BP appears to be gaining on Gulf oil spill

By Ben Nuckols and Greg Bluestein
Associated Press writers

ROBERT, La. — The hypnotic video of mud, gas and oil billowing from the seafloor has become an Internet sensation as Americans watch to see whether BP's effort to plug the gusher in the Gulf of Mexico succeeds.

BP warned Friday that it could be Sunday or later before the outcome of the cliffhanger becomes clear. And scientists cautioned that few conclusions can be drawn with any certainty from watching the spillcam coverage of the "top kill." But they said the video seemed to suggest BP was gaining ground.

In an operation that began Wednesday, BP has been pumping heavy drilling mud into the blown-out well in hopes of choking it off and putting an end to what is already the biggest oil spill in U.S. history, at anywhere from 18 million gallons to 40 million by the government's estimate.

Coast Guard Adm. Thad Allen said the denser-than-water mud was able to push down the oil and gas coming up at great force from underground, but it had not overwhelmed the gusher. The trick is to pump the mud with such force that it stops the upward flow of oil, and it's impossible to know how much mud that will take.

BP chief operating officer Doug Suttles said Friday the top kill was going basically as planned, though the pumping has stopped several times.

"The fact that it's stopped and started is not unusual," Suttles said. "We're going to stay at this as long as we need to."

He said the company has also shot in assorted junk, including metal pieces and rubber balls, which seemed to be helping to counter pressure from the well.

Twin Falls sheriff aims for grant to buy thermal sights

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Twin Falls County sheriff's deputies are one step closer to seeing in the dark.

The county commission approved a grant request Friday that, if approved by the First Federal Foundation, will lead to the purchase of three hand-held thermal imaging cameras. The cameras pick up body heat and help with search and rescue operations and finding suspects, sheriff's Lt. Daron Brown said.

"The FLIR (thermal imaging camera) is just 'now' technology," Brown said. "They'll be a huge benefit. These are tools that you are able to pick out persons in dark areas where you can't normally see. They work better than any spotlight or flashlight made."

The First Federal Foundation grant request is for $9,990, the cost of two cameras. The sheriff's office also applied for a matching grant from the Idaho Community Foundation for one camera. It will learn in November or December if the grants are approved, said Mark Brunelle, director of Twin Falls County Research & Development.

The thermal imagers would allow deputies and search and rescue volunteers to see body heat at night, in dusty conditions and in fog, Brunelle said. Brown said the office gets an "easy dozen" of search and rescue calls a year where the cameras would help find stranded or missing people. He said they'll also help keep deputies safe in the dark because they'll be able to spot hiding suspects.

The sheriff's office currently has an infrared camera to help spot people but its use is limited, he said. It relies on light and doesn't work well in the dark or in dusty or foggy conditions.

During the unanimous vote, Commissioner Tom Mikesell called the new cameras an essential part of saving lives. Commissioner Terry Kramer called them "wish-list items" because of their cost but was supportive of the grant.

"These are things that we feel we can't put into the budget," said Commissioner Terry Kramer. "But if they can find grants, we'll certainly support them in that."

Canyon Ridge sends off first graduating class

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

It's a scene that will be repeated for years to come, but on Friday, it was the first time.

Canyon Ridge High School graduating seniors marched through the gymnasium of their school, wearing their gowns and caps to pick up their diplomas and move on to adulthood.

For the school, its inaugural graduation ceremony marked a milestone as well: the end of its first year and the start of continued traditions.

That realization was evident as the graduates adjusted their caps and straightened their gowns as the gymnasium filled with people for the school's first graduation ceremony.

"It went by faster than I expected," said Mary

Walton, the class valedictorian. "This is a great new school."

The graduates, most of them Twin Falls High School Bruins before they came to CRHS for their senior year, said that if anything, their sense of school pride was even stronger. This year's opening of Canyon Ridge marked the first year Twin Falls has had two major high schools for students to attend.

In an interview, one graduate used Canyon Ridge's mascot as a metaphor for the first year.

Call of 'heads' secures seat for Buhl Republican official

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

With the clatter of a coin, history was made Friday in Twin Falls County — a tie in the Republican primary for Buhl's seventh precinct committeeman was broken with incumbent Neola Weaver keeping her position.

No one at the event, which happened at the County Commission's Friday meeting, could remember the tiebreaker being used in the 20 years people had been at the county offices.

The stakes were between Miles Cunningham and Weaver, who both received 84 votes in the primary election. Cunningham, who had never run in an election before, showed up early for the toss.

"Butterflies," he said. He deferred the call of heads or tails to Weaver's stand-in, Mya Goodman, whose gut proved true and won her friend another term.

"She said to just go with my gut instinct and she wouldn't be upset if I chose wrong," Goodman, a Twin Falls Republican Women member with Weaver, said after the toss.

Cunningham said the close call surprised him as it was his first race and against an incumbent. He made no promises to run again but said his interest is piqued.

"It just makes you feel like the system is working and that people are paying attention," he said.

The coin toss, which is mandated in Idaho state law, has been used in Idaho before. Most recently it settled a tie in the race for Wendell mayor in 2009. The coin toss there unseated incumbent mayor Rick Cowen and replaced him with Brad Christopherson.

Twin Falls meeting to discuss teacher pay

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Twin Falls School District will hold a public meeting on Monday that's part of the process of reaching a finalized contract with teachers.

The meeting, called a due process hearing, is one of the legally required steps for the school district to negotiate a contract under state law after opting into the statewide financial emergency declaration. The declaration offers public school districts the flexibility to negotiate for reductions in teacher contracts to offset cuts in state funding in the coming fiscal year, which begins in July.

That's become a reality for districts, which face a statewide reduction of $128.5 million, or 7.5 percent, in state funding for the next school year. For Twin Falls School District, the estimated cut is state revenue is $2.64 million, down from $35.51 million to $32.86 million.

"It's something we're all trying to work through and we're just conducting the meeting according to the new codes and statutes," said Superintendent Wiley Dobbs.

The meeting is at 6 p.m. Monday at Canyon Ridge High School.

No final decision will be made at the meeting, though it's expected that the school district will schedule a meeting for later in the week. The school board will make the final decision.

Under the district's proposal, new teacher contracts would include 14 furlough days reflected in the salary schedule, and no experience-based movement on the salary schedule. The furlough days would provide $1.89 million in savings, and the funding for teachers would decrease 6.81 percent, from $19.8 million to $18.46 million, in the upcoming school year, under the proposal.

The Twin Falls Education Association, which represents the district's teachers, would not comment for this story.

M-C Drug Task Force takes funding request to Rupert

By Coreen Hart
Times-News correspondent

RUPERT — The Mini-Cassia Drug Task Force continued its quest for increased funding during Tuesday's Rupert City Council meeting.

Commander Dan Renz said the three-member task force needs to hire a new member from among its participating entities — Cassia and Minidoka counties and the cities of Heyburn and Rupert.

The task force, which handles drug-related cases in Mini-Cassia, is funded through its member entities, with Cassia County paying 50 percent of its yearly $110,000 budget, Minidoka County paying 30 percent, Rupert 12 percent and Heyburn 8 percent. Renz said the actual budget increase the task force needs isn't yet known, as its new hire will be paid based on the officer's current wage. On Tuesday, he requested an increase of $60,000 to $70,000 for the coming year.

Renz said he'll submit an amended budget to the member entities once a new officer is hired. He

The student was arrested for possession of a firearm on school grounds, police said.

The student did not have any pellets and no shots were fired, police said.

Public invited to potluck, discussion of Sawtooth

The Sawtooth Society and the U.S. Forest Service invite you to learn about the successes and future plans of the Sawtooth Vision 20/20 program at a potluck dinner, Thursday at the Stanley Community Center.

Sawtooth Vision 20/20: Shared Strategies for the Future of the Sawtooth National Recreation Area is a community-based, long-term strategy for the SNRA that was developed in 2006 by a broad spectrum of organizations and individuals. At the dinner, organizers want to share their successes so far with the community, while continuing the open dialogue that got the project this far.

The event starts at 5 p.m. All are encouraged to bring a side dish or dessert to share, as well as a beverage. Hamburgers, hot dogs, condiments and table service will be provided.

Obama administration extends roadless moratorium for a year

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — The Obama administration Friday extended for another year the moratorium on most logging and mining in millions of acres of remote and rugged backcountry sections of national forests. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack said from Washington, D.C., he wants to continue to give decisions on projects in roadless areas a higher level of scrutiny while waiting for federal courts to resolve the legal issues. The idea of preserving roadless areas for wildlife habitat and clean water came out of the Clinton administration. The Bush administration tried to open them up to more logging and mining by giving states control. Conservation groups and the timber industry both welcomed the moratorium due to the continued questions over the legal standing of the policy. Once those are resolved, conservationists would like to see continued protections for roadless areas, while the timber industry wants more thinning projects to reduce wildfire danger and insect infestations. National forests in 39 states have a total of 58.5 million acres of roadless areas that have been formally placed on an inventory. Historically, they were not logged or mined due to their remote and rugged geography. But the land became a battleground between conservation groups and the timber industry during the 1990s, when national forest logging was cut back to protect fish and wildlife such as the northern spotted owl and salmon.

The moratorium does not apply in Idaho, which developed its own roadless rule during the Bush administration. Colorado has submitted a roadless plan that has yet to be approved. "The roadless rule stands to this day as the most significant forest conservation measure to happen in our lifetimes," said Marty Hayden, legislative director for Earthjustice. "You've got something on the order of 60 million Americans whose water literally begins in our national forests, and most of that water begins in roadless areas." If the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upholds the roadless rule, Hayden said he expected the Obama administration to stand pat with the 2001 rule. Jane Danowitz, director of the public lands program at the Pew Environment Group, said the extension of the moratorium was good news, and pointed out the need to reform the 1872 Mining Law, a longtime goal of environmental groups. The 2001 Roadless Rule allows some logging and road construction to reduce wildfire danger, improve forest health and wildlife habitat, and to serve pre-existing mineral leases. Under the old moratorium, Vilsack approved 21 projects in Nevada, Utah, Washington, Colorado, Wyoming, Alaska and Oregon, including thinning to reduce the danger of wildfire, moving a trailhead and campground, drilling methane wells for an existing coal mine and cleaning up a mining operation.

Zip line plan still being shopped around

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

JEROME — Don't think the proposed mechanized zip line across the Snake River Canyon is dead — its handlers are merely looking around. Jody Tatum of Magic Valley Flight Simulation LLC showed their business proposal to the Jerome County Commission this week in what both parties described as more a courtesy call than a push for approval. Tatum said they are canvassing the Magic Valley looking for private property to build their attraction. The Twin Falls City Planning and Zoning Commission denied the company's proposal in February, saying that it would qualify as an amusement park ride and didn't fit with the canyon rim's open-space zone. The zip line was billed as "the world's first powered zip line" and would have flown its riders at speeds of up to 90 mph on a 1.3 mile round-trip ride. The P&Z meeting left the LLC looking at rim-side private property across the Magic Valley. "The Jerome County presentation) is pretty much the same thing that we brought to the (city's) Planning and Zoning Commission," Tatum said. "I'm hoping that within the next month or two we're going to have a few private properties and something to go to the Twin Falls (city) Planning and Zoning Commission with." The presentation impressed at least one commissioner: small-businessman Charlie Howell. "I think with the business proposal and it being on private property, it sounds reasonable," he said. The county commission has no say in the project now, however, because it would be on private property. It was the second time the Jerome commissioners have heard a presentation about the zip-line technology. The powered line's inventor, Martin Tilley, visited with the commission about possible sites in 2009. Nothing came of it then, in part due to conflicts with the county's Snake River Canyon Park and preservation zone on the north canyon rim.

attempted 5,000 feet underwater, and public fascination is high. BP, under pressure from Congress, made available a live video feed of what is going on underwater, and about 3,000 websites were showing a version of it that the PBS "Newshour" offered for free. On Thursday alone, show spokeswoman Anne Bell said, more than a million people watched it. Many found it hypnotic. "It made me wonder how I use energy and if this situation could teach us how much energy we use ourselves," said Jeb Banner, 38, a web design and marketing company owner in Indianapolis who has been looking at the feed every hour or so since before the top kill started. "It felt like a historic moment." It was difficult to tell sometimes how the top kill was going. On Friday, reporters received a note from a BP spokesman saying information on it is now considered "stock-market sensitive" and updates can be provided only in "formal settings," though BP's CEO talked about it on the morning news shows. Meanwhile, President Obama visited the coast to see the damage as he tried to emphasize that his administration was in control of the crisis, which began April 20 when the Deepwater Horizon drilling platform blew up. Eleven workers were killed. "I'm here to tell you that you are not alone, you will not be abandoned, you will not be left behind," he told people in Grand Isle, where the beach has been closed by gobs of oil and the frustration and anger are palpable. "The media may get tired of the story, but we will not. We will be on your side and we will see this through." Hundreds of workers hit the beaches ahead of Obama's visit, cleaning debris from the shoreline before they hopped on buses and left soon after the president arrived. "This is the cleanest I've ever seen the beach," Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal said. "We saw a surge of activity the last couple of days. Let's hope it continues now that he's gone." Watching the video could offer clues to who is winning in the battle — BP or the oil — said Tony Wood, director of the National Spill Control School at Texas A&M University in Corpus Christi. If the stuff coming out of the pipe is jet black, it is mostly oil and BP is losing. If it is whitish, it is mostly gas and BP is also losing. If it is muddy brown, as it was Friday, that may be a sign that BP is starting to achieve success, he said. That "may in fact mean that there's mud coming up and mud coming down as well," which is better than oil coming out, Wood said.

PUC approves cost adjustment

Customer rates to decline

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

Rates for Idaho Power Company customers will decrease an average 5.2 percent Tuesday as the result of four rate adjustments approved Friday by state regulators.

The Idaho Public Utilities Commission approved the annual Power Cost Adjustment, an average 6.5 percent decrease, and three smaller increases.

The percentage of decrease will vary because the adjustments don't apply to all customers. For residential customers, the decrease is 3.2 percent and the overall rate decrease — even after the increases in the three other cases — is 1.4 percent.

This year's cost of supplying power to customers is expected to be $42.2 million, far less than 2009's $188.9 million, resulting in a cost reduction of $146.7 million.

Idaho Power agreed in January to lower customer costs by using $88.7 million of the savings in permanent base rates. Idaho Power officials say base rates will not increase again until January 2012 at the earliest. The remaining $58 million of the PCA reduction will go to customers — also lowering customer costs from from 1.4 cents per kWh to 0.31 cents per kWh.

However, part of the savings in supplying power to customers will also be used to pay for the installation of automated meters.

Idaho Power is expected to spend $2.36 million during the second year of a three-year process of installing automated meters.

The new meters will eventually allow customers to monitor electric prices and adjust their use to take advantage of lower price-periods. Idaho Power submitted a cost estimate of $71 million for the project and will absorb any costs above that. So far, Idaho Power has spent $47.3 million.

The advanced meters can be read from a remote location, negating the need for an Idaho Power representative to access customer properties. They can provide the company and individual customers with hourly meter readings and inform customers of current electric prices, allowing them to manage their use and reduce their bills.

MDU Technologies opens customer service center in Meridian

Times-News

Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter joined company officials and local dignitaries Thursday in announcing the opening of MDU Utilities Group's new customer service center in Meridian, from which Intermountain Gas and three sister companies serve more than 950,000 customers in eight states.

The facility in The CORE economic development area of Meridian, near Interstate 84, will have at least 140 employees when it is fully deployed by early next year. Eighty-five full-time employees already are on the job, and training of additional new customer service representatives is under way.

North Dakota-based MDU Utilities Group, which includes Intermountain Gas, Montana-Dakota Utilities, Cascade Natural Gas and Great Plains Natural Gas, serves customers in Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota.

Terri Shoen, director of the customer service center, said MDU Utilities Group chose the Idaho location over possible sites in four other states based on the quality of employees available.

Sid Moreno, of Moorpark, Calif., prepares to drive off the lot in a 29-foot motor home at Expedition Motor Homes in Calabasas, Calif., before heading for a Memorial Day vacation. High unemployment, stock markets in retreat and other indicators of a fragile economy help explain why, on the cusp of the Memorial Day holiday weekend 2010, travelers are planning their trips cautiously.

Key index shows expansion for eighth straight month

By Courtney Schlisserman
Bloomberg News writer

WASHINGTON — Business activity expanded in May for an eighth straight month, a sign manufacturing has yet to be affected by the turmoil in financial markets.

The Institute for Supply Management-Chicago Inc. said Friday that its business barometer stood 59.7 this month. Figures greater than 50 signal expansion.

Rising sales and lean inventories are prompting companies to boost production and hiring, helping to broaden the economic recovery. Companies such as General Electric and Deere are among those saying the global economic rebound is strong enough to weather the effects of the European debt crisis.

"Clearly the factory sector continues to move ahead at a very healthy clip though it's slowed somewhat from the torrid April pace," said Richard DeKaser, chief economist at Woodley Park Research in Washington, who correctly forecast the decline from April to May. "We're coming down to a more sustainable pace."

Consumer spending unexpectedly stalled in April as Americans used growing wages to rebuild savings, figures from the Commerce Department also showed Friday.

The Labor Department is scheduled to release its monthly employment report on June 4. Manufacturers boosted payrolls in each of the past four months, the most successive gains since 2006. Factory employment has grown by 101,000 workers this year.

For vacationers, another

SCALED-BACK SUMMER

By Harry R. Weber
Associated Press writer

Americans aren't in the mood to spend much on travel this summer.

More people are expected to hit the road than did last year, but their budgets will be tighter because of high unemployment, stock markets in retreat and a still-fragile economy. The Commerce Department said Friday that consumer spending was stagnant in April and is at its weakest level in seven months. The savings rate rose last month, showing that more people are holding on to their money in uncertain economic times.

Auto club AAA says about 28 million Americans will take road trips over the Memorial Day holiday weekend, 1.6 million more than last year.

AAA estimates families will spend an average of $809 on summer travel, compared with $876 in 2009, even though flying is more expensive than it was a year ago.

They're knocking down the cost, travel agents say, by staying closer to home, choosing less-expensive modes of transportation or by picking destinations based on the best fares and lodging they can find.

While the economy is recovering, travel has bounced back slowly, says Steve Piraino, senior economist at IHS Global Insight. His firm attributes it to high unemployment, still hovering near 10 percent.

Hotels and resorts are trying to entice people into longer stays with lower rates or discounts at restaurants and spas. As a result, the average room rate is down slightly to about $95, according to travel research firm STR. It was $107 just two years ago.

The vast majority of Americans drive to their summer vacation spots, and they should get a break at the pump in the weeks ahead. The nationwide average for gas is $2.75 a gallon, and analysts think it could fall as low as $2.65 by July 4.

For fliers, finding a deal will be more difficult. During the recession, airlines cut back on the number of planes they fly, and fewer available seats means higher fares. From June through August, domestic airfares are 24 percent higher than last year, averaging $321 per round trip, according to fare-tracking website Bing Travel.

Weaker euro could strengthen European economy

The Euro monument is illuminated in front of the European Central Bank (ECB) in downtown Frankfurt, Germany. How low can the euro go? Economists think the 16-country currency is headed significantly lower because of the Europe's government debt crisis.

By Colleen Barry
and Greg Keller
Associated Press writer

MILAN — How low can the euro go? Many economists think the 16-country currency is headed for a significant decline because of Europe's government debt crisis.

Some are even predicting that by next year the euro will sink to what's called parity against the U.S. dollar — 1 euro equals $1, a level last seen in July 2002 and an 18 percent slide from Friday's $1.23.

Such a decline would take some of the shine off Europe's vaunted project in a shared currency. And it would cut European's purchasing power for imports. But if it happens gradually enough, the slide in the euro's exchange rate could help exports and provide the boost Europe's troubled economy needs.

Export-focused companies would be more competitive on price outside the eurozone, likely boosting their revenue and helping to remove the threat that Europe will drag down the global economy and stock markets.

With a lower euro, Parisian hotel owners could sell more Left Bank hotel rooms to tourists from North America, while Italy would surely sell more shoes and textiles. And Spain just might be able to turn over some of that vacant seaside property left from a U.S.-style real estate bubble.

And since China and other Asian countries link their currency to the dollar, the euro would weaken in that direction as well and help trade with Asia.

All that would come as a relief to U.S. officials and investors, who have seen Europe's troubles weigh on stocks and expectations for the world economy in the past several weeks.

Exports have been a key factor lifting Europe out of recession. In the fourth quarter of 2009, exports from the eurozone rose 1.9 percent over the prior quarter and totalled 838 billion euros — or 36 percent of eurozone economic output.

End of the year forecasts for the euro range anywhere from $1.15 to $1.22. One of those seeing $1.00 in 2011 is BNP Paribas currency strategist Hans Redeker.

"There are a lot of negative events taking place and that means the euro is going to stay under pressure for the time being," Redeker said. "But at the end of the day, we need a substantially undervalued euro to keep the euro zone together."

Oil rises above $72 a barrel as traders mull Europe impact

The Associated Press

SINGAPORE — Oil prices rose to above $72 a barrel Thursday in Asia as investors mulled the impact slower European economic growth could have on global crude demand.

Benchmark crude for July delivery was up 85 cents to $72.36 a barrel at late afternoon Singapore time in electronic trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

The contract added $2.76 to settle at $71.51 on Wednesday.

Oil has dropped from $87.15 a barrel earlier this month amid investor concern that Europe's debt crisis will undermine a global economic recovery. Some analysts expect oil prices to move higher once the Europe crisis stabilizes and investors focus on surging crude demand in emerging countries.

Greece, Ireland, Spain and Portugal — four of the European countries with the biggest debt and fiscal problems — account for just 4 percent of the global economy and 2.6 percent of global crude demand, Barclays Capital said in a report.

“Persistent fears about the region's sovereign debt situation keep sentiment fragile and oil prices under pressure,” Barclays said. “The risk to oil prices is clearly skewed to the upside, once this initial fear about the eurozone fades and fundamentals return to being the focus of the market.”

In other Nymex trading in June contracts, heating oil rose 2.13 cents to $1.9420 a gallon, and gasoline gained 0.96 cent to $1.980 a gallon. Natural gas was steady at $4.186 per 1,000 cubic feet.

In London, the Brent crude July contact was up 68 cents to $72.42 on the ICE futures exchange.

Always room for one more at the Mazurs' house

CHEERS: To the Mazurs of Declo, a truly remarkable family.

Steve and Debbie Mazur, having raised six children of their own and have taken in a dozen more.

Many of them are last-chance kids from Third World countries previously adopted by Americans who subsequently relinquished them.

Some of the Mazurs' children came from Haiti. Others were born in Ghana and Liberia.

Ten of the couple's younger children have already been adopted. Luc, 12, Elizabeth, 11, Marie, 10, Nicholas, 10, Matthew, 10, Rachel 10, Hannah, 8, John, 6, Naomi, 6 and Abby, 5, have been home-schooled and home-raised since each arrived in Declo.

The newest additions — Sean, 11, and Becca, 9 — will have their adoptions finalized soon.

Many of the Mazurs' adoptive children have missing hands, a cleft lip, or came from the kind of poverty unimaginable to most Americans.

Although they don't wear designer clothes and Debbie saves money by making her own laundry soap, the Mazurs take trips and enjoy outings like any other family.

Once, at a mall they stopped and had special teddy bears made for all the children. While paying for their purchases, the clerk asked Steve if he would like to donate a dollar to “save the children.”

He smiled at her and said, “Ma'am, I already am.”

May we all find that kind of joy in doing what's right.

JEERS: Steamed about the results of this week's Idaho primary election? You only have yourself to blame if you were among the 73 percent of registered voters who found something better to do last Tuesday.

Some observers were expecting a record turnout in the supercharged political atmosphere of the moment. It didn't happen.

Monday is Memorial Day, a commemoration of some of your fellow citizens who gave up their lives to preserve your right to vote.

Don't dishonor their memories by staying home for the general election on Nov. 3.

CHEERS: To the patrons of the Mountain Home School District, for digging deeper in their pockets Thursday to save district's sports and other activity programs.

Had the $2.8 million levy failed, the district would have had to eliminate all extracurricular activities. Thursday's vote saved those programs.

Despite the levy's approval, the district will still cut more than $1 million from its budget and teachers will see a 4 percent cut in pay while district administrators will take a 6.5 percent reduction. That's a consequence of the Legislature's cut in state support for public schools.

It's a spring of difficult choices for many Idaho communities, as the failure of levies in Hansen and Hagerman has shown. Good for the citizens of Mountain Home for stepping up when they were needed.

Lawmakers urged to raise cigarette tax

As a committee of more than 20 volunteers who are working to conquer cancer here in the Mini-Cassia area, we believe in prevention of the disease as well as treatment advancements. Tobacco use is one of the most preventable causes of cancer encountered. This year alone, 1,500 adults here in Idaho will die from smoking. One hundred youth in Idaho will become new daily smokers this month. Kids will buy and smoke more than 4.1 million packs of cigarettes this year. Overall, tobacco use currently costs Idaho $319 million a year in health-care related costs. By raising the existing tobacco tax by at least $1, Idaho would enjoy an increase in revenue by at least $46.4 million a year. This revenue could go directly into the Medicaid budget to help fund smoking cessation programs along with helping reduce the Medicaid budget shortfall in general. Increasing the cost of cigarettes will prevent 9,800 Idaho youth from ever becoming addicted. We have heard about the difficult budget decisions our legislators have faced this past year. This is an easy fix. Raise the tax and you'll decrease the health impact on Idaho citizens while also raising funds for smoking-related costs to the state. We would ask that our legislators move forward with this sensible solution this coming session.

There is a right way to be an immigrant

Theodore Roosevelt's ideas on immigrants and being an American in 1907: “In the first place, we should insist that if the immigrant who comes here in good faith becomes an American and assimilates himself to us, he shall be treated on an exact equality with everyone else, for it is an outrage to discriminate against any such man because of creed, or birthplace or origin. But this is predicated upon the person's becoming in every facet an American and nothing but an American ... There can be no divided allegiance here. Any man who says he is an American. but something else also, isn't an American at all. We have room for but one flag, the American flag ... We have room for but one language here, and that is the English language ... And we have room for but one sole loyalty and that is a loyalty to the American people.” (taken from the Internet). On a personal note, there is no such thing as an European-American, white-American, African-American or Mexican-American or any other type of American, well, except Native Americans — after all, they were here first, but we are all Americans now. Be proud of what you have become, enjoy your heritage, but we are all Americans first, English is our language, use it. You know we have a lot of problems in this country of ours right now, a government that won't pay attention to us and is very corrupt. It's our responsibility to make this government work for us again not against us; let get this thing fixed together and again be proud of your heritage, but also be proud to be an American. If you support illegal entry into this country, then you support breaking our laws. Maybe we should revoke your citizenship and send you back to your country of origin. That includes any government officials and the American Civil Liberties Union; shame on you both. Viva, Arizona. And remember, “A house divided cannot stand” (Abraham Lincoln).

Why Rand Paul doesn't have an 'off' switch

No ideology survives the collision with real-world politics perfectly intact. General principles have to bend to accommodate the complexities of history, and justice is sometimes better served by compromise than by zealous intellectual consistency.

This was all that Rand Paul needed to admit, after his victory in Kentucky's Republican Senate primary, when NPR and Rachel Maddow asked about his views of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. “As a principled critic of federal power,” he could have said, “I oppose efforts to impose Washington's will on states and private institutions. As a student of the history of segregation and slavery, however, I would have made an exception for the Civil Rights Act.”

But Paul just couldn't help himself. He had to play Hamlet, to hem and haw about the distinction between public and private discrimination, to insist on his sympathy for the civil rights movement while conspicuously avoiding saying that he would have voted for the bill that outlawed segregation.

Under duress, he finally said it. But the tap-dancing route he took to get there was offensive, tone deaf and politically crazy.

It was also sadly typical of the political persuasion that Rand Paul represents.

This persuasion shouldn't be confused with the Tea Party movement, whose inchoate anti-deficit enthusiasms Paul rode to victory earlier this month. Nor is it just libertarianism in general, a label that gets slapped on everyone from Idaho militia members to Silicon Valley utopians to pro-choice Republicans in Greenwich, Conn.

Paul is a libertarian, certainly, but more importantly he's a particular kind of a libertarian. He's culturally conservative, radically noninterventionist, and so stringently constitutionalist that he views nearly everything today's federal government does as a violation of the Founding Fathers' vision.

This worldview goes by many names, including “paleoconservatism,” “the old right” and “paleoliberalism.” But its adherents — Paul and his father, Ron, included — view themselves as America's only true conservatives, arguing that the modern conservative movement has sold out to both big government and the military-industrial complex.

Instead of celebrating the usual Republican pantheon, paleoconservatives identify with the “beautiful losers” of American history, to borrow a phrase from the paleocon journalist Sam Francis — the anti-imperialists who opposed the Spanish-American War, the libertarians who stood athwart the New Deal yelling “stop,” the

“Like many outside-the-box thinkers, they're good at applying their principles more consistently than your average partisan, but lousy at knowing when to stop.”

Midwestern Republicans who objected to the growth of the national security state after World War II. And they offer an ideological synthesis that's well outside either political party's mainstream — antiwar and antiabortion, against the Patriot Act but in favor of a border fence, and skeptical of the drug war and the welfare state alike.

In an age of lockstep partisanship, there's a lot to admire about this unusual constellation of ideas, and its sweeping critique of American politics as usual. There's a reason that both Rand and Ron Paul have inspired so much visceral enthusiasm, especially among younger voters, while attracting an eclectic cross-section of supporters — hipsters and NRA members, civil libertarians and Christian conservatives, and stranger bedfellows still.

The problem is that paleoconservatives are self-marginalizing, and self-destructive.

Like many groups that find themselves in intellectually uncharted territory, they have trouble distinguishing between ideas that deserve a wider hearing and ideas that are crankish or worse.

Like many outside-the-box thinkers, they're good at applying their principles more consistently than your average partisan, but lousy at knowing when to stop.

And like many self-conscious iconoclasts, they tend to drift in ever-more extreme directions, reveling in political incorrectness even as they leave common sense and common decency behind.

It isn't surprising that two of the most interesting “paleo” writers of the last few decades, Francis and Joseph Sobran, ended their careers way out on the racist or anti-Semitic fringe. It isn't a coincidence that the most successful “paleo” presidential candidate, Pat Buchanan, opposes not only America's interventions in Iraq, but the West's involvement in World War II as well. It isn't surprising that Ron Paul kept company in the 1990s with acolytes who attached his name to bigoted pamphleteering.

And it shouldn't come as a shock that his son found himself publicly undone, in what should have been his moment of triumph, because he was too proud to acknowledge the limits of ideology, and to admit that a principle can be pushed too far.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Doonesbury

By Garry Trudeau

Mallard Fillmore

By Bruce Tinsley

The Scots were right; the French were wrong

When I was in college I took a course in the Enlightenment. In those days, when people spoke of the Enlightenment, they usually meant the French Enlightenment — thinkers like Descartes, Rousseau, Voltaire and Condorcet.

These were philosophers who confronted a world of superstition and feudalism and sought to expose it to the clarifying light of reason. Inspired by the scientific revolution, they had great faith in the power of individual reason to detect error and logically arrive at universal truth.

Their great model was Descartes. He aimed to begin human understanding anew. He'd discard the accumulated prejudices of the past and build from the ground up, erecting one logical certainty upon another.

What Descartes was doing for knowledge, others would do for politics: sweep away the old precedents and write new constitutions based on reason. This was the aim of the French Revolution.

But there wasn't just one Enlightenment, headquartered in France. There was another, headquartered in Scotland and Britain and led by David Hume, Adam Smith and Edmund Burke. As Gertrude Himmelfarb wrote in her 2004 book, "The Roads to Modernity," if the members of the French Enlightenment focused on the power of reason, members of the British Enlightenment emphasized its limits.

They put more emphasis on our sentiments. People are born with natural desires to be admired and to be worthy of admiration. They are born with moral emotions, a sense of fair play and benevolence. They are also born with darker passions, like self-love and tribalism, which mar rationalist enterprises. We are emotional creatures first and foremost, and politics should not forget that.

These two views of human nature produced different attitudes toward political change, articulated most brilliantly by Thomas Paine and Edmund Burke. Their views are the subject of a superb dissertation by Yuval Levin at the University of Chicago called "The Great Law of Change."

As Levin shows, Paine believed that societies exist in an "eternal now." That something has existed for ages tells us nothing about its value. The past is dead and the living should use their powers of analysis to sweep away existing arrangements when necessary, and begin the world anew. He even suggested that laws should expire after 30 years so each new generation could begin again.

Paine saw the American and French Revolutions as models for his sort of radical change. In each country, he felt, the revolutionaries deduced certain universal truths about the rights of man and then designed a new society to fit them.

Burke, a participant in the British Enlightenment, had a different vision of change. He believed that each generation is a small part of a long chain of history. We serve as trustees for the wisdom of the ages and are obliged to pass it down, a little improved, to our descendants. That wisdom fills the gaps in our own reason, as age-old institutions implicitly contain more wisdom than any individual could have.

Burke was horrified at the thought that individuals would use abstract reason to sweep away arrangements that had stood the test of time. He believed in continual reform, but reform is not novelty. You don't try to change the fundamental substance of an institution.

You try to modify from within, keeping the good parts and adjusting the parts that aren't working.

If you try to re-engineer society on the basis of abstract plans, Burke argued, you'll end up causing all sorts of fresh difficulties, because the social organism is more complicated than you can possibly know. We could never get things right from scratch.

Burke also supported the American Revolution, but saw it in a different light than Paine. He believed the British Parliament had recklessly trampled upon the ancient liberties the colonists had come to enjoy. The Americans were seeking to preserve what they had.

We Americans have never figured out whether we are children of the French or the British Enlightenment. Was our founding a radical departure or an act of preservation? This was a bone of contention between Jefferson and Hamilton, and it's a bone of contention today, both between parties and within each one.

Today, if you look around American politics you see self-described conservative radicals who seek to sweep away 100 years of history and return government to its preindustrial role. You see self-confident Democratic technocrats who have tremendous faith in the power of government officials to use reason to control and reorganize complex systems. You see polemicists of the left and right practicing a highly abstract and ideological Jacobin style of politics.

The children of the British Enlightenment are in retreat. Yet there is the stubborn fact of human nature. The Scots were right, and the French were wrong. And out of that truth grows a style of change, a style that emphasizes modesty, gradualism and balance.

Are we safe with Obama protecting our borders?

Like a good Obama puppet, Presidente Calderon lectured America on our harsh immigration laws.

But Mexico's atrocious immigration/deportation policies must have made him second choice speaker to Ahmadinejad, who apparently was too busy hosting prison tours for American mothers last week.

Then Mikey Posner crawls to China, apologizing for Arizona's law, the same China that shoots you in the face for crossing the Great Wall without papers. I imagine the meeting was interrupted early and often with updates of Tibetan executions for President Hu Jintao's amusement. Did Jintao ever ask about the 53 Chinese illegals caught in Arizona's desert last March? Clinton will probably be praising North Korea for their tolerant immigration policies if Kim Jong can break away from his latest game of Battleship. With Obama, Napolitano, Holder and ICE head John Morton protecting our borders, how could we not feel safe?

They fear state laws they've never read while groveling to Third World dictators who imprison 300,000 political dissidents. Janet Napolitano (as governor of Arizona) once wrote a letter to Bush's administration demanding reimbursement for the hundreds of millions spent on illegals in her state and demanded border security. Her letter was ignored; coincidentally, she now heads the department that ignores those same letters. Now, Arizona police and border patrol report more gun battles than the 2nd Battalion in Afghanistan and Phoenix gets sympathy cards from Beirut for its kidnapping woes. The Obama answer is to transfer about 400 trained border patrol from the southern border to the Canadian border. And in a cosmetic show of concession to get congressional amnesty moving forward, 1,200 unarmed National Guard head to the border; a sixth of the soldiers originally requested, sent to battle AK-47s with radios. Basically, Obama's idea of protection is deploying Paul Blart, the Mall Cop. Bush must be smiling.

Celebrate 4th on the 4th

I have been following the news concerning the deliberation and decision from the Twin Falls City Council to move the festivities, notably the fireworks display at the College of Southern Idaho, from the Fourth of July to July 5 to accommodate those who are either offended at its display on a Sunday or would not be able to view it for that reason.

I am a devout worshipper and hold Sunday to be a most important day as well, but I must disagree with those who separate the Fourth of July from having religious significance. Albeit a primarily secular holiday for observance, think about how our forefathers regarded the providence and working of God as inseparably woven into this declaration. It was undeniably their regard for and dependence on God's blessings and grace that carried them not only through the turmoil leading up to and after the declaration was made but in the drafting, signing and upholding of the declaration itself. Look at the words contained within the declaration and see the emphasis placed on the presence and reliance on God and his interaction with the peoples of this nation and it will become totally clear. Our declaration, its framers and we, the blessed recipients, are inextricably linked to not only the earthly aspect of celebrating this event but even more so to the heavenly role that is inherent in the formation of our nation.

I realize that parades and some of the other regular celebrations may indeed be missed by those like me who will choose to be at worship instead of on the street. However, since the fireworks usually don't begin until dusk or later, I have no doubt that anyone wishing to view these wherever they may be should not have a problem as most evening worship services are concluded long before then. If special religious periods are reserved for this time of night, then that is when those who are devoted to such will observe them. That is no justifiable reason to alter the traditional celebration. I am totally devoted to worship at the time or times set aside to be with those of like faith but I do not hold others that do not share my beliefs to the same standard.

I would be overjoyed if absolutely everyone would recognize that our nation would not be a nation without God's direct working and influence but that simply is not the case, and such events as Fourth of July celebrations should not be postponed or eliminated from the actual day just because it happens to fall on a Sunday. Keep the Fourth on the Fourth.

STAN HURD

From Facebook, with caution

Six years ago, we built Facebook around a few simple ideas. People want to share and stay connected with their friends and the people around them. If we give people control over what they share, they will want to share more. If people share more, the world will become more open and connected. And a world that's more open and connected is a better world. These are still our core principles today.

Facebook has been growing quickly. It has become a community of more than 400 million people in just a few years. It's a challenge to keep that many people satisfied over time, so we move quickly to serve that community with new ways to connect with the social Web and each other. Sometimes we move too fast — and after listening to recent concerns, we're responding.

The challenge is how a network like ours facilitates sharing and innovation, offers control and choice, and makes this experience easy for everyone. These are issues we think about all the time. Whenever we make a change, we try to apply the lessons we've learned along the way. The biggest message we have heard recently is that people want easier control over their information. Simply put, our current controls are too confusing and complex. Our intention was to give you lots of granular controls, but we missed the mark.

We have heard the feedback. There needs to be a simpler way to control your information. In the coming weeks, we will add privacy controls that are much simpler to use. We will also give you an easy way to turn off all third-party services. We are working hard to make these changes available as soon as possible. We hope you'll be pleased with the result of our work and, as always, we'll be eager to get your feedback.

We have also heard that some people don't understand how their personal information is used and worry that it is shared in ways they don't want. I'd like to clear that up now. Many people choose to make some of their information visible to everyone so people they know can find them on Facebook. We already offer controls to limit the visibility of that information and we intend to make them even stronger.

Here are the principles under which Facebook operates:

- You have control over how your information is shared.
- We do not share your personal information with people or services you don't want.
- We do not give advertisers access to your personal information.
- We do not and never will sell any of your information to anyone.
- We will always keep Facebook a free service for everyone.

Mark Zuckerberg is founder and chief executive of Facebook. He wrote this commentary for The Washington Post.

Prepare for a safer yard sale

Q: I have had problems with theft at my yard sales. Two years ago, a woman came on my property and took what she wanted, walked right past me, smiling, and then got into her car and left. I got her license plate number and car make, but nothing was ever done. Last year, it happened again, and I wasn't able to identify the thief. This has also happened to other people I have talked to and we are sick of it. Is there anything legally we can do to protect ourselves and our property, like charge them with trespassing or something?

A: Yes, quit having yard sales. But seriously, there are some things you can do to prevent or discourage theft at your yard sale. The first thing you could do is put the most valuable items near the area you use as a checkout stand, or even behind it. This gives you a better eye and the ability to control those items. Stores use this tactic all the time to keep their valuable items from walking out the door.

You should also remove any items that have their own case, such as CDs or video games. These items are easy to hide and you might not be the wiser if you think the case still has the item inside. What I learned is that you can simply put the CDs or games in an area where you can put them back in the case for the buyer.

Another legal trick you could use would be to videotape the yard sale. It is perfectly legal and might also make a thief think twice. I would even go so far as telling you to put the camera in plain sight, but not where somebody might pick it up or steal it thinking it was for sale.

If you catch somebody stealing things at your yard sale, by all means you can and should charge the person with theft. Chances are that the thief has stolen from other yard sales as well. You can also have them charged with trespassing if something was taken from you while on your property.

One last thing you could do is use price labels that are unusual and don't look like everybody else's. This can help the police identify items if they catch the thief away from the scene with your priceless yard-sale treasures.

On the subject of yard sales, let me give you a warning that I'm sure applies in almost all cities. Yard sale signs usually are not permitted to be placed on poles or street signs. No signs can be posted at all on any stop sign except those allowed by law (usually saying to buckle up). That'll get you a regular infraction ticket and ruin the profits of your yard sale.

MADD to offer victim services in Twin Falls

Following assessments conducted by the Idaho Transportation Department and National Highway Traffic Safety administration, Mothers Against Drunk Driving victim's services has been granted funds to introduce victim advocates to serve victims and survivors of drunk driving in Coeur d'Alene (Region 1) and Twin Falls (Region 5). Both regions showed that the number of injury or fatality crashes that involved alcohol were higher than the state and national average. MADD Idaho, headquartered in Boise, was granted Victims of Crime Act funding for victim advocates to serve in these underrepresented areas.

MADD's mission is to stop drunk driving, support victims and prevent underage drinking. If you or someone you know has been injured or killed by drunk driving, or if you want to know more about volunteer opportunities available in your community, contact Christina Schorzman, MADD Victim Advocate, 320-6417 or Christina.Schorzman@madd.org.

NEW SIGNS IN HAGERMAN

The Hagerman Chamber of Commerce recently purchased street signs, installed last week, that highlight Hagerman activities. Mark Bolduc and Phil Gossi donated their time, truck and tools to make sure the signs were up before the annual Fossil Days celebration on Memorial Day weekend.

Teen feels overwhelmed by pressure from parents, teachers

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm 17 and having difficulties meeting the expectations of my parents and teachers. The pressure is really strong and is a burden on the already heavy load I'm carrying. Can you help?

sure. The many theories of this phenomenon do little to solve the problem of what this is and what can be done about it. While the medical director of a local private school for 33 years, I saw the multifaceted consequences of this ubiquitous blight. Neither the problems nor the consequences have changed much over the years and, in fact, they may have exacerbated. All we need do is read the daily newspaper or watch television to see the horror stories unfurl when students and faculty are pressed too hard. There seems to exist two basic classes of student pressure — external and internal.

External pressure, either flamboyant or insidious, is delivered up by the environment. For example, consider pressure from teachers. "I don't care that you've got a two-hour test tomorrow; tonight's history assignment is STILL 60 pages!" Or from parents: "If I'm going to send you to a fancy private school, you should try harder to get good grades!" Or from peers: "Oh, c'mon. One little puff or a can of beer isn't going to kill you!"

External pressure can be destructive if it takes the form of unrealistic expectations that students may find difficult or impossible to meet. Such demands can be seen in the teacher who flunks three-quarters of an entire class or in a parent who insists that his child must attend an Ivy League college. Students who accomplish goals solely to please their parents or other adults may become unhappy achievers under a

WH had Clinton try to ease Sestak out of race

WASHINGTON (AP) — Forced to disclose backstage political bargaining, President Obama's embarrassed White House said on Friday it had enlisted Bill Clinton to try to ease Rep. Joe Sestak out of Pennsylvania's Senate primary with a job offer.

Nothing wrong with that, the White House said. Oh, yes, there was, Republicans countered.

The administration admission — it said Chief of Staff Rahm Emanuel had asked the former president to call Sestak — left many questions unanswered, and it seemed unlikely the issue had been put to rest. For Obama, the revelations called into question his repeated promises to run an open government that was above back room deals. And for Sestak, they raised questions why he kept talking about up the offer — a 60-second conversation, he said Friday — in the first place.

"I wasn't interested, and that was the bottom line," Sestak said on the steps of the Capitol.

Seeking to quiet the clamor over a possible political trade, the White House released a report describing the offer that was intended to clear a path for Sen. Arlen Specter to win the Democratic nomination. Sestak stayed in the race and eventually defeated Specter to become the Democratic nominee, ending Specter's 30-year Senate tenure.

After a week of silence, Sestak answered reporters' questions on last summer's offer.

He said he cut Clinton short after hearing only a few words about a possible post on a presidential board and said the former president immediately dropped the subject during a phone call.

"There was nothing wrong that was done," Sestak said.

White House Counsel Robert Bauer rendered his own verdict in a two-page report that said there was no improper conduct in the offer. No one in the administration discussed the offer with Sestak, Bauer said. The report did not say what, if any, contacts or promises the White House had with Specter on the matter. It also did not reveal whether Obama was aware of Clinton's role.

White House lawyers prepared the summary weeks ago and earlier this week shared it with representatives for Sestak and for Clinton. Bauer based his determination on conversations with White House officials and did not speak directly with Sestak or Clinton before reaching a conclusion.

The report didn't impress Republicans.

Rep. Darrell Issa, the top Republican on the House oversight committee who unsuccessfully had sought a Department of Justice investigation, said Obama had become a part of the Washington culture he decried.

"It's pretty clear from the White House statement that they intended to get him out of the race by offering him a position, and that's illegal and it's unethical," Issa said just moments after Sestak spoke.

Victory Home receives check for new roof

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

An anonymous donor provided Victory Home with a check for $5,000 this week to help fund a new roof.

The check was received Thursday, said home director

Tony Lopez.

Victory Home, a Bible-based treatment facility that helps drug users and gang members find Jesus and overcome their addictions, held a fundraising event on May 8. But Lopez said there wasn't much of a turnout, with little funds garnered from the event.

Roofing materials, estimated at $7,500, will replace old shingling that was in place when Victory Home, in 2008, took over the building at 450 Third Ave. W., Twin Falls. The shingling and sheetrock is damaged, Lopez said, causing water to leak into the attic. TCA Roofing of Twin Falls has opted to donate free labor, he said, but the facility needs to pay for the materials for the 7,200-square-foot roof. It costs about $3,500 a month to operate the non-profit home, which can accommodate between 12 and 16 people.

The check is a Godsend, said Lopez, who is grateful for the group that donated the money.

"This is an answer to our prayer," he said. "This will open the door so others will see that, hey, this is a worthwhile cause."

Young adults choose a different kind of faith

By Taya Flores
Journal & Courier

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Monica Perkins of Attica said she does not ascribe to any faith or religion.

"I really don't think a religion should tell you how to live your life," the 20-year-old said. "I think living on Earth is hell and when we die, we all go to heaven."

Perkins is one of the many Millennials, those born between 1980 and 1991, who are less devoted to faith. Most American young adults rarely read the Bible or other sacred texts, attend church or pray, according to a recent survey of 1,200 Millennials conducted in August 2009 by LifeWay Research, a research firm for church leaders.

Rev. Shawn Zambrows, pastor of the Baptist Student Foundation at Purdue University, said she has noticed young people steadily drift away from church life.

"I think that the numbers have been going down for a long time, not just this generation," she said. "More and more students are growing up without a religious background. Another part is this post-modern mindset. I think they look at spiritual things differently and religious establishments have not been able to communicate to them in the way they think."

While the majority of young adults may be outside the church, other local ministers said passionate devotees do exist.

"The statistics paint a pretty bleak picture but there is a whole other story of college students who really are committed and who are doing amazing things in their lives," said Rob Schruppf, minister of teaching for Purdue Christian Campus House.

Alex Balingit has one of those stories. After a troubled adolescence full of drugs and alcohol, he found redemption in the Christian faith, he said.

"I cried out (to God) and that is when he revealed Himself to me," the 22-year-old graduating senior said. "When God became real to me that's when my whole entire world was flipped upside down ... Jesus became my drug."

Once a self-proclaimed atheist, he has been actively involved with Campus House for about three years.

Krin Baer and Bethany Landis are also young adults involved with Campus House. "I was raised in what I would call a nominal Christian household ... but I never really understood who Jesus was or who God was," said 22-year-old Baer. "So I started to search for answers and it has always led me back to Jesus."

Landis was raised in a Christian home but eventually became jaded with religion by the time she came to college. "I had a lot of questions about hypocrisy that I saw within the church," the 24-year-old said. "I wanted to express myself the way I felt I had been made. I wanted to vote how I wanted to vote and think and question. I like science and it seemed like the church was opposed to those things."

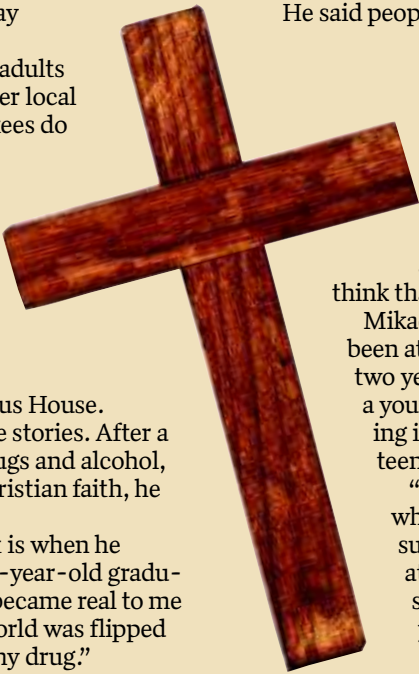

Although her own search led her back to the church, she said that same disenchantment with organized religion might be a barrier for other young people.

Pastor Paul Barrett, of Second Baptist Church in Lafayette, said even in light of a national drift away from the church, young people are still open to spiritual guidance. "I've seen people who may not come to church who will stop me and say, 'Pastor will you pray for me,'" he said.

He said people in the church need to reach out to the young adults who have not been raised in the church. "Unlike their parents and grandparents there are a lot more opportunities to do other things that might be more appealing than sitting in church," he said. "There are a lot more distractions. I think that's why it makes it difficult."

Mikaela Nweke of Lafayette has been attending Second Baptist for two years. She became a Christian at a young age but did not start applying its principles to her life until her teenage years.

"I was going through a point where I experienced attempted suicide, neglect and child abuse at an early age," the 25-year-old said. "It was a test. That's when you realize that no matter what, (God) is still there."

LDS church presents Family Values award to Lutheran couple

By Terri Johnson
For the Times-News

BURLEY — The first Mini-Cassia Family Values award was presented by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to Leonard and Betty Martin of Paul on May 7 at the Burley Best Western Inn.

The Martins were honored for preserving and defending family values of service, love, charity, loyalty, integrity and hard work within their own family, their beloved Lutheran Church and in the Mini-Cassia community where they have lived all their lives.

"Leonard and Betty have taught good works by example," said David Phillips, a neighbor and longtime friend of the Martins who introduced the couple to invited guests at the presentation. "They are not a flashy couple. They don't like to be recognized. But they give unbelievably of their time and talents to their family and their community."

Phillips explained how Leonard helped him face a difficult time in his life recently.

"When the Martins daughter, Brenda, died a few years ago," he said, "Leonard wondered why but then said that when God closes a door another one will open, just wait and see."

The Martins raised four children, two daughters and two sons. They have 12 grandchildren and six great grandchildren. They have served joyfully in their church and have participated in the community on various levels including fair boards, hospital boards, catlemen associations and in various ways supporting the youth of the community. Camp Perkins, located outside of Stanley, has received extensive support in time and resources from the Martins.

Elder J. Craig Rowe, an area leader of the LDS Church, presented the award. He praised the couple for their "exemplary family life" and counseled those in attendance to "look to them as an example of great family values."

Rowe said that of all the ways God could have sent us to Earth, he chose to send us to families. He noted further that families like the Martins give communities hope for a bright future.

Rowe presented the Martins with an original painting of Mount Harrison from Pelican Point painted by local artist Marilyn Miller and a framed copy of "The Family: A Proclamation to the World" both in honor of the "goodness of their lives in affecting so many people in a positive way."

Accepting the award, Leonard exclaimed, "What an honor this is for an old clodhopper like me. We are so honored to accept this award." He paid tribute to Betty, his wife of 57 years. "Without her I would be nothing, and without my Lord we would be nothing," he said.

Betty concurred, saying, "This is truly an honor and we are so touched to see all of you here."

The Family Values Award, which originated by the LDS Church in 1991, was inspired by the renewed emphasis on family issues in the United States. The award acknowledges community leaders who are "Striving to advance standards and values that are consistent with" those espoused by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and consistent with the church's position on the Family.

"It is not often we have the opportunity to know people of the caliber of (Leonard and Betty) Martin," Rowe said.

Retiring priest is ready for his next mission: cycling to fight poverty

By Jim Sullinger
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Five years ago, Matthew Ruhl, a 51-year-old Catholic priest, was riding a bike on the Katy Trail in Missouri on an early spring day when he had an inspiration.

"I would love to cycle across the country," he said. "And then a thought came to me that I could maybe do a lot of good for somebody. So I said to my little angel who suggested this, 'You show me what you want me to do and I'll do it.'"

Several months later, he listened to a presentation on a major poverty program by Catholic Charities and knew that the angel had answered. The goal of this national program is to cut the poverty rate in half by 2020.

"I wanted to promote Catholic Charities USA Campaign to Reduce Poverty," Ruhl said. "I just thought that is the most worthy and audacious endeavor I have heard of in a long time."

He began training shortly afterward for a 5,092-mile journey from Cape

Flattery in Washington state to Key West, Fla. He recruited 11 other people to ride with him on the 100-day trek, which begins this weekend and ends on Labor Day.

Ruhl gets up at 4 a.m. and walks three miles. Afternoons, he rides a bicycle 25 to 30 miles; on

After nine years at St. Francis Xavier Catholic Church in Kansas City, Father Matthew Ruhl, center, says his farewells to the congregation after his final mass Sunday in Kansas City, Mo. weekends, he makes one long ride of 50 to 80 miles.

On Sunday, Ruhl completed his final Mass as pastor of St. Francis Xavier Catholic Church, 5200 Troost Ave., and retired after serving the parish for more than eight years.

The team of 12 cyclists will have plenty of support for their journey.

"We have two vans, a trailer and a little chase car that will all be keeping an eye on us," Ruhl said.

He said all of the paths his group will follow on their journey are designated bicycle routes. Eleven members of the Cycling for Change team are from the Kansas City area. The 12th member is from Colorado Springs, Colo.

Thousands of additional riders are expected to join the team for segments of the ride as it moves across the country. Events supporting the poverty initiative have been planned in 85 cities along the way. Each rider raised $10,000 in private donations to defray the costs of the trip.

Another part of the preparation for the trip was prayer.

"I've sweated rosary beads over this," he said.

Hansen mission becomes fully-constituted church

Hansen Baptist Fellowship, which meets in Hansen Community Center at 340 W. Main St., celebrated Sunday, when the mission became a fully-constituted church. On hand for the 'constitution dinner' were 10 Southern Baptist pastors, from left, Richard Nevarez, Rupert First Baptist; Paul Krieger, Berean Baptist in Wendell; Larry Maxwell, Valley Baptist in Hagerman; Doug Stevenson, Hansen Baptist Fellowship; Dalton Ramsey, Jackpot Baptist and Three Creek Baptist; Paul Rodriguez, director of missions; David Grindstaff, Rogerson; and Manuel Vela, Lapuerta Hermoso. Not pictured were Ratu Kabakoros, First Southern Baptist in Twin Falls; and John Haeger, missions director for the Utah/Idaho Southern Baptist Convention in Salt Lake City. In all, about 60 people attended the celebration. Haeger delivered the message, saying Jesus himself began the first church. He said it's like a relay race with Jesus handing the baton to endless pastors of endless churches down through the ages, and that Jesus will be on hand to run the last lap of the race. Ramsey gave a blessing to the new church, with a challenge to continue. Larry and Betty Maxwell were presented a plaque commemorating Larry's 19th mission start. Bill and Eileen Pyron and Barbara Homan were honored as the church's first members. Jackpot Baptist Church was the sponsor of Hansen Mission when it started April 26, 2006, in the home of Bill and Eileen Pyron. It moved to the Community Center on July 8, 2006.

Former Episcopal bishop of Idaho dies

Rt. Rev. Harry Brown Bainbridge III, chairman emeritus of Episcopal Relief & Development and retired bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Idaho, died Thursday in Easton, Md. He was 70.

Since 2007, he had battled lung cancer and heart complications.

"Bishop Harry," as he was known by many, joined Episcopal Relief &

Development's board of directors in 2001, serving as board chairman from 2003 to 2008. During his tenure, the organization grew from a small granting program of the church to a large relief and development agency, serving the needs of more than two million people annually.

Bainbridge was the 12th bishop of the Diocese of Idaho. He served on the Standing Commission on Ministry Development of the Episcopal Church and as president of Province VIII.

In his first six years of ordained ministry, he served three congregations in the Episcopal Diocese of Tennessee. He then spent six years as assistant chaplain at the University of the South and as a teacher of religion at the Sewanee Academy, Tenn.

Catholic teacher fired after Facebook survey

FORT DODGE, Iowa — A teacher at a Catholic school in Fort Dodge has been fired after saying in a Facebook survey she did not believe in God.

Administrators of St. Edmond Catholic School fired 27-year-old Abby Nurre late last year, just months after she was hired as an eighth-grade math teacher.

The Des Moines Register reports that in August, she responded "No" to a Facebook members' poll in which she was asked whether she believed in God, miracles or heaven. In November, Nurre posted a comment to the online discussion forum Atheist Nexus.

Nurre was fired in December. In her defense in January, she told the school board teachers are taxpayers who are entitled to think. She later said she is not an atheist, and that opinions on such things constantly change.

Springfield Diocese to eliminate workers to close $5M deficit

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — The Roman Catholic Diocese of Springfield is laying off more than one-third of its work force in an effort to close a projected $5 million deficit for the next fiscal year.

Bishop Timothy McDonnell said in a statement that 49 positions, including seven clergy and religious personnel, are being eliminated out of 138 jobs total. The layoffs take effect July 1.

The bishop says the cuts were prompted by the economic downturn, increased financial demands to subsidize Catholic schools, and some parishes' failure to meet financial obligations.

McDonnell says settlements with abuse victims did not play a significant role.

Nathan “Nate” Allan Brooks

JEROME — Nathan “Nate” Allan Brooks, our wonderful and beloved husband, dad, grandpa, great-grandpa and friend to many, passed away Wednesday, May 26, 2010, in Twin Falls, Idaho.

He was born to Charles and Mattie Brooks on Feb. 14, 1924, in Bells, Texas. In 1940, at the age of 16, Nathan moved with his family to Jerome, Idaho, where they farmed for many years. Over the years, Nathan worked at a variety of jobs including farming, operating service stations, ranching and construction. In 1945 while working at Blue Light Service station, he met the love of his life, Jeanne Weigle, and they were subsequently married on Dec. 28, 1947. They recently celebrated their 62nd wedding anniversary.

Nathan is survived by his wife, Jeanne; and five children, Craig Brooks of Jerome, Sherrie Walker (Dan) of Salt Lake City, Utah, Beckie Kukal (Gary) of Jerome, Lisa Boman (Tim) of Salt Lake City and Jan Ganguet (Terry) of Jerome. In addition, he is survived by 11 grandchildren and 17 great-grandchildren.

Nathan loved to fish, ride horses, rope, play cards and poker. He read voraciously and enjoyed western novels in particular. He enjoyed trading stories at the Wrangler and Choates. He loved to tell and hear a good joke.

Nathan delighted in creating endearing nicknames for Jeanne and each of his children, grandchildren and great grandchildren. Most of all he enjoyed the time spent with his family whether it was during holidays, backyard barbecues, or irrigation day at their home on Davis Street, where they lived for 50 years.

Nathan was preceded in death by his parents, two brothers and two sisters.

A memorial service will be held at 1 p.m., Saturday, May 29, 2010, at Hove-Robertson Funeral Chapel in Jerome, with Pastor Tim Peery officiating.

The family suggests memorial donations to the charity of their choice or IFARM in Jerome in care of the Jerome County Historical Society.

Cremation arrangements took place under the care and direction of the Hove-Robertson Funeral Chapel in Jerome.

The nutrient enhancement program started in 2007. In 2008, the amount of blue-green algae decreased, but it increased last summer. Officials say last spring’s runoff could have flushed more phosphorus into the reservoir, leading to the algae blooms.

Boise man sentenced to prison for ID theft

BOISE — Federal authorities say a Boise man who stole identities to buy houses, a Mercedes-Benz car and a Dodge truck has been sentenced to more than five years in federal prison.

Adrian Lamont Gunn, who is 38, was sentenced Wednesday for aggravated identity theft and fraud.

The U. S. Attorney’s Office says Gunn’s sentence starts after he completes a state sentence for probation violation.

Chief U.S. District Judge B. Lynn Winmill also ordered four years of supervised release once Gunn exits prison, and ordered him to pay restitution.

Gunn pleaded guilty in December 2009 to using the identity of a Texas man in 2007 to purchase houses two houses near Boise.

He also stole the identity of two women from Idaho and Montana and a California man to get credit cards, then ran up $100,000 in charges.

Ark. zoo penguin dies after 1 day on job

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — The Little Rock Zoo says a six-month-old penguin acquired this week suffered a seizure and died after one day at the park.

One of the two birds received Wednesday from the Tautphaus Zoo in Idaho Falls, Idaho, died in quarantine Thursday. A cause isn’t known. The zoo says the other penguin is doing fine.

The Little Rock Zoo lost animals throughout the 2000s to various ailments, including two giraffes, a leopard, a black bear and a gorilla that died after a non-invasive echocardiogram. Two snowy owls died from suspected West Nile virus and a lemur escaped and was found dead two days later — the day after a sloth bear was found dead.

The Arkansas zoo is opening an African penguin exhibit this year.

Fisheries managers lower chinook prediction

LEWISTON — Fisheries officials have reduced their prediction of the number of spring chinook returning above Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River to 314,000.

That’s a significant drop from the preseason forecast of 470,000. The latest prediction on Wednesday by state, federal and tribal fisheries officials took into account dropping fish counts at Bonneville Dam.

Sam Sharr of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game tells the Lewiston Tribune there is no talk of ending any open salmon fishing seasons early in Idaho.

U.S. Marines patrol southern Afghanistan in October 2009. The American military death toll in Afghanistan surpassed 1,000 when NATO reported that a service member was killed Friday in a roadside bombing in southern Afghanistan.

U.S. toll reaches 1,000 deaths in Afghanistan war

By Robert H. Reid
Associated Press writer

KABUL, Afghanistan — The American military death toll in Afghanistan reached 1,000 at a time when President Obama’s strategy to turn back the Taliban is facing its greatest test — an ambitious campaign to win over a disgruntled population in the insurgents’ southern heartland.

More casualties are expected when the campaign kicks into high gear this summer. The results may determine the outcome of a nearly nine-year conflict that became “Obama’s war” after he decided to shift the fight against Islamist militancy from Iraq to Afghanistan and Pakistan, where Afghan insurgents find sanctuary.

The grim milestone was reached in a roadside bombing just before the Memorial Day weekend, when America honors the dead in all its wars.

The NATO statement did not identify the victim or give the nationality of the service member killed Friday in southern Afghanistan. U.S. spokesman Col. Wayne Shanks said the trooper was American — the 32nd U.S. war death this month by an Associated Press count.

Already the new focus on the once-forgotten Afghan war has come at a heavy price. More than 430 of the U.S. dead were killed after Obama took office in January 2009. The number of U.S. troops in Afghanistan has now surpassed the total in Iraq — roughly 94,000 in Afghanistan compared with 92,000 in Iraq, where the war is winding down.

The list of American service members killed in combat in Afghanistan begins with Sgt. 1st Class Nathan Ross Chapman of San Antonio, Texas, a 31-year-old career Special forces soldier ambushed on Jan. 4, 2002, after attending a meeting with Afghan leaders in Khost province. He left a wife and two children. The base where a suicide bomber killed seven CIA employees last December bears his name.

For many of the U.S. service members in Afghanistan, the 1,000-mark passed without fanfare.

Capt. Nick Ziemba of Wilbraham, Massachusetts, serving with the 1st Battalion, 17th Infantry Regiment in southern Afghanistan, said 1,000 was an arbitrary number and would have no impact on troop morale or operations.

“We’re going to continue to work,” he said.

The AP bases its tally on Defense Department reports of deaths suffered as a direct result of the Afghan conflict, including personnel assigned to units in Afghanistan, Pakistan or Uzbekistan.

‘Diff’rent Strokes’ star Gary Coleman dies

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Gary Coleman, the adorable, pint-sized child star of the smash 1970s TV sitcom “Diff’rent Strokes” who spent the rest of his life struggling on Hollywood’s D-list, died Friday after suffering a brain hemorrhage. He was 42.

Life support was terminated and Coleman died at 12:05 p.m. with family and friends at his side, Utah Valley Regional Medical Center spokeswoman Janet Frank said.

Spokeswoman Janet Frank said Coleman was hospitalized because of an accident at the home, but she had no further details.

Coleman, with his sparkling eyes and perfect comic timing, quickly became a star after “Diff’rent Strokes” debuted in 1978. He played Arnold Jackson, the younger one of a pair of African-American brothers adopted by a wealthy white man.

His skeptical “Whatchu talkin’ ’bout?” — usually aimed at older brother Willis — became a catchphrase.

“It’s unfortunate. It’s a sad day,” said Todd Bridges, who played Willis. “It’s sad that I’m the last kid alive from the show.”

The series lives on thanks to DVDs and YouTube. But its equally enduring legacy became the troubles in adulthood of its former child stars.

In 1989, Bridges was acquitted of attempted murder in the shooting of a drug dealer. The then 24-year-old Bridges testified he became depressed and turned to drugs after “Diff’rent Strokes” was canceled.

Coleman

Dana Plato, who played the boys’ white, teenage sister, pleaded guilty in 1991 to a robbery charge. She died in 1999 of an overdose of painkiller and muscle relaxer.

The medical examiner’s office ruled the death a suicide.

Coleman’s popularity also faded when the show ended after six seasons on NBC and two on ABC.

He remained estranged until his death from his parents Sue and Willie Coleman, who said they learned about his hospitalization and death from media reports.

Coleman chafed at his permanent association with “Diff’rent Strokes” but also tried to capitalize on it through minor reality shows, endorsements and other TV appearances.

His role as a car-washing plantation slave in the 2008 conservative political satire “An American Carol” was cut from the final print.

The diminutive actor also appeared in last year’s “Midgets vs. Mascots,” a film that pits little people against mascots in a series of silly contests for a chance to win $1 million.

NOTICES

Buhl School District
NOTICE OF SPECIAL
SUPPLEMENTAL LEVY ELECTION
BUHL JOINT SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 412
TWIN FALLS AND GOODING COUNTIES, IDAHO

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN according to law, and the requisite action of the Board of Trustees of Buhl Joint School District No. 412 Counties of Twin Falls and Gooding, State of Idaho, that a Special Supplemental Levy Election will be held on June 17, 2010 for the purpose of submitting to the qualified electors of said District their vote and determination on a supplemental tax levy. The polls will be open from 12:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. at the following locations:

Buhl School District Office
920 Main Street
Buhl, Idaho

Clear Lakes Country Club
403 Clear Lake Lane
Buhl, Idaho

An elector must be a registered voter who has resided in this state and in this school district at least thirty (30) days preceding the election.

The question submitted will be:

*Shall the Board of Trustees of Buhl Joint School District No. 412, Twin Falls and Gooding Counties, Idaho be authorized and empowered to levy a Supplemental Levy in the amount $466,000 for the purpose of paying all lawful expenses of maintaining and operating the schools of the District for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 2010 and ending June 30, 2012?

ANSWER:

For Supplemental Levy of $466,000 each year for (2) years YES _____

For Supplemental Levy of $466,000 each year for (2) years NO _____

The voter may express his/her vote by marking "X" opposite the word on his/her ballot which expresses his/her choice.

Qualified electors who expect to be absent from the District on June 17, 2010 or who will be unable, because of physical disability or blindness, to go to a polling place, may vote by absentee ballot. Written application for an absentee ballot may be made to the Clerk of the Board of Trustees. Such application must be made no later than 5:00 p.m. of the day before the election.

By order of the Board of Trustee

/s/ Jackie Frey

Clerk of the Board

DEAR ABBY: I'm an "A" student, but my boyfriend, "Rory," has a difficult time in school, so he often comes over for help. We work at the computer in the room my sister and I share so she listens to everything we discuss. She says we are cheating because I'm doing most of his homework for him.

I don't give Rory the answers to questions, but I do give him "hints" and tell him where he's likely to find the answers in the textbooks. I always check that the answers are correct. With his math homework, I tell him each step he needs to take, but he actually does the math himself and then I check for accuracy. If he needs to write an essay, I suggest what he might want to write and help him with some of the edits.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

My sister thinks what I do goes far beyond help, and that I'm enabling him to cheat. She feels that while it may help his grades now, I am doing him no favors in the long run. We had a big argument over this. I don't think it's any of her business. I'd really appreciate your opinion.

— HELPING OR CHEATING?

SACRAMENTO, CALIF.

DEAR HELPING: Thank you for asking. I'm sure you care deeply for Rory, but sometimes — with the best of intentions — a person can do too much. When you suggest topics for your boyfriend's essays, then edit them so the teacher won't see where he needs to strengthen his English skills, what you're really doing is preventing him from learning how to properly spell or construct a sentence. And when you're no longer around to be his filter, it's going to become apparent.

The same goes for math. If you tell Rory what steps to take to solve his math problems, he won't master the concepts or memorize the formulas. Heaven help him if he plans to take a college entrance exam!

While the argument you had with your sister was regrettable, please try not to be so defensive. She was trying to tell you something important, and it couldn't hurt to really listen.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 13-year-old girl in junior high. I am very shy and self-conscious. When I see skinny girls, I look at myself and feel embarrassed or ashamed. I have a lot of friends who support me. They say I shouldn't worry about my weight and that I don't need to lose any more.

I would like some words of encouragement from you. It seems like nothing can stop the way I feel. I have a boyfriend, but our relationship is long-distance. We talk online and he is as supportive as he can be, but I still feel self-conscious. Please help me with this.

— TEEN IN NEED

IN NORTH CAROLINA

DEAR TEEN: The harder we stare at our imagined flaws, the bigger they become. So please stop constantly comparing yourself to others. It's a depressing waste of time. Very few people are completely confident and self-assured at 13, and there are more important qualities to focus on in life than whatever happens to be the ideal of physical perfection at the moment. Your time would be better spent developing qualities that not only make you special, but also will last a lifetime — your personality, your intellect and your talents.

So listen to what your friends and your boyfriend are telling you.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"It was deja vu all over again."

— Yogi Berra

The following deal proved too hard for a multiple World Champion in a 1999 Vanderbilt match. The contract in both rooms was four spades by South, and the lead in each instance was the diamond queen.

It seems that, in a worst-case scenario, declarer might have a loser in each suit, but the first declarer did not see any danger.

He won the diamond lead in hand, preserving entries to dummy's club suit, and played ace then king of trumps, finding he had a loser there. Hoping to eliminate hearts, then somehow effect an endplay, declarer led a low heart from dummy. But East nipped in with the 10 to fire a diamond through. The end result was one off.

Declarer was beguiled by his array of nines and 10s. Try imagining that, apart from the aces and kings, all of North's and South's cards are insignificant, as John Solodar did in the other room. He appreciated that all he needed to do was to set up a club trick for a diamond discard, so he too won the diamond lead in hand. But he cashed just the spade ace before leading a club to the ace, another to the king, and a third club. East won and fired back a diamond, which Solodar took with dummy's king. He then cashed the spade king and played an established club, discarding his diamond loser from hand. A heart and a trump were all that was now available to the defense: contract made.

ANSWER: Your partner has not taken leave of his senses. When you jumped to three no-trump, you could have had as much as a 14-count along with your five hearts. Your partner has a maximum plus a moderate fit for hearts and a source of tricks in clubs. Just in case you were in the slam zone, he is cooperating with you. Since you have no slam interest, sign off in four hearts.

IF MAY 29 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: In October, you may be tempted to follow your fantasies, when sticking to the tried and true is more beneficial. It is almost as though the universe is testing your focus and demanding that you stick to routines. Do not be fooled by someone or something that seems too good to be true — and if you meet someone in October who you hope is Mr. or Ms. Right, obtain a credit report before you give your heart away. If you have doubts about someone's sincerity, try to meet for a heart-to-heart in late December or early January. That is when only people who have your best interests at heart can get their foot in your door and anyone who is not sincere will run for the hills. Late December and early January is an auspicious time to launch important plans or to begin anything new, because it is sure to succeed or improve your life.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Kick back and relax while you have a chance to recharge your batteries. You might be naturally insistent but if you push too hard, someone might back away.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You can be a tough negotiator if bargaining for the best price is required. Just be sure that your talents aren't wasted with penny-wise, pound-foolish projects.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Build a framework to achieve your goals. You may be discouraged if you try to organize a precise and detailed outline. All you need is a broad sketch.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Tell the difference between the carrot and the stick. Your close advisers and companions may be aggressive and confident, but it is best to make your own decisions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Focus on your net worth today; balance the check-book. The black column could pleasantly surprise you. Love and affection grows stronger near home base.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It is time to take care of minor changes before you forge ahead on new ones. Old friends or past difficulties could be part of the picture and distract you temporarily.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Glass ceilings are invisible. You may be attracted to someone who seems to have limitless ambition, but it is difficult to break through self-imposed barriers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Get connected. Telephone your cronies and go out and paint the town. You might be able to mix business with pleasure in group settings or at community events.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be generous toward others, but tough on yourself. Putting a positive spin on unpleasant situations is your special skill. Moody loners could attract your interest.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Group consensus is necessary. If you attempt to strike out as a rugged individualist, you might find that your business plans fail or that you stir up trouble.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You could be heading to the starting gate of an important new project. Everyone needs to accept their fair share of the workload; divvy up duties amicably.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Being on the receiving end of good will from others can boost your spirits but it may be better to get the facts before spending your money too freely.

SUDOKU

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Concepts Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

Celtics rip Magic, return to NBA Finals

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press writer

BOSTON — The NBA's most-decorated team avoided the biggest playoff collapse in league history and earned a chance to hang an unprecedented 18th championship banner from the rafters. Paul Pierce had 31 points and 13 rebounds, and little-used backup Nate Robinson gave the Celtics a boost with 13 second-quarter points as Boston beat the Orlando Magic 96-84 on Friday night, earning a chance to play for a second NBA title in three years. The finals will begin Thursday in either Los Angeles or Phoenix. The Lakers lead the Western Conference finals 3-2, and a victory over the Suns in Game 6 on Saturday would set up the cross-coast rivals for a rematch of the 2008 finals — and 10 other championship series from 1959-87. “We got back to moving the ball, playing good defense, not allowing them to shoot the 3-point shot. That was the key,” Pierce said.

The Boston fans have been chanting “Beat L.A.!” since Game 3, when the Celtics cruised to a 3-0 lead in the best-of-seven Eastern Conference finals. Orlando won the next two games and threatened to become the first team ever in the NBA — but the second in Boston this month — to come back from a 3-0 deficit in a playoff series. The Bruins opened a 3-0 lead against Philadelphia in the NHL's Eastern Conference semifinals before the Flyers rallied to win — in the very same building.

The Magic, who dressed in the same locker room where the Flyers celebrated their comeback, couldn't match it — or even force the series back to Orlando for a Game 7. “The starting five has never lost,” Boston coach Doc Rivers said. “This starting five has never lost a series, ever. We believed that coming into the season, and we just kept believing.” Dwight Howard had 28 points and 12 rebounds as the defending East champions

Division leads up for grabs at MVS

After racing action stalled last weekend due to unfavorable weather conditions, the Budweiser Super Stocks, NAPA Street Stocks and Quale's Electronics Hornets drivers are hoping for clear skies tonight as the look to get back into the racing groove. Currently second and fourth, respectively, in the standings, Super Stocks drivers Daniel Shirley and Willie Dalton not only have their sights set on their first main-event win of the season, tonight they are optimistic they can make a dent in the points lead held by 2009 track champion Kris McKean. John Newell has the edge in the standings in the Street Stocks division but an up-and-coming Casey Pehrson is lurking and could grab the lead with a good performance tonight. Even more at risk in the rankings is Hornets driver Jeff Peck, who recently raced his way into a slight series lead. Peck's advantage is very much in jeopardy though, as both Bob Gilligan and Andy Brennan are well within reach of taking over the position. A rare appearance by the speedy Non-Winged Sprint Cars rounds out tonight's action on the track. Falls Brand is the host for tonight's festivities, which includes a hot dog eating contest and bicycle races for kids at intermission. Boys and girls who bring their bikes for the event will receive free admission. Gates open at 5 p.m. The first green flag flies at 6.

Buhl's Hamilton cheers her seven grandchildren to state tourney success

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

BUHL — J.P. Hamilton would be proud. Seven of the late Buhl resident's grandchildren competed in four state tournaments last weekend, with his widow, Margaret Hamilton, earnestly keeping tabs on all of them. None of the seven placed lower than third in their respective competitions, and four earned the right to be called champions. It was a fitting tribute from the grandkids to the grandparents who started it all. “Our grandfather was a big supporter of all the sports, and he really loved baseball,” said Whitney Amoth, a junior who won the Class 3A shot put title last week and finished second in the discus, setting school records in both disciplines. “Everyone's just trying to follow in his footsteps, to make him proud.” Margaret Hamilton might be getting on in years, but she made a concerted effort to see all seven compete this year. She saw six, missing only Wood River tennis player Jessica Hamilton. Traveling all the way to Hailey for what were usually short tennis matches didn't make sense, something the Wolverine junior readily acknowledged. “She was going to come when we played Twin Falls, but it got canceled (due to weather). I understand she can't make it all the way up (to Hailey),” said Jessica Hamilton. “But she calls before every match, telling me I could do it and to have fun. She always reminds me to have fun.” Hamilton and mixed doubles partner Morgan Pike were the Class 4A runners-up at the state tournament in Boise. Because mixed doubles points are split between boys and girls, Hamilton actually contributed to the Wolverine boys' state championship. The girls finished fifth.

A mother of seven and a grandma of 17, Margaret Hamilton's conventional game day this spring started at the Buhl softball diamond, she said, where she watched Kendyl Hamilton, a sophomore, and freshman McKayla Lively. Seeing grandma at the game was a boost rivaled only by the competition and support the kids get from each other. “It's pretty neat to see her at the games,” said Kendyl Hamilton, who helped the Indians to third place at the 3A state tournament. “We've got a great support system.

Nampa driver Hamilton seeks swig of milk at Sunday's Indianapolis 500

INDIANAPOLIS — Nampa's Davey Hamilton ran 27 laps Friday on Carb Day at Indianapolis Motor Speedway. It was the last practice opportunity for the 33 drivers in Sunday's Indianapolis 500. Hamilton was 25th on the speed chart with a quick lap of 221.666 mph in his HP de Ferran Dragon Racing machine. “Our car is real good,” said Hamilton. “The trick is ‘What wing angle do you want? Are we negative? Are we plus? Are we even?’ That's the whole key and I think we've heard from across all teams, the different strategies and what they are going to do. I think that is one thing that we feel very confident from practice. We know where we want our wing angle. Is it going to be the right one? We'll let you know on Sunday. But, we feel confident that we're picking the right wing angle.” Hamilton will start from the fifth row, in the 14th starting position. He said if there is one tradition he has dreamed about the most, it would be drinking the milk in Victory Lane. “That's the first thing that you do — you win and you drink the milk,” said Hamilton. “The milk tradition carries so much history.” Four-time pole sitter and three-time Indy 500 winner Helio Castroneves lead's the field for Sunday's noon start on ABC.

Confident Nash says Suns will win Game 6

PHOENIX (AP) — Steve Nash says he's no "Joe Namath who walked in in his fur coat" but the Suns playmaker is not backing away from his post-game promise that Phoenix will beat the Los Angeles Lakers in Game 6 of the Western Conference finals.

Not might win, not try hard to win, not hope to win. "I just said we're going home and win Game 6 and come back in Game 7," Nash said after practice on Friday. "Take it how you want to take it."

The Suns didn't seem devastated by Thursday night's last-second 103-101 loss in Los Angeles. Quite the opposite. The close call seemed to bolster their belief they can win this series, even though the Lakers are up 3-2 and can advance to the NBA finals for the third straight year with a victory in Phoenix on Saturday night.

"There's some really good things that we did last night, some things to build on," the Suns' Grant Hill said. "I think the main thing is the confidence that we can beat this team. Obviously we've done it twice, and we've got to try to do it twice more."

Nash's assurance may not have packed the flamboyance of Namath's famous guarantee that his huge underdog New York Jets would beat Baltimore in the Super Bowl, but it was enough to rile Game 5 hero

ARTEST LATE TO PRACTICE, FINED

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. (AP) — Ron Artest had perfect timing in Game 5 of the Western Conference finals — and not so much the next day.

Artest was fined by the Los Angeles Lakers on Friday for showing up late to practice a day after his buzzer-beating layup clinched their 103-101 victory over the Phoenix Suns.

Lakers coach Phil Jackson said it was an innocent mix-up by the forward, who showed up 30 minutes late. Artest misread the practice starting time on the locker room dry-erase board in the excitement following Thursday's win.

"It was just one of those nights," said Jackson, who didn't disclose the amount of the fine. "I think he was just so excited after the game that all that processing and things that were on the board there didn't all register."

Ron Artest.

"That's like no respect for us. There's no respect. That's how it's been for a long time this season. I'm sure we'll talk about it," Artest said before the Lakers left Los Angeles on Friday. "Coaches have no respect for the Lakers at all. They have no respect for me. The players don't respect — a lot of the guys don't respect. ... I'm sure Kobe heard that (what Nash said), and I'm sure he'll do his part (Saturday)."

Cabrera's three HRs not enough for Tigers

DETROIT — Miguel Cabrera hit three home runs in a game for the first time in his career, but it wasn't enough to beat the Oakland Athletics.

Ben Sheets worked seven innings in his longest start of the season and Landon Powell homered and drove in two runs in Oakland's 5-4 win over the Detroit Tigers on Friday night.

Sheets gave up three runs in his longest outing since tossing a five-hit shutout for Milwaukee against San Diego in 2008.

longest power surges in Cincinnati history, and Sam LeCure went six innings to win his big-league debut.

The Reds maintained a one-game lead over St. Louis in the NL Central.

BREWERS 2, METS 0

MILWAUKEE — Corey Hart ended the Mets' shutout streak at 35 innings with a game-winning homer in the ninth and Yovani Gallardo pitched his first career shutout in Milwaukee's victory over New York.

Johan Santana pitched eight scoreless innings, allowing three hits in a super performance.

PHILLIES 3, MARLINS 2

MIAMI — Ryan Howard had two hits and scored Philadelphia's first run in 31 innings on a triple by Raul Ibanez, Chase Utley drove in the go-ahead run and the Phillies snapped out of a dreadful slump to beat Florida.

CARDINALS 7, CUBS 1

CHICAGO — Albert Pujols and Yadier Molina each drove in a pair of runs, Chris Carpenter pitched into the seventh inning and St. Louis rolled to a victory over Chicago.

DODGERS 5, ROCKIES 4

DENVER — Manny Ramirez broke out of a slump with a go-ahead two-run homer in the sixth, and the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Colorado Rockies.

Ramirez capped the Dodgers' four-run sixth with his 549th career home run and first at Coors Field.

FRENCH OPEN

Sharapova, Henin set up showdown

PARIS (AP) — So much has transpired in the nearly 2½ years since Maria Sharapova and Justine Henin last played each other.

Sharapova needed right shoulder surgery and was off the tour for 10 months, then missed time with a right elbow injury. Henin abruptly announced her retirement and stayed away for 20 months, then returned, happier off the court and, so far, almost as good on it.

The two former No. 1s, owners of a combined 10 Grand Slam titles, set up an attention-worthy showdown in the French Open's third round Saturday by wrapping up matter-of-fact victories on a sun-soaked, busy Friday.

"Comes very early, of course, third round," Henin said. "But I feel ready for it."

Relentless rain Thursday created a backlog of matches, meaning that nearly every big name in tennis was swinging a racket somewhere around Roland Garros a day later. Both Williams sisters; Roger Federer and Rafael Nadal; Novak Djokovic, Andy Murray, Lleyton Hewitt — all played and won.

The only upset of real significance came when defending champion Svetlana Kuznetsova lost 6-3, 2-6, 6-4 to 30th-seeded Maria Kirilenko in a third-round match that lasted nearly 2½ hours. Even that wasn't exactly shocking, when you consider Kirilenko already beat Kuznetsova on clay at Rome this month and knocked out Sharapova at the Australian Open in January. Plus, Kuznetsova arrived in Paris with a losing record this year and barely eked through the second round by saving four match points.

"I have to move on. I have to grow and to improve," said Kuznetsova, who will fall out of the top 10 in the rankings for the first time in four years. "I didn't come here with my best game, but I gave it my all."

Maria Sharapova reacts after defeating Kirsten Flipkens during a second-round match of the French Open tennis tournament at the Roland Garros stadium in Paris, Friday.

With so many other top players still around, some must start facing each other. Four-time French Open champion Nadal meets past Wimbledon and U.S. Open winner Hewitt on Saturday. That is scheduled to be followed in the main stadium by Sharapova vs. Henin, two women with decidedly different ways of looking at their most recent encounter, a straight-set win by Sharapova in the 2008 Australian Open quarterfinals.

It turned out to be Henin's last Grand Slam match before her hiatus.

"It seems so far away. I mean, even seems like it never existed, that moment," the Belgian said after eliminating 79th-ranked Klara Zakopalova of the Czech Republic 6-3, 6-3. "I didn't want to be on the court anymore at

Couples, Kite lead way at Senior PGA

PARKER, Colo. — Tom Kite doesn't mind that the thin air, hilly terrain and erratic wind gusts at the Colorado Golf Club conspire to favor the younger golfers on the senior circuit.

Kite still considers himself a whippersnapper after celebrating his 60th birthday in December, a point that's hard to argue as he sits in second place halfway through the 71st Senior PGA Championship, a single stroke behind Fred Couples.

Couples shot a 4-under 68 on Friday, putting him at 7 under after 36 holes. He had the best round of the day despite teeing off in the afternoon, when the winds picked up after a lull.

Tom Lehman (71) is two strokes behind Couples, and Lu Chien-soon (70) and Jay Don Blake (69) are tied for fourth, three shots back.

Bernhard Langer, the co-leader along with Robin Freeman after the first round, was making an impressive charge on the back nine until a double-bogey on No. 17 and a bogey on 18 left him with a 3-over 75, same as Freeman.

They are tied with Nick Price (71), four shots off the pace.

After turning the requisite 50-years-old in October, Couples has energized the Champions Tour, winning half of the six events he's entered this season.

He's trying to become the 12th golfer to win the Senior PGA Championship on his first attempt, something Kite came tantalizingly close to doing himself in 2000, when he finished second to Doug Tewell in a tournament shortened to 54 holes by heavy rain.

Kite is aiming for one of golf's true rarities, winning a tournament in his 60s. Of the 915 tournaments in Champions Tour history, only 18 have been won by hexagenarians.

"I have that as a goal," Kite said after his second straight 69 moved him to 6 under. "I work hard on my conditioning and my game to try to make it last and I'm very pleased with where my game is right now. I think that at some point I will win in my 60s. And I look forward to that day. I hope it's this weekend."

MOLDER LEADS COLONIAL AFTER 62; MICKELSON MISSES CUT

FORT WORTH, Texas — Bryce Molder has yet to have the same kind of success that other four-time All-American collegiate players have had on the PGA Tour.

For now, Molder will settle for his career-best round and the lead midway through the Colonial, where four-time All-Americans Phil Mickelson and David Duval missed the cut.

Molder shot an 8-under 62 Friday to get to 13 under for a one-stroke lead over that time, and now I have a lot of motivation to be out there and to fight and try to keep winning."

Here is Sharapova's take: "Actually, feels like we never left. Or it was just yesterday. That's so funny. It was a couple of years ago, and here we are. We're back. It's a different Slam, but it's the same drill."

Like Henin's second-round match, Sharapova's was halted in the second set because of darkness Thursday night. Like Henin, Sharapova wasn't challenged much in a 6-3, 6-3 victory, hers coming against 71st-ranked Kirsten Flipkens of Belgium.

Clay never has been the 6-foot-2 Sharapova's preferred surface; she's only once been as far as the semifinals in seven previous trips to the French Open, while she won each of the other Grand Slam tournaments.

The 5-foot-5¾ Henin, in contrast, excels at Roland Garros, where she has earned four of her seven major titles and owns winning streaks of 23 matches and 39 sets.

They're forced to face off this early because Sharapova is seeded 12th, and Henin 22nd — far lower than both have been, but a consequence of all those matches they missed over the past two seasons. Henin, remember, is competing at the French Open for the first time since 2007, when she won a third consecutive championship.

"We have different features and qualities, of course. She is tall. She can be very powerful. She can be a slugger when she hits the ball," said Henin, who has won six of nine matches against Sharapova. "There's one thing we share ... which is: We are winners. We are fighters. With her, it's never over."

Other women's third-round matchups today include No. 1 Serena Williams against No. 29 Anastasia Pavlyuchenkova of Russia, and No. 4 Jelena Jankovic against No. 27 Alona Bondarenko.

first-round co-leader Jason Bohn (65). Kris Blanks (64) and Brian Davis (65) were two strokes back, one ahead of Boo Weekley (63) and Jeff Overton (67).

A 31-year-old Georgia Tech graduate who has split time between the PGA and Nationwide tours since his professional debut in 2002, Molder was one stroke off matching the course record of 61 after missing an 8-foot birdie putt on the final hole.

Mickelson would have overtaken Tiger Woods for the No. 1 spot in the world ranking with a win at Colonial, but instead had consecutive over-par rounds. The Arizona State grad shot a 73 on Friday, when he had consecutive bogeys early and then three more in a row after his last birdie, to finish 4 over on the course where Lefty won in last appearance two years ago.

Duval, who like Molder was a standout player at Georgia Tech, was 1 over after a round of 73.

After two days of ideal scoring conditions with hot temperatures and nearly no wind, 76 players made the cut at a tournament record-low 2 under. There were 19 other players who broke par or were even and will not play this weekend.

Hamilton

I remember after we beat Kimberly (at the state tournament) and I already had text messages from everyone congratulating us.

"I feel so lucky to have a family like this ... and that (Margaret) was part of starting it all."

After watching the first game of a softball doubleheader, Margaret Hamilton would jet over to Faux Field to watch senior Jack Hamilton and juniors Matt Hamilton and Markus Lively play baseball, their grandfather's favorite sport.

The family joke was that Matt Hamilton, who broke the school's single-season home run record this season with 14, would aim for his grandma's car, usually parked just beyond the right-field wall. He connected twice, and once waved toward Margaret as he circled the bases to let her know he knew she was there.

"He definitely used it as a target," Markus Lively quipped. "As long as he didn't hit the windows, I guess it's all good."

Margaret Hamilton said the most difficult part of keeping up with everyone at state was that she so badly wanted to be in all four places at the same time, with tennis and track in Boise, softball in Coeur d'Alene and baseball in Ontario, Ore.

She settled for getting phone updates until the baseball team reached the state championship game last Saturday. She was in attendance on a sloppy, wet day that saw Buhl win its first baseball title in nine years.

"It was really draining, physically, mentally and emotionally," Markus Lively said of his state experience. "To have our grandma there and be able to share that with her was really special."

Even though the Hamilton clan is filled with athletes — and there are plenty more coming down the pike, Amoth said — there was something unique about last weekend's trophy haul.

"That's just amazing to me. I'm so proud of them," Margaret Hamilton said. "The only regret I have is that their grandpa isn't here to see it. He would have been so proud."

failed to get back to the finals. Vince Carter scored 17 points, and Jameer Nelson finished with 11 points and four assists as he was outplayed by Boston's starting point guard, Rajon Rondo, and Robinson, his backup.

Reporters and fans snickered when Rivers said last month that Robinson, who had struggled to get playing time and contributed little since coming to Boston at the trade deadline and had never appeared in the postseason before, "He's going to win us a playoff game."

But Robinson came off the bench at the start of the second quarter, when Boston led 30-19, and hit 3-pointers 90 seconds apart to help stretch the lead to 15 points. Boston led 44-25 when Robinson stole a bad pass from Carter and took off on the fast break, getting bowled over at the other end to draw a flagrant foul on Nelson.

The free throws gave Boston a 21-point lead — its biggest of the first half.

"You know, he really won this game for us because the game was in the mix to go either direction and he really gave us a spark," Pierce said of Robinson. "... That's really growing up, really growing into a man tonight."

NCAA: 8 violations in UConn men's basketball

Allegations surround recruitment of ex-CSI player Nate Miles

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — Connecticut coach Jim Calhoun and the men's basketball program he took from obscurity to national titles have been accused of eight major NCAA infractions, with investigators citing hundreds of improper calls and texts from UConn staff to recruits.

The school released a notice from the NCAA on Friday that lays out the allegations against the Hall-of-Fame coach, his staff and the school. Besides the calls and texts, the accusations include giving recruits improper benefits and improperly distributing free tickets to high school coaches and others. Calhoun is cited for failing to promote an atmosphere of compliance.

"It's not exactly, certainly anywhere near the high point of my career, as a matter of fact it's certainly one of the lowest points at any time that you are accused of doing something," said Calhoun, who has led the Huskies since 1986 and taken them to the Final Four three times. "It's a very serious matter."

Athletic director Jeff Hathaway offered support for Calhoun and defended the university.

"Let me be clear," he said. "The University of Connecticut is fully committed to NCAA rules compliance and takes this matter very seriously. With regard to coach Calhoun, he personally has a long-standing demonstrated commitment to NCAA rules compliance."

The allegations come at the end of a 15-month investigation into the recruiting of former player Nate Miles, who was expelled from UConn in October 2008 without ever playing a game for the Huskies. He was charged with violating a restraining order in a case involving a woman who claimed he assaulted her. Miles played in nine games at the College of Southern Idaho at the end of the 2009-10 season before pursuing a professional career.

The NCAA alleges 160 impermissible telephone calls and at least 191 impermissible text messages between recruits and coaches, including assistants Beau Archibald, Patrick Sellers, Andre LeFler, associate head coach George Blaney, and then-assistant Tom Moore, who is now the head coach at Quinnipiac. Moore did not immediately return messages seeking comment.

UConn is to appear before the governing body on Oct. 15 to respond. Attorney Rick Evrard, an outside counsel who advises UConn on NCAA-related matters, said the school likely will spend the next three months reviewing the allegations. He said if the school confirms them, it is obligated to impose its own sanctions.

Evrard said that, in cases such as UConn's, penalties most often affect recruiting and could include the loss of scholarships. They don't usually include a ban on postseason play or the forfeiting of any games when there was no competitive advantage obtained from the violations, he said.

Still, recruiting violations can devastate a program. Indiana overhauled its famous basketball program — from which it hasn't recovered — after former coach Kelvin Sampson was forced out in February 2008 when more than 100 impermissible calls to recruits came to light. Sampson had already been sanctioned for recruiting violations while he was the coach at Oklahoma.

Among the allegations against UConn is that Archibald and Sellers provided false and misleading information to NCAA investigators. Sellers and Archibald, who served as director of basketball operations, have both resigned. Hathaway said Archibald left last week and Sellers quit on Sunday.

Both men released statements Friday saying they needed to devote their full attention to the allegations against them.

"Coaching is my passion and something I have spent many years of enjoyment doing," Sellers said. "I want the record to reflect this and for the people to see the respect and integrity that I will show toward the process in the months ahead."

Calhoun has coached 24 seasons at UConn and 38 overall, compiling a record of 823-358 that includes two national titles and another trip to the Final Four in 2009. He recently signed a five-year, $13 million contract.

The biggest blemish on the program until now came in 1996, when UConn was stripped of its NCAA Tournament run to the regional semifinals and ordered to return $90,970 in tournament revenue because two players accepted plane tickets from a sports agent.

But this is the first time the program has received a letter from the NCAA accusing the school of major violations, Evrard said. The case has no impact on the other athletic programs at UConn, such as its national champion women's basketball team.

"I am confident that the university will appropriately address and respond to this matter and continue cooperating fully with the NCAA as this process moves forward," University President Michael Hogan said in a statement.

UConn as an institution was cited for not adequately monitoring "the conduct and administration of the men's basketball staff in the areas of: telephone records, representatives of the institution's athletics interests; and, complimentary admissions or discretionary tickets."

Castroneves enjoys spoils of journey

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Last year, Helio Castroneves wasn't sure if he'd be at the Brickyard or headed for a jail cell come the final Sunday in May. This year, the buildup to the Indianapolis 500 has come with less baggage for IndyCar's most successful driver.

Instead of worrying about his freedom, the defending champion is thinking only about racing — car setup, pit strategy and how the speed-boosting "push-to-pass" button's introduction at Indy might affect his strategy.

And, of course, he might be scoping out the perfect place to climb the fence if he gets his fourth victory. A win Sunday would put Castroneves in the elite company of Rick Mears, Al Unser Sr. and A.J. Foyt, the only other four-time winners in the history of "The Greatest Spectacle in Racing."

"It's nice, because I can just focus a little bit more on the race," Castroneves said. "Last year, all I was thinking about was the joy of being here. I had doubts about whether I'd be racing at all."

His future went into flux when the feds indicted him on tax evasion charges that carried up to a six-year prison sentence. Remnants of the case lingered through most of May, and along with worrying about all the usual racing issues that come up at Indy, Spiderman came to the year's biggest race with the specter of possible jail time on his mind.

Not until two days before last year's race was Castroneves cleared of the final charges. On race day, he started from the pole and was his usual, focused self. He won the race, becoming only the ninth driver to kiss the bricks three times at racing's most hallowed track. When it was over, the tears flowed freely. "Thanks for giving me my life back," he said to team owner Roger Penske, who supported him through the ordeal.

"He's part of our family, part of our team," Penske said. "The situation, it was very unfortunate. I hope he'd expect us to stand by him. Whether it was Helio Castroneves or a crew member having the same situation, we'd do the same thing."

While Castroneves goes for No. 4, Penske is at 15 and counting — a record that almost certainly won't be broken. His main threat this year comes from the three-car team run by Chip Ganassi, who will become the first owner to win the Daytona 500 and Indy 500 in the same year if Dario Franchitti, Scott Dixon or Townsend Bell take the checkered flag. (Jamie McMurray won for Ganassi

Indy 500

Noon, Sunday, ABC

in Daytona.)

But as has been the case at the Indy 500 for the past several years — pretty much since the open-wheel split that devastated the sport back in 1996 — there is a short list of true contenders. Along with Castroneves, there are the other Penske drivers — Ryan Briscoe and Will Power, this year's IndyCar series leader who will start next to Castroneves in the No. 2 spot.

Also on that list are Tony Kanaan and Danica Patrick, though both Andretti Autosport drivers have issues.

Kanaan, a fan favorite who has never won here, crashed twice during qualifying and had to scramble to get his car back in shape simply to make the race. Now he hopes to become the first person to win from the dead-last starting position.

Kanaan said a friendly wagering pool has developed in his trailer about how many cars he'll pass during the first lap. Among the tools at his disposal will be the "push-to-pass" button — a booster that provides 18 seconds of extra horsepower but can be used only 15 times in the race.

Kane, Van Riemsdyk share bond as they go for Stanley Cup

Stanley Cup Finals

Flyers at Blackhawks

CHICAGO (AP) — Three years ago, a pingpong ball took a fortuitous bounce for the Chicago Blackhawks, almost like a sliding puck, and they came out winners in a lottery that has revived the franchise.

With just little more than an 8 percent chance of winning the top pick in 2007, the Blackhawks were able to leapfrog the team with the worst record, the Philadelphia Flyers, and they made Patrick Kane their No. 1 choice.

Kane went to Chicago and became the rookie of the year, while the Flyers took James van Riemsdyk with the second pick. Now both players are in the Stanley Cup finals, facing each other with Game 1 set for Saturday night at the United Center.

"It seems like it's almost worked out good for both teams," Kane said. "They're here three years later. I'm here three years later, our team is, and that's the most important thing for this franchise."

The Blackhawks are searching for their first title since the days of Bobby Hull and Stan Mikita in 1961. The Flyers are looking for their first championship since the Broad Street Bullies socked their way to the second of back-to-back Stanley Cup titles in 1975 — long before Kane or van Riemsdyk, both 21, were born.

The two played together in the world juniors and remain close. They went to dinner when the Blackhawks were in Philadelphia for their only meeting with the Flyers this season. Now comes a shot at the Cup.

"You never know what could have happened. I think going into that draft, the Blackhawks were like fifth to last place or whatever you want to call it at that time," Kane said. "So it was kind of a shocker they got the first overall pick. ... To be honest with you, I was kind of excited when Chicago got it."

Kane headed right to the NHL after he was selected No. 1 and quickly emerged as a star, a consistent scoring threat with his speed and puck handling skills. Van Riemsdyk took a different route, heading off to college first and then signing with the Flyers a little more than a year ago.

"We were both put in different situations and we were in different stages of our hockey development and, you know, I did what I thought was best for me to be a better player," van Riemsdyk said. "He was obviously ready to make that jump right after the draft. He's done a good job for himself."

And for his team. The Blackhawks were playing before a half-empty arena before Kane and 22-year-old captain Jonathan Toews arrived and became the centerpieces of the team's rebirth on the ice and the accompanying marketing campaign.

Now the Blackhawks are one of the hottest tickets in Chicago, a young team that made it to the Western Conference finals a year ago before losing to Detroit.

Winning four more games will be a challenge against a Flyers team also considered a championship contender entering the season before it had to make a remarkable run to get to the finals for the first time since 1997.

U.S. expects to use most regulars against Turkey

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — There's a bit of chaos when a national team comes together.

"We have own idea about things at Everton," U.S. goalkeeper Tim Howard said. "And AC Milan have their own ideas. And Rennes have their own ideas. And Watford."

By the time of the June 12 World Cup opener against England, all these players from different clubs will form a coherent team, and that process will accelerate Saturday when the United States plays Turkey in its last game before leaving for South Africa.

More than 50,000 tickets have been sold for the send-off match at Lincoln Financial Field. Most starters were rested for Tuesday's 4-2 loss to the Czech Republic, among them Landon Donovan, Clint Dempsey, Jozy Altidore and Howard.

"We'll have a team that I think will be close to our regular team," U.S. coach Bob Bradley said Friday.

Turkey, a 2002 World Cup semifinalist that failed to qualify for this year's tournament, is a physical side with a reputation for rough play. The Turks are ranked 29th in the world, 15 places below the U.S. and four above the Czechs.

It is a far better test than four years ago, when the last three World Cup warmups were against Morocco, Venezuela and Latvia.

"We looks for these games to fine tune things. I don't think playing teams of lesser quality is going to help us, at all," defender Oguchi Onyewu said. "It's going to help us pinpoint certain weaknesses or things we have to work on as a group."

Onyewu, who is with AC Milan, returned Tuesday night from October surgery to repair a torn pateller tendon in his left knee and appeared rusty, getting out-jumped by Tomas Sivok for a header on the first Czech goal. Onyewu could form the back line with Watford's Jay DeMerit, out since April 17 with an abdominal strain; and Rennes' Carlos Bocanegra, sidelined since sports hernia surgery on May 5. Jonathan Spector or Steve Cherundolo could play on the right.

DeMerit and Bocanegra have been in full training for a week and appear ready for the field.

Reutimann reflects on rain-shortened victory

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — David Reutimann nervously paced pit road last season, praying that the sun would stay away and racing would not resume at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

He stood in the rain an agonizing two hours, certain NASCAR would not call the race anytime soon. Sure, the forecast was bleak, but Reutimann had never been a benefactor of good luck or great timing.

"These things don't ever go our way," he said to himself. "I don't know why it should now"

But for the first time in his NASCAR career, Reutimann caught a break.

The journeyman driver picked up the only win of his Sprint Cup Series career when NASCAR stopped the Coca-Cola 600 last season just past the halfway point. He won it on a gamble: running 14th when the leaders pitted, his crew chief told him to stay out and pray the sky would open up.

The decision gave Reutimann the lead for the next five laps, all run under caution. NASCAR then called the cars to pit road for a third rain stoppage, and Reutimann stood by his Toyota the entire time.

A year later, as he prepares to defend that victory Sunday, he jokes about how his spot in the record books is viewed.

"Like I'm the only guy on the planet that's ever won a rain-shortened race?" Reutimann said. "It is what it is. You always have that little star beside it. You don't like it because people look at it different. So it just drives you more to go out there to win it the way you want to win it to begin with."

"Trust me, I didn't want to win the race that way. It's just the way it worked out."

The irony that there's a perceived asterisk next to Reutimann's name is not lost on the driver or his Michael Waltrip Racing team. No matter how well the 40-year-old driver does, gaining respect and recognition is no easy feat.

It drives his bosses at MWR nuts, mostly because they couldn't be happier with the driver they call "The Franchise."

"It's so frustrating how little respect he gets," said MWR general manager Ty Norris.
