With orange bags slung over their shoulders, members of Boy Scout Troop 159 picked up garbage Saturday along Blue Lakes Boulevard for Johnny Horizon Day, an annual clean-up of Twin Falls County roads.

"Our whole troop comes out here every year to help out," said Ryker Harris, 16, of Twin Falls. "I did not want to do this at all but it is worth it at the end of the day."

Citizens and organizations from across the county participated in the campaign, with a goal to clean every road in the county. Area Lions clubs, Southern Idaho Solid Waste and the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce were just a few of the organizations involved in this year's Johnny Horizon.

"It's just an opportunity for civic organizations to go out and give back to the community," said Rick Novacek, director of Twin Falls County Parks and Waterways Department. "They clean up 75 percent of the roads in a four-hour period for one day a year, and it's just a big success."

Gathering empty beer bottles and other litter may not have been the ideal activity for Troop 159, but members said they appreciated the chance to serve.

"This shows community spirit," said Jacob White, 17, of Twin Falls. "It is a way to help others around you."

"These boys were ready to go," said Kelly White, a leader with Troop 159. "These boys needed service hours. It is good for them to help out in the community. ... They learn that you should not be throwing garbage on the road, and just to be better citizens."

Surging winds and chilly temperatures didn't make things easy for the volunteers, but things could have been worse.

"It could be a lot nicer out here," White said. "But you know, last year it was raining."

Afterward, a free lunch was served to volunteers at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds in Filer, the Red Barrel in Castleford and the LDS building in Murtaugh.

"The county appreciated their efforts in coming together," Novacek said of the volunteers. "This helps to keep the county roads clean. It is greatly appreciated."

More than just damage control

Idaho House hopefuls use 'opposition research' to damage opponents

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — After Idaho media reported this week that Republican U.S. House candidate Vaughn Ward was late on his Valley County property taxes, it took just minutes for him to pay his $434 bill.

Within the hour, however, the Magic Valley product's campaign was also on the offensive, circulating a document to reporters outlining how U.S. Rep. Walt Minnick, D-Idaho, was late on his property taxes multiple times since 1999.

This wasn't something somebody ginned up quickly: There were photos of Minnick's home and investment properties, details of their skyrocketing values, even a table showing the congressman had $712.94 in late payments and interest.

Bank's failure puts historical Stanley lodge in limbo

By Cynthia Sewell
Idaho Statesman

STANLEY — If their bank had not been shut down, Karen and Gary Zak say they would not be in this situation.

"We didn't fail. The bank failed," Karen Zak said.

The Zaks say they had never missed a mortgage payment on the lodge they own near Stanley. Their loan from First Bank of Idaho was in good standing until the Ketchum-based bank collapsed one year ago. The bank's branches and desirable assets were taken over by U.S. Bank, but the assets U.S. Bank wouldn't take — including the Zaks' loan — were left to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

Now, after a year of unsuccessfully wrangling with the FDIC, the Zaks are about to lose their beloved lodge, and a prime piece of Stanley Basin property could soon be on the auction block.

On the outskirts of Stanley, the Salmon River Lodge sits on the east side of the river after which it is named.

Sun Valley founder Averell Harriman often stayed in the five-bedroom lodge built in 1931. A small cabin built in 1898 was the original stage stop when the road ran along the east side of the river before crossing at the Lower Stanley bridge

Mules, draft horses and early tractors put on a show

A view of the back end of a mule team didn't deter Ben Holland from taking the reins and picking up the plow secured to the mules during Saturday's old-fashioned farming event southwest of Twin Falls.

The Spring Farm Day was hosted in a field along U.S. Highway 93 by the Southern Idaho Draft Horse and Mule

TERRELL WILLIAMS/For the Times-News

Attendees got a chance to work a team of mules and a hand plow during Saturday's Farm Day hosted by the Southern Idaho Draft Horse and Mule Association and the Magic Valley Tractor Pullers.

Association, along with the Pullers. The day's steady wind Magic Valley Antique Tractor and chilly temperatures thinned the crowd's potential ranks, but those who attended both observed and participated in the show.

After laying the team's worn leather ropes across his shoulders, Holland gave a holler to the stock, "Get up Bess, get up."

The two animals pulled forward as Holland reached for the plow handle. He shifted the triangular plow, its front point piercing the soil. With Holland holding the plow steady, the team made its way up the field, folding the soil over, leaving an earthen wake behind it like some dirt-bound tugboat.

Mexican traffickers getting help on the inside for business on the outside

Drug traffickers using U.S. prison gangs to carry out criminal actions

By Christopher Sherman
Associated Press writer

EL PASO, Texas — When Mexican drug traffickers need someone killed or kidnapped, or drugs distributed in the United States, they increasingly call on American subcontractors — U.S.-based prison gangs that run criminal enterprises from behind bars, sometimes even from solitary confinement.

Prison gangs have long controlled armies of street toughs on the outside. But in interviews with The Associated Press, authorities say the gangs' activity has expanded beyond street-level drug sales to establish a business alliance with Mexican cartels.

"They'll do the dirty work that, say, the cartels, they don't want to do" in the United States. "They don't want to get involved," said a former member of Barrio Azteca, a U.S. prison gang tied to Mexico's Juarez cartel.

The partnership benefits both sides: The gangs give drug traffickers a large pool of experienced criminals and established distribution networks in the U.S. And the cartels provide the prison gangs with discounted drugs and the logistical support of top criminal organizations.

To carry on their gang activity, imprisoned gang members resort to elaborate subterfuge: using sign language, sending letters through third parties, enlisting corrupt prison officials, holding conference calls using contraband cell phones. Some even conduct business in an ancient Aztec language to foil censors.

FBI special agent Samantha Mikeska spent nearly a decade investigating the Barrio Azteca. Last year, three leaders got life sentences, but she questioned the real

Idaho 81 work begins in Malta Tuesday

Reconstruction of Idaho Highway 81 and the addition of sidewalks to the Cassia County town of Malta are expected to begin Tuesday, the Idaho Transportation Department announced Friday.

Roadway reconstruction will begin at the junction of Idaho 81 and Idaho Highway 77 in Malta, and will extend north for about 10 miles. The separate sidewalk project will install sidewalk, curb and gutter, starting near the Raft River schools and continuing east to the junction of Idaho 77/81, then north to First Street.

Crews will also begin roadwork in mid-May by milling off a top layer of asphalt, overlaying the entire section with a chip-seal coat and paving a fresh layer of asphalt, according to an ITD release. The projects are scheduled to be completed by mid-June, pending weather.

Drivers are urged to use caution in work zones and near schools, and to follow all traffic control signs, lane closures and flaggers. Speeding fines are increased in work zones.

Johnson Excavation Inc., of Inkom is the contractor for the $1.7 million federally-funded project.

Timmerman Rest Area reconstruction starts today

Reconstruction of the Timmerman Rest Area at the junction of U.S. Highway 20 and Idaho Highway 75 is scheduled to begin today, the Idaho Transportation Department announced Friday.

The rest area will be closed for the duration of the project, which is expected to reach completion in September. Improvements to allow the area to serve long-term growth needs include expanded restroom facilities, accommodations for family usage, an expanded parking area, and Americans with Disabilities Act accessible parking, ramps and restrooms, according to an ITD release.

Barry Hayes Construction of Idaho Falls is the contractor for the $2 million project. Motorists are encouraged to plan ahead and call 511, or visit 511.idaho.gov, for information on the state highway or interstate system.

Twin Falls City Council to meet today

Times-News

The Twin Falls City Council will meet at 5 p.m. today in Council Chambers, 305 Third Ave. E.

The council will discuss the following:

- An ordinance that would permit the city to construct or operate facilities that do not conform to an area's zoning, if placed on city-owned property.

The ordinance would permit all municipal services in all zoning districts, but would require a public hearing and council approval before new municipal services can begin in a nonconforming zone.

For example, the ordinance would allow a new emergency communications tower or water storage tank to be built on city-owned land in a residential zone.

- A request for an outdoor event permit for Garibaldi's Mexican Restaurant, 645

Filer Ave., for Cinco de Mayo, which would take place from 6 to 9 p.m. Wednesday. Consent is needed due to proposed outdoor music and alcohol sales.

- A request for the 21st Annual Mother's Day and Latin Fiesta at City Park. The event would take place from noon to 8 p.m. on Sunday.
- A second one-year extension on approval of the final plat for Eagle Parke Subdivision, a 74-lot project on 30.47 acres at the southwest corner of Falls Avenue East and Hankins Road. The extension is sought due to the real estate market's condition, city documents state.

- A one-year extension of the final plat of the Rex Subdivision, which has two commercial lots on 0.74 acres at 1667 Locust St. N. The extension is sought due to current economic conditions, city documents state.

Farm day

reddening his face, the 33-year-old Holland smiled ear to ear.

"It's a lot of work but it's not hurting any of the three of us," Holland said.

There is something to be said in the work's simplicity, the quiet communication and accomplishment. The day was uncomplicated by the grumbling of a tractor's engine, as the earth moved by combination of only man, mule and a centuries-old plow.

"He's got what it takes — he sure does," said Cotton Riley, watching as Holland took pass after pass through the field.

Riley brought the equipment and the team. At 99 years old, he farmed with animals and the early implements as a young man, and still does.

"It's just what I grew up with and it still works," he said." I can work my garden just fine."

Watching the work from the sidelines was 13-year-old Braden Wiggins, his four younger siblings and his mom, Spur Baker, from Filer.

Riley picked Wiggins out and asked, "Want to give it a try?"

Wiggins shifted his weight, shrugging his shoulders slightly, "I don't know."

The teen, agreeing to try after bering assured he wouldn't go at it alone, manned the plow with Holland's help.

"After this, he won't think helping mom with some chores outside isn't so bad," Baker said.

At times Wiggins struggled with the weight of the plow and the mules' speed. After a pass up and back down the field, Wiggins gave way for someone else to try.

"It wasn't so bad. At times I felt like I couldn't keep up but I did," Wiggins said, while emptying his shoes of loose dirt.

He walked back to his family, who encircled him with questions and praise.

"There is quite a bit of novelty here today," Riley said. "Hopefully the people here will learn and appreciate how it was done before."

Jerome resident Joseph Aslett certainly appreciated the show.

"It's just awesome," Aslett said. "It goes to show you that if we have no gas, no resources that we have now, we could still survive."

Research

Its origin? The properties embedded in the three-page Word document appears to indicate it came from the National Republican Campaign Committee.

Ward's counterattack reveals a modern campaign reality, as candidates and political parties across America unleash teams of so-called "opposition researchers" on rivals, poring over their court records, family histories and tax filings. Sifting through dirty laundry might secure some kind of advantage down the line — or help a candidate with an antidote to a potentially damaging story.

Reporters often get calls that start something like this: "Hey, did you hear about...?"

"Every candidate uses an opposition researcher to get this information," said Ryan O'Barto, Ward's campaign manager. "The stakes have risen. In the age of the Internet, it makes it a lot easier to search about facts on people."

Ward faces state Rep. Raul Labrador in the May 25 GOP primary; the winner will take on Minnick.

O'Barto pays Alexandra, Va.-based Haley O'Neill

LLC, an opposition research firm, to gather material on campaign foes.

Labrador has also hired outside help to do his opposition research.

"In every campaign, you're always trying to find out if there's anything you can use," Labrador said. "You also better do some research on yourself. You need to know your strengths and weaknesses."

John Foster, Minnick's campaign manager, says he keeps his sleuthing in-house, including staffers who film Ward's events.

"I view it more as backup and protection," Foster said. "When accusations fly in the heat of campaigns, it's good to have research, to make sure that what's being discussed is factual."

The National Republican Campaign Committee has about a half dozen opposition researchers scrutinizing Democratic campaigns, including in Idaho. The Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee is doing the same thing on Republicans.

Though Ward was on the receiving end of the National Republican Campaign Committee document about Minnick's late tax payments, he hasn't been endorsed in his primary race against Labrador, said Joanna Burgos, a spokeswoman.

The committee isn't taking sides in primaries with its research, she said.

"It's to use against a Democrat, not in support of one candidate or another," said Burgos on Thursday.

Labrador said he hasn't asked for, or received, opposition research results from the National Republican Campaign Committee.

Another opposition research piece about Minnick distributed by Ward's campaign to reporters this week details the Idaho congressman's friendship with President George W. Bush's Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson, former chairman of Goldman Sachs Group Inc.

The document appears aimed at linking Minnick to bailouts and the New York investment bank, which is now the target of mortgage securities fraud charges; Goldman Sachs-linked donors have given Minnick more than $10,000 since 2008.

Still, Minnick's own opposition researchers might also highlight how Ward's campaign got thousands from John Whitehead, a former Goldman Sachs chairman.

For those gathering the information, it's like being a partisan investigative journalist whose only subject is "the other guy" — and his or her past transgressions, supposed or otherwise.

Opposition researchers in the 2010 Idaho campaign, for instance, have long since pored over Idaho's courts database.

There, they've found details of Ward's 2001 divorce from his first wife and speeding tickets; Minnick, also married for a second time, once drove too fast in a school zone; Labrador, for his part, got a speeding ticket in March.

Minnick brought in $231,000 in campaign cash during the last quarter, while Ward raised $167,610, giving both more resources to devote to opposition research than Labrador, who raised just $35,763.

But Labrador and Minnick's and Ward's campaigns downplayed any money advantage, saying the costs of such research pale in comparison to airfare, lodging, logistics or mailers needed to spread a campaign's message.

Lodge

and continuing to Yankee Fork.

Karen Zak, a writer and journalist, and Gary Zak, a financial adviser for the Paul Allen Co. in Seattle, became part owners of the lodge in 2002 and full owners in 2006. The Zaks are divorced but remain friends and partners in the lodge. Karen Zak recently moved to Boise from Hailey; she spends her summers working at the lodge, which has two employees.

Today, the lodge is used by vacationers and for weddings, family events and other large gatherings. Last summer, the lodge had 2,500 guests, Karen Zak said. Four weddings already are scheduled for this summer. Zak fears she will have to cancel the weddings if they lose the lodge.

“These are real-life people who have been planning their wedding for months. They don’t deserve to have this happen,” Zak said.

The 4.9-acre riverfront parcel is zoned commercial, but it is surrounded by thousands of acres preserved under conservation easements through the Sawtooth National Recreation Area.

The Zaks had worked with the U.S. Forest Service to draft a conservation easement for their land to protect it from overdevelopment, but the easement had not yet been put in place when First Bank failed.

“This is not just another property lost to a foreclosure ... It is a historical site in a commercially zoned spot,” Zak said. “Someone could come into that view corridor and destroy that beautiful piece of property.”

Zak contends the FDIC’s policies led to their “performing loan” being reclassified as a “nonperforming” one.

Seasonal businesses often rely on a line of credit or other financing to help make ends meet when cash flows decline during slack periods between the winter recreation season and summer tourist season.

Local banks frequently work with their clients to customize financing plans to accommodate these seasonal fluctuations, said Bryan Furlong, a former First Bank of Idaho president who now works at Zions Bank in Ketchum.

When the Zaks bought out their partners in 2006, the lodge was appraised at $1.3 million. The Zaks got an

This undated photo shows the Salmon River Lodge near Stanley. The lodge’s owners say they had never missed a mortgage payment. $890,000 mortgage and a $92,500 equity reserve account through First Bank of Idaho. The equity reserve account was used to make half of each month’s $5,600 payment during slow months.

Those terms were unacceptable to the FDIC, Zak said. When the FDIC took over the Zaks’ loan, it froze the equity account and gave them 30 days to pay off the loan or find other financing.

“In the middle of the credit meltdown. “In the dead of winter in Stanley,” Zak said.

The Zaks could not afford to pay off the loan. They went to three other banks seeking financing. All three turned them down.

“The conservative credit market and depreciated values precluded new financing,” she said.

They stopped making their monthly payments last May. “We realized we were pouring money into a black hole,” she said.

The total loan is about $955,000. It would take a payment of about $62,000 to make the loan current, Zak said.

The FDIC typically sells performing and nonperforming loans together in a bundle. The bundled loans are sold at auction to prequalified buyers, often for about 55 percent of their value.

“Their job is to liquidate assets to get the cash. They don’t really want to take any personal interest in what is going on,” she said. “But aren’t these extraordinary circumstances and extraordinary times?”

She said if she and her ex-husband could buy the property at a 50 percent discount from the FDIC, as foreclosure bundlers do,

“we could get financing from two banks today.”

The FDIC is slated to sell the Salmon River Lodge loan on Friday, according to Zak. The FDIC confirmed the loan will be sold but would not confirm the date. Once a loan is sold, the new note holder can renegotiate with the borrower or demand full payment and begin foreclosure proceedings.

The FDIC took receivership of 2,180 loans when it shut down First Bank in April 2009. Since then, 1,474 of those loans have been resolved — paid off by the borrower or refinanced through another institution.

The FDIC is still working to resolve the remaining 706 loans, including the Zaks’, said FDIC spokesman Greg Hernandez. Any loans not resolved will be sold at auction, either individually or as part of a bundle.

Hernandez could not speak specifically about the Zaks’ loan, when it would be sold or if it would be bundled, because of privacy issues, but he did say the loan is moving toward foreclosure because of “nonperformance by the borrowers.”

Zak said she is fighting back not only to save her property, but to stand up for “people who are so downtrodden that they never would think that they have the right to fight back.”

“Ketchum was a microcosm of a small-bank failure, and the fallout that has continued to take place,” she said.

“I would bet that in many cases around the U.S. where there have been small-bank failures, there have been similar situations for people like us, who were not in default, but still lose their property because we cannot find financing,” Zak said.

Committee hears from Idaho producers on farm bill

Rep. Minnick: Farmers need less paperwork

NAMPA (AP) — Idaho producers told members of the House Agriculture Committee during a hearing on the new federal farm bill they need less government regulation and more money spent on agriculture research.

The current $284 billion bill, approved in 2008, expires in September 2012, and members of the committee are holding a series of meetings around the country. They stopped in Idaho on Saturday.

Idaho Reps. Walt Minnick, a Democrat, and Mike Simpson, a Republican, took part in the meeting that also included committee members from California, Oklahoma and other states.

“Compliance with existing programs is too paper-intensive,” Minnick said. “We need to help people spend less time farming the government, and more time farming the land.”

“Our ability to maintain a cheap, safe, and domestic supply of food in the United States is tied directly to the policies put forth in the farm bill,” Simpson said. “Too few people in our nation appreciate the complexities of maintaining a domestic supply of food while too many underappreciate the work, money, and emotion that goes into being a farmer or rancher.”

Ron Bitner, owner of Bitner Vineyards, represented the Idaho Wine Commission. He said immigration reform is needed.

“Several different groups said we need to have access to migrant workers but they need to be documented,” he said.

A fourth-generation fruit grower from Fruitland, Kelly Henggeler, also wants the guest worker program reformed.

“We lack sufficient legal labor to prune, pick, pack and process our crop,” Henggeler said. “Despite our best recruitment efforts, it is difficult, if not often impossible, to find local workers.”

Fred Bossy grows organic crops on 300 acres along the Little Wood River. He told committee members he wants U.S. Department of Agriculture grants and low-interest loans made more available to small producers.

Additional meetings are planned in California, Wyoming, Georgia, Alabama, Texas and South Dakota.

WASHINGTON — In a not-so-subtle jab at bureaucratic language often found in U.S. Code or the Federal Register (“in witness thereof,” “notwithstanding” and “directive,” among other classics), the Center for Plain Language awarded its National ClearMark Awards on Thursday for the best and worst examples of language in government, business and the nonprofit community.

The center distributed ClearMark awards for examples of good language and WonderMark awards for examples of the worst. HealthWise, an Idaho-based nonprofit group, won the Grand ClearMark Award for a video describing a back pain product. Four federal agencies earned either recognition:

ClearMark Awards

The Federal Trade Commission won the “Best Original Public Document” award for its new financial model privacy form, essentially a document that financial institutions can use to develop privacy notices for consumers. Judges said the form “reflects a balance of required regulation and industry comments, and an easy-to-read and well-organized design.”

HealthFinder.gov, a website operated by the Department of Health and Human Services’ Office of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion, won for best public sector website. It was developed after extensive research involving more than 750 people.

“This site hits the mark with its simple-to-use and easy-to-understand format. It provides people at all levels of literacy with relevant health-care information,” judges said.

One judge described the U.S. Customs and Border Protection I-94 form as “rife with language that is confusing, arcane, bureaucratic, bizarre, and downright offensive.”

WonderMark Awards

U.S. Customs and Border Protection won the Grand WonderMark Award for the I-94 form, the document tourists must complete before entering the country. One judge described the form as “rife with language that is confusing, arcane, bureaucratic, bizarre, and downright offensive.” (Questions on the form include “Have you ever been or are you now involved in espionage or sabotage?”)

A Department of Homeland Security spokeswoman would not comment on the honor but noted that the form will be phased out and replaced in coming months with an electronic version that includes tutorials in several languages.

The Department of Education’s Office of Postsecondary Education was also cited for a final regulation it issued last July about student loans. The regulation included two sentences of 84 and 75 words and was cited for “confusing languages, legalistic terms and incomprehensible lists.”

“Paragraphs do not start with main ideas,” one judge noted. They recommended tables and charts instead.

value of sending them back to prison.

“I think I’ve made them stronger,” she said.

The latest annual National Drug Threat Assessment, released in February by the Justice Department, said prison gangs were operating in all 50 states and were increasing their influence over drug trafficking along the U.S.-Mexico border.

Federal authorities have documented numerous links between most of the major U.S. prison gangs and Mexican drug trafficking organizations.

For instance, federal prosecutors in San Diego charged 36 people last year in a racketeering case that connected California’s infamous Mexican Mafia prison gang to the Arellano Felix drug trafficking organization in Tijuana. Gang members and associates allegedly worked in drug-trafficking, kidnapping and attempted murder for the Mexican cartel.

Baldemar Rivera ran a large Texas’ prison gang called Raza Unida for years while confined in isolation, which is common for gang members.

Rivera, who is known as “the Professor” and perpetuates the name with wire-rimmed glasses and calm demeanor, said he used sign language to discuss business with a subordinate who visited him in prison. When Rivera needed to communicate with gang members in other Texas prisons, he turned to his captains — who were also imprisoned — to write to the men.

“Within three or four days, everything was known,” Rivera, 50, said recently from a medium-security facility near Cuero, where he is serving a 60-year murder sentence. He says he left gang life a decade ago after finishing the state’s gang-renouncement program.

Rivera was running Raza Unida in the 1990s, when prisoners often used the mail to communicate with each other and the outside world. Now they have cell phones. Authorities confiscated 1,200 phones from Texas prisons last year.

Texas inmates can no longer mail letters directly to each other, but they now use third parties. For instance, a letter sent to a girlfriend is immediately readdressed and mailed to another gang member in prison.

Inmates also hold conference calls arranged by friends on the outside. To get around mail censors, some even communicate in Nahuatl, the language of the ancient Aztecs, which is still spoken by about 1.4 million people in parts of Mexico.

Gang members learn the language from books and use it mostly in written communications. Some leaders adopt Aztec names in Nahuatl.

The use of the language “is to honor their heritage but most importantly to conceal their messages to law enforcement,” said FBI special agent Armando Ramos.

Sometimes they get help from corrupt court or prison employees. A woman who worked in the federal public defender’s office was convicted in El Paso of serving as a bridge between incarcerated gang members and cohorts on the outside.

In at least two recent federal cases, gang members testified about how money from the gang’s outside enterprises — extortion, drug sales and other illicit activity — was routinely funneled to gang members’ commissary accounts in state and federal prisons.

In a case against Texas’

Mexican Mafia prison gang last year, an FBI agent testified that the gang collected at least $8,000 per week and sometimes as much as $40,000, just in San Antonio. The proceeds were sent to gang leaders in prison, where they could spend it on food, stationery and other personal items, or they could send it to family members on the outside.

“Commissary money, all that, it just comes in,” said the former member of Barrio Azteca, who left the gang and is serving a 40-year murder sentence in Texas. He spoke on condition of anonymity because he feared for his safety in prison and after his release.

“Drugs — you don’t even got to ask for that, it just flows in towards you. Visitations from girls that mess with the same people, with the group that you’re in.”

The contraband is smuggled in by corrupt guards, lawyers and visitors, and paid for with the revenue from the streets — a cell phone can cost $2,000. The goods are dropped at pre-arranged locations where prisoners can retrieve them while on work detail. Once 60 phones were found in an air compressor delivered for a Texas prison’s workshop.

Once released, gang members are expected to report to gang leaders on the outside, attend regular gang meetings and contribute to the gang’s money-making operations, usually by selling drugs or shaking down the street dealers in their assigned part of the city.

Estimates put the number of active gang members in the U.S. near 1 million. Prison gangs like the Mexican Mafia, the Texas Syndicate, Hermandad de Pistoleros Latinos, (the Brotherhood of Latino Gunmen), Raza Unida and Mexikanemi account for only about 145,000 gang members. But they control most of the local street gangs as well, particularly in southern California and south Texas.

An FBI investigation showed high-level contact between the Barrios Aztecas and the Juarez cartel, Mikeska said.

She cited recorded conversations between a Barrio Azteca captain in the U.S. and Eduardo Ravelo, who runs the Aztecas in Juarez and is known to be a close friend of the Juarez cartel’s point man in that city. Ravelo is on the FBI’s 10 Most Wanted list.

NYPD: Video has possible SUV bomb suspect in alley

By Tom Hays and Deepti Hajela
Associated Press writers

NEW YORK — Police investigating a failed car bomb left in Times Square have videotape of a possible suspect shedding clothing in an alley and putting it in a bag, and found a substance that resembled fertilizer in the parked SUV, Commissioner Raymond Kelly said Sunday.

The surveillance video shows a white man in his 40s taking off one shirt, revealing another underneath.

Kelly said officers were on their way to a Pennsylvania town to talk to a tourist who also might have recorded the suspect on his video camera.

The commissioner said there's no evidence that a Pakistani Taliban videotaped claim to the failed car bombing is valid.

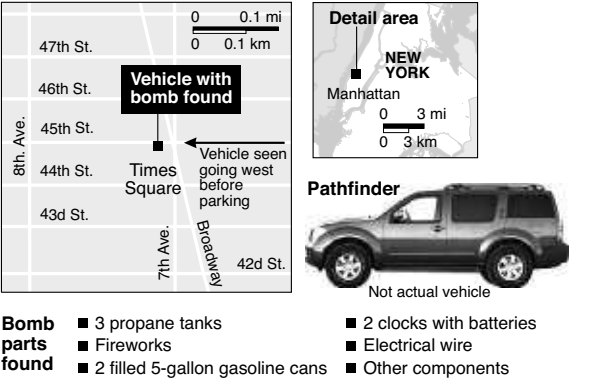

Police found the SUV parked on one of the prime blocks for Broadway shows such as "The Lion King" on Saturday night. Thousands of tourists were cleared from the area for 10 hours. The bomb was dismantled, and no one was hurt.

The SUV contained three barbecue-grill-sized propane tanks, fireworks, two filled 5-gallon gasoline containers and two clocks with batteries, electrical wire and other components, police said. Timers were connected to a 16-ounce can filled with the fireworks, which were apparently intended to set the gas cans and propane afire, Kelly said.

"Clearly it was the intent of whoever did this to cause mayhem, to create casualties," Kelly said at a news conference at police headquarters. "It's just a sober

Times Square bomb scare

New York police found a smoking Nissan Pathfinder with an "amateurish" but potentially powerful bomb. The area was cleared of tourists for 10 hours after police were alerted by 2 vendors.

reminder that New York is clearly a target of people who want to come here and do us harm."

He said New Yorkers are lucky that the bomb did not fully detonate because it "looks like it would have caused a significant fireball." He said the vehicle, which had Connecticut license plates that didn't match it, would have been "cut in half" by an explosion and people nearby could have been sprayed by shrapnel and killed.

"It wasn't an accident," he said. "It was somebody who brought this to the location to send a message to terrorize people in the area."

Police also found eight bags of an unknown substance in a gun locker that was in the smoking SUV, Kelly said. The substance "looks and feels" like fertilizer, he said, but tests were pending.

Kelly said surveillance video shows the vehicle entering the area at 6:28 p.m. Saturday, and a vendor pointed the SUV out to an officer about two minutes later, at the height of dinner hour before theatergoers head to Saturday night shows. He said the license plates on the SUV belong to a car that is being repaired in Connecticut.

Duane Jackson, a 58-year-old handbag vendor from Buchanan, N.Y., said he noticed the car and wondered who had left it there.

"That was my first thought: Who sat this car here?" Jackson said Sunday.

Jackson said he looked in the car and saw keys in the ignition with 19 or 20 keys on a ring. He said he alerted a passing mounted police officer.

They were looking in the car "when the smoke started coming out and then we heard the little pop pop pop like firecrackers going out and that's when everybody scattered and ran back," he said.

"Now that I saw the propane tanks and the gasoline, what if that would have ignited?" Jackson said. "I'm less than 8 feet away from the car. We dodged a bullet here."

Boston mayor: Schools open despite huge water main break

By Glen Johnson
Associated Press writer

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. — Crews made faster-than-expected progress Sunday repairing a broken pipe that cut the clean water supply to 2 million Boston-area residents, prompting Massachusetts Gov. Deval Patrick and Boston Mayor Thomas Menino to urge schools, businesses and commuters to resume their normal routines as the workweek began.

"Boston's open for business," Menino declared during a joint news conference with his fellow Democrat.

"So is the whole eastern Commonwealth," added Patrick.

Boston School Superintendent Carol Johnson also struck a confident tone as she looked ahead to today, saying: "The good news is, for all of our students, we expect to see you in school on time!"

Nonetheless, a boil-water alert remained in effect for Boston and 29 surrounding communities. Health officials warned of the risk of a parasite infection if residents used unboiled tap water for brushing their teeth, washing raw vegetables or making ice. It remained safe for showering and toilet flushing, with one official likening it to lake water.

Officials don't expect to lift the boil-water alert until at least today.

The head of the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority also didn't shy from stating the magnitude of the problem created when a 10-foot-wide steel pipe burst at a seam Saturday morning. Over the next eight hours, an estimated 65 million gallons spilled into the Charles River and forced officials to tap a reservoir filled with untreated water, potentially contaminating the supply to 750,000 households.

"For the people in the water industry, it is everyone's worst nightmare: to lose your main transmission line coming into a metropolitan area," said MWRA Executive Director Frederick Laskey.

Johnny Barahona, 5, of Revere Mass., sits in a carriage piled high with bottled water, Sunday, at a supermarket in Chelsea, Mass. Gov. Deval Patrick declared a state of emergency and ordered area residents to boil the water coming from their taps since it didn't meet federal clean water drinking standards following a major water main break on Saturday.

The break interrupted normal weekend routines, with many Dunkin' Donuts franchises stopping the sale of coffee. Customers also lined up at stores to buy bottled water, and both Patrick and Attorney General Martha Coakley warned against price-gouging.

Adding to the pressure was an unseasonably warm weather, with 80-degree temperatures not seen since last summer. Menino, fearing a loss of business, noted many restaurants were open "and serving delicious meals."

Hongbin Luo of Lexington came upon a Stop & Shop that had just restocked its shelves. He wheeled out a shopping cart with two cases of water, plus 18 one-gallon bottles.

"We want to have something to use and send off with the kids to school," Luo said.

Fellow Lexington resident Ira Goldman said he had boiled water but added, "I'm going to Europe tomorrow; it's not a big inconvenience."

Boston's water runs from the Quabbin Reservoir, in the central part of the state, to the Wachusett Reservoir, before being treated at a plant in Marlborough. It travels through an 18-foot-wide pipe to suburban Weston, where it branches off into the 10-foot-wide pipe that broke.

When the breach occurred, the MWRA rerouted the clean water supply through the Sudbury Aqueduct, which hasn't been used in decades. It also briefly tapped the Chestnut Hill Reservoir to maintain pressure and meet expected demand across the system. While the water in the aqueduct was clean, the water from the reservoir — which is in the open air next to Boston College — is not, prompting the warning to boil water for one minute.

Gary Lownsdale talks about the events that caused his 1970 class to miss its graduation ceremony at his home April 27 in Tellico, Tenn. THE GRADUATION THEY NEVER GOT

40 years after Kent State, members of the class of '70 get special ceremonies

By Dan Sewell
Associated Press writer

CINCINNATI — Forty years later, Gary Lownsdale is still haunted by what he felt and what he saw in the last days of his senior year.

Shock and outrage over the May 4 National Guard slayings of four Kent State University students, on the other end of Ohio from his University of Cincinnati campus. Then fear and confusion as schools across the state and much of the country saw the demonstrations against the expansion of the Vietnam War into Cambodia swell into angry, combative confrontations.

One by one, colleges closed and students were ordered to pack up and leave, some amid the acrid smell of tear gas as police and armed soldiers stood guard. TV helicopters buzzed overhead. Rumors and reports were rampant, of undercover FBI agents infiltrating students, or violent radicals converging to escalate the protests.

For some graduating seniors of the Class of 1970, there would be no joyful mortarboard tosses, posing for photos with proud parents, or late-night celebration parties. They lost the chance to cram for final exams for a last boost to GPAs, or to say their good-byes to favorite professors and former roommates.

Until now. This spring, Lownsdale and other members of the Class of '70 will return to Cincinnati — or to Boston, or to Athens, Ohio — for the festive commencements they never had. Some will be accompanied by their parents, now elderly, or by grown-up children. Maybe they will find a chance to heal some old wounds.

“Even today, it evokes a lot of emotion,” Lownsdale says. “There was a feeling of vulnerability ... all these years later, I’m still angry about it.”

No one knows how many of the 1970 alumni will come back for the belated ceremonies. Meg Umlas, executive director of alumni relations at Boston University, says several hundred people, including family members, may attend that school’s May 15-16 weekend. Ohio University and the University of Cincinnati will follow with gatherings in June.

“I think it’s going to be a huge opportunity to get a sense of closure,” says Roderick J. McDavis, Ohio University’s president and himself a Class of ’70 alum.

But 40 years ago, graduation ceremonies were not a priority. Marsha Epstein was a senior at Boston U; she remembers being clubbed in the back by police at a peace rally before the shootings.

“We were lucky to be alive,” Epstein says. “As I reflect upon the time, we were still stricken by the shock of what had happened. It would have been ridiculous to bemoan not having my bourgeois graduation.”

Lew Moores was executive editor of the UC News Record student newspaper then, and had written columns in support of the war. But the Kent State slayings rocked his outlook.

“These kids were my age,” he says. “There was no excuse for that.”

“You couldn’t fathom that we as a society, in the United States, would shoot students on campus, no matter what,” says Class of ’70 senior Bill Mulvihill. “We were stunned. Then it became anger, and then anger turned into action.”

UC students — 5,000 or more — marched on downtown Cincinnati the next day. There were rallies, sit-ins, silent vigils in the ensuing days. Student strikes disrupted hundreds of campuses across the nation. A presidential commission on campus unrest later described it as a time of the deepest U.S. social divisions since the Civil War.

At Cincinnati on the morning of May 8, notices were posted on dormitory doors and around campus: School was closing, everyone had to leave, buildings were locked down. Students flooded away, by car, bus, or plane.

The police shootings on May 14 of 14 more students — two of them fatally — on the campus of Jackson State University in Mississippi added to worries about whether schools should resume classes.

Cincinnati reopened for a single day. “There was a palpable fear,” Moores recalls. “There was concern that outside agitators would gravitate to our campus if we were the only large university in the state that was still open.”

School had already been shut down at Ohio University, the hilly Appalachian college town roiled in early May by riotous protests and the unnerving sight of National Guardsmen with bayonets fixed on their rifles.

“It’s kind of a blur,” says then-senior Connie Romine.

“I just remember seeing the National Guard lined up along Court Street. You felt as if you were in another country.”

Gary Lownsdale returned to UC’s campus a few weeks later for what was a no-frills, solemn graduation ceremony. Kent State also reopened its campus for a commencement under tight security.

Mulvihill remembers wearing a peace symbol armband, as did other UC participants who represented only a fraction of the full class. Many seniors had already started their new jobs, and out-of-state students had gone home.

Classmate Candace Kendle lived in Cincinnati, but declined to attend commencement.

“I wanted no part of it,” she recalls. “I was so angry. It was just an angry, angry time.”

Over the years, schools across the country have recognized these lost commencements. Some have invited Class of ’70 alumni to march with current graduates, linked class reunions to regular commencement ceremonies or recognized them at their children’s graduations.

Myron Hughes, the former UC Bearcat basketball player who now heads the school’s alumni association, has traveled among alums and had heard them tell tales of 1970. He proposed the makeup ceremony at Cincinnati.

“A lot of people didn’t get the chance to go through commencement, and a lot of people who did tell me they don’t really have any memory of it,” Hughes say. “It wasn’t the excitement and the energy one looks forward to.”

Says Mulvihill: “There was a sense that you had lost a rite of passage in your life.”

Putting together wider-scale events is a little easier these days, organizers say, thanks to e-mail, social networks and other, newer ways to find and reconnect with people. Graduates who are well-established in their careers or even retired, their children grown, are better able to travel for a weekend of receptions, discussions and ceremony complete with cap and gown.

And perhaps they are better able to consider the events of the past in a broader perspective.

“You go through life’s evolution in major steps,” says Kendle, who founded and heads the Cincinnati-based clinical research company Kendle International. “I think when you get to this place in your life, you can really see how your early choices helped you or hurt you. You’re in a whole different world of appreciation.”

She and others remember their campus years as a time of repeated tumult — not only the war, but the 1968 assassinations of Martin Luther King Jr. and Robert F. Kennedy, and other movements for civil rights, women’s liberation and more. They talk of gaining passion and commitment from those formative years.

“It was a very charged time. Particularly that spring, it seemed like almost every day something else was happening,” says Mulvihill, now vice president of the University of Cincinnati Foundation. “Passionate is the word that always stuck with me about that time.”

Drug maker recalls 43 medicines for children

By Lyndsey Layton
The Washington Post

A division of Johnson & Johnson is recalling 43 over-the-counter medicines made for infants and children — including liquid versions of Tylenol, Motrin, Zyrtec and Benadryl — after federal regulators identified what they called deficiencies at the company’s manufacturing facility.

The voluntary recall, which was announced late Friday by McNeil Consumer Healthcare, affects hundreds of thousands of bottles of medicine in homes and on store shelves throughout the United States and its territories and in nine other countries — a vast portion of the children’s medicine market.

The Food and Drug Administration is advising parents and caregivers to stop using the affected products, although Commissioner Margaret Hamburg called the potential for serious health problems resulting from the medications “remote.”

FDA inspectors had begun a routine inspection April 19 in the company’s Fort Washington, Pa., plant when they noticed “manufacturing deficiencies” that triggered the recall, said Douglas Stearn, a senior FDA official.

Stearn said the plant’s manufacturing process was “not in control,” a term regulators use to describe flawed procedures that affect the composition of medicine. Federal investigators do not know when the problems at McNeil began, but Stearn said that “this does go back in time” and that “we have to try to figure that out.”

While the FDA investigates, McNeil has suspended operations at the facility. In a statement, the company said: “Some of the products included in the recall may contain a higher concentration of active ingredients than is specified; others contain inactive ingredients that may not meet internal testing requirements; and others may contain tiny particles.” It said the problems may affect “purity, potency or quality.”

Marc Boston, a McNeil spokesman, would not discuss the deficiencies cited by the FDA or say when the manufacturing facility was shut down. The company also declined to disclose the amount of products affected by the recall. In addition to the United States, Puerto Rico and Guam, the medicines were sold in Canada; Dominican Republic; Dubai, in the United Arab Emirates; Fiji; Guatemala; Jamaica; Panama; Trinidad and Tobago, and Kuwait.

A complete list of recalled products is on the company’s website.

Weekend storms kill 7 in Tenn., 4 in Miss.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Seven people were killed in Tennessee and four in northern Mississippi by a line of storms that brought heavy flooding and tornadoes to the region over the weekend. More rain and storms loomed Sunday as emergency officials in Tennessee sought help from the state’s Army National Guard, and urged people to stay off roads and interstate highways turned into raging rivers.

At a Sunday news conference, Tennessee Gov. Phil Bredesen said it will likely be days before floodwaters recede enough to thoroughly assess the damage to roads and bridges.

Tennessee officials have confirmed seven deaths. At least three people are missing after getting swept away by flood waters, and one of them is presumed dead by the Tennessee

Emergency Management Agency, which would bring the death toll to 8.

Bredesen said he expects to ask for federal disaster designation.

Earlier Sunday, TEMA asked for the state’s National Guard to help with rescue operations.

Agency spokesman Jeremy Heidt confirmed that one person died around 4 a.m. Sunday in a tornado near Pocahtontas, about 70 miles east of Memphis. The other deaths in Tennessee were all due to flooding, TEMA said.

Interstate 24 remained closed in Nashville, and segments of I-40 between Nashville and Memphis were blocked.

Physician group draws line on lethal injection

Group will revoke certification to those that participate in execution

By Rob Stein
The Washington Post

A national physicians organization has quietly decided to revoke the certification of any member who participates in executing a prisoner by lethal injection.

The mandate from the American Board of Anesthesiologists reflects its leaders' belief that “we are healers, not executioners,” board secretary Mark Rockoff said. Although the American Medical Association has long opposed doctor involvement, the anesthesiologists' group is the first to say it will harshly penalize a health-care worker for abetting lethal injections.

About half of the 35 states performing executions, including Virginia and North Carolina, require a doctor to be present at all executions. Other states have also recruited doctors, including anesthesiologists, to play a role in executions involving lethal injections. In some jurisdictions, anesthesiologists consult prison officials on dosages. In others, they insert catheters and infuse the three-drug cocktails.

Under the policy, which the group's 40,000 members learned about in February, any of these activities could lead to a loss of certification. Anesthesiologists can get state medical licenses without certification, but most hospitals require it.

While death penalty opponents welcome the move because it raises yet more questions about lethal injections, capital punishment supporters contend that doctors are not needed during the procedures, which can be administered by prison employees. But as questions mount about the types and combinations of drugs used and whether they cause undue suffering, states have been turning to doctors for advice and assistance. With 3,200 prisoners now on death rows across the country, most of the 50 executions performed each year since 2008 have used lethal injections.

“If I were lying there on the gurney and someone was administering a paralyzing drug ... I would want someone there who knew what they were doing,” said Ty Alper, associate director of the Death Penalty Clinic at the University of California at Berkeley's School of Law. “Just like if I was getting surgery — I wouldn't want a prison guard administering the anesthesia.”

Thus far, no doctors have been disciplined, Rockoff said, but several anesthesiologists, including some who have worked as execution consultants or testified in capital punishment litigation, said the step has had a chilling effect.

“They are clearly drawing a line in the sand and saying, ‘If you cross this, we'll come after you,’” said Bryan Liang, a law professor at California Western School of Law and a professor of anesthesiology at the University of California at San Diego.

“It sure will deter me. For the ABA to threaten to pull your board certification is a big deal,” said one anesthesiologist who has consulted for prison officials in his state about drug dosages. Arguing that the decision should be left up to individual doctors' consciences, none of those who criticized the policy agreed to be named, saying they feared repercussions.

Florida Gov. Charlie Crist arrives at Tampa, Fla. International Airport last week. In a move that some think will become a political trend, Crist left the Republican party to run as an Independent as he seeks election to the U.S. Senate in November.

Crist's move ominous political trend

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press writer

Analysis

WASHINGTON — Charlie Crist's departure from the Republican Party is not just a Florida story, it's an American story — a tale of two parties driven by their ideologues, squeezing out moderate candidates, alienating independent voters and isolating the place in U.S. politics where most things get done: the middle.

Crist, a populist governor with a history of bipartisan ship, bolted the GOP on Thursday to run for the Senate as an independent. He did so only after it became clear that he would lose his party's primary to conservative purist Marco Rubio.

No matter who wins a three-way race in Florida, the factors that drove Crist from the GOP are a microcosm of broader political and social changes contributing to polarization.

“We have a deadlocked democracy,” said Pat Buchanan, a conservative commentator and three-time presidential candidate. “Both parties, held hostage by their extremes, are incapable of tackling the issues that threaten this country.”

Buchanan left the GOP for the Reform Party after he twice failed to win his party's presidential nomination.

Moderate Sen. Joe Lieberman of Connecticut left the Democratic Party after losing a 2006 nomination fight to liberal Ned Lamont. He won re-election as an independent.

Sen. Arlen Specter quit the GOP last year as he faced a conservative challenge in Pennsylvania. He found a more welcoming home in the Democratic Party.

And now Crist. True, they abandoned their parties for purely political reasons — to save their skins. But Lieberman, Specter and Crist had viable options outside their parties because so many voters feel disconnected from the Democratic and Republican establishments.

“Unfortunately our political system is broken,” Crist said in an appeal to independent-minded voters in St. Petersburg, Fla.

Democratic consultant Steve McMahon calls these voters the “invisible middle” because parties care far less about them than hard-core liberals and conservatives. This is especially the case in nonpresidential election years like 2010, which tend to draw high percentages of partisan voters.

“Politicians are responding to the noisemakers of their party,” said McMahon, who helped engineer the 2004 presidential campaign of liberal Howard Dean.

Dean's unsuccessful campaign brought to light one of the factors contributing to polarization: new technologies and media.

He launched his bid when the war in Iraq was highly popular. That was a political problem for the anti-war candidate until like-minded people began finding and organizing each other through websites such as Meetup.org.

Soon the anti-war minority became a vocal, unyielding majority. A generation ago, it would have taken much longer for people opposed to the war to realize they were hardly alone and could reshape the campaign agenda if they banded together.

Fast forward a few years to the explosion of blogs and the rise of partisan cable news channels and we're a national people who increasingly get their information from people who already agree with us.

Facts become fungible. Compromise becomes cowardice.

McMahon's firm recently conducted research that showed most young voters get political information from Comedy Central's “The Daily Show” and “The Colbert Report,” mock news shows with a liberal bent.

“As a Democrat that sounds great,” McMahon said, “but as an American, that's scary, because a lot of them think those shows are news.”

Another contributor is the fact that both parties work hard — often in concert — to draw congressional districts so that most lawmakers represent areas that are heavily Republican or Democratic. This gerrymandering is designed to protect incumbents but, as technology makes the practice more precise, it also favors hyper-partisan candidates.

Pope all but endorses authenticity of Shroud of Turin

By Nicole Winfield
Associated Press writer

TURIN, Italy — Pope Benedict XVI all but gave an outright endorsement of the authenticity of the Shroud of Turin on Sunday, calling the cloth that some believe is Christ's burial shroud an icon “written with the blood” of a crucified man.

During a visit to the Shroud in the northern Italian city of Turin, Benedict didn't raise the scientific questions that surround the linen and whether it might be a medieval forgery. Instead, he delivered a powerful meditation on the faith that holds that the Shroud is indeed Christ's burial cloth.

“This is a burial cloth that wrapped the remains of a crucified man in full correspondence with what the Gospels tell us of Jesus,” Benedict said. He said the relic — one of the most important in Christianity — should be seen as a photographic document of the “darkest mystery of faith” — that of Christ's crucifixion and resurrection.

The 14-foot-long, 3.5-foot-wide cloth has gone on public display for the first time since the 2000 Millennium celebrations and a subsequent 2002 restoration. Kept in a bulletproof, climate-controlled case in Turin's cathedral, it has drawn nearly 2 million reservations from pilgrims and tourists eager to spend three to five minutes viewing it.

The Shroud bears the figure of a crucified man, complete with blood seeping from his hands and feet, and believers say Christ's image was recorded on the linen's fibers at the time of his resurrection.

Benedict focused in his meditation on the message that the blood stains conveyed, saying the Shroud was “an icon written in blood; the blood of a man who was whipped, crowned with thorns, crucified and injured on his right side.

Pope Benedict XVI salutes the faithful during his visit to the Cottolengo in Turin, Italy, Sunday. Benedict prayed before the Shroud of Turin, the linen with an image of a crucified man on it that some believe is Christ's burial cloth and others dismiss as a medieval fake. At left is the Pope's personal secretary Georg Gaenswein.

“The image on the Shroud is that of a dead man, but the blood speaks of his life. Each trace of blood speaks of love and life,” Benedict said.

McKean outduels nephew at MVS

By Linda Brittsan
Times-News correspondent

With the No. 88 car still out of commission after taking a pounding on the opening night for the series, Jerry McKean pulled another car out of his hat Saturday at Magic Valley Speedway to capture the Budweiser Super Stocks main event.

Driving the No. 22 car on loan from former track champion Jonathon Gomez, McKean started from the pole position in the 30-lap race. While McKean's number stayed at the top of the board the entire race, it was not without constant pressure from another McKean — nephew Kris. Kris McKean managed to find Jerry McKean's bumper in the turns and tried high and low to get around him on the straight-aways, but to no avail.

"We couldn't stay with him coming off the corner and so we just couldn't get a line on him," Kris McKean said. "We got under him a couple of times but couldn't quite get up to his door. I got him sideways a little bit but it's early in the season."

For Jerry McKean, he did what he thought was needed to maintain his position.

"I knew he was behind me, then he decided to cut me off in lap traffic so I decided to four-lane race," elder McKean said. "He was driving in hard into the corners but I was faster coming out. Jonathon and his crew worked on the car last week and got it going pretty good."

NUTHAK ROUNDS UP NAPA STREET STOCKS VICTORY

Craig Nuthak, who started from the pole position, had his hands full with Rob Roche in the NAPA Street Stocks main event, but was able to defend his spot to capture his first win of the season. Nuthak edged Roche across the line by just .313 seconds followed by Chase Carraway in third.

AUDET BY A NOSE IN BRENNAN'S CARPET PONY STOCKS

The pole position was the place to start for the other local class as Todd Audet led the field to a narrow win in the Brennan's Carpet Pony Stocks main event. Ray Homolka and Wade Henslee battled Audet in the final laps and it was down to the wire as the trio came to the finish line but Audet held steady for his first win of the year.

SELLARS CAPTURES SUPER SIXES WIN

Taking the lead in Lap 5 from Andrew Graybeal, Randy Sellars went into defense mode for the remainder of the race as Jasen Skyberg tailed him to the checkered. Meanwhile Bob Parks and Dean Waltman scuttled for third, with Waltman getting the position with just six laps to go in the 25-lap event.

MVS results

Budweiser Super Stocks: 1. Jerry McKean, 2. Kris McKean, 3. Kendel Woll, 4. Daniel Shirley, 5. Norm Hatke.
NAPA Street Stocks: 1. Craig Nuthak, 2. Rob Roche, 3. Chase Carraway, 4. John Newell, 5. Casey Pehrson.
Brennan's Carpet Pony Stocks: 1. Todd Audet, 2. Ray Homolka, 3. Wade Henslee, 4. Micheal Stuart, 5. Jerry Slocum.
Magic Valley Pipe and Steel Super Sixes: 1. Randy Sellars, 2. Jasen Skyberg, 3. Dean Waltman, 4. Bob Parks, 5. Andrew Graybeal.

Kobe puts kibosh on Jazz upset bid

Los Angeles Lakers Kobe Bryant, drives to the basket against the Utah Jazz during the second half of Game 1 of a second-round NBA playoff series in Los Angeles on Sunday. The Lakers won 104-99.

Lakers hang on to take Game 1 of series

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — While the Los Angeles Lakers' reserves haplessly gave away the lead early in the fourth quarter, the Utah Jazz celebrated every basket with increasing glee, spilling off their bench in anticipation of an upset.

Even the Hollywood crowd was tense, with many fans anxiously kneading or waving the giveaway white T-shirts they apparently were too cool to wear.

"It was tough," Kobe Bryant said. "But when it got really tough for me, I just checked myself in."

A few minutes after Bryant checked in, the Jazz were checkmated in these familiar rivals' second-round opener.

Bryant scored 11 of his 31 points in the final four minutes, and the Lakers blew a fourth-quarter lead before rallying for a 104-99 victory Sunday.

Pau Gasol had 25 points and 12 rebounds while blocking five shots for the top-seeded Lakers, whose backups were nearly run off the court by the fired-up Jazz before Bryant seized control.

Last season's NBA finals MVP coolly scored seven consecutive points to erase Utah's four-point lead, followed by a dynamic slice through the lane for a layup with 22.6 seconds left. Los Angeles also did it with defense, holding the Jazz to one field goal in the final 4:10.

"We put ourselves in a little bit of a hole and let them gain all the momentum," Bryant said. "At that point, you've just got to buckle down."

Los Angeles will host Game 2 of the best-of-seven series Tuesday night. The clubs are meeting in the postseason for the third consecutive year after the Lakers ended Utah's last two seasons, including a first-round victory in 2009.

Perhaps that familiarity was one reason the Lakers again had trouble getting too excited for this one — a mood matched by the home crowd.

After the Lakers' consecutive first-round losses to Oklahoma City inspired a crackling atmosphere for their blowout victory in Game 5 last week, Staples Center reverted to its usual relaxed state. Los Angeles handed out thousands of white shirts in an apparent attempt at a whiteout crowd to go with the Lakers' Sunday white uniforms, but the majority of fans didn't bother to actually wear them.

Lakers fans get excited about titles, not T-shirts — and despite an inconsistent regular season and a playoff run that hasn't dazzled anybody to date, their team appears capable of contending for its 16th crown.

DISTRICT VI RODEO Repeat winners aplenty in Burley

By Diane Philbin
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Several familiar names were on top of the leader boards with back-to-back wins Friday and Saturday as District VI concluded two nights of high school rodeo action at the Cassia County Fairgrounds.

Tanisha Adams of Declo and her horse Ghosty navigated through the barrel pattern Saturday night posting in 17.600 seconds after running 17.851 on Friday. In goat tying, Kindee Wilson of Filer completed her run with a time of 7.78 seconds on Friday night, which bettered her 8.37 on Saturday. Kelli Kindig of Minico threw the rope around the calf's neck in 2.65 seconds Friday night in breakaway and clocked 3.01 on Saturday.

In the rough stock events, the boys were led by reigning state champion saddle bronc rider Brady Manning. The Oakley cowboy rode Big Buck for 61 points on Saturday after gathering 57 points on a Friday re-ride. In bull riding, Layne Ward of Raft River managed to stay aboard Revolver for the full eight seconds on Saturday, securing 72 points to best the 67 points by Zackery Toner of Minico. Ward and Jade Wadsworth of Kimberly tied for the win on Friday with 65 points apiece.

Other contestants continued to add wins to their 2010 resume on Saturday night. With a 57-point ride, Trevor Eldridge of Filer won bareback riding for the fifth time. Tyler Wadsworth's fifth tie-down win came after the Kimberly cowboy posted the season's fastest time of 10.97 seconds. All-around cowgirl Kyndal Stradley of Filer earned her fourth win in poles (21.535) and Garrett Alger of Filer won for the second time in steer wrestling, finishing at 9.34 seconds.

It was an all-cowgirl win in team roping as McKenzie Zollinger and Jacee Bedke of Oakley worked together for a 15.37-second catch for the pair's first victory in the team event.

For Kimberly freshman Kelsey Wright, being able to compete in rodeo is a dream come true.

"I've always dreamed about being a rodeo person," said Wright, who sits fourth in the rookie standings. "I was in Wrangler rodeo for three years and now I'm in high school rodeo. Do I enjoy high school rodeo? Oh yes, I'm loving it."

"The best part is just being out there. It takes a lot of concentration because sometimes your friends are out here and you need to learn to focus on what you need to do. My favorite event is goats because it is really fast and exciting in such a short time."

What will it take for the rookie to compete with the district's top cowgirls like Kindee Wilson and Kyndal Stradley?

"A lot of practicing," said Wright, who also competes in breakaway, barrels and poles, "They have been doing it for a long time. Hopefully, I'll start to catch up. I'd love to be up LeBron James won his second straight NBA MVP award Sunday.

Landslide: LeBron James dominates NBA MVP voting

By Tom Withers
Associated Press writer

AKRON, Ohio — LeBron James looked out at the sea of faces from his past and present. There's no knowing if they'll be in his future.

Scanning an audience which came to celebrate his second straight run-away NBA MVP award, James pointed out his former high school coaches and best friends. He praised his mom, Gloria, who somehow raised him after giving birth when she was just 16. He had a special message for his girlfriend, Savannah, and their two young sons, LeBron Jr. and Bryce.

James thanked them all, and then singled out one special group.

"I'm sorry," he said Sunday, halting the ceremony at the University of Akron's James A. Rhodes Arena. "But all my teammates, you have to come up here with me, man."

He was soon surrounded on the podium by Shaquille O'Neal, Mo Williams, Zydrunas Ilgauskas and the rest of the Cleveland Cavaliers, the team he led to 61 wins during the regular season and is determined to take all the way to an NBA championship.

Each of the Cavs hugged James before forming a half-circle around him. A few players used video cameras to record the all-for-one moment.

"My name may be put on the front of that trophy," James said, pointing at the Maurice Podoloff Trophy. "But these guys have a lot to do with it."

Dominating the voting just as he dominated on the floor all season, James became the 10th player in league history to win consecutive MVP awards, and he made sure to share it with the people closest to him, the ones who can never imagine him playing anywhere but Cleveland.

"Since I was a kid, I always said I'd find a way to put Akron on the map," James said. "It will always be my home and it will always be my life."

James has given few clues about his intentions for when free agency opens on July 1, but James almost sounded as if he was preparing to say goodbye.

James received 116 of a possible 123 first-place votes to win in a landslide over Oklahoma City forward Kevin Durant, who was picked first on four ballots. Orlando center Dwight Howard received the other three first-place votes and finished fourth.

Los Angeles Lakers star Kobe Bryant had no first-place votes and finished third.

Murphy, Rangers top M's in extras

SEATTLE — David Murphy tied the game in the ninth inning, then hit a sacrifice fly to drive in the go-ahead run, and the Texas Rangers trumped an ace-like start by Seattle's Doug Fister to beat the Mariners 3-1 in 11 innings Sunday.

Murphy singled off closer David Aardsma in the ninth to score Elvis Andrus with the tying run, after Fister had allowed just three hits in eight scoreless innings. Murphy then lined a sacrifice fly off Mark Lowe (1-3), after an infield single by Andrus on a punt.

YANKEES 12, WHITE SOX 3
NEW YORK — Mark Teixeira tied a career high with four hits and Robinson Cano had a three-run homer, backing another dominant performance by Phil Hughes in New York's rout of Chicago.

ORIOLES 3, RED SOX 2, 10 INNINGS
BALTIMORE — Ty Wigginton doubled home the winning run in the 10th inning following a throwing error by Boston closer Jonathan Papelbon, giving Baltimore its first three-game sweep of the Red Sox at home in 36 years.

Miguel Tejada had two hits and scored a run for the Orioles, whose three-game winning streak is a season high.

NATIONAL LEAGUE CARDINALS 6, REDS 0
ST. LOUIS — Chris Carpenter pitched seven innings of two-hit ball and Albert Pujols broke it open with a three-run double in the seventh as the St. Louis Cardinals beat the Cincinnati Reds 6-0 on Sunday to wrap up a 6-1 homestand.

David Freese homered for the third time in four games on a three-hit day and Ryan Ludwick and Brendan Ryan had an RBI apiece for St. Louis, which took two of three for its seventh series win out of eight this season. The Cardinals are an NL-best 17-8.

SAN DIEGO — The San Diego Padres shut out the Milwaukee Brewers for the third time in four games on Sunday on a combined three-hitter by Jon Garland and two relievers.

ROCKIES 4, GIANTS 1
SAN FRANCISCO — Jhoulys Chacin allowed one hit in seven scoreless innings for his first major league win, Melvin Mora hit a two-run single and the Rockies avoided a three-game sweep. Chacin (1-0) struck out seven and didn't allow a hit until Matt Downs' two-out double in the fifth, one of only a couple of well-struck balls he gave up.

CUBS 10, DIAMONDBACKS 5
CHICAGO — Alfonso Soriano hit a pair of two-run homers, Marlon Byrd also hit a two-run shot and the Cubs won the last three games of the series after dropping the opener. Chicago scored 33 times against Arizona after managing only three runs in two losses to Washington. Soriano had four homers against the Diamondbacks.

DODGERS 9, PIRATES 3
LOS ANGELES — Andre Ethier homered twice with four RBIS, Blake DeWitt had his first four-hit game in the majors and James Loney added a pair of run-scoring hits for the Dodgers.

Hiroki Kuroda (3-1) allowed a run over eight innings, struck out three and walked one.

BRAVES 7, ASTROS 1
ATLANTA — Jason Heyward and Melky Cabrera each drove in three runs and the Braves completed a three-game sweep that leaves the Astros with a six-game losing streak.

MARLINS 9, NATIONALS 3
MIAMI — Hanley Ramirez drove in four runs with two homers, and the Marlins took the rubber game to win a series for the first time in two weeks.

PHILLIES 11, METS 5
PHILADELPHIA — Shane Victorino hit a grand slam off Johan Santana and Chase Utley had a two-run shot during Philadelphia's nine-run fourth inning. Santana (3-2) allowed a career-worst 10 runs in 3 2-3 innings.

Youngster McIlroy wins Quail Hollow

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — All the buzz about Rory McIlroy came to life at the Quail Hollow Championship with one dazzling shot after another in a record round that made him the PGA Tour's youngest winner since Tiger Woods.

Explosive as ever, the 20-year-old from Northern Ireland was 5 under over the final five holes to set the course record at 10-under 62 and win by four shots over Masters champion Phil Mickelson (68). McIlroy finished in style, rolling in a 40-foot birdie putt on the 18th hole and thrusting his fist into the air.

With a one-shot lead, McIlroy — who will 21 on Tuesday — hit a 5-iron from 207 yards up the hill to 3 feet for eagle on the 15th. From a fairway bunker on the 16th, he hit 7-iron to 5 feet for another birdie. Then came the finish, when he knocked in the 40-foot putt. He finished at 15-under 273 and won $1.17 million.

Woods, who missed the cut this week, was 20 years, 10 months when he won his first PGA Tour title in Las Vegas in 1996.

MIYAZATO TAKES TRES MARIAS CHAMPIONSHIP

MORELIA, Mexico — Ai Miyazato won the Tres Marias Championship for her third LPGA Tour title of the season, sharing the spotlight with Lorena Ochoa in the Mexican star's final event before retiring.

Miyazato, the 24-year-old Japanese star who swept the season-opening events in Thailand and Singapore after winning the Evian Masters last year in France for her first LPGA Tour title, shot a 6-under 67 to finish at 19-under 273.

Stacy Lewis (66) was a stroke back, and Michelle Wie (68) was third at 17 under. Ochoa, the winner three of the last four years, shot a 71 to finish sixth at 12 under.

Ochoa has held the No. 1 ranking since April 2007. LPGA projections show she will lose it when the rankings come out Monday, with Jiyai Shin taking over. Shin won in Japan on Sunday. Ochoa is likely to drop to No. 2, with Miyazato moving to No. 3.

ISHIKAWA FIRES 58 ON JAPAN TOUR

TOGO, Japan (AP) — Ryo Ishikawa shot a 12-under 58 — the lowest score ever on a major tour — to win The Crowns on Sunday for his seventh Japan Tour title.

The 18-year-old Ishikawa tapped in for par on the par-4 18th after his 15-foot birdie try slid inches by the cup. He had 12 birdies in his bogey-free round on the 6,545-yard Nagoya Golf Club course. After opening with rounds of 68, 70 and 71 to fall six strokes behind third-round leader Shigeaki Maruyama, Ishikawa birdied nine of the first 11 holes Sunday. He added birdies on Nos. 14-16 and closed with two pars to finish at 13-under 267, five strokes ahead of Hiroyuki Fujita and Australia's Paul Sheehan.

Ishikawa broke the Japan Tour record of 59 set by Masahiro Kuramoto in the first round of the 2003 Acom International. On the PGA Tour, Al Geiberger, Chip Beck and David Duval share the record at 59. Annika Sorenstam also had a 59 on the LPGA Tour.

In 2000 in a U.S. Open qualifier, Maruyama shot a 13-under 58.

Ishikawa earned $255,000 for his first victory of the season. He first won on the Japan Tour as a 15-year-old amateur in the 2007 Munsingwear Open. Last month in the Masters, he missed the cut by a stroke.

foot birdie putt on No. 16 to take a two-stroke lead, an extra stroke he needed after bogeying the 18th to finish at 11 under. He also won the 2003 MasterCard Classic and 2005 Boeing Greater Seattle Classic.

Tommy Armour III shot a 67 to finish second. He three-putted from 60 feet for a bogey on the par-3 17th, and finished with a par.

Will Mayweather and Pacquiao ever be made?

LAS VEGAS
Floyd Mayweather Jr. wanted to put on a show and he did, from the moment he entered the arena accompanied by acrobats on stilts tossing fake $100 bills to the final seconds of the 12th round when he finished giving Shane Mosley a beating.

Manny Pacquiao took a break from campaigning for congress in the Philippines to watch on television, and was impressed. So, too, was most everyone at Mayweather's post-fight press conference, though there was some concern over the right hand from Mosley that almost knocked him down in the second round.

"Ain't nothing cool about what happened in the second round," Mayweather agreed.

Those are the risks you take in boxing, though, and Mayweather knows as well as anyone that it is a hurt business. It can also be a rich business, as evidenced by the paycheck of at least $22.5 million that Mayweather will cash for winning his 41st straight fight.

Not bad for a night's work. The near capacity crowd at the MGM Grand arena seemed happy with what they saw, and few who spent $60 or $70 to buy the fight on TV could complain they got ripped.

But it wasn't the fight that boxing fans yearn for. Even worse, the more Mayweather talked after the fight Saturday night, the less likely it seemed that fans will finally get the fight they really want.

Pacman and Money. Will they ever share a ring for real?

"If the fight happens, it happens," Mayweather said. "I'm not out chasing fighters."

Fortunately for Mayweather he doesn't have to chase Pacquiao. Boxing's most exciting fighter may be thousands of miles away, but he seems as eager to fight as he does to win a seat in congress in next week's elections.

In a perfect world they meet in November in the sport's richest fight ever, a showdown that may forever destroy the myth that boxing is dead. The money is so big that it seems like it almost has to happen, and both fighters months ago agreed to what is usually the major stumbling block in negotiations with a deal to split the proceeds evenly.

Unfortunately, boxing is a very imperfect world.

Mayweather, it seems, is not only on a mission to make more money than any other fighter before him, but to clean up the sport along the way. His demand for Olympic-style blood testing derailed the proposed March 13 fight with Pacquiao, and his dominating win over Mosley seemed to do nothing but harden his stance for the Pacquiao fight.

"If Manny Pacquiao can take a blood and urine test then we have a fight," Mayweather said. "If not, no fight."

work and we put more effort into keeping leads and building on leads and stretching the games out," Gasol said. "It's always a little bit frustrating when you lose leads and you're on the bench and you can't do anything. It happens hopefully not very often, but we got stagnant. Guys weren't sharp out there."

Deron Williams scored 24 points for fifth-seeded Utah, which went 3:51 without a field goal after taking a 93-89 lead. Utah has lost 15 straight to the Lakers at Staples Center, including seven playoff games.

"We got a little rattled coming down the stretch — put up some shots, they just didn't fall," said Paul Millsap, who scored eight of his 16 points early in the fourth quarter. "We're not playing to get close. We're playing to win the game."

Carlos Boozer had 18 points and 12 rebounds, while C.J. Miles added 16 points, including several difficult baskets in the fourth quarter while the Jazz surged ahead with a 12-1 run. But the Lakers had plenty of time to surge back, leaving Utah again lamenting its finishing skills.

"It is kind of repetitive," said Williams, who didn't appear slowed by his injured elbow. "We had a chance to win this game, but we couldn't make the plays down the stretch. Kobe made some unbelievable shots, and that was pretty much it."

HAWKS 95, BUCKS 74

ATLANTA — The Atlanta Hawks weren't going to let another game slip away on their home court.

After keeping their season alive with a gutty win in Milwaukee, the Hawks made sure the Bucks were in no position to duplicate their improbable Game 5 upset. Jamal Crawford scored 22 points, Al Horford put up a double-double and Atlanta pulled away for a 95-74 win Sunday that gave the Hawks a 4-3 triumph in the tougher-than-expected series.

It was the only series to go the distance in the opening round.

The third-seeded Hawks advanced to face No. 2 Orlando in the Eastern Conference semifinals. The Magic have been resting since wrapping up a sweep of Charlotte last Monday.

Canadiens skate past Penguins to even series

PITTSBURGH — Mike Cammalleri scored two goals, Jaroslav Halak made 38 saves in a performance much like his series-stealing play during Montreal's first-round victory over Washington and the Canadiens beat the Pittsburgh 3-1 on Sunday.

Brian Gionta also scored as Montreal, playing without injured defenseman Andrei Markov, bounced back from a 6-3 loss in Game 1 and an early 1-0 Pittsburgh lead to even the Eastern Conference semifinal series. Game 3 is Tuesday night in Montreal.

Halak, pulled after allowing five goals on 20 shots in Game 1, made big save after big save as the Canadiens won despite being outshot 39-21. Sidney Crosby didn't score for the second successive game, and neither did Evgeni Malkin.

Cammalleri put Montreal ahead 2-1 by scoring on a power play in the second period, then sealed it by stealing the puck from Crosby at mid-ice and beating Marc-Andre Fleury on a breakaway with 2:54 remaining.

Matt Cooke scored for Pittsburgh.

SHARKS 4, RED WINGS 3

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Joe Thornton scored his first goal of the playoffs with 7:23 left to give San Jose a 2-0 lead in the second-round series.

Joe Pavelski kept up his sizzling postseason for San Jose, scoring twice to push his NHL-high playoff total to nine and setting up Ryane Clowe's between-the-legs score. Thornton then won it by ending his playoff drought.

Dany Heatley skated up ice on a 3-on-2 break and fired a slap shot at Jimmy Howard. Thornton beat Brian Rafalski to the rebound in the crease and poked in the winner. The series now shifts to Detroit for Games 3 and 4, starting Tuesday night.

Pavel Datsyuk, Tomas Holmstrom and 40-year-old captain Nicklas Lidstrom scored for the Red Wings, who were unable to hold onto a 3-2 lead heading into the third.

With Reid on the ropes, Yucca Mountain might not be dead

Sen. Harry Reid of Nevada is in big trouble. The Senate majority leader — a lightning rod for criticism of the national health insurance reform legislation passed by Congress and signed by President Obama — trails his likely Republican opponent, Las Vegas business-woman Sue Lowden, by double-digits in most polls. A four-term Democrat, Reid is the leading opponent of permanently storing high-level nuclear waste at southern Nevada’s Yucca Mountain site. So if he loses, what happens to Yucca Mountain?

The issue matters to Idaho because the federal Department of Energy has a 2035 deadline for removing all the spent nuclear fuel and high-level waste from the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory. That’s important to the Magic Valley because much of our water supply lies in Eastern Snake River Plain Aquifer beneath INL.

At a March 24 hearing of the U.S. House of Representatives Energy and Water Development Subcommittee, Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho, got Energy Secretary Steven Chu to commit to honoring the deadline.

That’s fine, but Chu is opposed to opening Yucca Mountain. So where is all that radioactive garbage going to go if Yucca Mountain isn’t developed?

If Reid loses in November, his likely successor as Democratic leader is Sen. Richard Durbin of Illinois, who represents a state in which nuclear power is important. If Republicans take over the Senate, their leader — Mitch McConnell of Kentucky — is on record of supporting putting the waste at Yucca Mountain.

Two years ago, Nevada’s other senator — like Reid a fervent foe of Yucca Mountain — might have singlehandedly blocked reconsideration of closing the facility if the Republicans regain control of the Senate this fall. But John Ensign has been buffeted by a series of personal ethical lapses — serious enough to get him fired as chairman Senate Republican Policy Committee. Ensign still sits on the powerful Senate Finance Committee, but there’s no question that his clout on Capitol Hill has waned.

So with Ensign politically compromised and Reid in danger of defeat, who’s standing in the way of opening Yucca Mountain?

Primarily, the Obama Administration. The president carried Nevada in the 2008 election in part because he pledged to Nevadans that Yucca Mountain was dead.

But Obama’s chances of winning Nevada again if he runs for reelection in 2012 are at best clouded. So politically, the issue is probably going to be less important to the administration in the next two years.

All of which is just political speculation at this point. After all, there will be six presidential elections and 12 congressional elections before the Idaho deadline of 2035. The political ground can shift many times in the meantime.

Yet, for the moment, Yucca Mountain seems not quite dead. Idahoans should pull for its recovery.

Our view:

Unless America finds a permanent grave for its deadliest nuclear garbage, the prospect of high-level waste remaining at the Idaho National Laboratory is very real.

What do you think?

We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Are tea parties a Bush backlash?

Jonah Goldberg

I attended the Cincinnati Tax Day Tea Party rally as a speaker. But it was more interesting to be an observer.

First, here’s what I didn’t see. I didn’t see a single racist or bigoted sign or hear a single such comment. Nor did I see any evidence of “homegrown fascism.” Though in fairness, such things are often in the eye of the beholder, now that dissent has gone from being the highest form of patriotism under George W. Bush to the most common form of racism under Barack Obama.

But I did see something a lot of people, on both the left and the right, seemed to have missed: a delayed Bush backlash.

One of the more widespread anti-tea party arguments goes like this: Republicans didn’t protest very much when Bush ran up deficits and expanded government, so when Obama does the same thing (albeit on a far grander scale), Republican complaints can’t be sincere.

This lazy sophistry opens the door to liberals’ preferred argument: racism. “No student of American history,” writes Paul Butler in The New York Times, “would be surprised to learn that when the United States elects its first non-white president, a strong anti-government movement rises up.”

Butler, a law professor and author of the no-doubt-seminal “Let’s Get Free: A Hip-Hop Theory of Justice,” speaks for many in the media when he insinuates that nearly unprecedented stimulus spending combined with government takeovers of the health care, banking and automotive industries are dwarfed in importance by Obama’s skin color.

I speak for many who have actually spoken to tea partiers when I say that is slanderous hogwash.

But how, then, to explain the relative right-wing quiescence on Bush’s watch and fiscal Puritanism on Obama’s?

No doubt partisanship plays a role. But partisanship only explains so much given that the tea partiers are clearly sincere about limited government and often quite fond of Republican-bashing. So here’s an alternative explanation: Conservatives don’t want to be fooled again.

Recall that Bush came into office promising to be a “different kind of conservative,” and one of his first legislative victories was the No Child Left Behind Act, sponsored by Teddy Kennedy.

Throughout his presidency, Bush’s “compassionate conservatism” surrendered — either rhetorically or substantively — to the assumptions of welfare state liberalism, i.e. that your decency was best measured by your commitment to large, inefficient government programs. “When somebody hurts,” Bush insisted, “government has got to move.” Many conservatives disliked this whole mind-set and the policies behind it, from comprehensive immigration reform to Medicare Part D.

... the chief attitude driving the 39 percent of tea partiers who describe themselves as “very conservative” isn’t partisanship, racism or seizing the Sudetenland from Czechoslovakia. It’s “we won’t be fooled again.”

Many conservatives muted their objections, in part because they actually liked the man personally or because they approved of his stances on tax cuts, judges, abortion and, most important, the war on terror (we can see a similar dynamic with so many anti-war liberals who still support Obama).

Conservatives didn’t necessarily bite their tongues (remember the Harriet Miers and immigration fiascoes), but they did prioritize supporting Bush — often in the face of far nastier attacks than Obama has received — over ideological purity. Besides, where were conservatives supposed to go? Into the arms of John Kerry?

The 2008 GOP primaries compounded conservative frustration. Because there was no stand-in for Bush in the contest, there was no obvious outlet for anger at Bush’s years of pre-surge Iraq bungling or his decision to outsource domestic spending to Republican congressional ward-healers. Then, as a lame duck, Bush laid down the predicates for much of Obama’s first 100 days, supporting both a stimulus and Wall Street bailouts. As one participant of the D.C. tea party rally told the Washington Examiner’s Byron York, “George Bush opened the door for Barack Obama and the Democrats to walk in.”

According to last week’s New York Times/CBS poll of tea party supporters, 57 percent have a favorable view of Bush, but that hardly captures the nuance of tea party feelings. For instance, when Bush’s face appeared on the Jumbotron in the arena, the Cincinnati audience applauded. When speakers criticized Bush and the GOP for “losing their way,” the audience applauded even louder.

Going by what I saw in Cincinnati, second to a profound desire to rein in government, the chief attitude driving the 39 percent of tea partiers who describe themselves as “very conservative” isn’t partisanship, racism or seizing the Sudetenland from Czechoslovakia. It’s “we won’t be fooled again.” In the near term, that spells trouble for Obama and Democrats. In the long term, that lays down a serious gauntlet for Republicans.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Tea partiers called all kinds of names

I’ve become quite impressed by the resiliency of these tea party people. Our parents taught us to judge folks by the company they keep, but the character of these Americans is clearly being forged by the barbarians at the gate, including the sickest politicians who attack their concerns, freedom of speech and right to assemble with the worst conceivable labels.

Before they even had a name they were considered anti-American and unpatriotic. After explaining their frustration with big government, inevitable taxing and over spending, they were called racist mobs. When they demanded to be heard during health care legislation, they were demonized as potential domestic terrorists. Filthy names spewed by our elected officials to intimidate citizens to sit down and shut up.

For lack of a better analogy, the tea party is the new pretty girl in school that irritates the undesirable incumbent cheerleaders. She can’t be wooed with entitlements, free programs or vague campaign promises. She spots snake oil Independents and sleazy RINOs from a mile away and she refuses to be a Republican prom date. Her sexy singing voice rocked Massachusetts, with more concerts scheduled in 2010-12. This makes quasi-conservatives and fearful Blue Dogs want to win favor with her while the nasty liberal step sisters spread rumors and lies about her on the bathroom walls. She may be new to the school, but this isn’t her first rodeo. The path behind her is littered with ex-scumfriends from both sides of the tracks who promised “hope and change,” “compassionate conservatism,” “putting people first,” and “no new taxes.” Decades of disappointmentments have made her strong and wise, and she’s mature enough to withstand name calling from gutter-mouthed playground bullies.

Besides, when’s the last time you made a woman shut up by calling her nasty names? Uh-huh, hurt didn’t it?

Euro partners agree on Greek bailout

By Raf Casert and Elena Becatoros
Associated Press writers

BRUSSELS — European governments and the International Monetary Fund on Sunday committed to pull Greece back from the brink of default, agreeing on euro110 billion in emergency loans on the condition Athens make painful budget cuts and tax increases.

The rescue is aimed at keeping Greece from defaulting on its debts and preventing its financial crisis from infecting other indebted countries just as Europe is struggling out of recession.

After chiding Athens for years of mismanagement and cheating on its budget reporting, the IMF and Greece's 15 partners that share the euro currency rewarded Prime Minister George Papandreou for tough measures including cuts in civil servants' pay.

"I have done and will do everything so the country does not go bankrupt," Papandreou told a nation which now faces years of painful belt-tightening after years of overspending.

France, Greece's most sympathetic partner, agreed there was no other choice.

"It's a very harsh plan because there was a lot of laxity," Finance Minister Christine Lagarde said.

But even Germany, long the fiercest critic of Greece's boundless spending, saw the need to back a euro-partner in such dire need — if only to keep the shared currency out of more trouble. The crisis is already threatening other eurozone countries with huge financial problems, including Finance Ministers of the 16 nations using the euro met on Sunday to review a proposed bailout for Greece.

Portugal and Spain.

"It is not an easy decision but there is no alternative," German Finance Minister Wolfgang Schaeuble said after the eurozone finance ministers approved the package in an emergency meeting in Brussels.

Lagarde also insisted that "everyone has an interest in Greece being stable and trusted."

The plan will still need approval by some countries' parliaments. But the eurogroup head, Luxembourg's Jean-Claude Juncker, said Greece will get the first funds by May 19, when Athens has euro8.5 billion worth of a 10-year bond maturing.

Next Friday, the government leaders of the eurozone will convene in Brussels for an extraordinary summit to wrap up the rescue package and look at ways to avoid it in the future.

The new Greek measures include cuts in civil servants' salaries and pensions, and tax increases, including for tobacco and alcohol, that aim to cut the deficit to below 3 percent of gross domestic product by 2014 from 13.6 percent now.

"We are called on today to make a basic choice. The choice is between collapse or salvation," George Papaconstantinou said before flying to Brussels.

Violent protests already marked the Labor Day parades in Athens on Saturday and more demonstrations and a nationwide general strike are set for Wednesday.

"These are the harshest, most unfair measures ever enacted. That is why our reaction will be decisive and dynamic. You can't always make the workers pay for the results of failed policies," Stathis Anestis, spokesman for Greece's largest umbrella union, GSEE, told The Associated Press.

Yet with Papandreou's Socialists holding a large parliamentary majority, his austerity plan is unlikely to face obstacles before it is rushed through parliament by Friday.

"Economic reality has forced us to take very harsh decisions," Papandreou said, adding that "This is the only way we will finance our euro300 billion debt."

Polanski breaks silence over U.S. extradition

PARIS (AP) — Filmmaker Roman Polanski, breaking a months-long silence, said Sunday that the U.S. is demanding his extradition from Switzerland on a 33-year-old sex case largely to serve him "on a platter to the media."

Polanski, who is under house arrest in his Alpine Swiss chalet, laid out his case against extradition on an online magazine run by one of his staunchest supporters, French philosopher Bernard-Henri Levy.

"I have had my share of dramas and joys, as we all have, and I am not going to try to ask you to pity my lot in life," he wrote. "I ask only to be treated fairly like anyone else."

Polanski suggests the case against him is unjust and riddled with problems. Each argument begins with the phrase: "I can remain silent no longer."

One of Polanski's complaints is that Los Angeles County District Attorney Steve Cooley, "who is handling this case and has requested (the) extradition, is himself campaigning for election and needs media publicity!" Cooley is running for California attorney general.

The district attorney's spokeswoman Sandi Gibbons said the office "will withhold comment until the Swiss make a decision on his fugitive status."

Swiss authorities are trying to decide whether to extradite Polanski to Los Angeles for having sex in 1977 with a 13-year-old girl. Polanski was arrested seven months ago as he arrived in Zurich to receive a lifetime achievement award at a film festival.

The Oscar-winning director of "Rosemary's Baby," "Chinatown" and "The Pianist" was put behind bars for more than two months before being transferred on $4.5 million bail to house arrest in the luxury resort of Gstaad. Polanski wrote in the online magazine, La Regle du Jeu, that he had mortgaged his apartment to pay the bail.

Nations gather to 'recommit vows' to nuclear treaty

Iran leader to use meeting to assail U.S. over disarmament

By Charles J. Hanley
Associated Press writer

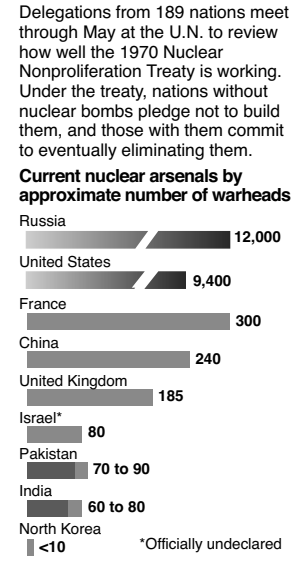

UNITED NATIONS — Delegates of 189 nations convene today for a twice-a-decade marathon of diplomacy, dickering and deal-making over the 40-year-old treaty designed to check the spread of nuclear weapons worldwide.

The presence of Iran's President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, the only head of state taking part, ensures sharp words will fly over Tehran's nuclear program and Israel's secret bombs, as well as over treaty outsider North Korea and the huge U.S. and Russian nuclear arsenals.

Departing Tehran on Sunday, Ahmadinejad signaled he'll use the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) review conference to assail the U.S. and other nuclear-weapons powers for slow movement toward disarmament.

"The atomic bomb has become a tool for bullying, domination and expansionism of some countries and governments," he told reporters.

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, on NBC's "Meet the Press," suggested the Iranian leader was coming to New York "to try to divert attention and confuse the issue," which she identified as Iran's suspected nuclear bomb program, target of U.S.-led efforts to impose a new round of U.N. Security Council sanctions on Tehran.

"We're not going to permit Iran to try to change the story from their failure to comply" with the NPT, she said.

Despite such exchanges, the U.N. conference's Filipino president put the monthlong talks in a more amiable light.

"It's like a recommitment of marriage vows to the treaty, as the cornerstone of nuclear disarmament, non-proliferation and peaceful uses of nuclear energy," said Ambassador Libran N. Cabactulan.

The NPT is the world's single most important pact on nuclear arms, credited with preventing their spread to dozens of nations since entering into force in 1970.

It has done it via a grand global bargain: Nations without nuclear weapons committed not to acquire them; those with them committed to move toward their elimination; and all endorsed everyone's right to develop peaceful nuclear energy.

Treaty members — every nation but India, Pakistan, Israel and North Korea — gather every five years to review how it's working and agree on new approaches to problems. They do that not by updating the treaty, a difficult task, but by trying to adopt a consensus final document calling for steps outside the treaty to advance its goals — in U.S.-Russian arms reductions, for example, or by strengthening the hand of the U.N. nuclear inspectors, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA).

Mexico, Germany urge the world to act on climate

KOENIGSWINTER, Germany (AP) — With the fight against global warming in serious trouble, Germany and Mexico are calling on world leaders to get international negotiations back on track and reach concrete results by the end of the year.

"We need to show the world how serious the threat is," Mexican President Felipe Calderon said as he opened an international climate change conference in Germany on Sunday.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel, who also spoke at the opening of the conference co-hosted by both countries and aimed at laying the groundwork for the next U.N. conference on climate change, asked nations around the world for more ambition in their efforts to cut greenhouse gases.

While scientists believe global temperatures must not rise by more than 3.6 degrees Fahrenheit compared to pre-industrial times, the world is now headed for a 3 to 4 degree increase, Merkel said.

"We have to realize that we have quite a long way to go to reach the 2-degree-goal," Merkel said. "Therefore we have to ascertain how we can reach our goals nonetheless."

Mexico will host the next U.N. conference on climate change in Cancun in December, the first such high-level summit after the troubled U.N. conference in Copenhagen five months ago.

Germany has long presented itself as a driving force in the international efforts to curb global warming and came up with the idea of a "mid-term" meeting.

The three-day conference called the Petersberg Dialogue hopes to make some progress on details, but most of all build trust between poor and rich nations, Calderon said.

Airline safety errors, close calls reveal an industry overwhelmed

By Ken Kaye
Sun Sentinel

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — In the past five years across the nation, three regional airline crashes killed 119 people. Three large airliners were destroyed in accidents and scores of planes came close to colliding.

Aviation safety has made great strides in the past decade. But each day pilots, air traffic controllers, ramp workers and other airline workers continue to commit dozens of errors, from controllers losing track of planes to pilots taking off with inadequate fuel.

Economic hardship caused by the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks and the current recession have strained the airline industry, contributing to inadequate training, pilot and controller fatigue, and a steady drain of experience, experts say.

Intense competition, incessant weather delays and tight security have applied even more pressure.

The Sun Sentinel reviewed hundreds of pilot and controller reports filed with a federal aviation-safety program, as well as accident reports investigated by the National Transportation Safety Board.

"We've maintained a fairly impressive safety record," said William Voss, CEO of the Flight Safety Foundation, an independent, nonprofit organization that monitors aviation safety. "But the safety improvements have stopped. The overstressed airline community might have a limit as to how much it can take."

Congress is on the verge of approving a far-reaching aviation bill. It would upgrade air traffic control and require more-stringent training for pilots and more experience for co-pilots.

Still, some in the aviation world are uneasy about the immediate future.

"We'd be naive if we weren't watching closely and being concerned," Voss said.

The airlines' safety record has been excellent in the past five years, with about 0.02 fatal accidents per 100,000 departures, according to the NTSB.

Still, the industry continues to be plagued by glitches. Since 2005, more than 17,000 have been detailed in the Aviation Safety Reporting System, a joint venture between the Federal Aviation Administration and NASA that accepts anonymous reports.

The problems often involve pilots straying from their assigned altitude, controllers failing to keep two planes far enough apart or ramp workers allowing planes on the ground to bump into each other.

But they also include pilots confessing they dozed off at the controls and con-

Airline safety

Airline safety has come under stress with a number of serious and fatal accidents as well as thousands of minor glitches.

Number of accidents in the U.S.

Errors and glitches filed anonymously by pilots, controllers and other airline workers trollers losing their radar scopes because of a power failure.

Most errors end without harm but still pose danger.

In June, controllers ordered the pilots of a 737 to make a rapid descent from 24,000 feet, while the plane was 50 miles from Palm Beach International Airport in Florida. The flight was then instructed to make a night landing on a 6,900-foot runway, which the captain thought was too short. The runway had no instrument landing system, and the co-pilot had only 100 hours of experience flying that type of jetliner.

"The last thing I wanted was to be high and fast to a short runway with no instrument landing system at night with a new guy flying," the captain wrote. "This was unsafe controlling as far as I'm concerned."

The plane landed safely.

In another instance, in February 2008, the pilots of a Boeing 737 airliner were instructed to take off at an intersection rather than use the full 9,000-foot runway at Fort Lauderdale-Hollywood International Airport. However, the pilots had loaded the jetliner with fuel and needed an additional quarter-mile of runway to ensure safety. The plane took off overweight.

Aviation safety officials consider glitches to be precursors of potential accidents. They encourage pilots, controllers and others to report the problems and avoid punitive action.

"We want to find things that have gone wrong and prevent them from happening again," said Alison Duquette, an FAA spokeswoman.

In the past year, the airlines have had a series of serious accidents and incidents.

As recently as March 27, a United Airlines Boeing 777 came within 200 feet of colliding in the air with a small plane that flew into its path near San Francisco International Airport.

Oil in Gulf has countless livelihoods in limbo

By Vicki Smith
Associated Press writer

HOPEDALE, La. — When Kenny LeFebvre is out of work, so are the two men who help him haul glistening blue crabs from the waters he’s fished since he quit school at 14. So are his sister and brother-in-law, who sell him bait, buy back the catch, pack it up, then resell it to buyers who put it on dinner tables in Maryland.

And so are thousands of other families just like theirs in some of the world’s richest fishing grounds, livelihoods in limbo as winds from exactly the wrong direction — the southeast — threaten to push an oil slick the size of Puerto Rico ever closer to the fragile, fingerlike bayous.

“I don’t know what I’ll do. I really don’t,” says LeFebvre, who unloaded 2,100 pounds of crab about 20 minutes before natural resource officials ordered the fishing zones in St. Bernard Parish closed. There was no sign of oil yet. Not even a whiff in the breeze. And the crabs had just started biting.

Now, the 600 traps LeFebvre dropped Friday morning will sit uncollected for weeks, he figures. Maybe months. Maybe years. How he will support six children, ages 9 to 18, is beyond his ability to imagine.

“I’m 35. I ain’t never drove a nail in my life. This is what I know, right here,” he says. “We starved all winter, and we was just getting to where we was making money and getting back on our feet.”

More than birds and fish lie in the path of the massive oil slick threatening the Gulf Coast from Florida to Texas: A centuries-old way of life that’s endured dozens of hurricanes is now facing the possibility of environmental and economic disaster.

Federal authorities on Sunday banned commercial and recreational fishing in a large stretch of water off four states, from Louisiana’s mouth of the Mississippi River to western parts of the Florida Panhandle. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said the closure would last for at least 10 days and was aimed at keeping seafood safe.

businesses support dock services, tackle shops and gas stations. Restaurants are Louisiana’s largest private-sector employer, with 140,000 workers and a direct annual economic impact of $5 billion. Wendy Warren, vice president of the Louisiana Restaurant Association, says nearly two-thirds of them serve some type of seafood.

Then there are some of the busiest shipping ports in the world, moving oil from offshore rigs up the Mississippi and Midwestern grain out to sea to feed the rest of the world.

All are vital to world commerce and have a potential impact on consumer pocketbooks.

The Port of Gulfport in Mississippi is the nation’s second-largest importer of green fruit, with Central American bananas from Chiquita and Dole accounting for 74 percent of its imported cargo in 2007.

The Port of New Orleans handled 73 millions tons of cargo in 2008, including coffee from South America and steel from Japan, Russia, Brazil and Mexico. Three cruise ships also dock there, handling more than 600,000 passengers a year.

Upriver is the Port of South Louisiana, the nation’s busiest with 224 million tons of cargo a year — mostly grain and other agricultural commodities, and chemicals from the scores of plants that line the river.

When a tanker and a tugboat collided near New Orleans two years ago, oil cascaded downriver and some 200 ships stacked up, unable to move for several days while the Coast Guard had the vessels scrubbed. Millions of dollars were lost.

OBAMA TO DO EVERYTHING ‘HUMANLY POSSIBLE’ ON SPILL

By Robert Burns and Steven R. Hurst
Associated Press writers

VENICE, La. — No remedy in sight, President Obama on Sunday warned of a “massive and potentially unprecedented environmental disaster” as a badly damaged oil well a mile deep in the Gulf of Mexico spewed a widening and deadly slick toward delicate wetlands and wildlife. He said it could take many days to stop.

Obama rushed to southern Louisiana to inspect forces arrayed against the oil gusher as Cabinet members described the situation as grave and insisted the administration was doing everything it could. Then he took a helicopter ride over the water to view the 30-mile oil slick caused by as much as 210,000 gallons of crude gushing into the Gulf each day.

The spill threatens not only the environment but also the region’s abundant fishing industry, which Obama called “the heartbeat of the region’s economic life.” As of now, it appeared little could be done in the short term to stem the oil flow, which was also drifting toward the beaches of neighboring Mississippi and farther east along the Florida Panhandle. Obama said the slick was 9 miles off the coast of southeastern Louisiana.

BP Chairman Lamar McKay raised faint hope that the spill might be stopped more quickly by lowering a hastily manufactured dome to the ruptured wellhead in the next six to eight days, containing the oil and then pumping it to the surface. Such a procedure has been used in some well blowouts but never at the mile-deep waters of this disaster.

The leaking well was not only an ecological disaster but a potential political hazard, as well, depending on how the public judges the Obama administration’s response. In 2005, President George W. Bush stumbled in dealing with Hurricane Katrina in the Gulf and left the impression of a president distant from immense suffering. His presidency never recovered.

“My worst fear is nobody wanting to come down because they can’t fish, they can’t shrimp, they can’t do anything.”

– Penny Benton, manager of Island Paradie Suites on Grand Isle, La.

Springs, Miss., Paul Nettles worries about losses of his own. He and his partners at South Coast Paddling Co. started their kayaking business last August, taking tourists through inland salt marshes and to some of the barrier islands.

“We just spent all year advertising and marketing, and it’s just now starting to pay off. If the whole summer is a wash, it could be devastating,” says Nettles, 38, preparing to take a dozen highway contractors on a three-hour tour of Old Fort Bayou.

On tiny Grand Isle, which boasts Louisiana’s only white sand beaches, the manager of the Island Paradise Suites is also fretting about what could happen this summer. Every weekend, says manager Penny Benton, there’s a fishing rodeo that supports the bait shops, eateries and motels. The big one is the tarpon rodeo at the end of July, when so many people pack onto the 6-mile-long island that it takes two hours to drive from one end to the other.

“My worst fear is nobody wanting to come down because they can’t fish, they can’t shrimp, they can’t do anything,” says Benton, 45, who counts on her job at her aunt’s inn to support her 8- and 12-year-old children. “I don’t even want to think about that. I know I need to, but I don’t want to.”

“We’re just praying. That’s all we can do,” she says. “Everybody’s scared to death.”

Recreational fishing draws some 6 million saltwater anglers a year, supports more than 300,000 jobs and contributes $41 billion dollars annually to the Gulf Coast economy, according to the American Sportfishing Association.

Registered nurse Diane Edinger, 50, of Twin Falls says she usually gets only a 30-minute lunch break, so she works out on her days off. On Wednesday, she used a treadmill at YMCA in Twin Falls. Edinger frequently exercises in the morning but is considering switching to the lunch hour because she has found there to be fewer people, more machines to choose from and better parking.

Sandwiches and sit-ups

Why you might choose to exercise during lunch

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

It's noon, and you're looking for a crunch. Most will find it in the chips and crackers that accompany their sandwich, but for others, lunchtime means their crunches are abdominal, complementing treadmills and barbells.

The most common reason to exercise during lunch breaks is, simply, scheduling.

"It seems like for me it ends up being a pretty convenient time. I lose motivation to go the gym after work, and I have other things to do at home," said Kathryn Goldman, who lives in Bellevue but works and exercises in Hailey.

Morning and evening are by far the most common times to exercise, said gym owners, but sleep, errands, family activities and other commitments may make those times unworkable for people who want to squeeze fitness time into their workday.

"It's something incorporated in your day already," said Krista Gehrke, owner of Blaine County Fitness Center, noting that the "mental appointment" of a lunch-hour workout is easy to keep, compared with the variable activities after work that could get in the way of the best intentions. "The group at lunch is a very consistent group; that time frame makes them use their time wisely."

Because noontime exercisers aren't common, it's also easier to get in, get access to your desired machines or equipment, and get out with a few minutes to spare. This can be an advantage even for those who don't have a 9-to-5 work schedule.

"I typically was working out in the morning, and I've been trying to alter the time because I've found that between 12 and 2 it's very quiet," said Diane Edinger, who works out at the YMCA in Twin Falls. "Today, there was one other person (on the treadmill). I can do whatever I want."

She works out only on her days off, because her nursing schedule means that during 12-hour shifts she has half-hour lunch breaks, which would leave her too tired and with not enough time for a mid-shift workout.

But it doesn't take a lot of time to get active, Gehrke said, noting that she has some lunchtime exercisers who opt for just 15-20 minutes on an aerobic machine and then head back out the door. Others alternate their routine to make the most of limited time — like Cory Wolfley of Bellevue, who works with weights on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and attends a "boot camp" class on Tuesday and Thursday.

"It just seems to be the only time of the day that I can get there," he said. His job is flexible enough that he can take more than an hour off sometimes, and he often eats at his desk to fit lunch into the midday break.

Lunching quickly before or after a workout is common among those who work out during their lunch hours, especially if their employers allow them to eat at their desks. But heed what your mother told you about not bolting your food, and be sure you provide your body enough calories to get maximum benefit from your exercise.

Goldman said her job varies so much from day to day that she can't predict which days she'll be able to make it to the gym, but she always plans to go when her afternoon is free of public appearances or business meetings, in case her workout leaves her sweaty or mussed.

But returning to the office with a little extra glow isn't enough to deter Goldman and other noon exercisers.

"Getting blood to the brain, it helps your overall productivity level. I get the 3 o'clock doldrums a lot worse (if I don't work out)," she said. "I could not sit here for eight hours a day if I didn't get exercise, no way."

Fitness center owner Gehrke agreed.

"Everybody walks in here feeling one way and walks out feeling better," she said. And who doesn't want to feel better as they face long afternoon meetings or accumulating e-mails?

Worried by rising Blaine County rates, suicide prevention advocates organize Hailey workshop

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

The economic downturn of the past couple of years has left more than failed banks, failed businesses and home foreclosures in its wake.

Idaho's suicide rate — already the seventh highest in the nation — has been climbing, as well. And Blaine County has had a marked increase since September, said Blaine County

HAILEY PRESENTATION

The presenters at Thursday's workshop on suicide awareness are psychiatrist Sally McCollum; Gay Miremont, a social worker with St. Luke's Wood River Medical Center; high school teacher Janet Dennis; Betty Brooks of Idaho Department of Health and Welfare; Blaine County Sheriff Walt Femling; and Nancy Kneeland, who works with Crisis Hotline of the Wood River Valley. The free presentation starts at 6 p.m. in the Distance Learning Center at Wood River High School, 1250 Fox Acres Road in Hailey.

Coroner Russ Mikel.

Hailey resident Kathryn Olson says it doesn't have to be that way. To prove it, she and her colleagues at the Wood River Chapter of NAMI — National Alliance on Mental Illness — have organized a suicide awareness presentation. The free, public presentation will be from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday at the Distance Learning Center at Wood River High School in Hailey.

Olson has been haunted by suicide for 52 years — since her 22-year-old brother took his own life.

"In 1958 there was not much in the way of treatment for families, and there was a great deal of stigma," said Olson, who grew up in Toledo, Ohio. "That's not the case now. There are dozens of medications available. My sister became very depressed when our father died, and she got help immediately. They found the right antidepressant for her, and a few months later she was so much better."

The top 10 states for suicide are all in the West, with Alaska ranking highest. Experts have speculated that the rural character of the West with an emphasis on rugged individualism, as well as ready access to guns, may be partly to blame.

There were 19 suicides in Blaine County from 2005 to 2009, according to Mikel. And the number is on the increase. Seven people took their lives during in 2009. And there have been four suicides so far this year, among them, a 42-year-old Bellevue man who allegedly invited police to shoot him and then shot himself when they refused.

Wood River Valley's Crisis Hotline has been fielding two to three calls a week from people contemplating suicide — the most calls the organization has experienced in its 23 years, said executive director Sher Foster. And Blaine County police say they are responding to as many as three suicide calls a month.

Local experts say recession is playing a role in Blaine County's sharp increase, possibly serving as the trigger in some cases. But they're quick to say that other factors are at work, as well.

"We all know the economy has been hard on people. But it's probably only been a significant factor in a couple of cases. The rest appear to be due to the normal things — severe mental illness, terminal illness, occasionally family disputes," Mikel said.

About 90 percent of those who become suicidal have depression or some other diagnosable mental illness, said Olson. The other 10 percent are dealing with some traumatic event, such as the loss of a loved one, a divorce or financial problems.

Withdrawal is a common symptom among suicidal people, Olson said, but people who are around them might not notice as it can sneak up over time. Other symptoms include reckless behavior and other sudden changes in behavior, changes in weight or appearance, increased drug or alcohol use, inability to sleep or a tendency to spend way too much time sleeping, a feeling of hopelessness and giving away possessions.

Someone who thinks they recognize one or more symptoms in a friend or family member should approach that person privately, assuring them that anything they say will be kept in confidence, Olson said.

"You might say, 'I notice you're not quite the same. Is there anything I can do? I'm here to listen,'" she said. "It's important you stress that you're not there to offer advice but to listen. These people feel isolated; they think no one understands. It's also important to try to recommend that they get some sort of medical treatment."

Janet Dennis, who teaches a personal growth class at Wood River High School, said she also stresses communication when students come to her worried about a friend.

"One of the myths about suicide is that we'll plant the idea in someone's head if we talk about it," she said. "We need to let people know they're not alone. And we need to talk about it more than once."

Olson said she hopes this week's suicide awareness presentation will attract not just those who know someone with mental illness but those who don't.

"The more people are aware the more likely people are to get treatment. And treatment works," she said. "Someone may think they don't know anyone at risk for suicide but they may realize they do know an employee or friend who is at risk after they attend this workshop. Or, someone who needs help may come into their life in the future."

"The most important thing anyone can do is to notice the symptoms," she added. "You can't do anything if you're not aware."

Patients in denial:

When it's helpful to tune out the truth

By Ibby Caputo
Special to The Washington Post

A mother finds a lump in her breast while in the shower. It doesn't hurt, and she has to get breakfast on the table and go to work, so she ignores it.

A husband goes to the hospital to have a total knee replacement. While there, he shows signs of alcohol withdrawal, but when the doctor asks his wife if he has a drinking problem, she says he hardly drinks at all.

These are examples of denial, a common defense mechanism that is often misunderstood, according to psychiatrists. In extreme cases, such as when a woman denies signs of breast cancer, the results can be deadly. But more often, a healthy dose of denial helps people endure and process a disturbing reality they or one of their loved ones are facing.

"From a psychiatric perspective, denial is the mind's way of protecting the body and, actually, the mind, from some noxious truth," said Terry Rabinowitz, medical director of the psychiatric consultation service at Fletcher Allen Health Care in Burlington, Vt. "Think of the whole brain as comprising a bunch of different loudspeakers: Denial is the way for the brain or mind to turn down the volume on a certain set of speakers."

The concept of denial as a defense mechanism was introduced by Sigmund Freud, according to Hanoch Livneh, a psychologist who specializes in rehabilitation at Portland State University in Oregon.

"Freud literally thought about it as very pathological," Livneh said, "something that a normal person should not engage in."

In some cases, denial can indeed be pathological.

Lillie Shockney, administrative director of the Johns Hopkins Avon Foundation Breast Center and a two-time breast cancer survivor, said she

A healthy dose of denial helps people endure and process a disturbing reality they are facing. 'Think of the whole brain as comprising a bunch of different loudspeakers: Denial is the way for the brain or mind to turn down the volume on a certain set of speakers,' says psychiatrist Terry Rabinowitz.

sees such cases at least once a month. "A patient will come into the emergency room complaining of severe pain," she said, "not in the breast but in the spine or lungs, because the disease is everywhere."

Shockney said that in these cases, as soon as the patient's clothes come off, she can see the tumor eating through the breast tissue. She said such women will typically admit their breast has been in this condition for years, but when she asks if they thought it was cancer, they often remain silent.

"It doesn't matter how much I see it, I'm always stunned that someone can endure this," Shockney said.

It is a minority of patients who suffer in such a severe state of denial. Still, the majority of those with a life-threatening illness experience some form of denial, Shockney said. She can understand why.

"Breast cancer remains the most feared disease of all women, no matter what age, ethnicity or race," said Shockney. "From the time that a girl gets fitted for her first bra, she's taught the value of having breasts. Society places a lot of importance on sexiness and womanhood."

Whether it stems from a fear of loss of womanhood or a fear of death, as Freud believed, or from myriad other anxieties, denial after a diagnosis can be a very protective defense mechanism, according to Livneh.

"The major function of denial is to alleviate anxiety. To find some way to cushion the very severe stress that may be under most conditions too much for the person to handle," Livneh said. He said that after the diagnosis of a life-threatening illness, a person might refuse to believe that she will die, experience pain from treatment or lose her hair. In these situations, denial can provide the emotional and mental space a person needs to process distressing information.

"Moderation in everything," Livneh said. He said it is normal to deny the severity, duration or far-reaching consequences of a condition as long as that process does not jeopardize medical intervention. Denial following diagnosis allows the ego to muster up the power and energy it needs to deal with the situation, he said.

Donald Northfelt, a medical oncologist who specializes in breast cancer at the Mayo Clinic, agrees.

"Denial in some ways can be a healthy thing because it can help patients overcome things that would be too traumatic if they were forced to face them straight on," Northfelt said.

Northfelt, who has been taking care of breast cancer patients for 20 years, said that when he was newly trained, he used to get frustrated with patients' denial. That does not happen as much anymore.

"Age and experience has given me a greater depth of understanding and I think more compassion for people who are experiencing denial about their medical situations," he said.

While denial can be dangerous, life without some measure of denial would be a catastrophe, said Livneh.

"We would be swamped with so much negative stimuli we could not handle it," he said.

How to prevent stress fractures

By Alison Johnson
Daily Press (Newport News, Va.)

Stress fractures — small cracks in bones, most often in the feet and lower leg — are common injuries in both serious and recreational athletes. Here are trainers' tips on protecting yourself:

Alternate your activities. Stress fractures are overuse injuries, caused by repeated shock to the same body part. Balance high-impact exercise such as running and aerobics with low-impact choices like swimming and biking.

Don't do too much. Many stress fractures occur with sudden increases in activity. Gradually build up time, speed and distance over a period of weeks. For runners, a general rule is no more than a 10 percent increase in distance per week.

Wear the right shoes. Replace old, worn sneakers and avoid stiff, uncomfortable footwear. Aim to buy shoes designed for the activity you do most.

Be aware of risk factors. People who regularly run or play sports on hard surfaces such as asphalt are more prone to stress fractures. So are runners, dancers, gymnasts and tennis and basketball players.

Do some strength training. Stronger muscles are better able to absorb shock and protect bones.

Take pain seriously. If you have discomfort during activity, swelling and tenderness, apply an ice pack, elevate your foot above heart level and rest for a few days; otherwise you risk a complete bone break. If the pain lingers, see a doctor.

Change your gait. There's some evidence that runners who slightly shorten their stride can lower their risk of a stress fracture. If possible, work with a trainer or running coach.

Eat the right foods. Calcium and vitamin D are especially important to bone strength, but the usual advice holds: plenty of fruits and vegetables, lean proteins, whole-grains and low-fat dairy products.

Got sore thumbs, shoulders from texting? Stretch

By Kelly Brewington
The Baltimore Sun

The proliferation of cell phones is leading to a new range of pain, according to Dr. Mark Sobor of ChicagoHealers.com.

All that texting is causing neck, shoulder, hand and arm pain, including the same kinds of repetitive motion injuries as those who type on computer keyboards a lot. Further, cell phones are not really designed for all that writing.

Dr. Sobor says people tend to hunch over, putting strain on their neck and upper backs.

They tend to use only one thumb to type, focusing strain on one side. And repeated motions of some muscles deprives them of oxygen, causing them to spasm.

Here are his tips, in his words:

- Prepare for texting like for a physical workout. Warm up and stretch your muscles.
- Improve your posture. Don't hunch over while texting. Place your phone or PDA on a surface where you don't strain your neck and upper back bending over to see the screen.
- Take frequent breaks. Put the phone down between texts, get up and move around. Regularly open and close your fingers and stretch them.
- Stretch your forearm muscles by extending your arm with palm facing up and using the other hand to pull your palm toward the floor. Hold for 15 seconds, repeat 2 or 3 times for each arm.
- Use both thumbs to text and keep messages short.

How to keep germs at bay while traveling

By Landon Hall
The Orange County Register

Here are 5 tips for avoiding germs on the plane and at the airport:

- Wash your hands constantly. Think for a moment how many things you touch on the plane or at the airport that are touched by someone else: boarding passes, coins, restroom door handles.

- If you need a snack, go to the newspaper/magazine store and buy trail mix or dried fruit.
- If someone on the plane near you clearly is sick, turn on the overhead air vent and point it their way.
- Avoid the airline's unhealthy, overpriced snack kit.
- Don't trust those ubiquitous miracle-cure potions for sale at the airport.

IF MAY 3 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Your ability to suspend your disbelief and envision "what could be" is at its powerful best between now and the end of June. This is a good time to write down your inspirations, to take a trip to Disneyland where imagination rules, or to simply enjoy a romantic weekend for two. You are susceptible to flattery in August and September and could easily waste time on a wild goose chase, so keep your money in your pocket and your heart hidden up your sleeve. Ambitions grow in November, but you must follow the rules and be certain you don't ignore responsibilities if you want to succeed. Late February is the best time to launch major projects and plans.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders
ARIES (March 21-April 19): A closed mind doesn't need to be locked. Open up the windows of your mind and be willing to let others air their views. You may rush into areas where angels fear to tread due to preconceived notions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Take your time. If a major project is nearly complete, don't rush or force it. There may be some important details you have overlooked in your rush. Don't feel you must compete for everyone's attention.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Busy bees make the most honey. You have the sweetest touch with business matters. Don't be surprised if people at the other end of the phone or the other side of the table push all of your buttons.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Remember the carpenter's wise old advice: Measure twice and cut once. Think things through carefully before you rush into action. A mistake made now could cause enormous extra effort later.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Burn no bridges. You might be thrown in contact with someone who challenges your authority or feels defensive in your presence. Look for ways to be more tolerant when engaged in debates or disputes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are as old as you feel and will never grow old mentally if you continue to learn. The only way to learn what will easily prevent an argument or dispute is to listen to what others have to say.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Push aside your personal desires and things will change for the better. Only ask for favors that benefit everyone. The response might not be satisfactory if you ask the wrong question at the wrong time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your image can change from geek to sheik in the snap of a finger. Use logic and deductive reasoning to surmount obstacles and you may easily impress your fan club with your good judgment and wisdom.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Never say never. There could be fleeting moments when you feel overpowered by forces outside your control. Remember that the one thing you can control is your reaction to stress.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Speak out, as others may need to hear exactly what you have to say. You needn't be belligerent or unyielding, but at the same time you can stand up for your right to express an informed opinion.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Focus on ways to achieve your heart's desire without ruffling anyone's easily antagonized feathers. If you can't reach someone by phone or e-mail, remember to be polite and leave a detailed message.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep your composure. A financial situation or the bills look bigger and more troublesome than they really are. Don't work up a sweat or be afraid to move on if you have truly reached a stalemate.

"How many one-of-a-kinds are there?"

Today is Monday, May 3, the 123rd day of 2010. There are 242 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On May 3, 1960, the Harvey Schmidt-Tom Jones musical "The Fantasticks" began a nearly 42-year run at New York's Sullivan Street Playhouse, closing in Jan. 2002 after 17,162 performances.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1802, Washington, D.C. was incorporated as a city.

In 1810, English poet Lord Byron, inspired by the Greek myth of Hero and Leander, swam across the Hellespont, a strait located in present-day Turkey.

In 1909, a wireless news dispatch was transmitted from The New York Times to the Chicago Tribune in the first such communication between the two cities.

In 1916, Irish nationalist Padraic Pearse and two others were executed by the British for their roles in the Easter Rising.

In 1933, Nellie T. Ross became the first female director of the U.S. Mint.

In 1945, during World War II, Allied forces captured Rangoon, Burma, from the Japanese.

In 1948, the Supreme Court, in Shelley v. Kraemer, ruled that covenants prohibiting the sale of real estate to blacks or members of other racial groups were legally unenforceable.

In 1978, "Sun Day" fell on a Wednesday as thousands of people extolling the virtues of solar energy held events across the country.

In 1979, Conservative Party leader Margaret Thatcher was chosen to become Britain's first female prime minister as the Tories ousted the incumbent Labour government in parliamentary elections.

In 1986, in NASA's first post-Challenger launch, an unmanned Delta rocket lost power in its main engine shortly after liftoff, forcing safety officers to destroy it by remote control.

Ten years ago: The trial of two alleged Libyan intelligence agents accused of blowing Pan Am Flight 103 out of the sky over Lockerbie, Scotland, in 1988 opened in the Netherlands. (One of the defendants, Abdel Basset Ali al-Megrahi, was convicted of murder; he was freed from a Scottish prison in 2009 on compassionate grounds because of advanced prostate cancer and returned to Libya. The other defendant, Lamen Khalifa Fhimah, was acquitted.) The archbishop of New York, Cardinal John O'Connor, died at age 80.

Five years ago: The first democratically elected government in the history of Iraq was sworn in. Iran told a United Nations nonproliferation conference it would press on with its uranium-enrichment technology.

One year ago: A Lakeland, Fla. man, Troy Ryan Bellar, shot and killed his wife, Wendy, and then their 5-month-old and 8-year-old sons before killing himself; Bellar's 13-year-old son, Nathan, escaped unhurt. Ricardo Martinelli won Panama's presidential election.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other."
— Benjamin Franklin

We all know a few more-than-senior citizens who love to play bridge. But few couples have grown old as gracefully as Sidney and Lillian Matthews. A few years ago Sidney celebrated his 100th birthday in Marbella. At that dinner Sidney, still an enthusiastic golfer, announced his retirement as a bridge tournament director, but gave no indication he was ready to stop playing for the foreseeable future.

Matthews had recently played this hand in a duplicate pairs, which he was also directing. West led the spade king against six hearts. Matthews won with his ace, then led two rounds of trump to discover that the overcaller had started with three.

Having escaped a diamond lead, declarer appreciated that as long as clubs broke no worse than 4-2, he could discard his five losers in hand on dummy's clubs. But Sidney thought that he should secure his slam against a 5-1 break, even at the expense of an overtrick. How right he was, for after cashing the club ace, then ruffing a club high in hand, he saw West discard a diamond.

A heart to dummy drew the last trump, and Sidney was home in a slam that few pairs had bid, and even fewer had brought home. The logic behind the successful line is that if making your contract will secure you a good score, the merits of playing for an overtrick are strictly limited.

ANSWER: Declarer has shown eight playing tricks in spades, and dummy will be very weak, so ask yourself which lead is least likely to give away a trick or take a finesse for declarer he could not take himself. Partner will probably have a balanced 12-14 points, and on that basis a trump rates to be least likely to cost a trick. A club is a VERY close second, though.
