Lawmakers face dilemma over grocery tax credit

Legislators torn between raising it, saving money

Magicvalley.com

READ Capitol Confidential, a political blog by Ben Botkin, and vote in an online poll about whether the grocery tax credit should be expanded.

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

BOISE — No lawmaker wants to be known for keeping money away from the poor to help state coffers.

Yet, with the economy battered and state revenues down, it's a choice they may face this legislative session. In his State of the State speech Monday, Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter said he wants to see the grocery tax credit continue expanding to help residents.

In 2008, the Legislature increased the credit to $50 for residents who are not required to pay a state income tax. It also set in motion phased-in increases of $10 annually until the credit reaches $100, or $120 for seniors. Residents also get a credit for dependents.

Because of the 2008 legislation, residents eligible for the credit on their 2009 returns get a $60 credit. Expanding the credit this year would dent state revenue by $15 million. Lawmaker action would be required to delay the phased-in increases from continuing, an idea that was brought up in the 2009 session but never gained momentum.

"I think his logic is right," said Rep. Stephen Hartgen, R-Twin Falls of the governor's proposal. "It is a commitment we made and I would hate to see us pull back that commitment. I think at this time that's the right decision. The people who use that credit, they're the most needy group in our society and I think it's pretty clear that if we were to take that way, that would hurt the lowest income group."

Saving the spillway

Chris Ketchum, Bureau of Reclamation assistant area manager, looks at crumbling piers on the Minidoka Dam spillway Friday. Agencies and members of the public met Friday in Burley to discuss options for replacing the spillway, which could cost $50 million and take three years.

Minidoka Dam repairs could cost $50 million

BURLEY — Nearly 50 representatives of government agencies, canal companies, power companies, area officials and members of the public gathered in Burley Thursday to gain a better understanding of the three options provided in the draft environmental impact statement for the replacement of the Minidoka Dam spillway.

U.S. Bureau of Reclamation Civil Engineer Keith Brooks said the dam, built in 1906, must be replaced.

"There is significant concern that one or more piers will fail," said Brooks. "If that happens during the middle of the summer it would have a major impact on the delivery of irrigation."

Bureau of Reclamation Assistant Area Manager Chris Ketchum said the three alternatives are doing nothing, replacing just the spillway, and the preferred option — called Alternative B — replacing the spillway, overflow, radial gates, two sections of dike, the south and north canal headworks, as well as making public use improvements and special use areas.

If the latter option is selected, costs are expected to be $50 million, which is $15 million less than originally projected, Ketchum said.

The cost will be split between water users, Bonneville Power Administration, Idaho Department

Twin Falls man pleads guilty to lewd conduct with children

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

He stood accused of 13 charges involving rape, lewd and lascivious conduct against minors, and child sex abuse, but on Friday a jailed Jeremy D. Amen struck a deal with prosecutors, trimming down the list.

Amen pleaded guilty to two counts of lewd and lascivious conduct, and in exchange prosecutors will drop the other charges against him. He faces a maximum possible punishment of life in prison, said Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loeb.

Amen, 38, was charged in four cases involving six victims, said Loeb.

On Friday, Amen tearfully conceded that he understands under the plea agreement his contact with his own child — not named as a victim — may be limited or prohibited.

Amen's public defender, George Essma, told the court that jail staff has "intercepted" Amen's attempts to communicate with this child, even though he was not accused of victimizing her. "At some point it may be in the best interest for reunification," Essma said in court.

Rather than prison,

Essma plans to request Amen be placed in a retained jurisdiction program, called a RIDER, when he is sentenced in April.

The prosecutor, however says Amen should go to prison for up to 20 years, and serve at least 12 before he becomes eligible for parole.

Amen

Amen cried in court Friday, saying that "I would love to have contact" with his child. But to the charges of lewd conduct he said, "I'm guilty of those crimes."

He said he touched his victims "inappropriately" for his own sexual gratification and has been jailed for 180 days while awaiting trial.

"Nobody's promised me anything," said Amen Friday in the courtroom. "The state has held up to their responsibility."

Authorities said in court records that they found victims dating back to 1999 who "have just now come forward because of their fear of being injured by Mr. Amen."

Other adult victims in the cases outside of Amen's plea included a former sister-in-law and an ex-wife, according to court records.

Blaine Co. schools urged to get a jump on building projects

District seeks judge's permission to borrow against levy passed in October

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — The Blaine County School District is considering whether to borrow money to get a jump start on building projects funded by plant facilities levy tax revenues that will become available in July.

Wood River Valley residents urged district trustees Wednesday night to borrow money against future tax revenues of a $59.8 million, 10-year plant facilities levy voters approved in October before that money becomes available. The idea is to take advantage of government incentives, including zero-interest or low-interest loans, to begin construction in the spring while labor costs remain low.

"Leveraging money now makes absolute sense," said Ketchum City Councilman and ski-shop owner Baird Gourlay. "If you save a dollar now, you're going to save that dollar for the next 10 years, which means you will have $10 to spend in the classroom," he said.

The district has drafted a petition for judicial confirmation from a 5th District judge to borrow money as an "ordinary and necessary" expense. Though the district received 59 percent voter approval of the levy in October, entering into long-term debt to take an early lease on future levy revenues would require the district to seek voter approval or a judge's exemption.

Since an election can't be performed in a timely fashion, the district held Wednesday's judicial confirmation hearing as the first step to possibly seeking a judge's confirmation.

Projects targeted for potential immediate action include a $1.37 million multipurpose cafeteria at Bellevue Elementary School, a $2.2 million maintenance and storage facility, and $22.2 million in energy conservation retrofits, including using geothermal energy to heat school buildings.

Trustees heard an hour of testimony at the hearing and are expected to make a decision by Jan. 27, said school board Chairman Julie Dahlgren.

As anticipated, building contractors made up a large part of the 70 people who crowded into the district office for the hearing. Builder John Rutherford touted the efficiency of geothermal heat over natural gas, and Ted Higginbotham said the school district will get a pay-back on using geothermal heat sooner than it thinks as the costs of natural gas go up.

School bus driver B.J. Miller pleaded for new maintenance buildings, saying maintenance workers are crammed in a 20-by-40-foot shop "and they don't even have a loading dock."

Builder Tommy Richmond encouraged the district to make good on its promise to hire locally as much as possible. Jeff Goitianda echoed Richmond's concern, saying he became certified to install Promethean smart boards in classrooms only to have the district hire a Utah firm for the installation of its boards.

"The money the school board spends needs to come back to our community," he said.

Rep. Jim Patrick, R-Twin Falls, said he has mixed emotions about either option.

On the one hand, he said, he wants to see the credit help residents. On the other hand, the budget needs all the money possible with the revenue shortfalls.

"I'm wondering if that money wouldn't be better put to education," Patrick said. "... Every million dollars helps."

Sen. Bert Brackett, R-Rogerson, said he was in favor of the phased-in increases of the grocery tax credit. But like everything else, whether the credit continues to expand will depend on the state's revenues, he said.

"Depending on how the revenue numbers keep coming in I think everything's on the table," Brackett said.

Rep. Scott Bedke, assistant majority leader, said there will be a lot to weigh with that issue.

"In a normal year the answer would be, 'Yes,'" Bedke, R-Oakley, said of the expansion. "This year, however, we have to weigh everything against cutting services in public schools and our colleges and universities and some of the other basic state services."

Bedke said he supports the principle of expanding the grocery tax credit, adding that the Legislature will need to continue watching revenue figures.

"We may need every dollar that we can get just to perform the basic services," he said.

Sen. Chuck Coiner, R-

Twin Falls, said he would want to see the bottom line of the impact before knowing what's needed, adding that it's hard to do anything that cuts revenue in the current economic climate.

Rep. Donna Pence, D-Gooding, said she leans toward keeping the planned expansion, adding that it's already been put in place and helps residents.

Dam

of Parks and Recreation, U.S. Fish and Wildlife along with the two irrigation companies.

Burley Irrigation District Manager Randy Bingham was one of only three people to provide public comment during the meeting.

Bingham said Friday the irrigation district is in favor of the alternative that replaces the headworks for the two canal companies and said the district also supports the fishery and the bypass flows.

One concern for the company, he said, is how to pay for its portion of the project, which is $7.9 million. Minidoka Irrigation District's portion is nearly $14.8 million. Both districts will hold bond elections on Feb. 2, seeking a method to finance the project.

Bingham said Burley Irrigation District's governing board prefers funding the replacement by bond issue, which will spread the costs to water users over the period of the bond, which could be up to 30 years. The other option will be for water users to pay their portion of the bill each year as the dam is built. In either case, the assessed amount will be levied per acre and could substantially increase irrigation bills.

The south headworks will be reconstructed about 300 feet downstream from where they are now and the north headworks will be built 115 feet downstream.

Because of the terrorist attacks in 2001, federal restrictions now ban anyone from coming within 300 yards of a dam. Alternative B provides the special-use areas to ensure historical uses of the dam by the public such as swimming, wading and ice fishing, at least in some areas. Ice fishing will likely shift farther north from where people currently fish, Ketchum said.

But public access to some areas that are now available, such as the top of the spillway, will be restricted. "Access on the south side below the power plant will be more difficult," Ketchum said. Under Alternative B, the actual length of the spillway will be reduced from 2,133 feet to between 1,316 to 1,480 feet. The bureau proposes to alter the existing spillway bridge that crosses the pool below where the new radial gate sections will be located and add a handicap-accessible parking area near the south end of the bridge.

Burley resident Mitzi Brooks said she goes to the dam to fish and target shoot, but is not concerned about any added restrictions on where she can go.

"I'm sure they are going to make sure there is access for the fishermen and the hunters," Brooks said.

Brooks said it is probably a good thing that access on top of the spillway will be restricted because it is a dangerous place, anyway.

Ketchum said because the new dam will not leak like the old one does, it will need to release 100 cubic feet-per second of water during the winter months to ensure wildlife habitat below the dam.

"This is to preserve, predominantly, an endangered snail species that we're dealing with," Ketchum said.

Ketchum said there will also be some impact to fish near the dam during construction.

"There will be some blasting to remove rock," Ketchum said. "And there will be some mortality associated with the blasting."

Bureau of Reclamation Activity Manager Allyn Meuleman said the public comment period for the EIS will end Feb. 5, a final EIS will be issued July 6 and will be filed with the Environmental Protection Agency July 7. A record of decision is expected on Aug. 9.

Construction is expected to take 31 months and is expected to be complete by April 2013. The construction will be spaced out so irrigation seasons are not interrupted. Roller-compacted concrete will be used, which has a life-span of 200 to 300 years.

Hailey students given early focus on life after high school

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — Some students in Casey Ellison's kindergarten class at Woodside Elementary School are still using training wheels, but they're already preparing for college.

"I know. I know. I know I can," they chant in class. "I know I can learn. I am on my way. I am on my way to college."

It's all part of No Excuses U (university) — a nationwide program the Hailey school adopted in 2008.

Hallways are adorned with college pennants and signs proclaiming, "College Bound: Going for the Gold" and "My Future's So Bright I Have to Wear Shades." Teachers' college graduation pictures adorn their desks.

Each class has adopted a university, donning that college's sweatshirt and learning the college fight song. And students have their pictures taken with signs identifying them as the Class of 2022 or the Class of 2023.

It's an ambitious plan, considering 63 percent of Woodside's students come from impoverished homes and do not speak English as their first language. Sixty percent are on the free and reduced lunch program, school officials say.

But that doesn't make any difference to the effort, said Principal Brad Henson.

"We don't think anymore in terms of they're poor, they're a minority, they're not from this country or that no one from their family has graduated from high school. We believe that they're all bound for college," he said.

To change the culture, teachers must change the conversation, Henson said.

"The conversation now revolves around, 'Where are you going to college?' And 'Are you saving money for college,'" said social worker Jane Goodson. "We're even asking, 'Who are you going to invite to your graduation?'"

Students early in their educational careers are learning terms from "college" to "NCAA," while fourth- and fifth-graders have taken trips to see Boise State University's classes, dormitories and the blue turf at Bronco Stadium.

"Every time I go to Woodside I get goose bumps," said district Superintendent Lonnie Barber.

The ultimate goal of the program is to have zero Latino high-school dropouts from these classes in a nation in which 42 percent of Latino students do so.

Moldy smell prompts huge Tylenol recall

NEW YORK (AP) — Johnson & Johnson issued a massive recall Friday of over-the-counter drugs including Tylenol, Motrin and St. Joseph's aspirin because of a moldy smell that has made people sick.

It was the second such recall in less than a month because of the smell, which regulators said was first reported to Johnson & Johnson's Consumer Healthcare Products in 2008.

Federal regulators criticized the company, saying it didn't respond to the complaints quickly enough, wasn't thorough in how it handled the problem and didn't inform the Food and Drug Administration quickly.

The recall includes some batches of regular and extra-strength Tylenol, children's Tylenol, eight-hour Tylenol, Tylenol arthritis, Tylenol PM, children's Motrin, Motrin IB, Benadryl Roloids, Simply Sleep, and St. Joseph's aspirin.

The FDA and McNeil said they did not know the number of bottles recalled. It included caplet and geltab products sold in the Americas, the United Arab Emirates, and Fiji.

Consumers should check the full list at www.mcneilproductrecall.com to identify the recalled batches.

Nunez pleads guilty to 2nd child injury charge

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — Mauro Z. Nunez, the Hailey man accused for the second time in three years of raping an underage girl, has pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of felony injury to a child for allegedly having sex with a 15-year-old girl last fall. Nunez, 21, pleaded guilty to injury to a child in a 2007 case also originally charged as rape.

According to court documents, Nunez pleaded guilty to injury to a child on Monday "so he doesn't have to go to trial on the more serious charge" of rape. He also admitted to violating probation conditions on the 2007 case that prohibited him from socializing with minors.

Police allege Nunez, after meeting the then-15-year-old victim at a party, exchanged text messages and phone calls with her for several months before arranging to pick her up at a hill near her Bellevue home at midnight to "hang out." The victim, now 16, is not being named because she is a minor.

According to court records, the victim reported that Nunez smelled of alcohol and had empty beer cans in his car, which he drove to his parents' house in Hailey, where he snuck her in through a window.

After watching movies for several hours, they allegedly had sex before Nunez returned the teen to the hill near her home.

The victim said she felt she was forced to have sex because "I was scared he wouldn't bring me home and he's a lot bigger than me, and I was scared he would hurt me or something," according to court records.

During the ride home, Nunez allegedly asked the victim to "promise you're not going to tell anyone" about what had happened that night.

Court documents show Nunez has admitted to having an alcohol addiction, and a substance-abuse evaluation will be part of his sentencing on March 15. The maximum penalty for felony injury to a child is 10 years in prison and a $50,000 fine.

Warm Springs crash damages power pole

Times-News

A woman and her infant child are safe after a close call involving ice and a power pole in the Warm Springs area of Ketchum.

The woman, identified by police as Itztlalzihuatl Aviles, 21, of Ketchum, was driving north on Bald Mountain Road to its intersection with Warm Springs Road, when her Chevrolet Suburban began to slide.

"She was able to get out, some bystanders were able to help her get the infant out, and then the car slid off the roadway," said Ketchum Police Chief Steve Harkins.

The car slid backwards approximately 20 feet down the embankment on the south side of Bald Mountain Road until it hit a power pole. "It knocked the pole loose and leaned it over a little bit," causing tension in the lines but not breaking any, Harkins said.

The Ketchum Fire Department and Ketchum Police Department responded to the scene, and Idaho Power was later called to shut off the power to the pole before the SUV was towed back onto the roadway and the pole was repaired. The SUV sustained extensive damage to the rear cargo compartment.

"It could have been bad," Harkins said, speculating on what might have happened if the occupants had not been able to get out of the vehicle, or if it had slid differently.

Persistent smog plagues Utah

By Mike Stark
Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — A thick layer of smog stubbornly lingering over parts of Utah has fouled the state's air so badly this week that health officials warned people not to exercise outside and some schools kept children inside for recess and sports.

The haze that has obscured Utah's picture-perfect mountain views for the last several days is blamed on a weather phenomenon called an inversion that pins pollution to the valley floors and doesn't relent until a storm blows through.

The smog spell has made Utah's air the dirtiest in the country for almost a week, and nearly 8 of 10 Utah residents are living under health advisories. Residents are being urged to drive less and prohibited from burning wood, and sometimes even the most fit have been urged not to exercise outside.

"It's a disgrace that we've got this," said Richard Middleton, 72, a retired consultant who was out walking in Salt Lake City on Thursday to rehab his knee after surgery.

Carol Werner said it still doesn't take long for the telltale signs to hit when she steps outside: sneezing, congestion, tightening throat.

"If I go out for a walk for an hour, I'm sorry I did," said Werner, a professor at the University of Utah.

Her friend, 72-year-old Donna Gelfand, has canceled her regular walks, at least until things clear up. She has lived in Utah for 48 years and said this winter "is one of the very worst."

industrial pollution and emissions from homes and businesses. The geography of the region makes matters worse: Much of Utah's population resides in bowl-shaped valleys that cause the smog to get trapped overhead.

The state issues daily health advisories on the region's air quality between Nov. 1 and March 1. Already this season, 19 "red alerts" — the most severe ranking — have been issued for Salt Lake County, more than the previous two years combined and the third-most in the last decade, according to state records.

The state has made strides in cleaning up its act when it comes to pollution, including cracking down on large-scale polluters, limiting vehicle emissions and making a huge investment in light rail and other mass transit.

Cheryl Heying, director of the Utah Division of Air Quality, said the state's air is actually cleaner than it was just five years ago and nothing like the lung-clogging conditions from pollution heydays in the early 1990s.

What's changed in recent years, she said, is that the Environmental Protection Agency tightened its standards, including for tiny particulates called PM2.5 that is linked to premature death in people with heart and lung disease. The pollutant is also particularly tough on people who already have pre-existing respiratory problems such as asthma.

The tighter standards mean more frequent exceedances, and more health advisory notices to the public, Heying said.

But many believe that the smog is worse than most years.

Duane Harris with Intermountain Allergy and Asthma Clinic in Draper said this year "seems particularly bad" and patients are reporting unusual winter symptoms including burning eyes and irritated noses.

"I've definitely seen an increase the last week or so" in terms of the number of patients and their complaints, Harris said.

Visitors coming to Utah this weekend to ski on its famous slopes will have to slog through the smog in the valleys but will find blue skies and clear air at higher elevations.

"It's just a completely different environment up there," said Jessica Kunzer, spokeswoman for Ski Utah.

Those who don't flee the valleys will have to make do — pollution is expected to linger at least through Saturday. The air quality slightly improved Friday.

Leary said Friday the Utah Department of Financial Institutions shut Barnes Banking Company, based in Kaysville.

Micron announces deal with Aussie firm

BOISE — Micron Technology Inc. has signed a deal with an Australian company to build solar components using new technology that could significantly lower the cost of solar panels.

Micron on Thursday announced it had signed the deal with Origin Energy, which also generates and retails energy to about three million customers.

The Idaho Statesman reports the two companies signed the agreement in December.

Origin has already produced commercial solar panels using a silicon wafer called "sliver" technology in Australia.

Origin says the sliver panels are built from cells thinner than most solar cells but are highly efficient.

WYOMING

National Elk Refuge feeding will be later than normal

JACKSON — The National Elk Refuge in Jackson Hole plans to begin providing supplemental feed to elk much later than usual this year.

The reason is the elk still have plenty to eat. There's still lots of grass left over from last year and less snow than normal covering up that grass.

Typically the refuge begins putting out alfalfa pellets for elk around the third week of January. Last year, feeding began Jan. 27, about a week later than normal. This year, feeding might begin several weeks later than usual.

Refuge Manager Steve

Kallin says it's good news for the 4,000 elk on the refuge this winter. Kallin says that when elk aren't being fed, they're more dispersed and that helps prevent disease from spreading through the herd.

Lack of good faith over wolves disputed

CHEYENNE — Wyoming is disputing claims by Interior Department attorneys that the state's plans for managing wolves wouldn't ensure a sustainable minimum population of the animals.

Attorneys for the state wrote in a brief filed Friday saying that the department falsely accused Wyoming of not acting in good faith on wolves.

The brief could be the state's last in a lawsuit over wolves before the case is scheduled to go before U.S. District Judge Alan Johnson in Cheyenne on Jan. 29. Wyoming sued after the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service removed Endangered Species Act protection for wolves in Montana and Idaho but not Wyoming.

Responding to Wyoming's lawsuit, the Interior Department questioned laws and rules Wyoming has passed in preparation for wolves being removed from endangered species protection in the state.

In a brief filed last month, the agency said Wyoming is proposing a zone of enhanced protection for wolves before the species is delisted but intends to enact a smaller zone of enhanced protection after the species is delisted.

Federal attorneys also said the state would allow as few as 28 wolves within its borders — fewer than what considered a sustainable number.

Officials: Military vulnerable to another Fort Hood-like massacre

WASHINGTON (AP) — The military remains vulnerable to another Fort Hood-like massacre with religious radicalization on the rise and too little attention being paid to internal threats, senior Pentagon officials said Friday.

An internal investigation into the shooting at the Texas Army post in November found that several officers failed to use "appropriate judgment and standards" in overseeing the career of Army Maj. Nidal Hasan and that their actions should be investigated immediately.

Hasan, an Army psychiatrist, has been charged with killing 13 people.

"I would ask all commanders and leaders at every level to make an effort to look beyond their day-to-day tasks and be attuned to personnel who may be at risk or pose a danger," said Defense Secretary Robert Gates.

Separately, the FBI said it would revise its own procedures to make sure that when it does investigate a member of the military, it notifies the Pentagon. In the Hasan case, a local joint terrorism task force run by the FBI with some military personnel examined Hasan but did not alert the Pentagon that concerns had been raised.

The FBI also says it will increase training for task force members to better search bureau databases when conducting investigations.

Lawmakers including Rep. Ike Skelton, the Missouri Democrat who chairs the House Armed Services Committee, and Texas Republican Sen. John Cornyn called the findings unacceptable.

"We cannot let our guard down," said Cornyn, a member of the Senate

Hasan

Judiciary Committee.

A separate White House assessment concluded the government doesn't do enough to share information on "disaffected individuals" and that closer scrutiny of some information is needed by intelligence and law enforcement officials.

Of particular concern is "self-radicalization" by individuals seeking out extremist views, said Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

"There is clearly more and more of that going on, and how much of it we have in the military is something that we ought to really understand," Mullen said.

The Hasan case has taken on heightened importance in recent weeks because of its parallels to the attempted bombing of a Detroit-bound passenger jet. Both cases are linked to a radical cleric in Yemen and expose a failure by intelligence officials to prevent the attacks.

According to two officials familiar with the case, as many as eight Army officers could face discipline for failing to do anything when Hasan displayed erratic behavior early in his military career. The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because that information has not been publicly released.

The officers supervised Hasan when he was a medical student and during his early work as an Army psychiatrist at Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington.

The review did not consider whether the shootings were an act of terrorism and did not delve into allegations that Hasan was in contact with the cleric. Those questions are part of the separate criminal case against Hasan.

China faces tough challenge over Google dispute

BEIJING (AP) — At a time when they wanted to focus on the economy, Chinese leaders face a surprise political challenge: A possible Google pullout that could anger China's public and embolden other companies to vent grievances.

Google Inc.'s threat to shut down its China-based site Google.cn over censorship and e-mail hacking alarmed a Internet-connected public that has tolerated a gap between rapid economic and technological progress and a closed, secretive political system.

"The political outcome is that it could stir up a restive group of people, which is the younger people and the Internet users in China who may look at access to information as a civil right," said James McGregor, a senior counselor for consulting firm APCO Worldwide Inc. and a former chairman of the American Chamber of Commerce in China. That potential Internet lobby is vast. China's online population soared by nearly 30 percent last year to 384 million people, bigger than the whole U.S. population. It includes the Chinese elite of entrepreneurs and professionals who have benefited most from economic reform and usually support the ruling party.

Other companies that accept pervasive controls in exchange for access to China's huge and growing market appeared unlikely to follow Google's lead. Still, there could be less drastic changes in their relations with Beijing.

"We're not going to see a lot of foreign companies stand up and walk out of China but you might see a lot more foreign companies standing up and being much tougher in dealing with what they consider to be an unfairness in market access and trade issues," McGregor said.

TF Council recognizes a good deal when it sees one

CHEERS: To the the Twin Falls County Sheriff’s Office for offering a reduced-price animal control contract to the city of Twin Falls, and to the Twin Falls City Council for accepting it.

After a year of false starts, the council signed off on a $109,500 agreement for animal-control services with county on Monday. The county had previously asked for $114,000.

calls in Twin Falls.

The sheriff’s office has handled animal control for both the county and the city since 2000, but costs charged to the city have steadily risen over the years and spiked from $50,000 to $120,000 in 2008. The 2008 contract was never actually signed, in part because former mayor Lance Clow was concerned about the cost.

The new deal is a bargain for the city, because the county does a good job with animal control.

In 2008, the sheriff’s office handled 3,935 animal-control

“The thing that impressed more than anything else is that in the last year we have not had one complaint about our animal control,” Mayor Don Hall, then a councilman, said in November.

Thanks to the county and the People for Pets animal shelter, stray critters aren’t nearly the problem in Twin Falls that they were a decade ago.

JEERS: We have some serious concerns about the health care bill passed by the U.S. Senate on Christmas Eve. But we don’t think it’s worth spending Idaho taxpayers’ money on a quixotic effort to stop it.

The Legislature’s Health Care Task Force this week approved a resolution by Co-chairman Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, opposing the legislation and backing Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter in his fight against it.

Cameron was “appalled” at what he said were constitutional violations in the House and Senate versions of the reform legislation, “including but not limited to violation in which the Congress itself is vacating its own powers or bestowing powers upon others that it holds.” He also said he thought it was unconstitutional to require people or businesses to buy health coverage, and that the changes would be costly to Idahoans.

On Dec. 30, Otter sent a letter to U.S. Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., and Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., decrying the health care legislation and threatening legal action.

The governor and Cameron must know that the state’s chances of prevailing in such a challenge are slim. Let’s spend our limited resources on more pressing needs for Idahoans.

CHEERS: It’s gorgeous and accessible, and was finished on time — and most importantly in this day and age — under budget.

The Idaho Capitol Commission and the Legislatures that authorized the restoration of the 98-year-old Statehouse did themselves proud.

The new capitol is 50,000 square feet bigger, thanks to two new underground wings. They’re mostly filled with committee hearing rooms, which can each accommodate 80 to 200 people.

That’s important because much of the Legislature’s work is done in committee, and in the past the cramped hearing rooms didn’t allow for many spectators.

In the rest of the building, flooring and decorative plaster have been repaired. Windows were restored and refinished, as were wood doors. Eighty-eight hundred square feet of marble is part of the new entrance and wings.

Through it all, the architects managed to make the remodeled people’s house more people-friendly.

Secret Santa delivery much appreciated

Thank you to the “secret friends” who delivered the boxes from Santa to 1216 11th Ave. E. in Twin Falls on Tuesday evening Dec. 22.

I do not know who you are, but my heartfelt thanks goes out to you. The gifts were very thoughtful and much appreciated.

Thank you again for your thoughtfulness.

Thanks for helping send coffee to troops

Four months ago, I went into Starbucks and bought coffees for our son in the Army. A few days later, a barista offered coffees to our troops if we would mail them. Those troops were so grateful for the gift of coffee! Later, the same barista said Starbucks would collect coffees for our troops if we would mail them.

Starbucks on Blue Lakes collected more than 90 pounds of coffee from Twin Falls, Ketchum and Idaho Falls. We mailed 10 large boxes. Each box contained more than 50 messages from people from all over the country and Canada who had visited participating Starbucks. Six boxes went to FOB Tillman on the Pakistan/Afghanistan border and four went to Special Forces in the Middle East.

We can only say thank you from our troops for your support as they stand in harm’s way so we can be free! Thank you, Starbucks.

Mountain rescuers deserve praise, thanks

Thank you to the Mini-Cassia Search and Rescue, Twin Falls Search and Rescue and snowmobile clubs.

We all want to thank each and every one of you for getting Olene and Don out of the mountains on Tuesday night (Jan. 5). And to the others that heard when it was and came up also.

A special thanks to Robert Nye for getting and organizing the search. Each one of these men and women had already worked all day and came up when called.

The weather conditions were terrible — snow, rain and fog. It was around 3 a.m. before these men and women left the mountains and got home and maybe two hours sleep before they went to work. Unless you see them in action, you can not believe how professional and organized they are. These people had already been out a lot the last two weeks.

Our sincere thanks.

The difficult truth behind Haiti

On Oct. 17, 1989, a major earthquake with a magnitude of 7.0 struck the Bay Area in Northern California. Sixty-three people were killed. This week, a major earthquake, also measuring a magnitude of 7.0, struck near Port-au-Prince, Haiti. The Red Cross estimates that between 45,000 and 50,000 people have died.

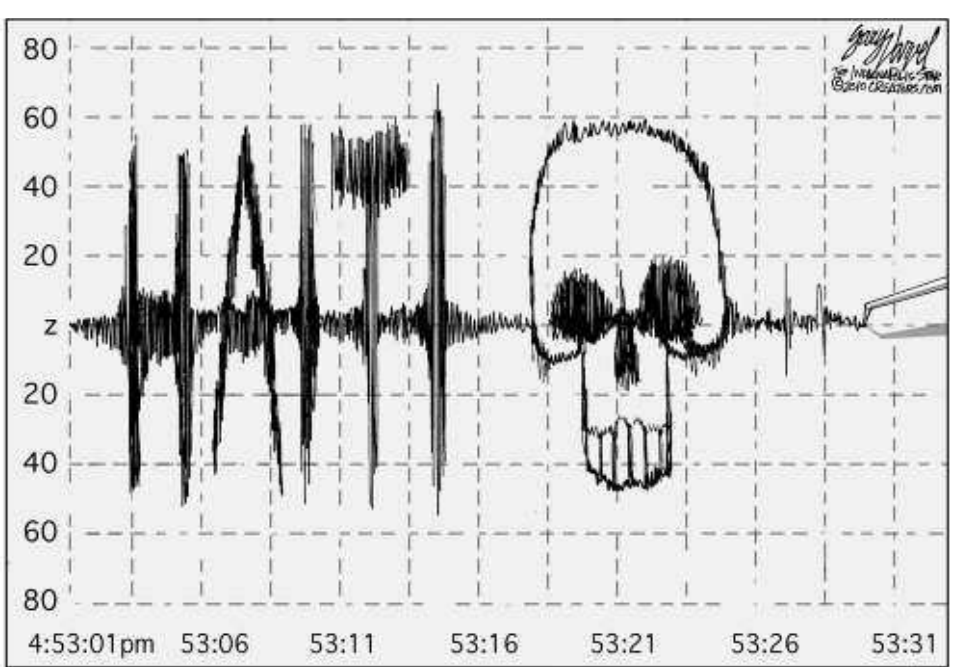

David Brooks

This is not a natural-disaster story. This is a poverty story. It’s a story about poorly constructed buildings, bad infrastructure and terrible public services. On Thursday, President Barack Obama told the people of Haiti: “You will not be forsaken; you will not be forgotten.” If he is going to remain faithful to that vow then he is going to have to use this tragedy as an occasion to rethink our approach to global poverty. He’s going to have to acknowledge a few difficult truths.

The first of those truths is that we don’t know how to use aid to reduce poverty. Over the past few decades, the world has spent trillions of dollars to generate growth in the developing world. The countries that have not received much aid, like China, have seen tremendous growth and tremendous poverty reductions. The countries that have received aid, like Haiti, have not.

In the recent anthology “What Works in Development?,” a group of economists try to sort out what we’ve learned. The picture is grim. There are no policy levers that consistently correlate to increased growth. There is nearly zero correlation between how a developing economy does one decade and how it does the next. There is no consistently proven way to reduce corruption. Even improving governing institutions doesn’t seem to produce the expected results.

The chastened tone of

these essays is captured by the economist Abhijit Banerjee: “It is not clear to us that the best way to get growth is to do growth policy of any form. Perhaps making growth happen is ultimately beyond our control.”

The second hard truth is that micro-aid is vital but insufficient. Given the failures of macrodevelopment, aid organizations often focus on microprojects. More than 10,000 organizations perform missions of this sort in Haiti. By some estimates, Haiti has more nongovernmental organizations per capita than any other place on earth. They are doing the Lord’s work, especially these days, but even a blizzard of these efforts does not seem to add up to comprehensive change.

Third, it is time to put the thorny issue of culture at the center of efforts to tackle global poverty. Why is Haiti so poor? Well, it has a history of oppression, slavery and colonialism. But so does Barbados, and Barbados is doing pretty well. Haiti has endured ruthless dictators, corruption and foreign invasions. But so has the Dominican Republic, and the D.R. is in much better shape. Haiti and the Dominican Republic share the same island and the same basic environment, yet the border between the two societies offers one of the starkest contrasts on earth — with trees and progress on one side, and deforestation and poverty and early death on the other.

As Lawrence E. Harrison explained in his book “The Central Liberal Truth,” Haiti, like most of the world’s poorest nations, suffers from a complex web of progress-resistant cultural influences. There is the influence of the voodoo religion, which spreads the message that life is capricious and planning is futile. There are high levels of social mistrust. Responsibility is often not internalized. Child-rearing practices often involve neglect in the early years and harsh retribution when kids hit 9 or 10.

We’re all supposed to politely respect each other’s cultures. But some cultures are more progress-resistant than others, and a horrible tragedy was just exacerbated by one of them.

Fourth, it’s time to promote locally led paternalism. In the United States, we first tried to tackle poverty by throwing money at it, just as we did abroad. Then we tried microcommunity efforts, just as we did abroad. But the programs that really work involve intrusive paternalism.

These programs, like the Harlem Children’s Zone and the No Excuses schools, are led by people who figure they don’t understand all the factors that have contributed to poverty, but they don’t care. They are going to replace parts of the local culture with a highly demanding, highly intensive culture of achievement — involving everything from new child-rearing practices to stricter schools to better job performance.

It’s time to take that approach abroad, too. It’s time to find self-confident local leaders who will create No Excuses countercultures in places like Haiti, surrounding people — maybe just in a neighborhood or a school — with middle-class assumptions, an achievement ethos and tough, measurable demands.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Doonesbury

Mallard Fillmore

By Bruce Tinsley

If marriage is special, shouldn't we spread it around?

However passionate and polarized the gay marriage debate grows, sometimes it is difficult to tell one side from the other.

"Where marriage is honored, and where there is a flourishing marriage culture, everyone benefits — the spouses themselves, their children, the communities and societies in which they live," argues one of the groups that filed a friend-of-the-court brief in the gay marriage case on trial in San Francisco.

Sounds to me like an argument for expanding marriage to include same-sex couples.

But I am wrong, very wrong. The quote comes from a brief filed by the Southern Baptist Convention's Ethics and Religious Liberty Commission, which opposes same-sex marriage.

Ann Woolner

The warring sides at least agree that marriage is special.

For one side, that means you can't legally keep a group of people out of it. For the other side, it means you shouldn't let them into it.

It's so important that everyone should have access, say gay marriage proponents, or so important that it should be "protected" from same-sex couples say those who want to ban it.

So it goes in a federal trial that opened this week that will determine whether California's 2008 ban on same-sex marriage violates the Constitution.

Defenders of the ban, a coalition called Protect Marriage, insist they have no animus against gays.

But why do you need to protect marriage from a group of people if you don't think them somehow bad?

Proposition 8 supporters say it would only further degrade an eroded culture of marriage to let gay people marry. An alarming 40 percent of American babies are born to unmarried mothers, they say. And the growing number of unmarried cohabiters are indicators of an institution in trouble.

They say they want children raised in stable environments with two married parents, albeit one of each gender. What about the children born to or adopted by gay people? Shouldn't they have the benefit of two married parents? And if you don't like people living together out of wedlock, let them wed.

Marriage-ban defenders have on their side the fact that Californians voted for their way, as have voters across most of the country. The question is whether the Constitution allows such bans, not whether people want them. A majority once thought racial segregation was fine, but that didn't make it constitutional.

One of the reasons it wasn't was that white supremacy was a driving force behind it.

To say whether the California ban is constitutional, the judge must determine whether it stems from animus toward gays. If so, it would be harder for him to uphold the ban, though not impossible.

No one can dispute the long and violent history of hostility toward homosexuals, which continues today.

But given that Proposition

8 passed in a state friendly to gays "speaks not ill will or animosity toward gays and lesbians, but a special regard for marriage," Charles Cooper, the lawyer representing proponents of Prop 8, told the judge this week.

And that's the part that hangs me up. How can a "special regard for marriage" prompt you to keep out certain people unless you think them not special enough?

If you want to protect marriage, ban from it everyone with a history of beating their loved ones. To protect children, prevent child molesters from marrying.

Proposition 8 passed in large part because of the religious backing behind it. The Mormon church poured money and people into the effort, as did other Christian groups.

When you strip away unproven allegations of societal ruin if gay people marry, their argument boils down to the Bible's description of marriage as a sacred union between a man and a woman.

If the reason for keeping the ban is based in religion, consider that atheists are Americans, too, and religious practices vary. Some branches of Judaism perform same-sex weddings and so do some Christian churches.

The government can't interfere with religious convictions unless they harm others, and it can't impose those beliefs on others, which is what Proposition 8 defenders seem to want.

Lacking research to show societal harm from same-sex marriage, what reason is there to oppose it other than animus or religious beliefs?

Insurance exchange plan raises prices and limits choices

Both the House and Senate health-reform bills create health insurance exchanges, and both, I hope, will be scrapped by Democrats who are forging the final legislation.

Of the two versions, however, the House plan is by far the worse. It is both national and more sweeping in scope, severely limiting choices and driving up premiums for everyone — especially for the young and healthy.

If the House's nationalized exchange proposal wins out, Americans will be stuck with a costly new government bureaucracy called the Health Choices Administration run by another appointed "czar" who decides what constitutes good health care and who is entitled to it.

This super-bureaucrat would have absolute power in transforming today's consumer-driven health care into a government-dictated system that, among other things, would:

- Not be required to consult with patients or health-care providers and would make unilateral decisions about health-care choices.

- Could impose penalties on patients, doctors, employers and insurers with no system in place to ensure such penalties are fair and justified.

- Have the power to grant illegal immigrants health-care tax credits based on a process different than that in current law.

- Dramatically increase waiting times for appointments, tests and new procedures in ways that in many cases would be rationing of healthcare services.

In short, the federal exchange proposed in the House bill would be worse and far more insidious than the public option Democrats may scrap to meet Senate demands.

About 165 million Americans currently get their health coverage through an employer. They have both guaranteed access to coverage, and the employer can choose from the range of policies offered by the insurer.

Unfortunately, the House legislation limits employers' choices to those insurers participating in the exchange and to one of only four standardized plans.

As for individuals buying their own coverage, in most states they already have access to multiple options. In most areas there will be more than a dozen health insurers offering a wide range of deductibles, co-pays and HMO products, and at a wide variety of premiums.

Since the vast majority of Americans are relatively healthy, they would have no problem choosing from one of the existing plans being offered and have coverage within a few days. So why try to manufacture a market when one already exists? Of course, some uninsured people have a pre-existing condition and could be denied coverage or charged a lot more for it. That problem is one of the reasons that exchange supporters think the system is broken — and the exchange will fix it.

While we do need some reforms to fix the current problems, we certainly don't need the House's exchange. It will lead to fewer options and higher premiums — and a whole lot of promises to fix those problems next time Congress gets around to it.

An amazing, wonderful woman in Lincoln Co.

Lincoln County, do you know you have an angel among you?

- She contacted individuals in the Shoshone, Richfield and Dietrich schools who challenged students to collect donations of pajamas and story books. She identified and contacted families who could benefit from the pajama sets, then delivered 170 pairs of pajamas and books to needy families.

- She organized donation of coats, hats, gloves and other accessories. Many of these were purchased with money from her own pockets.

- She made and delivered food baskets to many families.

- She learned that a seventh-grade Shoshone student was injured in a very serious accident before Thanksgiving and hospitalized in Salt Lake. With the assistance of the student's classmates, she put together a box for him and his family. In addition, the Silver Creek Chariot Association did a fundraiser, and helped immensely with this cause.

Display on Twin View Lane was wonderful

Thank you, folks on Twin View Lane!

Your holiday light display was wonderful as in years past. I detoured off my path three times to drive up your lane and take a few minutes to slow down and enjoy all of your hard work. It gave me that little "lift" to get through the holidays and think about the real meaning of the season. I hope you keep doing it. It's inspiring and so close to town that all should take a few minutes to drive up your lane to get in the holiday spirit.

Obama, Dems near health care accord

By David Espo
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Obama and top congressional Democrats closed in on agreement Friday on cost and coverage issues at the heart of sweeping health care legislation, their marathon White House bargaining sessions given fresh urgency by an unpredictable Massachusetts Senate race.

Negotiators are "pretty close," Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid said after returning to the Capitol in late afternoon.

A White House statement said there are "no final agreements and no overall package."

But no further meetings were scheduled, and Rep. Jim Clyburn, D-S.C., the third-ranking House Democrat, said, "Something should be going to CBO very soon," indicating that aides were drafting the decisions made around the table in the White House Cabinet Room. The Congressional Budget Office is the official arbiter of the cost and extent of coverage that any legislation would provide.

No details were immediately available, and congressional aides stressed the decisions made at the White House had not yet been fully shared with the Democratic rank and file.

One key obstacle appeared on its way to a resolution when Sen. Ben Nelson, D-Neb., requested the elimination of an intensely controversial, one-of-a-kind federal subsidy to cover the entire cost of a Medicaid expansion in his home state.

That provision in the Senate-passed measure has drawn criticism from governors and others in both political parties from the moment it was disclosed, and even former President Bill Clinton urged that it be jettisoned. "That Nebraska thing is really hurting us," he told House Democrats in an appearance designed to build support for the overall legislation.

In its place, officials said Obama and lawmakers decided to increase federal money for Medicaid in all 50 states, although it was not clear if there would be enough to cover the expansion completely.

The increase in the Medicaid program is a key element in the bill's overall goal of expanding health coverage to millions who lack it. The bill also envisions creation of new insurance exchanges, essentially federally regulated marketplaces where consumers can shop for coverage. Individuals and families at lower incomes would receive federal subsidies to defray the cost.

DRUG FIRMS TAKE AIM

WASHINGTON — The drug industry is threatening to end its support for President Obama's health overhaul effort because of a rift with the administration over protecting brand-name biotech drugs from low-cost generic competitors.

In an e-mail obtained Friday by The Associated Press, the president of the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers of America told the trade group's board members that "we could not support the bill" if the industry is given less than 12 years of competitive protection for the expensive products.

Obama and House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Henry Waxman, D-Calif., are leading the drive to shorten that period, which proponents argue would be a boon to consumers.

"Please activate immediately all of your contacts," said the e-mail from Billy Tauzin, the group's president.

Health bill at stake, Obama to stump in Bay State

BOSTON (AP) — His health care plan in peril, President Obama laid on a last-minute campaign trip to Massachusetts for Democrat Martha Coakley on Sunday with polls showing her struggling in an unexpectedly close race against Republican Scott Brown to fill the late Edward

M. Kennedy's Senate seat.

Vice President Joe Biden, trying to turn the focus of the race away from the president's embattled health care bill, joined the fray, sending an e-mail to Democrats assailing the Republican candidate for opposing Obama's just-announced plan to tax large Wall Street firms.

The late-game White House aggressiveness reflected a sudden deep concern among Democrats that they could lose a seat the party has controlled for more than half a century — and with it the 60th Senate vote that is all that has kept alive the health care overhaul that Obama has spent his entire first year pushing toward passage.

Beyond that, a poor outcome for Coakley on Tuesday would make moderate Democrats ever more nervous about backing Obama on other issues out of concern about their own re-election chances in November, undercutting his presidency just as he's beginning his second year.

On defense and on the attack, Coakley made the same argument as Biden Friday as she tried to appeal to an anti-government, populism electorate. "I'm standing with Main Street on this one. Scott Brown stands with Wall Street," she said.

Brown countered at a campaign event later: "There's only one candidate in this race who's a tax cutter — and it's not Martha Coakley."

Democrats control 60 votes in the Senate, enough to thwart a Republican filibuster of Obama's near-complete health care plan. If Coakley wins, she has said, she will vote, as Kennedy did, with the 57 other Democrats and two independents who side with them. Brown has made clear he would vote against the health plan, which all other Republicans oppose, giving Senate Republicans the 41st vote they need to block the legislation.

"If Scott Brown wins, it'll kill the health bill," said Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass.

Secretary of State William F. Galvin, Massachusetts' top election official, said certifying Tuesday's results could take more than two weeks, maybe enough time for Democrats to push Obama's signature legislation through Congress before Brown could take office.

Idaho lawmakers seek relief for potato growers

Times-News staff and wire reports

Idaho's congressional delegation is seeking relief from the federal government for struggling potato growers left with a spud surplus after a stellar growing season was offset by falling prices.

Leaders of potato grower industry groups said last month that prices for Idaho potatoes had dropped to less than half of what it cost farmers to grow last year's crop.

Idaho Senators Mike Crapo and Jim Risch, along with Idaho Representatives Mike Simpson and Walk Minnick, sent a letter to the U.S. Department of Agriculture earlier this week seeking help.

The lawmakers wrote in support of a pending request for the purchase of the surplus spuds for federal nutrition programs.

According to growers, potato stocks are 13.5 percent higher than last year's stocks.

"Potato growers are struggling right now with their returns, which are quite low," the delegation stated in the letter to the USDA. "Without action, the combination of high supply and low prices will drive many growers in ... Idaho and throughout the country to go out of business."

They added that trying to get financing for next year's crops could be difficult if producers demonstrate lower returns for the current year's crops.

Still, potatoes generated $796 million in 2009, a 2 percent increase compared to 2008, meaning that potatoes remain Idaho's top cash crop. Record yields averaging 411 hundred-weight per acre in 2009 helped boost overall production more than 13 percent.

Jerome man launches electronic file storage site IdahoDataSafe

By John Plestina
Times-News writer

A Jerome man and his California business partner have nearly completed the patent process for an invention, which they say is a groundbreaking secure electronic file storage system that's been a decade in the works.

IdahoDataSafe is the trademarked name recorded on the National Registry of Trademarks, but the system is marketed far beyond the land of famous potatoes.

Engineers Mike Dahmer, of Jerome, and David Kurn, of San Francisco, began development in 2000. They are partners in Systems Associates Inc., with its IdahoDataSafe and IdahoQuad.com divisions.

EXTRA FEE FOR EXTRA FACE TIME

Dr. Stephen Glasser poses for a portrait in his Baltimore office. Glasser used to care for about 3,500 patients, seeing between 25 and 30 a day. He pared the total down to between 600 and 700 when he converted to a concierge practice six years ago.

Don't want to feel like your doctor visit is rushed? That could cost you $1,500 a year

By Tom Murphy
Associated Press writer

Over the counter cold-and-flu remedy: $5.99. Trip to the doctor's office: $20. Extra time to bend your doctor's ear: $1,500 a year and up.

Primary care physicians are increasingly offering exclusivity to those willing to pay for it.

These practices, known as concierge, boutique or retainer practices, typically charge annual fees that range from $1,500 to $10,000 or more. The fee allows the businesses to prosper with a far smaller roll of patients than has become the norm under the traditional system.

Patients like the extra attention and lack of crowded waiting rooms. Doctors say they need alternatives to a payment system that forces them to cram their schedule with appointments.

But the growth comes with concerns about doctor access, particularly since a bill moving through Congress could cover millions of uninsured people and flood doctor offices with new primary care patients.

"It's unfortunate that you have to pay for (extra time with a doctor), but for me, the $1,500 a year for that extra attention is worth every penny and then some."

— Heidi Berman, an attorney in Baltimore, Md.

Heidi Berman pays $1,500 annually to see Dr. Stephen Glasser in Baltimore. The 38-year-old attorney said visits to her previous doctor lasted five or maybe 10 minutes.

"If you had questions, they were sort of an afterthought because the experience was so rushed," said Berman, who switched to Glasser a year ago.

Now, if she forgets to ask a question during normal office hours, she calls her doctor in the evening and he immediately calls back.

"It's personalized attention that I think ... every person is really entitled to," she said. "It's unfortunate that you have to pay for that, but for me, the $1,500 a year for that extra attention is worth every penny and then some."

The fee typically gives patients longer, more in-depth appointments with doctors as well as extras

Ketchum could get new grocery store

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

A grocery store developer has purchased the former Stock Lumber property located at the intersection of Warm Springs Road, 10th St. and Lewis Street in Ketchum.

Peter Buck, an attorney based in Seattle, Wash., who is the spokesman for the developer, said the buyer is not disclosing his name at this time. But he added that the developer hopes to build a "value driven" grocery store on the property.

"The owner is in his due diligence phase at this time," Buck said. "For this to work, he will need to see if he can plan an economically viable store and housing that will meet with approval of the

Unemployment higher among blind

The unemployment rate for the blind and visually impaired is around 70 percent.

Doug Raper, a business consultant for the Idaho Commission for the Blind and Visually Impaired, said there is a misunderstanding among some employers as to what a blind or visually impaired person is able to do.

Consumers are squeezed as inflation outpaces wages

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — American families were squeezed last year as their inflation-adjusted weekly wages fell 1.6 percent — the sharpest drop since 1990 — well below the 2.7 percent consumer inflation rate.

Consumers' spending power sank in the face of falling wages, job losses and higher prices for energy, medical care and education. Slack pay and scarce job creation are slowing consumer spending, hindering the economy's ability to mount a strong recovery.

A surge in energy prices last year offset the biggest drop in food costs in nearly a half century, the Labor Department's Consumer Price Index showed Friday. For December, the CPI rose a modest 0.1 percent. Excluding food and energy, prices were also up just 0.1 percent last month.

The 2.7 percent rise in overall consumer prices for 2009 followed a 0.1 percent increase in 2008, which had been the smallest gain in more than a half century.

Energy costs for the 12 months ending in December shot up 18.2 percent. That was the biggest jump since 1979, after they had dropped 21.3 percent in 2008. The energy surge was led by higher gasoline costs, which rose 53.5 percent after falling 43.1 percent in 2008.

Food prices swung in the opposite direction. After rising 5.9 percent in 2008, they fell 0.5 percent for the 12 months ending in December, the biggest drop since 1961.

Core inflation, which excludes the volatile food and energy categories, rose 1.8 percent for the 12 months ending in December. It matched the 1.8 percent rise in core inflation in 2008. Both gains were the smallest since a 1.1 percent rise in 2003.

Core inflation is expected

YESTERDAY ON WALL STREET

Verizon Wireless, AT&T lower voice plan prices

NEW YORK (AP) — The fight for cell phone users heated up Friday, as the country's two largest wireless carriers cut their calling plan prices.

Verizon Wireless, the largest cell phone carrier in the U.S., said early in the day that, starting Monday, it would start charging $70 a month for an unlimited monthly calling plan. The same plan previously cost $100.

This also brings down the monthly cost for users of the company's high-end smart phones like Motorola's Droid, which require a $30 per month unlimited data plan.

An unlimited data and voice plan will now cost $100, rather than $130.

Rival AT&T Inc., the nation's second-largest wireless carrier, responded late Friday by announcing some of the same price cuts. Starting Monday, it, too will charge $70 for an unlimited calling plan that had also been $100, and offer a $100 plan with unlimited voice and data for smart phones like Apple Inc.'s popular iPhone (also down from $130).

The latest moves in a long-running pricing competition between the nation's wireless carriers is not just leading to lower prices for some customers: It also shows that data use is becoming an increasingly important service for mobile carriers as they look to new sources of revenue from customers dependent on mobile access to e-mail and the Web.

In fact, with the latest round of changes, both companies are requiring more customers to buy the data plans used to access the Internet and check e-mail on high-end mobile devices.

The high-tech file storage system uses two secure environments at different, distant locations to preserve sensitive data in the event of natural or manmade disasters.

It is operational with servers in Jerome, San Francisco, Phoenix and Toronto.

"The information stored is not viewable in any form by anyone," Dahmer said. "Even our system administrator with our highest clearances to run the storage server cannot view any details about the customer's storage."

He said that is because customers' information is stored on two of four servers which is jumbled and encrypted, Dahmer said.

"This is cryptography. It's codes and ciphers," he said. "The reliability of this thing is incredible. We have 3,200 terabytes of disk space and we are invaded with customers," Dahmer said.

He said the system can update at speeds that are almost real-time, and the storage server has no knowledge of the transaction.

Dahmer said he and Kurn filed their provisional application with the U.S. patent Office in February 2008. A long process remained ahead.

Desperation grows in Haiti

Aid slowly arrives; U.S. military brings some relief

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Pushed to the far edge of desperation, earthquake-ravaged Haitians dumped decaying bodies into mass graves and begged for water and food Friday amid fear that time is running out to avoid chaos and to rescue anyone still alive in the wreckage.

The U.S. military brought some relief, taking control of the airport, helping coordinate flights bringing in aid and evacuating foreigners and the injured. Medical teams, meanwhile, set up makeshift hospitals, workers started to clear the streets of corpses and water was being distributed in pockets of the city.

But the task was enormous.

Aid workers and authorities warned that unless they can quickly get aid to the people, Port-au-Prince will degenerate into lawlessness.

There were reports of isolated looting as young men walked through downtown with machetes, and robbers reportedly shot one man whose body was left on the street. Survivors also fought each other for food pulled from the debris.

"I'm getting the sense that if the situation doesn't get sorted (out) real soon, it will devolve into chaos," said Steve Matthews, a veteran relief worker with the Christian aid organization World Vision.

Time also was running out to rescue anyone who may still be trapped alive in the many buildings in Port-au-

Prince that collapsed in Tuesday's magnitude-7.0 quake.

"Beyond three or four days without water, they'll be pretty ill," said Dr. Michael VanRooyen of the Harvard Humanitarian Initiative in Boston. "Around three days would be where you would see people start to succumb."

An Australian TV crew pulled a healthy 16-month-old girl from the wreckage of her house Friday — about 68 hours after the earthquake struck. In a collapsed house, neighbors and reporters heard a cry and found an air pocket: part of the top floor had been held up by a cabinet.

"I could see a dead body that was there, sort of on top of the cabinet; I could hear the baby on the left side of the body screaming," said David Celestino of the Dominican Republic, who had been working with the TV crew.

Although her parents were dead, Winnie Tilin survived with only scratches and soon was in the arms of her uncle, whose pregnant wife also was killed.

"I have to consider her like my baby because mine is passed," Frantz Tilin told The Associated Press.

As temperatures rose into the high 80s, the sickly smell of the dead lingered over Port-au-Prince, where countless bodies remained unclaimed in the streets. Hundreds of bloated corpses were stacked outside the city morgue, and limbs of the dead protruded from crushed schools and homes.

At a cemetery outside the city, trucks dumped bodies by the dozens into a mass grave. Elsewhere, people pulled a box filled with bodies along a road, then used a mechanical front-loader to lift the box and tip it into a large metal trash bin. South of the capital, workers burned more than 2,000 bodies in a trash dump.

The Red Cross estimates 45,000 to 50,000 people were killed. A third of Haiti's 9 million people may be in need of aid. As many as half of the buildings in the capital and other hard-hit areas were damaged or destroyed, according to the United Nations.

"There are going to be many difficult days ahead," said President Obama, speaking for the fourth time on the disaster in three days.

The effort to get aid to the victims has been stymied by blocked roads, congestion at the airport, limited equipment and other obstacles. U.N. peacekeepers patrolling the capital said popular anger was rising, warning aid convoys to add security to guard against looting.

"People who have not been eating or drinking for almost 50 hours and are already in a very poor situation — if they see a truck with something, or if they see a supermarket which has collapsed, they just rush to get something to eat," U.N. humanitarian spokeswoman Elisabeth Byrs said in Geneva.

Americans wait and plead to exit country

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Cradling babies and limping on crutches, hundreds of Americans waved their passports in the air and begged U.S. soldiers Friday to let them on flights out of Haiti's earthquake-ravaged capital.

As troops and supplies streamed into Port-au-Prince on military cargo planes, beleaguered American survivors of Tuesday's earthquake hoped for rides out after hours and days of waiting under the tropical sun.

"We've been standing since this morning and we've got no idea whether we will leave by the end of the day," said Stacy Obvien, 44, who was traveling with an Illinois missionary group.

U.S. soldiers in camouflage appealed to those waiting to remain calm as they sorted Americans from other foreign nationals at the airport. The work seemed without an immediate purpose: Few were able to leave.

Before dawn, some were able to make it out. Military aircraft flew about 250 U.S. citizens visiting Haiti for tourism, business, charity and family visits to New Jersey early Friday morning.

"From the time I got to Haiti, it was nothing but pure hell," said Mirlene Jacob, a 27-year-old from Philadelphia who was in Haiti for only a few hours before the earthquake hit.

Jacob came to attend her grandmother's funeral, only to see her father nearly killed by a collapsed wall. Her father was airlifted out for surgery, but Jacob and her family slept outside the U.S. Embassy for two nights before they could get home.

Against the odds: Survivors found in Haiti's rubble

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — She had already spent three days under the rubble, and by the time rescuers pulled the woman from the crumpled home, they told her crying relatives to dump her broken body with the other corpses on the sidewalk.

The family protested: She deserved better.

So a Mexican rescue worker leaned over and felt 19-year-old Josyanne Petidelle's throat. He looked up at her relatives.

"She's alive!" he shouted. "She's alive!"

Against increasingly high odds, search teams and rescue workers around Port-au-Prince found more victims still breathing under the rubble and collapsed concrete on Friday, the fourth day of recovery efforts after a devastating magnitude-7.0 quake that toppled countless homes and buildings.

British firefighters pulled a 2-year-old girl from a fallen building on Friday. Seven people were freed from the Montana Hotel Thursday night and Friday — including four Americans who were up and walking soon after being hauled from the wreckage.

Even an Australian television crew got in on the rescue efforts, digging out a healthy 16-month-old girl from beneath her destroyed hillside home about 68 hours after Tuesday's earthquake. The crew was about to film an interview when neighbors and reporters heard the toddler's cries.

"We had to break some walls," said David Celestino of the Dominican Republic, who was working with the TV crew. "We had a big hammer, we made a hole and she came out to the light. She basically walked out to me."

Experts say people trapped by the quake and without access to water will soon die.

"Beyond three or four days without water, they'll be pretty ill," said Dr. Michael VanRooyen of the Harvard Humanitarian Initiative in Boston. "Around three days would be where you would see people start to succumb."

Petidelle was discovered amid the sad resignation and stench of rotting bodies in the downtown neighborhood of Carrefour-Feuille. Her rescue sent shudders of excitement and hope running down the street, where crowds flocked to congratulate themselves on what they viewed as just short of a miracle.

Petidelle's father, boyfriend and neighbors had dug frantically for three hours after hearing shouts from under a collapsed concrete house.

When they finally reached Petidelle, they found her motionless, with her dress tattered and her skin bruised and caked in white dust. As flies buzzed around her open wounds, she kept her eyes wide open, staring into the empty without a blink.

Most neighbors thought she was dead and shifted their focus to a team of Miami firefighters who'd just arrived nearby. But relatives pulled her onto a battered old mattress and carried the makeshift stretcher the street to a team of Israeli and Mexican medics, who were for searching for dozens of students believed trapped under a flattened St. Gerard University building.

"We can hear their shouts, but for now we can't reach them," said Louis Alva, a Mexican volunteer rescue worker whose small team only worked with shovels and bare hands on Friday.

When the medics saw Petidelle on the mattress, they angrily told her relatives to take her down the road to where other corpses were lying in the dust. But her father and brother begged until one medic wearily leaned over the mattress and pressed two fingers against Petidelle's throat.

After a second's surprise, he cried out that the woman was still alive.

A handful of doctors and nurses flocked to the woman to drip water through her half open mouth and intubate her.

Petidelle eventually burst out with a loud screech of pain, which the medics viewed as a good sign.

Dov Maisel, a doctor who'd just arrived from Israel with the aid group Zaka, said she appeared to suffer from multiple internal injuries. Her condition would be assessed at Port-au-Prince's main hospital, he said.

"But I think she'll live," Maisel said, as relatives carried the woman away.

But Petidelle's ride to the hospital was a truck coated in blood piled with corpses, where she — wounded and covered in dirt — barely stood out.

One Haitian woman was found Friday near the Montana Hotel bar after a 17-hour operation by a search and rescue team from Fairfax County, Va. The first thing she asked for was a glass of wine, said Rebecca Gustafson of the U.S. Agency for International Development disaster assistance team.

Four Americans rescued there Thursday were in good shape, but a fifth American — found Friday — was flown out of Haiti. It wasn't known how many were still inside in hotel ruins, alive or dead.

"They're still searching for those who are surviving in this rubble. We're still in search and rescue mode," Gustafson said.

The British firefighters that rescued the 2-year-old girl were among six teams searching through schools and areas where there have been reports of survivors, Britain's Department for International Development said.

Telethon to appear on networks

NEW YORK (AP) — MTV is joining the major broadcast networks and several cable channels for an all-star telethon for Haitian earthquake relief on Friday.

A statement released by MTV Networks on Friday said "Hope for Haiti" will be shown at 7 p.m. MST.

Toast on the Hudson

Passengers, crew remember anniversary of water landing

By Samantha Gross Associated Press writer

Passengers, crew and family members, of the US Airways flight that had an emergency water landing in New York's Hudson River last year, celebrate with a toast on Friday.

Lucille Palmer, left, and Diane Higgins, center, of Goshen, N.Y., passengers on the US Airways flight that had a water landing in New York's Hudson River last year, reunite with flight attendant Sheila Dial on the anniversary of the incident, in New York, Friday.

NEW YORK — Crying, cheering and embracing, the survivors of US Airways Flight 1549 raised a toast to life Friday, marking the anniversary of their harrowing water landing with a return to the place their crippled jet hit the Hudson River. Hollering, they raised their glasses at 3:31 p.m., the moment of impact, on one of the ferries that plucked them from shivering from the water just minutes after they splashed down. With the sun gleaming on the Hudson and festive sprays of colorful water shooting into the sky behind them, they made the toast at the approximate place where the plane went down after a half-day of gatherings to mark their miraculous survival. In the extra year that no one expected they would have, the survivors have been coping with the trauma of their terrifying crash, but also discovering new gifts. One passenger, Jennifer Doyle, is pregnant. Karin Hill became Karin Hill Rooney when she married her boyfriend, who was sitting next to her as the plane went down. Another two, Ben Bostic and Laura Zych, strangers at the time of the crash, have fallen in love and begun dating. The year has also been a difficult one. Ann Oblak, who saw her 73rd birthday after surviving the crash, still sometimes has dreams of being on the plummeting plane. She and her husband

Warmed-up sea turtles are freed off Florida

JUNO BEACH, Fla. (AP) — They came in crowded trucks and left by flipper: Hundreds of endangered sea turtles are being released back into the Atlantic Ocean now that Florida's weather has warmed enough. Officials in the Sunshine State helped rescue nearly 3,000 turtles from frigid waters in the past week, plucking them from the ocean, lagoons and rivers as air temperatures dipped into the 30s along the coast. The turtles — which weigh up to 400 pounds — were found across Florida as the unseasonably chilly temperatures sent them into a cold stress, leaving them stunned and largely motionless, the perfect prey for predators. Now after about a week of treatment, including soakings in heated pools and oxygen therapy, turtles by the truckload are headed back into the wild. Tractor-trailer trucks full of turtles arrived Thursday at several Florida beaches, where the animals were hand-placed in the surf for their journey home. More were set to be released Friday. But even as hundreds of turtles were nursed back to health, the state continues to take in more sick ones, with about 500 turtles collected in recent days, said Meghan Koperski of the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission. At Loggerhead Marine-life Center in Juno Beach, a nonprofit that runs on donations, caretakers already have treated more than 45 sick turtles — about what they normally treat in a year. 'We've already exhausted our year's hospital budget in just the first two weeks of January,' director Nanette Lawrenson said of the $60,000 spent so far. Koperski said reports of endangered green sea turtles and some threatened loggerheads with a 'form of hypothermia' began about a week ago. 'All of their energy was going toward just keeping themselves alive, so they literally just floated in the water,' Koperski said.

Officials: U.S. kills FBI-wanted terrorist in Pakistan strike

DERA ISMAIL KHAN, Pakistan (AP) — A U.S. missile strike in Pakistan killed one of the FBI's most-wanted terrorists, a man suspected in a deadly 1986 plane hijacking with a $5 million bounty on his head, three Pakistani intelligence officials said Friday. The death would be the latest victory for the CIA-led missile campaign against militant targets in Pakistan's insurgent-riddled tribal belt bordering Afghanistan, a campaign that has recently escalated. One Thursday is believed to have missed Pakistan's Taliban chief. The intelligence officials said a Jan. 9 missile strike in the North Waziristan tribal region killed Jamal Sa'ed Abdul Rahim. The FBI's Web site lists him as a Palestinian with possible Lebanese citizenship. The Pakistani officials called him an al-Qaida member, but the FBI site says he was a member of the Abu Nidal Palestinian terrorist group. Rahim is wanted for his alleged role in the Sept. 5, 1986, hijacking of Pan American World Airways Flight 73 during a stop in the southern Pakistani city of Karachi, according to the FBI site. The hijackers demanded that 1,500 prisoners in Cyprus and Israel be released and that they be flown out of Pakistan. At one point, the hijackers shot and threw hand grenades at passengers and crew in one part of the plane. Some 20 people, including two Americans, died during the hijacking. Rahim had been tried and convicted by Pakistan, but he and three suspected accomplices were apparently released in January 2008. All four were added to the FBI list late last year. The FBI did not immediately respond to a request for comment Friday. The three Pakistani intelligence officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they lacked authority to speak to media on the record.

T.F. boys grind out win over Highland

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

In a go-to-work kind of game, Twin Falls found itself fortunate Brett Kohring brought his lunch pail.

With little going the Bruins' way in the first quarter, Kohring entered the game and scored all four of his points, providing a stabilizing force on the floor as Twin Falls found its step and worked out a 52-43 win over Highland at Baun Gymnasium on Friday.

Kohring had four rebounds, three of them on the offensive glass, to set the tone when Twin Falls desperately needed someone to put his stamp on the game.

"Coach (Matt Harr) wanted us to get a lot of offensive rebounds. That's something that I really love to do," said Kohring. "I think that helped us relax a little bit and get more aggressive, which put Highland on their heels."

Kohring came in when

Twin Falls senior Jon Pulsifer picked up an early technical foul for complaining that he was fouled on a rebound. Highland enjoyed its only lead of the game at that stretch, after Nate Hartman hit one of the Rams' seven 3-pointers to give them an early 3-2 lead.

Pulsifer came back to lead the Bruins (11-1) with 11 points, matched by Eric Harr, but he was quick to credit his fellow forward for showing leadership.

"Brett Kohring made the difference," Pulsifer said. "He gave us a spark and got the whole bench fired up. After that we were really ready to go out there and play as a team."

Avery Manu led the Rams (6-5) with 19 points in a game that was far more physical than the 28 total fouls indicate.

Every time Highland got itself back into the game, however, the Bruins

AS PEARCE GOES, SO GO THE JEROME TIGERS

RYAN HOWE/Times-News

Jerome senior Kameron Pearce is the leader for this season's Tigers.

By David Bashore * Times-News writer

JEROME — Opposing teams have picked their poison against Jerome the past few years. This year poison goes by one name: Kameron Pearce.

After two steady seasons at point guard, where he was more of a second or third scoring option, Pearce is the face of Jerome boys basketball this year. As the main man he can't just be a distributor; he's got to score 15 to 20 a night.

And everyone knows it.

"Last year teams would have to guard against the big three," Pearce said, referring to himself, Kevin Williams and Logan Parker. "This year, like (Burley coach Jack Bagley) said earlier, teams are trying to hold me to 10 or 12 points. They think if they control me, they control the team."

This season has been a case of the team going as Pearce goes. The Tigers yo-yoed through their first seven games, alternating wins and losses before hammering Bishop Kelly to break that trend. Heading into Friday night's game at Minico, the Tigers had won five in a row.

Pearce played badly for the first 3 1/2 quarters in a Jan. 8 game at Burley, by his own admission, during which Bagley game-planned to stop him.

Pearce took over in the final quarter and overtime to get Jerome the win.

"He just knows what to do in order to be the best player he can be and do what's best for the team at the same time," said Cameron Stauffer, Pearce's backcourt mate.

Pearce credits the ability to turn it on when needed to a better feel for the game and harder work this season.

"I was a little lazy at times (last season), and I looked on film and wondered why I was doing that," Pearce said. "But I've worked hard on my defense and I think my basketball IQ is better this year, knowing when to shoot and when to pass."

Tiger coach Joe Messick disagreed with the laziness assessment, though he'll never complain about a player seeing what he can do to become even better.

"I think it looks that way but it was really a situation where he didn't have to do certain things because we had so many great athletes," Messick said. "This year he knows he's the guy, and he's done a great job for us."

Pearce stepped into the limelight as a sophomore, when he singlehandedly forced overtime in the district tournament opener at Minico with a four-point play in the final minute and then a 12-foot jumper with 2 seconds left to tie the game.

Jerome lost the game, but a star was born. After that season Pearce forsook football and baseball in the hopes of

CSI women, men host CNCC

Turns out it's good to play at home.

After playing six straight Scenic West Athletic Conference games on the road, the College of Southern Idaho men and women returned home Thursday night to take wins from the College of Eastern Utah.

The victories ended three-game conference skids for both CSI squads, which are home today for dates with Colorado Northwestern Community College. The women tipoff at 3 p.m., with the men following at about 5 p.m.

Thursday night's men's affair between CSI and CEU started slowly, but turned into a classic, going to overtime before CSI took an 83-77 win.

"It was a great all-around win for our guys," CSI head coach Steve Gosar said Friday.

CSI (13-7, 4-5 SWAC) led on three occasions in regulation, but each was short-lived, as the host Golden Eagles were in front for only 55 seconds of clock time.

Chuck Odum's deflection and resulting break-away dunk off a pass from D.J. Stennis gave CSI a 78-75 edge in overtime that proved to be the difference.

"That was the one that kind of put us over the top," said Gosar.

In CNCC, the Eagles face a team that is more of a threat than its 1-15 (1-8 SWAC) record suggests. The Spartans played CSI to an eight-

RUPERT — Two of the hottest teams in Class 4A boys basketball collided at Minico High School Friday night. Visiting Jerome had won five in a row. Minico had won five of its last six. Both teams were unbeaten in conference — next Wednesday.

"It's going to be a dogfight," Hubsmith said of the Twin Falls game. "We're going to have to come out and play our best game this year."

The 32-minute display of physical, emotion-filled basketball lived up to the billing.

Jerome clawed back from a nine-point fourth-quarter deficit, but Minico hung on for a 48-43 Great Basin Conference victory.

"Minico-Jerome has never been a (friendly) rivalry, in any sport," said Minico's Shad Hubsmith. "We knew it was a big conference game and we knew it was going to be a battle. It goes back to last year when we got blown out almost every time we played them. Everybody was sick of it, so "I think this is a better win for us than a blowout win because you find out more about your team," said Minico coach Mike Graefe. "I was proud of our kids for battling through it."

Belgians' return bolsters competition Down Under

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — In her Grand Slam comeback, Kim Clijsters upset Serena Williams en route to claiming the U.S. Open title.

Williams was really, really upset in that semifinal last September and it cost her the match and a record fine.

Four months later, the return of another Belgian from a premature retirement has bolstered the field at the Australian Open and created a compelling women's draw in the year's first Grand Slam tournament.

Justine Henin, who has won seven Grand Slam singles titles and quit in May 2008 while holding the No. 1 ranking, is only one tournament into her comeback, but is hoping to emulate Clijsters' successful return to the majors.

Again, Williams is the defending champion.

While the men's champion at Melbourne Park is widely expected to come from the group of top five players led by Roger Federer, Rafael Nadal and Novak Djokovic — who've won the last three Australian titles — the list of women's contenders is growing.

Messick: "Our kids did a nice job battling tonight. We were extremely physical and aggressive on the defensive end. I'm extremely proud of our effort. It shows the resiliency that our kids have and it shows that we've gotten mentally tougher."

Jerome's comeback was capped by Cameron Stauffer's 3-pointer to tie it 43-all with 3:06 remaining.

But Hubsmith, who finished with 19 points and eight rebounds, answered with a bucket in the paint on the other end to give Minico a lead it never relinquished. The Spartans clinched it by converting 3 of 6 from the foul line in the final minute.

"We did all the little things to possibly win this ballgame," Messick said. "Unfortunately a few things went Minico's way at the end."

Jerome (8-4 overall, 3-1 GBC) got a game-high 23 points from Kameron Pearce, who scored seven straight during the Tigers' fourth-quarter rally. But Minico held Jerome's next highest scorer, Nolan McDonald, to just six points.

Kevin Jurgensmeier had 13 points and six rebounds for Minico and Mark Leon scored eight and grabbed five rebounds.

Rangely, Colo. "They're a dangerous club," said Gosar. "They've got a bunch of guards who can drive it and they like to play small ball."

CNCC is led by guards Jon Henderson and Terrance Tatum, who average 16.5 and 15.0 points, respectively. The Spartans will be short-handed today as guard Michael Russell and forward Dustin Welch complete a two-game suspension resulting from a Jan. 9 skirmish against Salt Lake Community College.

The CSI women are 13-6 and 5-4 in league play after their 65-54 win over CEU on Thursday. While CSI shot only 36.5 percent for the game, it snatched 17 steals and forced 29 turnovers.

There could be more of the same today against a struggling Colorado Northwestern squad. The CNCC women are 0-9 in SWAC games and just 2-13 overall, including a 76-58 home loss to CSI on Dec. 4. Markie Workman (9.0 ppg) and Tira Calloway (8.6 ppg) lead CNCC in scoring.

Notes: Today's other men's and women's SWAC contests include Eastern Utah at North Idaho and Snow College at Salt Lake.

earning a college basketball scholarship.

"I liked all sports. ... Basketball has always been my first love," Pearce said. "I decided to focus all my energy on one sport and see how far it could take me. It was hard not playing all those hours with my friends, but I knew I had to make a choice."

Two years later it's clear the 6-foot-4 guard made the right decision. Pearce helped lead the Tigers to a third-place trophy at the state tournament last season, and this year he will be the main reason Jerome makes it back, should the Tigers qualify.

His profile grew as part of the Boise Flite AAU team this summer, where he played with top Idaho players like Vallivue's Zach Kelsh and Skyview's Kyle Dranginis, a junior who has given a verbal commitment to Gonzaga.

Pearce too hopes to play at an NCAA Division I school, and he accepts that he might have to go the junior college route to achieve that. Pearce said he's heard from several Division II schools and junior colleges, including North Idaho College and the College of Southern Idaho.

Wherever he ends up, Pearce knows he must continue to hone his talent and improve his effort to achieve his dreams.

"He's going to have to get stronger and work on his shot and defense," Messick said. "But the sky's the limit for this kid."

Crawford's buzzer-beater lifts Hawks past Suns

ATLANTA — Jamal Crawford hit a long 3-pointer at the buzzer to cap an Atlanta comeback in the final seconds, giving the Hawks a 102-101 victory over the Phoenix Suns on Friday night.

The home team trailed 100-96 after Steve Nash hit two free throws with 10 seconds left. But Atlanta squeezed two more possessions out of the clock, and Phoenix missed a couple of chances to put the Hawks away.

The Suns failed to block out when Josh Smith missed the second of two free throws with six seconds to go, allowing Crawford to slip inside for the rebound. His putback made it 100-99.

Amare Stoudemire was fouled quickly and missed one of his free throws. After a timeout, Mike Bibby inbounded the ball to Crawford, who nailed a 28-footer over Jared Dudley.

Arenas pleads guilty to DC gun charge

WASHINGTON (AP) — Straightfaced and subdued, Washington Wizards star Gilbert Arenas pleaded guilty Friday to a felony gun charge connected to a locker-room argument, leaving his All-Star career in limbo and his freedom in doubt. Arenas won't know whether he must serve jail time until his March 26 sentencing and remains free until then. The government indicated it will not seek more than six months, although the judge can give Arenas anywhere from probation to the charge's maximum term of five years. He will remain free until then. Arenas did not speak to reporters on the way into D.C. Superior Court — only shaking his head when asked if he wanted to tell fans anything — or when he walked down the block to police headquarters after his 20-minute hearing. In court, Arenas was barely audible, offering mostly terse answers such as "Yes, your honor" or "No, sir."

O'Neal added 16 points and 13 rebounds for the Heat, who snapped Houston's eight-game home winning streak.

Richard Hamilton scored a season-high 32 points and Rodney Stuckey scored eight of his 13 points in overtime and Detroit beat New Orleans.

Detroit, which has won two straight after losing 13 in a row, also got 21 rebounds from Ben Wallace.

BOBCATS 92, SPURS 76

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Boris Diaw had 26 points and 11 rebounds, Gerald Wallace added 21 points and Charlotte used stifling second-half defense to beat San Antonio for its franchise-record sixth straight home win.

With Wallace collecting acrobatic blocks, the Bobcats took control with a dominant defensive stand that bridged the third and fourth quarters. The Spurs went more than 9 minutes without a field goal, and the Bobcats' 19-2 run put them ahead 70-57 and secured their sixth win in seven games overall.

76ERS 98, KINGS 86

PHILADELPHIA — Sam Dalembert made a $100,000 donation to help relief efforts in his native Haiti, then had 17 points and 12 rebounds to lift Philadelphia over Sacramento.

Thaddeus Young scored 20 points for the Sixers and Allen Iverson had 17. Dalembert made all seven of his shots and had three blocks.

PACERS 121, NETS 105

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Danny Granger scored 22 of his 28 points in a 72-point first-half blitz and Indiana earned its third straight win with a victory over woeful New Jersey.

Troy Murphy added 21 points and 14 rebounds, Brandon Rush had 15 points and Mike Dunleavy 14 for the Pacers. Roy Hibbert also had 12 points.

GRIZZLIES 135, TIMBERWOLVES 110

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Rudy Gay scored 21 points, Zach Randolph and O.J. Mayo added 20 apiece and Memphis won its seventh straight home game with a victory over Minnesota.

Rested Saints expect to keep pace with Arizona

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Sean Payton was the toast of New Orleans even before the Saints' storybook run to the NFC championship game in his first season as a head coach.

Fans were happy to have their team back and eager to embrace a coach who wanted to be a part of the rebuilding after Hurricane Katrina left entire neighborhoods in a state of lifeless, sagging, water-logged ruin.

Four years later, evidence of the widespread devastation is dwindling. Shattered windows and ripped up roofs have been replaced. Homes have been rebuilt. Long rows of flooded cars and countless fetid debris piles are gone from most of the city.

The Louisiana Superdome — a hot spot of sweltering, rancid misery for thousands who took shelter there during Katrina — is getting new champagne-colored siding to replace panels faded gray by decades of sun and dented by projectiles launched by the storm's fierce winds.

On Saturday, when the Arizona Cardinals visit for the divisional round of the playoffs, the dome will be a place countless thousands want to be, a place where home fans now gather to simultaneously celebrate their solidarity during the recovery and the greatness exhibited by Drew Brees and the rest of Payton's league-leading offense.

Cardinals at Saints

2:30 p.m., FOX

Expectations have gone up — a lot — and that's precisely what Payton envisioned when he took the job. Although New Orleans won a franchise-record 13 games this season, it will mean little if they flop in the playoffs.

"In the very beginning, when we got here, you're wanting to raise the expectation level and how we perform, and I think that when you get to where we're at now in the postseason, this is a place that we aspire to be every year," Payton said. "For this team, just getting in the postseason was part of the process, but it wasn't the end goal. I think the expectation level of this team and the organization has changed. And four years ago that's what we were looking to do."

The Superdome crowd was already sure to be juiced even before Payton, as if to add some extra zip, brought back franchise rushing leader and fan favorite Deuce McAllister on Friday. McAllister has been out of football for a year and will not play, but Payton said the 31-year-old running back would be an honorary captain.

Colts want to be sharp against Ravens after break

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Indianapolis Colts are trying to repress those old playoff memories.

Back in 2005, they were undefeated entering December, had a bye week in early January and a home date against the AFC's No. 6 seed (Pittsburgh), which had lost in the AFC championship a year earlier.

The Colts lost. On Saturday night, Indy faces the same scenario against another AFC North foe, Baltimore.

"That was 2005, and that was a completely different team," defensive end Dwight Freeney said. "It was a completely different defense. There's not much that needs to be said other than 'This is the playoffs! Either win or go home.'"

It's a simple philosophy the Colts (14-2) understand as well as any team still in the hunt.

Despite having the most successful decade in regular-season history (115 wins), an NFL record seven straight 12-win seasons and the league mark for most consecutive regular-season wins (23), Indianapolis has won just one Super Bowl title.

Critics contend they've struggled in the playoffs because those long, late-season breaks made them rusty.

This time, they're at least healthy. Not one player missed practice this week, a first this season.

Ravens at Colts

6 p.m., CBS

But the lesson is clear: Regular-season success, seeding and odds-makers mean nothing in the postseason. Being sharp does.

"Don't go out there and look like you haven't played a game in six months," receiver Reggie Wayne said when asked what the Colts learned from their early exits. "As long as you can just go out there and play football and play all four quarters, somewhere in there you'll have the opportunity to win the game."

A victory clearly would help the Colts change perceptions after two straight playoff losses, both to San Diego. Indy hasn't won in the postseason since beating Chicago in the Super Bowl after the 2006 season.

Baltimore (10-7), meanwhile, understands what it takes to be win playoff games on the road — a suffocating defense and a proficient running game.

That was the game plan Baltimore used to win its Super Bowl title following the 2000 season as a wild-card team. They won their first-round game again last Sunday, handing New England its only home playoff loss since 1978.

Ryan Palmer takes 1-shot lead at Sony

HONOLULU (AP) — Ryan Palmer tried to pretend that his good opening round in the Sony Open never happened. He played just as well Friday, closing with two birdies for a 4-under 66 that gave him a one-shot lead over some familiar company.

Having stumbled into an article about how defending champion Zach Johnson never looks ahead, Palmer stayed calm in an ocean breeze and surged into the lead at Waialae with a drive so big on the par-5 18th that he had only an 8-iron into the green for an easy birdie.

He was at 9-under 131, and among the group one shot behind was Chad Campbell, his neighbor from the Dallas suburbs.

They decided to escape the cold and head for the California desert to get ready for their season opener, playing two rounds together on courses used for the Bob Hope Classic next week.

The stakes are higher at the Sony Open, although neither let on who claimed the cash last week.

"Let's call it a push. It was give-or-take $5,000 on the last hole," Campbell said with a wink and a smile.

Campbell, who had a 64, is happy to be in Honolulu for reasons beyond the fact Waialae is one of his favorite courses. A year ago, he was on the plane to the middle of the Pacific Ocean when he realized he forgot to formally enter, and he had to turn around and go home.

Asked if he found that funny, Campbell deadpanned, "Not really."

A coincidence, at least? "More of an inconvenience," Campbell said.

They are part of a crammed leaderboard going into the weekend, typical of the first full-field event of the PGA Tour season, when pins typically are a little more generous to help get 144 players through the tiny property.

Johnson looked every bit the part of defending champion with eight birdies. He looked anything but that with one bad break on the 17th hole that led to a triple bogey. Feeling heavy sand under his feet from a deep bunker, he didn't realize there was hardly any sand at all until his ball sailed over the green into a plugged lie in another bunker.

Ryan Palmer waves to the gallery after finishing his second round at the Sony Open golf tournament, Friday in Honolulu.

Son of Georgia legend Dooley introduced as new Tennessee coach

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Derek Dooley has the Southern accent, the coaching pedigree and is doing his best to reassure Tennessee fans their new coach appreciates where he's now working.

"How can you ask for anything more than the University of Tennessee?" Dooley said Friday.

The son of Georgia legend Vince Dooley was introduced as the Vols' second new head coach in 14 months, replacing Lane Kiffin days after he bolted for Southern California. Among his first challenges will be reassuring fans and players that he wants to be at Tennessee.

"The times of worrying about what happened is over," Dooley said.

Dooley talked about how he learned early that Tennessee represented the essence of college football, and remembers watching the weekly television shows of former coaches Johnny Majors and Phillip Fulmer. He also promised he will not try to sell Tennessee in a sound bite, perhaps taking a shot at Kiffin, who was reprimanded by the Southeastern Conference for brash comments.

"Everything we're going to do is going to be done with a foundation of integrity with every aspect of the program," Dooley said. "We're going to represent this institution with class on and off the field."

Dooley was offered the job late Friday afternoon, resigned as coach and athletic director of Louisiana Tech, and flew into Knoxville for the late news conference. He brings along a son with a name popular in Tennessee — Peyton — just like Kiffin, who named his young son Knox after taking the Vols' job in December 2008.

Like his predecessor, Dooley comes with a short head coaching resume.

He went 17-20 in three seasons at Louisiana Tech and was the only coach in major college football to also serve as the athletic director. He holds a law degree and previously worked for several years under Nick Saban at LSU and with the Miami Dolphins.

Louisiana Tech appointed offensive coordinator Frank Scelfo to be its interim football coach and formed a committee to find a full-time replacement for Dooley.

KELLY ASKS IRISH PLAYERS TO BUY IN UNCONDITIONALLY

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — New Notre Dame coach Brian Kelly had a message for his players when they arrived back on campus this week for the spring semester: he doesn't have time to ask them to buy into his program.

"We didn't have time to have a big group hug. It was time to go to work," he said.

Kelly, hired last month to turn around a program that just completed the worst decade in its storied history, said the Irish already are behind teams that went to bowl games and got extra practices. He asked players to buy in unconditionally to what he and his staff are telling them.

His message: "Have some faith and go to work."

Kelly led Cincinnati to a 12-0 regular-season finish before taking the job at Notre Dame, which fired Charlie Weis after the Irish went 6-6 in the regular season for a second straight year. Kelly said he knows what is expected for a school that last won a national title in 1988.

"This is about winning championships, and that's why we're here," he said.

ARIZONA TE TO SKIP SENIOR YEAR AND TURN PRO

TUCSON, Ariz. — Arizona tight end Rob Gronkowski will skip his senior season and declare for the NFL draft.

The 6-foot-6, 265-pound Gronkowski missed all of last season after back surgery. He said Friday that he received clearance from the surgeon who performed a microdiscectomy on his back on Sept. 24.

Drew Rosenhaus will represent him.

STAR UCLA K FORBATH RETURNING FOR SENIOR YEAR

LOS ANGELES — UCLA kicker Kai Forbath is returning for his senior season.

Forbath won the Lou Groza Award as the nation's top kicker last season, and was a second-team AP All-American. He made 28 of 31 field goal attempts, including all 25 from inside 50 yards.

Royalty receives Navy award

Navy Petty Officer Christopher Royalty, who was recently promoted to HM3, was recently named Naval Hospital Camp Pendleton (Calif.) 2009 Bluejacket of the Year.

The hospital corpsman is responsible for processing and dispensing more than 360,000 prescriptions annually with less than 0.01 percent error rate. He implemented new standards of organization, leading to enhanced tracking and increased accuracy, while expanding the current scope of care to the brig.

He volunteered 90 off-duty hours to cover undermanned shifts to ensure mission accomplishment. Royalty initiated the removal of more than 200 return-to-stock refill medications per week, freeing up a substantial amount of space in a limited workspace. Royalty trained four newly reported pharmacy technicians, five Program School Input (PSI's) and three 8404 corpsman in outpatient procedure, enabling them to become productive members of the pharmacy. Along with his Bluejacket of the Year Award he has mitment to education and personal growth.

What gives with two-lane right turns?

Q: If you come up to a stop light with two right-turn-only lanes, is it legal to turn right from the left-most turn lane? I've always thought it was illegal because you actually have to cross a lane of traffic.

A: First off, this answer is based on an interpretation of rules of the road I couldn't find. With that in mind, I couldn't find anything in Idaho law that would keep you from turning right from a the left-most lane of side-by-side right-turn-only lanes.

What I found was Idaho code 49-802-3(b), which reads: "Except when a sign is in place prohibiting a turn, a driver after stopping, facing a steady circular red signal, may turn right, or turn left from a highway onto a one-way highway after stopping. Vehicular traffic shall yield the right-of-way to pedestrians lawfully within an adjacent crosswalk and to other traffic lawfully using the intersection."

I believe this would allow somebody to turn right from the left right-turn-only lane. That is, of course, unless there's a sign posted that bars right turns on red. As you might know by now, when it comes to government, there are always exceptions.

Q: Can you drive 25 mph in a school zone when school is out for vacation, etc?

A: The answer depends on how the school zone is set up. It can also depend on the officer patrolling the school zone.

Most school zones are in effect from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., when kids are either arriving at school, in school or leaving school. Whether or not school is in session doesn't matter, unless the posted school zone is specifically not in effect during certain times. Did I confuse you yet?

Simply put, if there's

POLICEMAN DAN

nothing specifically stating when a school zone isn't in effect, then the school zone speed limit is the speed limit. I'd add, however, that an officer writing tickets for school-zone speed violations in the summer might hear from the judge as well as the plaintiff.

Officer down

For those of you who e-mailed, this includes last week's officers down. Please put these officers, killed in the line of duty, and their families in your prayers. God bless them all.

- Officer Maylon Thompson (Tommy) Bishop Jr., Guntersville Police, Alabama

- Deputy John Bernard, Grant County Sheriff, Washington

- Special Deputy Marshal Stanley W. Cooper, U.S. Government

- Deputy Josie Greathouse Fox, Millard County Sheriff, Utah

- Cpl. James J. Szuba, Mishawaka Police, Indiana

- Officer Alfred Celestain, New Orleans Police

- Trooper Duane Dalton, Louisiana State Police

- Officer Craig Story, Arlington Police, Texas

- Trooper Paul G. Richey, Pennsylvania State Police

Even though fewer officers lost their lives on duty in 2009, 120 officers were killed while serving last year. Let's hope 2010 sees a lower total yet.

Be safe, I'll be back next week. E-mail questions to policemandan@yahoo.com.

Dan Bristol is the Heyburn chief of police.

What type of health care provider is the best?

DEAR DR. GOTT: I recently switched jobs and had to move to a new state. I also switched insurance to the one offered by the company I work for because it is more cost-efficient for me. My problem now is that I have to pick a new health care provider. I was given a book that lists all the available providers in the area that accept this insurance, but the list is quite extensive. I noticed that there are also several types of providers: MD, DO, APRN, NP and PA. I know that an MD is a typical medical doctor, but I don't know what any of the others are and wonder if they are perhaps a better choice.

ASK DR. GOTT

DEAR READER: Because of space restrictions, I will be able to provide only general overviews of what each professional is, what he or she can do and how to decide which best suits your medical needs.

First, the MD. Medical doctors are by far the most common type of health care professional. They include general practitioners, pediatricians, urologists, psychiatrists, neurologists, pulmonologists and other types of specialists.

They all are able to diagnose, treat, correct and give advice and prescriptions for any human disease, deformity, pain, injury or other condition, both physical and mental. MDs tend to break the body down into parts and treat each separately. They may have a private or group practice, or work in a hospital or teaching facility, and some may work within a health maintenance organization (HMO) or public health organization.

Next is the DO, or doctor of osteopathy. They are similar to MDs, but rather than treating symptoms or specific illnesses, they treat the patient as an integrated whole. Osteopathy tends to emphasize the role and manipulation of the musculoskeletal system in order to treat diseases.

Both medical doctors and doctors of osteopathy have similar training. Both must attend four years of undergraduate school to receive a bachelor degree. Typically, medical schools prefer to admit those who have a strong undergraduate emphasis on basic sciences, such as physics, chemistry and biology.

MDs then go on to standard medical school. DOs go to osteopathic school. Both are four-year programs. Upon graduation, both receive degrees (either MD or DO), but neither can practice on his own.

Next is residency. Depending on which specialty is chosen (such as internal or emergency medicine, pediatrics, family practice and more), this step can take from three to seven years. In this phase, medical students learn to work with patients and treat them in real medical situations. Upon completion, the students are required to become licensed in the state in which they wish to practice. The MD and DO licensure examinations are different, but comparable.

Next is an optional fellowship program in which those physicians wishing to specialize further can. These subspecialties include gastroenterologist, child or adolescent psychiatry or cardiology. If a subspecialty is not chosen, the physician can choose to enter the medical workforce.

A physician's assistant (PA) is just as it sounds. These are people who are not physicians, but after appropriate education and training are able to work with an MD or DO to aid in diagnostic, therapeutic, preventive and health-maintenance services.

The final category is the APRN (advanced practice registered nurse). There are four major groups of the APRN, including nurse

In a gender shift, more moms become breadwinners

By Hope Yen
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The number of working moms who are the sole breadwinners in their families rose last year to an all-time high, and the number of stay-at-home dads edged higher, in a shift of traditional gender roles caused partly by massive job losses.

The number of moms who were the only working spouse rose for the third straight year, according to Census Bureau figures released Friday. The number of dads who were the only working spouse dropped, and the number of stay-at-home dads ticked higher.

The figures are for married couples with kids under 18.

"Women are really stepping in and helping families stay afloat. The question is whether men are stepping up and picking up the slack around home," said Kristin Smith, a family demographer at the University of New Hampshire.

In most households with moms as breadwinners, both parents were working until the husband was laid off or retired, and the wife remained in her job. In other situations, a non-working wife may have rejoined the labor force, in a growing industry such as teaching or health care, to sustain the family income after the husband was let go.

By the numbers, about 4 percent or 963,000 moms were the only parent in the labor force. The share of fathers as the sole worker was much bigger — 28.2 percent or 7.3 million — but still the lowest since 2001. The share of couples who both work stayed the same at 66 percent or 17 million.

There were 158,000 stay-at-home dads, up from 140,000 in 2008. Still, the number is less than 1 percent of married couples.

The recession's toll has been harder on male-dominated industries such as construction and manufacturing. There are also longer-term cultural changes at work, too, as more women earn college degrees and the better job opportunities they bring.

"The economic crisis is heavily affecting families, and what the latest data show is that gender roles are flexible and are going in the direction of egalitarian roles," said Pamela J. Smock, a sociology professor at the University of Michigan.

She said the shifts could have lasting effects after the economy rebounds, as people become more accustomed to the roles of breadwinner moms and stay-at-home dads.

Smith sees a continued reliance on wives as breadwinners, "particularly if we see a jobless economic recovery like we did after the 2001 recession."

Her research on working moms found that employed wives last year contributed to 45 percent of total family earnings. That was up from 44 percent in the previous year, the large single-year increase in the last decade.

practitioners (NPs), clinical nurse specialists (CNS), certified nurse midwives (CNM) and certified registered nurse anesthetists (CRNA).

These practitioners can work in nearly every setting a physician can. In some states, they are able to write prescriptions. Some work in clinics without physician supervision, while others work together with doctors as a health care team. How they choose to work and what authority they have depends on the particular state in which they work.

All APRNs have training beyond the four-year nursing degree. Some may continue on to a doctorate in nursing. (This can be slightly confusing because the person can then be referred to as doctor because of his or her status as holding a Ph.D.; however, he or she is not a medical doctor.)

To get at the real heart of the matter, I believe any of these health professionals is capable of providing you with appropriate medical advice and treatment. Which type you choose to use is a personal decision, but it should not be your only concern. You will be best served by finding the person among those available with whom you feel the most comfortable. I suggest you ask your co-workers and friends their opinions of the available providers and then set up "get acquainted" visits with each of those who appeal to you. You will then be able to choose your primary-care provider.

'Mission To Be Happy'

By Andrew Weeks • Times-News writer

After a career that spans three decades and includes film direction, theatrical productions, book releases and more than 30 albums, Michael McLean is learning to be happy.

He's learning not only through the big and fantastic, he said, but in small ways.

"I thought happiness would come someday 'after,'" the popular LDS songwriter told the Times-News — "after a really good song was released, or if I made movies for years or, in a cosmic sense, if maybe I lived a righteous life, maybe I'd go to the next life and get some kind of reward. Then I'd be happy.

"But I was missing it. Life is about how I can be happy today."

McLean — who has written such songs as "You're Not Alone," "Together Forever," "If Only You Believe in Yourself" and "Hold on, The Light Will Come" — recently released his newest project, a book/CD combo called "Mission To Be Happy."

Its mission: to help readers and listeners find happiness in daily life.

In a candid phone interview Tuesday, McLean, who has ties to Magic Valley but lives in Heber, Utah, said: "I'm probably the perfect guy to write 'Mission To Be Happy,' because I've struggled with finding happiness ... I'm a middle-aged, clinically depressed, Type-2 diabetic. I've known dark times."

That might come as a surprise to fans of the 57-year-old McLean, who during the 1980s emerged as one of the most popular songwriters in the LDS church. His fame, which stretches beyond Mormon circles, grew in the 1990s when he introduced his holiday musical "The Forgotten Carols." His resume also includes directing a number of inspirational films such as "Nora's Christmas," starring Celeste Holm, "Our Heavenly Father's Plan" and "The Prodigal Son"; he wrote the latter two, among others. He also produced "Mr. Kruger's Christmas," which starred movie legend Jimmy Stewart.

His accomplishments came without a college degree.

He abandoned school after his wife was seriously injured in a car accident; and his stints at Brigham Young University and the University of Utah were eye openers, when professors told him he didn't have much musical talent. He pursued the music inside himself anyway and broke into the LDS spotlight in 1983 with his song "You're Not Alone."

"A half-million women in the church connected with this song, which gave me the chance to release an album and share my views of the world," he said, noting that each of his songs have a personal connection. He believes many of them have been heaven-inspired.

"I love the writing most of all, that's the best part of my job," he said. "I never believe that songwriters own their songs. I just think they've heard them first."

Later albums, released through Salt Lake City-based Deseret Book Co., included "Celebrating the Light," "Distant Serenade" and "The Forgotten Carols," the latter two also released as book/music combos.

"Mission To Be Happy" is different. It's an upbeat, motivational project with music that includes an anthem and even a rap sequence.

"Yeah, that's my mastery of an old white guy rapping," he said, laughing. "But it cracks me up, so that's OK."

If anything, "Mission To Be Happy" is fun.

McLean, who is witty and quick to acknowledge the good in others, doesn't consider himself a singer as much as a songwriter, but he shares his voice on the new CD. And he's not afraid to share his experiences with depression, hoping that others will be inspired. Citing "The Chosen" author Chaim Potok, McLean said: "From the Travis Turner and his wife, Tina, pose with their three children. Turner is the new pastor of Grace Community Church in Rupert.

M-C church installs new pastor today

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

Members of Grace Community Church in Rupert will officially welcome their new pastor today.

An installation ceremony will be held at 2 p.m. to welcome Travis Turner, who will lead the 65-member church.

"It's kind of like a marriage," Turner said of the installation process.

Speakers will address the importance of pastoring and church relationships, before the church board passes the baton to Turner as the congregation's new leader. The community is invited to participate in the ceremonies.

Turner, who was born in Twin Falls, juggled time between Idaho and Oregon while growing up. After high school in 1990, he served in the Marines for four years. In '95 he moved to Boise, where he met his wife, Tina. The couple have three children.

Turner, 38, comes to Rupert from Caldwell, where he worked as a youth/young adult pastor at Valley Pentecostal. For the past six months or so, he's traveled to Mini-Cassia to speak at Grace church — which he describes as non-denominational but with Pentecostal roots.

"I'm very excited," he said. "There's a great bunch of people in the church and I'm excited to get to know them better."

Members are excited about their new pastor.

"We were ready to have an aggressive, forward-looking pastor. He's basically a perfect fit," said church member Bob Dempsey. "It was one of those things where all things fell into place as they should. It was a match made in heaven."

Two verses of Scripture stand out in Turner's mind, he said — Matthew 28:18 and John 3:17.

"I think that's good news. There's a lot of people that could find comfort and peace in that," he said of the latter verse.

"My goal is to really get involved in the community, to take the church outside of its four walls. ... My heartbeat is about serving people, serving the community and inspiring people to become everything the Lord has called them to be."

WEEKEND EVENTS

An installation ceremony welcoming Pastor Travis Turner will be held at 2 p.m. today at Grace Community Church, 100 N. Meridian Road, Rupert. The community is invited to attend.

At 7 p.m. Sunday the church will host guest speaker Darryl Carnley, senior pastor of North Pole Worship Center in North Pole, Alaska.

Churches post billboards to spark religious discussion

ANDREW WEEKS/Times-News

A group of 14 Magic Valley churches have joined for a billboard campaign that aims to spark religious discussion among congregations and others. The billboards, which will be in place through early February, look like this one posted along Washington Street South in Twin Falls.

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

If January has a theme, it might be Jesus.

That's what area church leaders are hoping after a set of billboards went up early this month across the Magic Valley that read, "Jesus Asked, 'WHO DO YOU SAY THAT I AM?'"

Ten billboards are located in Burley, Filer, Jerome and Twin Falls. It's the first set of religious-themed billboards to go up in the valley this year — but hopefully not the last, said Mike Smit, director of ministries for Twin Falls Reformed Church.

Another set might go up around Easter time, he said. The current billboards will be in place through early February.

The billboard campaign is sponsored by 14 area churches that want to spark more discussion about Jesus.

"It's to create the conversation of who Jesus is, get churches united around a common theme, and help congregations engage the conversation in culture," Smit said.

So far it seems to be working; people are starting to talk, he said.

The campaign brings churches together while at the same time allows them to bring their own emphasis, said David Callen, chairman of the campaign committee.

Some churches are going beyond the billboard campaign. A few are making brochures to hand out, others are producing T-shirts with the billboard's question.

"Each church will be able to use the campaign differently to fit their ministries and what they want to do in the community," said Callen, a member of Magic Valley Evangelical Free Church in Jerome.

While most of the discussion so far has involved participating churches, participating members say they hope the campaign will spark discussion among others in the community.

Hispanics flock to Pentecostal churches

By Jeff Kuerth
The Orlando Sentinel

ORLANDO, Fla. — The back wall of the sanctuary of the Iglesia Cristiana Pentecostal Church of Orlando in Pine Hills, Fla., is lined with the flags of the Hispanic congregation: Puerto Rico, Brazil, Dominican Republic, Honduras, Venezuela, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Cuba, Haiti and Texas.

The flags speak to the spread of Pentecostalism throughout the world and, in particular, Latin nations. The Pentecostal faith, which holds that the miracles of the Bible are still happening today, is proliferating among Hispanics, many of whom are former Catholics.

"It's a combination of immigration in which a lot of Latinos are already Pentecostal and the conversion taking place in the Catholic Church among those converting to Pentecostalism," Luis Lugo, director of the Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life in Washington, D.C.

Worldwide, Pentecostals represent one of the fastest-growing religious movements, fueled in part by the Hispanic brand of worship that is highly emotional, very intense and extremely personal, Lugo said.

"It's really evangelism on steroids," Lugo said. "This may well be the most dynamic religious movement in the world today in terms of growth and breadth and scope."

That growth is evident at Iglesia Cristiana, which began 23 years ago with seven families and now has 200, said Rene Eugene Baez, the pastor. The Pine Hills church has started congregations in Clermont, Winter Garden, Haines City and DeLand, Fla.; New Orleans; and El Paso, Texas. It has also sponsored Pentecostal churches in Nicaragua, Honduras and Puerto Rico.

Pentecostal churches are largely independent and unaffiliated. They lack the structure, tradition and rituals of religious denominations such as Catholics, Baptists and other Protestant churches.

In Baez's church there is a schedule to the services — music, announcements, sermon, collection — but there are no prayers repeated every Sunday, the music is always different, and the service itself is dictated more by whim and instinct than established ritual.

"There isn't any pattern. There isn't a procedure. We don't believe in that," he said. "When you come to our church you don't know what is going to happen. The experience will always be different."

Some of the Pentecostal growth has come at the expense of the Catholic Church. The majority of Hispanics in the United States are Catholic, but their numbers are expected to decline from 68 percent in 2006 to 61 percent by 2030, according to a study on how Latinos are transforming religion in the United States by the Pew Forum and the Pew Hispanic Center.

The study found that of those who converted to Pentecostalism, 43 percent had been Catholic.

Bishop Thomas Wenski of the Catholic Diocese of Orlando concedes the defections of Catholic Hispanics to Pentecostal churches, but says many of those were Catholic more by culture than religious conviction. In some Latin American countries, where the influence of the church has waned, Hispanic Catholics are more open to seeking other religious experiences.

The challenge for the Catholic Church, Wenski said, is to give those cultural Catholics a meaningful religious experience as well.

HISPANIC RELIGIOUS AFFILIATION IN THE U.S.

Evangelical:	15 percent

Other Christian:	3 percent
Secular:	8 percent
Don't know:	1 percent

Source: "Changing Faiths: Latinos and the Transformation of American Religion," a study by the Pew Hispanic Center and Pew Forum on Religion & Public Life.

One way the church is doing that is to create small-group organizations of Hispanic Catholics that serve as cultural and religious support groups for immigrants and new arrivals.

"Here in Orlando, we are trying through these Hispanic groups and spiritual movements to evangelize the Hispanic so that his religion is not just one of culture, but conviction also," Wenski said.

Daisy Rodriguez said she left the Catholic Church for the greater freedom of religious expression within the Pentecostal faith. Rodriguez, who joined Baez's church four years ago, said she began experiencing faith healing and speaking in tongues while still a Catholic but felt ostracized by priests and other members of the church.

"I have beautiful experiences in the Catholic Church, but there were limits," said Rodriguez, 68, who is from Puerto Rico. "In the Pentecostal Church, I feel more freedom to perform what the Lord wants me to do."

What is Evangelism?

Evangelism involves spreading the Gospel to nonbelievers. In the United States, the majority of evangelicals are not Pentecostal. In many Latin American countries, most evangelicals are Pentecostal.

What is Pentecostalism?

Pentecostalism places an emphasis on a direct personal experience of God through the Holy Spirit, revealed through the speaking of tongues, faith healing, divine visions and miracles. Pentecostalism exists throughout the world, but is strongest in Latin America.

What is the charismatic movement?

Within the Catholic Church, the charismatic movement incorporated elements of Pentecostalism including speaking in tongues, faith healing and visions. According to the Pew Center, 54 percent of Hispanic Catholics identify themselves as charismatics.

Controversy hits pope's Rome synagogue visit

Some angered at push to make Pope Pius XII a saint

By Ariel David
Associated Press writer

ROME — Pope Benedict XVI's planned visit to Rome's main synagogue on Sunday has sharply divided Italian Jews, with some angered by his moves to push World War II Pope Pius XII toward sainthood.

Some Jews and historians have accused Pius of not doing enough to stop the Holocaust.

A top rabbi and at least one other prominent community member have announced they will not attend the synagogue visit in protest. And the tension, which comes on the heels of other mishaps in Jewish-Catholic relations, has raised fears of demonstrations, although both sides insist they will not let the event be marred by controversy.

Jewish leaders from around the world have traveled to Rome for the German-born Benedict's third visit to a synagogue as pope after seeing ones in Cologne, Germany, and New York.

He will be following in the steps of his predecessor, Pope John Paul II, who became the first pontiff to set foot in a synagogue when he visited the monumental synagogue in Rome near the Tiber River in 1986.

"It will be a meeting of peace, friendship and mutual respect," said Rome's chief rabbi, Riccardo Di Segni. "But above all it will be an example of how to coexist even if he have differences."

But Rabbi Giuseppe Laras, head of the Italian Rabbinic Assembly, told the Corriere della Sera daily on Thursday that he will not be at the synagogue because he felt that such a step on Pius so close to the visit was a "less than friendly" gesture.

Cardinal Walter Kasper, the top Vatican official in charge of relations with Jews, said "problems and difficulties will be open until the last day of history," but "the visit will not speak about the problems, but about what we have in common."

Last month, Benedict sparked outrage among some Jewish groups by signing a decree on Pius' heroic virtues, paving the way for him to be beatified once a miracle attributed to Pius' intercession is confirmed.

Pope Pius XII

Beatification is the last formal step before possible sainthood. The process has been going on for decades, and the Vatican says Pius' faith and virtues were greater than those normally expected from faithful, making him a model of Christian life.

Some Jews and historians have argued that Pius, pope from 1939 to 1958, was largely silent on the Holocaust and should have done more to prevent the deaths of 6 million Jews at the hands of the Nazis and their collaborators. Among the victims were more than 1,000 Roman Jews who were deported in 1943 from the old Ghetto neighborhood by the synagogue, across the river from the Vatican.

Piero Terracina, one of about a dozen survivors of the deportation, said he would not attend Benedict's visit.

"I am convinced that if that pope had come out, had made a single gesture, the Roman Jews would not have been deported, but that didn't happen," Terracina was quoted as saying by Corriere.

The Vatican insists Pius used quiet diplomacy to try to save Jews and that speaking out more forcefully would have resulted in even more deaths.

December 2009 Pope Benedict XVI declares Pius XII "venerable," moving him closer to sainthood despite objections of Jewish leaders who say Pius turned a blind eye toward the Holocaust reporters this week, reiterated the Vatican's position that the beatification was an "internal question of the Church" and had to do with the "spiritual judgment" of Pius, not his historical role.

Before entering the synagogue, the German-born Benedict is expected to pause in the adjacent square where the Jews were rounded up for deportation.

Rabbi Arthur Schneier, who hosted Benedict's New York synagogue visit in 2008, said he respects those made uncomfortable by the beatification moves, but told The Associated Press that "one should not be paralyzed by the past, one has to move on."

Other disputes that have strained Jewish-Catholic relations include Benedict's rehabilitation of a Holocaust-denying bishop last year and his 2007 decision to revive the old Latin Mass, which includes a prayer for the conversion of Jews.

Schneier, a Holocaust survivor who converses in German with Benedict, noted that in each case the pope and the Vatican had sought to issue clarifications or correct mistakes, showing that Benedict was acting in good faith.

"I don't think the pope would deliberately bring about missteps and then find himself correcting them," Schneier said.

Courageous kindness

I was the assistant director for our high school production of "The Diary of Anne Frank." As I recall, my job was to flirt backstage with the girls in the cast and to sound like a really scary Nazi pounding on the door at the end of the show.

I was pretty good at that first job — backstage flirting was one of the primary things that drew me from sports into drama. But I think I was only marginally successful at the second job. My voice has never been what you would call "threatening." Back then, telephone callers to our home were still confusing me with my sister. So I didn't exactly strike terror into the hearts of our audience members as I pounded on the door offstage and shouted "Aufmachen die tür!" I probably sounded more like a crackly voiced teenager confirming your order at Der Wienerschnitzel.

It was years before I started to think about the story of Anne Frank and her family as something other than a great way to spend time in a darkened theater with beautiful young actresses. In college, I was required to read the book upon which the play is based, and I was touched by young Anne's poignant telling of the story of a Jewish family coping with the horrific realities of their life in Nazi Germany. I was incensed by the cruelty of an oppressive regime and inspired by the courage of those who did the best they could with the life they were forced to live in hiding.

Through the years, my perspective on the story has changed a little. In high school, Anne was clearly the star of the show. Her optimistic nature in the face of such extraordinary evil is heroic. When she writes: "In spite of everything, I still believe that people are really good at heart," and you know that just three weeks after she wrote that she and her family were captured, and eight months later she died at Bergen-Belsen — well, it's pretty much awe-inspiring, especially to a teenager.

As a young father I found myself looking at the heroism of Otto and Edith Frank, Anne's parents. I can't even imagine how hard it would be to see so much horror swirling around you and to try to keep your faith and your family together, doing whatever you have to do just to get through each day. Nor can I comprehend how it must have felt when father Otto, the only member of the family to survive the holocaust, read his daughter's diary and was reminded of her joyful spirit and brilliant potential.

But lately I've been thinking about Miep Gies, the Dutch-born woman who risked her own life to hide and protect the Frank family. As a Christian, Miep was not in the same situation as the Franks. She worked for Otto and was a friend of the family, but there was no risk to her from the German authorities until she decided to help hide the Franks. Only then was her life in danger — because she chose to help her friends. While the Frank family hid in an unused room in Otto's company office, Miep was among a handful of trusted souls who provided them with food, water, clean clothes and information. And when the family was finally captured, it was Miep who found the pages of Anne's diary and preserved them, eventually delivering them to Otto.

When I learned of Miep's passing last week at 100 years of age, I found myself asking the same question I have asked numerous times through the years: do I even have it in me to be such a friend? To risk that much, to care that much, to give that much for others? I'm not sure I do. But I'm inspired by Miep and others like her who have stared cruelty and tyranny right square in the face and overcome it with courageous kindness and audacious benevolence. The world was, and is, and ever will be a better place because of them.

And not just because of the backstage possibilities.

Prayer requests keep church volunteers busy

By Jessamy Brown

FORT WORTH, Texas — Throughout the day, when others are working, eating and sleeping, teams from Calvary Cathedral International church in Fort Worth, Texas, are at prayer.

Volunteers pray for the church, nation, its leaders and the world all day, every day in its Power Tower ministry, which started in May 1995.

Church members known as "pray-ers" sign up for two-hour weekly shifts, taking over from the previous team on duty. Every day, 120 to 150 people call in to ask for prayers. Callers will pray with the volunteers on the phone or leave the request to be prayed over later, said Stephen Arbo, Power Tower director.

The church's electronic billboard — very visible to drivers on Interstate 35W just north of downtown — touts the prayer service, and people are responding.

More than 664,000 prayer requests have been submitted from around the world by phone, fax or Internet, church officials say. Requests tend to center on three areas: physical,

"We receive every type of request, people whose hearts are heavy or broken. People living life," said Calvary Cathedral Pastor Bob Nichols. "For us, it is a part of what God has called us to do."

Arbo said people often call while they are in the middle of a crisis.

They might be experiencing relatively small problems — they're late for work or they've lost their keys — or full-blown emergencies.

"We've had people on the scene of accidents where it looked like someone might die," said Arbo, who does about 12 shifts per week. "We are definitely there to be encouragers for people, to be that anchor in the middle of a storm. When you pray for people, it does give them hope, it does give them peace."

During each two-hour "prayer watch," the teams also offer prayers for the president and vice president, service members overseas and missions around the world.

Over the 24-hour cycle, prayers are said for the United States and its government, including senators and members of the House of Representatives, Supreme Court justices and members of the president's Cabinet.

The project started in a tower inside the church's former building on West Fifth Street in downtown Fort Worth. That site was destroyed in the tornado that tore through the city in March 2000.

The volunteers kept up the prayers at their homes while the church regrouped, eventually building a new campus downtown on Oakhurst Scenic Drive in 2003.

Bishop: S. Dakota synod won't split

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) — The bishop of the South Dakota Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America says seven congregations in the state have taken initial steps toward leaving the country's largest Lutheran denomination over its policy to allow gay clergy.

The Rev. David Zellmer says he also has been asked to lead the entire synod into a new denomination. But he says that won't happen, no matter his own misgivings about the decision.

Zellmer says this is not the first time he has been upset with the church, but he has never wanted to leave.

ELCA convention delegates in August voted to lift a ban prohibiting gay and lesbian pastors who were not celibate from serving as clergy.

The new policy will allow such people to lead ELCA churches as long as they are in committed, lifelong relationships.

Robert Lynn Stacey

KIMBERLY — Robert "Bob" Stacey passed away suddenly on Saturday evening in his daughter's arms. He is now in the arms of his loving wife of 48 years, Kaye.

Bob was born Aug. 18, 1934, to Robert and Lois Boulter Stacey, the first born son of seven children. He was raised in Rigby and Lorenzo, where he started working at a very young age for his father's contracting business. He joined the Navy in 1955 and retired from the Navy Reserves in 1987 as a chief petty officer. He attended college at Rexburg and Moscow, getting his engineering degree. He was an engineer for the government, retiring from the Kimberly Research Center in 1987.

Bob married the love of his life, Kaye Radford Woods, on Aug. 18, 1961. She brought to this union "her boys," Greg, Jeff and Bret Woods, who he loved and raised as if they were his own. In 1962, they welcomed their only daughter, Bobra McRoberts. In 1979, Philippines exchange student, Gladys Go Martins, became their second daughter and, in 1981, Wally McRoberts joined the family as the "favorite son-in-law." They lived in Rigby, Salmon, Boise, Moscow, Twin Falls and finally, in 1969, settling in Hansen to raise their children. They moved to Kimberly after the kids were grown and it was here that they both got their wish to pass away in their home, Mom on Oct. 30, 2009, and dad quickly followed on Jan. 9, 2010. This broke their family's heart to lose them both so close together. Bob enjoyed the outdoors, camping, fishing, hunting, canoeing, gold mining, rock hunting and riding motorcycles. He loved to travel and see the ocean.

Bob is survived by his children, Greg (Jeannette) Woods, Jeff Woods, Bret (Casey) Woods, Bobra (Wally) McRoberts and Gladys Go Martins; his sisters, Patricia and Marva Jo; brothers, Reed (Laura), Reece and Brent Stacey; his grandkids, Greg, Travis, Melissa, Justin Woods, Heather (Doug) Heward, Tristen, Scott Woods, Corey Woods, Michele (Kenny) Hatke, Auston McRoberts and Madison Martins; along with nine great-grandchildren; in-laws, Ria Beth (Keith) Brown and Bernard (Linda) Radford; several beloved nieces and nephews; and his very special companion, Sugar. He is preceded in death by his wife, Kaye; his parents, Robert and Lois Stacey; his in-laws, Elmer and Reta Radford, and his sister, Darlene Miller.

A memorial for both Bob and Kaye will be at later date in Rigby, Idaho.

Roberta Jean Dunham

INKOM — Roberta Jean Dunham, 73, of Inkom, passed away unexpectedly from hypertensive heart disease Monday, Jan. 11, 2010, in San Jose, Calif., while on a vacation where she was visiting friends and relatives.

Roberta was born April 24, 1936, in Gooding, Idaho, the third of six children. She grew up in Gooding. As a young person her interests leaned toward arts, crafts and sewing. She also had an interest in guns and was adept at shooting a rifle. She was also very talented musically. After graduating from high school she joined the Women's Army Corps known at that time as the WACs. She was stationed at Fort McClelland near Anniston, Ala. Her main duty in the Army was playing the French horn in the WAC Band. A highlight while she was in the Army was marching in the Eisenhower Inaugural Parade.

After being discharged from the Army, she returned to Idaho, where she worked at various jobs throughout the state, mostly drawing up land plats for the various title companies. She moved to Inkom in about 1991, where she lived until the time of her death.

Roberta was a multifaceted person. She had the reputation in the area as an expert upholsterer. She did beautiful woodworking and every piece she made was unique. She loved sports, music and making hand-made gifts of all kinds for her numerous friends. She loved to go boating and sharing her pontoon boat with her friends and family. She loved animals and had various large dogs throughout her life.

Roberta was preceded in death by her parents, William D. Dunham and Margaret Leland Dunham; and one brother, Jon E. Dunham. She is survived by brothers, William L. Dunham of Wasilla, Alaska, and Charles S. Dunham of Pocatello; and sisters, Margaret A. Gest of Lava Hot Springs and Linda Bolton of Twin Falls; and many nieces and nephews.

Her wishes were that there would be no memorial service. Her remains will be interred at the family plot in Buhl at a later date.

When he was discharged from the military, Wayne moved to Eden, Idaho, where he met the love of his life of 57 years, Charlotte, as he was getting off the train. Wayne worked at the Barlow Bean Warehouse in Hazelton for 30 years. He then retired and surrounded himself with all the enjoyment retirement brings. Wayne greatly enjoyed being with his family, fishing, hunting and camping.

Floyd Allan Finney

KIMBERLY — Floyd Allan Finney, 73, passed away Wednesday, Jan. 13, 2010, of cancer at his home in Kimberly, Idaho.

He was the eldest child of Floyd A. and Evelyn (Skeels) Finney and was descended from Woodland founding pioneers Austin and Sarah George. Floyd graduated from Kamiah High School in 1954 and then attended the University of Idaho for one year, participating in Navy ROTC. He was a Navy veteran before working for the Boise Police Department for 10 years. During these years, he formed a lifelong friendship with fellow policeman Don Holman.

Floyd or "Allan" or "Finney" married Doris Miracle in 1956. They were later divorced. They had two children. In 1980, Floyd married Deanna Lasure and acquired three stepchildren. They also raised two grandchildren, Jayde and Ryan Graham. Finney spent most of his working life as a bartender and was very proud of being "One of the Best." He acquired so many great friends and customers who rallied around him and came to his aid when he became ill. Honesty and integrity were just a couple of his many fine qualities.

Surviving Finney is his wife, Deanna of Kimberly; sister, Audrey (Dick) Spence of Woodland; son, Fred of Oregon; daughter, Yvonne (Jim) Van Sickle of Kimberly; stepson, Brent Lasure of Kimberly; and stepdaughter, Lori Williamson of Twin Falls. Also surviving are 13 grandchildren and one great-grandchild. His parents; infant sister; brother, Kenneth; and stepdaughter, Jana, preceded him in death.

A memorial service will be held at 1 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 21, at the Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home, 2551 Kimberly Road in Twin Falls. A celebration of Finney's life will be held following the service at the Log Tavern, 401 Fourth Ave. W. in Twin Falls. Cremation and private inurnment are under the direction of the funeral home.

Elva Mae Felton

Elva passed away at 4:30 p.m. Tuesday Jan. 12, 2010, at the Twin Falls Care and Rehabilitation facility in Twin Falls. She will be dearly missed by many in the community. After her stroke in late November, it was a study decline until her death.

She was preceded in death by three sisters and two brothers; her husband, James A (Bud) Felton; and her oldest son, James A. (Jim) Felton Jr. She is survived by one son, William D. Felton; two granddaughters (whom she dearly loved) Jackie Felton of Castle Rock, Colo., and Andie Martersteck of Ogden, Utah; and a great-grandson, Dusty Hartman of Ogden, Utah.

Elva was born Nov. 3, 1913, to William and Susan Cox of Malta, Mont. At the age of 4, she moved with her family to Hominy, Okla., where she finished her high school education. She graduated in 1931, at which time she and her mother drove out from Oklahoma to settle in Filer, Idaho, with the rest of her family. She met and married Bud Felton from Kimberly on April 6, 1936. They then settled in Hansen, where their first son Jim, was born. From there, they moved to Rupert, where their second son, Dennis, was born. Shortly after his birth, they moved to Jerome, where Bud managed the bean warehouse. In 1951, they moved back to Rupert, where both sons finished their high school education.

Elva was always very active. She belonged to a bowling league and golfed while in Rupert. But golfing was her true love. She spent many an hour at Muni knocking that little white ball all over the place. In her later days, she was also active in bridge playing. She was the oldest member of the Muni's Woman's Golfing Association for many years until she was forced to give up golfing at the young age of 91. She was active in many fraternal organizations and civic clubs throughout her life. She was an active member of Eastern Star No. 39 in Rupert and No. 29 in Twin Falls, Daughters of the Nile and Zenobia Club of Twin Falls.

As per her request, there will be no viewing, only a graveside service at 11 a.m. Monday, Jan. 18, at the Twin Falls Cemetery. Arrangements are under the direction of White Mortuary "Chapel by the Park" in Twin Falls.

AROUND THE WEST

IDAHO

Lawmakers approve more funds for N. Idaho cleanup

BOISE — The Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee has approved spending $8.2 million more in federal funds this year to cleanup residential yards in the Coeur d'Alene Basin contaminated with mining waste.

The committee unanimously approved the plan Friday that will allow cleaning up 200 additional yards in the Silver Valley this year by June 30.

Work crews are ahead of schedule and have already cleaned up 500 properties that were scheduled to be done this year.

The money comes from $3.2 million in federal economic stimulus funds and $5 million in remediation funds from the Environmental Protection Agency.

Approval of the spending next has to go through the Idaho House and Senate, but it's expected to pass following the unanimous vote of the committee.

Court rules against online tobacco seller

BOISE — The Idaho Supreme Court has rejected an appeal by an online cigarette marketer who claimed his company was immune from state laws regulating tobacco sales.

The unanimous decision issued Friday affirms a lower court ruling in a lawsuit filed by the Idaho Attorney General in 2006 against Scott B. Maybee, who sold millions of cigarettes to Idaho smokers through Smartsmoker.com and Ordersmokesdirect.com.

In the original lawsuit, the state claimed Maybee, a Native American from New York, was violating state laws requiring cigarette peddlers to register with the state and pay a fee to the state. The laws were passed in the wake of the national tobacco settlement in 1998.

Maybee claimed Idaho laws don't apply because he's protected by federal interstate and Indian commerce laws.

The justices disagreed and awarded attorney fees and costs to the state.

Ex-state senator injured in car crash

CANYON COUNTY — Former Idaho state senator Atwell Parry is in critical condition at a Boise hospital after a car crash.

Canyon County Sheriff's Office deputies say the long-time legislator and his wife were traveling north on Highway 45 Thursday when he lost control on an icy patch. His vehicle left the road and smashed into an earthen embankment.

Deputies say Parry's wife wasn't injured. Both had been wearing seatbelts.

The Melba resident was taken by air ambulance to Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center.

Man pleads guilty to Power County escape charges

AMERICAN FALLS — One of two inmates who briefly escaped from the Power County Jail last October has pleaded guilty to charges stemming from the incident.

Rodolfo Ortega pleaded guilty Thursday to kidnapping, escape and battery upon certain personnel.

He is scheduled to be sentenced on March 11.

The other inmate involved in the escape, Gilberto Delgado, was arraigned Thursday morning on three counts of injury to jail property. He pleaded not guilty.

Police say the two escaped after punching a female prison guard, taking her jail keys and locking her in a small library.

WASHINGTON ST.

Suspect in WSU hit-and-run found incompetent

PULLMAN, Wash. — Doctors have found an Idaho driver accused of striking two Washington State University students with his car incompetent to stand trial.

Whitman County Prosecutor Denis Tracy says 31-year-old Daniel Noble will stay at Eastern State hospital for an additional 90 days. A judge ordered Noble to the hospital on Dec. 10 for a mental examination.

Noble, a financial analyst in the University of Idaho Trust and Investment Office, was charged last month with two counts of vehicular assault, two counts of hit-and-run and one count of resisting arrest.

The two struck pedestrians, Neil Waldbjorn, 19, of Malaga, Wash., and Hogun Hahm, 23, of Pullman, each suffered a broken leg and have been released from the hospital.

WWW.MAGIC VALLEY.COM/ CLASSIFIEDS

DEAR ABBY: My wife, "Jana," and I have been married 15 years. She's the love of my life. I can't imagine living without her. We have three beautiful children, successful careers and a nice home. We have a great relationship, and I trust her completely.

Before we dated, Jana ran with a fast crowd. She was also somewhat promiscuous back then. Don't get me wrong, there are things from my past that I'm not proud of, either. But it bothers me that her "adventures" exceeded mine.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

We went to Jana's class reunion last fall, and I met several friends from her past. Each guy I met, I couldn't help but wonder if he had slept with my wife. I know about some of her old boyfriends, but not all.

I think Jana knows this bothered me, but she doesn't know how much. I literally became nauseated thinking about her past. After almost 20 years of dating and marriage, I thought I'd be over it. Should I press her for more details or just live with the knots in my stomach?

— CURIOUS GEORGE IN LOUISVILLE

DEAR GEORGE: Neither. After 20 years of dating and marriage, it's time to grow up. You have a happy, successful marriage — so why are you wasting time obsessing about the distant past? If you have digestive problems, discuss them with your doctor or a therapist. But to ask your wife for a scorecard at this late date will be counterproductive, and I doubt that it will fix what ails you. And in the future — skip the reunions.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 12-year-old girl who attends a private middle school. When I go to school, I see girls my age wearing a little bit of makeup. When I try to sneak off to school with a little bit on my face, my parents wipe it off and say I'm beautiful just the way I am, although I disagree. Abby, I will be 13 next month! I'm absolutely positive that I can handle makeup without going overboard. But when I say it to my parents, they still forbid me to wear or buy any. How do I convince them that I'm mature enough to handle this?

— NOT IMMATURE IN NYC

DEAR NOT IMMATURE: Your parents regard you as their little girl and may be hoping to keep you that way for another year. One of the hallmarks of maturity is being honest with your parents. If you want to convince them that you're mature enough to handle makeup, perhaps you should consider not sneaking out of the house wearing any. Prove to them that you can be trusted, and they'll have faith in your judgment — and I'm not just talking about makeup.

DEAR ABBY: I was being arguing with my husband over something, and I hope you can settle it once and for all. When he gets out of the shower, he leaves the curtain open. I prefer to keep it closed because I think it looks nicer to see a closed shower curtain in the bathroom.

My husband insists it should stay open to make sure the tub dries. I think the tub will dry regardless, since the air can flow over the curtain rod, and the curtain will become moldy if it's all crunched up. Who is right?

— STEAMY IN TEXAS

DEAR STEAMY: I did some checking, and was told by a major hotel chain that its housekeeping staff leaves the shower curtains pushed to the side (open) so air can flow through. However, those curtains are laundered frequently.

I also contacted the bed and bath department of a national department store chain, and the manager suggested leaving the curtain halfway open in the middle of the shower — open at both ends — to allow the air to circulate. That may be a satisfying compromise to both of you.

IF JANUARY 16 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Where your grasp of business matters is concerned, you are running on all cylinders and can step on the gas. Between now and March, your popularity may rise like a rocket and romance and relationships may come into sharper focus. You might hum the tune "Don't Fence Me In" when someone grows too close in February, but at the same time you could entertain the thought of a permanent commitment. If you are uncertain about which way to turn, wait until August when your decisions will be based on good judgment and anything promised will be fulfilled.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The cold shoulder only turns your way if you try to rush a romance into being before its time.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The proof of a busy person might be a messy desk, but the proof of an efficient one might be a clean desk with everything filed away.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You might reject the trend of minimalist spending and adopt a more self-disciplined outlook. Consumption can cause unhappiness.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): If you spend too much time on a sideline or spend too much money, you might blur the fine line between a business and a hobby.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The person you hope to charm, wine and dine might have complicated business views that, if adopted, may precipitately cause an upset.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): In the face of numerous temptations, it is refreshing to close the purse strings and deny yourself a pleasure.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may tire of relationships that make you a comparison shopper. You might impulsively take on an unwise financial obligation.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Tame your impulses. If you try to do everything all at once, you likely to find that you do nothing well at all.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be patient this weekend. Although you have a great deal of energy and enthusiasm, you might not have all the facts.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It better to opt for targeted expenditures than to impetuously throw money into the hat and hope for the best. Avoid investments.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Find a way to crush a short-term problem without creating a long-term obligation. Avoid using your credit card.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Break free of constraints without breaking the bank. You could be inspired to try your hand at something new this weekend.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"I could have stemmed misfortune's tide, And borne the rich one's sneer,— Have braved the haughty glance of pride, Nor shed a single tear."
— Anna Peyre Dinnies

Declarer sees that six diamonds is cold if the trumps break 2-2 or 3-1. He should therefore plan to do what he can against a possible 4-0 split. The first move is to lay down the diamond king, as he can pick up four trumps if the length is in West's hand, but not if in East's. Since the missing trumps include the jack and 10, declarer must lay down the honor in the hand with one high trump to be able finesse twice if necessary.

When the 4-0 split is revealed, the next move is for South to give up a heart, hoping to guess the suit if possible. The plan is to establish the North hand by ruffing two hearts and eventually discarding the other on South's fourth spade. Entries must be manipulated so that trumps can be led twice through West, picking up his guarded jack, and South can be left with an eventual re-entry.

Accordingly, South wins the club lead, cashes the diamond king, then leads a heart. East wins and returns a club, which South wins. South leads a trump to dummy and plays back a heart to ruff with the eight or nine.

South leads another trump and repeats the finesse. He exits dummy with another heart, ruffed with his last trump. A spade puts the lead back in dummy and the last trump is drawn. Declarer can claim the rest, pitching North's heart loser on the good spade.

ANSWER: Although most experts play responsive doubles (meaning that a double of a bid-and-raised suit in response to their partner's double is for takeout), this situation is not parallel. Spades have not been raised; hence, the double shows defense to spades, typically four cards or more in that suit. So pass and find out more about what is going on.
