T.F. fireworks guaranteed on the Fourth

July 5 show canceled

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

This July 4 will be, well, the Fourth in Twin Falls.

An outpouring of community donations rocketed past the early goal of $12,000 set by July 4 show organizers to surpass their grand goal of $17,000 on Wednesday afternoon. While some planning for the event still needs to be finalized, fundraiser organizer Ruth Pierce said the city's fireworks show is now guaranteed for July 4. Southern Idaho Fireworks has also cancelled its July 5 show.

"I really did not expect within 10 days to hit this goal," Pierce said.

The fight over flares erupted May 24, when dozens of community members at a Twin Falls City Council meeting protested Southern Idaho Fireworks' move of the celebration to the day after the Fourth of July holiday. Some of the event's major sponsors weren't comfortable with a July 4 celebration because it falls on a Sunday this year, prompting the move to July 5.

Since that meeting, local radio station KIRQ-FM 102.1 spearheaded a fundraising drive that netted more than $6,000, and the Facebook page of the July 4 fireworks group gained more than 4,000 members.

The group still has a fundraising event planned for Thursday night and has discussed other events leading up to the Fourth. Pierce said any additional money raised will be used as a seed fund for the 2011 fireworks show.

"The community has said 'This is our event,'" she said.

Pierce said Southern Idaho Fireworks has been very supportive of her group and is sharing its plans and resources for the original July 5 fireworks show.

Olivia Rowe, co-chairwoman of Southern Idaho Fireworks, said it would be redundant to have two fireworks shows and to ask the community to donate money to both. She said the two groups will probably hash out a 2011 plan in the coming months.

"When the Fourth of July is behind us, we'll probably all sit down together and make any possible plans for the future," she said. "The more people involved, the better it is. So it's wonderful that so many people got together!"

Shaping up for summer

Wildland firefighters slog through annual endurance test

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

At mile one, Eric Killoy thought, "Only two more to go."

Two-and-a-half miles into the endurance test, with his 45-pound pack feeling heavier and heavier on his 165-pound frame, the thought continued: "Only half a mile to go."

He tried not to concentrate too much on the distance, instead falling into the rhythm of his footsteps and the sounds of Tom Petty and hip-hop artist Tech N9ne in his headphones.

For Killoy, a 24-year-old wildland firefighter for the Bureau of Land Management entering his seventh season, the pack test is part of being on the crew. He, along with his younger brother, is following his father's footsteps and plans to make firefighting a career.

Killoy would have preferred to run the three laps around the College of Southern Idaho. The required speed-walking emphasizes endurance over speed, he said, and is similar to the hikes firefighters take while working the fire lines.

"The weight on your back really pounds your legs as you go," he said, dressed in a T-shirt and the canvas pants characteristic of firefighters, his sweat now dried.

Killoy aimed to beat his brother in the test, which, despite a respectable finish a few seconds shy of 37 minutes, "I failed to do. Again."

Erik Valdez, left, helps Amanda Russell, 21, get her 45-pound vest fitted before they begin walking three miles for the U.S. Bureau of Land Management annual firefighter endurance certification Wednesday at the College of Southern Idaho campus in Twin Falls. More than 100 people participated.

Behind him, his 100-plus co-workers slogged through the test. Sweat drenched their T-shirts and foreheads. Those not walking shouted encouragement to those who were. A young woman finished her test and almost immediately dropped her vest to the ground.

"They work hard," Killoy said. "They are pushing it and giving it everything they've got."

"That's something I do and expect them to do because when you're out there on a fire, those are the kind of people you want working next to you."

The training is mandatory for anyone working on or near the fire lines, BLM spokeswoman Sky Buffat said. The walk kicked off the training for the fire crews, which includes a mile-and-a-half run and push-up/pull-up challenge.

After physical testing is completed today, the BLM will hold a program-wide orientation on Friday, before rookie firefighters head to Methodist Camp north of Fairfield for Basic Fire School, held next week.

Officials: Fire season tough to predict

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Factors such as two fairly calm prior fire seasons and rainfall through Memorial Day don't make it any easier to predict the burn of this summer's season.

"Oftentimes, significant spring rain means more fuel when the summer heat starts drying things out," said Sky Buffat, spokeswoman for the U.S. Bureau of Land Management.

But, she said, the fuel moisture rating is better than it was last year. Overall, she said the BLM's Twin Falls District is preparing for a normal fire season — about 100 flare-ups that consume 90,000 acres.

Erik Valdez, prescribed fire technician for the BLM, said there are too many variables to accurately predict the severity of the season.

"There's always potential for fire," he said. "Just because we have a lot of moisture doesn't mean we won't have fire."

At the Sawtooth National Forest, the predictions are largely the same.

"We could see not another drop of rain by tomorrow," said spokeswoman Julie Thomas. "And in July and in August, it could be very hot. If so, we'll be a lot more concerned than we are now."

She said the Forest Service is also preparing as it normally does. Thomas asked people to take caution with fire in the forest: just because the forest has seen a lot of rain doesn't mean everything is too moist to catch.

Paul man won't face death penalty

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Cassia County's prosecuting attorney has decided not to seek the death penalty for a Paul man who allegedly shot and killed his estranged wife Saturday at a Burley bar.

Juan Manuel Arellano, 40, was charged with felony first-degree murder after he allegedly shot Ramona Monica Nanez Arellano, 32, in the torso at the El Paralito Saloon. She later died at Cassia Regional Medical Center. According to court records, Arellano is also charged with felony aggravated battery after the single 9 mm bullet exited Monica Arellano's body and struck Federico Llanos Castillo in the chest.

Cassia Regional Medical Center spokeswoman Geri Alejandro said Castillo was admitted to and released from the hospital on Sunday.

According to the criminal complaint, Arellano has

State considers new standards for students

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

To view proposed standards and submit comments, visit www.sde.idaho.gov. A public meeting is scheduled for 3:30 p.m. Tuesday at Canyon Ridge High School in Twin Falls.

Idaho's public schools may eventually follow a new set of common core standards for English language arts and mathematics that are aimed at rigorously preparing students for their future careers and college educations.

The state's been involved since June 2009 in the Common Core State Standards Initiative, an effort with 47 other states that has the goal of making students competitive with their peers across the nation and globally. Only Alaska and Texas are not participating.

The proposed voluntary standards were released Wednesday, but they aren't in place for Idaho yet. Before that can happen, the standards will need approval from the Idaho State Board of Education and head to the Legislature in 2011 for a vote.

As an initial step, the Idaho State Department of Education is holding a series of public meetings to explain the proposal and gather feedback, including one this Tuesday in Twin Falls.

"I think that it will provide students, teachers, parents and (the) community the standards of success in math and language arts," said Mary Lu Barry, secondary programs director for Twin Falls School District. "If there is a difference or if there is an emphasis, it's on college and career readiness and that's probably the most significant change."

Barry said she hopes the standards will better prepare students for needs beyond high school. For example, some students who enter college after high school require remediation also been charged with felony attempted first-degree murder for trying to fire a shot at the bar's security guard, Hector Lara, who wrestled him to the ground after the alleged shooting. All three charges carry an enhancement penalty for the use of a deadly weapon in the commission of a felony.

While Arellano faces the possibility of spending the rest of his life in prison, Cassia County Prosecutor Al Barrus said his office won't seek the strictest penalty it can request.

"A lot goes into the determination of whether or not you seek the death penalty," Barrus said. "You have to meet certain criteria and it's pretty strict. This case doesn't meet the criteria. It carries a maximum penalty of life in prison and we have filed other charges as well. There will be more than enough for the judge to work with in this case."

According to the court affidavit, Arellano allegedly told police he shot his wife because she was cheating on him.

"I'm tired of them laughing at me, right in front of me," Arellano allegedly said in the court affidavit.

Arellano allegedly told police he and his wife had been having problems since December.

According to court records, Arellano allegedly had the handgun tucked into the back waistband of his pants when he went into the bar. When Arellano's wife came in and started dancing with another man, Arellano followed her onto the dance floor and allegedly shot her.

According to the court affidavit, a Cassia County Sheriff's deputy asked Arellano if he knew who the male was who was shot and he said "whoever she was dancing with."

According to the criminal complaint, Lara said he saw Arellano with a gun walking toward the dance floor. After the shot was fired Lara allegedly struggled with Arellano and hit Arellano several times on the head while telling him to let go of the gun. Lara said Arellano allegedly attempted to shoot him during the struggle.

GRADUATE PROFILE

Filer's Beard an all-around student

By John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

FILER — Some students just seem to have their act together. Filer High School teachers say senior Bryce Beard can be listed among those ranks.

Beard, 18, credits the successes he has had in academics, athletics and public service to parents who passed on a balanced work and play ethic that has served him well during his high school years.

"Have fun and enjoy the high school experience, but, at the same time, take the serious aspect of it," Beard said about his philosophy. "Make sure you're coming away actually learning something. It's fun to mix both of them."

According to Filer High speech teacher Kristy Forester, the pursuit of academic excellence amounts to more than lip service for Beard, a class valedictorian with a 4.0 grade point average.

"With Bryce, you know why you're in the classroom. He's an exemplary student who achieves at a high rate in everything he does," Forester said. "He takes advanced courses in speech, English and government, and is one of the most polite kids you would want to meet."

Beard has also been a standout for Filer's varsity basketball team and proved to be a consistent runner during two years of cross-country competition.

"I started running to stay in shape for basketball and found out I loved it," he said. "I was able to take fifth place and medal in my junior year, and 15th place in my senior year."

The pinnacle of Beard's high school career is probably best defined in his senior-project work. Under the direction of Twin Falls dentist Jim Hughes, Beard organized a free January dental sealant day for 16 to 20 Filer Elementary School students.

"My biggest concern was how we were going to take care of so many, but I was amazed by how much work Bryce put into organization and then learning to apply the sealant," Hughes said. "He's the type of young man you hope your daughter marries."

CSI gets $25,000 grant from Qwest Foundation

The College of Southern Idaho in Twin Falls is receiving a $25,000 grant from the Qwest Foundation to grow its access to college courses for students in rural areas through the Idaho Education Network.

The grant will pay for 175 students to each take a dual-credit course through CSI, which allows them to simultaneously earn high school and college credits.

The grant is also a challenge to other businesses to pay for more students to participate in the program, said Qwest Idaho President Jim Schmit.

Curtis Eaton, executive director of the CSI Foundation, said the grant will help CSI expand its support of dual-credit students.

"Dual-credit is a valuable tool for any young person planning to go to college," Eaton said in a statement.

"It gets them engaged in higher education early and gives them a head start on accomplishing their goals."

Nearly $740,000 in airport projects heads to T.F. City Council

A $403,642 pavement sealing project and a $335,871 master plan update for Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport will be sent to the Twin Falls City Council for its approval.

The nearly $740,000 in projects were approved Tuesday by the airport's advisory board. The projects will be 95 percent paid for by the Federal Aviation Administration with the rest falling on the city and county, said Bill Carberry, airport manager.

The sealing project went to Intermountain Slurry Seal Inc., which bid about $50,000 less than the Airport Authority's consulting engineer estimated. The project is to seal most of the pavement at the airport.

Sun Valley Road night work delayed

The start of night work on the Idaho Highway 75 spur/Sun Valley Road has been delayed until Monday due to anticipated wet and cold weather, the Idaho Transportation Department announced Wednesday.

The contractor has rescheduled the work to install durable pavement markings from Ketchum to Sun Valley.

Crews will work for two nights from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. to replace existing paint striping, ITD stated.

Work could be delayed again due to sustained wet weather or low temperatures, according to ITD.

One lane will be closed while crews are working. Drivers should watch for flaggers and be prepared for delays of as much as 10 minutes. A pilot car will be in operation during the lane closure.

Specialized Pavement Markings, of Tualatin, Ore., is the contractor for the $149,000 project.

T.F. Special Olympics event helps, honors athletes past and present

Though she didn't run, one observer still carried a personal tie to the torch run. Hollister resident Donna Rae Henstock is a trainer for Special Olympics athletes in southern Idaho. Her daughter, Savannah Henstock, with the Henstocks to support Savannah at the 2007 World Special Olympic Games. On Wednesday, Henstock choked back tears as she thanked Perreira and Idaho State Police Capt. Rob Storm for their support over the years.

"It's important for people to know that they spend time with my team," Henstock said. "There is a great feeling of love from the officers. They were so special to Savannah. They were always there to hug her."

With a police escort, Wednesday's torch run moved along the 2.7-mile run north at a steady clip.

At the front of the pack, the Special Olympics "Flame of Hope" was held high to symbolize the connection law enforcement officers have with athletes as guardians of the event.

"I think it was a really good turnout this year," said Perreira, who has coordinated the torch run for the past eight years.

Participants included Special Olympics athlete Matt Holston, 22, of Twin Falls. He has competed in cycling and bowling for four years, training under Donna Rae Henstock.

Henstock said her family has found solace through the community's support and memories of Savannah's participation in past torch runs.

"Death is a tragedy for those of us left behind," she said. "But not for those that move on. We were able to bring a sense of joy and happiness to the funeral because Savannah is back home."

The torch run was an opening act for the charity event that continues with today's "Tip a Cop" event at Perkins, when officers will serve meals from 6 a.m. to 7 p.m., with tips and some proceeds going to Special Olympics.

A fundraising silent auction will also benefit Idaho Special Olympics athletes.

"It's always wonderful when people show support," Henstock said. "The donations really do help us so much. It covers the cost of travel, lodging, food for the athletes and participation fees. It's so needed to show the athletes that you care and you love them."

W.R. graduates mindful of absent peer

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — In all, 174 students marched across the stage at the Wood River High School gymnasium Wednesday night, taking their diplomas in hand.

But it was the one student who couldn't be there who was on their minds.

Sam Schwab suffered a badly broken leg in a trail bike accident over the Memorial Day weekend and was airlifted to Boise after he developed a life-threatening lung clot.

"We're a pretty close-knit group so, yeah, it's affecting all of us," said Ellen Johnson.

"I think everyone here has got something with them to remember him by," added Makenzie-Ann Callaghan, who had written Schwab's name on her elaborately decorated mortarboard.

The Class of 2010 will go out into the world with half a million dollars' worth of college scholarships and $195,000 awarded by local scholarship organizations, noted Principal John Blackman, who served his final graduation as principal before becoming assistant superintendent of the Blaine County School District.

Brendan Freund, a National Merit Scholar, will take a truckload of that scholarship money with him to Stanford University, along with a 4.0 grade point average and nine college credits in such classes as advanced calculus and physics.

He spoke Wednesday night as valedictorian.

Freund said he was concerned about the depletion of coal and oil, as well as other assaults on the earth. But, despite what others say, his generation does not spend all its time playing video games and texting one another, he said.

"We have so much talent, I have no doubt that we (will) be able to solve the problems like I just described," he said.

Freund encouraged his classmates to stay true to themselves.

"No matter what you decide to do, the most important thing is to be happy," he said. "Do what you love and don't let others tell you what you should be doing."

Ted Haggard to start new church in Colo. Springs

By Dan Elliott
Associated Press writer

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Former megachurch pastor Ted Haggard said Wednesday that he will launch a new church from his home, 3 1/2 years after he resigned from his ministry amid an embarrassing and devastating sex scandal.

"This is my resurrection day," he declared.

Haggard said his new venture would not be a megachurch like New Life Church, the congregation he founded in 1985 and then left in 2006 after a male prostitute said Haggard paid him for sex.

Haggard said he doesn't know how many people will attend his new church, but he said the ordeal he and his wife, Gayle, went through has prepared them to help others.

"I have an incredible heart for broken people," he said. "I think we're qualified to hold people's hands" in times of trouble.

Haggard made his announcement outside his home, a two-story, brick-fronted structure with a large barn, a swimming pool and white-fenced corrals on Colorado Springs' north side, not far from New Life Church. Wearing an open-neck shirt and jeans, Haggard sounded both optimistic and chastened, calling himself a repentant sinner and a broken man who believes he can still help others.

"When the crash came in my personal life, it was so incredibly embarrassing and heartbreaking," he said. "It broke me. And I'm still broken, some."

Haggard said a television documentary on the birth of his new church was a possibility but nothing was certain.

At his new church, Haggard said he will teach that God intended marriage to be a monogamous union of a man and a woman. But he said heterosexual marriage was just one ideal in a long list of things God wants people to do, including pray, be healthy and stay monogamous.

He also said the biblical ideals are sometimes hard to live up to.

"Earth is not heaven. And here on Earth, sexuality is very complex and very confusing," he said.

"There is a complex process people have to go through between their personal beliefs and their own ideals that they themselves fail at, and I am a glaring example of that," he said.

Standards

courses before moving on to their freshman-level courses, Barry said, and she'd like to see the standards reduce that need.

As one example of the changes, a proposed new math standard for first-grade students would require addition and subtraction within the number 20 with word problems and different situations involving objects, drawings, and equations. The current first-grade standard is to use objects, pictures and symbols to add up to 10 and to subtract up to nine.

While the standards are set at the state level, the proposed change would not remove the ability of school districts to determine which textbooks to use locally, said Melissa McGrath, spokeswoman for the education department.

Calif. may ban plastic bags

By Samantha Young
Associated Press writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — It could soon cost California shoppers at the checkout aisle if they forget to bring their own bags to the store under what would be the nation's first statewide plastic bag ban.

The California Assembly on Wednesday passed legislation prohibiting pharmacies and grocery, liquor and convenience stores from giving out plastic bags. The bill also calls for customers to be charged for using store-issued paper bags.

The goal is to get rid of unsightly disposable plastic bags that often wind up in urban rivers and the ocean, as well as to reduce the number of bags heading for landfills.

"The biggest way to eliminate this kind of pollution is to ban it," said Assemblywoman Julia Brownley, D-Santa Monica, who authored the bill.

Discouraging plastic bag use through fees or bans first gained traction outside of the U.S. in nations such as South Africa, Ireland, China and Bangladesh.

In 2007, San Francisco became the first U.S. city to require supermarkets and large drug stores to offer customers bags made only of recyclable paper, plastic that can be turned into compost, or sturdy cloth or plastic that can be reused.

Wal-Mart Stores Inc. got rid of plastic bags at three of its Northern California stores this January as part of a pilot program to gauge customer response.

No other U.S. state has adopted a ban, according to Brownley's office.

The bill, AB 1998, still needs state Senate approval. Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger praised the Assembly for passing the plastic bag ban, which he called "a great victory for our environment."

Ashley Smith, 29, of Sacramento said she favors banning plastic bags, even though she reuses her plastic bags to pick up after her dog.

"It's good to do things that are good for the environment," Smith said as she left a Safeway grocery store in Sacramento.

Requiring stores to charge customers for paper bags is a cost Republican lawmakers argued some Californians can't afford.

The American Chemistry Council estimates the bill would amount to a $1 billion tax and threaten 500 jobs in the plastic bag manufacturing business.

Sacred bone whistle headed back to Nez Perce from U of I

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — It was one of those fortuitous little moments that happen every now and again in archaeological collections: Somebody opens a dusty old box, not knowing what's inside.

What University of Idaho anthropologist Leah Evans-Janke and staff at the school's Alfred W. Bowers Laboratory of Anthropology found — a sacred bone whistle, among other items possibly dating to the 1700s — are now on the verge of being returned to the Nez Perce tribe after spending decades in a forgotten, anonymous crate in a warehouse.

While Evans-Janke, the lab's collections manager in Moscow, Idaho, says the discovery isn't earthshaking, "the greatest feeling in the world is meeting with the tribe, and handing the items back over to them, and knowing things are coming back to where they should be — kind of tipping the balance in the universe to where things should be."

The 20-year-old federal Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act requires human remains, funerary and sacred objects, and objects of cultural patrimony be returned to lineal descendants and culturally affiliated American Indian tribes.

That can take years; collections are so vast, even their curators sometimes don't know what they have.

In 2006, the remains of about 150 American Indians including Nez Perce members, as well as their possessions, were returned by the University of Idaho and Washington State University in nearby Pullman and reburied at a secret location, to thwart modern-day grave robbers.

In this latest find, Evans-Janke said lab workers were about 60 percent finished with cataloguing collections from Idaho's 10 northern counties in 2009 when they came across the bone whistle, along with a square wood stick, a brass or copper button, a tusk-like shell and a rounded cork.

"Every now and again, you still find one of those boxes that hasn't been paid much attention to," she said. "We get surprised, just like anybody else."

Records show the objects were dug up 47 years ago on property owned by a sheep rancher named Harry Hagen. It was in the midst of road construction, but the site had been ransacked, according to an Idaho State Archaeological Society account.

"Although the site did not yield human remains at the time of the excavation, it was noted that the site had been 'almost completely potted by amateurs,'" the National Park Service wrote in a Federal Register notice published Tuesday.

The federal agency now manages the site where the objects were found. It's near where Nez Perce members, led by Chief Joseph, fought U.S. Cavalry forces in 1877 during in the Battle of White Bird Canyon on their unsuccessful flight toward Canada.

Lightning hits people at Old Faithful, injuring 9

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK — A lightning strike in Yellowstone National Park injured nine people waiting to see Old Faithful geyser erupt and one man hit by the bolt on Tuesday was hospitalized until late Wednesday afternoon.

The park identified him as Harlan C. Idell Jr., 57, of Leesburg, Fla.

Yellowstone spokesman Al Nash said Wednesday he didn't know the type of injuries Idell suffered.

The others suffered minor injuries.

Nash said the lightning struck about 4 p.m. Tuesday in an asphalt area near the Old Faithful Inn.

"There were literally hundreds of people in the immediate area," he said.

Idell was flown to Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center in Idaho Falls, Idaho. Nash said some bystanders performed CPR on the man.

When park rangers arrived shortly thereafter, the man was conscious and breathing on his own, Nash said.

Idell was discharged from the hospital at about 5 p.m. Wednesday, according to a nursing supervisor.

Idaho pair sentenced for destroying historic mine

BOISE — Two Bellevue residents convicted of destroying part of a historic central Idaho mine have been sentenced to 18 months in federal prison for the crime.

U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge also ordered 37-year-old Russell Nuxoll and 51-year-old Janet Sylten to each pay more than $61,000 in restitution and spend three years on probation after they complete their prison terms.

Prosecutors accused the pair of looting the Snoose Mine, located two miles west of Hailey and listed as an official archaeological site, to sell the pre-World War II timbers of the head frame and ore bin to a timber recycling business. A jury acquitted the two of a charge of stealing government property, but convicted them of destruction of government property.

Group: Idaho's Teton River endangered amid dam talk

BOISE — An advocacy group named Idaho's Teton River to its list of most-endangered streams amid talk of resurrecting a dam that failed spectacularly three decades ago.

American Rivers says rebuilding the Teton Dam would waste money, be unsafe and irresponsible because other, more-reliable water supply options exist.

Idaho and the Bureau of Reclamation are investigating ways to boost water supply in Idaho, a state whose drier-than-average weather over much of the last decade has many concerned about its agriculture-based economy.

The Teton Dam failed in 1976, killing 11 people and 18,000 livestock.

Idaho high court says no drug-testing of parents

By Rebecca Boone
Associated Press writer

BOISE — The Idaho Supreme Court has ruled that the parents of a girl who committed petit theft can't be forced to undergo drug tests as a condition of their daughter's probation.

In the unanimous ruling Tuesday, the high court found that while state law allowed a Kootenai County juvenile court judge to require that the parents undergo random drug testing, the practice violates the U.S. Constitution's protection against unreasonable searches.

The Idaho Supreme Court justices said that even though the daughter had committed a crime, the parents didn't have any diminished expectation of privacy.

The parents were referred to as John Doe and Jane Doe II in the case to keep their daughter's identity from being revealed.

The case began in 2005, when the parents appeared without an attorney in magistrate court with their daughter, who was a minor. The daughter admitted to two counts of petit theft, and was put on probation at her disposition (the juvenile court equivalent of a sentencing) a month later.

But the judge decided to impose some terms on her parents as well, because an investigation done in preparation for the disposition showed that the parents had a history of drug abuse and that the mother was on probation for possession of marijuana drug paraphernalia.

Magistrate Judge Robert Burton asked the parents about their drug use, according to court records, and both said they'd used marijuana. As a result, Burton required both parents to undergo random drug tests as a term of their daughter's probation.

Some time later, the daughter was found to have violated her probation for various reasons — none of them involving drugs — and her parents tested positive for marijuana. Burton continued the girl's probation and again required the parents to undergo random drug tests, warning them they could be subject to contempt of court proceedings if they used drugs.

But this time around, the parents refused to sign the court's probation order and appealed the terms of probation.

The Idaho Supreme Court justices said the lower court judge's intentions were laudable and met the goals of Idaho's state laws designed to help juveniles become contributing members of society. And the high court said that under state law, the lower court was correct: "... the legislature gave magistrates the discretion to require drug testing for parents, at least where it is apparent that drug use is a feature of home life," Justice Warren Jones wrote for the court. "Drug use by a minor's parents could reasonably detract from the minor's education and rehabilitation."

Still, the high court found the probation order violated the parents' Fourth Amendment rights because it intruded on their bodily privacy.

Study: Fear keeps kids from being tested for lead

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — A new study concludes parents living in the Bunker Hill Superfund site in Idaho's Silver Valley are reluctant to have their children tested for lead exposure due to a stigma associated with elevated blood-lead levels.

Work at the Bunker Hill Smelter in Kellogg until 1982 left the region surrounding Lake Coeur d'Alene awash in lead pollution. Early childhood lead exposure is linked to a lower IQ and behavioral problems. No amount of lead exposure is considered safe.

The number of children living inside "the Box" — the 21-square-mile area that received the brunt of historic mining pollution — who are screened each year for lead exposure has dropped from hundreds to just a handful in the past decade, including seven kids in 2007. The declines also come after the federal government in 2002 stopped paying families $20 to have their kids screened.

The study by Sue Moodie, a doctoral student and toxicologist at Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health in Baltimore, Md., found parents feel "blame, shame and guilt" for high levels of lead in their children's blood. Moodie drew her conclusions after interviewing 94 caregivers.

"People were quite candid with me," Moodie told the Spokesman-Review newspaper in Spokane, Wash., for a story published Wednesday. "When they started talking about knowing people who were leaded, I realized that people really can identify those health effects in their families and friends."

Moodie said the low screening rates should be a concern, especially among children 6 and younger who are at greatest risk from lead exposure through household dust.

"Being leaded" is a derogatory term in the Silver Valley. Moodie found parents fear their children will become targets of ridicule if they are tested. The perception was that "they were dirty people and didn't take care of their kids," one survey respondent told Moodie.

"The Box" is cleaner than it was 30 years ago, when the Bunker Hill Smelter was operating, following $50 million worth of Superfund cleanup, said Marc Stifelman, a human health risk assessor for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. Over two decades, contaminated soil was stripped from residential yards and public areas and replaced with clean dirt.

When payments to families stopped eight years ago, 95 percent of the children tested during the three previous years had blood levels of 10 milligrams per deciliter or less. That's the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's threshold for public health action.

Federal judge retires before vote to settle Indian trust lawsuit

By Matt Volz
Associated Press writer

HELENA, Mont. — The federal judge who presided over a class-action lawsuit accusing the government of mismanaging Indian trust funds has retired before the Senate could vote on the $3.4 billion settlement negotiated after 14 years of litigation.

Judge James Robertson's retirement as a senior judge in the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C., took effect on Tuesday, said Robertson's secretary, Marlene Taylor. The judge is in his 70s.

Robertson oversaw the negotiations that led to the settlement between the Department of Interior and the plaintiffs — some 300,000 to 500,000 Indians who own property the government holds in trust for them.

The Department of Interior leases that land to others to farm or develop resources and by agreement is supposed to pay the Indians the money generated by the land into Individual Indian Money trust accounts, or IIMs. The plaintiffs claim the government mismanaged those trust accounts for more than a century.

The U.S. House of Representatives has approved the settlement, but it also must be accepted by the Senate. The parties have agreed to extend the May 28 deadline until June 15 for approval mandated by a federal court.

Bill McAllister, spokesman for lead plaintiff Louise Cobell of Montana, said Robertson's retirement was a surprise to all but a few, but it is not expected to affect the settlement.

"It may explain most easily why he was so anxious to get Congress to act on the case by the end of May. I think he wanted to be around to preside over the end of the case," McAllister said.

The case has been reassigned to District Judge Thomas Hogan, who will preside over a fairness hearing if the Senate approves the settlement.

Hogan will be the third judge to preside over the case.

Lineman ready to return to work after getting 7,620-volt shock

By Kevin Gaboury
Lewiston Tribune

LEWISTON — Aside from some scarring on his fingers and a missing big toe where 7,620 volts of electricity exited his body, Tig Cornell has fully recovered and is ready to return to work.

"Everybody's pretty much told me that I'm lucky," he said. "Everything just happened to work out perfectly the day that it happened."

The 35-year-old Avista lineman was severely burned on Jan. 27 while his crew was repairing power lines along the 2700 block of Sixth Avenue in Clarkston.

Cornell, who is from Genesee, said he has absolutely no recollection of the day of the accident or the week after it happened.

"I lost seven days where I don't remember anything," he said.

Nobody knows exactly what happened that day, and Cornell's only account is what he's been told by co-workers on the four-man crew he was with.

"I reached up to grab the wire and (the electricity) went in my left hand and out my right toe," he said. "I can't remember. It was like I wasn't even there."

Avista linemen Dave Paradis and Mike Knight were on the scene that day, but their memories of the accident are also fuzzy. Paradis said another lineman named Dave Fowler felt the power pole he was on shake violently when Cornell grasped the live wire.

"He turned around and saw Tig on the ground," Paradis said.

Knight said they didn't initially realize Cornell had been shocked.

"I thought he had fallen off the pole," he said.

The two men rushed to administer CPR to their fallen friend and Fowler was about to use an automatic external defibrillator (AED) when the ambulance arrived.

"They were just getting ready to put the stickys on me when the ambulance showed up," he said.

Cornell was airlifted to Harborview Medical Center in Seattle, where he spent three days in intensive care and 21 days in the burn unit.

"Then I came home and have pretty much been healing up ever since," Cornell said.

His wife, Sheri, said she was just about to leave for Hawaii when she received the call her husband had been burned.

She left town right away, and Avista arranged for a private jet to fly Cornell's daughters and his brother out to Seattle.

"It was scary with him not remembering that first day and second day ... having to repeat over and over what had happened because he just couldn't keep his short-term memory," she said.

"But now that we're home, everything's back to normal. He's running around with the kids and there are no problems with balance or anything."

Cornell's next doctor appointment is June 23. He credits his survival to the quick response of his co-workers and the new trauma ambulance based in the Clarkston Heights, which arrived on the scene in about three minutes.

"If they didn't put that ambulance up there in the Heights, I probably wouldn't be here," he said.

He mentioned Avista has been "nothing but extraordinary" throughout the ordeal.

Mike Thomason, Lewiston-Clarkston regional business manager for Avista, said aside from Cornell's case, the company has been fortunate when it comes to accidents.

"We have a very high regard for safety and training," he said. "We haven't had very many accidents involving industry linemen."

He added the swift response by Avista workers and EMS personnel made a major difference in the outcome.

"In cases where somebody comes in contact with that kind of voltage, they usually don't live to talk about it," Thomason said.

For Cornell, the hardest part of his harrowing experience has been not being able to do the job he loves and "just sitting around at home doing nothing," he said.

Cornell is now waiting on the results of a psychological evaluation before he can return to work.

He started working for Avista in May 2002 and said his favorite part is the change of scenery the job provides each day.

"You don't have to go to the same location everyday and do the exact same thing," he said. "Ninety percent of the time, it's something different."

When asked if the incident has changed his opinion of the line of work he's in, Cornell shook his head vigorously.

"Accidents happen," he said. "That's just part of the job."

Time to be blunt: Teton Dam won't be rebuilt, nor should it be Thirty-four years ago Saturday, eastern Idaho changed forever. The eight-month-old Teton Dam on the Teton River near Rexburg collapsed on June 5, 1976, drowning 11 people and 18,000 head of livestock and causing $2 billion in damage.

For a few anxious hours that Saturday afternoon, it looked as if the then-50-year-old American Falls Dam downstream on the Snake River might be endangered. Had the American Falls Dam failed, it would have changed life as we know it in the Magic Valley.

Ever since, irrigators and others in eastern Idaho have pushed for Teton Dam's reconstruction. Simply put, it's not going to happen.

For starters, the Teton Dam was constructed by the federal Bureau of Reclamation at a location where it should never have been built.

The site is volcanic rock that sits upon sedimentary rock. The area is permeable and riven with springs, according to historian Mark Reisner, author of “Cadillac Desert.” Test boreholes showed that one side of the canyon was fissured, a condition unlikely to be remediated by BuRec's favored method of “grouting” (or injecting concrete into the substrates under high pressure.)

No matter. Under pressure from then-Congressman George Hansen, R-Idaho, the dam was built anyway.

“The fundamental cause of failure may be regarded as a combination of geological factors and design decisions that, taken together, permitted the failure to develop,” a review panel concluded.

Nearly four decades later, the state of Idaho and BuRec are investigating ways to boost water supply in Idaho. That includes, perhaps, a new Teton Dam.

The environmental group American Rivers said this week that rebuilding Teton Dam would waste money, be unsafe and irresponsible because other, more reliable water supply options exist.

American Rivers is just articulating what downstream water users — including the Magic Valley canal companies that are the dominant power in southern Idaho irrigation — concluded years ago.

Yet for some eastern Idaho farmers, rebuilding the Teton Dam is as important as removing four dams on the lower Snake River is for the Nez Perce tribe and other salmon advocates.

So when the Idaho Legislature approved $400,000 in 2009 to study rebuilding the Teton Dam, the issue was joined again.

Except that by then a significant number of eastern Idaho conservatives — including farmers and other water-users — had significant doubts about rebuilding the Teton Dam.

Essentially, it boils down to this: There are better, cheaper ways to supply water to the Teton Basin and beyond than the Teton Dam.

Most of the parties who have been lobbying for years to have the dam rebuilt are now part of the Comprehensive Aquifer Management Plan, a basin-wide effort to preserve and revitalize the Eastern Snake River Plain Aquifer.

And the chances of getting an Obama Administration BuRec to sign off on rebuilding the project are negligible.

But let's be honest: The chief barrier to rebuilding the Teton Dam is the memory of what happened the last time it was tried. Contemporary societies don't repeat mistakes that magnitude.

Imagine that you're an irrigator seeking insurance for your operation located downstream from a rebuilt Teton Dam. Would you be able to find anyone who would write you a policy?

The Teton Dam failed; it's time — finally — to look at other solutions.

Our view: For some Upper Snake River Valley water users, rebuilding the Teton Dam has been the holy grail for the past one-third of a century. But it's not going to happen.

New doubts about climate change

Three modern myths have been sold to the American people: the promise of a transparent administration (President Obama); the promise of a more ethical Congress (Speaker Pelosi); and the myth of “global warming,” or climate change.

Cal Thomas

The first two are daily proving suspect and now the third is sinking with greater force than melting icebergs, if they were melting, which many believe they are not.

After spending years promoting “global warming,” the media are beginning to turn in the face of growing evidence that they have been wrong. The London Times recently reported: “Britain's premier scientific institution is being forced to review its statements on climate change after a rebellion by members who question mankind's contribution to rising temperatures.”

It gets worse, or better, depending on your perspective. Newsweek magazine, which more than 30 years ago promoted global cooling and a new ice age — and more recently has been drinking the global warming Kool-Aid — headlined a story, “Uncertain Science: Bickering and Defensive, Climate Researchers Have Lost the Public's Trust.” Newsweek does its best to cling to its increasingly discredited doctrine, but the growing body of contrary evidence only adds to the public's disbelief.

In Canada, the polar bear — which has been used by global warming promoters to put a cuddly face on the issue — is in danger of not just Americans. Joe D'Aleo of The Weather Channel, are publicly distancing themselves from the false doctrine of global warming. D'Aleo says, “We'll have La Nina conditions before the summer is over, and it will intensify further through the fall and winter. Thus we'll have cooler temperatures for the next couple of years.”

Remember the scare ignited in 2007 by supposed melting Arctic ice caps? The Star Canada says a new analysis shows that the apparent change was the result of “shifting winds,” while an expedition last year to the North Pole discovered the ice “100 percent thicker than expected.”

Much of this information — and more — is available at the useful website www.climatedepot.com. It is a given that America needs new sources of energy. Environmentalists have inhibited efforts at exploration by supporting policies that have forced some domestic exploration too far offshore (thus increasing chances of an ecological disaster as is occurring in the Gulf of Mexico).

Instead of trying to sell us a dubious doctrine at an estimated cost of $100 billion a year worldwide (so far), environmentalists would have done themselves and the world more good had they chosen a different strategy, such as not sending oil money to countries that want to destroy us. This would have increased our patriotic spirit and had the additional benefit of not only diversifying our energy supply, but also depriving our enemies of money they use to underwrite terrorism.

Watch for the hardcore “global warming” cultists to continue clinging to their beliefs; but also watch increasing numbers of scientists and eventually politicians to abandon this once “certain” faith and to look for other ways to control our lives. In that pursuit, the left never quits. Rather than acknowledge their error, they will go on to make new mistakes, knowing they will never be held accountable.

A veteran's thoughts about his pledge

As a proud veteran of this country, I stand for the beliefs of our founding fathers. When I took my oath to the military, I pledged my life to protect the interests of this country against all enemies, foreign and domestic. Once an oath and pledge is given it does not go away.

While many of my brothers, sisters and I may differ on issues of politics or religion, we stood as one in combat and oath. I still take that stand beside my brothers and sisters and will to the day I die.

“We the people, by the people and for the people” was not a political statement by men seeking reelection. It was by men who gave up all they had in life for a belief in a better way of life and a country where all people had a voice in their future. They were not Democrats or Republicans, just Americans.

Our country is now in turmoil due to a battle over who is going to run the country — the Republicans or Democrats — and to be quite honest, none of them really care about us the taxpayers except as long as we pay. They are even taking steps as I write this to remove one more of our rights using the United Nations — the right to bear arms.

We even have one city moving part of the Fourth of July celebration to July 5, while free market and fair market have been so distorted by the seller as to mean we will raise the price and you will pay it because you have no choice because the seller now sets the price not the consumer at the same time the worker needs a raise to support their family and so wages and services go up and it all becomes a vicious circle until that circle catches itself and we have financial Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

Idaho Mountain Express, Ketchum

When the city of Hailey enacted its so-called "Chicken Ordinance," it of course opened itself to all the painful and obvious puns — it was henpecked into its decision; it was an egg-citing moment; it's a way for families to re-coop some of their food costs; and others intended as humorous "yokes."

But on a more serious note, Hailey's approval of this form of urban agriculture is something of a return to the days of our grandparents before farming had become a corporate industry and home farmers were commonplace in small towns.

But yesteryear's community customs is today's useful innovation.

As part of the environmental trend of returning to the land and food self-sufficiency as well as a way to stretch family budgets, many homeowners have planted home gardens yielding fresh vegetables, known as victory gardens in World War II during food rationing. Adding a few chickens (limit of three under the new Hailey law) will add an ample supply of eggs to the breakfast table ...

Wisely, the city has said it will monitor the program over the next year for community acceptance and compliance, and in a year decide whether to renew the law.

If the Hailey program works and creates no nuisances in neighborhoods, it could be an important model for other cities to emulate.

Hailey would surely then have something cluck about, right?

Idaho Statesman, Boise

Wilderness bills have long divided Idahoans — and the people Idahoans elect to represent them on Capitol Hill.

But not this year. All four members of the delegation have signed on to Idaho's next good wilderness bill, the product of years of patient work by GOP Rep. Mike Simpson. They have agreed to cross party lines. They are moving forward, in an election year.

They have set aside smaller political concerns of the moment to focus on something bigger: Central Idaho's majestic Boulder-White Clouds roadless area, and a consensus-based plan for managing the region.

As advertised in its title — the Central Idaho Economic Development and Recreation Act, or CIEDRA — this bill skillfully balances varied interests:

- For wilderness advocates, 332,775 acres would be preserved in pristine form.

- For multiple-use advocates, the bill relaxes restrictions on 131,616 acres of wilderness study areas, now managed as de facto wilderness.

- For off-road vehicle enthusiasts, the bill preserves key access on the Germania Creek trail, which would cut between two wilderness areas.

- For Custer County, struggling with the constraints of a meager local tax base, the bill provides more than $2 million in grants for economic development, a community center, EMT services and health clinics.

- For ranchers, the bill allows continued grazing in the wilderness. Some ranchers would qualify for private compensation if they voluntarily retire permits.

The word "compromise" often gets a bum rap, but CIEDRA reflects compromise at its best. No one gets everything. Everyone gets something. The result, says Simpson, charts "a more secure future for this rugged, beautiful and productive heart of Idaho."

Granted, not everyone sees it this way.

An off-road group, the Idaho Recreation Council, has continued its fight against CIEDRA with radio ads targeting Simpson and Sens. Mike Crapo and Jim Risch. The ads are unpersuasive, and rehash the tired, unyielding rhetoric that has left the Boulder-White Clouds in management limbo for decades.

More troubling, potentially, is where Gov. Butch Otter stands. The state has some concerns, Simpson said ... after securing the GOP's 2nd Congressional District nomination.

"(Otter) has asked all the germane state agencies to review the CIEDRA legislation and provide input from the perspective of their own mission areas," Otter spokesman Mark Warbis said. "That process is continuing. Those comments then will be compiled and shared with Congressman Simpson's office."

Fair enough. But ultimately, Otter should bring forward any concerns, publicly. The delegation deserves that. So does every Idahoan who has worked to sweat the details of the bill now before Congress.

It shouldn't be a surprise that it has taken nearly a decade to reach this point. A point where Idaho can, and should, protect another one of its most precious places.

... Mr. Justice VanderSloot

Lewiston Tribune

One of Idaho's richest men now has tainted two of Idaho's five Supreme Court members.

Does that bother you? Late in the campaign, a third-party group calling itself Idaho Citizens for Justice began running ads slamming 2nd District Judge John Bradbury and promoting the incumbent, Supreme Court Justice Roger Burdick. Burdick prevailed (in last month's) primary election.

But until the Spokesman-Review's Betsy Russell broke the story just before the primary, nobody knew who or what Idaho Citizens for Justice was. The group had failed to comply with Idaho Sunshine Law requirements that it register with the Idaho secretary of state's office and disclose where it got its money and where that money was spent.

Turns out Idaho Citizens for Justice got half its money from Melaleuca Inc., an Idaho Falls firm owned by Frank VanderSloot, and got its other half from Citizens for Commonsense.

Melaleuca was that organization's sole contributor.

Between them, Bradbury and Burdick spent $134,000. In other words, VanderSloot added another 29 percent to the pot.

Perhaps this concealment was inadvertent. Other individuals were listed as running these campaigns. But this is not VanderSloot's first or even second venture into judicial elections. You'd think by now he'd understand the state's campaign finance requirements.

In 2006, VanderSloot and his wife Belinda invested nearly $15,000 in a third-party campaign ... that helped oust 7th District Judge James Herndon.

And in 2000, it was VanderSloot who bankrolled Concerned Citizens for Family Values' last-minute assault on incumbent Supreme Court Justice Cathy Silak. Concerned Citizens spent $70,000 helping Justice Daniel Eismann best Silak. Of that, $50,000 came from VanderSloot ...

... any judge who crosses VanderSloot and his company in a courtroom now has to recognize that the millionaire may choose to inject his checkbook into the next judicial contest.

What's beyond dispute ... is how a decade of VanderSloot's interference in these elections has eroded public trust and confidence in an impartial and independent judiciary.

How can anyone expect to get a fair day in court if he goes up against VanderSloot or his company before a judge whose campaign benefited from VanderSloot's support?

But as long as Idaho insists on electing its judges ... the temptation for corporate manipulation in those campaigns will be difficult to resist.

School district thanks voters who supported supplemental levy

I would like to thank our community for its decision to pass the supplemental levy on May 18. The levy funds will allow us to continue our quality K-12 education, to address our scheduled facility needs and maintain our present programs. The levy became even more needed this year to replace the reduction in state funds that were allocated to education.

I would also like to thank the staff who acknowledged the tough economic situation facing our school district. Research is clear that staff (certified, classified and hourly) is the most important factor in providing a quality education.

My approach throughout when discussing salaries and benefits was to be supportive of the staff and to arrive at a balanced budget. However, current conditions warranted benefits for all staff to be cut. The staff will not have employee-sponsored dental or vision insurance, the deductible for health insurance will increase and/or the staff will co-pay for the employee-sponsored health insurance. Additionally, we will operate with one fewer certified teacher and one less classified classroom aide. We also have a plan to reduce salaries if an additional state hold back is implemented for education by the state of Idaho.

We know the school budget for 2010-11 will be tight. Each school district throughout the state is dealing with its own unique situation on how to handle all budget expenses to arrive at a balanced budget. We will be reducing activities, classroom supplies, travel and contracted services. Our supplemental levy will help us for the next two years as we remain hopeful the economy will improve, and our state leaders will have the resources available to them to more fully fund the school districts of Idaho.

The trustees and teachers jointly decided to start school Aug. 18, stay with a five-day per week calendar and our current A/B block schedule. We do appreciate the input we have received regarding calendars and schedules. We do plan to form a representative committee to continue discussions on how to best serve our students.

ANDY WISEMAN
Castleford

(Editor's note: Andy Wiseman is the superintendent/principal for the Castleford School District.)

Spirit of cooperation quickly vanished

After bringing several negative issues to the table on behalf of 17 students, their parents and other concerned members of the community on Jan. 4, 2010, at the College of Southern Idaho concerning the rodeo program, we discovered how ruthless some people can be. Following this meeting, we all shook hands, exchanged hugs and left with the promise that a positive program was looming on the horizon. That is until the very next day.

Since then, we have been physically threatened, persecuted, ridiculed, called filthy names and shunned — so obvious as to why the students needed someone to stand up for them. They were and some still are afraid of repercussion!

If this type of behavior can be brought against us after a combined 55 years of dedicated service to the CSI rodeo program, then just imagine what can and has been brought against the students if the system is challenged. These students should be able to address issues without retaliation, and the administration should take action, not just sweep it under the rug.

Someone needed to speak on behalf of the students; we did and no matter the consequences, we are honored to have been their voice!

This Wall St. enforcer shoots blanks

Pop quiz: Name the person who doesn't belong in the category of Tough Lady Sheriffs Who Scare the Bejesus Out of Wall Street.

1. Mary Schapiro, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.
2. Sheila Bair, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.
3. Elizabeth Warren, chairman of the Congressional Oversight Panel on the Troubled Asset Relief Program.

If you didn't choose No. 1, you've got a short memory. Schapiro, the nation's top securities regulator, is getting lumped together with women known for cleaning up Dodge. Her record, though, includes overseeing an agency where brokers were embraced as part of the regulatory team and aggrieved investors were corralled into a private, back-room justice system.

Time magazine cheered Schapiro, Bair and Warren on its May 24 cover as "The New Sheriffs of Wall Street." You'll get no argument from me that women increasingly are demanding and getting clout to mop up the mess left behind by financial fraudsters or lazy regulators.

Bair spoke her mind about banks' bad policies even before the financial crisis, without regard to whose custom wing-tipped toes she might step on. Warren had the audacity to suggest that consumers, of all people, have a right to be protected from financial institutions that try to fleece them.

But Schapiro? There's no doubt she cast the deciding vote that allowed the SEC to file its much-debated lawsuit April 16 against Goldman Sachs. And since she became chairman in January 2009, the SEC has revamped its enforcement division and trained its examiners to spot frauds like that little Madoff case they missed.

Still, I wonder whether Schapiro is an investor advocate in the spirit of an activist like Warren, or just a really good politician who slides into populist posture when the times demand, then relaxes into business-advocate mode when headlines shift.

Schapiro was named president of NASD Regulation Inc., the regulatory arm of the National Association of Securities Dealers and predecessor to Finra, in 1996. Like the SEC she took over in 2009, NASD at the time was a regulator under fire. The Nasdaq stock exchange, which NASD owned, was awash in trading abuses and needed an institutional housecleaning.

Just as she's doing at the SEC today, Schapiro ramped up enforcement and produced results, with fines collected by NASD rising to $125.4 million in 2005. Then she was promoted to chief executive officer amid the euphoric markets of 2006, and as often happens when greed trumps fear among the investing public, memories of fraud receded and brokers started to catch a break.

Fines fell to $87 million in 2006, $48 million in 2007 and $28 million in 2008, according to data from Finra spokesman Herb Perone.

As Schapiro rose to the top, Ponzi schemes were cooking, unhappy investors were given no choice but to bring their complaints to private Wall Street courts, and hapless examiners didn't Google before an inspection.

She makes the right moves when she first gets called in a crisis. But if your portfolio gets robbed, don't count on this sheriff to draw her gun on your behalf if public attention has already moved on.

Teen sex: More use rhythm method for birth control

By Mike Stobbe
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — A growing number of teen girls say they use the rhythm method for birth control, and more teens also think it's OK for an unmarried female to have a baby, according to a government survey released Wednesday. The report may help explain why the teen pregnancy rate is no longer dropping like it was.

Overall, teenage use of birth control and teen attitudes toward pregnancy have remained about the same since a similar survey was done in 2002.

But there were some notable exceptions in the new survey by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. About 17 percent of sexually experienced teen girls say they had used the rhythm method — timing their sex to avoid fertile days to prevent getting pregnant. That's up from 11 percent in 2002.

They may have been using another form of birth control at the same time. But the increase is considered worrisome because the rhythm method doesn't work about 25 percent of the time, said Joyce Abma, the report's lead author. She's a social scientist at the CDC's National Center for Health Statistics.

The survey results were based on face-to-face interviews with nearly 2,800 teens ages 15 through 19 at their homes in the years 2006 through 2008. Trained female interviewers asked the questions.

It found that about 42 percent of never-married teens had had sex at least once in their life. Of those teens, 98 percent said they'd used birth control at least once, with condoms being the most common choice. Those findings were about the same as in the 2002 survey.

The increase in the rhythm method may be part of the explanation for recent trends in the teen birth rate. The teen birth rate declined steadily from 1991 through 2005, but rose from 2005 to 2007. It dropped again in 2008, by 2 percent, to about 10 percent of all births.

"We've known the decline in childbearing stalled out. This report kind of fills in the why," said Bill Albert, a spokesman for the National Campaign to Prevent Teen Pregnancy.

Teen attitudes may be big part of it. Nearly 64 percent of teen boys said it's OK for an unmarried female to have a child, up from 50 percent in 2002. More than 70 percent of teen girls agreed, up from 65 percent, though the female increase was not statistically significant.

The survey was conducted at a time of some highly publicized pregnancies of unmarried teens, including Bristol Palin, the daughter of former GOP vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin, and Jamie Lynn Spears, Britney's kid sister. The 2007 movie "Juno," a happy-ending tale of a teen girl's accidental pregnancy, was popular at the time.

Ex-JonBenet suspect sought in threat case

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Police are seeking the whereabouts of the man who once falsely claimed to have murdered JonBenet Ramsey after a former acquaintance told authorities that he threatened to kill her if she revealed his attempts to form a cult of little girls to have sex with him.

Karr

Samantha Spiegel, 19, claimed in a request for a restraining order against John Mark Karr that he made "ongoing death threats" and "threats of sexual exploitation to children" in e-mails and instant messages. The order was granted on April 19, but Spiegel's attorney said Karr has not been served because he could not be found.

Officer Alberto Esparza, a department spokesman, said Wednesday that Karr's "whereabouts are unknown."

"Our primary concern is the victim's safety," he said. "San Francisco police takes these threats very seriously and we're doing everything we can to continue the investigation and bring it to a close."

Spiegel told NBC's "Today" show that she had known Karr since she was 9, when he was a teacher at her school in San Francisco. She said they later became engaged.

Karr is now living as a woman.

Her attorney, Robin Sax, told The Associated Press that Spiegel reached out to Karr after he confessed to the death of 6-year-old child beauty queen JonBenet, whose body was found in 1996 in her parents' home in Boulder, Colo.

"She sought him out trying to reconnect, wanting to find out what happened to him," Sax said.

Things moved quickly to Karr contacting her hundreds of times a day, Sax said.

Spiegel also said Karr told her to help him recruit children, and that she thought about letting him meet her niece. Spiegel now says she was brainwashed, and that she's speaking out to help other potential victims.

Officials: Admin talked jobs with Romanoff to clear way for Colorado's Sen. Bennet

By Philip Elliott
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration dangled the possibility of a government job for former Colorado House Speaker Andrew Romanoff last year in hopes he would forgo a challenge to Democratic Sen. Michael Bennet, officials said Wednesday, just days after the White House admitted orchestrating a job offer in the Pennsylvania Senate race.

These officials declined to specify the job that was floated or the name of the administration official who approached Romanoff, and said no formal offer was ever made. They spoke on condition of anonymity, saying they were not cleared to discuss private conversations.

The new revelation of a possible political trade again called into question President Obama's repeated promises to run an open government that was above back room deals.

The Colorado episode follows a similar controversy in Pennsylvania. An embarrassed White House admitted last Friday that it turned to former President Bill Clinton last year to approach Rep. Joe Sestak about backing out of the primary in favor of an unpaid position on a federal advisory board.

Sestak declined the offer and defeated Sen. Arlen Specter late last month for the Democratic nomination after disclosing the job discussions and highlighting it as evidence of his anti-establishment political credentials. He said last week he rejected Clinton's feeler in less than a minute.

In a two-page report on the Sestak case, the White House counsel said the administration did nothing illegal or unethical.

Unlike Sestak, Romanoff has ducked questions on the subject, and it was not clear how long his discussions with administration officials lasted.

Romanoff had sought appointment to the Senate seat that eventually went to Bennet, publicly griped he had been passed over and then discussed possible appointment possibilities inside the administration, one of the officials said.

Republicans have strongly criticized the offer to Sestak, and challenged Romanoff to answer questions about his own dealings with the White House.

Bennet has outpaced Romanoff in fundraising and support from Washington, although party activists attending the state party assembly last month favored the challenger by a margin of 60 percent to 40 percent. The primary is Aug. 10.

Bennet was appointed by Gov. Bill Ritter to fill out the final two years of the term of Ken Salazar, who resigned to become interior secretary.

Romanoff's campaign spokesman did not immediately respond to questions.

Rural housing loans thrive in south-central Idaho

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

One hundred percent financing has been harder to find for most homebuyers, thanks to mortgage regulators cracking down on risky lending practices that led to the worst housing downturn on record.

But that's not the case in south-central Idaho, where lenders continue to offer 100 percent financing for first-time homebuyers through a little known rural development program.

The program offers 502 Guaranteed Rural Housing loans, which are administered and insured by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The loans cover 100 percent of the purchase price, and will even cover the 3 percent loan origination fee. Borrowers of this program rarely make a conventional down payment, which often amounts to 20 percent of the loan. The loans are provided mostly through private lenders who often surprise borrowers when they explain the program.

"Most people don't know these loans are out there, but we are doing a lot of them right now," said Kevin Dane, loan originator at Bank of Idaho's office in Twin Falls.

A "lot of them" is right. The number of rural development home loans originated in south-central Idaho nearly doubled in 2009 compared to the previous year, with total volume reaching $49.5 million, which represents 408 new single-family homes, according to data provided to the Times-News by the USDA. And the program is on track to exceed last year's record — if Congress approves additional funding for the program.

"Right now it's out of money, but Congress is expected to put more money into the program because it is so popular," said Becky Dean, area director for USDA's central Idaho region. "In the meantime, we're letting lenders issue conditional commitments. So they can close the loan, knowing that we will insure it."

The program is only offered to homebuyers looking for a house in rural communities or sparsely populated areas. That makes it ideal for south-central Idaho, where rural towns dot the region. Only Twin Falls is excluded from the program because of its population density.

It also makes the region the largest participant in the program, according to USDA.

Few, if any, people are critical of the loans, which closely resemble 100-percent loans that got some homeowners in over their heads on lofty mortgages with little or no down payment. But lenders say the underwriting is rigid enough to guarantee that borrowers are unlikely to default on the loans.

"The thing that keeps us out of the debacle of the sub-prime crisis is solid underwriting," said Brenda Hughes, senior vice president and real estate administrator for First Federal Savings Bank, which Dean said is tied with D.L. Evans Bank as the largest 502 lenders in the region. "We do a tremendous amount of these loans, but we do all the necessary payment checks and things that ensure the borrower can repay the loan."

Consumers snap up cars in May, despite fewer deals

DETROIT — Americans shrugged off fewer discounts and a scary stock market plunge last month, snapping up new automobiles and delivering another month of higher sales for carmakers.

The industry's double-digit jump in sales shows that consumers feel the economy is healthy enough for them to buy a new car or truck. It's easier to get a car loan and gas prices are holding steady. Those factors helped ease any jitters about the 8 percent drop in the stock market last month.

May marked the seventh straight month of year-over-year sales increases for the auto industry.

"Clearly we are in a recovery," said Jeff Schuster, executive director of global forecasting for J.D. Power.

The outlook for sales through the summer appears rosy — provided that the recovery continues. The financial markets need to stabilize and employers need to start hiring at a faster clip for sales to keep climbing, said Paul Ballew, a former chief economist at GM who is now at insurance firm Nationwide.

Ford Motor Co., General Motors Co. and Chrysler Group LLC saw double-digit sales gains over the same month last year — a bleak month for the industry as GM headed into bankruptcy and Chrysler was already there. Most Asian and

Auto sales jump

Most major automakers reported a jump in U.S. sales in May — showing they are benefiting from a fragile but improving economy.

European-based automakers also posted big gains.

The exception was Toyota Motor Corp. Toyota will extend its generous incentive programs, which includes zero percent financing, to some 2011 models. Toyota said its sales didn't rise as sharply in May because rivals had more favorable year-over-year comparisons.

However, Toyota Group Vice President Bob Carter told investors on Wednesday that the "effectiveness (of incentives) does run its course."

Consumers who visited dealerships last month saw fewer deals. The average per-vehicle spending on incentives — promotions ranging from cash-back rebates to zero-percent financing — was $2,603 per vehicle in May, down 1 percent from April and almost 12 percent in May last year, according to auto information company Edmunds.com.

Incentives are lower than in previous years because deep production cuts have left dealers with lean lots, making them less eager to cut prices, Schuster said. Incentives are likely to remain stable through the summer, he said.

Mercury falling: Ford eliminates mid-range brand

The Associated Press

DEARBORN, Mich. — Ford Motor Co. said Wednesday it will cease production of its 72-year-old Mercury brand by the end of 2010 after years of declining sales.

Ford plans to expand its luxury Lincoln lineup to make up for lost Mercury sales and support Lincoln-Mercury dealers who will suddenly be without a brand.

Derrick Kuzak, Ford's product development chief, said

Dennis Hopper remembered at New Mexico service

By Susan Montoya Bryan
Associated Press writer

RANCHOS DE TAOS, N.M. — Jack Nicholson and Val Kilmer were among the actors who joined dozens of Dennis Hopper's relatives, friends and Taos locals to remember the two-time Oscar nominee at a memorial Mass on Wednesday in New Mexico.

Hopper's simple wooden coffin was ushered into the adobe chapel at historic San Francisco de Asis church.

Hopper, who was twice nominated for Oscars and received a star this year on the Hollywood Walk of Fame, died Saturday at age 74 at his home in Los Angeles. He was diagnosed with prostate cancer in 2009.

Nicholson, cast alongside Hopper in "Easy Rider" as a drunk young lawyer in a breakout role, described Hopper as "an all-around guy."

"It was a very singular relationship I had with him, like nobody else. We were soul mates in a way. I really miss him," Nicholson said.

The church's bells chimed as Hopper's casket was brought into the chapel and again as it was taken out after the two-hour service. The rumbles of about half a dozen motorcycles could be heard in the distance as the casket was taken away in a funeral procession. A private burial followed.

Hopper first came to New Mexico in 1969 to scout locations for the iconic "Easy Rider." He lived in Taos for 12 years through the early 1980s.

Mourners who poured out of the chapel after the service described it as "lovely," "tender" and "beautiful," without mention of Hollywood or Hopper's public persona.

During the service, Hopper's son, Henry Lee Hopper, drew tears from many in the crowd as he read from Walt Whitman's collection of poems, "Leaves of Grass." Other relatives also spoke.

Many said the Mass gave them a sense of Hopper's spirit, and stories of his early days as a Kansas farm boy, his wild side and the time he spent in Taos making films and art continued to be shared after the memorial at a gathering of his friends and family.

"He was the spark plug of this town," said R.C. Israel, an art dealer and a longtime friend of Hopper.

Hopper has been called everything from an artist and an icon to a rebel, but Henry Lee Hopper said trying to sum up his father's life in a few words is nearly impossible. To the 19-year-old, Hopper represents an eternal flame of inspiration.

"You find something that you believe in and you really realize you've got to fight for it. Some people fight for a minute, but there are very, very few people in this world who fight from the day they're born to the day they go out. I would say Dennis was undoubtedly one of these people," the younger Hopper told The Associated Press.

Attorney: Gary Coleman, wife divorced in 2008

By Elizabeth White
Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — Former child TV actor Gary Coleman and his wife were divorced in 2008, an attorney for the late "Diff'rent Strokes" star said Wednesday, the same day a tape of a 911 call was released that detailed her call for help.

Randy Kester told The Associated Press that Coleman and Shannon Price divorced in August 2008 and Coleman never told him the two had remarried.

"Gary shared a lot of things with me," Kester said. "That's probably something he would have told me."

Coleman died Friday at the age of 42 after suffering a brain hemorrhage. He was taken off life support, but it's not clear who made that decision.

Kester said he does not know.

"Now issues are being raised about whether or not Shannon had authority to terminate the life support," he said.

A spokeswoman with Utah Valley Regional Medical Center told AP she cannot release any additional information about Coleman's death.

Utah divorce decree documents list only a John Doe and Jane Doe as parties, but the last page lists Price's name and address, saying a copy of the decree was mailed to her. The decree is dated Aug. 12, 2008. The couple wed in August 2007 after meeting on the set of the 2006 comedy "Church Ball."

Kester said he is not aware of a will for Coleman and that the two discussed the need to meet and work on one as recently as four or five weeks ago.

A message left for a representative for Shannon Price was not immediately returned Wednesday.

On the 911 call from May 26, Price can be heard asking a Utah emergency dispatcher to send help for Coleman, who was bleeding from the back of his head and "bubbling at the mouth" after falling at his Santaquin home, about 55 miles south of Salt Lake City.

In the recording, Price refers to Coleman as her husband.

"I just don't want him to die," Price tells the female dispatcher during the nearly six-minute call. "I'm freaking out like really bad."

Price said she's not sure whether Coleman had a seizure or whether he hit his head and fell. She said he had just gotten home and was going downstairs to make some food for her and that she then heard a "big bang."

"Send someone quick because I don't know if he's like gonna be alive cause there's a lot of blood on the floor," Price said.

Coleman is lethargic and Price says she "can't really help him" and can't drive or handle too much stress because she has seizures.

"I looked at the back of his head and it's all bloody and gross," Price said. "He's conscious but he's not, like, with it?"

Santaquin Police Chief Dennis Hammond has said Coleman had a dialysis treatment that day. It's unclear whether that may have been related to Coleman's fall.

Coleman's short stature of 4-foot-8 stemmed from kidney problems and required at least two transplants earlier in his life and dialysis. Last fall, he had heart surgery complicated by pneumonia, Kester has said. In February, he suffered a seizure on the set of "The Insider."

Coleman was conscious at the hospital that day but slipped into unconsciousness Thursday and was taken off life support Friday with family at his side.

A Santaquin police report released Wednesday largely reflects what Price says in the call. The report says an officer who arrived at the house asked Coleman if he could say what happened.

"He looked at me and stated that he could not remember," the report says.

The officer writes that Coleman had a laceration in the back of his head 1 to 1 1/4 inches long.

"While waiting for medical personnel I could tell that Mr. Coleman was weak," the report says.

The officer writes that while waiting for medical personnel to arrive he looked around the kitchen for any areas of possible impact besides the tile floor and couldn't find blood anywhere else.

The report says that, with assistance, Coleman was able to walk out of the home and into the garage where a gurney was waiting.

In February — on his 42nd birthday — Coleman pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor criminal mischief charge related to a domestic violence call in April 2009. In exchange, the original charge of domestic violence assault was dropped. Coleman and Price had an argument that got out of hand, Kester said.

Porn actor sought in fatal attack at L.A. movie studio

By Jacob Adelman
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Police searched Wednesday for a porn actor suspected of killing one colleague and injuring two others with a sword that was used as a movie prop at a production studio where the suspect had been living.

Stephen Hill, 34, attacked his colleagues during a small social gathering late Tuesday at Ultima DVD Inc.'s distribution and production center in Van Nuys, Los Angeles police Detective Joel Price said.

Hill had been told a week earlier to leave the studio by Wednesday.

"There was no indication that things were going to get violent, there was nothing that provoked this attack, but at some point Steven chose to arm himself with what can be best described as a sword," Price said. "He then used that sword against those three victims."

Hill attacked one man near the back on the facility and turned on two others when they tried to intervene, police said. A 30-year-old man who tried to help suffered a stab wound to the torso and died at a hospital. The other two victims were expected to survive.

Hill fled in an SUV with the weapon, one of several swords at the site, Price said.

Hill appeared in some Ultima films and had worked on its website, but Price believed the studio severed its business ties with Hill when he was told to leave the production facility.

Hill was currently on probation in connection with an unrelated charge of carrying a concealed weapon, said Price, who had no other details about that case.

The names of the victims were not released. Price said they were not established porn stars.

Eric Jover, who is listed as Ultima's contact on public documents, did not respond to phone and e-mail messages seeking comment.

Hill had lived for several months in a section of the production facility that appeared to double as an adult movie set. A witness to the attack also lived in the building, sleeping in a studio furnished as a bedroom.

BP faces another setback; oil slick threatens Fla.

By Melissa Nelson and Adam Geller
Associated Press writers

PENSACOLA, Fla. — The BP oil slick drifted perilously close to the Florida Panhandle's famous sugar-white beaches Wednesday as a risky gambit to contain the leak by shearing off the well pipe ran into trouble a mile under the sea when the diamond-tipped saw became stuck.

The saw had sliced through about half of the pipe when it snagged, and it took BP 12 hours to free it. The company said preparations were being made to resume cutting, but didn't give a timetable on when it might start.

The plan is to fit a cap on the blown-out well at the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico to capture most of the spewing oil; the twisted, broken pipe must be sliced first to allow a snug fit.

"I don't think the issue is whether or not we can make the second cut. It's about how fine we can make it, how smooth we can make it," said

Mary Smith of Theodore, Ala., watches over her grandchildren as a large crew of clean up workers walk along the beach in Dauphin Island, Ala., Tuesday. Oil from the Deepwater Horizon disaster has started washing ashore on the Alabama coast.

Coast Guard Adm. Thad Allen, the government's point man for the crisis.

As the edge of the slick drifted within seven miles of Pensacola's beaches, emergency workers rushed to link the last in a miles-long chain of booms designed to fend off the oil. They were stymied by thunderstorms and wind before the weather cleared in the afternoon.

Forecasters said the oil would probably wash up by Friday, threatening a delicate network of islands, bays and white-sand beaches that are a haven for wildlife and a major tourist destination dubbed the Redneck Riviera.

"We are doing what we can do, but we cannot change what has happened," said John Dosh, emergency director for Escambia County, which includes Pensacola.

Since the biggest oil spill in U.S. history began to unfold April 20 with an explosion that killed 11 workers aboard an offshore drilling rig, crude has fouled some 125 miles of Louisiana coastline and washed up in Alabama and Mississippi as well. Over the past six weeks, the well has leaked anywhere from 21 million to 45 million gallons by the government's estimate.

The latest attempt to control the leak is considered risky because slicing away a section of the 20-inch-wide riser could remove kinks in the pipe and temporarily increase the flow of oil by as much as 20 percent. The cap could be placed over the spill as early as Wednesday.

If the strategy fails — like every other attempt to control the leak 5,000 feet underwater — the best hope is probably a relief well, which is at least two months from completion.

As the oil drifted closer to Florida, beachgoers in Pensacola waded into the gentle waves, cast fishing lines and sunbathed, even as a two-man crew took water samples. One of the men said they were hired by BP to collect samples to be analyzed for tar and other pollutants.

A few feet away, Martha Feinstein, 65, of Milton, Fla., pondered the fate of the beach she has been visiting for years. "You sit on the edge of your seat and you wonder where it's going," she said. "It's the saddest thing."

Gore break-up shows splits aren't unusual, even after 40 years

By Jocelyn Noveck
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — There was no salacious sex scandal, no prostitution ring, no mysterious trip to Argentina.

Al and Tipper Gore are a famous political couple, but their split after 40 years of marriage apparently stemmed from a much simpler, more mundane cause, according to friends: They simply grew apart.

And in that, experts say, they're no different from many Americans. Such late-marriage splits are much more common than we think.

"We tend to mistakenly believe that once people reach a certain point in marriage, they just stop splitting up," says Betsey Stevenson, an economist at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School who studies family trends. "But that's simply not true."

In fact, Stevenson says, though marriages are more likely to fail in the first 10 years, once you get past that, "the percentage of those divorcing each year is very similar throughout the years of marriage."

Of course, there's no getting around the shock factor surrounding the separation announcement by the Gores, which came in an e-mail Tuesday to friends. Unlike many political couples, they'd spoken openly of their feelings for each other and seemed to share an easy affection, not to mention four children and three grandchildren.

That affection was apparent even without The Kiss — the go-for-broke liplock between the vice president and his wife at the 2000 Democratic convention that made so many blush, and is probably doing so again, on YouTube. Was it impulsive or calculated? Either way, it was still quite a kiss.

But now the Gores are parting, and many are asking not only, "Why THEM?" but "Why NOW?"

might find themselves in the same position.

Perhaps the most obvious: After 40 years, children have been launched and are well into adulthood, often with children of their own. Before then, even when children are teens or young adults, parenting can be so all-consuming that it's virtually a permanent distraction from one's own marriage.

Compounding the normal stresses and demands of raising four children, the Gores went through a painful ordeal when their then 6-year-old son, Albert, was nearly killed in a car accident.

"Even with older children, the demands are quite intense," says Elana Katz, a family therapist and divorce mediator at New York's Ackerman Institute for the Family. "That can be distracting, or it can create a strong bond. But when that chapter is done, people face each other across the kitchen table and say, 'Can this be the relationship that's my primary source of enjoyment as we go forward?'"

Also, says Katz, older people have expectations for their relationships now that previous generations may not have. "Even a couple of decades ago, people didn't have the same expectations of love and intimacy at a later age," she says.

It's significant that Al and Tipper Gore married in 1970, notes Stephanie Coontz, author of "Marriage, A History," and professor of family studies at Evergreen State College in Olympia, Wash. Marriages in the late '60s and '70s are marked by higher divorce rates than those of later years, she says. Why? Partly because people still married very young.

The two are now 61 and 62, with decades of health, seemingly, ahead of them. "The idea used to be that by our sixties, life was pretty much over anyway," says Coontz. "But today, people who reach 65 are likely to have another 20 years ahead. So it makes the calculus of living in an unhappy marriage even harder to take."

expectancies, there are more potential new partners out there — "what we call a thicker remarriage market," Coontz says.

A 2004 study on divorce conducted by AARP seemed to bear that out, finding that three-quarters of women in their 50s and more than 80 percent of men reported having a serious relationship after their divorce — often within two years.

The U.S. Census Bureau does not tabulate divorce rates for specific age groups. But Stevenson points to its 2008 American Community Survey, which asked people if they had divorced in the past year. Among those who said they had, a quarter married more than 20 years earlier.

Good fish, good tips

Fishermen offer advice at F&G fish fry

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

JEROME — More than 200 people visited the Idaho Department of Fish and Game regional office Thursday to eat fish and learn angling tactics.

It was the first time “Fish and Tips” was held at the office, but it likely won’t be the last, said Regional Fisheries Manager Doug Megargle.

“Yeah, I think so. It looks like it,” he said about making it an annual event. “This is exactly what we wanted. We wanted people to feel comfortable going to the different booths and talking to the people who know how to catch fish.”

Booths provided information about fish-catching techniques, fly tying and even mosquito abatement.

At the Magic Valley Fly Fishers table, Dennis Brauer tied flies, something he’s been doing for 20 years. His favorite is a mayfly, which he demonstrated tying in just a couple of minutes.

His passion for the sport was obvious, if not catching.

“There isn’t a fish in here that can’t be caught with a fly,” he said, before quickly adding, “except sturgeon. We haven’t figured out how to get those yet.”

The best thing about fly fishing for him is being outdoors. Even if he doesn’t have any luck at the end of his fly rod, it’s a refreshing experience.

“Trout usually don’t live in ugly places,” he said, “so just being out there is something.”

Connie Herbert, also with the fly fishing club, took interested parties outside to try their hand at fly casting.

Other booths shared information about various fish species including trout, bass, crappie, walleye and sturgeon.

Kurt Campbell, president of Idaho Walleye Unlimited, shared places where to catch walleye. Salmon Falls is always a good place, he said, but water temperature has to be just right.

“Walleye are passive-aggressive feeders,” Campbell said, noting they’ll either eat whatever you throw at them or let it float away, depending on water temperature, which determines their activity level.

Activity level at the free fish fry was high, as visitors grabbed plates of deep-fried catfish and crappie, hush puppies, fries and coleslaw.

“I came out to get some tips on how to fish for different species,” said Dan Cress of Filer. He walked away with some good information — and a satisfied belly — “though they’re not going to tell you any of their big secrets,” he said.

Megargle said there were several people who came just for the food, but that was OK. Hopefully, he said, it’s been another way to introduce people to fishing. Maybe they got a taste of crappie and decide to start fishing for it, he said.

Angling at Magic Reservoir

Times-New file photos

Bill Ogata of Jerome fishes Dec. 4, 2008, at Magic Reservoir. The reservoir is not only a popular place to ice fish during winter, but offers anglers the chance to catch fish in warmer weather. Fishermen now are having good luck using crank bait.

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

There’s more than one reason why it’s called Magic Reservoir — because it’s located in the Magic Valley, sure, but also because anglers have good luck catching fish at the 14,000-acre reservoir.

Anglers recently have been catching rainbow trout in the 2-pound range, says Don Hartman, owner of West Magic Resort.

“Two pounds (in the 12- to 16-inch range) is pretty much standard,” he said.

Anglers the last couple of weeks have found success using green PowerBait, he said, though fishermen also are catching fish on clown-pattern bait and Rapala lures.

Besides trout, the reservoir contains brown trout, yellow perch and smallmouth bass.

“It’s a little too cool for the bass yet,” Hartman said, “and perch are just kind of iffy ... but they’re all over the place.”

Magic, on land owned by the Bureau of Land Management, is a good place to visit if you like to do more than just fish.

The reservoir, located about 50 miles north of Twin Falls off Highway 75, is a popular spot for bird watching. During summer, birders can find a variety of fowl — from raptors to songbirds.

Many waterfowl — Canada geese, mallards, pintails, pelicans, gulls, grebes and killdeer — merely pass through the area, while others “make their homes year-round,” a site marker reads.

Besides its abundant bird population the reservoir is nestled in an area that, historically speaking, is a geological wonder. Geologists the country over are familiar with its volcanic history.

“Most of southern Idaho is considered geologically active” and could emit volcanic ash at any time, another marker reads, “perhaps tomorrow, or maybe 1,000 years from now.”

When visiting, be mindful of the lands about you. The same marker that informs visitors of the site’s geological wonders warns them that most of the land around the reservoir is publicly owned, but some are private lands.

Use common sense, be aware of which lands are owned by whom and respect property rights, the marker reads.

Besides the area’s geological history, its birding venue, and the reservoir’s accessibility to bank and boat fishing, the site also is a popular ice-fishing getaway during the cold months.

Perch are probably the most popular species of fish to catch during winter but, as Hartman said, they’re around in the summer too.

Lures to catch fish, not fishermen

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

When browsing the aisles of fishing lures at sporting goods stores, it’s easy to get overwhelmed with the glitter. But a rule of thumb is, when shopping for tackle you’ve got to think like a fish.

Dennis Brauer, an avid fly fisherman, gives good advice: “Pretty flies catch fishermen,” he said. “Basic flies catch fish.”

The same could be said about most any lure. There are plenty on the walls of sporting goods stores, and I was expecting Dewey Watson, a life-long angler, would show me some of the more fancy kinds when I visited him Tuesday at Sportsman’s Warehouse in Twin Falls.

Not so. Like Brauer had said, the fish are going after the basics.

Watson, who’s fished in a number of tournaments in 16 states and gets on the water every chance he has, said anglers at Magic and Salmon reservoirs are having good luck using the original floater Rapala lures. He also likes the brand’s Countdown minnows. He likes Nos. 5 and 7 for trolling, and said the ones that resemble small trout — dark on top, light on the bottom — work well, as do the blue-colored ones, or the gold ones that resemble perch. Perch smolts are what bigger fish are foraging on right now, he said.

There are a number of different Rapalas. Others that do well are the Husky Jerk, which contains a rattle, and the Shad Rap variety, which have larger lips. There’s also a jointed style that seems to work.

“This is what’s good right now, at this time of year,” Watson said, noting that later in the season he’d probably switch to a larger number lure because minnows will be larger by then.

Rapala is a brand name, and other lures on the market imitate the brand. The lures are good for bass, brown trout, rainbow trout and walleye, he said.

Twister Tales, another brand, also are popular for walleye, he said. He likes to use the 3-inch with a 1/8 jig head.

Watson said crank baits also have been working well in lakes and reservoirs, while spinners seem to be popular for rivers and streams. Fly fishing is picking up on some waters, he said, though the rivers and streams are still fairly high due to runoff and rain.

Overall, he forecasts that this should be an “extremely good” year, Watson said. “The water temperature is still a little cool. We’re already two or three weeks behind schedule, but give it another five degrees and things will pick up.”

Chinook season transforms Little Salmon River into a small city

By Roger Phillips
McClatchy Newspapers

ALONG THE LITTLE SALMON RIVER — It’s not just fishing that drives people to take part in the short season along the Little Salmon River. Fellowship, family tradition and fun are all part of the annual frenzy.

Each spring during the last decade a small city has formed along the Little Salmon River north of Riggins, Idaho, to meet the return of chinook salmon to the river that bears its name.

It’s a conglomeration of tents, RVs and pickups packed alongside the river. They’re squeezed into parking lots or wedged between the steep riverbank and the highway.

When word of a hot bite spreads, people skip work and drive through the night to spend hours casting shoulder-to-shoulder — known as combat fishing — for the chance to catch a fish that they could buy for about $4 a pound.

Big fish, big thrills

“It’s just the thrill of having a fish that strong on the end of your line,” said Rick Cloepfil of Boise. “It’s just hard to explain the thrill of having one on and landing it.”

Cloepfil, an aircraft mechanic, went home after a recent double shift that started at 3:30 a.m., packed and hit the road at 10:30 p.m. He arrived at the Little Salmon at about 2 a.m., took a short nap, then rose at 3:30 a.m. and sat for two hours next to the river to secure a prime fishing spot.

“You never know when is early best-tasting fish you can get enough,” he said.

By 7 a.m., he had landed his first chinook of the season.

“He’s slept on the rocks before,” his wife, Kathy Cloepfil, said.

The Cloepfils and their neighbors, Dan and Julie DeLong, make salmon fishing an annual event that usually ends with a baked salmon dinner.

Dan DeLong, a self-described seafood snob originally from the Puget Sound area in Washington, said spring chinook is among the Small waters run deep with trout

By Eric Sharp
Detroit Free Press

GRAYLING, Mich. — A half-dozen times a year for a decade, I drove over a creek so small you could jump across in most places. It went under the road a mile from a major trout river, and I always wondered what it might hold.

One day I stopped at the creek and began fishing upstream. It was great. There were 10- to 12-inch brown trout that would eat any insect that landed on the water. The absence of a fisherman's path or even footprints in the mud along the banks was a pretty good indication it rarely was fished.

The trees and brush grew so thick along the creek that hang-ups were common, but the fishing was so good that they were a minor irritation. About 300 yards up from the road the creek widened to a shallow pool where I could see a fish rising next to a deadfall along the side.

The rise was small, like another dink, and when I dropped the fly above the fading ripple, it was sucked down in a couple of seconds. But when I raised the rod tip, the water just exploded as a big fish ripped off across the pool and ran 20 yards upstream.

It turned out to be a 22-inch brown, the kind of fish you'd never expect from a stream this small. The memory of that great fish has lured me back to the creek several times a year since, and while I haven't caught another trout that big, I have been surprised by enough 14- to 18-inchers that I'll drive 50 miles out of my way to fish it.

A couple of weeks ago, I fished for smallmouth bass with Mike Pehanich, the senior writer for BASS Master magazine, and he told me about a series of stories he's working on called "Small Waters."

Pehanich's premise is that while most anglers work the same well-known big lakes, there are hundreds of 50- to 250-acre ponds within easy reach that contain good numbers of bass and get very little fishing pressure.

That got me to thinking about my penchant for small trout waters, which often are more productive than the big streams except when a major fly hatch is on, like the Hendrickson or hexagenia flies.

And the little rivers have a beauty and charm that's tough to match on big waters. One small river in the far western Upper Peninsula drops down a series of rock steps and ledges, and by midsummer the water level has dropped so low that it turns into a series of pools connected by tiny rivulets. The water runs clear and cold, but the fish are in little ponds ranging in size from a kitchen sink to a hot tub.

It's delightful to scale the exposed rock of the riverbed and cast flies to fish swimming in a pool 4 or 5 feet above. In some places, you can stand on the steep rock face below, poke your head over the rim of the pool and spot the fish holding in the crystalline water.

Many little streams don't produce major fly hatches, but that probably is what makes the fish in them less choosy. You will have a lot more success if you fish upstream rather than down.

The tight quarters along most of the small streams make a short fly rod a good choice. And for the creeks and small rivers, I've found that a leader a little shorter than the rod seems to result in fewer streamside hang-ups on the back cast.

Rather than the 2- or 3-weight rods that I often use on more open waters, I like a 6-weight fly rod for tight, brushy streams. Because most casts are 20 feet or less, the heavier No. 6 line makes it easier to drop a fly accurately.

When I fish a well-known trout river for the first time, I usually map out ahead of time a couple of smaller feeder creeks that look like they should hold trout and may get less angling pressure.

Computer sites like Google Earth are great for looking over these places before the trip. And if you get the GPS coordinates for a likely looking site from Google Maps and plug them into a car's GPS navigation unit, you'll be amazed how often the navigator will be able to guide you there on gravel roads and two tracks.

Fishing opportunities in the Magic Valley

Question: "My daughter had a great time learning to fish for trout at a student fishing clinic at the Hagerman Wildlife Management Area. Then my family and I attended the free fishing clinics and fish fry last Thursday evening. We especially enjoyed the fish fry but also had a great time learning about all the different types of fishing. Is there anything else coming up that we should look forward to?"

Answer: Thank you for the compliment. Before school let out, department employees assisted more than 1,500 students throughout the Magic Valley learn how to fish, fillet and cook their catch, and make paintings using the fish they caught.

Thank you cards from the students really say it best: "Thank you for letting us come and fish and how to file (filet) a fish. I went home and showed my dad, and he was amazed!" The parent of another student reported back that their child cooked the fish they caught that very day, and it fed their family.

As employees, we too had a great time at the first Magic Valley Sportsmen's Fish Fry, Chips and Tips. We estimate more than 240 sportsmen attended the free clinics and ate fish and hush puppies.

Several groups are to be thanked for making this event a success; Leo Ray's Fish Breeders of Idaho supplied the catfish fillets, Pepsi Bottling Adventures donated soft drinks, the Mini-Cassia Bassers supplied bass fishing expertise and gave away fishing gear. The Magic Valley Fly Fishers had a large contingent of anglers mesmerized learning fly-tying techniques. Idaho Walleye Unlimited club members educated anglers about walleye techniques and the Thirsty Fish Outfitters discussed sturgeon fishing.

This event took significant planning by several department employees in order to coordinate the cooking and the fishing clinics, and Regional Fisheries Manager Doug Megargle and his staff are to be commended for their thoroughness.

The next great fishing opportunity for your daughter is "Free Fishing Day" on June 12. As its name implies, no one needs a fishing license to fish on Free Fishing Day. There are several special opportunities for kids during the day at the Hagerman State Fish Hatchery, at the Hayspur State Fish Hatchery near Picabo, and at Heagle Park in Hailey.

During those special opportunities children do not need to bring any equipment, as there will be plenty of loaner equipment and bait available. In addition to assistance on angling techniques at the Hagerman hatchery, department employees will be on hand to teach children how to clean and prepare their catch for the table as well as making artist prints of their catch. Free hot dogs and drinks will also be available for the family.

Gary Hompland, regional conservation officer for the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, may be reached at 324-4350. Call or e-mail questions through the website: fishandgame.idaho.gov.

FISHING REPORT

Fishing reports in the Magic Valley region include:

Stream fishing on the South Fork Boise and the Big Wood River opened May 29. A lot of anglers took advantage of last weekend's perfect weather and caught fish, mostly trout. While temperatures have turned cold again, anglers are still out and have some success.

Anglers report consistently catching two-pound trout at Magic Reservoir from boats and from shore.

The cutthroat-rainbow hybrid trout wowed anglers this week at Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir. Most anglers were catching the 4- to 5-pound trout from the boat and banks using worms.

Some small walleye are being caught but regulars say the water is still a little cold. A few crappie and bass also are beginning to show up.

At Anderson Ranch fishermen are catching bass up to 3½ pounds. Many anglers are using 4-inch rubber black ringworms or grubs that are salty, and jigs with chartreuse tails. People fishing from the shore for trout are consistently catching fish more than 12 inches. Anglers after kokanee are having some success.

A steady stream of anglers are fishing for sturgeon on the Snake River and had good success around Riley Creek near Hagerman this week.

Ponds throughout the region are regularly stocked and provide a good opportunity for beginner and experienced anglers alike. Oster Ponds near Hagerman continue to be a popular and a successful destination to catch trout.

When Mann hooked a chinook, people moved aside so he could move downstream to fight it. Another angler netted it for him, while others congratulated him for catching his limit.

Combat fishing and purple hearts

The semi-organized mayhem on slick rocks and steep banks with hooks and lead weights flying through the air can lead to injuries.

Two years ago, Mann lost his footing on a slick rock and broke his leg. But did the 63-year-old retiree ever consider giving up salmon fishing? "Oh, hell no, it's so much fun," Mann said.

This year, one unlucky Treasure Valley angler was hauled away from the river in an ambulance after he yanked a snagged line and a 3-inch weight lodged between his eyeball and skull socket.

Several years ago, an angler slipped into the river and drowned.

Passing along a tradition

Upstream on Rapid River, where sport anglers are forbidden to fish, members of the Nez Perce Tribe use dip nets and gaff hooks to harvest salmon like the generations before them.

Samuel Enick, 48, has fished there since he was 14 and earns most of his annual income from commercial fishing.

He starts gill-netting on the Columbia River in early spring, moves to Rapid River when the salmon arrive there and finishes his season on the South Fork of the Salmon River.

"I can make $400 per day catching fish," he said.

Enick and other tribal members sell their salmon along U.S. 95 within a stone's throw of where they harvest the fish.

But not all the fish they catch are sold. Many are given to churches on the reservation for ceremonies.

"We give them to the elders and whoever else needs them,"

Chinook salmon harvest limits have changed

Times-News

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission has changed the daily and possession limits for chinook salmon on the lower Salmon River and the Little Salmon River, as well as the statewide annual limit.

On the lower Salmon and Little Salmon rivers, the daily limit is five chinook salmon, only three of which he said.

Talon Davis, 11, is learning to gaff salmon. His small frame is too light to muscle the long, heavy dip net that has twice dislocated Enick's shoulder.

Davis uses a 3-inch hook affixed to a long wood pole to sweep the bottom of Rapid River and snag chinook.

On his best day, Davis made $80 selling his catch.

Davis started helping other tribal fishermen when he was 6 by gutting fish and carrying them from the river to trucks and coolers. Now he's taking his place among the older anglers, and once gaffed 20 chinook in a single day.

may be adults. The possession limit is 15; nine may be adults.

The statewide limit for all waters has gone up to 40 adults for 2010.

Daily and possession limits in other waters open to chinook salmon fishing have not changed.

The daily limit on the Hells Canyon reach of the Snake River from Dug Bar to Hells Canyon Dam is four salmon, only two may be adults, and the possession limit is 12, six of which may be adults.

The daily limit on the Clearwater River main stem, North Fork, Middle Fork and South Fork and on the Lochsa River is three Chinook, one of which may be an adult. The possession limit is nine salmon, three may be adults.

An adult chinook is 24 or more inches in total length; a jack is less than 24 inches.

All walks of life

Rexanne Zimmerman owns the combination tackle shop and liquor store in Riggins, which is the unofficial headquarters for salmon anglers.

In the early 1990s, when salmon seasons were sporadic and short, salmon fishing mostly attracted local anglers or those from nearby communities. But 2010 marked the 10th straight year of salmon fishing, which is the longest streak since the early 1960s, and now attracts people from throughout the Northwest.

Zimmerman said she gets calls from Montana, Utah, Nevada, Arizona and California. She started getting phone calls in January and February from people wanting to know about the coming salmon season, which typically opens in late April.

"They just call and say, 'When is the best time to plan our vacation?'" Zimmerman said.

Riggins gets whipped

Unlike the long steelhead season, which lasts from September through April, salmon fishing is "like a feeding frenzy because it's such a short season," Zimmerman said.

Prime fishing typically lasts from a month to six weeks, depending on the size of the run.

The influx of anglers brings millions of dollars to the small river community. Restaurants, motels, bars, gas stations and stores go full-tilt to accommodate the rush.

"We all get whipped, but we look forward to it," Zimmerman said.

Honoring their sacrifice

As a people, we pause the last Monday in May — Memorial Day — to honor the memory of all the men and women who've given their lives in the service of our nation. Last year, after watching the elaborate parades, listening to the emotional speeches, and personally placing miniature flags and flowers at veterans' grave sites, I wondered, "Besides these token signs of appreciation, what could we do that would truly honor these people's sacrifices?"

I became convinced that the greatest honor we could bestow upon them would be to ensure the preservation of the very rights, principles and freedoms that they gave their lives defending. But to be perfectly honest, I had only a vague understanding of what those rights and principles were. So as part of my repentance, I began a systematic study of the Constitution and its amendments.

Now, a year later and somewhat better informed, I look at national and international events and believe that many of our hard-won liberties and freedoms are in danger from "enemies foreign and domestic." But what can one person do?

I believe our best opportunity to ensure the preservation of our founding principles is to investigate and learn about them, legally exercise them, and hold our elected representatives personally accountable to legislate in compliance with them. Individually, as citizens, we have been charged by the Founding Fathers to be vigilant watchmen and critics over their legitimate discharge of these duties. As the old saying reminds us, "a watched pot seldom boils over."

As a lifelong recreational shooter and sportsman, I have always been a staunch defender of the Second Amendment, but shamefully I hadn't, until last year, really studied the document to understand its origin, intent and rights. Are any of you guilty of the same negligence?

If so, today, with current political and court challenges, is the perfect time to become better informed and more involved in its preservation. There are lots of local and national organizations that would benefit from your talent and participation.

I am a life member of the National Rifle Association and have witnessed its continuing influence upon our legislators and Belt Way politicians. The NRA is currently our most powerful representative and lobbyist in Washington D.C. If you're not a member, please consider becoming one. I also encourage you to make community connections and friendships at your local gun ranges, trap, rifle and handgun clubs.

As an outdoorsman and conservationist, you can further our cause by aligning yourself with organizations, such as the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation, Safari Club International, Trout Unlimited, Pheasants Forever, Ducks Unlimited, Sportsman for Fish and Wildlife, as well as participating in locally-sponsored conservation projects.

Since the future of our sport depends upon the next generation of shooters and hunters — and our numbers are declining — consider introducing someone new to the shooting sports this year. There are children and adults in your extended family and neighborhoods that would love the opportunity to participate, if only given the invitation. So become a missionary for the cause.

Happy shooting!

Fly tying's easy — give it a try

By Kevin Wheatley
The State Journal

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Todd Weeks, a 50-year-old fly fisherman, sits at a small mobile worktable, clamps a fishing hook into a vice and winds its shank with dark-green thread.

For the tail, he ties black marabou — the soft, fluffy part of feathers found on turkeys — to the shank. He then adds olive-colored yarn for the body and a rooster feather for hackle.

Todd finishes the fly and briefly inspects it.

"Simple," he says, holding the fly in his palm. It's a woolly bugger, sort of a utility fly, which he says will "fish all day" at the Salato Wildlife Education Center's two lakes.

Tying flies may prove daunting for newcomers to fly fishing.

Today, however, Todd says anyone can do it.

All it takes is a little patience and the ability to follow directions.

"You have to be able to read a book, and that's it," Todd said. "I mean, I can give you this vice and some basic tools and hand you this book, and within a half hour's time, you can tie a fly in no time."

The book is "The Benchside Introduction to Fly Tying" by Leeson Schollmeyer. Todd recommends it for novices and veterans alike.

After more than 40 years of tying, Todd still keeps a copy nearby.

He's a journeyman tool and dye maker of 20 years and began tying flies when he was 8 growing up in Buffalo, N.Y.

His first fly was a woolly bugger — which resembles a leech or worm in water. The marabou tail provides fluttering action that fish find irresistible.

A small creek ran behind Todd's home in Buffalo where he caught his first fish — a bass — using one of his handmade flies.

"Back in the 60s you could just walk out your backdoor and spend all day down there," Todd says. "No one worried about you unless you didn't come to eat."

Over the years and through travels, Todd has accumulated a small stockpile of fly-tying materials.

He has a tackle box full of various styles and sizes of hooks, spools of colored thread and a blue plastic bin filled with bags of animal fur and feathers from deer, turkey, peacocks and roosters.

"There are a hundred different types."

He has more exotic tying material at home, including porcupine fur. There are even a few synthetic materials — which some fly tiers shun.

"Some people are traditionalists and Todd Weeks, 50, ties a fly May 21 at Salato Wildlife Education Center. Todd says it is a fun activity and something different to do. "When you start catching fish on flies that you've made, it's just a lot of fun," he says.

purists, and they're only going to tie with fur, feather, that kind of thing. I don't really follow that route. I kind of enjoy doing different things, like if I'm going up to Erie Pennsylvania, let's say, and I'm going after the steelhead trout. I've got yarn that's just bright orange, or chartreuse even, in color that I don't mind using.

"You're not going to find anything chartreuse in the wild that's going to help you tie that fly and catch that fish."

Todd teaches kids to tie flies in his spare time. He can keep their attention and says they're some of his best students.

Todd says beginners will always have problems with tying flies at first. That's one reason he started the Frankfort Fly Fishing Club two years ago.

"It's a friendly group of guys who will offer advice and show you how to tie flies.

"It's also a way to meet people to fish with."

Todd stresses proportions which he says is the most important dimension of imitating insects when tying.

"Proportions mean more than anything," he says. "The wings have to be about what the insect represents. So the silhouette of a fly, because obviously the fish is always looking at it from the bottom up, they want to see the same proportions of a fly.

"And most people who put their own little twinges on them at first, that's fine. You can vary color, you can vary feathers, anything you want, but if you can stay with the proportion of a fly, you're going to be more successful when fly fishing."

Some newcomers don't heed his advice.

"I see a lot of people get carried away, and it really makes me chuckle every time it happens. Someone will say, 'Look what I made,' and, hey, it's a nice fly, but they neglected to remember the fact that proportions mean more than anything when tying flies."

Tying flies also helped Todd's fishing prowess.

"The more you do this, the more the different aspects come into it," Todd said. "Understanding how creeks run, understanding about lakes and ponds, and you want to understand a little about the insects you're trying to imitate."

One thing he's learned over the years is the sleeping habits of grasshoppers. They sleep on their backs, and the sun warms their stomachs before they wake up.

"You know it'd be pointless to use a grasshopper at 6 in the morning if they get up around 9, depending on when the sun warms them up."

Todd practices catch-and-release when fishing. Although he'll keep a fish or two while camping, he mostly fishes for the fun of it.

Even catching a bluegill — about the size of a person's palm — gives Todd a thrill.

"Every time you get one, it feels like a whopper," Todd says. "It's a riot."

Reader asks what to do about hundreds of fatty tumors

DEAR DR. GOTT: I am a 53-year-old female who is about 50 pounds overweight. I have saved, for years, the column you wrote on fatty tumors. I had a few of them, but my doctor said to leave them alone, even though they could be seen through my clothing. In the past two to three years, they have multiplied, and I know I probably have hundreds of them. I've had a few removed that are painful, and they were lipomas, as suspected. Some of the remaining ones are painful; some are not.

Should I continue to "let it go," or should I have more removed? In your column, you said it could be associated with Gardner's syndrome. Should I look into that area? Would losing weight help, or would they just become more pronounced?

DEAR READER: Most peripheral nerve tumors are benign. There are a number of types, including lipomas, ganglion cysts, schwannomas, dumbbell tumors and neurofibromas.

Lipomas present as soft lumps under the skin, commonly appearing on the back, neck, arms or shoulders, caused by slow-growing fat cells. As a general rule, they do not cause pain, but because they can compress nerves, you should have periodic exams.

Ganglion cysts can occur almost anywhere but commonly form near the wrist or at the base of a finger. If there's no pain, you can ignore them. If there's pain, restricted use of a joint and paresthesias, surgical removal may be appropriate.

A schwannoma is common, slow-growing, benign and can appear anywhere on the body. Vestibular schwannomas occur near the cerebellum and brainstem. They can press on the nerves that control balance and affect hearing.

Dumbbell tumors are so called because of their appearance. They may occur in the spine or lower abdomen by the hip. They can become intertwined with the sciatic nerve. If surgery is necessary, it should be accomplished at an extremely reputable facility.

Neurofibromas are common in people diagnosed with neurofibromatosis. Most patients have mild symptoms, but related conditions, such as bone enlargement or deformity, scoliosis and tumors affecting the eye, can occur.

Colon polyps, multiple osteoma and soft-tissue tumors characterize Gardner's syndrome. The average age of diagnosis is 22. A common symptom, other than lipomas, is dental anomalies, such as multiple impactions. Treatment depends on the location and appearance of the lesions. Surgical excision may be recommended.

Speak with your physician about a weight-loss program. I don't know whether losing 50 pounds would improve your situation. I do know that fat cells increase in volume and size with weight gain, and liposuction, for example, will reduce the number of fat cells in the body. If losing weight works, you will feel better and the number of slow-growing fat cells within your body may be reduced. This is a win-win situation. With respect to "leaving them alone," I would buy that approach only if I were convinced all the lesions were benign and that removal, weight loss, liposuction and every other consideration has been ruled out. If you can't get that assurance or other management options from your doctor, request a referral for a second opinion.

Holloway suspect sought in Peru murder

By Franklin Briceño
Associated Press writer

LIMA, Peru — A young Dutchman previously arrested in the 2005 disappearance of Alabama teen Natalee Holloway is the prime suspect in the weekend murder of a Peruvian woman, police said Wednesday.

Joran van der Sloot is being sought for Sunday's killing of 21-year-old Stephany Flores in a Lima hotel, police chief Gen. Cesar Guardia told a news conference. He said the suspect crossed into Chile the next day by bus.

Authorities in Chile confirmed that van der Sloot entered their country on May 31 and there is no record of him leaving. Police inspector Douglas Rodriguez in Arica told The Associated Press that police are searching hotels and residences in northern Chile for the suspect.

The Dutch government said Interpol has issued an international arrest warrant for van der Sloot.

Guardia said the 22-year-old Dutchman, in Peru for a poker tournament, appears with the young woman in a video taken at a Lima casino early Sunday and the two were later seen entering the hotel by one of its employees.

The victim's father, circus empresario and former race car driver Ricardo Flores, says his daughter dropped off some girlfriends at 2:35 a.m. then apparently returned to the casino. She and van der Sloot were seen entering the hotel room about 5 a.m., said Guardia, and the Dutchman departed alone about four hours later.

"We have an interview with a worker at the hotel who says she saw this foreigner with the victim enter his room," said Guardia.

Stephany Flores' body was found face down on the hotel room floor on Wednesday, abrasions on her face and body, and signs of trauma, the police general said. He said she was clothed.

Asked if she had been asphyxiated, Guardia said he was awaiting autopsy results for the exact cause of death.

The killing occurred exactly five years after the May 30, 2005, disappearance of Holloway in Aruba, a Dutch Caribbean island.

Van der Sloot left Peru on Monday by land, Guardia said, his exit registered at the Santa Rosa border crossing. He had been staying at the hotel since May 14, having entered on a flight from Colombia, the police general added.

The victim's father is a 48-year-old former president of the Peruvian Automobile Club who won the "Caminos del Inca" rally in 1991 and brings circuses and foreign entertainers to Peru. He ran for vice president in 2001 and for president five years later on fringe tickets.

Interpol has issued an international arrest warrant for van der Sloot, Dutch Foreign Ministry spokesman Bengt van Loosdrecht told The Associated Press in The Netherlands.

He cited as his sources Peruvian police and the Dutch Embassy in Lima. The embassy's head of consular affairs, Angela Lowe, told the AP she could not comment on the case.

But Rodriguez, the Chilean police inspector, said authorities there had so far only received an order to locate his whereabouts, not an arrest warrant.

World at warmest point on record, NASA says

By Alex Morales
Bloomberg News

The global temperature this year reached its warmest on record based on a 12-month-rolling average, James Hansen, the top climate change scientist at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said Wednesday.

The mean surface temperature in the year through April was about 1.17 degree Fahrenheit warmer than the 1951 to 1980 mean, according to a graph in a 37-page draft paper on the website of NASA's Goddard Institute for Space Studies. That makes it a fraction warmer than the previous peak in 2005. Absolute temperatures weren't published in the paper.

"Record high global temperature during the period with instrumental data was reached in 2010," Hansen and three coauthors wrote in the paper. "As for the calendar year, it is likely that the 2010 global surface temperature in the GISS analysis also will be a record."

The figures strengthen the case that temperatures show a warming in the climate. Critics of efforts to regulate greenhouse gas emissions from fossil fuels had pointed to another data, compiled by the British Met Office, which puts 1998 as the warmest year, as evidence that the Earth is cooling.

The document will be submitted to Reviews of Geophysics, a scientific journal, Hansen said Wednesday in an e-mail. The NASA data series uses information from 6,300 monitoring stations around the world and is one of the three main gauges of global temperature used by the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change to compile its assessments.

Activists flash the peace sign as they ride a bus at the Allenby Bridge crossing point between Israel and Jordan, early Wednesday. Israel expelled hundreds of activists it rounded up in a naval raid on an aid flotilla headed for the Gaza Strip on Monday, and strongly rejected criticism of its heavy-handed tactics.

A hero's welcome

Israel deports activists to Turkey, Greece

By Selcan Hacaoglu

Associated Press writers

ISTANBUL — Hundreds of activists deported from Israel following a bloody raid by Israeli commandos on a pro-Palestinian flotilla returned to a hero's welcome in Turkey early Thursday. Nine bodies were on the first plane.

Deputy Prime Minister Bulent Arinc and several Turkish lawmakers welcomed them at the airport after Turkey pressured Israel to release the detainees, most of whom are Turkish. Others were from Arab countries, Europe and the United States.

"They faced barbarism and oppression but returned with pride," Arinc said.

A few thousand jubilant relatives and supporters, waving Palestinian and Turkish flags, burst into applause outside the airport, chanting "God is Great!" They later walked to the perimeters near the tarmac to see their loved ones. Another crowd celebrated their return in downtown Istanbul.

"Turkey is proud of you!" the crowd chanted as they shouted "Down with Israel!"

Three air ambulance planes carrying wounded activists had landed in Ankara earlier. They were bused to a medical center to undergo treatment, NTV television said.

The flotilla aimed to break a blockade that Israel has imposed on the Gaza Strip and carry food and other supplies to the Palestinians who live there.

Earlier, Israel's Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu hotly rejected calls to lift the blockade on Hamas-ruled Gaza, insisting the ban prevents missile attacks on Israel. He labeled worldwide criticism of his navy's bloody raid on a pro-Palestinian flotilla as "hypocrisy."

"This was not the 'Love Boat,'" Netanyahu said in an address to the nation, referring to the vessel boarded by commandos, setting off clashes that led to the deaths of nine activists. "It was a hate boat."

While Israeli officials spent most of the day trying to contain the flood of diplomatic condemnation of the raid, Netanyahu was anything but conciliatory in his first nationally broadcast comments since Monday's military action.

"Israel is facing an attack of international hypocrisy," he said, asserting that the Jewish state is the victim of an Iran-backed campaign to arm the Hamas rulers of Gaza with missiles that could hit Tel Aviv and Jerusalem.

Netanyahu said the aim of the flotilla was to break the blockade, not to bring aid to Gaza. If the blockade ended, he warned, hundreds of ships would bring in thousands of missiles from Iran, to be aimed at Israel and beyond.

The result, he said, would be an Iranian port on the Mediterranean. "The same countries that are criticizing us today should know that they would be targeted tomorrow," Netanyahu said.

Seven planes were being used to deport 527 activists to Turkey and Greece, Israeli Interior Ministry spokeswoman Sabine Haddad said. Seven other activists remained in Israeli hospitals for treatment of wounds suffered during the Israeli raid, she said.

After all the planes took off, the Israeli Foreign Ministry said three activists remained in detention over "documentation and other issues," without elaborating. The three were from Ireland, Australia and Italy.

About a dozen female activists scuffled with security officers at the airport but were quickly subdued by authorities, Israeli officials said. Officials said no charges would be filed and the women were deported as planned.

The U.N., Europe and others harshly criticized Israel after its commandos stormed the six-ship flotilla in international waters, setting off the clashes. About 700 activists — including 400 Turks — were trying to break the Israeli and Egyptian naval blockade of the Gaza Strip by bringing in 10,000 tons of aid.

Militants attack, fail to disrupt Afghanistan peace meet

By Kathy Gannon and Rahim Faiez
Associated Press writers

KABUL, Afghanistan — The thump of rockets and the rattle of gunfire punctuated President Hamid Karzai's speech opening a national conference Wednesday where delegates were divided over whether to negotiate peace with Taliban leaders to end nearly nine years of war.

Taliban fighters wearing suicide vests fired at the tent holding some 1,500 dignitaries, lawmakers and civil society activists, triggering a battle with security forces that killed at least two militants. Three civilians, but no delegates, were wounded.

One rocket landed within about 100 yards (meters) from the tent and kicked up smoke. Karzai brushed off the interruption, about 10 minutes into his address, and urged fighters from the Taliban and another major insurgent group, Hizb-i-Islami, to lay down their arms.

"My dear Taliban, you are welcome in your own soil. Do not hurt this country, and don't destroy or kill yourselves," Karzai said, emphasizing that more fighting would only prevent the withdrawal of international forces from Afghanistan.

"Make peace with me and there will be no need for foreigners here," Karzai said in the nationally televised speech.

The attack underscored the Taliban's opposition to what they have dubbed as a "phony reconciliation process" stacked with Karzai's supporters. They insist they will not negotiate until all foreign troops leave the country.

The Obama administration supports overtures to rank-and-file insurgents but is skeptical of a major political initiative with Taliban leaders until militant forces are weakened on the battlefield. NATO troops are preparing for a big offensive this summer in the Taliban heartland of Kandahar province.

No official militant representatives were invited to the three-day conference, although some delegates are insurgent sympathizers. Karzai's government said it organized the gathering, called a peace jirga, to gauge the mood of ordinary Afghans toward negotiations.

Government ministers, including former warlords Abdul Rasul Ruyaf and Vice President Gen. Mohammed Qasim Fahim, relaxed on couches and other plush chairs in the front row, while other delegates had less comfortable seating choices in the cavernous tent pitched on a university campus in Kabul.

The delegates largely shrugged off Wednesday's attack. But some said it demonstrated the weakness of the government.

UK taxi driver kills 12, wounds 25 in England

SEASCALE, England (AP) — A taxi driver drove his vehicle on a shooting spree across a tranquil stretch of northwest England on Wednesday, methodically killing 12 people and wounding 25 others before turning the gun on himself, officials said.

The rampage in the county of Cumbria was Britain's deadliest mass shooting since 1996 and it jolted a country where handguns are banned and multiple shootings rare.

The body of the suspected gunman, 52-year-old Derrick Bird, was found in woods near Boot, a hamlet popular with hikers and were in the hospital, with three of them in critical condition. In a sign of the scale of the tragedy, Queen Elizabeth II issued a message saying she was "deeply shocked" and shared in "the grief and horror of the whole country." She passed on her sympathy to the families of the victims.

The shootings had "shocked the people of Cumbria and around the country to the core," Police Deputy Chief Constable Stuart Hyde said.

Police said it was too early to say what the killer's motive was, or whether the shootings had been random. Some reports said Bird had quarreled with fellow cab drivers the night before the killings.

Peter Leder, a taxi driver who knew Bird, said he had seen the gunman Tuesday and didn't notice anything that was obviously amiss. But he was struck by Bird's departing words.

"When he left he said, 'See you Peter, but I won't see you again,'" Leder told Channel 4 News. The first shootings were reported in the coastal town of Whitehaven, about 350 miles northwest of London. Witnesses said the dead there included two of Bird's fellow cabbies.

Police warned residents to stay indoors as they tracked the gunman's progress across the county. Witnesses described seeing the gunman driving around shooting from the window of his car.

Victims died in Seascale and Egremont, near Whitehaven, and in Gosforth, where a farmer's son was shot dead in a field. Workers at the nearby Sellafield nuclear processing plant were ordered to stay inside while the gunman was on the loose.

Hyde said there were 30 separate crime scenes. Many bodies remained on the ground late Wednesday, covered with sheets, awaiting the region's small and overstretched force of forensic officers.

Chris Mottern

One of God's special angels has passed from our lives. Chris Mottern, 75, a longtime resident of Twin Falls and beloved mother, grandmother, sister, aunt and friend, departed this life at her home Wednesday, May 26, 2010, after a courageous battle with cancer. The memory of her radiant smile, cheerful personality, gentle nature and sense of adventure will be forever in our hearts.

Chris was born July 8, 1934, in Harrison, Ark., one of five sisters and one brother. As a toddler, she moved with her family to Idaho. She was a 1952 Filer High School graduate and was a leader in many school organizations and activities. Soon after finishing high school, she moved to Twin Falls and was employed by Barnard Auto Company. Later, she was hired by her eventual husband, Ben Mottern, at the Rogerson Restaurant. Chris and Ben were married in 1955 and remained a fun-loving and devoted couple until Ben's passing in 2004. Their years of their marriage were filled with raising four beautiful children, co-owning a successful restaurant business with their dear friends, Ted and Jennie Smith, traveling, cheering on their favorite sports teams and enjoying shared interests.

Throughout her lifetime, Chris' first priority was supporting her children's and grandchildren's activities. She was involved in their 4-H groups; decorating barn stalls and showing horses and dogs; car-pooling to dance lessons and recitals; watching sporting events of her children, grandchildren, many nieces and nephews and friends; spending hours with the Rogerson Coffee Shop Giants Little League baseball team; and helping out with any school activity where she was needed. Her last outing, 11 days before she died, was attending her grandson, Alex's, graduation from Lighthouse High School.

After her children were grown, Chris pursued a career in the hotel industry. Hired as a sales manager at the Canyon Springs Inn of Twin Falls, she was soon promoted to the position of general manager. Her career highlight was having the opportunity to establish and serve as the director of hotel management at the College of Southern Idaho for 12 years, where she was awarded Outstanding Technical Staff Person.

Chris was full of adventure and everyone wanted to be with her. She loved to go for a long ride and end up in a place no one would have imagined visiting on that outing. She had a passion to explore the outdoors and take in the beauty of nature, to return to places that made an early impression on her to reflect the past and an excitement to visit new destinations. Getting into the car and traveling to a CSI basketball tournament 2,000 miles away during a snow storm or following the University of Idaho Vandals to a football game wherever their schedule took them was perfectly normal for Chris! Just as exuberant as she was for adventure, she welcomed the precious moments of solitude. Greeting the dawn of a new day on her long walks on the CSI campus, the quiet times in her home listening to soothing music, meditating, reading inspirational books and just "being" with her angels were some of her most cherished times.

Chris was a shining example of authentic beauty, grace, sincerity and generosity. Her sense of empathy and compassion was strong, and she always had time for anyone who needed her. She lived her life with strong faith, a positive attitude and a healthy lifestyle. She faced difficult health challenges with strength, dignity, and poise and was thankful for each day. She continued her involvement with the Twin Falls Reformed Church, gathering with friends for Bible study and assisting with providing food for those in need every Monday evening. She was also active in the Twin Falls Chapter of PEO. She journeyed to Israel in 2008 with a group from her church and hiked the Negev Desert, where she "walked in the footsteps of Jesus," an event she called "a life-changing experience." Seeking knowledge of her granddaughter's culture, she traveled to Thailand in 2008. In the autumn of 2009, she experienced her first cruise visiting Italy, the Greek Isles and Turkey.

Chris is survived by her loving children and grandchildren, Jim (Jane) Mottern and their daughters, Jamie and Jenna of Irvine, Calif.; Janis (Ken) Mottern-High and their daughters, Sara and Emma of Twin Falls; Jerry (Nitnoi) Mottern and their daughters, Jennifer and Jasmine of Twin Falls; and Joni Mottern and her children, Alex and Haley Nixon, also of Twin Falls. Chris' family also includes her sisters, Betty Reichert of Twin Falls, Shirley (Tom) Mahan of Santa Clarita, Calif., and Rita (Michael) Delaney of Boise; her brother, Will Moore of Star, Idaho; and numerous nieces and nephews. She was preceded in death by Ben, her husband of 48 years; her father and mother, Clyde and Lena Moore; her sister, Eva McClure; and her nephew, Greg Moore.

The family would like to thank the medical community, especially Dr. Sara Johnson, and Hospice Visions for the compassionate care extended to Chris during the final days of her illness. For all the family and friends who prayed, visited and sent notes of encouragement, we are eternally grateful. She felt your love.

A celebration of Chris' life will take place at 1 p.m. Saturday, June 5, at the Reformed Church of Twin Falls, 1631 Grandview Drive N. In lieu of flowers, contributions to one of the following would be appreciated: College of Southern Idaho Foundation, P.O. Box 1238, Twin Falls, ID 83303; Vandal Scholarship Fund, in care of the University of Idaho Foundation, P.O. Box 443147, Moscow, ID 83844-3147; or the Reformed Church of Twin Falls.

Juanita Peterson

Juanita Peterson, 83, of Twin Falls, passed away Tuesday, June 1, 2010, at the Stoney Creek assisted living facility.

Juanita Peterson was born May 27, 1927, in Idaho Falls, to Athol Lee Burks and Dorothy Ida (Billington) Burks. They moved to Twin Falls when she was in grade school and she continued there until she graduated in 1945. She married James Kenneth Miller in January of 1947. They lived in Twin Falls for two years and then moved to Jerome. She later married Albert Peterson of Twin Falls (on June 12, 1973) and lived there for the remainder of her life.

She was active in the Magic Valley Art Guild and won many awards at the Twin Falls County Fair. She also worked with Welcome Wagon, Toast Mistress and Meals on Wheels, sang in the choir at the First Baptist Church in Jerome and was active in the BaptiWeds group. In later years, she was very active in the Good Sam

Club and went to many "jamborees" and fishing and camping trips with her husband, Albert.

She was preceded in death by her parents, one older brother who died in infancy, and her first and second husbands. She is survived by her brothers, Richard and Dorothy Burks of Gold Canyon, Ariz., and Dennis Burks of St. Paul, Minn.; her children, Oren and Trudy (Suhr) Miller of Minot, N.D., Murle and Annette (Dryden) Miller of Twin Falls, and Tris and Christine (Coman) Miller of Boise; plus eight grandchildren; numerous great-grandchildren; and many nieces and nephews.

A service of remembrance will be held at 2 p.m. Friday, June 4, at Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home, 2551 Kimberly Road in Twin Falls. Burial will follow at the Twin Falls Cemetery.

The family would like to thank the staff of the Stoney Creek Assisted Living Center and Hospice Visions for their love and care.

Chris Haney, co-creator of Trivial Pursuit, dies

By Elaine Woo
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Chris Haney, a former Canadian journalist whose fascination with entertaining, barely useful tidbits of information led him to co-create the bestselling board game Trivial Pursuit, died Monday in Toronto. He was 59.

He had been in poor health the last two years with kidney and circulatory problems, said Scott Abbott, who created the game with Haney more than 30 years ago and watched it become a cultural phenomenon across North America and around the world.

"I was the architect and Chris was the general contractor. I invented it and he made it happen," Abbott said of the partnership that resulted in more than 100 million copies being sold in 33 countries by the time Hasbro bought the rights to the game for $80 million in 2008.

Decades before data hounds had Google, there was Trivial Pursuit, a $29.99 board game that elevated the acquisition of a wide range of arcane knowledge to a coveted social skill. Players answered questions in six broad categories to collect six colored pie wedges to win. The game rewarded people who knew such facts as what part of an elephant has 100,000 muscles, what was Elvis Presley's highest-grossing movie and who invented the flush toilet.

Although trivia games and books were not new, Trivial Pursuit "spread like a virus all over the culture," said Syracuse University pop culture expert Robert Thompson, who attributed the game's enormous popularity to a critical mass of college-educated people that began building after World War II.

Born Aug. 9, 1950, in Welland, Ontario, Haney often described himself as a beer-swilling high school dropout whose biggest mistake was quitting school at 17. "I should have done it when I was 12," he said in interviews.

When he dropped out, his father, a radio news reader, insisted he get a job and helped him find one in the photo department at the Canadian Press wire service. Haney worked at various bureaus of the service from the late 1960s through the late '70s.

He met Abbott, a sports writer for the Canadian Press, in 1975 when he was assigned to the Montreal bureau to organize photo coverage of the 1976 Olympics. They became close friends and housemates.

In 1979, Haney was married to his first wife, Sarah, and working for the Montreal Gazette when he and Abbott hit on the idea that would change their lives.

It was a Saturday night before Christmas, and Haney and his wife had returned from grocery shopping with a surprise for Abbott: a Scrabble set. But Haney groused about paying what he believed was an inflated price — $11 — for the board game. "He said, 'There must be a lot of money in games. Why don't we invent one?'" Abbott recalled in an interview Tuesday. "Then he said, 'What should it be about?' I said, 'Trivia.'" Abbott then sat down with pencil and paper and worked out the basic details in 45 minutes.

Haney suggested calling the game Trivia Pursuit, but Sarah suggested a crucial tweak: adding an L to make it Trivial Pursuit. "That made it," Abbott said.

Beat poet, Ginsberg protege Peter Orlovsky dies at 76

By Emma Brown
The Washington Post

Peter Orlovsky, 76, a writer best known as a longtime muse, inspiration and companion of Beat poet Allen Ginsberg, died May 30 of lung cancer at a respite care center in Williston, Vt.

Orlovsky and Ginsberg were partners for more than 40 years until Ginsberg's death from liver cancer in 1997. They met in San Francisco in 1954 and committed to each other in a ceremony held the following year.

"At that instant, we looked into each other's eyes," Ginsberg later recalled, "and there was a kind of celestial cold fire that crept over us and blazed up and illuminated the entire cafeteria and made it an eternal place."

Ginsberg would soon be launched to national attention for the profane and sexually explicit poem "Howl," for which his publisher was hauled into court on charges of obscenity. "Howl" helped make Ginsberg a hero of free-speech advocates, an anti-establishment cultural icon and the prolific poet laureate of Beat generation writers.

Orlovsky was credited with sparking Ginsberg's creative impulse. "Allen needed someone to write to — whenever he wrote poetry, he was sort of writing with someone else's ear in mind," said Ginsberg biographer Bill Morgan. "A lot of times, it was Jack Kerouac; and at other times, it was Peter Orlovsky."

Encouraged to write by Ginsberg, Orlovsky became a poet in his own right. He won a $10,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts in 1979 and published several books, including "Dear Allen, Ship Will Land Jan. 23, 58" (1971), and a book with Ginsberg called "Straight Hearts' Delight: Love Poems and Selected Letters" (1980).

Orlovsky's poems were playful and frank, featuring unusual spellings and a conversational style. "Peter's poetry does not stand beside Allen's best work like 'Howl' and 'Kaddish,' but it had its own goofy, sweet integrity," said Steve Silverman, who came to know the couple as Ginsberg's apprentice and later as his teaching assistant.

"Morning again, nothing has to be done/maybe buy a piano or make fudge," reads Orlovsky's "Second Poem," written in Paris in 1957, when he and Ginsberg were staying with fellow poets William S. Burroughs and Gregory Corso at a boarding house known as the Beat Hotel.

Shriners provides one more chance

Three days later, Minico's Keelan McCaffrey reaggravated a previous injury by breaking bones in his foot.

Ryan Howe

Just like that, two high school football careers came to a heartbreaking end.

Their injuries were also a big blow to their teams. McCaffrey, a linebacker, was leading the team in tackles. Bedke was a two-way starter at running back and defensive back. The stars were reduced to watching from the sidelines and providing teammates with moral support.

The injuries shattered dreams born of hard work and anticipation for their senior seasons.

"It was the worst thing I've ever felt. It was terrible," said McCaffrey. "I waited four years to play as a senior."

While they weren't able to return to the field in the fall, McCaffrey and Bedke got one last opportunity to strap on the pads Tuesday in the 33rd Annual Magic Valley North-South All-Star football games.

"I was excited to play in the game, get another shot at playing," said Bedke, who now has a six-inch scar down his forearm from surgery to repair a broken radius. "It felt good to be playing again."

The all-star games raise funds for Shriners Hospitals for Children, which provides free pediatric care and serve nearly 500 Idaho children each year. Without Shriners, thousands of families across America would be in financial ruin due to mounting medical bills.

"What made it even a better experience for me was to play for the Shriners Hospitals and all those kids," said McCaffrey, who was named the 11-man North's Defensive MVP after intercepting two passes and blocking a field goal.

BLUER PASTURES?

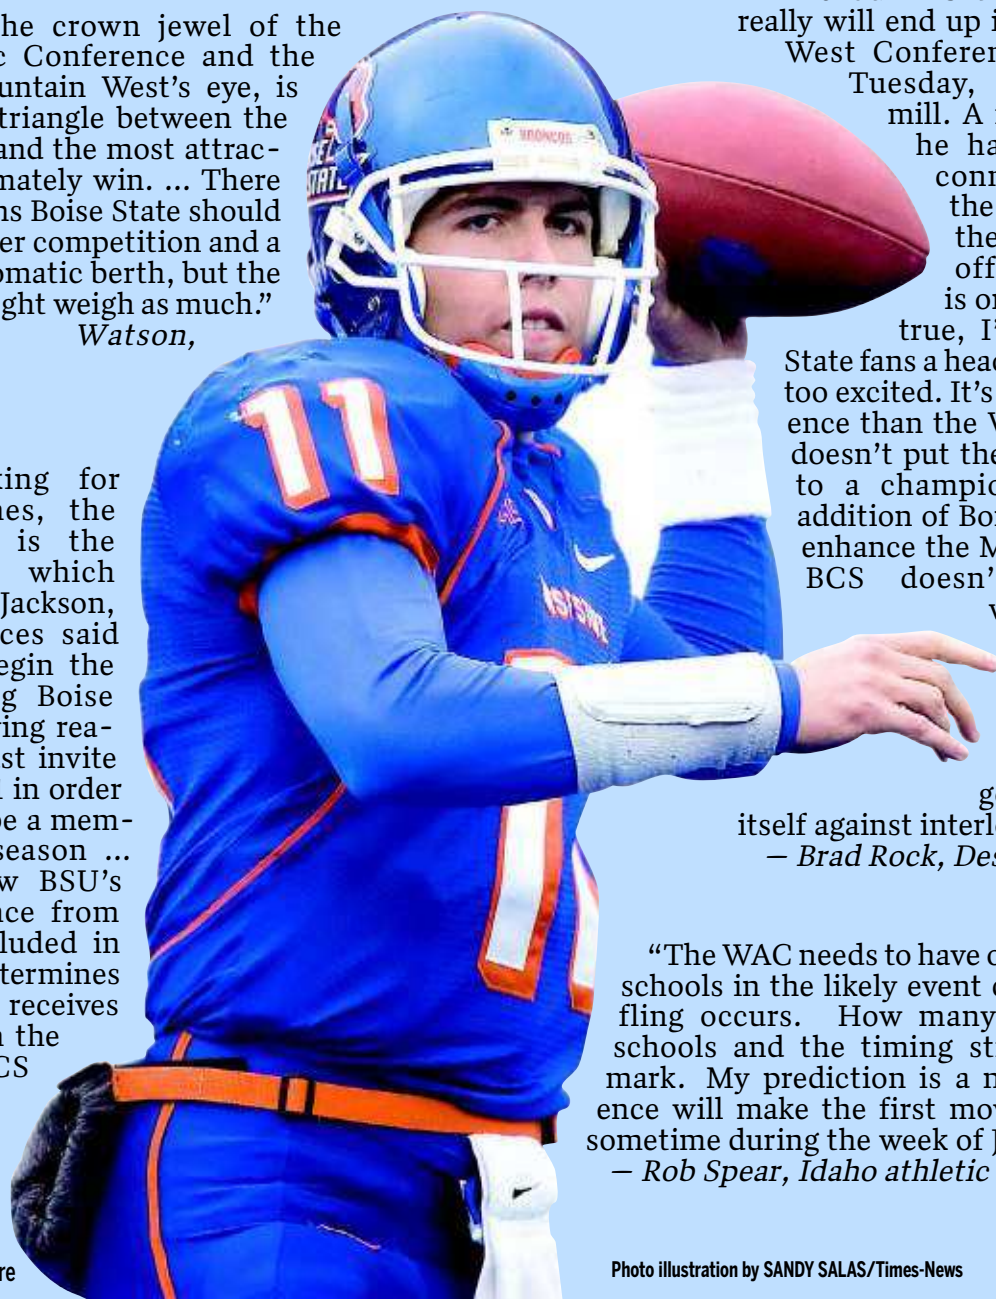

BSU to the MWC has been getting plenty of play in print, online and over the air waves. But does it have any merit? Will the Mountain West Conference really invite Boise State to join when MWC executives meet in Jackson, Wyo., Sunday through Tuesday? If so, will the Broncos make the jump and leave the WAC for the 2011 season? Those who can provide accurate answers aren't talking publicly, but here's a sampling of what some are saying.

"Boise State, the crown jewel of the Western Athletic Conference and the apple of the Mountain West's eye, is caught in a love triangle between the two conferences and the most attractive one will ultimately win. ... There are a ton of reasons Boise State should go, including better competition and a possible BCS automatic berth, but the reasons to stay might weigh as much."

— Graham Watson, ESPN.com

"If you're looking for expansion headlines, the league to watch is the Mountain West, which meets June 6-8 in Jackson, Wyo. Several sources said the MWC could begin the process of inviting Boise State for the following reason: The MWC must invite Boise State by July 1 in order for the Broncos to be a member for the 2011 season ... which would allow BSU's football performance from 2008-10 to be included in the formula that determines whether the MWC receives an automatic bid in the next cycle of BCS games."

— Jon Wilner, San Jose Mercury News

BSU quarterback Kellen Moore

"The buzz is that Boise State really will end up in the Mountain West Conference. I heard so Tuesday, via the rumor mill. A friend who says he has a co-worker connected with all the right people in the MWC says the official invitation is only days away. If true, I'm giving Boise State fans a heads-up: Don't get too excited. It's a better conference than the WAC, but it still doesn't put the Broncos closer to a championship. ... The addition of Boise would surely enhance the MWC. ... But the BCS doesn't much care whether Boise is in the WAC, the MWC or the League of Extraordinary Gentlemen. It's going to protect itself against interlopers."

— Brad Rock, Deseret News

"The WAC needs to have options to replace schools in the likely event conference shuffling occurs. How many schools, which schools and the timing still is a question mark. My prediction is a non-BCS conference will make the first move and it will be sometime during the week of June 7"

Celtics at Lakers
7 p.m., ABC

LOS ANGELES — When Kobe Bryant joined the Lakers and Paul Pierce landed with the Celtics in the late 1990s, they both learned most of what they needed to know about their franchises' histories and expectations simply by looking at the forests of fabric high above the court.

Multiple titles are the

the NBA finals begin Thursday night at Staples Center.

"It's going to mean everything for my career, because a lot of guys have won one, and not many have won a couple," Pierce said Wednesday before Boston practiced at Staples Center.

Pro basketball's most successful franchises are together in the NBA finals for the second time in three years and the 12th time overall. These teams will have won 33 of the league's 64 titles when they finish a potentially fascinating series with plenty of modern subplots.

"We're always focused on winning a championship," Bryant said. "And when you do it, you want to do it again and again."

Bryant is enjoying a dynamic postseason despite hobbling through injuries during a third straight finals run by his remarkably steady Lakers, who are 8-0 at home in the playoffs and haven't even trailed in a series.

Boston's swift rise from a 50-win regular season as a No. 4 seed has been even more surprising, with Rajon Rondo making a quantum leap into stardom during what might be the last stand for Boston's Big Three of Pierce, Kevin Garnett and Ray Allen.

But on the biggest scoreboard of all, the one these players claim they seldom check, it's Celtics 17, Lakers 15. Don't expect fans in either basketball-crazy city to forget that score when their team takes it all again.

And just in case the Staples Center fans didn't

CSI's Felix to visit ASU

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

Carrick Felix might be a devil after all.

The former College of Southern Idaho star will take a recruiting trip to Arizona State University this weekend, according to CSI head coach Steve Gosar.

Felix had planned to make a recruiting visit to ASU's Sun Devils back in March, but canceled the trip after verbally committing to Duke. He signed with the Blue Devils May 8, but was granted a release from his National Letter of Intent on May 25 and reopened his recruitment.

The 6-foot-5 Felix averaged 14.8 points and 4.7 rebounds as a redshirt freshman and will have three seasons of eligibility at his next school. He will be eligible to play in 2010-11 unless he signs with one of Duke's Atlantic Coast Conference rivals, in which case he'd have to sit out one season.

Felix spent a few days at Duke's Durham campus in May before deciding it wasn't the right fit. He is currently in Twin Falls retaking a math class.

Gosar said Felix has discussed possible campus visits with NCAA runner-up Butler as well as Alabama, Arkansas, Kansas State and St. Mary's. He can make up to four official visits.

ASU head coach Herb Sendek made visits to CSI's campus in recruiting Felix during the past season. Felix starred at Millennial High School in Goodyear, Ariz., not far from ASU's campus in Tempe.

So long, Kid: M's Griffey hangs 'em up

By Tim Booth
Associated Press writer

SEATTLE — The Kid has called it quits.

Just the way Ken Griffey Jr. wanted, there will be no farewell tour for one of the greatest players in baseball history. Instead, Griffey simply informed the Seattle Mariners on Wednesday night his career was over.

The 40-year-old Griffey unexpectedly announced his retirement before Seattle's game against Minnesota on Wednesday after 22 seasons, 13 all-star appearances and widespread acclaim as one of the greatest players of his generation.

Stuck in a limited role as a backup designated hitter and spot pinch-hitter, Griffey called Mariners' team president Chuck Armstrong and said he was done playing. Mariners manager Don Wakamatsu called his players together before the start of batting practice to inform them of Griffey's decision.

"While I feel I am still able to make a contribution on the field and nobody in the Mariners front office has asked me to retire, I told the Mariners when I met with them prior to the 2009 season and was invited back that I will never allow myself to become a distraction," Griffey said in a statement.

"I feel that without enough occasional starts to be sharper coming off the bench, my continued presence as a player would be an unfair distraction to my teammates and their success as a team is what the ultimate goal should be," he said.

Griffey was not in the clubhouse before the game, and the team said he would not be at Safeco Field.

Milton Bradley, Griffey's teammate for only a few months, turned to Mike Sweeney during batting practice and said, "on a day like this, it should rain in Seattle."

Griffey was hitting only .184 with no homers and seven RBIs this year and recently went a week without playing. There was a report earlier this season — which Griffey denied — that he'd fallen asleep in the clubhouse during a game.

He ends his career fifth on the all-time home run list with 630. He won an MVP award and was an 11-time Gold Glove. The only thing missing on his resume was a trip to the World Series.

"It's a sad day for the Mariners, our fans, for all the people in the community that have loved Ken, admired him as a tremendous baseball player and a

Stosur dumps Serena Williams out of French Open

PARIS (AP) — Serena Williams is usually the one who saves match points, not wastes them.

Who turns up her game at Grand Slam time.

Except at the French Open, the lone major tournament she's won only once and where she's now gone seven years without even reaching the semifinals.

The No. 1-ranked Williams dropped 17 consecutive points during one stretch, climbed all the way back to within a point of victory, then faded late and lost to No. 7 Samantha Stosur of Australia 6-2, 6-7 (2), 8-6 on Wednesday in the Roland Garros quarterfinals.

"Had I played better for two minutes, maybe the result could have been different. But it didn't work out," said Williams, who missed a forehand by an inch or so when she held a match point at 5-4 in the final set. "Just wasn't playing well today. Last year, I choked. I guess it's a redundant story with me."

The upset was Stosur's second in a row — she eliminated four-time champion Justine Henin in the fourth round — and came a day after men's No. 1 and defending champion Roger Federer was stunned by Robin Soderling.

"It's not over yet," said Stosur, a tour-best 19-2 on clay this season and a 2009 French Open semifinalist. "I want to definitely try and keep going."

In keeping with the run of surprises at this wide-open French Open, No. 22 Jurgen Melzer of Austria came back to beat No. 3 Novak Djokovic 3-6, 2-6, 6-2, 7-6 (3), 6-4 in the last men's quarterfinal. Melzer, at 29 the oldest man left, never before won a match after losing the first two sets — and never made it beyond the third round at any Grand Slam tournament in 31 previous tries.

His reward? A semifinal Friday against four-time champion Rafael Nadal, who eliminated No. 19 Nicolas Almagro 7-6 (2), 7-6 (3), 6-4. Nadal, who lost to Soderling in last year's fourth round, extended his current winning streak on clay to 20 matches.

In one women's semifinal Thursday, Stosur will play No. 4 Jelena Jankovic, who got past unseeded Yaroslava Shvedova of Kazakhstan 7-5, 6-4. No. 5 Elena Dementieva will face No. 17 Francesca Schiavone in the other.

For the first time at any Grand Slam tournament since the 1979 Australian Open, none of the four female semifinalists owns a major title. Williams has 12, with five at the Australian Open — including this year — and three apiece at the U.S. Open and Wimbledon. The one at the French Open came in 2002, and she was a semifinalist in Paris the following year, but not since.

"Maybe she was trying to get over that hump," said Williams' mother, Oracene Price. "That might have been on her mind."

Williams never hid her frustrations against Stosur, who wore her usual white baseball cap and red-rimmed wraparound shades as the sun finally returned after several days of clouds and rain.

Williams admonished herself aloud, sometimes muttering, sometimes screaming. She shook her head and put a hand on her hip. She crouched and rolled her eyes.

Her own serve was a friend — accumulating 13 aces — and a foe — yielding nine double-faults. The rest of Williams' strokes were a mixed bag, too: She finished with more winners than Stosur, 39-30, and nearly twice as many unforced errors, 46-24.

"I definitely was nowhere near my best today," Williams said, then added: "But she played really well."

Blown call denies Galarraga

DETROIT — Armando Galarraga squeezed the ball in his mitt, stepped on first base with his right foot and was ready to celebrate the first perfect game in Detroit Tigers' history.

What happened next will be the talk of baseball for the rest of this season and likely a lot longer.

Umpire Jim Joyce emphatically called Cleveland's Jason Donald safe and a chorus of groans and boos echoed in Comerica Park.

Then Joyce emphatically said he was wrong.

"It was the biggest call of my career, and I kicked the (stuff) out of it," Joyce said, looking and sounding distraught as he paced in the umpires' locker room. "I just cost that kid a perfect game."

"I thought he beat the throw. I was convinced he beat the throw, until I saw the replay," he said after the Tigers' 3-0 win.

It's rare for an umpire to acknowledge a mistake and, in one of the few sports that relies heavily on the human eye, it's certain to prompt a push for Major League Baseball to use increased replays. Soccer completely rejects using technology to review calls — a position that could create controversy at the World Cup, starting next week in South Africa.

MLB declined comment on Joyce's call.

RAYS 7, BLUE JAYS 3

TORONTO — David Price became the American League's first eight-game winner, Carl Crawford hit a grand slam and the Rays rallied in the ninth inning again, beating the Blue Jays.

Price (8-2), who has won six of his past seven decisions, allowed two runs, none earned, and nine hits in eight innings. He walked none and struck out three.

YANKEES 9, ORIOLES 1

NEW YORK — Nick Swisher and Curtis Granderson hit two-run doubles in the second inning to back another stingy start by Phil Hughes, and the Yankees handed the Orioles their seventh straight loss.

Robinson Cano hit a two-run homer in the seventh and ran his hitting streak to 16 games for New York, which had 15 hits.

RED SOX 6, ATHLETICS 4

BOSTON — David Ortiz hit a two-run homer to help Boston rally for the second straight game, and Daisuke Matsuzaka settled down to beat the Athletics.

One night after scoring nine straight runs to overcome a 4-0 deficit, the Red Sox spotted the A's three runs in the top of the first and then scored the next six.

ANGELS 7, ROYALS 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Torii Hunter homered and drove in three runs, and Scott Kazmir bounced back from a rocky previous start.

Hunter had a two-run single off Kyle Davies (4-4) in the first inning and added his eighth homer in the seventh to end a 4-for-26 slump. Bobby Abreu hit his 500th career double and the Angels had 14 hits to beat Kansas City for the 11th time in 13 games over two seasons.

RANGERS 9, WHITE SOX 5

CHICAGO — Matt Treanor homered and drove in a career-high four runs after the Rangers lost

Vladimir Guerrero to an eye injury during batting practice.

Guerrero, the designated hitter, was scratched from the lineup after a ball he hit ricocheted off the cage and struck him above the left eye. The Rangers said the eight-time All-Star had "significant swelling," but X-rays showed no structural damage. He is day-to-day.

NATIONAL LEAGUE BREWERS 7, MARLINS 4

MIAMI, Fla. — Carlos Gomez drove in the go-ahead run in the eighth inning and George Kottaras followed with a two-run homer.

Yovani Gallardo (6-2) won his sixth straight decision allowing two runs in seven innings. He struck out four and delivered a solo home run to halt the Brewers three-game losing streak.

Brewers slugger Prince Fielder also hit his ninth home run of the season and the second in two days.

BRAVES 2, PHILLIES 1

ATLANTA — Omar Infante, replacing the injured Chipper Jones, lined a two-out, run-scoring single in the eighth inning to back Derek Lowe's best outing of the season.

DODGERS 1, DIAMONDBACKS 0, 14 INNINGS

LOS ANGELES — Garret Anderson hit an RBI single with two outs in the 14th inning and Los Angeles handed Arizona its 10th straight loss.

PADRES 5, METS 1, 11 INNINGS

SAN DIEGO — Adrian Gonzalez hit a grand slam with one out in the 11th inning to beat the Mets, who wasted another strong performance by Johan Santana.

CARDINALS 4, REDS 1

ST. LOUIS — Chris Carpenter beat Cincinnati for the eighth straight start, allowing four hits in eight innings as the St. Louis Cardinals pulled into a first-place tie.

ASTROS 5, NATIONALS 1

HOUSTON — Carlos Lee hit a two-run home run and Wandy Rodriguez snapped his three-game losing streak.

Flyers pull back into series with OT win

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Twice, the Philadelphia Flyers needed video replay to decide if a goal counted.

One did, one didn't. Claude Giroux didn't need the officials to check his winner.

Giroux scored 5:59 into overtime to give the Flyers a 4-3 overtime victory over Chicago in Game 3 of the Stanley Cup finals Wednesday night, cutting the Blackhawks' series lead to 2-1.

Game 4 is Friday night in Philadelphia.

Giroux scored on a deflection off Matt Carle's pass, beating Antti Niemi to decide the third straight one-goal game in the series.

The Blackhawks, trying to win their first Stanley Cup title since 1961, snapped a seven-game winning streak and a seven-game road winning streak.

Giroux ended the game moments after Simon Gagne thought he scored the winner, only to have replay officials rule the puck didn't cross the goal line.

The game kept going — but not for long.

It was the second time replay was needed to determine a Flyers' goal. They went 1 for 2 — but, oh, how huge that one was for the Flyers in their first Stanley Cup home game since 1997.

Scott Hartnell had a no-goal overturned by replay to spark the Flyers to their first Cup win since 1987. Danny Briere and Ville Leino also scored for the Flyers, helping them win a game they desperately needed to avoid their second 3-0 hole of the playoffs. Michael Leighton made 24 saves for the Flyers.

Giroux's goal was the only shot in OT for the Flyers. Niemi stopped 28 shots in the third straight thriller in the series.

Duncan Keith, Brent Sopel and Patrick Kane scored for the Blackhawks.

The Flyers were the beneficiary of replay to win this one.

The Flyers heard the goal horn twice on one goal midway through the second period to go up 2-1.

Chris Pronger's power-play slap shot was deflected by Hartnell, trickled through Niemi and eked past the red line. Blackhawks defenseman Niklas Hjalmarsson diving stab at the puck cleared it back onto the ice as the goal horn sounded.

Flyers fans were irate over the blown call as play continued for another 1:42 even as the red light spun like a siren light.

When play stopped, officials reviewed the play. Flyers fans howled in delight and coach Peter Laviolette watched stern-faced as numerous replays on the big screen showed, in fact, the goal was good.

Referee Bill McCreey skated on the ice and declared, "Upon further review, we have a good goal."

Chicago and Philadelphia swapped goals 20 seconds apart to make it 3-3 early in the third.

great human being," Mariners CEO Howard Lincoln said. "It's always tough for great superstars like Ken or anyone else to make a decision to retire. This has been his life for so many years, but he has made his decision and will support it. We will honor him in every way possible."

A star from the time he was the overall No. 1 pick in the 1987 draft, Griffey played 22 years in the majors with Seattle, his hometown Cincinnati Reds and the Chicago White Sox. He hit .284 with 1,836 RBIs.

But his greatest seasons, by far, came in Seattle.

Griffey played in 1,685 games with Seattle and hit .292 with 417 homers, most coming in the homer-friendly Kingdome, and 1,216 RBIs. He won the AL MVP in 1997 and practically saved a franchise that was in danger of relocating when he first came up.

Griffey returned to the Mariners in 2009 and almost single-handedly transformed what had been a fractured, bickering clubhouse with his leadership, energy and constant pranks.

Griffey signed a one-year deal last November for one more season in Seattle after he was carried off the field by his teammates after the final game of 2009. Griffey hit .214 last season with 19 homers as a part-time DH. He was limited by a swollen left knee that required a second operation in as many off-seasons.

"Of course it surprised us. You never know what is in a player's mind. They debate things here and there and in this particular case Ken made his decision and there wasn't anything anybody could say," Seattle general manager Jack Zduriencik said.

have enough reason to go crazy in Game 1, Pierce threw out the first volley against his own hometown.

"Our fans are, I want to say, a little bit more knowledgeable to the game," said Pierce, a Lakers fan growing up in Inglewood. "I think a lot of celebrities come here to get out of the house (rather) than to watch a game — to see the other celebrities. It's an interesting crowd, whereas I think our fans really come to watch the actual game."

L.A. should be fully focused on this historic matchup, however. Most players on both teams already have jewelry after Boston beat Los Angeles in six games in 2008, and the Lakers routed Orlando last season. But just one ring isn't enough now — not for the veterans who appreciate the rare opportunity to go for two.

"If you look at the great players in Celtic history, the great teams, they've all won a couple of championships at least," said Pierce, who dumped his baseball dreams for basketball mostly because of this rivalry's irresistible pull in the 1980s. "I want to be mentioned up there with the great Celtics of all time, cement my name in history with the group by winning more than one championship. ... To win another one, and to come close to it, is pretty impressive."

Celtics coach Doc Rivers subtly emphasized this point all season at Boston's training complex with a blank banner hanging above their practice court, right next to the 2008 banner. Rivers claimed it was put there by the late Red Auerbach, whose coaching record for NBA titles was broken by Lakers coach Phil Jackson last year.

Zito has 2 of top 3 choices for Belmont

NEW YORK (AP) — For a change, Hall of Fame trainer Nick Zito has the favorite for the $1 million Belmont Stakes.

A two-time Belmont winner with long shots Birdstone in 2004 and Da' Tara in 2008, Zito has two of the top three choices for Saturday's final leg of the Triple Crown: Ice Box is the 3-1 morning-line favorite and his other starter, Fly Down, is the 9-2 third pick.

A field of 12 was entered Wednesday for a Belmont that will be run without Derby winner Super Saver or Preakness winner Lookin At Lucky.

"Nick's going to be tough to beat," said trainer Kiaran McLaughlin, who will try with 10-1 choice Uptown-charlybrown. "We feel good about our horse. He's ready."

McLaughlin took advantage the last time the Derby and Preakness winners didn't run in the Belmont, winning in 2006 with Jazil.

Zito's pair of 3-year-olds have been training at Saratoga, and arrived at Belmont on Wednesday. Zito would prefer to fly under the radar, but isn't complaining about his position this time.

"You know what they say, great expectations can bring great disappointments," he said this week. "We're grateful we have these two good horses. It's better than not having them. We've had success at the mile and a half, so I hope that continues."

Ice Box skipped the Preakness, while Fly Down is making his Triple Crown race debut for relatively new owner Richard C. Pell.

"It's absolutely unbelievable," said Pell, a New York-based money manager who counts Fly Down among his first purchases in 2008. "You hope you get to the races and win some nice ones, but with my first crop of horses to have one in the Belmont? Since the Dwyer, I've been walking around with a permanent smile."

Preakness runner-up First Dude is the 7-2 second choice. The name refers to Todd Palin, husband of former Alaska governor and vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin. Trainer Dale Romans says "a lot of Republicans" will like his horse.

Romans certainly does.

"Ice Box is going to be tough, especially in this race, but maybe we can turn the tables," he said. "You're not going to skip a classic with a horse like this. We were waiting to go a mile and a half. He's a throwback kind of horse, a big rugged kind of horse, nothing bothers him, and I don't think three weeks (between races) is going to bother him."

Woods moves on without a coach

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Tiger Woods is the defending champion at Memorial and a four-time winner at Muirfield Village.

It just doesn't seem that way.

He arrived at the course that Jack Nicklaus built — the one that Woods at times seems to own — with his game as unpredictable as ever. Woods is coming off a neck injury that he said now feels good enough to practice and play. He no longer has a swing coach, having split with Hank Haney three weeks ago, and has no plans to find another one anytime soon.

Since returning to golf in April, he has completed only one tournament, a tie for fourth in Masters. That takes on even greater significance with the U.S. Open at Pebble Beach only two weeks away.

"Maybe this time I'll get four rounds in and get ready for the Open," Woods said Wednesday.

He remains as capable as ever, and Woods wasted no time showing that in the Memorial Skins Game. Playing in the second group of five players, he hit a towering shot out of the right rough behind a tree on the 10th hole to about 18 feet and rolled in the quick putt for a birdie to win a skin. Next up came the par-5 11th, where he followed a pure tee shot with a 4-iron to just outside 4 feet for eagle.

Easy game, right?

Tiger Woods practices for this weekend's The Memorial golf tournament Tuesday in Dublin, Ohio.

Everything else has been a struggle, starting with the upheaval in his personal life, seeping into his game.

When last seen in public, Woods leaned his head against the locker at the TPC Sawgrass, eyes closed and looking lost, after withdrawing from the final round of The Players Championship with what he feared was a bulging disc. Turns out it was inflammation of a joint in his neck, which he treated with massage, anti-inflammatory medicine and rest.

"My neck feels pretty good," he said. "Still not where I want it to be, but the inflammation has calmed down. I've got a range of motion again. It's a little bit sore after a good, hard day of practice. But I can recover for the next day, which is good."

As for the coach? Woods doesn't feel as though he needs one.

Even when he left Butch Harmon sometime in 2003, he had been friends with Haney through Mark O'Meara, and they often discussed swing thoughts and strategy even before they began working together.

Now, Woods' coach is a video monitor.

"That's the great thing about technology," Woods said.

He'll find out what kind of swing he brings to the course on Thursday when the Memorial gets under way with some compelling story lines, not all of them involving Woods.

Phil Mickelson, for the third straight tournament, has a chance to replace Woods at No. 1 in the world ranking. He was in position at The Players Championship with Woods out of the way, but went the wrong direction in the final round. At the Colonial last week, Mickelson missed the cut. Perhaps his time is coming. He won all nine skins in his group, which featured Nicklaus, during the Wednesday game.

"It would be cool," Mickelson said about the ranking. "I don't want to discount it. Right now, my goal is to play well here and get ready for the Open next week."

Mickelson mentioned to the tournament host how badly he wants to win his tournament. Nicklaus couldn't agree more, spinning a famous phrase from Bobby Jones who once said a golfer's resume is not complete until he wins at St. Andrews.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Like the song says, breaking up is hard to do. Whether the Big 12 schools are committed to staying together is an open question in the eyes of commissioner Dan Beebe.

"There's a lot of interest by a lot of the athletic directors to try to get to the same goal I have — some sort of conclusion on the commitment of all institutions," Beebe said Wednesday during the league's spring meetings. "I just don't know if that's possible or not. The presidents and the board are the ones who have to answer that."

League presidents will meet with athletic directors Thursday and then get together behind closed doors for more discussions. The meetings will conclude with further meetings by presidents on Friday and what some hope will be a final resolution to the turmoil stemming from the Big Ten's announcement that it is studying expansion from 11 members — and Big 12 members Nebraska and Missouri saying they might be interested.

"I think your story is going to come when the presidents are here," Nebraska athletic director Tom Osborne told reporters Wednesday.

Asked directly if the Huskers would leave for the more lucrative Big Ten, Osborne shrugged.

"It's important to understand I don't think the Big Ten knows what they're going to do," he said. "They might add one (school), they may add three, they may add five. So we have no indication right now even what's going to happen."

Missouri athletic director Mike Alden said little when cornered by reporters.

"Missouri's a proud member of the Big 12," he said. "We have been for some time. We look forward to the future."

If the Big 12 does break up, every school is carefully checking what options it might have going forward.

For some, such as Oklahoma and Texas, the possibilities would be good. For those in more sparsely populated states such as Kansas and Iowa, the future might not seem nearly so bright.

Panthers' Smith, tennis' Isner forge friendship on airplane

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — They play different sports, have contrasting backgrounds and one is a foot taller than the other.

Yet it took just a chance seating assignment on a flight to Australia to forge a friendship between Carolina receiver Steve Smith and tennis' John Isner.

Five months after Smith cheered on Isner's surprising run to the fourth round of the Australian Open, and a week after Isner was eliminated in the third round of the French Open, the hard-servicing Isner was back in his home state on Wednesday watching the fiery Smith work out with his favorite team, the Panthers.

"Never seen a practice like this up close at the pro level," Isner said, smiling.

Few Panthers players or coaches had been so close to a tennis player, either, especially one 6-foot-9.

"I don't know that there are many that tall," coach John Fox said.

The scene was a bit unusual, and certainly spiced up a normally mundane offseason workout at Bank of America Stadium.

Smith is a 5-foot-9, four-time Pro Bowl pick who grew up in a rough part of Los Angeles. The towering Isner is a Greensboro, N.C., native, six years younger than Smith and just recently started to make noise in majors.

Look closer, however, and there are similarities. Smith was supposed to be too small to play football and Isner too tall for tennis. Both have used their intense drive and athleticism to overcome those obstacles and become elite athletes.

"I respect all athletes and all the sports they do. To get to that level is hard in whatever you do," the 31-year-old Smith said. "Just because he doesn't play football as far as professionally doesn't mean I have less respect or I don't think he's less of an athlete."

"I think how tall he is and how he moves, he'd be a pretty decent tight end, in my opinion."

The wiry Isner wasn't so sure. "With 40 more pounds I could be a tight end," Isner said, laughing.

Smith likes many sports. He's coached his kids' soccer teams, watched professional matches in Europe, and was the guest of the Mexican national team when it played an exhibition in Charlotte in March.

Smith, who said he plays a little tennis, was on his way to Melbourne to watch the Australian Open in January when his seat on the plane happened to be next to Isner's agent.

He recognized Smith, knew Isner was a Panthers fan, and arranged for them to meet.

"We met at the players' lounge at the tournament," Isner said. "I got him a credential to get him through all the security and whatnot. We've just hit it off ever since."

Smith watched Isner, who had just won his first ATP tournament in Auckland, reach the fourth round in Melbourne by beating Gael Monfils. Isner was also getting attention for his new buddy in the stands.

"When I had some matches on TV in Australia they'd show him on TV and all my friends would text me," Isner said. "Obviously, the ones home back in Greensboro were jealous. It's cool. I'm glad I met him. He invited me to come down here and I have a few days off."

Isner had just returned to the U.S. after falling to Tomas Berdych 6-2, 6-2, 6-1 at Roland Garros on Friday. He watched the final hour of Carolina's workout, then had a long chat with Smith on the sideline as the special teams units ran drills.

Isner, who said he's been a Panthers fan since the team was formed in 1995 when he was 10, impressed Smith with his football knowledge.

Maybe Smith, who has a friend who is a tennis instructor, could take a crash course and be Isner's hitting partner?

DaMarcus Beasley goes from ignored to a U.S. soccer leader

IRENE, South Africa (AP) — Not long ago, DaMarcus Beasley figured he'd be home in Miami by right now.

He was dropped from the U.S. national team last June after a big mistake led to a goal by Brazil in the Confederations Cup. Then he was benched by Glasgow Rangers for much of the just-completed season.

At 28, an age when many soccer players are in their prime, he thought his international career might be over.

But Bob Bradley gave him another chance, and Beasley responded with a strong training camp last month. The result — he's getting ready for his third World Cup.

"I had a tough year last year," he said Wednesday as roosters crowed and cows mooed outside the interview tent on the farm adjacent to the U.S. team's hotel. "I never thought I would be able to be this position."

His youthful accomplishments were impeccable.

A high school All-America at South Side High School in Fort Wayne, Ind., he won the Silver Ball for the United States at the 1999 FIFA Under-17 World Championship, when Landon Donovan won the Golden Ball. Originally assigned to the Galaxy by Major League Soccer, he was dealt to Chicago and made his Fire debut in 2000.

Just 18 when he made his first national team appearance against China in January 2001, he combined with Donovan to give the Americans youth and energy during their surprising run to the World Cup quarterfinals in South Korea the following year.

He went on to join PSV Eindhoven under Guus Hiddink in 2004 and scored four Champions League goals, becoming the first American to play in a semifinal. But his output dropped off during 2005-06, and he had a terrible game in the opening 3-0 loss to the Czech Republic at the 2006 World Cup, getting shifted to the right flank from the left to make room for Bobby Convey.

"We got nothing out of Beasley on the night," bristled then U.S. coach Bruce Arena, who also criticized several other players.

Beasley was loaned to Manchester City for 2006-07, then joined Glasgow Rangers. He was hurt for significant stretches of his three seasons in Scotland, and had just two goals in 14 appearances this season.

Before December, he played in just three club matches in the first half of the season, slowed by a hamstring injury sustained in August. Even worse, when he failed to read Donovan's short corner kick against Brazil last June, it led to a Kaka pass that helped feed Robinho's goal. The next stop was national team exile.

"DaMarcus had a stretch where things had not been going well with his club, and at the same time then when we were making roster decisions for camps and games, we felt that he — we made the decision not to bring him into our group," said Bradley, who succeeded Arena as national team coach in December 2006. "That's a tough thing for any player, especially a player who has experience and a history with the national team."

Beasley wasn't used for the three remaining matches of the Confederations Cup, and was ignored for the final five World Cup qualifiers and two exhibitions in Europe.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

THE JEROME COUNTY PLANNING AND ZONING COMMISSION WILL HOLD A PUBLIC HEARING ON Monday, June 28, at 8:30 p.m. in the District Court Room of the Jerome County Courthouse, 300 North Lincoln, Jerome, Idaho, for the purpose of receiving public comment on the proposed revisions to Chapter 21 of the Jerome County Zoning Ordinance. Such revisions are proposed for the purpose of distinguishing between the procedures used when a request to rezone the county's zoning ordinance is legislative in nature; verses that to be used when the request to amend is quasi-judicial in nature. Interested persons are invited to attend and shall have 5 minutes for public comment. A copy of the proposed changes to Chapter 21 can be seen in its entirety at the Jerome County Planning and Zoning Office between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. week days or at the Jerome City Library, or on the Jerome County Website (www.jeromecounty.org). DEAR ABBY: My wife, "Alana," and I have been married for 14 years. In many ways our marriage is good, but our sex life is horrible. In my opinion, it has never been good. As time passes, I feel more and more anger toward her. Alana is attractive and physically fit; I don't understand her lack of desire. When the subject of sex comes up, it makes us both clam up.

I have been thinking of leaving her. We have become more like best friends than husband and wife. Our two boys would be crushed if we split. I have not — and would never consider — an affair. What do you think about this?

— TROUBLED HUSBAND IN MISSOURI

DEAR TROUBLED: Good sex is all about open communication. If the subject makes you and your wife both clam up, it's no wonder your sex life has faltered.

Before you and Alana can get on the same wavelength, you need to understand how each of you defines a good sex life. The reason sex therapy has become a medical specialty is that so many couples have the same problems you're experiencing. Before deciding to call it quits, ask your doctor for a referral to a sex therapist.

DEAR ABBY: I am going to be a sophomore in college next year. I played basketball in high school and was offered a full scholarship to play at the college I attend now. I played ball during my freshman year, and I do not want to do it again next year. My heart is no longer in it.

My biggest fear is letting my parents down. I know having my education paid for has helped them out, but don't I have a right to do what makes me happy? Please help me come up with a way to convince them that I'm making the right decision.

- DROPPING THE BALL IN IOWA

DEAR DROPPING THE BALL: Before you make a final decision, you need to know what penalties there may be for dropping your athletic scholarship. You should also check to find out what academic scholarships or loan programs you might qualify for, and if there are any part-time jobs available in case your parents are unable to foot the entire bill for your education. You should also keep in mind that, in a sense, your athletic scholarship is a job that's getting you through college, and it doesn't have to be your heart's desire to be a means to an end.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

Bobby Wolff

"Not all that tempts your wandering eyes
And heedless hearts is lawful prize;
Nor all that glisters, gold."
— Thomas Gray

When today's hand arose at the Dyspeplia Club's rubber bridge table, South's exploits had already put North in a bad mood. So as soon as South got his hands on another three no-trump contract, North was already mentally sharpening his ax.

West led the spade jack and declarer saw that the best chance of a ninth trick lay in the diamond suit. South ducked the lead, won the spade continuation, then led a diamond to the king.

East rose with the ace and returned a spade. South won, entered dummy in clubs, and played a second diamond to the 10 and West's jack. Now the contract had to fall when diamonds proved to be 4-2.

As North bitterly commented, South needed only two tricks from the diamond suit, not three. So it was indeed right to duck the first spade lead, catering to a 5-2 break. If East held the diamond ace, he would have no spade to return when on lead with that card, and a heart switch would set up the ninth trick for declarer in that suit.

Equally, it was correct to play a diamond to the king and ace. But when East returned a spade, South knew that spades had split 4-3. The right play now is to lead out the diamond queen. Here, the jack falls doubleton, so the hand is over. But had it not done so, South could have entered dummy in clubs next and played the third diamond toward the 10 to set up the game-going diamond trick.

ANSWER: Your partner's double is not for penalties. It is a responsive double, primarily for layout, but focusing on the minors rather than spades. This is because your partner would have bid spades if he had them. Accordingly, simply bid three clubs and await developments, if any.

IF JUNE 3 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You have a lovely, peaceful summer ahead, but must guard against letting groups or clubs take up too much of your time. Friends may distract you from what is important in your life. September may be a great time for a whirlwind romance, with few strings attached, or for a pleasant vacation. During late October, you may be overly gullible, so put off any important decisions or changes. Roll up your sleeves and work like a dog in November when your ambitions make you more dedicated to building up concrete experience. During February, Lady Luck smiles on everything you do, making it a good time to launch key plans or to make crucial decisions.

HOROSCOPE Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Time always tells. A great deal of the pressure is off, but you might still be in danger of misunderstanding instructions. If possible, ask for extra time to complete a project or to gather pertinent information.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Never judge a book by its cover. You wouldn't spend your hard earned cash on a book just because you liked the cover, so don't be convinced to pull out your credit card if you hear a dazzling sales pitch.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can get your point across. People will trust what you say but even the most sincere talks might fail to produce the results you expected. Keep your own counsel and wait for better heavenly aspects.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Circumstances may conspire to place you in a questionable position. Be as honest and forthright as possible even when you feel you are drowning in negativity. Objective friends will be a lifesaver.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Partners may be depressed or under the weather, leaving you feeling unappreciated. Avoid making promises until celestial clouds lift. Seek a safe haven with family members and tame the urge to wallow in self-pity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are mentally adept and communicate convincingly with little effort. Delay taking major steps for a few more days, even if you see an opportunity to profit from news. Gather knowledge for future use.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your nose may ache from pressing too firmly on the grindstone. A little careful planning and organization can speed up your progress. Work according to an outline to complete assignments on time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A grudge is hard to bear. Rather than losing your temper or letting a misunderstanding fester, put an issue on the back burner so you can deal with it under much better future conditions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Maintain serenity by seeking harmonious surroundings and optimistic companions. Others with anxieties can undermine your tranquility but your warmth and vitality can help them ward off gloom.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Money taken from your pocket is replaceable. Damaging someone's good name creates a situation much more difficult to repair. Be discreet; guard your reputation by doing nothing that to harm it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): It is simple for you to speak your mind and impart the message you wish heard. The problem is that most people are not in the mood to listen. Write down ideas or proposals for future use.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It seems you can do no wrong. If you fall in the mud, you will get up smelling like a rose. Avoid minor misunderstandings with a significant other today by keeping important joint goals firmly in mind.

SUDOKU

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Concepts Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.
