Mandy Rose hugs her brother, Abel Flores, after her graduation Wednesday from the 5th Judicial District Drug Court Program at the College of Southern Idaho in Twin Falls. Rose was among 13 graduates of the program, intended to help drug offenders avoid incarceration and improve their lives.

Mandy Rose was tired of running. The 33-year-old mother of four couldn't do it anymore — the running, the using, not knowing how to stop using. She had taken drugs since she was 11 and spent time in prison, but after her latest run-in with the law, she was ready to start a change. On Wednesday, Rose and 13 others graduated from the 5th Judicial District Drug

Court Program, designed to provide drug and alcohol treatment to those who are willing to work toward a better life. "This changed my life," Rose said. Rose was busted for methamphetamine use in January 2009. Instead of doing more time, she qualified for the program and spent 58 weeks working her way through the various phases of treatment. Darrell Roskelley, an administrator of the program, said drug court treatment includes random drug testing, meeting with 5th District Judge John Butler on a regular basis and attending group sessions or other 12-step meetings. Participants can either be awarded or penalized based on their progress, and they must find regular work or attend school to obtain their high-school equivalency degree. "It's a good change for these people," Roskelley said. The program aims to give addicts a chance to clean up if they're sincere about it, as long as they meet the program's qualifications and — if prosecuted in Twin Falls County — those of the prosecutor's office. Drug court has graduated 284 people since it began nearly 15 years ago and boasts a 60 percent success rate.

Report: Crime falls in T.F., surrounding area

By Bradley Guire

Crime appears to be slowing in Twin Falls, according to the police department's 2009 crime report. The Idaho State Police also released its annual report on Thursday, which includes information from all Idaho counties. The Twin Falls Police Department reported a 5.8 percent decrease in total offenses and a 1.5 percent decrease in total arrests from 2008. It's a far cry from that year's report, which cited a 2.2 percent increase in total offenses and a 13.6 percent increase in total arrests over 2007. "It's encouraging that crime has decreased," said Lt. Craig Stotts. "Overall, it really has to do with the police department working closely with the community." Among the more-notable changes from year to year in the 2009 report, motor vehicle theft offenses dropped by nearly half, as 47 were reported compared to 97 in 2008. Kidnapping offenses increased slightly, as did pornography offenses. Controlled-substance

Teachers pin hiring hopes on federal jobs bill

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Educators are waiting to see if a bill that the U.S. House of Representatives approved late Thursday will pass muster in the Senate and provide $10 billion to help preserve teachers' jobs at a time when state budgets are tightening. The $10 billion for teachers is part of a larger $80 billion bill that includes $30 billion for a troop surge in Afghanistan, $5 billion in Pell grants for low-income college students and $700 million to increase security along the U.S./Mexico border. Idaho's estimated share of the education money would be about $59 million. The state's public schools budget, meanwhile, has been trimmed by $128.5 million — 7.5 percent — forcing school districts to cut teacher pay, keep vacant positions open, and drop programs like music, athletics and drama. "In many school districts, they did not replace that teacher, so this money would be able to be used to hire teachers to fill those positions," said Sherri Wood, president of the Idaho Education Association. If it passes, the bill could be instrumental in helping schools keep programs in place, she said. "In a district where they have totally cut music programs, the reason that they cut the music program was because they had to cut teachers and so they might be able to hire a teacher to teach music rather than cut the entire program," Wood said, giving an example. U.S. Rep. Walt Minnick, Idaho's lone congressional Democrat, voted in favor of the bill. See TEACHERS, Main 2

Quilt Walk continues in downtown Twin Falls

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

Freda Nicholson knew her husband's favorite colors and wanted to incorporate stitched images of the tools, western gear and spurs Gerald used on a regular basis. She started to design the blue, gold and red quilt while her family lived in Stanley. Each step of the process was revealed to her husband, who didn't know he would receive the quilt as a gift when they moved back to the Magic Valley. When the quilt was finished she asked him to take a look at it. "I told him the person's name who it was for was on the bottom of it," Nicholson said. "Of course it was his." She gave it to him eight years before he died in 2004. "He was so pleased with it. He wasn't a gushy man so he didn't say much," she said. "But when anybody came over he had to drag it out. That says something." Freda Nicholson's labor of love is now displayed proudly at the Historic Downtown Quilt Walk, which continues today in Twin Falls. About 300 quilts were flaunted in business windows and strung up outside for onlookers to admire. Stitchin' Time owner Cathy Reitz partnered with local businesses to put on the quilt walk for a second year. She said the event is expected to draw 2,000 people through the downtown area between Friday and today. "People love quilt shows and I thought a quilt walk to bring people into businesses and allow them to open their doors was a good idea," Reitz said. "How can you go wrong with that?" Reitz said she found her love for sewing when she was young. She would often help her grandmother — Dortha Moser, then

MORNING BRIEFING

Pat's Picks

Three things to do today

Pat Marcantonio

- There are big doings in the Wood River Valley with the Hailey Days of the Old West celebration. Today is a big antique show starting at 9 a.m. at nexStage Theatre — 120 S. Main St. in Ketchum — on Hailey's Main Street, at Roberta McKercher Park and at the Hailey Armory. Free admission. That's just the beginning. There's a rodeo, music and more throughout the weekend.
- The Malta Fun Run features a 5k run at 8 a.m. and a 1-mile run for kids ages 4 to 12 at 9 a.m. near Raft River

Elementary School, 140 W. Center St. Proceeds benefit Raft River High School.

- The Sorry for Partyin' Music Fest, featuring Reckless Kelly and more, strikes up at 5 p.m. off of U.S. Highway 20, behind the Iron Mountain Inn in Fairfield. Tickets are $25 at sfpidaho.com or $30 at the gate. Kids 12 and younger are free.

Teachers

"America cannot afford to curtail investment in education if our nation is to compete in a global economy. At the same time, neither can our nation afford to add to the national debt or continue to keep running up the credit card. I was pleased to invest in our children by supporting teachers, as well as Pell grants for college students, without adding to the deficit," Minnick said in a statement.

U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho, voted against the bill along with most fellow House Republicans.

"The president wanted a clean war supplemental bill to fund our troops, but Nancy Pelosi chose to play politics by tacking on millions of additional domestic spending projects that should have been vetted through the regular appropriations process," Simpson said in a statement.

He added, "The House needed to pass the Senate version, unamended, in order to fund our troops immediately. We must provide them with the resources and support they deserve. It is unconscionable that House Democrat leadership is using our U.S. soldiers to advance their spending agenda."

Lindsay Nothern, spokesman for U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, said the senator still needs to decide about the legislation when it gets to the Senate, adding that added amendments usually make a bill look different than its House version.

Still, Crapo is not inclined to seek discretionary spending in large amounts that is not offset by money from other areas, Nothern said.

"He would be more inclined to support money for teachers than a new federal initiative, but again the devil is in the details regarding deficit spending," Nothern said.

the head of wardrobe for the MGM Grand hotel in Las Vegas — repair worn costumes.

The creativity of the quilt walk extended from the colorful quilts to an art display hosted by Scrappin' Girlfriends. Eleven chairs decorated by individual artists on the Scrappin' Girlfriends design team were placed throughout Main Avenue. The theme for the art was "Take a Seat in Twin Falls." All of the chairs will be on display in the store and will be auctioned during the 2011 quilt walk.

Freda Nicholson said she's thinking about displaying another quilt next year. She has many to choose from — each one of her four children received a quilt, and she has given eight quilts as wedding presents to her grandchildren. She also made 25 quilts for her great-grandchildren when they were born.

She can't remember how many quilts she's crafted over her 85 years of life. But, she said, she enjoyed making the quilt for her husband the most.

Crime

"Our rate has went way down," said Sheriff Shaun Gough, referring to his office's decrease in offenses and arrests of 20.2 and 15.1 percent, respectively, from 2008 to 2009. "That's why we have empty beds (at the county jail). It's got us baffled. We don't know if it's the economy or what. It gradually just started falling away. It's gotten even lower (so far in 2010)."

Camas and Blaine counties

also reported decreases in offenses and arrests of 20 percent or more.

In Minidoka County, the ISP report cited increases of 8.5 percent for offenses and 10.4 percent for arrests, but the statistical eye-opener came from Cassia County — sort of. Although offenses and arrests both increased by more than 95 percent, according to the report, that's due to a reporting error from the 2008 report, not any loss of order in the county. Cassia County's 2008 data wasn't complete in time for that year's ISP report.

Calls for comment to the Cassia County Sheriff's Office weren't returned Friday.

The program is also a big savings to the state, according to Roskelley. Participants are treated as outpatients, which is different from those in a retained-jurisdiction program. The treatment cost per person is $4,000, and a sliding scale determines how much of that cost a patient pays for treatment.

Brian Rioux, 42, of Gooding, was another of Wednesday night's graduates and is a repeat drug offender.

"My first time (convicted), I had a three-year probation, but no real treatment was provided," he said.

Rioux, a drug user since he was 12, said he had been addicted to alcohol, marijuana and methamphetamine. His addiction to meth became so bad that he lost many teeth, but through the program, he was able to earn enough money to purchase a

Meeting to discuss Declo quarry plan

Times-News

The Idaho Transportation Department will hold an open house Wednesday to discuss establishing a quarry for road materials near Declo.

The open house to gather public comment will be held from 4 to 7 p.m. at the Declo city office, 8 North Clark St. ITD spokesman Nathan Jerke said the quarry will be used for materials for road-way construction and main-tenance. The quarry will be located one mile south and three miles east of Declo.

ITD officials will be avail-able to explain the proposed site and its use, as well as answer questions, according to a press released issued Friday by ITD.

The noncommercial site is located on Bureau of Land Management-administered property.

Among the topics dis-cussed will be transferring the land, its specific uses and access to bordering, federally administered land.

According to the Friday ITD release, preliminary survey test results showed that the site material meets the specifications for con-structing and preserving ITD roads, although addi-tional tests will be needed.

Renovation to close Hagerman rest area

Times-News

Reconstruction of the Hagerman Rest Area is scheduled to begin Tuesday and is expected to be completed in October, according to the Idaho Transportation Department.

Located on U.S. Highway 30 southeast of Hagerman, the restroom facility will be closed as crews demolish and rebuild the existing facility.

Currently, the rest area fails to meet standards set by the Americans with Disabilities Act. ITD spokesman Nathan Jerke said the restrooms are not wheelchair-accessible and nearby sidewalks are cracked, creating an unsafe environment.

The new facility will include three stalls in each restroom with wheelchair access and an added family assist restroom.

ADA-compliant curb, gutter and sidewalks will be included, along with new picnic pads and tables. A new sanitary sewer sys-tem, reconstructed irriga-tion system and parking lot update will also be under construction. The recon-struction project will cost $423,000 and is being contracted by Starr Corp. of Twin Falls.

The rest area was built in 1966 and has an average of 60 vehicles stop at it daily. Jerke said it's a popular stop for people to make, although there are other amenities nearby.

"People will have to uti-lize facilities in Buhl, Jerome, Bliss or stop at the next rest area on Interstate 84," Jerke said.

Wendell hires new firm to handle finances

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — Mayor Brad Christopherson broke a tie vote by the Wendell City Council on Thursday to hire a Gooding accounting firm to help get the city back on the right financial track.

City officials announced last month that the city's general fund had accumu-lated a $556,000 deficit since 2004.

The council hired Jones, France, Basterrechea and Brush CPAs to act as the city's chief financial opera-tor through the end of the year.

Council President Ilene Rounsefell and Councilman Barry Brown voted against the move that also terminat-ed the city's current accounting firm, Buhl's Deagle, Ames and Co. Councilmen Kent Bates and Jason Houser voted in favor of the move, with Christopherson casting the tie-breaking vote.

"I think we need this to get the city on track."

— Jason Houser, Wendell city councilman

"I make it very clear that I place zero blame on Deagle and Ames, but the (years) we've been with them should have been sufficient time to get this city on track," Christopherson said.

Deagle, Ames and Co. Senior Partner Dan Deagle told the Times-News his firm was only hired to get Wendell's records in order prior to each year's manda-tory audit. The firm, he said, was never contracted to help the city manage its money.

"I'm disappointed that we won't be working with Wendell on this because we've really enjoyed our relationship thus far," Deagle said.

He said the firm extended an offer to work for free because "we understand that municipalities are fac-ing budget constraints and we felt that helping the city out was the civic thing to do, not because we felt we could have done anything better.

"We were hired to get them auditable and we did that for five years. It's taken a long time but the city finally has some reliable numbers to work with."

The firm will still manage a payroll tax project for the city.

During Thursday's meet-ing, Brown wanted to explore taking Deagle and Ames' offer of pro bono work before ending its con-tract.

Rounsefell said Jones,

France, Basterrechea and Brush's offer looked "too good to be true." The Gooding CPA firm will likely start right away. Services the firm will perform include payroll, posting and correct-ing bookkeeping, and streamlining Wendell's financial management sys-tem. Additional services can be contracted for.

It's going to cost the city up to $12,000 for the initial assessment period of up to three weeks, and up to $10,000 per month there-after.

"I think we need this to get the city on track," Houser said.

F&G asks for public's help tracking wolves

Times-News

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game is asking the public for a little wolf intel.

Wildlife managers ask those headed to the hills for the holiday weekend to report back with any wolf observations. More eyes and ears out there can go a long way toward helping biolo-gists document new wolf packs and activity, accord-ing to the agency. Be sure to note the time and date, the location — the more specif-ic you can be the better. Biologists are interested in anything, from tracks and scat to howling and sight-ings.

When you return to civi-lization, you can enter it all in a simple IDFG Web page at http://fishandgame.idaho.gov/apps/wolf\_report/.

AROUND THE VALLEY

T.F. sheriff's office puts more deputies on patrol

The Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office is putting more deputies on patrol starting this weekend, thanks to federal grants.

The Idaho Transportation Department's Office of Highway Operations and Safety has partnered with counties across Idaho in a campaign to reduce deaths and injuries from traffic crashes due to impaired driv-ing. The increased patrols will continue through July 12.

ITD reports that impaired driving was the cause behind 41.4 percent of all motor vehicle fatalities in 2008 and 10.7 percent of all injuries sustained in crashes.

Hearing continued for alleged shooter

A preliminary hearing for Marcus Raymond May, 23, was continued Friday in 5th District Court in Twin Falls.

May is charged with aggravated battery, three counts of aggravated assault, burglary and elud-ing a police officer. May allegedly shot James Lambert on May 27 in Buhl.

The preliminary hearing is scheduled to continue at 8:15 a.m. July 23.

Here’s to Mustard Seed – truly a friend in need

CHEERS: If you’re looking for the very best of Twin Falls, you’ll find it in an office building on West Shoup Avenue.

That’s the site of the Mustard Tree Wellness Clinic, a free clinic that has just earned a much-deserved honor for volunteer service.

The six-year-old outreach ministry of the Twin Falls Reformed Church provides care for uninsured and under-insured people. It has received the Southern Idaho Jefferson Award for public service.

The good this program does is hard to exaggerate.

Dr. David McClusky had the original idea for the project, but works full-time as a surgeon at St. Luke’s Magic Valley. John Sexton had recently retired as a medical technologist, so he could devote himself to the clinic — he still puts in 60 to 70 hours a week — and was able to get it off the ground. John’s wife Sandra works part-time at St. Luke’s in cardiac rehabilitation, then pitches in at the clinic.

The nonprofit depends on grants, donations and volunteers to keep the door open.

JEERS: Sen. William Borah, Idaho’s greatest political icon, and his GOP Senate colleague Frank Gooding — a former governor — hated each other. A lot.

Borah was a progressive. Gooding a conservative who led a powerful Republican political machine in the decade after World War I.

Borah won two primary elections during the period, beating Gooding-backed candidates both times. And on neither occasion did the former governor suggest Borah wasn’t Republican enough for the job.

But it’s happened in the Idaho Republican Party this year.

The state GOP convention last week voted to send a letter to a Republican nominee for Ada County commissioner, Vern Bisterfeldt, demanding that he step down because he’s worked with Democrats in the past.

Bisterfeldt, now a Boise city councilman, had previously been elected three times to the county commission as a Republican.

A decorated Boise cop — he carried a badge for 28 years — Bisterfeldt is so revered in the community that the city and county named their law enforcement center after him.

We’re confident that Bisterfeldt will give the Idaho GOP’s kind suggestion all the attention it deserves — and be elected in November.

CHEERS: To the Idaho Senate’s top Republican tax specialist for endorsing a suggestion by a Democratic gubernatorial candidate that deals between the Idaho Tax Commission and those protesting their payments be audited.

Sen. Brent Hill, a Rexburg Republican who heads the Local Government and Taxation panel, said Allred’s proposal would boost public confidence in the system’s fairness while protecting taxpayer privacy.

Allred floated the idea this week, adding he believes a Democratic lawmaker’s lawsuit against the tax commission alleging improprieties is unlikely to succeed — and is the wrong way to enact good policy.

But an audit panel, created with or without help of the Legislature, would clear up the public’s “cloud of doubt” over whether taxpayers with political clout get special treatment.

Rep. Shirley Ringo, D-Moscow, in June filed a lawsuit in 4th District Court, accusing the four-member tax commission of concocting secret tax deals handing wealthy residents millions.

Hill, who like Allred is skeptical of the lawsuit, calls Allred’s approach “a great idea.”

“Audits are there to protect the innocent, as well as to discover any appropriate actions,” said Hill, a supporter for Allred’s Republican opponent C.L. “Butch” Otter. “If we can save the citizens some money by not having to defend unjustified lawsuits, if we can boost transparency and nurture public confidence, I think that’s a good thing for everybody.”

Two years ago, a whistleblower complaint from a tax commission auditor that the commissioners were cutting sweetheart deals with out-of-state companies led to two investigations, neither of which found wrongdoing. The Legislature subsequently made changes designed to improve the transparency of the way the commission does business.

But there’s still too much suspicion hanging over the panel. Allred’s idea would be a good way to dispel it.

GOP did Idaho proud at its state convention

It has been interesting reading the liberal media’s one-sided editorials regarding the Republican State Convention. As the one who personally presided over the convention, I would like to share some of the positive and inspiring things that occurred.

More than 500 delegates, elected by their peers from across the state, packed the convention hall in Idaho Falls to welcome their candidates and share in a common goal. In attendance were long-time party regulars, relative newcomers, and people that I have never seen before. They were motivated and excited to be there, sacrificing their time and money to attend.

Committee members exhaustively examined and debated proposed rules, resolutions and platform planks. As the party of ideas, we are not afraid of having these discussions, and we hold our convention deliberations under the full scrutiny of the media. Contrast that with the Democrats who just a few weeks ago banned the press from attending their platform discussions. As the party that is saddled with the crippling agenda of Barack Obama, Nancy Pelosi, and Harry Reid, it is understandable why they wouldn’t want Idahoans to hear their discussions.

Staying faithful to their liberal allies in Washington, D.C., Democrat state legislators have openly spoken in favor of tax increases during the current recession and have also voted against the Health Freedom Act, thereby aligning themselves with the eventual federal takeover of our health care system. The Democrat candidates for Governor and Congress also oppose Idaho’s efforts to fight this costly federal mandate.

Like Idahoans from all walks of life, the delegates that attended the Republican State Convention are concerned, scared — and even angry — at what Obama, Pelosi and Reid have done to our great nation. Under the Democrats, the radical ivory tower experiments of the liberal establishment have been taken out of the classroom and unleashed on everyday Americans.

People have had enough. Enough of big government, out-of-control spending, bailouts, government takeovers, health care mandates and back-door deals. Americans — Republicans, Democrats and independents alike — are frustrated and they want to be heard by their elected leaders. As the party of ideas, only the Republican Party has been listening.

At our state convention, we embraced these ideals and united behind our candidates statewide. We welcome all Idahoans to join in the effort to topple the liberal ivory tower by rejecting the agenda of Obama, Pelosi and Reid and leading our nation back to its promise of the American dream of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Afghanistan: Success is the only way out

Here is the grim paradox of America’s involvement in Afghanistan: The darker things get and the more setbacks we suffer, the better the odds that we’ll be staying there indefinitely. Not the way we’re there today, with 90,000 American troops in-theater and an assortment of NATO allies fighting alongside. But if the current counterinsurgency campaign collapses, it almost guarantees that some kind of American military presence will be propping up some sort of Afghan state in 2020 and beyond. Failure promises to trap us; success is our only ticket out.

Why? Because of three considerations. First, the memory of 9/11, which ensures that any American president will be loath to preside over the Taliban’s return to power in Kabul. Second, the continued presence of Al Qaeda’s leadership in Pakistan’s northwest frontier, which makes it difficult for any American president to contemplate giving up the base for counterterrorism operations that Afghanistan affords. Third, the larger region’s volatility: it’s the part of the world where the nightmare of nuclear-armed terrorists is most likely to become a reality, so no American president can afford to upset the balance of power by pulling out and leaving a security vacuum behind.

This explains why the Obama administration, throughout all its internal debates and strategic reviews, hasn’t been choosing between remaining in Afghanistan and withdrawing from the fight. It’s been choosing between two ways of staying.

The first is what we’re doing now: the counterinsurgency campaign that Gen. David Petraeus championed, which seeks to lay the foundations for an Afghan state that’s stable enough to survive without our support.

The second way is the “counterterrorism-plus” strategy that Vice President Joe Biden, among other officials, proposed last fall as a lower-cost alternative.

Advocates of a swift withdrawal tend to see Biden as their ally, and in a sense they’re right. His plan would reduce America’s footprint in Afghanistan, and probably reduce American casualties as well.

But in terms of the duration of American involvement, and the amount of violence we deal out, this kind of strategy might actually produce the bloodier and more enduring stalemate.

It wouldn’t actually eliminate the American presence, for one thing. Instead, such a plan would concentrate our forces around the Afghan capital, protecting the existing government while seeking deals with some elements of the insurgency. History suggests that such bargains would last only as long as American troops remained in the country, which means that our soldiers would be effectively trapped — stuck defending a Potemkin state whose leader would pose as Afghanistan’s president while barely deserving the title of mayor of Kabul.

At the same time, by abandoning any effort to provide security to the Afghan people and relying instead on drone strikes and special forces raids, this approach would probably produce a spike in the kind of civilian casualties that have already darkened America’s reputation in the region.

This grim possibility is implicit in the Rolling Stone profile that undid Gen. Stanley McChrystal last week. Ostensibly a left-wing, antiwar critique of counterinsurgency, Michael Hastings’ article relied heavily on complaints that the current strategy places too much value on ... innocent Afghan lives. “In a weird way,” the Center for a New American Security’s Andrew Exum pointed out, Hastings ended up criticizing counterinsurgency strategy “because it doesn’t allow our soldiers to kill enough people.”

Such ironies suggest that if the current strategy proves ineffectual, the alternative that the Obama administration falls back on won’t be remotely antiwar. Instead, it will be a recipe for still more dead Afghans and a near-permanent military presence. And in the long run, it will mean more enemies like Faisal Shahzad, the would-be Times Square bomber, who cited civilian casualties in Afghanistan as his prime motivation for turning to terrorism.

The bleakness of this Plan B is the best argument for giving our military the time it needs to try to make a counterinsurgency succeed. We can’t hold the current course indefinitely, and we won’t: President Obama’s decision to set a public deadline was a mistake, but everyone knows there are limits to how long the surge of forces can go on. But of the options this White House seems willing to consider, it’s the one that holds out hope of enabling a real withdrawal from Afghanistan.

So this is what Gen. Petraeus will be fighting for, across the next year and more — not to keep us in forever, but to seize what may be our last chance at getting out.

LETTERS OF THANKS

Passersby help out after family boat flips

On Sunday, June 27, we were going on a family boat ride down at Centennial Park. When, out of courtesy for other boaters, my husband slowed down and a wake came over the bow of our boat. He tried to recover our speed so that the bow would come up but it was too late and a second wave came over the bow and we sank and flipped the boat. I would like to thank all the people for stopping and helping get my granddaughters out of the river. I would also like to thank the other people who took time out of their day to rescue our boat. Especially the kayaker named Tom who was so patient to stay with us and helped us flip the boat back over. I am glad to see that there are still people who are willing to stop and help others out in a time of need. Thank you all for everything.

Pine senior center grateful for grant

On behalf of the South Fork Boise River Association Senior Center in Pine, Idaho, I would like to thank the Idaho Community

Foundation for the grant of $1,500. This grant helped to pay for lunches on Tuesdays for the students, teacher and aid at the one-room school in Pine. This is the only hot lunch the students receive during each week of the school year. It also assisted in providing fire, casualty and liability insurance for the center. Fire insurance is very high, since there is no fire suppression coverage in the area. All of the residents of the Pine-Featherville area appreciate the help received from the Idaho Community Foundation.

Assimilation and the Founding Fathers

In his immigration speech on Thursday, President Obama heralded America as a “nation of immigrants” defined not by blood or birth, but by “fidelity to the shared values that we all hold so dear.” If only it were so. Left-wing academics and activists spurned assimilation as a common goal long ago. Their fidelity lies with bilingualism, identity politics, ethnic militancy and a borderless continent.

Obama blames “politics” for the intractable immigration debate. Whose politics? The amnesty mob has taken to ambushing congressional offices this week to scream at lawmakers to choose “reform” or “racism”.

Is there no middle ground for all sides to agree that clearing naturalization application backlogs should take priority over expanding illegal alien benefits, or that tracking and deporting violent illegal alien criminals should take precedence over handing out driver’s licenses to illegal aliens, or that streamlining the employee citizenship verification process for businesses (E-verify) and fixing outdated visa tracking databases should come before indiscriminately expanding temporary visa and guest worker programs?

Must every response to even the most modest of immigration enforcement measures be “RAAAAACIST”?

Further, as I’ve noted many times over the years when debating both Democrats and Republicans who fall back on empty phrases to justify putting the amnesty cart before the enforcement horse, we are not a “nation of immigrants.” This is both a factual error and a warm-and-fuzzy non sequitur. Eighty-five percent of the residents currently in the United States were born here. Yes, we are almost all descendants of immigrants, but we are not a “nation of immigrants.”

Even if we were a “nation of immigrants,” it does not explain why we should be against sensible immigration control. The Founding Fathers were emphatically insistent on protecting the country against indiscriminate mass immigration. They insisted on assimilation as a pre-condition, not an afterthought. Historian John Fonte assembled their wisdom, and it bears repeating this Independence Day weekend:

George Washington, in a letter to John Adams, stated that immigrants should be absorbed into American life so that “by an intermixture with our people, they, or their descendants, get assimilated to our customs, measures, laws: in a word soon become one people.”

In a 1790 speech to Congress on the naturalization of immigrants, James Madison stated that America should welcome the immigrant who could assimilate, but exclude the immigrant who could not readily “incorporate himself into our society.”

Alexander Hamilton wrote in 1802: “The safety of a republic depends essentially on the energy of a common national sentiment; on a uniformity of principles and habits; on the exemption of the citizens from foreign bias and prejudice; and on that love of country which will almost invariably be found to be closely connected with birth, education and family.”

Hamilton further warned that “The United States have already felt the evils of incorporating a large number of foreigners into their national mass; by promoting in different classes different predilections in favor of particular foreign nations, and antipathies against others, it has served very much to divide the community and to distract our councils. It has been often likely to compromise the interests of our own country in favor of another. The permanent effect of such a policy will be, that in times of great public danger there will be always a numerous body of men, of whom there may be just grounds of distrust; the suspicion alone will weaken the strength of the nation, but their force may be actually employed in assisting an invader.”

The survival of the American republic, Hamilton maintained, depends upon “the preservation of a national spirit and a national character.” “To admit for -eigners indiscriminately to the rights of citizens the moment they put foot in our country would be nothing less than to admit the Grecian horse into the citadel of our liberty and sovereignty.”

As pro-amnesty extremists moan that “we didn’t cross the borders, the borders crossed us” and illegal alien marchers haul foreign flags above Old Glory, President Obama pretends that the “common national sentiment” our Founding Fathers embraced still binds us all together. Many of us still have faith in a strong, sovereign America — the unphenated, the law-abiding, the gratitude-filled sons and daughters and grandchildren of legal immigrants for whom such distinctions still matter. But it’s no thanks to the assimilation saboteurs who put “one world” over “one nation under God.”

ERRORS NEARLY GONE

Free giveaway of US Gov't issued never-circulated coins

9,661 already taken, only 5,930 remain; over one million readers will see this announcement today in selected newspapers across the country; all discounted Gallery Displays with 57 free coins expected to be gone before 48 hour order deadline

By J.S. Speakman
Universal Media Syndicate

(UMS) – Everyone hates making errors. But in the world of coins and currency when someone makes an error, it usually pays huge dividends to whoever finds it.

“I can’t believe errors occurred on these Gallery Displays with the tight procedures we have in place,” said Jefferson Marshall, Executive Director of the private World Reserve Monetary Exchange.

“That’s why I’ve directed our vault officials to give away all 57 never-circulated U.S. State Quarters as a reward to all readers who find at least one of the errors,” said Marshall.

There are only 5,930 of these Gallery Displays left so, “readers who want to make sure to get the complete set of all 57 State Quarters for free should closely inspect the large photo for the error and call in today,” Marshall added.

Whether or not the errors on these custom-built, museum-quality Gallery Displays will ever cause them to become sought after by collectors, only time will tell. But one thing is for sure, the quality of the construction is beyond compare. “We had a frame shop build a duplicate and the price tag was $231.00 and that was without a single coin, but because of the error we’re able to give them away fully loaded with all 57 U.S. State and Territory Quarter Dollars Encapsulated in never-circulated condition for just $88 and shipping. It’s truly the bargain of a lifetime,” said Marshall.

Starting at 8:00am this morning and ending in just 48 hours, the World Reserve Monetary Exchange guarantees that each of the last 5,930 Gallery Displays will be filled with all 57 State and Territory Quarters free with each order of the Gallery Display and shipping.

When asked how all this happened, Marshall said, “A former World Reserve proofreader failed to catch these errors and officially accepted them into our inventory.” So, now the private vaults of the World Reserve contain these frames that are perfect quality, but contain two known spelling errors.

Because of this extreme oversight, the World Reserve has quarantined these Gallery Displays.

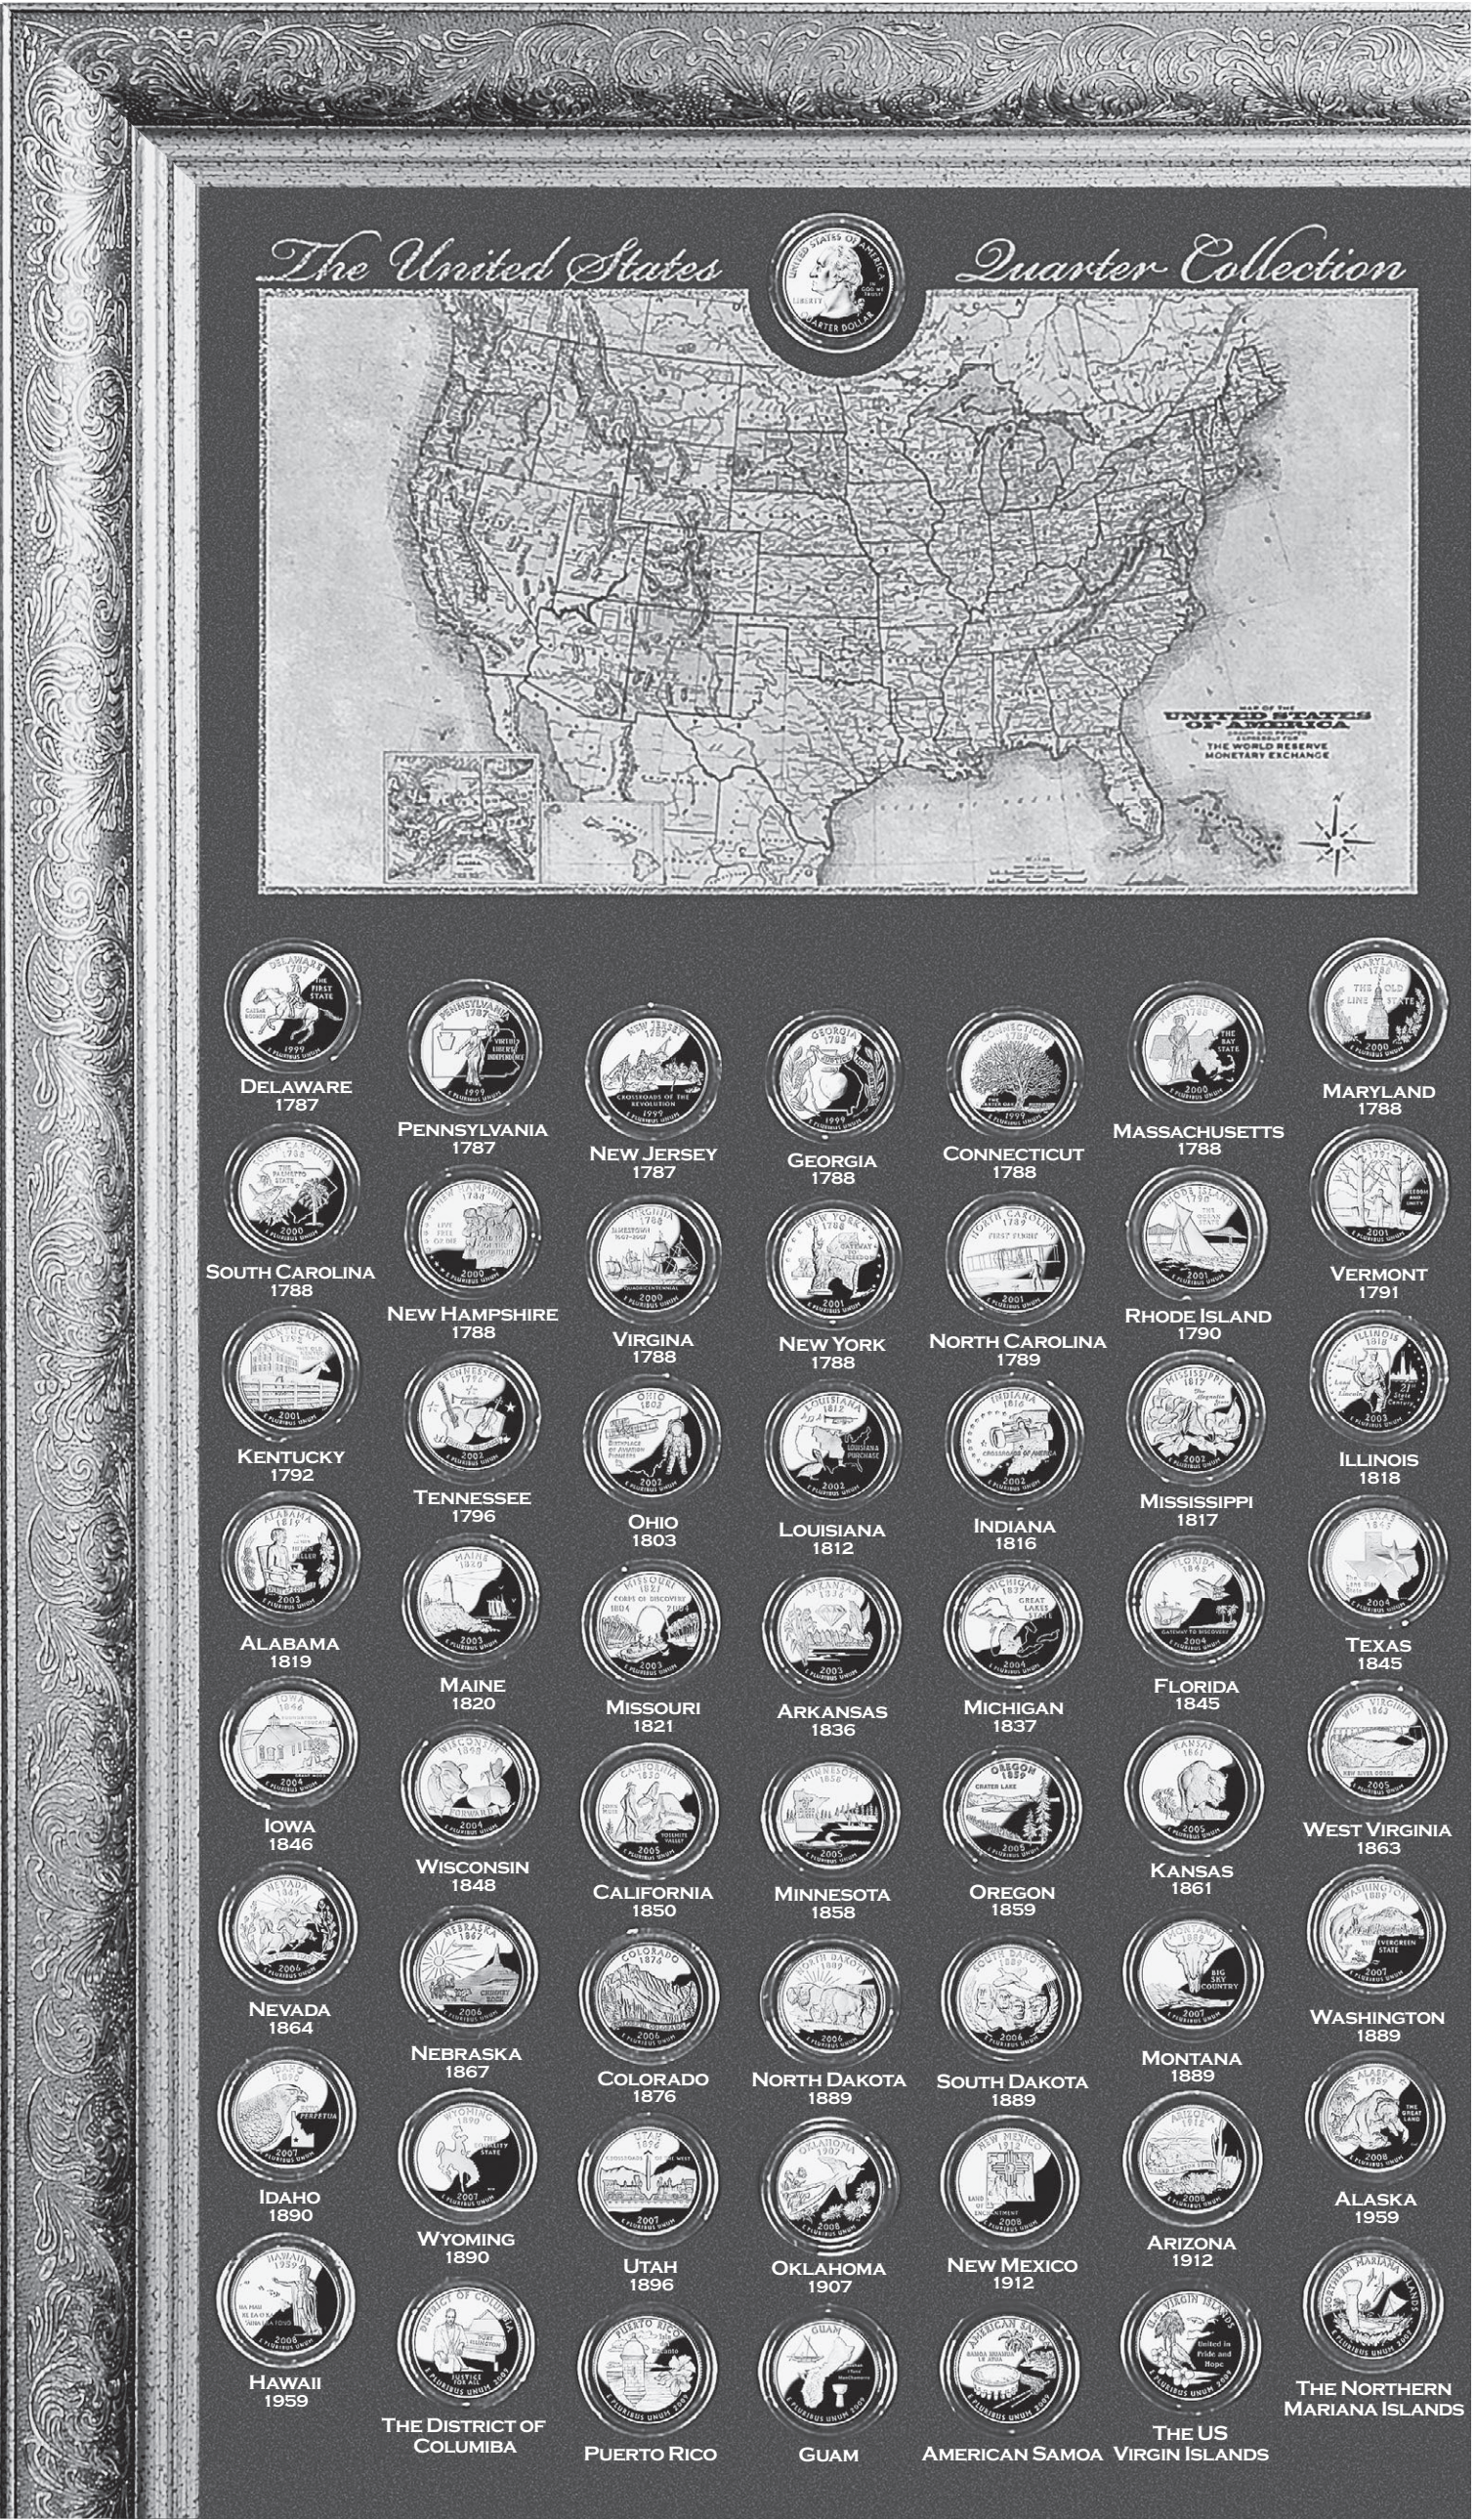

“They cannot be sold as new because they simply do not meet our strict standards of perfection,” Marshall added. “So instead, I’ve sent a Directive to immediately discount these from their original price of $198 which you will find on our website down to just $88 and shipping for today’s readers, but just for the next 48 hours, or until they’re all gone,” he said.

Everybody loves to find the mistake. And the two mistakes in this run of the classic custom-made Gallery Display are actually somewhat challenging to find. So for readers who are struggling to find the errors, here’s a hint. One spelling error is in the second row, and one is in the bottom row.

“We’re bracing for all the calls because everyone wants to get their free coins,” said Aaron Stryker, the Director of Hotline Operations. So when the lines are busy, keep trying. “We promise to get every call,” Stryker said. “Beat the deadline and you’ll be bragging to your family and friends how you found the spelling error and got all the coins absolutely free,” he added. ■

■ VALUABLE: Never-Circulated State Quarters like these have increased up to 500% in collector value because they are a much higher quality than pocket change. That’s why everyone is trying to get the whole collection free before they’re gone forever.

■ FREE: Today’s readers who find just one of the spelling errors in the Gallery Display above and call the Toll Free Hotline at 1-866-769-6086 before the 48 hour deadline get all 57 U.S. State and Territory Quarter Dollars free with each discounted Gallery Display.

Job market not growing fast enough for big rebound

By Jeannine Aversa and Christopher S. Rugaber
Associated Press writers

WASHINGTON— A second straight month of lackluster hiring by American businesses is sapping strength from the economic rebound.

The jobless rate fell to 9.5 percent in June, still far too high to signal a healthy economy. It came in slightly lower than the month before only because more than a half-million people gave up looking for work and were no longer counted as unemployed.

The private sector added just 83,000 jobs for the month. Looked at from that angle or almost any other, from a teetering housing market to falling factory orders, the recovery is limping along as it enters the year's second half. And that is when the benefits of most of the government's stimulus spending will begin to wear off.

The fate of the economy will hinge on whether it can stand on its own. President Barack Obama acknowledged the slow pace of the recovery and used the new jobs figures to argue for more stimulus spending and extended unemployment benefits.

"We're not headed there fast enough for a lot of Americans," the president said. "We're not headed there fast enough for me, either?"

Overall, the nation's total payroll actually shrank last month by 125,000, the first decline in six months, the Labor Department said Friday. The loss reflected the end of 225,000 temporary jobs helping the U.S. Census Bureau complete its 10-year head count.

The 83,000 jobs added by the private sector was a better performance than in May, when private job creation nearly stalled. But it fell far short of what the economy needs — at least 200,000 jobs a month — to bring down the unemployment rate.

Nobody, from Obama to Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke to private economists, expects that anytime soon. And the government has mostly exhausted its realistic options for nudging the economy along faster.

Benchmark interest rates, which at low levels can encourage borrowing to spur economic growth, are already near zero. Republicans in Congress object to additional stimulus spending.

Unemployment is expected to stay above 9 percent through the midterm elections in November. And the Fed predicts joblessness could still be as high as 7.5 percent two years from now. Normal is considered closer

Apple: iPhone signal display is causing poor reception

By Alejandra Cancino
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Apple Inc. said Friday its formula to calculate signal strength is "totally wrong," and that it will start using a new formula by AT&T to calculate how many bars to display to represent signal strength.

The announcement comes as customers continue to complain of a significant loss in signal when holding the iPhone 4 in a certain way that seems to interfere with the phone's antenna. Unlike previous iPhones, the new phone's antenna is a steel frame that wraps around the device.

Apple maintains the latest phone has the best wireless performance "we have ever shipped." However, due to the number of complaints, the company said it tested the phone and found that its formula to read signal strength often displayed four bars in places where the strength was equivalent to just two bars. In general, the phone displayed two more bars than "it should for a given signal strength."

Customers who experienced signal drops when gripping the phone were probably in a place with poor reception, Apple said, even though the phone displayed a strong signal. "Their big drop in bars is because their high bars were never real in the first place," the company said in a statement.

Apple also said phones usually drop reception by one or more bars when held in a certain way and suggested users buy a case and avoid gripping the phone in the lower left corner "in a way that covers both sides of the black strip in the metal band?"

On Thursday, a California law office sued Apple, citing the antenna problems. The law firm claimed to be speaking on behalf of "hundreds of thousands" of iPhone 4 owners. The suit asks for monetary damages related to the alleged "diminished value of the phone" and for Apple to hand out free phone cases.

Apple said it will release a free software update "within a few weeks" with AT&T's formula. It will also make the first three bars a bit taller, so that they are easier to see. The update will be available for the iPhone 3G, 3GS and 4.

LOOK, UP IN THE SKY!

This undated handout photo shows the Terrafugia Transition shortly after takeoff. A major hurdle to production of the planes was removed recently when the FAA granted the company a waiver on weight restrictions.

Cars with wings may be just around the corner

By Joan Lowy
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — If cars had wings, they could fly — and that just might happen, beginning next year.

The company Terrafugia, based in Woburn, Mass., says it plans to deliver its car-plane, the Transition, to customers by the end of 2011. It recently cleared a major hurdle when the Federal Aviation Administration granted a special weight limit exemption to the Transition.

"It's the next 'wow' vehicle," said Terrafugia vice president Richard Gersh. "Anybody can buy a Ferrari, but as we say, Ferraris don't fly."

The Transition is a long way from cartoon dad George Jetson's flying car zooming above traffic, or even the magical Chitty Chitty Bang Bang.

"There is no launch button on the (instrument panel)," Gersh noted.

Rather, the car-plane has wings that unfold for flying — a process the company says takes one minute — and fold back up for driving. A runway is still required to takeoff and land.

The Transition is being marketed more as a plane that drives than a car that flies, although it is both. The company has been working with FAA to meet aircraft regulations, and with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration to meet vehicle safety regulations

The company is pitching the Transition to private pilots as a more convenient — and cheaper — way to fly. They say it eliminates the hassle trying to find another mode of transportation to get to and from airports: You drive the car to the airport and then you're good to go. When you land, you fold up the wings and hit the road. There are no expensive hangar fees because you don't have to store it at an airport — you park it in the garage at home.

The plane is designed to fly primarily under 10,000 feet. It has a maximum takeoff weight of 1,430 pounds, including fuel and passengers. Gas mileage on the road is about 30 mpg.

Terrafugia says the Transition reduces the potential for an accident by allowing pilots to drive under bad weather instead of flying into marginal conditions.

The Transition's price tag: $194,000. But there may be additional charges for options like a radio, transponder or GPS.

Another option is a full-plane parachute.

"If you get into a very dire situation, it's the ultimate safety option," Gersh said.

So far, the company has more than 70 orders with deposits, he said.

Terrafugia is Latin for "escape from the land." The company was founded in 2006 by five Massachusetts Institute of Technology grad students who were also pilots. They received some seed money from the school.

The concept of a car-plane has been around since at least the 1950s, but it's possible that Terrafugia may become the first company to mass-produce one, FAA spokeswoman Laura Brown said.

"We're working very closely with them, but there are still some remaining steps," Brown said.

Home buyers win more time to claim tax credit

WASHINGTON (MCT) — President Barack Obama signed Friday morning a three-month extension on the deadline for home buyers to obtain a federal home-buyer tax credit of up to $8,000.

Buyers now have until Sept. 30 to close on a home sale to be eligible for the credit. The closing deadline was originally June 30. To be eligible, buyers need a contract that was in place by April 30.

The National Association of Realtors has estimated that about 180,000 otherwise eligible buyers were likely to miss out on the credit if the original deadline was upheld. It's been difficult for some buyers to get their mortgages approved on time, as lenders work through a clogged pipeline of applications.

Target stores boost grocery sections, cut back on gardening supplies

By Sandra Pedicini
The Orlando Sentinel

ORLANDO, Fla. — Groceries are in, gardening out at Target.

The Minneapolis-based discounter known for trendy clothes and stylish home decor now is now beefing up its stores' super-market aisles. Target is adding meat, fresh fruits and vegetables, and packaged baked goods such as pies.

Target says it's feeding the demands of its customers, who want increased convenience.

The chain plans to spend $1 billion on remodeling 340 of its stores this year.

Other changes will take place as well. Beauty sections get a makeover with softer lighting and curved fixtures. The home sections will display decor in a way that allows shoppers to more easily envision them in their homes. Video games, now locked away in cases, will be in the open, where customers can touch them.

Meanwhile, Target is phasing out all its garden sections, planning to get rid of them by September. It says the garden areas are no longer profitable. A few gardening items will still be sold in other areas of the stores.

In the stores getting remodeled, new layouts will devote about 10,000 square feet to food, expanding existing grocery sections by

Chicago approves tough new handgun restrictions

By Don Babwin
Associated Press writer

CHICAGO — The Chicago City Council on Friday approved what city officials say is the strictest handgun ordinance in the nation, but not before lashing out at the Supreme Court ruling they contend makes the city more dangerous because it will put more guns in people's hands.

The new ordinance bans gun shops in Chicago and prohibits gun owners from stepping outside their homes, even onto their porches or in their garages, with a handgun. It becomes law in 10 days, Corporation Counsel Mara Georges said.

The vote comes just four days after the high court ruled Americans have the right to have handguns anywhere for self-defense — a ruling that makes the city's 28-year-old ban on such weapons unenforceable.

"I wish that we weren't in the position where we're struggling to figure out a way in which we can limit the guns on our streets and still meet the test that our Supreme Court has set for us," said Alderman Toni Preckwinkle, minutes before the council voted 45-0 to approve the ordinance.

It was swift action for a council that typically takes far longer to pass ordinances, but Mayor Richard Daley — who promised the city would not "roll over" if the court ruled against the city's handgun ban — clearly wanted to give police a law they could begin enforcing as quickly as possible.

"You have to get the tools to the police," Daley said.

And even though the ban remains in effect until it is struck down by an appellate court, Georges said it was important to pass a new law to clear up confusion Chicagoans might have about what kind of weapons they can legally own and how they can use them.

Some residents applauded the vote.

"There's just too much killing going on (and) we need protection," said Mary Fitts, a retiree who came from her home on the South Side to watch the vote. "You can't even sit on your front porch!"

Others, like Senesceria Craig, wondered how much good it would do. "They're not going to abide by it," she said of criminals, pointing out that her 20-year-old daughter was shot and killed with a handgun in 1992, 10 years after the city's ban went into effect.

But gun rights opponents quickly criticized Daley and the City Council and promised lawsuits.

"The city wants to put as many hurdles and as much red tape in the way of someone who just wants to exercise their constitutional right to have a gun," said Todd Vandermyde, a lobbyist with the National Rifle Association in Illinois.

Vandermyde would not say when lawsuits might be filed.

July 4th travel rolls on, but a little closer to home

By Patrick Walters

PHILADELPHIA — Standing in line on hot asphalt waiting to see the Liberty Bell, Don Shelley couldn't help but think that, if the nation's economy were better, he would be basking on a beach in Hawaii.

Shelley, of Mesa, Ariz., turned 50 on Friday, and his wife had planned to take him on a surprise trip to Hawaii. But they decided to take a much-cheaper trip to the birthplace of American independence, where they could see some historic sites for free and pack lunches.

"This is just as much fun," Don Shelley, a high school principal, said as he waited with his wife and three children, ages 12, 17 and 20, adding that he remains optimistic about the national economic recovery and still hopes to get to Hawaii — someday.

The economy is in the doldrums, it's time-consuming to fly anywhere, and fireworks displays nationwide are being downsized or canceled. Millions of people are expected to hit the beach, visit tourist attractions or watch parades — even more than last year — but many are still scaling down their trips or traveling by car instead of flying as they look to stretch their dollars.

The travel weekend comes on the heels of Friday's report by the Labor Department that employers cut 125,000 jobs in June, the most since October 2009.

Bill Murray, center, and Cate Murray, right, both of Columbus, Ohio make their way with their luggage through the Caltrain station in San Francisco, Friday.

In Chicago, Naomi Saunders and Paul Cosby said they planned to scale back this year's family Fourth of July meal and wouldn't be making special trips to the grocery store.

"The cookout won't be as large," said Saunders, who has a temporary job with the Census Bureau. "It'll be like a regular meal!"

The couple planned to splurge by taking their older son to the Taste of Chicago, an annual food festival, for his 11th birthday, but even for that they bought their tickets ahead of time to save cash.

AAA said that of the 34.9 million Americans expected to travel this holiday weekend, most would go at least 50 miles or more, and mostly by car — about 90 percent.

The figure is 17.1 percent higher than last year, when 29.8 million went somewhere else, but it's still lower than the 37.8 million who made travel plans in 2008.

The economy kept Tommy Aaron and his wife, Jessica Infante, of Egg Harbor Township, N.J., close to home — but not off the beach.

They were enjoying their trip to Point Pleasant, on the Jersey Shore, with their three teenage children but admitted they would have rather been in a more "luxurious location" for the holiday weekend.

"It would be fun to be in Aruba, Hawaii, you know, some tropical location, but the reality is we're watching every penny," said Infante, 42. "And this is a fun place to be that doesn't cost us an arm and a leg!"

Aaron, who works in the casino industry in Atlantic City, and Infante, a saleswoman in a clothing store, said they aren't struggling financially. But Aaron said he knows no one is immune from the possibility of unemployment.

"It can happen in an instant," said Aaron, 45. "We have a mortgage, the kids will be starting college soon, it costs more to buy things — we'd be foolish to spend money on major trips or other luxuries right now?"

Some, however, said they hadn't changed their plans.

Michael Stevens, 62, of Baton Rouge, La., booked a trip to San Francisco last week, in part to take his mind off the ravaging effects of the oil spill along the Gulf Coast. Stevens, a caterer, said the spill's effects were depressing, not to mention the summertime weather in Louisiana.

"It's just hot and miserable," he said.

So, economics notwithstanding, he planned an excursion with his wife to the seaside town of Sausalito, Napa wine country and Muir Woods — and the area's famously mild weather.

GOP chairman: Afghan 'war of Obama's choosing'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican chairman Michael Steele drew criticism from within his own party Friday, including calls to resign, after saying the 9-year-old commitment of U.S. troops to Afghanistan was a mistaken "war of Obama's choosing."

As criticism swelled, Steele issued a statement stressing his support for U.S. troops, but he did not acknowledge his factual error about a war launched by former President George W. Bush in response for the terror attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

For Democrats, looking at a difficult environment ahead of November's midterm elections, the gaffe was an opportunity to test their strategy of attacking the GOP with its members' own words.

Steele

Conservative Bill Kristol, writing for The Weekly Standard, was among the first to say Steele should resign.

"There are, of course, those who think we should pull out of Afghanistan, and they're certainly entitled to make their case," wrote Kristol, a consistent supporter of the Afghanistan war. "But one of them shouldn't be the chairman of the Republican Party?"

In remarks captured Thursday on camera and posted online, Steele criticized President Barack Obama and his handling of the Afghan war and suggested the war cannot be won.

"If he's such a student of history, has he not understood that, you know, that's the one thing you don't do is engage in a land war in Afghanistan? All right? Because everyone who's tried, over a thousand years of history, has failed," Steele said. "And there are reasons for that. There are other ways to engage in Afghanistan."

Republican officials confirmed Steele made the comments at a Connecticut fundraiser, which was closed to the news media. The remarks, at odds with members of the Republican Party, were caught on camera and posted on the Internet.

"This was a war of Obama's choosing," Steele said. "This is not something the United States has actively prosecuted or wanted to engage in."

USAID compound attacked in Afghanistan; 4 killed

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Taliban suicide attackers stormed a four-story house used by an American aid organization in north Afghanistan on Friday, killing four people before dying in a fierce, five-hour gunbattle with Afghan security forces.

The pre-dawn attack appeared part of a militant campaign against international development organizations at a time when the U.S. and its allies are trying to accelerate civilian aid efforts to turn back the Taliban.

It came on the same day that Gen. David Petraeus landed in the Afghan capital to take command of U.S. and international forces fighting the nearly 9-year-old war. Petraeus arrived from Brussels where he sought to reassure allies that the war against the Taliban was on track despite rising casualties and problems regaining control over key parts of the country.

Insurgents began their brazen attack in Kunduz at about 3:30 a.m. A suicide car bomber blew a hole in the wall around a building used by Development Alternatives Inc., a global consulting company based in the Washington, D.C., area on contract with the U.S. Agency for International Development, or USAID. The company is working on governance and community development issues in the area.

Subjects or citizens? Thomas Jefferson made slip in Declaration

WASHINGTON (AP) — Preservation scientists at the Library of Congress have discovered that Thomas Jefferson, even in the act of declaring independence from England, had trouble breaking free from monarchical rule.

In an early draft of the Declaration of Independence, Jefferson wrote the word "subjects," when he referred to the American public. He then erased that word and replaced it with "citizens," a term he used frequently throughout the final draft.

The Library released news of the struck word for the first time on Friday.

Fenella France, a research chemist at the Library, said her lab made the discovery

Dr. Fenella France, a research chemist at the Library of Congress, displays a computer screen at the Library of Congress in Washington, Friday, with a correction to the rough draft of the Declaration of Independence written by Thomas Jefferson. invisible layers — like erased text and even fingerprints — pop into view on a computer screen.

In switching from "subjects" to "citizens," France said it appears Jefferson used his hand to wipe the word out while the ink was still wet. A distinct brown smudge is apparent on the paper, although the word "subjects" is not legible without the help of the digital technology.

"This has been a very exciting development," France said, calling the findings "spine-tingling."

Historic, handwritten documents reveal clues about the past that word processors cannot illuminate, said James Billington, librarian of Congress.

"It shows the progress of his mind. This was a decisive moment," Billington said. "We recovered a magic moment that was otherwise lost to history."

Accompanied by police escort, the document was unveiled outside its protective case for the first time in 15 years on Friday morning for a demonstration of the hyperspectral imaging technology. It normally can only be viewed through a 130-pound oxygen-free safe.

Donning a pair of white researchers' gloves, Maria Nugent, director of the Library of Congress' top treasures collection, slowly lifted a piece of off-white corrugated cardboard to reveal the rough draft of the Declaration, which includes handwritten corrections by both John Adams and Benjamin Franklin.

"That's a pretty good editorial committee," said Billington, who was present for the procedure.

The rough draft was written on two sheets of white legal-sized paper, on both the back and front sides of the sheets.

The document was returned to the library's vault on Friday after the testing.

BP hasn't reached maximum capacity with 2 oil-capture devices

By Harry R. Weber
Associated Press writer

HOUSTON — The two containment devices capturing oil from BP's busted well at the bottom of the Gulf of Mexico haven't been collecting the maximum daily amount possible since both were in place, according to an Associated Press analysis of company data.

Since June 16, the oil giant has been using a cap over the gusher to contain some of the oil and a vessel on the surface that is bringing up oil through undersea lines.

Together, the two devices can recover 840,000 gallons to nearly 1.2 million gallons of oil per day.

An AP review of data obtained from the company shows the closest BP has gotten was 1,137,780 gallons on June 22, the day before an undersea camera bumped the cap and forced BP to remove it for more than 10 hours.

Since the cap was put back on, the highest amount of oil collected on any single day was 1,059,240 gallons on Tuesday.

BP insists there is nothing wrong with the two devices. Spokesman Toby Odone said Friday the volumes vary from day to day depending on various factors, including the proportion of gas and oil in the hydrocarbons coming out of the well, the sea state and the stability of the processing plant aboard the vessels.

A third system BP has been looking to bring online to raise capacity to between 1,680,000 gallons and 2,226,000 gallons per day was supposed to be in place by the end of June. However, bad weather put it behind schedule, and it is now due on line around the middle of next week, according to the company.

As the massive spill has dragged on for 2½ months, BP and the government have made several predictions about when the oil would be contained or when it would be reduced to a small amount. The predictions haven't panned out.

On June 8, BP chief operating officer Doug Suttles said the spill should be reduced to a "relative trickle" in less than a week. BP later said it would take more time for the spill to reach a trickle. President Barack Obama told the country around the middle of last month that as much as 90 percent of the oil would soon be captured, saying the company had informed him that was how much of the oil could be kept out of the water within weeks.

Up to 2.1 million gallons of oil a day were believed to be flowing from the busted well until June 3, when a cut to the well pipe increased the flow.

Capsule fails to dock with space station

MOSCOW (AP) — An unmanned Russian space capsule carrying supplies to the International Space Station failed in a docking attempt, Russian Mission Control and NASA said Friday.

The Progress space capsule is carrying more than two tons of food, water and other supplies for the orbiting laboratory. Three Russian and three U.S. astronauts comprise the current crew.

None of the supplies were deemed necessary for the station's immediate survival and the outpost is well supplied, said NASA flight commentator Rob Navias. The Interfax-AVN news agency said space station commander Alexander Skvortsov reported the Progress was "rotating uncontrollably" as it neared the space station.

Another docking attempt was likely to be tried Sunday.

Mexican murder suspect: U.S. consulate infiltrated

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The drug-cartel enforcer told a unsettling story: A woman who worked in the Mexican border's biggest U.S. consulate had helped a rival gang obtain American visas. And for that, the enforcer said, he ordered her killed.

Nonsense, says a U.S. official, who said Friday the motive for the slaying remains unknown.

The employee, Lesley Enriquez, and two other people connected to the U.S. consulate in the city of Ciudad Juarez were killed March 13 in attacks that raised concerns that Americans were being caught up in drug-related border violence.

Jesus Ernesto Chavez, whose arrest was announced Friday, confessed to ordering the killings, said Ramon Pequeno, the head of anti-narcotics for the Federal Police. Pequeno said Chavez leads a band of hit men for a street gang tied to the Juarez cartel.

Enriquez and her husband were killed in Ciudad Juarez, across the border from El Paso, Texas, as they drove toward a border crossing. Chavez also is accused in a nearly simultaneous attack that killed the husband of a Mexican employee of the consulate.

Pequeno said Chavez told police that Enriquez was targeted because she helped provide visas to a rival gang.

A U.S. federal official familiar with the investigation said Friday that after the killings, U.S. officials investigated possible corruption involving Enriquez and found none. The official was not authorized to speak about the case and spoke on condition of anonymity.

The official said the motive behind the killing remains unclear.

Chavez

Officials with the U.S. Embassy in Mexico City declined to comment. At the U.S. Justice Department in Washington, spokeswoman Tracy Schmalzer law enforcement "continues to work closely with our Mexican counterparts to bring to justice individuals involved in these murders."

U.S. Embassy officials previously said that Enriquez was never in a position to provide visas and worked in a section that provides basic services to U.S. citizens in Mexico.

Mexican police provided no further details from Chavez's confession on how Enriquez might have helped provide visas to a drug gang.

Enriquez was four months pregnant when she and her husband, Arthur H. Redelfs, were killed by gunmen who opened fire on their vehicle.

Scientists find fossilized skull of giant sperm whale

By Amina Khan
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Paleontologists digging near the coast of Peru have uncovered the largest fossilized skull of a sperm whale ever found.

The 12-million-year-old skull — which measures nearly 10 feet across — belonged to a now-extinct genus and species of sperm whale that could have been as much as 57 feet long.

The whale, described in a paper published Thursday in the journal Nature, was christened Leviathan melvillei in honor of Moby Dick author Herman Melville.

The creature "was certainly a top predator, probably occupying the same ecological niche of the living killer whale," said Olivier Lambert, one of the study's lead authors and a paleontologist at the National Museum of Natural History in Paris.

Modern sperm whales may grow to about the same size as Leviathan melvillei, but they dive deep into the ocean to feed on squid using suction.

The older whale, on the other hand, may have used its sharp teeth to rip into mid-size baleen whales.

"That's a provocative idea," said Ewan Fordyce, a paleontologist specializing in whales and dolphins at the University of Otago in New Zealand who was not involved in the discovery.

"If that's how it fed, it fed very differently from the modern sperm whale," he said. "It opens our eyes about the diversity of feeding habits."

Lambert said the fossil, which his team uncovered during the last few hours of the final day of digging on a 2008 research field trip, gives researchers a better picture of the diversity of marine mammalian life millions of years ago.

But the reason for their demise remains a mystery. Perhaps their great size became a detriment, he said.

"When you become bigger it becomes difficult to attack smaller animals," he said.

Even within a faith, there are vast differences

You tell me you're Christian. How much information have you really given me?

Being Christian probably means that the story of Jesus is central to your life, but I don't know how you worship, what you claim as your authority, how your church is organized or even whether you belong to a church.

You say these details are not important, but remember, Christians have killed other Christians because of these details. Such sorry histories and present realities persist in many faiths. Some of these details may be important to who you are today.

The three main expressions of Christianity are (Eastern) Orthodoxy, Roman Catholicism and various forms of Protestantism. Some classify the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormonism) as Protestant; others consider it a fourth form of Christianity.

Worship varies from beautiful, elaborate forms of liturgical worship and sacramental devotion to the moving spirituals and cadenced preaching of the black church, to the utter simplicity and spontaneity of the Quaker meeting where folks sit in silence until and unless someone is moved to speak, to some Appalachians who worship by handling serpents.

Is tradition or the magisterium of your church your ultimate guide to how you live your life? Or is the Bible your final authority, and if so, whose interpretation? What roles do reason and cultural influences play in answering questions of faith?

Is your church led by clergy governed by bishops in apostolic succession or by members of the local congregation or by a presbyterial, regional authority? Or does your church eschew ordained leadership altogether and teach that each person has the inner light? What positions may women and gay people occupy?

I've not yet asked doctrinal questions

What's the most important part of a worship service?

McClatchy Newspapers

TO SPEAK TO GOD AND TO HEAR GOD, TOO

Rabbi Robert L. Tobin of Congregation Beth Shalom, Overland Park, Kan: A worship service is different from personal prayer. We all have the language of our hearts, and God knows and hears us better even than we do.

A worship service is, for Jews, a gathering that seeks, as a group, to engage God within our tradition. So we must answer that there is not "One Most Important" thing and assert that there are "two most important" things that make that possible for us: to help people of Israel (Jews) and our Bible (Torah).

In traditional circles, a quorum ("minyan" in Hebrew) of 10 or more adult Jews must gather for our most important prayers to be said. These include the Kaddish prayer spoken by mourners for a set period after their loved one's burial and the reading aloud of the Torah in its original Hebrew from a parchment scroll in ancient fashion.

While the Kaddish is said at services morning, afternoon and evening, the formal chanting of the Torah occurs in fullest form only on our weekly Sabbath, called Shabbat (Friday sundown to Saturday nightfall).

It is this act that makes us more than our individual selves and joins us to a chain of traditions from Mount Sinai to

Eastside Baptist closer to finishing building, thanks to N.C. volunteers

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

The sun beat down from a blue sky, creating temperatures in the upper 90s and beads of sweat on Ken Knight's face.

Instead of wiping the perspiration away, he reached for another brick.

Inside the building, where sunlight streamed through the unfinished windows, it was just as hot; muggy. Here, the sounds of hammering, people using lifts; the smell of fresh lumber and old sweat.

Not quite what you'd expect at a church.

Eastside Baptist Church in Twin Falls is one step closer to having its 6,000-square-foot auditorium complete, thanks to a group of North Carolina volunteers.

About 20 volunteers from Carpenter's Hands Ministry arrived in Twin Falls last Saturday. On Monday, they started work to complete the outside of the building. More volunteers are planned to arrive over the next couple of weeks — about 60 during the entire three-week mission project.

It's a blessing to have so many people willing to help the church achieve its goal, said Pastor Paul Thompson.

"We thank the Lord," he said.

The building still won't be complete by the time the volunteers leave July 17, but their work will put the church one step closer to being able to use the new facility.

Thompson said he hopes to see the new building completed by fall.

"It's taken a bit longer than it should have, perhaps," he said, "but we've taken the debt-free route."

Like the labor, most of the money for the building has been donated. When complete, the $330,000 building will hold about 260 people, up from 140 that the current building holds. The new facility includes a sanctuary, kitchen, nursery and restrooms. The old building will still be used for educational classes, he said.

Eastside began the project in 2009, when senior volunteers from Louisiana and Texas came out to do the initial framing. Like that first group, the current volunteers come from a variety of backgrounds — bricklayers, construction workers, technicians and homemakers.

Most are retired or employed; others, such as Knight, lost their jobs through layoffs but, through their own church's donations, have found the means to join Carpenter's Hands Ministry.

Knight, a brick mason, says he dedicated his life to Christ about two years ago after being let go from his job.

"I've found a way to keep my house, my family, my truck, but we don't rely on money as much as we used to," said Knight, a member of Freedom Biker Church in Monroe, N.C. Instead, he's learned to rely more on God.

When a pastor asked if he'd like

George Braxton of Hendersonville, N.C., works Monday on the new building that Eastside Baptist Church is constructing on its property in Twin Falls. Braxton, a brick mason, has come with 20 other volunteers from Carpenter's Hands Ministry to help with the mission project.

to help with a mission project, Knight jumped at the chance. He says the opportunity to serve others is a blessing in his life. Others echoed the sentiments.

"You get a whole lot more out of this than what you put into it," said volunteer Robert Stepp.

Volunteer director Michael Nelson said his group tries to participate in at least two building projects a year — one around Christmastime, the other in summer. They chose the Twin Falls church after a lot of prayer.

"We do a lot of prayer about where God wants us, where we can be most effective," Nelson said. "God led us here. It's really been a blessing for us, especially the praise and worship time here at the church."

"Everywhere we go we see God's hand," Nelson said, noting that one of the ways is how people with different skills and backgrounds pull together to work on a project.

"It's like a jigsaw puzzle," he said. "When all the pieces come together, it makes a beautiful picture."

Volunteers work on the new, 6,000-square-foot building at Eastside Baptist Church.

Besides helping Eastside members with the labor — installing plumbing, heating and air conditioning, sheetrock, siding — the volunteers gave the church a check for $10,000.

"Not only did they pay their own way, but they donated money to the church," Nelson said. "We do this out of love."

Church members say they're thankful to the volunteers for devoting their time, talents and money to help the 80-or-so-member congregation.

"Just knowing these people are helping build this building for us ... I know it's God's plan, because they came at the perfect time," said 15-year-old Aaron Burton, who worked alongside the volunteers on Monday.

"They deserve our thanks, considering how many people will be saved (through Jesus Christ) in the building"

Knight scooped cement onto his trowel, plastering it against the sheetrock, and then reached for another brick.

George Braxton, a retired brick mason, worked beside him. Despite the heat he wore to shield his face from the sun, he, too, had sweat on his forehead.

Being a brick mason, for him, is carrying on a family tradition. Now that he's retired, he wanted to use his time to help someone else.

"That's what it's all about," he said.

Victims: Ky. abuse suit against Vatican could heal

By Dylan Lovan
Associated Press writer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — It had been more than 80 years since James O’Bryan stepped inside a Roman Catholic church. He hadn’t attended Mass since the late 1920s, when he says he was fondled at age 7 by a priest at Saint Cecilia Catholic Church in Louisville.

O’Bryan is one of three men who filed a U.S. lawsuit regarded as having the best chance of discovering whether the Vatican holds any liability in sexual abuse by American priests. He and others not involved with the suit also see an opportunity for Rome to reconnect with American victims who lost their faith after being abused.

“I’ve been trying to reconcile this thing in my head all these years,” said O’Bryan.

“I’ve completely lost my faith, until recently.”

At age 89, O’Bryan just recently began attending services at a tiny Catholic church near his Mendocino, Calif., home after his wife died in January.

“We need to know the truth, and maybe more important than us needing to know the truth, the hierarchy needs to know that secrecy is not acceptable — it’s not God’s way,” said Colleen Powell, who was abused by her Catholic priest at her childhood church near Dayton, Ohio. She is part of a vocal victims group called SNAP and lives in Louisville.

The Vatican has asked that the suit be dismissed, arguing in May that Rome does not exercise “day-to-day control” over U.S. bishops.

“After six years of litigation, it is time to put this case to rest.”

— Vatican attorney Jeffrey Lena, writing in a court motion tion, it is time to put this case to rest,” Vatican attorney Jeffrey Lena wrote in the motion. Last week, Lena argued in another filing that a suit against the Archdiocese of Louisville — settled in 2003 for $25 million — had turned up no connection between the archdiocese’s handling of abusive priests and the Vatican.

The suit remains in court at a time when Rome has taken more public steps to address the scandal and a fresh wave of reports of abuse around the world.

Earlier in June, Pope Benedict XVI asked for absolution from abuse victims while in a significant setting: in front of thousands of Roman Catholic priests attending Mass in St. Peter’s Square.

“We too insistently beg forgiveness from God and from the persons involved, while promising to do everything possible to ensure that such abuse will never occur again,” Benedict said.

The Kentucky suit argues in part that U.S. bishops should be considered employees or officials of the Holy See. The church has countered with court filings from officials in the Louisville archdiocese that seek to demonstrate independence from Rome.

“The Holy See in no sense exercised the requisite operational day-to-day control over the Archbishop, including the Archbishop’s supervision of the priests at issue,” the Vatican argued in the May 17 motion filed in U.S. District Court.

Kim Richardson bristles when she hears the argument that American archdioceses acted without Vatican input when deciding how to handle abusive priests.

“That is crazy to even assume that they are not responsible or connected,” said Richardson, who said she was abused as a child while she lived in a Kentucky Catholic orphanage. She is not part of the Kentucky suit.

Louisville attorney William McMurry, who reached the $25 million settlement with the Louisville archdiocese, also filed the Kentucky suit against the Vatican.

McMurry wants to find out how the Vatican reacted to Kentucky priest Louis Miller, who was removed from the priesthood in 2004. Miller pleaded guilty in 2003 to sexually abusing children in the 1970s. He is serving a 13-year prison sentence. McMurry says Miller abused 90 victims.

Legal experts say the Kentucky suit faces several obstacles, including how to demonstrate that U.S. bishops are employees and official representatives of the Vatican, which is considered both a church and a sovereign nation. A similar suit in Oregon that claims priests are Vatican employees moved forward this week after the U.S. Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal from the Holy See.

such as whether you believe in a literal and eternal hell or whether all will ultimately be saved. I’ve not yet asked about religious issues that enter the political arena.

These questions hardly begin to outline differences within Christianity.

And other faiths may be even more varied. Buddhism, for example, ranges from the spare meditation of certain Zen schools to the phantasmagoric dances of some Tibetan sects. Even atheists differ considerably.

Most faiths have enormous internal variations. There is no single Islam, Hinduism or Judaism.

Problems within faiths, as among them, arise from those demanding unity, uniformity or control.

Differences exist because people need different approaches to ultimate mysteries. Seeking universal agreement defies those mysteries. Distinction rather than conformity may be the better blessing.

Worship

the future. We gather in worship to support people in need and come not only to speak to God (prayer) but to hear from God instructions (Torah).

A CALL TO ACTION FOR THE COMMUNITY

The Rev. Holly McKissick, pastor of St. Andrew Christian Church, Olathe: My tradition has a straightforward answer: Communion (what some call Mass or Eucharist) is the center of our worship. Along with Communion, though, the community is central. Some traditions celebrate a mystery by which bread and wine are changed into the body of Christ. We celebrate that we are changed.

We come tender and broken. In an ordinary loaf of bread, we affirm the extraordinary grace of God, which offers healing, forgiveness, a second chance. Gathered around the table, we affirm that everything we are and everything we have comes to us as a gift; not a reward for good behavior but a sign of God’s unconditional love. It’s like coming home from college after flunking out or graduating with honors; either way, the family is waiting with your favorite dish.

But worship is more than Communion and community. My daughter was a newborn when we hired architects to design our sanctuary; she was in kindergarten when it was completed.

It took five years because our young congregation spent so much time thinking carefully about how worship is related to joy, justice, care for the Earth and its people. How can a worship service, and a sacred space, express awe at the Earth’s beauty and solidarity with the world’s poor?

That’s finally the center of worship: how it moves us to act.

Being a dad and a pastor is not easy.

They say you do what you tell others to do, to walk what you talk.

And another challenge is time management. Being a pastor is an around-the-clock job, and balancing blood family and spiritual family can be difficult.

The Rev. Golden Davis, a pastor and father of six, recalled when his children wanted a dog.

His response was quick. “We can’t afford a dog. No dog is coming into this house!”

That was the end of that. Or so he thought.

One Sunday during prayer time, his youngest son, Jonathan, who was 8, raised his hand and said he wanted to pray and ask God for a dog.

“My first instinct was, ‘How dare he go over my head!’” said Davis, 43, of Mount Olive Baptist Church in Kansas City, Kan.

“But then I began to think that if it’s important enough for him to pray about, they should have a dog.”

A few days later, someone sent him an e-mail about a black Labrador who needed a home. She was gentle with children and housed at a shelter.

One day after leaving the church, Davis went to the shelter to see Ladie the Lab.

“All of the other dogs barked at me, except Ladie,” he said. “She looked like she was waiting for me.”

He filled out the paperwork right then, and the two rode home, with Ladie’s head on his shoulder.

They walked in the house to a huge celebration.

“That taught the kids that God answers prayer,” he said, adding that it reinforced what he teaches as a pastor.

Davis, whose children range from ages 9 to 21, concedes that he has been over-protective sometimes, and others have corrected him.

On one occasion, two of his sons wanted to go on an overnight retreat. He thought not.

“I was in Bible study with the men and this came up,” he said. “Two of the guys challenged me as to why not. I started talking about kids sneaking out and doing things with people I didn’t know.”

“Then one of the brothers said that as kids grow older, you have to show them that you trust them and their judgment. They went. The sun came up the next day, and they were still alive.”

“I don’t know if other dads see me as a role model,” he said. “But on numerous occasions I’ve had to intervene between fathers and sons.”

And over the years, other parents have come to him with issues dealing with their children.

His children, like those in every family, are all different, including one still in “the fog, searching for his place on the stage of life.”

“But I have to believe that the same God that brought me through the fog will bring them through,” he said. “Children everywhere struggle with what it is to continue to strive and to go further and be themselves.”

He said his father was a pastor, yet he (Davis) didn’t get saved until he was 18 years old.

“With the children that God entrusted to me, I talk about salvation and what it means day by day,” Davis said. “I tell them to always love God and go with God as much as you can.”

He is aware of being a good example for his children, not wanting them to read the paper and see a scandal about him. And he’s looking for the day when his children come back and give him his “parental report card.”

“Tell me what kind of job I did in raising them.”

The Rev. Landon Whitsitt usually is in the pulpit on Sunday mornings as pastor at First Presbyterian Church of Liberty, Mo.

His wife, Jerilyn, sits with their four sons, ages 2, 4, 8 and 12.

“If they keep acting rowdy and cranky, it’s hard to miss them, even though she sits toward the back,” he said.

On one particular Sunday they were being a little rowdy when he saw a church member go and speak to his wife.

Later he found out the woman had kindly said the children were acting just as children are supposed to.

Whitsitt, 33, said he is grateful that his church loves children and members “don’t expect them to act like little adults.”

“When my wife works in the nursery, she has the 8- and 12-year-olds sit up front,” he said. “I tell them, ‘Don’t be mistaken; I will call you out if you are acting up.’

“I’ve never had to do that. They know me well enough that I would have no problem embarrassing my children if they’re acting up.”

As with other pastors, one of his biggest challenges is his schedule.

“Unlike in most families, Sunday is a work day for me,” he said, “so the family doesn’t get to take weekend vacations, and often I have things to do Sunday afternoons or evenings.

“If you would ask my kids, they probably would say it is unfortunate that our dad is a pastor, because they can’t get away with a lot of excuses some of their friends do.”

They also don’t like it when he uses his sermon language when talking to them.

As a pastor and a dad, Whitsitt said, he feels the responsibility to be a good role model.

“One of the things clergy have to deal with is that we represent God to people,” he said. “That’s what people see, and that’s what they understand.

“I need to be the one to demonstrate having a good and healthy relationship with your kids, but I try to be subtle with my modeling.”

Some parents, many older than him, talk to him about their children. In a few cases, they have asked him to talk to one of their children.

To the congregation, he’s “Landon,” not “Reverend Whitsitt.” He thinks that helps the young people feel more comfortable talking to him.

“The only thing we can do with kids is to teach them how to make good choices so that when they leave our house they are equipped to live life,” he said.

Protesters end sit-in at closing Cleveland church

By Thomas J. Sheeran
Associated Press writer

CLEVELAND — Carrying U.S. and Hungarian flags, parishioners ended a 16-hour sit-in at a Cleveland Catholic church that is closing after police told them Thursday they would be trespassing if they did not leave.

The protesters staged a vigil at midnight Wednesday at the 106-year-old St. Emeric Church near downtown Cleveland, then remained through about 4 p.m.

The historic Hungarian church is the last of 50 parishes to be closed by the local diocese. Bishop Richard Lennon has agreed to meet with protesters, police and protesters said. No date had been set.

The protest ended after police had entered the church several times and spoken with parishioners by cell phone. Police Commander Keith Sulzer said six protesters were inside the church. No one was arrested.

The protesters had locked themselves inside and declared that they were well-stocked with food and ready to stay “for a long time” in order to save their church.

John Juhasz, a parish member and protest leader, emerged from the church and said it was important to challenge the closings.

“Somewhere along the way, someone had to take a stand in opposition for justice for all the parishioners, for all those broken souls who were thrown out of those parishes to have a chance at reconciliation,” he said.

Some parishioners opposed the vigil and expressed concerns that it would damage the appeal to the Vatican to keep St. Emeric open and hurt discussions with the diocese to allow the Hungarian-American community to use the property for ethnic language, cultural and scouting programs.

The diocese called the protest an illegal occupation.

“We politely asked that they leave, and a police officer advised them that they would be considered to be trespassing if they did not do so,” spokesman Robert Tayek said in an e-mail. “We are grateful for a prompt and peaceful resolution of this matter and will continue to work in cooperation with the police to ensure public safety and the security of church property.”

Juhasz said the goal was to force the bishop into a dialogue toward saving the church.

“We have been rebuffed for four years by this bishop,” he said by phone before the protest ended. Parishioners still hoped the closing could be reversed in a Vatican appeal, but that decision has been delayed, “and I believe Rome has taken a hands-off policy,” Juhasz said.

Parishioner Marta Fordos said the pastor gave parishioners the key to the church on Wednesday with the understanding that they could stay until midnight, and they locked the door from the inside. Fordos said the protesters took soft drinks, water, desserts and bagels into the church with them.

Last year, a group of about a dozen protesters at St. John the Baptist Church in Akron sat for about two hours following its final Mass. The diocese had obtained a temporary restraining order, and police officers arrived to tell the protesters they would be arrested if they stayed.

The Diocese of Cleveland announced the closings last year, citing falling attendance, a priest shortage and financial problems.

Officials at the Vatican did not immediately return a call after office hours Thursday seeking comment about the situation in Cleveland. They have declined to comment on parish closings in the past.

The demonstrators were inspired by round-the-clock protest vigils at Roman Catholic churches in Boston a few years ago before the archbishop there decided to reverse a few church closings out of dozens, Juhasz said.

Lennon was one of then-Archbishop Sean O'Malley's chief deputies during the Boston church closings. Three parishes were fully reopened, one of which had been occupied by protesters. A fourth church that was scheduled to be closed started a vigil and remained open. Three others were reopened as chapels to a nearby parish.

From left: Hanna Gereby, John Juhasz, David Hoehnen, Mark Juhasz and Marta Fordos peacefully exit the St. Emeric church Thursday in Cleveland. The church is the last of 50 parishes to close its doors, ending a massive downsizing of mostly older, ethnic parishes decreed by the Roman Catholic Diocese of Cleveland because of falling attendance, a priest shortage and financial problems.

VATICAN CITY Vatican, Vietnam agree pope will appoint envoy

VATICAN CITY — The pope will appoint a representative for Vietnam in a first step toward establishing diplomatic relations between the Vatican and the communist nation.

Vietnam has 6 million Roman Catholics — the second-largest Catholic community in Southeast Asia after the Philippines — but there have been tensions for decades between Catholics and the Hanoi government over church property seized by the Communists and other issues.

Last week, a joint working group on improving ties met at the Vatican and agreed to appoint a nonresident representative to Vietnam, according to a Vatican statement released June 26.

The Rev. Federico Lombardi, the Vatican spokesman, called it “a very concrete step toward diplomatic relations.” He said the representative would be allowed to travel to Vietnam, but details were still being worked out. Usually, the Vietnamese government insists on approving most church appointments, and closely monitors religious groups in the country.

There have been improvements in ties since the joint group first met last year. Most notably, Pope Benedict XVI and the president of Vietnam held talks in December — the first such meeting since the Communists took power in 1954.

The phrase ‘under God’ was spray-painted by vandals onto an atheist billboard on Billy Graham Parkway in Charlotte, N.C. over the weekend. The sign, put up a week ago, was controversial both for its message and for its location on a road named for Billy Graham, the Charlotte-born evangelist. The sign features an American flag background and quoted the original phrase from the Pledge of Allegiance, ‘One Nation Indivisible’, before ‘under God’ was inserted after “one nation” in 1954. Violence in eastern India's Orissa state began after the 2008 killing of a hard-line Hindu leader who advocated that Christian converts return to Hinduism.

Police blamed Maoist guerrillas for the killing, but Hindu militants turned on local Christians and the rampages left at least 40 people dead.

WYOMING Church founded in railroad car marks 85th anniversary

RAWLINS, Wyo. — An unusual

church built from an old train chapel car in Rawlins is celebrating 85 years off the tracks.

The First Baptist Church in Rawlins was founded in 1925. The rounded-top doors came from the car, which was built in 1891 and served as a chapel for 34 years. The majority of the building's wainscoting came from the chapel car's original wood. From the basement, the bottom of the frame of the Evangel is still visible, replete with scorch marks from a 1950s fire.

Church members have also assembled a room matching the chapel car's original dimensions and put photos and letters on display.

“There's all kinds of history here,” church member Jenita Calton said. “Ten years ago it wasn't even organized. At least now we have it all in one room.”

The church started with just 29 members. It has been featured in the book “This Train is Bound for Glory: The Story of America's Chapel Cars.”

Congregants say the church's membership has declined in recent years, and they're hoping the anniversary celebration rekindles interest. The church's 27th pastor, the Rev. Harvey Hansen, said the church attracted about 100 congregants a week in the early 1990s, but only about a third of that today.

LOUISIANA Fireworks sales help fund Thibodaux Pentecostal church

THIBODAUX, La. — It's a novel way for a church to raise money: Members of the House of Prayer First United Pentecostal Church in Thibodaux are selling fireworks.

The church plans to use money from fireworks sales to pay off debt on its building. The church also has used money raised from past fireworks sales for mission work in foreign countries.

Pastor Ronnie Melancon said the fireworks the congregation recently sold could bring the church as much as $20,000 after taxes. Melancon says he expects the church to be debt free by the end of this year.

Two earn womanhood recognition

Two young women in the Burley LDS 7th Ward, Burley West Stake, recently received their Young Womanhood Recognition awards.

To earn the award, girls ages 12 to 18 set goals in eight value areas — faith, divine nature, individual worth, knowledge, choice and accountability, good works, integrity and virtue — and strive to achieve them through church, community and self-improvement projects.

Emily Marie Winn, daughter of Brent and Trina Winn of Burley, graduated in 2010 from Burley High School, where she participated in Business Professionals of America. She enjoys swimming, reading, and riding bikes. Her projects included free baby-sitting, making cross-stitch designs for her future home, reading the Book of Mormon, becoming a certified lifeguard and learning first aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation. Emily plans to attend Idaho State University in the fall to major in accounting.

Of sheep, wolves and sheep dogs

I thought that this would be the right week to answer a question I hear a lot. That question is usually, “How could you be a cop? I could never do that.” The truth of the matter is that there really are people who are made to be cops and ones who aren’t.

Let me start out with telling you about the 1-percent people. The easiest way to explain this is to think of a sheep dog. Sheep dogs protect the herd of sheep that we will call the 98-percent people. The sheep dog is there to protect the whole herd even though it might only be one dog to protect that herd.

The sheep dogs of the world I will lump into mainly police and military. These are the people who, no matter what, will stay vigilant to protect the sheep. These are the ones who will run toward the gunfire rather than away from it. These are the ones who re-enlist to serve another tour of duty even though they could go home and join the herd. These are the people who know their lives could be lost, but continue to risk those lives day-in and day-out.

I’m sure you remember September 11, 2001. That was a sad day for law enforcement. More officers were killed on that date than any other. They were not killed standing around; most of them died running in and out of the buildings continually to help people get out. Those heroes died protecting the herd.

I know that for the mathematicians out there the figures only add up to 99 percent. Here is where the other 1 percent of people comes in to play. We will call them the wolves, or any other creature that could cause harm to sheep.

I probably don’t have to tell you whom the wolf represents, but I will anyway. The wolf represents all the “bad guys” out there whose main goal is to hurt the sheep. That could be physically, through property loss or both. It should come as no surprise that some motorcycle-gang members have a patch on their jacket that only reads “1%.”

The sheep dog is also not trained to kill the wolf, but rather stop it from harming the herd. The unfortunate thing about wolves is sometimes they end up killing the sheep dog. That is the day that all the other sheep dogs and herds cry.

If you have a sheep dog mentality then maybe being a cop is up your alley, but you must remember that the sheep dog does not get paid the value it is worth. If that does not bother you then grab a collar and join the sheep dogs.

Officer down

Please put these officers, killed in the line of duty, and their families in your prayers. God bless these heroes.

Post-polio syndrome nothing to brag about

DEAR DR. GOTT: I’m having a running feud with members of my family that I need cleared up.

In 1955, at the age of 2, I contracted polio. I was immediately put in isolation in a children’s hospital, where I remained for several weeks in casts and braces. My left leg was drastically crooked and atrophied in a short amount of time.

I have since overcome most of the setbacks, but in 1985, I was diagnosed with post-polio syndrome. It was like a recrippling and decay of all my energy. Since then, I have gotten progressively worse. I have educated myself by reading much material, visiting polio clinics and attending support groups, so I feel quite knowledgeable on the subject.

My mother and sister now claim they too suffered from polio and have PPS. They were never hospitalized, never had any visible signs, and had no lingering fevers from initial exposure. They have gone for almost 50 years not claiming this. Now, as they age, they want sympathy for their “supposed” polio devastation, and I am furious. They’re claiming I’m not compassionate and think I want the “glory” all to myself.

My dad and older sister never claimed the illness, so how could anyone even want to make such an unsubstantiated claim? Is the theory possible, even without visible signs? My goodness, I would never wish this crooked body and pain-filled life on anyone. It doesn’t make sense to me. I know the entire family did have a fever in 1955, but the germ passed through everyone as diarrhea. My mother now has arthritis, and my sister has bad feet. Do they really have a claim?

ASK

DR. GOTT

DEAR READER: The polio virus can be transmitted through contaminated food or water, or through direct contact with a person infected with the virus. So anyone in close proximity to you at the time you contracted it could have also become infected. And large majorities of people are never aware they’ve become infected, because some people develop a nonparalytic form of the disease. They might experience initial symptoms of fatigue, muscle spasms, meningitis, fever, sore throat and more that can last up to 10 days.

As you are aware, PPS can develop decades after the diagnosis has been made. It can be characterized by a weakening of muscles previously affected and in muscles that were not previously affected. Some patients may develop mild symptoms; others may suffer from joint degeneration, scoliosis and more.

A diagnosis of PPS is made only if certain criteria are met. This includes documented evidence of a positive diagnosis of paralytic polio followed by an extended period (typically 15 years or more) of improvement or stability. Symptoms must begin gradually but be progressive and persistent, lasting for at least one year. Other possible causes need to be ruled out before a diagnosis of PPS can be given.

There are several risk factors for developing PPS. These include experiencing severe symptoms following the initial infection; if the initial infection was acquired as an adolescent or adult; achieving drastic recovery (especially following severe symptoms); and performing physical activities to the point of exhaustion or fatigue.

Once diagnosed with post-polio syndrome, people should be monitored for complications. Severe muscle weakness may result in increased falls. Prolonged inactivity and immobility also increase the risk of developing osteoporosis. Combined with the risk of falling, broken bones may become a major concern. People with weakness of the muscles involved in chewing, swallowing and breathing also need to be especially watchful for signs and symptoms of malnutrition, dehydration, pneumonia and acute respiratory failure. People who experienced weakness of these muscles during the initial infection are more likely to experience these symptoms than those who developed weakness of the arms and/or legs.

You appear to be in a no-win situation. Your mother and sister are convinced they suffer from PPS, and unless they are willing to undergo confirmatory testing, you will likely never convince them otherwise. I don’t know their medical histories, but based on your information, it does not seem likely that they had polio. Even if they did, it was likely so mild that it caused few or no symptoms. This drastically decreases their risks of developing PPS. I don’t understand their comments that you are seeking all the “glory” in regards to your polio status. There is nothing glorious about living with deformity and pain. Both arthritis and foot pain have other, more common causes.

I believe your efforts will be better spent continuing with the positive attitude you are exhibiting, staying abreast of new treatments, attending support groups, and visiting clinics where you can help victims of the disease learn to cope.

Woman accepts plea deal in sex case

POST FALLS (AP) — A 29-year-old Post Falls woman has accepted a plea agreement in a case in which she was charged with having sex with a 14-year-old boy she was hired to watch in August 2007.

The Spokesman-Review reported that Summer K.A. Hughes entered an Alford plea Thursday to four counts of misdemeanor injury to a child. Under an Alford plea, a person does not admit the crime but acknowledges they could be found guilty at trial.

Kootenai County prosecutors had charged Hughes with felony lewd conduct, but the boy testified in May that the sex acts occurred on dates that Hughes was not in the state.

Investigators say it was a slip-up by the boy, while Hughes' lawyer said the boy changed his story several times.

First District Judge John Mitchell sentenced Hughes, also known as Summer Nelson, to two years on probation. Hughes was fined $500 and credited with 14 days served in jail.

Police found out about the allegations against Hughes from her ex-husband's estranged wife. Hughes said the allegations were being used in a custody battle and denied improper contact before entering the Alford plea.

"I am tired of going to court," Hughes said. "I want to put this behind me."

She was arrested last July after a boy she had been hired to baby-sit told police he and Hughes had sex four times. Police also said family members said Hughes spoke of being in love with the boy.

Barry McHugh, Kootenai County prosecutor, said inconsistent statements by the boy made acquittal too risky to go to trial.

Jed Whitaker, Hughes' public defender, said Hughes accepted the plea deal "because the stakes were too high going the other way."

Allred says audit could boost faith in Idaho tax system

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Democratic gubernatorial hopeful Keith Allred's plan to audit tax deals between the Idaho Tax Commission and those protesting their payments has been endorsed by the state Senate's tax committee leader.

Sen. Brent Hill, a Rexburg Republican who heads the Local Government and Taxation panel, said Allred's proposal would boost public confidence in the tax system's fairness while protecting taxpayer privacy.

Allred floated the idea Thursday on the Capitol steps in Boise, adding he believes a Democratic lawmaker's lawsuit against the Tax Commission alleging improprieties is unlikely to succeed — and is the wrong way to enact good policy.

He said an audit panel, created with or without help of the Legislature, would clear up the public's "cloud of doubt" over whether taxpayers with political clout get special treatment.

"I think probably what we're going to find is there is not a difference" in how the commission treats taxpayers, Allred said. "That's the most important reason to do this."

Rep. Shirley Ringo, D-Moscow, and former Idaho Supreme Court Justice Robert Huntley in June filed a lawsuit in 4th District Court, accusing the four-member Tax Commission of concocting secret tax deals handing wealthy residents millions.

Keith Allred

Allred doubts Huntley and Ringo will win.

"I'd be surprised if the current lawsuit reveals any violations of the current law," he said.

Hill, also deeply skeptical of the lawsuit, said Allred told him Wednesday about his audit plan.

While he supports Otter in the chief executive's race, Hill called Allred's approach "a great idea."

"Audits are there to protect the innocent, as well as to discover any appropriate actions," Hill said. "If we can save the citizens some money by not having to defend unjustified lawsuits, if we can boost transparency and nurture public confidence, I think that's a good thing for everybody."

A Tax Commission spokeswoman didn't return a phone call.

Allred also called for the review and repeal of many of roughly $1.7 billion worth of tax exemptions the Legislature has added since 1965 to help everyone from mortuaries and ski-resort operators. Lawmakers have long studied exemptions but failed to dump them amid fierce opposition from beneficiaries.

Allred also criticized Otter for not collecting a bigger share of Idaho's estimated $250 million "tax gap" that goes uncollected annually through cheating or taxpayer ignorance. Had Otter hired more collection staff since he took office in 2007, Allred believes Idaho could have significantly reduced this year's $128 million cut to public education.

Otter was out of the governor's office Thursday. His campaign director, Debbie Field, declined to comment on Allred's audit proposal, saying it was the first she'd heard of it.

But she said it's fine for Allred, a former Harvard University professor, to take potshots from the campaign trail, but that the governor has the actual responsibility of navigating Idaho through the economic downturn and accompanying plunge in tax revenue.

"It's easy to posture without reality," she said, adding Otter's four-year plan to bolster the Tax Commission's staff is well under way but demands strict return-on-investment criteria be met to show new personnel are bringing in enough cash to justify their jobs.

Since 2009, the commission has gotten about $2 million to hire 74 temporary auditors to go after tax cheats.

Officials revise size estimates of wildfire near Las Vegas

LAS VEGAS (AP) — A spark from a wood chipper started a wildfire that destroyed 15 buildings in a ranch community northeast of Las Vegas, and an illegal campfire was blamed for another blaze that forced the evacuation of mountain hamlets northwest of the city, officials said Friday.

No serious injuries were reported in either blaze.

More than 150 firefighters, aided by aerial tankers and a helicopter, were working to encircle the 600-acre fire in the desert town of Moapa, said Hillerie Patton, a fire spokeswoman for the federal Bureau of Land Management.

Previous estimates for the nearly 1-square-mile fire ranged from 100 acres to 680 acres, but Patton said Friday evening they were inaccurate because of smoke and an inability to use GPS technology.

After being sparked by the wood chipper Thursday, the blaze swept through grasses and palm trees near state Route 168 about 50 miles northeast of Las Vegas, Patton said.

Ten homes and five other buildings were destroyed. A TV news helicopter Friday showed a palm grove reduced to tall charred spikes. A ranch home, redened by fire retardant, sat unharmed on a blackened patch of land.

Firefighters battle a fire 55 miles northeast of Las Vegas, Thursday. The blaze destroyed 15 buildings in the ranch community of Moapa.

Patton said firefighters made progress on the fire but it was still active Friday evening. Patton said harsh winds and high temperatures caused smoldering in some spots that were burning a day earlier.

On Mount Charleston, about 40 miles northwest of downtown Las Vegas, fire managers reported 50 percent containment of the 20-acre Cathedral fire in the steep terrain of Kyle Canyon, said Kirsten Cannon, another BLM spokeswoman.

Evacuation orders were lifted Friday afternoon and roads into and out of the area reopened, Las Vegas police spokesman Bill Cassell said. Five trailheads and a picnic area remained closed along with their trails.

Two helicopters and more than 250 firefighters from Nevada, California, Utah and Arizona were battling the fire, which burned a swath of pinion and shrubs about 1,000 feet from homes in the woody Rainbow enclave.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency approved a state request to recoup firefighting costs for the Cathedral fire after determining the blaze could have become a major disaster.

The fire started about noon Thursday at an elevation of about 7,200 feet. Mount Charleston peaks at 11,916 feet above sea level in the Spring Mountains National Recreation Area.

Cannon said the blaze was started by an illegal campfire outside the Cathedral Rock Picnic Area. Authorities were trying to identify the people responsible.

Idaho to pull cash from school

BOISE — The state is pulling funding for a public charter school that tangled with Idaho officials in federal court for banning the Bible as a historical teaching tool and is now being closed over financial woes.

Nampa Classical Academy has more than 500 students enrolled this fall and administrators hoped to keep the state from cutting off their funding while they fight to stay open.

But the Idaho Department of Education plans to follow a deputy attorney general's conclusion, which found the school is not entitled to state funding because its charter has been revoked.

The school will receive a final installment of state funding July 15, said department spokeswoman Melissa McGrath.

Charter schools are funded with public money but given more freedom in how they operate. There are others in Idaho that have closed, but this is the first to have its charter revoked by the state's Public Charter School Commission.

"This situation was new to us and unclear in Idaho code and that's why we requested the opinion," McGrath said. "We want to ensure all public schools are treated in the same way and we follow the letter of the law in every situation."

The charter school commission decided last week to close the year-old academy, citing unstable finances.

The school is appealing that decision to the state Board of Education, but says the decision to withhold funding has effectively pulled the rug out from the under the academy, which is now scrambling to pay teachers.

"Regardless if we win the appeal or not, we may not even have people around to be part of the school," said Erik Makrush, who sits on the academy's governing board. "So they've won without even having to fight."

School administrators maintain they've been unfairly targeted amid their differences with the state over use of the Bible and other religious texts in the classroom. The Idaho attorney general's office also sided with state officials on the Bible front, Makrush said.

Outfitter reports 4 wolves killed

LEWISTON — A northern Idaho outfitter says two wolves were killed and two others were likely killed in the last month as part of a state plan to reduce wolf populations to protect elk in the Lolo Wildlife Management Zone.

Joseph Peterson of the Kamiah-based Flying B Ranch says the wolves were killed during a special hunt authorized by the Idaho Department of Fish and Game that ended Wednesday.

Peterson says two wolves were turned into Fish and Game while the carcasses of two other wolves that were shot could not be recovered.

The state agency authorized four backcountry outfitters in the region to kill five wolves each for a total of 20 by the end of June as part of a plan to protect the recovery of elk herds in the region.

IDENTITY CRISIS

Children of accused spies have questions

By David B. Caruso
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Children often ask the question “Who am I?” as they come of age, but that’s nothing like the identity crisis now confronting the sons and daughters of four couples accused of spying for Russia.

Over a turbulent week, at least some, and maybe all, have discovered that mom and dad are not who they said they were. The children’s citizenship, family history, and even their very names have been called into question.

At least two children involved in the case, ages 1 and 3, will soon be headed for Russia.

Of the 11 people charged this week with being members of a Russian spy ring, eight were parents. Collectively, they are believed to have eight children, although, like much else associated with this strange post-Cold War spying case, the true facts are hazy.

Some of the older children are likely already wrestling with questions about their identities.

Juan Lazaro Jr., a gifted 17-year-old pianist at New York’s LaGuardia High School of the performing arts, was named after his father. But the FBI said this week that dad’s name was fake, as was his claim to have been raised in South America.

Tim Foley, a 20-year-old student at George Washington University, wrote on a blog that he was born in Toronto and grew up in Paris and Boston. Now his true birth country has been called into question. Prosecutors say they have evidence the family is actually Russian.

Two girls growing up in suburban Montclair, N.J., ages 7 and 11, were given the last name Murphy, but prosecutors said that was a lie, too.

“While the FBI has spent years conducting extensive electronic and physical surveillance of the people who call themselves the Murphys, there is no indication that the Murphys’ children have any inkling that their parents are, in truth and in fact, Russian secret agents,” Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael Farbiarz wrote in a court filing Thursday. Their parents went by the names Cynthia and Richard Murphy.

The future of those children, at least the youngest ones, is now in question.

Who will take care of them if their parents remain in prison? Do they have extended families in Russia they have never met? Are they all American citizens?

U.S. immigration officials have declined to comment on the children’s status, citing privacy rules, but note that any person born in the United States is a citizen by right, except in certain cases involving the children of diplomats or other foreign government workers.

At least two of the children, the toddler and preschooler whose parents posed as American Michael Zottoli and Canadian Patricia Mills, will be going to Russia. Federal prosecutors said Friday the couple acknowledged they are Russian citizens and instructed a family friend now caring for the children to contact relatives in Russia to arrange for the youngsters to go there.

By most accounts, the couples charged in the case appeared to be caring parents. Several raised children who excelled.

Tim Foley wrote in his blog about speaking English, French and German and said he was learning Chinese. He said he was majoring in International Affairs with a concentration in Asian studies, and wrote about his plan to spend a semester in Beijing.

His 16-year-old brother, Alex, attended the International School of Boston, a private high school where some classes are taught in French and the theme is “shaping global citizens.”

Reached at home by telephone, the teen politely declined to talk about the case.

Federal prosecutors have questioned the family’s claim of Canadian heritage. The boys’ father, they said, faked his citizenship by stealing the name Donald Heathfield from a baby who died in Montreal in 1963. Investigators weren’t certain where the boys’ mother, who went by Tracey Lee Ann Foley, was born. However, photographs found in a safety deposit box, taken when she was in her 20s, had been developed by a Soviet film company.

Driving while blind? Maybe, with new high-tech car

WASHINGTON (AP) — Could a blind person drive a car? Researchers are trying to make that far-fetched notion a reality.

The National Federation of the Blind and Virginia Tech plan to demonstrate a prototype vehicle next year equipped with technology that helps a blind person drive a car independently.

The technology, called “nonvisual interfaces,” uses sensors to let a blind driver maneuver a car based on information transmitted to him about his surroundings: whether another car or object is nearby, in front of him or in a neighboring lane.

Advocates for the blind consider it a “moon shot,” a goal similar to President John F. Kennedy’s pledge to land a man on the moon. For many blind people, driving a car long has been considered impossible. But researchers hope the project could revolutionize mobility and challenge long-held assumptions about limitations.

“We’re exploring areas that have previously been regarded as unexplorable,” said Dr. Marc Maurer, president of the National Federation of the Blind. “We’re moving away from the theory that blindness ends the capacity of human beings to make contributions to society.”

The Baltimore-based organization announced its plans for the vehicle demonstration at a news conference Friday in Daytona Beach, Fla.

A blind person, who has not yet been chosen, will drive the vehicle on a course near the famed Daytona race track and attempt to simulate a typical driving experience.

Maurer first talked about building an automobile that the blind could drive about a decade ago when he launched the organization’s research institute.

“Some people thought I was crazy and they thought, ‘Why do you want us to raise money for something that can’t be done?’ Others thought it was a great idea,” Maurer said. “Some people were incredulous. Others thought the idea was incredible.”

This handout photo shows Addison Hugen participating in the 2009 YouthSlam, a science camp for blind students, in College Park, Md. Workers at the National Federation of the Blind and Virginia Tech say they plan to demonstrate a prototype vehicle next year equipped with technology that would help a blind person drive a car.

GOP senators line up against Kagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican senators began to line up against the nomination of Elena Kagan to the Supreme Court on Friday, with Senate Republican Leader Mitch McConnell saying that he wasn’t sure she could “constrain the ardent political advocacy that has marked much of her adult life.”

Kagan, 50, has been chosen by President Barack Obama as the replacement for retiring Justice John Paul Stevens. The Senate Judiciary Committee on Thursday wrapped up her four-day confirmation hearing, and has scheduled a vote on her nomination on July 13.

The committee cannot stop a Supreme Court nomination from getting a vote on the Senate floor. It will only be voting on whether she will get a favorable or unfavorable recommendation. The committee could also choose not to make a recommendation.

One member of the committee, Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, announced Friday that he would be voting against Kagan, despite his approval of her as solicitor general last year.

Hatch said a Supreme Court nominee needs “both legal experience and, more importantly, the appropriate judicial philosophy.”

“General Kagan regrettably does not meet this standard,” Hatch said. Hatch’s announcement was soon followed by similar statements from McConnell and GOP Sen. Lisa Murkowski of Alaska.

McConnell has been one of

the lead opponents against the major campaign finance law over the last decade. Kagan, as solicitor general, unsuccessfully argued for part of that law front of the Supreme Court earlier this year.

“She refused to repudiate her alarming position in the Supreme Court that the federal government can ban core political speech if it dislikes the speaker, including speech with a long and venerable history in our country, like political pamphlets,” said McConnell, R-Ky. “I do not have confidence that if she were confirmed to a lifetime position on the Supreme Court she would suddenly constrain the ardent political advocacy that has marked much of her adult life.”

Second meeting for Wade and Bulls

Amare to meet Knicks in N.Y. this weekend

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press

Amare Stoudemire is out of Phoenix and headed to New York — for a meeting.

If the Knicks are willing to give him a maximum salary contract, a deal might not be far behind.

Speaking of meetings, Dwyane Wade had a second one with the Chicago Bulls on Friday, perhaps a sign that his return to Miami isn't as guaranteed as once thought.

"Things are getting very interesting," Wade said after the 2½-hour meeting, which he said he agreed to at the team's request.

Paul Pierce agreed to stick around in Boston and the Mavericks let Dirk Nowitzki know how much they want him to remain in Dallas, but many of the leading names in this free agency class are still available.

Though the focus has been on LeBron James, Wade and Chris Bosh, Stoudemire might be able to land big bucks before them.

When the Suns gave long-term deals to Channing Frye and Hakim Warrick, it became clear that Stoudemire was on his way out of Phoenix. His agent, Happy Walters, confirmed that the Suns were no longer in the picture and said Stoudemire was going to New York this weekend to meet with the Knicks "but we're talking to other teams as well."

Walters said there is "a structure of an offer on the table" from the Knicks. He added no matter where Stoudemire signs, it will be for the maximum of five years and about $100 million.

The Knicks might be willing to spend that if they feel they'll fall short in pitches they made to James on Thursday, and Wade and Bosh on Friday.

James received visits Friday from the Heat and Los Angeles Clippers. The Heat have also spoken to Stoudemire and Bosh as they

A little more drama

Cowboys fall to Centennial in eighth inning

By John Derr

TWIN FALLS — More drama, but with a different result. The Twin Falls Cowboys were cruising Friday, up by four runs when things went sour.

Just like their two games Thursday, one bad inning put the game in doubt. Unlike Thursday, Twin Falls was unable to get the hits when needed, falling 6-4 to Centennial in the Cowboy Classic at Skip Walker Field.

"I told the guys were are playing with fire. We need to figure out those middle innings and I think we will," said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir.

Pool play concludes today and the two teams with the best records meet for the championship at 11 a.m. Sunday.

CENTENNIAL 6, TWIN FALLS 4

With the game tied 4-4 after seven innings, it was extra innings again for the Cowboys.

The Barons got the first shot and quickly took advantage. Chase Harris singled then moved to second on a sacrifice bunt.

Back-to-back RBI doubles by Jon Popadics and Ryan Abel put the Barons up two.

Twin Falls made things a little interesting in its half of the inning with a double by Zeb Sneed, but he was left stranded.

"We had it right were we wanted. We have just got to make the plays. Give Centennial credit, they battled," said Stadelmeir. "Eric Harr pitched a great game. He gave us a chance to win and that is all we ask of our pitchers"

The Cowboys again got a big hit with two outs as T.J. Ellis plated Michael Williams with a single to left in the fourth.

The Cannons opened the sixth with a walk and two singles, loading the bases with no outs. A fielder's choice scored one while a bloop single by Popadics brought two more home. A double steal scored the fourth run of the inning as the game was tied.

While Centennial is in the driver's seat in tournament standings, there is a chance the two teams could meet on Sunday. Last year the two teams were Longview hammered 12 hits on the way to a run-rule victory over Reno.

What can Brown do for BSU?

RS nickelback making strides

By Dustin Lapray
Times-News correspondent

BOISE — As more college football teams have spread their offensive formations, defenses have been forced to adjust, often exchanging a linebacker for a fifth defensive back to cover multiple receiver sets. Since teams still run the football from the spread formation, this nickelback must also provide run support.

Boise State began running a 4-2-5 nickel package two years ago with Ellis Powers writing the definition for the position on the fly, game by game. His freedom in the secondary helped him to 78 tackles, second on the team behind Jeron Johnson in 2008. Winston Venable transferred to BSU last season, took over for the graduated Powers and made 63 tackles, third best on the team.

Venable is a senior in 2010 and the Broncos need a viable replacement.

Enter Jonathan Brown, a redshirt freshman from Encinal High School in Alameda, Calif. Brown (5-foot-10, 204 pounds) worked at the nickel spot this spring, hoping to score the backup role behind Venable. Jason Robinson was the backup, but he pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor battery charge in May and was suspended from the team during spring ball.

Robinson subbed in for Venable during some passing downs last season and

Times-News correspondent

The Mr. Gas Late Models, Budweiser Super Stocks, NAPA Street Stocks, Brennan's Carpet Pony Stocks and the famous Trailer Race of Destruction hit the track tonight at Magic Valley Speedway before the evening is capped off by a fireworks show.

MVS bills tonight's lineup as one of the most electrifying of the year at the one-third mile track, highlighted by a 125-lap main-event race for the Late Models Series that awards double points to the drivers.

Late Models driver Jeff Pohlman hopes to light a fire under his run for the championship.

"Being fifth in the standings right now it is extremely important for us," Pohlman said of the double points carrot dangled in front of him. "We need to qualify well, pass cars in the race and win, that would be the best thing that could happen."

"On the other hand, it could be dangerous for us if we do have a problem. I don't wish bad luck on anyone, but the fact is at least one of the guys ahead of us in the standings needs to

Netherlands shocks Brazil at World Cup

The Associated Press

PORT ELIZABETH, South Africa — Don't call the Dutch underachievers anymore.

Not after the way the Netherlands rallied to upset five-time champion Brazil 2-1 in the World Cup quarterfinals Friday.

After waking themselves up at halftime, the title that has eluded the Dutch for all these years is now just two wins away.

"For 45 minutes we went full throttle," said Wesley Sneijder. "We were rewarded."

One of the shortest players on the field, Sneijder put the Netherlands ahead in the 68th minute on a header — a thrill so huge he ran to a TV camera, tapped the lens and stuck his face in for a close up.

"It just slipped through from my bald head and it was Rafael Nadal falls to the court as he celebrates his victory over Andy Murray in their men's semifinal at the All England Lawn Tennis Championships at Wimbledon, Friday.

Nadal to face Berdych in Wimbledon final

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Rafael Nadal knows exactly where he was, of course, on the first Sunday of July 2009, the only time in the past five years that the Wimbledon men's final went on without him.

"I watched at home," Nadal said. "On the sofa."

Yes, a year ago this time, he was in front of a TV in Spain, resting his aching knees, instead of wielding his racket on Centre Court, only the fifth player in the history of a tournament that began in 1877 unable to defend his title because of injury.

He's here now — once again in the Wimbledon final, once again on top of his forehand-whipping, every-shot-retrieving, foe-demoralizing game. The No. 1-ranked Nadal picked apart No. 4 Andy Murray of Britain 6-4, 7-6 (6), 6-4 in the semifinals Friday to close in on a second trophy at the All England Club and eighth Grand Slam championship overall.

"For sure, that makes (it) more special," Nadal said, "because I worked a lot to be back, playing my best tennis. I did, so that's very important. Personal satisfaction, no?"

Nadal's wait to return to the Wimbledon final lasted 24 months, which probably seems like the blink of an eye to local fans. Their wait for a homegrown champion drags on: A British man hasn't won the title since Fred Perry in 1936; one hasn't even reached the final since Henry "Bunny" Austin in 1938.

"I obviously want to win for myself. I want to win for the guys I work with. I want to win for, you know, the U.K.," said Murray, who also lost in the semifinals last year and appeared on the verge of tears at his news conference. "A little bit more disappointing than other Grand Slams, because this one is, you know, the biggest one of the year for me."

Nadal has won his last 13 matches at the grass-court major, and 25 of 27, with the only losses coming against Roger Federer in the 2006 and 2007 finals. Nadal beat Federer in the epic 2008 title match, which ended at 9-7 in the fifth set as darkness descended.

On Sunday, Nadal will take on someone other than Federer in the Wimbledon final for the first time: 12th-seeded Tomas Berdych of the Czech Republic. Berdych followed up his quarterfinal upset of six-time champion Federer by ousting No. 3 Novak Djokovic of Serbia 6-3, 7-6 (9), 6-3 Friday.

This will be Nadal's 10th Grand Slam final; Berdych's first. Might Berdych feel some pressure because of that?

"I hope so," Nadal said with a smile, "but I don't think so."

With English soccer superstar David Beckham seated in the front row behind Murray's guest box at Centre Court, and about 15,000 others pulling for the Scotsman, too, Nadal was a picture of perpetual motion.

He repeatedly sprinted from one corner to another, tracking down strokes that would be clean winners against anyone else. A few times, members of the eager-to-roar crowd would applaud, thinking Murray won a point, only to be hushed by other spectators as play carried on.

When Nadal won two points in a row early in the second set with superb defense, Murray put his palms up as if to ask, "How many great shots do I need to hit?"

"His backhand's good. His serve's good. His forehand's good. His movement is good," Murray said afterward. "He does everything really, really well."

BSU football team, every position on the field is dynamic," Brown said. "I'm getting a great opportunity out here to learn from the best. Just watching how Winston does it, how he takes advantage, goes hard every play. It's just great to watch him and learn from him."

Brown played baseball in high school and said that helps his football skills. He started at quarterback and safety in football, throwing for 1,364 yards and 28 touchdowns while running for 862 yards and nine TDs. He tallied 92 tackles, eight sacks and blocked a pair of punts. He was named all-conference at both positions his senior season.

"At my high school, I learned the value of hard work and what hard work can get you," Brown said. "It was one of those schools that wasn't too high on football, but my senior year we accomplished a major feat, went undefeated and won a championship."

He said the winning tradition at BSU led him to the City of Trees. He called winning "the greatest feeling in the world."

A nickelback must play equally well going forward and backward. He must tackle efficiently and defend the pass in space. He must blitz effectively and chase down backs in the flat. BSU's defense largely hinges on the success of the position.

"If you're playing on the BSU football team, every position on the field is dynamic," Brown said. "I'm getting a great opportunity out here to learn from the best. Just watching how Winston does it, how he takes advantage, goes hard every play. It's just great to watch him and learn from him."

Brown spent last season on the practice squad, locking up with the starters on the BSU offense. He used the experience to get used to college life and get the defense down.

"It was just a matter of getting your mind right to help the offense however you can, just do the best you can so they can play better on game day," Brown said of last year's 14-0 squad. "I felt like we had something to do with that."

Brown also played linebacker in high school, so he seems destined to play the hybrid nickel. He probably won't have a chance to start until 2011, but he's determined to make progress.

"I'm not content where I'm at," Brown said. "I've got to keep working hard and one day I'll be where I want to be. Through time, it's going to be polished like the players before me."

Scherzer helps Tigers whip Mariners

DETROIT — With the Tigers' biggest star out of the lineup, Max Scherzer pitched like one himself.

Scherzer allowed three hits in a season-high eight innings and late substitute Don Kelly got Detroit's offense going Friday night in a 7-1 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

Johnny Damon hit a two-run homer and the Tigers opened their home-stand with a win despite playing without slugger Miguel Cabrera, a late scratch from the lineup due to lower back tightness.

"I was executing with my fastball," Scherzer said. "I was really pitching in well tonight and I think that's what allowed me to have a lot of success."

Kelly, filling in at first base for Cabrera, doubled in Detroit's first two runs in the second inning and Austin Jackson followed with a two-run single. Brennan Boesch added an RBI single in the fifth to chase Mariners starter Doug Fister (3-4). Damon hit his fourth homer of the season off Sean White in the seventh.

It was more than enough support for Scherzer (5-6), who struck out seven and walked two. The only run he allowed came on Franklin Gutierrez's homer in the second.

The Mariners got only two runners to second base after Gutierrez's homer.

"Tip your hat to Scherzer," Seattle manager Don Wakamatsu said. "His changeup was outstanding. Nothing happened offensively other than the home run."

RED SOX 3, ORIOLES 2

BOSTON — Pinch-hitter Daniel Nava sliced a bloop single down the right-field line to break an eighth-inning tie and give injury-depleted Boston a victory over Baltimore.

Nava, a switch-hitter best known for hitting a grand slam on the first major league pitch he saw on June 12, batted for Eric Patterson when lefty Will Ohman replaced Brad Bergesen (3-5) with two outs and Marco Scutaro on second with a double.

BLUE JAYS 6, YANKEES 1, 11 INNINGS

NEW YORK — Alex Gonzalez hit a go-ahead single in the 11th inning and Toronto snapped a five-game losing streak.

Gonzalez singled for a 2-1 lead and Dewayne Wise's bases-loaded triple capped a five-run burst for the Blue Jays.

The loss snapped Cleveland's season-high five-game winning streak. Oakland has won six of seven.

TWINS 2, RAYS 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Danny Valencia had two hits and the go-ahead RBI in the seventh inning and Minnesota outlasted David Price and Tampa Bay.

Scott Baker (7-7) gave up one run and six hits and struck out eight in seven innings.

Price (11-4), who entered the game leading the AL in wins and ERA, allowed two runs and four hits with six strikeouts in eight innings. The Twins tagged him for two runs in the seventh and Jon Rauch stranded the tying run at second base for his 18th save in 22 chances.

NATIONAL LEAGUE REDS 12, CUBS 0

CHICAGO — Bronson Arroyo pitched six sharp innings and the Cincinnati Reds took advantage of Chicago's wildness on the mound and defensive incompetence to score nine runs in the seventh inning during a 12-0 victory over the collapsing Cubs on Friday.

Scott Rolen, Jonny Gomes and Ramon Hernandez drove in two runs each during Cincinnati's biggest inning this year. The Cubs had six walks, an

Armstrong wary of first week as Tour de France begins

ROTTERDAM, Netherlands, (AP) — The Tour de France gets under way today and Lance Armstrong says he doesn't expect to win the 5.5-mile prologue of what will be his last ride in cycling's premier event.

The short and mainly flat stage through the Dutch port of Rotterdam's city center doesn't feature major problems, but Armstrong has recently struggled in the discipline. He used to dominate his rivals in time trials during his heyday.

Last year, his failure in the Annecy time trial hampered his chances in his comeback attempt to win the Tour for the eighth time. Armstrong eventually finished third.

"I'm not going to win on Saturday, I know that," Armstrong said. "These time trials ... I don't know, it's just I've lost it."

Armstrong built his seven straight Tour victories with strong displays in the mountains and time trials. But at nearly 39 years old, he lacks explosiveness in the race against the clock.

Armstrong said this Tour is one of the toughest he'll tackle, with riders going through seven dangerous and treacherous cobblestone sectors in the third stage.

"The first week, we can't have any mistake," Armstrong said. "We can't lose time. I have to get through the first week neutral. There will be people, I think, that will be minutes behind."

"If you consider the first three or four stages in relation to the last four stages, it's a full race. There is three weeks of real racing. It's start to finish."

The Texas has had a complicated season without much time to practice. He was expected to compete in time trials at the Circuit de la Sarthe and at the Tour of California, but had to withdraw because of illness and a crash.

"He did some time trial work, but it has been a catch-up constantly to find a good condition," said Armstrong's RadioShack sports director Johan Bruyneel.

Armstrong finished second at the Tour of Switzerland last month following a solid performance in the final stage.

Among the prologue favorites are Olympic time trial champion Fabian Cancellara of Switzerland, Bradley Wiggins and David Millar of Britain as well as Tony Martin of Germany.

"For sure, to win this stage is a big goal," Martin said. "Hopefully, I will be able to achieve this."

Armstrong's hopes have been boosted this year because there is only one big time trial scheduled during the three-week race, coming on the eve of the finish on the Champs-Elysees.

The course has 23 mountain passes and favors defending champion Alberto Contador, who is considered the best climber.

Contador says Armstrong can't be ruled out.

"I think he's stronger than last year," the 27-year-old Spaniard said. "There are maybe about 10 to 12 riders with intentions to win the Tour, and Armstrong is among them."

Contador had a tense relationship with the seven-time champion when they rode together on the Astana team last year.

"He seems very motivated, we'll have to look out for him," Contador said.

Contador is aiming to win the Tour for the third time, with help from Alexandre Vinokourov, a Kazakh star who is returning from a two-year doping ban.

"My relations with Vino are excellent, there's great trust between us, and it's impossible that something like last year will happen this year," Contador said.

Rose right back in the hunt at AT&T

Tiger falls 10 back with 70

NEWTOWN SQUARE, Pa. — Justin Rose was happy to be leading the AT&T National, especially because it was only five days ago that he threw away a chance to win with a surprising meltdown in the final round.

AP photo

Justin Rose hits out of a bunker on the No. 15 hole during the second round of the AT&T National golf tournament at the Aronimink Golf Club, Friday in Newtown Square, Pa.

Tiger Woods? He's happy to still be playing.

Rose played bogey-free Friday and wound up with the best score of the tournament, a 6-under 64, to build a one-shot lead over Jason Day and Charlie Wi going into the weekend at demanding Aronimink Golf Club.

Woods, who won this tournament last year at Congressional, hit the ball well for the second straight day. He again got nothing out of it, however, and missed a 30-inch putt late in the round that brought him back to a 70. He was at 3-over 143, which made the cut on the number, although he was never in serious danger of going home early.

"I'm driving it on a string right now, and that's fun," Woods said. "But if you don't make putts, no matter how good you hit the golf ball, you're not going to shoot good scores."

The scoring improved slightly in the second round, especially in the afternoon as the wind began to calm. Rose said his round was helped by being in the same group with Sean O'Hair (68) and J.B. Holmes (69), who also played well. They combined for 13 birdies and only one bogey over the 54 holes they played collectively.

For Rose, the timing could not have been better.

In his first tournament since winning the Memorial by closing with a 66, Rose had a three-shot lead at the Travelers Championship in Cromwell, Conn., when it all fell apart. He shot 39 on the back nine for a 75 and tied for ninth.

"I turned up here Monday morning feeling like I was a better player than I was on Sunday, because you learn," he said. "My game doesn't go away overnight. You have an experience like that, and if you ask yourself the right questions and if you deal with it in the right way, you become better."

It might have been different had he not just won his first title in America. That allowed him to take the collapse in stride, and he sure hit his stride Friday on another gorgeous afternoon outside Philadelphia.

He never had a par putt longer than 5 feet, and he seized the outright lead late in his round with a 30-foot birdie putt on the par-3 17th, making it two straight weeks with the 36-hole lead. The idea how is close better.

"Obviously, you have a day like today where everything goes your way and it's easy to think, 'Well, this course isn't that difficult! But you just need to really keep your patience around here,'" Rose said. "I think nothing really changes

WARGO FIRES 65 AT MONTREAL CHAMPIONSHIP

BLAINVILLE, Quebec — Tom Wargo shot a 7-under 65 — the first time he has bettered his age in Champions Tour play — for a share of the first-round lead in the inaugural Montreal Championship.

The 67-year-old Wargo, the former Centralia, Ill., club pro who won the last of his four Champions Tour titles in 2000, had a bogey-free round at Fontainebleau Golf Club to match Russ Cochran atop the leaderboard and also tie the course record.

Jay Don Blake, Joey Sindelar, John Cook, Tom Purtzer, Jay Haas and James Mason opened with 66s. Corey Pavin, coming off a playoff loss in the PGA Tour's Travelers Championship, had a 68. Fred Couples shot a 69.

CANIZARES LEADS FRENCH OPEN

VERSAILLES, France — Spain's Alejandro Canizares shot his second straight 5-under 66, birdieing the final three holes to take a one-stroke lead over defending champion Martin Kaymer in the French Open.

Kaymer shot a 67. Dutchman Robert-Jan Derksen (71) was 8 under.

gremlin cured, we should be all right."

Competitor Mike Greco, who led the standings just a month ago, enters today's events 43 point behind current leader Rick Fowble. Greco also hopes to cash in on tonight's big point incentive.

"Obviously it's huge," Greco said. "But especially with the spread between Rick and me it will either kill you or help you."

Before Greco can even think of where he might up end up in the standings after tonight's main event, he must first finish the race.

"The odds are against me there, I haven't even finished more than a 50-lap race yet his year," he said. "But we took the car out to practice earlier this week and it seems really good. Hopefully we can get this monkey off our back now. It's a long race though and I am not the type of guy to try and reserve myself. I'll need to pace myself. It will be an education for me."

Former champion Kris McKean continues to dominate in the Budweiser Super Stocks division, but the gap in the standings is much narrower for both the NAPA Street Stocks and Brennan's Pony Stocks leaders.

NASCAR looking at changes to Chase

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — NASCAR is considering tweaking the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship, with chairman Brian France wanting to create more drama to the title-deciding format.

"We want to make sure (the Chase) is giving us the biggest impact moments it was designed to do," France said Friday. "Everything, to us, means pushing the winning envelope to mean what it needs to mean in our sport. We're happy with the Chase, (but) if we can enhance it in a pretty significant way, we may do that."

The Chase was one of several topics France covered Friday at Daytona International Speedway during a question-and-answer session.

Also under consideration are changes to the second-tier Nationwide Series that could affect the participation of Cup drivers, and scheduling requests made by track operators International Speedway Corp. and Speedway Motorsports Inc. for the 2011 season.

But it was the Chase that received the most attention as France admitted NASCAR is continuously trying to improve its championship system.

Introduced in 2004 as a radical new system for crowning the Cup champion, 10 drivers competed over the final 10 races of the season. The inaugural year was a smashing success, as five drivers went into the season finale in mathematical contention to win the title that ultimately went to Kurt Busch, who beat Jimmie Johnson by eight points in the final standings.

Two years later, Johnson began his run of four consecutive titles, even as NASCAR widened the field to 12 drivers and created a seeding system based on bonus points earned through "regular-season" victories.

Now, as NASCAR goes through a self-evaluation period designed to renew interest in a series that has suffered through sagging attendance and television ratings, changes to the Chase are again on the table.

France would not talk specifics, but in general terms, his ideas sounded as if NASCAR is considering both eliminations and tweaking the system to ensure that several drivers are in title

HARVICK ON POLE AT DAYTONA

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Kevin Harvick had no chance to start from the pole at Daytona International Speedway — until the rain came.

Harvick, the Sprint Cup points leader, was awarded the pole for Saturday night's Coke Zero 400 when rain washed out qualifying Friday.

"Obviously, that'll make things a little easier at the beginning of the race to get things going," Harvick said.

Harvick was one of only 12 cars that completed qualifying laps Friday before showers, but the best he would have started the race was ninth. Sam Hornish Jr. turned the fastest lap, but he will start 30th based on owner's points.

The field was set by points for the third time this season. Qualifying at Martinsville and Talladega also was rained out.

Four-time defending series champion Jimmie Johnson will start on the outside of the first row. Kyle Busch, Denny Hamlin, Jeff Gordon and Kurt Busch round out the first three rows.

contention during the season finale. In the past several years, Johnson has had to only preserve a decent finish to wrap up the title with little to no competition.

"We like a playoff-style format for sure," France said. "The big design is to have playoff type moments that only can be, in any sport, created when there's a lot on the line at any one moment. That's what the essence of Game 7s, eliminations and all that are."

"What we're talking about is enhancing it in a way that will bring out more of the winning moments, the big moments that happen in sports. And if there's a way we can do that, and there are a couple of ways, we're going to give that a lot of weight."

Drivers immediately questioned where NASCAR is headed, while Johnson, who has been accused by many fans of ruining the Chase with his dominance, seemed skeptical.

"I know their No. 1 goal is to make it entertaining and exciting," Johnson said. "The thing that I keep questioning them on is making sure that it follows the history of our sport and a champion is crowned in a way that respects the past and the past champions."

Cup

teammates swarmed him when the final whistle blew. John Heitinga picked up Sneijder and slung him over his shoulder as Netherlands captain Giovanni van Bronckhorst, a Brazil shirt in hand, leaped up and rubbed Sneijder's closely shaved head.

The result was a case of role reversal for both sides.

The top-ranked team in the world and one of the most impressive squads in the tournament until Friday, Brazil lost its composure after falling behind and defender Felipe Melo was ejected in the 73rd minute for stomping on the leg of Arjen Robben.

The Dutch made the championship match in 1974 and '78, lost both, and rarely have lived up to their talent in other World Cups. They did this time, helped by an own goal off the head of unfortunate Felipe Melo that brought them into a 1-1 tie in the 53rd.

"I'm devastated. It was hard to see the players crying back there," Felipe Melo said after emerging from the locker room.

"I have to apologize to the Brazilian fans. I came here thinking about giving Brazil the title, but I'm a human being. Everybody can make mistakes."

He was almost the hero.

Robinho gave the Brazilians the lead on Felipe Melo's brilliant low pass up the middle of the field that the striker put home with a low shot.

But the second half presented the unusual sight of the Brazilians scrambling wildly to find an equalizer.

It never came.

Instead, it was the Oranje and their fans doing the dancing as Brazil's players lay on the turf.

Brazil also lost in the quarterfinals four years ago, falling to France 1-0. Former team captain Dunga was hired to coach the team after that defeat, despite having no previous managerial experience.

"We didn't expect this," he said. "We know that any World Cup match is about 90 minutes. In the first half we were able to play better and we weren't able to maintain that rhythm in the second half."

URUGUAY 1, GHANA 1, URUGUAY WINS 4-2 ON PENALTY KICKS

JOHANNESBURG — Uruguay survived a last-second penalty kick by Ghana in extra time and then won the shootout 4-2 after a 1-1 draw to advance to the World Cup semifinals Friday.

The wild win put the South Americans in the tournament's last four for the first time since 1970. It eliminated the last of six African teams in the tournament and denied the continent its first-ever semifinalist.

Sebastian Abreu chipped in his penalty kick to give Uruguay the victory. It will play the Netherlands in the final four.

Ghana missed twice in the shootout, but wouldn't have been there had Asamoah Gyan, who made two penalty kicks earlier in the tournament, not hit the crossbar on the final play of overtime.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 13, the youngest of three children, but I am treated with no respect. My parents (mostly my dad) treat my brother like he's a prince. Even if he loses a football game he is praised. I just started playing volleyball and my team won, but my parents haven't said anything to me.

Dad treats me and my sister as if we are in the 18th century. We're supposed to work all the time while our brother is spoiled. Even when we finish working they don't appreciate it, and I'm always to blame.

Abby, I feel so disrespected. Please help me. I have talked to them about it, but it doesn't seem to get through.

— NEEDS RESPECT
IN TAMPA, FLA.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR NEEDS RESPECT: Does your sister feel the same way you do? If so, you should approach your mother together and discuss it. Even if your father doesn't, she should be praising you when you do something right.

I hope you and your sister continue to strive to excel and be recognized, because you may find that while your father isn't capable of giving you the affirmation you need, others will as you achieve your goals. So bide your time and persevere. If you do, you won't be sorry.

DEAR ABBY: A friend of mine, "Ashley" is being married in September. She invited me to be one of her bridesmaids and my two children to be ring-bearers. I accepted because I felt obligated and didn't want to hurt her feelings, but now I regret my answer.

Abby, I cannot stand there beside her and support her marrying the man she has chosen. He is dishonest and in debt because of his poor decisions. After three years of dating, Ashley gave him a deadline to propose, and he waited until the last minute. I understand this is her choice — I just cannot support it.

She continues to say how she misses spending time with me, but makes no effort to get together. Needless to say, our friendship is not what it was at one point. My question is, how do I back out now, before it's too late? And how do I explain things without creating an enemy? — MOMMY OF TWO

DEAR MOMMY: Tell her immediately, and here's how: "Ashley, I can't be in the wedding. I don't think this man is good enough for you, and I think you are doing something you will regret later. Please don't think I don't care about you because I do, but the children and I cannot be a part of this."

DEAR ABBY: Yesterday, after my neighbors went out, the hose on their washing machine broke. Because the faucet had been left in the open position, hot water gushed out all day long, soaking through the floor and flooding their basement. Abby, their basement had just been refinished. The repairs will cost thousands of additional dollars.

My dad warned me about this potential problem years ago. Ever since, I have always turned my faucets off when I am not actually doing laundry.

Please print this so your readers will know to shut off the washing machine faucets unless their machine is in use.

— GRATEFUL DAUGHTER
IN COLORADO

DEAR GRATEFUL DAUGHTER: Thank you for a valuable reminder. Better to take an extra second to turn off the taps than spend hours bailing, mopping and kicking yourself!

IF JULY 3 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Your ambitions are tweaked in August and that is a good time to make major financial, business or career decisions because you intuitively understand how the world of commerce works. Friends met through organizations could interfere with your schedule in August, but will open doors and offer a helping hand in October. It is possible to experience rough going during November, December and January when you could become the target for criticism or hostility. You can avoid problems by being impeccable with bill payments, rules and deadlines and by not beginning anything of great importance.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): "Make love not war" might be your motto. The weekend highlights connections with friends, especially in groups and clubs. You may find you are on the same spiritual wavelength with others.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Ardent desires are exhilarating. You could be looking for love in all the right places or trying to magically turn nickels into dimes. Burn the midnight oil to follow through on the latest fantasy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If you can create the illusion of success in public it could become reality. Surround yourself with an aura of peace and tranquility to attract more of the same. Delay signing investments and contracts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Love can be a feast, so pretend you are a hot tamale and spice up the night. You are the star of the moment on the social stage, so take a bow. Spread inspiration and enthusiasm wherever you go.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Twinkle, twinkle, little star. Those extravagant plans for the future may have a bigger chance for success than you ever dreamed possible. Others are willing to support your aims and cooperate in every way.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Convert latent resources into assets. You might find it possible to spin straw into gold, make a silk purse from a sow's ear or to simply trade in your old furnishings. Don't get sidetracked by new projects.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Party hearty. You're a live wire and a flame that attracts moths whether you are entertaining that special someone or mingling in a crowd. Expect smooth sailing with relationships as well as finances.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may be 6 or 60, but you can still be a child at heart when relaxing happily in your own home turf. You are in control of your own castle, so it isn't necessary to follow any rules but your own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Business creativity is emphasized. Be poised for new starts and take a hard look at your appearance; look the part. With imagination at a high point, it's time to write down your dreams.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A sense of whimsy is in the air. Your favorite people will respond best to a romantic attitude. Work, and the things you earn from labor, may take on new meaning. It is useless to take a hard line.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Faith in others will be rewarded. A business or social contact may give you just what you deserve. An enchanting appearance requires hard work behind the scenes; don't neglect fitness routines.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Share your joy in living with that special someone. Act out your fantasies while amorous bliss is in the air. A new hobby or fun-filled activity could bring you closer. Invite friends and family to your home.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

*"I passed no secret, darkened nook
Without a shuddering, furtive look,
Lest he should take me unawares
In some one of his subtle snares."
— Alice Williams Brotherton*

Despite West's old-fashioned strong jump overcall, South was prepared to gamble on moving past game when his partner showed game-forcing values and admitted to some trump support. Although dummy held just the three honor-cards, the heart slam looked respectable enough. South's one concern was the fourth-round spade loser, and since there were several possible ways to get rid of it, it was important to take the chances in the right order.

West led two top clubs and South ruffed. The first question was whether to lead a high trump or a low one from hand. Playing a high trump would preserve entries to dummy; the low-trump lead would allow a ruff in dummy if spades did not break.

South made his first good guess when a low trump to the ace revealed the bad break. Now South had to decide whether East had long diamonds or long spades, since if either suit was going to break, 12 tricks would be easy. Realizing that he might be able to overcome a bad spade break if the spade jack was doubleton, South guessed correctly to test diamonds from the top. He led out the king of diamonds, played his jack to the the ace, and ruffed a diamond. When East discarded a club, declarer knew that it was now safe to go after spades. He cashed the three top spades, ruffed a spade low in dummy, and could now play off dummy's top trump and claim the rest.

ANSWER: This auction is forcing, no ifs, ands or buts. Because passing is not a possibility, many players would now use a second negative of three diamonds, which allows opener to introduce a four-card major if he has one. That will simplify your task at your next turn, allowing you to raise a major or pass a call of three no-trump.
