LT. GOV. ENCOURAGES STUDENTS TO VOTE

Little visits high school during Magic Valley swing

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Students at Magic Valley High School in Twin Falls got a special government lesson on Monday, provided by Lt. Gov. Brad Little.

Little dropped by the school's senior government class, coming at a time when the primaries loom and the election season is in full swing. For the students, many of them 18 years old, this year will be the first opportunity they have to vote.

Little became lieutenant governor in January 2009, replacing Jim Risch who was elected to the U.S. Senate. After handing out campaign brochures and telling students about his job, Little fielded a variety of questions about issues ranging from the education budget to legalizing marijuana.

Little told students the state has a balanced budget, unlike the federal government.

"I'm proud to say Idaho doesn't have any long-term debt at all," Little said. "You might be saddled with some federal debt, but you won't be saddled with Idaho debt."

When asked why a bill banning texting while driving didn't pass the Legislature, Little told students about the debate over the bill and an existing law that already allows fines to be levied against inattentive driving.

A student asked if Idaho would follow the lead of other states in legalizing marijuana.

"If I was inclined to wager, I would say probably not," Little said, noting that law enforcement officers have concerns about the idea. "I would not

Attention shoppers: Gulf spill could affect you

By Harry R. Weber and Vicki Smith
Associated Press writers

NEW ORLEANS — The calamitous oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico isn't just a mess for the people who live or work on the coast. If you drink coffee, eat shrimp, like bananas or plan to buy a new set of tires, you could end up paying more because of the disaster.

The slick has forced the shutdown of the gulf's rich fishing grounds and could also spread to the busy shipping lanes at the mouth of the Mississippi River, tying up the cargo vessels that move millions of tons of fruit, rubber, grain, steel and other commodities and raw materials in and out of the nation's interior.

Though a total shutdown of the shipping lanes is unlikely, there could be long delays if vessels are forced to wait to have their oil-coated hulls power-washed to avoid contaminating the Mississippi.

Some cargo ships might choose to unload somewhere else in the U.S. That could drive up costs.

"Let's say it gets real bad. It gets blocked off and they don't let anything in. They lose time, and they are very concerned about that," said river pilot Michael Lorino. "It's going to be very costly if they have to unload that cargo in another port and ship it back here because it was destined for here."

When a tanker and a tugboat collided near New Orleans two years ago, oil cascaded down the river and some 200 ships stacked up, unable to move for several days while the Coast Guard had the vessels scrubbed. Millions of dollars were lost.

Several river boat pilots said the edge of the oil slick Monday was 15 to 20 miles off the Southwest Pass, where ships headed to New Orleans enter the Mississippi. The latest satellite image of the slick, taken Sunday night, indicates that it has shrunk since last week, but that only means some of the oil has gone underwater.

Mikesell bows out of race for county commissioner

Incumbent who filed for re-election will pursue a new career instead

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

Three weeks before the May 25 primary, Twin Falls County Commissioner Tom Mikesell has pulled out of the race to defend his seat.

Mikesell announced in a Monday e-mail to county employees that he has been offered a job by two private businesses and will not seek re-election. He will serve out the rest of his term, which ends in January.

That means Mikesell's three challengers in the Republican primary, as well as Democrat and independent contenders this fall, will not face the difficult task of unseating an incumbent — though it's apparently too late to take his name off of the May ballot. The winner of the November election will get a four-year District 2 commission seat.

The news came as a surprise to Mikesell's fellow commissioners. He said later Monday that the job offer, a "wonderful opportunity," came in early April and required a lot of thought to accept.

"It might not ever happen again, so I thought I should take it and take it as quickly as I could," he told the Times-News. He declined to elaborate on what his new career will entail, adding that his new employers have asked him not to share that for now.

Mikesell was first elected in 2002 and served as chairman of the three-member commission in 2007 and 2008. Prior to joining the commission, he served on the Twin Falls City Council and ran a photo processing business.

Unopposed in his last race in 2008, he this time faced six challengers: three Republicans, two Democrats and an independent.

Commissioners George

Urie and Terry Kramer said they had no idea Mikesell would drop his re-election bid.

"It certainly changes the dynamics of the race, because we don't have an incumbent in there," Kramer said.

The sitting commissioner's three Republican challengers noted that as well, though Roger L. Urnsbach Sr. said he doesn't expect his campaign to change, as he still has to get his name out ahead of this month's primary. Urnsbach, Jim Schouten and Leon Mills all said they had wondered why Mikesell didn't have campaign signs out.

"He was probably our stiffest competition," Mills said.

The challenge of a crowded field had nothing to do with Mikesell's decision to retire from the race, he said. Rather, the 56-year-old said he felt he should jump on the job offer while he had the chance. And he had to make the decision before the primary, he said, to avoid having to resign and have a successor appointed.

"If I served another term, I was done," he said, adding he feels it would be harder to search for a job then. "I never wanted to be a career politician."

He hopes for the rest of this year to bring as many of his pending projects to a close as he can, he said. In his e-mail, he thanked county employees for the work they did together.

"I think it was a privilege to serve the people of Twin Falls County," he said later.

Schoolboy prank ends up all wet

Wendell students disciplined for creating outdoor classrooms

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — When Wendell High School employees arrived at school on April 22, they found chairs and desks in tidy rows, a teacher's podium at the front of each classroom.

The only problem: the classrooms were set up outside, in front of the gymnasium and on the football field. The schoolboy prank was carried out by nine senior boys who the school declined to identify, and would have been mostly harmless except for one small detail — it rained earlier that morning.

"Evidently the students gained entry into the school

Twin Falls Council approves zoning ordinance change

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

The Twin Falls City Council on Monday unanimously approved an ordinance that will permit the city to construct or operate facilities on city-owned property that don't conform to an area's zoning.

There's a catch. The city would still have to hold a public hearing with council approval before new municipal services could start in a nonconforming area. The ordinance takes away the need for the city to get a special use permit and approval through the Planning and Zoning Commission.

P&Z members had sought to retain that oversight for projects in new areas. The nine-member commission voted unanimously in March to suggest the council only exempt expansions of facilities that exist today.

Mitch Humble, the city's community development director, said that this could be used to construct a needed service like a radio communications tower in a neighborhood that's not zoned for that structure.

No public hearing would be required for city services that conform to an area's zoning.

In other council business:

● Councilmen Lance Clow and David Johnson will serve on the task force that examines the city's recycling program and any potential improvements. The task force will include citizen input.

● Councilmen Trip Craig, Will Kezele and Greg Lanting will serve on a task force that looks at city salaries and insurance. The city recently completed a salary study, and the task force will include input from city staff.

● A request was approved for an outdoor event permit for Garibaldi's Mexican Restaurant, 645 Filer Ave., for Cinco de Mayo, which would take place from 6 to 9 p.m. Wednesday.

● The council also approved a request to hold the 21st Annual Mother's Day and Latin Fiesta at City Park. The event is from noon to 8 p.m. on Sunday.

hours of community service each, and had to split a $200 fine to pay for custodial supplies required in the cleanup.

Lowe said the punishment fit the crime.

"We didn't get the police involved because no harm was intended," he said. "It was a senior prank and we understand that. However, the students did break in and enter the school."

No disciplinary action was handed down to the substitute teacher whose key was involved, as Lowe said the teacher had no idea the key had been taken.

"Oh, that's a good one," said Brett Thackeray, a 1985 Wendell High School graduate now living in Lewistown, Mont.

He didn't readily remember any pranks pulled by his class, but a post for stories to his Facebook page had tales quickly pouring in.

While senior pranks are likely to be remembered for years to come, Goss cautioned students from trying to outdo each other.

"It's known among Wendell that a senior prank will not go without consequences," Goss said. "Students need to consider if laws are broken, if it's worth it."

Progress on Jerome Co. jail lawsuit slows

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

JEROME — A lawsuit filed against Jerome County after its voters struck down a proposal for a new jail in November remains pending in court, with a similar election for a new facility just three weeks away.

On May 25, residents in Jerome County will vote on whether to let the county sign off on a lease-purchase agreement to construct a new jail and sheriff's office, after a similar push narrowly failed to garner 66 percent supermajority approval at the polls last year.

A petition filed by resident Lee Halper on Jan. 8 against the county, its commissioners and its prosecutor's office slowed Monday in a Jerome courtroom when a hearing on Halper's motion for summary judgment was rescheduled to May 17.

Halper, who is representing himself, alleges in court records that the county defendants violated Idaho law by not seeking bids for an expenditure of more than $25,000 when they contracted with Rocky Mountain Corrections — a Ketchum-based jail development and consulting firm — in connection to November's failed election.

The county had paid RMC about $87,500 without going to bid for the services, according to Halper's case.

Sheriff's office authorities have said they are handling their own public relations for the latest election effort rather than using RMC.

The life span for the current jail, which opened in 1975, depends on whether the Idaho Counties Risk Management Program will continue to insure it, as liability issues permeate under a growing list of facility deficiencies, deputies have said.

The county filed a motion to dismiss Halper's case on March 9. Mike Seib, the Jerome County prosecutor handling the case, said Monday from the courtroom that Halper's motion filings have been untimely.

"I'm confused what we're here for," Seib said, before Judge Butler rescheduled the hearing.

In a reader comment printed in April in the Times-News, Halper explained why he sued the county.

"I filed a lawsuit against the commissioners as per their jail procurement actions. Why? Because I contend they did not follow the law and because the law needs clarification," Halper wrote.

The county in court filings has denied Halper's claims, and asserted he is "a taxpayer that has a special interest peculiar to himself that is not common to all taxpayers in the county."

When asked if he'll still be in office 10 years from now, Little wasn't sure.

"Ten years is a long time. I'm worried about the 25th," Little said, referring to the May 25 primaries.

Little's being challenged for the Republican nomination by Steven Pankey of Shoshone and Joshua Blessinger of Boise.

Little wrapped up his presentation by encouraging students to question candidates.

"Don't let us off the hook by not participating and not asking us tough questions," Little said.

Melanie Hutchinson, the government class teacher, said her goal with getting candidates like Little to visit students is to encourage them to start voting.

When a T.F. Democrat controlled Idaho politics

Twin Falls County hasn't elected a Democrat to county office in nearly 50 years, nor a legislator from the party in almost seven decades. So it's hard to imagine that once the most powerful Democrat in Idaho was from Twin Falls.

Meet Missouri-born William Orr Chapman, a Blackfoot lawyer who moved to Twin Falls after World War I. A brilliant courtroom advocate, he was a protege of the most influential Idaho Democrat of the Progressive Era, Gov. James Hawley.

Chapman was a Catholic and a conservative, but a firm believer that Prohibition should be repealed.

In 1928, he and his long-time associate — fellow Twin Falls Democrat Asher B. Wilson — effectively took control of the Idaho Democratic Party when Wilson was elected national committeeman. The “dry” wing of the party — those who favored Prohibition — included future Gov. Ben Ross.

Said Hawley: “I have no patience with Prohibition or its supporters, and while I am no drinking man, I really believe that Prohibition is the source of most intemperance and is doing more to immortalize the American people than any other evil that is affecting them at the present time.”

After Ross was elected governor in 1930, he clashed early and often with Chapman. In 1931, the Twin Falls County Commission hired Chapman's law firm and tried to get a court order mandating that federal relief money be distributed to counties on the basis of population. Instead, Ross had used the cash mostly for highway construction projects, reasoning that it created jobs.

Chapman lost that argument.

Later that year, Ross fired state Public Works Director Alvin Harbour, a Twin Falls boy and a protege of Chapman's, for bid-rigging. Chapman was furious.

“Arguing that Ross had

YOU

destroyed his friend unfairly, Chapman became Ross' most bitter enemy,” wrote Ross biographer, Michael Malone. “Significant is the fact that, while Ross heralded his exposure of wrongdoing, he made no serious effort to reform the Public Works Department or straighten out its clumsy method of accounting.”

In 1932, Chapman announced his candidacy for the U.S. Senate seat held by John Thomas of Gooding, a very vulnerable Republican.

“Lt. Gov. G.P. Mix, the brother-in-law of Chapman's main ally J.J. Day, dealt Chapman's cause a serious blow by entering the race and thereby neutralizing the Day influence,” Malone wrote in “C. Ben Ross and the New Deal in Idaho.” “Very probably, Ross put his good friend Mix up to this strategy in an effort to keep Chapman out of power.”

Ross was re-elected in 1934, but Chapman got his revenge when Ross made the disastrous decision to challenge 29-year incumbent Republican Sen. William Borah in 1936.

According to Malone, in the summer of 1936 Chapman visited Democratic National Chairman James Farley and pitched an idea:

What if Borah were to endorse President Franklin Roosevelt — who was up for re-election — and the New Deal, and Farley were to talk Ross out of challenging the Lion of Idaho?

Both Borah and Ross balked at the idea, and the governor lost badly to the senator that November.

Chapman had a long and distinguished legal career after that but never again was a player in Idaho Democratic politics.

But then again, neither was his archrival Ross.

Judge denies Cameron Watts' post-conviction relief request

By Andrea Jackson
Times-News writer

Cameron Watts' first shot at parole won't come until at least 2027, after a judge put an end to the murder convict's petition for post-conviction relief.

In a 22-page judgment dated April 29, 5th District Judge Randy Stoker dismissed Watts' claims against the state of Idaho with prejudice so Watts may not re-file them.

Watts, 32, pleaded guilty to first-degree murder for the death of Dale Miller, 18, after Miller's body was found inside a 55-gallon drum in a Twin Falls apartment garage in 2007.

Watts claimed in the petition for post-conviction relief that he received ineffective assistance from lawyers who helped him through his 2008 guilty plea to the murder. In post-conviction relief petitions, defendants request for their convictions to be set aside, or sentences to be modified or reduced.

Miller, Watts and co-defendant John McElhiney became acquainted “because of their mutual involvement in drug dealing,” wrote Stoker in the judgment.

Watts was sentenced to 20

years to life in prison for his part in Miller's death, which authorities have said involved the kidnapping of Miller and burglary of his apartment. McElhiney pleaded guilty to the murder and won't become eligible for parole until 2029.

By pleading guilty in Miller's murder, Watts also escaped possible prosecution for allegations of child sex offenses from multiple counties, including Twin Falls, Jerome and Gooding.

“Watts had a great fear of going to the penitentiary labeled as a sex offender,” wrote Stoker in last week's judgment.

In March, Watts told the court he wanted to withdraw his guilty plea in the murder.

“The court finds that any claim by Watts that he specifically told his attorneys to file a motion to withdraw his plea is simply not credible,” Stoker wrote.

Watts had claimed in court that McElhiney threatened him into helping tie up Miller during the crime.

A 2008 appeal to the Idaho Supreme Court from Watts was also dismissed.

Body from burned car identified

Authorities decline to name person pending family notification

Times-News

A body found on April 18 in a burned vehicle has been identified following an autopsy, Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loeb announced Monday.

Loeb declined to name the individual or give his or her age, saying the person's family had not been notified by Monday evening about the death.

Still unanswered Monday night was whether the body may be connected to an accident or a homicide, Loeb confirmed.

A deputy found the body and vehicle on April 19 in the backwaters area of Salmon Falls Dam.

Idaho revenue misses April projection

By Todd Dvorak
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Preliminary tax revenue data show Idaho collections in the critical month of April fell more than $55 million below the estimates set by the state's chief economist, a shortfall due in part to higher-than-expected income tax refunds.

But the unofficial information released Monday shows state revenue is tracking more closely to forecasts set by state budget writers earlier this year when they reconfigured the state's $2.28 billion budget for fiscal year 2010. Based on the legislative budget figures, April's performance means the state is facing a $13.5 million deficit heading into the final two months of fiscal 2010.

Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter called the latest figures disappointing but no cause for panic. Otter has ruled out imposing another round of spending holdbacks on state agencies and at least for now is not considering calling lawmakers back to Boise to tweak and balance the $2.28 billion 2010 budget.

State Budget Chief Wayne Hammon said Otter instead will reach into rainy day accounts authorized by lawmakers and urge agency directors to look for savings until the fiscal year ends June 30.

"The governor does not envision calling a special session because he has the tools available to address the issue," Hammon told The Associated Press.

Revenue for April — always the biggest month for collecting taxes and fattening the state's general fund — was $1.8 billion, about $55.5 million short of the forecast set by the Division of Financial Management.

In January, lawmakers on the GOP-dominated Economic Outlook and Revenue Assessment Committee scaled recommended a more conservative revenue forecast and adjustment to the 2010 budget.

The 18-member committee estimated $2.28 billion in tax revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, and for 2011 a revenue goal target of $2.29 billion, about $60 million less than the state's chief economist.

The disappointing revenue news for April follows positive developments in March, when tax revenue came in $14.5 million above projections, the first time in six months revenue beat expectations.

Like March, April also showed improvement in sales tax collections, a sign people are spending more on goods and services. Sales tax receipts generated $800 million in April, more than $2.6 million higher than projected for the month.

But the overall revenue outlook took a hit in April because the state dished out more money in tax refund checks than anticipated, and corporate income taxes came in $11 million short of projections.

Hammon said the total amount paid back to taxpayers in April has not yet been calculated. Overall, the report shows individual income tax collections at $928 million, $47 million below forecasts.

Hammon said a closer look at the report shows current individual income tax withholdings — money held out of April paychecks — were up for the month, a sign more people are working and those working are logging more hours. Last month, the Idaho Department of Labor reported the state unemployment rate fell to 9.4 percent in March, the first dip in 32 months.

For Otter and Republican lawmakers, April's lackluster revenue performance reaffirms the conservative stance taken earlier this year when the Legislature reworked the 2010 budget, adding more spending cuts and setting revenue targets below projections preferred by Democrats.

"The caution we showed was probably the correct path," said Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, co-chair of the legislature's budget writing committee.

There is some hope the state can turn things around in May and June, the months when those granted tax extensions are due to make payments.

Rep. Wendy Jacquet, D-Ketchum, said with two months left in the year and signs of improvement emerging, it's too soon for Republicans to declare victory.

"I think they left some money on the table," Jacquet said. "From what I'm seeing, people are starting to go back to work. It's not June 30th yet."

GOP hopeful's earmark stance wins rival's critique

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — In his new campaign ad, Republican U.S. House hopeful Vaughn Ward says he wants to ban earmarks.

"The only way to stop reckless spending and make the government accountable and transparent is to end government bailouts and ban earmarks," Ward says in the TV spot.

In January, however, Ward offered a more-nuanced view of the spending measures that direct taxpayer cash from Congress to specific projects in members' states: He told a crowd in Homedale at a campaign stop that earmarks ensure federal money goes where it has state or local support.

"Earmarks are really disingenuous," said Dennis Mansfield, Labrador's spokesman. "You're either for it, or you're against it."

On Monday, Ward said he's been steady, all along: The earmark process is broken; it should be halted, then fixed or forbidden.

"I have always felt that it's not the earmarks that are the problem, it's that Congress is abusing the process," he said.

This year, House Republicans and Democrats have had competing anti-earmark maneuvers, banning them temporarily or forbidding them for companies that make campaign contributions. Earmarks make up less than 1 percent of federal spending under Congress' control.

"We're looking for good standing candidates that say what they mean and mean what they say," Mansfield said Labrador wouldn't seek earmarks, should voters send him to Washington, D.C.

"You can take that to the bank," Mansfield said.

In March, Minnick called for a permanent, complete ban.

"He has a perfect record against earmarks," said John Foster, Minnick's spokesman. "We hear consistently from voters across the political spectrum they really appreciate what Walt's version of a ban on earmarks looks like."

In Idaho, lawmakers including U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson, a GOP member of the House Appropriations Committee, have used earmarks to send money to the Boise Airport tower, build military housing at Mountain Home Air Force Base, and pay for work at the Idaho National Laboratory in Idaho Falls.

He then went on to say the process of awarding earmarked money isn't transparent.

"It's not about that earmarks are bad, it's the transparency is not there," he said at the Jan. 26 event.

Last week, in a questionnaire for the group Tea Party Boise, Ward offered another take on earmarks: They should be banned — with a caveat.

"I won't rule out seeking money to help towns cover unfunded mandates to the states," Ward wrote, a nod to Nampa and Caldwell that fear new federal pollution rules could cost them millions to protect the Snake River.

His rival in the May 25 GOP primary, state Rep. Raul Labrador, an earmark foe, contends Ward is being inconsistent by shifting from January's lengthy explanation, to allowing exceptions for Nampa and Caldwell, to the campaign ad in which he now argues for an outright ban.

Still, for many Idaho conservatives — voters that Ward and Labrador both will be courting furiously over the next 22 days — earmarks remain a symbol of the lack of accountability and transparency in federal government. Projects like Alaska's "Bridge to Nowhere" — the disputed $400 million bridge plan in Alaska that lost its congressional earmark in 2005 — have earned them a bad name.

Just where Ward and Labrador come down — and how voters interpret their positions — could play a vital role in which one is sent to face U.S. Rep. Walt Minnick, D-Idaho, in November. Minnick, a first-term lawmaker, is one of four U.S. House Democrats who say they won't seek earmarks.

"It's absolutely crucial, is how I would put it," said Brendan Smythe, Tea Party Boise president, on candidates' stances on earmarks.

"We do not care where the chips fall, either Democratic or Republican," Smythe said.

Group files new lawsuit over sage grouse

BOISE (AP) — An environmental group has filed another legal challenge over the federal government's decision not to give the sage grouse protection under the Endangered Species Act.

In March, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service ruled the sage grouse warranted threatened or endangered status, but formal listing under the law was precluded by other agency priorities.

Western Watersheds Project filed a lawsuit in U.S. District Court in Boise Friday. The group's lawyers compare the decision to putting the bird in the "black hole" of species denied protective status.

It's a separate case from the legal challenge that forced the agency to reconsider its 2005 decision not to grant the bird protection.

Once abundant in the West the bird's population has declined due to grazing, wildfires, energy development and other influences on its habitat.

Housing options for Idaho seniors growing rapidly

BOISE (AP) — The number of assisted-living and other retirement home options has grown dramatically in the last five years, giving Idaho seniors more options but creating a tough marketplace for operators of the facilities.

An Idaho health care official says growth in the number of retirement and assisted-living homes is outpacing current demand, especially in the Treasure Valley, the state's most populated region.

The Idaho Department of Health and Welfare reports it has 8,413 licensed beds at assisted living centers statewide. Agency officials say growth in these beds has increased 36 percent in the last five years.

Retirement homes for seniors who don't need assisted living also are booming, said Robert Vander Merwe, executive director of the Idaho Health Care Association and Idaho Center for Assisted Living.

"It's an explosion over the last five years," Vander Merwe told the Idaho Statesman.

The rapid growth has also come during the economic downturn across the state and nation. The growth in Idaho mirrors a national trend fueled by the aging population and an increase in the number of households with two working parents.

"Certainly, there has been an overbuilding of assisted living in some areas," Vande Merwe said. "At the same time they overbuilt, the economy tanked."

Assisted living is for people who may have trouble with the ordinary activities like cooking, dressing or remembering to take medication.

Retirement communities serve seniors who can take care of themselves, often in their own apartments, duplexes or other on-site housing, but are happy to leave the cooking, cleaning and yard work to others.

The range of retirement community options covers the spectrum, from affordable with few options to luxurious units that require entrance deposits starting at $100,000.

For example, one retirement community in Boise offers single-family homes, apartments or condominiums, along with commercial services, golf, a private lake and walking paths. Its residents pay between $2,900 and $3,600 per month.

AFGHANISTAN

Leader of Pakistan's Taliban appears in video, threatens attacks against the U.S.

KABUL — The leader of Pakistan's Taliban appeared in a video Monday threatening attacks against the U.S. three months after American and Pakistani officials believed he died in a U.S. missile strike.

Hakimullah Mehsud's emergence occurred as a suicide bomber attacked the gate to a CIA base where seven agency employees were killed last December. The Pakistan Taliban claimed responsibility for that bombing, and Monday's attack could have been aimed at showing that the group was back in business despite months of setbacks from relentless U.S. missile strikes and a Pakistani military offensive.

The Pakistan Taliban have also claimed responsibility for an attempted car bombing last weekend in New York City's Times Square — a claim that New York officials question.

U.S. and Pakistani officials had been confident until recently that the ruthless, 30-year-old Mehsud had been killed in a January missile strike along the boundary between South Waziristan and North Waziristan — tribal areas along Pakistan's border with Afghanistan where Islamist militant groups operate with near impunity.

A video posted on militant websites and broadcast Monday by Pakistani television showed Mehsud seated between two masked, armed men, speaking in Pashto with English subtitles.

CALIFORNIA

Woman stabs 4 in Southern Calif. Target store before off-duty deputy intervenes

WEST HOLLYWOOD — Authorities say a woman who allegedly stabbed and wounded at least four people in a Target store near Los Angeles has been arrested.

Los Angeles County Sheriff's Sgt. Josh Mankini says an off-duty deputy who was shopping Monday afternoon pulled out his gun and ordered the 34-year-old woman to the ground. Mankini says the woman was arrested with the help of private security guards at the West Hollywood store.

Mankini says the woman stabbed three women and a man with a large blade about the size of a kitchen knife.

Los Angeles County fire Inspector Fredrick Stowers says at least one of the victims was in critical condition. He didn't know the conditions of the others.

MEXICO

5 killed on soccer field in Mexico; guns decorated with gold, diamonds seized in raid

MEXICO CITY — Gunmen drove up to a soccer field and shot five men to death as they played early Monday near the Pacific coast resort of Acapulco, police in southern Mexico said.

It was unclear why the five men were playing so late, but the region of Guerrero state is often so hot and humid by day that athletes wait until night to compete. Many people also work unusual hours in the local tourist industry.

The men were playing in the hamlet of Xaltianguis, on the northern outskirts of Acapulco, when gunmen in three vehicles pulled up beside the field and opened fire.

Two of the dead were identified as local men aged 25 and 34; the other three victims had not been identified because relatives quickly took the bodies away.

Nor was there any immediate information on a possible motive for the attack. However, the area around Acapulco has been plagued in recent months by a bloody turf war between rival factions of the Beltran Leyva drug cartel.

WASHINGTON

Business travelers hold key for success of the new United after $3B Continental deal

United CEO Glenn Tilton and Continental CEO Jeffery Smisek announced Monday that the nation's third- and fourth-largest airlines will consolidate into the world's biggest in hopes of drawing more business travelers who will pay top dollar for last-minute tickets. It's a stock swap deal in which United acquires Continental, and the new airline is to be called United.

The two airlines have been losing tons of money, first from high fuel prices, then the recession. Now they say their combined network of flights across the U.S. and around the world will attract enough corporate travelers to boost revenue by up to $900 million a year.

"The only people happier than Jeff and I today is our corporate sales team," Tilton said.

Henry Harteveltd, a travel-industry analyst for Forrester Research, said U.S. leisure fares probably won't change much because Continental and United routes overlap heavily with low-fare carriers such as Southwest. They compete with discount carriers on 92 percent of the 50 biggest routes they serve, Harteveltd said.

VIRGINIA

Men's lacrosse player charged in slaying of women's lacrosse athlete at same school

CHARLOTTESVILLE — A senior on the Virginia men's lacrosse team was charged Monday with the slaying of a fellow student on the women's team, stunning students at the picturesque campus.

George Huguely, 22, of Chevy Chase, Md., was charged with first-degree murder in the death of 22-year-old Yeardley Love, also a senior, of Cockeysville, Md., Charlottesville Police Chief Timothy Longo said.

Longo said Love's roommate called police around 2:15 a.m. concerned that Love may have had an alcohol overdose, but police found her dead with obvious physical injuries.

"It was quickly apparent to them that this young lady was the victim of something far worse," Longo said.

The police chief said that Huguely and Love were in relationship at some point and that Huguely quickly became the focus. Longo would not detail the extent of Love's injuries, but said there did not appear to be any weapons used in the slaying.

N. Korea's Kim to meet Chinese leaders

By Hyung-Jin Kim
Associated Press writer

SEOUL, South Korea — Reclusive North Korean leader Kim Jong Il is expected to meet top Beijing officials Tuesday, a day after he arrived in China for his first journey abroad in years, reports said.

Kim's trip comes amid mounting tension on the divided Korean peninsula over speculation his impoverished communist regime may have torpedoed a South Korean warship.

China's leadership has also been trying — so far unsuccessfully — to persuade North Korea's absolute ruler to come back to the negotiating table in talks to end its nuclear weapons program.

A luxury 17-car train carrying Kim pulled into the Chinese border town of Dandong on Monday morning, according to South Korean and Japanese media reports. Kim then headed to the Chinese port city of Dalian aboard a passenger vehicle and is believed to have spent the night there, they said.

Photos and TV footage taken in the Chinese port city of Dalian showed a man in sunglasses who appeared to be Kim getting into a car, surrounded by security personnel. Major Japanese TV networks showed videos of a man who appeared to be Kim at a hotel in Dalian. Some of the footage showed the man dragging his left leg while walking.

In Dalian, Kim reportedly toured an automobile-manufacturing factory, a shipbuilding yard and port facilities and is believed to have met Vice Premier Li Keqiang at a banquet Monday night. He is expected to travel on to Beijing aboard his train for talks with top Chinese leaders including President Hu Jintao as early as Tuesday night, Seoul's mass-circulation Chosun Ilbo newspaper

Chinese President Hu Jintao, right, shakes hands with North Korean leader Kim Jong Il at Beijing's Great Hall of the People in January 2006. A news report said Kim's personal train has crossed the border into China early Monday, indicating that he may have begun a much-sSpeculated trip there.

reported citing an unidentified diplomatic source in Beijing.

The Dong-a Ilbo newspaper in Seoul carried a similar report. YTN television network, however, said Chinese officials may visit Dalian to meet Kim because a 12-hour railroad journey from Dalian to Beijing could be a burden for Kim who suffered a reported stroke in 2008.

Kim's visit, if confirmed, comes at an awkward time for Beijing. The Chinese leadership has been trying to get Kim to agree to return to six-nation nuclear disarmament talks stalled now for a year, and believed that it had won the North Korean dictator's assent last October.

Since then, however, prospects for negotiations have dimmed. Pyongyang has been unwilling to comply with requests from the U.S. to resume the talks, and tensions have risen between North Korea and South Korea, partly over the mysterious ship sinking in late March in which 46 sailors were killed.

Rumors of a Kim trip, the first since he traveled to China in 2006 and the only the fifth since he took over power from his father in 1994, have circulated for months since Chinese President Hu invited Kim for a visit to mark the 60th anniversary of diplomatic ties between the allies.

China, which backed North Korea with troops during the 1950-53 Korean War, is North Korea's last major ally and biggest provider of aid, and is widely seen as the country with the most clout with Pyongyang.

Kim's special armored train arrived to a phalanx of soldiers and police in the Chinese border town of Dandong, South Korean and Japanese media reported. Kim is known to shun air travel.

Japan's Kyodo News agency, citing unidentified sources knowledgeable about China-North Korea relations, also said Kim was seen at Dalian's five-star Furama Hotel and published photos that appeared to be Kim.

A switchboard operator at the hotel, where the presidential suite runs more than $2,100 a night, told The Associated Press that security had been tightened but would not say whether Kim was expected.

There was no mention of the Kim trip to China in North Korean state media, which typically reports on his journeys after he returns home. Chinese and South Korean officials could not confirm Kim's reported trip.

The timing of the visit comes as a U.N. conference opened this week to review the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty and explore ways to strengthen its controls on the spread of nuclear materials. China, a nuclear power, is a backer of the treaty, but is expected to come under pressure to get North Korea to comply.

Judge: Militia members can leave jail until trial

By Ed White
Associated Press writer

DETROIT — Nine members of a Michigan militia will be released from jail pending trial after a federal judge on Monday harshly criticized the government's claim they had conspired to overthrow the U.S. government.

The decision is a significant defeat for federal authorities, who spoke in tough and triumphant terms after arresting members of a southern Michigan group called the Hutaree in March and charging them with conspiracy to commit sedition and attempted use of weapons of mass destruction.

The government "need not wait until people are killed before it arrests conspirators," U.S. District Judge Victoria Roberts said. "But the defendants are also correct: Their right to engage in hate-filled, venomous speech is a right that deserves First Amendment protection."

While Roberts ruled only whether to keep the eight men and one woman in jail until trial, her decision — reached after nearly 10 hours of hearings and detailed in 36 pages — offers an early look at her thoughts on the strength of the government's case.

In court papers and testimony before Roberts, prosecutors and an FBI agent claimed the Hutaree are violent, anti-government zealots who plotted to kill police officers in an effort to spark an uprising that would take down the federal government. Instead, the judge said the rambling, scornful recorded conversations offered as evidence didn't prove the group poses an imminent threat.

"Discussions about killing local law enforcement officers — and even discussions about killing members of the judicial branch of government — do not translate to conspiring to overthrow, or levy war against, the United States government," Roberts said.

She said the nine defendants in custody can be released until trial under strict conditions, including electronic monitoring. They won't actually be freed until they return to court for paperwork and other processing Tuesday.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Ronald Waterstreet asked the judge late Monday to freeze the release until the U.S. Justice Department could be consulted about an appeal, citing the fatal shooting Monday of a Detroit police officer in a drug house. That slaying had no connection to the Hutaree, but prosecutors have said the militia's plans included killing a police officer and then bombing the funeral to increase the death toll.

Defense attorney William Swor, who represents militia leader David Stone, called Waterstreet's argument "outrageous."

Observers cautioned that U.S. Attorney Barbara McQuade and her team should be worried about Roberts' assessment of their case, rather than her decision to release the defendants pending trial.

"The feds are in big trouble," said Lloyd Meyer of Chicago, a former terrorism prosecutor who won decades-long prison sentences against violent militia members in western and northern Michigan. "If they can't persuade the judge by clear and convincing evidence that the defendants are dangerous, how can they convince 12 jurors beyond a reasonable doubt? Her ruling looks like the feds are prosecuting U.S. citizens for jibber-jabber."

The group, based in Lenawee County near the Michigan-Ohio border, is led by Stone, 44, of Clayton, Mich. The other defendants include his wife, Tina Stone and two sons, David Stone Jr. and Joshua Stone.

During two days of hearings before Roberts last week, prosecutors tried to show how dangerous they perceived the Hutaree militia to be. The evidence included a recording made by an undercover agent of David Stone and others talking about killing police.

In a separate talk inside a van on a trip to Kentucky, the elder Stone was recorded saying "it's time to strike and take our nation back so that we may be free again from tyranny."

But no specific names or dates were disclosed, and some conversations were sprinkled with laughs and a mix of subjects, including strippers and drawing Hitler mustaches on photos of state troopers.

The judge wasn't impressed: "This so-called speech — never delivered outside the van — speaks of reclaiming America, not overthrowing the United States government," Roberts said.

Prosecutors were stung when an FBI agent who testified at the demand of defense lawyers said she couldn't reveal much because she hadn't lately reviewed investigative reports.

Roberts said Monday that prosecutors failed to rebut the defendants' position that the Hutaree's "live-fire training" amounted to shooting at dirt mounds on private property twice a year. With just a few exceptions, all weapons and ammunition seized by agents were legal, the judge said.

"Her opinion is a shot across the bow," said Alan Gershel, former head of the criminal division in the U.S. attorney's office in Detroit who now teaches at Thomas M. Cooley Law School in suburban Detroit. "It's fair to say this should cause the government some concern, but I don't think it's an indication the case is in dire straits."

Robert Lloyd ‘Bob’ Tanner

JEROME — Robert Lloyd “Bob” Tanner, 70, of Jerome, passed away peacefully in his sleep at home on May 1, 2010, after a brief struggle with cancer. He was born Oct. 16, 1939, in Burley, Idaho, the son of Lloyd Tanner and Helen Stanger Tanner. Bob spent his younger years in Oakley and Burley and later attended high school in Salt Lake City. He married Neva Turner on Aug. 13, 1960. Bob worked for the Twin Falls Water Department for 30 years. He was a gentle man who was kind to all he knew. He had a great love of the outdoors and his family. He will be greatly missed. Bob is survived by his wife, Neva Tanner of Jerome; their son, John (Naomi) Tanner of Elko; three grandchildren; two brothers; and one sister. He was preceded in death by his parents; his son, Tracy; and two brothers. A funeral service will be conducted at 7 p.m. Friday, May 7, 2010, at Farnsworth Mortuary Chapel, 1343 S. Lincoln St. in Jerome, with Bishop Rick Geist officiating. A visitation will begin at 6 p.m. A brief service prior to the interment will be held at 2 p.m. Saturday, May 8, at the Redwood Memorial Estates Cemetery, 6500 S. Redwood Road in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Monte Blaine Bowcut

BURLEY — Monte Blaine Bowcut, 76, of Burley, passed away Sunday, May 2, 2010. He was born April 26, 1934, in Burley, Idaho. Blaine was a lifelong resident of Burley. He was a painter for Lockwood Manufacturing and a driver for various farmers in the community. He was a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Blaine loved gardening and keeping a great yard. Blaine is survived by his children, Cindy Lou Woodley of Silverton, Ore., Kathleen Joyce Roberts (Harold B. Roberts Jr.) of Rigby, Idaho, Carol Ann (Arnold) Jensen of Ashton, Idaho; four grandchildren; six great-grandchildren; his brothers, Leslie Keith (Dorothy Miller) of Alpine, Wyo., Noel Brent (Lois Scoville) of Burley, Idaho; and Jerry Max (Helen Gardner) of Burley. Blaine was preceded in death by his parents, Leslie Peter and Fern Mitton Bowcut; and one grandson: Andrew Blaine Roberts. A funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Friday at Hansen-Payne Chapel, 321 E. Main St. in Burley, with Bishop Larry Kloefer officiating. Burial will take place at the Oakley Cemetery. A visitation will be held one hour prior to the service. Blaine’s family would like to thank Parke View and Highland Estates for the care they gave him.

Bresha Anjanique Lohnes

LUBBOCK, Texas — Bresha Anjanique Lohnes, 14, of Lubbock, Texas, passed away Friday, April 30, 2010, at her home in the loving arms of her mother. She was born Nov. 28, 1995, in Pocatello, Idaho, to Brent and Kolene (Murdock) Lohnes. She lived in Soda Springs, Idaho, until moving to Casper, Wyo., with her family in 2002, and later to Lubbock, Texas, in 2007. Anjanique means “Gift from God,” and she lived up to her name. Bresha touched the lives of all those around her with her special ability to get into their hearts. Even though her life was too short, her gift to us will be everlasting. Bresha is survived by her parents, Brent and Kolene Lohnes of Lubbock, Texas; two sisters, Hailey and Kamie; two brothers, Gavyn and Robert Kade; grandparents, Robert and Linda Murdock of Rupert, Idaho, and Floyd and Charlene Gambrel of Eden, Idaho; and countless loving aunts, uncles and cousins. She is preceded in death by her grandfather, Edsel Lohnes; an uncle, Mat Lohnes; and cousin, Jory Lohnes. We will all miss our “Gift from God,” but we will never forget the lessons of courage, strength, patience and endurance which she has taught us. The funeral will be held 11 a.m. Thursday, May 6, at the Rupert LDS 1st Ward Chapel, 806 G St. A viewing for family and friends will be from 6 to 8 p.m. Wednesday, May 5, at Hansen Mortuary, 710 Sixth St. in Rupert, and from 9 to 10:45 a.m. Thursday at the church. A private family burial will be held Friday at Fish Haven, Idaho. Memorials may be made to a fund set up in Bresha’s name at any Wells Fargo Bank.

Garrell Sanders

OAKLEY — Garrell Nancy Sanders (Granny Sanders), age 75, of Oakley, passed away Sunday, May 2, 2010, at St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center in Twin Falls. She was born March 9, 1935, at home in Dunean, Greenville County, S.C., the daughter of Lonnie and Ruth (Godfrey) Riddle. She married Harley W. Sanders on April 26, 1954, in Greenville, S.C. They lived in South Carolina, Arizona, California, Utah and Wyoming prior to moving to Oakley, where they have resided for the past 30 years. Together, they raised five daughters, Garrell Phyllis, Jo Louise, Peggy Ruth, Marva Nancy and Marsha Elaine. They are the grandparents of 18 grandchildren and 27 great-grandchildren. Her husband always said, “You could take the girl out of the mill village, but you couldn’t take the mill village out of the girl.” Garrell was preceded in death by her parents, one brother, two granddaughters and one great-grandson. The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, May 7, at the Oakley LDS Stake Center, 355 N. Center Ave., with Bishop Douglas K. Cranney officiating. Burial will be in the Oakley Cemetery. Friends may call from 6 until 8 p.m. Thursday, May 6, at the Rasmussen Funeral Home, 1350 E. 16th St. in Burley, and from 10 until 10:45 a.m. Friday at the church.

Mary Jane Mosqueda

Mary Jane Mosqueda, 65, of Twin Falls, Idaho, died Sunday, May 2, 2010, at her home in the presence of her loving family. Mary Jane was born to Sirildo and Guadalupe Castillo in Clovis, N.M., on Feb. 23, 1945. She helped her family by working and helping with her younger siblings. Mary Jane married Richard Araiza in 1962. Together they worked, lived and had eight children. Mary Jane and Richard later divorced. Richard passed away July 21, 2003. On April 2, 1996, she married Felipe Mosqueda. Mary Jane and Felipe helped raise grandsons, Rodney, Marky, Manual, Carlos; and a great-grandson, her “Little Angel.” She loved fishing, camping and the mountain views of Idaho. She also enjoyed spending time with family and friends. Survivors include her husband, Felipe Mosqueda of Idaho; sons, Richard Araiza of Idaho, Rodney Araiza of Florida and Roy Araiza of Idaho; daughters, Reinald Araiza of Idaho, Rose Marry Sepulveda of Texas and Randi Araiza of Idaho; siblings, Benito Castillo (Sherry) of Oregon, Ruben Castillo

(Elfida) of California, Tony Castillo (Caroline) of Oregon, Bill Castillo (Rose) of California, Elida Nuncio of Michigan, Margie Aguillo (Pete) of Nebraska, Yolanda Crespo (Kurt) of North Dakota, Rosa Carmen of California, and Delores Bond of Idaho; sister-in-law, Mary Castillo of Texas; and numerous nieces and nephews. She is also survived by grandchildren and great-grandchildren that she loved dearly. Mary Jane also loved and is survived by, her best friend of 35 years, Mary Garcia, and all the kids she adopted in her heart who called her Grandma. She was preceded in death by her father, Sirildo Castillo; mother, Guadalupe Castillo; and brother, Gilbert Castillo; son, Robert Araiza and daughter, Rebecca Ariaza. A celebration of life will be held at Because of Jesus Ministries, 450 3rd Ave West, Twin Falls, Idaho on May 4, 2010 at 1:00pm. Mary Jane requested to be cremated and laid to rest with her mother in Gooding, Idaho. Burial will take place at a later date. Cremation is under the direction of Serenity Funeral Chapel, Twin Falls.

Redgrave, 67, dies; ‘Georgy Girl’ star was part of British acting dynasty

By Adam Bernstein
The Washington Post

Lynn Redgrave, an actress who excelled in unglamorous screen roles, notably in “Georgy Girl” (1966) as an ugly duckling in swinging London, and then alternated between supporting roles and a long engagement as spokeswoman for Weight Watchers, died Sunday at her home in Kent, Conn. She was 67. No cause of death was reported, but Redgrave had been treated for breast cancer in recent years. She explored her struggles with cancer and bulimia in books and one-woman shows, which also touched on her place in one of Britain’s greatest theatrical dynasties. Redgrave was the youngest child of actors Michael Redgrave and Rachel Kempson and the sibling of actress Vanessa Redgrave and actor Corin Redgrave, who died April 6 at 70. Corin’s daughter Jemma became an actress, as did Vanessa Redgrave’s daughters Joely Richardson and Natasha Richardson, who died last year at 45 from injuries in a skiing accident. Unlike her siblings, Lynn Redgrave said she did not plan on a career in the arts. She entered the family business only after her interest in horse jumping proved unrealistic. Under the tutelage of her brother-in-law, celebrated director Tony Richardson, Redgrave made a memorable film debut as a barmaid who screams “Rape!” in “Tom Jones” (1963) before moving on to larger parts on stage and screen. Impressed by her performance in “Tom Jones,” Laurence Olivier hired Redgrave for his National Theatre Company and cast her in works by Shakespeare and Bertolt Brecht. She displayed a talent for light comedy, reportedly stealing the show as a less-than-erudite flapper in Noel Coward’s “Hay Fever,” while also taking screen roles that elevated her public recognition. In “Girl With Green Eyes” (1964), Redgrave was the slang-spewing, man-eating roommate of a country girl played by Rita Tushingham. Two years later, Redgrave gained 18 pounds for the starring role in “Georgy Girl,” in which she was cast as a frumpy, good-hearted soul who finds love with her father’s boss, played by James Mason.

Repeal 17th Amendment? You’ve gotta be kidding

What’s the most crackbrained idea of the 2010 political season? That’s easy: Texas Congressman Louie Gohmert’s campaign to repeal the Seventeenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. And remarkably, the two leading Republican candidates in Idaho’s 1st Congressional District — Vaughn Ward and Raul Labrador — have embraced the idea.

If the Seventeenth Amendment doesn’t ring a bell for Idahoans, it should. U.S. Sen. William Borah, who represented the state on Capitol Hill from 1907 to 1940, was one of its most forceful advocates.

The amendment says voters get to decide who represents them in the Senate. Before its ratification in 1913, legislatures elected senators.

As you can imagine, the old system reeked of dealmaking, bribery and corruption.

The poster boy for reform was Montana’s William Clark, a copper-mining magnate who bought a Senate seat in 1899 by paying $2,500 to each legislator to vote for him. So egregious was the scheme that the Senate refused to seat him.

Here’s what Mark Twain had to say about Clark:

“He is as rotten a human being as can be found anywhere under the flag; he is a shame to the American nation, and no one has helped to send him to the Senate who did not know that his proper place was the penitentiary, with a ball and chain on his legs.”

No matter. Gohmert says the Seventeenth Amendment shifted too much power from the states to the federal government. On public television’s “Idaho Reports” last week, Ward and Labrador agreed.

Of course, the real reason Gohmert, Ward and Labrador want the change is that they think it would result in more Republican senators.

The Seventeenth Amendment was one of the critical reforms of the Progressive Era, along with enfranchising women; empowering voters with the direct primary election, initiative, referendum and recall, and establishing antitrust laws.

Americans — and Idahoans — aren’t going to give up electing their own senators, despite the efforts of the best minds of the 19th century.

And Ward and Labrador are flat wrong for suggesting they should.

Obama’s not happy, so nobody’s happy

Here’s a theory about why President Obama is having a tough political time right now: He doesn’t seem all that happy being president. I know, it’s the world’s hardest job, and between war and the world economy collapsing, he didn’t have the first year he might have wished for. And, yes, he’s damned either way: With thousands of Americans risking their lives overseas and millions losing their jobs at home, we’d slam him if he acted carefree.

Fred Hiatt

Still, I think Americans want a president who seems, despite everything, to relish the challenge. They don’t want to have to feel grateful to him for taking on the burden.

I started thinking about this a few weeks ago when Obama confidant David Axelrod, noting that the president always makes time for his daughters’ recitals and soccer games, told The New York Times, “I think that’s part of how he sustains himself through all this.”

Really? Is the presidency something to sustain yourself through?

He did ask for this job; we didn’t make him take it. And so it seems fair to ask: What part of it does he enjoy? Formulating rational solutions to complex problems, for sure.

But schmoozing with foreign leaders, like President George H.W. Bush? Obama’s relations with just about every counterpart are prickly.

How about horse-trading

“Americans might find it easier to root for or with Obama if he’d show us, despite everything, that he’s happy we hired him.”

or arm-twisting, like President Lyndon Johnson? George Will recently cited a recent Obama statement on the health-care bill (“Unfortunately, what we end up having to do is to do a lot of negotiations with a lot of different people”) to point out that Obama views such politics with a certain disdain.

Putting his feet up on his desk after a long day and chewing over events with aides, like Bill Clinton? If insider accounts are to be believed, Obama would rather preside briskly over the meeting and then go up to the family quarters or out for some basketball.

Does he recharge by heading back to the campaign trail, rolling up his sleeves and wading into the crowd? Obama will do that if he has to, to save his health-care bill. But he can’t persuade us he gets much of a kick out of it.

We understand that, even without war and recession, it wouldn’t be easy. His predecessor partied and stuck him with the tab. The Republicans are reliably obstructionist; his Democrats reliably unreliable. The media are carping, superficial and relentless. He is a prisoner of the Secret Service.

And yet. It’s hard to remember so far back, but the administration didn’t come to town with the sense of weariness and duty that it now projects. Unlike the Bush crowd, which never stopped kvetching about having to leave Texas, the Obamas and their circle spoke about the honor of service and the excitement of being in the nation’s capital.

A year later, here’s how they came across to People magazine:

“It was their first interview of the New Year on Jan. 8 in the rose-colored library on the ground floor of the White House. President Obama spoke in such a hush about the loneliness of his decisions on war and terrorism that one could hear between his words the tick of an old lighthouse clock across the room.”

Do Americans really want to hear the tick of the old lighthouse clock? Or would they prefer the good cheer that we associate with FDR or JFK, the jauntiness with which they took over the White House and made it theirs?

Less lugubriousness wouldn’t necessarily buy him a health care bill. But in the long run, Americans might find it easier to root for or with Obama if he’d show us, despite everything, that he’s happy we hired him.

A hot date beats a bigger bonus any day

Money buys you a reasonable amount of happiness, but maybe not as much as sex.

Sure, those with higher incomes are healthier and happier than those with lower incomes. But for the typical individual, a doubling of salary makes a lot less difference than life events like marriage or unemployment. A hot date is likely to make you happier than a few thousand dollars extra in bonus.

A few years ago, my colleague Andrew Oswald and I found that to “compensate” for the loss in happiness of a major life event such as being widowed or a marital separation, it would be necessary to provide the average individual with $100,000 in extra income a year, or more than double their incomes.

We can also use these data to calculate the money value of sex. On average, the amount of happiness bought by going from sex less than once a month to at least once a month is roughly equivalent to about $40,000 of annual income.

In the most recent survey

David G. Blanchflower

data from the General Social Survey, conducted in 2008 by the National Opinion Research Center in Chicago, the typical adult American reported having sexual intercourse two to three times a month (among people under 40 years of age, the median amount of sex is once a week).

Even with the iPad, the BlackBerry and portable GPS devices that tell you how long your shot is to the flag, Americans are no happier today than they were in the 1970s. We know this from the answers to questions posed in the General Social Survey.

Respondents are asked “taken all together, how would you say things are these days — would you say that you are very happy, pretty happy or not too happy?”

In 1972, 30 percent of respondents said they were “very happy.” When the question was asked in the 2008 survey, 30 percent of respondents also said they were “very happy.”

The obvious concern is that such responses tell you little or nothing about an individual’s level of well-being. It does seem, though, that they do say something. There is a large body of evidence now that shows these reports are strongly correlated with objective characteristics such as unemployment and ill health, and assessments of the person’s happiness by friends, family members and spouses.

Happy people have a lower risk of coronary heart disease and lower blood pressure; they even heal faster from injuries. Happy people are different from less happy people on skin-resistance measures of response to stress and electroencephalogram measures of prefrontal brain activity.

Interestingly, in these surveys women report having higher levels of happiness than men, but the gap has narrowed over time. Women’s happiness has fallen while men’s has barely changed. A similar story is found in the health data where women are now more subject to stress-related illnesses related to work than they were in the past. Hence, the feminist movement has made women more equal, but less happy.

Harvard University’s Erzo Luttmer has shown an increase of 10 percent, say, in neighbors’ earnings, or a 10 percent decrease in one’s own income, have roughly the same negative effect on well-being. My happiness rises if I get a new BMW but doesn’t if my neighbors also get one. Here, neighborhood should be thought of broadly as any relevant comparator group, including colleagues and friends.

A couple of hot dates will probably do more for your sense of well-being than a higher bonus. Money isn’t everything. Go and raise your happiness. Do it for the good of the country.

David G. Blanchflower is professor of economics at Dartmouth College and the University of Stirling.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Doonesbury

Mallard Fillmore

By Bruce Tinsley

Is it immigration reform – or just plain old politics?

WASHINGTON – Lots of people cheered last week when it was reported that Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi agreed to steer comprehensive immigration reform through Congress by year’s end. This is a bold, exciting plan – and if it works, it could be a game-changer.

But that’s only if it leads to a genuine, bipartisan push for an overhaul. A symbolic, partisan effort – such as introducing a bill that cannot pass – would be worse than no action at all and could set the cause back for years.

Congress has tried and failed to pass immigration reform twice in the past four years. A failure this summer would make it much harder for lawmakers to try again soon. Reformers have only one more shot before 2012 – an opportunity they must not waste.

President Obama is trying to jump-start the debate, calling several Republican senators last week to gauge their interest in immigration. But the odds against getting a bill through Congress this year are steep.

Even with Democratic majorities in both houses, it’s going to take both Democrats and Republicans to pass reform: Many moderate Democrats are just as likely as Republicans to vote no. Voters across the country are angry at incumbents. Unemployment is still near 10 percent. And after the ordeal of health care, few lawmakers in either party are in the mood to take another controversial vote.

Neither Reid nor Pelosi has commented on the chances of success. But since Reid declared he would move a bill (he made the surprise announcement this month at a largely Latino rally in Nevada, where Latinos make up 15 percent of the vote), many Democrats have jumped in to speak for him.

These supporters fall into two camps. Some, including leaders of the movement for immigrant rights, argue that forcing consideration of a bill this year would create momentum and draw Republicans into the debate – and that some GOP lawmakers, fearful of alienating Latino voters, will ultimately support reform. As this group sees it, Reid is playing hardball with Republicans, but his ultimate goal is passing a bipartisan bill.

A second group of Democrats has offered a strikingly different, more cynical calculus.

Listen to Markos Moulitsas of the Daily Kos: “Reid should push for a vote whether he has the 60 (votes) or not. While the ultimate goal is reform, even a losing vote would show Latinos where the opposition is coming from and help motivate them for the November elections.”

An unnamed Democratic

Congress has tried and failed to pass immigration reform twice in the past four years.

Senate aide spoke even more bluntly to Roll Call last week: “An all-Democratic bill works better ... because the Tea Party and right-wing will react strongly and permanently alienate Latinos.”

In other words, some Democrats don’t particularly care if no Republicans vote for reform – if anything, they welcome the opportunity to show up the GOP.

But that would do nothing to fix the country’s broken immigration system. It would not bring a single undocumented immigrant out of the shadows. It would not create a workable, legal immigration system to serve U.S. interests during the economic recovery and beyond. The way some activists see things, Democrats don’t need to deliver reform to please Latinos, the fastest-growing voting bloc in the country. They just need to make Republicans look bad.

There is nothing new about this kind of political thinking. Most lawmakers fall into one of two categories: those who want to solve problems and those whose main concern is scoring political points. When the second group wins, pressing problems become perennial wedge issues – issues we then give up on solving because they’re so potent on Election Day.

If it is difficult to move on immigration reform now, isn’t the climate likely to be worse in 2011? Many reformers think so. No one who believes we need to fix immigration wants to wait. And Republicans will surely gain seats in November.

But contrary to conventional wisdom, Republican gains could actually create incentives for bipartisanship on both sides of the aisle – on immigration and other issues. By early 2011, the economy would be growing and unemployment ebbing. Obama would be under intense pressure to deliver for Latino voters. And many Republicans, too, would want to fix the system and get immigration behind them before a tumultuous presidential election year.

The mood in Washington is volatile, and Congress may well take up immigration this year. But a partisan push that failed, or poisoned the well for the future, would ultimately be far worse than no push at all.

Tamar Jacoby is president of ImmigrationWorks USA, a national federation of employers advocating immigration reform. She wrote this commentary for The Washington Post.

Cleaner air could speed global warming

The world is running short on air pollution, and if we continue to cut back on smoke pouring forth from industrial smokestacks, the increase in global warming could be profound.

Cleaner air, one of the signature achievements of the U.S. environmental movement, is certainly worth celebrating. Scientists estimate that the U.S. Clean Air Act has cut a major air pollutant called sulfate aerosols, for example, by 30 percent to 50 percent since the 1980s, helping greatly reduce cases of asthma and other respiratory problems.

But even as industrialized and developing nations alike steadily reduce aerosol pollution – caused primarily by burning coal – climate scientists are beginning to understand just how much these tiny particles have helped keep the planet cool. A silent benefit of sulfates, in fact, is that they’ve been helpfully blocking sunlight from striking the Earth for many decades, by brightening clouds and expanding their coverage. Emerging science suggests that their underappreciated impact has been incredible.

Researchers believe greenhouse gases such as carbon dioxide have committed the Earth to an eventual warming of roughly 4 degrees Fahrenheit, a quarter of which the planet has already experienced. Thanks to cooling by aerosols starting in the 1940s, however, the planet has only felt a portion of that greenhouse warming. In the 1980s, sulfate pollution dropped as Western nations enhanced pollution controls, and as a result, global warming accelerated.

There’s hot debate over the size of what amounts to a cooling mask, but there’s no question that it will diminish as industries continue to clean traditional pollutants from their smokestacks. Unlike carbon dioxide, which persists in the atmosphere for centuries, aerosols last for a week at most in the air. So cutting them would probably accelerate global warming rapidly.

In a recent paper in the journal Climate Dynamics, modelers forecast what would happen if nations instituted all existing pollution controls on industrial sources and vehicles by 2030. They found the current rate of warming – roughly 0.4 degrees Fahrenheit per decade – doubled worldwide, and nearly tripled in North America.

Despite intransigence on carbon emissions, even China is taking aggressive steps to cut sulfate pollution, and temperatures have risen as a result.

But surely the answer

can’t be to slow our drive to clean our air. One way to buy time might be to tackle another air pollutant that warms the planet: soot. In 2008, scientists estimated that so-called black carbon, soot’s prime component, is responsible for 60 percent more global warming above that caused by greenhouse gases. Cleaner-burning diesel engines in the West and more efficient cookstoves in the developing world are the answer. But on both scores, “relatively little has been done to address the problem,” says the Boston-based Clean Air Task Force.

In the face of severe climate risks, credible scientists are beginning to study geo-engineering – tinkering with global systems to reduce warming directly. One scheme is to spew sulfates or other sun-blocking particles miles high in the stratosphere. If it worked, it would mimic the natural cooling effect of volcanoes, replacing the near-surface sulfate mask with a much higher one. But the possible side effects could be dire, including damage to the ozone layer. The potential geopolitical implications, like wars over the thermostat, could be devastating as well.

We might need geo-engineering to stave off the worst effects of the warming. But most climate scientists think we’re not there yet. And so the most important thing we can do now is to train our sights on both the unexpectedly helpful sulfates and the unexpectedly pernicious carbon. We can’t continue to only focus on traditional pollutants without reducing greenhouse emissions. We simply have to find a way to clean our air of both.

Eli Kintisch is the author of “Hack the Planet: Science’s Best Hope – or Worst Nightmare – for Averting Climate Catastrophe.” He wrote this commentary for the Los Angeles Times.

Want to work at home? Not so fast

A friend who writes a newspaper column asked a timely question to his online network of his fellow sufferers, including me.

He wanted to know whether, in this age of e-mails, the Internet, call forwarding and Skype video-conferencing, we preferred to work at home or in our downtown offices. I was relieved to discover that two-thirds agreed with me: The office is better.

I was relieved because I don’t want to fall behind the times. Of course, we were a pretty old-school group. I think almost all of us could remember typewriters.

And we were journalists, who work in a special kind of workplace. When we think of “the office” we think of newsrooms. Regardless of the city or town it serves, the newsroom traditionally offers a special menagerie of coworkers with quirks, talents, special skills and human failings far more interesting than anything that ever gets into print or on the air.

Generations of columnists have roamed the aisles between those desks, cheerfully cajoling their workmates and trolling for column ideas as gratefully as homeless drifters working their way along the cars at a stoplight with a Starbucks cups.

Clarence Page

But times are changing in workplaces of all sorts. The “virtual office” is in vogue. The industrial-age view that “presence equals productivity” is beginning to fade as employers, as well as workers, see advantages to home offices and other flexible work policies. Ellen Galinsky, president and a founder of the 21-year-old nonprofit Families and Work Institute, writes in her blog. The Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, Hurricane Katrina, the H1N1 threat and the recession have persuaded employers to see business advantages in home offices and other flexible work policies, including more “fully engaged employees.”

Galinsky joined other advocates at a White House conference on flexible work last week where President Obama and First Lady Michelle Obama spoke glowingly of working at home and other “virtual offices” to reduce business overhead costs, raise productivity, save jobs and improve family life. When you have the opportunity that this new age affords you to escape traditional brick-and-mortar spaces, say the Obamas, use it.

Good points all. Still, despite modern technical advantages, breaking out of the traditional office routine can require personal emotional adjustments. Working from home makes me, for example, feel oddly distanced from my coworkers, like a prisoner tapping codes on a wall to communicate with fellow inmates.

Editorial staffers at Inc. magazine report similar experiences in their current issue after spending the month of February working outside their plush New York City offices as an experiment in the future of work. In the first week, at least, the future didn’t look so good.

“(M)any of us were very nearly losing our minds,” senior writer Max Chafkin writes. “Some forgot to eat lunch; others ate way too much. Our feet were cold; our backs ached; and, in a few dire cases, our relationships suffered.”

Fortunately, the adjustment problem brought new opportunities, like mobility. After a few days of “feeling starved for human contact,” Chafkin writes, he began to spend more time in coffee shops and “another ridiculously underrated place to get work done: the public library.”

Indeed, the media guru Marshall McLuhan would smile at that. He used to say that every new technology eventually “reverses back” onto itself. How appropriate, then, that the new computer age leads us back to public libraries.

Investors take note: As independent bookstores, CD stores and – irony of ironies – computer stores disappear like mastodons from our cityscapes, the value of library-like alternatives to home and the traditional workplace may well increase, especially if they serve food, drinks and wireless Internet connections.

“Consider your culture,” Chafkin advised companies considering going virtual. Like the newsroom culture I appreciate, his editorial colleagues missed the “culture of collaboration” on which magazines and other trend-spotting media thrive.

“My job really became just about my job,” said a photo director. “I missed the distractions and surprises that my coworkers bring to the day.” I understand. Some of the best things about newspaper and editorial offices don’t sound very efficient, but somehow they work.

I’d like to ask my own colleagues what they think about that, but I’m working at home today.

Top scientists named to review U.N. climate panel

By Arthur Max
Associated Press writer

AMSTERDAM — A former Princeton University president was named Monday to head a prestigious 12-member group reviewing the work of the U.N. scientific panel on climate change, whose mistakes have undermined public confidence that global warming is happening.

The InterAcademy Council, an association of national science academies, said economist Harold T. Shapiro will chair the committee of top scientists from around the world.

U.N. Secretary General Ban Ki-moon assigned the task to the independent council after several errors were discovered in the voluminous 2007 report of the U.N.'s Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, which earned the panel a share of the Nobel Peace prize that year.

The mistakes were seized upon by skeptics who doubt the U.N. panel's conclusion that greenhouse gas emissions are causing the Earth's average temperatures to increase, and that humans are responsible.

The council, based in the Dutch capital, said the committee will review how the U.N. panel ensures the quality of the data from more than 2,000 scientists that feed into its authoritative reports, published every four or five years.

The review panel also will recommend how errors may be corrected after the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change's reports are released.

The mistakes in the latest report mainly came from the use of information from governments and advocacy groups, while most of the report relies on peer-reviewed scientific papers.

The most glaring errors came in a single entry saying Himalayan glaciers would disappear by 2035 — hundreds of years earlier than other information suggests. The chapter on Europe states 55 percent of the Netherlands is below sea level, when the true figure is about half that.

The discovery of the errors came a few months after e-mail exchanges between leading climate scientists were stolen and published. Skeptics said the e-mails showed climate scientists were suppressing evidence contradicting their global warming theories.

Shapiro, 74, an economist who writes on bioethics, was president of the University of Michigan for eight years before moving to the same job at Princeton in 1988. He served on scientific advisory committees under Presidents George H.W. Bush and Bill Clinton.

His panel includes leading scientists from South Africa, China, India, Japan, Brazil, Mexico, Britain, Germany, the Netherlands and Malaysia.

It will submit its findings and recommendations to the U.N. by Aug. 30.

Spectators look at downtown Nashville from the Shelby Street Pedestrian Bridge over the Cumberland River on Monday.

Nashville braces for more flooding as river swells

By Chris Talbott and Sheila Burke
Associated Press writers

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Nashville braced for more deaths Monday as the flooded Cumberland River continued to swell, sending muddy water rushing through neighborhoods and into parts of the historic heart of Music City after a destructive line of weekend storms killed 22 people in Tennessee, Mississippi and Kentucky.

The flash floods caught the city off-guard, and thousands of residents and tourists were forced to flee homes and hotels as the river rapidly spilled over its banks. Using motor boats, jet skis and canoes, authorities and volunteers rescued residents trapped in flooded homes on Monday, some which looked like islands surrounded by dark brown river water. Eleven of the 12 people killed in Tennessee drowned, including six in Nashville.

The downtown — home of a historic warehouse district that dates back to the 1800s and is now occupied by bars and restaurants — was nearly deserted after authorities evacuated the area. Floodwater spilled into some streets near the riverfront, and restaurants and bars in the warehouse district were closed.

Water seeped into a mechanical room in the basement of the Country Music Hall of Fame, though it was not immediately clear if there was any damage. Two blocks away, the historic Ryman Auditorium, longtime former home of the Grand Ole Opry, was in no immediate danger nor were many of the country music recording studios, located about a mile west of downtown.

On the east side of the river at LP Field, where the Tennessee Titans play, water covered the field and surrounding parking lot.

"It's shocking to see it this way, but it was an incredible storm," Mayor Karl Dean said as he surveyed the downtown flooding on Monday. The Cumberland River was expected to crest Monday night at about 12 feet above flood stage, and officials worried they may find more bodies in the rising floodwaters.

Thousands of people took refuge overnight in emergency shelters, including about 1,500 guests at the Gaylord Opryland Hotel who spent the night at a high school to escape the flooding.

River floods Nashville's Grand Ole Opry House

By Chris Talbott
Associated Press writer

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Country music landmark The Grand Ole Opry House has been flooded with several feet of water, forcing managers to seek alternate space for upcoming shows.

The Opry House is part of the large Gaylord Opryland Hotel complex in Nashville. They took on water Monday from the Cumberland River, which flooded due to heavy rains that have inundated parts of Tennessee.

The Grand Ole Opry has been held in the same space in east Nashville since 1974. The Opry puts on 150 shows a year, and the building hosts other concerts.

It's unclear how much water is in the Opry House but there is 10 feet of water in the nearby hotel.

The historic Ryman Auditorium, which is the longtime former home of the Grand Ole Opry located in downtown Nashville, was in no immediate danger of flooding.

NOTHING TO BE AFRAID OF?

Idaho's itsy-bitsy, (mostly) harmless spiders

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

They're in wood piles, mulch and bushes. They hide in the folds of your sheets and towels, or boldly strut across your ceilings. Their eight legs, jerky movements and tendency to pop up everywhere inspire fear in the hearts of southern Idahoans like Gloria Morales.

"I hate them," the Jerome woman said. "I get my son to squish every one I find."

But that fear is usually unwarranted, said Edward John Bechinski, professor of entomology at University of Idaho in Moscow. For the most part, that is.

Of the hundreds of spider species that make their homes in Idaho, only two pose potential harm to humans: the notorious black widows and hobo spiders. And all of them prey on smaller pests, like houseflies and aphids, that annoy homeowners and wreak havoc on gardens, making the creepy arachnids a useful ally.

Although 99.6 percent of North American spider species are venomous, most have fangs too weak to pierce human skin or, if they can bite, their venom isn't dangerous to people. And according to Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, there are no recorded deaths from spider bites in the state's history.

That's not to say Idaho's spider history is boring. In the late 1960s and early '70s, Northwest physicians reported injuries that were similar to brown recluse bites. Symptoms included necrotic lesions and systemic illness. The problem: Brown recluse spiders don't live in Idaho or any surrounding states. Idaho toxicologist and spider expert Darwin Vest was called to Twin Falls in 1974 to examine one of the mysterious bites and noted that some symptoms didn't line up with a brown recluse bite. Between then and 1982, he evaluated more than a dozen similar cases.

In the mid-1980s, he identified the Tegenaria agrestis as the culprit, and his sister and fellow researcher Rebecca Vest gave the spider its common name: the hobo spider. (Darwin Vest went missing from Idaho Falls in 1999, but his estate continues to operate his website, hobospider.org.)

Hobo spiders are small and brown, like lots of other species, and there is no way to tell if it's a hobo for sure without a microscope, Bechinski said. You can, however, rule out some suspects; any spider with striped legs is definitely not a hobo.

Hobo bites are almost painless at first, but produce a red area on the skin within 30 minutes. Within a day and a half, the bite blisters and scabs over, transforming into a lesion that can take weeks to heal. Other symptoms can include headache, nausea and weakness.

Female black widows are more easily identifiable with red hourglass shapes on their abdomens. Even so, some people still confuse them for other species, especially the immature widows that look like the venomous Australian redback spider. Males are slightly harder to identify; the small, tan spiders can look like other species.

The other spiders who inhabit your garden and cellar aren't dangerous and help control pest populations, but might look just as creepy. Species of wolf spiders, jumping spiders and tiny crab spiders all populate south-central Idaho.

Keeping that in mind might help skittish gardeners stay calm.

"Don't assume that every spider is a hobo spider," said U of I Twin Falls Extension educator and entomologist Eric Wenninger. "If you have spiders in your garden, that's a good thing."

Melissa Davlin may be reached at 735-3234 or melissa.davlin@lee.net.

AVOIDING THE BITE

Don't be scared of spiders, said University of Idaho entomologist Eric Wenninger, but exercise caution. Wear gloves when working in the yard to avoid bites from surprised spiders, and keep spider habitats away from the house. Shake out clothes and blankets that have been in storage, and look for places where spiders can enter your house. "The best thing you can do is just improve the weather stripping and just check any potential entry point around doors and windows, around the foundation," said Wenninger, who works in the university's Twin Falls County Extension office.

If you think you've been bitten, stay calm. Most bites will swell slightly but cause no adverse reactions, and many rashes that people think are spider bites aren't really caused by spiders at all. If you know you've been bitten by a black widow, or a bite causes respiratory problems or excessive swelling, go to an emergency room or contact a physician immediately. Not sure which spider has bitten you? If possible, collect the spider and bring it in to a U of I Extension office for identification, even if you crushed it. Because spider carcasses can degenerate quickly, preserve it with rubbing alcohol or vodka.

Know your spiders

Earlier this year, University of Idaho released "Homeowner Guide to Spiders around the home and yard." The booklet, authored by Edward John Bechinski, Dennis Schotzko and Craig R. Baird, contains a guide to common Idaho spiders, biology and behavior information, tips on how to identify spiders and more. The booklet is available for $5 or for download at uidaho.edu.

Jumping spider

Jumping spider species can be identified by their short, jerky jumps and eye arrangement — two large eyes point forward, and six small eyes line the upper edge of the face. The small arachnids don't spin webs and are active hunters. They identify prey by movement, slowly turn to face the object, and pounce.

Yellow sac spider

• Folding door spiders are Idaho's closest relatives to the tarantula. Their name comes from their habit of burrowing into soil and camouflaging their hideout with vegetation debris and soil. Vibrations from insects that pass let the folding door spiders know prey is nearby.

Yellow sac spider bites are more common than black widow and hobo bites, but are less dangerous. The bites sting, but the pain goes away quickly.

• Daddy longlegs are in the arachnid family, but aren't true spiders; spiders have two body sections, while daddy longlegs have just one. Urban legend says these leggy arachnids are the most poisonous spider known to man. That's false; they don't produce venom, and they don't even have fangs. (The myth may have originated from their doppelgangers, the cellar spiders, which do produce toxic venom but have fangs too weak to pierce human skin.)

Wolf spiders are "lie-and-wait" ambush hunters. Instead of letting their prey get tangled in their webs, they wait, motionless, for prey to pass by. The spiders are big, but harmless. The rare bite results in temporary pain.

Nautical motifs with a high-style edge

By Kim Cook
For The Associated Press

If "nautical motifs" have you thinking "kitsch," think again.

This trend's all about stylish accessories and contemporary graphics far removed from the whimsies of beachside souvenir shops. Adding a few nautical touches to even the most landlocked home can evoke a nice summery vibe.

The style in its bolder form is characterized by fresh primary hues like navy, red and yellow, the graphics of boat sails, and objects evocative of seaside life, such as ropes, floats, buoys or anchors. When it's successful, this decor has a slightly preppy freshness.

Wisteria.com has an array of pillows in bold red and blue graphics on crisp white. A reproduction set of painted oars would look interesting propped in a corner, hung on a wall or repurposed creatively. Pottery Barn's gone paddling, too — in various sizes, theirs come with a D-ring for hanging.

A $78 Williams-Sonoma wreath made out of seagrass, sand dollars, sea urchins and starfish.

At Land of Nod, find a jaunty banner of nautical flags, and a unique lamp made from a buoy; the shade features an Eastern seaboard depth chart. Telegraph dial and life preserver throw pillows are fun, inexpensive accessories.

Don't try this at home

When you should leave home-improvement projects to the experts

By Amy Hoak
MarketWatch

CHICAGO — Eager to save money, homeowners are more willing to get their hands dirty with home-improvement projects these days.

But the DIY route isn't always the safest or cheapest.

"Especially with money being so tight, it's totally understandable that people want to take on projects themselves that in other periods they would have hired someone to do," said Meri-K Appy, president of the Home Safety Council, a Washington nonprofit dedicated to preventing home-related injuries.

But how do you determine if a project entails more than you can realistically handle?

Most people tend to gauge the complexity of a project by doing research online, said Chris Murray, front-end insights manager for tool maker Black & Decker. Some do-it-yourself Web sites grade a project's difficulty.

You also should look at the tools that are required for the job. "If it says 'You need these tools,' do you know how to use them? If you don't, you have a challenge coming," Murray said.

If you're unsure about your ability to finish a project correctly, get an expert opinion before proceeding. Sometimes, you may end up spending more money to repair a bungled DIY job than if you had hired someone to do it from the start.

Here are a few occasions when you may want to consider turning to a pro:

If the costs of materials or tools are high

Sometimes the costs of materials and the expense associated with making a mistake are enough to make hiring an expert a good idea.

"For something like crown molding ... you need an expensive tool and the material itself is expensive," Black & Decker's Murray said. Mistakes on this project are also not always easy to correct, he said.

A kitchen cabinet can cost a couple of hundred dollars, and if you order incorrectly, there might be a restocking fee and special orders may be non-returnable, said Mike Albrecht, division director for Home Depot's installation business. Being off on measurements for granite countertops also can be a costly flub.

When safety is an issue

Tinkering with a home's electric system can be risky business, said Matt Knox, chief executive of DiggersList.com, a construction classifieds Web site. Not only could the do-it-yourselfer risk electrocution, but doing a job incorrectly could create a safety hazard within the home's structure.

A basic ceiling-fan installation is a popular do-it-yourself project. But even that, if done incorrectly, can have dangerous results. More than 19,700 people a year are injured by ceiling fans that are improperly mounted or incorrectly sized, according to Electrical Safety Foundation International, an organization that focuses on electrical safety in the home and the workplace.

Some other jobs that involve safety risks:

Extending a gas line. "Do not mess around with gas. ... If you're DIY, you probably don't know how to check for gas leaks," Knox said. A mistake there could lead to an explosion or carbon-monoxide poisoning.

Projects that involve heights. Carefully assess projects that require you to be high up, whether it's roofing or pruning trees, Appy said. "Do the cost/benefit analysis upfront and ask yourself, 'How well trained am I to do this, do I have the proper tools, what is my physical well being,'" she said.

Projects that require power tools. Obviously, big power tools, such as a circular saw, can lead to serious injury or even death if used improperly. But don't underestimate jobs that could cause an injury that might not be devastating, but would still slow you down, Appy said. "The nail gun that injures the hand you write with, it might not be something that seriously injures you," she said. "But it could be something that puts you out of commission for a couple of weeks."

When water is involved

Leaks and water damage can lead to more costly and complicated repairs. If left unfixed, they can lead to mold — which affects air quality and if found during an inspection can be a deal breaker on a home sale.

Water-related projects don't have to strictly involve your home's pipes. Putting in a skylight might seem like a do-it-yourself job you can handle. Do it incorrectly, however, and you could end up with a leaky roof, water damage and mold.

"If you're lucky and it leaks, you will see the leak," said Knox. If you're not lucky, leaking can start inside the ceiling and drip behind the walls, causing damage to drywall and wooden beams.

Knox said 90 percent of all construction-defect claims on jobs done by professionals are due to water intrusion, so "it escalates when you go to DIY."

If the project is too big

If you're planning on replacing all the windows in your home or remodeling your kitchen, think twice about how much of the project you want to take on yourself, Albrecht said. Often, you can leave the heavy lifting to the experts, and work on the finishing touches, such as painting and tiling backsplashes, he said.

In a bathroom, for example, you might be comfortable changing lighting fixtures and medicine cabinets, painting and retiling, Knox said.

"If you mess up, there's not injury or damage," he said. "If it can do damage you can't see, have someone else do that part."

While putting in hardwood or laminate flooring can be a good do-it-yourself project, its complexity will largely be determined by its scale: Installing laminate flooring in a small, square bedroom is easy for homeowners to do on their own, Albrecht said. But doing a larger-scale flooring project — involving a transition between rooms or perhaps around a kitchen island — is where people get tripped up.

Degrease a gas-grill lid before trying to repaint

By Al Heavens
The Philadelphia Inquirer

Q: We have a permanently installed gas grill that is about 30 years old. It does not get a lot of use. For a number of years, the interior paint on the lid has had flakes and chips. I scrape it, use a wire brush and steel wool to clean it, and rinse it with water. After a few days of drying, I spray it with black heat-resistant paint.

It looks good for a year or so, then the flaking starts again.

Is there something you can recommend for a cleaner (for the smoke and grease) or primer, or can you tell me what I might be doing wrong so that my attempts at refurbishment will last longer?

A: Have you used a degreaser on the interior to prep for painting? Sometimes a buildup of grease will prevent paint from adhering to the interior surface of a grill. Rinsing with water isn't a good substitute.

Some experts recommend several thin coats of heat-resistant paint, with proper drying and light sanding between coats, rather than one thick coat for a longer-lasting finish.

Once you finish painting and the final coat is dry, the experts suggest turning up the heat full blast to cure the new coating.

They also suggest a quick touch-up coat periodically, perhaps once a year, whether the grill needs it or not.

Thirty years is a long time for anything to remain fresh and good-looking — people as well as gas grills. The fact that you've kept it running this long is a tribute to your care and diligence.

Some practical advice on cleaning

By Jura Koncius
The Washington Post

Check out the practical advice in these four engaging books on housekeeping.

"Home Comforts: The Art & Science of Keeping House" by Cheryl Mendelson (Scribner, $19.95 in paperback). This scholarly tome originally published in 1999 has been labeled the modern bible of cleaning. At 896 pages it is comprehensive and thorough, providing the most amazing details of cleaning minutiae, such as how to touch up cigarette burns on your floors and how to maneuver the many attachments your vacuum is sold with. But it can be daunting: Mendelson thinks you should wash your combs and brushes every week.

"Martha Stewart's Homekeeping Handbook" by Martha Stewart (Clarkson Potter, $45). This is Stewart's encyclopedic (744 pages) yet approachable compendium of her life's mission to teach the practical way to keep a house running properly. There is lots of information gleaned from her magazine's articles on cleaning, laundry and stain removal. In the chapters divided by room are thorough cleaning instructions as well as organizing ideas and glossaries. A source list includes Stewart's favorite rust remover, piano polish and mop.

"Real Simple Cleaning" by Kathleen Squires (Time Inc., $21.95). Room-by-room tips for cleaning the baseboards to the webby ceilings are written in the clear language of Real Simple magazine. There is a nice cleaning calendar of how often you should perform major tasks. Don't forget to vacuum the fridge condenser coil every six months, says Squires. Thank goodness she tells us where the coils are.

"Spring Cleaning: The Spirit of Keeping Home" by Monica Nassif (Chronicle Books, $16.95). Written by the founder of Caldrea and Mrs. Meyer's Clean Day, this little guidebook explains the correct way to clean ashes out of a fireplace and shares the recipe for the best brass cleaning polish. The photos of rugs being shaken out in the breeze and newly sparkling chandelier crystals somehow entice you to dig out your cleaning tools and get to work.

A mess of cleaning questions

The Washington Post

Monica Nassif, founder and president of Caldrea, maker of house-cleaning products, was the guest in an online chat recently and answered readers' questions. Below is an edited excerpt.

Q. Company is coming in one hour. What is the best and fastest thing to do to spruce up your home?

A. Focus on what guests will see first. Sweep out the entryway, shake out rugs. Add shine to one object; this way, everything looks clean. Wipe down the guest bath, especially the sink and counter. Clean up the kitchen, again focusing on sinks. Have a back closet ready to store piles of papers, etc. Light a candle, and dim the lights!

Q. What are the top things I should do for my spring cleaning to make the most impact, and is there a special order in which I should do things? And, what things might I get my young kids involved with?

A. First, organize your priorities. Take a notepad and pencil, and go from room to room and make notes of what needs to be done. Second, work in an organized fashion. Clean from top to bottom (starting by vacuuming moldings around the ceiling), as well as top of house to bottom. Clean dry (vacuum/sweep) before wet. And work clockwise around each room, as it saves time.

Yes, get the kids involved. That's how they learn how to care for what they have. Kids can vacuum, as well as create a tag team for cleaning baseboards. One child can use a wet towel, the other can dry. I grew up with a chore list every Saturday morning. We could not play outside until our jobs were done.

Q. Mini and Venetian blinds are the bane of my existence. I do love them for the slatted light, but what's the best way to clean each and every slat?

A. You can find blind brushes, but they just move the dirt around. I use a soft brush attachment on my vacuum first, then go over each slat with a soft, damp cloth. Time-consuming, I know, but they will be nice and clean.

Q. My roommate is moving out, and I can't wait to get into her room and clean. My question is how do I get rid of the makeup, powders, etc., that have been building up in her bathroom for a couple of years?

A. I have two teen-age daughters, and we have had makeup residue all over their bathroom, especially in the drawers. I recommend you first vacuum so you don't smear the dry powder. Then wipe down with a mixture of all-purpose cleaner and powdered scrub. Depending on the level of grime, allow the mixture to sit for several minutes.

USDA to cut subsidies as insurers post big profits

Industry says proposed reductions could hurt rural areas

By Steve Karnowski
Associated Press writer

The federal government wants to slash spending on crop insurance after years of big profits by insurers, but the industry claims the reductions could hurt rural areas.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture is negotiating a new deal with crop insurance companies, which posted profits of 26.4 percent last year.

Crop insurance covers part of farmers' losses when their crops fail and helps them get credit for spring planting because lenders know they will be able to repay their loans. While participating farmers pay premiums, the government subsidizes the program to keep it affordable. Last year, it paid crop insurers $3.8 billion.

"The federal crop insurance program is an important part of the farm safety net, but costs have escalated to an unsustainable level and we need to take steps protect taxpayers," U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said.

Earlier this year, the U.S. Department of Agriculture proposed cutting $8.4 billion in spending on crop insurance over 10 years. Its first revision brought that down to $6.9 billion.

A study done for the Risk Management Agency found the crop insurance industry's profit in 2009 was the second-highest in 21 years and more than double the 10.7 percent the agency considered "reasonable" for last year. Over the past 21 years, the study said, the companies averaged a 17 percent return, compared with a "reasonable" rate of 12.7 percent.

The agency also said government payments to crop insurance providers have more than doubled in the past three years while the number of policies hasn't really grown.

"If you look back since the mid-1990s, the companies have only lost money in this program one year, 2002, and it wasn't that much of a loss," said Bill Murphy, administrator of the USDA's Risk Management Agency, who noting a 2002 loss of 0.5

percent. "They certainly have been making far more than they've been losing."

Brian Riedl, a budget analyst at the conservative Heritage Foundation, said he doesn't like the government telling people what a reasonable profit should be, but the crop insurance system needs reform.

"I have no sympathy for those who are making a killing off the crop insurance program on the backs of the taxpayers," he said.

Bob Parkerson, president of National Crop Insurance Services, a trade group based in Overland Park, Kan., said the companies are legally required to maintain huge reserves. That's because they have to pay out large sums when there are widespread crop failures, he said.

The industry employs some 18,000 people, mostly in rural communities, and those jobs could be at risk if the federal government cuts too deep, Parkerson said. That could mean too few employees to serve farmers well, he said, adding that writing policies and handling claims for crop insurance is much more labor intensive than for auto or home insurance.

Feds doing 1st investigation of major meatpackers

By Nate Jenkins
Associated Press writer

LINCOLN, Neb. — The federal government is conducting its first investigation into whether the handful of large meatpackers that slaughter most of the nation's cattle are illegally or unfairly driving down cattle prices, according to an official representing independent beef producers nationwide.

The investigation is under way as the Justice and Agriculture Departments hold a series of antitrust hearings on competition in agriculture, and the USDA is expected to release sweeping antitrust rules covering the meat industry this spring.

Many ranchers and critics of the meatpacking industry are cautiously hopeful the investigation and more aggressive action by a little-known federal agency will force meatpackers to competitively bid for more cattle. That, they say, could help slow a 15-year trend in which several thousand ranchers are forced out of business every year, resulting in the smallest U.S. cow herd in several decades and threatening a way of life that has kept the nation supplied with beef for more than a century.

Bill Bullard, chief executive officer of R-CALF USA, said the federal Grain Inspection, Packers and Stockyards Administration has been speaking with his group's members for months and is "clearly asking questions in the context of an investigation."

"They appear to be doing a very comprehensive investigation of the overall behavior of meatpackers in the cattle market," Bullard said, adding he believes a main reason for the investigation is to gather information to help craft new rules.

The administrator of GIPSA wouldn't say whether the agency was investigating the so-called "Big Four" meatpackers — Tyson Foods, JBS, Cargill and National Beef — who together slaughter about 80 percent of U.S. beef. But administrator J. Dudley Butler said GIPSA is being more aggressive in enforcing the 89-year-old Packers and Stockyards Act and investigations are part of that. Ranchers say the act has long been ignored, and a 2006 federal audit concluded GIPSA had avoided complex investigations. But that may be changing under the Obama administration, which named Butler to head the agency a year ago.

"I will acknowledge that what we're doing at GIPSA now is trying to ... enforce the Packers and Stockyards Act, and it's done in many ways, it's done through investigations, it's done through oversight, it's done through inter-agency working relationships," such as with the U.S. Department of Justice, Butler said.

Beet crop off to good start

By Cindy Snyder
Times-News correspondent

Despite a week of cold and blustery weather, the 2010 sugarbeet crop is off to a good start.

Adequate moisture and warm soil temperatures created nearly ideal germination and emergence conditions in mid-April. Conditions were so good seedlings were cracking through the soil surface within six days. Since then the weather has been anything but ideal for sugarbeet seedlings.

According to the Idaho Agricultural Statistics Service, 53 percent of the sugarbeets planted in south central Idaho had emerged by the end of April. That's ahead of last year when just 11 percent had emerged and also faster than the 5-year average of 33 percent by the end of April.

Cold temperatures and strong winds can damage sugarbeet seedlings early in the year. Although growers and crop consultants have seen minimal damage, with another week of cold and windy weather forecast, it's too early to say the crop is safe.

Matt Nail, who farms south of Murtaugh, said last Thursday's frost nipped one leaf on his seedlings, but it was not enough to hurt the plant.

That's what crop consultants for Amalgamated Sugar Co. are also reporting. Not only has frost damage been minimal to date, but so has wind damage. Good surface soil structure with lots of clods seems to be providing some wind protection for seedlings.

Voles and mice have caused growers to replant more acres so far than the wind or cold have.

Two years ago, thousands of acres of sugarbeets blew out of the ground during a two-day wind event the third week of May. Plants were larger than they are now and the wind whipped them back and forth creating a helicopter effect that blew plants out of the ground.

An increasing number of growers are also using strip tillage planting practices that place the seed into last year's crop residue. That residue provides wind protection and also helps hold warmth in the soil to protect against frost.

According to the National Weather Service, temperatures in Twin Falls are forecast to drop to around 30 degrees again mid-week. The amount of frost damage depends on how cold temperatures get and how long the cold lasts.

Voles and mice have caused growers to replant more acres so far than the wind or cold have. Stan Gortsema, University of Idaho extension educator in Power County, knows of one grower who had to replant an entire field because of vole damage. The rodents started at one end of a row and ate every seed in the row. Several fields in the Magic Valley have also suffered extensive vole damage.

Get help for irrigation conversions

By Cindy Snyder
Times-News correspondent

BOISE — Ground water irrigators who are interested in increasing their water efficiency can apply for cost-share assistance. But they'll have to get their applications in before May 28.

This federal Agricultural Water Enhancement Program (AWEP) has been funded for 2010. The program is one of several efforts to get management practices on the ground that promote water conservation, reduce water demand or free up water for management.

Both irrigated cropland and irrigated pasture qualify for AWEP. Land must have been

Supreme Court takes up Monsanto alfalfa case

By Bill Lambrecht
St. Louis Post-Dispatch writer

WASHINGTON — Monsanto Co. asked the U.S. Supreme Court on Tuesday to set aside a 2007 ban on genetically engineered alfalfa, which was ordered amid fears that the crop might contaminate nonmodified plants.

In the Supreme Court's first case dealing with genetically modified crops, Monsanto sought to convince justices that a federal district court in California went too far in siding with growers of conventional alfalfa who were worried about contamination from the pollen of genetically modified plants.

The case stems from a lawsuit filed four years ago by Idaho alfalfa grower Phillip Geertson and others. A northern California district court ruled for Geertson when he argued that conventional and organic growers faced the "likelihood of irreparable harm" from contamination.

"There is absolutely no evidence in the record whatsoever of cross-pollination," asserted Monsanto lawyer Gregory Garre.

The district court allowed farmers

Conventional farmers fear the economic implications of the altered seeds, which are modified to protect plants from applications of Monsanto's Roundup Ready herbicide and have become popular among farmers seeking to rid their fields of weeds. The so-called contamination can occur when seed is spilled along roads or when pollen gets transferred between fields by wind or insects.

Whatever the court rules also may have a bearing on regulation of other Monsanto products, such as genetically modified sugar beets.

The case has implications for the biotech industry as well as for organic farmers and environmental advocates. The biotech industry has preferred operating under what the Agriculture

Geertson, 71, who was on hand for the oral arguments, said in an interview afterward that he had moved his alfalfa seed business to western Canada, where modified alfalfa can't be grown.

Ireland shuts airports today as ash risk returns

By Shawn Pogatchnik
Associated Press writer

DUBLIN — All flights in and out of Ireland have been canceled this morning because of the renewed risk of volcanic ash drifting south from Iceland, the Irish Aviation Authority announced Monday.

But experts said they couldn't tell whether the shifting winds would lead to wider European airspace shutdowns, mirroring last month's crisis, when more than 100,000 flights were canceled and airlines estimated they lost more than $2 billion in business.

"We cannot really tell what it is going to do," said University of Iceland geophysicist Pall Einarsson.

Ireland's airspace managers said all flights from 7 a.m. to 1 p.m. had to be canceled because of "the safety risks to crews and passengers as a result of the drift south of the volcanic ash cloud caused by the northeasterly winds."

The airport shutdown affects both the Republic of Ireland and the British territory of Northern Ireland, leaving the island dependent temporarily on ferry links to Britain and France.

Britain's Civil Aviation Authority

also announced a shutdown of air services over Scotland's outermost Hebrides islands Monday night because of the risk that ash could be ingested into aircrafts' jet engines. The shutdowns were the first in Britain and Ireland since April 22, a week after the Eyjafjallajokull volcano erupted in Iceland.

However the latest restrictions will not affect airplanes that normally use Irish or British airspace to reach other destinations, because the ash threat exists at much lower altitudes than the cruising altitudes for international flights.

The two major Irish-based airlines, Ryanair and Aer Lingus, announced more than 200 flight cancelations and said they doubted if any Irish services would resume before 2 p.m. However Aer Lingus said all but one of its trans-Atlantic services to U.S. cities would operate later today, subject to delays.

Dubliners said they were already braced for potential shutdowns, and expressed relief that the disruption had not fallen on a special three-day weekend that ended Monday.

"Better Tuesday than Monday. We're all back to work Tuesday anyway," said Sheila Dawson, 27, a Dublin secretary who had just returned from long weekend in Spain. "Looks like I just made it — although getting trapped in sunny Spain wouldn't have been so bad either."

Iceland's weather forecasting service attributed the resumed threat to Irish airspace to a change in wind direction, not substantially increased emissions of ash.

Icelandic meteorologist Ole Arnason said the Eyjafjallajokull volcano was emitting a slightly higher level of ash Monday than on previous days. He speculated this was because of an increased volume of melted ice, which generates the ash.

Clinton, Ahmadinejad trade charges at United Nations

By Charles J. Hanley
Associated Press writer

UNITED NATIONS — Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad and Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton engaged in a verbal nuclear exchange Monday on the U.N. stage, where nations gathered for a monthlong debate over the world's ultimate weapons.

Speaking from the podium of the General Assembly Hall, Clinton accused Iran of "flouting the rules" of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty with its suspect uranium enrichment program, and said it is "time for a strong international response."

For his part, Ahmadinejad earlier rejected such allegations, saying Washington has offered not "a single credible proof."

They were the opening salvos in four weeks of deliberations over how to improve the NPT, formally reviewed every five years in a meeting of all 189 treaty members — all the world's nations except India, Pakistan, Israel and North Korea.

The review conference is meant to produce a final document pointing toward ways to better achieve the NPT's goals of checking the spread of nuclear weapons, while working toward reducing and eventually eliminating them.

Because it requires a consensus of all parties, including Iran, any final document would be highly unlikely to censure the Tehran government, which would block consensus.

Instead, as delegates assess the state of the NPT in U.N. conference halls, U.S. and European diplomats will be working elsewhere to reach agreement with sometimes reluctant China and Russia on a fourth round of U.N. Security Council economic penalties to impose on Iran.

"I hope that we can reach agreement in the Security Council on tough new sanctions," Clinton told reporters, "because I believe that is the only way to catch Iran's attention."

In her address, Clinton proposed that the nonproliferation treaty be strengthened by introducing "automatic penalties" for noncompliance, rather than depend on such drawn-out council negotiations.

Ahmadinejad devoted much of his half-hour speech to the huge U.S. nuclear arsenal, denouncing the Obama administration's refusal to rule out the use of those weapons.

"Regrettably, the government of the United States has not only used nuclear weapons, but also continues to threaten to use such weapons against other countries, including Iran," Ahmadinejad said.

He referred to the new U.S. Nuclear Posture Review's provision retaining an option to use U.S. atomic arms against countries not in compliance with the nonproliferation pact, a charge Washington lays against Iran.

Clinton later announced the U.S. government was releasing previously undisclosed details about the U.S. arsenal. About the same time in Washington, the Pentagon was reporting that the U.S. maintains 5,113 nuclear warheads in its stockpile and "several thousand" more retired warheads that await dismantling.

Ahmadinejad invited President Obama to join a "humane movement" that would set a timetable for abolishing those and all other atomic arms, weapons he called "disgusting and shameful."

As the Iranian president spoke, the U.S. delegation, of working-level staff, walked out of the General Assembly hall, joined by several European delegations, including the French and British. Lower-level Iranian officials sat through Clinton's later speech.

Yukiya Amano, head of the U.N. watchdog International Atomic Energy Agency, leveled the specific indictment against Iran, saying his inspectors could not confirm that all of its nuclear material is devoted to peaceful activities.

Iran must "clarify activities with a possible military dimension," Amano said.

Ahmadinejad, the only head of state participating in the conference, complained that the U.S. and its allies were pressuring Iran "on the false pretext of probable diversions in their peaceful nuclear activities without providing even a single credible proof to substantiate their allegation."

Indian court convicts Pakistani in Mumbai siege

By Erika Kinetz
Associated Press writer

MUMBAI, India — An Indian court on Monday convicted the only surviving gunman in the bloody 2008 Mumbai siege, ruling Mohammed Ajmal Kasab was guilty of murder and waging war for his role in the attacks that left 166 people dead and deeply shook India. Two Indians accused of helping plot the violence were acquitted.

The verdict also implicated Pakistanis still at large in the attacks, which is likely to complicate recent attempts by Islamabad and New Delhi to rekindle formal peace talks. Calls for swift retribution rang out from the streets of Mumbai, while in Pakistan doubts swirled about India's intentions and the fairness of the trial.

The November siege reverberated across India. Millions watched on television as the violence stretched over three days, leaving corpses scattered through some of the city's best-known places.

The judge said Kasab, 22, had personally killed seven men and, with his partner — who was killed by security forces during the attacks — had a hand in 47 more deaths.

Kasab, his face shadowed by a light beard, spent most of the two-and-a-half-hour proceeding slumped motionless in his seat, his head bowed.

After standing briefly while the judge read out a summary of his guilt, Kasab sank silently to his seat and covered his eyes with his hand.

Kasab was convicted on nearly all the 86 charges against him, including murder and waging war against India. The handful of acquittals were on technicalities or for relatively minor charges, such as forging an identification card.

A sentencing hearing was scheduled for Tuesday. Kasab faces a possible death sentence.

Judge M.L. Tahlilyani's 1,522-page ruling went farther than pronouncing Kasab's individual guilt — a judgment many here saw as a fait accompli in a case so overwhelmingly and publicly documented. For instance, photos of Kasab striding through Mumbai's main train station, an assault rifle in his hand, became iconic images of the attacks.

Iraqi politicians bicker over recount

By Rebecca Santana
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD — The Iraqi prime minister's coalition cried foul just one hour into a partial vote recount that began Monday and demanded the process be halted, the latest political tussle delaying the formation of an Iraqi government in the aftermath of the close election.

The recount of roughly 2.5 million votes cast March 7 in the capital was demanded by Shiite Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki's State of Law coalition, which narrowly lost to a bloc led by former prime minister Ayad Allawi that enjoyed heavy Sunni support. It has further stalled any formation of a government, raising fears that violence will increase as U.S. forces withdraw this summer.

Raider Visser, who closely follows Iraqi politics for the Norwegian Institute of International Affairs, said it is doubtful the recount will alter the outcome.

"The only thing that they're (State of Law) achieving is the postponement of government formation," he said. "It doesn't seem very realistic. It seems more like a protest."

Al-Maliki demanded recounts in five provinces and got one in Baghdad; it is expected to take about two weeks.

But shortly after election workers began to carefully tally ballots under the watchful eye of observers, representatives from the prime minister's State of Law held a news conference railing against the recount.

They alleged the commission wasn't conducting it properly since it was not reopening voter records and checking voter signatures against ballots.

State of Law official and Oil Minister Hussain al-Shahristani also demanded election commission officials be held accountable for manipulating the votes and that the recount be halted.

As the news conference wound down, a tiff between election commission chief Faraj al-Haidari and al-Shahristani erupted, with the two men raising their voices and wagging fingers at each other as journalists crowded around.

State TV cut their live transmission of the event but the spat continued with bodyguards physically keeping journalists at bay.

An electoral worker looks inside a ballot box as votes in the March 7 national election are re-counted in Baghdad, Iraq, Monday.

Today is Tuesday, May 4, the 124th day of 2010. There are 241 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
 On May 4, 1970, Ohio National Guardsmen opened fire during an anti-war protest at Kent State University, killing four students and wounding nine others. (Two of the students who died, Allison Krause and Jeffrey Miller, had been participating in the demonstration while the other two, Sandra Scheuer and William Schroeder, were passersby en route to their next classes.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
 In 1626, Dutch explorer Peter Minuit landed on present-day Manhattan Island.

In 1886, at Haymarket Square in Chicago, a labor demonstration for an 8-hour work day turned into a deadly riot when a bomb exploded.

In 1904, the United States took over construction of the Panama Canal.

In 1916, responding to a demand from President Woodrow Wilson, Germany agreed to limit its submarine warfare. (However, Germany resumed unrestricted submarine warfare the following year.)

In 1932, mobster Al Capone, convicted of income-tax evasion, entered the federal penitentiary in Atlanta. (Capone was later transferred to Alcatraz Island.)

In 1945, during World War II, German forces in the Netherlands, Denmark and northwest Germany agreed to surrender.

In 1946, a two-day riot at Alcatraz prison in San Francisco Bay ended, the violence having claimed five lives.

In 1960, actress-comedian Lucille Ball divorced her husband, Desi Arnaz, after 20 years of marriage.

In 1961, a group of "Freedom Riders" left Washington, D.C. for New Orleans to challenge racial segregation on interstate buses and in bus terminals.

In 1980, Marshal Josip Broz Tito, president of Yugoslavia, died three days before his 88th birthday.

Ten years ago: The "LOVEYOU" e-mail virus infected computer networks and hard drives across the globe, spawning various imitations. Londoners chose political maverick Ken Livingstone to be their first elected mayor.

Five years ago: A military judge at Fort Hood, Texas, threw out Pfc. Lynndie England's guilty plea to abusing Iraqi detainees at Abu Ghraib prison, saying he was not convinced the Army reservist knew her actions were wrong at the time. (England was later convicted in a court-martial and sentenced to three years in prison — she served half that time.) A suicide bombing at a police recruitment center in Irbil, Iraq, killed 60 people. Prosecutors rested their case in the molestation trial of Michael Jackson, who ended up being acquitted. ABC aired a segment of "Primetime Live" in which former "American Idol" contestant Corey Clark claimed an affair with judge Paula Abdul, who denied the allegation. (Fox TV cleared Abdul of any wrongdoing.)

One year ago: President Barack Obama promised to crack down on companies "that ship jobs overseas" and duck U.S. taxes with offshore havens. Jeff Kepner, of Augusta, Ga., underwent the nation's first double-hand transplant at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center. Mexican officials lowered their swine flu alert level in their capital. Cleveland's LeBron James was named the NBA's MVP. Actor, comedian and director Dom DeLuise died in Santa Monica, Calif. at 75.

IF MAY 4 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: A passionate desire for success could be the carrot that lures you to excel in your field during the year to come. For the next two months, you should concentrate on getting fit as a fiddle through exercise or competitive sports. This is a great time to take a relaxing vacation or hook up with someone for some passionate, but not necessarily committed, play. You may need to pay your dues in November or could be subjected to intense scrutiny and criticism by the boss or powers that be, but if you keep on plugging away you will eventually hit your stride. Look for improved conditions by December and an opportunity to make long lasting improvements next March. Providential advice at that time could pave the way to future happiness.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Ask for guidance if you experience a problem. You may have run up against a brick wall where your career or finances are concerned, but you will find valuable help and assistance is available today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Give peace a chance. Your keen desires and avid enthusiasms could be viewed as argumentative or overly pushy. Use a friend as a sounding board. Don't let your job interfere with quality family time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Steer clear of sympathy. The people you are thrown contact with who appear to want a shoulder to cry on will do better in the long run if you offer insights, technical solutions or clear-cut measures.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stick to your goals like glue on paper. Be a bit of a philosopher about aggravations. Good advice can be found in a book, from a professional or from a distant relative or close neighbor.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Busy people don't need more activities to take up their time. If you are in too much of a hurry, you might offend a friend or lover. This could be a good time to set a new plan in motion if everyone is in agreement.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep a vision of the future you want to have firmly in mind. This is a good time to make a definite plan and enlist help from others to help you achieve your goals. Look for ways to be fair to everyone.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep your eyes trained on the destination. Top performers remain focused and develop habits that keep them in shape. Some days you need to wear blinders so you aren't distracted by the competition.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Teach your children well. You don't need to be a rock star or a troubadour to give valuable guidance to the younger set or to make a beneficial difference in someone's life. Do what makes you happy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Draw on your charm to instill trust. Those who bristled with hostility earlier this week might be willing to listen to you today. A relationship can get back on track if you are willing to forgive.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Old habits die hard. If you have been going full throttle it will be difficult to unwind and relax. Develop new habits that revitalize your spirits and make them part of your future daily routine.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is a good time to examine problems from the past and revise expectations so you can perform more successfully in the future. Don't let frustrations drive a wedge between you and a loved one.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Whistle while you work. A cheerful attitude will keep you at the top of your game and promote a positive team spirit. This is a good time to ask others for a helping hand, a favor or a recommendation.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

Get In The Habit!
Read the Classifieds Every Day

DEAR ABBY: My wife was hired for an administrative position. On her first day of work, they called her into the human resources director's office and told her she was being "let go" because of her website. The site has photos of her when she worked as a model for a large department store. They are in no way provocative or overly revealing. Photos of our children are also on the site.

The HR director told her that one of the other (internal) applicants had Googled her and had seen the site. An image so upset the other applicant that she made a formal complaint, which caused my wife's dismissal!

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

We consulted a lawyer and contacted the local Equal Employment Opportunity Commission only to be told that North Carolina is an "at will" employment state and that the employer did nothing wrong. We feel their actions were wrong. Is there anything that can be done?

— YANKEE IN CONFEDERATE COUNTRY

DEAR YANKEE: I'm sorry, but the answer is no. In most states there is a presumption of "at will" employment unless you have a written contract to the contrary. However, the employer cannot terminate an employee for an illegal reason — such as age, religion, gender, sexual orientation or a disability. It does not appear from your letter that your wife was terminated for an illegal reason, but what happened stinks anyway.

DEAR ABBY: My mother got drunk at a family function and started a fight with me. I ended up leaving before it could escalate, but I feel I ruined the host's day. Would it be appropriate to send an "I'm sorry" note, and how would I word it?

— MAKING AMENDS IN TENNESSEE

DEAR MAKING AMENDS: The person making the amends should be the person who created the scene — your mother. If you feel something needs to be said by you, and apparently you do, then write your host and say, "I feel terrible about what happened at your party and would like to apologize for my mother's behavior. I left before she could create a scene, but I'm afraid it cast a shadow on your day, and for that I would like to apologize." Sign it with love.

P.S. You'll lead a happier life if you stop feeling that you have to apologize for your mother's behavior. You are responsible only for your own.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have been lucky enough to travel all over the world during our long marriage. Over the years, we collected lovely items from every location.

Now that we are older, we have decided to move into a smaller home, and would like to share these lovely souvenirs with our friends. Although I think "Ellen" would love to have one of my silk scarves, and "Peter" would appreciate a pair of my husband's marble bookends, or "Annemarie" would cherish my necklace from India, etc., I'm unsure that my choices would be their choices.

Would it be proper for us to ask our friends to choose among our treasure rather than our making the choice for them?

— WORLD TRAVELER IN MIAMI BEACH

DEAR WORLD TRAVELER: I commend you for your generosity; however, you might run into trouble if several of your friends choose the same item. Were I in your shoes, I would make the selection for each of them. (Include a note with the gift — i.e., "Ellen, this scarf matches your eyes," "Annemarie, I know you love ethnic jewelry," etc.)

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Syllables govern the world."
— Sir Edward Coke

One of my favorite collections of deals this year comes from the fertile imagination of Patrick Jourdain, who is president of the International Bridge Press Association.

For many years he has written sets of problems for Bridge Magazine in the U.K. and contributed a weekly problem for Teletext on Channel Four Television. I shall be running some deals from his book "Problem Corner" all this month. In today's deal, consider how you should play three no-trump on a spade lead.

If clubs split, you have no problem, so you have only to protect yourself against a 4-1 break. One solution is to lead the club king, then the jack, which works fine if West has length. But if East has the length, he may duck the jack, just as he would if you had started by running the jack as your first play in the suit. Now you have only three club tricks and few chances to get the hearts going.

A better line is to win the spade, play the club king, and (unless East shows out) lead a low club from hand to dummy's eight! If the defense wins the second club, you can later overtake the club jack to ensure nine tricks. If, on the second club, dummy's eight wins, but either defender still has the guarded queen remaining, then take a heart finesse. You will later use the club ace as your entry to dummy to take a second heart finesse.

ANSWER: In this sequence your double would be takeout, suggesting values and either both unbid suits or one unbid suit plus support for partner. You would normally require better fit for partner than a singleton, but here you would expect partner always to deliver a six-card minor, or to be able to bid a three-card major if he did not want to repeat his clubs.

LOVING THE CHALLENGE

Bruins favored in tight GBC tourney race

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

For the Twin Falls baseball team, it's a case of new opposition, same goal.

After winning the Class 5A Region Four-Five-Six championship the last three seasons, the Bruins are in the 4A ranks, gunning for their fourth straight district title overall.

This time they have closer rivals for the crown. And with four teams beating up on each other at the top of the league, it just might be tougher to win this one than it has the last three. Considering Twin Falls won each of its previous three titles in its final at-bat, that's saying something.

"With Jerome, Burley and Minico, it's going to be a big battle," said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir. "But that's the great thing about this group of guys: they love the challenge."

Twin Falls stood out from the rest of the teams in the league over the course of the 15-game schedule, and earned home-field advantage for as long as the Bruins keep winning.

Minico, Jerome and Burley nearly finished in a three-way tie, but the reigning state champion Spartans rallied in their last game Friday night to nab second place and the all-important first-round bye.

"It's a big advantage," Minico coach Frank said. "It's important because it gives you a chance to take that first game off and be going into Round 2 with your No. 1. It also gives you a chance on Tuesday to go and scout who you're going to play."

Twin Falls and Minico get to wait until Thursday to get started, but the tournament starts in earnest today. No. 3 Jerome hosts No. 6 Canyon Ridge, while No. 5 Wood River heads to No. 4 Burley.

Wood River has the confidence of a three-game sweep against Canyon Ridge, in which the

Shoe-fillers needed for CSI softball

Generra Nielson is the workhorse of the College of Southern Idaho softball pitching staff.

Bradley Guire

The sophomore is the first pitcher in program history to win 25 games and the first to record more than 150 strikeouts in a season. She stands at 263 in 2010, nearly double her strikeout count in 2009 (134). She's three away from a collegiate career total of 400.

But she may not have reached these heights had last fall gone differently. It's a dead horse that keeps coming back for another beating, but the departure of pitcher Darcy Ulrich impacted so many facets of the CSI roster.

While Brie Dimond and Kelsey Bryant are competent pitchers and have the full confidence of coaches Nick Baumert and Debbie

Suspended BSU player reaches plea agreement

The Associated Press

BOISE — Suspended Boise State safety Jason Robinson has reached a plea agreement on a charge of breaking a man's jaw during a bar fight.

Robinson agreed to plead guilty last week to a charge of misdemeanor battery in the Feb. 12 fight. Ada County court records say he is scheduled to enter the plea on May 25.

Under the agreement, he will spend 19 days working on the sheriff's labor detail and begin making restitution to the victim, The Idaho Statesman reported.

Robinson was arrested in March on a charge of felony aggravated battery. If he had been convicted of a felony, he would have lost his eligibility for an athletic scholarship at Boise State or any other state school.

Jazz hope good start prevents Kobe's big finishes

Kirilenko 50-50 for Game 2

By Greg Beacham
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Utah coach Jerry Sloan has watched Kobe Bryant's playoff evolution from its inauspicious beginnings.

The Los Angeles Lakers' star guard wouldn't have become a peerless postseason finisher without his performance at the erstwhile Delta Center in 1997, when Bryant spectacularly failed to finish off the Jazz.

The 18-year-old rookie's four infamous airballs late in the final game of that second-round playoff series in Salt Lake City only made Bryant tougher and more determined. Thirteen years later, the calculating veteran makes sure no lead over the Lakers is safe — certainly not the tenuous four-point lead Bryant erased Sunday with a few flicks of his wrist in Game 1 of the clubs' latest playoff clash.

"You're not going to stop Kobe Bryant at this point," Sloan said Monday before practice at the Los Angeles Clippers' Playa Vista training complex. "You can doubt him and try to make their big guys make a shot, but you just have to play a little harder and hope he'll miss a few. ... He's learned a lot of tricks over the years, a lot of ways to score in a close game. It's a tougher task to defend him than almost anybody."

Bryant led Los Angeles to a 104-99 win with deceptive ease in the opener, scoring 11 points in the final four minutes. Game 2 is tonight (8:30 p.m., TNT) at Staples Center.

After the Lakers' practice in El Segundo on Monday, Bryant deflected praise for his late-game poise onto Los Angeles' defense, which held the Jazz to one field goal in the final 4:10. Though Bryant must be responsible for most of the Lakers' clutch scoring this season, he sees improvements in other areas for the defending champions.

"It's a different team," Bryant said. "We were much better offensively last year for whatever reason, but we've better defensively this year."

Utah's efforts to guard Bryant could get a boost if Andrei Kirilenko returns today from a strained left calf that has prevented him from playing a full game in nearly two months. The Russian forward's wiry frame gives him a chance to stop Bryant, or at least force him to be more creative.

Kirilenko went through a full practice with the Jazz on Monday, and he estimated his chances of playing in Game 2 at "50-50."

"He adds a lot of energy to their team," Bryant said of Kirilenko. "He's a very good passer and an emotional defender."

Kirilenko also could give a boost to Utah's low-post defense, which struggled against Lakers 7-footers Pau Gasol and Andrew Bynum, who confirmed he's putting off arthroscopic surgery on the small tear in the meniscus of his right knee until after the postseason.

Makings, Kimberly blank Wood River

Times-News

It's another perfect regular season for the girls from Kimberly. The Bulldogs crushed Wood River 10-0 Monday afternoon in Hailey to cap a 22-0 softball campaign.

The Bulldogs take the No. 1 seed into the Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference Tournament, which begins Wednesday.

Monday's regular-season finale saw pitcher Nellie Makings and Averie Schroeder. Ali Levy and Alex Lindbloom. Extra-base hits — 2B: Kimberly, Whitney Carlton, Gentry Funk. HR: Kimberly, Makings, Mikki Corder, Jensen Upton.

"Nellie dominated the game," said Wood River assistant coach Dick Coleman.

Wood River (6-14) puts its 3-8 Great Basin Conference mark on the line this week, playing at Burley on Thursday before hosting the Bobcats for a doubleheader Friday to cap the regular season.

Glenn's Ferry took care off Minico's junior varsity on Monday, winning 9-2 and 8-0 in doubleheader action. Rory Hance went 3-for-4 with a double and two RBIs in Game 1, while Gabe Arevalo pitched six scoreless innings.

After doubling with two RBIs in the opener, Clay Anderson ignited the Pilots in the nightcap with a three-run homer in Glenn's seven-run first inning. Adrian Martinez got the win, fanning 13 batters in the five-inning game.
The Pilots (11-11) are off until hosting the state tournament May 20-22. They'll open May 20 against the second seed from District V-VI.

Rondo, Celtics throttle Cavs to even series

CLEVELAND (AP) — The window hasn't closed on the Boston Celtics. It's still wide open.
Rajon Rondo tied a team playoff record with 19 assists, Ray Allen scored 22 points and the Celtics, showing they're still very dangerous despite their years, opened a 25-point lead in the fourth and then survived Cleveland's comeback for a 104-86 win on Monday night to even their semifinal series at 1-1.

After blowing an 11-point lead in the third quarter of Game 1, the Celtics almost squandered a much bigger one. They led 91-66 with 9:08 left, but the Cavs scored 15 straight and pulled within 93-83 on LeBron James' basket with 3:13 left.

Boston, though, closed with an 11-3 spurt.

James scored 24 and Antawn Jamison 16 for Cleveland, outscored 31-12 in the third.

Game 3 is Friday night in Boston.

The Celtics seemed in control with their 25-point bulge, but they got complacent and found themselves having to scramble down the stretch when they could have been resting up.

"We were playing the clock instead of the game and got stagnant," Rondo said.

But leading 93-83, Boston regrouped. Rondo and Allen scored, then Kevin Garnett completed a three-point play to make it 100-84, allowing Celtics coach Doc Rivers to finally relax after watching his club play inspired ball most of the way before letting up.

Garnett finished with 18 points and 10 rebounds, and Paul Pierce scored 14.

Rasheed Wallace, called out by Rivers after a lousy opener, added 17 points off the bench as the Celtics stripped the Cavaliers of home-court advantage in the series and gave them four days to think about went wrong.

Two years removed from their 17th NBA title, the Celtics were given little chance of getting past James and the top-seeded Cavs. Despite beating Miami in the first round, Boston was thought to be too old, too slow and too reliant on the aging Big Three of Allen, Garnett and Pierce.

But the trio combined for 54 points with Rondo, the Celtics' jitterbugging point guard, setting them up with passes from impossible angles. Rondo matched the club's postseason record for assists set by Hall of Famer Bob Cousy.

Up by four at halftime, the Celtics wasted no time pushing their lead to double digits in the third.

Pierce and Allen hit 3-pointers, and with James tentative — perhaps because of an injured right elbow — and the Cavaliers unable to get anything going on offense or contain Rondo, the Celtics' lead ballooned to 74-57 on Kendrick Perkins' basket underneath.

At that point, Cavaliers forward Anderson Varejao showed his frustration by blatantly slamming into Allen on a baseline drive. Boston's guard was sent sprawling and Varejao was assessed a flagrant foul. Allen split the free throws, but on Boston's next trip, he drained a 3-pointer from deep in the corner to make it 78-57.

Anthony Parker threw up his hands in disgust as the Cavs were unable to stop the Celtics' surge.

With Boston ahead 83-60 after three, several Cleveland fans left their seats.

"We're going to the bar," one said as he bounded up the steps.

Boston Red Sox blast Los Angeles Angels

BOSTON — Dustin Pedroia's three-run homer capped Boston's seven-run sixth inning as the Red Sox cruised to a 17-8 win over the Los Angeles Angels on Monday.

Bill Hall and Adrian Beltre each hit their first homers in a Red Sox uniform, both two-run shots, and Kevin Youkilis had a solo blast.

Boston snapped a three-game losing streak after getting swept by Baltimore over the weekend.

BLUE JAYS 5, INDIANS 1
CLEVELAND — Brett Cecil took a perfect game into the seventh inning for Toronto and settled for a victory over Cleveland.

The left-hander allowed one hit over eight innings, striking out a career-high 10.

Cecil (2-1) lost the perfect game when he walked Grady Sizemore with one out in the seventh. He then walked Shin-Soo Choo but came back to strike out Austin Kearns before Jhonny Peralta lined a 2-2 pitch to left field, scoring Sizemore to get Cleveland within 4-1.

YANKEES 4, ORIOLES 1
NEW YORK — CC Sabathia pitched eight strong innings and Randy Winn hit a three-run homer to lead New York.

Sabathia (4-1) allowed one run — Matt Wieters' second-inning homer — and six hits while improving to 11-1 in 16 career starts against Baltimore.

TWINS 10, TIGERS 4
MINNEAPOLIS — Wilson Ramos had three more hits in Joe

Mauer's place and Michael Cuddyer added a three-run homer and Minnesota snapped Detroit's five-game winning streak.

Ramos had two doubles and an RBI and Scott Baker (3-2) allowed three runs and seven hits with six strikeouts in seven innings for the Twins.

WHITE SOX 5, ROYALS 1
CHICAGO — Jake Peavy pitched seven-plus shutout innings in his most impressive start of the season and Alex Rios had three hits and two RBIs for Chicago.

NATIONAL LEAGUE REDS 3, METS 2

CINCINNATI — Laynce Nix hit a solo, pinch-hit homer in the bottom of the 11th inning Monday night, powering Cincinnati to a 3-2 victory over the New York Mets and keeping the Reds perfect in extra innings.

CARDINALS 6, PHILLIES 3
PHILADELPHIA — Jaime Garcia allowed one run in six innings, David Freese had three RBIs and Nick Stavinotha homered for St. Louis.

Garcia (3-1), a rookie left-hander, gave up three hits and struck out six.

DIAMONDBACKS 9, ASTROS 1
HOUSTON — Cesar Valdez won his major league debut and Chris Snyder hit a three-run homer, leading the Arizona Diamondbacks to a 9-1 victory over the slumping Houston Astros on Monday night.

Lucic scores late as Bruins edge Flyers 3-2

BOSTON — Milan Lucic waited at the faceoff circle, his back to the goal, for a deflected puck to land. When it hit the ice, the Boston Bruins forward tapped it with his stick to settle it and then, in one motion, turned and shot.

Lucic's turnaround slap shot broke a third-period tie with 2:57 left, and Boston beat the Philadelphia Flyers 3-2 on Monday night to take a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven Eastern Conference semifinals.

"I was trying to block the defense out and wheel and shoot," said Lucic, who hadn't scored in the playoffs and had just one goal since March 25. "Luckily, it found a hole. ... It was more a relief than anything else. Especially when it's a game-winner like that."

Tuukka Rask made 24 saves, and Miroslav Satan and Johnny Boychuk also scored for Boston. The No. 6 seed in the East, the Bruins inherited home-ice advantage when the conference's top three teams were eliminated in the opening round and protected it heading into Game 3 Wednesday night in Philadelphia.

BLACKHAWKS 4, CANUCKS 2
CHICAGO — Kris Versteeg scored go the go-ahead goal from the left circle with 1:30 left and the Chicago Blackhawks rallied to beat the Vancouver Canucks 4-2 on Monday night to even the Western Conference semifinals at 1-1 on Monday night.

In a furious final rush, Versteeg lost the puck near the goal. It went out to Duncan Keith, who slid the pass to Versteeg for a shot that beat goalie Roberto Luongo to send the United Center into a frenzy.

Patrick Kane added an empty-netter with 47.7 seconds left.

GBC

Wolverines got their offense untracked.

"We're a little nervous to play those guys. Wood River can swing it," said Burley coach Devin Kunz. "There's something in the water up there where they just don't know what the score is — they always play so loose.

"Bottom line is you've got to be playing your best. We are playing better and better every game."

The two teams standing at the end earn trips to the state tournament in two weeks at Rodeo Park in Nampa. While Twin Falls is the favorite on paper, any two of the top four teams advancing might not be that shocking.

Whoever survives the gauntlet is expected to fare well in Nampa.

"I think Twin Falls is the favorite; they have the most polished team," said Jerome coach Tom Bobrowski. "But we have confidence that we can play against them."

"This conference is the best in Class 4A. Whoever gets out is going to do some damage at the (state) tournament."

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bulls' Vince Carter and Scottie Pippen were seen on the sidelines of the Bulls' game against the Detroit Pistons on Monday in a long anti-racism rally. The rally comes after a late-season altercation between Bulls coach Phil Jackson and vice president of basketball operations Jerry Krause, and another first-round playoff exit.

There was no word on whether Gorchov would be a successor.

The 49-year-old coach was hired in 1997, coming after Nassar's firing. He led the team to a 20-16 record in his first season, finishing with a 20-16 record.

Buck wild: 2 rogue deer run amok in Wis. ale house

MILWAUKEE (AP) — The Milwaukee Bucks' rallying cry — "fear the deer" — turned into a punchline Sunday afternoon when two deer burst through the glass doors of a Menomonie restaurant as patrons watched a Bucks playoff game.

The first deer apparently hurt itself, bloodying its snout and becoming dazed, said Jay Ouellette, general manager of the Stout Ale House. Two customers were able to safely wrestle it to the ground.

The other deer fled into a private room. Cornered deer can be dangerous because they kick and bite, but a restaurant worker managed to wrestle that animal down as well, Ouellette said.

"I could tell it was starting to get a little anxious," he said. "There was definitely the possibility of injury."

The incident happened about 12:20 p.m. — shortly after the Bucks started Game 7 of their playoff series against Atlanta. There were about 30 customers in the restaurant at the time, many watching the game.

Bucks fans chant "fear the deer" in support of their team. After the deer broke in, customers joked that the cry had a new meaning to them.

"They were still kind of in disbelief, but everyone was having a good time with it," Ouellette said.

Things could have been worse for one man who narrowly avoided being hit by the charging deer.

Surveillance video shows the man pausing in the lobby before walking outside and closing the door behind him. Moments later he jumps out of the way as the two bucks slam into the doors, tearing them off their hinges and spraying a shower of glass.

Replacing the doors was expected to cost several thousand dollars, said David Burg, the restaurant's vice president of operations. Insurance was expected to cover most of the cost, he said.

Ouellette said its the first time since the restaurant opened in 2006 that it's had a problem with deer. There's a golf course nearby that deer often visit but they never cross the large parking lot to the restaurant's front door, he said.

"I think they just lost their bearings and got startled," he said. "I've seen this happen on TV before, but I never thought it would happen around here. It was pretty amusing."

Lefty has a chance to be No. 1

PONTE VEDRA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — That 15-foot birdie putt Phil Mickelson made on the final hole at Quail Hollow meant more than an extra $130,000 for finishing in second place alone.

It put him in position to become No. 1 in the world.

Mickelson could reach the top spot in the world ranking for the first time in his career by winning The Players Championship, provided Tiger Woods finishes out of the top five.

Of the players considered to be the "Big Four" of this generation — Woods, Mickelson, Vijay Singh and Ernie Els — Mickelson is the only player to have never been No. 1.

The Quail Hollow Championship had already been decided when Mickelson came to the 18th hole in a tie for second with Angel Cabrera, five shots behind winner Rory McIlroy. The final birdie that made him solo runner-up gave him enough extra points for a chance to rise to No. 1 at the TPC Sawgrass.

Woods, who missed the cut last week for only the sixth time in his career, has been No. 1 the last five years.

Mickelson is trying to become only the 13th player to be No. 1 since the rankings began in 1986, and he has momentum on his side. He won The Players Championship two years ago, and he is coming off a Masters victory and a runner-up finish at Quail Hollow.

"I'm glad that this first tournament went well, because after a couple weeks off after a big high like Augusta, you never know where the game is going to be at," Mickelson said Sunday. "And the way that I played and kept the ball in play and hit good shots, I'm looking forward to next week."

Woods is coming off the highest 36-hole score of his career at Quail Hollow. He shot a 79 in the second round — the second-highest round as a pro — and missed the cut by eight shots.

Woods arrived on Monday for a practice round with Rod Pampling.

It is rare for Woods to show up at regular PGA Tour events on Monday, although he said last week before leaving Quail

Hollow that his home course at Isleworth is torn up at the moment because of renovations.

This is the second time in the last two years that Woods' top ranking was on the line. Last year at Doral, Sergio Garcia could have become No. 1 with a victory in the World Golf Championship provided Woods was 27th or worse. In that situation, however, Woods had never finished out of the top 10 at Doral.

While he won The Players

Championship in 2001, this is the only tournament where Woods has finished out of the top 20 at least five times. Last year, he played in the final group (five shots behind Alex Cejka), but closed with a 73 to finish eighth.

Report: Roethlisberger spends weekend at clinic

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Post-Gazette reported Monday that Ben Roethlisberger spent the weekend in a clinic being evaluated as part of the sanctions handed down by NFL commissioner Roger Goodell.

The newspaper cited an unidentified team source saying the evaluation will take days rather than weeks. Goodell suspended the Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback six games without pay last month.

A Steelers spokesman said the team is prohibited by league rule from discussing Roethlisberger's treatment. NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said all details of the evaluation are confidential.

The two-time Super Bowl winner was ordered to undergo a "comprehensive behavioral evaluation by professionals" after violating the NFL's personal conduct policy. Goodell announced the punishment a week after prosecutors decided not to charge Roethlisberger in a case involving a 20-year-old college student who accused the quarterback of sexually assaulting her in a Milledgeville, Ga., nightclub.

"I have talked to him," coach Mike Tomlin said Sunday, according to the report. "I will continue to talk to him, and I don't have a crystal ball in regards to when he's going to be back in the (Steelers') facility. A lot of that has to do with the things he needs to do and of course the judgment of the commissioner."

Dodds, there is no doubt that Nielson is the No. 1, the alpha, and that her arm is a key to the team's success.

In seasons past, Jody Zillner or Stephanie Holmes didn't have to bear that much responsibility.

"That's what I do," Nielson said Saturday after the Western Nevada College series. "I'm fine with it."

That said, CSI only has her for two, possibly three, more weekends as a Golden Eagle. The season is nearing its close as the Eagles host the College of Southern Nevada this weekend for the final series of the regular campaign. Next weekend, Salt Lake Community College hosts the Region 18

Tournament.

As far as 2011 goes, Baumert has signed one pitcher, Jyl Eckstein, a 5-foot-10 player for Fremont High School in Utah and the Utah Xtreme ASA travel team. Last week, Eckstein threw a one-hitter against Northridge High School, striking out 11 and walking one. Hopefully, a couple more like her are in the works.

"Our goal is to get back to a four-person staff," Baumert said.

When the Golden Eagles reunite this fall for the scrimmage season, Bryant will be the only returning pitcher. She has won nine games so far, with an opponents' average below .300 but an ERA of more than 4.00. She has proven her ability in the circle (a victory over No. 1 Salt Lake), at the plate (.427 average, 53 RBIs as of April 20) and at short-stop.

While Bryant is a triple threat, there's room to grow.

"Consistency and confidence," Baumert said. "Even Generra went through a period of doubt (as a freshman). 'Am I good enough to get people out?' Kelsey has the stuff to get good hitters out."

The ball is literally in Bryant's hands when it comes to the future of CSI's pitching staff.

Jazz

Without Kirilenko and center Mehmet Okur, who's out for the postseason, the Jazz didn't have an inside presence to match the Lakers. Kyrylo Fesenko, the Ukrainian big man filling in for Okur, had just two points in 13 minutes while playing self-acknowledged inadequate defense.

"In the first half, I was kind of thinking, 'Wow, I'm playing here against the Lakers,'" Fesenko said. "I have a long way to go. I'm not happy with my game. I need to play tougher. I got a little soft in the last couple of games."

While the Jazz changed their approach, the Lakers stuck to their usual between-games routine, honed by two straight runs to the NBA finals.

Los Angeles focused on getting a better effort out of its reserves, who gave away a lead early in the fourth quarter. Lamar Odom was particularly vocal about needing better communication among the Lakers' bench players on defense.

"I just know we can play a lot better together, just using each other and playing off each other," Odom said.
