It can be hard to drum up interest in rewriting county code.

But Twin Falls County residents who turned out for a Tuesday evening meeting on the rewrite were passionate on the issue, largely worried about how the county will navigate the changing face of agriculture.

Jim Carter, of Logan Simpson Design, fielded questions about planning for farms and dairies, preserving so-called "old agriculture" in the face of more-industrial operations and altering the rules for confined-animal feeding operations – though the last item isn't part of the current work.

"My firm is not under contract to rewrite that chapter," Carter said. "I think the (county) staff would agree that it's something that needs to be done?

Arizona-based Logan Simpson Design for is rewriting the zoning and subdivision chapters of county code, which haven't been updated in about 30 years.

"It's old and it's outdated," Carter said.

Part of that work is simply modernizing things, he said. For example, there's no current requirement for developers to do a site analysis of their land.

The firm's other task is applying the county comprehensive plan, a guiding document revised in 2008, to actual legal ordinances.

Officials are gathering as much public input as they can for that second task, leading to this week's meetings. At least 20 residents

RUPERT – Parents of Minidoka County students who live within city limits can now visit the school district's Web site to find the nearest bus stop and learn what time the bus will arrive there.

"It (the software) doesn't work out in the country because in the county the buses go door to door," said Alicia Bywater, Minidoka County School District transportation supervisor.

The new software, called Transfinder, was recently installed on Minidoka County School Web District's site, www.minidokaschools.org. The software can be found

Jerome Co. approves limited role for RMC

By John Plestina Times-News writer

JEROME Rocky Mountain Corrections, the Ketchum-based consultant that assisted Jerome County with public information for the November 2009 vote on funding for a new jail, will assist the county with the May election effort for jail funding on a limited basis.

The mood of county commissioners on Monday was to go it alone this spring but to use RMC on matters requiring expertise beyond what the commissioners and a jail committee could supply.

Jerome County paid $87,500 to RMC prior to the Nov. 3 election, in which a 30-year, $13.5 lease-to-purchase funding agreement for the new facility failed by less than 1.5 percent to garner a 66 percent supermajority of the vote.

The proposed Jerome County Justice Facility would have included a 165bed jail and sheriff's station.

The county previously paid $10,000 to Lombard-Conrad Architects, of Boise, for its portion of a separate regional jail study, bringing its total paid for jail studies and election consulting services in 2009 to $97,500.

On Nov. 24, RMC General Manager April Lee proposed to the commission that RMC assist with voter education for the May election for a fee of $25,000 and an additional $5,000 if the ballot question passes.

She said last month that RMC wasn't be likely to agree to provide services on an as-needed basis. Her company has since revised a proposal to allow for on-call services.

Veritas Advisors, of Boise, also submitted a proposal for election assistance and voter education at a fee of $45,000.

Minidoka schools move on after fiscal emergency By Laurie Welch Times-News writer

RUPERT - One year after declaring a financial emergency due to funding cuts and declining enrollment, Minidoka County School Superintendent Scott Rogers said the district is making progress.

Rogers gave highlights from the year during a state of the district address to the school board last week. His comments included the opening of two new elementary schools, a new multipurpose room at another school and meeting federal Adequate Yearly Progress goals for the first time since 2004 in four of the district's schools.

Rogers said the district also donated old elementary school buildings in Rupert and Heyburn to the respective cities.

'We are definitely moving in the right direction toward continued improvement in the district." Rogers said. "But we must continue to do what is best for kids and what is best for their families who we serve in our district."

Rogers said that in 2009 more than 98 percent of the district's teachers met highly qualified standards. Almost 13 percent of students participated in programs to learn to speak English and nearly 63 percent of students qualified for free or reduced-price lunches. Two and a half percent of the districts' students were in gifted and talented programs and there were about 40 more special education students. In the district, 79.1 percent of the class of 2009 graduated.

"We have some work to do," Rogers said.

Rogers said the district received $791,840 less in state and local funding than the prevsious fiscal year. The district also renegotiated staff contracts, reducing teacher salaries by 2.1 percent and implementing four unpaid furlough days. The district also reduced

Student enrollment rises amid funding decline at North Idaho College

By Jessie L. Bonner Associated Press writer

BOISE, Idaho - North Idaho College President Priscilla Bell told lawmakers that state funding for higher education is shrinking at a time when enrollment on her campus has swelled with an influx of unemployed workers going back to school.

dramatic enrollment growth is being tied to the economy," Bell told the Joint-Finance Appropriations Committee on Wednesday.

The higher-than-expected revenues from student tuition helped the school cover most of a $766,000 loss in state funding budget ed for this year. That includes $603,500 from a 6 percent holdback in state spending on higher education the governor ordered in September and $162,500 from another 1.5 percent holdback he proposed earlier this month.

The budget cuts, while tion never convenient, couldn't have come at a worse time.

"When enrollments are increasing the impact is even more severe," Bell said.

The college, which serves more than 20,000 through degree offerings and other programs such as workforce training and Head Start, shed two high-level positions and left other roles "Much, if not all, of the unfilled to help cover the cuts this year. Gov. Otter's initiatives are foundering on the details as there ever been an Idaho elected official with better people skills than Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter? We can't think of one.

Otter's down-home, self-effacing charm is among his greatest assets as a politician and a leader. So why isn't he more successful in advancing his agenda?

For two years, the Republican governor tried to persuade an overwhelmingly Republican Legislature to approve a package of funding to repair Idaho's roads. He failed.

And now Otter's proposal to eliminate seven state agencies - Idaho Public Television, the Human Rights Commission, the Commission on Hispanic Affairs, the Council on Developmental Disabilities, the Independent Living Council, the Council for the Deaf and Hard of Hearing and the Digital Learning Academy — by phas-ing out their funding is running into heavy opposition.

Some of it was inevitable, but the governor failed to make a case for why these agencies should go and what should happen to the services they provide and the clients they serve. If he has a vision for what leaner state government should look like, he hasn't stated it.

So others drove the debate. Lawmakers have been inundated with pleas to rescue IPTV, especially since the first round of cuts would likely jeopardize service to rural areas.

And last week's announcement that the Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation would survive despite the fact that Otter wanted to zero out its budget came in the wake of a statewide outcry that the governor seemed to misjudge. Worse, the initiative to save the department came not from Otter aybe it's just me, but I've found the last few weeks in American politics particularly unnerving. Our economy is still very fragile, yet you would never know that by the way the political class is acting.

Where did all the grownups go?

We're like a patient that iust got out of intensive care and is sitting up in bed for the first time when, suddenly, all the doctors and nurses at bedside start bickering. One of them throws a stethoscope across the room; someone else threatens to unplug all the monitors unless the hospital bills are paid by noon: and all the while the patient is thinking: "Are you people crazy? I am just starting to recover. Do vou realize how easily I could relapse? Aren't there any adults here?'

Sometimes you wonder: Are we home alone? Obviously, the political and financial elites to whom we give authority often act on the basis of personal interests. But we still have a long way to go to get out of the mess we are in, and if our elites do not behave with a greater sense of the common good we could find our economy doing a double dip with a back flip.

Dov Seidman, the CEO of LRN, which helps companies build ethical cultures, likes to talk about two kinds of values: "situational values" and "sustainable values."

Leaders, companies or individuals guided by situational values do whatever the situation will allow, no matter the wider interests of their communities. A banker who writes a mortgage for someone he knows can't make the payments over time is acting on situational values, saying: "I'll be gone when the bill comes due."

People inspired by sustainable values act just the opposite, saying: "I will never be gone. I will always be here. Therefore, I must behave in ways that sustain my employees, my customers, my suppliers, my environment, my country and my future generations."

Lately, we've seen an explosion of situational thinking. I support the broad proposals President Barack Obama put forth last week to prevent banks from becoming too big to fail and to protect taxpayers from banks that get in trouble by speculating and then expect us to bail them out. But the way the president unveiled his proposals – "if those folks want a fight, it's a fight I'm ready to have" - left me feeling as though he was looking for a way to bash the banks right after the Democrats' loss in Massachusetts, in order to score a few cheap political points more than to initiate a serious national discussion about an incredibly complex issue.

Obama is so much better when he takes a heated, knotty issue, like civil rights or banking reform, and talks to the country like adults. He is so much better at making us smarter than angrier. Going to war with the banks for a quick political sugar high after an electoral loss will just work against him and us. It will spook the banks into lending even less and slow the recovery even more.

That said, part of me can't blame the president. The behavior of some leading Wall Street banks, particularly Goldman Sachs, has been utterly selfish. U.S. taxpayers saved Goldman by saving one of its big counterparties, AIG. By any fair calculation the U.S. Treasury should own a slice of Goldman today. Goldman has been the poster boy for banks behaving by "situa-tional values" – exploiting whatever the situation, or rules that it helped to write, allowed.

Also, Obama tried to create a bipartisan commission to come up with a plan to reduce the national debt - a plan that would inflict pain on both parties by cutting some programs and raising some taxes. But the Republican leader, Sen. Mitch McConnell, said the GOP would not cooperate with any commission that proposes raising taxes. And some liberal Democrats rejected cutting their favorite programs. Way to take one for the country, guys.

Don't forget both the Democratic and Republican senators who have decided to get a quick populist boost by turning one of the few adults we have left - Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke - into a pinata. No, Bernanke is not blameless for the 2008 crisis. But since then he has helped steer the country back from the brink and kept us out of a depression. He absolutely deserves reappointment.

No doubt, this is a lousy season to be the leader of any institution. We are in the midst of a long period of austerity, where all that most leaders will be able to do is cut, fire and trim. It is so easy to play populism and run against them. But this time is different. When our government is this deeply involved in propping up our economy, and the economy is this fragile, politics as usual will kill us. We badly need leaders inspired by sustainable values, not situational ones. Without that, we'll just be digging our hole deeper and making the reckoning, when it comes, that much more ferocious.

but from IDPR Director Nancy Merrill and public officials and community leaders in the Magic Valley trying to head off the closure of Thousand Springs State Park.

Of the other agencies on the chopping block, the future of just one has been decided. The Human Rights Commission will likely be folded into the Department of Labor.

But the governor may not get his way with the rest, especially IPTV. By not putting forward a plan for what IPTV would look like if privatized, he conceded the advantage to those who want to keep public television public.

Otter excels at articulating what government should and should not do. His problem is closing the sale.

Want less government? Defend marriage mericans are rightly alarmed at the torrent of government spending that floods Washington and the state capitals. Neglected in most calls to avert looming disaster and rebalance our nation's books, though, is a vigorous defense of traditional marriage.

How's that again? Simply this: Anyone who stands for free enterprise and free markets shouldn't stand still for "free love" - or any of the other baggage of the sexual revolution.

Proponents of same-sex marriage often use the rhetoric of individual choice and liberty to advance their agenda. In reality, if they succeed in deinstitutionalizing traditional marriage in America, we'd have less freedom under a more powerful, more expensive state.

Doubters should consider the historic fact that liberalizing divorce laws was a priority for radicals as early as the Bolsheviks in Russia and as recently as the Socialist government in Spain.

spontaneously, even before politics. Its essential purpose is to attach mothers and fathers to their children and to one another.

When human beings are born, they're helpless. They require years of adult assistance to survive and mature. Marriage exists, in all times and places, to solve this social problem.

But the benefits of marriage extend beyond family. In developed countries, the family takes care of its dependent young rather than foisting that responsibility on taxpayers and the state.

Marriage is like the market in harnessing the abilities and knowledge of millions within a decentralized social system. Rather than a centralized state agency raising all children in a homogenized way, each couple raises their kids in the way they deem most likely to succeed.

When marriages thrive, government's role recedes. By providing a minimal legal structure for marriage, the state encourages massive voluntary cooperation. As long as a couple fulfills a few basic requirements, the state has no further concern. Marriage is a largely self-regulating system.

In contrast, the breakup of families – or failure to form them – fosters expansions of state authority and spending. This is because children from disrupted families do worse in virtually every way than children of intact marriages. They are more likely to have physical and mental health problems. Studies show they suffer a higher risk of psychiatric disease, attempted suicide and substance abuse. Regardless of family income, fatherless boys are more likely to be aggressive – and ultimately put behind bars.

These social pathologies are painful to those directly involved. But they also increase the burden on taxpayers and produce a more activist, intrusive state.

The goal of "knocking marriage off its perch" now permeates the teaching of family law. The state, in this view, has no particular interest in channeling parenthood into marriage or in assigning social and legal rights to biological parents.

If the family-law radicals have their way, the state's power will increase dramatically. Courts will not simply record parentage, they'll actually determine parentage.

Same-sex marriage is only the most recent, most dramatic attempt to separate biology from parenthood. And getting the government out of marriage is the leftist solution to Americans' conflict over same-sex marriage as if "privatizing mar riage" were like privatizing the post office.

A state that no longer prefers biological mothers and fathers to other family forms, however, is a state that reduces incentives for parents to work together and further empowers itself.

CHANTEL'S READING

By Bruce Tinsley

Let's cut taxes, right-size state government

hile Idaho's economy continues to drift in a national recession, it is a good time to look to the recovery ahead and what economic principles should guide Idaho's business and political leaders.

In that effort, a group of nearly 30 Idaho House members have put together a platform of prosperity principles which emphasize limited government, fiscal responsibility and low taxes. I am pleased to review some of these conservative ideas.

The first objective is to strengthen our state economy by encouraging investment, entrepreneurship and private sector revitalization. Nothing will accomplish this better than improving out competitive edge by limiting or reducing income taxes for both individuals and businesses. Those who advocate increasing taxes as a shortterm way of maintaining government's size are missing how the private sector works to create jobs.

A second objective is to maintain common sense in our Idaho state budget. To that end, we should resist substantive fee increases, levies and surcharges as measures which weigh on private investment, not encourage it. Limiting Idaho's governmental growth is critical. For two decades, from 1990 to 2010, Idaho's population grew by more than half a million people, an increase of about 50 percent. But our government costs grew from $1billion to over $3 billion, a 200 percent increase.

If we had held the growth of government to the same rate as the population increase, we would not have to painfully wrench state costs downward so sharply in this recession. (The most recent projections show Idaho at below a $2.3 billion budget for the current year, off at least $700 million in 18 months. Keeping us in balance at this new level will mean painful cuts, which could have been avoided by more, not less, prudence in prior years. Yet many spenders, both in and out of government, continually advocated even more costs in those times, and some still do, despite the clear weakness of this logic.)

A third principle is to find savings in governmental restructuring. We have seen two successful announcements of this in recent days, both initiated by Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter. One is with the state Human Rights Commission, which is proposed to move into the Department of Labor. The other is the Department of Parks and Recreation, which is proposing more of a business approach to parks management, to include broader entrance fees. unit-by-unit business plans and staff cuts in Boise. A third opportunity is the Idaho Capitol Commission, on which I have proudly served, but which is now winding down after completing the Capitol renovation. Two positions there will be dropped in the coming budget year.

If savings can be found in entities like these, there are surely more for the looking, if we are up to the task. The tree of government, well watered by taxes and fees, grows like a Russian olive on a southern Idaho ditch bank; intelligent pruning is a well-proven, if not so well-exercised, option. We need more such efforts, not fewer. We must prune the cloth of government to fit the body of what our citizens can afford, just as we must all trim our personal expenses in tough times.

A fourth principle is to assert our state's sovereign ty against what seems like an endless assault by the federal government under the current Obama administration. The Constitution and Bill of Rights were framed to help create an appropriate federal union, but left states and citizens essential rights. The 10th Amendment helps assure we keep them, despite efforts to force health care mandates, impose cap and trade and weaken our right to own firearms. Idaho is known as a leading state in defending appropriate sovereign principles. We legislators pledge to do what we can to preserve them today, and for tomorrow.

We have a difficult job this year in balancing Idaho's budget in a down economy, in striking the right balance between preservation of essential services, removing costs where we can, and in protecting our citizens from excessive regulation and higher taxes.

The sound principles of fiscal responsibility, limited taxes and efficient government within our means are goals we are proud to stand by in these challenging times. Our Platform for Prosperity will keep Idaho safe, responsible and strong.

OTHER VIEWS

Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

... property taxes rising

Lewiston Tribune

Four years ago as then-Idaho Gov. Jim Risch pushed his tax shift plan through a one-day special legislative session, critics predicted it would lead to another round of property tax increases.

The prophecy is twothirds complete.

Risch yanked the property tax levy that covered a quarter of public education's operating budgets. That was worth $260 million.

class sizes smaller or even more generous teacher salaries to compete with other states for classroom talent. ... But what were once dollars available to pay for extras have become funds needed to provide necessities. Even before the recession hit. the Risch tax shift had deprived schools of a steady source of new property tax dollars. Meanwhile, schools had to compete with other state programs for a share of the money state legislators were handing out. So the supplemental tally was inching up. Now, even in a bad economy, the tally is likely to rise again. If state schools Superintendent Tom Luna is right, the next round of budget cuts will strip $130 million from public education. Schools that have run out of reserves or room to cut may appeal to property taxpavers. Idahoans dread the property tax, but they'd rather not go without high school football or a music program. The tactic works only in districts where the voters have the means and the desire to shore up their schools, however. About a third of the state's districts operate without supplemental property taxes.

So as the urban, wealthier districts become increasingly dependent on local property taxpayer support, they will pull ahead of the rural districts that lack an adequate property tax base ...

When they framed the constitution, Idaho's founders promised a "general, uniform and thorough system of public, free common schools."

That pledge is about to be broken.

... taxing Internet sales

Idaho Statesman, Boise

In February 2007, Idaho's retailers were riding the crest of a 20-year boom. Business lobbyists and chambers of commerce pushed for a bill designed to protect the long-term health of brick-and-mortar retailers – a bill paving the way to collect sales taxes on Internet purchases. A divided Idaho House of Representatives said no; the vote was 37-33. The prevailing argument was largely based in state sovereignty a resistance to mold Idaho tax laws to conform with other states. With her characteristic bluntness, Challis Republican Rep. Lenore Hardy Barrett likened the idea to "crawling into bed with other states."

tor is a growing challenge for traditional retailers. The longer Idaho legislators ignore this problem, the worse it will get. An Internet sales tax is nothing new. Idaho consumers are supposed to pay a 6 percent sales tax on an online purchase. But when online retailers do not also have a physical presence in the state, they might not be required to collect a sales tax for e-commerce. The problems are obvious:

• First, it puts tax payments on the honor system. Idaho Mountain Express, Consumers are supposed to track online purchases and voluntarily pay a use tax.

Some shoppers may use the Internet to willfully dodge the sales tax; other shoppers may simply be misinformed. Either way, the state has no mechanism to track online purchases and no way of making sure the state collects full dollar for schools, Medicaid or other prisons.

How much is the gap? An April University of Tennessee study estimates Idaho's "lost" taxes at $35.1 million for 2010, and projects the number to grow to $46.4 million by 2012.

Second, it puts conven-

... limiting Legislatures

Ketchum

Using a state constitutional amendment to limit how many days the Legislature can remain in session is tantamount to the proverbial use of a sledgehammer to kill a fly.

Frustrated politicians and political activists always turn to amending the state or U.S. constitutions when pet gripes go ignored. And it's always a bad idea.

Democratic state Rep. Grant Burgoyne, of Boise, who proposes a constitutional time limit, would find that any such law would be modified to their dilly-dallying. Clearly, however, Idaho's lawmakers need something to prod them into more efficient, more timeconstrained annual sessions.

Last year's 117-day session was the longest yet, nearly 30 percent more than the customary 90day expectation.

A far more effective incentive to reduce long sessions would be to promptly cut off all pay at 90 days. This would not only hasten committee work and final actions, but would prod leaders of the minority and majority caucuses to put a stop to frivolous legislation that goes nowhere except to impress the folks back

He replaced it with a $210 million increase in the sales tax.

Since then, school patrons across the state have voluntarily imposed upon themselves $114.2 million each year in supplemental property taxes to support schools. When Risch held his special session, the total stood at $79 million.

In other words $35 million of the $50 million net tax cut has been lost.

Supplemental levies are one way local patrons can infuse extra money into their schools. The taxes can pay for electives, such as fine and performing arts, athletics. more teachers to help keep tional merchants at a disadvantage in an already rough retail market. Conventional retailers are forced to cede a 6 percent pricing edge to online retailers that do not collect sales taxes at the time of purchase ...

The Internet tax issue might not go anywhere this year. Even though a bill would merely position Idaho to join a national effort to collect Internet taxes, that's a tough sell in an election year.

But when Idaho's leaders are ready to get serious about modernizing the tax system, Internet taxes have to be a part of the discussion.

Fed holds rates at record low

By Jeannine Aversa Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON - The Federal Reserve has decided to hold interest rates at a record low and pledged to keep them there for an "extended period" to nurture the economic recovery and lower unemployment.

The Fed made no reference to signs of improvement in the housing market, which it had after its previous meeting. The Fed said it still expects to end a $1.25 trillion program aimed at driving down mortgage rates as scheduled on March 31. But it reiterated that it remains open to changing that timetable if necessary.

Reports on home sales this week pointed to a still-fragile housing market.

Boise man pleads guilty to wire fraud

BOISE - A Boise man has pleaded guilty to scheming to defraud a Florida businessman of more than $7.000.

Forty-seven-year-old Barret Akers pleaded guilty Tuesday to one count of wire fraud in U.S. District Court in Boise. The charge carries a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison and fines of up to $250,000.

Federal prosecutors allege Akers, who ran an investor relations business, began lying to a Florida businessman about his relationship with the Securities and Exchange Commission in February to win business from the company.

he was friends with an SEC employee who could delete damaging information about the company in the SEC's files, ultimately saving the company legal trouble. Some of those false statements were made through interstate text

The businessman and the publicly traded Florida energy company are not identified in court documents.

Akers is expected to be sentenced April 8.

He said Toyota is expected to contact dealers with more information "sometime next week."

In an unprecedented move, the company said late Tuesday it would halt sales for the eight models – which make up more than half of Toyota's U.S. sales volume - to fix the gas pedals. Last week, Toyota issued a recall for the same eight models, affecting 2.3 million vehicles.

A private firm said it had identified 275 crashes and 18 deaths because of sudden, uncontrollable acceleration in Toyotas since 1999.

Toyota has said the problem appears to be related to the buildup of condensation on sliding surfaces in the accelerator system that help drivers push down or release the gas pedal. The gas pedal mechanism can wear down, causing the accelerator to become harder to press, slower to spring back or stuck.

fter more than 20 years riding dirt bikes, Mel Henry decided to buy a snowmobile. While others might spend thousands of dollars on sleds, Henry has taken a more economical approach. "I think it was a good investment," the Kimberly resident said recently, before hopping on his snowmobile to take his 5-year-old son. Nathan, for a ride in the South Hills. Henry said he wanted something for his family to enjoy but didn't want to spend a lot of money getting started. So far it seems to be working. Lawsuit challenges forest's motorized vehicle plan

Bv Todd Dvorak

Associated Press writer

BOISE - Two environmental groups have filed a lawsuit in federal court claiming the new off-road vehicle plan for the Salmon-Challis National Forest fails to protect land, streams and wildlife across hundreds of thousands of acres of eastern and central Idaho backcountry.

The lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court last week also asks a judge to block the forest from implementing its new travel management plan, the policy rewritten last year to designate appropriate routes and areas for all-terrain vehicles and other off-road recreation.

Brad Brooks, of the Wilderness Society, says the forest's plan is fraught with flaws, creates new miles or off-road trails in areas previously without designated roads and fails to balance off-road use with hikers and campers who head to the forests for peace and solitude.

"The real issue is the forest service's failure to protect wilderness and the characteristics of the land in this plan," Brooks told The Associated Press. "There are thousands of miles of roads and trails across the state, and we only ask for a relatively small amount of land to be designated for non-motorized use?"

Forest Supervisor Lyle Powers declined to comment on the lawsuit, citing agency policy barring employees from commenting on litigation.

Like other national forests across the nation, officials with the Salmon-Challis are in the final stages of writing new rules and redrawing maps designating appropriate roads, trails and areas for off-road vehicles. The forest area spans 4.3 million acres, including 1.3 million of the Frank Church-River of No Return wilderness area, the biggest in the lower 48 states.

After years of study and public comment, the Salmon-Challis travel plan was approved in August. The new policy could go into effect as early as February pending approval of a new set of maps designating the motorized trails.

Forest officials have rejected nearly a dozen administrative appeals to the plan, setting the stage for more formal challenges in the courts.

Environmentalists also say forest officials failed to incorporate research done by the groups showing the degradation caused by motorized use.

In the lawsuit, the environmentalists say they shared hundreds of photos of 40 different routes and trails identified in the new plan. The research identified damaged hiking trails, mountain meadows reduced to muddy bogs, deep tire ruts, crushed vegetation and stream bank erosion.

Environmentalists are not seeking to lock out recreationists who enjoy four-wheelers and motorcycles, just prevent their use in new areas that don't have established roads and trails or have been deemed worthy for future wilderness designation.

They also contend vehicle emissions pollute the air and engine noise has an adverse impact on big game and other wildlife.

"Everyone has a right to enjoy our national forests, but no one has the right to abuse them," said Brad Smith, of the Idaho Conservation League. "ATV's are a legitimate way to enjoy our national forests but should not be allowed to damage the clean water and natural beauty that belongs to all of us."

Mel Henry's snowmobile headlight is seen in the distance as he nears a sign that warns users about trail usage.

Yes, I'm referring to Yamaha's new YZ450F.

I was recently caught gawking at the 2010 model a bike so attractive it's made me revert to that chauvinistic phrase of calling a machine a "she" - at Adventure Motorsports in Twin Falls. I wasn't the only one.

It's really a whole new bike, said off-road fan Richard Bean, who stopped to admire the bike while visiting the shop the same day. There's a lot of space between engine parts, which makes the bike look lightweight. That's deceiving, Bean said, because the bike is actually about 5 pounds heavier than last year's model.

There's plenty that's new with the YZ.

The air box has moved to the front of the bike and the fuel tank has been moved lower to the rear, causing "greater mass concentration for increased flickability and an ultra-light feel," reads a brochure about the YZ.

Among other things, the bike is fuel-injected and has improved suspension and a new (reversed) intake and exhaust system. I haven't

One thing's for sure: it's a head turner. Others who walked into the shop stopped, if only briefly, to Me? I walked away from the shop salivating.

If nothing else, the bike's worth a peek. Find the YZ at www.yamaha-motor.com.

Sun Valley kicks off Nordic festival

By Karen Bossick Times-News correspondent

Sun Valley, which has redefined itself as Nordic Town USA, will kick off its inaugural Sun Valley Nordic Ski Festival Saturday as it highlights nine days of fun events, competitions and cool deals designed to spotlight the worldclass Nordic skiing that the Wood River Valley offers.

"We sometimes take what we have for granted. But skiers who have been coming here for years tell us this is the best Nordic center in the country," said Andy Munter, owner of Backwoods Mountain Sports.

A number of out-of-town visitors have indicated they plan to take advantage of $49 passes that allow unlimited skiing on any of the trails at Sun Valley Nordic Center and the North Valley trails from Galena Lodge to Quigley during the festival, said Chamber Director Carol Waller.

And, after a slow start to winter, the Blaine County Recreation District should have all of its trails groomed and ready to go, including Billy's Bridge which has been slow to open because the Forest Service doesn't permit removal of rocks or shrubs on it before the start of ski season, said Janelle Connors.

Here's the schedule:

them. It's just not for him, novice or not.

He said he would consider upgrading to a bigger machine later on, but right now he's testing the sport to see if it's something he and his family want to stay with. So far, he seems to like it.

The most difficult thing about getting started snowmobiling is purchasing the equipment. Riding is fairly easy. One Web site, gosnowmobiling.org, suggests that beginners take a rider safety course or at least get in contact with a snowmobile club so they don't have to ride alone.

The Magic Valley Snowmobile Club, a member of the Idaho Snowmobile Association, is always open to new members.

Henry said rider safety is important to him.

As an experienced dirt biker, he's teaching his family by word and example. Henry said he won't ride a sled without wearing a helmet. He and Nathan both wore helmets while at the South Hills, even when they weren't going very fast.

He's done that on the cheap, too, by using the same helmets they use for dirt biking.

Now that you're ready to buy your own sled, all you need is the snow.

The South Hills is one option, and a good place for beginners.

"The weather is great up here and there's plenty of places to ride," Henry said.

Astronomers call such an event an opposition, because Mars and the sun stand opposite each other in the sky.

Oppositions are a great time to observe a planet, not only because the planet is close enough to show maximum detail, but because it rises as the sun sets, allowing all-night observation.

That being said, not all oppositions are created equal. If Earth's and Mars's orbits were perfect circles, then oppositions would occur at clockwork intervals, with the separation between them the same each time. But Mars's orbit is the second most elliptical of the planets (after Mercury), which means that the Earth-Mars distance varies dramatically from opposition to opposition.

The last close opposition was in August 2003, spawning a chain of viral e-mails that continue to circulate annually, becoming more garish and inaccurate with each go-round. It's probably a matter of time before their hyperbolic announcements of Mars looking "as big as a full Moon" start getting the Chicken Little treatment from a jaded populace.

Friday's opposition of Mars will be 78 percent farther away than 2003s historically close approach. But it has one advantage: At its highest point in 2003, Mars was ach winter, the Outdoor Retailer trade show in Salt Lake City brings together 40,000 attendees to ogle the latest in outdoors apparel and gear. I am just back from the madness. Here are a few products that stood apart from the rest.

The Brooks Range Elephant Foot Sleeping Bag, $249, takes inspiration from minimalist European alpinists, the company says. Indeed, the compact down bag, which has suspenders built in, comes up only waist-high when in use, necessitating a warm down jacket on top for a bearable night's bivy. But the result of the pared-down design which is specified to keep a climber warm to 15 degrees Fahrenheit - is a bag that packs tiny and weighs just 1 pound. Available at www.brooks-range.com.

National Geographic's latest iPhone application, World Atlas, gives the ability to virtually explore the globe on a small screen. There are satellite photos, ocean maps, and GPS-based tools. A unique option, the "antique" view, offers oldworld-style maps viewable on a 21st century device. The World Atlas app, available on iTunes, costs $1.99.

The name may be a mouthful, but the Timex Ironman Global Trainer Bodylink System provides a GPSenabled training experience heretofore unavailable on such a small face. The watch has a four-part split-screen to display data on your realtime running speed, your pace, distance, heart rate, and other metrics a fitness freak may need. Available in May for about $300.

Like an Airstream Trailer for the adventure set, the Cricket Trailer is a lightweight camper towable by almost any automobile. Station wagons, minivans, and even some four-cylinder cars can hook up and haul the 15-foot-long pod.

Inside, a 6-foot-2-inch-high ceiling, a bed, table, fridge, sink and optional toilet provide a cozy living space for a camping couple or a small family on the road. The price tag is a steep $15,000 and up at www.crickettrailer.com.

In the I'm-not-sure-The Wenger about-that category, RangerGrip Bridgford Foods Corporation's premade, shelf-stable sandwiches are WPER, $72.95, is a touted to have a three-year life if stored at 80 degrees or less. The "ready to eat" sandwiches are marketed to campers, hikers, hunters, and boating enthusiasts. The sandwiches, originally developed for the U.S. military, come in flavors including BBQ beef, BBO chicken. Italian and "pepperoni stick."

The Keen Alaska Boot is a full-on snow tromper from a company best known for its sandals. The women's boots, made with a leather upper, are lined with insulation and have a "thermal heat shield footbed" said to reflect warmth back into the boot even as you walk over frozen ground. The boots will cost $150 when they debut later this year with Keen's cold-weather line.

I may be biased on this knife, which is named after a race in Patagonia that I will compete in next month. But the Wenger RangerGrip 179 worthy Swiss Army tool, including a wood saw, screwdriver, cap lifter, wire stripper, and a big serrated blade with a safety lock. The handle has rubber inlays and is laserengraved with the Wenger Patagonian Expedition Race (WPER) logo.

Bringing computer control to the category of the headlamp, Petzl's CORE System is a rechargeable battery compatible with many of the company's popular TIKKA and ZIPKA lights. Plug it into a USB computer port to charge. The ion-polymer battery can store enough power for 120 hours of operation. Soon to come, Petzl will add an application for users to set up custom battery power and light strength via a control panel on their computer screen.

pair of winter hydration packs for backcountry skiers and snowboarders. The women's Roulette and men's Pit Boss backpacks include the requisite CamelBak hydration hose and reservoir plus adjustable carrying straps for skis or a snowboard on back. Both packs have a shovel pocket and places to stow climbing skins, an avalanche probe, goggles and other backcountry essentials. Available for next year's ski season at $100.

Arachnoiditis disorder is a tough condition to control

DEAR DR. GOTT: My wife was diagnosed with arachnoiditis about three years ago. Our doctor has her on a fentanyl patch, Neurontin, Norco and Flexeril at bedtime. These medications seem to keep things in check for reducing her pain, but sometimes she will get a flareup and nothing seems to work. Her doctor put her on prednisone for short periods, which worked well and almost made her euphoric; however, when she isn't on the prednisone, her feet become callused, crack, bleed and become painful.

Have you run into this before with your patients? If so, what is out there in the way of new technology to help the situation? Any new studies being done? DEAR READER:

Arachnoiditis is a disorder caused by inflammation of the arachnoid, a membrane surrounding and protecting the nerves of the spinal cord. The inflammation can result from a bacterial infection or virus, injury, chronic spinal-nerve compression, chemical irritation or any invasive procedure, such as surgery.

The condition can present with stinging and burning of the lower back or legs, muscle cramps, spasms and pain. Bladder and bowel abnormalities, as well as sexual dysfunction, might also occur. Any prior disorders of the spine or aging can complicate or impede progress.

Treatment is commonly directed toward the relief of pain. Management might be accomplished through exercise, physiotherapy or psychotherapy and, as you have discovered, steroids. Surgical intervention remains controversial because of the less-thanoptimal outcome and the fact that pain relief is temporary. She might consider speaking with her physician about visiting a pain clinic, undergoing acupuncture, or attending water-aerobics or yoga classes. Treatment outcomes vary from person to person, so what works for one person might not be successful for another. The condition remains difficult to manage.

Her physician has her on several high-powered medications for pain control, and Flexeril, a muscle relaxant commonly used for acute muscle spasms, pain or injury. It is common for feet to crack, bleed and hurt like the dickens when dry. Perhaps your wife's problem is the result of a medication or the combination of drugs she is on. In any event, this condition can often be controlled with a mentholated chest rub or even plain petroleum jelly available in pharmacies. Simply have her lather a generous amount of the ointment on her feet then slide them into white cotton socks before retiring for the night. The medicated salves should work their magic by morning and provide welcome relief.

Finally, the National Institutes of Health performs clinical trials for this and a number of other medical conditions. She might wish to contact them to determine whether she qualifies for a program related to arachnoiditis. They can be reached through their Web site at www.ninds.nih.gov.

Because I edited your letter due to space limitations, I am also passing on your recommendation of the Circle of Friends with Arachnoiditis' supportgroup Web site, www.cofwa.org. Perhaps this information will assist other readers in coping with this extremely painful condition.

To provide related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Managing Chronic Pain." The poorly marked sea border – drawn by the American-led Command at the end of the Korean War - is a constant source of tension between the two Koreas. Scientists find reddish-orange color in dinosaur's tail, study says confirmed color in a dinosaur. Don't think purple Barney, but reddish-orange Conan O'Brien. The first solid proof of pigmentation has smallish meat-eating dinosaur found in China and named Sinosauropteryx. The creature seems to have russet colored rings, according to a paper published online Wednesday in the journal Nature. That 125 million-year-old tail has the same internal cellular coloring agents as the hair of a red-haired person. said study lead author Mike Benton, a professor of paleontology at the University of Bristol in England. And the same finding provides what some outside experts say is even more conclusive evidence that some dinosaurs had feathers, further linking them to birds.

By Seth Borenstein Associated Press writer

Benton and his colleagues didn't actually see the reddish color itself. Using an electron microscope, they spotted the specific cellular signs of the color. An earlier study by WASHINGTON – Scientists have for the first time another group of researchers and Benton's team found similar cellular color hints in prehistoric bird feathers.

Drawings of dinosaurs show them in all sorts of hues, usually duller Earth tones such as brown and gray, but scibeen spotted in the fossilized tail feathers of a entists have only speculated on their coloring. As their connection to birds came to light, so did the idea of brighter colors. But until now, there was no proof of any coloring.

> Before Benton's technique, which is likely to be copied with other dinosaur fossils, paleontologists had to look to a dinosaur's anatomy to guess at colors, said famed dinosaur expert Paul Sereno at the University of Chicago. The color and the feathers were probably used for display, like a peacock, he theorized. Sereno, who wasn't part of Benton's team, called it a "landmark paper" that gives us "a sneak peek at how they might have appeared when alive."

> "That's really cool just to be able to pin down this aspect," said University of Maryland paleontologist Thomas Holtz Jr., who wasn't part of the discovery team. "It does sort of help bring a more complete view of the living creature ... and further from just being a bunch of bones."

This dinosaur was "a dinky little guy," Holtz said. Adult Sinosauropteryx were about three feet long, but the tail accounted for more than half of that length and it had a long neck, so "there's not a lot of dinosaur there," he said. It fed on small mammals, sort of like a prehistoric roadrunner, he said.

While some dinosaurs are rather closely connected to birds evolutionarily, Sinosauropteryx is not. It was around earlier than the beginnings of birds and is the "most primitive feathered" dinosaur, Benton said. And those feathers, early in their evolutionary development, resemble tiny bristles, less than one-fifth of an inch tall, he said.

"They are stuffed with melanosomes just like any other feathers," Benton said. Melanosomes are molecules that contain color-producing pigments. With the pigment long gone in fossils, the shape of the melanosome shows what color it used to be. Sinosauropteryx had sphere-shaped melanosomes which translate to red, and sausage-shaped ones which are whitish-gray.

Mexico sees record 15.7% drop in remittances

MEXICO CITY (AP) -Money sent home by remittances to Mexico will Mexicans abroad plunged a probably continue to decline record 15.7 percent in 2009 as migrants worldwide struggled to find work during the global economic slowdown, the central bank reported Wednesday.

Remittances – Mexico's No. 2 source of foreign income after oil exports - totaled $21.2 billion in 2009, compared with $25.1 billion in 2008, the bank said.

Since the bank began tracking remittances in 1996, it has recorded just one other annual decline - a 3.6 percent decrease in 2008, as the world financial crisis exploded.

Central bank president Agustin Carstens attributed the latest drop to the weak economy in the United States and the increased difficulty Mexicans are having securing employment there. More than 11.8 million Mexicans live in the U.S.

Carstens said a 1.3 percent uptick in remittances in December, compared to the previous month, gave some hope for a recovery.

'It is just one figure, but it could indicate the beginning of a relative stabilization in the drop in remittances, and it would be congruent with the fact that economic activity in the United States is about to go from negative to positive," Carstens said.

An analyst was less optimistic, saying that employment levels in the United States "remain very bad" and through the first half of 2010 when compared to the same period of 2009.

Mindset changing for Filer program

t was the game that solidified Filer as a legit contender, a game a fledgling program could build upon.

Looking back on it now, the first meeting last season between Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference rivals Filer and Kimberly - exactly a year ago yesterday – has proven to be a significant building block for the Filer boys basketball team.

To refresh your memory of that instant classic, Filer came from eight points down in the final three and a half minutes to upset the defending SCIC champs. It made Filer's record 10-2 and proved the Wildcats, who had won just five games in the previous three seasons combined, were headed in a new direction.

"Last year was a huge win for us to beat Kimberly," said second-year Filer coach Alex Wells. "This year, we definitely have more confidence and just a different mindset."

Contrast last year's huge win to the Wildcats' victory at Kimberly on Tuesday. While it was still a big win, Filer walked onto the floor expecting to come out on top. The outcome wasn't surprising.

"It helps to have a little bit of experience," said Filer senior guard Bryce Beard. "Last year we were kind of Momentum is important. Health is paramount.

That's why College of Southern Idaho men's basketball coach Steve Gosar believes his team's bye week CSI's leading scorer and comes at a good time, even though the Golden Eagles own a four-game conference win streak.

"It helps us get a chance to get and Carrick Felix healed and get ready for that stretch run," said Gosar. "I think it came at a ing with nagging good spot for us. Hopefully we don't injuries from recent lose any momentum out of the deal." After a light practice on Monday, expected to have limited

Besides being perhaps the sharpest-dressed coach in the Magic Valley. Wells has also infused a sense of style into his players. They feel more comfortable and confident.

And at 10-3, they're also proving now that they're no one-hit wonder.

"Everybody can have that one flash-in-the-pan year when you come out and shock everybody, but when you sustain it for the next year, that says a lot about our program, that we're consistent and doing things right," Wells said. "Every big win we get this year is solidifying our program."

Indeed. But when will the rest of the state take notice? So far, Filer has been the Rodney Dangerfield of this season's media polls, barely sniffing the "Others receiving votes" realm.

"It is what it is," said Filer senior guard Bryce Beard. "When it comes down to it, the polls don't really matter. What matters is districts and the state tournament."

It doesn't help that the state-wide perception is that the SCIC is down this year, nor that the only voting media member who has seen Filer play this season is the Times-News'David Bashore. (For the record, Bashore is the one responsible for Filer being listed among "Others receiving votes").

Sure, the Wildcats aren't any better record-wise than the teams in the Top 5, but two of Filer's three losses were to Twin Falls, arguably one of the top teams in the state, regardless of classification. The other blemish was a three-point road defeat at Declo, which is a

Wizards' Arenas, Crittenton suspended for rest of NBA season

NEW YORK - Gilbert Arenas and Javaris ment in Germany. Crittenton were suspended without pay for the remainder of the season Wednesday by NBA commissioner David Stern, who said guns in the workplace "will not be tolerated."

Stern delivered the punishment after meeting with Arenas earlier Wednesday, and with Crittenton a day before. Arenas already had been suspended indefinitely by Stern on Ian. 6.

Both players admitted bringing a gun or guns into the Washington Wizards' locker room – a violation of the collective bargaining agreement - after a dispute stemming from a card game on a team flight. Stern said the players expressed remorse, but added, "nevertheless, there is no justification for their conduct."

Asked during a conference call what message the penalties sent, Stern said: "We mean what we say when we say that guns are prohibited from being in our buildings and on team business.

"You will be dealt with harshly because it's very potentially dangerous to our players, to the other players and to anyone else who might be involved."

He went on to a Hall of Fame career as a running back with the Green Bay Packers.

The winner will be picked by a selection committee of 12-16 former players and media members, including former New York Giants quarterback and current CBS analyst Phil Simms.

Tiger's under the care of another superstar ello, I'm Tiger Woods and I'm a sex addict.

Those might be the toughest words Woods ever had to say, assuming, of course, he stood up and said them at a clinic in Mississippi.

That's also assuming Woods is currently residing at the Pine Grove Behavioral Health and Addiction Services clinic in Hattiesburg, though photos taken by a certain tabloid suggest it to be true. If so, the world's greatest golfer is under the care of a superstar in his own field, sexual addiction treatment pioneer Patrick Carnes.

Unfortunately for Woods, greatness on the greens doesn't count in group therapy. Unlike golf, he has hardly any way of controlling what goes on.

It begins the same way for all. You can't be treated until you acknowledge there's a problem.

"I don't know if he can stand up and say it," said celebrity shrink Dr. Drew Pinsky, who hosted a VH1 sexual addiction reality show. "But it's a key component of these things."

For now, the frantic hype over where Woods is has begun to subside, if only because the consensus is that he indeed is behind guarded gates. The paparazzi have, for the most part, left Hattiesburg, driven out by a new fence encircling the clinic and the fact the money shot has already been taken.

Desperate times reportedly drove Woods to a place he never would have imagined.

It's easy to see why. There's no driving range, no chipping green to work on the short game. So far, no one has spotted Woods at the nearby athletic club where patients sometimes pump a little iron.

And if Woods thought preparing for the Masters was tough, he's likely now spending long days filled with lectures, group sessions and the ever-present 12-step program every patient must conquer. Patients must dress a certain way, address each other a certain way and, most importantly, can patient sift through his or her life to find the underlying reasons behind the addiction. For almost all, she says, there was a traumatic incident in childhood, anything from being spanked to more extreme things.

Often, it has something to do with the parent of the opposite sex.

That, at least, is Carnes' theory and that of his followers in a relatively new field. There are other skeptics who believe the whole thing is a bunch of psycho babble and that some people, mostly men, are inclined to want to have sex with reasonably attractive people of the opposite sex because it's in their DNA to do so.

The American Psychiatric Association does not list sex addiction as a diagnosable mental disorder, and there are no real statistics on how many people it might affect or the cure rate.

"It is what alcohol was 25 or 30 years ago," Canning said. "People don't want to talk about it and, because of the shame, people don't have a lot of places to go. They stay isolated in their pain and behavior."

If Woods is to change that behavior, his wife, Elin, likely will need to play a role. Spouses are encouraged to join some of the therapy because they are considered part of the overall problem.

"There's a reason that person chose to be with that identified addict and that tells you that person needs to do a bit of work, too," said Pinsky, an addiction specialist and longtime radio advice show host. "It's often difficult to get them to do so because they're thinking 'Why should I be doing anything when I'm so betrayed?' But you do hope in Tiger's case that his wife commits to the relationship and appreciates the effort."

New venue, date revive NFL's annual all-star game

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) – Chad Ochocinco took a snap and tested his punting leg, then later tried out as TV commentator while his opponents practiced.

The NFC all-star defense lined up with three No. 90s side by side – Julius Peppers, Darnell Dockett and Jay Ratliff.

Donovan McNabb pumped his fist in mock celebration when he completed a short pass to an unguarded receiver.

"Ah, that was awesome right there! Woo!" McNabb shouted.

The Pro Bowl's always a little different, even at practice. And this year's game is different from other Pro Bowls.

NFL all-stars held their first workouts Wednesday in preparation for Sunday's showcase, which has a new venue and a new place on the league calendar.

As a one-year experiment, the game has been moved to Miami from Honolulu, its home since 1980. And for the first time, it's being played the week before the Super Bowl instead of in its customary slot the week after the NFL's title game.

The switches paid off in ticket sales. The league expects a sellout, and the crowd of more than 70,000 will be the largest for a Pro Bowl since 1959 in Los Angeles.

McNabb said. "It doesn't do any justice for the guys who are playing in the Super Bowl game. But all of us who are here would love to be playing next week."

Along with seven Colts and seven Saints, absent players include Tom Brady, Philip Rivers, Brett Favre, Steven Jackson, Sidney Rice and Brian Cushing.

That still leaves a lot of talent on hand, including Chris Johnson, Adrian Peterson, Andre Johnson, Antonio Gates, DeMarcus Ware and Ray Lewis.

It's old hat to Lewis, chosen for the 11th time, the most of any player in this year's game. He said he decided without hesitation to take part.

"I love it too much," Lewis said. "It's one of the greatest accomplishments you can have outside of the Super Bowl. Whether it's your first time or your 11th time, it's the same reward. You understand these times will never be again."

At the other end of the spectrum is Redskins linebacker London Fletcher, the league's most prolific tackler over the past decade. He made the Pro Bowl for the first time as a replacement for the Saints' Jonathan Vilma.

"Once I knew I was going to the Pro Bowl, I was so excited about it," Fletcher said. "It has been a long time coming, but I'm here now."

QB Warner to address his future Friday

PHOENIX – Arizona Cardinals quarterback Kurt Warner will hold a news conference Friday to announce whether he will retire from the game, his agent said.

Mark Bartelstein, in a telephone interview on Wednesday, said the announcement will be made at the Cardinals training facility in Tempe. Bartelstein declined to reveal Warner's decision.

"These kind of programs are very structured," said Maureen Canning, a clinical consultant for sexual compulsive programs at the Meadows treatment facility in Arizona. "It's basically a 12-hour day every day, plus homework."

Treatment centers like the Meadows and Pine Grove are places where people end up only when the consequences are so painful they have no choice. For some it's divorce, while for others it's a lost job, jail or even disease.

National scorn? Well, that, too.

Indeed, for Woods the pain has to be magnified by the fact he's such a public figure. People cheered his every move, dreamed of what it would be like to be him.

Behind it all, though, may have lurked a very different person.

"Most sex addicts are extremely lonely emotionally," Canning said. "They look really good. They're intelligent, bright and personable. But emotionally, they're lonely because they don't know how to feel feelings or allow anyone close. They confuse the intensity of sex with that of intimacy."

Canning says the best part of her job is helping a

"We actually did a whole Oprah on this," Pinsky said. Don't count on seeing Woods on "The Oprah Winfrey Show" anytime soon. The six weeks of inpatient therapy is just the beginning for a program that can stretch up to five years.

This long-term program is much like one for alcohol or drug addiction, which means making sure Woods' environment is structured so he doesn't have the urge or opportunity for sex outside his marriage. Usually that involves having someone around to make sure he stays out of trouble and keeps up with his 12-step meetings.

That can be tricky for someone who travels around the world to make a living, especially if his wife and kids aren't along. Woods will have to abide by new rules, and his Vegas haunts will surely be out.

He may find it particularly difficult to adjust to a confining lifestyle while trying to regain his dominance on the golf course.

The reward is that it may be the only thing that can save his marriage.

The bonus is that it may some day also help salvage his reputation.

Winn hit .262 with two homers and 51 RBIs for the San Francisco Giants last vear, but his on-base percentage was just .318. The 35year-old was an All-Star in 2002, when he batted .298 with 14 homers and 75 RBIs for Tampa Bay.

New York figures to start Curtis Granderson in center field and Nick Swisher in right most of the time, with Winn and Brett Gardner sharing time in left.

Damon helped the Yankees win the World Series for the first time since 2000, hitting .282 with 23 homers and 82 RBIs, but he was coming off a $52 million, four-year contract and New York valued the 36-year-old at far less.

"The Yankees along all have said they had $2 million and that obviously removed them out of the marketplace of a lot of talented players. We really did not have a lot to talk about," said Damon's agent, Scott Boras. "Johnny knew what their budget was, so there was never any expectancy. The Yankees could never make an offer because they knew Johnny's performance value far exceeded what their budget was."

The Yankees' projected payroll for 18 players with agreements likely to make the opening-day roster is now at $205 million.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

"I have a whole bag of tricks,' he said, 'which contains a hundred ways of escaping my enemies."

— Aesop

In today's deal from the 2010 NEC Cup there was fine declarer play in both four spades and in three no-trump.

Against four spades West's diamond lead gave nothing away. Declarer, Tadashi Teramoto, finessed, played two rounds of trump (ducked by East), and led an impassive low club from his hand. Fooled by South's bland countenance, West ducked, and now declarer had his contract with an overtrick. In fact, there was no defense even if West had taken the club queen. Declarer can arrange a heart ruff in hand, and the trump spots are just too good.

In the other room in three notrump, South ran into the one lie of the major suits that would spell defeat at once on a heart lead if he elected to win the trick. Maybe he should have ducked?

That was what happened when Babu Koneru led a heart and Li Jie, South for the Chinese team, did indeed duck. The defenders cleared hearts (West deceptively signaling for spades), but declarer had no option except to knock out the spade ace. Back came a spade from East, so declarer ran the spade suit, on which Koneru deceptively discarded two diamonds, trying to suggest he did not have the diamond queen. Despite that, declarer still went ahead and took the diamond finesse for his contract, rather than trying to endplay East with the club queen to lead into the diamond tenace. Well done!

ANSWER: If the opponents had stayed silent, you would have responded one spade, of course. When the opponents bid, there is no real need to stretch to introduce a weak four-carder on very minimum values. Don't tell a soul, but if I did bid, I'd be inclined to raise to two diamonds!

IF JANUARY 28 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Accept any opportunity at face value if it arrives during the next two weeks. A casual offer may contain the answer to your prayers. This is a good time to plan for the future or to improve your situation by making wise decisions. Through the middle of March, your business aspirations can be achieved through a combination of cold-blooded thinking and strategic actions. Avoid a potential wild goose chase in your love life during this time that might distract you from success. Do not begin anything of crucial importance in August and September, but diligently follow through on responsibilities and obligations.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Sometimes the gray area can make decisions difficult. Wait until matters are clearer before making a choice.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Don't let high praise go to your head. Some may see you as mysterious but others simply don't know who you are.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An exciting new hookup is probably not in it for the long haul. Accuracy and the truth are not necessarily the same thing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Learn to live within your means and you'll be much less frustrated. Take time to contemplate past mistakes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take time for contemplation

Times News, Twin Falls, Idaho

DEAR ABBY: I am in my early 40s, and married with two daughters. I have a friend, "Sally," whom I have known since the third grade. We are like sisters.

Sally has been profoundly depressed for at least 15 years. She sees a therapist and a psychiatrist on a regular basis and is on medication.

My question, Abby, is what do you say to someone who calls at least once a week, for at least an hour, crying so hard I can barely understand her? She calls to tell me how sad she is and how she doesn't think anything in her life will improve. While I'm concerned for her and care about what happens to her, I don't feel I can give her any advice or guidthat her ance counselor/psychiatrist isn't able to give.

Short of listening and providing the proverbial shoulder to lean on, what more can I do? I feel I need to be there for her, but I also feel drained dry because this has been going on for several years. Any guidance you might offer would be greatly appreciated.

- CONCERNED FRIEND IN FLORIDA

DEAR CONCERNED: You are a supportive friend, but when Sally calls crying so hard she can hardly talk, tell her that the person she needs to be talking to is her therapist. By allowing her to vent to you, you are preventing the therapist from evaluating her while she's in crisis and giving her the tools she needs to improve. Your friend may need to have her meds adjusted or changed, and seeing Sally while she is "at the bottom" could give therapist valuable her insights. If Sally isn't capable of placing the call to her therapist, offer to do it for her.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 14year-old girl in eighth grade. I have plenty of friends, play the clarinet and piano, and am involved in school yearbook and theater, among other things. My problem is, I get sick a lot.

No one can figure out why I can't go two weeks without picking up a virus. Because of this I am gone from school quite often. I can handle the occasional teasing I get from other kids, and my teachers are helpful. It's the two school secretaries I have a problem with. Once, when I left school during the day because I wasn't feeling well, one of them said to me: "You need to try to be at school more. I know it's hard, but you've got to try." Other things they have said lead me to believe they think I'm faking. Now they want a note from every doctor I see. I was gone a lot last year, but they didn't enforce this. What is appropriate in responding to their "comments"? I'd like to ask, "Is that your opinion as a secretary?" or say, "I'm doing the best I can with my situation and you're not helping." Or, I could bore them with a detailed description of my medical history, or maybe complain to the principal. What do you suggest? - SICK OF IT IN IOWA DEAR SICK OF IT: Your medical history is not the school secretaries' business, and you do not owe them any detailed descriptions of it. However, it's possible that the woman who advised you that you "needed to be at school more" was speaking out of concern, so try not to be defensive. If a note from your doctor is required, you should produce one after every absence. And I recommend that you have your mother contact the principal if there are any questions about your medical status.
