Twin Falls wants tourists, Allegiant wants locals to be tourists

By Nick Coltrain Times-News writer

With her two young boys darting around her, Cassandra Berger walked off the inaugural Allegiant Air flight to Twin Falls and toward her reason for flying into the Magic Valley: a visit with lifelong friends.

It took only one story on the nightly news before Berger booked her flight, she said, and she'll probably book more. The twice-weekly flights offer an easy escape from the Vegas heat in the summer and save her friends a drive to Boise to pick her up in the winter.

Travelers like Berger fall between the ideals of Twin Falls tourism officials and Allegiant Air — she's a visitor to Twin Falls without being a tourist spending a lot of money in the area; she's also a customer to Allegiant Air, filling seats without being the type to book a weekend getaway at a Las Vegas resort.

Allegiant unhesitant to leave failing markets

By Nick Coltrain Times-News writer

Allegiant Air has no qualms about pulling out of floundering markets, even if the sputtering starts only a few months after an area's first flight.

The airline abandoned Worcester, Mass., in 2006 after only nine months of what political leaders said was a five-year agreement. It also cancelled service from Columbia, S.C., to St. Petersburg,

Iconic trophies a staple of Idaho Regatta history

By Ryan Howe Times-News writer

After the roar of the engines cease, but before the sun sets on the Snake River this evening, one Idaho Regatta race team will join an elite group by hoisting the Bill & Lance Faulkner Memorial Trophy and donning a Moyle Mink.

"Every year a story emerges," said longtime Idaho Regatta announcer Larry Ambrose.

The Faulkner trophy and the iconic mink coat from just downriver in Heyburn have become as much a piece of regatta tradition as speed and racers' occasional thrilling plunges into the Snake.

Because the mink coat is custom-tailored and offered in 10 different styles, no two Moyle Minks are alike. The stories behind the minks remain as unique as the coats themselves.

Every mink has a story: This is the beginning.

The Moyle Mink farm has been a locally-owned Heyburn business since the early 1940s. Lee and Don Moyle were among the original founders of the Idaho Regatta in 1976.

Two years later, the Moyle Mink tradition began, according to Idaho Regatta Committee Chairman (and Don's son) Mark Moyle. To encourage racers to come to Burley, the Moyles present a mink coat to the wife of the racer who either breaks or comes closest to the course record in his class.

"If you win the mink coat, you're the baddest boat out that weekend," said Dallas Ambrose, a four-year Idaho Regatta veteran in the Cracker Box class. "It's the only venue that we run where there's a real prize."

The rules state that the same racer can't win the Moyle Mink two years in a row.

Bill Faulkner Sr. — the man with the baddest boat in the regatta's early days — found a loophole. Technically, the rules dictate no one can win twice in a row "in the same class."

After winning the mink in 1982 in the super stock class, he and his boat "Hot Canary" again raced a mink-qualifying run in 1983. While he

... pants on fire: If the truth be told, guys can't

You're right, ma'am. He's a big, fat pre-variator.

Look it up yourself. Britain's Science Museum recently commissioned a poll on gender and truthfulness and found — hope you're sitting down, ladies — that the average guy tells three lies a day, or 1,092 a year.

(By contrast, the typical woman lies just twice a day, which works out to 728 falsehoods annually.)

But there's worse. The most likely person for a man to lie to is his mother. One-fourth of men say they've misled mom (compared with 20 percent of women).

"I didn't have that much to drink" is men's most popular fib.

And guys don't feel that bad about bearing false witness, apparently. Seventy percent of men said a lie eats at their conscience, compared to 82 percent of women.

But then again, these are Brits. They're more honest than Yanks.

Think not? Four years ago The Associated Press polled Americans about lying. Thirty-nine percent said they never told a lie, but almost 10 percent who said they never lie reported in the very next question that they might have told a lie in the previous week.

Eighty-two percent of Democrats told AP that it's OK to lie sometimes to spare someone's feelings, while 68 percent of Republican women declared it's never all right to dissemble. Half of Catholics and 36 percent of Protestants said it's acceptable for a parent to lie to a child about mom's or dad's past.

The sorry truth is that there's not much downside to lying anymore.

Americans are simply dreadful at detecting lies (which explains our recent political history, I suppose), picking out false statements just 47 percent of the time, according to one study — less than if we guessed randomly.

Maybe that's why we say stupid things like "Sorry I missed your call." Come on, nobody is sorry he or she missed your call.

My fourth-grade teacher, Sister Teresa, was a stickler for the truth, and when she didn't get it there were con-

SUN VALLEY — Three years ago, no one involved in water issues would have guessed a varied group of water users could together come up with a plan to better manage the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer.

The group succeeded and is ready to put the Comprehensive Aquifer Management Plan into practice. But funding it remains a significant challenge, speakers reminded the audience at the Idaho Water Users Association's summer law conference on Monday.

The effort may need $100 million over 10 years from both the state and assorted water users to pay for just a third of the adjustments many believe are needed to restore the Lake Erie-sized aquifer to sustainability.

An attempt to pass a funding mechanism derailed in the Legislature this spring, but is expected to return next year. It was delayed by several issues, including an argu-

CAMP PROJECTS

Many CAMP projects are already under way, though it's too early to tell how successful they've been.

Despite a poor snowpack, spring moisture has provided about 62,000 acre-feet of water for managed aquifer recharge.

An existing cloud seeding project in eastern Idaho now has nine more remote generators. And the federal Agricultural Water Enhancement Program has provided $2.6 million to help 33 irrigation systems convert from using groundwater to surface water in the Magic Valley.

ment over whether water users above the Blackfoot-Shelley area will receive credit for "incidental" recharge that at least one member of a panel discussion said threatens to derail the whole process.

"We need all hands on deck to fund this," said Jeff Raybould, chairman of the Fremont-Madison Irrigation District and a member of the committee guiding the plan.

Surface, ground- and spring-water users, municipalities and industrial users would all pay into the project. The Idaho Department of Water Resources estimates irrigation and aquaculture account for 97 percent of the water used across the aquifer, and committee members were warned that a fee on domestic wells would be political suicide, said Steve Howser, general manager of the Aberdeen-Springfield Canal Co.

Groundwater pumpers aren't opposed to paying $2 per acre, said Dean Stevenson with the Magic Valley Ground Water District. They've learned to take advantage of water as it's available for managed recharge or conversions, he said; now water users in general may have to be as opportunistic when it comes to finding funds.

"There are a lot of places you can have partnerships if you look in the right places," said Stevenson, who is also on the committee. "... The groundwater districts I represent are committed to moving forward on projects that can help."

Brian Olmstead, manager of the Twin Falls Canal Co. and a farmer, said paying $1 an acre is equivalent to selling 20 pounds of hay or one-quarter of a bushel of wheat. But if it provides an extra day of water at a critical time in the growing season, or allows his canals to deliver five-eighths of an inch of water for a few more days, that dollar has more than paid for itself.

"Is there light at the end of the tunnel?" asked Olmstead, another committee member. "I believe there is, but I think that light is very dim right now because we are so far apart on funding issues."

The committee is expected to meet again next week.

"We have had broad-based support as we formed the plan," Raybould said. "We want to have that going forward as we try to resolve the funding mechanism."

T.F. updates road construction

Times-News

Several Twin Falls road construction projects are progressing, according to a city release.

Motorists will continue to see changes along Washington Street North, as the temporary stop sign at the street's intersection with North College Road was removed Thursday. Two-lane Washington traffic is expected between Filer Avenue and Cheney Drive as Idaho Transportation Department road-widening work continues.

Farther south, paving on the southbound lanes of Washington between Shoup and Dubois avenues is expected to be completed by midweek. Two-lane traffic will be transferred to the newly paved lanes so crews can complete work on the northbound lanes.

To the west of Washington, the widening of Falls Avenue West has seen curb and gutter work between Grandview Drive and Wendell Street reach completion. This week, curb and gutter work is expected to continue on Wendell.

Motorists using Canyon Springs Road may experience delays at the top of the road's grade as workers open the road for a sewer line upgrade.

Mink

couldn't win for that run, the SK boat "Hot Flash" — piloted by one Bill Faulkner Sr. — finished second in the mink running.

Faulkner Sr. became the first two-time winner and gave the minks to his wife, Marlene.

"When we won the first one, I said to Bill, 'What are we going to do with this?'" Marlene Faulkner said. "And Bill said, 'You can wear it to Reams and squeeze the tomatoes in the produce.'"

Bill Faulkner Sr. died of cancer in 1984. Ever since, Marlene Faulkner has presented the trophy that bears his name at the Idaho Regatta. A travelling trophy, it joins the Moyle Mink as the event's top prize.

"It's the biggest trophy in circle powerboat racing," Mark Moyle said. "It would be the equivalent to winning the Borg-Warner Trophy at the Indy 500."

This is a love story.

After Bill Faulkner Sr.'s death, his sons Bill Jr. and Lance kept the family racing legacy alive.

During the early 1990s, the Faulknors' biggest rival was Gordon Jennings. Much to the Faulkner boys' dismay, their sister Katie started dating Jennings.

"We were like, 'Are you kidding me?'" said Bill Faulkner Jr. "He was our No. 1 competitor. Back in those days he was a menace to us."

Jennings and Lance Faulkner went neck-and-neck in several races, including the 1993 Idaho Regatta when Jennings won the Moyle Mink and Faulkner Memorial Trophy.

Eventually, Jennings and Katie Faulkner married, and the menace became the brother-in-law.

"Because my dad had passed away, I walked my sister down the aisle," Bill Faulkner Jr. said. "I told her that it wasn't too late to turn around and stop this whole thing ... Now he's my best friend and my brother!"

This one's of fathers, sons and tragedy.

With Lance behind the wheel and Bill Jr. as crew chief, the Faulknors set out with one goal in mind.

"Our main goal every year is to win the mink coat and my dad's memorial trophy. It's real hard to win," Bill Faulkner Jr. said.

In 1994, in what is still remembered as one of the greatest moments in Regatta history, Lance Faulkner won Dad's trophy. In 1999, he later matched Bill Sr.'s tally, winning his second trophy and mink.

"It was the biggest thing we had accomplished, and prior to that we had already set world speed records and won national championships," said Bill Faulkner Jr.

Lance Faulkner died in Arizona in a November 2001 racing crash. He was 32.

A five-time national champion, Lance Faulkner is regarded as one of the top all-time boat racers. After his death, Lance's name joined his father's on the family's trophy, becoming the Bill & Lance Faulkner Memorial Trophy.

In the final year of Lance's life, he hand-selected driver Ty Newton and taught him everything he knew.

After Lance's death, Newton took over the main driving duties, racing in "Canary Pride," a boat built by Lance. In 2005, Newton raced to a mink coat finish, giving Faulkner Racing its fifth mink.

friend of Bill Faulkner Sr. and built engines for several of his race boats.

"Before Bill passed away, he was bragging to Grichar about how he had won two mink coats," said Ben Marrone, a race boat owner from Arcadia, Calif.

Three years after Bill Sr.'s death, in 1987, Grichar won a mink.

Marrone says that Grichar tried to win it again in the late '90s, but a bad accident caused him to quit boat racing.

However, in 2004, Marrone purchased a 1959 wood deck Rayson Craft on the premise that Grichar would drive it.

Grichar, now 73, got back behind the wheel of the Grand Nationals class, and he matched his buddy Bill's achievement by winning a second mink in 2007 — 20 years after he won his first.

"It was pretty emotional, a pretty special moment," Marrone said.

Ask any boat racer why he or she craves the sport, and each one will give a form of the same answer.

"It's the thrill of the speed," said Tony Scarlata of Thousand Oaks, Calif. "It's the competition, racing against other people. I love being on the water. Crashing is just part of the deal!"

Scarlata should know. He's crashed his K-boat six times. One wreck, however, was more disastrous than the rest. In 2008 at a race in Bakersfield, Calif., Scarlata flipped his boat while heading into a turn at 100 mph. He broke five ribs, punctured his lung, tore a ligament in his knee and came centimeters away from a serious spinal injury.

Just three months after the crash, Scarlata was back in Burley, competing at the Idaho Regatta for the Moyle Mink. He came up short, but returned in 2009 and won it.

Although Scarlata's win was meaningful for him, the racer says the victory was a bigger thrill for the boat's owner, Dave Rankin.

"Dave has been trying to get that mink for 20 years," Scarlata said. "He's been around forever. He's raced everything."

It wasn't easy. Scarlata's boat was damaged in a crash during the first heat. The crew went back to the pits and held it together with cargo tape.

"I couldn't believe how strong that stuff was," Scarlata said.

When Rankin finally won his first mink last year, it was an emotional moment.

"I've never seen so many crying women and men in my life over a dead animal," Scarlata said.

For the past 12 months, the Faulkner Memorial Trophy has sat proudly in the middle of Rankin's living room.

"The wife wasn't thrilled about it," Rankin said of the trophy's conspicuous placement. "She liked the mink coat, though."

Teachers spend a day in the field at geoscience meeting

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Diverse rock formations make Twin Falls an ideal place to study geology.

An equally diverse group of teachers traveled from across the Northwest to take advantage of that during a five-day geoscience meeting hosted by the College of Southern Idaho.

Last summer, CSI geology professor Shawn Willsey attended the regional National Association of Geoscience Teachers meeting in British Columbia and volunteered to host this year. The group hasn't met in Idaho recently, so it was a rare chance for secondary and post-secondary teachers to learn about local geology.

Teachers spent a day attending presentations and the other four getting their hands and knees dirty during field trips to sites such as the City of Rocks National Reserve and the Hagerman Fossil Beds National Monument.

Saturday, the last day of the meeting, 30 teachers headed to Hagerman to find fossils and float the Snake River.

Western Oregon University instructor Karen Brown joined the caravan on her motorcycle; she rides to the meeting every year.

"I've ridden through southern Idaho before," Brown said. "But unless you get off the highway, you don't see the things we've learned here."

Paleontologist Phil Gensler led a tour of what he called "the richest fossil site on earth" and patiently answered questions from the participants, who at times seemed more like excited kids than teachers.

Laura Corder, a Canyon Ridge High School teacher, said the field trips boosted her enthusiasm. She took hundreds of pictures and samples to share with her classes.

"I've toured these areas before, but now I've seen them in detail, right down to how they're formed," Corder said. "I think that will be my theme for next year: 'Look closely!'"

Brett Gilley of the University of British Columbia said the field trips are invaluable because teachers can then instruct from their experience and have their own rock collections for classroom use.

A driver later joked, "I want to know how much heavier their luggage gets by the end of the trip."

FOUNDING FATHERS AND FRESH FRUIT

We all know that the 4th of July and fresh, ripe cherries go together like Laverne and Shirley, which puts an ironic twist on that old familiar story of George Washington and the cherry tree. Why on earth would the Father of Our Country decide to chop down a tree that produces such a delicious treat—instead of, say, mangling a gooseberry bush or trampling a bunch of artichoke plants? If he'd done either of those things, his dad probably would have patted him on the back and raised his allowance. So this year, as you celebrate our nation's independence by remembering great men like George Washington and munching on some fresh, juicy cherries from Swensen's Market, we'll forgive you for wondering, even for an instant, what George Washington possibly could have been thinking when he cut down that tree.

Such fliers are welcome, both sides say, and are a benefit to the airline and the Magic Valley. But Berger's still just a mother of two visiting old friends from central Nevada who is nonetheless "very excited" about the new flights.

Tourism in Twin Falls

When the flights were first announced, Shawn Barigar, president and CEO of the Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce, thought "is there anything we could do to bring folks from the Las Vegas market or other markets that Allegiant serves to the Twin Falls area?"

Barigar, along with officials from Southern Idaho Tourism and the Sun Valley-Ketchum Chamber and Visitors Bureau, began brainstorming attractions: Skiing? BASE jumping? River sports and other outdoor activities?

They also started talking with Allegiant Air about the possibility of drawing tourists north as well as south, only to hit a wall. It isn't in Allegiant's business plan.

"We don't traditionally do reverse traffic because realistically we can only get so much money out of someone flying from Las Vegas," Allegiant Air spokeswoman Sabrina LoPiccolo told the Times-News. "While we are happy to bring customers to Idaho, it doesn't matter as much as our destination markets."

The company, which does focus on some smaller-market traffic to areas like Mount Rushmore or California wine country, probably won't spend any advertising dollars to draw people to southern Idaho and won't spend any money advertising for Twin Falls, LoPiccolo said.

Allegiant Travel, the airline's parent company, specializes in travel packages, such as booking hotels, rental cars and flights together. LoPiccolo called it a "full-service travel company that happens to have an airline." With that, Allegiant is a little more open to hotel partnerships in Twin Falls, she said, but it's still not a priority.

"It's not out of the question but it is probably not something we are going to focus a lot on at the moment," LoPiccolo said.

That hasn't deterred Barigar or Debbie Dane, executive director of Southern Idaho Tourism. They both see opportunities and are trying to form plans to capitalize on them — "Hope is a pretty bad one, in terms of tourism strategies," Barigar said.

"There is the opportunity to collaborate and it is a definite benefit to our market," Dane said. "We just have to respect that they are in beginning mode and look for those opportunities to collaborate so it benefits (both parties)."

Allegiant's aims still a local boon

Allegiant Air's flight schedule reveals a lot about its goals in Twin Falls: Offering flights only on Mondays and Fridays means those with a traditional workweek are forced to take at least one day off and enter into vacation mode — quick weekend getaways aren't an option.

"We're definitely looking for the leisure customer. We may get business customers who come down, but the leisure customer is our focus," LoPiccolo said. "Two days if you're going to be trying to go on vacation is not enough."

Simply offering the flights is a boon for the Twin Falls area, Barigar said, and will boost the quality of life for its residents and workers. Those benefits outweigh the possibility of losing local dollars to the Las Vegas Ground crew from Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport chat with Allegiant Air pilot Steve Giordano after the airline's maiden flight from Las Vegas on June 17. The airline offers twice-weekly flights between Twin Falls and Las Vegas.

Strip's flashing lights, he said, adding that he hasn't heard any complaints from local business owners.

SkyWest Airlines already offers four daily flights to Salt Lake City.

Many locals are already taking advantage of the new service to Las Vegas: the next several flights are booked with about 130 passengers each, Twin Falls Airport Manager Bill Carberry said, just 3 percent shy of the airline's 90-percent booking goal.

"With more people in the terminal, that brings more opportunities," Carberry said. "It will get a lot of people who haven't used Magic Valley Regional Airport to see how convenient we are."

Just having the airline offer the service bodes well, Dane said.

"I think the airline builds capacity for our area," she said. "We have SkyWest and we have Allegiant. I think that builds more opportunity."

Opportunity is the one constant description of Allegiant's new service. Ideas of how to maximize it abound on both sides. Though neither can predict exactly what niche these twice-weekly flights will fill, they are excited for the opportunity to find out.

Jackpot casinos not worried about Las Vegas flights

Allegiant: If you travel, why not travel to Vegas?

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

JACKPOT, Nev. — David Frazier doubts Allegiant Air's new service to Las Vegas will divert him from his occasional trips from Twin Falls to Barton's Club 93 casino in Jackpot, or even replace his yearly drive to Sin City to watch auto races. He enjoys his current habits too much.

"I like the 93," he said on his way inside the casino. "Started out years ago with my dad, so it's kind of a family thing."

It's the same for his trip to Las Vegas, he said. He and his wife can leave on a Thursday to cruise through eastern Nevada and spend an evening in Ely. That said, he's not turning up his nose at the flights, especially since they are cheap, he said.

Attitudes like Frazier's, and the casinos' faith that they provide good service, is leading Jackpot casinos not to fret over the extra competition.

Kris Ann Brown, spokeswoman for Cactus

Petes Resort Casino and the Horseshu Hotel & Casino, said the casinos already draw customers from throughout the area, despite competition from Boise Airport's flight schedule to Las Vegas. Being only an hour drive from Twin Falls, she said, guests can get out of town for only an evening to see a show and eat a meal.

"We don't know that there will be or what the potential impact may be, if any, at Cactus Petes (and the Horseshu)," Brown said.

While the target markets for Allegiant Air's new trips and the Jackpot casinos will undoubtedly overlap, Allegiant Air spokeswoman Sabrina LoPiccolo said the main target of the airline will be leisure customers for whom the draw is the city of Las Vegas as much as the din of slot machines — though she also mentioned the frequent-player benefits many Las Vegas casinos offer. Brown also pointed out that Cactus Petes and the Horseshu offer regular specials to their guests.

"While gaming is a huge draw here in Las Vegas, there are lots of other things to do. Lots of recreation, lots of entertainment," LoPiccolo said. "Those people that want to go to Jackpot, you're still going to need to make a trip, so why not make the trip to Vegas?"

Passengers get off the first Allegiant Air flight from Las Vegas on June 17 at Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport.

Fla., in 2007 after only two months of daily flights. In May, it announced the end of flights between Monterey, Calif., and San Diego after a year of service.

The reasons for leaving are too varied for specifics, Allegiant Air spokeswoman Sabrina LoPiccolo said. But if a service ends or an airport is abandoned, it'll be because the company wasn't making money, she said.

"There could be quite a few issues. It could be that we are just not filling seats and we are not getting enough customers to make it profitable," she said. "Unfortunately, there are a few markets that just won't work regardless of what we try."

Being a budget airline, Allegiant needs to strike a careful balance between cost and capacity, LoPiccolo said — fares need to be low enough to fill flights but high enough to still turn a profit. The airline shoots for 90 percent capacity with its flights, she said. In Allegiant air operates flights to more than 40 U.S. cities out of its Las Vegas hub. Here's a look at Allegiant's available connections once travelers out of Twin Falls hit Sin City.

South Carolina, where the service lasted two months, flights were only 75 percent full at the beginning and soon dropped to below half.

"We go into a market investing in a market and thinking it is going to work," LoPiccolo said. "We didn't go into a market if we didn't think it was going to succeed."

Allegiant and Twin Falls county and city officials signed a three-year lease for the airline to operate out of Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport, though there are no negative consequences for the airline if it leaves early, Airport Manager Bill Carberry said.

County Commission Chairman George Urie, who signed the agreement on behalf of the county, said even if the airline breaks the lease, local government doesn't stand to lose that much — its only matching cash is $5,000 in advertising, according to the lease.

"We're not going to lose a bunch of money if they pull out," he said.

"The thing is, how could you know if the benefit outweighs the investment? You have to think optimistically and think it is going to be a positive thing."

Carberry said the airport has been in off-and-on talks with Allegiant Air since 2001, with steady dialogue for the last two years — signs it is being careful with its investments, he said.

"(Allegiant leaving) is always a possibility. It all depends on community response," he said, adding that success may depend on more than just flight capacity. "At the end of the day, I think the success of the route will depend on people boarding the hotels."

Allegiant Air is a subsidiary of travel company Allegiant Travel. LoPiccolo said it has been described as "Expedia with wings" for its vacation packages.

The head of the Kinston, N.C., airport told The Daily Herald of Everett, Wash., in 2008 that a lack of hotel reservations, cars rented and Disney tickets bought led the airline to cancel service from the airport to Orlando, Fla. LoPiccolo said hotel packages do play a role in a route's success, albeit a small one. She also said that travel packages earn more money for the company than their airline tickets.

The Kinston airport also reported flights at 80 percent of capacity, 10 percent lower than what the company shoots for.

Allegiant Air does expand more than it contracts, LoPiccolo said. A local example of that is the Idaho Falls airport, where Allegiant Air began offering Las Vegas flights in 2005 and expanded to offer Los Angeles flights in April.

But it is unclear if the Magic Valley will be another in-and-out operation or if it will lead to expanded service in the area.

"Honestly, we've had a little bit of a slow start (in Twin Falls), but because we're entering a new community we realize it will take a while for people to realize the services we offer," LoPiccolo said. "In small communities like this, word of mouth means everything to us."

Idaho, other states settle computer chip lawsuit

Officials unclear about how restitution will be distributed

The Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho and 32 other states will share in a $173 million settlement with six international manufacturers, including Boise-based Micron Technology Inc., who were accused of price fixing related to the sale of Dynamic Random Access Memory (DRAM) computer chips.

Idaho Attorney General Lawrence Wasden said Thursday the amount of money to be distributed to consumers, businesses, the state and local governments has not yet been determined.

“I appreciate that the manufacturers worked with the states to reach an agreement to address our concerns and resolve this matter,”

— Idaho Attorney General Lawrence Wasden

Wasden said in a statement.

In July 2006, the multistate group sued in federal court, alleging that consumers and state agencies overpaid for products containing the chips.

The manufacturers did not admit to any violations.

Wasden said the agreement still needs court approval.

“Idaho’s governments, businesses and consumers spend sizable amounts of money for computers and other products containing DRAM,” Wasden said. “When those costs are inflated by unlawful anticompetitive practices, as we have alleged in this case, we have a duty to the taxpayers and consumers to recover their money and end the unlawful activity.”

‘BE INNOVATIVE’

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Mckay Lundrom, left, with his father-in-law Wayne Skeem and Brook Prudent at the SOS siren-operated sensor’s facility in Twin Falls. They sell the device, that opens gates when a siren is detected, throughout the nation and in the southeast where there are more gated communities.

Idahoan built international company from the ground up

By Rebecca De Leon
Times-News writer

Wayne Skeem, founder of an international company built from his own sweat and a little Idaho dirt, has four words for youngsters today:

“Be lazy. Be innovative?”

Skeem is most well-known for his invention, the Siren-Operated Sensor (SOS), which is a device that allows emergency vehicles immediate access to gated communities just by turning their vehicle sirens on within 100 feet of the gate. The device is Skeem’s most successful invention, but it’s not the only one.

While farming and driving his tractor in the late ‘60s, Skeem decided he did not like to get off the tractor, open the gate, and then close the gate after the tractor got through.

“If I can inspire young people to be innovative, I will have done my part.”

— Wayne Skeem, inventor

Laziness? Check.

So he took an air compressor and hooked it up to a device that recognized the sound of a vehicle horn; with this, he simply needed to drive up to the gate and honk his horn for access. Thus, the Horngate was born.

Innovation? Check.

After the Horngate’s success, Skeem went on to invent a variety of other useful devices, including SOS, which was first developed in the mid-’80s and hit the market in 1992. SOS units have been sold across the world and are the foundation of a million-dollar international company Skeem’s son-in-law now owns and operates.

Legislation in many counties across the nation, and throughout the entire state of Texas, have passed laws making SOS mandatory for all gated communities.

“Public safety without public funds” is the product’s motto.

Skeem’s position as a high school band teacher in Elko, Nev., made him an unlikely person to create a ground-breaking invention. But in 1976, he did just that by selling the F-100 Round Bale Feeder to Vermeer, resulting in nearly $120,000 in stipends and royalties over the next few years.

But, the experience taught Skeem a valuable lesson.

“Timing is very important,” Skeem said. At the time he patented the round bale feeder, which dispenses a controlled amount of hay from a round hay bale, the agricultural industry was discovering the usefulness of square hay bales. When Vermeer stopped selling Skeem’s invention, Ford/New Holland bought his upgraded Model 175 Round Bale Feeder. However, it was discontinued after just five years, as farmers had completely made the transition over to square bales.

Luckily, Skeem’s innovative spirit was unshaken. He moved to Buhl to continue teaching band, where he invented “Piano in a Band/Tuxedo Ensembles.”

“I said to myself, ‘I need to do something better,’” Skeem said. The idea threw a piano into the Low mortgage rates fail to boost lending activity

By Dina ElBoghady
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Mortgage rates have hit an all-time low, but consumers are responding with a big “So what?”

The average rate on a 30-year fixed-rate mortgage dropped to 4.69 percent last week from 4.75 percent last week, Freddie Mac reported Thursday. That marks the lowest level since the company started tracking the data in 1971 and breaks the most recent low set in December. Rates have hovered below 5 percent since early May.

Yet home sales are tumbling and mortgage applications are slipping. Potential buyers have retrenched, discouraged by employment fears, the recent expiration of a home buyer’s tax credit and tough lending standards, industry experts said.

“Interest rates have no effect on buyer psychology anymore,” said Glenn Kelman, chief executive of Redfin, a real estate company. “Now, interest rates fall to the floor and nobody cares.”

The lull in home purchases follows a burst of activity in April and May, when people were rushing to take advantage of the tax credit — $8,000 for some first-time buyers and $6,500 for certain repeat buyers. To qualify for that subsidy, buyers had to sign a contract by April 30 and they must close the deal by Wednesday.

As the program wrapped up, home purchases plummeted. Industry figures released this week showed that sales of existing homes fell 2.2 percent in May from April and government data showed that sales of new homes plunged nearly 33 percent during the same period.

Jennifer Du Plessis of George Mason Mortgage said she sees that trend continuing.

“Ever since the home buyer tax credit expired, people have backed off on the buying side,” Du Plessis said. “I still have buyers, but they’re trickling in.”

Mortgage rates are low because investors, nervous about global economic stability and a volatile stock market, are plowing their money into mortgage securities backed by Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, assets that investors perceive to be relatively safe bets.

Michael Fratantoni, a vice president at the Mortgage Bankers Association, said the volume of mortgage applications for home purchases is now at a 13-year low. Purchase applications have dropped for six of the past

Immigrant farm workers issue challenge to unemployed

By Julian Barbassa
Associated Press writer

SAN FRANCISCO — In a tongue-in-cheek call for immigration reform, farm workers are teaming up with comedian Stephen Colbert in a challenge to unemployed Americans: Come on, take our jobs.

Farm workers are tired of being blamed by politicians and anti-immigrant activists for taking work that should go to Americans and dragging down the economy, said Arturo Rodriguez, the president of the United Farm Workers of America.

So the group is encouraging the unemployed — and any Proponents of tougher immigration laws have argued that farmers have become used to cheap labor. The problem with the UFW’s proposition, they argue, is that growers don’t want to raise wages and improve working conditions enough to attract Americans.

In either case, those who have done the job have some words of advice for applicants.

The St. Luke's Wood River Foundation board of directors and the Harvey Gray family awarded Charlene Malone, RN, the 2010 Carl A. Gray Memorial Award for overall nursing excellence. The announcement came during an award ceremony May 12 at the Ketchum-based hospital.

Each year the entire hospital staff may nominate a nurse who exemplifies excellence in their nursing practice. The nursing staff then votes on the colleague whom they believe is most deserving of the recognition. Malone works as the clinical supervisor in the medical surgical unit at the hospital and nursing colleagues recognized her as a role model who provides outstanding patient care.

The Gray family established the award in 1995 to recognize St. Luke's Wood River Medical Center nurses.

seven weeks. They are down 30 percent from April, when the tax-credit frenzy peaked, he said.

Fratantoni said consumers have grown used to the low rates, which have bounced around the mid-4-percent to the low-5-percent range for more than a year. They're more worried about stagnant wages and high unemployment than a spike in mortgage rates, hence their reluctance to buy, he said.

Although the economy added more jobs in May than in any other month in the past decade, the job growth was driven by temporary hiring for the once-a-decade census.

For now, refinancing represents two-thirds of all mortgage activity and lenders report some signs of life on that front.

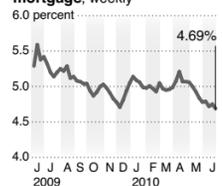

"I've had at least 40 messages from people today," Brad Cohen of Mason Dixon Funding said Thursday. "They're all hearing about the record low rates and they want to refinance."

But refinancing activity is about half of what it was during the frenzy of early 2009, when the Federal Reserve committed to buying a huge chunk of mortgage-backed securities and mortgage rates immediately dropped below 6 percent.

Since then, refinancing has petered out. Many who could refinance already have. Some borrowers are unable to refinance because the value of their homes has tumbled and their equity has melted away. Others have been shut out because lenders are demanding stellar credit or hefty down payments.

Jobs

Statistics' top ten list of the nation's most dangerous jobs.

Second, expect long days. Growers have a small window to pick fruit before it is overripe; work starts before dawn and goes on for 12 or more hours.

And don't count on a big paycheck. Farm workers are excluded from federal overtime provisions, and small farms don't even have to pay the minimum wage. Fifteen states don't require farm labor to be covered by workers compensation laws.

Any takers? "The reality is farmworkers who are here today aren't taking any American jobs away. They work in often unbearable situations," Rodriguez said. "I don't think there will be many takers, but the offer is being made. Let's see what happens."

To highlight just how unlikely the prospect of Americans lining up to pick strawberries or grapes is, Comedy Central's "Colbert Report" plans to feature the "Take Our Jobs" campaign on July 8. Requests to Comedy Central and Colbert for comment on the nature of the collaboration weren't immediately answered.

Another way of tackling the issue is to strengthen immigration enforcement, said Mark Krikorian, executive director of the Center for Immigration Studies, which supports strict immigration laws.

It's an idea that might not end up on Comedy Central, but reducing the pool of farm workers would force growers to improve working conditions and raise wages.

"They're daring the American people to get by without farm workers," he said. "What I'm saying is, 'Let's take them up on that and call their bluff!'"

The campaign is being played for jokes, but the need to secure the right to work for immigrants who are here is serious business, said Michael Rubio, supervisor in Kern County, one of the biggest ag producing counties in the nation.

"Our county, our economy, rely heavily on the work of immigrant and unauthorized workers," he said. "I would encourage all our national leaders to come visit Kern County and to spend one day, or even half a day, in the shoes of these farm workers."

Innovation

was, 'How do we make it mix of instruments, and sectioned off certain small ensembles to sell the larger ensemble. Audiences everywhere were astounded.

"You are to be congratulated for this innovative idea," commented Yamaha International Corporation to the band and its director in 1988.

Meanwhile, at home, Skeem toiled away on his greatest invention, SOS.

"Young inventors today should know that they don't need to spend lots of money on a patent," Skeem said. "All you need to do is pay $10 for a patent disclosure document and you have two years to work on your idea. Get your product on the market as soon as you can."

Soon after SOS began selling to distributors, Skeem saw profits increase exponentially. Business was so good that he was forced to quit teaching band to become a full-time inventor and entrepreneur.

"I've always been busy, ever since the Horngate," Skeem said. The original SOS model was bulky and came with a cassette tape for testing the sensor. Now, the model is smaller, more efficient, packaged nicely, comes with a CD for testing, and sells to end users for up to $450 apiece, for a profit margin of 50 percent.

Skeem brought Mckay Lundgren, a skilled economist with an extensive background in hotel administration and Skeem's esteemed son-in-law.

Lundgren said. So, they adapted parts of the SOS system for use with other access entryways. The Gate Trigger with Talk Back tells a homeowner when a vehicle is approaching the gate so they can open it and greet those arriving. The Postal Alert attaches to the door of a mailbox and alerts the homeowner when the mail is being delivered. And, most recently, the SOS Silent. With a small apparatus, emergency vehicles can open gates using the small remote instead of their siren, for a stealthy entrance.

Lundgren also changed the approach to advertising, selling the product in better packages and expanding their audience to appeal to politicians.

"Top-selling items are not always the best products, they are just marketed the best," Lundgren said. Although they recognize the importance of good advertising, SOS employees say it is almost unnecessary, as they claim their products have no competitors.

"Any average guy can be innovative," Skeem said, who sold his company to Lundgren in 2007. Now, Lundgren and Skeem still get together often to review new designs and products, along with Technical Manager Brook Prudent. The company sells an estimated $750,000 a year, and has under 10 employees. Although sales have leveled slightly in recent years because of the housing market crash, the three men remain confident about the future of their product.

journey," Lundgren said. "We still have a long way ahead of us."

NO SEAFOOD, NO BUSINESS

Oil spill forces owner of Louisiana cafe to close doors

By Jason Bronis
Associated Press writer

GHEENS, La. — Vicki Guillot has served her last seafood po-boy.

The local bounty of fresh shrimp and oysters that once kept the only restaurant in this rural Louisiana town bustling can no longer be culled from the Gulf of Mexico because of the massive oil spill that has fouled the water.

All her distributors can offer her now is imported shrimp at twice the price she was paying 10 weeks ago before an oil rig explosion triggered the disaster that has dumped millions of gallons of crude off the Gulf Coast.

"The last price I got from him was for imported shrimp, and I said, 'No thank you,'" Guillot said Thursday. "Our waters are all around here, our boys fished all the time. To buy imported?"

Then, she shook her head from side to side as she broke down in tears in the kitchen of Debbie's Cafe.

Guillot, 49, had to close the restaurant for good Tuesday after just six months in business.

She said she battered her own shrimp and fried her own fish. But now there's no more batter, no more frying oil where Guillot and her family served up sandwiches, ice cream and ice snowballs seven days a week to loyal customers in the town of mostly commercial fishing families.

Guillot is one of a slew of small business owners who rely on the Gulf waters for fresh seafood. But with more than 70,000 square miles of those waters closed to fishing since the spill, the well that kept the businesses running is running dry.

Vicki Guillot cries as she talks about closing her restaurant, Debbie's Cafe, in Gheens, La., Thursday. Lack of shrimp to make her prized fried shrimp po-boy sandwich and a lack of customers, due to the Deepwater Horizon oil spill, forced her to close in this small fishing town.

Larger restaurants are able to maintain their seafood stocks, but at a price.

"We are a strong player in the market," said Tommy Cvitanovich, owner of famed Drago's Seafood Restaurant in Metairie, a New Orleans suburb. "I've got a few more cards to play with some other people."

Nevertheless, Cvitanovich says the price he pays for Gulf oysters has nearly doubled since the spill. He pledges not to pass those price increases along to customers, but may remove some oyster dishes from his menu.

Meanwhile, he says if prices continue to rise, more and more restaurants will be forced to drop the Louisiana staple from their menus.

"Oysters have reached the ceiling," Cvitanovich says. "At some point, restaurateurs or consumers will only pay so much."

At Zydeco's Cajun Restaurant in Belle Chasse, owner Raelynn Scott pulled shrimp from her menu a week ago and put an end to the restaurant's all-you-can-eat shrimp special.

When she can get shrimp, Scott says the cost has increased by more than 50 percent. The restaurant has raised the prices of some seafood dishes.

"We pretty much ate the cost for about a month and finally had to make some adjustments temporarily," Scott said.

None of that matters anymore back at Debbie's, where the paper menu still hangs on the wall next to the idle cash register.

As a small restaurant — the yellow, narrow building at the center of town only has one table inside — Guillot has no leverage with seafood distributors. Near the end, she made po-boys with shrimp from her own home freezer.

"When I knew I couldn't get the seafood like I wanted, it brought my business down," Guillot said. "For everything that you need to have in a business, I would have been working in here for nothing, and I didn't want to do it anymore."

"I will miss it."

Then, she locked the front door of the restaurant — adorned with a sign that reads "Welcome Friends" — one last time.

Early iPhone 4 owners in grip of reception problem

SEATTLE (AP) — First there's the anticipation. Then, the long lines, followed by the triumphant walk out of the Apple store, new gadget in hand.

Now, inevitably, the first slew of complaints are in, among them that just holding the iPhone 4 a certain way can interfere with calls.

Apple Inc. redesigned the fourth generation of its smart phone, replacing sloping edges with a stainless steel band that wraps around the more squared-off sides. The metal band acts like a sturdy skeleton for the delicate phone, and it does double duty as the device's antenna.

The iPhone 4 went on sale Thursday morning in the U.S., the U.K., France, Germany and Japan. Within hours, some early buyers posted messages on Apple's customer support website, complaining that gripping the gadget in ways that covered small black lines in the steel band could cause the number of "bars" — the indicator of call signal strength — to plummet.

Some people said the iPhone 4 would disconnect mid-call when the phone was nestled in their hands in such a way that the lower-left corner of the device was covered.

While some iPhone owners reported no problems at all, others say the issue is intermittent: "It's only every once and a while," Lawrence Ho, 27, said outside the Apple store on New York's Fifth Avenue on Friday.

In the U.S., this issue will be piled on top of existing iPhone service complaints. AT&T Inc. is the only carrier in the U.S. with the iPhone, and its wireless network hasn't been able to keep up with growing demand for the gadget. In big cities especially, iPhone users complain of frequent dropped calls.

Natalie Kerris, an Apple spokeswoman, called such problems "a fact of life for every wireless phone."

She recommended avoiding holding the iPhone 4 in ways that block the black line, or buying a case for the phone.

Market Volatility

I have heard that banking legend JP Morgan made the sage understatement "Stocks tend to fluctuate." While he lived over a century ago, it would be challenging to better summarize today's marketplace in just four words. The talk in some financial circles is that the market volatility seen in recent months may become the new normal. If so, you could benefit from a better understanding of the financial vehicles that are funding your retirement.

Recently, a new client described to me his current portfolio holdings. When we reviewed his documents, I saw something completely different. As we attempted to reconcile this tale two portfolios, the client realized his recollection was not accurate. It had been several years since he had made the effort to review his retirement holdings with a financial professional. Staying abreast of your portfolio and its objectives can prevent missteps on the path to your retirement goals.

Becoming a better informed investor can start with a conversation between you and your investment adviser. Let them know that you want a better grasp of the risks and merits of your financial holdings. For many wage earners, the primary source of retirement income is their 401(k). If this describes you, I caution that a 15 minute annual meeting with your retirement planner may not provide sufficient understanding of your retirement selections.

Consider that many employer sponsored retirement plans offer mutual fund options that include balanced funds and bond funds. These fund classes are typically viewed as more conservative than other mutual fund options. But today's historically low interest rates place these funds in an environment that may challenge their ability to maintain their current valuations.

A knowledgeable instructor once told me "Until the law of supply and demand is repealed; when interest rates rise, bond prices will decline." This witty observation is consistent with economic history. Bond funds, by definition, hold bonds and balanced funds often place 30% or more of their holdings in bonds. A rising interest rate environment could create considerable headwinds for this type of holding. Thus, the wage earner that selected this fund class for his 401(k) may underestimate the risk of these holdings in today's environment.

This observation is not an indictment of the retirement plan or a particular fund selection. It is offered as a valid illustration of the need to better understand the retirement landscape in an economic world that has seen significant changes. Despite new pressures to retire later in life, many of today's workers will spend a significant part of their life in retirement. Don't you owe it to yourself to get a better handle on this part of your life?

My office provides personalized retirement account reviews without cost or obligation. We take a friendly approach to understanding this vital topic. Whether you need to start planning for retirement or would like to better understand the financial vehicles you have, I welcome the opportunity to visit with you.

Ruby Ethel Gochnour

BURLEY — Ruby Ethel (Fullerton) Gochnour, 84, of Burley, died peacefully Sunday, June 20, 2010, at Parke View Rehabilitation and Care Center surrounded by family.

Ruby was born Nov. 4, 1925, in Brown County, Minn., the eighth child of Herbert and Elizabeth Jensen Fullerton. At age 2, her family moved to Glasgow, Mont., where Ruby grew up and was the first one in her family to attend and graduate from high school. She then came to Burley to help her brother, Earl, with his family. She worked at Shelley Processing in Burley, where she met her lifelong friend, Emma Gochnour. Ruby and Emma decided to go to California during the war years and stayed with Emma's sister, Anna. Ruby and Emma got jobs as "riveters" for Lockheed Aircraft.

They moved back to Burley in 1945 and, when Emma's brother returned home from the war in July, Emma got them together. In December 1945, Ruby married the love of her life, Ted Gochnour. They were married for 42 wonderful years before Ted passed away in 1988. Ted farmed and milked cows and together, they raised their five daughters. In the early '60s, Ruby went back to school and then back to work. Ruby worked at JC Penney and later for Dr. Anest, the Cassia Memorial Hospital, in the lab at the sugar factory and for Dr. Ellingham.

Ruby loved to travel. She achieved her goal of visiting each of the 50 United States, Canada, Mexico, Australia and New Zealand (twice) with friends and family. Her family was the light of her life and she loved to play games with the grandchildren whenever they came over. Ruby loved people and was loved by most everyone she met. She was active in several card groups after retirement. She was a very caring and giving lady. Ruby was a longtime member of the Burley First Christian Church, where she was very active in the Christian Women's Fellowship. Wherever you saw Ruby, you heard laughter. In 1983, when Ted's health failed with Parkinson's disease, Ruby chose to retire so she could take care of him full time. She lovingly cared for him in their home until he died in 1988.

Ruby is survived by her daughters, Kathy (Ray) Muir and Gail (Walt) Fisher of Burley, Susi (Mike) McCall of Rupert, Jani (Lyle) DeMond of Caldwell and Mary (Ernie) Monroe of Boise; 11 grandchildren; 25 great-grandchildren; and three great-great-grandchildren. Also surviving her is a brother, Hal (Estela) Fullerton of Missoula, Mont.; her sisters, Blanche (Dorval) Kittleson and Arnetta Braaten of Glasgow, Mont.; and a special sister-in-law, Emma (Gochnour) Fisher of Burley. She was preceded in death by her parents, her husband, four brothers, six sisters, two grandchildren and a great-granddaughter.

A special thank you goes out to all who helped Ruby through the past few years of her life — those at Highland Estates, Parke View, the hospice nurses and especially Dr. James Spackman.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Wednesday, June 30, at the Burley First Christian Church, 1401 Oakley Ave. in Burley. Burial will be in the Pleasant View Cemetery. Friends may call from 6 until 8 p.m. Tuesday, June 29, at the Rasmussen Funeral Home, 1350 E. 16th St. in Burley, and from 10 until 10:45 a.m. Wednesday at the church.

Harland W. Wilson

BLISS — Harland W. Wilson, 83, died Friday, June 25, 2010, at the Lincoln County Care Center in Shoshone, Idaho.

Co.; Harland stayed on and managed the ranch until 1979.

He then purchased a home in Jerome and moved there. Not wanting to work for someone else, he purchased a truck and two trailers and started his trucking career. Harland and Kate divorced at this time and he continued trucking, going to nearly every state in the Continental United States. In 1984, Harland married Linda Rebold Richardson in Winnemucca, Nev., and they lived in Hagerman. Harland then sold his truck and they moved to Montrose, Colo., where Linda had family. While there, he worked for a small firm winding transformers. The firm then moved to Pampa, Texas, and Harland and Linda followed them there, where he continued to wind transformers and Linda was office manager until he retired and they then moved back to Bliss. Harland suffered a stroke in 2005 and has been in a care center since. He was an avid outdoorsman that loved hunting, fishing, camping and being with family.

Harland was the first child born to Roscoe H. Wilson and Zetta L. Caudle Wilson in Kuna, Idaho, on June 1, 1927. Harland spent his early years in Owyhee County, going the first years of school in Riddle and while growing up there and going to school, he worked for various ranchers in and around Riddle. When Harland graduated from the eighth grade, he could no longer stay at home and go to school in Riddle, as Riddle only had an elementary school. Harland then went to Bruneau and lived with his Uncle Ralph and Aunt Donna and started high school in Bruneau. During Harland's first year of high school, the family moved to Hagerman and then he was able to transfer to Hagerman for his high school. Harland's high school was interrupted when he was drafted into the U.S. Army in 1945, before he finished high school. He served with occupation forces in Japan and Korea. When he was discharged from the Army, he returned to Hagerman and finished his high school education, graduating two years late. After high school, he attended Southern Idaho College of Education at Albion, Idaho, where he majored in education and played football. After his college days, he married Kathryn Ashmead of Gooding. To this union, two children were born, Judy K and Michael H. When Judy was born, they moved to Boise, Idaho, where Harland drove oil tanker truck for Utah Oil Co. In the fall of 1959, they purchased a large farm and ranch in Camas Prairie, where they farmed and ranched until they sold to an Eastern Investment Harland is survived by his wife, Linda of Bliss; son, Michael (Cindy) of Nampa; daughter, Judy (Don) Coleman of Virginia Beach, Va.; five grandchildren; brother, Bill (Ruth) of Hagerman; brother, Frank (Suana) of Los Angeles, Calif.; sister, Mary Bunn of Bliss; and two stepsons, Judd of Montrose, Colo., and Jon of Houston, Texas. He was preceded in death by his parents and two sisters, Helen and Eleanor.

A graveside service will be conducted at 11 a.m. Tuesday, June 29, at the Hagerman Cemetery. Arrangements are under the direction of Demaray Funeral Service, Gooding Chapel.

Republicans say Obama, Pelosi, Reid pushing Idaho to the right

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

IDAHO FALLS — Republicans at the 2010 state convention said their shift right this weekend has its roots not just in home-grown GOP ranks, but in the man many in Idaho's dominant party see as their arch political enemy: President Barack Obama.

Add a healthy dose of Democratic U.S. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, and Idaho GOP leaders say there's a trifecta of villains in Washington, D.C., to rally against. That has the state party's most-faithful hewing even more closely to their conservative roots.

Take the party's new platform, updated Saturday to include a loyalty test for candidates, a provision recommending Idaho withhold taxes from the federal government, further efforts to limit marriage to "naturally born" men and women — even a GOP-sanctioned admonishment for residents to stock up on gold and silver to gird against the ravages of U.S. dollar inflation, should it come to that.

"It does reflect a change," said Rep. Marv Hagedorn, a GOP legislator from Meridian and a delegate. "But it's not a change in our party, it's a change in the White House."

Saturday's meeting, with red-meat speeches by U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo and Jim Risch, drew to a close the third and final day of the state Republicans' biennial confab where more than 500 delegates set their philosophical underpinnings through 2012. Their message was clear: The Beltway is the root of all evil, leaving the task of propping up the Republic to Idaho residents in places like Montpelier, or Rupert, or Bonners Ferry, or Island Park.

"As bad as you think Washington is, it's worse," Risch said, calling it a haven for "mindless spending."

"The solutions are not in Washington," he said. "The solutions are here with you."

Two years ago, the convention in Sandpoint was a divisive affair, with newcomers to party politics made up of supporters of libertarian-leaning Texas congressman Ron Paul in the 2008 presidential election encountering stiff, sometimes acrimonious resistance from traditional Idaho Republicans.

These newcomers ousted then-Chairman Kirk Sullivan, replacing him with Norm Semanko, who won re-election Saturday.

But two tea party movement backers, Marla Lawson for secretary and Todd Hatfield for second vice chair, were installed on the party's executive committee, giving the conservative wing of the party more clout.

By this weekend, this group was and ready to consolidate its power — and dictate the philosophical terms by which Republicans in the state will live by for the next two years.

Those terms now include a recommendation to revise Idaho's Constitution to give Idaho the right to take over federally managed U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management territory.

"We are better stewards of our land than the bozos on the East Coast," said Bill Roberts, a GOP delegate from Boise County.

Again and again, the federal government was on the receiving end of criticism.

"Washington, D.C., is literally stealing the dreams of our children, right before our eyes!" Idaho public schools chief Tom Luna told a receptive crowd.

Robert Dunlap, Death Valley prospector, dies at 87

By Phil Willon
Los Angeles Times

Known for his tall tales and a brush with the homicidal Manson family in the 1960s, Robert "Ballarat Bob" Dunlap was one of the last Death Valley prospectors who dynamited and burrowed through the Panamint Valley in search of riches.

Dunlap died of cancer at the VA Medical Center in Loma Linda on June 1, joining the likes of Seldom-Seen Slim, Panamint Tom and other well-known desert characters now laid to rest near Ballarat, an abandoned blast furnace of a town in Inyo County. He was 87.

With his wily humor and knack for self-promotion, Dunlap often referred to himself as "Ballarat Bob, a legend in his own time." Most longtime residents of the nearby town of Trona knew Dunlap or had at least heard of him and, though he killed a man in the 1970s after an argument, his friends remember him as a colorful old-timer with a warm spirit.

"He was a desert character, the likes of Seldom-Seen Slim and others. He was a miner. He drank a lot, he smoked a lot, just like all those guys did," said Patrick Hannon, 75, who knew Dunlap for decades. "But he was famously known for spreading B.S., if you know what I mean."

Dunlap also crossed paths with Charles Manson and his followers in 1968 when they settled at Barker Ranch, 20 miles east of Trona, the spot where they were arrested a year later.

"I got my picture taken with Manson — with the girls too," Dunlap told the Los Angeles Times in 2006.

Dunlap at the time had been sort of a caretaker at Barker Ranch, where he kept a pack of wild burros for prospecting expeditions, according to Ed Sanders, whose book "The Family" provided one of the first detailed accounts of Manson's life and crimes.

In a phone interview from his home in Woodstock, N.Y., Sanders referred to Dunlap as a "bit player in a big tragedy."

Sanders said he first met Dunlap in 1970 at the Ballarat general store, drinking an Olympia beer, just months after Manson's arrest.

"He was one of these guys who went around leaving claims in tobacco cans here and there," Sanders said. Dunlap guided Sanders around and recalled once asking Manson to round up his burros, the author said.

"Ballarat Bob looked a bit like a 50-year-old, tan, muscular version of the artist R. Crumb. His white hair was parted in the middle, and he sported a little white beard," Sanders wrote in the book, first published in 1971. "He had fond memories of the Family, especially the girls, who must have seemed to him — a crusty storyteller loner ore-hound — like moist manna from the heaven of instant gratification never before seen in them thar hills."

MAKING SENSE OF INVESTING

Virtual school teacher offers 1,516 lessons and counting

By Lisa M. Krieger
San Jose Mercury News

SAN JOSE, Calif. — From a tiny closet in Mountain View, Calif., Salman Khan is educating the globe for free.

His 1,516 videotaped mini-lectures — on topics ranging from simple addition to vector calculus and Napoleonic campaigns — are transforming the former hedge fund analyst into a YouTube sensation, reaping praise from even reluctant students across the world.

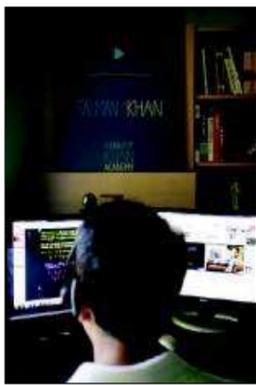

"I'm starting a virtual school for the world, teaching things the way I wanted to be taught," explains Khan, 33, the exuberant founder and sole faculty member of the nonprofit Khan Academy, run out of his small ranch house, which he shares with his wife and infant son.

Khan has never studied education and has no teaching credentials. His brief and low-tech videos, created in the corner of his bedroom, are made with a $200 Camtasia Recorder, $80 Wacom Bamboo Tablet and a free copy of SmoothDraw3 on a home PC.

But every day, his lectures are viewed 70,000 times — double the entire student body of UC Berkeley. His viewers are diverse, ranging from rural preschoolers to Morgan Stanley analysts to Pakistani engineers. Since its inception in 2006, the Khan Academy website has recorded more than 16 million page views.

At a time when conventional education is under stress, his project has caught the attention of educators and venture capitalists such as John Doerr, who just invested $100,000 to help pay Khan's salary.

company 37signals, said he invested in Khan's nonprofit because "the next bubble to burst is higher education. It's too expensive. It's too much one-size-fits-all. This is an alternative way to think about teaching — simple, personal, free and moving at your own pace."

With a computer science degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and an MBA from Harvard, Khan settled into a lucrative position at Sand Hill Road's Wohl Capital Management, while his wife studied medicine at Stanford.

Then, his young cousin Nadia started struggling in math. In afternoon long-distance conference calls to Louisiana, Khan taught her "unit conversions" using Yahoo Doodle as a shared notepad. He wrote JavaScripts to generate random algebra problems.

Soon Nadia's brothers and other far-flung family members wanted help, too. Frustrated by scheduling tutoring sessions around work, soccer schedules and different time zones, he simply posted his talks on YouTube.

"Then somebody searched YouTube for 'greatest common divisor,'" he said with a laugh. Web traffic now soars 10 percent a month.

His approach is learn-as-you-go. Students can start anywhere in the curriculum. Stumped? Simply stop the video, and repeat. He's off camera and conversational. Lessons are bite-size. The modules offer immediate feedback — what's right, what's wrong. There's conceptual progression.

Some lessons — in math, computer science and physics — are spontaneous, as Khan works from memory. Other topics, such as cellular respiration or the Haitian revolution, are more scripted. He immerses himself in material, roaming the aisles of the used bookstore BookBuyers. When stuck on a question, he calls experts.

"I just ponder things, until they're clear," he said.

So clear that Felix Thibodeau, 11, of Wilmington, N.C., can enjoy math.

"I think he rocks. I'm studying pre-algebra and I love it," he said in an e-mail message to the San Jose Mercury News.

Saudi dentist Fawaz Sait wrote: "He deserves a Nobel Prize."

It's not possible to verify the accuracy of each video. But in their testimonials, students say Khan helped them master the material — particularly math.

"I learned more about calculus in the last few hours than in the whole of the last semester at university," said Derek Hoy, majoring in geological science/geophysics at Australia's University of Queensland. "I was almost ready to change majors, because I wasn't understanding a lot of the content but am now up to speed."

Khan laughed. "I'm the 'Dear Abby' of math problems. But if you understand something, shouldn't you be able to explain it? Isn't that the whole point?"

Ready for Roundup? At long last, just maybe

The GM debate — genetically modified agricultural products — has roiled through cyberspace and the environmental community worldwide for a quarter century now.

And in all that time, the evidence of GM's harm to humans is thin.

So cheers — and from Idaho's agriculture community, thanks — to the U.S. Supreme Court for restoring a measure of common sense to the debate.

In a 7-1 decision last Monday, the high court upheld the planting of alfalfa seeds engineered to be resistant to Monsanto's Roundup herbicide.

The ruling shifted the focus of the environmental dispute to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which under the ruling can now consider allowing planting. It would be an interim measure while the USDA finishes an environmental impact statement that ultimately might clear the way for unrestricted planting.

The USDA says Roundup Ready alfalfa can reduce costs and yield more valuable hay because it contains fewer weeds.

The court's decision is expected to have a significant impact on southern Idaho, which is the second-largest producer of alfalfa in the nation. Dairy cows are the primary consumer of alfalfa.

In 2009, Idaho produced more than $550 million in alfalfa that was sold to both foreign and domestic markets — Twin Falls County was the largest producer in the Gem State.

The justices said last week that a federal judge in San Francisco went too far when he placed a nationwide ban on Roundup Ready alfalfa seeds because of the possibility they would contaminate other plants.

The ruling wasn't an unalloyed victory for Monsanto, though, according to Barry Estabrook, who writes about food science issues for The Atlantic magazine.

"Even though Monsanto technically won, the most important parts of the lower court's decision were upheld, meaning there are still many regulatory hurdles GM alfalfa has to clear before it can be legally planted on a commercial scale. And in a decision that may have wide-reaching effects on future GM cases, the justices agreed that GM crops could cause environmental harm through cross-pollination."

The decision may affect a similar fight being waged over Monsanto's Roundup-tolerant sugar beet seeds.

A federal district judge in Oregon is scheduled to begin hearings next month on whether Roundup Ready sugar beet seed can be planted before an environmental impact statement is completed. Beet growers hope the recent Roundup Ready alfalfa case will set a precedent.

Before Roundup Ready sugar beets were approved, it cost growers $50 to $60 an acre to send hoeing crews through sugar beet fields to remove the weeds that herbicides had missed.

Alfalfa, the fourth-most-planted U.S. crop behind corn, soybeans and wheat, is worth $9 billion a year, with annual seed sales valued at $63 million, according to a USDA study. Dairy cows are the primary consumers of alfalfa hay.

A draft environmental impact statement released in December reported no significant effect from the seeds on the environment or human health. About 5,500 growers planted 263,000 acres of Roundup Ready alfalfa before the ban went into effect, including several in southern Idaho, Monsanto says.

For centuries, Monsanto advances in science have allowed farmers to earn a better living. Now, maybe, more of them can again.

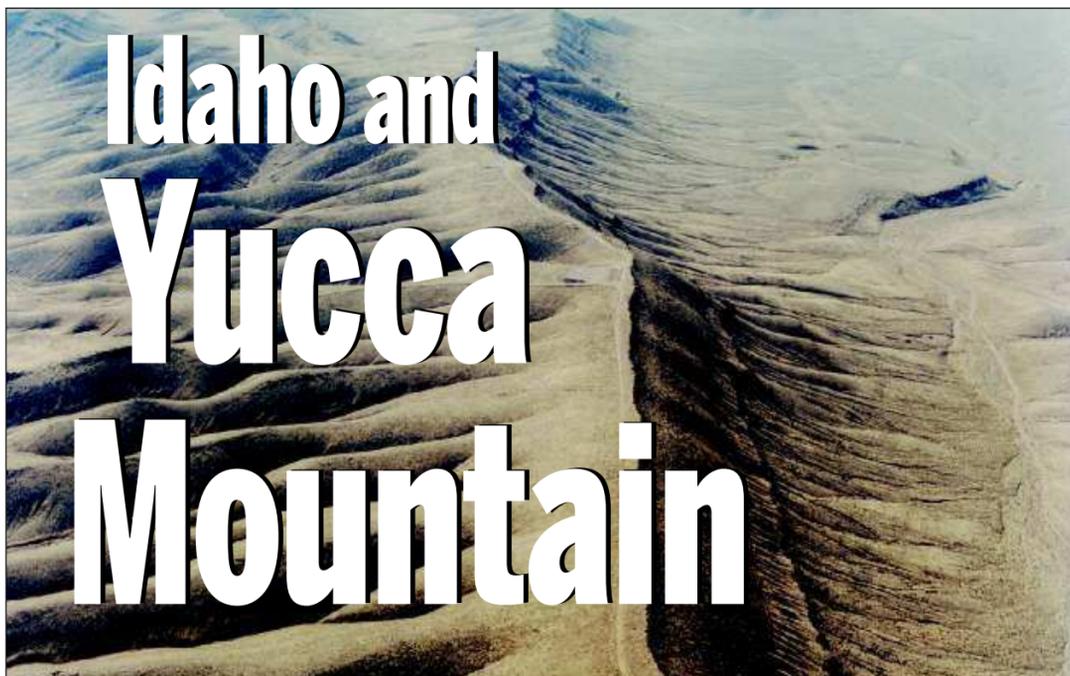

About this case

Roundup Ready alfalfa is a genetically modified variety, patented by Monsanto Company, that is resistant to Monsanto's glyphosate. Although most broadleaf plants, including ordinary alfalfa, are sensitive to Roundup, growers can spray fields of Roundup Ready alfalfa with Roundup, and so kill the weeds without harming the alfalfa crop.

Roundup Ready alfalfa was sold in the United States from 2005-2007. But in 2006, organic farmers, concerned about the impact of GM alfalfa on their crops, sued Monsanto. In response, in May 2007, the California Northern District Court issued an injunction order prohibiting farmers from planting Roundup Ready alfalfa until the U.S. Department of Agriculture completed a study on the genetically engineered crop's likely environmental impact. As a result, the USDA put a hold on any further planting of Roundup Ready alfalfa.

The key issues of the lawsuit were the possibility that Roundup Resistance could be transmitted to other plants, including both other crops and weeds, making major pest species resistant to Roundup.

Idaho and Yucca Mountain

Whatever happens in Nevada, INL on track with nuclear waste

By John J. Grossenbacher

Idahoans are now considering what the Yucca Mountain license application withdrawal could mean for Idaho, and newspaper columns — including editorials in the Lewiston Tribune and the Times-News — will surely contribute to the public discourse.

Because an informed citizenry is critical for productive discussions, I'm writing to address some issues raised in recent editorials.

Both editorials said the Yucca issue matters to Idaho because the federal government has several deadlines to meet under terms of the 1995 Idaho Settlement Agreement, including removing used nuclear fuel from Idaho by 2035. The Tribune envisioned a "political firestorm" reignited in Idaho if the 2035 commitment looks like it may be missed.

The fact is, DOE and its contractors are safely meeting the Settlement Agreement commitments made to the state of Idaho for managing used nuclear fuel and nuclear waste.

More than 90 percent of the used fuel at the Idaho site is now in dry storage containers. These robust containers have no moving parts and require no human action to isolate the used fuel. The rest of the used fuel is in modern wet storage.

Plutonium-contaminated materials brought into Idaho during the 1950s and 1960s and buried in pits are being exhumed, characterized, repackaged and shipped to New Mexico for disposal. Radioactive waste stored in Idaho for decades is on schedule to be out of the state as early as 2015, years

YUCCA MOUNTAIN TIMELINE

- 1982 — Congress passes the Nuclear Waste Policy Act, requiring the establishment of a deep geologic repository for nuclear waste storage and isolation. Two repositories are to be developed, one on each side of the country, to ensure regional equity. A detailed selection and evaluation process is to be carried out by the U.S. Department of Energy. The Nuclear Waste Fund is established to finance this process. Companies that own and operate nuclear power plants are required to pay into the fund via a fee on electricity they generate; the companies pass the cost to ratepayers.
- 1983 — DOE chooses nine locations in six states for consideration as potential repository sites.
- 1984 — DOE issues site suitability guidelines for a repository based on the requirements of the Nuclear Waste Policy Act.
- 1986 — President Reagan approves three locations for intensive study as repository sites: Hanford, Wash.; Deaf Smith County, Texas, and Yucca Mountain, Nev.
- 1987 — Congress amends the 1982 legislation, stopping the repository selection process. Yucca Mountain, about 80 miles north of Las Vegas, is designated as the only site to be considered further. Research on granite rock, and efforts to develop a second repository in the East, are halted.
- 1996 — As evidence mounts indicating the ability of water to move rapidly through the volcanic rock at Yucca Mountain, it becomes increasingly clear that Yucca Mountain does not have the natural geological and hydrological characteristics necessary to serve as a "primary barrier" in containing radioactive waste. As a result, there is an increasing reliance on engineered barriers in the proposal for containing waste at Yucca Mountain.

• 2000 — After several years of proposals and rulemaking, the DOE issues new site suitability guidelines for Yucca Mountain. These new guidelines do not include many requirements of the Nuclear Waste Policy Act. Factors that qualify or disqualify Yucca Mountain from development as a repository are no longer specified.

• 2001 — In January, several environmental and public interest organizations and the state of Nevada file lawsuits against the Environmental Protection Agency, the DOE and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, challenging the Yucca Mountain project. In February, Bechtel SAIC becomes the primary management and operations contractor at Yucca Mountain. Its five-year, $3.1 billion contract includes $133.2 million in various awards and performance incentives for meeting deadlines and performing work to certain standards.

• 2002 — Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham officially recommends to President Bush that a nuclear waste repository be developed at Yucca Mountain. The president approves the recommendation the next day. In July, both the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate override Nevada's objection with a majority vote, and so Congress designates Yucca Mountain as the site for the nation's first nuclear waste repository. DOE begins work on its license application to the NRC.

• 2004 — In July, the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals, ruling on the 2001 lawsuits, finds the EPA's 10,000-year compliance period for radiation protection at Yucca Mountain illegal. As a result, the EPA must reissue its compliance period rule. The NRC also must reissue its licensing rule, which is based on the EPA's regulations.

• 2005 — DOE unveils plan for above-ground nuclear waste storage of up to 46.3 million pounds at Yucca Mountain. In May, a federal judge denies Western Shoshone's lawsuit against project.

• 2006 — In November election, Democrats take control of U.S. Senate and Sen. Harry Reid of Nevada, an avowed opponent of the Yucca Mountain project, becomes majority leader.

• 2007 — In October, DOE issues environmental studies and certifies license application document database complete. In December, Congress cuts Yucca Mountain budget to $390 million in fiscal 2008, $104 million less than Bush requested.

• 2008 — Barack Obama, a Yucca Mountain opponent, is elected president.

• 2009 — Energy Secretary Steven Chu announces plans to halt Yucca Mountain development.

• 2010 — In February, the DOE announces it will discontinue its applications to the NRC for a license to construct a high-level waste geological repository at Yucca Mountain. In June, Nevada Republicans nominate Sharron Angle — a proponent of developing Yucca Mountain — to oppose Reid in the November election.

The sounds of silence at Melba High

By Bill Cope

Iprepared the following speech in May after learning that the Melba School Board had decided to drop all of its secondary music programs. No more band. No more chorus. Not in Melba.

I then called the district office over there and notified some nice lady that I was available to deliver the commencement address. She said she'd pass it on up the food chain, but I never heard anything back. By now, I assume the Class of '10 has graduated and already sent their caps and gowns back to the rental

Editor's note: Westword is a weekly selection of commentary from Western newspapers and other media outfit. I hate like hell to see a good commencement address go to waste, though. So I present it to you, my readers. And if you take from it the inspiring message that you can be anything you dream of being, you got the wrong damn message. Better read it again, and pay attention this time.

Congratulations Melba seniors, and Goooooo Mustangs!!!

But seriously, graduates, you're getting out just in time, did you know that? Especially you band and choir kids. You may well be the last of your kind. Maybe at some point in the future, you can sit your little brothers and sisters down and tell them what a bitter-sweet blessing it was to have played the last Sousa march or sung in the last spring concert ever performed in Melba.

Or maybe it's better they never find out what they missed. And let us pray there is no nascent Mozart or Wynton Marsalis or Joan Sutherland coming up through the Melba school system. What a tragedy that is, eh? Talent with no place to go?

It was nothing personal, kids. The School Board was only doing what it was told had to be done. The state Legislature informed them — along with every other school district in Idaho — that sacrifices had to be made. An overall 7.5 percent sacrifice, actually, according to the boys who run the state. They left it up to the individual districts to decide where that pound of flesh was coming from.

So your district ripped the throat out of its music programs. Meridian is lopping off chunks of teacher salaries and bus routes. Undoubtedly, there will be a few districts that shave off their girls' sports, while others dump the drama department and the art classes. The Boise system recently eliminated 60 positions, and the slashery has just begun. Another year like this, and students might be expected to provide their own lighting and heat when they come to class.

If you've followed the news like your social studies teacher told you to, you'll know this isn't just an Idaho problem. There's hardly a state left that hasn't watched their school budgets turned into the thinnest of gruel. It's a damn bad time to be a youngster, let me tell you. Particularly if you're a youngster with visions of accomplishment dancing in your head. I can well imagine employers of the future looking at your resumes and saying, "Oh dear, you attended public schools during the Bush Recession? Why, Child, you might as well have never gone to school at all!"

Now, it's always possible you will make up for in college what you were screwed out of in public schools. If you can afford to go, that is. I'm sure you're aware our universities are stuck in the same mud hole public schools are in, only they can do something public schools can't. It's called "tuition," and apparently, there's no limit to how high it can be raised.

You can borrow the money to educate yourself, of course. You might even get the loan paid off by the time your own children reach college age ... assuming the career you dreamed of having wasn't shipped out to some country with a better-educated work force. And given what's happening to America's middle class, the day's coming when the countries with a more educated work force than ours will be about all of 'em.

It's depressing, but not for everyone. Say you happen to come from a family of America's wealthiest — the Top 20-Centers, let us call them — things are looking sweeter all the time. If you track it back ... oh, say ... 30 years — maybe to about the time Ronald Reagan got his tax cuts for the rich (which, incidentally, marks the beginning of that rapid decline in this country's educational opportunities) — you will be pleased to know that you and your upper-crust mates have increased your share of America's total wealth from 80 to 85 percent. Figure the top 1 percent — the super rich — owns about half of that, while the bottom 80th percentile has to scrap over whatever's left: the 15 percent that sticks to the bottom of the barrel.

Even better: While everyone else's income has decreased in real terms, income has increased dramatically at the top of this lop-sided pyramid — one of the benefits of naming your own bonuses, I suppose. And then when George Bush piled on more tax cuts for the rich, the good life's only gotten gooder. Bigger houses, bigger boats, bigger cars, bigger vacations. Hell, you can even afford a lobbyist firm or two to make sure those tax breaks keep a-comeing!

But let's get back to your reality, kids. All of that rosy outlook stuff applies only if you belong to the Top 20-Centers. And it's not very likely any of them would be graduating from Melba High School, is it? The rest of you are sitting out here in the desert, waiting to see what gets cut next — from your schools, from your children, from your lives — and listening to your leaders drone on about how wrong it is to raise taxes on those who do the producing in this great land of ours — even if all they seem to be producing anymore is a land of lost blessings and disappearing opportunities.

Best of luck, Mustangs. You're gonna need it.

Too many Idahoans get free ride on taxes

Gov. Otter, et al., made deep cuts to Idaho's universities, to local schools and teachers and to many community, environmental and indigent services rather than reduce sales tax exemptions for special interests. Nor would they fully fund pursuing the $60 million in tax delinquencies from the likes of Republican House Revenue and Taxation Committee member Phil Hart (who reportedly owes Idaho $53,000).

Supposedly every effort was made to spare education, cutting other favorite Republican targets even deeper. Yet, educational cuts were among the largest total dollars axed, and arguably the most significant cuts impacting Idaho's future amounting to eating the seed corn. The Legislature's website says 2009 sales tax collections were barely $1.2 billion while $1.7 billion were exempted.

Instead of adjusting the exemptions, Otter, et al., threw the education system and Idaho's students under the school bus. Meanwhile, the Tax Foundation says Idaho is the 13th-highest taxed state. Do we get the 13th-best return in the country on state and local taxes? Tax exemptions are socialism for the influential. Eliminating exemptions would halve the sales tax rate. Ordinary Idahoans pay higher sales tax so the well connected and ideological darlings of the Legislature can get a free ride.

To see who else's sales taxes you pay rather than them paying their fair share during these tough times, go to www.legislature.idaho.gov/budget/publications/PDFs/FiscalFacts/2009/FFFrame.htm. Click sales tax exemptions.

A 10 to 15 percent adjustment in giveaways would have put Idaho in the black without closing one-third of our HHS offices, without educational cuts and without dozens of other lost services that Idaho's citizens will endure while being disproportionately taxed for their share of the pain.

It's time to end the Idaho Republican monopoly on power. We can start by electing Keith Allred for governor and Stan Olson for Idaho superintendent of education.

Cuts to education will put students further behind

I'm a son of two public educators and a student of biology at Idaho State University. The sadness of the American school system transcends smaller paychecks brought home by my parents and teachers throughout the country.

In a study done by the Program for International Student Assessment, 15-year-old students were tested on their applied learning and problem-solving skills. Thirty industrialized countries participated, and the United States ranked 24th in science and 25th in math. The study was done in 2006. The sadness now becomes more troublesome considering we are now producing students whose test scores are comparable with countries like Portugal and the Slovak Republic.

Top scoring nations included Canada, the Netherlands, Korea and Australia. Interestingly enough, the latter countries are stronger competitors for service sector and high value jobs. Now, Twin Falls students are facing 13 fewer days spent in the classroom. My parents now lose almost half a month of working with and teaching our community's youth. This is what brings educators to tears.

The frustration that results from wanting to provide the best education Twin Falls students deserve and doing so with shortened school years, unattainable classroom resources, fewer faculty, absent technology and misinformed opinions of their profession.

Gooding to get new building for flower show

The Gooding Garden Society had wonderful news at our June meeting. Don Gill called and told us a new building was being built for the flower show at the fairgrounds. It would have air conditioning. We are so excited as it is hard to keep flowers alive in the heat of August in a building without the air. We have been having containers with living plants and flowers, and they have been so beautiful and survived without air conditioning. We decided to continue with them as the public was very impressed, but we will also have bouquets in a vase of the person's choice.

I'm inviting as many people in Gooding County to enter to show our appreciation for the new building that can. The fair book will have all the information one needs.

A call for term limits

My, haven't the greedy fat cats made a deal out of Social Security?

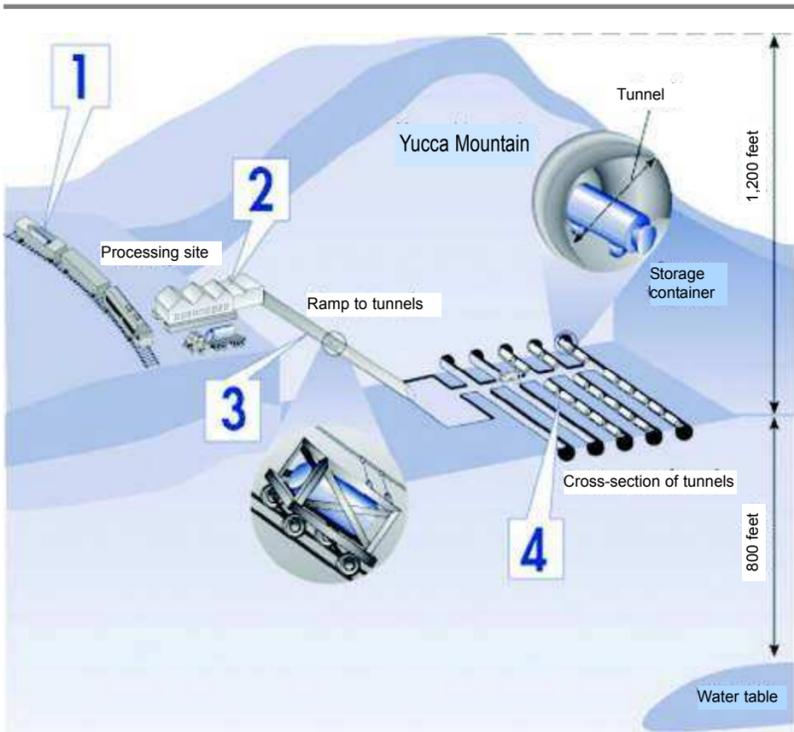

Social Security does not receive one tax dollar. This is an act FIAC to pay in advance for the baby-boom retirements. A safety net that is indispensable for millions of retired senior citizens in their "golden years." Workers have it deducted from their pay checks and it has grown to a massive surplus of $2.5 trillion now, rising to $4.3 trillion by 2023 (check it out).

The greedy fat cats' eyes are turning green looking at those figures and trying to privatize it so they can get their hands in that pot and, if they can get it done by lying to us, they will really be purring. These greedy fat cats have bought the majority of the Supreme Court and now corporations are free to give money to political candidates. McCain spent $17 million just to get the nomination to run for Senate. How do you raise that amount without being bought and tell me, are we poor we have to cut school budgets. Most of our politicians admit they spend 10 percent of their time working for the voters and 90 percent of their time scrounging for money so they can stay in office.

We can do something about this. We do not have to pretend it is someone else's problem. We owe it to our grandchildren. We can hound our legislators and start a national demand for term limits. We will hear the old crap that we will lose some good people. There are lots of good people that are not owned by anyone. All our lawmakers have local phone numbers; let them know the "little people" are fed up with that old crap that the richest nation in the world cannot educate their children or help the working class people whose incomes have decreased while the fat cats purr.

The project is on track to meet its Settlement Agreement commitment to treat the material so that it is "ready to be moved out of Idaho ... by a target date of 2035."

Idaho is where the nation first turned to explore the use of nuclear energy to generate electricity and propel ships. As the U.S. and the world work to meet our energy needs in environmentally acceptable and efficient ways, I am convinced nuclear energy will have a significant role to play for decades and, more likely, centuries.

Our Idaho National Laboratory's role in that future can be extraordinarily important and long-lasting. This will bring change to the INL site independent of any impacts of the Yucca Mountain decision.

This role and its changes will carry with them significant benefits for our state, our nation and the world — along with burdens. The details of these benefits and burdens, as well as the means for keeping them in balance, deserve serious and fact-based public discourse and thoughtful consideration as a new chapter in the history of nuclear energy is written.

Idaho's role of leadership in nuclear energy should be informed by vigorous, factual, informed and responsible public discourse.

Twin Falls cuts aren't equitable

In the 2010 Idaho Legislature, the state of Idaho cut funding for teachers and paraprofessionals (aides, kitchen, custodial, etc.) by 4 percent and administrators by 6.5 percent.

In the Twin Falls School District, teachers got cut 15 out of 192 days or 7.8 percent; administrators also got cut 15 days. Elementary vice principals have contracts for 205 days; 15/205 is 7.3 percent. Elementary principals, high school vice principals, athletic directors have contracts for 215 days; 15/215 is 6.9 percent. Middle school principals have contracts for 225 days; 15/225 is 6.7 percent. High school principals have contracts for 235 days; 15/235 is 6.4 percent. District office personnel have contracts for 255 days; 15/255 is 5.9 percent.

The state of Idaho has requested a 6.5 percent (not 5.9 percent cut). There are eight people in the district administration office plus the secretaries and other support people whose contracted days may or may not equal 255 total. Using math, this reads that they are not equivalent nor proportional cuts!

One direct quote from the superintendent to the teachers reads that the superintendent will cut his salary proportional to the teacher cut. To me that means the same percent. I would love for the teachers to have a 5.9 percent cut! That would be 11 days including Day 192. That means only 10 days cut from the calendar. Bottom line is that everyone except custodians got cut 15 days. Custodians got cut 19 days. I think they work close to the 255 days or close to the same as the Twin Falls superintendent; 19/255 is 7.4 percent, still much more than the superintendent has cut his salary.

This is still not equitable nor proportional. Their funding (school support staff) from the state was only intended to be cut 4 percent, not 7.4 percent! A year ago, the district proposed a budget for 2009 to 2010 with a carryover fund proposal of $1.9 million. The carryover is now projected to be $2.25 million at the end of this year, 2010.

That means in a year of economic decline (2010), our district increased their savings account budget by $350,000. What is wrong with this picture?

Government without any self-control

Could these men have imagined any government without the parameters of any self-control?

"Only free people can hold their purpose and their honor steady to a common end and prefer the interest of mankind to any narrow interest of their own" (Woodrow Wilson).

"A man must first govern himself ere he is fit to govern a family, and his family ere he be fit to bear the government of the commonwealth" (Sir Walter Raleigh).

"The true strength of rulers and empires lies not in armies or emotions but in the belief of men that they are inflexibly open and truthful and legal. As soon as a government departs from that standard, it ceases to be anything more than 'the gang in possession,' and its days are numbered" (H.G. Wells).

"The punishment suffered by the wise who refuse to take part in the government is to live under the government of bad men" (Plato).

If we choose to live our lives only to be entertained, to take comfort in allowing others to determine the moral level for us, we abstain from the right to complain. So we get movies with no content other than meaningless graphic sex, violence for the sake of violence, TV where profanity, drug use and illegal and abusive behavior is paraded before us as if it is normal. Can we not expect our children to believe that pleasure is the goal of life and if it's fun it must be right?

Are you even angered any more that those in government care nothing for our safety or welfare? Does it matter that China is allowed to flood our marketplace with dangerous or poisonous products? Do we care that unregulated borders allow any and all illegal substances to insinuate our population?

The U.S. Dept. of Illegal Alien Labor

President Obama's Labor Secretary Hilda Solis is supposed to represent American workers. What you need to know is that this longtime open-border sympathizer has always had a rather radical definition of "American." At a Latino voter registration project conference in Los Angeles many years ago, Solis asserted to thunderous applause, "We are all Americans, whether you are legalized or not."

That's right. The woman in charge of enforcing our employment laws doesn't give a hoot about our immigration laws — or about the fundamental distinction between those who followed the rules in pursuit of the American dream and those who didn't.

While in Congress, she opposed strengthening the border fence, supported expansion of illegal alien benefits (including driver's licenses and in-state tuition discounts), embraced sanctuary cities that refused to cooperate with federal homeland security officials to enforce immigration laws, and aggressively championed a mass amnesty. Solis was steeped in the pro-illegal alien worker organizing movement in Southern California and was buoyed by amnesty-supporting Big Labor groups led by the Service Employees International Union. She has now caused a Capitol Hill firestorm over her new taxpayer-funded advertising and outreach campaign to illegal aliens regarding fair wages:

"I'm here to tell you that your president, your secretary of labor and this department will not allow anyone to be denied his or her rightful pay — especially when so many in our nation are working long, hard and often dangerous hours," Solis says in the video pitch. "We can help, and we will help. If you work in this country, you are protected by our laws. And you can count on the U.S. Department of Labor to see to it that those protections work for you." To be sure, no one should be scammed out of "fair wages." Employers that hire and exploit illegal immigrant workers deserve full sanctions and punishment. But it's the timing, tone-deafness and underlying blanket amnesty agenda of Solis' illegal alien outreach that has so many American workers and their representatives on Capitol Hill rightly upset.

With double-digit unemployment and a growing nationwide revolt over Washington's border security failures, why has Solis chosen now to hire 250 new government field investigators to bolster her illegal alien workers' rights campaign?

Unfortunately, the federal government is not alone in lavishing attention and resources on workers who shouldn't be here in the first place. As of 2008, California, Florida, Nevada, New York, Texas and Utah all expressly included illegal aliens in their state workers' compensation plans — and more than a dozen other states implicitly cover them.

Solis' public service announcement comes on the heels of little-noticed but far more troubling comments encouraging illegal alien workers in the Gulf Coast. Earlier this month, in the aftermath of the BP oil spill, according to Spanish language publication El Diario La Prensa, Solis signaled that her department was going out of its way to shield illegal immigrant laborers involved in cleanup efforts. "My purpose is to assist the workers with respect to safety and protection," she said. "We're protecting all workers regardless of migration status because that's the federal law." She told reporters that her department was in talks with local Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials who had visited coastal worksites to try to verify that workers were legal.

No word yet on whether she gave ICE her "we are all Americans, whether you are legalized or not" lecture. But it's a safe bet.

How to prevent injury and falls?

Do you know that FALLS in adults over 65 are the most common cause of hospital admissions for trauma and the leading cause of injury-related deaths! A fall that results in a broken hip or other fracture can trigger a chain reaction of serious health problems which many times require a lengthy stay in a rehab facility and in some cases, cause such a decline in health that it results in death. FALLS can be caused by many factors. Here are some simple things that you can do to help make your home SAFER and help PREVENT falls:

- Check bone density and treat if necessary (Osteoporosis).
- Start a simple exercise program to improve strength and balance.
- Remove items on the floor, in hallways and on the stairs, use non-slip double sided tape on rugs, install grab bars in the bathroom and make sure the lighting is good.
- Review your medications regularly with your physician. Have periodic eye exams.
- Use a cane or walker, they are making some great looking canes! Overall, just be aware. Our bones grow more brittle as we age, but we can take steps to help lessen the risk of accidents or injury.

If you would like a home safety check please call

WORLD LEADERS SLAM NORTH KOREA, IRAN

Protests turn violent at site of G-20 meet

By Tom Raum and Jane Wardell
Associated Press writers

TORONTO — At odds over how to strengthen the global recovery, top world leaders found common ground on foreign policy Saturday, condemning North Korea for the alleged sinking of a South Korean warship and endorsing a five-year exit timetable for Afghanistan.

In a joint statement, the leading eight industrial democracies also criticized both Iran and North Korea for continuing their nuclear march and called on both to heed existing United Nations resolutions.

The statement on the March sinking of the South Korean ship was not as strongly worded as the United States and some other countries had hoped. Russia was cited as a holdout against tougher language.

While earlier demonstrations had been nonviolent, black-clad protesters broke off from a larger crowd on Saturday, torching police cruisers and smashing windows with baseball bats and hammers. Some demonstrators hurled bottles at police.

"This isn't our Toronto and my response is anger," Mayor David Miller told CP24 television.

After spending Friday debating the best response to the lingering global financial crisis, the G-8 leaders — representing the United States, Canada, Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Japan and Russia — focused Saturday on foreign policy, where it appeared easier to find common ground.

The Group of eight nations concluded the group's two-day meeting at a lakeside resort about 140 miles north of Toronto with a joint statement. Leaders then immediately returned to Toronto to continue their talks in the Group of 20, a broader meeting which includes countries with fast-growing economies such as China, India and Brazil.

World leaders found themselves divided on how best to keep the world economy growing after the worst recession since the 1930s. They split between calls, mainly from the U.S., for more government stimulus to keep the world from slipping back into recession, and appeals from European countries and Japan for spending cuts and even tax hikes to avoid Greece-like near defaults.

For now, the leaders have generally cooled their rhetoric and agreed that deficits must be tamed in the long term, but different countries may use different tactics in the short term, depending on their levels of indebtedness.

French President Nicolas Sarkozy told reporters that President Barack Obama "clearly talked about the risks of debt and deficit" in the U.S.

Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner said world leaders must work together to make sure the global recovery stays on track. Although the world economy has recovered somewhat, many challenges remain, Geithner told reporters.

"The scars of this crisis are still with us," he said. "If the world economy is to expand at its potential, if growth is going to be sustainable in the future, then we need to act together to strengthen the recovery and finish the job of repairing the damage of the crisis."

The back-to-back summits came amid what Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper, the host, called an "enormous crisis facing us all, serious threats to the stability, economic prosperity of every country."

Leaders were also holding one-on-one sessions on the sidelines of the two summits. Obama met separately on Saturday with Chinese President Hu Jintao, South Korean President Lee and British Prime Minister David Cameron.

Obama discussed the torpedoing of the South Korean warship with Lee during their meeting. Afterward, Obama said North Korea must be "held to account" and "we stand foursquare behind" Lee. The South Korean appealed for a "strongly worded" resolution out of the U.N. Security Council.

In their closing statement, the G-8 leaders cited an independent report that found that the ship had been sunk by a North Korean torpedo.

The leaders said: "We condemn in this context the attack which led to the sinking of the Cheonan." But the statement did not explicitly blame North Korea for the attack.

Japanese officials said that Russia was the only G-8 member to resist tougher language condemning North Korea more directly.

An official in the Russian delegation, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because the leaders were meeting, said that Russia still did not consider the results of the investigation to be final and because of this, felt that condemning Pyongyang further could lead to negative consequences.

Obama used the meeting with Lee to announce his administration would resume talks aimed at resolving issues blocking the completion of a free trade agreement with South Korea stalled since 2007. Obama said his goal would be to clear up remaining differences with Seoul by the time he visits South Korea in November. "It is the right thing to do for our country. It is the right thing to do for Korea," he said.

White House spokesman Robert Gibbs told The Associated Press that South Korean barriers to sales of U.S. autos and beef "are the outstanding issues we most want to see addressed and resolved before sending it up" to Congress. He said the administration could submit the agreement later this year "but more likely next year."

In their final statement, the G-8 countries also called Israel's current restrictions on the flow of goods to Gaza "not sustainable and must be changed."

"We welcome the decision of the Israeli Cabinet's announcement of a new policy toward Gaza as a positive development," the communique said.

U.S. teen sailor reunited with brother after ordeal at sea

SAINT-DENIS, Reunion (AP) — Sixteen-year-old Californian sailor Abby Sunderland got a big hug from her older brother Saturday on the appropriately named Reunion Island, and again defended her family for letting her try to sail around the world alone.

Though saddened by the loss of her boat in an Indian Ocean storm, Sunderland said she isn't giving up sailing.

"I'm really disappointed that things didn't go as planned," Sunderland told reporters after coming to shore early Saturday on the remote French island of Reunion, located in the waters near southeastern Africa.

Massive waves snapped her boat's mast June 10, and she was rescued in a remote area of the southern Indian Ocean two days later by a French fishing boat. It took two weeks more at sea to reach Reunion, from which she plans to fly home today.

"Any sailor that goes out to the water knows that being hit by a rogue wave is a risk, no matter where you are," said Sunderland, flanked by her 18-year-old brother Zac, who flew to Reunion to meet her. "That was a risk that I was willing to take."

Sunderland said she was as well-prepared as she could have been.

"You can't eliminate risk, you can do a lot to minimize it but it's always there," Sunderland said.

Australia and France worked together to rescue the American teenager — and they footed the hefty bills for chartering jets to find her and diverting boats to her location.

Both countries have brushed off questions about the price tag for the American teenager's solo adventure and say they have no plans to seek compensation for the maritime search and rescue operation.

Sunderland thanked everyone who helped in her rescue and acknowledged "the public debate about the cost of rescues."

"I know that the USA would do the same for a citizen of any other country as these countries did for me," she said.

Sounding composed and lucid, she choked up only once, when thanking Zac — who at 17 briefly held the record for being the youngest person to sail solo around the world — for "inspiring my dreams."

Her brother met the French patrol boat as it sailed into the harbor of Reunion's capital, Saint-Denis, climbing aboard and embracing her as Abby teared up.

The accident "ended my trip but it didn't end my dream," Sunderland said. But she blanched and didn't answer when asked whether she would try another solo circumnavigation anytime soon.

Palin decries 'Dumpster divers' at Calif. campus

TURLOCK, Calif. (AP) — Sarah Palin leveled criticism at California's attorney general and others raising questions about her visit to a cash-strapped university, telling supporters that students had better things to do than dive through Dumpsters to find out how much she earns speaking.

The former Alaska governor's headline address Friday night at the 50th anniversary celebration at California State University, Stanislaus has drawn criticism and scrutiny since it was first announced. It also attracted sizable donations for the public school.

Officials have refused to divulge the terms of her contract or her speaking fee, and some details only came to light after students fished part of what appeared to be Palin's contract from a rubbish bin.

"Students who spent their valuable, precious time diving through dumpsters before this event in order to silence someone ... what a wasted resource," she told the crowd dining in the campus cafeteria.

"A suggestion for those Dumpster divers: Instead of trying to tell people to sit down and shut up ... spend some time telling people like our president to finally stand up," she said.

The material recovered by the students, which detailed perks such as first-class airfare for two and deluxe hotel accommodations, prompted California Attorney General Jerry Brown to launch an investigation into the finances of the university's foundation arm and allegations that the nonprofit violated public disclosure laws.

New GOP fundraising group to spend millions this fall

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a campaign season of anti-establishment ferment, some of the Republican Party's best-known insiders are building an ambitious fundraising machine for the fall elections and beyond.

They started with a bang in April, cashing a $1 million check from a Texas oil magnate. After a quiet May, friends and foes are watching to see if the new organization's core group, American Crossroads, can reach its goal of raising $52 million by November.

Karl Rove, who was President George W. Bush's top political strategist, and Ed Gillespie, a former Republican Party chairman and White House aide, modeled their network on successful operations created by Democrats several years ago.

American Crossroads is a 527 organization — named for a section in the tax law — that is exempt from limits on campaign fundraising and spending that apply to party-affiliated groups. It can tap rich conservatives, such as Trevor Rees-Jones, president of Dallas-based Chief Oil and Gas, who chipped in the first $1 million.

But eyebrows rose in political circles when the group filed its next monthly report with the Internal Revenue Service, showing only $200 raised in May.

Steven Law, a former U.S.

Chamber of Commerce lawyer and now president of American Crossroads, said the group has about $30 million in pledges that Rove, Gillespie and others secured during recent trips to various cities.

"We feel very good about the progress we've made," Law said, predicting a strong fundraising report for June.

He said the idea for American Crossroads grew from talks last fall involving Rove, Gillespie and other conservatives who feel liberals outthrustled the GOP after the McCain-Feingold campaign finance law in 2002 and subsequent court rulings set new limits — and opportunities — for political activities.

Mysterious ex-con draws comparison to Jason Bourne

By Thomas Watkins
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Authorities came upon a startling and mysterious scene when they showed up at a luxury apartment in Los Angeles in April while investigating a call about a gas odor.

The door was barricaded. A cache of loaded weapons, including an AK-47, sat next to a mosaic depicting the CIA seal. They found equipment for counterfeiting money. High-powered binoculars were trained on the U.S. Federal Reserve building next door.

What followed was a six-week hunt for a suspect who had slipped out of the fire escape moments earlier and whose evasiveness drew comparisons to fictional agent Jason Bourne.

Police would eventually find their man, Brian Alexik, hiding out in his girlfriend's apartment less than a mile from where he fled. But three weeks on, detectives are still trying to figure out just who he is, what plot they may have thwarted and whether he was a lone wolf or part of a larger group.

Alexik clammed up soon after he was arrested and his trail has been harder to follow because he used at least two fake names.

The 34-year-old is originally from Edison, N.J., detectives said. In 1996, he was convicted in Middlesex County on a drug-dealing charge. Five years later, he pleaded guilty to theft by deception and was sentenced to 180 days in jail, five years probation and had to pay $1,000 in restitution to a business.

Investigators are scouring his computer hard drives and studying the alarming contents of his penthouse as they attempt to unravel the mystery.

One bedroom had been converted into a makeshift machine shop, with tools scattered around. It appeared Alexik had been manufacturing the parts of assault rifles that ammunition magazines are slotted into, said Detective Mark Severino from the Los Angeles Police Department's major crimes unit.

Detectives found a loaded sawed-off shotgun and handgun, an AK-47, ammunition and other weapons parts including a gun barrel. Ballistics tests are currently under way.

The CIA mosaic, depicting the white, starred shield with an eagle's head on a blue background, measured about 5 feet across and investigators were impressed with the quality of the tile work. They initially thought Alexik was obsessed with the spy agency.

"But there was no other evidence in there linking the CIA or his infatuation with the CIA," Severino said. "I don't know why he would do that."

A pair of binoculars was found by a tripod at the back window overlooking the Federal Reserve, but police don't know what Alexik had been watching.

Answers might lie within the hard drives of four computers seized from the apartment and being analyzed by the Secret Service.

Police said Alexik appeared to move comfortably in social circles and most of his friends were in the cosmetics and clothing industries. Investigators found designer clothes and European shoes in his apartment, along with a photo of Alexik mugging next to U2 frontman Bono.

"He could easily fool a lot of people, he could be very charming and carries himself very well," Severino said. "There was something about him that attracted these people to him."

Alexik has pleaded not guilty to 10 felonies including weapons charges, narcotics offenses and forgery. Federal weapons charges are also expected. At a recent court hearing he appeared in a blue jail jumpsuit, his brown hair dyed to a coppery orange color and swept back across his head.

His public defender did not respond to requests for comment or for an interview in the jail. If convicted of all counts he could face up to 15 years in prison.

Police believe Alexik was manufacturing fake IDs and passports, as well as counterfeiting thousands of dollars in cash. A stash of what was believed to be illegal pills and methamphetamine was also in the home.

He allegedly had been bleaching low-denomination bills then using a printer to change the value to $100 or $50. In all, police recovered about $15,000 in bogus bills.

After Alexik slipped out the back window of his apartment on April 19, detectives interviewed tenants at the downtown lofts. Alexik had been paying about $4,000 cash for his rent but had recently stopped paying and was on the verge of getting evicted, Severino said.

He also seemed to have stopped paying his electric bill — Severino noticed coils of cables running from the hallway power outlets into the apartment. The noxious odor that initially drew police reportedly came from a generator.

As investigators closed in, they arrested a friend, Gregory Koller, who was found with assault-style weapons magazines. Police are looking into whether those may have been in the duffel bags Alexik was seen lugging as he fled down the fire escape.

Hundreds of people line up hand-in-hand as part of the Hands Across the Sand event Saturday in Pensacola Beach, Fla.

Beach-goers protest offshore oil drilling

By Sara Kennedy
McClatchy Newspapers

ANNA MARIA ISLAND, Fla. — Joshua Spaid of Bradenton, Fla., sat in the soft, clean sand overlooking luscious aquamarine waters at Manatee Public Beach, and wondered whether its pristine beauty would be lost to future generations.

"We grew up coming to these beaches, and we want to make sure future generations — like my daughter, here — have a place like this to come to," said Spaid, 33, who works in pest control.

Beside him sat his daughter Josephine Spaid, 9, and his wife Alicia Spaid, 34.

"Because we live here, we want to back everything to get our environment clean," Alicia Spaid said.

They were among hundreds Saturday at Manatee County, Fla., beaches protesting oil drilling and supporting clean energy on a perfect summer day.

About 350 formed a four-block human chain at Manatee Public Beach, at State Road 64 and Gulf Drive, said Jay Moyles, Manatee County's chief of marine rescue.

Moyles was looking down the beach with binoculars from the top of the lifeguard stand at the mostly black-clad crowd, which appeared as part of the Hands Across the Sand international protest.

The black clothing represented opposition to oil drilling.

At the north end of Anna Maria Island, organizer Caryn Hodge counted 132 protesters, while Gerry Swormstedt, an organizer at Sarasota's Siesta Key beach, estimated more than 1,000 took part there.

"Look at this beautiful water and white sand," said Jennie Patellis, 79, of Holmes Beach, Fla., a retired businesswoman. "What would happen if this was coated with oil? It would be devastating, devastating, to all the businesses here and the economy?"

Chavez meets with Syria's Assad in Venezuela

By Christopher Toothaker
Associated Press writer

CARACAS, Venezuela — Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez met with Syrian President Bashar Assad on Saturday and called on Latin America and the Arab world to fight what he called America's imperialist and capitalist interests abroad.

During a meeting at Venezuela's presidential palace, Chavez told Assad it was an honor to host the Syrian leader on his first visit to Latin America. Chavez presented Assad with a gold-plated replica of a sword that once belonged to South American independence hero Simon Bolivar — the inspiration for his "Bolivarian Revolution."

The two leaders signed an agreement to create a $100 million trade and development fund.

"Arab civilization and our civilization, the Latin American one, are being summoned in this new century to play the fundamental role of liberating the world, saving the world from the imperialism and capitalist hegemony that threaten the human species," Chavez said. "Syria and Venezuela are at the vanguard of this struggle."

Assad praised Chavez for standing up to the United States and supporting the Palestinian struggle.

"There are few politicians who are courageous to speak out when it's necessary," he said through an interpreter. "Chavez has projected the image of a resistant Venezuela."

Assad strongly criticized Israel, calling the Jewish state's government "extremist" and condemning its blockade of Gaza.

"The resistance must be supported," he said.

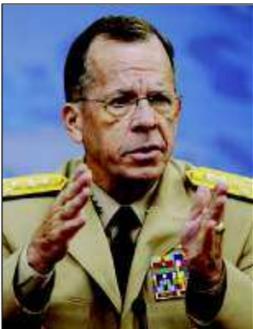

Chavez is perhaps Latin's America's most outspoken critic of the United States, lashing out at the U.S. government.

U.S. to Karzai: Petraeus won't alter Afghan plan

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — America's top military officer assured President Hamid Karzai on Saturday that newly chosen NATO commander Gen. David Petraeus would pursue the policies of his ousted predecessor, whom the Afghan leader warmly praised for reducing civilian casualties.

Karzai's emphasis on preventing civilian deaths and injuries could make it difficult for NATO to relax rules of fighting that some U.S. troops say give the battlefield advantage to the Taliban. For now, however, no changes have been proposed, said a spokesman for visiting Adm. Mike Mullen, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

During a 45-minute meeting with the Afghan leader, Mullen explained the events that surrounded President Barack Obama's decision to dismiss Gen. Stanley McChrystal, the commander of both U.S. and NATO forces. McChrystal resigned after he and his aides were quoted in Rolling Stone magazine making disparaging remarks about top Obama administration officials guiding the civilian mission in the war.

Mullen, who spent just a half-day in Kabul, also met with U.S. Embassy officials and had a video teleconference with regional commanders in the field. To both sides, Mullen stressed the importance of a good "lash up" between often strained civilian and military efforts to beat back a resurgent Taliban and extend the Karzai government's control beyond Kabul.

"He stressed to President Karzai that absolutely nothing will change about our commitment to the struggle there, to the strategy," said Capt. John Kirby, a spokesman for Mullen.

Mullen then flew to neighboring Pakistan, where he repeated the message to President Asif Ali Zardari and Chief of Army Staff Gen. Ashfaq Parvez Kayani.

Mullen's trip, which was scheduled before McChrystal's dismissal, took on a different tone after the change. Afghan leaders and some U.S. allies in the war worried that McChrystal's firing could disrupt the counterinsurgency strategy at a critical juncture in the war. But they were relieved when Obama chose Petraeus, McChrystal's boss who helped author the plan, to replace him.

North Korea to elect leaders; could set stage for Kim's heir

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Secretive North Korea said Saturday it will choose new ruling party leaders later this year — a surprise announcement that is intensifying speculation the regime is setting the stage for supreme ruler Kim Jong Il's youngest son to eventually succeed him.

The question of who will take over from the 68-year-old Kim, believed to suffer from a host of ailments, is important because the leader — as presumably his successor would — holds absolute power in the impoverished country, which has active nuclear and missile programs and regularly threatens to destroy rival South Korea.

Many fear political instability or even a power struggle if Kim, who rules North Korea through his position as chairman of the powerful National Defense Commission, were to die or become incapacitated without clearly naming a successor.

Kim is also supreme commander of the Korean People's Army as well as general secretary of the Workers' Party.

Kim himself was publicly groomed for years to succeed his father — North Korea's founder Kim Il Sung, who ruled the country for nearly 50 years and led it through the 1950-53 Korean War. He died in 1994.

The North may not have the luxury of such a long transition this time. Kim is believed to have suffered a stroke in 2008 and there have been reports his memory is slipping. In addition, after years of relatively good relations with Seoul, ties have become strained again, exacerbated most recently by the sinking of a South Korean navy ship blamed on Pyongyang. The North has denied the allegation.

The North is also grappling with economic woes that have worsened after a botched currency reform last year, and finds itself increasingly isolated in a standoff with the international community.

Tropical Storm Alex soaks Belize, Mexico's Yucatan

By Patrick E. Jones
Associated Press writer

BELIZE CITY — Hundreds of tourists and residents fled low-lying islands off Belize and beachgoers were warned to stay out of the water along Mexico's resort-studded Caribbean coast, as rain from Tropical Storm Alex began lashing the region.

Alex, with maximum sustained winds of about 65 mph, was expected to make landfall at Belize by night-fall, cross land and enter the Gulf of Mexico late Sunday. The storm appeared headed west of the massive oil spill in parts of the Gulf, but meteorologists warned that a storm's track can quickly change.

The U.S. National Hurricane Center said Alex was centered just 15 miles east-southeast of Belize City on Saturday afternoon and heavy rains were spreading into northern Guatemala and Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula.

A tropical storm warning was in effect for Belize and Mexico's entire Caribbean coastline up to Cancun.

Belize officials opened storm shelters in the island tourist resort of San Pedro, as some 1,400 people fled for the mainland by plane and by boat. Torrential downpours and heavy winds were reported on offshore islands Saturday afternoon.

Fairweather said.

Moderate rain was falling along Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula, and Quintana Roo state authorities said choppy waves made it too dangerous to swim — but otherwise the storm did not pose a significant threat to tourist areas such as Cancun, Cozumel, Playa del Carmen and Tulum.

State Public Safety director Miguel Ramos Real said 25 fishermen were evacuated and 17 navy personnel were brought to the mainland from a base on Banco Chinchorro, an atoll off the Mexican coast. Three shelters were opened, and ports were closed to small craft.

Meteorologists predict that Alex will likely lose strength as it passes over the Yucatan Peninsula, before picking up steam again over the Gulf of Mexico.

The latest Hurricane Center forecast puts Alex on a track that would take it through the southwestern Gulf and toward landfall around Veracruz or Tamaulipas state in Mexico — possibly as a hurricane.

Hurricane forecaster Jack Bevens said for now, the storm is not expected to hit the spill that has fouled the Gulf with somewhere between 69 million gallons and 132 million gallons of crude.

He noted, however, that it's too early to say with certainty exactly where Alex will go.

Shelters also opened in Belize City, where motorists formed long lines at gas stations and shoppers stocked up on water, canned food and other emergency supplies amid sporadic rain.

Rough seas halted maritime traffic, and Belize City Mayor Zenaida Moya-Flowers went on national radio to urge boaters to make for safe harbor. Nevertheless, she said, emergency plans were well under way and "we are prepared."

A storm surge of 3-5 feet was expected along the northern coast and offshore islands, national emergency coordinator Noreen

Magic Valley Rural Training Track

The Magic Valley Rural Training Track, established in 2008, is a branch of the Family Medicine Residency of Idaho, designed for broad-spectrum rural family medicine training. Residents serve with the physician team in the Jerome community and on rotations with specialists in the Twin Falls area. Evidence shows that newly-graduated doctors are more comfortable practicing in a setting similar to their residency experience. Of the nine graduates to date in the sister program in Caldwell, 60 percent are practicing in Idaho and 70 percent are serving in rural areas.

An ethnic Uzbek investigation near a relative's grave as Kyrgyz policemen dig up graves for reburial at an Uzbek cemetery in Osh, southern Kyrgyzstan, Saturday. Investigators began exhuming the bodies of people killed during clashes between ethnic Uzbeks and Kyrgyz last week because officials said the bodies were buried without investigation of the cause of death.

Kyrgyzstan votes in key referendum

BISHKEK, Kyrgyzstan (AP) — Polls opened in Kyrgyzstan for a referendum Sunday to choose a new constitution that the interim government hopes will legitimize its power until new parliamentary elections in October.

The Central Asian nation was on a high security alert for the vote, deploying almost 8,000 police officers and an equal number of defense volunteers to keep the peace.

Questions remain about how successfully it can be held just weeks after violence left hundreds of Uzbeks dead and forced up to 400,000 to flee.

Attitude and altitude are key at Idaho Regatta

DREW GODLESKI/For the Times-News

P-96 Arizona Girl, driven by Amy Ottinger and her co-pilot Scott Stump, overtakes P-9 Miss Suncoast driven by Ed Solis during the 35th Annual Idaho Regatta Saturday in Burley. Arizona Girl won the heat.

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — It's all about attitude and altitude.

Those are the two biggest factors in the race for a mink at the Idaho Regatta.

Ty Newton, who won the mink in 2005, has the attitude part figured out. After a convincing victory in Saturday's Pro Stock finals in Faulkner Racing's "Canary Pride," Newton believes he's got a chance today to take the Moyle Mink and Faulkner Memorial Trophy.

"We're really trying to run for that mink this year again. I think our chances are really good," Newton said. "It's all on time, so you've got to give it all you've got."

At last year's Idaho Regatta, Newton and "Canary Pride" set the all-time course record for flat bottom boats.

"Hopefully we can do that again this year and win that mink coat," he said.

Also making a run for the mink is Jeff Bernard, driver of 2.5-liter hydro S12 "Liquid Lizard," owned by Mike Hoffhine of Bear River, Wyo. Two wins Friday and two wins Saturday make Bernard 4-for-4 with today's two races remaining.

"I hope so," Bernard said of his mink chances. "Right now we're on pace to be a contender for it, which would be real cool because there's never been a hydro person's name on that trophy?"

One advantage Bernard's team holds over the competition is it seems they have figured out the altitude. Since most boat races are run at sea level, one of the biggest challenges race teams face at the Idaho Regatta is the elevation. Burley sits at 4,165 feet.

"When you come up here and run at this high altitude it's hard to tune the boat," Bernard said. "(The team) found something in the set-up the first year they were

Nadal not derailed despite struggles

By Howard Fendrich
Associated Press writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Things got quite complicated for Rafael Nadal on Saturday.

His right knee was bothering him "a lot," something he later would say he's "a little bit scared about." His left elbow was briefly in pain, too, following one serve.

He got into a dispute with the chair umpire over whether Toni Nadal, Rafael's uncle, was coaching during the match, which is against the rules.

Oh, and then there was this issue, of most immediate concern Saturday: For the second consecutive round at Wimbledon, Nadal fell behind by two sets to one.

For the second consecutive round, though, the generally indefatigable Nadal came back and came through, this time pulling out a 6-4, 4-6, 6-7 (5), 6-2, 6-3 victory over 33rd-seeded Philipp Petzschner of Germany to reach the second week.

"This match was very difficult for me," Nadal acknowledged. "Having a five-set match two days ago and one today — that's tough. I'm happy to be in the fourth round. I'm going to try to be better for Monday?"

That's when the grass-court Grand Slam tournament will resume after observing its traditional day of rest on the middle Sunday, all 32 players still in the event will be on the jam-packed schedule.

RUSTENBURG, South Africa — The U.S. team's manic run through the World Cup came to an abrupt end Saturday with a 2-1 overtime loss to Ghana that was decided on a splendid goal by Asamoah Gyan.

The Americans never led in regulation time in the tournament and never lost in regulation either. Yet they came within a goal of the quarterfinals only to be sent home on Gyan's shot in the dark.

"The finality of it is brutal," said Landon Donovan, the L.A. Galaxy star who scored three of the five U.S. goals in the tournament. "When you realize how much you put into it, not only for the last four years but for your whole life. There's no guarantee there's another opportunity.

It's disappointing?"

After fighting back to force the extra period on a Donovan penalty kick in the 62nd minute, the U.S. saw Ghana retake the lead three minutes into the first 15-minute extra period on a play that started innocently enough with the U.S. sending a long ball into the Ghana end. A Ghanaian defender headed it forward to Andre Ayew, who was simply trying to clear it back across the midfield line.

But his clearing shot found Gyan on a dead run, cutting between two U.S. defenders. Gyan grounded the ball with his chest and got off a left-footed shot that went over keeper Tim Howard and into the goal, sending the U.S. home and the Black Stars on to the quarterfinals to play Uruguay, a 2-1 winner over South Korea earlier in the day.

"We had a great opportunity. But you have to prove it over 90 minutes and we didn't do it," Howard said. "We're going home so there's an opportunity missed. We should have won the game?"

In was a painful way to lose for a team that hadn't done anything the easy way in this tournament, coming from behind to earn draws with both England and Slovenia before beating Algeria on a Donovan goal in stoppage time to qualify for the second round.

"I think we can hold our heads high how we did," Donovan said. "Obviously you hate losing. Obviously the feeling is bitter.

"But the effort, the energy, the attitude we had, the belief. I have no qualms with that. Sometimes you lose games. That's part of the soccer.

"At this point we lost the game and we're out of the World Cup?"

This is the second time in as many World Cups that Ghana has sent the U.S. packing with a 2-1 win, having knocked the U.S. out in group play in 2006. That came in Ghana's World Cup debut and it carried the Black Stars into the second round. This time they're going to the quarterfinals, where they will meet Uruguay on Friday night at Soccer City Stadium in Johannesburg.

In the first World Cup on African soil, Ghana, which rode to the game Saturday in a bus painted with the slogan, "The Hope of Africa," will carry the continent's flag forward as the last of six African teams still playing.

"We must fight, not just for us, but for the other teams that are not here," Ayew said.

Tennis duo's court communication a winning strategy

ARIEL HANSEN/Times-News

Raleigh Grossbaum, left, and Charlie Grabow, who attend The Sage School but played tennis last season for Wood River High School, won the Class 4A state tennis boys doubles title this year.

Times-News writer

KETCHUM — They weren't the "No. 1" tennis pair from Wood River High School this year — their coach opted to give that honor to a couple of seniors — but sophomores Charlie Grabow and Raleigh Grossbaum more than proved their talent by earning a Class 4A state title in boys doubles last month.

Their secret to success: Believing they'd succeed. Hours of practice combined with constant communication on the court didn't hurt.

"We had the 'We're gonna win this' mindset," Grabow said, recalling the pair's attitude before nearly every game. They lost only four matches all year, he said, including one immediately after Grossbaum was injured off the court. All their losses, including that one, they took as lessons, but never lost their attitude. "In tennis, you can't not be confident?"

Both Grossbaum and Grabow are students at The Sage School, a tiny private school in Hailey, but they were allowed to compete on the Wood River High School team. The entire team grew close on the courts, the boys said, so they never felt a disadvantage not going to classes with their teammates.

It could be that their hours together at the small school helped the teens develop their system of on-court communication, which included verbal codes and hand signals that they used between every point.

"We talked a lot on the court ... and people apparently found that really annoying," Grabow said with a grin. "(But) if we didn't agree, we trusted each other?"

Many of their plays were based on a psychological evaluation of their opponents, they said.

"There were a lot of those where one thing was working, so we did it a lot, and then we'd do the opposite. We'd fake the fake," Grossbaum said. "A lot of times it was conscious, we were trying to hit it to whoever was struggling?"

In their hardest match of the season, against a pair of brothers from Nampa's Skyview High, they took advantage of sibling rivalry to

Kerr up 8 at LPGA Championship

PITTSFORD, N.Y. — Holding an eight-stroke lead and 18 holes away from a second major title, Cristie Kerr wasn't about to declare victory in the LPGA Championship.

"I can sit here and say, 'Give me the trophy now.' But it's not going to happen," Kerr said after shooting a 69 Saturday. "I've got one more round of golf to play. There's one reason I'm sitting here and so far ahead at this point is because of the attitude I'm bringing."

Kerr's focus was on display during a rain-soaked round at the Locust Hill Country Club, where she went to 13-under 203 entering the final round Sunday. Her advantage tops the previous largest entering the final round of the LPGA Championship — Mickey Wright led by seven in 1961 on her way to a title.

And Kerr fell just short of matching the largest 54-hole lead at an LPGA major set by Babe Zaharias, who had a 10-stroke lead at the 1954 U.S. Women's Open.

Mika Miyazato double-bogeyed No. 18 to finish at 72 and fall into a three-way tie for second with rookie Azahara Munoz and Jimin Kang after both finished with 70s in the LPGA Tour's second major of the year. The only others within 10 shots of Kerr are Song-Hee Kim, who shot a 69 Saturday, and Jiyai Shin (70), who are 4 under for the tournament; and American Karrie Webb (69) at 3-under 213.

Shin, the world's second-ranked player, is competing in her first tournament since an appendectomy two weeks ago.

Kang could only shrug when asked if there's a chance of catching Kerr.

"I've got nothing to lose but 18 holes to go," Kang said. "That's all I can say."

Miyazato's not conceding anything just yet, either.

Speaking through an interpreter, Miyazato said: "If I keep my patience and endure to the last hole, then I am going to be able to catch up."

There's even more on the line for Kerr should she win on Sunday.

Opening the week fifth in the world rankings, Kerr is in position to take over the No. 1 spot currently held by Ai Miyazato, who supplanted Shin by winning the ShopRite LPGA Classic last weekend. The LPGA announced that if Kerr wins, Miyazato would need to finish second overall to retain her ranking.

That's highly unlikely after Miyazato shot a 70 on Saturday to put her in a tie for 24th at 1 over for the tournament.

ROSE LEADS AT TRAVELERS CHAMPIONSHIP

CROMWELL, Conn. — Justin Rose closed in on his second straight PGA Tour victory, shooting a 2-under 68 to take a three-stroke lead over Ben Curtis into the final round of the Travelers Championship.

Rose, the 29-year-old Englishman who won the Memorial three weeks ago but then failed to qualify for the U.S. Open, had a 16-under 194 total at TPC River Highlands after setting the tournament 36-hole record with rounds of 64 and 62.

Curtis, the 2003 British Open champion, shot a 64. Vaughn Taylor (67) was 11 under, and Ricky Barnes (64), Scott McCarron (66), Brendon de Jonge (67), Bubba Watson (67), Matt Jones (68), Ryder Cup captain Corey Pavin (69) and Bill Lunde (69) were 10 under.

FORSMAN IN FRONT AT DICK'S SPORTING GOODS OPEN

ENDICOTT, N.Y. — Dan Forsman shot a 6-under 66 to take a one-stroke lead over Brad Bryant after the second round of the Champions Tour's Dick's Sporting Goods Open.

Forsman was at 12-under 132 and lucky to be there alone after Bryant (67) bogeyed the final hole. Russ Cochran (66) and first-round leader Wayne Levi (69) were 10 under.

Nick Price (66), Bill Glasson (66) and Mark Calcavecchia (68) were 9 under. Calcavecchia is making his first start on the 50-and-over tour.

NASCAR's Race for Chase heating up

LOUDON, N.H. (AP) — The Chase for the Sprint Cup Championship traditionally kicks off at New Hampshire. So does the 10-race sprint to make the 12-driver field.

When drivers return here in September, they hope they are gearing up for a championship run. With only 10 races left until the field is set, the pressure is revved up for those around the cutoff mark.

Carl Edwards is clinging to 12th place entering Sunday's race, only 57 points ahead of Dale Earnhardt Jr.

Clint Bowyer and Ryan Newman are lurking behind Junior. Don't count out pole sitter Juan Pablo Montoya or even David Reutimann among the small group of drivers who have a lugnut-size margin of error this summer.

"I feel like we've got a chance," Reutimann said Saturday. "We just need top-fives everywhere we go."

Oh, no pressure.

Points leader Kevin Harvick, four-time defending champion Jimmie Johnson, Kyle Busch and Denny

Hamlin have their spots all but secured. It would take a string of disastrous DNF performances to knock out NASCAR's elite drivers.

From about ninth in the standings on down, anything can happen.

Tony Stewart, a two-time Cup champion, is 10th and understands how fragile his spot can be down the stretch.

"If you are ninth through 12th right now, you are worrying about just making sure you have enough points to be in it and go from there," he said.

Earnhardt wants to make that field as long as he feels he can realistically compete for his first career Cup title. He's coming off his best two back-to-back races of the season and believes his No. 88 Chevrolet can still find more speed to stamp themselves as a legitimate Chase threat.

"We've still got a long ways to go, man," Earnhardt said. "We've got a lot of work to do to get better and get more competitive. I feel like we're starting to be able to contend, but we've got a lot of speed to find."

BUSCH WINS NATIONWIDE RACE

LOUDON, N.H. (AP) — Kyle Busch won the Nationwide Series race at New Hampshire Motor Speedway on Saturday and become the career laps led leader in NASCAR's second-tier series.

Busch bowed to the crowd, which saluted his sixth win of the season in the No. 18 Toyota for Joe Gibbs Racing. Busch has led 8,118 laps in his career and earned his 36th career victory.

He held off Brad Keselowski, who finished second and had his solid run derailed by a poor pit stop. Carl Edwards, Joey Logano and Trevor Bayne round out the top five.

Keselowski stretched his points lead to 247 over Edwards.

Danica Patrick finished 30th, five laps down. Patrick went into the wall only seven laps into the race. The IndyCar regular posted her best finish in four Nationwide races.

"It was a bummer to get lapped so many times," Patrick said.

here, and last year they won five out of six heats with Mike driving."

A native of Kent, Wash., Bernard said tuning has been an issue with his competitors so far.

"S81 (driven by Jessie Robertson) is on of our biggest competitors and they've had motor problems," Bernard said. "The S83 (driven by J.P. Squires), they're fast and they blew up two motors (Friday). It's challenging to get a boat set up here. I do things that I don't normally do at other places just to get the boat off the water."

Although Faulkner Racing has competed at all 35 Idaho Regattas, Newton said even the veterans have trouble with the altitude.

"It's not the greatest air up here," said Newton, who hails from Goodyear, Ariz. "Anybody who's out here running, that's the biggest problem they have. These motors need to breathe and there's no air."

Early Saturday, things started off shaky for Newton and "Canary Pride," which has a brand-new, refreshed motor in it. The boat had complications in its first run, but crew chief Bill Faulkner Jr. and his team made the necessary adjustments in time for his Pro Stock victory.

"We were fortunate enough we got it fixed and got it running again," Newton said.

Newton's good fortune ran out later in the afternoon, however. Racing owner David Rankin's "Wild Child" in the Super Stock class, Newton drew the outermost lane.

"It's all the luck of the draw. My luck wasn't with me," Newton said. "Coming from Lane 7 is a whole different animal because you've got six other guys underneath you who want to do the same thing you do, and that's make to the first turn and get in front."

Despite the poor draw, Newton almost did just that, hammering it off the start and somehow beating all but one driver to the first turn. That driver, Charlie Marquard in "Simple Too," held off Newton to take the checkered flag.

Rankin, driving owner Gordon Jenning's "Freedom Child," raced to victory in the K-boat final.

Other winners Saturday included Harold Bruce in "Spare Parts," who led wire-to-wire in the Competition Jets final, and Russ Dodge in the 1-Liter Hydro "Polecat." Amy Ottinger won the Cracker Box final in her "Arizona Girl" and Bill Wheeler took first in Grand Nationals.

The racers will be back on the water today for more finals and the conclusion of the 35th Annual Idaho Regatta.

Loney, Dodgers rally to beat Yankees

LOS ANGELES — James Loney drove in four runs to help the Los Angeles Dodgers defeat the New York Yankees 9-4 on Saturday, tying the teams' second regular-season series at a game apiece.

The Dodgers, who lost the opener 2-1 Friday night, stopped a season-worst four-game home losing skid. They've dropped 10 of 14 overall to fall out of first place in the NL West. They'll need another win in the finale Sunday to equal what they did in the clubs' first regular-season meeting in 2004, when they took two of three.

The Yankees' three-game winning streak ended against the team they've beaten eight times in 11 World Series meetings, while their lead in the AL East shrank to two games.

WHITE SOX 3, CUBS 2

CHICAGO — Paul Konerko hit his 19th home run to snap an eighth-inning tie and the Chicago White Sox won their 11th straight game, beating the struggling Chicago Cubs 3-2 on Saturday.

The White Sox are on their longest win streak since a 12-game run in June 1961, and they can thank Konerko for keeping it going. He broke a 2-all tie with one out in the eighth when he connected off reliever Andrew Cashner (0-1), sending the White Sox to their 15th victory in 16 games.

The home run made a winner of J.J. Putz (4-2), who pitched a scoreless eighth after Freddy Garcia went seven innings.

MARINERS 5, BREWERS 4

MILWAUKEE — Seattle reliever Brian Sweeney pitched four scoreless innings in his first appearance since 2006 and Milton Bradley and Jose Lopez homered.

Milwaukee's season-long five-game winning streak ended despite a four-run third that included Prince Fielder's 15th homer and a wild play that saw Corey Hart coming around to score on an error after hitting a double.

Sweeney (1-0) had been recalled from Triple-A Tacoma on June 15 and made his first appearance since playing with San Diego after Doug Fister went four innings in his return from the disabled list. Fister gave up four runs and five hits and threw 92 pitches.

RAYS 5, DIAMONDBACKS 3

Sean Rodriguez and Jason Bartlett both had two RBIs for the Rays, held hitless Friday night for the third time in the past 12 months. Price (11-3) allowed two runs and seven hits while walking one and matching his career high with 11 strikeouts.

RED SOX 4, GIANTS 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Mike Cameron hit a three-run homer, Darnell McDonald also connected and Boston beat the San Francisco Giants and their top pitching prospect.

Scott Atchison (1-1) tossed 2 1/3 innings against his former team after Red Sox starter Clay Buchholz was removed early because of a hyperextended left knee that he hurt while running the bases.

RANGERS 7, ASTROS 2

ARLINGTON, Texas — Ian Kinsler ended a career-long 32-game homerless drought with a tiebreaking shot and Texas quickly rebounded from its first loss in two weeks.

Rangers slugger Josh Hamilton extended his hitting streak to 20 games with a single in the sixth inning.

Kinsler's three-run homer off Josh Banks (0-1) in the fourth snapped a 2-all tie. It was only his second homer of the season and first since May 18, the day after manager Ron Washington moved Kinsler to the No. 3 spot in the batting order and dropped Hamilton to fifth.

BRAVES 4, TIGERS 3

ATLANTA — Chipper Jones' three-run homer in the seventh gave Kenshin Kawakami his long-awaited first win of the season, but only after Atlanta escaped a ninth-inning jam.

Peter Moylan struck out pinch-hitter Johnny Damon with the bases loaded to end it, and Kawakami needed Jones' help to avoid the first 0-10 start by a Braves pitcher. The right-hander trailed 1-0 when he left for a pinch-hitter in the seventh.

Jones' homer off Joel Zumaya (2-1) later in the inning landed about 10 rows deep in the center-field seats and drove in Gregor Blanco and Melky Cabrera, who walked.

TWINS 6, METS 0

NEW YORK — Jason Kubel and the Minnesota Twins roughed up former teammate Johan Santana early, and Carl Pavano produced another fine pitching performance.

Pavano (9-6) gave up three hits in his second consecutive complete game, both of which have come against an NL East ace. The well-traveled right-hander tossed a four-hitter Sunday to beat Roy Halladay and the NL champion Phillies 4-1.

REDS 6, INDIANS 4

CINCINNATI — Laynce Nix singled home the tiebreaking run in the sixth inning and came around to score on a jarring dive into home, rallying first-place Cincinnati past free-falling Cleveland for its fifth straight win.

Nix's single off Justin Masterson (2-7) was the turning point in a ragged game on a hot, humid night.

Cleveland has lost a season-high seven in a row and 11 of 12, falling a season-low 21 games under .500.

CARDINALS 5, ROYALS 3

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Colby Rasmus and Skip Schumaker homered off Kyle Davies.

Blake Hawksworth (2-4), making his second major league start, went five-plus innings for the win, allowing two runs and two hits.

Ryan Franklin got four outs for his 15th save in 16 opportunities. Cardinals reliever Jason Motte left the game in the seventh with a cramp in his right calf and is day to day.

Rasmus hit a 1-0 pitch for a three-run homer off Kyle Davies (4-6) in the fourth after Nick Stavinocha opened the inning by reaching on the pitcher's error. With one out, Matt Holliday singled ahead of Rasmus' shot.

ORIOLES 6, NATIONALS 5

BALTIMORE — Adam Jones homered, Matt Wieters had three hits and two RBIs, and the Baltimore Orioles rallied to clinch their first series win in 14 tries.

Baltimore scored the game's last six runs after falling behind 5-0 in the fourth inning. Less than 24 hours earlier, the Orioles came back from a six-run deficit to win.

Baltimore had lost 11 straight series and was 0-12-1 since taking two of three from Seattle on May 11-13.

BLUE JAYS 5, PHILLIES 1

PHILADELPHIA — John Buck, Aaron Hill and Alex Gonzalez homered and Shaun Marcum (7-3) pitched six solid innings.

Marcum allowed one run and five hits while striking out six and walking one. The right-hander improved to 7-1 in nine starts following a Blue Jays defeat, the latest victory coming on the heels of Friday night's 9-0 loss to the Phillies and former Toronto ace Roy Halladay.

NATIONAL LEAGUE PADRES 2, MARLINS 1

MIAMI — Adrian Gonzalez hit an RBI double and San Diego became the first team in nearly two months to score more than once against Florida ace Josh Johnson.

Jon Garland (8-5) pitched into the seventh inning and hit a go-ahead sacrifice fly in the fifth after a triple by Jerry Hairston Jr. The NL West-leading Padres (44-30) moved 14 games over .500 for the first time since the end of the 2007 season.

Rays view struggling offense as temporary

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — The Tampa Bay Rays insist there's no reason to panic.

Despite being no-hit twice this season — and three times in less than a year — they feel it's only a matter of time before they pull out of the offensive funk that had cost them nine games in the standings entering play Saturday.

A buzz created by a dazzling start that enabled them to maintain the best record in baseball for much of the past two months has given way to a malaise. The Rays have lost 18 of 29 games since May 23, when they were 32-12 and held a six-game lead over the New York Yankees in the AL East.

A day after being no-hit by Arizona's Edwin Jackson to fall three games behind the World Series champions, manager Joe Maddon searched for positives to reinforce his contention that things are not nearly as bad as they might seem.

"We lost 1-0," Maddon said, adding that he slept well after Jackson tossed the fourth no-hitter of this season and had spent more time thinking about what Tampa Bay needed to do to win its next game rather than what went wrong Friday night.

Jackson walked eight, hit a batter and also saw another man reach base on an error while throwing 149 pitches to finish the second no-hitter in Arizona history.

"It was a no-hitter, but it didn't really feel like one when you have 10 baserunners," Maddon said. "But it doesn't really matter. It matters that we lost 1-0. Now we just try to win the series."

Oakland's Dallas Braden pitched a perfect game against the Rays on May 9, Colorado's Ubaldo Jimenez no-hit Atlanta on April 17 and Philadelphia's Roy Halladay tossed a perfect game against Florida on May 29.

The four no-hitters this season are the most in any year since 1991, when there were seven.

The Rays, also victims of Mark Buehrle's perfect game in Chicago last July 23, became the first team in major league history to be no-hit three times within a span of 12 months in games of at least nine innings.

The 1906 Brooklyn Superbas were no-hit three times in the same season, but two of those game were seven innings.

After Jackson shut down his former team, Maddon had an unusual request.

"Please find somebody that's been no-hit twice and gone to the World Series and won it. I'd really appreciate it," Maddon said. "And if it hasn't happened, please make it up."

Upon learning the White Sox pulled off the feat in 1917, Maddon did a little research of his own and discovered there were a lot of things he liked about that team.

"I looked them up. What a team. 100 wins, 54 losses," Maddon said. "

"But the interesting part was the walk to strikeout ratio. ... Most of them had more walks than strikeouts. I'm looking for that positive vibe, and there it was. ... A couple of years ago when we went to the World Series we had two seven-game losing streaks. I was looking for a parallel there and it was the '83 Orioles. It's always interesting, historically, how things reoccur over and over again."

The Rays are one of two teams to be no-hit twice in one season. Entering Saturday's game against the Diamondbacks, Tampa Bay had dropped seven of its previous nine games while scoring 12 runs and batting .154 in the losses.

They were 2 for 25 with runners in scoring position in the first three games of their current homestand and 0-for-7 against Jackson, who walked seven in the first three innings and worked through a base-loaded, no-out jam in the third.

Cleanup hitter Carlos Pena had 61 home runs, but was batting .199 and leading the AL in strikeouts. B.J. Upton (.229) and Jason Bartlett (.225) have also struggled while strong starting pitching, an improved bullpen and sturdy defense have kept the Rays going.

Bauer leads UCLA past TCU and into CWS finals

OMAHA, Neb. — Like everyone else at Rosenblatt Stadium, UCLA's Trevor Bauer was feeling the heat.

He said pregame warmups were almost intolerable. He gave up a homer in the first inning and had to work out of a mini-jam in the second. And it wasn't long after that his sleeves — yes, the quirky sophomore was wearing a long-sleeved liner — were soaked through.

So don't think the Bruins' 10-3 win Saturday against TCU was no sweat.

Sweet? Yes. The Bruins (51-15), who hadn't won a game in two previous College World Series, are heading to the best-of-three championship round to face South Carolina on Monday after Bauer limited the Horned Frogs to four hits and struck out 13 in eight innings.

Blair Dunlap hit a three-run homer in UCLA's five-run first, and the Bruins won going away.

"Obviously, that five-spot in the first inning was huge," Bauer said. "It gives me confidence they have my back and simplifies your pitching approach. Throw strikes and don't put people on base. In a tighter game you have to be more careful and there's higher stress. It's huge when the offense can support you like that."

UCLA players Dan Klein, rear, and catcher Steve Rodriguez (3) hug after UCLA defeated TCU 10-3 in an NCAA College World Series baseball elimination game, in Omaha, Neb., Saturday. UCLA advances to the championship series, and TCU was eliminated.

Aside from Bryan Holaday's two home runs for TCU, Bauer (12-3) dominated a lineup that was batting a CWS-best .337. The Frogs, in the CWS for the first time, finished the year 54-14.

Bauer, with his fastball approaching the mid 90s, allowed only one more base runner after Holaday's fifth-inning homer, and that was on a walk. He struck out the last four batters he faced before Daniel Klein came on to pitch a scoreless ninth.

unreal inning," UCLA coach John Savage said. "He was on top of his game."

Bauer and the Bruins weathered Omaha's hottest day of the year. The temperature was 94 degrees with a heat index, or feel-like temperature, of 107 degrees by the seventh inning. A thermometer on the field measured the temperature at 109.

Home-plate umpire Jim Jackson and second-base umpire Mark Ditsworth had to be treated for heat issues during the game, which

"It was definitely hot out there," Holaday said. "And then those long innings, they had a lot of really good at-bats and seemed like every inning they had runners on. And definitely it wears you out a little bit being out in the heat like that."

SOUTH CAROLINA 4, CLEMSON 3

OMAHA, Neb. — Christian Walker homered and singled in the go-ahead run in the seventh inning, and South Carolina staved off elimination a fourth straight time Saturday night to beat rival Clemson 4-3 and advance to the College World Series finals.

The Gamecocks (52-16) will play UCLA in the best-of-three championship round starting Monday. Clemson, the only team to make it to Omaha that wasn't a No. 1 regional seed, finished 45-25.

Walker broke a 2-2 tie after Clemson intentionally walked Jackie Bradley, who had knocked in nine runs in four CWS games. Walker sent Alex Frederick's 3-1 pitch up the middle, scoring Evan Marzilli from third base.

For the Times-News

The Southern Idaho Ice 14U ASA softball team brought home the 11th annual Bear Lake Fastpitch Invitational championship last weekend, defeating the Boise Sliders 4-3 in the championship game.

The Ice 14U team, coached by Nick Baumert, Curt Fleming, Phil Wert and Stanley Watts, finished third in the Diamond Bandit Shootout earlier this month and third in the Twin Falls Invitational.

The Ice will travel to Utah this weekend before competing in Idaho Falls, Pocatello and the 14U B Western Nationals in Roseville, Calif. in August.

make the brothers frustrated with each other so they wouldn't play as well.

The two Wood River champions had different styles, with Grossbaum focusing on finesse and strategy, aiming carefully and hitting more softly, and Grabow bringing power to every stroke.

It is unclear whether the pair will play together again next season, as they feel they've already achieved their most dreamt-about goal.

"Since we've already won state once, we're going to be getting better and better but our competition was seniors, so they're gone," Grossbaum said. He said he would like to win a title in all three categories: boys doubles, mixed doubles and singles. With just two years left to play in high school, he'll have to switch it up next year to do that.

And for two boys who are just launching a summer of teaching tennis lessons and enjoying the time away from school, Grabow said the 2011 season "seems really far away."

Cup

Despite the bitter end, for the U.S. this World Cup has been equal parts good soccer and good fortune, a two-week roller-coaster ride that ended in the same place where it started — tiny Royal Bafokeng Stadium, squeezed on a South African plain between the old mining town of Rustenburg and the modern resort playground of Sun City.

Along the way the team won the cheers of a Bush former USC tailback Reggie, who attended last Wednesday's win over Algeria and a Clinton, former President Bill, who extended his stay in South Africa to attend Saturday's game.

Clinton, by the way, was sitting with Mick Jagger of the Rolling Stones while the Lakers' Kobe Bryant, fresh off a winning run of his own, was also in the house.

It was the first time Ghana scored on anything other than a penalty kick in this World Cup and Boateng, Ghana's bad boy striker, celebrated by dancing off the pitch and up the track surrounding the field as his teammates gave chase.

The U.S. came back to tie the score after Clint Dempsey drew a foul on a nice run he started by turning defender John Mensah around before racing into the box. Ghana's Jonathan Mensah gave chase, earning a yellow card with a hard tackle from behind, setting up Donovan's penalty kick.

But that was the Americans' last hurrah.

"This was a game we feel like we should have won," Donovan said.

URUGUAY 2, SOUTH KOREA 1

PORT ELIZABETH, South Africa — Luis Suarez scored twice as Uruguay beat South Korea 2-1 on Saturday and advanced to the World Cup quarterfinals for the first time in 40 years.

Playing in swirling wind and rain, Suarez scored the winner in the 80th minute — sidestepping two defenders and curling a right-footed shot off the post from the edge of the area.

Nadal will meet 66th-ranked Paul-Henri Mathieu of France, who beat Thiemo de Bakker of the Netherlands 7-6 (5), 7-6 (6), 6-7 (8), 6-4. In his previous outing, de Bakker eliminated John Isner, the 6-foot-9 American who won the longest match in tennis history, 70-68 in the fifth set.

Isner was still in town Saturday morning, having breakfast in Wimbledon village with doubles partner and pal Sam Querrey. Hours later, as darkness descended, No. 18 Querrey won his own lengthy — well, not THAT lengthy, of course — match, reaching Wimbledon's fourth round for the first time by defeating 2002 semifinalist Xavier Malisse of Belgium 6-7 (4), 6-4, 6-2, 5-7, 9-7. The final point was played at 9:23 p.m., and Querrey figured the match would have been suspended and continued Monday if he hadn't won when he did.

Next up for Querrey, a 22-year-old from Santa Monica, Calif., is a Centre Court contest against No. 4 Andy Murray, trying to become Britain's first Wimbledon men's champion since Fred Perry in 1936.

"I think it'll be 99 percent for Murray," Querrey said, "and, like, my mom and dad and sister cheering for me."

Murray, who hasn't dropped a set so far, beat No. 26 Gilles Simon of France 6-1, 6-4, 6-4 Saturday.

Other fourth-round men's matches Monday will include two-time French Open runner-up Robin Soderling of Sweden vs. No. 9 David Ferrer of Spain, and No. 10 Jo-Wilfried Tsonga vs. No. 32 Julien Benneteau in an all-French pairing.

Neither of those is nearly as intriguing as the women's matchup between 12-time Grand Slam champion Serena Williams and three-time major winner Maria Sharapova.

GREGG MIDDLEKAUFF'S QUOTE OF THE DAY
 If you have an important point to make, don't try to be subtle or clever. Use a pile driver. Hit the point once. Then come back and hit it again. Then hit it a third time with a tremendous whack.

John Wooden remembered as 'one in a billion'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John Wooden was remembered Saturday for being “one in a billion as a coach, mentor and friend” during a memorial service uniting the decades of “boys” who helped him win a record 10 national championships at UCLA.

A sepia-toned photo of the man who answered to the simple moniker of “Coach” rested on one end of a stage inside Pauley Pavilion, where Wooden plied his trade on the basketball court.

The 10 gold-and-blue banners representing each of his NCAA titles were spotlighted in the rafters.

“His spirit will be a part of this building forever,” said broadcaster Al Michaels, who opened and closed the public service attended by 4,000.

UCLA athletic director Dan Guerrero told the crowd that Section 103B, Row 2, Seat 1 — roped off and bathed in a spotlight — is now retired. That was where Wooden could be found sitting for years after his 1975 retirement, watching the Bruins' games and patiently signing autographs.

“No one else will ever sit there,” Guerrero said as the audience applauded.

Wooden's life, from his early humble beginnings in Martinsville, Ind., to his days as an All-American player at Purdue to the dynasty he built at UCLA, were remembered in speeches and videos.

In homage to Wooden's Irish heritage, a former neighbor opened the 90-minute service by singing and playing guitar on “Galway Bay,” one of his favorite songs.

Wooden died June 4 at 99. His daughter Nan, son Jim, seven grandchildren and 13 great-grandchildren — the first great-great-grandchild is on the way — sat in the front rows watching as dozens of photos detailing Wooden's life and love of family flashed on the screen.

Current UCLA coach Ben Howland visited an awake but weak Wooden in the hospital two nights before he died.

“I leaned over and Coach hadn't shaved in about five days,” Howland recalled. “He felt these whiskers and said, ‘I kind of feel like Bill Walton.’”

The crowd laughed, fully aware of Wooden's strict grooming policies for his players that banned facial hair and long hair, popular in the turbulent 1960s.

Former UCLA player Keith Erickson delivers remarks during a memorial for former UCLA basketball coach John Wooden on Saturday at Pauley Pavilion in Los Angeles. Wooden, who coached the Bruins basketball team for 27 years and won 10 NCAA championships, died on June 4 at age 99.

Although he didn't address the crowd, Walton was among Wooden's so-called “boys” who gathered in the darkened arena, the cheers of the fans and the squeaking of shoes on the court silenced for this day.

He was joined by Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Jamaal Wilkes, Keith Erickson, Walt Hazzard, Gail Goodrich, Marques Johnson, David Meyers, Henry Bibby, Michael Warren and Sidney Wicks, among others.

“Coach Wooden was one in a billion as a coach, mentor and friend,” Wilkes said. “As a friend, whenever you reached out to him he always reached back unconditionally. Coach led a good life and he died a good death. Let's balance that deep grief with the joy of having known this man.”

In April 1965, Abdul-Jabbar, then known as Lew Alcindor, walked into Pauley Pavilion for the first time, its wooden court not yet installed. The man who awaited him would become a lifelong friend.

“Many people have asked me if Coach Wooden was for real. They wanted to know if he really didn't use foul language or really didn't tell his teams they had to win a specific game.” Abdul-Jabbar told the audience. “I'm aware how cynical the world has become. Coach's value system was from another era, it was developed in an America that has passed on.”

He remembered becoming interested in Islam as a UCLA student and Wooden's interest in learning about it.

“That's the one thing that always impressed me about coach,” Abdul-Jabbar said afterward. “He never stopped being curious, understanding he hadn't learned everything that was possible to know.”

Erickson, his voice choked with emotion, recalled some of Wooden's famous sayings (“Be quick but don't hurry”) and insistence on showing his players the proper way to put on socks and sneakers. Their typical response was disbelief and a collective roll of their eyes out of Wooden's sight.

“He believed in hopelessly out-of-date stuff that never did anything but win championships,” Erickson said. “There's never been a finer man in American sports than John Wooden.”

Outside the arena, Warren recalled driving Wooden to renew his driver's license when he was 95. He marveled at people's reactions to seeing the Hall of Fame coach lined up like them for such a mundane task.

“It's like walking around with Jesus or Mother Teresa,” Warren said. “It may sound outlandish, but in all sincerity, when you think about the things he accomplished and how humble he remained, he's one of those figures who transcends everything — ethnicity, gender, race.”

DEAR ABBY: I am 18, disabled, and work with a service dog. I would like to offer people a few tips on interacting with service dog owners. Perhaps it will lessen some of the daily frustrations all handlers deal with:

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

1. Not all service dogs are big dogs. I know several Chihuahuas who save their owners' lives every day with their medical alert tasks.

2. Not all disabilities are visible. Please don't ask, "What's wrong with you?" or, "What's your problem?"

3. There are many kinds of service dogs, not just guide dogs. Medical alert dogs help people with everything from epilepsy to diabetes to panic attacks. There are also autism service dogs, mobility dogs and hearing dogs.

4. Please do not pet my dog without asking me first. My dog wears a patch that says, "Do Not Pet." It's there for a reason. Abby, I can't count the number of people who read her patch out loud, then reach out to pet her anyway. Please do not take it personally if we say no.

5. If a dog's handler seems ill, it's OK — even preferable — to ask if we are all right. I once had an episode and no less than two dozen people walked right past me while I sat on the floor. Had I been diabetic, I could have died because no one stopped — including two store managers.

— HOPING TO HELP IN PENNSYLVANIA
DEAR HOPING TO HELP: Thank you for an important letter. What many people fail to understand is that when an assistance dog is out in public, the animal is working and should not be distracted from its task — which is ensuring the well-being of its owner.

Your last tip was the most important of all. Folks, I shouldn't have to tell you that if you see someone who appears to be in trouble, it takes only a moment to do the right thing and make sure the person gets the help he or she needs. And that includes calling 911 if it's merited.

DEAR ABBY: I am a widowed grandmother. Two of my son's children, ages 18 and 21, have never had much contact with me or my husband. I have mailed them gifts for their birthdays and holidays, never receiving a thank-you or a card or a call on my birthday. To keep the peace, I have kept sending — but now I'm tired.

They used to live in Arizona, but now the older granddaughter, "Bethany," lives here in Florida, 40 miles from here. When she came with her parents to stay with me while house-hunting, she asked, "What are you going to give me for my birthday?" I did not respond.

After Bethany became established and settled, I called her on at least four separate occasions, leaving messages, all of which she has ignored. She claims she never received them. My birthday came and went — no card or call from her. I feel I should do the same for her from now on. I would like your opinion so I can show it to my son.

— UNAPPRECIATED IN FLORIDA
DEAR UNAPPRECIATED: Here it is, and by all means, share it with your son. Bethany is the product of her upbringing. You were not a part of her childhood in Arizona, and she was never taught that good manners mean acknowledging gifts and returning phone calls.

She is no longer a child, and she was presumptuous to ask you what you would be giving her for her birthday. (You should have replied, "Malaria. Do you want it now?") If you choose to stop acting like a vending machine — which is the way you are being treated — you'll get no argument from me.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

Dear Mr. Wolff: When a hand in a duplicate board is boxed so that everyone at the table sees an honor card in that hand, what is the appropriate remedy? Flasher, Saint John, New Brunswick

ANSWER: The first thing a director should try to do is get the board played. If the information passed to the other three players at the table is such that they cannot play it fairly, then an adjusted score may be appropriate — but play it first, ask questions later. And the director should try to warn the guilty party at the previous table about being careless.

Dear Mr. Wolff: I held ♠ A-Q-9-4-3, ♥ Q-3, ♦ A-J-8-7, ♣ A-Q, and my RHO bid two spades. If I doubled, my partner would assume this was for takeout. How do I show a penalty double? Punitive Measures, Sacramento, Calif.

ANSWER: For the reasons you state, you can't double for penalties here. I suggest you choose between a slightly cautious natural two-no-trump bid and an optimistic jump to three no-trump, hoping your partner has a few points. One has to give up something to be able to make the calls with the highest frequency. Here, when an opponent has six spades, you want your double to describe a hand with short spades because such hands come up so much more often ... right?

Dear Mr. Wolff: At a club duplicate, with nobody vulnerable, you hold ♠ 9, ♥ J-10-3, ♦ A-Q-3-2, ♣ A-J-10-8-4 and open one club. What do you plan to rebid after your partner responds in a major? Dream Spinner, Pueblo, Colo.

ANSWER: I always try to avoid rebidding two clubs with only five and would not do so with any suit much weaker than this. With your hand you can raise one heart to two, and with a singleton spade, a one-no-trump rebid over a one-spade response will always be acceptable. Your failure to raise with three trumps means partner won't insist on playing a five-carder willy-nilly.

Dear Mr. Wolff: My rubber bridge friends and I have a difference of opinion regarding scoring of unfinished rubbers or games. I claim that points are awarded only when one pair has a partial rubber or game. They claim if both have a game or partscore, they both receive the bonus points. Please settle this controversy. Nick and Nora, Lakeland, Fla.

ANSWER: On the last deal of a Chicago, for example, the bonus goes to the pair who made the partscore on the last deal. No bonus goes to the pair with the earlier partscore. In an unfinished rubber I believe the same treatment should apply.

Dear Mr. Wolff: In third chair I held ♠ Q-9, ♥ Q-3, ♦ K-J-8-7-2, ♣ K-Q-7-4. When my partner opened three hearts at favorable vulnerability, I could not decide whether bidding four hearts would be to make, or to keep the opponents out. What do you say? Offense or Defense? Tucson, Ariz.

ANSWER: With no aces, you can be fairly sure your side won't make game, but can the opponents make four spades? Let's say partner has seven hearts to the ace-jack and two cards in each of the other suits. Do you like your chances of beating four spades? I do not! Accordingly, raise to four hearts to try to keep the opponents out. It will make it harder for your LHO to work out what is going on.

IF JUNE 27 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Like an Olympic contender, you have the timing down to a science this month. You can excel at anything that requires hair-splitting accuracy. Don't let the praise or blue ribbons go to your head, as you aren't quite ready for the next logical step forward. Your ambitions can be thwarted during August and September when people will be more critical of your performance and less likely to forgive your inexperience or mistakes. Wait until February, when celestial conditions are more favorable to begin anything of great importance.

HOROSCOPE
 Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Juggle your way to success. You may need to filter ideas as an intermediary this week. Discover the value of creating a feedback loop between those in the field and those orchestrating the proceedings.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): If everyone gives a little, then everyone can gain a lot. Your ability to find ways to achieve a compromise and display a team spirit is sorely needed. Focus on cooperation during the first part of the week.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Some people think they know everything, but know little else. You understand your limitations and willing to make sure you have dug up all the facts. Work diligently behind the scenes in the week ahead.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Mental exertion can be laborious but fulfilling. You may glean valuable information by asking the right questions in the week to come. Don't probe too deeply or play psychoanalyst with a mate.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't fret if your wallet seems to shrivel up just when you need to stretch it further to make ends meet. By the end of the week, your ability to profit and to juggle income and obligations will improve.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Never memorize anything you can look up. You don't need to waste your time and brainpower on minor details that are readily available on the Internet or in the phone book. Focus on big things this week.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You can't lose the argument if you don't take part. Your diplomacy and tact are needed when a delicate situation rears its head. In the week ahead don't let hidden tensions or stress get the best of you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Look for the exit ramp. You may speed along and rush ahead at too frantic a pace in the upcoming week. A ticklish situation might make you laugh but could prove expensive, so depart gracefully.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If you make it, they can take it. On the heels of yesterday's eclipse, you may feel cut off from your ability to hang onto income. You may be expected to contribute in substantial ways this week.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A desire left burning can cause churning. An obsession with something or someone can overpower your good sense. Efforts to have your cake and eat it too can create turmoil in the week ahead.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You know a mountain by its peak, but remember that the peak is the smallest part of the mountain. Even if you don't reach financial or career goals, be glad there is something to aspire to this week.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Dread not, err not. In the week ahead you won't make mistakes if you control your fears and anxieties. Lucky for you, the part of the brain that imagines the worst will happen has a short attention span.

FACES OF THE 116TH

FOUR OF THE 200

Almost 200 guardsmen from Magic Valley will head to Iraq with the 116th this fall. Here, meet four of them.

Spc. Denise Mealer,
21, Twin Falls

Married with a 14-month-old son; stay-at-home mom. She'll miss her son Zakary's second birthday while deployed.

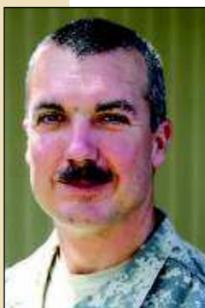

Spc. Samir Smriko,
24, Twin Falls

Newlywed; officer with Jerome County Sheriff's Office. He is deploying two days before his one-year wedding anniversary.

Staff Sgt. Clint Doerr,
37, Twin Falls

Married with one child and two stepchildren; K9 officer with Twin Falls Police Department. His dog, Bleck, is retiring from the police force a month before Doerr deploys.

Sgt. Armando Aspeytia,
38, Twin Falls

Married with three children; Twin Falls city water department employee. He is deploying with his younger brother Jose Aspeytia, also of Twin Falls.

Your guardsmen, your neighbors

In the "Faces of the 116th" series debuting today, writer Melissa Davlin and photographer Ashley Smith are following four members of the Idaho Army National Guard's 116th as they prepare for deployment to Iraq. Davlin and Smith will take you inside the lives of Magic Valley's guardsmen, and they'll explore the effects of deployment on families and employers. Next month's installment: marriage and the military. Also today, a special "Road to Iraq" website launches at magicvalley.com/app/deployment/ — where you'll find interactive and multimedia content about the 116th. Log on today to see:

- Audio slide shows with more photos of today's four featured guardsmen.
- Photos and videos from the 116th's live fire training.
- More stories about the 116th, plus maps and timelines.
- A place for you to post messages to Idaho's guardsmen.

It's a website you'll want to come back to. Keep logging on for fresh stories, photos and graphics from Times-News journalists.

Idaho Army National Guard Spc. Denise Mealer holds her 1-year-old son, Zakary, June 16 at their home in Twin Falls. Mealer is preparing to deploy to Iraq with the 116th Cavalry Brigade Combat Team this fall.

Guardsmen's families count down to separation

By Melissa Davlin • Times-News writer

Before they were soldiers, they were sons and daughters, husbands and wives, fathers, mothers, friends.

When they enlisted with the Idaho National Guard 116th Cavalry Brigade Combat Team, they didn't leave those roles behind. They trained on weekends but still came home on Sundays to greet their spouses and kiss their kids good night.

But now they have deployment orders. Almost 200 guardsmen from Magic Valley, with 1,300 others from across Idaho, will do security work in Iraq for nearly a year.

As they ready to leave for Camp Shelby, Miss., in September, they're reflecting on what their absence will mean for their families, their jobs, and the lives they'll leave behind in Idaho.

Spc. Samir Smriko has been to Iraq before, deploying with another National Guard team in 2006-07. His decision to join the Guard broke his mom's heart. Samir's mother, Sefika Hidanovic, fled Bosnia when Samir was 2. The family lived in Croatia until he was 8 and came to Twin Falls when he was 9.

When her son volunteered to go to Iraq, Sefika had a hard time accepting his decision.

"My last deployment, it was flip-pin' out," Samir said. He had considered going active duty but held back for his family's sake. He came home safe last time, but Samir said his mom still isn't happy about him returning to Iraq.

Despite his mother's reservations, Samir, who works for the Jerome County Sheriff's Office, re-enlisted

See FACES OF THE 116TH, Family Life 3

Idaho Army National Guard Sgt. Armando Aspeytia holds onto his 1-year-old daughter, Nadiya, while he and his wife, Yolanda, watch their daughter play softball June 17 in Twin Falls. Aspeytia, who served with the Marines in Somalia, will go to Iraq with the 116th Cavalry Brigade Combat Team in the fall.

What kinds of photos do you carry around?

Many people tote pictures of their pets

By Sue Manning
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — The next time someone reaches for photos and offers: "Let me show you some pictures of my little darlings," you might be surprised who's mugging for the camera.

According to a recent Associated Press-Petside.com poll, nearly half (45 percent) of all pet owners say they carry around photos of their pets — in wallets, purses, cell phones, laptops, iPods, iPads and other mobile devices.

Dog owners (48 percent) are a bit more likely than cat owners (37 percent) to carry pet pictures with them, and women (52 percent) are more likely than men (36 percent).

Over half of those under age 50 say they carry pet pictures, but the number diminishes with age. Just under a quarter of those age 65 and up still carry such photos.

Tigger, a 6-year-old Persian cat, is such a fashion plate and so agreeable that Larry Beal of Newburyport, Mass., can't help but take photos. "Plus we love him," the 66-year-old former teacher said.

"He will do anything you ask him to. My wife dresses him in all kinds of doll clothing and stuff. He wears costumes for Easter and Thanksgiving and Halloween and Christmas and all sorts of things," Beal said.

Beal carries most of the photos in his cell phone because he doesn't use a wallet. But he does carry a portrait of Tigger in a plastic sleeve in his pocket secretary. Refrigerator magnets and framed photos of the cat are all around his house. He's only too happy to share pictures of Tigger with friends and acquaintances.

"Usually someone else starts it," he said. "Then after they tell me about theirs, I say, 'Well, look at what we have.'"

But Tigger and his four-legged friends are still on the outside looking in, according to the poll conducted by GfK Roper Public Affairs & Media. Almost all women — 90 percent — say they carry pictures of their children, as do 80 percent of men, including David Jeter, 51, of Los Angeles.

Jeter is married with two sons, ages 9 and 13, and a 6-year-old yellow Lab named Lucky. He has uploaded lots of photos from his digital camera to his global Blackberry, but Lucky didn't make the cut.

Because he travels all over the world and sometimes doesn't see people for six or 12 months at a time, he carries the boys' pictures so he can update them.

"The only people who have ever shown me pictures of their animals were people without kids. That recently happened in a business meeting. Everyone started showing pictures of their kids and there was one guy who didn't have kids but he was talking about his dogs," Jeter said.

How to be a better caregiver

By Alison Johnson
Daily Press (Newport News, Va.)

As the population ages, a growing number of people are caring for an ailing family member or friend at home. Here are tips from doctors:

Take care of yourself. Stress puts caregivers at greater risk for colds, flu, exhaustion and chronic illnesses such as heart disease and diabetes. Eat well, exercise, get enough sleep and go to the doctor regularly.

Don't help too much. Let the person you are caring for stay as independent as possible. Divide complex tasks into simple steps, allow for some mistakes — as long as safety isn't a question — and let the patient make some decisions, even if they are as small as what to eat or wear.

Let people help you. Don't be afraid to ask for specific things you need, such as supplies from the grocery store, a hand with yard work or a break from care giving for part of the day.

Give the patient things to do. Studies have shown that nursing home residents asked to care for pets or plants live longer and maintain more independence. Also try to engage patients in activities such as reading, doing puzzles or playing board games.

Look into outside services. Your options may include home health aides, adult day care centers, respite care, Meals on Wheels and grocery delivery programs. Your local agency on aging can help connect you.

Take pride in your efforts. Being a caregiver is not easy. Don't expect yourself to be perfect — it's normal to feel annoyed or frustrated at times. But if you feel near a breaking point, take a breather.

Watch for signs of depression. Extreme sadness or hopelessness that lingers more than two weeks is a sign that you may need professional help.

CLEANING

Question:

My husband and I just recently moved to Idaho. We love the area and the wonderful lifestyle here, but goodness... what's with your hard water!? My sinks and showers get gross and scaly with nasty stains and stubborn buildup. You're my only hope Lori! I'm a newly-sprouted Idaho Spud, making a few new adjustments. Can you help?

"City Girl Hard Up with Hard Water"

Answer:

Welcome to Paradise! I've lived in the great state of Idaho my entire life, and can proudly say I'm a survivor of hard water trauma! You can be too! For your showers and sinks, nothing tackles hard water scum and scale better than Showers 'N Stuff. For hard water spots on windows (usually caused from lawn sprinkler overspray) there's only one product... Once Over. You'll be amazed as you watch those nasty, stubborn stains disappear!

with his friends last year. But this time, he had another person to think about.

Samir and Amanda Smriko married in September 2009. The newlyweds knew deployment with the 116th was a possibility but weren't certain until he read it in the news in April.

"I'm sad, but trying to be OK with it," said Amanda, 22. She knew it was coming, Samir said, but that didn't make the news any easier to take.

"She didn't want to accept it," he said. "No one wanted to accept it."

But in less than three months, Amanda will have to say goodbye to her new husband. Between his work shifts and his increased National Guard training schedule, they are making as much time for each other as possible. In May, they vacationed in Lake Tahoe together, and they hope to go on more trips before he leaves.

After Samir deploys, Amanda plans to move out of their Twin Falls apartment and back in with her parents.

"I won't live alone," Amanda said. Samir's family will check in on her, he said, and he'll do what he can to stay in touch. Soldiers have access to the Internet, Skype and phone cards, so they'll chat whenever possible. (They know not to rely on cell phones — one couple they know accumulated a $4,000 one-month bill that way.)

The coming year will be hard, but the couple is confident they'll tough it out.

• • •

Spc. Denise Mealer's life has also changed radically since she first signed up.

Denise, 21, enlisted in the National Guard on a whim during a shopping trip to Magic Valley Mall. Just 17 at the time, she didn't know she would soon meet her future husband, Jarid, while working at Walmart in Jerome. She didn't know they would have a son together. She didn't know she would leave her new family for a war-torn country.

While pregnant, Denise learned her unit might deploy. She tried to get out of the National Guard, and when that didn't work, she quit her job at Albertsons to spend as much time with Zakary as possible. The family went on a cruise with Jarid's parents, then put Zakary in day care a couple of times a week to make the transition easier when his mommy leaves.

It's a start, but it won't replace the time lost with her son.

"You can never be prepared enough," she said.

Denise plans to bring her laptop to Iraq to talk on Skype with her family and take online classes. She wants to be an emergency medical technician, and her lieutenant encouraged soldiers to stay busy and accomplish something in their free time.

While she will miss Jarid and Zakary, she is excited for deployment.

"Then I'll have a story to tell my son," she said.

• • •

While her husband, Sgt.

Staff Sgt. Clint Doerr received this flag made of wood after returning home from his last National Guard deployment in Iraq.

"I'm happy 'cause he's fighting for our freedom. But I'm sad because I'm not going to see him for a year."

— Logan Doerr, 8-year-old son of Staff Sgt. Clint Doerr

"I told them we'll be throwing parties a lot so we'll forget him," she said, smiling.

Last weekend, the girls went to a camp for soldiers' children in Donnelly, where counselors were trained to answer questions they might not feel comfortable asking family members. And until he leaves, Armando will cheer them on from the sidelines at their softball games.

• • •

They've been through deployment before. They know what the separation does to families.

Staff Sgt. Clint Doerr first deployed to Iraq in 2004. That tour took him away from his family for 18 months, leaving his wife, Maria, his son, Logan, and his step-children, Kayla and AJ Gutierrez, at home in Twin Falls. Between extended family and Clint's co-workers at the Twin Falls Police Department, Maria and the kids were well cared for, but nothing could fill the hole in their family.

Clint's absence was hard, but the reunion was harder. Clint left a loving, affectionate father and returned a soldier, Maria said. Less patient, more likely to snap at his family. The kids had changed, too. Kayla became a teenager, moved to junior high and fought depression. Logan was 2 and not yet speaking in sentences when Clint left, and a talkative 4-year-old when he came back.

While the family still loved each other, they had no idea how to act around one another, Kayla said. They're comfortable now, but they never got back what they had pre-Iraq.

When the 116th got its orders this spring, the Doerrs knew what was coming. Here we go again, Maria thought.

But Clint hopes his previous experience will help. Last time, he paid little attention to information on how deployment affects families. He assumed he would come home and everything would return to normal.

This time, he knows that's not the case. He knows where to get help. And he knows to listen to that advice.

Right now, Clint and his family are trying not to think about his upcoming deployment.

"It hasn't hit us yet," said Kayla, 18. Logan, now 8, is old enough to know his dad is leaving. He loves playing Army with Clint — the two built a bunker under their backyard deck — and while he is already adapting to his dad being gone for training, he can't shake the sadness.

"I'm happy 'cause he's fighting for our freedom," Logan said. "But I'm sad because I'm not going to see him for a year."

His words brought tears to his mother's eyes. If only he knew.

Preparing to separate from families, guardsmen build new bonds in training

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

ORCHARD TRAINING AREA — No enemies hid behind the hills outside Mountain Home on June 9. As members of the Idaho Army National Guard's 116th Cavalry Brigade Combat Team peppered targets with machine gun fire, no one shot back.

But stress ran high throughout the unit. The soldiers were testing to qualify for weapons system training. As they drove Humvees and ran through scenarios — shooting at targets symbolizing enemy vehicles or people — officers watched and timed them from a tower. Soldiers on deck to run through their exercise watched and practiced verbal commands, staying focused as they waited.

For the guardsmen, the burden of exhausting preparation is lessened by the bonds they form within their units.

Training is less taxing physically than mentally, said Capt. Douglas Uphoff.

Exercises run both night and day to replicate what the unit might experience in Iraq, down to living in tents and running on very little sleep. If guardsmen didn't pass the weapons test, they had to repeat live fire training.

And if they can't deal with the intensity and fatigue during training, they're going to have a problem during deployment.

During the monthly sessions leading up to September's deployment, soldiers rest, eat and clean their weapons between exercises. It's common to get just three or four hours of sleep in a 24-hour period, Uphoff said.

And sometimes, they get less. At his home in Twin Falls a week after June's training, Sgt. Armando Aspeytia recalled one night when guardsmen didn't get back to their tents until 3 a.m. The unit's next test was scheduled for 4:45 a.m.

"It was like, do we sleep or do we stay up and go from there?" Aspeytia said. In the end, they decided on an hour-long nap.

Sleepless nights aren't out of the ordinary for Spc. Denise Mealer, who has a 14-month-old.

"My son doesn't sleep as it is," the Twin Falls woman said as she rested between exercises June 9. The stress still gets to her — she woke up with a cold sore one morning, which she attributed to the physical and mental strain — but soldiers simply must deal with it, she said.

Aspeytia agreed. It doesn't matter whether you feel awful or tired, he said. Everyone else feels the same way, and the training schedule doesn't have a snooze button. It doesn't help when exercises are delayed by maintenance issues and mechanical problems, he added, which forces soldiers to hurry up and wait while suppressing their anxious energy.

To stay awake, they pound energy drinks and grab an hour or two of rest whenever they can. They decompress by telling jokes, listening to music or reading.

While they train and get ready for deployment, the bond between the soldiers grows. It helps them get through the tough training regimen and is comforting for some soldiers, especially those who haven't been to Iraq before. Aspeytia, whose younger brother and close friend are also deploying, said the bond in his team helps ease uncertainties. He asks a lot of questions about what to expect.

"Like they say, knowledge is power," Aspeytia said.

As Uphoff drove through the training area June 9, he passed one unit that had hoisted boxer shorts as Humvee flags. He shook his head. That's camaraderie, he said with a grin.

Idaho Army National Guard Staff Sgt. Clint Doerr, right, pets his dog, Bleck, while his wife, Maria, and step-daughter Kayla Gutierrez also greet the dog that patrols with Doerr, a K9 officer with the Twin Falls Police Department.

Hits and Mrs.

A new generation of bloggers is waxing nostalgic over the joys of housewifery

By Whitney Friedlander
Los Angeles Times

There's a doubt that can creep into the mind of a career woman in this post-liberation era, a nagging series of questions that might come to mind after she works 10 hours, prepares and cleans up after a dinner and checks homework, makes lunches for the next day and walks the dog.

Wouldn't it be easier to stop the juggling act and be a housewife and a helpmate? Wouldn't it be better for her spouse and children if she were to opt for a more traditional role — full-time wife, full-time mom, full-time writer of thank-you notes — a choice that continues to be embraced by many forces in our culture?

Consider this: Three-quarters of Americans believe both partners should contribute to the household income, according to a Pew Research Center study from October. Meanwhile, only 37 percent of mothers who work outside the home want to be working full time, that same study reported.

Maybe those women are just tired, stressed out by the tedium of everyday life amid a recession. Maybe it's easier to idealize so-called simpler times (1945 to '65 anyone?) amid difficult ones. Or perhaps we should examine the role of pop culture and TV, which has a tendency to clothe domestic life in perfect little cocktail dresses.

After all, the much watched women of Wisteria Lane seem to be more interested in "feminine arts" such as gossiping and scheming than in holding down a corporate gig. The housewives of the Camelot-era "Mad Men" seem to have nothing better to do than mix martinis, look fabulous and inspire a partnership with Banana Republic and a slew of cocktail recipes that are listed on sites such as Oprah.com.

Whatever the source of their inspiration, a small contingent of women is turning to the Internet to champion the importance of being a good wife and partner. Some of their voices are sincere and straightforward. Others toy with the notion of 1950s housewifery, viewing it through a lens that seems clouded with nostalgia. It seems doubtful any of them would endear themselves to the editors of Ms. Magazine, but they have tapped into that longing to be a full-time wife and mother.

There are bloggers like Kathi Browne, a fortysomething mother of three in Maryville, Tenn., who stopped working in the corporate world after her third child was born and summarizes her philosophy at Wingspouse.com as "an alternative to the traditional career choices some executive spouses are forced to make. Rather than requiring a choice between a career or family, the wingspouse career unites the two — creating a partnership between the executive and the spouse, and leading to mutual success."

A wingspouse can help analyze an executive's ideas without fear of reprisals — or theft. A wingspouse might accompany his or her partner to a speaking event and help work the room — or simply stand back and read people to see if the message is getting across. Or provide comfort on the home front. "Another wingspouse shared her secret to making her husband feel settled sooner," Browne blogged last December. "She hangs the same plaque in the front entrance of every home they move to!"

A wingspouse can be a man or a woman, but Browne acknowledges that she believes she is writing primarily for women.

In San Diego, Kelley Lilien, 30, a graphic designer and work-from-home mother of two, lets her inner eccentric housewife run free with MrsLilien.com. Hers is a splashy website with themed posts on perfect picnic outfits and snacks or Grace Kelly tributes, each entry enhanced by a fanciful poem.

Keeping everything tongue-in-cheek, Lilien also extols the virtues of another nuclear family stereotype, the mother's little helper. She is not afraid to mention booze, pills and retail therapy on her blog. While her alter ego might be the one to show up at your cousin's wedding in a T-shirt-length magenta caftan to match her super-sized Cosmopolitan cocktail, the real-life Mrs. Lilien is slightly more subdued, happily affixing her fingers with the cocktail rings her husband gives her each Valentine's Day, never leaving the house without lipstick and believing that a good dinner party "is just what life's about."

And then there's Taryn

Cox, who isn't afraid to put it all out there, unabashedly writing about stereotypically uxorial topics ranging from themed baby showers and creating her own cocktail-style dresses to the art of ironing a newspaper and how to clean with vodka at a blog she has titled TarynCoxTheWife.com.

Cox's posts showcase classic glamour and gorgeous parties as songs such as "Sunny Side of the Street" play in the background.

"I've always just been so completely fascinated by the idea of marriage and dedication," says Cox, a trim 26-year-old with a penchant for pastels and an e-mail address that starts with "stepfordwife."

No, she's not married and she doesn't have kids, but "this (blog) is for those dreams and fantasies. I believe my own vision. I believe there's an art to being a good wife."

Growing up in Newport Beach, Calif., as an only child to a single mom, Cox says her enthusiasm for the wife-and-mother role grew when she saw all her elementary school friends getting picked up at the curb when school let out and she was shuffled off to the YMCA for after-school care. Her blog, where the word "wife" is written in capital letters, includes rules for domestic bliss (WIFE rule No. 17: "The perfect WIFE should shave her legs every day or every other day." WIFE rule No. 14: "The perfect WIFE should have the most beautiful and neat handwriting. This always comes in handy when writing Thank You notes, Addressing Cards, and Sharing Recipes").

MOM SPEAK
A BLOG BY SHELLEY BONNES

The phases they go and grow through

It was Christmas Eve when we decided to do a family movie night with a Christmas movie before bed. The movie choice was "A Christmas Story" where little Ralphie wants a Red Ryder BB gun. ... Little did we know the effect it would have on my 4-year-old. He saw the desire that little Ralphie had for that Red Ryder BB gun and decided he wanted one too. I started out by telling him in a joking way that he would "shoot his eye out." He assured me he wouldn't. I told him he wasn't old enough and that when he was older he could take a gun safety class if he was responsible. He was quick to assure me that he was responsible now. The more we tried to divert his desire the worse it got.

I can tell you from experience how crazy my kids go when their dad is out of town. Even if it's just for one night, my 4-year-old son really struggles without his father around. My husband shoulders all the responsibility for the financial support of our family, is my best friend, and is our kids' favorite person in the world. Every evening around 6 o'clock, my kids hear the garage door open and it's as if the circus has come to town. They drop whatever they are doing and run, yelling, to the door to meet him with hugs and kisses.

Summertime is here — and so is the chance of kids' injuries

By Barbara Mahany
Chicago Tribune

Yeah, sure, summertime is all about easy. Except when you're a kid and you keep getting bumped or scraped, bee-stung or klonked in the head. How to handle these boo-boos? We dialed up Dr. Joseph Wright, an emergency room kids' doc for the last 20 years at Children's National Medical Center in Washington, D.C., and a professor of pediatrics and emergency medicine.

He's here to help.

Scenario No. 1

YOU CAN DO IT

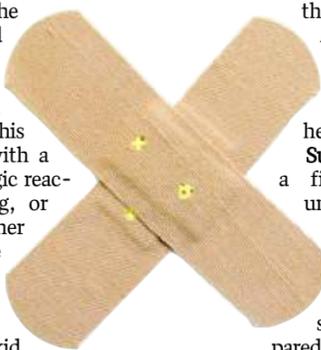

Bee sting: Ice to the sting, ASAP. Then, try to get the stinger out once it's a tad numbed. Let the little guy know that within half an hour the pain will subside (obviously this works only for kids with a concept of time). Allergic reactions: Throat swelling, or body rash. If you see either of those, grab the Benadryl and call the doctor, or, if it's severe enough, dial 911.

Twisted ankle: If a kid can't bear weight on it, it likely needs medical attention. Even if it's a minor sprain, get the kid off it. Try R-I-C-E, which spells rest, ice, compression, elevate. Use an Ace bandage to secure an ice pack in place. If you do feel the need to slip on a pre-made compression wrap, make sure it's not too tight. You should be able to slip two fingers under the wrap. If the kid says he feels pins and needles below the wrap, it's too tight. And if the extremity turns bright red, it's too tight, and the blood can't return back to the heart.

Sunburn: Remember, this is a first-degree burn. It's uncomfortable, and it's going to require local relief — a cool washcloth is best. Kids might benefit from some analgesic. Be prepared for a major peel.

Splinter: If you can't get it out with tweezers, in one solid piece or neat parts, don't be shy about getting medical help. "Don't ignore a splinter. It needs to come out."

Bird feet

Newsday

Q. Why does my cockatiel walk across the bottom of his cage but my canary just hops across the bottom like a person in a sack race? Is there something wrong with his legs, or do all canaries do this?

A. Actually, there is nothing wrong with him at all. Most small birds do not walk by putting one foot ahead of the other like larger ones do. They are always in a hurry to get from one place to the next and, when you are so little, you can cover more ground faster by hopping rather than taking little baby steps.

Scenario No. 2

GET TO THE DOCTOR ASAP IF THE KID ...

- Has a head injury (including a hard bonk on the head from a fall)
- Has an obviously deformed or immediately swollen body part
- Hits his/her abdomen hard against bike handlebars (You might not see the obvious fallout here, but there could be internal damage.)
- Needs stitches (Any time you can see the flesh beneath the skin, or if bleeding won't stop.)
- Steps on or is otherwise punctured by a rusty nail

DIY weddings abound

By Dorie Turner
Associated Press writer

After the I dos and 'til death do us parts, they're the two little words every bride waits to hear on her wedding day: "How creative!"

At least, that's what I wanted to hear after I got married last September before 90 guests in an outdoor ceremony at an antebellum mansion in downtown Memphis.

Artsy to the core, I longed to create the perfect handmade wedding, with clever details that my guests wouldn't see anywhere else. I wanted to highlight my personal style and undying love for being crafty and gluing stuff together.

And with a budget of $10,000, I wanted to save a little cash.

Already an avid shopper at the online artists marketplace Etsy.com, I knew when my beau, John, proposed that it was the first place to start looking for unique items, and to get ideas for what I could make myself.

Etsy sales have risen quickly since it began in 2005, reaching $180 million last year thanks in part to a burgeoning wedding section with thousands of handmade wares, said spokesman Adam Brown. Brides can peruse everything from typewriter-key cufflinks to a personalized ring-bearer pillow.

Wedding blogs such as 100 Layer Cake, Style Me Pretty and Etsy Wedding also promote handmade wedding fare and artsy style. Online bridal message boards light up with suggestions when brides-to-be ask about how to make their own table numbers, or craft lanterns out of baby food jars and tea light candles.

Do-it-yourself wedding decorations and favors have become so popular that TheKnot.com and Martha Stewart Weddings — the arbiters in all things bridal — now have sections dedicated to brides looking to break out the hot-glue gun.

"In generations past, weddings were very similar, but now people want to put their own unique spin on their wedding," said Rebecca Dolgin, executive editor of TheKnot.com. "They want it to be different from someone else's, and these DIY details really make that happen."

LEFT: The cake topper at Dorie Turner's 2009 wedding in Memphis, Tenn. Turner turned a pair of bird-shaped salt and pepper shakers into a little bride and groom and mounted them on an antique letterpress stamp.

Dorie Turner and her husband, John Nolt, during their Sept. 26 wedding.

- I hired Etsy artists to create boutonnieres and corsages for the wedding party and our families — something more permanent (and cheaper) than flowers that they could take home with them. The boutonnieres were roses made from folded roadmaps, and the corsages were flowers created from brown and green organza and brown pearls. (Corsages, $15 apiece. Boutonnieres, $8 apiece.)

- I asked a friend who is a graphic artist to design our program based on a wedding invitation I had found online. It read like a story rather than the traditional order of ceremony, and it drew more comments than any other item at our wedding. ("Here's how it's going to go..." the program read near the top.) We printed the programs at home on recycled card stock and used a paper cutter from a craft store to round off the edges.

- After searching for nearly three months for the perfect cake topper, I realized I'd have to spend more than $100 and probably still wouldn't get exactly what I wanted. So, I turned a pair of bird-shaped salt and pepper shakers into a little bride and groom and mounted them on an antique letterpress stamp with the word "September." I used polymer clay to create the groom's top hat and shoes, and I recycled tulle and pearls from my mom's wedding dress to decorate the bride bird. (About $25 total.)

- Favors for our guests were CDs of songs written by my fiancé and his fellow songwriter friends as part of his proposal (he's the creative type too). We designed the CD cover and label and assembled them ourselves at home, spending about $60 on the whole project.

- Instead of a photo slideshow during the reception, we hung photos on long pieces of twine with clothes pins to create a more homey feel. I also made a sign that said "LOVE" to hang in the middle, using a fancy font I found for free online and flower-shaped cardboard cutouts.

- We decided to print our invitations and save-the-date cards at home, so we had a designer from PrintablePress.com create them and send us the PDF. We gussied up the envelopes with tree and bird stamps from Etsy and Target. ($175 for the design, $50 for paper supplies and $45 for stamps.)

- I wanted our guests to fill out notes of advice to us, so I used a set of typewriter-style stamps to make little note cards from our leftover card stock saying things like "wishes" and "thoughts" and "blessings" at the top.

- Instead of a traditional guest book, we had a photo booth where guests could don pirate hats, sunglasses and feather boas. Guests got to keep one copy, and the other they glued into our guest book, where they could write notes. (About $1,400 for six hours of booth rental, which includes an attendant, unlimited photos, two sets of prints, a scrapbook and a digital CD of every photo taken. We provided the basket of costume pieces ourselves to save $400.)

Not everything that can be DIY at a wedding should be, though. There are some things best left to the experts.

Dolgin recommends that brides — even the most frugal ones — hire people to take care of the food, cakes and photos. No matter how good a baker she is or how talented with a camera, the bride has too much to worry about on her wedding day (and the week leading up to it) to handle those items herself.

In the end, many guests at my wedding gave me the best compliment possible with these simple words: "This wedding is just so you!" And it absolutely was.

Why kids get swimmer's ear

By Howard Bennett
Special to The Washington Post

Whether it's a community pool or the ocean, kids love to jump, dive or slide into the water.

For most kids, being in the pool for hours at a time doesn't cause any problems. Some kids, however, can get an infection called swimmer's ear. Although swimmer's ear isn't serious, it hurts a lot. Fortunately, in most cases, it's easy to treat.

The ear is divided into three parts. The outer ear is the ear itself and the ear canal. The middle ear is made up of the eardrum and the middle ear bones that transmit vibrations to the inner ear. The inner ear is made up of the cochlea, which transmits sound signals to the brain, and the semicircular canals that help with balance.

The ear canal is lined with sensitive skin, tiny hairs and special wax-producing glands. Your ears produce wax to protect the skin that lines the ear canal. The wax also traps foreign matter and protects your eardrum.

If you've been swimming for a long time, water gets into your ear canal. Sometimes the water will dissolve the wax and become trapped inside. Since the ear canal isn't sterile (that means it contains germs), the water may allow bacteria to grow, causing an infection.

Doctors diagnose swimmer's ear by seeing what happens if you gently pull on your ear. With a regular ear infection (that's the type you get after colds or the flu), it doesn't hurt to pull on your ear. The reason it doesn't hurt is that your middle ear is located within bone, so moving the ear doesn't put pressure on your eardrum. Since swimmer's ear is an infection in the ear canal, pulling moves the part of the ear that's infected, causing pain.

Doctors treat swimmer's ear with drops that reduce inflammation and kill bacteria. The good news is that you should be feel better in a day or so. The bad news is that you should not go swimming until you get the OK from your doctor. This can be anywhere from three days to a week.

How do you prevent swimmer's ear? When you come out of the water, tilt your head to one side and bounce up and down. Another technique is to put drops in your ear canal that help dry out the water. Your folks can get these for you at the pharmacy; no prescription is needed.

Mark my words:

Asking the Oxford dictionary experts about English

By Margaret Webb Pressler
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — You might not realize it, but English is one of the most difficult languages on Earth. Its rules have lots of exceptions, and its words are hard to spell. Here's a typical example of how confusing English can be: Say the words "mate," "eight" and "strait" out loud. They all make the same sound when you say them, but they are spelled totally differently!

Pronouncing and spelling most English words probably is easy for you, but for people learning English for the first time, these kinds of quirks in our language make it extremely challenging.

Summer break is a good time to learn some cool things about the English language. These fun facts are from the Web site of the Oxford English Dictionary, a highly respected authority on the language. To see lots of other interesting facts, go to www.askoxford.com and click on "Ask the Experts."

Q: What other words besides "hungry" and "angry" end in "-gry?"

A: There aren't any!

Q: Are there any words in which the same letter appears three times in a row?

A: Typically, English requires a hyphen to prevent that from happening, as in bee-eater or cross-section. But the Oxford English Dictionary does contain a few examples without hyphens, including frillless (without frills) and duchessship (the office of being a duchess). And, no, "brrr" is not a real word.

Q: What's the longest one-syllable English word?

A: There are several examples of one-syllable words with nine letters, including "stretched," "scratched" and "screched."

Q: Are there any words that have no words that rhyme with them?

A: There are no words in the language that rhyme with either "orange" or "silver." Pity the poets.

Q: Are there any words that exist only as a plural?

A: There are quite a few, including scissors, binoculars and tongs. (What do those three objects have in common?)

Q: What is the opposite of exceed (which means to be superior to or better than)?

A: There isn't one, but the editors of the Oxford English Dictionary think that one is needed. They are considering the possibility of "deceed," which would mean "to be less than."

Q: Is there a word for a baby hedgehog?

A: Until recently, they were simply called baby hedgehogs (awww). But lately, experts have started calling these spiny little critters "hoglets" or even the super-cute "hedgehoglet."

What is a U.S. Territory?

By Moira E. McLaughlin
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Treasury has begun a program of creating quarters honoring U.S. territories — just like it did for the states. That got us thinking about territories.

Many states today were once territories. Colorado, Utah and Wyoming, for example, were all territories in the 1800s before they joined the Union. Most recently, Hawaii was a territory that became the 50th state in 1959.

In some cases, the United States bought land from other countries and named them territories. In 1917, the United States bought the Virgin Islands from Denmark. Who wouldn't want to own that aqua water and those sandy beaches? In other cases, the United States acquired territories after wars. For example, after the Spanish-American War in 1898, the United States acquired Puerto Rico and Guam, which today are U.S. territories.

Now the United States controls 14 territories, three in the Caribbean Sea and 11 in the Pacific

TERRITORY TRIVIA

The Southwest Territory was the first territory to ask to become a state. It was admitted into the Union on June 1, 1796, as the state of Tennessee.

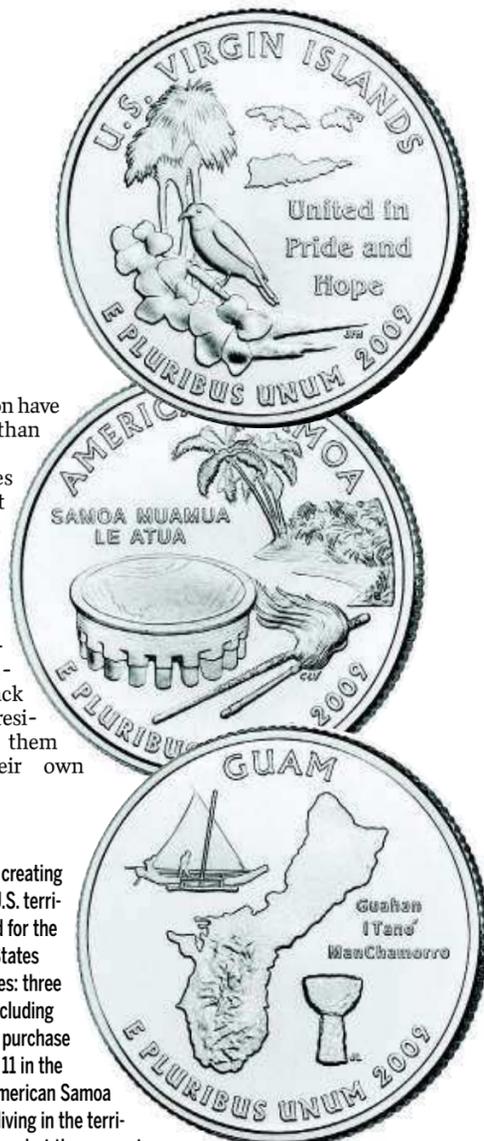

Ocean. Five of those are inhabited by people: American Samoa, Guam, the Northern Mariana Islands, Puerto Rico and the U.S. Virgin Islands. (There are some deserted islands in the middle of the ocean that are U.S. territories.) Territories can gain independence as the Marshall Islands did in 1986.

People living in the territories are U.S. citizens, but they cannot vote in presidential elections and although they are represented in Congress, their representatives have no voting power. That sounds a lot like the District of Columbia, where residents got the right to vote in national elections in 1961. Today, just like territories, D.C. doesn't have a voting representative in Congress. The Founding Fathers set up the city like this because they didn't want the capital to have too much power, but today many people think it's wrong that people who live in Washington have fewer rights than other citizens.

The territories and the District have their own local governments and some, such as Puerto Rico, have their own constitutions, but President Barack Obama is their president. Some of them even have their own Olympic teams!

The U.S. Treasury is creating quarters honoring U.S. territories, just like it did for the states. The United States controls 14 territories: three in the Caribbean (including the Virgin Islands, a purchase from Denmark) and 11 in the Pacific (including American Samoa and Guam). People living in the territories are U.S. citizens, but they cannot vote in presidential elections.
