Nearly 500 Twin Falls kids celebrated Martin Luther King Day by walking into an at Lincoln assembly Elementary School carrying chains - "kindness chains."

The project coincided with the observance of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, but the chains originated from a project called "Rachel's Challenge," part of the "Kindness and Compassion Clubs" organized by the family of Rachel Scott, a student who died in shootings. When somebody does something nice, the recipient makes a chain link and connects it to a larger chain. Theoretically, it will set off a "chain reaction" of niceness.

Otter aide: Progress made on saving Parks and Rec

BOISE - Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's budget chief says the Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation may survive, after all.

Wayne Hammon, Division director, met with Parks Director Nancy Merrill in recent days and came away optimistic she's making headway on finding ways to save $4.5 million annually, improve customer service and keep parks open.

Hammon says, "Those are the three challenges we gave her — and she's making great progress?"

Otter had proposed moving oversight of Idaho's 30 state parks to the Department of Lands and sell parks headquarters east of Boise.

But that plan had run into a possible roadblock: When the Harriman family donated ground in eastern Idaho to become Harriman State Park, they demanded the state first have a professional parks service to manage it.

Idaho Dems close caucus meetings

BOISE - Democratic lawmakers in the Idaho Capitol plan to caucus in secret, just like their Republican colof Financial Management leagues, in a move they say is designed to maximize their effectiveness.

According to a press release on Monday, the new rules take effect immediately for House and Senate Democrats.

For minority years, Democrats — they hold just 18 House seats and seven seats in the Senate – have allowed members of the public, including reporters, into their meetings.

Last year, however, House Democrats closed at least two caucus sessions to reporters. Now, the party's lawmakers in both chambers are following through with a rule banning outsiders from listening in on their discussions about strategy and priorities.

More of your neighbors can't put food on the table

f you've got a job and can provide for your family, it's easy to forget how many southcentral Idahoans can't.

A New York Times survey of food stamp use published Monday contained some eyeopening statistics about Idaho counties.

Twelve percent of Jerome County residents – that's 2,456 people — now rely on food stamps, an increase of 75 percent in two years.

Our view:

Fourteen

percent of your neighbors don't to eat — or without the

help. That's ernment's

able.

wouldn't have enough

In Twin Falls and Minidoka counties, it's 11 percent, or 7,250 people. That's a 72 percent rise since 2007 in Twin Falls County and a 43 percent increase in Minidoka. Food stamp use in Cassia County is 10 percent of the population, or 2,135 folks. That's up 36 percent in two years. Gooding County has seen a 78 percent increase in demand since 2007. There, 9 percent of residents are on food stamps, or 1,286 people. Surprisingly, the biggest increase came in affluent Blaine County -150 percent in two years, to 652 residents.

In all, 14,188 south-central Idahoans are food stamp recipients - and the U.S.

Department of Agriculture estimates another 10,700 qualify but haven't applied.

These aren't welfare mothers, by and large; they're the working poor. And they include married couples, the newly jobless and workers whose reduced hours or meager wages leave pantries bare. The average benefit per person: $96.95 a month, according to the Henry J. Kaiser Family Foundation.

What does that mean for the rest of us?

- Economic development must do more than attract jobs; it must seek jobs that pay a living wage.
- Counties, cities, school districts and other taxing entities need to remember that some property owners - disproportionately the elderly - are living very close to the margin during the Great Recession.
- South Central Community Action Partnership, the churches and the private organizations that supply food to the hungry across south-central Idaho need the public's help year-round, not just during the Christmas season.
- The more the governor and the Legislature cut the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare's budget — and the number of its employees — the harder it is for the hungry to get the help they need.

By the federal government's definition, one in seven of us doesn't have enough to eat — or wouldn't without food stamps.

That's not just the working poor's problem; it's the community's.

New question: Can colleges afford you?

n these agonizing months between the completion of college applications and the arrival of the first envelopes in the spring, many high school seniors and their parents are speculating about whether the economic downturn will harm their chances of admission to one of the nation's top colleges and universities. And a few well-to-do parents I know have even confessed their hope that hard times and declining endowments may have improved their children's chances of admission, as colleges look for full-paying freshmen.

Steven Brint

Before the recession, most of America's wealthiest and most selective colleges and universities were following policies designed to increase the numbers of low- and moderate-income students on their campuses. First, they evaluated applications without consideration of parents' ability to pay, a practice known as "need blind" admissions. Second, if students qualified for financial aid, many of these colleges promised to meet their full demonstrated need.

But while about two dozen of the country's top-tier colleges and universities - schools such as Harvard and Princeton, Williams and Amherst are maintaining these policies and expanding their financial commitments to low- and moderate-income students, at schools just below this tier, admissions are becoming more "need aware." These schools are now making some admissions decisions with an eye to an applicant's ability to pay, and some are unofficially reserving new seats for those who can pay full freight.

Meanwhile, the top public universities are moving to enroll larger numbers of out-of-state students, therefore tend to be wealthier than in-state students.

Of course, wealthy families have always enjoyed an advantage at the top colleges. In the 1950s, Arthur Howe, the admissions director at Yale, calculated that at least two-thirds of Yale's students would need to pay their full way for the university to meet its financial obligations. Today, many institutions provide scholarship aid to more than a third of their incoming classes but those admitted are, as a group, still much wealthier than the general population. SAT scores are strongly correlated to family income, so an admissions policy that favors high scores means a large proportion of students whose parents can pay $50,000 a year. High-income families can also support activities, such as playing violin tions with a need-blind with the city orchestra, that make for impressive applications.

Still, in recent years the top three to four dozen private colleges and universities tried to enroll diverse classes and to meet the financial needs of all their students. This wasn't cheap - by the early2000s, tuition had become who pay higher tuition and so expensive that even families earning as much as $180,000 a year were qualifying for financial aid grants – but, in the boom times before the economic crisis, when endowments were growing by as much as 8 percent a year, institutions could afford it. The situation has changed. As C. Anthony Broh, a higher-education consultant, said the combination of recent endowment losses, declines in annual giving and increased need among applicants has placed extraordinary strains on institutions just below the top two dozen. These colleges and universities, he said, "would like to follow the same practices as the top tier, but cannot afford to do it anymore."

Tufts University's experience offers a prime example. The admissions committee began deliberaapproach, but when 95 percent of the class was full, it had to stop. Tufts had spent its entire financial aid budget. With 850 folders to go, the school could admit only the applicants who could pay full fare.

Meanwhile, the top public universities are admitting more out-of-state applicants, who pay higher tuition than in-state students and are not eligible for state-funded financial aid programs. At the University of Michigan, upper-division students from elsewhere pay about $37,000 in tuition - only afew thousand dollars less than at a top private university.

Elsewhere, a few private institutions continue to work hard to increase their proportion of students from low- and moderateincome families.

"The big national question is: What do you do to make great education accessible to talented students whose families are not wealthy?" Amherst President Anthony Marx said. "As a country, we have moved in the opposite direction. We won't see the full damage for a generation, and by that time the leaders and politicians who made the prior choices will be long gone."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

It's time to stand up for our freedom

In 1966, Robert Welch, founder and president of the patriotic, pro-constitutional, anti-communist John Birch Society, made these prophetic predictions concerning the elitists' drive to make us slaves in a tyrannical world government:

- 1. Destruction of religion and morality;
- 2. Indoctrination of socialism through education, media, churches and entertainment;
- 3. Getting a large percentage of people dependent on a government check

- to live; 4. Increasing government handouts and welfare to many groups and individu-
- 5. Increase the unaccountable bureaucracy under the executive branch (the presidency);
- 6. Convert our representative republic to a democracy that James Madison said was the worst form of government:
- 7. Divide the country along race, color and income; the haves versus the have nots;
- 8. Federal government takeover of education, business and law enforcement;

- 9. Promote undeclared wars where we trade freedom for security;
- 10. Increase government control over every aspect of our lives through bureaucratic regulations;
- 11. Give up national independence to the pro-communist United Nations; and
- 12. The bottom line is to convert the United States to Third World status so that we can merge into a world government.

Robert Welch was correct! However, he and the John Birch Society were smeared for exposing the truth of the plans to destroy our great republic which have nearly come to pass. Fortunately, we still have our Constitution and Bill of Rights, but they need to be reinstated to protect our God-given rights.

How long will you stand aside? Take a stand for freedom! Get informed at www.jbs.org and www.thenewamerican. com and get involved to preserve liberty under our God-inspired U.S. Constitution.

Five myths about terrorists

y now, more than eight years after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, we should be better at plucking a terrorist out of an airport security line. After all, we have some idea of what he'll be like: young, socially alienated and deeply religious. And he'll come from a country like Afghanistan, Algeria, Cuba, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Libya, Nigeria, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, Somalia, Sudan, Syria or Yemen.

Or will he? What if he comes from Northern Virginia, like the five young men who were arrested in Pakistan and accused of planning "terrorist activities"? The bottom line is that we can no longer assume that terrorists fit any particular profile.

1. Most terrorists are spoiled rich kids. Many prominent jihadists are indeed well off and well educated. Umar Farouk Abdulmutallab, the suspect in the failed Christmas Day airline bombing, comes from one of the wealthiest families in Nigeria. After the 2001 attacks, much was made of the engineering backgrounds of some of the hijackers, and Osama bin Laden famously hails from a wealthy family with close ties to the Saudi royals.

But terrorists come from all socioeconomic backgrounds. Of the 25,000 insurgents and terrorism suspects detained by U.S. forces in Iraq as of 2007, nearly all were previously underemployed.

2. Al-Qaida members come from repressive countries in the Middle East.

Al-Qaida's core organization, which was responsible for the Sept. 11 strikes, is now based in Pakistan, but terrorist organizations claiming to be its affiliates include North Africa's al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb, Jemaah Islamiah in Indonesia and al-Shabab, which is fighting in southern Somalia and has been recruiting Westerners.

The organization also has a more amorphous following of independent cells and individuals around the world. It is almost impossible to target or quantify them because it isn't centralized in any one location.

Nor is there a political system that reliably promotes or deters terrorism. There are many more terrorist incidents in democratic India than in non-democratic China or Saudi Arabia.

3. Al-Qaida is made up of religious zealots.

To the contrary, rankand-file terrorists who claim to be motivated by religious ideology often turn out to be ignorant about Islam. The Saudi Interior Ministry has questioned thousands of terrorists in custody about why they turned to violence, and found that the majority had only a limited understanding of Islam. According to Saudi officials, one-quarter of the participants in a rehabilitation program for former jihadis had criminal histories, often for drugrelated offenses.

In Europe, second- and third-generation Muslim youths are rebelling against what they consider the culturally contaminated Islam that their parents practice, favoring instead the allegedly purer Islam that they discover online or via imams from the Middle East. But the form of Islam they turn to is often highly unorthodox. For example, the Hofstad group in the Netherlands — a network of radicalized young Muslims practiced a do-it-yourself Islam cobbled together from Web sites and the teachings of a self-taught Syrian imam who is also a former drug

4. Terrorists are motivated by a strong belief in their cause.

Terrorist movements often arise in reaction to a perceived injustice, but operatives are often more interested in adopting a new identity than in supporting a terrorist group's stated goals. Many speak, in particular, about being motivated by a feeling of humiliation. A Kashmiri militant founded his group because, he said, "Muslims have been overpowered by the West. Our ego hurts ... we are not able to live up to our own standards for ourselves."

The reasons that some people become terrorists are as varied as the reasons that others choose conventional professions: market conditions, social networks, contact with recruiters, education and individual preferences. And a terrorist's motivations for staying with his cause can also change.

5. The typical terrorist recruit is an alienated loner. Abdulmutallab, the alleged Christmas airplane attacker, wrote in an online Islamic forum: "I have no one ... to consult, no one to support me and I feel depressed and lonely. I do not know what to do. And then I think this loneliness leads me to other problems."

But for most terrorist recruits, the problem isn't so much a lack of friends as the wrong friends. This dynamic isn't so different from the way gang recruiting works in the United States: Terrorists often join an armed struggle because they have a buddy who has done so.

Ultimately, some individuals may join terrorist groups out of a misplaced desire to transform society. But over time, terrorists want to better their own circumstances at least as much as they want to change the world.

What the GOP can learn from bad pizza

his is one of those rare moments when the conventional wisdom in Washington is right. The Democrats are poised to have a bad year: the only argument is over how bad it will be. And that question rests on whether or not the Republican Party crafts an agenda voters will support.

So far the GOP has shrewdly been the "party of no." Since I disagree with so much of the Obama-Pelosi-Reid agenda, I happen to think that "no" is the correct position on the merits. But that's not the point. Saving "no" has worked because that's what most Americans say, too.

The trick for the GOP is to figure out what it will say yes to. Republicans are a bit like the Democrats in 2006 and 2008. Americans were sick of Bush and the Republicans back then, so they threw their support behind the Democrats by default. The Democrats over-read this support as a sweeping mandate for their agenda.

This has given the GOP an opportunity many Republicans feared just a year ago might not come for a generation.

Now comes the hard part: seizing the opportunity. Fortunately, I'm not a political consultant. But if I were giving my two cents — and whaddya know? I am! - I'd tell the GOP to look not to Reagan in 1980 or Gingrich in 1994, as so many pundits suggest.

I'd look to Domino's in 2010.

You may have seen the commercials or the fourminute YouTube video touting the iconic pizza-delivery chain's reinvention. But if you haven't, Domino's new campaign can be summed up easily enough: "We blew

Focus groups and consumer surveys revealed something pretty much evervone outside of Domino's has known for vears: Their pizza stinks. It tastes as if aliens tried to copy real pizza but just couldn't capture its essence. In their four-minute video (search YouTube for "the Pizza Turnaround") executives, employees and chefs at the same dish. That's not a the company confront their harshest reviews head-on. They talk about how much it hurts to hear that their product "tastes like cardboard" and is worse than microwave pizza. But they admit the truth and commit themselves to starting over with more flavor, better crusts, and cheese that doesn't taste like discount weather caulking. Domino's says that the American palate has improved, and they want to update their recipe to take account of that fact. The appeal of the campaign should be obvious: honesty. Domino's admits they lost their way, and they want a second chance. They're confronting the criticism head-on rather than denying it. Obviously, the analogy to the GOP isn't perfect. For example, last I checked, Domino's didn't get bogged down in an unpopular war.

But the GOP's troubles over the last decade have a lot to do with the fact that Americans didn't stop liking what the Republican Party is supposed to deliver. They actually delivered. As a conservative who cares more about policies than partisan success, I would hate to see the GOP abandon conservative policies in order to be more popular. That would be like Domino's listening to critics and then deciding to get into the Chinese food business. Indeed, by my lights, that's what George W. Bush tried to do with his "compassionate conservatism." He surrendered to liberal arguments about the role, size and scope of government on too many fronts. In effect, he said you can have your pizza and Kung Pao chicken all in good meal, it's a bad mess. Moreover, abandoning conservatism would be silly. According to Gallup, Americans identify themselves as conservative over liberal by a margin of 2-1, the same proportion as just after 9/11. So what would a GOPturnaround recipe look like? That's a subject for any number of other columns. But for starters, I'd look to young political chefs like Rep. Paul Ryan, R-Wis. He's been the leader in attacking "crony capitalism" – the corrupt merger of big business and big government, a hallmark of the Obama administration. For too long Republicans confused supporting big business with supporting free markets, when big business is often the biggest impediment to fair competition. Other fresh new ingredients would almost surely include profamily tax policies and the de-linking of legal and illegal immigration as interchangeable terms.

But first, the GOP needs to admit it screwed up. That's what Democrats did with Bill Clinton, and it gave the "New Democratic Party" a new lease on life.

F. Scott Fitzgerald couldn't have been more wrong when he said there are "no second acts in American lives." More than any nation on Earth, America is about second acts. We love contrition and redemption. We love it in pizza companies and politicians alike.

Tax-free income is the best gift you can give yourself at retirement. Converting to a Roth IRA from a traditional IRA allows for tax-free accumulation as well as tax-free withdrawals in retirement - which means you don't have to worry as much about what income tax rates will be in the future.

There are tax considerations and other factors that determine whether converting to a Roth IRA is right for you. And changes set for 2010 will eliminate the $100,000 modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) limit, which means anyone can convert to a Roth IRA.

ATLANTA – A scholar and activist invoked the fiery side of Martin Luther King Ir's rhetoric Monday at the civil rights icon's church, urging the audience not to "sanitize" King's legacy or let the president off the hook on issues like poverty.

Across the country, Americans marked what would have been King's 81st birthday with rallies and parades. And days ahead of the anniversary of his historic inauguration, President Obama honored King by serving meals to the needy.

But in the city where the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize winner was born, it was Princeton University profes-Cornel West who reminded listeners that King's message of nonviolence came with a fiery urgency. West delivered a passionate keynote address to hundreds at Ebenezer Baptist Church on the 25th federal observance of King's birthday.

West told the crowd to remember King's call to help others and not enshrine his legacy in "some distant museum." Instead, West offered, King should be remembered as a vital person whose powerful message was once even considered dangerous by the FBI.

Race to fill Kennedy's seat could derail health reform

McClatchy Newspapers

BOSTON — Before he died last August, Sen. Edward Kennedy called health care the "cause of my life." Now Congress is closer than it's ever been to overhauling health care, but a special election today to fill the Massachusetts U.S. Senate seat that Kennedy held for 47 years could deal a fatal blow to his cause.

Republican state Sen. Scott Brown is making an unexpectedly close run at State Attorney General Martha Coakley, Democratic candidate, and the enthusiasm, not to mention the polling and momentum, seems to be with Brown.

The results could reverberate far bevond Beacon Hill or even Capitol Hill. A Coakley loss, or even a narrow victory, would be considered a rebuke to President Obama in a state where he won 61.8 percent of the vote in 2008 and that hasn't elected a Republican to the U.S. Senate since 1972.

"The race has become a referendum on business as usual. That includes health care, the president, Wall Street bonuses, unemployment and crazy terrorists we can't seem to stop," Democratic consultant Dan didates: Brown, they said, ists in civilian courts," he Payne said.

Energy efficiency, commercial-grade appliances top trends in kitchen design

By Ariel Hansen • Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — If watching the Food Network makes you drool as much over the appliances as the gourmet food, it might be time to start thinking about kitchen remodeling. It's easy to become overwhelmed by the variety of options in countertops, cabinetry and island design, but local experts are here to tell you what's hot today, and what might be the next great kitchen idea.

Energy efficiency is something any kitchen can take advantage of, no matter what price point it is being designed at, and those on a budget can take comfort in the knowledge that these appliances and light fixtures will save energy - and utility bills - well into the future.

"I'm seeing people specing out Energy Star, going greener," said Jenni Conrad, designer with Five Star Kitchen Designs of Ketchum (726-4039, fivestarkitchendesigns.com). "More people are noticing energy use."

If you're willing to splurge a bit, try a commercial-grade appliance, perhaps a Sub-Zero refrigerator or Viking range. These are often larger than standard appliances, with more versatility in how you use the burners or how you store food at differing temperatures. But be aware that this is a quick way to add cost to what is already probably the most expensive room in the home.

These days, the expense may be worth it, said designer Jeff Martin, president of JM Kitchens in Twin Falls (734-1434, jmkitchens.com). "It's now not only the heart of the home, but the main entertaining area," he said. "People spend the entire evening in the kitchen, dining area and patio." And a designer kitchen adds a lot of resale value.

Contractor Steve Mantey, who works with Conrad, agreed. "People are looking at their kitchens as the central gathering area of the house," he said, noting that he is often asked to remove walls to open kitchens up to living rooms and dining rooms.

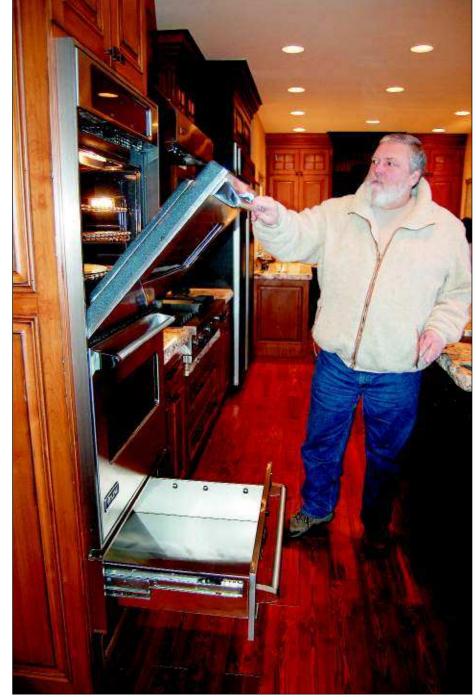

Mantey said he is seeing a trend toward cabinets made from specialty wood, which is then distressed and given multiple finishes. In the highest-end kitchens. these often have hardware, like hinges and slides, that make them glide open and closed easily. Sun Valley second homeowner Daphne Campbell of Las Vegas said she found the distressed wood look appealing. "It needed to be easy; if you scratch it, it looks like just more of the distress," she said with a laugh. Cabinets may also include effi-

"The cabinet space works better centimeter stone. Conrad said than I thought it would, the way everything rises up and pulls out," Campbell said.

cabinetry.

A double layer of three-centimeter stone, finished with a rough edge, gives countertops a rustic weight.

Many colors and textures of artificial stone are available to give any kitchen countertop a unique appearance while still being easy to maintain and clean.

For The Associated Press

For many families, the big-screen TV has become the contemporary fireplace - the focal point of the room and the spot where the family gathers. The challenge is to get it installed to ensure the best viewing without wrecking your home decor.

Ahead of the Super Bowl, the Olympics and Hollywood awards viewing season, here are some tips.

BY THE NUMBERS:

The ups and downs of financing a livestock research center • Private donations: State officials in 2005 asked the Idaho dairy industry to raise $5 million in private donations to ensure state funding. The industry has raised about $1 million to date. • State assistance: Idaho lawmakers set aside $10 million in 2007 to help finance construction of the livestock research center. The governor said last week that money will be delayed because of revenue shortfalls. • University funding: University of Idaho officials agreed to pay $10 million toward the facility. But in October 2009, the university cut 6 percent, or about $600,000, as part of the governor's holdbacks. SANDY SALAS/Times-News photo illustration Some fear that without state commitment, private

University of Idaho officials say delaying $10 million in state funding for a proposed livestock research center near Jerome could sour the whole deal. to delay state funding for the research center could compromise current and future donations by the private sector, they said.

That's because more than $1 million in private donations to the Idaho dairy foundation were made with the understanding that Idaho would share the financial burden.

"There is a real concern that if those public Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's recommendation dollars go away, then the private donations might also go away," said Rich Garber, director of government relations for the university. "It will be a challenge. And, quite frankly, it's going to be even more important for the foundation to attract those outside donations."

It's something that has proven to be difficult and slow moving.

The IDEAL Foundation was organized by Idaho dairy producers in 2007 to solicit donations from producers, processors and other industry leaders. However, it ran into difficulties when milk prices collapsed beginning in 2007 — one of the worst industry downturns

The foundation has an internal goal of raising $5 million by the end of 2010, but it has generated a little more than $1 million to date.

"The state (funding) portion was a critical part of the discussions when we sat down at the table with donors," Garber said.

John Sanow, a DTN marketing analyst, says corn and soybean markets will be pressured because of a record harvest in the U.S.; the ample soybeans being harvested in South America; and reduced demand for corn overseas.

Grain prices tumbled last week following the USDA's report on 2009 crop production. Despite poor weather for much of the year it was the nation's most productive year ever.

About 13.2 billion bushels of corn were harvested this fall nationwide, up 2 percent from the November forecast and surpassing the previous record of 13 billion bushels in 2007. Soybean production totaled a record 3.36 billion bushels.

U.S. wheat stocks near record levels

Times-News correspondent

The U.S. Department of Agriculture's latest monthly grain balance sheet was mostly bearish for wheat growers.

The biggest change to the U.S. supply and demand balance sheet was another 50 million-bushel drop in the export forecast. Domestic seed and feed use was also dropped. The decline in seed use was not surprising given the 14 percent drop in winter wheat acres.

But the fact that exports continue to lag is surprising. Weekly export sales in mid-January were around 90,000 tons. Sales of 600,000 to 900,000 tons per week are needed to reduce stocks.

Sagging exports sales pushed projected ending stocks on May 31 to 976 million bushels – the highest level since 1987-88 when stocks topped 1.26 billion bushels — and raised the stocks-to-use ratio to ratio 48.6 percent.

A combination of reduced acres and increased demand are needed to reduce large carryout stocks. Fewer winter wheat acres help but with export sales continuing to lag, stocks aren't getting used up quickly enough.

Georgantones thinks wheat is over-priced - as much as $2 per bushel.

But Paul Patterson points out that costs of production have increased substantially in the last several years and today's $5 per bu. wheat is comparable to $3 wheat of five years ago.

The University of Idaho extension economist was surprised that USDA didn't lower its average price for the 2009-10 marketing year. But at $4.85 per bu., it is already 28.5 percent below the 2008 crop's average price.

DEAR ABBY: I rent my own apartment and my family lives an hour's drive away. My boyfriend of one year, "Mac," lives about 10 minutes from me and spends the night a few times a week and vice-versa. I got the flu last month and it developed into bronchitis. I was so sick I could barely drag myself out of bed. I asked Mac to come over and take care of me and he said, "No, I don't want to get sick. I'll come by when you're better."

DEAR $\mathbf{A}$ BBY Jeanne Phillips

Abby, if someone cares about you, don't you think he should help out - maybe make some soup, give you water at your bedside and just be there in general? If Mac got sick like that, I would go over and take care of him. But he wasn't willing to do the same. He said he doesn't feel it is "his job."

I am upset by this. Is it an indication of how he would be if we got married?

IN SICKNESS AND IN HEALTH DEAR IN SICKNESS:

Yup. It appears Mac isn't the nurturing kind. However, if he has everything else you're looking for in a man, this needn't be a deal breaker. Instead of expecting him to intuit what you need, try telling him what you want. Example: "Send some soup over." "Please empty the trash." "Call an ambulance." You get the idea. If that doesn't do the trick, then scratch Mac.

DEAR ABBY: One of my bosses insists on using his speakerphone for conversations - business and personal - with his office door wide open. He speaks loudly, and both sides of the conversation can be clearly heard throughout the office. He also walks through the hallways with his cell on speakerphone.

Everyone who works here finds his behavior annoying and boorish. No one says anything, and he doesn't get the message when a chorus of doors slam shut each time he begins one of these calls or walks by with his cell phone blasting. Any ideas on how to address this issue?

UNWILLING THIRD PARTY IN THE NORTHWEST

DEAR UNWILLING: Is no one, including your boss's assistant, close enough to him to tell him that his loud phone conversations are distracting his employees and colleagues and offer to shut his door for him so he can have privacy? Most employers would prefer their workers and colleagues operate at maximum capacity, particularly in this economy.

DEAR ABBY: Please settle a dispute between my wife and me. One of her coworkers, "Cassie," is eight months pregnant and also overweight. My wife saw her and said, "Wow, you've gotten as big as a house!"

Cassie told her she was hurt by the comment. In my wife's opinion, what she said is not uncommon when said to a pregnant woman and she thinks Cassie was overly sensitive. I believe the comment was inappropriate. What do you think?

 NEEDS A MEDIATOR GAINESVILLE, FLA. DEAR NEEDS A MEDIA-TOR: I agree with you. No one - pregnant or not wants to be told she resembles an orca, and your wife should have kept her observation to herself.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

"How can I then return in happy That am debarr'd the benefit of rest?"

William Shakespeare

Bjorn Fallenius of Sweden has been a resident of New York for two decades and has been a regular player in the Cavendish tournament for many years. When this deal came up in the Cavendish Teams, he found a way to demonstrate how to eat your cake and have it too when he received the lead of a small diamond against his four-heart contract. The first important issue was whether to win or to duck. Fallenius correctly worked out that he could not duck this trick for fear of a heart switch, so he took dummy's diamond ace. The next question was how best to combine the chances in hearts and clubs. Clearly the contract hinges on holding the combined losers in the two suits to one. The correct answer, which Fallenius found, was to play a low club to the queen, preserving dummy's club jack.

If this finesse lost, then he would still have the necessary side-suit entry to dummy to pick up the heart king doubleton or tripleton onside, and if the finesse won, as happened in real life, he could simply ruff a club in dummy for his 10th trick. (Note that if he had led the club jack from dummy and the finesse had lost, he would have needed to ruff a club to dummy to to play on hearts, so he would not have been able to pick up a twice-guarded heart king onside.)

ANSWER: Sometimes the simplest answers are best: raise your partner's reverse into diamonds (which shows a good hand and four diamonds together with five or more clubs) to three diamonds. Your raise is forcing to game and will let partner describe his hand further so that you can work out whether to play in diamonds, spades, or no-trump.

Turnover not always a bad thing for CSI

urnovers can drive a coach batty. Turnover can be even worse.

A revolving door of talent is simply the way of life in junior college basketball, but the College of Southern Idaho men's program has dealt with more than its share in Steve Gosar's two seasons as head coach.

The latest departure: Sophomore guard Antonio Owens, who was dismissed from the team over the weekend for a "violation of team and school rules," according to Gosar.

Owens is the sixth Golden Eagle to leave the nest since last summer and the second one dismissed. But that's nothing compared to what Gosar and CSI endured during his first season when four players were sent packing for violations, while two more left for personal reasons. And of the 10 freshmen that completed the 2008-09 season, only four are on the current roster thanks to LDS missions, academic casualties and one attempt at a pro career.

"Your team hardly ever finishes the way it starts," said Gosar. "You have to make a lot of adjustments along the way."

When Barret Peery left for an assistant job at the University of Utah in May 2008, Gosar was left between a rock (having to find two new assistants) and a hard place (filling all but two spots on a depleted ros-

Gosar lived and learned. "It was an adjustment with a new staff adjusting to what a CSI guy is and what we need to do to win at this level," he said. "Certainly we made some mistakes on some kids, and some kids just decided this was too much for them."

When this season began, the Eagles appeared to have a versatile lineup reminiscent of the 2007-08 squad that went 30-2.

Said Gosar: "I'd thought we'd have some great depth and athleticism and could get to back to pressing a lot this year. We haven't been able to. We just don't have the depth and personnel. We've adjusted to it and adjusted to the personnel, and I think our guys are playing pretty good right

And that is the silver lining of the revolving door. Owens averaged 12.7 points, 3.8 rebounds and nearly two assists and two steals per game in 12 appearances. But sometimes losing a guy, even when he's your thirdleading scorer, can have some upside.

"The guys we've lost, I think for most part it's been addition by subtraction," said Gosar. "I think the team's gotten better, and we've gotten closer to being a family and a tighter knit group as a result."

So far, the proof is in the pudding. Energy was up, and leaders emerged in two conference home wins last week. With six of the final 10 league games at home, the Eagles may have finally shed enough baggage to let themselves soar.

MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

CSI softball prepares for fourth season

By Bradley Guire

Times-News writer

Allie Thain and Kelsey Bryant had to stop their reps every few pitches to find a fence post and knock loose all the reddish-brown mud that stuck to their cleats. They were finishing up practice Monday afternoon, working with catchers Chelsea Nix and Kayla Powell in the left-field bullpen as pitching coach Desi Thomson looked on. It was sunny, yet cold, and the wind made it worse. The ground was wet, and parts of the infield and bullpens were pits of muck and sludge.

Welcome back, softball season. The College of Southern Idaho softball team began preparations in earnest Monday for the season opener, which is less than two weeks away. work cut out for them as they prepare to break in eight freshmen. Part of that includes replacing 2009's sophomore-stuffed outfield corps of Cassi Merrill, Dani Grant and Erin Olander - they recorded only six errors as a unit in 2009 - with newcomers Marie Williams, Jessica Albertson and MeChel Hunt, who previously played on the CSI women's basketball team.

"Definitely spending time with my teammates and coaches," she said, when asked what she'll remember most. "Coach (Gordon) Kerbs has been my coach for four years, and I wouldn't want it any differently. Obviously I always look back at the state championship, and that's something I'll never forget."

Wayment was pulled up to play varsity as a freshman. At first, she was a solid role player with her athleticism and knack for defense. But midway through her freshman year, a teammate's injury propelled her into the starting lineup, where she's been ever since.

"When I was a freshman, you couldn't stop us," Wayment said. "There were five people on the court, and everybody could score, everybody was ready to play. There was a lot of unity, and we knew what our goal was, and we were all going to achieve it."

That year, Wayment helped Burley win the 2007 Class 4A state championship, which was the school's first-ever state title in girls hoops.

"When I went from eighth grade to varsity level, I just had to step up and play," Wayment said. "Varsity level is a completely different game. I kind of got banged around a little bit, but I just got stronger from it. Over the years you learn from experience, learn to step up."

Now as a senior, Wayment has stepped up as a leader. She's averaging about 10 points and eight rebounds per game. She leads the Bobcats in rebounds, assists, SPOKANE, Wash. Sasha Cohen has quite the hold on figure skating.

It's been almost four years since she last competed, and no one has even seen her skate recently. Yet her presence hung over every event this season, and she's the only woman on anyone's mind at these U.S. Figure Skating Championships.

"Have you seen Sasha?" "What have you heard

Wizards keep streaking with win over Trail Blazers

WASHINGTON Antawn Jamison scored 21 of his 28 points after halftime, Caron Butler made two big baskets down the stretch and the Washington Wizards put together a rare winning streak Monday with a 97-92 victory over the Portland Trail Blazers.

Tamison was 3 for 10 from the field at halftime, but he shot 7 of 11 in the second half in a game that was close throughout. The victory gave the Wizards two wins in a row - only the fourth time they've accomplished that in a distressing season that includes last week's guilty plea to a felony gun charge by three-time All-Star Gilbert Arenas.

KNICKS 99, PISTONS 91

NEW YORK - Nate Robinson showed his game is much more than dunks, scoring 27 points to lead New York to a victory and a split of a home-and-home series with Detroit.

Chosen earlier in the day to defend his slam dunk title at All-Star weekend, Robinson made five 3pointers, one during a 7-0 spurt that started the fourth quarter and gave the Knicks the lead for good.

THUNDER 94, HAWKS 91

CLIPPERS 106, NETS 95

LOS ANGELES - Chris Kaman had 22 points and seven rebounds in his return to the lineup, and Los Angeles snapped a fourgame skid.

Kaman, who missed the previous four games with a sore lower back after being the only Clipper to play in each of the first 35 contests, played 30 minutes and made 10 of 16 shots. Marcus Camby had 17 points and 14 rebounds, and Craig Smith added 18 points off the bench.

TIMBERWOLVES 108, 76ERS 103, 0T

MINNEAPOLIS - Jonny Flynn had a career-high 29 points and nine assists and Minnesota rallied from 20 points down to beat Philadelphia in overtime.

OLYMPICS Olympic halfpipe hopeful injured, out for 2010

Snowboarder Danny Davis won't have a chance to dedicate his Olympics to a fallen friend after a season-ending back injury suffered when he crashed his four-wheeler into a closed gate outside a house in Utah.

Davis, who is good friends with injured halfpipe rider Kevin Pearce, was scheduled to undergo surgery Monday to repair a vertebrae in his lower back. A message on his Facebook site said Davis would not be competing in remaining snowboard events in The Summit County sheriff's department in Park City, Utah, released a statement that said Davis was leaving a housing development at around 3:30 a.m. Sunday, after celebrating his victory in a Dew Tour halfpipe event, and was knocked unconscious when he crashed his four-wheeler into a closed metal gate on a private driveway.

Davis was dedicating his season to Pearce, who suffered a severe brain injury during school cafeteria.
