Utah man killed in crash on I-84

ISP: Accident may have been suicide attempt

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

A Utah man died Friday after crossing the median of Interstate 84 and colliding head-on with two semitrailers in what state police are calling a suicide attempt.

Idaho State Police Capt. Rob Storm said Cody Scott, 18, of Vernal, Utah, crashed a stolen 2006 Chevrolet Silverado pickup truck at midday as he attempted to flee the state of Utah by heading northwest into Idaho. Scott apparently intentionally crossed the interstate median into the eastbound lanes of traffic at mile marker 237 near the Idahome exit in Cassia County, according to ISP.

Storm released Scott's identity Friday afternoon after his family was notified. He was the only occupant of the vehicle. According to an ISP release, Scott was pronounced dead at the scene of the crash, in which alcohol is believed to have been a factor.

Wet spring could increase threat of West Nile virus

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

After a wet spring, people in the Magic Valley are finally enjoying summer's warmth. But along with barbecues, the heat will encourage mosquitoes, and the chance of getting the West Nile virus could be greater this year.

Regional experts anticipate a bad year for mosquitoes. The heavy rains of this spring resembled those of 2006 — the first year West Nile really hit the state — when Idaho led the nation with 1,000 confirmed cases of West Nile virus, according to the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare. The department recommends avoiding bites by covering up, using bug spray and staying inside between dusk and dawn.

Kirk Tubbs, Twin Falls County Pest Abatement District director, has been setting mosquito traps around the county since late April to find breeding locations so he can kill the larva before they take flight. Streams and ponds are common breeding sites, but Tubbs said larva can also exist in tiny pools such as puddles in cow tracks.

"Our counts have been low so far, but now that the warm weather is here, we expect it to pick up," Tubbs said.

He will also learn if the few species that carry the virus are in the area. Last year, he found virus-carrying mosquitoes at three sites west of Twin Falls.

If the traps catch a high number of adult mosquitoes, Tubbs treats open water with naturally occurring bacteria that are deadly to larva. He's used twice as much of the bacteria this year because it's been so wet.

"Culprits this spring have been boats, tarps ... anything that collects water," Tubbs said. "I can treat ditches, but I can't get into everyone's backyard."

Eliminating standing water can be as effective as treating for mosquitoes, Tubbs said, and that reduces the risk of getting the virus.

But that risk will never be eliminated. Tubbs said surrounding counties, including Jerome, have no

Internment camp stories shared through comedy, song

In good times, they danced. And when good times became bad times, they still danced, with their feet tapping floors and their eyes turned away from the barbed wire and armed guards.

That was part of reality for the Japanese-Americans residing in internment camps in the United States during World War II. It was brought back to life on Friday for the Civil Liberties & the Arts Symposium V at Canyon Crest Dining and Event Center in Twin Falls. The two-day symposium, organized by Minidoka National Historic Site, Friends of Minidoka and the College of Southern Idaho, focused on the arts and civil liberty issues stemming from the internment camps.

With comedy, dance and songs from that generation, the Los Angeles-based Grateful Crane Ensemble held the attention of about 350 people with its show, "The Camp Dance: The Music and The Memories."

First storm of season threatens Gulf coast, oil spill cleanup effort

By Brian K. Sullivan
Bloomberg News

Residents along the Gulf of Mexico face a weekend of watching and planning as a weather system that may become the year's first tropical storm or hurricane lingers on their doorstep.

A low-pressure system between the coast of Honduras and Grand Cayman island has a 80 percent chance of becoming Alex, the first storm of the 2010 Atlantic hurricane season, on a track toward Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula, according to the National Hurricane Center in Miami.

"Upper-level winds are becoming more conducive for development and a tropical depression will likely form at any time later today or Saturday," according to a statement posted on the center's website at 2 p.m. The system could become a cyclonic storm in the next 48 hours.

A storm in the Gulf of Mexico may become a threat to cleanup efforts for the worst oil spill in U.S. history, as well as to the offshore rigs that produce 30 percent of the country's oil and 10 percent of its natural gas.

The Gulf is also home to seven of the 10 busiest U.S. ports, according to the Army Corps of Engineers.

"We will have our first real threat to operations and I am still worried about the oil slick," Jim Rouiller, a senior energy meteorologist at Planalytics Inc. "We cannot rule out impact on this spill from Alex."

The 45-minute show had a bittersweet mood of happy high school dances that also reminded the audience of the difficulties of life in internment camps. Piano and drums brought back the music of World War II, and actors played out dance scenes based on camp life and drawn from interviews with those who lived in the camps.

They were decidedly all-American stories — like the one about the smart high school girl who doesn't get noticed by the boy she likes, as he falls for the pretty, popular girl instead.

The story ended on a good note, though. Haruye Ioka, who played the smart, over-looked girl added a post-script to the story. Fifty years later, the smart girl saw her former competitor at a reunion and thought: "She's no longer pretty, but I'm still smart!"

The audience laughed.

The ensemble was joined by Mary Kageyama Nomura, a singer who lived in an internment camp in California as a teenager and is called the "Songbird of Manzanar."

Difficult times were not sugar-coated. In one bit, the actors mentioned that the families lived in horse stalls that reeked of manure and had barracks with a hanging light bulb, pot-bellied stove, and metal cots with mattresses that internees had to stuff with straw.

After the show, the group took questions from the audience. Darrell Kunitomi said that it's a reminder that in the worst of times, the best things are still needed — including the rights of all.

"We have to be the best that we can be and that is why it means so much," he said.

abatement programs so mosquitoes can always move back in.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game also keeps tabs on the virus by monitoring bird deaths. West Nile can kill birds, especially robins, crows and magpies.

Between 2002 and 2006, biologists investigated every bird death to learn about the virus. Now, they only investigate events where many birds have died, where many people have been infected or where sage grouse or raptors have died, said Fish and Game wildlife veterinarian Mark

Drew. If many people are infected, biologists may consider eliminating local crow and magpie populations to prevent the virus' spread.

"The alert status has been ratcheted up by the wet spring," Drew said. "But it really falls back to public awareness."

West Nile virus causes mild flu-like symptoms in most cases, and only 1 percent of people, usually those older than 50, experience serious problems.

Wendell reveals $556,000 deficit in general fund

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — Wendell’s general fund isn’t just in the red, it’s bleeding.

An audit report unveiled during Thursday’s council meeting indicated the general fund has accumulated a $556,000 deficit since 2004.

The audit report was given to the city last week, completed by Twin Falls accounting firm HCM Holmstead.

“This came as a complete surprise to me,” Mayor Brad Christopherson told the Times-News. “There have been concerns over the years about where exactly did the city sit, but I never paid much attention until I was voted into office.”

Even those with many years on the council didn’t have an explanation for how overspending went unchecked.

“All I can say is that our upcoming budget process will be extremely important,” said council President Ilene Rounsefell, a seven-year council veteran. “It will take us some time to figure our revenue, cut expenses and be more frugal so that we can accumulate, over time, those funds that have been supporting the general fund. We’ll do our best to improve the situa-

“This came as a complete surprise to me. There have been concerns over the years about where exactly did the city sit, but I never paid much attention until I was voted into office.”

— Wendell Mayor Brad Christopherson

tion we are in.”

During the meeting, Rounsefell said the council wasn’t aware of the deficit. However, she said that funding cuts to all departments may be necessary to repay enterprise funds for things like sewer and water, which were tapped into to keep the city from bouncing checks.

Councilman Jason Houser expressed regret at learning the city engaged in something his November re-election campaign promised wouldn’t happen.

“I am so sorry,” Houser said.

His apology prompted jeers from the crowd of 50 or so residents packed into council chambers for the meeting.

“Sorry doesn’t cut it,” yelled one resident.

George Benson, a resident and former mayor, said, “The council better pay attention ... so this doesn’t happen again.”

City Clerk and Treasurer Mickey Walker said that for years, the general fund had supported the enterprise funds it is leaning on now.

She said some deficits were caused by unforeseen expenses the city has had to pay in recent years, from lawsuit legal fees to fines for the sewer system being out of compliance.

“Now that we know exactly where we sit we can take the necessary steps to fix it,” Walker said.

Christopherson said he made a few suggestions to the council during a closed-door session called during Thursday’s meeting, but couldn’t discuss those with the media. The council cited Idaho Code exemptions for legal and personnel matters as its justification for the closed-door meeting.

“All I can say is I hope the council makes the right decisions. We need to find out how the city let this happen and find ways to correct this,” Christopherson said. “I’m blown away. This is inexplicable.”

Burley tabs new fire chief

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — The Burley Fire Department will soon have a new chief at the helm.

City officials announced Thursday in a press release that Keith Martin has been hired as the city’s new fire chief.

“I’m really excited,” Martin said during a Thursday phone interview. “We had a chance to come up for the oral interview with the mayor and City Council and we just fell in love with the town. We stayed at the Fairfield Marriot and when you walk outside you have the mountains to the south, which had a little snow on the top and it was just picturesque.”

Martin, 44, started his firefighting career in 1992 as a volunteer firefighter. He was hired as a full-time firefighter in 1998 and worked through the ranks to become a battalion chief for four fire stations in Woodbridge, Calif., overseeing a district that encompasses just less than 200 square miles.

Martin said he oversees nine firefighters on his shift and is responsible for training, inspections, weed abatement and other duties.

Martin and his wife, Tracey, who have been married nine years, have two children and live in Linden, Calif., about 20 miles southeast of Woodbridge.

Martin plans on relocating to Burley on July 8 or 9 and will take his post on July 12.

“Everyone we talked to while we were there was so nice and cordial,” he said of Burley. “They made us feel like we’d been there for 10 years. They made us feel right at home.”

Martin will replace former chief Steven Hamilton, who was terminated by the city March 3.

Hamilton had been the city’s fire chief since October 2007.

Martin will oversee nine full-time firefighters at the Burley station and 21 volunteers.

Calls for comment made to the Burley Fire Department and Mayor Terry Greenman weren’t returned Thursday or Friday.

Oil spill

Rouiller said a tropical storm or hurricane in the spill area would force all the oil recovery ships to flee, which would mean free-flowing crude from the rig leased by BP. The well may be gushing as many as 60,000 barrels of oil a day.

Rig crews would need to begin preparing to evacuate three to seven days ahead of the storm, Coast Guard Adm. Thad Allen, the government’s national incident commander, said earlier this week.

Rouiller said the storm will most likely be moving through the Gulf starting Monday night through Wednesday.

BP has lost more than half of its market value since the April 20 explosion on the Deepwater Horizon rig, which killed 11 crew members and triggered the spill. The company, while being investigated by U.S. authorities, has agreed with President Barack Obama to deposit $20 billion in an independently managed account to cover cleanup costs and compensation claims.

“To me, it was sort of unthinkable that not only are they dealing with the nation’s largest oil spill, now you are dealing with a hurricane,” Rouiller said.

Rouiller predicted the storm may hit anywhere from Brownsville, Texas, to the mouth of the Mississippi. A weather front that is forecast to bring cooler air to the northern U.S. may pull the storm on a more northerly track into Louisiana, he said.

The storm may also take a more southerly track and become a threat to Mexico, said Joe Bastardi, chief hurricane forecaster at AccuWeather Inc. in State College, Pa.

If the storm does miss the spill area, no one should breathe a sigh of relief, Bastardi said.

“This is a real warning shot that this season isn’t going to monkey around,” Bastardi said by telephone. “It is a sign that the pot is bubbling and if it doesn’t boil over in July it will in August.”

Once again, Idaho Republicans take leave of reality

JEERS: Remember when you used to count on the Idaho Republican Party to be the soul of sobriety and responsibility? No more.

Consider what the Idaho GOP's bi-annual convention did Friday in Idaho Falls:

- A panel of delegates passed a measure to define marriage as a bond between a “naturally born” man and woman, effectively barring transgenders.

Bannock County delegate Ralph Lilling says his amendment to the state party's platform will help further protect the traditional family unit.

But Donna Montgomery, a delegate from Kootenai County, argued the additional language was unnecessary because people from Idaho understand man is a man and a woman is a woman.

The measure still has to go before the full convention today for approval.

- A committee narrowly passed a proposal to include language in the party's platform that seeks to nullify the constitutional amendment created a century ago to shift election of U.S. senators from state legislatures to voters.

Supporters of the measure say making senators accountable to legislators instead of voters will restore the constitution's checks and balances.

State Sen. Jeff Siddoway, a Terreton Republican, joined more than a dozen other delegates in voting against the proposal, saying it takes voters out of the equation.

Siddoway told delegates: “You're giving up your right to vote for people who are representing you in Washington, D.C.”

- Another committee insulted state Rep. Fred Wood, R-Burley, by backing a resolution opposing the Legislature-approved idea — brokered by Wood — of sending constitutional amendments covering public debt to voters this November. Instead, they backed a resolution they hope will lead to defeat at the polls this fall.

The amendments would allow local governments, publicly owned airports and public hospitals to take on long-term debt to build facilities or make purchases without a public vote. The catch is that revenue from the projects — not tax dollars — pay off the debt.

The measures address a 2006 Idaho Supreme Court decision requiring such expenditures go to a vote, even though no taxpayer money was in play.

- Since 2006, building contractors and subcontractors that do work valued at more than $2,000 must register with the state and buy insurance. It was meant to protect homeowners from unscrupulous contractors.

But Larry Spencer, a northern Idaho delegate, says the Legislature did a disservice to residents. Instead, he says the law provided a windfall for insurance companies and drove up costs.

A resolution to the Legislature supporting repeal must win convention approval in a vote due today.

Not everybody is in favor.

Jesse Taylor, a Bear Lake County delegate, says he wouldn't go to a doctor who didn't have medical liability insurance — so why let a contractor without coverage build his home.

It would be easy to blame such lunacy on Tea Party delegates, but this is the second state Republican convention in two years that has gone off the deep end ideologically. State party Chairman Norm Semanko and his national committeeman, Damond Watkins, should have reined in this nonsense long ago.

We hope they remember that Republican candidates actually have to run on this platform in November.

If there are grownups left in the Idaho GOP, now is the time for them to speak out.

CHEERS: To the Idaho Public Charter School Commission, for pulling the plug on the trouble-plagued Nampa Classical Academy this week.

The school that unsuccessfully sued the state for barring use of the Bible as a historical text in the classroom will be shuttered because of financial troubles, officials said Thursday.

The commission voted to revoke Nampa Classical Academy's charter, citing a lack of stability in the school's finances, despite a school board member's plea “for grace and mercy.”

While administrators complained they've been unfairly targeted because of their differences with the state over use of the Bible, the commission insists the academy's money troubles are to blame.

The charter school ended classes two weeks earlier than planned this year after federal funds that were budgeted for did not come through. The state also highlighted a $140,000 hole in the academy's budget for this fiscal year, though school administrators say they're working toward financial solvency and will balance their budget.

The financial dilemmas are not unlike those any other charter school would run into during its first year of operation, said Erik Makrush, who sits on Nampa Classical Academy's governing board.

“We are aggressively appealing this decision to the state Board of Education,” Makrush told The Associated Press.

NCA can appeal all it wants, but the charter school commission made the right call.

The Nampa charter was a trainwreck from the beginning, defying the Legislature-mandated ground rules of charter schools and striving to go its own way.

If charter schools have any asset, it's their credibility as public schools. NCA made a mockery of those standards and in so doing endangered every other charter school in the state.

LETTERS OF THANKS

Heartfelt thanks for caregivers

Losing my mom, Sylvia, made me realize that I must thank some very special people.

To all her doctors, nurses and aides at Same Day Surgery, St. Luke's, DaVita and Heritage; to mom's friend, Neva, thanks for being there until the end. To Sonny, brother, you always know when to call me. To Cindy and all at Hospice Visions, I just wish that I had made you my first choice; you made my mom's transition the way it is supposed to be. Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home did an excellent job. To my teachers at the College of Southern Idaho, Drs. Morache and Simonson, Susan McFarland and Matt Reynolds; my counselor, Kate; Brent and Kellie at Vocational Rehabilitation and to Oscar and Kim Carranza at KOA. To the unknown cab driver that took mom on April 1 to surgery; thanks for telling someone to call me.

Heartfelt thanks.

Senior Center thanks Hagerman church

On behalf of the board of directors and members of the Hagerman Valley Senior Center, we wish to thank St. Catherine's Catholic Church of Hagerman for its cash donation from the proceeds of its Basque dinner, which will be added to our building fund to remodel the center's kitchen.

Without such donations, our senior centers would not be able to assist our seniors with meals and fellowship. Please remember, you will remain in our hearts and prayers.

Thanks to Boy's and Girl's State supporters

The Filer American Legion and Auxiliary 47 would like to thank the following clubs from Buhl for their financial contributions to send three Gem Boy's State and 3 Syringa Girl's State delegates from Buhl High School to Idaho's sessions in June:

Steve Kaatz and the West End Men's Association, Buhl Kiwanis, Buhl Rotary, Beta Sigma Phi.

We also sent two Syringa Girl's Staters from Filer High School. Thanks to Filer Kiwanis, Filer Mutual Telephone Co., and PEO Sisterhood AH.

We would also like to thank the Twin Falls County Fair Board for allowing our members to earn money during the fair by helping with the flower department. This earned money also allows us to give a scholarship to a deserving Filer High School graduate each year. This year's recipient is Trevor Doxey, son of David and Stacey Doxey.

We could not do this without your help.

Triumph of the culture of exposure

The most interesting part of my job is that I get to observe powerful people at close quarters. Most people in government, I find, are there because they sincerely want to do good. But they're also exhausted and frustrated much of the time. And at these moments they can't help letting you know that things would be much better if only there weren't so many morons all around.

David Brooks

So every few weeks I find myself on the receiving end of little burst of off-the-record trash talk. Senators privately moan about other senators. Administration officials gripe about other administration officials. People in the White House complain about the idiots in Congress, and the idiots in Congress complain about the idiots in the White House. Washington floats on a river of aspersion.

Government is filled with superconfident, highly competitive people who are grouped into small bands. These bands usually have one queen bee at the center and a squad of advisers all around. These bands are perpetually jostling, elbowing and shoving each other to get control over policy.

Amid all this friction, the members of each band develop their own private language. These people often spend 16 hours a day together, and they bond by moaning about the idiots on the outside.

It feels good to vent. You demonstrate your own importance by showing you are un-awed by the majority leader, the vice president or some other big name.

Military people are espe-

cially prone to these sorts of outbursts. In public, they pay lavish deference to civilian masters who issue orders from the comfort of home. Among themselves, they blow off steam.

Those of us in the press corps have to figure out how to treat this torrent of private kvetching. During World War II and the years just after, a culture of reticence prevailed. The view was that human beings are sinful, flawed and fallen. What mattered most was whether people could overcome their flaws and do their duty as soldiers, politicians and public servants. Reporters suppressed private information and reported mostly on public duties.

Then, in 1961, Theodore H. White began his “The Making of the President” book series. This series treated the people who worked inside the boiler rooms of government as the star players. It put the inner dramas at center stage.

Then, after Vietnam, an ethos of exposure swept the culture. The assumption among many journalists was that the establishment may seem upstanding, but there is a secret corruption deep down. It became the task of journalism to expose the underbelly of public life.

Then came cable, the Internet, and the profusion of media sources. Now you have outlets and websites whose only interest is the kvetching and inside baseball.

In other words, over the course of 50 years, what was considered the least important part of government became the most important.

And into this world walks Gen. Stanley McChrystal.

McChrystal was excellent at his job. He had outstanding relations with the White House and entirely proper relationships with his various civilian partners in the State Department and beyond. He set up a superb decision-making apparatus that deftly used military and civilian expertise. But McChrystal, like everyone else, kvetched. And having apparently missed the last 50 years of cultural history, he did so in front of a reporter. And this reporter made the kvetching the center of his profile.

By putting the kvetching in the magazine, the reporter essentially took run-of-the-mill complaining and turned it into a direct challenge to presidential authority. He took a successful general and made it impossible for President Obama to retain him. The reticent ethos had its flaws. But the exposure ethos undermined public faith in institutions and elevated the trivial.

Another scalp is on the wall. Government officials will erect even higher walls between themselves and the outside world. The honest and freewheeling will continue to flee public life, and the cautious and calculating will remain.

The culture of exposure has triumphed, with results for all to see.

Many helped make day camp a success

As the Falls District Cub Scout Day Camp director, I would like to give thanks to those who sponsored our successful event this year. This year's Falls District Cub Scout Day Camp took place at Rock Creek RV Park and was a huge success due to the unselfish contributions from great people and businesses:

Special thanks Air St. Luke's flight crews who made every tour special for the boys and their leaders, County Parks and Recreation for use of the facility, BLM Forestry who made the boys' and my experience wonderful, Adventure Motor Sports who helped us transport our goods to set up each day, Idaho Fish and Game who made true fisher-kids out of my daughter and a lot of boys, Ray Perron of Home Mortgage who let us use a secured trailer to store equipment, Galen Slater of Let's Dance, who filled our lunch time with music and dance.

Flag Day event sponsors, organizer thanked Cheers and special thanks to Ron Yates for spearheading the June 14 Flag Day celebration at Shoshone Falls Park. A crowd celebrated the 100th anniversary of Twin Falls' first Flag Day, where cliffs on the south and north side of the canyon were named to honor assassinated U.S. Presidents McKinley and Garfield. These cliffs flew U.S. flags and were renamed, for the evening, in memory of photographer Clarence Bisbee (south) and civic leader Howard Allen (north).

Additional thanks for the event's success: Twin Falls Municipal Band, Twin Falls City Parks and Recreation, Twin Falls City Council, KMYT, KLIX, Times-News, Wayne Goetz, flagmen on Allen and Bisbee points, Lynn Schniederman and Spencer Geilman, Music Magic, Citizens on Patrol, Twin Falls Senior Citizens and Bethel Temple Church for shuttle vans, and all who attended.

China turns tables on rich nations

Your move, folks. That's the message from China's surprise move to allow a more flexible yuan. China, in signaling it's OK with a rising currency, voiced a strong vote of confidence in its economic outlook. It also shifted the onus to the developed world in a crafty and unambiguous way.

Timothy Geithner and his team at the U.S. Treasury should keep on ice the champagne they're tempted to open. Now it's time to start getting their own imbalances in order.

It's wrong to conclude China was browbeaten into acting. Yes, the step means Chinese officials can breathe easier arriving in Toronto for this weekend's Group of 20 meeting. Yet a rising yuan will make it easier to tame asset bubbles and reduce inflation risks. It also increases the purchasing power for the nation's 1.3 billion people. Efforts to kick China's addiction to exports are now underway.

That will require some adjustments for the outside world. A stronger yuan is reflationary. Chinese will, over time, be able to buy more goods from other countries. Increased import activity coincides with a sudden militancy among Chinese workers demanding higher wages.

While good developments

in the long run, both phenomena will affect global inflation rates and require considerable nimbleness on the part of multinational companies. The infinite sea of cheap, docile Chinese labor is evaporating.

None of what China is doing will placate the Lindsey Grahams and Charles Schumers of the world. Both senators have had a linear focus on China's undervalued currency, as if it were the root cause of the United State's problems. While China's role in global imbalances is indisputable, officials in Beijing didn't put the U.S. where it is.

It was the administration of Bill Clinton that decided to remove Depression-era banking-system safeguards and fight efforts to regulate derivatives. It was President George W. Bush who removed every financial regulation in view, squandered a budget surplus through tax cuts for the ultra-rich and put a point-less war in Iraq on a credit card.

The crisis of the past two years didn't come from the periphery of the global economy, but its core. It's the irresponsible policies of the U.S., the euro zone, Japan and Britain that are imperiling markets, not those of China, India or Brazil.

It would be a crime if the G-20 left Toronto this weekend without exploring how to restore trust.

China has further to go in rebalancing its economy. Letting the yuan rise indicates a confidence to step up the process. It also makes a mockery of rich nations demanding that developing ones do all the heavy lifting.

Democrats may try to revive jobless aid bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The demise of Democrats’ jobs-agenda legislation means that unemployment benefits will phase out for more than 200,000 people a week. Governors who had counted on fresh federal aid will now have to consider more budget cuts, tax increases and layoffs of state workers.

Democratic officials said the House may try to revive the long-stalled jobless aid bill next week as a stand-alone bill shorn of controversial tax and spending provisions that prompted Senate Republicans to filibuster it on Thursday.

But the Senate may not have enough time to clear the measure for President Barack Obama’s desk before leaving Washington for the Fourth of July recess. The impasse has meant that more than 1.2 million people have lost unemployment benefits averaging $300 a week.

The aides required anonymity to speak freely about internal party strategy. Stymied by Republicans, Democrats are at a loss as they struggle to help pump up the economy in the run-up to congressional elections this fall. Senate Democrats cut billions from the bill in an attempt to attract enough Republican votes to overcome a filibuster. But the 57-41 vote Thursday fell three votes short of the 60 required to crack a GOP filibuster.

“Democrats have given Republicans every chance to say ‘yes’ to this bill and support economic recovery for our middle class,” said Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev. “But they made a choice to say ‘no’ yet again.”

President Barack Obama will keep pressing Congress to pass the bill, his spokesman said. But Democrats haven’t shown they can come up with the votes.

That’s leading Democrats to consider breaking the jobless aid measure from the catchall bill and try to pass it as a stand-alone $33 billion measure next week before leaving Washington for a weeklong Independence Day recess.

Former VP Cheney hospitalized

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was not immediately clear whether Cheney’s health concern was related to his previous heart troubles. He sustained his last heart attack, deemed a mild one, in February.

Cheney was not feeling well on Friday and went to see his doctors at George Washington University.

On their advice, he was admitted to the hospital for further testing.

Teen shot by Border Patrol had smuggling arrests

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — A 15-year-old Mexican boy shot and killed by a U.S. Border Patrol agent was among El Paso’s most wanted juvenile immigrant smugglers, according to federal arrest records reviewed by The Associated Press.

The records show Sergio Adrian Hernandez Huereca had been arrested at least four times since 2008 and twice in the same week in February 2009 on suspicion of smuggling illegal immigrants across the U.S.-Mexico border. Hernandez was repeatedly arrested along the U.S. side of the border near downtown El Paso, not far from where he was killed, but was never charged with a crime by federal prosecutors.

A Border Patrol agent shot and killed Hernandez June 7 while trying to arrest illegal immigrants crossing the muddy bed of the Rio Grande. Some witnesses said a group of people on the Mexican side were throwing rocks at the agents. Agents are generally permitted to use lethal force against rock throwers.

The records show that in at least one case Hernandez was to be paid $50 a person for smuggling four people into the U.S.

The records also show that in one case, federal prosecutors declined to charge Hernandez because there were no “extenuating circumstances or endangerment.”

Obama claims victory in financial overhaul deal

Legislation redefines federal oversight in financial industry

By Jim Kuhnhen
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The toughest financial regulations since the Great Depression are headed for final votes in Congress next week, covering everything from debit card swipes at Starbucks to the most complex securities, in an election-year salve for public anger over the Wall Street risk-taking that cost millions their jobs, homes and nest eggs.

House and Senate negotiators reached an agreement early Friday morning on legislation that redefines federal oversight of the financial industry and, following the signing of the health care act in March, adds another milestone to mark the Obama presidency. President Barack Obama declared victory Friday after congressional negotiators reached agreement on a sweeping overhaul of rules overseeing Wall Street.

The legislation touches on an exhaustive range of financial transactions, from a debit card swipe at a supermarket to the most complex securities deals cut in downtown Manhattan. Obama said the bill, forged in the aftermath of the 2008 financial meltdown, represents the toughest est financial overhaul since the Great Depression.

“We’ve all seen what happens when there is inadequate oversight and insufficient transparency on Wall Street,” he said. “The reforms working their way through Congress will hold Wall Street accountable so we can help prevent another financial crisis like the one that we’re still recovering from.”

The bill would set up a warning system for financial risks, create a powerful consumer financial protection bureau to police lending, force large failing firms to liquidate and set new rules for financial instruments that have been largely unregulated.

In its breadth, the legislation would affect working class homebuyers negotiating their first mortgage as well as international finance ministers negotiating international regulatory regimes.

The bill came together in during a time of high unemployment for American workers, huge bonuses for bankers and rising antipathy toward bank bailouts.

Jim Dunigan, managing executive of investments for PNC Wealth Management in Philadelphia, said investors are relieved that they now know what the bill will look like. “It clears the playing field a little bit so at least you know what you’re up against and you can start to plan around that. The no man’s land that they were in while they were crafting the final bill left too much uncertainty,” Dunigan said.

As temps rise, so do plant sales

BLAIR KOCH/For the Times-News

Tamara Lierman, of Filer, shops inside the greenhouse set up with flowers and vegetable plants at Ridley’s Family Market in Buhl. Like many shoppers, Lierman is behind on her flower and garden and looking to buy now that the weather is nice.

Early season weather has vendors nervous

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — A green mini-van pulls around the front of a greenhouse set up in the Ridley’s Family Market parking lot in Buhl. The driver cranes her neck, looking at the variety of plants and blooms inside.

After parking, she makes a beeline to the store and doesn’t purchase any plants.

“I’ve already put my garden in, only to have it sapped by frost. I can’t afford to plant it again, but I can’t help looking,” said Heather Carrillo.

Late frost has burned on-time gardeners and ongoing chilly weather has effected sales at stores across the valley. As the weather improves, so have sales and vendors hope that customers, now ready to plant, will make up for the early season slump.

“It’s been kind of slow,” said Chris Caldwell, assistant manager. He recently transferred to the Buhl

Ridley’s location from Gooding and said the story was much the same. “The weather just hasn’t helped us out.”

Inside the store’s greenhouse, Filer resident Tamara Lierman considers picking up a few more bedding flowers.

“I’m way behind. What I bought earlier in the year, sat and sat and sat before I could finally put it in,” Lierman said. “What I’m doing now should have been done a month ago.”

Although sales have sapped both shoppers and stores, Lierman said she hasn’t seen any great sales to take advantage of.

“I haven’t found a lot of clearance,” she said.

This is the first season the Olsen Greenhouse Garden company has resorted to discounted surplus plants in an attempt to move product, said Sales Representative Lisa Eisenstat. The company is one of several vendors stocking area stores, including Home Depot in Twin Falls.

“It has been a tough, tough season,” Eisenstat said. “We’re writing off losses and offering discounts. We’ve never, ever done that before.”

In May, Olsen sales through Home Depot were down 26 percent. Sales recovered in June, which were even over last year.

Customers looking to get more bang for their buck, and longevity from their plants, have chosen perennials over annual or vegetable plants.

However, at the Gooding King’s Discount Store, sales have been surprisingly steady, said Manager Travis Hawkins.

“May was slow, we were way down,” Hawkins said. “But surprisingly, we’ve done better than last year. We have more stock remaining than we usually do at this time of year but that’s because we ordered more.”

Idaho Power wants energy efficiency expense declared ‘prudent’

Times-News

The Idaho Power Company wants to recover its nearly $51 million investment in energy efficiency programs that it financed during 2008 and 2009.

The company asked state regulators this week to declare that $50.7 million spent on energy efficiency and demand response programs funded by a rider on customer bills was “prudently incurred.” A declaration of prudence by the Idaho Public Utilities Commission means the company can recover its investment in the programs.

The rider funds 16 energy efficiency programs and three demand-response programs. Energy efficiency programs reduce consumption by encouraging more efficient use of electricity. Demand-side programs reduce demand on the utility’s system, primarily by shifting use of electricity, such as that from air conditioning and irrigation, to non-peak hours of the day when fewer people are using electricity.

The energy saved by the energy efficiency programs increased by 62 percent from 2007 to 2009, according to Idaho Power. Idaho Power reports the three demand-response programs reduced the company’s total electrical load by 48 megawatts in 2007, 61 MWs in 2008 and 218 MWs in 2009. A megawatt is one million watts, enough electricity to power about 650 average homes.

Idaho Power officials said the company invested about $21 million in demand-side management programs in 2008, of which $18.8 million came from the customer rider. In 2009, it invested $35 million in DSM-related activities of which $31.8 million came from the rider.

Company officials said all but one of the programs passed three cost-effectiveness tests that demonstrate customers would have paid more had the programs not been in place — the only exception was a holiday lighting program which, due mostly to its small participation rate and the incremental costs of LED bulbs, failed one of the three cost-effectiveness tests.

The commission has set a July 9 deadline for interested parties who may want to intervene in this case for the purpose of presenting testimony, cross-examining witnesses or participating in settlement discussions.

Gondola to start at Bald Mountain

KETCHUM — Sun Valley Resort in central Idaho plans to start running its gondola on Bald Mountain on Saturday for the summer tourist season.

The gondola carries passengers 2,000 feet to the resort’s Roundhouse restaurant midway up the mountain. From there, passengers can get on a chair lift to go to the top of the 9,151-foot mountain.

Costs range from $10 for children to $20 for adults.

All-day passes add $5.

Zions bank to hold farewell for manager

Antitrust lawsuit filed against potato groups

The Associated Press

BOISE — An antitrust lawsuit contending Idaho potato growers and others conspired to raise potato prices in the United States by controlling supply has been filed in federal court in Pocatello.

The action, filed last week on behalf of a New York produce wholesaler, asks the court to rule it a class-action lawsuit and award plaintiffs triple their damages, though no dollar figure was specified.

“Classic cartel behavior” is how the lawsuit describes the defendants’ actions: “Each defendant knew that it could not fix prices by itself and the supply could only be restrained by collective action.”

Among the 24 defendants are the United Potato Growers of America and the United Potato Growers of Idaho.

Barb Shelley, spokeswoman for the United Potato Growers of America, said the cooperatives are made up of farmers who are not breaking the law because of the Capper-Volstead Act of 1922, which exempts agricultural cooperatives from antitrust regulations under some circumstances.

“We view (the complaint) as an attack on our potato farmers who work every day to grow potatoes and to provide the country with an adequate supply of potatoes at a fair price,” Shelley told the Idaho Statesman.

She said the group represents about 60 percent to 70 percent of the nation’s fresh potato growers with members from Florida to Alaska.

The lawsuit claims the groups are not protected by the act.

“We have a dozen reasons they are violating the act,” lead attorney James Pizzirusso said.

Prince Harry starts U.S. trip with a bang at West Point

By Michael Hill
Associated Press writer

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Prince Harry showed he knows his way around a rifle as he joined cadets in training at the storied military grounds Friday at the start of his three-day visit to New York.

Harry, third in line to the British throne, arrived by helicopter just after 1:30 p.m., uniformed in camouflage. He hopped on the back of a Humvee, swapped his light blue beret for a helmet and headed out for live-fire exercises on the firing range and field exercises in nearby woods.

Harry, who served in Afghanistan in 2008, fired an M4 rifle along with a team of West Point cadets involved in a firing range training exercise. He and the cadets shot at pop-up silhouette targets anywhere from 50 to 300 meters away.

Crouched in the gravel and then later lying down, Harry had to hit the "enemy" targets but refrain from shooting at the yellow-banded "friendlies." Col. Casey Haskins said he did quite well, hitting multiple targets.

"He clearly knows what he's doing," Haskins said. "He clearly knows how to shoot. He clearly knows how to move."

Prince Harry later shadowed a group of cadets through heavy woods in a combat exercise but did not participate.

He was met upon his arrival at West Point by Superintendent Lt. Gen.

Britain's Prince Harry waits on the deck of the USS Intrepid before giving a speech during his visit to New York, Friday.

Franklin L. "Buster" Hagenbeck and others. Cadets presented Harry with a ceremonial saber before he flew back to New York City a few hours later.

The prince changed into a dark suit for a reception for British and American veterans and their families at the Intrepid Sea Air and Space Museum.

Harry said it was "a bit of a 'pinch yourself' moment" to stand on the flight deck of the Intrepid, a historic aircraft carrier docked on Manhattan's West Side.

He said that American and British forces "have fought shoulder to shoulder for a hundred years to safeguard the ideals and values our countries share."

But Harry said the two countries must forge stronger links between their military veterans.

"We in Britain can learn from the American culture of charity, and from the great pioneering work in the fields of care, prosthetics and rehabilitation of your universities, hospitals and other organizations," he said. "In turn, I hope we can offer some inspiring examples of our own."

Harry attended the Royal Military Academy at Sandhurst and is a lieutenant in the British Army. His service in Afghanistan as a battlefield air controller continued until a media leak cut his time short.

He has made no secret of his desire to return to the front lines, and the decision last month by British Army commanders to train him as an Apache attack helicopter pilot could make that more likely.

Harry did not speak to roughly three dozen British and U.S. reporters following him at West Point. But cadets said he talked to them about his experience in Afghanistan and the differences between the academy and Sandhurst.

"He seems like a really down-to-earth guy," said Cadet Kristen Griest of Orange, Conn.

Harry will throw out a first pitch at a Mets baseball game against the Minnesota Twins today and take part in a UNICEF event.

Woman on oxygen dies after power cut to home

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A woman who needed powered oxygen equipment to breathe died after she did not pay the power bill and a utility shut off her electricity, police said Friday. State officials were investigating whether any regulations were broken.

Kay Phaneuf, 53, died Thursday at Caritas Holy Family Hospital in Methuen, Mass. She had been in critical condition since her husband found her unconscious Monday about an hour after power was cut to their home in Salem.

"She can't survive without it," Salem Police Capt. Shawn Patten said of the oxygen equipment. "They cut the power to the house, the power to whatever machine she had went out, and that was it."

There was a backup battery on the machine, but it had not been activated, he said. Such devices often have alarms indicating when power is cut, but it wasn't clear whether Phaneuf's had one.

The electricity bill hadn't been paid, Patten said, but state regulations require written notice to be given two weeks before a shutoff.

Does free will mean we are responsible for all our actions?

McClatchy Newspapers

ADAM AND EVE EXERCISED FREE WILL

Pastor Raymond Davis Jr., Greater Corinthian Church of the Christ: Amid the debates regarding free will in human beings, Bible/Scripture must be our source of reference for understanding.

First, free will is an exercise of daily living. It permeates our personality. We live in consequence of our actions and decisions because we are created moral creatures.

Originally, free will was discussed and conclusions drawn about it with respect to man's resolve toward God. So the question that must be laid alongside our immediate question is — to what extent does human sin affect free will?

Genesis 3 is an explanation of what is known as the original sin — Adam and Eve's willful rejection of God's command. They chose not to obey, thus relieving themselves of being under the perfect authority of their creator; they became creatures of consequence based on their own choosing.

And finally, free will becomes problematic under the heading of man's relationship with God — to do good or to do evil (Romans 7:14-25). Man wrestles with having free will toward God with good resolve. We live with a God-given sense of free will.

Therefore, inside or outside Eden, in the church or outside the church, under law or under grace, saved or unsaved, we are God's children of consequence. As such we are responsible and accountable for our actions.

EACH OF US HAS A RANGE OF CHOICES

Lama Chuck Stanford, Rime Buddhist Center & Monastery: Free will, sometimes referred to as self-determinism, implies that the choices we make are up to us. The opposite of free will is "determinism," which is the theory that all human actions are caused entirely by preceding events or by outsid causes such as by God or the devil.

Of course we are responsible for all of our actions. If we aren't responsible, then who is? Most religions and even governments believe that each of us has free will and is responsible for our actions.

In the Buddhist faith we believe in a doctrine known as "karma." Karma is simply defined as cause and effect. For every action we make there is a result either in this lifetime or in a future lifetime.

The Buddha said: "Wholesome actions produce wholesome results. Unwholesome actions produce unwholesome results." So, if our actions are kind, compassionate and helpful to others, then the result will likewise be pleasant. If our actions are mean, nasty and unkind to others, then the result will probably be one that we don't like.

Each of us has choices to make every day. However, these choices are not completely independent of past causes and conditions. So while we are free to choose, our choices are conditioned by our past. The further along you are on the spiritual path, the more you realize the range of your choices.

Filer church pastor retires

By John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

FILER — The Rev. Gary Benedix and his wife, Vicki, have shared the gospel message with people in different parts of the world for more than four decades.

On Sunday, Benedix will deliver his last sermon as pastor of Peace Lutheran Church in Filer. The couple is retiring to spend time with family and minister to the needs of a small church in Nevada.

"We've been serving this particular congregation for 30 years and it's a mix of people who live up to their name," Benedix said. "That doesn't mean there isn't work left to do, but it's probably time for somebody younger and with some different abilities."

Born in the small town of Escalon, Calif., Benedix was raised on the family farm and introduced to the Christian faith. During those early years a bout of hepatitis and the birth of a severely disabled brother began nurturing within him the idea of going into the ministry.

"As a 10-year-old, I saw both of these as tests of my faith," he said. "I can't say they didn't help make me who I am, but what I thought was a development of faith turns out to be just a need to help my family with the pain of what this little boy was bringing to the household."

It wasn't until after he graduated high school and entered Concordia College in Oakland,

Help celebrate

A retirement celebration for Rev. Gary and Vicki Benedix will begin with a 9 a.m. Sunday worship service at Filer Peace Lutheran Church, 600 Stevens St. A potluck lunch is scheduled at 11 a.m. in the fellowship hall. The program will include sharing memories of the couple's ministry years, as well as some special presentations.

Calif., that a solid understanding of faith, the message of Scripture and the importance of presenting a servant's attitude toward God started forming.

"I'd heard the word gospel but hadn't really grasped it," he said. "The central thing about being a Christian pastor was understanding not what I can do, but what God did for humankind in Jesus Christ. That was the turning point in my faith and ministry."

While still in high school Benedix met the young woman who would be his soul mate and ministry partner, Vicki Dalander, at a summer baseball game.

"German and Swedish Lutherans didn't usually associate back then, but I was friends with Gary's sister and went over to their house one evening," Vicki Benedix said. "I made everybody laugh and his father says, 'bring that girl back, we like her!'"

After Benedix completed a philosophy degree from Concordia Senior College in Fort Wayne, Ind., the couple married and moved to St. Louis where he graduated from Concordia Seminary in 1968 and was selected to serve as a missionary to the Philippines.

"I had been active in agriculture and FFA (Future Farmers of America) in high school and wanted to be an agricultural missionary but kind of lost track of that as I prepared for the ministry," Benedix said. "That all came back to me about six months before graduating seminary."

The couple, with their 3-month-old daughter, accepted the five-year call and settled in Guinzadan, a grass hut village without electricity or running water in the mountains about 220 miles northeast of Manila. From there, Benedix would drive or hike to former head-hunting villages training lay church leaders. While serving on their mission a son and second daughter were born to the family.

"There had been two other missionaries before me and, for the most part, people were

Embracing the love of Amma, 'the Hugging Saint'

By Kurt Streeter
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Globalization is good and necessary, whispers the guru, her arms circling yet another stranger, her words translated into English by an attendee. "But at the same time, families are disintegrating, people are becoming isolated islands, there is no communication... there is no love."

So says Amma, the Indian-born spiritual leader who over the last two decades has gained an international name for her simple insight and her signature public act. Amma — full name Mata Amritanandamayi, age 56 — is known as "the Hugging Saint."

In Los Angeles last week,

GENARO MOLINA/Los Angeles Times

thousands of devotees bilowed through a windowless conference room at the Hilton Los Angeles Airport to see her. Mostly, they had one goal: During the guru's annual sojourn to Southern California they hoped to disappear for a short while into her embrace.

With this, they hope, will flow a touch of enlightenment and a great deal of what she says is the salve for the world's problems: love.

"She is simply the essence, the embodiment, of compassion," said Roy Strassman, wiping sweat from his forehead. "Just to touch her ... wow!"

Though not physically imposing — Amma is short, round and wide-hipped — in a room full of adoration she is a blunt instrument. When she walked into the conference room last week, on Monday morning, surrounded by a gaggle of assistants and dressed in her trademark white sari, all it took was a smile and a wave for a collective gasp of awe to ripple through the hall.

Sitting in a chair at the front of the room, she was soon at work. Indian chanting filled the room. Men, women and children arranged themselves in tidy rows and slowly made their way to her chair. As she gave out her hugs, some cried, some laughed, some shook and could hardly say a word as she softly prayed in her native Malayalam. It is the language spoken in the southern Indian state where she was born and now runs an ashram, a hospital, a university and a charity organization that reports having built 6,200 homes for victims of the tsunami that devastated part of India in 2004.

"In all of history, no spiritual master has had this kind of following, so many people from all over the world," said Suresh Nair, a moist-eyed engineering student at the University of California-Riverside who said he began following Amma when he lived in India. "Well, maybe Christ" had such a following, he conceded.

Amma is part of a small clutch of Indian spiritual masters who, over the last two decades, have found increasing popularity in the United States and other Western countries.

"She represents the third wave of Indian gurus to come to this country and establish themselves," said Karen Pechilis, a professor of Asian religions at Drew University in New Jersey.

California man accuses Catholic church of fraud

By Gillian Flaccus
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — The 20-year-old college student was working as a youth minister with the Archdiocese of Los Angeles when he revealed a long-buried secret to church authorities: He had been molested by a priest for several years, beginning when the cleric was first a youth minister and then a seminarian.

The young man met with church officials, who promised the priest would never work around children again.

Sixteen years later, the man — now a father of two — typed the Rev. Jeffrey Newell's name into a computer and was stunned by the results: Newell was still a priest, serving in the Diocese of Tijuana. His MySpace page lists a half-dozen teenage boys as his friends and includes pictures of Newell in his priest's collar.

That discovery led to a lawsuit filed Tuesday against the Los Angeles archdiocese alleging that church leaders engaged in fraud and negligence by allowing Newell to continue serving as a priest long after his alleged crimes were reported.

The lawsuit is the second to be filed in California in recent months that uses fraud — and not molestation or sexual battery — as the basis for litigation over alleged sex abuse, and more are expected. Dozens are already working their way through the legal system in several other states, including about 20 fraud cases filed in Minnesota in the past year.

Church attorneys in California have submitted court papers calling the theory fatally flawed, and a Fresno County judge will soon consider if a case there, filed in April, passes legal muster in California.

If it survives, suing for fraud could be another avenue for California clergy sex abuse victims who failed to take advantage of a one-year grace period that allowed them to sue after the deadline for a lawsuit had expired.

The alleged California victim, referred to only as Joseph Doe in the lawsuit, says he was duped into not suing earlier because he believed the archdiocese had removed Newell.

"I thought the archdiocese would handle it. I was 20, 21 years old and here I was going up as high as I thought I could go," said the man, who requested anonymity because he is a sexual assault victim and is concerned about his reputation as an administrator at a private Christian school. The Associated Press does not name alleged victims of sexual abuse.

A 2008 letter from a church attorney to law enforcement indicates Newell was ordained in 1990, a year before the alleged victim reported the abuse, and removed from the Los Angeles archdiocese in 1993 for unrelated reasons. The letter lists possible contact information for him in the Diocese of Tijuana.

On Wednesday, church spokesman Tod Tamberg said Newell was removed for "not complying with a treatment program for personal issues including obesity and alcohol" and engaging in "sexual misconduct with an adult." He did not elaborate.

Newell, 48, now ministers in a working-class neighborhood in Tijuana and holds a daily evening Mass with drums and electric bass that is broadcast live through the parish website. Young parishioners interviewed there said they think highly of "Padre Jeff," who runs a teen community group every week, holds a radio show for Catholic teens and takes groups of children on sleepovers to a church-owned ranch. There is no evidence of abuse allegations in Mexico.

When approached by an Associated Press reporter, Newell said the Tijuana archdiocese told him not to comment. But he did say he had done nothing wrong in Mexico.

"I've lived a chaste life for the past 20 years, 17 years in this community," he said.

Until now, the church has been immune to old sex claims not filed within the one-year window — but that could change if these new lawsuits survive legal challenges, said Anthony DeMarco, a plaintiff's attorney in Los Angeles. The claims could also be a financial pitfall for the Roman Catholic church in California.

MISSIONARIES

Elder Drew Davis has returned from serving a mission for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the Michigan Detroit Mission.

Davis is the son of Alan and Geana Davis of Twin Falls. He plans to continue his education in the fall at the College of Southern Idaho.

Vatican 'astonished' at Belgian police raid

By Alessandra Rizzo
Associated Press writer

VATICAN CITY — The Vatican said Friday it was astonished and outraged that Belgian police investigating priestly sex abuse had conducted raids that also targeted the graves of two archbishops.

The Vatican summoned the Belgian ambassador to the Holy See to convey its anger over the raids, which also included the home and offices of the retired archbishop of Belgium. The ambassador was called in for a meeting with the Vatican's foreign minister.

In a statement, the Vatican said any sinful and criminal abuse of minors from members of the church must be condemned and repeated that there is a need for justice and amends.

But it added, "The Secretariat of State also expresses astonishment at the way in which the search took place." It expressed "outrage over the violation of the tombs."

On Thursday, police raided the home and former office of former Archbishop Godfried Danneels, taking documents and Danneels' personal computer. Police and prosecutors did not say if Danneels was suspected of abuse himself or simply had records pertaining to allegations against another person. He was not questioned.

Investigators also opened the graves of archbishops in the St. Rombouts Cathedral in Mechlin, north of Brussels, looking for possibly incriminating documents, said Jean-Marc Meilleur, spokesman for the Brussels public prosecutor.

Archbishop Andre-Joseph Leonard, Belgium's current archbishop, condemned the search of the cathedral, saying that is stuff for "crime novels and 'The Da Vinci Code.'"

Separately, police seized the records of an independent panel investigating sexual abuse by priests, some 500 cases in all. The victims are mostly men now in their 60s and 70s.

This also drew the condemnation of the Vatican, which said it regretted the violation of the confidentiality due the victims of child abuse.

The Brussels prosecutor's office said the raids followed recent statements to police related to the sexual abuse of children within the church.

It was the latest development in a sex abuse scandal that has shaken the Roman Catholic Church in Europe and beyond for months.

Reports of rape and other sexual abuse of minors in seminars, schools and other church-run institutions have piled up. Victims have come forward accusing priests of abuse and bishops of covering up crimes in order to safeguard the church's name.

News of the Belgian raid was welcomed by the U.S. victims group SNAP, the Survivors Network of those Abused by Priests.

In a statement released late Thursday, it said: "This raid is precisely what's needed, not just in Belgium but in other church offices across the globe." It urged police and prosecutors to "use their full powers to gain access to and control over church records that likely document the crimes and cover ups."

accepting," Benedix said. "I think all pastors should spend a couple of years in the foreign mission field sharing Christ with other countries and learning from them."

Returning to the states in 1973, the couple submitted a resignation to the church mission board and accepted a call to serve at Trinity Lutheran Church in Eden.

"They were salt-of-the-earth people willing to try different things in the four years we were there, including an evangelism program or building a gymnasium and bell tower," Benedix said. "But at the same time, it was hard because we were trying to get re-acclimated to America and were isolated in the country."

After leaving the Eden congregation they moved to Coronado, Calif., and joined a Lutheran Baja social services mission project moving supplies in towns along the U.S.-Mexico border.

"The job was as the project's assistant director with the idea that I would become the new director," he said. "But that all fell apart because of personality conflicts and the project running out of money."

A short time later, they received the call from Peace Lutheran Church congregation for a pastor.

"They were willing to support a pastor, support a wife who supported him and give us a good life," Vicki Benedix said. "This congregation is more interested in regular church attendance, administering the sacraments, preaching the gospel and visiting the sick than holding onto the old exclusivity you see in some churches."

Part of Peace Lutheran's own mission outreach has been to support the small congregation of Hope Lutheran in Jackpot, Nev. Over the years church numbers have fluctuated from a high of around 28 people to a low of three. Benedix plans to continue as the congregation's interim pastor.

"I'm comfortable around non-traditional Missouri Synod Lutherans and I think that comes out of our time as missionaries in the Philippines and Mexico," he said. "We can adapt to a situation much better or faster than if we'd been in a parish our whole life. These people probably won't show up at one of my services but I can just go into the clubs and find people to talk to, that's my calling."

Hugging

The first wave came in the late 1800s, Pechilis said. The second, in the 1960s, was typified by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, the controversial guru followed briefly by the Beatles.

The third wave, though, is composed largely of women who are trying to distance themselves from the old scandals while placing a stronger emphasis on charity work. They include leaders such as Mother Meera, known for communicating her intentions with a look into the eyes, and Gurumayi Chidvilasananda, who believers say can transmit enlightening energy through a television.

Pechilis said Amma's dashan, her hallmark embrace, bumps against deeply rooted Indian cultural views. "She's distinctive because she has such an emphasis on physical contact," Pechilis said, adding that Indian culture is not typically tolerant of the sight of men and women touching in public, particularly if an embrace comes from a woman such as Amma, a villager born into a low caste.

Female gurus, Pechilis said, "want to pursue the universal, not be tied to accidents of history" like the Indian caste system. Moreover, there is less emphasis "on some of the Hindu inspired teachings and more emphasis on making the message approachable" to a wider audience.

Finally, on Tuesday, after she had taken time to answer questions it was time to experience an embrace.

Amma's hands clasped my neck. She planted my head into her upper chest and held so tight that no movement was possible. She clasped the back of my head and stroked my hair. She scattered flower petals atop my head and it was over.

Right where we want them

According to one report, the last words of Gen. George Armstrong Custer before he fell at the Battle of Little Big Horn (often referred to as “Custer’s Last Stand”) on June 25, 1876, were these: “Hurrah, boys! We’ve got them! We’ll finish them up and then go home to our station!”

Don’t ask me how we know this. The only people who could have possibly heard him speak his last words were Sioux warriors, who likely weren’t jotting down notes on what the white guy in the fancy uniform was saying. Or else they were Custer’s soldiers, which means they were — you know — dead. So I’m not going to vouch for the authenticity of this report.

Still, it’s a good story. You have to love the relentless — borderline ridiculous — optimism found in those words. Overwhelmingly outnumbered and with bullets and arrows flying all around, Custer tries to rally his rapidly diminishing troops with a cheer and a declaration that things are actually going well and that they should be home in time for supper.

And then he died. But that’s beside the point.

My Dad was always optimistic like that. When he was a senior in high school he was the favorite to win the state track and field title in the hurdles. Years of carrying 50-pound sacks of flour up and down the stairs at his father’s flour mill had given him strong legs and boundless energy for — well — bounding. He was fast, he was strong and he had red hair. As far as Dad was concerned, that made him pretty much unbeatable.

The day of the state championships, Dad’s coach approached him and asked him how he’d feel about running in an additional event that day. The school’s 100-yard dash man was ill, and the coach didn’t want to just lose those points toward the team championship.

Dad knew he’d be going against a great sprinter from the southern part of the state. This kid had never been beaten; he was the two-time defending state 100-yard dash champion. So it wasn’t like the coach was expecting first-place points for the team anyway. “I don’t expect you to win,” the coach said, “but it would be great if you could at least finish high enough to score some points for the team.”

“I’ll score points,” Dad said, flashing his best we’ve-got-them-right-where-we-want-them smile. “Just make sure there’s room in the trophy case for another first-place trophy!”

VALUE
SPEAK

Joseph Walker

The coach had to like Dad’s bravado. But he also wanted him to be realistic.

“Bud,” he said, “you know this guy has never lost a race, don’t you?”

Dad shrugged.

“What I know,” he said, “is that he’s never raced me.”

Dad took that attitude with him to the starting line, where — as fate would have it — he lined up right next to the undefeated, two-time defending state champion. At the crack of the starter’s pistol, the champ sprinted out to a quick, seemingly insurmountable lead, and Dad stumbled out of the blocks in eighth place. He never was a quick starter, not even in the hurdles. But he had those long, strong legs and a heart that didn’t know how to quit. By the halfway point Dad had churned his way to second place, and he was closing the gap on first. In his mind he had that sprinter right where he wanted him. Dad surged past his unbeatable opponent at the finish line to claim the state 100-yard dash title.

And then, an hour later, he went out and lost his hurdle race.

But that’s beside the point.

More often than not, an awkward start by an inexperienced sprinter will lead to defeat at the hands — or feet — of an undefeated state champion, just like being impossibly outnumbered on the battle field will usually end in a Last Stand for the outnumbered-ees.

It’s that way in almost every aspect of our lives. We occasionally find ourselves in hopeless situations, with the odds stacked against us and conquest clearly in sight. At that point, it seems to me, it’s all about attitude. If you give up, you’re done. Which is OK, I guess — I mean, you’re probably done anyway, right? But if you refuse to “go gently into that good night,” and instead say to yourself, “We’ve got them right where we want them,” and you move ahead confidently in the face of — well — whatever, who knows? You may get scalped. Or you may end up with a gold medal around your neck. The only thing that matters is that you don’t surrender, and that you try.

And that is precisely the point.

Teenage seminarians explore theology, vocation

By Dan Linehan
The Free Press

MANKATO, Minn. — For 10 months a year, 11th-grader Ivan Ruiz doesn’t watch TV, talk on a cell phone or listen to the radio.

When asked why he gives up that — and, of course, certain, um, relationships with girls — the Catholic seminarian says that’s not how he looks at it.

“To the naked eye, it’s Ivan denying himself stuff,” said the Harrisburg, Pa., native.

But those accessories are mere distractions for building a relationship with God.

“You’re giving so little, and getting so much,” he said.

In some ways, Ivan Ruiz and the nine other young men living at the Blessed Jose Sanchez del Rio Minor Seminary in Mankato are like their teenage counterparts on the outside.

They huddle around a foosball table and gently mock each other. They go on outings to sporting events with families who attend SS. Peter and Paul’s Catholic Church.

They use the Internet (with monitoring), go to shop class and put on school plays.

They recently performed an original play, “The Chronicles of Francis Xavier,” about the father of the Jesuit order. The play is about a young man in despair at being poor, lonely and discouraged learns about the similar struggles of the 16th-century mission-ary.

But in other ways they, and their daily lives, are different than other teenagers.

Discouraged is one way to describe how Ruiz felt about the prospect of staying in high school, even catholic high school, considering the environment was very “anti-priesthood.”

All the boys — some are young men, really — who came to this seminary have found a safer place to explore their theology, and their vocation.

They live in individual rooms and attend classes taught by church members or Loyola teachers using a home-school curriculum for 7th- through 12th-graders. The seminary has a kitchen and a chapel and is basically a self-contained mini campus.

“Life in the seminary is very busy,” said Father Mariano Varela.

They are all on a path toward their order’s “major,” or post-high school, seminary in Washington, D.C., and eventual priesthood. But they still have a choice. The process of choosing whether or not to be priests is called “discernment,” and the high school seminary is very much a testing ground to see if the priesthood is right for them.

Etched crosses, letters in N.M. might be from Spanish explorers in 1580s

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Newly found inscriptions depicting Christian crosses and letters etched in stone have been discovered north of the Sandia Mountains — possibly the work of a Spanish expedition that visited New Mexico in the 1580s.

Albuquerque historian and author Mike Smith said he found the etchings this month while exploring a rocky, desert area east of the Rio Grande.

New Mexico’s state historian, Rick Hendricks, plans to examine the inscriptions to verify their origins.

Smith said the style of the inscriptions, as well as the weathering they show, suggest the carvings were made by Spaniards who visited New Mexico four decades after Francisco Vasquez de Coronado explored the region in the 1540s.

Smith found florid lettering that appears to spell the name “Santa Maria.” Smith said he believes the inscription was made by Juan de Santa Maria, who was one of three Franciscan priests who participated in a small expedition to New Mexico in 1581 and 1582.

If Smith’s claim is confirmed, the find would pre-date New Mexico’s oldest known Spanish inscriptions, which were made around 1605 during one of Juan de Onate’s expeditions.

One month left in census count

By Judy Albertson
Times-News writer

BURLEY — It's not too late to make the census count for Cassia and Minidoka counties.

Stacy McBain, a U.S. Census Bureau media specialist, said census counters nationally are beginning to cut back on door-to-door visits and those who think they have not been contacted should make an effort to be included.

People who have not been counted in the 2010 Census, have not received a form/questionnaire or have not been visited by a census taker still have one last opportunity to be counted by calling 866-872-6868 before July 30 and taking the census over the phone,

| Census participation | | | |

McBain said.

"People need to remember that the census count brings federal dollars into their community, $1,400 per person per year for the next 10 years. If you have not been counted, please make that call now," she said.

Locally, the 2010 Census door-knocking operation is complete ahead of schedule. The operation was slotted to run though mid-July, aimed at counting all the households who had not already mailed back their 10-question form.

McBain said that the response to the census in this area was satisfactory.

"In general people were cooperative," she said. "I think they understood that the census people were their neighbors."

"The projection rate was good for us. We did better than expected."

Response in Idaho was up from the 2000 survey, McBain said, though statistics still show no change in statewide response rates from a decade ago.

"Fortunately, three out of four Idahoans mailed it back this year."

Drivers must yield when entering interstate

Q : Could you please clarify the traffic rules on entering the freeway? I thought that while on the on-ramp you should speed up to the speed of traffic you are merging with, but there are some people who enter the freeway at lower speeds and then gradually increase their speed over the next mile or so. This causes a lot of congestion.

A : The rule is from NASCAR and it is to drive the other vehicle into the wall if they crowd you. Now before anybody gets into a crash and blames my advice you should know by now that this is what we call "cop humor," not the truth.

The true answer is any vehicle entering the freeway must yield to the freeway traffic. That could mean stopping if necessary if there wasn't a chance of getting onto the freeway without avoiding a collision. If the vehicle switches to the outside lane to let you in, that is what we in law enforcement call a "nice person". The vehicle already on the interstate is not required to yield to the vehicle entering the highway; it is the other way around.

I know some of you are saying, "wait a minute" or "that doesn't sound right." Think of it this way. What happens when the vehicle already on the interstate is being passed while coming to the on-ramp area? Does that vehicle have the ability to get out of the way? No, because the passing vehicle blocks it.

If you have the ability to change lanes to avoid a collision and don't and cause a collision, you could be held liable for a majority of the crash repairs for not trying to avoid the collision. The best and cheapest thing to do is be courteous when you drive because most everybody likes a courteous driver.

Q : I had somebody call me in as a reckless driver. The person tailgated me all the way to the place where the police stopped me. The tailgater signed a citation against me for reckless driving. The police would not let me cite that person for tailgating me. What I want to know is if it is OK to break the law to get somebody cited?

A : No, the only people exempt from traffic violations in the course of their jobs are authorized emergency personnel. For example, if you saw a car speeding, that did not give you the right to go over the speed limit to keep up with that car so you could sign the citation. You would probably get to sign two citations in that case.

If the citing party was following you too closely, then you could have cited him or her. You have the right to cite anybody but you must also be able to prove the incident in court. The other issue with this is that if you don't win that court case you could be open to going to civil court when done with the criminal court.

Family struggles with professional man's alcoholism

DEAR DR. GOTT: I simply cannot understand my husband's habitual drinking. I'm embarrassed, ashamed and frustrated, and we're even considering divorce because of it. We are a well-educated couple. He's a professional with a good job.

He promises he will change but those promises have been broken so many times I have lost track. We have three wonderful children who have been damaged because of his habit. I try to help them understand, but they aren't dumb.

He knows right from wrong, so why on Earth can't he see that he is rapidly destroying everyone and everything around him?

I'm backed up against the wall but hopefully not into a corner. Help!

ASK
Dr. Peter Gott

DEAR READER: Alcohol can be a powerful addiction that can have devastating effects on both partners, their children, family and friends. Sadly, the person who needs the help is often the last to understand the complexity of the situation. Beyond that, the quantity of alcohol a person consumes and how often he or she consumes it is not nearly as important as the behavior that can follow and the results it can have on others.

While the disease — and it is a disease — can be hidden or explained in countless ways, invariably it surfaces. Employers tire rapidly of the feeble excuses. The extended lunch hour so an employee can enjoy a couple of "needed" pops often results in unemployment. Missed meals or soccer games and the empty seat at dance recitals affect children more than the alcoholic can begin to imagine. Children become fearful of their friends finding out and tend to withdraw from their friends and family. Spouses make excuses for canceling dinners with family members and acquaintances. It's simply a no-win situation — a powder keg waiting to explode.

I am sure your pleas have fallen on deaf ears, so my recommendations may be difficult to handle. Your family needs help, and that help must start with you. Read your local newspaper to determine the nearest Al-Anon meeting. Don't be embarrassed about attending. Everyone there is in the same boat. What is said there stays there, and you will realize you are not alone with the burden of an alcoholic. You will learn to cope, to find your own path. Your children can attend Alateen meetings to get themselves on the right path, as well. If you are more comfortable, you could start by participating in online or telephone meetings.

When confronted by your partner, and you will likely be verbally accosted, explain that your pleading fell on deaf ears for too long and it was too painful to sit back doing nothing. You were powerless and needed to take a stand. A victim — and that's just what you are — can then ask if his or her husband, wife, partner, son, daughter, parent or friend will consider seeing a counselor, get in-house professional rehabilitation, or attend AA meetings. There are facilities across the country that work in a professional manner with their residents.

An alcoholic is an alcoholic. There is no age limit, no ethnic pattern, no financial guideline, no educational group targeted — only broken promises, frustration and repeated heartbreak. Anyone can fall prey to this ghastly addiction. So there can be no excuses. If your suggestion fails, at least you will have tried your best and you will be stronger for making the effort. If it works, you will both have the ability to mend the relationship. You may feel as if you could create world peace more easily than taking such steps, and that may be just the case. It isn't an easy road, but for the mental health of everyone, it is necessary.

To provide related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Help: Mental Illness and Substance Abuse." N. Idaho lawmaker late on property taxes

BOISE (AP) — A newspaper is reporting that a northern Idaho lawmaker who faces an ethics investigation over unpaid federal and state income taxes has been late on his property taxes since 2002.

Tax records at the Kootenai County treasurer's office, obtained by The Spokesman-Review, show Rep. Phil Hart, R-Athol, owes about $1,000 for the 2009 taxes on his house in the county.

The newspaper reported Friday records show that over the last eight years Hart has been as much as 16 months late on the home's property taxes and has paid about $1,500 in interest and $325 in penalties and fees.

It's unclear whether Hart's property taxes are relevant to the House ethics committee investigation concerning his income taxes.

"Basically what he's doing is he's borrowing money from the county," House Minority Leader John Rusche, D-Lewiston, told the newspaper. "I just don't know what that means, but it's interesting"

Hart faces questions about

a possible conflict of interest involving his fight over unpaid state and federal income taxes and his position on the House Revenue and Taxation Committee.

He faces additional questions over possible misuse of the legislative privilege from arrest and civil process after seeking delays in his income tax disputes during the Legislative session, citing his work as a state lawmaker.

Hart has been hit with nearly $300,000 in tax liens from the Internal Revenue Service in the last year. He also owes the Idaho Tax Commission more than $53,000 in unpaid state income taxes, penalties and interest accrued over several years.

Hart stopped paying income taxes in 1996 when he filed a lawsuit against the IRS contending the tax is unconstitutional, lost in court in 2000 when a federal tax judge in Spokane, Wash., ruled against him, and conceded in 2003 when the U.S. Supreme Court refused to take up the case.

Some Idaho legislators could aim to copy Ariz. immigration law

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — Arizona's sweeping new immigration law doesn't even take effect until next month, but lawmakers in nearly 20 other states are already clamoring to follow in its footsteps.

Gubernatorial candidates in Florida and Minnesota are singing the law's praises, as are some lawmakers in other states far from the Mexico border such as Idaho and Nebraska. But states also are watching legal challenges to the new law, and whether boycotts over it will harm Arizona's economy.

The law, set to take effect July 29, requires police to check the immigration status of anyone they think is in the country illegally. Violators face up to six months in jail and $2,500 in fines, in addition to federal deportation.

Lawmakers or candidates in as many as 18 states say they want to push similar measures when their legislative sessions start up again in 2011.

Arizona-style legislation may have the best chance of passing in Oklahoma, which in 2007 gave police more power to check the immigration status of people they arrest.

Bills similar to the law Arizona's legislature approved in April have already been introduced in

IDAHO GOP PANEL SUPPORTS REFORMS

Grass-roots Republican leaders from across Idaho joined in solidarity with Arizona and its efforts to push immigration reforms. At the Idaho State Republican Party Convention on Friday in Idaho Falls, a committee vetting resolutions criticized the federal government for not enforcing immigration laws and praised Arizona for taking up the cause.

Arizona's law, which takes effect July 29, requires police to check the immigration status of anyone they think is in the country illegally. Violators face up to six months jail and $2,500 in fines. The Idaho convention panel urged the federal government "to protect the states...from foreign invasion." But the panel stopped short of demanding that lawmakers pass a law like Arizona.

More than 400 delegates attending the convention still must vote on the resolution today.

—The Associated Press

Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Minnesota, South Carolina and Michigan, but none will advance this year.

Business, agriculture and civil rights groups oppose such legislation, saying legal residents who are Hispanic would be unjustly harassed and that immigration is a federal rather than a state responsibility. Supporters say police will not stop people solely on the basis of skin color and argue that illegal immigrants are draining state coffers by taking jobs, using public services, fueling gang violence and filling prisons.

"If the feds won't do it, states are saying, 'We're going to have to do it,'" said Idaho state Sen. Monty Pearce. Pearce's second cousin is the author of the Arizona law, Arizona state Sen. Russell Pearce, who like Monty Pearce is a Republican.

The debate is putting pressure on Congress and the Obama administration to act. In 2007, when states like Idaho and Kansas were making English their official languages as part of an immigration-related push, then-President George W. Bush failed to persuade even many Republican allies in the U.S. Senate to agree to combine increased border enforcement with a path to citizenship for illegal immigrants.

President Barack Obama has called Arizona's law irresponsible, but Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer says it helped prompt him to send 1,200 National Guard members to the U.S.-Mexican border, mostly to her state. She and U.S. Sen.

John McCain, R-Ariz., say that's not enough.

McCain, Obama's one-time presidential rival, says the border needs a force approaching the 6,000 soldiers sent by President Bush until 2008.

Obama is asking Congress for $600 million in emergency funds for 1,000 more Border Patrol agents, 160 new federal immigration officers and two unmanned aircraft, but immigration is not at the top of his priorities this year. An Associated Press-GfK poll this month found that 85 percent of people now rank immigration as an important issue, and about half disapprove of how Obama has handled it.

In Florida, Arizona's law is a campaign issue in the GOP gubernatorial primary, with millionaire Rick Scott trumpeting its merits and Attorney General Bill McCollum saying he backs the law but that it's not needed in his state.

Meanwhile, Minnesota gubernatorial candidate Tom Emmer, the presumptive Republican nominee, called Arizona's bill "a wonderful first step."

In Idaho, Monty Pearce cites one county that paid more than $100,000 for medical services for an indigent illegal immigrant. Supporters of a citizen initiative in Nevada say they're motivated by the state budget crisis and record unemployment.

Idaho GOP leans right, 1 measure after another

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

IDAHO FALLS — Measure by measure, delegates to Idaho's 2010 Republican Convention on Friday cemented their place at the head of the nation's stalwart conservatives.

More than three dozen proposals, emerging from separate resolution, rules and party platform committees at this biennial event where the state's dominant party sets its compass for the next two years, still must win approval Saturday when all 508 registered delegates are due to vote on them.

Even if just half survive to become part of the Idaho Republican Party's manifesto, they'll still underscore what's become a political fact of life: Following the 2008 convention in Sandpoint where Ron Paul Republicans made a raucous entry onto the scene, this conservative faction is now established at the tiller of the state GOP's inner circle.

One resolution favors establishing an independent Idaho militia, free of federal tethers.

A platform plank would define marriage as between a "naturally born" man and woman, barring transgender individuals — and going further than a 2006 state constitutional amendment.

Another would make GOP candidates sign a loyalty oath to the party platform — or disclose where they differ.

"Look at the resolutions this year," said Greg Collett, a delegate from Canyon County. "These would not have been passed two years ago."

Again and again, convention committee members from as far north as the Canadian border to the remote, Mormon-dominated mountain-and-lake region of the deep southeast pushed through measures that trumpeted their right-leaning principles.

With them, they carried pocket copies of the U.S. Constitution — and libertarian-leaning Texas congressman Paul's book, "End the Fed" to abolish the U.S. Federal Reserve. One woman's shirt read, "I like being conservative."

They backed measures meant to put their money — or their silver and gold, as it were — where their mouths were. "Let free Idahoans pay taxes, and other fees due to the State, County and City in silver and or gold in any form," read one resolution now awaiting Saturday's vote.

To be sure, there was grumbling among those who in 2008 might have been known as mainstream Republicans, when the Sandpoint convention proved the downfall of then-Chairman Kirk Sullivan, a vaunted fundraiser ousted by lawyer and lobbyist Norm Semanko.

"I don't understand the point of this," said Phil Hardy, an Ada County delegate whose day job is communications adviser to the majority caucus in the Idaho Senate.

But Hardy — again and again — found himself on the losing side.

One conservative delegate said only Ada and Twin Falls counties brought with them to Idaho Falls members of the old-guard Republican establishment.

"Other than those two counties, I'd say conservatives have been successful getting their (delegates) here without a fight," said Larry Spencer, from Bonner County in northern Idaho.

Spencer went further: U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson, due to speak today, "is not much of a Republican," he said.

Simpson has fallen out with hard-core conservatives over his stances on the 2008 Wall Street bailout — he backed it — and a wilderness plan for central Idaho.

Among other resolutions, Idaho residents would send their federal tax payments to the state, which would pay for only mandates covered by the U.S. Constitution. Leftover cash would go back to citizens.

The Legislature should nullify President Obama's health care reforms; Arizona's immigration reforms were cheered; and any federal order declaring carbon dioxide a pollutant would be ignored by Idaho as "junk science."

ONE YEAR AFTER POP STAR'S DEATH Fans around the world honor Michael Jackson

A year after Michael Jackson's death caused a worldwide outpouring of shock, tears and tributes, the anniversary of his passing was being marked Friday on a quieter scale, as fans remembered their fallen King of Pop with vigils, prayer and, of course, music.

The electric, enigmatic and troubled icon died on June 25, 2009, at age 50, as he was preparing for a series of comeback concerts in London. Dr. Conrad Murray is charged with involuntary manslaughter in Jackson's death for administering the powerful anesthetic propofol to Jackson to help the pop star sleep.

At Jackson's final resting place at Forest Lawn in Glendale, Calif., about 500 fans filed past barricades Friday to get close to the mausoleum where Jackson is interred. Some wept, while some carried bouquets; others were armed with cameras to document the moment.

Erick Dominguez, 37, a sales representative from Victorville, Calif., wore a black shirt with Jackson's photo that read: "In Loving Memory."

"He's been my idol all my life since I can remember. I feel like I haven't had closure," he said, starting to weep from behind dark sunglasses.

Yugi Aoki, 33, of Tokyo, came with 13 other Japanese fans. They were all wearing sparkling gloves and fedora hats, one of Jackson's signature looks. Aoki smiled as he described how Jackson influenced him: "Michael Jackson changed myself. We love his dancing and songs."

Members of the Jackson family arrived at the cemetery Friday afternoon, and brother Tito Jackson shook the hands of a few waiting fans.

In Gary, Ind., Jackson's hometown, hundreds of fans began gathering in the afternoon for a tribute at the family home; Jackson's mother, Katherine, was in the city for the event.

Leonia Lowery, 69, a retiree from Chicago, stood against the fence hoping to catch a glimpse of the family matriarch.

"I'm very proud to be here and will be coming here every year because we love him," she said as the King of Pop's music played over loudspeakers set up outside his boyhood home.

In Harlem, pictures of Jackson hung on a wall outside New York's Apollo Theater, where Jackson and his brothers won amateur night in the late 1960s. A sidewalk plaque honored the singer alongside such other legends as James Brown and Smokey Robinson.

Speakers stress catching, caring for concussions

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

Concussions can't be prevented, but they can be better managed.

That was the overarching theme put forth Friday in the morning session of the Sports Medicine Symposium held at the College of Southern Idaho — a seminar designed for coaches, athletic trainers and medical professionals that runs through today.

Friday morning's session was dominated by talk of managing concussions, a sports subject that has dominated headlines — and legislative sessions — with a frequency rivaled perhaps only by the Bowl Championship Series.

"When I played football in high school, you got a sticker on your helmet for the 'hit of the week,' it was encouraged," said Dr. Alex Homaechevarria, a Boise physician who also serves the U.S. Ski Team. "It's on ESPN all the time, and it's part of our culture. I don't think we can change that, but we need to be able to treat (concussion) more properly when it happens."

Homaechevarria, Boise-based Dr. Kurt Nilsson, Dr. David Jensen of Twin Falls and Matt Jaksetic, a certified trainer in the Wood River Valley, each delivered presentations Friday morning.

Nilsson's lecture covered cardiac issues in athletes, though he sat in on a concussion roundtable later in the session.

None of the speakers touched on prevention for concussions, because they are not 100 percent preventable. Instead, they hammered home the importance of thoroughly evaluating athletes before a concussion and proper treatment afterward.

Each speaker emphasized the importance of "return-to-play" guidelines, a several-step progression for a concussed athlete to safely return to the field of play. Each alluded to situations involving mismanagement of concussed players and the tragedy of what's called "second impact syndrome," which can occur when an athlete returns too soon from a concussion and suffers another one.

Many times athletes, particularly football players, refer to a concussion as getting their "bell rung" or getting "dinged." There used to be a lawyer-driven recommendation from the International Conference on Concussion in Sport to classify concussions as simple or complex, Jensen said, but that is no longer the case.

In fact, he likened it to pregnancy in terms of all-or-nothing diagnosis.

"You can't just be a little bit pregnant," Jensen said. "It's just like this; it's not about whether you have a moderate or severe concussion. You have a concussion."

Homaechevarria delivered a bevy of statistics on concussions, including several that may have been surprising.

Concussions only result in a loss of consciousness about 10 percent of the time,

Ambrose celebrates 10th anniversary as event's announcer

By Ryan Howe

BURLEY — Fans taking in the sights, smells and sounds of the Idaho Regatta this weekend are familiar with the roar of race boats thundering around Crow Island on the Snake River.

For the past decade, the sound of Larry Ambrose's deep, authoritative voice has become just as synonymous with the races as the revving of the engines.

Ambrose, of Huntington Beach, Calif., is celebrating his 10th anniversary as the Idaho Regatta announcer. His run is the longest tenure in the race's 35-year history. Of the many races he works around the country, he says Burley ranks among his favorites, partly because of how well the out-of-towners are

Isner loses quickly in second round

By Howard Fendrich

WIMBLEDON, England — There were moments during Andy Roddick's third-round match at Wimbledon when he could have allowed himself to get distracted by frustration.

Indeed, there was a time, not all that long ago, when he probably would have.

"You used to see," said Roddick's coach, Larry Stefanki, "negativity carry over and linger for a few games."

Not anymore. The No. 5-seeded American let the second set slip away against No. 29 Philipp Kohlschreiber of Germany, then quickly regrouped Friday, finishing with 28 aces in a 7-5, 6-7 (5), 6-3, 6-3 victory to reach the second week at the All England Club.

"I've done a good job of not saying a word out there this whole tournament, just going about my business the right way," Roddick said, "so I just tried to play the next point."

Leading 5-4 in the second set, Roddick got to love-40 on Kohlschreiber's serve. But Roddick frittered away all three of those set points, then lost the last three points of the tiebreaker, too. Did he let that bother him? No, he went out and broke to open the third set.

Then, still nursing that lead late in the third, Roddick badly missed a forehand wide, an unforced error he greeted with a growl. But that was it. Instead of losing his focus, he tightened it, winning 15 of the next 16 points. Later, on his first match point, Roddick sprinted forward and dived to try to reach a volley, but netted the shot. Five minutes later, he blew a second match point by

Big one: U.S. meets Ghana in World Cup

U.S. vs. Ghana
12:30 p.m., ABC

RUSTENBURG, South Africa — For other countries, a second-round World Cup match is a big step. For the United States, Saturday's game against Ghana is so much more.

The television audience back home could top the U.S. national team record of 13.7 million, set during the 1994 World Cup loss to Brazil.

With a victory, the Americans would advance to a quarterfinal matchup versus Uruguay or South Korea on July 2 and match the farthest the U.S. team has advanced since the first World Cup in 1930. Confidence is soaring.

"If we continue to build on the successes so far, we can go to the end," coach Bob Bradley said Friday.

The U.S. team made the 2-hour trip Friday northwest from Irene and checked into the Bakubung Bush Lodge, where the bus was blocked by an elephant ahead of the opener against England on June 12. Players have been stoked since Landon Donovan's injury-time goal beat Algeria on Wednesday and lifted them into the knockout phase.

"The way we've been playing, feeling like we've gone undefeated and we've gotten stronger, I think that gives us hope," goalkeeper Tim Howard said.

American sports fans have been focusing on soccer at an unprecedented level. Former President Clinton attended Wednesday's game in Pretoria and chugged a postgame beer with captain Carlos Bocanegra. New Orleans Saints running back Reggie Bush joined the party. Clinton changed his schedule to stick around for the Ghana game.

"People were coming out of the woodworks to celebrate," Bocanegra said.

The Columbus Crew, FC Dallas, New England Revolution and New York Red Bulls of Major League Soccer are among those hosting viewing parties. The Kansas City Royals are setting up televisions around Kauffman Stadium so fans can watch while attending the baseball game against the St. Louis Cardinals.

"You want to have a team that the people who care about ... and follow that team and root for that team and

Eddy Matthews of Bear Lake slides into home as Burley catcher Kody Moon tries to make the tag during the Donnelley Wood Bat Tournament Friday in Burley.

Green Sox open 1-1 at home tournament

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY – The Burley Green Sox are 1-1 after Day 1 of the Donnelley Wood Bat Tournament.

Alex Larson’s RBI triple scored Joe Ferrin in the bottom of the sixth inning to lift Burley to a 3-2 win over Bear Lake.

Later on, Blackfoot beat Burley 10-1.

“We ran out of gas,” said Burley coach Devin Kunz after the defeat.

In the morning win over Bear Lake, however, Burley didn’t have much gas to begin with as it sputtered early.

“It sometimes takes us a while to get going, but once we get going we’re a tough team,” said Burley catcher Kody Moon.

Burley starter Spencer Rice loaded the bases in the first inning and Bear Lake scored two runs on two hits. But Rice settled in after that, allowing just three more harmless base hits.

Ferrin pitched the final 2 2-3 innings in relief, giving up just one hit and one walk.

“Spencer led us off pretty good and Joe came in and did a good job,” said Moon. “(Ferrin) is living low. When Joe trusts his off-speed, he’s tough.”

Jake Mills batted 2-for-2 and the Green Sox scored on Bear Lake throwing errors in the first and fourth.

“An ugly win is better than a pretty loss,” Kunz said. “We’re playing OK, we’re scrapping, but we’ve got to play better. We’ve got to be more aggressive and our bottom part of the order has got to pick it up.”

In other tourney action, Blackfoot is 2-0 after also defeating Idaho Falls, 4-1. Idaho Falls split, with a 19-0 win over Bear Lake.

Further details from Burley’s defeat by Blackfoot were unavailable.

Donnelley action continues today at Burley, culminating in the tournament championship at 6:30 p.m.

Jackson fires no-hitter

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Edwin Jackson overcame a wild start to throw the fourth no-hitter in the season of the pitcher, leading the Arizona Diamondbacks to a 1-0 victory over the Tampa Bay Rays on Friday night.

Jackson (5-6) threw a whopping 149 pitches — a major league high — and walked eight, all but one in the first three innings, in the second no-hitter in Diamondbacks’ history.

This is the third time the Rays have been no-hit since last July, including Dallas Braden’s perfect game at Oakland on May 9.

Colorado’s Ubaldo Jimenez no-hit Atlanta on April 17 and Philadelphia’s Roy Halladay tossed a perfect game at Florida on May 29. Armando Galarraga had his perfect game ended with two outs in the ninth on a blown call by umpire Jim Joyce.

Adam LaRoche homered off Jeff Niemann (6-2) with one out in the second, all the support Jackson would need.

WHITE SOX 6, CUBS 0

CHICAGO — Screaming Cubs starter Carlos Zambrano had to be separated from teammate Derrek Lee in the dugout.

Jake Peavy (7-5) allowed three hits over seven innings, Carlos Quentin hit his fourth homer in four games, and the White Sox matched their longest winning streak in 34 years.

But all that was overshadowed by the confrontation in the visitor’s dugout following a four-run first inning.

Zambrano (3-6) screamed as he walked down the dugout steps past Lee and stormed toward the other end. Lee appeared to yell something, and as Zambrano headed back toward him, manager Lou Piniella, pitching coach Larry Rothschild, and bench coach Alan Trammell stepped between them.

Cubs catcher Geovany Soto grabbed the pitcher from behind and pulled him away. Zambrano appeared to say something to Piniella on his way to the clubhouse after being lifted for Tom Gorzelanny, who came out to pitch the second inning.

Zambrano was later suspended indefinitely by the Cubs.

BREWERS 8, MARINERS 3

MILWAUKEE — Rookie catcher Jonathan Lucroy hit his first major league home run to lead Milwaukee to its fifth straight win.

Dave Bush (3-5), whose last turn in the rotation was skipped, pitched six innings. He gave up three runs on seven hits. Carlos Villanueva, Kameron Loe and Trevor Hoffman each pitched a scoreless inning in relief.

Ryan Rowland-Smith (1-7) gave up five runs on five hits in 5 1-3 innings.

TCU stays alive at CWS

OMAHA, Neb. — Matt Purke and Tyler Lockwood held UCLA to four hits and Taylor Featherston hit the biggest of TCU’s three home runs, leading the Horned Frogs to a 6-2 victory Friday that keeps them alive in the College World Series.

TCU (54-13) forced a second Bracket 1 title game this afternoon, with the winner going to the best-of-three finals beginning Monday.

Featherston’s two-run homer off reliever Garrett Claypool gave TCU a three-run lead in the bottom of the seventh after the Bruins (50-15) had closed to 3-2.

The unbeaten Purke set a school record with his 16th win of the season, and Lockwood earned his eighth save.

UCLA starter Rob Rasmussen (11-3) struggled with his control early and left in the fifth inning.

Pena homered in the fourth to put TCU up 3-0. Bryan Holaday followed Featherston’s seventh-inning homer with his 15th of the year in the eighth. The Frogs hit three homers in Wednesday’s 11-7 win over Florida State.

Purke, who held Florida State to four hits over seven innings in last Saturday’s CWS opener, turned in his second straight strong performance.

He held UCLA hitless until Chris Giovinazzo reached on a bunt single with one out in the fifth, drawing a smattering of boos from the TCU-partisan crowd.

S. CAROLINA 5, CLEMSON 1

OMAHA, Neb. — Michael Roth pitched a three-hitter in his first start in 14 months, and South Carolina scored in five of the first six innings to force a second Bracket 2 final at the College World Series.

South Carolina (51-16) and Clemson (45-24) meet again today, with the winner advancing to the best-of-three championship round that starts Monday.

N.Y. Giants draft pick injured in single-car accident in New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Chad Jones, a two-sport star at LSU who was drafted by the New York Giants, underwent surgery for a broken left leg and ankle Friday following a dawn wreck in which his SUV smashed into a pole.

“The surgery was successful,” said Jones’ father, Al, after emerging from the hospital on Friday evening. “The rehab is going to take a while.”

Jones was in surgery at LSU

Public Hospital from midmorning until late afternoon. His father said the major concern related to improving blood flow around the ankle and that it appeared doctors were able to address that.

“Chad got this far. God brought him this far. He’s not going to leave him alone,” Al Jones said. “Chad is a fighter. That’s why he’s at this point and stage in his life and he’s going to continue to fight. ... One way or another, Chad’s going to be just fine.”

It was not clear what caused Jones, 21, to lose control of his vehicle at about 6 a.m. on a six-lane thoroughfare with a streetcar line on the west side of the city, police spokeswoman Shereese Harper said.

Jones was extracted from the SUV, but the two other men riding with him were fine, Harper said. She said it was too early in the investigation to know if Jones was speeding, and police will run toxicology reports to see if alcohol was a factor.

Jones’ agent, Rocky Arceneaux, said Jones was alert when taken to the hospital.

Arceneaux said he spoke to the passengers, who said Jones was in the far left lane and turned the wheel abruptly to get his tires off the streetcar tracks grooves. The vehicle then rolled into a pole that carries an overhead electrical wire powering the streetcar line.

The driver’s side of the SUV appeared to have been violently compressed, according to people who saw the wreckage before it was removed.

“It was so crushed in,” said Liz Lapre, who works across the street from the accident site at a store selling recreational gear. “I kept looking at it like, ‘Did they make it? Did they survive?’”

Edmonton chooses Hall to top NHL draft

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Edmonton Oilers selected forward Taylor Hall with the No. 1 pick in the NHL draft on Friday, finally ending a yearlong debate about the two best 18-year-old prospects in hockey.

The league-worst Oilers chose Hall over fellow OHL forward Tyler Seguin on Friday, making the toughest call at the top of a draft in several years.

“They’re such a great franchise with so much history behind them,” Hall said. “With the five (Stanley) Cups they won, it will mean a lot to me to join their organization and hopefully bring another one up there.”

The Boston Bruins eagerly grabbed Seguin moments later with the No. 2 pick.

Many NHL scouts and executives couldn’t choose a favorite between Hall, a physical left wing from the Windsor Spitfires, and Seguin, a smooth-skating center from the Plymouth Whalers. Seguin was the league MVP last season, and Hall was the playoff MVP while leading the Spitfires to the Memorial Cup.

Hall and Seguin both expect to be on NHL rosters this fall, and they realize their careers are likely to run on parallel tracks for many years.

“I don’t think it matters who goes first overall,” Seguin said. “I’m just excited to be here and to be going to Boston. I’m sure the rivalry will continue if we’re both in the NHL next year, but we both respect each other. We’re good buddies, and that isn’t going to change.”

Hall and Seguin spent much of the past three days hanging out together at various tours and events — everything from batting practice at Angel Stadium to a red-carpet Hollywood movie premiere — in the NHL draft’s first trip to Los Angeles.

Hall is the fourth straight OHL player chosen No. 1, following Patrick Kane, Steven Stamkos, and John Tavares. Those three picks are working out quite well — and Hall believes he can join the Oilers’ young core to return respectability to the struggling club.

“I feel honored with all the players that have gone No. 1,” Hall said. “When I came into this year, that was one of my goals, was to go No. 1. In saying that, there’s still a lot of work to do out here.”

Florida selected Kingston defenseman Erik Gudbranson with the third pick, and Columbus grabbed WHL center Ryan Johansen next.

“It’s where I wanted to be ever since the combine,” said Gudbranson, a physical defenseman with a big shot. “I know there’s a lot of work ahead, but it feels pretty great.”

Forward Nino Niederreiter, Johansen’s teammate in Portland, became the highest-drafted Swiss player in NHL history when he went to the New York Islanders with the fifth pick. The Islanders already have defenseman Mark Streit, the only NHL All-Star from Switzerland, as a club cornerstone.

Just the first round of the draft was scheduled for Staples Center on Friday. The final six rounds are today.

Spain cruises to victory in Group H play

PRETORIA, South Africa — David Villa and Andres Iniesta each scored as Spain beat Chile 2-1 on Friday at the World Cup, a result that sends both teams on to the round of 16.

Villa got his goal on a shot from 45 yards out in the 24th minute, when goalkeeper Claudio Bravo came out of his area and cleared a ball straight to the Spain striker.

Iniesta doubled the advantage by beating Bravo with a right-footed shot from the edge of the area in the 37th, with Marco Estrada ejected after collecting his second yellow card on the play.

Brazil had already secured advancement and won Group G with seven points, two more than Portugal. Ivory Coast, which beat North Korea 3-0, was third with four points. The Koreans ended with zero.

Portugal came into the match with a comfortable goal differential to just about guarantee its spot in the round of 16 even with a loss.

Brazil plays Chile on Monday in Johannesburg. Portugal faces Spain on Tuesday in Cape Town.

IVORY COAST 3, NORTH KOREA 0

NELSPRUIT, South Africa — Yaya Toure, Koffi Romaric N'Dri and Salomon Kalou all scored for Ivory Coast in a 3-0 win over North Korea at the World Cup, but the Elephants didn't advance to the round of 16.

Ivory Coast started the match needing a big win and a Portugal loss to Brazil to have any chance of moving on. But Brazil and Portugal tied 0-0, putting the Portuguese into the next round.

Ghana is the only one of six African teams to advance to the second round.

North Korea lost all three matches, giving up 12 goals and scoring just one.

Rose shoots 62 to take five-shot Travelers lead

CROMWELL, Conn. — Justin Rose shot an 8-under 62, birdieing five consecutive back-nine holes for the second straight round, to take a four-stroke lead over Kevin Sutherland on Friday in the Travelers Championship.

Rose, the Memorial winner three weeks ago who failed to qualify for the U.S. Open last week at Pebble Beach, broke the tournament record for the first 36 holes, finishing at 14-under 126. The 62 was one off the course record at TPC River Highlands.

“Yesterday’s finish was amazing, ran five birdies in the last six and then again today, managed to get five in a row again,” said Rose, who started his second round on the 10th tee. “Birdied 10 of the 12 holes, so from just cruising, suddenly I went to the top of the leaderboard just like that and began to get a nice little lead there.”

Sutherland shot his second straight 65. Vijay Singh (66), Corey Pavin (66), Bill Lunde (63) and Charlie Wi

(67) were five strokes back at 9 under.

After making 162 PGA Tour starts without winning, Rose broke through at the Memorial three weeks ago. This was his first start since.

“I think I’m just on a nice streak,” Rose said. “I’m not getting in my way. I’m letting it happen. It’s nice to not field the question, ‘Can this be your first win?’ I must say. That helps. Having done that, that’s one question that it’s just something less that I have to think about.

“Winning a tournament in its own right is difficult. So, when you have the added expectation of it trying to be your first, that can be harder sometimes.”

KERR GRABS FIVE-SHOT LEAD AT PGA CHAMPIONSHIP

PITTSFORD, N.Y. — Cristie Kerr shot a 6-under 66 on Friday to take a five-stroke lead in the PGA Championship, the tour’s second major of the season.

Relying on her chipping and near-perfect putting, Kerr had a 10-under 134 total on the Locust Hill Country Club course.

Inbee Park, the 2008 U.S. Women’s Open champion, and Mika Miyazato were tied for second at 5 under after 70s. Brittany Lincicome (69) and Amy Yang (67) were 4 under.

Seeking his first Wimbledon title at age 27, Roddick has lost three finals at the grass-court Grand Slam tournament to Federer, and they are on track for a semifinal meeting next week.

After being taken to five sets in the first round, then four in the second, Federer was back to his best Friday, beating 2001 Australian Open runner-up Arnaud Clement 6-2, 6-4, 6-2.

“Obviously,” Federer said, “this felt much better.”

Federer saved the only break point he faced, hit 29 winners and only 12 unforced errors, and was ushered off Centre Court by a roar of approval from the crowd.

“I get standing ovations 99 percent of the time — doesn’t matter if the performance was great or not-so great,” Federer said. “I think they’re happy to see me, and they love tennis. ... But of course, when I end up winning, and they give me a reception like this, it feels good at the heart.”

John Isner, meanwhile, was feeling anything but good Friday, when he trudged on court at noon to play in the second round a day after finishing the longest match in tennis history. Understandably wiped out after his victory over Nicolas Mahut went to 70-68 in the fifth set and included 11 hours, 5 minutes of action spread over three days, the 23-seeded Isner, of Tampa, Fla., bowed out 6-0, 6-3, 6-2 to Thiemo de Bakker in 74 minutes — the shortest men’s match at Wimbledon so far this year.

“This is one type of loss that I can’t be too disappointed about, because I didn’t have a good chance to begin with,” said Isner, who was dealing with a “dead” right shoulder, a stiff neck and a painful blister on the little toe on his left foot.

“It was brutal,” said Isner, who hit a record 112 aces against Mahut, and zero against de Bakker. “I mean, things were looking pretty bleak right from the get-go.”

Friday’s winners included

No. 3 Novak Djokovic, the 2008 Australian Open champion; No. 12 Tomas Berdych, a French Open semifinalist; and No. 15 Lleyton Hewitt, the 2002 Wimbledon champion, who eliminated No. 21 Gael Monfils.

No. 8 Kim Clijsters defeated No. 27 Maria Kirilenko 6-3, 6-3, and No. 17 Henin eliminated No. 12 Nadia Petrova 6-1, 6-4.

Justine Henin owns seven Grand Slam titles, and Clijsters two, but neither has won Wimbledon.

Venus Williams, a five-time champion at the All England Club, got off to a slow start Friday, trailing 3-1, before overpowering No. 26 Alisa Kleybanova of Russia 6-4, 6-2.

Montoya takes pole at New Hampshire

LOUDON, N.H. (AP) — Juan Pablo Montoya has found his groove at New Hampshire Motor Speedway.

Montoya turned a lap of 132.337 mph and won the pole in Friday’s qualifying — the second straight time he’ll start first at New Hampshire. Montoya won his first pole of the season after taking two last seasons.

Montoya is looking for his first career NASCAR win on an oval.

“We have been very close as a team to winning races,” he said.

Starting first could help. He set a track record at New Hampshire last September to win the pole, and parlayed that into a third-place finish.

“I think last year we were too conservative here against Mark Martin, but it was the beginning of the Chase and we thought we needed to be very smart and take the points,” Montoya said. “Right now, we are kind of in the same situation. We need a lot of points. We’ll see what happens.”

The former Formula One star made NASCAR’s Chase for the Sprint Cup championship for the first time last season. He’s a disappointing 20th entering Sunday’s race — 161 points out of the 12th and final place in the Chase field.

With 10 races left until the Chase field is set, Montoya believes he can still find a way to get the No. 42 Chevrolet into competing for a championship.

“We are miles ahead right now,” of last year, he said. “We have more top-10s, more top fives. We have a much faster race car than what we had last year at this point. But we had a blown engine. We got together with our teammate. We’ve been involved in I don’t know how many wrecks from other people.”

Montoya has four top-fives and eight top 10s this year, only to have those finishes offset by six in the 30s.

Montoya laughed as he recalled his fast lap, which he thought wasn’t enough to get him the pole.

“I got sideways and got on the gas and I thought they were going to kill me,” he said. “I’m about to press the button and say, ‘Sorry guys, I got loose,’ and they say, good job. I’m like, ‘Oh, thank you.’”

Kasey Kahne was second and Kurt Busch third. Mark Martin and Ryan Newman round out the top five.

Martin held off Montoya on a three-lap sprint to the finish last year in the Chase opener for his fifth win of the season. Montoya accused Martin of holding him up at the start of the second lap.

Martin is in 11th place and trying to boost his spot in the standings as the summer heats up.

“We saw that we closed that gap some today and we’re really looking forward to tomorrow to try to massage this thing a little bit more and maybe get a little more out of it,” he said.

World Cup

can feel part of,” coach Bob Bradley said Friday. “A team that people believe in and a team that people are proud of. And so, that’s part of our responsibility, and we’re excited in the moment that there’s that kind of feeling.”

Saturday’s game, nationally televised by ABC starting at 2:30 p.m. EDT, will be the third for the Americans at Royal Bafokeng Stadium. They had a 3-0 win over Egypt in last year’s Confederations Cup and the 1-1 draw with the English in this tournament.

The U.S. is coming off a 2-2 tie against Slovenia, when the Americans rallied from a two-goal deficit and saw an 85th-minute goal controversially disallowed, and the thrilling 1-0 victory over the Algerians.

It would appear the U.S. has a favorable path to the semifinals, a round it reached for the only time 80 years ago.

The Americans are ranked 14th, well ahead of Ghana (32nd) and South Korea (47th) and slightly in front of Uruguay (18th).

While the U.S. finished atop its first-round group for the first time since 1930, it hasn’t won consecutive World Cup games in 80 years. And in Ghana, it plays the only one of six African teams to have survived past the group phase. All African fans figure to be supporting the Black Stars.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"The strongest is never strong enough to be always the master, unless he transforms his strength into right, and obedience into duty."

— Jean Jacques Rousseau

Today's deal shows one of the world's top declarers, Antonio Sementa of Italy, at the helm in a very delicate three no-trump.

After a revealing auction, West led the spade nine to East's 10 and South's king. Declarer, knowing West had led from short spades, played the club king and ducked a club. East overtook his partner's 10 to lead a low diamond through, West following with the nine under declarer's ace. It was a second piece of interesting information for declarer, who next exited with his remaining spade.

East could not cash all her spade tricks without setting up dummy's winner, so after winning the jack and the ace (declarer throwing a club and West a heart), she exited with her last club, making it as difficult as possible for declarer to find out the exact distribution.

Sementa, however, now knew that he needed West to have no more than two diamonds, or else the defenders could cash a diamond trick. And since West had to have precisely two spades and four clubs, he had to have begun with five hearts.

So declarer won the club ace, played off the heart ace, and continued with a low heart, planning to put in dummy's nine. At the table, West split his heart honors, but it did not help him at all. Declarer won dummy's queen, cashed his second diamond, and played a club to West, pitching dummy's heart nine and forcing a lead into declarer's heart tenace at trick 12: contract made!

ANSWER: Though you have a weak hand, your five trumps make you worth a jump to four clubs. This is a splinter, showing a singleton club and spade support. You have no high cards to spare, but you owe your partner at least one highly encouraging bid. The point is that any hand with five supportive trumps must be worth something.

DEAR ABBY: "Todd" and I have been close friends since eighth grade. We're now in our mid-20s, and over the years I have gotten to know his family. His mother, "Cindy" is a kind and darling woman and I like her a lot.

The problem is, she has it in her head that I am perfect for Todd. On more than one occasion she has gone so far as to ask me why I don't marry him. Todd and I have always been close, but I have never had any interest in him beyond friendship. In fact, I am involved in a serious relationship right now with a man I love dearly.

Is there a way to stop Cindy from making suggestive comments without hurting her feelings?

- HOLDING MY TONGUE FOR NOW IN MINNESOTA

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR HOLDING YOUR TONGUE: Todd's mother's attempts at matchmaking may be annoying, but they're the greatest compliment a mother can pay a young woman. The next time she does it, smile and tell her that if you could clone yourself you would because you think she'd be the best mother-in-law in the world, but you're seeing someone and the relationship is serious.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 48-year-old man about to be married for the second time. My bride, "Jennifer," is significantly younger than I, but aside from that, we're alike on most issues. We have lived together for five years and have two beautiful daughters, ages 3 and 7.

We are now involved in making wedding plans. I know it's a woman's special day, but when I ask the normal question of "How much does it cost?" Jennifer becomes unglued. She says she's aware that we don't have an unlimited budget, and she's sick and tired of my always asking about the costs and saying things are too expensive.

Today she went off again when I said that the diamond-encrusted wedding band she wants me to wear was too expensive, and a simple gold band is fine for me. I told Jennifer to cut out the Bridezilla attitude. Money is a factor in a wedding, and since I'm part of it, my opinion should matter as much as hers.

Now she's stomping around in a huff, and I'm at the end of my rope. If this is how she acts now, what about after the wedding? Am I being an idiot to worry about the money, or is Jennifer being unrealistic by ignoring it and stifling my concerns?

- GROOM (?) IN MICHIGAN

DEAR GROOM (?) You're not an idiot. You are asking some very intelligent questions. One of the most frequent causes of divorce is arguments over money. So before you go any further, stop the music and insist that the two of you get premarital counseling to ensure that you really are on the same page. It could save you a bundle — of heartache and money.

DEAR ABBY: I am 17 and popular in school. I have a lot of friends, but inside I feel like I'm not good enough to go out with the popular boys I like. I am friends with them all, but they always pay more attention to the prettier girls.

I know I should feel privileged to be popular, but what can I do to get the guys to notice me more? I sometimes stay up crying at night over this.

- WANTS MORE IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR WANTS MORE: I'll tell you a secret. Fear of failure can become a self-fulfilling prophecy — and so can success. The more you dwell on your "deficiencies," the more pronounced they'll become. So, act more confident and soon you will be.

IF JUNE 26 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Over the next six months, you will do well if you manage to tread water, but may flounder if you try to swim to a new destination. Your ambitions might prod you to take on extra duties, but you would be wise to pay more attention to the responsibilities you already have on your shoulders. Take good care of your health and do not begin anything of importance between now and mid September. This is a good time to keep your nose to grindstone, gather experience, but do not give anyone an excuse to fire you or criticize your work. Because you are prone to taking drastic actions and may regret them later, wait until at least the beginning of the year to make significant changes or decisions.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If there isn't a challenge, it isn't for you. You are in your element when letting the competitive juices flow. Shoot a round of golf, bowl a few frames, or play some pool. Test your abilities to their limits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The more, the merrier. Don't settle for a run-of-the-mill picnic; invite the gang over for a full-scale wingding. Show the object of your affections how much you truly care with an extravagant gift.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Test the waters before you dive in. You may be willing to profess your undying loyalty to a significant other, but much depends upon the mood toward you at the time, so it may be a bad move.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be realistic with investment opportunities. Don't expect a huge pile of money to just fall into your lap if you haven't done your homework. Blissful moments with a loved one provide all the riches you need.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Read the fine print. Agreements or deals may be fraught with unseen details that will make it a much less lucrative bargain in the long run. Don't be too hard a critic on yourself; others may see it as weakness.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Plans are likely to change. Despite your original intentions, unseen events can change your agenda. Don't get overly frustrated; just go wherever fate decides to lead you. You could be far worse off.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Too much of a good thing can be monotonous. You're right where you want to be but it may be time to shake things up just for a change of pace. A relationship could create additional responsibilities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make the most of the gorgeous summer weekend. Put your feet up and relax, spend some time by the pool, have a cookout, or just grab some sun. Recharge your batteries for the work-week ahead.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): It's not bragging if you can back it up. Don't sell yourself short when dealing with movers and shakers. You should display your own talents and create new opportunities. Get out and mingle.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): There are no sure things. If there were, everyone would be rich. Use common sense with your money and don't gamble your future on someone else's say so. Focus on some well-earned R&R.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take the formal approach for the best results. Send an RSVP, use your best manners and be politically correct in social situations. Work and play mix nicely; you are likely to meet valuable new contacts.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A rolling stone gathers no moss. Keep on your toes and avoid growing roots. Get out and tackle those little household chores or start a brand new project. Do whatever you can to remain busy and constructive.
