THE DANGERS OF A 14,000 TON BULLET

Train ride with policemen provides railroad safety training

SHOSHONE — The "choo-choo" of the train's engine, the startlingly loud horn, and the squealing brakes signal to a crowd of people at the train station that the 14,000-ton machine has arrived. With so many wide eyes and smiles, it's hard to imagine that this could be a place of tragedy.

Idaho State Police and Union Pacific Railroad joined forces Friday to host a free train ride for 150 people on a round-trip between Shoshone and Gooding. The purpose of the event, dubbed Operation Lifesaver, was to promote awareness of the dangers of reckless behavior near trains and train crossings.

Instructors in the four different cabs gave do-and-don't safety instructions for when people are near railroad crossings. The most common mistake that leads to crashes is when a car tries to "beat" the train across the crossing, the instructors said.

Steve Roberts, of Pocatello, has been a railroad conductor for decades, and knows firsthand the horror of a train-car collision.

"I had nightmares for years," Roberts said. "It happened 15 years ago. We were going through a crossing, and a car ran through right in front of us. We broadsided him completely. The young man was killed. I can still see it every time I close my eyes."

A proposal to eliminate butts, puffs and dips from the South Central Public Health District will go before the Twin Falls City Council today.

The proposal to eliminate tobacco products from Twin Falls parks — which is

The goal, she said, is to provide a healthy environment for the community and to set a good example for children at the parks.

Overtreating early cancer — more harm than good?

By Lauran Neergaard

WASHINGTON — D.J. Soviero wanted the least treatment that would beat back her small, early-stage breast cancer, but her first doctor insisted she had only one option: tumor removal followed by radiation and chemotherapy.

Then she found a novel program at the University of California, San Francisco, that gave her an unbiased evaluation of the pros and cons of all

Lessons from failed Cold War spy mission in China

By Robert Burns
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Detail by painful detail, the CIA is coming to grips with one of the most devastating episodes in its history, a botched cloak-and-dagger flight into China that stole two decades of freedom from a pair of fresh-faced American operatives and cost the lives of their two pilots.

In opening up about the 1952 debacle, the CIA is finding ways to use it as a teaching tool. Mistakes of the past can serve as cautionary tales for today's spies and paramilitary officers taking on al-Qaida and other terrorist targets.

At the center of the story are two eager CIA paramilitary officers on their first overseas assignment, John T. Downey of New Britain, Conn., and Richard G. Fecteau, of Lynn, Mass., whose plane was shot from the night sky in a Chinese ambush.

The mission was quickly smothered in U.S. government denials, sealed in official secrecy and consigned to the darkest corner of the spy agency's vault of unpleasant affairs.

Downey was the youngest of the four. At 22, with one year of CIA service, he was destined to spend the next 20 years, three months and 14 days in Chinese prisons. His CIA partner, Fecteau, was 25. He was behind bars for 19 years and 14 days.

Both survived. Their pilots, Robert

LISTEN UP, CONGRESS! Student to address D.C. lawmakers on Wednesday

Travel to another country for a few weeks to learn about culture: Check. Volunteer more than 1,000 hours to help Magic Valley youth learn to love the arts: Check. Fly to Washington, D.C., to address Congress: Almost checked.

Jené Johnson, an 18-year-old Twin Falls High School graduate and Buhl native, will settle that last task Wednesday when the Congressional Award Gold Medal winner gives a four-minute speech to Congress about her experiences with the award.

She is one of 70 finalists who will meet in Washington for a few days of sightseeing and museum tours, but the only one selected to give a speech.

"I am going to talk about the importance of setting goals," she said. "I've learned a great deal through this process, mostly that if you set your mind to anything you can achieve it."

Johnson said she owes much of her inspiration to her mentor, Buhl High School counselor Angela Hoops, who passed away last spring due to a sudden illness.

The Congressional Award is comprised of four program areas including volunteer public service, personal development, physical fitness and an expedition trip. Johnson is receiving the highest level of the award for completing thousands of hours of service and development.

"I've been working really hard," she said. "I enjoyed each category so much that I didn't even realize I treatment options. "I realized that I didn't need to use a sledgehammer. It was my choice," said Soviero, of San Francisco, who went with the lumpectomy and radiation, but refused the chemo.

It's an unthinkable notion for a generation raised on the message that early cancer detection saves lives, but specialists say more tumors actually are being found too early. That is raising uncomfortable questions about how aggressively to treat early growths — in some cases, even how aggressively to test — along with a push for more of the informed-choice programs such as the one Soviero used.

"The message has been, 'Early detection, early detection, early detection.' That's true for some things but not all things," said Dr. Laura Esserman, a breast cancer specialist at UCSF. She helped lead a study, reported last week, that found mammography is increasing diagnoses of tumors deemed genetically very low risk.

"It's not just all about finding any cancer. It's about being more discriminating when you do find it," she said.

Today's cancer screenings can unearth tumors that scientists say never would have threatened the person's life. The problem is there aren't surefire ways to tell in advance which tumors won't be dangerous — just some clues that doctors use in prescribing treatment.

Work is under way to better predict that, and even the staunchest supporters of screening call overdiagnosis a problem that needs tackling.

"We're really at a tipping point right now, where we have a trade-off between the benefits of finding cancer early and the harms that are caused," said Dr. Len Lichtenfeld of the American Cancer Society. "We treat more patients than we know will benefit. ... We just don't know who they are."

Nowhere is the disconnect more obvious than with prostate cancer screening. Most men over 50 have had a PSA blood test to check for it even though major medical groups don't recommend routine PSAs, worried they may do more harm than good for the average man.

What's the evidence? A study of 76,000 U.S. men, published last year, concluded annual PSAs didn't save lives. A separate study estimated two of every five men whose prostate cancer was caught through a PSA test had tumors too slow-growing ever to be a threat.

A European study of 162,000 men screened less aggressively — a PSA every four years versus none — found seven fewer deaths per 10,000 men screened. But 48 men had to be treated to prevent each death, meaning many men who weren't facing death experienced treatment that can have such side effects as incontinence and impotence.

Thus, the American Cancer Society urges that men weigh the limitations of PSAs against their individual risk and fear of cancer before deciding for themselves. Government guidelines say men over 75 shouldn't get a PSA at all — although about one-third do.

"PSA is the controversy that refuses to die," said Dr. Michael Barry of Massachusetts General Hospital and the Foundation for Informed Medical Decision-Making, which pushes programs that help patients make such choices. "But in some ways, it's the prototypical close call that we have to come to grips with in American medicine — that there just isn't one right answer for everybody."

Mammograms aren't nearly as controversial, except for the when-to-start-them question. Most medical groups advise age 40; a government task force ignited complaints last year by advising not until 50. Generally, studies find they cut the risk of death from breast cancer by roughly 20 percent.

The trade-off: More than three-quarters of the 1 million-plus anxiety-provoking biopsies done each year to check out suspicious spots turn out to have been false alarms.

The bigger unknown is overdiagnosis, as closer mammogram readings spot ever-earlier growths.

A study in last month's Journal of the National Cancer Institute said nearly one-quarter of breast tumors found by mammograms may be overdiagnosed. That includes invasive cancer, but also a common milk-duct growth called DCIS, or ductal carcinoma in situ.

DCIS isn't invasive cancer and isn't life-threatening; it's described as "stage zero" cancer or even pre-cancer. But it is a risk factor for later developing invasive disease, and many of the 50,000 DCIS cases a year get the same care as women with outright early cancer.

Research is examining when and how to scale back aggressive DCIS care. At UCSF, Dr. Shelley Hwang is testing whether hormone drugs such as tamoxifen allow DCIS patients to avoid surgery altogether.

Idaho saves money on inmates with preventive care

LEWISTON (AP) — An Idaho Department of Correction official says the agency is saving more than $525,000 on a new medical contract for state prison inmates due to increased preventative care.

Education and Treatment Division Chief Shane Evans says the cost per inmate has been reduced from $12.45 per day to $12.15 per day in the contract that starts July 1 with a minimum of at least 4,800 inmates.

Correctional Medical Services of St. Louis, Mo., the state's current medical contractor, won the bidding process.

Evans says the savings come from catching medical problems early before specialists or trips to a hospital are needed.

Lessons

C. Snoddy, 31, a native of Roseburg, Ore., and 29-year-old Norman A. Schwartz of Louisville, Ky., did not.

Bits and pieces of the story surfaced over the years. But the lid was largely intact until a series of disclosures — some required of the CIA, some not — revealed a tale of tragedy, miscalculation, misery and personal triumph, as well as the agency's misplaced confidence it could manipulate events in China.

Three years ago, the CIA declassified an internal history of the affair. Now it's hired a filmmaker to produce an hourlong documentary. The CIA does not plan to release the film publicly. But the agency premiered it for employees on Tuesday at its Langley, Va., headquarters, and an AP reporter attended.

Downey and Fecteau declined through CIA officials to be interviewed for this story. They attended the film screening and were flooded with applause and agency autograph seekers.

Their tale forms part of the backdrop to today's uneasy U.S.-China relationship, especially Beijing's anger over American military support for China's anti-communist rivals on Taiwan.

In the early years of the Cold War, the CIA had a rudimentary paramilitary force — those with specialized skills to conduct high-risk, behind-the-lines operations.

Downey and Fecteau were assigned to a covert program called "Third Force," intended to create a resistance network. Small teams of non-communist Chinese exiles were airdropped into the Manchuria area of China to link up with disaffected communist generals.

The goal was to destabilize Mao Zedong's new government and distract it from the Korean War, which Chinese forces had entered two years earlier.

The plan failed — badly. "The CIA had been 'had,'" the late James Lilley, who helped train agent teams for insertion into China, wrote in his 2004 memoir, "China Hands." There were no dissident communist Chinese generals to be found, and the Chinese on Taiwan and Hong Kong who sold the idea turned out to be swindlers, Lilley wrote.

"The whole program smacked of amateurism," CIA historian Nicholas Dujmovic said.

Donald Gregg, who came into the CIA with Downey in 1951 and had dinner with him the night before his ill-fated flight, faults those in the CIA who oversold the program.

"That was a wild and woolly, swashbuckling time in the agency's history," Gregg said in an interview. "There was pressure from presidents for regime change here and there, and it was a very damaging time."

Richard G. Fecteau relaxes at the Valley Forge Army Hospital on Dec. 15, 1971 in Phoenixville, Pa.

On Nov. 29, 1952, above the foothills of the Changbai mountains, Downey and Fecteau flew into Chinese airspace in an unarmed C-47 Skytrain. They planned to swoop low over a rendezvous point marked with three small bonfires and use a tail hook to pick up a Chinese agent off the ground without landing. Downey was to reel in the agent with a winch aboard the plane.

As they descended, the sky suddenly exploded in bursts of gunfire. It was a Chinese ambush. The agent had betrayed the Americans, luring them by promising to provide important documents from a dissident leader.

After the C-47 slammed through a grove of trees, the cockpit burst into flames and skidded to a halt near the village of Sandao.

Downey and Fecteau, stunned and bruised but alive, were captured on the spot. They were hauled off to prison — first in the city of Mukden, then in Beijing — interrogated and isolated in separate cells. Each spent long stretches in solitary confinement, alone with their fears.

It was an intelligence bonanza for the Chinese. Both Americans, after a psychological battering, spilled the beans, to varying degrees.

Here lay one of the lessons: Agency officers with close links to a covert action program should not fly on such missions.

doubled my hours.”

Starting when she was 14, Johnson focused many of her efforts on the performing arts and her personal development as a performer. She plans to pursue her passion for classical voice and opera in the fall at Point Loma Nazarene University in San Diego.

Johnson said one of her most rewarding experiences was traveling as a student ambassador to the United Kingdom with People to People, a program that promotes world peace through cultural understanding. She said the People to People program was a driving force in achieving her goals with the Congressional Award and gave her a love for culture and travel. The international group will hold its world leadership forum in Washington, D.C., at the same time as the congressional ceremony, and it too asked Johnson to speak about her experiences.

“I loved it so much that I went on another trip with them to the Mediterranean last summer,” Johnson said. “It’s a phenomenal program.”

Even after speaking to Congress, Johnson’s list of goals is far from being completed. But she said she feels prepared: the experiences she’s had thus far have readied her for a life of accomplishments here and beyond.

Police officers standing nearby shook their heads in grief at the man’s story.

“It is a very serious matter,” said ISP Trooper Steve Otto. “We always hope for the best and expect the worst,” he added about police arriving to the scene of an accident involving a train and car.

“You blame yourself,” Roberts said, looking into the horizon. “But there’s nothing you can do. Some trains are 14,000-feet long and weigh 14,000 tons. When something like that is going 60 miles an hour, it just can’t stop that fast.”

Operation Lifesaver began in 1972, a year with more than 12,000 railway collisions, as a one-time, Idaho-only initiative. But it grew to encompass the nation, and railway collisions have dropped by 84 percent since its inception.

Last year, there were 10 collisions reported in Idaho, resulting in four injuries and no fatalities. While these numbers seem small, participants of Operation Lifesaver say 10 accidents is 10 too many. So far this year, there have been no injuries as a result of a train-car collision.

Kim Matkin, of Pocatello, has been a train engineer since 1992. Just a year after he started, the train he was operating broadsided a car, which resulted in the injury of the driver. He described his feelings surrounding the incident as “yucky.”

“I just did everything I could do to stop the train,” Matkin said. “I was scared. Then angry afterwards because he caused me trauma for no reason. My wife said I was a different person for two weeks after that. She said I was angry for the next two weeks. Nothing would cheer me up.”

The railroad offers a support group for employees who are present during such collisions.

Lacey Loughmiller, of Richfield, said her father was a large part of establishing that support group. She and her husband Jose took their 7-year-old son Mason on the train ride Friday.

“It was a great experience,” she said. “I wanted my son to know what being on a train is like, since his grandfather worked on a train for 40 years.”

N. Idaho man sentenced in child enticement sting

MOSCOW (AP) — A northern Idaho man who pleaded guilty to enticing a child over the Internet has been sentenced to 30 days in jail and five years probation.

Forty-year-old Kendall W. Heustis of Moscow was sentenced Friday in 2nd District Court.

Heustis must also complete sex offender treatment, register as a sex offender, and is not allowed to use the Internet except as allowed under his probation requirements.

Heustis was charged after an investigating officer with Oregon’s Internet Crimes Against Children Task Force posed as a 13-year-old girl from Oregon as part of a sting operation between April and July 2008 and Heustis exchanged explicit information through chat rooms and Web cameras.

Arrest puts extremist back in public eye

By Meghann M. Cuniff
The Spokesman-Review

COEUR D'ALENE — He called himself “the attorney for the damned,” has gained national attention for his work with high-profile clients and was a coveted speaker in the national racist movement for years.

Now in custody at the Spokane County Jail in a North Idaho murder-for-hire plot, Edgar J. Steele’s emergence into the Federal Bureau of Investigation’s cross hairs comes after a somewhat quiet few years spent mostly espousing his views on his website, ConspiracyPen.Pal.com.

“There hasn’t been much going with Mr. Steele,” said Christine Holbert, president of the Bonner County Human Rights Task Force, which monitors hate groups in the area. “He has not made many public statements lately.”

The 64-year-old’s arrest is the latest twist in a life that came into the public eye little more than a decade ago. That’s when Aryan Nations founder Richard Butler hired the Sandpoint attorney to defend the supremacist group from a lawsuit filed by the Southern Poverty Law Center on behalf of a woman and her son who were shot at outside Butler’s Hayden Lake compound. Although Steele lost the court battle and the $6.3 million jury award bankrupted the group and shut down the compound, he quickly rose to prominence in the extremist movement.

“The trial gave him a lot of clout in extremist circles because the Aryan

— Heidi Berich, director of the Southern Poverty Law Center, a nonprofit organization that tracks extremist groups and filed the 2000 lawsuit against the Aryans. She said while Steele didn’t bring his wife to speaking events, he often wrote about her as his best friend.

Nations was such a revered group,” said Marilyn Mayo, director of right-wing research at the Anti-Defamation League, a civil rights group that monitors anti-Semitism. “For a while, he rode on that wave.”

Steele, who is licensed to practice law in Idaho and Washington, became a featured speaker at extremist events, including a gathering of Holocaust deniers in 2004, and wrote a self-published book that same year called “Defensive Racism,” which he sells on the Internet. But his work has been largely focused on his website; the federal raid at his home June 11 came more than a year after his last major publicized speaking event.

The purpose of the raid to gather evidence regarding an allegation that Steele paid a man to murder his wife and mother-in-law shocked groups that have tracked him for years.

“He’s been ranting, especially about the Jews, for some time but to see him accused of trying to blow up his wife and mother-in-law?” said Heidi Berich, director of the Southern Poverty Law Center, a nonprofit organization that tracks extremist groups and filed the 2000 lawsuit against the Aryans. She said while Steele didn’t bring his wife to speaking events, he often wrote about her as his best friend.

“We were in shock here,” Berich said.

Edgar Steele served in the Coast Guard, got a master’s degree in business and was an accountant in San Francisco before graduating from UCLA’s law school in 1982. He married Cyndi Kunzman in San Mateo, Calif., in 1985.

The Steeles have owned a home on Talache Road, just east of Shepherd Lake, since 1996. It’s currently valued at about $364,000. They have two children, ages 22 and 20, and Edgar Steele adopted his wife’s 28-year-old daughter from a previous marriage.

Decade-old court documents show their marriage struggled.

Cyndi Steele, who operates a horse farm on the couple’s property, filed for divorce in June 2000, alleging her husband “misrepresented his marital status and eligibility” in online dating profiles “with the sole intention of meeting women” in San Mateo, where he maintained a law office.

But the case was dismissed two months later and the couple remained married. In July of that same year, Steele took over defense in a civil lawsuit filed against the Aryan Nations by the Southern Poverty Law Center.

Though he lost the historic trial, Steele “stuck his neck out for Butler.

In white supremacist circles, he’s seen as a hero,” Berich said.

Butler founded the Aryan Nations and was one of the country’s most influential racists until his death in 2004.

When Steele took over the group’s defense, he said it wasn’t because he shared Butler’s beliefs, but because he believed the case was about free speech. He sued The Spokesman-Review over an article he said implied otherwise.

The Idaho Supreme Court dismissed the lawsuit in 2003.

By then, Steele had made his views clear.

“It was after the Aryan Nations trial that Steele really became very open with his own anti-Semitic views,” said Mayo, of the Anti-Defamation League.

In 2004, Steele spoke at a Holocaust denial conference in Sacramento, Calif., saying the claim that 6 million Jews died in World War II at the hands of Adolf Hitler is based on “a pattern of lies.” The conference was sponsored by the National Institute for Historical Review, an anti-Semitic group.

“I don’t want to pull my punches anymore,” Steele told the audience. “I’m not ashamed.”

On his website, Steele says he devotes his “colorful and lively ranting” to “politically incorrect issues” and that he devotes his law practice to “cases that test the limits of constitutional law on behalf of politically incorrect clients.”

Before the Aryan Nations trial, Steele worked on a controversial tabloid targeting some incumbents just before the 1998 elections in Bonner County. He was involved with several high-profile cases after the trial, including the case of a North Idaho family, the McGuckins, who used guns and dogs to guard themselves from authorities trying to take five children from the home in 2001. He also represented an Oregon couple accused of kidnapping three of their children from social workers at gunpoint and taking them to Montana.

“I have defended and provide legal advice to probably more of the politically incorrect than has any other attorney in America today,” Steele said in a May 2009 essay available on his website. “Always, I have required that they be fundamentally decent people and always they must be innocent, regardless of how things might eventually turn out in court.”

Steele’s last major publicity came in 2005, when he appeared on national news talk shows defending two young girls in a music group called Prussian Blue, which promoted white supremacy.

His last speaking engagement was at a militia and Constitution convention in Georgia called the Jekyll Island Project in May 2009, but he “was a bit of an oddball in the sense that he was the only serious racist and anti-Semite,” said Berich, of the Southern Poverty Law Center.

2nd fire forces evacuations in Arizona

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — A thick plume of smoke blot-ted out the blue sky north of Flagstaff on Sunday afternoon as a second wildfire moved through the area, forcing the evacuation of additional homes and an animal shelter.

Coconino County authorities said residents of the Timberline Estates, Wupatki Trails and Fernwood neighborhoods were being asked to leave their homes. Authorities couldn’t immediately say how many people were affected.

The Second Chance Animal Shelter also was being evacuated.

About 170 homes already were evacuated Sunday because of the 350-acre Hardy wildfire on the southeastern side of Flagstaff, which started Saturday.

The second blaze was spotted Sunday on the north end of Shultz Pass. Coconino National Forest spokeswoman Karen Malis-Clark said the fire was torching tree-tops and sending up a “pretty impressive towering column of smoke.”

Hot shot crews, helicopters and air tankers were fighting the flames.

A shelter that had been set up by the American Red Cross at a Flagstaff middle school for residents displaced by the Hardy fire also was being used for evacuees from the Shultz fire.

Fire officials did not know what sparked the second blaze. But a California man was arrested Sunday on suspicion of starting the Hardy fire by leaving behind hot coals at a campsite just outside the city.

Randall Wayne Nicholson,

A new wildfire burns at Shultz Pass between the San Francisco Peaks and Mount Elden on Sunday, in Flagstaff, Ariz. The Timberline neighborhood is being evacuated and two other neighborhoods nearby are on standby.

54, was arrested on a misdemeanor charge of burning of a wildland, city spokeswoman Kimberly Ott said. Nicholson, whose hometown was not immediately available, was being held on a $2,500 bond at the Coconino County jail. It was unknown if he had an attorney.

Authorities said the Hardy fire started in a wooded area a couple of miles from downtown after Nicholson built a small campfire for either cooking or making coffee. Investigators believe he dumped coals from the fire on the ground before leaving the site.

“As far as we understand, this was not a deliberate act. It was a careless act,” Ott said.

The fire quickly spread up a hill and threatened homes in two neighborhoods. Crews worked overnight and Sunday to protect structures and establish a perimeter around the blaze. But Coconino County spokeswoman Joanne Keene said fire officials have not declared any part of the fire contained.

“The winds are expected to pick up, and the latest I’ve heard is about 30 mph, so we’re concerned about that,” she said.

Evacuation orders for 170 homes remained in place, and a park and popular bike trail were closed as a precaution, Keene said. The Little America Hotel also was briefly evacuated.

The Hardy fire also sent smoke through parts of Flagstaff and caused traffic to back up on Interstate 40. Authorities said no homes or buildings had been burned.

Heavy tankers and three aircraft were on standby in case ground crews needed help.

Fires also had crews busy Sunday near Williams, Ariz., and in Colorado and New Mexico.

High winds and rugged terrain kept ground crews and aircraft from getting close to a wildfire in southern Colorado’s Great Sand Dunes National Park. The fire grew to 4,500 acres.

Celia becomes first hurricane of season

MIAMI (AP) — Celia was upgraded to hurricane status Sunday as it howled toward open seas, away from Mexico’s Pacific coast.

The U.S. National Hurricane Center in Miami said the storm was expected to gradually strengthen and it already had maximum sustained winds of about 75 mph with higher gusts. The storm is listed as a Category 1 hurricane.

Celia was centered about 365 miles south of Acapulco Sunday afternoon, the hurricane center said, and it was moving westward at about 7 mph.

That course would take it toward the open Pacific and forecasters said it posed no immediate threat to land.

Elsewhere Sunday, Blas weakened and was downgraded to a Tropical Depression. The storm was far from land, with its maximum winds dropping to 35 mph, down from about 60 mph Saturday night.

That storm was centered 470 miles southwest of the southern tip of Mexico’s Baja California peninsula and it was moving west-northwest at about 13 mph.

UMS - It's like a run on the banks. The phones just keep ringing off the hook. That's because state residents are actually getting the World Reserve's exclusive state overlaid $2 bills for free.

The only thing residents need to do to get their new state bills is call 1-888-509-2690 or one of the five Overflow Hotlines right now to get a state $2 bill vault pack containing 4 protective estate wallets, each loaded with its own state $2 bill for just $12 and shipping per wallet. The first 3,956 residents from each remaining state who do are also getting their state's new $2 bill in a protective estate wallet and a Certificate of Authenticity free.

This free giveaway starts at precisely 8:00am today. But only the first 3,956 state residents who call to beat the 48-hour deadline will instantly be awarded their state $2 bills for free.

Special Toll Free Hotlines have been set up because you can't get these exclusive bills at local banks, credit unions or even the Federal Reserve. They're only being released directly to state residents exclusively by the private World Reserve.

These crisp state $2 bills featuring the exclusively designed state overlaid printing are so precious you would never even dream of carrying them around in an ordinary leather wallet.

That's why they are being released in individually loaded rich protective estate wallets. They are so impressive, everyone will swear they must have been taken right from the Governor's desk.

"Everything in our vault may soon be gone. So residents who want to get them now had better hurry and call," said Jefferson Marshall, Executive Director of the private World Reserve Monetary Exchange.

Some collectors are always trying to snatch up all the original $2 bills issued by the Government they can get their hands on. They know that $2 bills are almost impossible to find in your pocket change these days.

Originally issued in 1928, the currently designed $2 bills have largely been locked away in the bowels of the U.S. Federal Reserve vaults, rarely distributed by banks and almost never seen

■ FREE PUBLIC GIVEAWAY: Shown above are the World Reserve's state $2 bill vault packs that residents from each state are trying to get their hands on. That's because they are the only existing state $2 bills. But only the first 3,956 state residents who call before the 48-hour deadline to order the vault packs are getting their state $2 bill for free. So if lines are busy keep trying, all calls will be answered.

The $2 bills issued by the Treasury Department's Bureau of Engraving and Printing, makers of all the nation's paper currency, make up less than 1% of the $670 billion in genuine U.S. currency that circulates worldwide, according to the U.S. Department of Treasury.

"That's why I've authorized a limited number of genuine Government issued $2 bills to be overlaid with each state's exclusive design and released from our private vault reserve to the first 3,956 state residents who call to beat the 48-hour deadline for free. For now dealers can't get the state $2 bill vault packs to make sure residents can get what they need," Marshall said.

"These exclusive state $2 bills will be highly sought after and are extremely popular to hand out as gifts for friends and family. They are the perfect gift for any occasion," he said.

"That's why this announcement is being so widely advertised, to make sure the first 3,956 state residents who call from each state have a chance to get their own state $2 bills for free," said Marshall.

They are sure to impress because most people have never even seen one of these newly enhanced state $2 bills featuring their state's skyline and significant state symbol with President Thomas Jefferson on the front.

"Since the World Reserve has the only existing state $2 bills, residents who want more than 10 state $2 bill vault packs containing 4 protective estate wallets, each loaded with its own state $2 bill must submit requests in writing so there will be no hoarding," said Marshall.

"You better believe we will be strictly enforcing the limits so that we can guarantee there will be enough vault packs for the first 3,956 State residents who call in the next 48 hours," Marshall said. ■

DRILL THE SPILL

A rig burns oil and gas near the Discoverer Enterprise, left, at the site of the Deepwater Horizon oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico off the coast of Louisiana on Saturday.

Far offshore, crews drill into Gulf to stop oil

ON THE GULF OF MEXICO — Fly by helicopter above the patchy wetlands along the Mississippi River Delta and past the floating boom and skimmers that have failed to protect the Gulf Coast from the worst oil spill in U.S. history. Keep following the finger-like oil slicks speckled orange and brown that threaten it still.

About 40 miles from the coast a fleet of ships appears. They look like toys packed in a two-mile-square patch of dull water. It’s easy to see the approaching drill rig with its 200-foot derrick, offering what is likely the best chance for permanently stopping the nation’s worst environmental disaster.

The Sikorsky chopper reaches it and settles on its landing pad. The thwack of the rotors quiets down, and a rig worker steps into the helicopter cabin.

“OK, welcome to the DDII,” he says.

Transocean Ltd.’s Development Driller II is one of two rigs slowly grinding their drill bits 13,000 feet below the seafloor until they intersect the well damaged April 20 when another Transocean rig exploded, killing 11 workers and triggering the massive oil leak. A group of reporters that included The Associated Press had a rare chance to tour the rig Saturday.

Once one of the two relief wells intersects the damaged line, BP plans to pump heavy drilling mud in to stop the oil flow and plug the blown-out well with cement.

“It’s really not a tough thing to do,” said Mickey Fruge, the wellsite leader aboard the DDII for BP, which was leasing the rig when it blew and is responsible for stopping the oil.

But that doesn’t mean it’s easy. For starters, Fruge’s team must hit a target seven inches across, or roughly the size of a salad plate, about three miles below the ocean surface. If the DDII or its sister rig DDIII fail, miss or just move too slowly, oil will keep gushing into the sea. A pair of relief wells took months to stop an undersea gusher in Mexico that started in the summer of 1979.

And no one on the rig has done it before because these deep sea interventions are so rare. That includes Wendell Guidry, Transocean’s drilling superintendent on the rig, who has been in an oil field for 27 years and worked his way up from a clothes washer. But he insists in his Louisiana drawl that the job is business as usual.

“We try to keep the guys focused,” he said. “We’re just treating this like we treat any other well that we drill.”

Glancing from the rig deck, it’s clear this situation is not normal.

Out in the distance, another drilling rig is siphoning off oil and natural gas from the undersea well and burning it in a multi-nozzled flare. It looks like the flames are radiating from an oversized shower-head. Other ships hose off that rig’s deck to keep the heat from building.

Meanwhile, a boom attached to a drill ship called the Discoverer Enterprise flares off natural gas taken from a containment cap that is sucking up oil from the well head. The distant flames are a constant reminder that crude and gas are leaking beneath the feet of those aboard the DDII as they walk across the see-through grating on its floor.

The Enterprise sits where the Deepwater Horizon rig exploded. Some of Guidry’s crew knew Transocean workers on the rig that exploded.

It’s “always, always on our mind,” Guidry said.

BP PLC has said a relief well should be ready by August, and the DDIII is farther along, having reached a depth of nearly 11,000 feet below the seafloor. Still, Guidry said, it’s unclear which rig will hit the target first.

“Never know what will happen,” he said. “You never know.”

Johnson snatches win at Sonoma

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press writer

SONOMA, Calif. — A NASCAR ruling cost Marcos Ambrose his first career Sprint Cup Series victory Sunday when he stalled his car under a late caution at Infineon Raceway and was forced to forfeit his lead to Jimmie Johnson.

Johnson went on to win his first career Cup race on a road course and ended a 10-week victory drought for the four-time defending series champion.

Ambrose, who led 35 laps, had to settle for sixth after coughing up yet another chance at a victory.

“My bad,” the Australian said. “Just feel really disappointed. Might not like the call, but it is what it is. I know the rule. It’s a judgment call.”

Ambrose, a road racing ace, was cruising to a long-awaited victory when caution for a Brad Keselowski spin threw a roadblock in his path. Instructed by his crew chief to conserve fuel, Ambrose flipped his engine on and off as he circled the winding 1.99-mile course.

But his Toyota apparently stalled, and six cars weaved around his unmoving Toyota. Although Ambrose got his car restarted and moved back to the front of the field, NASCAR ordered him back to seventh for “failing to maintain reasonable speed” right before the restart.

That gave Johnson the lead and he sailed away for his fourth win of the season, but first since Bristol in March.

Ambrose crew chief Frank Kerr visited NASCAR officials after the race, and said he understood the ruling. But asked if he was “content” with the ruling, he said only “no comment.”

Kerr also asked Sprint Cup Series director John Darby about the 2007 race at Kansas, where winner Greg Biffle appeared to run out of gas under caution on the final lap and was passed by Johnson and Clint Bowyer before the finish line.

McKean masters Late Models

For the first time this season, Eddy McKean came through with a main event win, competing in the Mr. Gas Late Models series Saturday night at Magic Valley Speedway.

McKean lined up fifth at the start of the race in a field of 13 contestants and took over the lead position from Norm Hatke on the ninth lap. Rick Fowble was able to make his way into second on the same lap in a caution-free race.

In the end, McKean navigated his way around the track without missing a mark to cross the finish line 1.213 seconds ahead of his closest rival Fowble. Mike Greco came from eighth in the field to finish third in the 50-lap race.

In the NAPA Street Stocks, Kendel Woll never saw the back of another car as he led from start to finish in the 20-lap main event race. John Newell gave him all he could muster at the finish, but Woll was able to hold on by 0.295 seconds for his second win of the season.

Ray Homolka continued to be a top contender for the championship with another win in the Brennan’s Carpet Pony Stocks division. Homolka took over the lead from Jerry Slocum just past the halfway mark of the 20-lap main event race.

Todd Audet challenged Homolka for the win but at the finish line Homolka nipped Audet by just more than half a second for the victory.

McDowell is U.S. Open’s first European champion in 40 years

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press writer

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — In a U.S. Open with golf’s biggest stars on the leaderboard, it was Graeme McDowell who played like one.

McDowell seized control after a shocking collapse by Dustin Johnson, then failed to get flustered with Tiger Woods, Phil Mickelson and Ernie Els lined up behind him. The 30-year-old from Northern Ireland wasn’t perfect, but he was good enough.

He closed with a 3-over 74 to become the first European in 40 years to capture the U.S. Open, getting an embrace on the 18th green from his father.

“You’re something, kid,” Kenny McDowell said, speaking for thousands who watched this unlikely Open unfold along the Pacific coastline.

It was a final round no one expected.

Johnson took a triple bogey on the second hole to lose all of his three-shot lead, and a double bogey on the next hole ended his hopes. Three of the biggest stars of this generation were right there, ready to continue the lineage of great champions at Pebble Beach, only to play far below their expectations.

McDowell made only one birdie — an eight-foot birdie putt on the fifth hole — and his final round was the highest score by a U.S. Open champion since Andy North in French meltdown: Players refuse to train in protest after Anelka booted

By Jerome Pugmire
Associated Press writer

KNYSNA, South Africa — A draw, a loss, a tantrum and now chaos for Les Bleus.

France’s World Cup team refused to train Sunday in protest of striker Nicolas Anelka’s expulsion from the squad, prompted by a profanity-laced tirade against coach Raymond Domenech the day before.

The latest round of turbulence also led to the resignation of France team director Jean-Louis Valentin, who said he was fed up with the team.

“It’s a scandal for the French, for the young people here. It’s a scandal for the federation and the French team,” Valentin said. “They don’t want to train. It’s unacceptable.”

Before getting in a car and driving off, he added: “As for me, it’s over. I’m leaving the federation. I’m sickened and disgusted.”

Tensions boiled over after the team arrived at training and got off the bus to greet about 200 fans who had gathered there. Domenech, whose tactics and management skills have been questioned, stayed on the bus to talk to France captain Patrice Evra.

Meanwhile, fitness coach Robert Duverne was on the field putting down training cones. After Domenech and Evra got off the bus, Evra and Duverne started to argue. Domenech tried to intervene, but Duverne then stormed off, throwing his accreditation down the field.

“Everyone in the whole world is mocking us now,” winger Franck Ribery said on television hours before training even started. “I’m gutted, because we’re not playing football any more.”

Afterward, Domenech read a statement he said was written by the players to explain their protest:

“The French Football Federation did not at any time try to protect the group. They took a decision uniquely based on facts reported by the press. As a consequence and to show our opposition to the decision taken by officials of the federation, all the players decided not to take part in today’s training session.”

Evra and the players, en masse, boarded the team bus and drew the curtains.

French sports minister Roselyne Bachelot said “the indignation of the French is great” and that she had spoken to French President Nicolas Sarkozy about it.

Seventh heaven? Roger Federer the favorite at Wimbledon

By Steven Wine
Associated Press writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Walking the Wimbledon grounds Sunday, wearing a stylish white jacket with gold trim, his collar turned up for protection from a biting wind, the tournament’s six-time champion looked like the same old Roger Federer.

True, there have been signs of slippage this month. Federer lost at the French Open in the quarter-finals, his earliest Grand Slam exit in six years. Then he dropped to No. 2 in the rankings behind nemesis Rafael Nadal. Then, at a Wimbledon warm-up event, came Federer’s second grass-court defeat since 2003, extending his drought of nearly five months without a title.

But the All England Club tends to bring out the best in Federer, which is awfully good. He has reached a record seven consecutive Wimbledon finals, losing only one of them — to Nadal in 2008. Last year Federer regained the title, beating Andy Roddick 16-14 in the fifth set of a final that ranked with the sport’s greatest matches.

And so when Federer steps onto an immaculate Centre Court lawn for his opening-round match Monday against Alejandro Falla of Colombia, he’ll again be the man to beat. Tournament organizers acknowledged as much by giving Federer the top seeding even though he’s ranked second.

He’ll try to join Pete Sampras and 19th-century champion Willie Renshaw as the only men to win the singles title seven times.

“Obviously my game’s made for grass,” Federer said. “I definitely think every time I play, I’ll have a chance to win here, there’s no doubt. We all know how hard it is to win Grand Slam titles. But I think the experience I have on this surface can pull me through many matches maybe I would be struggling with.”

Also made for grass are women’s favorites Serena and Venus Williams, who are seeded 1-2 and have combined to win eight of the past 10 Wimbledon championships. Serena, who earned her third title by beating her sister in last year’s final, has tweaked her tournament preparation in anticipation of a visit Thursday to Wimbledon by Queen Elizabeth II.

Rowland-Smith shuts down Reds

SEATTLE — Ryan Rowland-Smith had a little extra motivation in looking for his first victory of the season.

Rowland-Smith's sister and mother both were in the stands Sunday when he pitched against Cincinnati. It was the first time his sister, who lives in Hong Kong, had ever seen a major league game and the first time his mother had seen him start.

"You know what? Today's my day," Rowland-Smith said, describing his pregame mindset. "I've got family in town. My sister's first big league game today ... my mom's first start she's got to see. My girlfriend was here. I was like I'm just going to come out and enjoy this process and just get deep into the game and have some fun and get a win."

Rowland-Smith earned that elusive first win, holding the Reds to three hits over six innings and leading the Seattle Mariners to a 1-0 victory that completed a sweep.

PHILLIES 4, TWINS 1

MIAMI — Josh Johnson outpitched David Price in a matchup of two of baseball's top starters, Wes Helms hit a two-run homer.

Johnson (8-2) gave up six hits in eight innings, striking out nine, walking none and throwing 87 of his 117 pitches for strikes while lowering his ERA a tiny bit to 1.80.

RANGERS 5, ASTROS 4, 10 INNINGS

HOUSTON— Josh Hamilton tied a career high with five hits, including a tying single in the ninth inning and a go-ahead single in the 10th that lifted the Texas Rangers over the Houston Astros for their season-best eighth straight win.

Boesch and Guillen hit consecutive homers in the seventh to help the Tigers finish up an 8-1 homestand against NL opponents.

CUBS 12, ANGELS 1

CHICAGO — Carlos Zambrano pitched seven strong innings, Derrek Lee drove in a season-high four runs and Geovany Soto homered to send the Chicago Cubs past the Los Angeles Angels.

It was quite a turnaround for the Cubs, who had dropped six of nine and were coming off a 12-0 loss that left fans peppering them with boos.

ATHLETICS 3, CARDINALS 2

ST. LOUIS — Kevin Kouzmanoff had a season-high four hits, including a home run, and Trevor Cahill threw six strong innings to lead the Oakland Athletics over the St. Louis Cardinals.

The A's snapped a four-game losing streak with their second win in nine games.

Italians held by resolute Kiwis

NELSPRUIT, South Africa — Defending champion Italy was held to a second 1-1 draw, this time by lowly New Zealand in the latest World Cup stunner.

The 78th-ranked All Whites took the lead after only seven minutes of Sunday's Group F match when Italy's 36-year-old captain Fabio Cannavaro made a horrendous error, handing a goal to Shane Smeltz. A long free kick from Simon Elliott sailed deep into Italy's area, off Cannavaro's hip as he fell and directly toward the waiting Smeltz for the tap-in.

It was New Zealand's only shot on goal the entire match.

Riccardo Montolivo hit the goalpost for Italy in the 27th, then Vincenzo Iaquinta equalized two minutes later with a penalty kick. Tommy Smith was given a yellow card for tugging down Daniele De Rossi inside the area on a corner kick.

Iaquinta appeared to celebrate as if he were blowing a vuvuzela, the plastic trumpets that have become a symbol of this World Cup.

At the final whistle, however, the celebration was located in one corner of the Mbombela Stadium, where a small section of New Zealand fans marked their country's historic result by taking off their shirts and waving them around deliriously.

Luis Fabiano scored his first goal in six matches for Brazil with a powerful right-footer from inside the penalty area in the 25th minute after a perfect pass by Kaka, firing into the top of the net from a difficult angle.

Luis Fabiano added to the lead in the 50th with a left-footer from near the penalty spot after beating two defenders inside the area, and Elano closed the scoring in the 62nd after another setup by Kaka, who later was sent off for picking up two yellow cards.

PARAGUAY 2, SLOVAKIA 0

BLOEMFONTEIN, South Africa — Enrique Vera and Cristian Riveros scored and Paraguay beat Slovakia 2-0 to move closer to advancing at the World Cup.

Vera broke through for La Albirroja in the 27th when forward Lucas Barrios slipped a pass into the box and Vera angled it past Slovakia goalkeeper Jan Mucha with a one-time shot.

Riveros added a goal in the 86th minute, a left-footed blast from the edge of the penalty area.

Cowboys, Toros split twinbill

Times-News

The hit parade started late in Game 1, but the bats and gloves went silent in Game 2 as the Twin Falls Cowboys Class AA American Legion Baseball team split a doubleheader with Mountain View Sunday at Skip Walker Field.

The Cowboys (13-6) won Game 1 8-2 on the strength of a five-run sixth inning, during which they clubbed five extra-base hits. Ryan Petersen took the win for Twin Falls.

Game 2 was a different story, however, as the Cowboys only managed six hits and gave away three runs in the top of the seventh inning to fall 5-3.

With the bases loaded and two outs, Twin Falls got the ground ball it needed to end the game but the throw was wide, allowing two runs to score. A third runner came across on a wild pitch.

"We had the game won. ... We got the ground ball when we needed it, it just didn't work out for us," said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir. "We didn't swing it as well as we did in the first game. Our pitching

“None of us can even go out fishing, and he’s at the yacht races. I wish we could get a day off from the oil, too.”
— Bobby Pitre, who runs a tattoo shop in Larose, La., in a statement after BP chief executive Tony Hayward took a day off to see his 52-foot yacht compete in a race

EDITORIAL

Why wouldn’t voters want to pick from between the best candidates?

A faction of Idaho Republicans has fought tooth and nail for years to close GOP primary elections to voters who aren’t Republicans. Looks like they’re on the wrong side of history.

Last Tuesday, California became the third state to adopt the “top-two” primary system, under which only the two candidates with the most votes in a primary — regardless of their political party — advance to the November general election. In 47 states — including Idaho — the top vote-getter in each party advances to the fall campaign.

Fifty-six percent of Californians voted yes on Proposition 14, which was backed by Republican Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger as a means to curb the hyper-partisanship in California — and national — politics. The measure will create a single, open primary in which the top two finishers, regardless of party, advance to the general election runoff, paving the way for Republican-vs.-Democrat, Democrat-vs.-Democrat or Republican-vs.-Republican contests.

Washington and Louisiana already have nonpartisan blanket primary laws; Texas uses the system for special election.

It’s the ultimate open primary, and while it might seem that the majority party would benefit the most, that’s not always true.

The Democratic-controlled Louisiana Legislature adopted the two-top system in 1976 at the insistence of Democratic Gov. Edwin Edwards, who was trying to curb rising Republican power in his state. It worked great for Edwards — he was twice re-elected under the nonpartisan blanket primary — but ever since the Bayou State has trended strongly Republican.

In Washington, where voters passed Initiative 872 six years ago, just the opposite happened. Democrats have had the upper hand since 2004.

A top-two system in Idaho would probably favor Republicans, since they dominate county, legislative and state offices. In last month’s primary election, there were nearly twice as many GOP candidates on the ballot as Democrats.

But party affiliations notwithstanding, the top-two system has a better chance of giving voters the right choice than the current Idaho primary — an “open” system, under which voters don’t have to register as Democrats or Republicans and can vote on either ballot.

That’s not good enough for some Idaho Republicans, however, who consider their party a club to which Democrats and independents needn’t apply.

What they’re missing is just how weary to the bone Americans — and most Idahoans — are of mindless partisanship and endless political bickering. They want a chance to vote for the best candidates — political parties be damned — and that’s the beauty of the top-two system.

Sooner or later, it’s coming to Idaho.

An argument for local control

Last week The New York Times ran a front-page article on the chaotic efforts to clean up the oil washing around the Gulf of Mexico. Campbell Robertson reported on an incident in which boats that were supposed to be laying boom were, in fact, anchored on the wrong side of a bay in Louisiana. They were helpless as oil oozed in from the gulf, and BP had no way of contacting the workers to get the boats moving.

David Brooks

The article described a cleanup operation that is overwhelmed. “From the beginning,” Robertson wrote, “the effort has been bedeviled by a lack of preparation, organization, urgency and clear lines of authority among federal, state and local officials, as well as BP.”

Some of the chaos was inevitable, once this much oil started gushing into the coastal waters. What was not inevitable, however, was the sense of insult and rage local officials now feel.

If you talk to elected leaders from Louisiana to Florida, they fill your ears with tales of incompetence — of advice that was not heeded, of red tape stifling effective operations, of local knowledge that was cast aside and trampled.

If you read the local news media from the gulf region, this anger flows out in article after article. “The information is not flowing,” Sen. Bill Nelson of Florida told a Senate hearing. “The decisions are not timely. The resources are not produced. And as a result, you have a big mess, with no command and control.”

Tony Kennon, the mayor of Orange Beach, Ala., waited helplessly as federal planners failed to protect his town’s beaches. “It was a very discombobulated and disorganized effort. It still is,” he told The Press Register of Mobile last week. “And they’ve had five weeks to plan this.”

The most common complaint you read in the local papers is that lines of authority are either tangled or opaque. “If you asked me today, ‘Who was in charge: the Coast Guard, BP or their subcontractors?’ I couldn’t look you in the eye and tell you who was making the decisions,” Billy Nungesser, the president of Louisiana’s Plaquemines Parish told The Times-Picayune of New Orleans.

Local officials in Magnolia Springs, Ala., drew up plans to protect the Magnolia River. They sent the plans up the chain of command for approval in mid-May, and it took weeks of confusion before they heard back.

“This is the biggest damn mess I’ve ever seen,” Gib Hixon of the Fish River/Marlow Fire and Rescue Department told Jay Reeves, a reporter for The Associated Press.

Others describe times when the cleanup plans were effective, but there was no follow-through. An article in The Advocate of Baton Rouge, La., described how federal, state and BP officials fly over coastal areas and recommend where cleanup work should be done. But then the plans don’t get executed.

“It’s drawn up right. It’s just not happening that way,” said Louis Buatt of the Louisiana Department of Natural Resources.

Leaders in Okaloosa County, Fla., had a state-approved plan to protect their waterways, but then the Coast Guard raised a fuss, and now they’ve got to start over, according to The Northwest Florida Daily News of Fort Walton Beach.

The Times-Picayune reported that state officials claim “Louisiana’s efforts to attack oil approaching coastal wetlands have repeatedly been stymied by BP and federal officials.”

Many locals say that they are perpetually in the dark. “Calls go into a maddeningly circuitous string of dead ends, as local residents, businesses and Herald reporters can attest,” declared an editorial in The Bradenton Herald of Bradenton, Fla.

In Louisiana, Deano Bonano, a Jefferson Parish administrator, has tried to get information on marsh cleanup plans. “I cannot get an answer,” he e-mailed The Advocate of Baton Rouge.

In article after article, you see local officials exploding in anger. Bill McCollum, Florida’s attorney general, has called himself “absolutely appalled.” Gov.

Bobby Jindal of Louisiana said this week, “We are not winning this war.”

The county commissioners in Okaloosa County, Fla., got so fed up with outside interference that they unanimously voted to give their emergency management team the power to do whatever it wants. “We made the decision legislatively to break the laws if necessary,” Chairman Wayne Harris told The Northwest Florida Daily News.

Some of this rage is unavoidable when you have a crisis that no one can control. But it’s also clear that we have a federalism problem. All around the region there are local officials who think they know their towns best. They feel insulted by a distant and opaque bureaucracy lurking above.

The balance between federal oversight and local control is off-kilter. We have vested too much authority in national officials who are really smart, but who are really distant. We should be leaving more power with local officials, who may not be as expert, but who have the advantage of being there on the ground.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

It’s time to put corporate genie back in the box

During my 17 years doing damage assessment for the Federal Emergency Management Agency, I not only looked at the damage caused by such things as fire, flood, earthquake, typhoon and tornado, but what caused or exacerbated the damage. In a flood, it often wasn’t just rising water but a clear-cut that destroyed the watershed that was to blame, the location of the buildings, the type of construction; some human decision that made matters worse.

I use that same analysis in looking at the ongoing catastrophe in the Gulf of Mexico. This is not a natural disaster; it is a human-caused disaster. It is not a spill; it is a hemorrhage, not a pin prick of a vein, but the nicking of an artery. It is a disaster with numerous causes, including some blatant, high-risk, cost-cutting decisions by BP management. Check out the letter from the Congressional Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigation to BP. The root of the problem runs deeper than those decisions.

We have created an amoral or immoral entity, the corporation, and even given it full citizenship rights without responsibilities. Its sole purpose is to enrich the stockholders; it is the mandate of its officers to “maximize profits.” It is not tasked with social or environmental responsibility. We have institutionalized “greed” as a virtue and it wreaks havoc on the Earth and the inhabitants of the Earth.

We have numbed ourselves, become amoral or immoral ourselves. We might call the damage in the Gulf collateral damage from our non-negotiable lifestyle, just like we call the death and destruction of people and places from our immoral and illegal wars “collateral damage,” just a cost of doing business. This is the same mindset that corporate accountants and economists use in justifying their projects by writing off the social and environmental costs they don’t want to take responsibility for as “externalities,” costs that can be passed off to others.

It is time to put the corporate genie back in the box and nail the lid shut.

Our children don’t know true dates of holidays

Reading the paper today (June 16), there was one more letter about the Fourth of July celebration.

Mary Jones’ letter has been the best of all. She stated it very well.

Our children don’t even know the true date for some of our holidays now. Now I know why some of our kids Mother’s Day and Father’s Day cards arrive late. Ha ha!

Blessed to have access to great medical care

From Jan. 17 until April 20, my late husband, Chester Bartlett, had three “stays” at St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center. He spent more than nine weeks total there.

Chester received extraordinary care every hour of the day and night while there.

We are so very blessed in our area to have the caliber of physicians, surgeons, gastroenterologists, nurses, certified nurse’s assistants and support staff that serve at St. Luke’s. They are kind, caring, considerate and courteous, in addition to being skilled and well trained.

From the medics, ambulance personnel to the emergency room staff to x-ray to the intensive care unit to doctors, nurses, CNAs, therapists, student nurses, transport people, food service and house-keeping personnel to everyone in between — I thank you from the bottom of my heart. You tried valiantly to save and preserve his life numerous times.

Nobody had better tell me we don’t need the new hospital and all the latest equipment!

Suicide bombs kill 33 in Iraq, officials say

By Kim Gamel
Associated Press writer

BAGHDAD — Suicide bombers in a crowded Baghdad commercial district and Saddam Hussein’s hometown of Tikrit killed as many as 33 people Sunday as insurgents tried to turn a monthslong deadlock over forming a new Iraqi government to their advantage.

The latest violence began when bombers drove two cars packed with nearly 180 pounds of ammonium nitrate toward the gates of the Trade Bank of Iraq building in Baghdad and detonated the explosives after striking the surrounding blast walls, said Iraqi military spokesman Maj. Gen. Qassim al-Moussawi.

Al-Moussawi said at least 18 people were killed and 42 wounded. But three Iraqi police officials and a doctor at the Yarmouk hospital where many victims were taken put the toll at 28 killed and 57 wounded. Conflicting casualty tolls are common in the chaotic aftermath of bombings in Iraq.

Hours later, a man wearing an explosives vest blew himself up as police and onlookers responded to a roadside bomb apparently set as a trap in the northern city of Tikrit. At least five people were killed and 12 wounded in the late night attack, according to police and hospital officials.

The attacks added weight to warnings that insurgents would try to foment unrest as politicians squabble over forming a new government more than three months after inconclusive national elections.

The explosions capped a week in which about 100 people were killed in bombings and shootings nationwide, including at least 26 who died in a commando-style assault against the central bank in Baghdad last Sunday. An al-Qaida in Iraq front group, the Islamic State of Iraq, claimed responsibility for that attack, saying it targeted the institution responsible for funneling “oil money and the stolen wealth of Muslims” to the West.

Sectarian bloodshed that pushed the country to the brink of civil war in 2006-2007 has dropped sharply after a series of U.S.-Iraqi offensives, a Sunni revolt against al-Qaida and a Shiite militia cease-fire. But Iraqis still face near-daily attacks.

Many are venting their anger at politicians for failing to choose a prime minister and form a government, even though the new parliament was seated last week. Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki has been acting in a caretaker role as he battles to keep his job after a rival Sunni-backed political bloc won a narrow victory in the March 7 parliamentary vote.

The head of the Iraqiya bloc, Ayad Allawi, has warned more violence could ensue if the Sunnis who backed him feel sidelined by a Shiite alliance between al-Maliki’s party and a hard-line religious group.

Ahmed Abdullah, an engineer in the Electricity Ministry, said bickering politicians “have encouraged al-Qaida sleeper cells to resume work and strike again.”

“Ordinary Iraqis are paying the price of the political struggle in Baghdad,” he said.

Hassan al-Janabi, a 44-year-old hotel employee in Baghdad, said he has altered his routine to avoid crowded areas and rush hour traffic, which have been popular targets for insurgents seeking to maximize casualties.

“I believe the deteriorating security situation is connected to the political struggle and the fight between politicians over power and government,” he said. “I think that attacks will increase because regional countries will increase their interference in Iraq after the upcoming withdrawal of U.S. forces.”

Bombs hidden in push carts rock war-torn country, underscore security threat

KABUL, Afghanistan — Two bombs hidden in push carts exploded less than a half hour apart Sunday in one of Afghanistan’s most dangerous provinces, underscoring the continued security threat despite years of trying to bring peace to the unstable south.

The double explosions in Helmand province were just two in a series of attacks reported over the weekend across the country.

They came a day after a U.N. report painted a grim picture of the security situation in Afghanistan, saying roadside bombings and assassinations have soared in the first four months of the year. In Washington, Defense Secretary Robert Gates said on “Fox News Sunday” that while the war is a “tough pull,” momentum was shifting toward the U.S. troops and their Afghan and international partners.

U.S. troops are hoping to gain the upper hand before President Barack Obama’s July 2011 deadline to begin withdrawing American forces, now numbering more than 94,000. It’s unclear how troops would leave, but Obama’s chief of staff, Rahm Emanuel, told ABC’s “This Week” that the July 2011 date is firm. Emanuel did not dispute quoted remarks from Vice President Joe Biden that “a whole lot” of troops would leave then.

The double bombing occurred early Saturday morning in Lashkar Gah, the capital of Helmand province. The first explosion in front of a bank killed a young girl and a woman and wounded at least 14 other people, the Afghan Ministry of Interior said.

NEBRASKA

Town, angered by influx of workers at meatpacking plant, votes on immigration

FREMONT — Angered by a recent influx of Hispanic workers attracted by jobs at local meatpacking plants, voters in the eastern Nebraska city of Fremont will decide Monday whether to ban hiring or renting property to illegal immigrants.

The vote will be the culmination of a two-year fight that saw proponents collect enough signatures to put the question to a public vote. If the ordinance is approved, the community of 25,000 people could face a long and costly court battle. Either way, the emotions stirred up won’t settle quickly.

“Even if we say ‘no’ ... we still need to say, ‘How do we get along with each other now?’” said Kristin Ostrom, who helps oversee a campaign against the measure.

Across the nation, people have been outraged by — and demanded action against — the poor enforcement of federal laws to prevent illegal immigration. A law recently introduced in Arizona requires police to question people on their immigration status if there’s a “reasonable suspicion” they are illegal.

A man who helped write the Arizona law is helping to fight for the ordinance in Fremont, which has seen its Hispanic population surge in the past two decades. That increase is largely because they were recruited to work for the Fremont Beef and Hormel plants, and the city maintains an enviable low unemployment rate.

ISRAEL

New list of goods banned from Gaza limited to weapons, materials of military use

JERUSALEM — Israel pledged Sunday it will immediately allow all goods into Gaza except weapons and items deemed to have a military use under its decision to ease its three-year-old blockade of the Palestinian territory.

The list of banned goods replaces an old list of allowed items that permitted only basic humanitarian supplies for the 1.5 million Gazans. Under the new system, the government said practically all non-military items can enter Gaza freely.

“From now on, there is a green light of approval for all goods to enter Gaza except for military items and materials that can strengthen Hamas’ military machine,” Israeli government spokesman Mark Reggev said.

Israel decided on Thursday to ease the blockade under intense international pressure after its raid on a blockade-busting international flotilla bound for Gaza killed nine pro-Palestinian activists.

U.S. exec must clean up oil spill, BP’s image

By Raphael Satter and Tom Murphy
Associated Press writers

LONDON — BP’s new strategy to clean up its image and the Gulf Coast is to hand the job from its British CEO, widely criticized for tone-deaf comments and yachting amid the crisis, to one of its top-ranking Americans.

Bob Dudley is no stranger to tough situations, having protected his company’s interests in rough dealing in Russia even after he was barred from the country. Perhaps most importantly, he is a fresh face for the oil giant as it attempts to fix the spill and protect its future.

Dudley will take over as BP’s point man on the spill response, reporting to CEO Tony Hayward. Company officials have variously put the time frame at anywhere from immediately until after the spill is plugged, which isn’t likely to happen until August.

Hayward’s gaffes include saying, “I’d like my life back,” and most recently enjoying a yacht race off the coast of England on Saturday while oil spill relief workers sweated it out.

Roadshow Starts Tomorrow in Twin Falls!

By Jason Delong
Treasure Hunters Roadshow
STAFF WRITER

Roll up your sleeves and get ready to start your spring cleaning early this year. The Roadshow starts tomorrow in Twin Falls and is looking for anything old. Remember those matchbox cars you played with as a kid? You know the ones that have been stored away in the attic for the past 30 years. Well it's time to dig 'em out along with any other forgotten treasures. You might be sitting on a small fortune and not even know it.

Roadshow representative Archie Davis explains what the event is all about. "It's a chance to sell just about anything

“Treasure Hunters Roadshow has been in over 600 cities since 2001.”

that's old and get a fair price. We host over 1,000 shows every year throughout the U.S. and Canada. Toys, dolls, trains, pocket watches, old advertising signs, gold jewelry, coins just about anything can be sold at the Roadshow. This event is popular because it puts money in people's pockets. At a typical show we will see hundreds of people during the five day event. We will see a few unusual items but mostly we will see a lot of old coins, gold jewelry, and a wide variety of antiques and collectibles. Last week at a show in Missouri a retired dentist walked in with over 5 lbs. of dental gold fillings. "I would say that is pretty unusual, wouldn't you?" says Davis. The gentlemen received over $31,243

“It's a Modern day gold rush as precious metal prices soar due to weak economy. It's a sellers market.” says Archie Davis Roadshow representative.

for his gold fillings. The dentist told Davis that over the years he would keep the extracted teeth when the owners didn't want them. He would throw them in a jar and over the years it added up to over 5lbs of gold. Now not everybody has a jar of gold teeth lying around but according to Davis more than you might think have some sort of gold they can cash in. Davis says,

"The Roadshow receives a fair amount of gold each day of the 5 day event." Broken jewelry, gold coins, dental gold are all valuable items with today's high gold prices. Archie Davis commented, "Other top categories at the Roadshow would have to be silver dollars and other coins, pocket watches, and his personal favorite, old toys." Davis told me a story about a visitor at a recent Roadshow in Iowa. "This elderly gentlemen walked into the show and asked if we were interested in old toys. The fellow must have been in his late seventies or early eighties. He said he kept all of the toys from his childhood and they were outside in his pickup. I walked outside and to my surprise his pickup was full of the coolest old toys I had ever seen. Big old metal trucks, pedal cars, train sets, cast iron toys he had it all. We spent the next 3 hours going through his childhood. It was fun to listen to the stories he told about growing up and playing with the toys. He said one time he decided to play farmer in the garden and ended up digging up and ruining a fair number of vegetable plants. His folks were really mad and he said it was the longest summer he ever remembered working off the damage he had done. Back then the garden was a staple to every country family. His mom would can, jar and pickle the harvest to eat all winter. The vegetable plants were replaced and all ended well. I even think

“If you go to the Roadshow, you can cash-in your items for top dollar. Roadshow representatives will be available to assess and purchase your items at the Hilton Garden Inn this week, tomorrow through Saturday in Twin Falls.”

I saw him wipe a tear toward the end of that story. All ended well that day as he ended up getting over $7000.00 for his old toys. His last comment to me was "Well I guess its time to let em go"

Whether you have 5 lbs. of gold or a single gold tooth, a pick up full of old toys or a single Barbie doll you should visit the Roadshow this week. It's free, It's fun and it could put some money in your pocket. Maybe a lot of money!

Dealing with dementia

MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

A moment of confusion sweeps over Judy Davidson as she tries to finish a story June 14 in her room at Heritage-Woodstone Assisted Living in Twin Falls. Davidson has dementia and cannot remember parts of her past.

As rates rise, more families struggle with loved ones' decline

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

Judy Davidson can remember sending her third husband, Cam, love letters while he courted her. She still feels the rage from a nurse being disrespectful to Cam, and knows that Cam's step-daughter didn't like her. She knows he suffered from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease in the last years of his life.

But she can't tell you what town they lived in, or what year he died. She doesn't know when she moved to her new home at Heritage-Woodstone Assisted Living in Twin Falls, and has trouble finding the words to tell listeners about what she does remember.

And she is painfully aware of what she used to know.

One in seven Americans age 71 or older is affected by dementia, according to the Aging, Demographics, and Memory Study funded by the National Institutes of Health. Alzheimer's disease, the most common dementia, destroys brain cells. It robs victims of memories. It warps personalities. It renders lively, intelligent parents and spouses into confused and disconnected versions of themselves. It has no cure.

Family members of Alzheimer's patients can do little more than make their loved ones comfortable. And wait.

Every 70 seconds, somebody in the United States develops Alzheimer's disease, a progressive dementia that affects 5.3 million Americans, according to the Alzheimer's Association.

That's more than just a statistic to Gary Luther of Jerome. Over the past 15 years, Alzheimer's has slowly taken away his father's memory.

Carter Luther taught agriculture at Jerome High School for 34 years. He touched a lot of students' lives, Gary said, and the high school to which Carter dedicated his career honored him by naming the agriculture building after him.

"He was really quite a brilliant man," Gary said. In the mid '90s, Carter started forgetting things. He asked the same question over and over. Carter soon learned to mask his confusion with clever answers to questions. Gary recalled a nurse asking his father if he knew where he was.

"Yes, I'm right here with you," Gary remembered Carter saying. Technically true, but avoiding the question.

Soon after, doctors diagnosed Carter with Alzheimer's, making him one of the estimated 26,000 Idahoans 65 and older living with dementia, according to the Alzheimer's Association. That's 37 percent more than a decade ago, when 19,000 had dementia.

Since the 2000 Census, Idaho's population has increased by just 19.5 percent, according to the Idaho Department of Labor.

Carter and his wife recently moved in with their daughter in California. He forgets who his son is but remembers his wife, and he's happy, Gary said.

Stephaney Osburne, programming director for the Solana Care Unit at River Ridge Care and Rehab in Twin Falls, said Alzheimer's is responsible for 70 percent of the ward's dementia patients. The Alzheimer's patients in her care are either in the second or third stages of dementia and require constant supervision and secured doors so they don't wander away — a concern for advanced dementia patients, Osburne said.

In the disease's first stage, which Osburne said lasts about two to four years, people show signs of forgetfulness. They can't remember what they were supposed to be doing, or start misplacing items. In the second stage, which lasts up to 10 years, people can't recall family members' names, or get lost easily. In the third and final stage, Osburne said, they lose control over bodily functions. Many are unable to speak and need constant care during waking hours.

Therapies can slow Alzheimer's progress, but nothing can stop it. Many patients are healthy physically, though their minds decline. Families end up grieving for years before their loved ones die. Many secretly wish for their parents to pass, Osburne said. For some, the finality of

WHAT ARE THE SIGNS?

These are 10 warning signs of Alzheimer's, according to the Alzheimer's Association. Yes, something on this list is likely to look familiar to almost anyone. But occasionally misplacing the remote control or temporarily forgetting names are all normal and don't necessarily indicate dementia. Contact your doctor with questions.

1. Memory changes that disrupt daily life, like forgetting important dates or asking for the same information over and over.
2. New challenges in planning or problem solving, like paying monthly bills.
3. Difficulty completing familiar tasks, like driving to a familiar location or remembering the rules of a favorite game.
4. Confusion with time or place. People with Alzheimer's may lose track of dates, seasons and passage of time, or be confused about where they are and how they got there.
5. Trouble understanding visual images and spatial relationships — they may have trouble reading or be unable to recognize their own reflection, for instance.
6. New problems with words in speaking or writing, like having trouble following conversations or forgetting what they're saying in the middle of a conversation.
7. Misplacing things and losing the ability to retrace steps, or putting things in unusual places.
8. Decreased or poor judgement, potentially involving money or personal hygiene.
9. Withdrawal from work or social activities.
10. Changes in mood and personality. People with Alzheimer's can become confused, suspicious, depressed, fearful, anxious and easily upset.

Shawna Denton describes her mom as a tough lady. Judy Davidson first married in 1959 at 18 years old and had three daughters. Her husband left the young family in the early '70s — Shawna doesn't remember the year but knows it was the day after Thanksgiving. The young mother took double shifts at her restaurant job in Idaho Falls to keep her children fed. A few years later, Judy married her second husband, but she left him in 1979 after finding out he was an alcoholic. All this time, Judy worked restaurant jobs and attended school to get her GED, Shawna said.

In 1992, Judy married Cam Davidson — "her dream husband," Shawna said. They lived together in Middleton until he died in 2000. Judy stayed active in her church and community until she started becoming forgetful.

In 2008, doctors diagnosed Judy with dementia. Shawna begged Judy to move to Twin Falls, but she refused until July 2009. I want to move to Twin Falls, Shawna recalls Judy saying, but I don't want to move in with you. Find me a nursing home.

Shawna and her husband, Lawrence, moved Judy to Heritage-Woodstone Assisted Living and visit her several times a week. Judy's outgoing personality hasn't changed, Lawrence said; she greets fellow residents every morning with compliments.

But Judy has trouble operating telephones and Marriott will encourage golfers to use pushcarts instead of golf carts, increasing the number of calories they burn. Golfers carrying their clubs burn the most calories. Here, the Express Auto three-wheeled pushcart from Richmond, Va.-based Bag Boy.

Walking helps a round of golf lead to a less-round golfer

By Lenny Bernstein
The Washington Post

I've never played a single hole of golf, but I certainly hold no animosity toward those who love the game. I'll even watch a few holes on TV occasionally, during the final round of a major championship, thanks mostly to Tiger Woods' exploits. His golf game, that is.

Still, I count myself among those who believe that "a good walk spoiled," in the words of Mark Twain, really can't be considered much of a workout. Especially when that walk is so often a ride, in a golf cart.

So I was intrigued when Marriott Corp.'s golf division announced recently that it will try to encourage people to park their carts at about a dozen of its golf resorts and walk the courses instead, in the name of better health and fitness. The Bethesda, Md.-based hospitality giant plans to accomplish this by making available a fleet of modern pushcarts for anyone inclined to wheel a golf bag around the course instead of riding the cart paths.

I like this idea. But first, let's agree that golf carts certainly have their purpose. For the elderly, the frail, the disabled and younger children, golf carts deserve considerable credit for making the game more accessible. If you're physically unable to tote your own golf clubs (even with a pushcart) or walk the course, by all means hop in that cart and enjoy. You'll hear no complaint from me.

Some people also believe that golf carts make the game move faster. And certainly many golf course operators love them; some mandate their use. But when I see a bunch of overweight, middle-aged guys zipping along in a golf cart when they are perfectly able to walk the course, well, I have a problem with that.

When I see a bunch of overweight, middle-aged guys zipping along in a golf cart when they are perfectly able to walk the course, well, I have a problem with that.

Yes, I know, the clubs are heavy. Yes, I've read the studies that fatigue can affect performance on later holes. (This is one reason Tiger works out hard enough to develop the upper body of a mixed martial arts fighter.) Yes, I know that in places such as Palm Springs it can be 100 degrees in the shade, and a golf course can be 3 1/2 to 6 miles long.

Too bad. Get out and walk. "I'm not a doctor, but there has been research that you can pretty much double the calorie burn in a round" by walking instead of riding, said Bill Nault, vice president of Marriott Golf. "And that's a good thing."

Nault's partner in this venture is Craig Ramsbottom, president of Dynamic Brands, which makes the Bag Boy three-wheeled pushcarts that Marriott has adopted. Ramsbottom cited a 2008 study that found golfers walked 2.5 miles and burned 718 calories using a pushcart over nine holes. Using a golf cart, they walked a half-mile and burned 411 calories.

Sitting quietly, a person burns about 84 calories an hour.

The widely used Compendium of Physical Activities Tracking Guide shows that a 150-pound man will burn 251 calories playing an hour of golf using a cart, 308 walking and pulling a bag of clubs, and 322 walking and carrying clubs. (By the way, all three figures are toward the low end of the activity scale. An hour of competitive racquetball consumes 716 calories; an hour of "slow, moderate or light" freestyle swimming burns 501.)

I asked Melicia Whitt-Glover, who helped update the tracking chart for her doctoral dissertation in 2002, whether there's any point to putting the brakes on golf carts and encouraging golfers to walk, given the relatively small number of calories burned.

"It is definitely a good idea," she said. "Research has shown that something as simple as standing to do an activity, as opposed to sitting to do an activity, you burn more calories."

"For most folks it's probably not an aerobic workout," she said. "But it mostly depends on how fit a person is when they start." A couch potato might see some fitness gains, she said, and walking contributes to strengthening of muscle and bone.

Marriott's Nault said walking the course is also a more enjoyable way to play. "When you put your feet on the ground and walk the hills, you get an appreciation for nature and the beauty of a golf course," he said. "You get a better appreciation for the game."

remote controls, and sometimes has to stop conversations so she can think about what she has to say. She still remembers her children, although she sometimes she forgets her great-granddaughters' names, or who distant relatives are.

Often, relatives who visit only once a year are surprised at how the dementia has progressed, Lawrence said, although the changes aren't as stark to him and Shawna. He likened it to watching a child grow — if you see the kid every day, you don't notice how tall he's getting.

Sitting in a stuffed chair in her room on June 14, Judy told visitors detailed stories about her time with Cam. She recalled blizzards that kept them from visiting each other, and a trip to see his sister. But she forgot words and spoke in circles, repeating details over and over. Any movement in the room distracted her, so she kept her eyes lowered to limit diversions. When she forgot something, she looked to Lawrence for help or closed her eyes tightly to recall the word.

Other times, she unknowingly changed topics in the middle of a sentence. She started one conversation about how she loves to sing, but switched without pause to a story about her sister.

That's how dementia sounds.

The formerly active Judy gets frustrated with her dependence and forgetfulness, but often laughs at the absurdity of it.

This isn't Shawna's first experience with dementia. Both her great-grandmother and grandmother also suffered from it. She knows the disease may be a reality in her future, but tries not to think about it now.

"If you spend your whole life dwelling on it, you're not going to be a very happy person," Shawna said.

So she takes care of her mom and waits for Judy's condition to worsen, not knowing what the future holds for her own mind.

Is coconut water 'Nature's Sports Drink'?

By Jennifer LaRue Huget
Special to The Washington Post

Zico brand coconut water is billed as "Nature's Sports Drink," but is coconut water really the best beverage for the job?

Andrea Giancoli, a spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association, noted that coconut water is fine, "if you like the taste." (Which, I have to say, I don't.) As for "the hype that it will cure everything from cancer to hypertension," Giancoli says, "there is no miracle food. Every time we 'miracle-ize' a food, we lose sight of its real benefits."

And those benefits are? "Coconut water is lower in calories than a Gatorade or juice," Giancoli says. Better yet, it's a really good source of potassium, delivering nearly 700 milligrams per serving, which is more than a banana, she adds. We need potassium in our diets to, among other things, regulate our blood pressure.

But do we really need coconut water — or any other "sports drink" — after we exercise? Giancoli says, "Most people don't exercise heavily enough to need a sports recovery drink. Water is just fine for most people."

Time to get real about processed foods

By Jennifer LaRue Huget
Special to The Washington Post

Packaged guacamole makes the cut. Pop Tarts do not. The difference? The first is “real” food, the second not so much.

That’s according to Bruce Weinstein and Mark Scarbrough, whose new book, “Real Food Has Curves: How to Get Off Processed Food, Lose Weight, and Love What You Eat” (Gallery), is a guide to what should be a natural, intuitive activity: feeding ourselves.

Connecticut authors Weinstein (a trained chef) and Scarbrough (a former English professor) have written 17 cookbooks together over 11 years and write for Weight Watchers, Cooking Light and, on occasion, The Washington Post.

In “Real Food,” they walk us through a seven-step process of weaning ourselves from packaged and processed foods, starting by selecting and tasting — really tasting — a fresh peach and ending with committing to “treat yourself well” by bettering your breakfast, enjoying midday snacks and relishing dessert.

Along the way, readers learn to view foods in terms of how close they are to “real.” In the authors’ paradigm, freshly squeezed orange juice is “real,” orange juice not made from concentrate “almost real,” orange juice from concentrate “barely real” and bottled orange-flavored drink “not real.”

Wherever your typical diet falls in this range, the authors suggest you “take one step to the left,” closer to the “real” end. “As you go about your day,” they write, “think about what’s real and what’s not, what’s almost real food and what’s barely so, what’s been shellacked with additives, what’s wonderful in its natural state.”

Eating in this fashion will probably help you lose weight, say the authors, who both shed pounds when they shifted toward “real” food. But it will also make your diet more healthful and satisfying, they promise.

Grocery shopping with the two, as I got to do last week, is an exercise in discretion and label reading. Just back from a business trip, they needed to restock their larder. Scarbrough assured Weinstein that they still had plenty of homemade granola; what they needed were ingredients to make the week’s lineup of vegetable-and-grain-based lunch salads, which include wheat berries, quinoa, roasted corn and red peppers, baby artichokes, cucumbers and celery. (You can find recipes on their blog: www.realfoodhascurves.com.)

The two are wary of ingredients such as “flavoring” and “spices,” which really don’t pin down what you’re putting in your mouth. They nixed bottled coleslaw dressing (whose first ingredient is sugar) but approved of pre-sliced, packaged purple onions in the refrigerator section. If you use those onions, Weinstein says, “you are cooking; you’re just not chopping.”

Tofu makes the grade, but not tofu-based vegetarian chorizo sausage. If your dietary restrictions preclude your eating a certain food, Scarbrough suggests, “don’t get something fake instead.” If you’re gluten intolerant and can’t eat a pizza, he says, better to forgo “fake” wheat-free pizza crusts and opt instead for a plate of nachos with (“real”) melted cheese.

Weinstein bakes bread at home, but for convenience’s sake he buys store-baked bialies. That’s in keeping with Scarbrough’s advice that “convenience shouldn’t be discounted, just examined.”

As for the common wisdom that the most healthful food lies along the grocery store’s perimeter, Scarbrough asserts that some approved foods can be found among the boxes, bags and cans in the center aisles. Shelf-stable vacuum boxes of milk pass muster, for instance, as do some canned tomatoes and rice.

Still, the grocery shelves are stacked against those seeking “real” food. In the syrup aisle, Scarbrough pointed out that the only “real” sweeteners there, the honey and real maple syrup, are on the top shelf, out of reach. And they are more expensive than the front-and-center pancake toppers whose first ingredients are corn syrup and high fructose corn syrup, with not a drop of maple in the mix.

As we left the store, Scarbrough mentioned that he and Weinstein “almost called the book ‘Chocolate Pudding Will Save Your Life.’”

To these two, the difference between pudding made at home with a few simple ingredients and the additive-riddled kind in boxes or tubs is emblematic of their approach.

“If you have ‘real’ chocolate pudding,” Weinstein says, “it will change the way you think about everything.”

DEAR ABBY: Please remind parents and teenagers that it is "cool" to wear a helmet when riding bikes and skateboards. A child in our town died recently after suffering a head injury, and we have just received word that the son of a close friend (age 23) has started having seizures because of a head injury he suffered as a teen after falling from a skateboard.

I had my grandson decorate his helmet. All his friends thought it looked great, and that made it "cool" to wear it. With summer here and kids outside, wearing a helmet cannot be stressed enough.

— VIGILANT GRANDMA

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR GRANDMA: You are not only a vigilant grandma, but also a clever one. Falls are common among bike riders, skateboarders, rollerbladers, and those who drive and ride all-terrain vehicles. According to the Traumatic Brain Injury Recovery Network, an estimated 7 million Americans seek medical care every year for injuries sustained during sports or recreation-related activities, an estimated 4.3 million of whom are treated in emergency rooms. The highest rates of sports- and recreation-related injuries are among adolescents 10 to 14 years of age.

When a child's head hits cement, wood or hard-packed dirt, the result can be a traumatic injury that leads to concussion, permanent brain injury or even death. That is why children who participate in sports should be strongly encouraged to wear protective headgear at all times.

DEAR ABBY: Some friends who live out of state just left, after inviting themselves to stay at our home while they attended to family business. We live in a town with many hotels. We enjoy their company, but when we visited them last year, we stayed at their bed and breakfast (at their invitation) and were charged $175 a night even though there were empty rooms at their inn.

My wife says I should shut up, but I feel used. Your thoughts?

— MIFFED
IN MICHIGAN

DEAR MIFFED: Your feelings are accurate. You welcomed this couple as friends; they welcomed you as paying guests. Now that you know this about them, treat them accordingly. The next time they invite themselves to your home, tell them you'd love to visit with them while they're in town and refer them to a hotel.

P.S. If this has happened more than once, it could only be because you allowed it.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 42-year-old mother of three, married to my husband for 15 years. I am active in my church and community and live a good, decent life.

My 20th college reunion is coming up in September. I lived a wild life in college, drank too much and was promiscuous. I would like to attend the reunion with my husband, who is also an alumnus. While I will love seeing old friends, I feel apprehensive because I will be among some people I once had relations with.

Abby, I am not the same person I was back then. Part of me wants to go to the reunion to show that I have changed. My husband is aware of my past and accepts it. Should I go?

— DIFFERENT NOW
IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR DIFFERENT NOW: Go! I'm sure you won't be the only person there who was "wild" when you were younger. Show up, have a good time, and let bygones be bygones.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

IF JUNE 21 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: During the next six weeks, you might feel that your life is like the little girl who, when she was good, was very, very good, but when she was bad, she was horrid. You may be torn between two factions, people or choices; one is extremely trustworthy and the other is greedy or controlling. You will need to exert expert judgment in order to avoid making a mistake. Do what is right and honorable and you will have no negative consequences. In August and throughout the fall you may have an urge to seek greener pastures, but will merely cause turmoil if you make major, permanent changes.

HOROSCOPE

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stick with what you know. You're more than willing to test new things, but if you try something that you aren't familiar with, people might think you aren't serious. Hold off on entering into new agreements.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Relationships are not businesses, and there is no need for a boss. Friction will ensue if you try to impose your will on your partner. Mutual understanding and respect creates a more pleasant atmosphere.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Nothing truly worth having is ever attained easily. It's the trials that come with acquiring such an object that make the prize that much sweeter. Be alert for signals that indicate you could lose someone's trust.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Open up your heart and let the sun shine in. When you smile, the world smiles with you. Let your cheerfulness infect your colleagues and by quitting time you'll all be singing your way home.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): As the skipper, you run a tight ship — but beware of those who may wish to rock your boat. Not everyone is entirely happy with your methods and may be working in private to undermine your authority.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep your feet on the ground. A new acquaintance could open your eyes to lofty new goals and ideals that are attractive and glamorous as well as completely impractical. Be realistic during this solstice.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do unto others, etc. It's a good policy to be generous and kindhearted when others are in need. However, be careful that you are not being taken advantage of by those who view you as a pushover.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Do "new and improved" products mean the previous version was "old and lousy"? Not at all. New does not always mean better — and sometimes the trusted and established is the most advisable choice.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A cheerful outlook can help make the worst situations turn out for the best. Look for the silver lining in every little storm cloud and there won't be any situation that can hold you back.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It's not whether you win or lose but how you play the game. There are no winners or losers if all are team players and do their part to the best of their abilities. Hold off on that new project until later.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): We all know what curiosity did to the cat. You're dying to know the latest dirt about a high-profile situation going on. The simple fact is that the matter doesn't concern you — so mind your own business.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): People will be drawn to your energy and passion like lightning to a lightning rod. Use your influence and share your wisdom with those who would benefit from an objective and refreshing perspective.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Who can tell the mischief which the very virtuous do?"

— William Makepeace Thackeray

All this week's deals come from the European Open Championships held at this time last year in San Remo.

Every two years the European Championships switch from being the qualifying tournament for the World Championships to an open event in which players from all over the world can compete. There are teams and pairs, and no restriction on playing with someone from the same country.

Here Agustin Madala and Norberto Bocchi showed a neat defense against a very normal contract of four spades. Madala led a diamond to declarer's jack, and two rounds of trump were cashed. Next came the diamonds, West ruffing the third round, at which point it was obvious to everyone at the table that the defenders had to try to cash their winners in hearts and clubs before the rats got at them.

Madala observed that his partner had followed up the line in diamonds and spades, thus denying the two top hearts, when he would have given suit preference by playing high-low. So he needed to resort to trickery.

Accordingly, Madala continued by leading a low club away from his ace, putting his partner in with the club king to lead a low heart. Not unexpectedly on such a defense, South assumed East had the two top clubs, so West's scanty values had to include the heart ace. South now guessed wrong in hearts and went down.

ANSWER: This double does not ask for an unusual lead such as a diamond. With the suit bid twice on your left already, and with your having both black suits well under control, it simply says you will beat the hand by leading partner's long suit. So lead the heart nine.
