Millions of dollars head to Idaho counties

Twin Falls Co. to receive $1.5 million for federal lands

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Twin Falls County's coffers will be a bit fuller thanks to the federal government's full payment in lieu of taxes for federal land the county can't tax.

The county will receive more than $1.53 million from the U.S. Interior Department, part of $358.1 million distributed by the agency. Idaho will receive $25.28 million, according to the

Hailey rallies for Bergdahl

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — When Hailey resident Steve "Gus" Snyder sees a UPS driver with a year's worth of beard driving past, he always pauses to place his hand over his chest.

Like so many residents of the Wood River Valley, Snyder wants to show he hasn't forgotten that driver's son, Army Spc. Bowe Bergdahl, who was captured by the Taliban in Afghanistan on June 30, 2009.

Bergdahl, who was promoted from private first class in absentia on June 12, remains the only U.S. soldier known to be captured in Afghanistan. The Taliban has released several Internet videos of him in the past year, in which Bergdahl pleads for release but appears healthy.

To mark 365 days of Bergdahl's imprisonment, Wood River Valley residents gathered Wednesday in Hailey at Zaney's River Street Coffee to hear a statement from Bergdahl's parents, who haven't spoken directly to the media since his capture. Blaine County Sheriff Walt

REFUGEE REFORM

Local agencies unsure of some proposed changes' effectiveness

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

The Obama administration's ordered reviews of the U.S. refugee resettlement system have been met locally with a measure of skepticism.

While local resettlement managers told the Times-News that reform is long overdue, some proposals may not improve the system, said Ron Black, manager of the College of Southern Idaho Refugee Center.

One change would extend the maximum duration of federal financial aid refugees receive from eight months to 18. Some people may need more time to find work, Black said. Refugees from places such as Nepal and Burma need to learn English, learn to drive a car and adjust to cultural differences, such as hygiene and being on the clock.

But refugees who arrive with some education and knowledge of English shouldn't need 18 months to get on their feet, Black noted.

"It can be a disincentive to work," he said.

CSI's Twin Falls center provides housing and helps refugees find work by providing English classes, employment counseling and job placement. The U.S. State Department requires refugee centers to place a certain percentage of refugees in jobs within five months, although Black said the department had backed off that mandate during the economic downturn.

Black said some refugees want to work, but some will drag their feet as long as they receive benefits.

"I hope whatever reforms they come up with are flexible," Black said. "It needs to be a case-by-case basis. One size does not fit all."

Chuda Subedi, 30, and his family could be poster children for the need for extended financial aid. Subedi and his brother, Som, 46, came with their families from Nepal to Twin Falls in October 2008. Their brother, Shree, 56, and his family came in May 2009. They knew little English and have struggled to find work.

Now, Subedi is the only member of the family who speaks some English. The only work he can find is at a temp agency, but no work is available now. Som goes to the same temp agency but doesn't get work because he can't speak English.

He was evicted from his apartment when his benefits ran out last June and his wife suffers from mental problems that make her wander constantly. His family of five moved in with Subedi.

They were joined in the house by Shree's family in January when Shree lost his apartment because he also can't get work. Both Shree and Som will begin another English class at CSI in August.

Fourteen family members now live in a four-bedroom house paid for by Subedi's parents' Social Security money and what little Subedi can bring in.

"For the illiterate, uneducated, there are no jobs," Subedi said, pointing to his

Graced with award, Mustard Tree founders look to expand

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

John and Sandra Sexton are not ones to rest on their laurels, especially laurels they weren't expecting.

Since 2004, the Sextons have been the guiding force behind the Mustard Tree Wellness Clinic in Twin Falls, a free health clinic that provides care for uninsured and underinsured people from around the Magic Valley.

This year, they received the Southern Idaho Jefferson Award for public service given to people who make a difference on a daily basis in their communities. Out of a group of local winners, they were selected to attend the award's June 22 national ceremony in Washington, D.C., and received a Jefferson Award medal that will hang on the clinic wall.

Sandra Sexton said the award is one of the greatest programs she has witnessed.

"Most of the news is so negative," Sandra said. "But at the ceremony, we were able to hear story after story that was so inspiring."

John said the experience was humbling. The Jefferson program has the eastern part of the country mobilized, he said, but the West is playing catch-up.

"It's good to be able to see the good," John said.

Dr. David McClusky had the original idea for a clinic but works full-time as a surgeon at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center. John had retired, so he could devote himself to the clinic — he still puts in 60 to 70 hours a week — and was able to get it off the ground. Sandra works part-time at St. Luke's in cardiac rehabilitation, then

St. Benedicts to close long-term care unit in Jerome

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

JEROME — Another Magic Valley medical facility has made a big change in order to save money.

St. Benedicts Family Medical Center in Jerome announced Wednesday that its long-term care facility will close July 30.

Rev. Norbert Novak, chairman of the hospital's board of trustees, said the long-term facility has been losing money for the past few years. St.

Benedicts was also going to have to sink additional funds into bringing the 49-year-old building up to fire code before 2013.

The hospital began internal and outside reviews of its long-term services about a year ago. Based on the findings, the board decided to close the facility.

"We were limited in what we could do as a hospital," Novak said.

The number of patients served at the long-term facility has steadily decreased, Community Relations Director Christy Davies said. An average of 30 daily residents in 2004 dropped to 15 by 2010. The hospital tries to focus on the greatest need, Davies said, and the facility no longer serves enough of the community.

"People are staying home longer," Davies said. "A lot more care is occurring in the clinic and at home."

The facility stopped admissions and notified staff and families of the remaining 14 long-term care residents of the decision Wednesday.

Davies said fortunately, every resident had family that could help them through the relocation.

"We're very close with the family members," Davies said. "They know we'll work to get them taken care of."

Novak said some assisted-living facilities exist in Jerome, but no other skilled-nursing homes. So a center representative will help the patients find beds nearby, probably in Twin Falls. Novak said some St. Benedicts employees will continue to work in the hospital; those who are laid off will get help finding new jobs.

Davies said the center hasn't decided what to do with the building once it's vacant. It was equipped to meet long-term care facility regulations and will have to be revamped. Three services that St. Benedicts will expand are its surgery, clinic providers and transitional care, but Davies didn't know which would be the best fit for the new space.

Blaine County Sheriff Walt Femling, a friend of the family of Army Spc. Bowe Bergdahl of Hailey, reads a statement from the family to a gathering Wednesday at Zaney's River Street Coffee in Hailey. The gathering marked one year since Bergdahl was captured in Afghanistan by the Taliban.

Bowe

Femling, a friend of the family, read the statement to the crowd.

"It lifts our spirits each time we see the streets of our hometown and valley covered in yellow ribbons, knowing they're there for Bowe and our family," Femling read. "We're trying to find courage and be patient while doing everything we can to keep hope during this difficult situation!"

Femling noted that Bergdahl's girlfriend, identified only as Monica, has moved in with his family to help morally support them, and that the family is in constant contact with military representatives.

"I know they are happy with what the military is doing (to find and retrieve Bergdahl)," Femling said.

Others in the community have expressed disappointment that Bergdahl hasn't been freed.

"They're in a little bit of disbelief that it has been a full year," said Zaney's owner Sue Martin, whose coffee shop became a place for locals to exchange information and sympathies about Bergdahl. She is offering free yellow ribbons and stickers with Bergdahl's face on them to replace the ones that have faded over the past 12 months.

After Femling's statement and a proclamation of continued support of the Bergdahls from Hailey Mayor Rick Davis, many in attendance gathered ribbons to place around town.

"I'm going to do my part and participate this year," Marcia Rausch said with a handful of folded yellow. She echoed the Bergdahl family's statement, emphasizing how important it is for the community to support its long-missing son.

Snyder, who has known the Bergdahls for many years and is a Vietnam-era veteran, tied his ribbon to the back of the canoe on his roof rack, right next to the year-old, ragged, faded one.

"What can we say from our hearts that can be listened to?" he said, hoping American support for Bergdahl will provide greater impetus to end the war. "My heart is just grieving."

But like many hearts belonging to the Bergdahls and their friends and neighbors in the Wood River Valley, it is also full of hope that Bowe Bergdahl will be returned safely.

department's website.

"We deeply appreciate the support these communities provide federal lands," Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar said in a statement.

Twin Falls County Commission Chairman George Urie said the payments tend to be so sporadic that the county doesn't include them in its budget. Prior to the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008, which enacted five years of full payment, the county only received about $900,000 from the federal government.

"(Traditionally) they haven't fully funded us," Urie said. "They just kind of gave us what they felt like."

Because of that, the county typically uses PILT money to fill any gaps that arise in the fiscal year and for the commissioners had budgeted.

The county has been lobbying to keep the PILT payments — which are reimbursements for the county's 600,000-plus acres of federal land — fully funded, he said. The mandate for full funding will expire for fiscal year 2013, creating a half-million-dollar budget hole if previous trends are followed.

The money's equally valued across the Magic Valley. Cassia County Commission Chairman Dennis Crane said his county counts on its PILT money. Cassia County will receive $1.87 million this year.

"It's somewhat substantial to closing the budget," he said. "It's very important to us."

brothers. "If they didn't have family like me, where would they go?"

The CSI Refugee Center is projected to receive 350 refugees between October 2009 and September 2010. It is still working with 100 refugees from before October.

Changes sought by the Obama administration would have to be approved by Congress, with input from national resettlement agencies. But, Black said, local agencies such as his had no input.

"They asked some centers, like in Chicago," Black said. "But needs in Chicago are different from ours."

Black would like more focus on support services, such as transportation and programs to deal with housing evictions. He'd also like an increased emphasis on English language education, along with the creation of training programs with local businesses, such as hotels.

The Subedi family in Twin Falls came to America after living in a refugee camp in Nepal. The family of 14 — not all family members are pictured — is supported by the income of Chuda Subedi, upper-left corner. Other family members have had trouble finding work.

MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

Aleksandra Popovic, employment coordinator for the center and a former refugee, said she has had trouble with some businesses refusing employment to non-Spanish-speaking refugees, although it's gotten better.

"We're trying to keep a balance," Popovic said, "between getting jobs for our clients and keeping businesses happy."

When the economy is good, businesses will hire people with limited English, but that's less common now, Black said. Popovic said it was easier three years ago. Even qualified refugees, although they get interviews, are not getting jobs.

"But even Americans aren't getting the jobs," Popovic said.

pents in her share at the clinic.

The nonprofit depends on grants, donations and volunteers to keep the door open. It has received grants for equipment from the Twin Falls Health Initiatives Trust and received $20,000 in October from St. Luke's Magic Valley's Community Health Improvement fund to "continue providing care." The county-run health trust was formed during the 2006 sale of the Twin Falls hospital to St. Luke's.

"St. Luke's has been so good to us; I like to give them credit," John said.

But those grants barely keep the clinic afloat. Sandra said many grants fund only specific equipment or procedures, so the clinic struggles to meet operating costs.

"When people hear that we've received these grants, I think they think that we don't need money," Sandra said.

The clinic has four treatment rooms that are never empty during clinic hours. Dr. Robert Lobb sees 12 to 15 patients during his four-hour shift and sees the need the clinic fills.

"These people are so happy to get the help and to be pointed in the right direction," Lobb said.

What spare room there is in the rented suite north of St. Luke's is piled to the ceiling with supplies and drugs. The phone rings off the hook so the Sextons finally hired an administrative assistant. Success can be stressful.

"We need more room," John said as he sidled between piles of boxes.

The Mustard Tree may get some relief this summer as similar clinics pop up in surrounding communities. Another free clinic opened a few months ago in Gooding. North Canyon Medical Center CEO Earl Fitzpatrick said when considering a clinic, he looked for models and found the Mustard Tree and John Sexton.

"I love him," Fitzpatrick said. "I'm busy running a hospital so he saved me a lot on research. He basically handed me the paperwork and showed me how to get over the hurdles."

The Gooding clinic is open only one night a week but doesn't face the demand of Twin Falls. The clinic operates in donated space, is staffed by volunteers and received a sizeable donation from the hospital's auxiliary.

Sexton is helping another clinic start up in the Wood River Valley and hopes to do the same in Burley. And he said he won't slow down there. His goal is to open as many as 25 free clinics across Idaho so people in need don't have to depend on Medicaid.

At that rate, he may need to save space for another Jefferson Award medal on the clinic wall.

Calmer winds ease firefighting

Times-News

Gusty winds caused a few wildfires sparked Tuesday to char sizable areas before they could be brought under control. Additional U.S. Bureau of Land Management crews were brought in from other parts of Idaho, and they got some relief Wednesday as winds died down.

All of the fires were expected to be contained by Wednesday evening, with some controlled as well.

The Black Butte Fire east of the range burned an estimated 16,442 acres before six engines and several aircraft could bring it under control. Measured at 5,000 acres earlier in the day, the fire grew due to both a flare-up and the BLM's ability to thoroughly map it, spokesman Brock Astle said.

The Sailor Creek Fire, west of Mountain Home Air Force Base's Saylor Creek Bombing Range, burned more than 10,400 acres, requiring 14 fire engines and two water tenders.

The Buhl Corral Fire 7 miles west of Hollister burned close to 100 acres, and the Pot Hole Fire north of the Black Butte Fire covered about 260 acres. The Clear Lakes Fire south of Wendell was the smallest at nine acres.

The fire danger has been designated "moderate," so wildfires are more of a threat. The employees at the BLM remind people not to use fireworks on public lands to minimize the possibility of more wildfires.

Students raise funds for CSI Foundation drive

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Students have played a role in two $10,000 donations to the College of Southern Idaho Foundation's major gifts campaign.

The CSI Student Senate recently donated $10,000 in carryover funds to the campaign, which is raising money for scholarships. The money was left in the student organization's budget at the end of the fiscal year before the 14-member student group unanimously decided to donate it.

Because the funds were matched by a donor, the actual gift ended up at $20,000.

"It's just great to be able to give back to them because they have a heart for the students," said Sheree Haggan, CSI student body president.

Haggan also helped oversee and manage a telethon that took place during a two-week period in June, raising an additional $10,000.

The event included between 15 and 20 student and alumni volunteers.

Having scholarships available to students is an added bonus for a college that already provides an education to students at a low cost, Haggan said.

"It's incredible how much CSI provides," she said.

Tom Ashenbrener, chairman of the major gifts campaign executive committee, said that the donations are "extraordinary."

"I think it's astounding," he said. "... I just think it's a wonderful tribute to the students and their support of the college. It's a good example of positive leadership by students."

Curtis Eaton, executive director of the foundation, said, "I think it's very notable that the students would want to use some of their own money to set up a scholarship for students."

Pocatello woman's job loss is gain for elderly

By John O'Connell
Idaho State Journal

POCATELLO — Long ago, Teresa Nelson had aspirations of opening her own small business and making the right moves to see it grow.

Toward that end, she earned both a bachelor's degree and a master's in business administration at the University of Wyoming. But somehow, she found herself taking the safe route professionally, working stable jobs for established employers.

Last April, the slow economy gave Nelson the nudge she needed to pursue a goal she'd pushed aside for far too long. Nelson, the former marketing manager with the Idaho Museum of Natural History, was among a host of Idaho State University employees who were laid off due to state budget cuts to higher education.

A few months later, she's now owner of her own franchise business, called Home Helpers of Eastern Idaho, enabling the elderly to continue living in their own homes. She's already got four full-time staff members with benefits beneath her and two employees who will work on call until additional clients are added. She's had no trouble finding qualified applicants for jobs.

"They're fully bonded, insured and background checked," she said.

The client base she currently serves a handful of elderly residents is also growing nicely. Earlier this month, she was planning to hire a few additional employees in the Idaho Falls area and to meet with some perspective clients.

Strange as it may sound, Nelson is convinced that in many ways, her lack of experience in the industry accounts for a great strength of her business model.

Though the employees she's hiring have extensive backgrounds in medicine and geriatrics she's looking for staff members who are certified nurse assistants she doesn't have those qualifications herself. Nelson reasons without the temptation to spend too much time in the field, she'll be free to market her business, seek referrals and stay on top of paperwork. After all, her strengths lie in marketing and management.

Through the Home Helpers franchise, which encompasses 500 small businesses throughout North America, Nelson underwent a week of training to become a certified senior adviser. For now, her role in the field involves tasks such as shuttling seniors to appointments and taking them grocery shopping.

Nelson admits the thought of running a business to help seniors continue living at home never crossed her mind until she consulted the Idaho Small Business Development Center.

The center, funded by the state and the Small Business Administration, offers free training and consulting services to perspective business owners. Nelson spoke with officials at the center about various options, including franchising, and they had her meet with a franchise consultant.

"I don't know that I would ever have picked the senior industry on my own. I don't even think it was within my realm of consciousness if the franchise coordinator hadn't matched me," Nelson said.

Aside from senior care, Nelson had matches in event planning, tutoring and consulting. Based on those matches, Nelson began to realize that you don't necessarily have to be an expert in a given field to start a business in it. It's good enough to have a keen interest in a subject and hire some experts.

"In previous jobs I've been involved with elderly folks and always had a fondness for them," Nelson said. "The senior population is growing so quickly. This business model allows you to provide the help for them to stay independent in their own home. That was so appealing to me."

Nelson researched six different senior care franchises before she settled on Home Helpers. Her territory covers all of eastern Idaho.

In exchange for her franchise fee, Nelson said she received training, software, mentoring services, manuals, job descriptions, applications, marketing materials, policy manuals and a trusted corporate name, among other resources.

"The franchise made it easy because they just told me step by step what I needed to do," Nelson said.

Statistically, franchises have a much better chance of succeeding than other small businesses, explained Tom Maydew, executive director of the Small Business Development Center.

While just one in four small businesses survive five years, Maydew said business owners who buy franchises have an 85 percent chance of success.

"You're buying a proven step-by-step program. They have got the system developed, and it's a proven track record," Maydew said.

Osterhoudt trial begins again

Times-News

Opening arguments and law enforcement testimony kicked off the first day of Franklin Ward Osterhoudt's trial Wednesday in 5th District Court in Twin Falls.

Osterhoudt, of Buhl, is charged with incest, rape and five counts of lewd conduct with a minor.

These charges were filed in 2007, and he pleaded not guilty in July 2009. He was tried for the first time later that year, but the jury was not able to reach a verdict.

Osterhoudt's trial is expected to last through the week and possibly into Monday.

Utah immigrant verification program has loophole

By Brock Vergakis
Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — A state website created to certify that businesses are checking the immigration status of new employees doesn't verify whether the companies are actually complying with the law.

The Verify Utah website went live this week to publicly display who is using the federal E-Verify system, which cross-checks names and other information against federal databases.

However, the state Department of Commerce says it isn't checking to see if businesses are actually using E-Verify when they register with Verify Utah.

"We're not certifying — they're certifying," department spokeswoman Jennifer Bolton said. "By them going through and putting their information in, they're certifying that they, the business, has completed the federal E-Verify."

The Utah website only requires businesses to type in their company name, city and the name of the person filling out the form. A $3 registration fee is required every two years.

The state law creating the website doesn't specify that officials are supposed to verify that businesses are telling the truth. It only says employers can voluntarily register with the Department of Commerce "certifying that the private employer is in compliance."

The bill's sponsor, Sen. Chris Butters, R-West Jordan, called the website a "great incentive" while it was under consideration by legislators.

The idea behind the move is that businesses that register with the state will be looked upon as good corporate citizens.

Messages left with Butters were not immediately returned.

Tim Counts, a spokesman for U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, said it's difficult for states to easily know who is actually using the program and who isn't.

For example, some companies with employees in Utah might access E-Verify from headquarters in another state. In addition, businesses using the program frequently change.

As of June 26, about 2,600 Utah-based businesses had registered with E-Verify, while the total number of work sites in the state to use E-Verify was about 5,400.

Starting Thursday, all Utah businesses with 15 or more employees will be required to use E-Verify, although there is no penalty for not doing so.

Republican Gov. Gary Herbert nearly called lawmakers into a special session to clarify that using E-Verify is voluntary. But the move to water down the bill was scrapped when debate over an immigration law in neighboring Arizona heated up.

Albion to hold Diamondfield Jack play, lookalike contest

By Rebecca De Leon
Times-News writer

ALBION — History buffs and mustache aficionados alike can take a trip to the Wild West Saturday by participating in an impromptu play about an 1897 murder trial and a look-alike contest for wrongly-convicted murderer “Diamondfield” Jack Davis.

Davis

Society and Albion Valley Players Inc., invite people of all ages to help bring an important time in Albion history back to life.

Jackson Lee Davis made U.S. headlines in 1897, when he was convicted of the murder of two sheepherders. He spent six years in prison and was condemned to hang before the real murderers’ confession and a last-minute reprieve by then-Gov. Frank

THINK YOU KNOW JACK?

Albion will host an impromptu play and lookalike contest focusing on the trial and times of “Diamondfield” Jack Davis.
When: Saturday
Where: Albion Civic Center
Registration: Register for the contest and play Saturday morning Play: Performance scheduled to begin at 1 p.m., with possible encore performance at 3 p.m.
Lookalike contest: 2:30 p.m.
How much: Admission is free; $100 cash prize for winner of lookalike contest
Information: Verlene, 673-6213, or Tressa, 673-6900

Steunenberg set him free. Albion historian Verlene Powell obtained documents from the original trial and made them into a script for Saturday’s impromptu play at the Albion Civic Center. Anyone wishing to demonstrate their theatrical side in the play can sign up for a part. Costumes will be provided, but participants are welcome to bring their own. “It’s kind of like a Civil War re-enactment,” said Tressa Toner, who’s helping organize the event. “It’s a play that teaches history.”

“Hearsay made him look like the bad guy, but he was innocent,” Powell said of Davis. A historical display at the Civic Center is intended to highlight local efforts to establish a museum in downtown Albion. The display will feature pictures, maps, artifacts and other memorabilia from 1870s Albion. Many of the props to be used in the play are authentic items from the courtroom where Davis was convicted. The jury chairs, although their exact origin is unclear, have been preserved since the era of Davis’ trial and will be used in the play as props. “Diamondfield Jack” got his nickname from a scam that involved worthless quartz crystals presented as diamonds, but many said he was far from the cold-blooded killer his trial portrayed him as. “He was a very nice man,” Toner said. “Neighborhood kids would come by and visit him all the time because they loved him so much. He would give them candy, and they just adored him.” Davis’ unique look is the reason why organizers decided to have a look-alike contest. Participants will be judged on how well they represent Davis from the shoulders up, Toner said, with the winner receiving $100. Cuts of consequence

Buhl schools consider cutting athletics, bump a little extracurricular activities

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — No Homecoming. No state solo music competition or district tournaments. That’s the reality being faced by the Buhl School District as trustees investigate ways to trim $466,000 from the district’s $7 million budget.

Superintendent Byron Stutzman on Wednesday presented the school board with a proposal to hold another supplemental-levy vote, modified after a first attempt failed last month. But he said outside the meeting that without some sort of revenue increase, the sports, music and other extracurricular activities that make school worthwhile for many students may have to be cut.

More than 90 percent of the budget can’t be touched now, he said, including teacher salaries, transportation, nutrition and federal programs.

“Right now, nothing has been decided upon but unless something else happens we have to do what we have to do,” Stutzman said. “It would be tragic for many students. I know when I was in high school the only things keeping me going were my parents and sports.”

Cutting all middle and high school athletics and extracurricular activities, teaching supplies, new textbook and library purchases, new technology and equipment, field trips, and trimming maintenance costs would save $440,501, still leaving the district slightly over budget.

The district has about $1.2 million in savings but that could evaporate quickly if the state calls for another 5-percent hold-back, as some legislators have hinted at. Shifting the remaining savings to cover the year’s expenses would leave the district vulnerable to cash-flow fluctuations.

“I don’t think we want to run the district paycheck to paycheck, month by month,” Stutzman said. “It wouldn’t be financially responsible.”

Stutzman suggested running a one-year, $350,000 levy and getting more people to the polls. The district would kick in nearly $150,000 from savings to cover expenses and keep programs alive.

Before approving that plan, trustees want to first find out why the last levy failed, opposed by about 64 percent of voters. Surveys are being sent to those voters, with additional surveys available at the district office.

The survey breaks the levy into six separate issues, asking voters if they would support staff training, technology and computers, supplies, maintenance and restoration of employee wages.

“If we find that 600 voters are completely against everything ... another levy would be a waste of time,” board Chairman Jim Barker said.

However, Trustee Mike Hamilton said the surveys may not provide much insight.

“Regardless, we need to do what we feel is right,” Hamilton said.

If the board decides to present another levy option, the election must be held prior to mid-September, the deadline for the tax to be put on the year’s property tax assessment and in time for the coming school year.

Bellevue mayor resigns, faces DUI charge

Times-News

Bellevue Mayor Jon Anderson resigned last week, nearly two months after his second misdemeanor arrest for driving under the influence.

The Associated Press reported that Anderson left office citing health and family issues.

Anderson was arrested May 7 and charged with misdemeanor driving under the influence and possession of an open container. A week later, he pleaded not-guilty to both counts and requested a jury trial.

In June 2005, barely two months after being elected mayor, Anderson was arrested for misdemeanor driving under the influence. He pleaded guilty in October 2005 in Blaine County and was sentenced to 180 days incarceration, which were suspended. The pretrial conference for Anderson’s latest offense is set for 10 a.m., Wednesday to be heard by 5th District Magistrate Judge Mark Ingram.

Anderson on Wednesday declined comment, and a call to Bellevue City Council President Chris Koch, who is the interim mayor until November’s election, was not returned.

ISP promotes Haight to patrol lieutenant

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

Idaho State Police’s Region 4 office has a new patrol lieutenant in Kevin Haight, who was promoted Monday afternoon in a pinning ceremony at the Jerome headquarters.

Haight, 40, is a 10-year ISP veteran, having served his entire tenure in the Jerome office. The former sergeant replaces Capt. Rob Storm, who took over Region 4 command when Kedrick Wills became the major in charge of the Police Services Division in Meridian.

“I’m excited,” Haight said. “I see it as a new challenge and a new opportunity. I’m a visionary kind of guy. I like to think big and try to be open-minded and think of different ways to accomplish goals.”

Storm praised Haight as technically proficient in everything he does and possessing a “great tactical mind.”

Haight

“He’s very organized, and his ethics are beyond reproach,” Storm added. “I completely trust him.”

Prior to his 2007 promotion to sergeant, Haight, originally from Pennsylvania, was one of the lead crime-scene reconstructionists out of Region 4. He worked on high-profile fatality crashes and homicides, including the Sarah Johnson case in Bellevue.

Nevada's Angle retracts 'take out' Reid comment

By Michael R. Blood
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Nevada Senate candidate Sharron Angle backed away Tuesday from remarks in which she referred to the Second Amendment right to bear arms and the need to "take ... out" Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid.

Angle, in her first extended Nevada interview since winning the June 8 primary, said she was speaking broadly about the Constitution and her words about the Democratic leader were "a little strong."

The Republican nominee stopped short of an apology but said she no longer uses that phrase.

"I meant take him out of office, and taking him out of office is a little different," Angle said. "I changed my rhetoric." Angle's interview on Nevada's KVBC's news interview program "Face to Face with Jon Ralston" came after several weeks in which she's rarely talked with reporters but turned up routinely on conservative talk radio shows. Her campaign spokesman, Jerry Stacy, said she's been busy raising money and building a campaign organization and is planning more interviews. "We're not hiding out from anybody," Stacy said. In a wide-ranging and sometimes contentious exchange with Ralston, Angle defended her proposal to phase out Social Security for younger workers, affirmed her opposition to abortion, including instances involving rape and incest, and sparred with the host over the origin and meaning of the separation of church and state. When asked if separation of church and state arises out of the Constitution, Angle answered no. She said Thomas Jefferson is often misquoted and that he wanted to protect churches from being taken over by a state religion. The drafters of the Constitution "didn't mean that we couldn't bring our values to the political forum," she said.

Reid's campaign said Angle's remarks showed she believed church-state separation is unconstitutional. Angle spokesman Stacy said in a statement that Reid is "figuring out ways to twist a larger historical statement Angle was making about the origins of separation of church and state. He's doing it because he's terrified of having a real discussion about jobs and the economy."

NRC panel puts nuclear waste dump project back on track

By Ken Ritter
Associated Press writer

LAS VEGAS — A Nuclear Regulatory Commission legal panel put a proposal for a national nuclear waste dump in Nevada back on track Tuesday, at least until the full commission decides whether the Department of Energy can withdraw its plan.

Energy Secretary Steven Chu doesn't have the authority to pull the plug on a process that Congress started when it passed the Nuclear Waste Policy Act in 1982, the NRC Atomic Safety and Licensing Board said in a 47-page order issued in Rockville, Md.

"Congress directed both that DOE file the application ... and that the NRC consider the application and issue a final, merits-based decision," the panel said. It said letting the department "single-handedly derail" the process would be "contrary to congressional intent."

Nevada state and Energy Department officials promised to appeal to the full five-member commission.

"The department remains confident that we have the legal authority to withdraw the application for the Yucca Mountain repository," Energy Department spokeswoman Jenni Lee said in a statement. "We believe the administrative board's decision is wrong."

The panel's ruling dealt a blow to President Obama's effort to kill the Yucca Mountain project — a campaign promise he made and a longtime goal for the Nevada congressional delegation and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid.

"The full commission will ... make the final decision," Reid, D-Nev., said in a statement Tuesday. "Our country has some of the best scientific minds in the world, and I am confident they can come up with a safer solution to deal with the nation's nuclear waste."

The commission is chaired by Gregory Jaczko, a former Reid staff science adviser who has said he's convinced that used nuclear reactor fuel can be maintained safely and securely for decades where it is, at commercial power plants in 31 states.

The fate of the Yucca Mountain project is seen as key for Reid's bid for a fifth Senate term against conservative tea party-backed GOP challenger Sharron Angle. Angle, a former Nevada state lawmaker, favors using the Yucca Mountain site for nuclear waste reprocessing.

Bruce Breslow, executive director of Nevada's Agency for Nuclear Projects and the top state official working to stop the project, said the state "respects but disagrees with" the ruling, and would appeal.

For more than 25 years, the Energy Department has pursued plans to bury at least 77,000 tons of highly radioactive spent nuclear fuel in tunnels bored beneath an ancient volcanic ridge 90 miles northwest of Las Vegas. The NRC panel noted Tuesday that $10 billion had been spent on the project to date. Estimates have projected the total cost at more than $90 billion over 100 years.

Jury rules against couple in parental rights case

By Rebecca Boone and Todd Dvorak
Associated Press writers

BOISE — A federal jury ruled Wednesday that a family's constitutional rights were not violated when their infant daughter was given a spinal tap against their wishes.

The jury deliberated for five days before reaching its verdict in a civil lawsuit brought by Corissa and Eric Mueller against the Boise police department, St. Luke's Regional Medical Center and Dr. Richard MacDonald.

The Muellers, who lived in Boise but now reside in Kalaheo, Hawaii, claimed their constitutional rights against unlawful search and seizure were violated in 2002 when a Boise police officer took custody

"This is a vindication of the hospital, a vindication of the doctor and of the city's police department. All the parties involved in this case were trying to do the right thing for the girl."

— J. Walter Sinclair, the attorney representing St. Luke's Regional Medical Center of their five-week-old daughter, Taige, so a doctor could perform a spinal tap to check for signs of meningitis or other major infections.

Doctors then performed the spinal tap on Taige and administered antibiotics against her mother's wishes. Corissa Mueller was also barred from being with her daughter during the procedure, and prevented from calling another physician or her husband. Police also threatened to place her in handcuffs and put her in jail.

After spending about a week in deliberations, the jury unanimously rejected the Muellers' claims that the police, hospital staff or Dr. MacDonald infringed on the Muellers' constitutional rights. It also freed the defendants from any liability for interfering with the mother's custodial relationship with her daughter.

"This is a vindication of the hospital, a vindication of the doctor and of the city's police department," said J. Walter Sinclair, the attorney representing the hospital. "All the parties involved in this case were trying to do the right thing for the girl."

Eric and Corissa Mueller said they were disappointed, but remained convinced that pressing their case in court was the right thing to do. The Muellers had hoped their case would shed a spotlight on what they consider is an imbalance in the rights of parents to determine a child's medical care over physicians.

"We're disappointed," Corissa Mueller said after the verdict. "Our motivation from the start was not about money, but showing how this was a violation of our rights and to set a precedent."

The case began after Taige Mueller developed a low-grade fever when she was 5 weeks old. The family recently had colds, Corissa Mueller told jurors, and after talking to the family physician she decided to take the baby to the emergency room as a precaution.

Mueller said she expected doctors to check for infections or minor illnesses, and that she knew they would likely ask to perform a spinal tap. But she said she believed the risk of meningitis to be less than 1 percent, and felt the risks of the procedure outweighed potential benefits.

STORM TRASHES TRAILER

Hundreds still without power in wake of central Idaho storm

BOISE (AP) — Crews continue to work to restore power and cleanup debris and other damage caused by storms that whipped through a swath of central Idaho.

Idaho Power spokeswoman Stephanie McCurdy said about 1,500 homes are still without power, mostly in the towns of Donnelly, Cascade and Lake Fork.

Storms packing powerful wind gusts toppled trees Monday night across the region, specifically in Valley County. Authorities say one person was injured by a falling tree at a campground, and hundreds of homes and vehicles suffered some kind of damage from falling trees and flying debris.

Fire crews also doused several grass fires sparked by falling power lines.

Altogether, the storm and winds knocked out power to about 18,000 homes from Garden Valley to New Meadows.

Idaho to finish fiscal year about $7 million short

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press Writer

BOISE — Idaho is expected to finish the fiscal year Wednesday about a $7 million shortfall, but the state has enough money to cover it, officials said Wednesday.

"That's a very manageable number, we can fix that," said the governor's budget chief, Wayne Hammon.

Idaho will be able to balance its reduced 2010 budget with permanent building funds set aside for next year, tapping about a third of the $22 million allocated for maintenance of state-owned buildings in 2011, Hammon said.

The state's bare-bones budget faced a $13.5 million deficit heading into the final two months of the fiscal year. That shortfall was trimmed to $9.5 million after May tax revenue collections beat forecasts.

Hammon said the deficit has since been lowered another $2.5 million, according to best estimates, though firm tax revenue numbers won't be available until July.

Idaho lawmakers set a budget for the current fiscal year based on just $2.28 billion in tax revenue in 2010, which was about $69 million below the budget Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter proposed in January.

"We're still going to be short of even that lower number," Hammon said. "It's a very good thing that they cut, otherwise we could be facing a much bigger problem."

Idaho lawmakers' handiwork is set to play out on another front Thursday, when several new laws go into effect.

Health care workers will have the right to refuse to give care they find morally objectionable under a new law that aims to shield nurses and pharmacists opposed to providing treatment for end-of-life care, abortions, emergency contraception and stem-cell therapy.

Young men who have consensual sex with 16- or 17-year-old partners will avoid tough penalties, along with another new law that allows Idaho to sue the federal government over its authority to regulate firearms made and sold in-state.

And come November, Idaho voters will have to show a photo ID to cast their ballots.

Idaho motorists using more gas

SEATTLE (AP) — A new report finds that drivers in Idaho, Oregon and Washington used 100 million more gallons of gasoline between 2008 and 2009.

Seattle-based Sightline Institute says lower gas prices helped boost per-capita gas consumption in 2009 in the three states, reversing a decade-long trend of decline.

The report says the increase is surprising given the struggling economy.

Idaho drivers increased their gas purchases by 4 percent.

Ethics panel to look at Rep. Hart's tax case

LEWISTON (AP) — A legislative ethics committee has been appointed to look into whether a state lawmaker who refuses to pay income taxes used his position to get special treatment.

Rep. Phil Hart, R-Athol, has picked a series of fights with state and federal tax collectors in recent years and has argued in court that income taxes are unconstitutional. The Internal Revenue Service has filed nearly $300,000 in tax liens against Hart in the last year, and state tax officials say he owes another $53,000 in state income taxes, interest and penalties.

This week, Idaho House Speaker Lawrence Denney appointed a seven-member ethics panel to look into Hart's case. The review will also include claims Hart made to the state Tax Commission that he should be allowed to delay filing his appeal on some tax claims as long as the Legislature was in session. Democrats contend Hart's reason for seeking the delay amounts to a misuse of the legislative privilege. Democratic leaders, who requested the ethics inquiry, have also questioned Hart's role on the House Revenue and Taxation Committee as a conflict of interest.

Denney said the committee will begin meeting in August.

"It's important for both the House and Rep. Hart to have this matter resolved quickly and fairly," Denney told the Lewiston Tribune.

Denney named Rep. Thomas Loertscher, R-Iona, as committee chairman and Rep. Wendy Jacquet, D-Ketchum, as co-chairwoman. Other lawmakers appointed to the ethics panel include: Rep. Dell Raybould, R-Rexburg; Rep. Bert Stevenson, R-Rupert; Rep. Rich Wills, R-Glenns Ferry; Rep. Bill Killen, D-Boise; and Rep. George Saylor, D-Coeur d'Alene.

According to state rules, the ethics committee could recommend dismissal of the complaint. But it could ask that Hart be reprimanded, censured or expelled from the Legislature.

A reprimand or censure would require a majority vote by the House; expulsion would require a two-thirds vote.

Hart, who is running unopposed for a fourth term, has said he welcomes the ethics inquiry and the chance to tell his side of the story.

Portland police re-open investigation of sex allegations against Al Gore

By Nigel Duara
Associated Press writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — Police said Wednesday they are reopening an investigation into a Portland massage therapist's allegations that former Vice President Al Gore groped her at an upscale hotel in 2006.

In a brief statement, the Portland Police Bureau did not say why it was reopening the investigation. Police earlier said they considered the case closed because there was no evidence.

Kalee Kreider, a spokeswoman for Gore, said the former vice president "unequivocally and emphatically" denied making unwanted sexual advances toward the woman and that he welcomed the investigation.

"Further investigation into this matter will only benefit Mr. Gore," Kreider said.

She also said "the Gores cannot comment on every defamatory, misleading and inaccurate story generated by tabloids."

The masseuse alleges Gore made unwanted sexual advances during a massage appointment on Oct. 24, 2006, at the downtown Hotel Lucia, where Gore was reportedly registered as "Mr. Stone." Gore was in Portland to deliver a speech on climate change.

The story first broke when the National Enquirer reported the allegations a week ago.

The AP does not generally identify people who say they are victims of sex crimes.

Portland police last week said the woman's lawyer came to them with the allegations in 2006 but that the woman canceled appointments with detectives. The case reopened in January 2009, when detectives interviewed the woman but determined there was insufficient evidence to support the allegations.

According to transcripts of the 2009 interview, the masseuse described the allegations at length. She said Gore groped, kissed and pinned her down on a bed. She told Gore he was acting like a "crazed sex poodle," according to the transcript.

The woman said she felt there would be consequences if she didn't cooperate.

"I feared that if I ran for the door to get out, I could or would be violently accosted by some security detail," she said. "I felt certain that any, even the smallest complaint from him to the hotel, could also destroy my work reputation."

While trying to pack up, she said Gore "wrapped me in an inescapable embrace," looked her in the eyes and touched her back, buttocks and breasts. She said she asked Gore to stop several times.

"I finally told him and said, you're being a crazed sex poodle, hoping he'd realize how weird he was being, yet he persisted," she told Det. Molly Daul.

The woman said Gore's "Mr. Smiley Global Warming" persona differed from his actions and made her afraid.

"I did not want to get hurt and I did not want to get raped," she said.

She said Gore demanded she drink cognac, though she told him she doesn't drink alcohol. She said Gore became enraged when she refused his advances.

"This is like people going nuts on the MAX (Portland's public transit system) and you want to get off before they beat you up," she said.

During the interview, the woman mentioned working as a masseuse for the lead singer of the Counting Crows, members of former professional wrestler Hulk Hogan's family and NBA players.

After the alleged incident, the woman said she was dissuaded from contacting the police by liberal friends of hers, whom she refers to as "The Birkenstock Tribe," and of which she counts herself a member.

"It's like being the ultimate traitor," the woman said.

One friend "was basically asking me to just suck it up, otherwise the world's going to be destroyed from global warming," she said.

WASHINGTON — For the third time in as many weeks, Senate Republicans on Wednesday successfully filibustered a bill to continue providing unemployment checks to millions of people.

But this time, since the slimmed-down measure attracted two Republican votes, its passage seems assured next month once a replacement is in place for Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., who died on Monday.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., a supporter of the bill, had to vote "nay" to take a procedural step that would allow for a revote. Even though the tally stood at 58-38, Democrats were in reality just one vote short of the 60 needed to beat the filibuster. Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska was the sole Democrat against the bill.

Immediately after the jobless aid vote, the Senate cleared for President Barack Obama's signature a measure to give homebuyers an extra three months to finish qualifying for federal tax incentives that boosted home sales last spring.

The jobless aid measure is one of the last remnants of the Democrats' jobs agenda, which has largely fallen prey to GOP concerns about the deficit. Although a hiring tax break passed in February, ambitious plans for new road construction, incentives for so-called green jobs, and, more recently, funding for cash-starved state governments and local school districts are languishing in the face of Republican resistance.

Save for GOP moderates Olympia Snowe and Susan Collins of Maine, Republicans uniformly opposed the $33 billion jobless aid measure because its cost would be added to the nation's $13 trillion national debt.

"The only reason the unemployment extension hasn't passed is because Democrats simply refuse to pass a bill that doesn't add to the debt," said Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky.

The House is slated to vote on a companion jobless aid measure today, though the Senate's action renders it a futile gesture as Congress gets ready to depart Washington for its cherished 4th of July recess.

Without an extension, 1.7 million of the 7 million people who have been without a job for at least six months will have lost their unemployment benefits by the end of this week, according to the Labor Department.

"We have a basic responsibility to help our constituents respond to emergencies," said Reid. "We have a fundamental obligation not to deny them the help they need when they need it the most."

Obama has urged lawmakers to spend about $50 billion to help states pay for Medicaid programs and to avoid teacher layoffs, but Democrats in Congress have been unable to come up with the votes.

Toyota: 270,000 vehicles have faulty engines

TOKYO (AP) — Toyota Motor Corp. said Thursday about 270,000 vehicles sold worldwide, including luxury Lexus sedans, have faulty engines, but the company did not say whether it would recall the automobiles.

The world's biggest automaker said the defective engines could stall while the vehicles were moving.

Of the 270,000 vehicles, some 180,000 were sold overseas and the rest in Japan. They include luxury Lexus sedans and popular Crown models.

Kyodo News agency and Fuji TV — without providing sources — said Toyota would recall 270,000 vehicles. Toyota spokeswoman Ririko Takeuchi would not say if the company would issue a recall.

Toyota has been working to patch up its reputation after more than 8 million vehicles were recalled worldwide over reports of unintended acceleration and other defects.

U.S. authorities slapped Toyota with a record $16.4 million fine for acting too slowly on those recalls. Toyota dealers have repaired millions of vehicles, but the automaker still faces more than 200 lawsuits tied to accidents, the lower resale value of Toyota vehicles and the drop in the company's stock.

In the aftermath of the recalls, Congress is considering an upgrade to auto safety laws to toughen potential penalties against automakers, give the U.S. government more powers to demand a recall and push car companies to meet new safety standards.

Toyota said last week it will recall 17,000 Lexus luxury hybrids after testing showed that fuel can spill during a rear-end crash.

Maggots in overhead storage force plane back to gate in Atlanta

By Kate Brumback
Associated Press writer

ATLANTA — Maggots falling from an overhead bin from a spoiled container of meat forced a US Airways flight to return to the gate so the bin could be cleaned.

Passenger Donna Adamo said she noticed a couple of flies on the Monday flight when she got to her seat but didn't think much of it. Then, as the plane was taxiing, she heard a passenger behind her causing a commotion and refusing to take her seat.

"Then I heard the word 'maggot' and that kind of got everybody creeped out," she said. "All of a sudden, I felt somebody flick the back of my hair and on the front of me came a maggot, which I flicked off me."

A passenger had the container in a carry-on bag and brought it on Monday's flight heading from Atlanta to Charlotte, N.C., said US Airways spokesman Todd Lehmacher. The pilot announced that they were returning to the gate because of a "minor emergency on board" and the flight attendants told everyone to sit down and be calm, Adamo said.

"I felt like they were crawling all over me because it only takes one maggot to upset your world," she said. "And as they're telling us to stay calm and seated, I see a maggot looking back at me and I'm thinking, 'These are anaerobic, flesh-eating larvae that the flight attendants don't have to sit with.'"

A shaky cell phone video shot by Adamo as passengers deplaned shows a small white maggot wriggling across a seat.

Once the plane returned to the gate, the passengers were asked to get off, and a crew boarded to clean up the mess, Lehmacher said.

A year later, let’s remember Bergdahl family’s private agony

America’s Afghanistan policy may be a mess, but whatever your views about what we’re doing in south Asia, today belongs to the family of Bowe Bergdahl of Hailey.

One year ago today, the Pentagon announced that Bergdahl, now 24 — an Army private first class — had gone missing on June 30 and was assumed captured by Taliban militants.

Ever since, life has been hell for his family. The Wood River Valley has more than risen to the occasion, but it hasn’t brought Bowe home.

Bergdahl is a member of 1st Battalion, 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment, 4th Brigade Combat Team, 25th Infantry Division, based at Fort Richardson, Alaska. He enlisted two years ago and went through basic training in Fort Benning, Ga.

Then he went missing from a U.S. Army base in the Paktika province.

The circumstances of Bergdahl’s capture still aren’t known. The version offered by Bergdahl, in a video released by the Taliban, is that he was captured when he fell behind on a patrol. CNN cited both Taliban and U.S. military sources, the former alleging he was ambushed after becoming drunk off base, and the latter denying that claim stating:

“The Taliban are known for lying and what they are claiming (is) not true.” The U.S. military reported that he wandered off base, though his captors claim he was taken while lagging behind while on patrol.

Though family, friends and the Pentagon deliberately kept Bergdahl’s identity secret for nearly three weeks after the BBC reported a U.S. soldier missing July 2, 2009, the government was forced to reveal his name when a video of him appeared on the Internet 12 days later.

Three videos of Bergdahl have been released by his captors on the Internet, but his whereabouts are still unknown.

In the latest video, released in April, he was wearing an Army jacket and camouflage pants and had a full beard. He appeared healthy and pleaded for his release and an end to U.S. military involvement in the region.

“I pray to God to see my family and friends again,” he said in the video. So do we.

Our view:

In a largely forgotten war, the family of Hailey’s Bowe Bergdahl hasn’t had a moment’s peace.

What do you think?

We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Are cellular phones the new cigarettes?

The great cosmic joke would be to find out definitively that the advances we thought were blessings — from the hormones women pump into their bodies all their lives to the fancy phones people wait in line for all night — are really time bombs.

Maureen Dowd

Just as parents now tell their kids that, believe it or not, there was a time when nobody knew that cigarettes and tanning were bad for you, those kids may grow up to tell their kids that, believe it or not, there was a time when nobody knew how dangerous it was to hold your phone right next to your head and chat away for hours.

We don’t yet really know the physical and psychological impact of being slaves to technology. We just know that technology is a narcotic. We’re living in the cloud, in a force field, so afraid of being disconnected and plunged into a world of silence and stillness that even if scientists told us our computers would make our arms fall off, we’d probably keep typing.

San Francisco just became the first city in the country to pass legislation making cell-phone retailers display radiation levels. The city’s Board of Supervisors voted 10 to 1 in favor. The one against, the Democrat Sean Elsbernd, said afterward: “It’s a slippery slope. I can go on Google right now and find you a study that says there’s a problem with the Starbucks you’re drinking.”

Different phone models emit anywhere from 0.2 watts per kilogram of body tissue to 1.6 watts, the legal limit. The amount of radio frequency energy seeping into the body and brain is measured by a unit called the Specific Absorption Rate.

“You see all these kids literally glued to their phones,” Gavin Newsom, the mayor of San Francisco, told me. “And candidly, my wife was pregnant and on her cellphone nonstop. So I dusted off some studies and started doing research.”

“That’s when I discovered that companies who make cellphones are required to disclose that information to the federal government, and that it exists but somewhere on someone’s Web page on the 88th page.” Why not underscore it, he thought, by alerting consumers at the store, putting the SAR level in the same font as the phone price?

His alarmed advisers, accustomed to seeing the sleek Newsom diving into bold stands without calculating the potential blowback told him to focus on jobs and the economy.

“They said: ‘There you go again. They’re going to mock you. It’s going to be another sideshow,’” he recalled. But stroking his baby daughter’s soft head and reading new studies on the vulnerability of children’s thinner skulls to radiation, he persevered.

One Swedish study that followed young people who began using cells as teenagers for 10 years calculated a 400 percent increase in brain tumors. But as Nathaniel Rich recently pointed out in Harper’s, studies about cell-phones’ carcinogenic potential all contradict one another, including those involving children.

When Newsom proposed the bill, telecommunications lobbyists went to the mattresses, as did hoteliers, who feared losing convention business.

He said lobbyists from Washington made it clear that they would invoke “the nuclear option” and come down “like a ton of bricks.”

“This is tobacco money, oil money,” he said. “But these guys from D.C. do not know me because that has exactly the opposite effect. Shame on them, to threaten the city. It’s about as shortsighted as one could get in terms of a brand.”

Months before the bill passed, he read me part of a letter that Marriott sent him: “CTIA — The Wireless Association, which is scheduled to hold a major convention here in October 2010, has already contacted us about canceling their event if the legislation moves forward. They also have told us that they are in contact with Apple, Cisco, Oracle and others who are heavily involved in the industry, as you know, about not holding future events in your city for the same reason.”

Sure enough, when the bill passed Tuesday, CTIA issued a petulant statement that after 2010, it would relocate its annual three-day fall exhibition, with 68,000 exhibitors and attendees and “$80 million” in business, away from San Francisco.

“Since our bill is relatively benign,” Newsom said, “it begs the question, why did they work so hard and spend so much money to kill it? I’ve become more fearful, not less, because of their reaction. It’s like BP. Shouldn’t they be doing whatever it takes to protect their global shareholders?”

So now we have Exhibit No. 1,085 illustrating the brazenness of Big Business.

They should be sending Mayor Newsom a bottle of California wine for caring about whether kids’ brains get fried, not leaving him worried about whether they’ll avenge themselves in his campaign for lieutenant governor. He’s resigned to that possibility, just as he is to his own addiction. “I love my iPhone,” he said cheerfully.

Opinion about Snake River Jam was right on My compliments to the Times-News editorial board! Your article on the Snake River Jam dated June 23 was right on the money.

As a performing jazz musician and guitar instructor, I supported Jazz in the Canyon for several years. True, many jazz festivals have held up very well and have continually been profitable, the Lion Hampton Jazz Festival in Moscow and Gene Harris Jazz Festival in Boise to name a few.

What is jazz? I can tell you what it is not. It isn’t a three-chord guitar banger with lyrics like “I Love a Rainy Night,” nor someone playing a washboard with thimbles nor a very large red suit screaming rap loudly enough to blow up a speaker system.

To name all or many great jazz players would consume full pages of your newspaper. There are several fine jazz players in our immediate area plus other payers in Boise and other cities surrounding Twin Falls. Your own local college has produced some excellent young players with fine harmony and theory backgrounds.

Having 15 different harmonicas in a padded case does not represent a jazz player. It is a player with a great desire that can play in only one pattern! 1-4-5. Amen.

Lawmakers ignoring the Constitution

Some time ago, I said this administration was planning a fascist takeover of this nation. I have seen nothing to change my mind. If we don’t want to live under a socialist/communist dictatorship, we had better speak out and make ourselves heard.

Have we become too complacent and ignorant of the circumstances of our founding and our Constitution? Maybe we need to spend some time away from the TV, golfing, camping, hunting and our leisurely lifestyles and read the Constitution and other founding documents, including the Federalist papers. Find out what a truly remarkable nation our founders gave us. Quit listening to the progressive liberal claptrap. Find out the truth. It will set you free.

The founding fathers literally bathed the birth of our nation and its Constitution with prayer. The battle cry of the American Revolution was: “No King but King Jesus.” Colonial religious leaders were prominent in our battle for freedom but are they speaking up now? The Bible was the first textbook in our country. Now our nation appears to be governed by a near majority of ungodly men and women who have made it their priority to sanitize God from our schools and public places and their hope is to exercise absolute control over us on an individual basis.

The Constitution and God is being ignored by those we have elected to govern us. It appears that the problem is even being ignored by our religious leaders and many of our people. It’s time to heed the words of God in 2 Chronicles 7:14: “If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray, and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sin and will heal their land.”

Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

Idaho Mountain Express, Ketchum

Something is wrong with the intersection of state Highway 75 and U.S. Highway 20 between Sun Valley and Twin Falls.

Despite improvements, at least one major crash a year occurs where the high-speed highways meet at Timmerman Hill.

Finding out what's wrong is more complicated than it may appear. Idaho Division of Highways District 4 Engineer Devin Rigby says the nature of the crashes there may have changed.

The intersection had been locally infamous for the failure of drivers on U.S. Highway 20 to stop at stop signs. A long series of rumble strips, a flashing red light and giant stop signs may have reduced those errors, but nasty accidents still occur. Recent ones indicate that today's drivers wrongly think the intersection is a four-way stop or fail to see oncoming traffic.

Rigby says his office will again investigate Timmerman's problems in late summer and determine if there are other measures — re-engineering to improve sight lines, for one — that could improve safety.

The ultimate fix, says Rigby, is an overpass interchange — a pricey proposition at a time when state highway funds are scarce.

The importance of finding a solution to the danger at Timmerman was illustrated last summer when 15 seat-belted people luckily walked away from what could have been a fatal crash. A two-vehicle collision last week was another wake-up call.

When a new airport generates more traffic, finding a fix will become urgent.

Highway engineers should identify the problems and act quickly to make the crossroads to the Sawtooths and the Sun Valley resort area safe.

Party platforms and resolutions — especially extreme versions such as the one Idaho Republicans produced in Idaho Falls last week — cause grief for candidates who run under them.

But every Idaho Republican candidate — from Gov. C. L. "Butch" Otter to U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo and those seeking legislative office — will find a way to distance himself from at least some of these ideas:

- Stopping the direct election of U.S. senators and placing that authority back in the hands of the state legislatures.

- Nullifying "any and all existing and future unconstitutional federal mandates and laws, funded or unfunded, that infringe on Idaho's 10th Amendment sovereignty."

- Abolishing the Federal Reserve and allowing "free Idahoans (to) pay taxes, and other fees due to the state, county and city in silver and or gold in any form. ..."

- Suggesting the state engage in tax protestation by holding on to the federal taxes Idahoans pay.

- Arguing the state constitutional amendment banning gay marriage was n't tough enough and restricting marriage to "naturally born" men and women.

- Joining a contingent of investment counselors by urging Idahoans to buy up gold and silver.

- Recommending a state constitutional amendment as a prelude to Idaho assuming control of U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management properties.

- Subjecting everybody who runs as a Republican to sign a loyalty oath to follow the platform.

- Opposing Republican Congressman Mike Simpson's decade-long effort to protect the Boulder-White Cloud range with a wilderness compromise forged at the local level. Idaho's congressional delegation backs the bill.

That sounds more like a fringe group than the party that has been governing Idaho for almost two decades.

Any Republican now on the ballot has the network of supporters and resources to forge ahead independently. That's especially true of Republican incumbents as well as the four dozen legislative candidates who face no challenge in November.

Those who do face opposition will appeal to voters in the center, voters who may reward GOP candidates who walk away from a platform that careens to the right side of goofiness.

... they cried wolf

Idaho Statesman, Boise

Here's the good news: Idaho's short-term budget crunch isn't as dire as once feared. And here's the bad news: The good news came three months after House Republican leaders went out of their way to tell public school administrators to plan for the worst.

The state appeared headed for a cash-flow problem, the legislators said in an April 5 letter to school boards. With tax collections sputtering, the state might be forced to use money from its 2010-11 budget to cover spending commitments for 2009-10. This, in turn, would leave the state no choice but to cut public school budgets for 2010-11.

"While there is no way to know for certain at this time, a holdback of 3.5 to 5.5 percent is a distinct possibility," wrote the Legislature's quartet of doom: House Speaker Lawrence Denney of Midvale; Majority Leader Mike Moyle of Star; Assistant Majority Leader Scott Bedke of Oakley; and Caucus Chairman Ken Roberts of Donnelly.

Having shown off their knack for prognostication, the lawmakers then gave the school boards some pointers in budgeting. They recommended districts plan for possible cuts when negotiating teacher contracts — since, after all, salaries and benefits account for 80 to 90 percent of a district's budget.

Then came the shortfall that wasn't. The 2009-10 budget year ends today, and Idaho is expected to wind up about $7 million short. The state can tap budget reserves and its Permanent Building Fund to comfortably cover this gap.

So the lawmakers didn't just pre-empt fellow Republican Gov. Butch Otter, the one official who can order a holdback. They got out ahead of the facts. Were they merely erring on the side of caution, because they were looking at projections of a $50 million-plus deficit?

The problem is, school boards and superintendents took the lawmakers' prediction to heart. They had no other option. Since the state provides a greater share of local school funding — an offshoot of the 2006 property tax cut and sales tax increase enthusiastically supported by House Republican leaders — school districts depend on state funding more than they ever had.

And so, school funding hinges on the state's fortunes, or districts' ability to convince local voters to approve a property tax levy. Districts from Bonners Ferry to Boise to Bear Lake are forced to make tough budget decisions — beyond the furloughs and pay cuts designed to trim personnel costs. They're going to long school days and shorter school calendars, with some districts adopting four-day schedules. Meridian has backed away from a confusing kindergarten schedule including some full-day sessions, but other districts have gone to full-day schedules.

It's a tough situation for staff — and for parents and kids. By jumping the gun, House leaders contributed to this climate of crisis.

An Open Letter to the Community from ST. BENEDICTS FAMILY MEDICAL CENTER

Over the past year, leadership at St. Benedicts with representatives from our Board, physicians and staff have completed a thorough review of our Long Term Care services. An outside review of the Long Term Care operations has also been completed. A reflective, discernment process, based on our Mission and Core Values, was utilized to evaluate the appropriateness of continuing to provide long term care services amid today's economic realities, resident census and our strategic goals set for the hospital and clinics.

Based on the findings, the St. Benedicts Board of Trustees voted to begin the process of closing our long term care facility. Several years of a declining resident census and the escalating financial losses contributed to the decision to discontinue this service. The closure date will be July 30, 2010.

"This was a very difficult decision. Throughout the Mission Discernment process, the Board and administration carefully examined all options before coming to this conclusion," said Father Norbert, Board Chairman. "In these challenging times, it's a normal process for any organization, including healthcare, to review their services and determine their ability to provide them and meet the community need. It was only after careful consideration of our resources and the acknowledgement that adequate beds are available in the Magic Valley that the decision was made to close the Long Term Care service."

The Long Term Care Unit at St. Benedicts is well-known for providing exceptional care and has been the past recipient of the L. Jean Schoonover Excellence in Caring Award in 2000, 2001, and 2002. The Award is based on the quality of care provided and recipients are determined through the licensure and survey process. St. Benedicts was recently notified they will receive the award again for 2010.

"It has been our honor to have so many residents consider St. Benedicts their home. We thank them and their families for the years of support in addition to the Long Term Care employees for their unending devotion as caregivers," said Dr. Elizabeth Sugden, Chief Medical Officer.

There are currently 14 residents in the Long Term Care. Employees are working very closely with each resident and their representative to assist them in locating to a new home they select. In keeping with St. Benedicts' mission and values, a thoughtful plan is in place to minimize disruption and to satisfy regulatory requirements.

"Our primary concern is for our residents, their families and our employees," said Jill Howell, a 32-year employee of St. Benedicts and Nursing Home administrator. "The Long Term Care employees are devoted to the residents and will continue to care and provide for them until they are moved to their new home."

Several Long Term Care employees will assume new responsibilities within the organization. The facility will experience some employee layoffs through the closure process.

ST. BENEDICTS Current Focus

St. Benedicts will continue to fulfill its mission of providing high quality Outpatient, Diagnostic, Primary and Acute Care services with compassion to those we serve.

St. Benedicts is expanding services in Transitional Care, Surgery, Primary Care and Women's Health. St. Benedicts is also recruiting additional physicians to provide services in Jerome. GE invests in Hagerman, Burley windfarms

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

GE Energy Financial Services, a unit of GE, announced Tuesday that it made an equity investment in Idaho's largest wind farm development near Hagerman and Burley.

The windfarms, which are the brainchild of Boise-based Exergy Development Group, have a combined value of nearly a half-billion dollars. The project is operating under the name Idaho Wind Partners.

According to a statement released by GE, the financial company will own a majority equity interest in the Idaho Wind Partners project. Exergy Development Group will own a minority interest along with manager and operator Reunion Power.

A spokeswoman for GE Energy Financial Service told the Times-News that the company is not disclosing further financial details.

Exergy officials said in a written statement that they signed a 20-year agreement to sell power to the Idaho

ABOUT THE PROJECT PARTNERS

- Reunion Power LLC, a privately owned company, specializes in development, engineering, and financial management in clean energy markets. www.reunionpower.com
- Fagen, Inc. is the largest green energy design-builder in the United States, constructing 60 percent of ethanol production capacity. www.fageninc.com

Power Company. According to a copy of the agreement provided by the Idaho Public Utilities Commission, Idaho Power will pay Exergy between $61 and $103 per megawatt-hour, depending on the time of year and demand on its system.

Construction company

Fagen, Inc. started construction earlier this month and is expected to complete the wind farms in late December.

GE officials said the project is expected to create up to 175 permanent jobs for operations and ongoing seasonal maintenance requirements. But an independent report by the National Renewable Energy Laboratory, which tracks research and development of wind farms in the United States, pegs the job creation at 25 permanent jobs and about 1,000 indirect jobs. GE is supplying 122 turbines, which will have the capacity to generate 183 megawatts — enough to power about 39,700 homes. GE will maintain the turbines for up to 7 years, according to the agreement with Exergy.

Wind accounts for nearly 80 percent of GE Energy Financial Services' renewable energy portfolio, which also includes equity investments in 58 wind farms in the United States.

Coors holds field day

By Cindy Snyder
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — Despite a difficult sales year, MillerCoors sees advantages from its merger two years ago.

U.S. beer sales volume fell by 2.2 percent last year, the highest rate since the 1950s and the first decline since 2003. According to the Beer Institute, 2010 year-to-date U.S. beer production is down 3.9 percent from the same period last year.

But brewers are noticing that while consumption of the major brands is down, craft beer sales are up. Nationwide, craft beer sales are up 7 percent. Dennis Puffer, chief integrated supply chain officer for MillerCoors, told growers that sales of Blue Moon are growing by 20 percent. Blue Moon is a Belgian-style craft beer owned by MillerCoors.

"We're having an okay year, but a difficult year," he said. The Beer Institute reports that MillerCoors posted a 1.9 percent drop in shipments last year.

Bill Coors, grandson of Coors Brewing Company founder Adolph Coors and a member of the board of directors until 2003, spoke briefly at the field day held at the Burley elevator.

He said the industry is very different today compared to when Coors drew his first paycheck 71 years ago. Back then 70 breweries just like the one at Golden, Colo., had survived Prohibition. Of those, just three are left: Anheuser, Miller and Coors, and together they control 80 percent of the U.S. beer market.

"How did we do it? With all of you. We're the only brewery in the world that has integrated operations back to the growing of barley, the development of barley," he said.

Bill Coors, center, poses with Jim and Deb Peterson at the MillerCoors field day. The Petersons were named Top Idaho Grower for 2009 based on their quality score.

The Moravian 69 line produced by Coors contract growers today, grown widely in southern Idaho, is a descendant from a single head of malt that Coors' father acquired 75 years ago. Coors was concerned about the quality of malt in America and had imported some malt from a province in Czechoslovakia called Moravia. While the malt made excellent beer, the small company could not afford to buy more. But the importer who handled the sale had given Coors a single head of two-row barley that sat on his desk for months.

Finally, the office manager took that single head and planted it in his home garden. After six years of seed increase, the company had enough barley to meet the brewery's production of 126,000 barrels annually. Today, production is 200 times that amount. The Burley elevator alone purchased 361 million pounds of barley in 2009, equivalent to a 23-mile line of rail cars.

"No other brewery worries more about malt and no other brewery worries more about barley than we do," he said. But the company has also kept its commitment to support growers. "We knew we had to form a partnership and a friendship with the people who grow the barley?"

Jim Peterson of Carey has grown Coors barley for 30 years.

"This is a special outfit," Peterson said. "These guys are great to work with, they really care. It doesn't matter what time of day you call, they always answer the phone."

Peterson earned Top Grower for Idaho honors for his 2009 crop but was beaten by 1/4 of a point for the company wide honor. He said he is paying more attention to the 2010 crop starting with irrigation management. One plugged nozzle could be the difference between winning company-wide honors and going home empty handed.

Olmstead to chair SIEDO board

Times-News

Dan Olmstead, public relations coordinator for Idaho Power, was elected as the new chair for the Southern Idaho Economic Development Organization during the organization's annual meeting earlier this month.

Olmstead will be responsible for managing SIEDO's executive board, executive director and the organization's operations through June 2011.

Olmstead has served on SIEDO's board since the organization's inception in 2001 and on the executive board for four years.

"SIEDO already has a well functioning and very successful board and executive director in Jan Rogers," Olmstead said. "Economic development in southern Idaho is a team sport and SIEDO is an integral part of this process. This organization continues to be admired around the state for its efforts and successes."

Olmstead also serves on the executive board of Business Plus, Region IV, chairs the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce's Public Policy Committee and sits on other boards in the region.

Olmstead replaces Arlen Crouch, whose term expired this year.

Verizon Wireless said to get iPhone in January

By Amy Thomson
Bloomberg News writer

NEW YORK — Verizon Wireless, the largest U.S. mobile-phone company, will start selling Apple's iPhone next year, ending AT&T's exclusive hold on the smartphone in the United States, two people familiar with the plans said Tuesday.

The device will be available to customers in January, according to the people, who declined to be named because the information isn't public. Brenda Raney, a spokeswoman for Verizon Wireless, didn't immediately return a call seeking comment. Natalie Kerris, an Apple spokeswoman, and Peter Thonis, a Verizon Communications spokesman, declined to comment.

Workforce development grant expires

Unless you work for a government agency or in economic development, you probably never heard of the Workforce Innovation in Regional Economic Development.

It was aptly named 'WIRED' to save time.

The grant, which totaled nearly $5 million was awarded about three years ago to the Workforce Development Alliance in south-central Idaho.

Despite the fact that most people have never heard of it, the grant money had a significant impact on our region — especially when the economy tanked.

For example some of the money was used to finance a nine week program at the College of Southern Idaho called Trade Industry Preparation. The program took people with a high school education, or less, and turned them into skilled workers for thriving regional industries.

But the real benefit was that many graduates worked beyond industry training — often pursuing four-year degrees at one of the state's colleges and universities.

Other money was used to buy industrial-grade mills and lathes and simulation machines to train students at the Cassia Regional Technical Center. The tools helped prepare students to work in the manufacturing industry.

And still more money was used to streamline training at CSI in industries that were expected to grow in coming years.

Unfortunately, the WIRED grant expired Wednesday — and in today's economy, grants like that are not readily available.

Jerome Chamber director resigns

Dawn Tipton, executive director of the Jerome Chamber of Commerce, will be leaving the chamber to move closer to family in Wyoming.

Her last day will be July 9.

She wrote in a letter to chamber members, "I have enjoyed working with you and with the community of Jerome and I have every faith that the Board of Directors will handle the upcoming change with absolute competence and efficiency."

Tipton was hired as the chamber director in August 2009.

Monsanto 3Q net income sags on weak Roundup sales

The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Monsanto Co., the world's biggest seed maker, said Wednesday its fiscal third-quarter net income tumbled 45 percent as it shrank its Roundup weedkiller business amid intense generic competition.

As Roundup sales have flagged, Monsanto last year said it was accelerating its long-term strategy to shift the majority of its business from chemicals and herbicides to genetically altered seeds. But the transition has been rougher than expected as growing generic competition from China drives steep declines in Roundup sales, and Monsanto has struggled to entice farmers to buy up its pricey geneti-

Three rare photos of Elvis, Graceland surface after 53 years

By Adrian Sainz, Associated Press writer

ON THE NET

See three never-before-seen photos of Elvis that were uncovered recently in the Graceland office of Elvis' father, Vernon Presley, at: http://www.elvis.com/news/full_story.asp?id=2326

Angie Marchese, director of archives at Elvis Presley Enterprises, said the negatives were tucked in a small envelope with no writing on it. Archivists scanned the negatives, and research revealed the photos were taken in 1957.

The three photos of the 22-year old performer have never been published, Marchese said, but a fourth picture from the same series has appeared on a limited basis in publications focusing on Elvis.

The photos show Elvis with his black pompadour, a jacket and long pants. Fans are standing at the closed gates and perched along the wall and brick columns that surround Graceland. Some fans are sticking pieces of paper through the gates for Elvis to sign, and one photo shows Elvis apparently signing something.

Marchese said other photos and home movies in the archives show an older Elvis interacting with fans at Graceland, but the newly discovered pictures show the singer making time for his adoring public early in his career.

"It's really quite amazing that they weren't in our database already and we had never seen them before," Marchese said.

Marchese said the photos were taken shortly after Elvis bought the mansion and the gates were installed as a security measure.

The pictures will be displayed at a Graceland exhibit beginning Thursday, through the end of Elvis Week on Aug.

TO TIE A FLY

“I can’t just sit around and wait for a fish to swim by. I need to go hunt them out.”

– Dennis Brauer, a self-taught fly-fisherman

Photos by MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

Fisherman Dennis Brauer ties a fly June 24 at his home in Twin Falls. Brauer has been fly fishing for 20 years and says he started tying flies in order to save money, but didn’t realize the hobby would become something of an obsession.

T.F. man hooked on hobby

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

At a small worktable just outside his home office, Dennis Brauer sits amidst books, colorful spools of thread, and a large magnifying glass — just a few of the tools he uses to tie flies. It’s something he’s been doing for nearly two decades.

“It relieves stress, takes my mind off whatever,” he says.

He’ll sit at his desk two or three times a week crafting flies that he hopes will catch fish.

So far, he hasn’t been disappointed.

There’s nothing quite like catching a fish on a fly you’ve made yourself, he says.

Over the years, Brauer has made many flies. He also has caught a lot of fish.

A natural progression

Brauer, 53, of Twin Falls, has been fishing for as long as he can remember, and fly fishing for about 20 years.

He doesn’t fault other types of angling — “the important thing is just to get out and fish,” he says — but, to him, fly fishing is more challenging.

“I can’t just sit around and wait for a fish to swim by,” the self-taught fly-fisherman says. “I need to go hunt them out.”

Fly tying, he says, is a natural progression after you’ve fly fished for a while. He started tying about 15 years ago.

Like fishing, it also can be challenging.

When crafting flies tyers need to know a bit about the waters they fish and the insects they’re trying to imitate, such as the different stages of insect development — nymph or adult. It’s also important when tying to look at the fly from a fish’s perspective, Brauer says. Fish see the bottom of a fly; the angler sees it from the top.

“Size, silhouette and, lastly, color are the most important things,” he says, noting that he’s known some fly tyers who’ve waded in swimming pools to look at the bottom of a fly; others might view them through the bottom of a glass of water.

Brauer keeps it simple: he holds up the fly, pinched between his fingers, or needle-nose pliers, to see his handiwork. A large magnifying glass attached to his worktable helps him to see and tie the intricate details. “There are lots of different styles to tying, variations of the same insect,” he says.

His favorite is a mayfly, preferably tied with a No. 16 hook. The larger the number, the smaller the hook. He’s tied up to a No. 26.

It doesn’t look as if a person could tie a fly that small, let alone catch fish with it. But you’d be surprised how many big fish are attracted to small flies, he says.

Styles and dividends

There are different types of flies — “wet flies” that go under water, and “dry flies,” which float. Brauer likes dry flies best.

He says everyone has their own style of fly tying, and he’s seen some perplexing creations — flies made out of carpet fibers and nutshells, for instance.

Brauer is more traditional in his tying, and over the years has amassed quite the collection of books, threads, feathers and hooks. Deer fur and chicken hackles are some of the staples. He says some farmers genetically raise chickens specifically for their feathers for fly tying.

He’s spent hundreds of dollars on his equipment over the years, but says it’s a hobby that costs only as much as a hobbyist allows. Though the materials might have cost more up front, it saves him money in the long run. He can tie a fly for about 25 cents, he says, compared to the $2 or so he’d spend on a quality fly at a sporting goods shop.

See HOBBY, Outdoors 3

Kept for inspiration, these bugs help guide Dennis Brauer when he’s tying flies.

Twin Falls fly fisherman Dennis Brauer says that in order to catch fish you must tie the fly correctly, and look at it from a fish’s point of view. He says fish see silhouettes and if anything about the fly looks awry, fish will not go for the bait.

City of Rocks to proceed with Overlook parking

Times-News

City of Rocks National Reserve will proceed to build a parking lot at the Circle Creek overlook.

Purposes of the project are to remove the existing parking area from private property, shield it from view of the California National Historic Trail, and properly locate a well-designed facility on public property as called for in the 1996 Comprehensive Management Plan.

The public was formally invited April 19 to make comments on the project's environmental assessment. Four comments were received. The finding of no significant impact means that the proposal to relocate the unofficial parking area at Circle Creek Overlook and to construct a well-designed facility nearby does not constitute impairment of the resources or values for which the Reserve was designated.

Construction of an 18- to 20-vehicle parking area and vault toilet at the trail head will occur between late August and the end of October. The access road to the overlook will be closed during construction.

The City of Rocks is visited by more than 100,000 visitors a year from across the U.S. and many foreign countries.

Highway 332 between Miles City and Ashland, Mont., is gravel for about 29 miles as it follows the Tongue River drainage. Now is a good time to drive the route. The countryside is green, wildflowers will soon bloom and there's a variety of wildlife.

WILD RIDE

Historic Montana route from Miles City to Ashland brims with wildlife

By Brett French
The Billings Gazette

BILLINGS, Mont. — One of the benefits of living in the fourth-largest state is that no matter how much I travel around Montana, there is always someplace new to discover.

Recently I made my first trip along Highways 332 and 447 — a paved and gravel route that follows the Tongue River between Miles City and Ashland in Eastern Montana.

The road starts or ends, depending on your direction of travel, 13 miles south of Miles City and angles southwest. The first 21 miles are paved, the next 29 miles are gravel and the final 7 miles into Ashland are also paved — 70 miles total. The gravel portion of the road is in good enough shape to take a passenger car on, but make sure you have air in your spare and a full gas tank since this is fairly remote country.

River route

Since the route follows a river, it has been a travel corridor for centuries before the road was cut. The Crow were the first American Indians to use the region. They were pushed west by the Cheyenne and Sioux, who were pushed west by Euro-Americans.

Consequently, much of the history of the area reflects the development of the West — from an influx of trappers to pitched Indian battles against the U.S. Army and, finally, agricultural settlement.

The Tongue River drainage has also long been discussed as a possible railroad route connecting Sheridan, Wyo., to Miles City. The subject of a railroad has re-emerged in recent years as a way to haul coal from the Ashland area's Otter Creek coal reserves.

Lush land

It's easy to see why Indian tribes and now ranchers and hunters value this region. The drainage is still rich in wildlife. Photographer David Grubbs and I saw antelope, some does trailing recently born fawns that looked no bigger than a spindly-legged house cat. One buck decided to try to outrun Grubbs' car, dashing in front of it and speeding along for about 100 yards before diving into the borrow pit. The buck screeched to a halt just before slicing through a barbed-wire fence.

A rooster pheasant held its ground as we drove close, finally extending its neck upward at the last moment to crow, as if challenging the automobile to a fight. Then it turned tail and ran off into the roadside brush after having its bluff called.

Numerous meadowlarks trilled their spring songs atop fence posts along the route, their buttery yellow breasts heaving with the exertion. Closer to the water, red-winged blackbirds perched on posts and sang their songs.

Mule deer does and bucks, looking shabbily dressed as they shed their winter coats for a cooler summer fur, also crossed the road or trailed through the adjacent agricultural fields.

Wet spring

The croplands were thick with green growth, as were the badland hillsides leading up to the exposed and etched faces of hilltop clay. In places, ponderosa pine groves top the hills. The red bands of rock along the hillsides are known as clinker, the same rock that landscapers use and that coats the graveled portion of Highway 332. The clinker was formed when coal deposits burning underground baked surrounding clays.

In the river bottom, the Tongue was roiled with rainwater runoff, its waters looking like strong coffee dosed with a large shot of cream and briskly stirred. All of the deeply carved drainages contained water — an unusual sight in this arid country — after some places received more than 3 inches of rain. Low-lying fields and groves of trees normally high and dry stood under water. Frogs chorused their pleasure at being in the swim of things, and tadpoles scooted around in ponds, their tails squiggling to motor them about.

Chokecherry trees, thick with white pods of blossoms scented the dense, humid air with sweetness.

We saw all of this driving through the area at midday. Undoubtedly more wildlife would be wandering about in the early morning and evening hours. And in a few days, once the weather warms, the unplowed hillsides should come alive with wildflowers, all the more reason to check this area out soon.

Rexburg Standard Journal

REXBURG — With a backdrop of heavy equipment, planners and city officials armed with golden shovels broke ground Monday morning for Rexburg's newest park and its outdoor aquatic center.

The first phase of the park will cover about 14 acres on the south side of the vacant land between Second North and the Teton River, just east of the railroad that bisects town.

In addition to the aquatic center, it will include parking, grassy areas and basic baseball and soccer fields.

The $5.2 million aquatic center is planned to be open for use by Memorial Day of 2011.

The groundbreaking ceremony took place at the south end of the park location on Second North and Center Street near the City Recreation Department Building.

Short speeches by Rexburg Mayor Richard Woodland, Urban Renewal Board Member Joseph West and contracted planner, Johnny Watson, praised the teamwork and community effort that went into planning the project.

Although the aquatic center initially received much public support, the economic downturn, as well as ideas about making the pool an indoor facility, have led to opposition from some residents, who have described it as "bound to be a disaster" and not a "sensible use of our money" on the Standard Journal opinion page.

But city officials stand by the aquatic center.

"I think it's an exciting day, not only for the City of Rexburg, but for the entire upper valley community," said City Councilman Brad Egbert after the ceremony. "It'll be a great place for families to gather and children to play. It's a challenging time in our economy — we realize that. We're being very careful with our budgeting, but at the same time we're providing something very positive for the community. It's an investment in the youth of our community."

Woodland said the project will benefit Rexburg residents with recreation and economic development.

"I'm excited for the amount of money this is going to keep in Rexburg," he said. "It is economic development — people from outside Rexburg will use the city as their recreational center."

The plans for the aquatic center consist of two main parts, an activity pool and a meandering "lazy river" that has a flowing current. The activity pool will have an interactive play area, a graduated depth swimming area with a deep end and catch basins for several water-slides.

Shotshells to ward off deadly serpents

Short of rounding a bend in the trail and coming face-to-face with an angry mother bear or creepy social deviant, your greatest threat while hiking this summer will probably come from crossing paths with a startled rattlesnake.

In the hot and dusty alpine rimrock and among the cool, shady creek bottoms that I traverse each summer, snakes — particularly rattlesnakes — are common.

Though I've spent a lifetime hunting and backpacking in our western mountains and deserts, I have only had to use deadly force on two occasions to protect myself from snakes. These incidents were enough to motivate me to put together my "anti-snake-bite kit."

First, because "an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure," it's important to remember to always be aware of your surroundings as you move about in the outdoors. Most snakes are

SHOOTING THE BULL

crepuscular (active at twilight) or nocturnal (active at night), and the majority of bites occur while people are rummaging around for firewood or walking about at night with their feet and legs unprotected. The antidote for these two circumstances is, of course, obvious.

Second, snake bites often occur in a person's upper extremities, particularly the hands and fingers. These strikes generally occur when people reach or move their hands or arms around or under rocks and fallen logs or rummage around in collapsed structures, caves or abandoned mines.

When suiting up for my summer and early fall jaunts, I slip on a pair of high, sturdy hiking boots and loosely fitting cotton trousers. In my gloved hands, I carry a lengthy walking stick. This "extra leg" is great for providing additional stability and traction. In confrontations where you might not be able to retreat immediately, your walking staff can serve double-duty by fending off an aggressive serpent.

RICH SIMPSON/For the Times-News

Since discovering CCI Ammunition's Pest Control shotshell loads, I've also been carrying along a .22 or .38/357 Magnum revolver. Located in Lewiston, CCI is the world's foremost producer of rimfire and specialty shotshell ammunition. It is the company's Pest Control/Specialty shotshell loadings that I'll highlight today.

By filling frangible plastic capsules with fine birdshot, CCI created several effective short-range loads. Currently, three loadings are available — a .22LR version containing about 165 pellets of No. 12 shot, a .22 WMR round boosting a 52-grain charge of No. 12 pellets, and a .38/357 casing packed with a 1/4-ounce payload of No. 9 shot (135 pellets). All of these loads have been engineered to achieve about 1,000 feet per second through abbreviated revolver barrels.

Whether you're hiking in the hills or culling vermin around the barn, give these shotshells a try. They might even make a snake charmer out of you.

Good shooting!

Fishing report

Bass fishing at Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir is consistent. Trout are being caught throughout the reservoir, but has slowed some along the banks. Anglers are having success with everything from fly fishing to trolling a wedding ring with a worm.

Trout fishing at Roseworth is said to be good and consistent.

Sturgeon fishing is fair to good on the Snake River; anglers are having the best success below Bliss Dam.

The word is good at Magic Reservoir. Anglers are using nightcrawlers and green PowerBait for trout. An eight-pound brown trout was hooked this past week. Bass also are showing up and fishing well in the Narrows.

Little Wood Reservoir is full and trout fishing off the dam is good. Trout are hungry and are running 10 to 14 inches.

Carey Lake has been slow with some small bluegill and perch being caught.

Trout fishing at Lake Walcott continues to be good. Sublett Reservoir is producing some nice fish, as well. Lots of small planters being caught in both places with some larger fish mixed in.

Oakley Reservoir had a lot of activity last weekend, though catch rates are still low.

At Dierkes Lake the water is warming up, so trout seem to be going deep and the bass/bluegill are picking up. Most bass being caught are not keeper size.

The Take Me Fishing Trailer's next stop is Dierkes Lake on Wednesday, July 7. From 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. that day fishing equipment and supplies will be provided for anyone who wants to learn to fish.

Thorn Creek Reservoir has good water levels at the moment and has been stocked.

Anderson Ranch Reservoir is full and fishermen are catching a few trout and small mouth bass. Kokanee fishing is steady but slow. Kokanee are 20- to 40-foot deep and are running 11 to 14 inches.

Silver Creek is a good choice for stream fishing. Anglers say it is fishing well using pmds and baettis.

The Big Wood, Big Lost and South Fork of the Boise rivers are all running high and murky. Wading at the moment is dangerous and is expected to stay this way for a while. This also holds true for the major tributaries.

Area ponds have been stocked and fishing well. For the time being, these are better choices than the Big Wood River Valley.

Ring-neck pheasant numbers drop in N.D.

By James MacPherson
Associated Press writer

BISMARCK, N.D. — North Dakota ring-neck pheasant numbers are down and a harsh winter two years ago is partly to blame, a state wildlife official says.

The spring pheasant crowing count survey — conducted by officials who listen for the crowing — released Monday by the state Game and Fish Department showed a 6 percent drop statewide from last year.

Stan Kohn, upland game management supervisor for the agency, said many adult birds did not survive the winter before last. Fewer adult birds and poor chick production the following spring due to cool, wet weather also hurt the pheasant population.

"That combination may have kept the breeding population down this spring," Kohn said. "This past winter did not appear to have a role in the lower crowing counts."

The survey, done each spring for more than 50 years, gives biologists and hunters a hint of the pheasant population for the upcoming hunting season. It involves wildlife officials from across the state who get up before sunup and drive 20-mile routes, stopping every two miles for two minutes to listen for pheasant crowing.

"The crowing count only gives us a general estimate of the number of breeding roosters that are out there," Kohn said.

Kohn, a veteran of more than 30 annual crowing counts, said roadside brood surveys, which begin next month and continue into August, give biologists a better insight on what to expect this fall.

Early signs point toward a high chick survival rate due to good nesting cover and plentiful insects for the birds to eat, Kohn said.

"I'm optimistic we could see good numbers this fall," he said.

Pheasant hunters killed about 652,000 roosters last year, or about 125,000 fewer than 2008, the Game and Fish Department said Monday. The number of hunters dropped from about 108,000 to 88,400.

Anglers hooked on Stubby Steve's lure

By Ray Sasser
Dallas Morning News

How many times have you come up with a good idea and never followed through? Maybe a year later, or five years later, somebody you never heard of brings your idea to market and slugs a hanging curve out of the financial ballpark.

A Virginia veterinarian named Steve Munsey watched fish in private ponds eating pelletized commercial fish food and had the same idea everyone else in that situation has had — what I need is a lure that looks like fish food.

Fly fishermen have tied flies to resemble tiny little brown chunks of fish food. Others have tightly bound fish-food pellets into a small piece of pantyhose and threaded it onto a hook. I've tried, unsuccessfully, to super-glue fish food to a hook and have cut brown plastic worms into fish-food-sized chunks.

Munsey took it a step further. He took actual fish food and mixed it with some form of natural rubber latex to create what is essentially a soft, flexible chunk of fish food that's easily threaded onto a small hook and, once there, incredibly hard to remove.

"I actually got the idea because my daughter and three of her friends wanted to go fishing when they graduated from high school," said Munsey. "I took them to a friend's pond where there was a fish feeder. There were plenty of fish, but the girls didn't catch them because the fish were so fixated on the feed they refused to bite anything else."

Like the rest of us who have been frustrated at the selective, piranha-like feeding frenzy when an automatic feeder dispenses pellets, Munsey was unable to get actual fish food to stay on a hook. Thus began a three-year quest that evolved into Stubby Steve's, The Artificial Fish Food Lure.

Fish feeders are very popular on private lakes, where growth rates of fish like bluegills and channel catfish can be considerably enhanced by feeding them a couple of times a day. A one-pound bluegill is a rare commodity in nature, but fish that size are common in lakes where the bluegills are fed.

"I knew that there are millions of private lake managers using feeders," said Munsey. "I figured if I could get their business, that's all the business I'd want."

A funny thing happened once Stubby Steve's got into the consumer's hands, however. Anglers discovered that fish food attracted fish that had never seen it before. Munsey's website includes testimonials from anglers who've caught a huge variety of species, both wild and hatchery-raised, on his product.

He admits largemouth bass seem less influenced by odor than species like bluegills and other sunfish, channel catfish, crappie, trout and carp, but he's heard from bass anglers who use the Stubby Steve's as an additive to a traditional bass lure.

Munsey, who holds degrees in animal nutrition, thinks the shelf life of his product is about one year, assuming it's stored in a cool, dry place. Shelf life is one reason you may never see Stubby Steve's in major sporting goods stores.

"When we sell it via the website, we're shipping out orders of fish-food lure that were made two weeks earlier," Munsey said. "I hope to make a profit one day, but I'm also interested in helping people, particularly children, enjoy their fishing experience."

A re-sealable bag of Stubby Steve's costs $4.99 and contains 20 of the lures, which are light enough to be cast on a fly rod and will float a small hook. Munsey generously supports youth fishing events and welcomes inquiries via the website, www.stubbysteve.com.

Hobby

He fishes a number of times throughout the year, using his homemade flies. That's where the hobby has its dividend.

Helping the youth

Brauer, a member of Magic Valley Fly Fishers, is a mentor in the club's Duck Tales division and has been for the past five years or so, ever since he suggested the club start a youth group.

He believes fly fishing can teach important lessons for people of all ages — sociability, patience and a love for the outdoors, to name a few — but says there's never enough women and children who practice the sport.

The club's efforts to promote youth fly fishing and women-only events is aimed to increase the activity among these groups.

At some club events, he also teaches youth how to tie.

Using the fly

On a dark-sky day use a dark fly; on a bright day, use a light fly. An old-wives tale, perhaps, but it seems to work for Brauer.

A quality fly-fishing rod and good casting techniques also help him to land big fish. He says that they, in fact, are perhaps the most important things to successful fly fishing.

A person doesn't need to spend a lot of money on a quality rod; one can be purchased for around $70, he says. And don't worry about the reel — "that's just a place to hold your line," Brauer says.

As for casting, well, that takes practice. Anglers want to cast their fly so it looks natural when landing on water; otherwise fish will know it's an imitation.

The more an angler gets out on the rivers and streams, the more his or her casting techniques will improve, as will the chances of catching fish.

Even when Brauer doesn't catch fish, however, he enjoys his time in the outdoors and says he's seen more of nature's handiwork, including wildlife, on his fishing excursions than on any of his hunting trips.

Another dividend. "I've hunted all my life," he says, "but have seen more things while fishing than I ever have hunting. You get attuned to what's around you when you fly fish."

A sportman's affection

"I love this sport," Brauer says about fly fishing, and you know he means it. His office is an outdoorsman's haven — the walls are decorated with game and fish mounts, pictures and other emblems.

Brauer, a plumber by trade, says if he could fish for a living, he would. For now, he's content getting on the water whenever he can and improving his craft at tying flies.

He sits at his worktable sometimes creating new fly patterns or trying variations of old ones; sometimes he'll copy ones he's seen in magazines and fishing journals.

Brauer has one goal in mind: "It's all about catching fish," he says. "If you can fool a fish, that in itself is kind of a victory. ... It gives you a sense of accomplishment, knowing I tied that fly that caught that fish."

F&G Commission approves chinook season in Boise River

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission on Wednesday approved a proposed chinook salmon harvest season in the Boise River.

The season will run from July 1 through Sept. 30.

Idaho Fish and Game plans to bring about 400 chinook from the Hells Canyon trap and release them in four Boise River locations between the Glenwood Bridge and Barber Park sometime today.

The daily limit is two chinook, regardless of size, and the possession limit is six.

All chinook salmon — adults and jacks — kept must be counted in the daily and possession limits. Only adult chinook salmon kept must be recorded on the angler's salmon permit. An adult chinook is 24 inches long.

No person may keep more than 40 adult chinook statewide during the calendar year.

Barbless hooks are not required on the Boise River, but it is unlawful to use any hook larger than five-eighths inch measured from the point of the hook to the shank. It is unlawful to take or attempt to take salmon by snagging.

Salmon anglers 14 and older must have a valid Idaho fishing license and salmon permit.

Taking a closer look at blood-pressure numbers

DEAR DR. GOTT: My hypertension has been treated for many years with lisinopril 20 milligrams daily and amlodipine 5 milligrams daily. These medications seem to have little effect on my numbers. My systolic readings are in the range of 140 to 165, while my diastolic readings are in the 50s.

I recently came across an

article on the topic of isolated systolic hypertension, in which a physician pointed out that this form of hypertension can lead to serious problems — stroke, heart disease, chronic kidney disease and dementia. The doctors and nurses who have taken my blood pressure have universally said that the diastolic reading was not a consideration; however, this report indicated that medications to control systolic hypertension should not be allowed to cause the diastolic pressure to go below

I am an 82-year-old diabetic male on medications for three years now due to exercise and diet. I also have symptom-free bradycardia. I would very much appreciate your comments on this report.

DEAR READER: I am a little confused. You indicate you are a diabetic and have hypertension that was treated with two medications. You then go on to state that you have been off medications for three years. Does this mean the antihypertensives, diabetes meds or both? In any case, I congratulate you on taking control and maintaining a healthier lifestyle.

Isolated systolic hypertension is defined as a systolic reading of greater than 140 and a diastolic reading of less than 90. The condition can result from hyperthyroidism, a leaky heart valve or other causes.

There was a time when doctors devoted their attention to the second number, the diastolic, with the thought the body could tolerate fluctuations in the first reading. Then there was the "blanket rule" that the first reading would be normal at 100 plus the age of the patient, i.e., 175 in a 75-year-old male. Both schools of thought have been modified. Today, the systolic and diastolic are of equal importance, and the 100-plus reading has been totally abandoned.

Of concern in patients with isolated systolic hypertension is that prescribed medications may affect the second number, lowering it to the point that it might increase the risk of heart attack or stroke. The fine line then becomes keeping the diastolic at no less than 70 mmHg, while simultaneously keeping the systolic at an appropriate figure, just as the report indicated.

My guess is that your diastolic readings are too low, and that you might require medication to bring both numbers into line. Take a copy of the article to your physician for his or her review. A determination can then be made about whether you should be back on the two medications or not. No matter what, I would continue the exercise and diet modification.

The lisinopril you are/were taking is an ACE inhibitor used to treat hypertension and congestive heart failure. It can be used alone or in conjunction with other drugs for the same purpose. The amlodipine is a calcium channel blocker that works to lower blood pressure and decrease the heart rate. It, too, can be used in conjunction with other drugs for best results.

To provide related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Hypertension." Other readers who would like a copy should send a self-addressed stamped No. 10 envelope and a $2 check or money order to Newsletter, P.O. Box 167, Wickliffe, OH 44092-0167. Obama takes on election-year fears over big debt

By Julie Pace
Associated Press writer

RACINE, Wis. — Sensitive to election-year resentment over big government, President Barack Obama declared Wednesday he intends to get “our debt and our deficits under control.” With fears alive of a double-dip recession, Obama warned that he won’t slash spending at the expense of the economic rebound.

“We got it moving again,” Obama said of the economy to his town hall audience in this Midwestern city, where unemployment tops 14 percent. “We now have to, in a gradual way, reduce spending ... but do so in a way that doesn’t hurt people. And that is a challenge.”

Politically, Obama’s challenge is even broader. He is trying to make the case to the nation that the $862 billion stimulus plan prevented disaster and is fueling job growth even while millions are still out of work. And he is doing it at a time when Republicans are pounding him for running up a long-term bill for taxpayers, the same frustration that helped give rise to the Tea Party movement and that has made the budget deficit a bigger worry for voters across the spectrum.

The dilemma is also playing out globally, as world leaders try to balance pressures to cut their debt without eroding any jolt that came from new spending.

Seizing on a political opportunity, Obama used his latest getaway from Washington to lash out at Republicans as out of touch with the daily problems of Americans. His agenda was to sharpen the contrast with the opposition party as midterm elections loom and economic anxiety still runs high.

The president jumped all over two recent comments by Republican lawmakers that Democrats are trying to turn into a political liability for the GOP: Rep. Joe Barton’s apology to BP for the $20 billion compensation fund the White House pressured the company to set up after the Gulf oil spill, and House Minority Leader John Boehner’s recent comment that the financial regulation bill Obama supports amounts to “killing an ant with a nuclear weapon.”

“He can’t be that out of touch with the struggles of American families,” Obama said of Boehner. “If he is, then he has to come here to Racine and ask people what they think.”

Boehner later shot back in a statement: “The president should be focused on solving the problems of the American people — stopping the leaking oil and cleaning up the Gulf, scrapping his job-killing agenda, repealing and replacing ObamaCare — instead of my choice of metaphors.”

Obama’s comments about debt came amid a national sense of bailout fatigue, with his own economic leadership in question.

“How do we get government spending under control? That’s a legitimate question,” Obama said. “And whether you’re a Democrat, an independent, or a Republican, all of us should be worried about the fact that we have been running the credit card ... Somebody’s going to have to pay that back.”

He promised that the matter would be a priority for him over the next couple of years, with help from a commission studying how to reduce costly safety-net programs. Still, the president defended as essential both the unprecedented stimulus spending and the massive aid given to big banks and auto companies.

Speaking to a friendly audience in a state he won in 2008, Obama made the case for a government that plays a role in the lives of its people. And in a sharp critique of his opponents, he said it was a hands-off vision favored by many Republicans that led the country into an economic mess in the first place.

“Their prescription for every challenge is pretty much the same — and I don’t think I’m exaggerating here: basically cut taxes for the wealthy, cut rules for corporations and cut working folks loose to fend for themselves,” he said.

Obama’s critique of the GOP underscored a reality four months out from the midterm elections: While the economy is no longer teetering on the edge of a recession, there are still concerns that the fragile recovery could spiral downward.

A string of disappointing economic numbers, capped off by a dismal report on consumer confidence this week, have contributed to a slide in the markets. The unemployment rate is expected to hover around 10 percent through the end of the year, and many economists expect Friday’s employment report to show that employers cut jobs in June, reversing five straight months of growth.

Obama chided Republicans for blocking the extension of unemployment benefits and opposing a Wall Street reform bill making its way through Congress, policies he said would bring more certainty to the lives of Americans and to the markets.

Elizabeth Edwards: It wasn’t easy to leave John despite his infidelity

By Mike Baker
Associated Press writer

RALEIGH, N.C. — Elizabeth Edwards says it was not easy to leave her husband in the wake of the two-time presidential contender’s infidelity, writing in a new chapter of her memoir that she still sees in him the memories of their 30 years together.

Edwards says in the updated version of her book released Tuesday that she spent two years trying to “reinvent” her role as a wife so that they could stay together despite the affair. But she says the “tender thread” holding the family together unraveled at the very end of 2009 — three years after John Edwards first told his wife in private that he’d had a one-night stand with a videographer.

“One day, I did not want to try anymore,” she said.

The couple has since separated and he acknowledged fathering a child with mistress Rielle Hunter during his 2008 campaign for the White House. The 2004 Democratic vice presidential nominee also acknowledged a federal investigation into his campaign funds, with former campaign aide Andrew Young saying a grand jury asked questions about money used to keep Hunter in hiding during the presidential race.

Elizabeth Edwards says in her book “Resilience” that it was not easy to leave the marriage because she saw 30 years of memories in him. They were law school sweethearts who got married just days after they took the bar exam together in the summer of 1977. They had four children together, including a son who died at the age of 16.

“So when I closed the door on the John of today, I also had to say good-bye to that sweet man whom I had loved for so long,” Edwards writes. “It was not as easy as it might have seemed to anyone looking in from the outside, who knew only the John of today.”

Elizabeth Edwards is battling cancer and says she hopes to live another eight years — long enough to see her youngest child graduate from high school.

Edwards says she wanted her children to love their father and see John Edwards in a positive light despite the affair that wrecked their marriage.

She said in an interview on NBC’s “Today” show

Wednesday that her battle with cancer made it important that their children see their father in a positive light.

“I have three living children for whom this is a father I want them to love and on whom they’re going to have to rely perhaps if my disease takes a bad turn,” Elizabeth Edwards said.

Edwards said their new parenting dynamics are “going pretty well.” Two of their children are still preteens.

She said the decision to end the marriage was difficult because she had leaned on him for so long.

“I was going to be on my own in a way that I maybe hadn’t ever really been, and that was pretty terrifying, particularly facing a disease, young children and a fairly uncertain future,” she said.

Todd Donald Smith

Heaven has received one, awesome, creative artist, son, brother and friend who touched the lives of so many in a fun-loving way.

Todd Donald Smith, 41, of Twin Falls, Idaho, was swept away by angels Monday, June 28, 2010, to play his guitar in a larger galaxy's Cosmic concert hall. Rock on, Todd!

This beautiful, creative and intelligent man graduated from Twin Falls High School in 1986, leaving behind a legacy in the garage band, "TRITE." Todd received his Bachelor of Arts degree in graphic design from the University of Idaho in 1991. His accomplishments, while at the university, were production manager for the campus newspaper and part-time campus DJ. He moved to San Francisco, Calif., after graduation, where he designed album covers for rap artists as well as worked for City Hall Records, where he spun words in music publications for 17 years. He also starred in two B-rated movies. Apparently, this planet couldn't accommodate such a talented man. Todd literally knocked people off their chairs with his unique sense of humor and stand-up comedy.

He is survived by his mother, Bette Smith; father, Donald Smith; sisters, Shelle Schooley and Stacy Smith; nephew, Jake Schooley; and niece, Shawnda Schooley.

We dearly love this wonderful and very precious son, brother and friend. Continue on, Todd, in your heavenly home where you will be unconditionally loved forever and ever.

A memorial gathering will be held from 2 until 5 p.m. Friday, July 2, at the home of Bette Smith, 1700 S. Dora Drive in Twin Falls. In lieu of flowers, please enjoy one of Todd's favorite Roger Miller songs! Arrangements are under the direction of White Mortuary, "Chapel by the Park."

Oldest U.S. postal worker retires in California at 95

By Nardine Saad
Associated Press writer

REDLANDS, Calif. — It wasn't snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of night that stopped Chester Arthur Reed from his appointed round. The mail handler just felt it was time to call it quits at age 95.

The fork lift operator retired Wednesday as the nation's oldest postal worker, ending a career without taking a single sick day. It's a feat he attributes to a healthy diet of watermelon, alkaline water and an onion sandwich with mayo every day.

"If everyone in the nation ate watermelons, they'd get rid of all the doctors," Reed said.

Despite being partially deaf and walking with a stoop, Reed has worked for more years than many of his co-workers have been alive and has accrued 3,856 hours — nearly two years — of sick leave for not missing a shift in 37 years.

Reed has been a U.S. Postal Service mail handler and forklift operator since he was hired in 1973, making $4 an hour. He hit the $25-an-hour ceiling about 10 years ago.

Reed said he likes his job because "one, it's a steady income and, two, they don't hassle you." But he also knows when to leave, reasoning: "The Bible says there's a time for everything. Well, it's time to retire, and that's it."

Reed worked the 2:30 p.m. to 11 p.m. shift and logged in more than 12 hours some days, his 55-year-old manager Mary Brunkhorst said. "We'd have to force him to go home, and he'd say there's still work to do. It takes a special person to work to age 95. Our generation would not do that."

"We'd have to force him to go home, and he'd say there's still work to do. It takes a special person to work to age 95.

Our generation would not do that."

attended a retirement ceremony Wednesday for Reed where he was presented with a plaque bearing about 40 stamps that depict locations he visited or activities he enjoyed. Some in the audience wiped away tears.

Reed was hired to the postal service after serving in the Air Force, which he joined at age 33. Among the places where he served were Wiesbaden in Germany, Okinawa in Japan, and three Texas bases before ending up in March Field in Riverside where he currently lives.

Despite his travel during military service, Reed still has wanderlust. He and his 59-year-old son Richard visit a continent each year, recently marking their fifth. He is planning another trip that will include Moscow, Helsinki and Dublin, and a second parasailing adventure in Rio de Janeiro.

He last parasailed two years ago, at age 93.

Reed was born in 1914 and grew up in St. Clairsville, Ohio, as the son of an auto mechanic and a housewife. After high school, he worked on Ford Model Ts in his dad's auto shop. In 1944, Reed met his wife Iva Katherine, a dance instructor, on the dance floor and enlisted in the Air Force three years later.

He retired from active service as a sergeant in 1972. He said he heard the post office was hiring, so he went in for an interview and was hired on the spot.

His military service, which included physical conditioning with pilots, is evident in the rigid discipline surrounding his health. It's his favorite topic of conversation, said Reed's co-worker Verna Ortiz, 50.

He believes in drinking alkaline water, to minimize acids that can damage digestive system, and eating sandwiches made "with a lot of mayonnaise and get a big slice of onion" because the vegetable is closely related to garlic, one of the healthiest foods you can eat, he said.

"He taught me to stay away from the two S's: salt and sugar," Ortiz said, adding she lost 10 pounds in six months by taking his advice.

Reed also likes to point out that his personal hero, the fitness guru Jack LaLanne whom Reed calls "a fine physical specimen," is only one month his senior.

Reed is one of seven siblings, but has outlived all but the youngest — a 65-year-old who lives near San Diego. Reed's other son died of cancer at age 58 a few years ago, and Reed's wife died soon after.

Regardless of his longevity, Reed doesn't think he's leaving a legacy. "Put your hand in a bucket of water, put it in all the way to your wrist. Take it out and the hole that you leave will be how much you'll be missed," he said.

And while he may not be going to a job anymore, he's still working hard.

"Hey, if Adam and Eve hadn't messed up, they'd be living yet," he said. "So I'm going to try to reach 100."

Dr. Demento leaving radio for Internet

By John Rogers
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Listen closely, that's the sound of demented music dying that you're hearing on your radio.

After nearly 40 years of broadcasting catchy little tunes celebrating everything from dogs getting run over by lawnmowers to cockroaches devouring entire cities, Dr. Demento is discontinuing his syndicated radio show.

By summer's end, the good doctor's hyper-enthusiastic voice will be heard only on the Internet as it introduces oddball classics such as "There's a Fungus Among Us," "Fish Heads" and "Dead Puppies."

For decades Demento has been a Sunday-night fixture on radio stations across the country, keeping alive the music of political satirists like Tom Lehrer ("The Vatican Rag"), while making a star of "Weird Al" Yankovic, whose first hit, "My Bologna," debuted on the doctor's show.

"He kept my whole career alive by playing Freberg records constantly," says Stan Freberg, the Grammy-winning song satirist who, at 83, continues to write and perform comedy music and make public appearances.

Recently, however, the radio stations carrying Demento's show declined to fewer than a dozen. He had planned to stop syndicating it this month until he learned a college station in Amarillo, Texas, had committed to airing it through the summer.

Over the decades, Demento, who was inducted into the Radio Hall of Fame last year, has kept his playlists contemporary. But it was changing radio formats that did in his syndicated show, said Demento, 69, who in a parallel life is Barret Hansen, music writer and ethnomusicologist. His college master's thesis was on the evolution of rhythm and blues.

"With the increasingly narrow casting, as they call it, of radio where stations will pick one relatively restricted format and stick with it 24 hours a day, especially in the music area, my show just got perhaps a little too odd of a duck to fit in," he said.

The program has always been built on Demento's personal music collection, which numbers in the hundreds of thousands and includes every recording format from antique wax cylinders to modern-day digital downloads.

He says he's long since lost count of how many recordings he keeps in the Southern California home he shares with his wife, Sue, but puts the number somewhere north of 300,000.

When he started putting them on the radio in 1970, it wasn't all that unusual for a pop station to play a record by blues-rocker Eric Clapton, followed immediately by one from crooner Frank Sinatra. With that dichotomy, broadcasting a variety show that would include songs like Sheb Wooley's "Purple People Eater" and "Weird Al's" Grammy-winning Michael Jackson takeoff "Eat It" didn't sound so out of place.

But those days of radio appear over, says broadcast veteran and University of Southern California's writer-in-residence Norman Corwin.

"Radio has been relegated to programs like Rush Limbaugh and other talk shows and (on the music side) niche formats," said Corwin, who has worked in and followed the broadcast industry for more than 70 years. "They do have a huge following, and a huge influence," he says of such shows. "But the variety programs are gone. That's a shame."

They've gone to the Internet, says Demento, who has been doing a separate Web show there for several years. On the Web, he says, he can play even a wider selection of music, including tunes too raunchy or outrageous for FCC-regulated terrestrial radio.

"I prefer to think of it as just transitioning to a new medium rather than it coming to an end," he says of the show, which will mark its 40th anniversary in October.

"It's kind of like when we changed from cassettes to CDs," he adds in that distinctive Dr. Demento voice.

Senate confirms Gen. Petraeus as Afghan war chief

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Gen. David Petraeus was unanimously confirmed by the U.S. Senate Wednesday as the new Afghan war commander, replacing Gen. Stanley McChrystal after his ouster over controversial remarks in a Rolling Stone magazine article.

The 99-0 Senate vote followed a confirmation hearing Tuesday in which members of the Senate Armed Services Committee praised Petraeus' leadership of the war in Iraq and lauded him as the nation's premier warrior-diplomat.

President Barack Obama released a statement expressing gratitude for the swift confirmation. "General Petraeus is a pivotal part of our effort to succeed in Afghanistan — and in our broader effort to disrupt, dismantle, and defeat al Qaeda 1/2ndash 3/4 and he has my full confidence," the president said.

Petraeus told the committee members that the Afghan war, which he said is being waged against "an industrial-strength insurgency," is likely to get worse before it gets better.

"My sense is that the tough fighting will continue," Petraeus said. "Indeed, it may get more intense."

Petraeus said he would adhere to McChrystal's strategy of trying to avoid civilian deaths in Afghanistan, a keystone of the U.S. military's counterinsurgency approach. But in a nod to U.S. troops who have complained that McChrystal tied their hands by limiting tactics, Petraeus said he would "look very hard" at how directives issued by the former commander were being implemented.

"I will continue the emphasis on reducing the loss of innocent civilian life to an absolute minimum in the course of military operations," Petraeus said, adding that the rules of engagement for U.S. troops are "fairly standard."

A separate "tactical directive," he said, was designed to govern the use of air-launched weapons

"because, of course, if you drop a bomb on a house, if you're not sure who's in it, you can kill a lot of innocent civilians in a hurry."

The general said that it is imperative that the directives are implemented uniformly throughout the force, and that "when our troops and our Afghan partners are in a tough spot ... it's a moral imperative that we use everything we have to ensure that they get out."

World's largest oil skimmer heads to Gulf

By Tom Breen and Jay Reeves
Associated Press writers

NEW ORLEANS — With hurricane-whipped waves pushing more oil onto the Gulf of Mexico's once-white beaches, the government pinned its latest cleanup hopes Wednesday on a huge new piece of equipment: the world's largest oil-skimming vessel.

The Taiwanese-flagged former tanker named the "A Whale" is the length of 3 1/2 football fields and stands 10 stories high. It just emerged from an extensive retrofitting to prepare it specifically for the Gulf, where officials hope it will be able to suck up as much as 21 million gallons of oil-fouled water per day.

"It is absolutely gigantic. It's unbelievable," said Louisiana State University environmental sciences professor Ed Overton, who saw the ship last week in Norfolk, Va.

As the monstrous vessel made its way toward the Gulf Coast, large waves churned up by distant Hurricane Alex left Alabama beaches splattered with oil and tar balls the size of apples. The rough seas forced most smaller skimming boats into port for a second consecutive day, putting many cleanup crews at a standstill.

The ship looks like a typical tanker, but it takes in contaminated water through 12 vents on either side of the bow. The oil is then supposed to be separated from the water and transferred to another vessel. The water is channeled back into the sea.

But the ship has never been tested, and many questions remain about how it will operate. For instance, the seawater retains trace amounts of oil, even after getting filtered, so the Environmental Protection Agency will have to sign off on allowing the treated water back into the Gulf.

"This is a no-brainer," Overton said. "You're bringing in really dirty, oily water and you're putting back much cleaner water."

The vessel, owned by the Taiwanese shipping firm TMT Group, was completed as a tanker earlier this year in South Korea. But after the Gulf spill, the company's CEO and founder, Nobu Su, ordered it changed into a giant skimmer. The vessel was sent to Portugal for the refit and embarked for the Gulf as soon as it was finished.

Alex hits Mexico's Gulf coast as hurricane, spawns tornadoes

By Christopher Sherman
Associated Press writers

SAN FERNANDO, Mexico — Hurricane Alex crashed into Mexico's Gulf coast as a powerful Category 2 storm Wednesday, spawning tornadoes in nearby Texas, forcing evacuations in both countries and whipping up high waves that frustrated oil-spill cleanup efforts and pushed crude onto beaches.

Alex made landfall at a relatively unpopulated stretch of coast in Mexico's northern Tamaulipas state about 110 miles south of Brownsville, Texas, and was pushing inland at 10 mph, the U.S. National Hurricane Center said.

Its heavy rains and 110 mph winds lashed Mexican fishing villages, whose residents fled to the inland town of San Fernando on buses and in the back of pickup trucks.

Hundreds of people filled a storm shelter in an auditorium in San Fernando, about 50 miles from where Alex made landfall.

"We didn't bring anything but these clothes," said evacuee Carolina Sanchez, 21, motioning to two small plastic bags at her feet, as her 3-year-old sister Belen Sanchez Gonzalez clutched a purple and white stuffed toy poodle at the storm shelter. Her father, a fisherman, was one of many to South Padre Island, a popular vacation getaway off the Texas coast, and 9-foot waves were reported on the island's beach.

The main threat as the hurricane begins to fall apart over land will be tornadoes, which could last another day or two, hurricane center meteorologist Chris Landsea said.

The other big threat is rain, Landsea said. Parts of Mexico and Texas are expected to get 6-12 inches of rain, which could cause flash flooding farther west, away from the coast, he said.

In Texas, more than 100 families took shelter in a Brownsville high school, which was beginning to quickly fill up.

Sergio Gonzales, 18, arrived with nine other family members after his father decided their house may not survive the flood.

Gonzales didn't agree with his dad. "I think it's just going to be a normal one," he said.

The storm was far from the Gulf oil spill, but cleanup vessels were sidelined by the hurricane's ripple effects. Six-foot waves churned up by the hurricane splattered beaches in Louisiana, Alabama and Florida with oil and tar balls.

It was the first June hurricane in the Atlantic since 1995, according to the National Hurricane Center in Miami, Florida.

The 'A Whale,' billed as the world's largest oil skimming vessel, is seen anchored on the Mississippi River in Boothville, La., Wednesday.

Kagan's chances still healthy despite tripping up on fruits and vegetables

By James Oliphant
Tribune Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — After completing two days of testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee that was alert, thoughtful, and punctuated with flashes of wit, Elena Kagan seems almost certain to become the nation's 112th justice on the Supreme Court. But one minor slip — on a question about, of all things, fruits and vegetables — gave Republicans at least one chance to benefit politically from the hearings.

As she demonstrated in the two days of testimony that ended Wednesday, Kagan is a gifted scholar, a savvy politician, and a talented administrator, who spent hours preparing for this week's appearances before the committee. But perhaps no amount of cramming could have readied her for the very simple-sounding question asked of her by Republican Sen. Tom Coburn. Can the government, he wondered, pass a law forcing Americans

To Kagan, at first blush, the question must have seemed absurd, maybe even a joke. "It sounds like a dumb law," she replied, off the cuff. Then, realizing Coburn was serious, she segued into sort of the windy, contextual, cautious analysis that she has employed to answer most of the questions asked of her during the past two days.

But she had fallen into Coburn's trap by answering more like the law professor she is than by simply responding like most people would. She never just said: "Of course it can't."

Within hours, a video detailing the exchange was atop the Drudge Report website, hundreds of thousands had viewed it on YouTube, and conservatives were having a field day.

Her equivocation fit ideally with the narrative Republicans are trying to fashion during these hearings — a story of a federal government out of control and a Congress running amuck.

For Kagan, it was a rare

misstep in what proved to be an uneventful two days of testimony. The confirmation hearing for President Obama's choice to replace the retired John Paul Stevens will continue with other witnesses, both supportive and critical, today. Even top Republicans conceded that her confirmation appeared likely.

But in a way, losing this summer in order to help bring about a big win in November was always the goal for the GOP. Its emaciated presence in the Senate helped ensure that. As Sen. Jon Kyl of Arizona said Wednesday, "With only 41 votes, a filibuster obviously would be highly improbable."

Instead, Republicans tried to tether Kagan to the policies of the Obama administration. "When we look at Elena Kagan's resume, what we find is a woman who has spent much of her adult life working to advance the goals of the Democratic Party," Sen. Mitch McConnell, the Senate minority leader, said on the floor Monday.

Brown cuts deals he campaigned against

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republican Scott Brown owes his election in part to the public furor over the so-called Cornhusker Kickback, the backroom deal that Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska struck for his vote to pass the health care bill. Now he is following Nelson's example, winning concessions in the financial overhaul bill on behalf of Massachusetts banks.

The "Massachusetts Miracle" who delivered Edward M. Kennedy's Senate seat to Republicans is now wheeling and dealing with both parties and hinting that he just might vote with Democrats if financial institutions in his state.

It's an instructive look this midterm election year at how quickly a candidate who campaigned against "closed-door meetings" and "backroom deals" can learn to craft them once in office.

Brown scored an exemption for home-state interests like Fidelity Investments and the so-called Cornhusker Insurance Co. from some new restrictions on trading. He also persuaded congressional negotiators to let banks invest up to 3 percent of their capital in private equity funds and hedge funds, a change that would help such banks as Boston-based State Street Corp.

Then this week, Democrats bowed to a more philosophical demand that knowledgeable officials say was choreographed by Republican leader Mitch McConnell. On Tuesday, Democratic negotiators agreed to remove a $19 billion tax on large banks and hedge funds after Brown threatened to vote "no" because of it.

Brown wouldn't say whether the concession was enough to win his vote.

Sultry red-head sensationalizes Russian spy tale

By Robin Abcarian and Geraldine Baum
Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — Talk about your American dream.

One day you're a 28-year-old red-haired beauty from Russia trying to make it as a "businesswoman" in New York City. The next, your name and sexy Facebook profile photo are splashed all over the world, your every status update — "Pain is only weakness leaving the body;" for instance — the subject of international fascination. You are a femme fatale.

And all you did was allegedly participate in a Russian spy ring.

Every good Cold-War-style spy scandal needs a Natasha, and Anna Chapman, who appeared in court Monday in designer jeans and a white T-shirt, has emerged as the tale's sexy antagonist.

With all manner of minor players having capitalized on the fame that comes with a fall, is it much of a stretch to think that Chapman may be looking at a lucrative future? If not an American Dream, then a publicist's dream?

"Story has 'blockbuster' written all over it," said New York publicist Peggy Siegal. "Sandra Bullock in a red wig!"

On her Facebook page, Chapman once wrote, perhaps presciently: "If you can imagine it, you can achieve it; if you can dream it, you can become it."

If Chapman, who is also known as Anya Kuschenko, is found guilty of what the government has charged — conspiring to act as an unregistered agent of the Russian Federation — she faces a maximum sentence of five years in prison. In court Monday, her attorney described the charges against her as "innocuous" and asked the judge to dismiss them.

The judge refused. Chapman is scheduled to be back in court July 27.

Her alleged co-conspirators appeared to lead classically suburban lives — selling real estate, attending school barbecues, driving Hondas.

But to the tabloids, with their lust for the alliterative label, Chapman's story is what the word "frenzy" was invented for. "Secret" sexpot partied, shopped & schmoozed way through 'free country,'" rejoiced a headline in Wednesday's New York Post.

The Post called her a "modern-day Mata Hari," a "vivacious vixen" and reported that she is divorced from a French supermarket heir. The Guardian in London reported that her father became Russia's ambassador to Kenya when she was in eighth grade.

Suspect in Russian spy ring vanishes in Cyprus

NEW YORK (AP) — An alleged member of a Russian spy ring that authorities say operated under deep cover in America's suburbs vanished in Cyprus on Wednesday, a day after being released on bail.

The man, who had gone by the name Christopher Metsos and was wanted in the U.S. on charges he supplied money to the spy ring, had been arrested Tuesday in the Mediterranean island nation as he tried to board a flight for Budapest, Hungary.

On Wednesday, after a Cypriot judge had freed him on $32,500 bail, he failed to show for a required meeting with police, and authorities began searching for him.

The U.S. Justice Department and the FBI — which spent nearly a decade gathering evidence against some of the defendants in the case — refused to comment on Metsos' disappearance.

On Sunday, 10 other people, most of them believed to be Russians living under assumed names, were arrested across the Northeast, accused of gathering information for Moscow on American business, scientific and political affairs while leading what appeared to be utterly ordinary suburban lives, right down to their well-kept lawns and the barbecues they threw on the Fourth of July.

and Virginia. It was unclear whether Metsos' disappearance while out on bail might affect their own attempts to get out of jail pending trial.

The turn of events raised questions about why Cypriot authorities released Metsos.

"I'm truly surprised that the court issued no such detention order against an individual who is alleged to be a spy," said Ionas Nicolaou, chairman of Parliament's Legal Affairs Committee.

Andreas Pastellides, one of Metsos' lawyers in Cyprus, said: "Yes, it was a serious case, but God forbid if someone remains detained for a month until extradition proceedings can begin."

U.S. judge grants asylum to ex-Israeli spy

SAN DIEGO (AP) — An immigration judge tentatively granted asylum Wednesday to the son of a Hamas founder who turned his back on his father's terrorist group and became a spy for Israel.

The ruling came after the federal government abruptly dropped concerns that Mosab Hassan Yousef was a terrorist threat.

Yousef, 32, was greeted by a small group of cheering supporters as he left an immigration detention center where the 15-minute hearing was held under heavy security.

He had argued that he would be killed if he was deported because he spied on Hamas for Israel's Shin Bet intelligence agency and abandoned Islam after becoming a Christian.

"I will keep fighting the ideology that is behind terrorists because I know how they think," he told reporters in the parking lot. "I know that this is the real danger that is facing liberty, facing freedom, facing humanity!"

The Department of Homeland Security initially denied Yousef's asylum request in February 2009, saying he had been involved in terrorism and was a threat to the U.S.

Kerri Calcador, a government attorney, gave no explanation in court Wednesday for the sudden change in the U.S. position.

Yousef said he could not explain the turnaround. His attorney Steven Seick said he was "totally surprised."

Four months ago, Yousef published memoirs in which he claimed to be one of Shin Bet's best assets while working as the Green Prince, a reference to his Hamas pedigree and the Islamists' signature green color.

Wells Fargo deal sheds light on banks' role in Mexican drug trade

By Michael Smith
Bloomberg News

Just before sunset on April 10, 2006, a DC-9 jet landed at the international airport in the port city of Ciudad del Carmen, 500 miles east of Mexico City. As soldiers on the ground approached the plane, the crew tried to shoo them away, saying there was a dangerous oil leak. So the troops grew suspicious and searched the jet.

They found 128 black suitcases, packed with 5.7 tons of cocaine, valued at $100 million. The stash was supposed to have been delivered from Caracas to drug traffickers in Toluca, near Mexico City, Mexican prosecutors later found.

Law enforcement officials also discovered something else. The smugglers had bought the DC-9 with laundered funds they transferred through two of the biggest banks in the United States: Wachovia and Bank of America.

This was no isolated incident. Wachovia, it turns out, had made a habit of helping move money for Mexican drug smugglers. Wells Fargo, which bought Wachovia in 2008, has admitted in court that its unit failed to monitor and report suspected money laundering by narcotics traffickers — including the cash used to buy four planes that shipped a total of 22 tons of cocaine.

The admission came in an agreement that Charlotte, N.C.-based Wachovia struck with federal prosecutors in March, and it sheds light on the largely undocumented role of U.S. banks in contributing to the violent drug trade that has convulsed Mexico for the past four years. Wachovia admitted it didn't do enough to spot illicit funds in handling $378.4 billion for Mexican-currency-exchange houses from 2004 to 2007. That's the largest violation of the Bank Secrecy Act, an anti-money-laundering law, in U.S. history — a sum equal to one-third of Mexico's current gross domestic product.

"Wachovia's blatant disregard for our banking laws gave international cocaine cartels a virtual carte blanche to finance their operations," says Jeffrey Sloman, the federal prosecutor who handled the case.

Since 2006, more than 22,000 people have been killed in drug-related battles that have raged mostly along the 2,000-mile border that Mexico shares with the U.S. In the Mexican city of Ciudad Juarez, just across the border from El Paso, Texas, 700 people had been murdered this year as of mid-June. Six Juarez police officers were slaughtered by automatic weapons fire in a midday ambush in April.

Mexican President Felipe Calderon vowed to crush the drug cartels when he took office in December 2006, and he's since deployed 45,000 troops to fight the cartels. They've had little success.

Among the dead are police, soldiers, journalists and ordinary citizens. The U.S. has pledged Mexico $1.1 billion in the past two years to aid in the fight against narcotics cartels.

In May, President Obama said he'd send 1,200 National Guard troops, adding to the 17,400 agents on the U.S. side of the border to help stem drug traffic and illegal immigration.

"It's the banks laundering money for the cartels that finances the tragedy," says Martin Woods, director of Wachovia's anti-money-laundering unit in London. Woods says he quit the bank in disgust after executives ignored his documentation that drug dealers were funneling money through Wachovia's

U.S., Afghans repel attack against major NATO base

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — U.S. and Afghan troops repelled an attack Wednesday on one of the biggest NATO bases in eastern Afghanistan by militants who used a suicide car bomb, rocket-propelled grenades and automatic weapons in a failed attempt to breach the defenses.

It was the third ground assault against a major coalition base in Afghanistan in the past five weeks — a sign that the insurgents have not been cowed by U.S. efforts to ramp up the war.

Eight militants were killed in the attack, which occurred at the airport base on the outskirts of Jalalabad about 75 miles east of Kabul on the main road between the Afghan capital and the Pakistan border.

The attack began with a suicide car bomber detonating his explosives near the gate to the base, followed by a half-hour gun-battle, Afghan officials said.

2010 TOUR DE FRANCE

Two-time winner Alberto Contador, right, and seven-time Tour de France winner Lance Armstrong will compete in the three-week race, which begins Saturday in France.

Armstrong vs. Contador II

By Jamey Keaten
Associated Press writer

PARIS — Lance Armstrong is giving the Tour de France one last go and two-time winner Alberto Contador is again the man standing between the Texan and an eighth title in cycling's showcase event.

And this time they aren't on the same team.

With their rivalry in the open, the action on the road has a chance to chase away the perennial doping cloud that lingers over the three-week race.

The nearly 200 competitors in the 97th Tour will start Saturday in the Dutch port city of Rotterdam on a 2,263-mile trek that will take them across Belgium and clockwise around France before finishing up in Paris on July 25.

Aside from the short prologue Saturday, organizers have scheduled only one individual time trial, on the next-to-last race day. The course layout offers a bouncy and bracing run over cobblestones, and treks through the Pyrenees that will be crucial to the outcome.

The sport already has had a bumpy ride this year.

Swiss star Fabian Cancellara has been hounded by repeated questions about whether he used a motor hidden in his bike frame while winning the Paris-Roubaix race — claims he has denied as ridiculous. But the International Cycling Union, or UCI, will use a scanner to help make sure no such contraptions are on hand at the Tour.

Armstrong — by far cycling's biggest star — has been on the defensive over doping allegations from former teammate Floyd Landis, the fellow American who was stripped of his 2006 Tour title for cheating.

The 38-year-old Armstrong, who'll be seeking an eighth victory at his 13th Tour, has had other knocks. He crashed out of the Tour of California and had his training disrupted by two bouts of illness.

In recent weeks, he has showed impressive, if not spectacular, form: He placed third at the not-so-difficult Tour of Luxembourg, and second at the mountain-laden Tour of Switzerland.

Contador, who stayed with Astana after Armstrong bolted last year for Team RadioShack, looks nearly invincible. He won the Paris-Nice, the Tour of Algarve and the Vuelta de Castilla and Leon, and placed second in the Criterium du Dauphine.

Taking a page out of Armstrong's old playbook, Contador has limited his racing days this year to focus on peaking for the Tour.

Armstrong, who turns 39 in September, knows he faces a stiff test.

"It will be very hard to win the Tour," he said this month at the Tour of Switzerland. "With my age, and the explosiveness of the other guys, my own struggles with the time trials in the last couple of years ... we'll have to be smart, to be a bit lucky, to play the team card a little bit.

"There are a handful of guys who are bigger favorites than me."

He could have been talking about the Schleck brothers, Frank and Andy; Ivan Basso, the Giro d'Italia champion; and Cadel Evans, a two-time runner-up at the Tour. Also in the mix are Russia's Denis Menchov, Britain's Bradley Wiggins — fourth at last year's Tour — and Kazakh star Alexandre Vinokourov, a teammate of Contador's.

Parents rally for Gooding tennis

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

A group of Gooding parents is putting the ball back in the school district's court.

Several parents are asking for the reinstatement of Gooding High School's tennis program, which had all of its school-district funding eliminated in the latest round of athletic budget cuts.

Twenty-seven students participated last year in Gooding's tennis program, though its elimination will save $2,944.49, according to the budget posted on the district's website. But parents are eyeing a July 13 school board meeting as a chance to pitch their plans for reinstating it.

"The route we have to take is through the athletic director, and then he takes it to the school board," said Gooding parent Troy Hurd, who would have two daughters participating in the tennis program next season. "But he's already the guy that cut the program."

Hurd said there will be multiple proposals submitted to Gooding athletic director Chris Comstock, including one that entails fundraising to support the program. Comstock said that any reinstatement of the program would be "up to the (school) board, not me."

With a cost-per-student average of slightly more than $100, Hurd expressed frustration with the elimination of tennis, believing costs could have been shaved in other sports with greater average costs per athlete. Hurd cited the popularity of the program and recent successes as other reasons it should have been kept alive.

"In (each of) the last three years they've sent a kid to state and they've had at least one foreign exchange student in tennis," Hurd said. "We had a tennis camp here in town and 60 kids signed up. They're interested."

The funding cut came as part of a 10- to 15-percent mandated cut in the athletic department budget for fiscal 2011, which begins today.

In addition to eliminating tennis, the new budget cut freshman boys and girls basketball and middle school golf, as well as one assistant coaching stipend for middle school football. One meet date for wrestling and two for volleyball, plus a freshman tournament, were also dropped.

The school board voted 3-2 to approve Comstock's budget proposal in a May 11 meeting, according to board chairman Tracie Anderson.

"It was the first time we had seen it, and two of us wanted to think on it a little more," said Anderson, who voted against the budget. "Three others thought there were cuts that needed to be done so let's just do it now, but we all respected the other opinions."

If the program is not reinstated, the only other immediate recourse would be to forge an agreement with a nearby school, where Gooding students would travel as members of the team during the season but would compete for the Senators at the district and state tournaments. The nearest high school with a tennis program is Jerome, almost 25 miles away.

Gooding and Jerome expressed both openness and reservations at the idea of a combined agreement.

"We'd be willing to look at it, but the one thing we do is that if we have enough numbers we wouldn't consider it," said Jerome athletic director Ty Jones. "If our tennis numbers are good, and this year they weren't bad, then we wouldn't do that because it would take away court time from our kids."

Cowboys gear up for home tournament

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

The Cowboy Classic will hopefully crown a champion this year.

The 2010 edition of the annual wood bat tournament begins today at Skip Walker Field in Twin Falls. In 2009, rain fall pushed back several games and the championship affair between Twin Falls and Centennial didn't even get out of the first inning before being halted by wet weather.

The host Cowboys went 5-0 last season in reaching that title game and hope for a similar run to Sunday's 11 a.m. championship game.

"The past couple of weeks we've struggled a little bit with some games that we should be winning," said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir. "With the wood bat we've got to be good on the mound and we've got to be good defensively, so that'll get us back to what makes us a good club."

This year's field consists of six teams, down from the traditional eight. The Cowboys play twice today, facing Meridian's Rocky Mountain and Longview (Wash.). The other teams in the tournament are Centennial, Reno (Nev.) and Lethbridge (Alberta). The Classic will feature four games each day through Saturday, with the championship game slated for Sunday.

Minico second baseman Andrew Frank turns a double play during the Spartans' doubleheader sweep of Maple Mountain (Utah) Wednesday at Warburton Field in Rupert.

Spartans sweep Maple Mountain

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Minico welcomed a new challenge to its American Legion Baseball schedule Wednesday, taking on Maple Mountain out of Spanish Fork, Utah, and the Spartans' two wins at Warburton Field couldn't have been more dissimilar.

Minico rallied with three runs in the bottom of the seventh to win the opener 8-7, and then took the nightcap in a 12-2 five-inning blowout.

"I was pleased that we were able to scrap up and get the wins," said Minico coach Ben Frank.

Down 7-5 entering the bottom of the seventh, Minico loaded the bases with no outs.

Shay Chandler's two-RBI single tied it, and then Stetzen Wrigley scored the winning run on Nick Salvi's suicide squeeze. "We had a job to do, and we just went out and did it," said Salvi.

Although it was an exciting come-from-behind finish, the Spartans never should have been in that position in the first place, as Minico squandered a 5-2 lead.

Maple Mountain scored two runs via passed balls in the seventh and under late-inning pressure, the Spartan pitchers folded up like a fireworks tent on July 5th.

Former CSI center to play for Boston in summer league

Parakhouski to also play for Belarusian national team

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

Former College of Southern Idaho center Art Parakhouski confirmed to the Times-News Wednesday that he has accepted an invitation to play for the Boston Celtics at the 2010 Orlando Summer League July 5-9 in Orlando, Fla.

Parakhouski had hoped to be drafted in last week's NBA Draft, but was not among the 60 players selected. He'll play in five games with the Celtics' summer league team in Orlando in hopes of earning a contract with Boston or another NBA team.

He told the Times-News he will not participate in the 2010 Las Vegas Summer League July 9-18, but will instead return to his home in Belarus to play for the Belarusian national team.

"I'm excited for everything," Parakhouski said. "I will definitely play for Boston in the summer league and see if I can sign with them or another NBA team."

A 6-foot-11, 268-pounder, Parakhouski spent two seasons at CSI, averaging 14.0 points, 8.1 rebounds and 1.4 blocks as a sophomore in the 2007-08 season. He finished his college career at Virginia's Radford University where he tallied 21.4 points, 13.4 rebounds and 2.1 blocks as a senior last season.

Parakhouski said he'll arrive in Orlando on Friday to prepare for the weeklong league. He begins training camp in Belarus on July 14. It'll be the first time in more than two years that he's been in his native country.

Another stunner: Federer out in quarters

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — For the first time in eight years, Roger Federer won't be striding onto Centre Court for the Wimbledon final.

The six-time champion was upset in the quarterfinals by big-hitting Tomas Berdych on Wednesday, stopping his bid for a record-tying seventh title at the All England Club and extending his recent stretch of disappointing play.

The 12th-seeded Berdych used his big serve and forehand to beat Federer 6-4, 3-6, 6-1, 6-4, on Centre Court for the biggest victory of the Czech's career.

Berdych will meet No. 3 Novak Djokovic for a spot in the final, with No. 2 Rafael Nadal facing No. 4 Andy Murray in the other semifinal.

It's the first time since 2002 that Federer has failed to reach the final. Since losing in the first round eight years ago, Federer had played in the championship match a record seven consecutive times. He won the title six times and finished runner-up once, bolstering his reputation as the greatest player of all-time.

Winner of a record 16 Grand Slam titles, Federer said he was unable to play his best tennis Wednesday because of pain in his back and right leg.

"I couldn't play the way I wanted to play," said Federer, who had been chasing the record of seven titles won by Pete Sampras and 19th-century player William Renshaw. "I am struggling with a little bit of a back and a leg issue. That just doesn't quite allow me to play the way I would like to play. It's frustrating, to say the least."

Berdych said he didn't notice anything wrong with Federer.

"I don't know if he is just looking for some excuses after the match or something like that," he said. "I think he was 100 percent ready."

forehand winner on his second match point to become the first Czech to reach the men's semifinals since Ivan Lendl in 1990.

"Not many other moments can compare to this one," Berdych said. "Standing on Centre Court here in Wimbledon, beating the six-time champion here. It couldn't be better. But there is still one match to feel better feelings than this one. I hope I can get to that."

Berdych will next face Djokovic, who swept past Yen-hsun Lu in straight sets to reach the semifinals for the second time. The third-seeded Djokovic never faced a break point as he beat the 82nd-ranked Taiwanese player 6-3, 6-2, 6-2 in less than two hours on Court 1.

Nadal, who beat Federer in the 2008 final, lost the first five games of the match but rallied to defeat No. 6 Robin Soderling 3-6, 6-3, 7-6 (4), 6-1. It was a rematch of this year's French Open final, which the Spaniard also won.

Nadal will play Murray, who defeated 10th-seeded Jo-Wilfried Tsonga 6-7 (5), 7-6 (5), 6-2, 6-2 to make the semis for the second straight year. Murray rallied after losing his first set and punctuated the victory with a vicious forehand winner on match point.

Murray is bidding to become the first British player to win the men's title at Wimbledon since Fred Perry in 1936. The last British man to reach the final was Bunny Austin in 1938.

With the loss, Federer will drop to No. 3 in the ATP rankings next week for the first time since Nov. 10, 2003. Since winning the Australian Open in January, he has failed to win a tournament.

NEW YORK — Felix Hernandez threw a wild pitch and handcuffed his catcher for a passed ball in the first inning.

With all that movement, he knew things would be all right.

Wow, were they. Hernandez pitched a two-hitter and struck out 11 to follow Cliff Lee's gem, and the Seattle Mariners secured their first road series win since April, beating the New York Yankees 7-0 Wednesday night.

"He told me, 'Oh my God, things are dropping like crazy,'" Hernandez said of catcher Rob Johnson.

Hernandez sent Yankees batters back to the dugout shaking their heads at-bat after at-bat. Alex Rodriguez smacked his bat to the ground after he chased a diving pitch for one of his two strikeouts. Derek Jeter shook his head as he watched Hernandez walk off the mound when he fanned to end the eighth.

King Felix took New Yorkers' minds off that other King for a few hours with a dazzling performance. LeBron James will be on everyone's mind come Thursday, but for now Yankees manager Joe Girardi marveled at Seattle's ace.

"He's as good as we've seen all year. His slider, changeup and curveball. He really had it all working tonight," Girardi said. "He's got electric stuff."

RAYS 9, RED SOX 4

BOSTON — Matt Garza allowed six hits in seven innings and the struggling Tampa Bay Rays pulled away with six runs in the eighth inning.

Garza (9-5) was sharp in his first road game since June 18 when he gave up seven runs in 11-3 innings in a 7-4 loss at Florida, the worst start of his career. He threw 49 pitches in the first inning of that game but just 34 in the first three innings against Boston.

ROYALS 7, WHITE SOX 6

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Billy Butler and Jose Guillen homered and Zack Greinke survived a five-run eighth inning.

Guillen also made a great catch of Mark Kotsay's leadoff drive in the ninth against Joakim Soria, banging into the right-field wall and falling to the ground but keeping the ball in his glove.

Seattle Mariners' Michael Saunders, right, is greeted by Lee Tinsley as he rounds the bases after hitting a home run during the third inning of against the New York Yankees Wednesday, at Yankee Stadium.

ORIOLES 9, ATHLETICS 6

BALTIMORE — Ty Wigginton and Luke Scott hit successive homers in the seventh inning, and the Baltimore Orioles tied a season-high with five longballs.

Adam Jones, Corey Patterson and Miguel Tejada also connected for Baltimore, which trailed 6-3 before rallying for its fifth win in six games.

INDIANS 3, BLUE JAYS 1

CLEVELAND — Aaron Laffey allowed one run over six-plus innings to lead the Indians to their fourth straight win.

Laffey (1-2), who gave up five hits and struck out five, was 0-8 in nine starts and 29 appearances at the major league level since beating Minnesota last Aug. 16. It was the left-hander's second start since being recalled from the minors on Saturday. He was optioned to Triple-A Columbus on May 30.

TWINS 5, TIGERS 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Justin

Morneau homered and drove in two runs, and Kevin Slowey went six innings.

Slowey (8-5) could've pitched more, but Magglio Ordonez's comebacker bounced off and bruised his right ankle before he threw him out on the final play of the sixth.

NATIONAL LEAGUE REDS 4, PHILLIES 3

CINCINNATI — Jay Bruce hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning off Roy Halladay, rallying the Cincinnati Reds to yet another win in their final at-bat.

Joey Votto also homered off Halladay (9-7), who fell to 2-4 since his perfect game on May 29.

Jonny Gomes opened the eighth with a single, and Bruce connected for Cincinnati's 25th comeback win — most in the majors. The Reds have 14 wins in their last at-bat, tied for the major league lead.

PIRATES 2, CUBS 0

CHICAGO — Brad Lincoln

pitched seven strong innings for his first major league win, Garrett Jones had a key RBI double and Pittsburgh continued its mastery of Chicago.

The last-place Pirates have beaten the Cubs nine times in 12 meetings. One-third of their victories (27) this season have come against Chicago.

DODGERS 8, GIANTS 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Matt Kemp homered and drove in three runs, Vicente Padilla won his 100th game, and Los Angeles completed a three-game sweep of San Francisco.

Rafael Furcal had four hits, including a home run, and drove in two for the Dodgers, who earned a sweep in San Francisco for the first time in three years.

PADRES 13, ROCKIES 3

SAN DIEGO — Clayton Richard struck out a career-high 10 and drove in two runs, and Scott Hairston hit a three-run double and finished with four RBIs as San Diego avoided a three-game sweep.

Every Padres regular had at least one hit and everyone scored at least one run except Hairston. Hairston had four RBIs for the second time in three games and drove in his older brother, Jerry Jr., twice. Chris Denorfia scored three runs.

DIAMONDBACKS 4, CARDINALS 2

ST. LOUIS — Barry Enright gave Arizona five solid innings as the fill-in for Edwin Jackson and Chris Young hit a two-run home run in a victory over St. Louis that avoided a three-game sweep.

Both Enright (1-0) and the Cardinals' Jeff Suppan (0-4) went at least five innings in a game that lasted 3 hours, 53 minutes.

BRAVES 4, NATIONALS 1

ATLANTA — Jair Jurrjens gave up one run and had a run-scoring single in his first start in two months.

Jurrjens (1-3) gave up six hits and one run in five innings in his first major league start since injuring his left hamstring on April 29.

ASTROS 5, BREWERS 1

MILWAUKEE — Wandy Rodriguez pitched seven solid innings and executed a perfect suicide squeeze bunt to snap a tie in the sixth inning.

Moore earns WAC student-athlete honor

For the Times-News

DENVER — Boise State quarterback Kellen Moore has been named the 2009-10 Western Athletic Conference Joe Kearney Award winner as the outstanding male student-athlete in the WAC, the university announced in a press release issued Wednesday.

The award, given annually to the top male and female student-athlete in the conference, is named in honor of former WAC Commissioner Joe Kearney, who oversaw the league from 1980 to 1994.

Moore is just the second Bronco to win the award joining former javelin thrower Gabriel Wallin, who won it five years ago.

Moore guided the Broncos to a 14-0 record in the 2009 season, including a victory over TCU in the Fiesta Bowl. He earned first-team All-American honors from ESPN.com, SI.com and CBSsports.com, finished seventh in the voting for the Heisman Trophy and was named the WAC Offensive Player of the Year.

"Kellen is the type of student-athlete we strive to recruit to Boise State," Boise State Director of Athletics Gene Bleymaier stated.

"He does an excellent job in the classroom, is outstanding on the playing field and represents the university in a first-class manner. I don't think we could ask for anything more from our student-athletes."

IndyCar series close to revealing new chassis decision

The Associated Press

IndyCar Series CEO Randy Bernard set a deadline of Wednesday for an announcement on the league's new chassis package.

The only announcement was of a future announcement.

Not ready to unveil the next generation of chassis just yet, IndyCar pushed back its original unveiling deadline and will make a formal presentation on July 14 in Indianapolis.

So, officially, nothing has been decided.

Unofficially, though, the choice appears to have been made, even if the final vote hasn't been taken.

"We could make it (the announcement) right now, I'm pretty sure, but I want to hold off so there aren't any rumors out there," Bernard said. "I want to wait a week or so before we make a final decision."

The seven-person ICON-

IC committee charged with researching and recommending the new chassis for 2012 held one of its biggest decision-making meetings on Tuesday and could hold its final vote as early as next week.

The decision could drastically alter the future of open-wheel racing in the U.S.

Delta Wing, Swift, Lola, BAT and Dallara have submitted proposals for the next generation of chassis. Dallara, the series' current manufacturer, and Lola are believed to be front-runners because of their experience in producing cars for multiple series.

Both manufacturers have put together packages with a more traditional look. Other designs would provide a bit of a different look for fans.

Delta Wing's design looks a bit like one of those rocket cars that set land speed records in Utah's salt flats, with a thin nose, tail fin and no wings.

Swift Engineering has a design that's Batmobile-esque, with "mushroom busting" technology that clears out dirty air and allows cars to run closer together.

It may not be just one design that gets chosen. There's a chance IndyCar could open the series up to multiple chassis, just as it did by announcing on June 2 that its engine strategy would allow for multiple manufacturers and configurations starting in 2012.

The goal is to create more excitement in the series and cut costs for the teams, which would certainly be accomplished by allowing, say, Swift's Batmobile to run alongside the futuristic Delta Wing every week.

"I think if I said that (impact of the changes) right now, I'd be giving way too much away," Bernard said. "I think we're listening to the fans, the team owners and our goal is to re-ignite IndyCar and that's what we kept driving home, is if it's in the best interest in the sport."

Bernard's focus since moving over from a successful run as executive of the Professional Bull Riders in February has been to rekindle interest in IndyCar.

He's made dramatic changes in a short period, adding oval and street/road course championships to the season and creating competition for the future engine package.

The chassis package could be the biggest one yet, which is why Bernard and the ICONIC committee have taken their time before making a decision. And, to make sure the announcement gets an added pop, IndyCar scheduled the introductory news conference for the day after baseball's All-Star Game, traditionally one of the slowest sports days of the year.

LeBron leads free-agent crop ready to change NBA

NEW YORK (AP) — This summer's biggest show in sports kicked off at 12:01 a.m. today and comes from a league that won't play for months.

It's called "LeBron James: Free Agent."

The two-time MVP known more aptly than ever as the King is one of the most sought-after players to hit the market in the NBA — or any sport. Teams have spent years jockeying to get themselves in position for this moment — slashing their payrolls and even enlisting high-profile sympathizers ranging from a music superstar to a singing governor.

James, who has played for the Cleveland Cavaliers since turning pro directly out of high school seven years ago, is the biggest prize in perhaps the NBA's deepest free agency class ever, a crop of star players who could change the course of basketball.

"I think the landscape could really shift," former Phoenix general manager Steve Kerr said.

Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh, James' classmates from the 2003 draft — and future teammates in Miami if they choose — are among this year's free agents. So are perennial All-Stars such as Dirk Nowitzki, Amare Stoudemire and Joe Johnson.

So is the hype. Talk of James' destination seems to change by the minute, considered a lock for Chicago in one report, then seemingly guaranteed to head to Miami in another. The rumor mill spun so out of control that an online sports book simply stopped taking action on James' next team.

Bottom line: James can get perhaps $125 million over six years by staying in Cleveland; $96 million over five years if he goes. (The exact figures can't be determined until next season's salary cap is set in July). But leaving could put him in a better position to win a championship.

Thorn is headed to Ohio, where James will welcome suitors to his home state Thursday. He'll be joined by new Nets owner Mikhail Prokhorov, coach Avery Johnson and hip-hop superstar Jay-Z, a part-owner and James' longtime friend.

Then it's back home for Prokhorov and Johnson, minus Jay-Z, to make pitches the next day in New York to Wade and Bosh.

The Knicks plan to drop in on James, too. They can afford to pay him and another player the NBA maximum next season, which might be what the Knicks need to finally get going again after a franchise-record nine straight losing seasons.

Cleveland Cavaliers forward LeBron James (23) and Utah Jazz forward Carlos Boozer (5) are two of the many prized NBA free agents looking to cash in when the negotiating period kicks off, starting today.

Calling time on World Cup fever

I'm done, and you should be, too. Put the vuvuzelas away. Stop worrying about how much time is really left in extra time.

Quit tweeting "Gooooaaaaaallllllll" on the rare occasion when someone actually scores. Stop gushing to your co-workers about the inner beauty of a nil-nil tie.

Don't feel compelled to spend your lunch break Friday cheering for Uruguay just because Ghana knocked out the red, white and blue. Forget, for the next four years, that you now know the difference between a yellow and a red card.

Feel free, though, to continue hissing at the French.

It's time to declare World Cup fever officially over. Way past time, actually, but who could really resist watching to see if that scrap-squad of underdog Yanks could knock off the mighty Ghanians and live to play another day.

They couldn't, and for that the folks at ESPN have to be apoplectic. They used all their self-promotional zeal to sell the happenings in South Africa as great theater, then got stuck with a clunker of an ending.

Even the British play-by-play team imported to make it sound all prim and proper couldn't sugarcoat it. Americans may not know soccer, but they do know a choke when they see one.

And this, really, was a choke of major proportions. The U.S. had a clear path to reaching the semifinals for the first time since the first World Cup 80 years ago, and was knocked out for the second straight time by a tiny country that most Americans would be hard-pressed to find on a map.

In countries where soccer really matters, this could be cause for deep national angst. England's ouster sent the country into a funk, Mexico quickly fired its coach, and the president of Nigeria was so upset he suspended the country's team from international competition for two years.

Here? We shrugged and went back to wondering where LeBron is heading or whether Brett Favre will put on the pads for yet another year.

No long debates over whether Bob Bradley was the proper man at the helm of the U.S. team. No questions about why the forwards haven't scored a goal in two World Cups now.

Soccer fanatics — and, yes, there are some — will point to ratings that show nearly 15 million people watched some of the U.S.-Ghana game as evidence that the sport is finally taking root here. Indeed, that's a solid number, though I'm guessing if ESPN put its promotional powers behind an American team competing in the world bocce ball championship it would get similar numbers.

If any further proof is needed, I offer you hockey from the Olympics. Lots of Americans suddenly became fans when Canada and the U.S. met for the gold, but most of them couldn't tell you who won the Stanley Cup this year.

We've seen this all before, beginning in 1994 when the World Cup was played in the U.S. and a cute dog named Stryker was the mascot. The game was already being played by tens of thousands of kids around the country, so FIFA figured that giving the U.S. the World Cup would spawn a new generation of soccer lovers from Texas to Maine.

Didn't happen, so they tried again with the 1999 women's World Cup. I was there, among 90,000 screaming tweeners and their parents, to watch four teams combine for zero — count 'em, zero — goals in regulation in the two final games at the Rose Bowl, a day now remembered by most for Brandi Chastain showing off her sports bra.

Those screaming girls are grown up now, and have grown out of their brief flirtation with the game. The women's pro league spawned by that World Cup was a bust and the MLS isn't doing a lot better now, even with the brief hysteria of a David Beckham sighting.

Face it. We're a nation that loves football, not futbol. We prefer sports where scoring comes in bunches, and we like a sport even more when we play it better than other countries.

So stop complaining about the horrendous refereeing. Quit trying to figure out the meaning of a golden goal.

It's OK not to watch anymore. There's no need to stay up late at night studying the Uruguayan roster so you can impress your friends with your soccer knowledge.

Give the vuvuzela one last toot. Then go back to more important things, like figuring out where LeBron will end up.

Vick

Vick's attorney, Larry Woodward, told The Associated Press on Tuesday that Vick left the establishment at least 10 minutes, and perhaps as many as 20 minutes, before the shooting.

Allen Fabijan, spokesman for Guadalajara Mexican restaurant and nightclub, said Wednesday that time-stamped footage from a surveillance camera outside the entrance of the club shows a car with Vick inside leaving at 2:07 a.m. — about 4 minutes before the shooting a block away.

Woodward did not return calls from the AP on Wednesday.

Fabijan said police have asked the club not to release the video to media but allowed the AP to view the

Vick's face is not discernible; a man wearing white that Fabijan said is Vick appears moving toward a parked car at 2:04 a.m. A crowd quickly gathered, and Fabijan said Vick accommodated fans trying to get an autograph, to pose for a photo or to shake hands — so much so that a club security guard tries to disperse the crowd.

The waiting car pulls away at 2:07 a.m. in the direction of the eventual shooting. Numerous people are seen lingering in front of the club for several minutes until, at 2:10:55, they suddenly appear to duck for cover.

Police spokesman Adam Bernstein, who said authorities have a copy of the video, said the first 911 call was received at 2:11.

Fabijan said Vick was not involved in any altercations during the hour he was inside, or immediately outside, the nightclub.

Vick, accompanied by Woodward, was interviewed by police on Monday. Police say Vick is not a suspect and have not identified the shooting victim. Woodward, however, told the AP that it was Quanis Phillips, a co-defendant in Vick's dog-fighting case.

Woodward said that Vick was not involved in the shooting and does not know who shot Phillips.

The NFL and the Eagles have said they are looking into the matter.

NFL commissioner Goodell told Vick when he reinstated him that his margin for error was "extremely limited." One rule of Vick's probation is that he is not allowed to be in the company of other felons.

Phillips, who was sentenced to 21 months, was not an invited guest, according to Woodward. The party — dubbed "Michael Vick's ALL WHITE 30th Birthday Bash" — was promoted on social networking sites such as Facebook and Twitter.

When contacted about having the party at Guadalajara, Fabijan said the party promoter said Vick would be back in the area as part of a public relations tour to repair his image.

Tour

UCI of lax controls at last year's Tour, sparking a new, bitter feud between the two agencies and ending their cooperation on anti-doping checks.

Because of that squabble, the World Anti-Doping Agency will fill the void left by the French agency, deploying six independent observers to keep watch on the UCI's doping controls at this year's Tour.

Race organizers say the UCI's biological passport program and hard penalties are helping to curb doping and catch cheats.

"Without being a 100 percent guarantee, it's clearly an improvement compared to what was done in the past," Tour director Christian Prudhomme said in an interview with French sports daily L'Equipe. "I'm convinced there has been a real step forward."

Armstrong remains in doping investigators' cross hairs. French prosecutors say his 2009 Astana team is facing a preliminary investigation after the discovery of syringes during last year's race. That probe is continuing.

Landis dropped a bombshell in April, accusing Armstrong of doping, teaching other riders to cheat, and paying off a top cycling official after allegedly testing positive in 2002. Armstrong has denied Landis' claims.

U.S. officials are investigating the allegations, and the UCI has asked members in four countries to do so, too.

Despite all of that, Armstrong is focused on the Tour — which will be his last, according to a post he made on Twitter this week.

He doesn't seem to be stressing out about it, and is thinking of his family. And putting his illustrious career in perspective.

"I have to be happy: 39 years old, I've been doing this for 17 years, and I'm still at the front," he said. "Despite (what) I read in the newspapers, and on the Internet every day, about people talking about me, the record speaks for itself."

"These days I don't get too nervous. I'm pretty comfortable in my life right now. If I'm 20 minutes down, I'm still going to go home and have five kids jumping all over me."

But for now, he wants to get a jump on Contador and Co.

NOTICE OF MITIGATION PLAN SUBMITTAL
BY THE SOUTHWEST AND GOOSE CREEK IRRIGATION DISTRICTS
IN RESPONSE TO THE SURFACE WATER COALITION WATER DELIVERY CALL

Notice is hereby given that on May 28, 2010, Southwest Irrigation District ("SWID"), and Goose Creek Irrigation District ("GCID"), through their counsel, Parsons, Smith and Stone, LLP, PO Box 910, Burley, ID, 83318, submitted the Southwest and Goose Creek Irrigation Districts Mitigation Plan Re Surface Water Coalition ("plan" or "mitigation plan") to the Idaho Department of Water Resources ("Department"). On June 16, 2010, the Department received an amended plan from SWID and GCID which included certain appendices that were omitted but referenced in the original submitted plan. The Department will process this plan pursuant to the Department's Conjunctive Management Rules (IDPA 37, Title 03, Chapter 11).

The plan is intended to satisfy the mitigation obligations of SWID and GCID for the Surface Water Coalition Water Delivery call administered by the watermasters of State Water District Nos. 110, 120, 130, 140 and 34 and the Department. The Surface Water Coalition (ESWC) consists of irrigation water delivery entities that hold senior surface water rights diverted from the Snake River and tributaries above Milner Dam. SWC members include A&B Irrigation District, American Falls Reservoir District #2, Burley Irrigation District, Milner Irrigation District, Minidoka Irrigation District, North Side Canal Company, and Twin Falls Canal Company.

SWID and GCID represent numerous landowners who hold ground water rights for irrigation, commercial, and other non-dominant consumptive uses located within the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer ("ESPA") and other areas of Cassia and Twin Falls Counties. Certain of these ground water rights have priority dates junior to the priority dates of surface water rights held by the SWC. Ground water sources in the ESPA and the Snake River are interconnected sources of water.

SWID and GCID have proposed to mitigate injury to all SWC senior priority surface water rights that may result from depletions under junior priority ground water rights held by SWID and GCID members. The plan provides for continued and new conversions of irrigated land from ground water to surface water and waste water supplies, the ongoing enrollment of ground water irrigated lands in the Conservation Reserve Enhancement Program, the ongoing voluntary curtailment of specific ground water irrigated acres under ground water rights held by SWID and GCID members, and seasonal aquifer recharge through injection of surface water to ground water wells and/or open ditches. SWID and GCID propose that the amount of mitigation provided each year may vary relative to the availability of surface water for its mitigation projects and that annual mitigation cannot be submitted until the end of the water year in order to determine the total amount of mitigation provided.

The Department has not determined the adequacy of the proposed plan. A complete copy of the proposed plan is available for review at either the Department's State Office in Boise, the Department's Regional Office in Twin Falls, or may be viewed online at the following website along with other related documents:

<http://www.idwr.idaho.gov/News/MitigationPlan/SWC/SWID.htm>

Any protest against approval of the plan must be filed with the Department, together with a protest fee of $25, on or before July 12, 2010. The protest must include a certificate of service showing that a copy of the protest has been mailed to or served on SWID and GCID, and their counsel.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"Turn with me from the city's clamorous street, Where throng and push passions and lusts and hate...."
— Thomas a Kempis

If you are going to bid aggressively and push the opponents around, then you may need to defend accurately when they end up in a poor contract, or it will be a case of "the biter bit." Today's hand provides an example.

Left to their own devices, North-South would surely have ended in a hopeless three no-trump. But after West's weak-jump overcall, South ended up declaring a delicate four hearts.

West led the spade seven to East's king. Declarer ducked and won the next spade with the ace. Declarer now ruffed a spade with the heart eight and carefully led a low heart to the jack and queen. Now there was nothing more the defense could do. If West played another spade, declarer could ruff with the 10, cross to hand with a diamond, and play a top heart. West could win and play yet another spade, but with hearts 3-3, declarer could draw trumps and claim.

Note that if declarer had led the heart 10 from dummy on the first round of the suit, another spade would have allowed East to overruff the dummy, forcing declarer to ruff in hand. Now, continued spade plays by West would beat the contract.

However, look at the effect if West ducks the first heart. If declarer plays another heart, West wins and continues spades, forcing declarer to ruff in hand. Now declarer has just the heart king left, while West has the ace and East the seven. Declarer cannot prevent the defenders from making both of their trumps separately.

ANSWER: Facing a two-level overcall, you have enough to drive to game, rather than inviting game with a call of two no-trump. Your choice is to make a two-diamond cue-bid, looking for a 4-4 heart fit, or to blast to the no-trump game. Given the possible weakness in spades, I prefer the more circumspect approach of the cue-bid.

IF JULY 1 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Your eye for detail is right on the bull's-eye this month. Don't be distracted by group activities, friends and social events that prevent you from following your heart. Plan ahead so that you won't have to begin anything of great significance in October and November. You should not open a new bank account or make investments then, but you should also make sure you comply with rules and regulations, especially on the job. Next April is the best time for business decisions, career changes, investments and financial matters because you will seem to have your finger on the pulse of the business world.

HOROSCOPE

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Plans can come to fruition. The first offer or idea may not be the best one so discuss and ponder first. Wait until tomorrow to complete important contracts or pursue love when all the facts are in place.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): No one can predict how high you can fly until you spread your wings. A whim or impetuous idea may have a great deal of merit. Talk things over with a special someone and get things straightened out.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Chemical affinities can lead to affable affairs of the heart. Real romance requires a meeting of the minds as well as the body. If a new hookup seems interesting, the lights are green for pursuit tonight.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): Steer your money boat with a wise and steady hand. Think through a viable plan of action to carry out tomorrow. A minor flirtation could turn into the real thing by the weekend if you are patient.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Follow the Yellow Brick Road. Your business instincts are in top condition and the person calling the shots might grant your every wish. Matters of love and affection take precedence this evening.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Let's make a deal. Get inspired today while you are filled with a sense of adventure and fun. You can sign on the dotted line tomorrow to insure a plethora of pennies land in your piggy bank.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Lucky at love usually means lucky at money. Put sharpened business skills, intuition and enthusiasm into service to help your career. Amorous paradise may be pinpointed on your road map.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The straightest arrow flies closest to the target. You can't bend the truth to fit the feelings that well up. Let the other person make the first move if you want to end up with anything worthwhile.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Money makes the world go around. Big bucks might come knocking on your door, so be ready to open up when you hear the call. Yield to tantalizing romantic temptations when the sun goes down.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You want all or nothing. Find middle ground. Tame the urge to see things in terms of black and white because otherwise, you will set yourself up for endless complications by the end of the month.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Easy does it. If you must play a game of cat and mouse to win someone's trust, the relationship probably isn't worth the effort. You won't need to play hard to get if there is a sincere desire to connect.
PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Get whatever you want. You and your significant other might start playing footsie under the kitchen table or a kiss could produce passionate fireworks. Rekindle fine feelings with some seductive moves.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.
