T.F. police respond to hotel shooting

Police responded to a shooting Monday afternoon that left a woman injured at the Comfort Inn & Suites, 1893 Canyon Springs Road in Twin Falls.

By late Monday, they were firing gas rounds into a Twin Falls residence in an attempt to secure a “person of interest.”

The victim, whose identity police said they weren’t able to verify Monday, was taken

Monday evening, police were attempting to coerce Thomas Trevino, 30, a “person of interest,” out of his last known residence, at 346 Third Ave. N., where they believed him to be.

After 4 p.m., city police and SWAT teams evacuated homes near the residence and attempted to make contact with residents inside.

Several blocks were closed to traffic, including Third Avenue from Eden to Fairfield streets. At about 7:30 p.m., the Twin Falls County Sheriff’s Office Crisis Response Team relieved its city counterpart as onlookers continued to gather near the barricaded streets.

Around 9:45 p.m., neighbors said, police shot windows out of the structure before backing off again. Twin Falls Police Lt. Craig Stotts said police had obtained a warrant for the home, but didn’t know if three years, but this is only the second year for chukars. After releasing only 60 to 70 chukars last year, Enslinger said members hope this time to release around 300.

The plan is to release birds in the same area for three years. The sportsmen hope the chukar population will be established enough by then that they can move to a different site.

“But we’re in a stage of learning right now, so that may change,” Enslinger said.

They used to release chukars when the chicks were 5 to 6 weeks old, but on the word of breeding experts, they released 4-week-old chukars on Monday. The chicks are raised in surrogators, large self-feeding and watering containers, until they are released to keep them wild.

The sportsmen have seven surrogators, which cost $2,000 each. The birds themselves don’t cost much — a couple dollars each — because most are hens and would normally be killed by

‘IT IS A GREAT HONOR’ Refugee interpreters aid court program

Kateryna Damaskina describes her role at the 5th Judicial District Juvenile Status Offender Services as being a voice.

She sits and listens in meetings with parents whose children aren’t following the rules and a mediator from the county. When it’s her turn, or when she’s needed, she pipes up and becomes the voice: either for a Russian or Ukrainian speaker or for the mediator who needs to be understood.

People like Damaskina are becoming more common at SOS, a sign, its executive coordinator says, of increased integration of the refugees who call Twin Falls home.

“As people start to integrate into the community, kids start growing up and they start getting in trouble like any other segment of the population,” Executive Coordinator Sam Sites said. SOS mediators work with

House ethics panel starts work today

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

A House ethics committee will have its first meeting today to start looking into allegations that a north Idaho lawmaker improperly used his office while trying to avoid paying state and federal taxes.

Three south-central Idaho legislators will sit on the seven-member committee: Rep. Wendy Jaquet, D-Ketchum, Rep. Bert Stevenson, R-Rupert, and Rep. Rich Wills, R-Glenns Ferry. They’ll play a key role in looking into the ethics complaint that the House Democratic leadership has filed against Rep. Phil Hart, R-Athol.

House Minority Leader John Rusche, D-Lewiston, sent a letter in June asking House Speaker Lawrence Denney to convene an ethics panel to determine if Hart used his office to curry special favor and if the lawmaker’s seat on the House Revenue and Taxation Committee is a conflict of interest.

Hart has tax woes on the federal and state level. He has been on the receiving end of nearly $300,000 in tax liens from the Internal Revenue Service in the last year. He also owes the Idaho Tax Commission more than $53,000 in unpaid state income taxes, penalties and interest that’s accumulated in the last few years.

Hart has attempted to use his status as an elected legislator as the basis for his ability to appeal an order to pay state tax debt, even though he missed the deadline for filing an appeal. In a letter to the state tax commission, Hart used a provision of the Idaho Constitution that exempts legislators from “civil process” when the Legislature is in session. State attorneys disagreed in the case’s filings.

Free to do what they love Local base jumpers honor soldiers

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News Writer

The flag looks small from the edge of the Perrine Bridge, almost the way a toy soldier’s flag would look to a child.

From the canyon rim, a small plaque can be seen at the base of the red, white and blue. The marble embedded in the ground has an aluminum plaque attached. It reads, “Dedicated to the men and women in our Armed Forces, fighting so we can be free to do what we love. Even if that means ‘Jumping off a Bridge’. Donated by local Twin Falls BASE jumpers.”

The memorial was placed with care at the landing site for BASE jumpers on the Snake River Canyon floor just below the Perrine Bridge in Twin Falls. Old Glory has flown proudly at that site for years but due to recent vandalism, the flag kept disappearing. It was opportunity enough for Jess Neuger, a skydiving instructor and BASE jumper, to follow through on a dream he’s had since he first visited Twin Falls in 1989.

“I always thought there should be a flag and a plaque there to honor the soldiers who allow us to do what we love,” Neuger said. “But I was only up here on trips and vacations and never had time to do it. It’s something I’ve wanted to do for years and years.”

Without a trace:

The strange case of Darwin Vest

On a windy, rainy June night 11 years ago, the world's leading expert on hobo spiders vanished while walking the streets of one of Idaho's quietest cities.

Darwin Vest, a 48-year-old self-educated toxinologist, was last seen in the early morning hours of June 3, 1999, at a bar in downtown Idaho Falls. Earlier that evening, Vest had walked from his home to another bar for a weekly trivia game with friends.

Vest often walked at night, relatives and friends told The Associated Press. He had previously been mugged on the streets of Idaho Falls.

Still, it seems an improbable place to disappear into thin air. Idaho Falls, which had a population of 49,000 at the time, had just two murders and five robberies in all of 1999, according to Idaho State Police. Twin Falls, which had one-third fewer people then, experienced two murders and 15 robberies that year.

Idaho Falls police ruled out suicide and doubt Vest disappeared of his own free will, according to the AP.

Vest was legally declared dead in 2004, but his family still welcomes possible information about what happened to the scientist. Log on to

YOU DON'T SAY

Steve Crump

Vest's website, <http://hobospider.org/dar.html>.

It was Vest and his sister, Rebecca, who named the hobo spider, a large, long-legged arachnid you should avoid. Hobos live around human dwellings, and their bites are painful and can cause necrosis, or the death of tissue around the bite.

Vest was an authority on spider, snake and plant poisons. The owner of Eagle Rock Research in Idaho Falls, he testified about poisonous bites in court cases across the country, lectured and wrote on the subject and was featured on the Discovery Channel.

Only days before his disappearance, Vest told his sister that an Oregon business was interested in selling a hobo spider trap kit he had invented.

"I think something bad happened," Vest's former research colleague Michael Williams told the Lewiston Tribune. "Exactly what, I don't know."

Ethics

Today's meeting is a conference call on whether Hart has violated legislative rules — a separate process from the appeal before the tax commission. Committee members will begin determining if there's probable cause and sufficient evidence to move forward with an investigation. If the committee decides that there is enough probable cause for a possible violation, the investigation will continue. The committee can recommend dismissing the charges or a range of punishments that include a reprimand, censure or removal from office. A majority of the full House would need to approve any recommendation, with a two-thirds approval required for removal from office. The process leaves lawmakers with a difficult task, regardless of political party. "It's tough because you are sitting as a judge on your peers," said Jaquet, who will be the committee's vice-chair.

Stevenson echoed that sentiment.

"That's the committee you don't want to have to serve on because you're sitting there in judgment over your fellow legislators," he said.

House rules call for an ethics committee to have four members from the majority party and three from the minority party. Majority-party members are picked from chairmen of committees. Minority-party members are selected by the House speaker from recommendations of the House minority leader.

Under the rules for ethics committees, minority House members on the committee must be "senior in service and experience."

"I went with ones that I thought were well-respected and have a sense of the history and culture of the House," said House Minority Leader John Rusche, D-Lewiston.

Rep. Thomas Loertscher, R-Iona, will chair the committee.

Jumpers

Las Vegas, moved to Twin Falls four months ago after falling in love with the area's outdoor activities and the chance to indulge his love of extreme sports. He said he BASE jumps almost every day — just because he can.

Neuger, 53, grew up in the Vietnam War era and lived close to the Virginia Military Institute. He never served in the armed forces but said he has the utmost respect for those who have fought for the freedoms he enjoys.

"Sometimes it's hard to talk to people and tell them how you feel, especially strangers," Neuger said. "The plaque is a way for me to express how much I appreciate the sacrifices they are making for us."

Neuger first had the urge to try skydiving when he was getting his pilot's license. Skydiving was the gateway to BASE jumping, a more-extreme high for adrenaline junkies.

Twin Falls, Neuger said, is a place unlike any other because of the wide acceptance and support of jumpers. For him and the close-knit community of BASE jumpers, the freedom to glide down to a place where the armed forces are honored is an honor in itself.

On the Memorial Day weekend, the plaque joined the flag pole that had been put up by Neuger and Miles Daisher, a prominent BASE jumper. Neuger has been down to the site on many occasions to manicure the area around the flag and plaque. The spot can be reached by jumping off the bridge with a parachute attached or by hiking a well-worn path starting near Centennial Park.

Daisher said he meets members of the military at many of his events, and always gives them a high-five and thanks them for their hard work.

"I'm stoked that we can honor them any way we can," Daisher said. "The plaque is just another way to give them another high-five."

anyone was actually inside. So for safety, he said, they fired gas canisters inside. The next steps would depend on the home's residents; if no one reacted, he said, police might move in as soon as 20 minutes after the gas started.

"So now, it's a matter of waiting," he said.

In a notice circulated earlier in the day, police reported Trevino as seen leaving the hotel vicinity and described him as a dark-skinned male adult with black hair and brown eyes, weighing 170 pounds and standing 5 feet, 10 inches tall. He was last seen wearing a white T-shirt, dark jeans and had a dog with him and is believed to be driving a red sport utility vehicle, police said.

A vehicle matching that description was parked outside the Twin Falls home. A dog matching the description of the animal Trevino was described as being seen with was also seen in the vicinity of the Third Avenue home.

Though the extent of the victim's injuries was not available on Monday, police said the shooting took place inside of a guest room at the hotel.

Several police cars and an ambulance were at the hotel's parking lot in the afternoon, and the building was closed off by police to everyone except hotel guests and personnel.

Elsewhere in the county, sheriff's deputies kept watch for red SUVs, just in case.

Twin Falls Police Lt. Craig Stotts said officers were proceeding with caution. Police still maintained regular calls for service in the city, he said.

"It is a very dangerous situation," Stotts said. "The best thing for people to do is to remain calm and let us do our jobs."

According to online court records, a Thomas Trevino Jr., born in 1979, has a number of past criminal charges against him in Twin Falls County, including a 1999 aggravated assault conviction for which he served three years in prison.

Anyone with information about the incident can call the Twin Falls Police Department at 735-4357.

Rollover near Bliss

sends five to hospital

Times-News

A one-vehicle rollover on Interstate 84 sent five people to the hospital Monday afternoon, according to Idaho State Police.

An ISP dispatcher confirmed the incident at milepost 134 west of Bliss, which was called in at 3:30 p.m.

A white Ford Excursion was found rolled in the median by the westbound lanes. No details were available Monday evening about what led to the rollover, but two unidentified adults within the sport utility vehicle were taken by air ambulance to a Boise hospital. Three children were apparently taken to North Canyon Medical Center in Gooding, where they were in stable condition. ISP is investigating the incident.

Eight percent of non-English mediations were in languages besides Spanish in 2007. So far this year, that number's been 23 percent.

They range from Bosnian to Greek to Farsi, with a need for Nepalese and Burmese peeking over the horizon, Sites said.

Scanning for speed

State police roll out new ‘e-ticketing’ equipment

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

JEROME — Idaho State Police Trooper Tyler Barrett can write up a speeding motorist in a minute, and it's not due to his nimble penmanship.

On Thursday, ISP rolled out its new electronic ticketing, or “e-ticketing,” system, which helps save the agency time, money and possibly lives when it comes to correcting dangerous driving.

“It's safer for us — the trooper and the driver — because we're not on the side of the road very long,” Barrett said last week as he patrolled Interstate 84.

Once a trooper decides to stop a motorist, he or she now uses a scanning device — similar to what a department store might use — on the bar codes located on the backs of driver's licenses and on vehicle registrations. Once scanned into a cruiser's computer, the trooper receives instant information on the driver and vehicle, including any notices of suspended privileges, outstanding warrants or if the vehicle is stolen. Previously, information was called in over radio to emergency dispatchers.

“It eliminates the wait,” Barrett said.

Within seconds, a trooper can select the violation he's pulled a motorist over for from a drop-down menu on the computer screen and print two copies of a ticket, which are no bigger than a grocery store receipt. One copy goes to the driver and another goes to the court, instead of handwritten citations. Then both trooper and motorist go on their way.

ISP purchased the scanning and printing equipment and software through a $900,000 federal stimulus grant awarded last fall, according to an ISP release.

NICK COLTRAIN/Times-News
Boxes of spent fireworks adorn the launch site of Sunday's Fourth of July celebration in Twin Falls. After the success of this year's show, organizers plan to expand events surrounding the display in 2011.

Successful Fourth leads to expanded plans for 2011

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Sixty-three-year-old William Green got “cranked up” when he heard the Independence Day fireworks were going to be on July 5. To him, having the fireworks on any day other than the Fourth of July sucked all meaning from the blossoms of light, especially for veterans like himself.

“A lot of older people, they don't go (to Fourth of July celebrations) to see firecrackers,” he said. “They go because it is a thank-you.”

But, thanks to the efforts of Magic Valley Citizens Fourth of July organization, which sprung up at the news of the fireworks being pushed back a day and then raised more than $25,000 for the show, Green and his family were able to “ooh” and “aah” at the booms and blooms that lit up the College of Southern Idaho campus Sunday night.

Ruth Pierce, organizer of the grassroots effort, said she never thought pulling off the event would be possible, considering planning began only a month in advance. And, with litter still dotting the CSI campus and stacks of firework tubing still resting on the outskirts, she is looking at expanding the celebration — at least its morning portion.

About 300 people showed up at Sunday's breakfast fundraiser for the event at Twin Falls City Park, she said. While it's too early to make solid plans, she said she'd like next year's breakfast to last into the early afternoon and give families more reason to spend time in the park on the holiday. The group has already raised about $7,500 for next year. Pierce said her group also plans to work with the traditional organizers of the Twin Falls show, Southern Idaho Fireworks.

Her plans for expansion already have supporters in the Green family: William Green's daughter, Desiree, said the breakfast and park activities would be a good way to spend time with her three kids, especially if it is warm out.

Plenty of fireworks, few fires on the Fourth

Area responders report few fire-related calls

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Despite the rockets' red glares and bombs bursting in air, at the end of the night, most of the brush was still there.

Firefighters saw a fairly quiet Fourth of July in the Magic Valley this year, at least in regards to firework-sparked fires. Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center heard as many controlled, but unauthorized, bonfire calls as it did firework flame-ups, dispatchers said.

In the four-county region SIRCOMM covers —

Jerome, Twin Falls, Lincoln and Gooding — dispatchers received five fire calls Sunday evening, one for a non-fireworks related brushfire, two bonfires and two fireworks calls.

The dispatch center for the U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management didn't get any calls at all, said Assistant Center Manager Richard Wilson.

“It was kind of an odd Fourth of July for us,” he said.

Hagerman Fire Chief Tim Peterson, whose department responded to the non-fireworks brushfire, said the wet spring and continued evening humidity likely played a role in the quiet weekend, along with awareness campaigns in the area. His department hasn't received any fireworks-related calls, he said. He said fireworks tend to pose problems for about a week after the holiday, however.

“We're pretty happy we made it through so far,” Peterson said.

About a half-acre of brush did burn in Buhl Sunday when a group of junior-high-aged children let a firework get away from them. The Buhl Fire Department's duty officer, Andrew Stevens, said the kids were let off with a warning because “their parents were giving them a better talking-to than I was.”

All told, it was a relatively quiet night for south-central Idaho's emergency-response services.

Senior SIRCOMM dispatcher Jennifer Davis said 391 calls for service originated from its service area. Of those calls, 214 originated from Twin Falls County.

“Usually there are a lot of noise complaints, but not last night,” Davis told the Times-News on Monday.

SIRCOMM handles dispatch for all emergency services within its four-county area, aside from the city of Twin Falls emergency dispatch. Information about calls for service received by the city wasn't available Monday.

breeders. The sportsmen depend on fundraising and donations to support their activities.

Enslinger said the Idaho Department of Fish and Game said the project wouldn't work. But he said the pheasants they've released seem to be doing OK after three years. This year, farmers have reported seeing pheasants with chicks.

Pheasant flocks suffer more deaths because they like to nest in alfalfa fields where they can be killed by farm machinery. Chukars should do better, he said, because their habitat is the desert.

“Pretty much all they need is natural water,” Enslinger said.

BOISE — A private group that drew attention in 2007 by naming U.S. Sen. Larry Craig to its “Idaho's Hall of Fame” list amid furor over his sex-sting arrest has elevated Mount Rushmore sculptor and one-time Ku Klux Klan member Gutzon Borglum to its 2010 class of honorees.

Borglum, born in Idaho Territory in 1867, chiseled the monumental heads of Presidents George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt in the granite of South Dakota's Black Hills.

In the mid-1920s, Borglum was also in the Klan.

Some historians speculate that Borglum, by most accounts a complex, ambitious and difficult figure, joined the KKK to secure financing for a Confederate monument at Georgia's Stone Mountain that he never completed. Others say he was a “prairie populist” with anti-Semitic tendencies who hoped the KKK would help advance his political aspirations.

Dallas Cox, Idaho Hall of Fame president, said she knew only that Borglum was the man whose labors in South Dakota today draw two million visitors annually.

He was chosen by the group's volunteer board of directors, including Idaho state controller Donna Jones, as part of its effort to honor people from all 44 Idaho counties. Cox said Bear Lake County, where Borglum was born to Mormon pioneers, wasn't yet represented.

“Oh my gosh, you're kidding?” Cox told The Associated Press, upon learning of Borglum's KKK ties. “Well, I'll bet if we sat down and took every one of the inductees since 1995, you could find something on every one of them. That's not our goal. It's to be able to recognize the person for their accomplishments.”

In October 2007, Cox's nonprofit group, which isn't affiliated with Idaho state government, drew attention when it added Craig amid his arrest and guilty plea in Minnesota.

Naming Borglum this year — with 23 others, including Olympic gold medal-winning cyclist Kristin Armstrong and writer Ernest Hemingway, whose association with Sun Valley ended with his suicide there in 1961 — likely won't draw the frenzy that accompanied Craig.

Still, honoring a former Ku Klux Klan member in Idaho, until 2001 home to the Aryan Nations white supremacist group, might raise a few eyebrows.

Firefighter hurt in fireworks explosion released from hospital

MOUNTAIN HOME (AP) — Police say an Idaho firefighter seriously injured while prepping a fireworks show has been released from the hospital and is expected to receive additional treatment at a Salt Lake City burn center.

Mountain Home Police Sergeant Rick Viola says investigators are working to determine what caused the annual Fourth of July fireworks display to prematurely ignite Saturday, a day before the show was scheduled to start.

The blaze hospitalized three firefighters and destroyed about $30,000 worth of pyrotechnics. All three firefighters were taken to Elmore Medical Center for treatment, and two were released later that day.

A Mountain Home Police Department dispatcher said Monday that the third firefighter has also been treated and released, though he is expected to receive additional treatment in Utah.

Idaho high court says no tanning bed tax exemption

By Rebecca Boone
Associated Press writer

BOISE — The Idaho Supreme Court says the owners of several Idaho tanning salons have to pay sales and use tax on their equipment.

In the ruling handed down last week, the unanimous court rejected the business owners' claims that the tanning beds were exempt from the taxes because they were rented to customers.

According to the lawsuit, the owners bought equipment from an out-of-state franchise some time before 2004 to be used in several Planet Beach tanning spas in Ada and Canyon counties. The salon owners — Gracie LLC and Barnes & Barnes Enterprises LLC — didn't pay Idaho sales taxes when they bought the equipment and in 2007, the Idaho State Tax Commission told them they owed the sales and use taxes, along with interest.

The companies protested, contending they were exempt from the taxes because the equipment to customers during the regular course of business.

The Idaho Supreme Court disagreed, saying that claim defied commonsense. Tanning salon customers pay for a package of services offered by salons, the court noted, including the expertise and assistance of salon employees who control how long a tanning bed is on.

James E. Webb Sr.

"Webb," as he preferred to be called, was born in Gardena, Calif., to Leslie and Ura Webb on Jan. 4, 1947, but southern Idaho was his home of choice. He died unexpectedly at his home in Twin Falls on Tuesday, June 29, 2010.

Webb had many jobs during his lifetime, including Keno writer in Jackpot, Nev., with his friend, Linda Elder, transporting vehicles, repairing limos, working at processing plants and driving harvest trucks. Webb enjoyed watching NASCAR while cheering for the Earnhardts; any Star Trek series or movie, a can of beer and a cigarette.

He is survived by his brothers and sisters, Bill, Les, Jack, Sandy and Candy. He leaves behind four children, Linda,

James and Janet of South Carolina and Leo of Missouri. Webb had many acquaintances and was always willing to help anyone in need. He is also survived by his special and longtime friends, Sheryl Humphries, Larry Morris and his newest friend, Connie Connor. His ex-wife and best friend, Pam Webb, will miss his companionship, dog-sitting and handyman talents.

At Webb's request, his remains were cremated and no service will be held. Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home & Crematory of Twin Falls was in charge of cremation. Those wishing to share condolences may do so at www.magicvalleyfuneral-home.com.

Harold Oscar Brown

Harold Oscar Brown was born 22 October 1938, in Onawa, Iowa, to Dale and Bernice Brown. In 1939, the family permanently relocated to Colorado, where Harold spent his youth. Harold's early school years were in Aspen, where the family lived at the base of the Ajax Ski Lift. School for the five Brown children was in a small brick Aspen school house, where Harold made lifelong friends. Harold's passion for music, skiing and the outdoors began here. School was highlighted by memorable music teachers and ski lessons from some of the outstanding local and international skiers. Throughout school, Harold held a variety of jobs and, during the summers, he roamed the mountains, fished for trout and hunted in the fall to keep the family in deer and elk meat. His family relocated to Buena Vista, Colo., for Harold's high school years. He played the trombone, football and basketball. His senior year, he was student council president and Lettermen's president.

In 1957, Harold enrolled at Colorado State University, where he walked on to the football team and "played a few minutes" against Denver University and Utah. He transferred and attended Adam's State College in 1958-59 before running out of money and working construction on the Glen Canyon Dam. In 1960, he joined the U.S. Army, training at Fort Riley and Fort Sill, where he learned his trade as a forward artillery observer. He then moved on to Fort Bragg and was assigned to the 82nd Airborne Division. Highlights of his Army years were a jungle warfare exercise in Panama, deployment to Homestead AFB in Florida in response to the Cuban Missile Crisis, and a deployment to the University of Mississippi to support James Meredith's historic enrollment. In early 1963, Specialist 5 (E-5) Brown received an honorable discharge from the Army then traveled with Army buddies, worked on the San Francisco docks, and ultimately returned to Buena Vista, Colo., to work with Avery Construction until winter.

The winter of 1963-64, Harold worked for the Aspen Ski Corp., where he lived in a ski hut atop the second chair. Off the mountain, he read extensively about the remote Western States and, after the ski season, he headed north in a red Volvo pulling a homemade one-wheeled trailer "the size of two wheelbarrows." He was soon hired as a surveyor in Fairbanks, Alaska. Alaska was a state that fit Harold's personality, and here he soon became a survey party chief for both the Alaska State Department of Lands and the Dickinson & Oswald Company.

In the fall of 1964, he met Jeanne Sadler, a math and science teacher from Nevada and, in August 1965, they married at St. John's Presbyterian Church in Reno, Nev. He returned to Adam's State and graduated in 1967 with a degree in physical sciences. After a summer bucking bales on the Sadler Ranch in Eureka, Nev., both he and Jeanne were hired by Aeronautical Chart and Information Center in St. Louis, Mo., where Harold obtained a top secret clearance and supported the geospatial mapping for NASA's moon landing and moon walk plans. Soon thereafter Harold's son, Hal Derek, was born in 1969. While St. Louis offered many amenities, Harold preferred the West. In the fall of 1970, Harold joined the Bureau of Land Management and returned to Anchorage, where they purchased a home in a subdivision that he had surveyed his first time in state. Harold was again a party chief and surveyed many areas of Alaska, including some original survey in the interior, and worked as a project specialist for the Trans-Alaska pipeline. In 1971, their daughter, Darcie Marit, was born. Harold continued his schooling, becoming a land law examiner and then a realty specialist. In his spare time, he enjoyed hunting, fishing and backpacking in the back country, as well as coaching a local ski team.

In 1975, the family moved to Gooding, Idaho, where they bought a small acreage and built a house with Gooding County "Building Permit No. 1." Harold continued work with the BLM until his retirement in 1998. Harold was proud of his public lands work as a Trans-Alaska pipeline project specialist, work on the Borah Midpoint Power Line and other projects with Idaho Power, the sculptured Canyon Withdrawal, and many survey classes taught to new BLM employees in Phoenix, Ariz. In Gooding, he was active in his kids' lives. He started the first ski racing team at Soldier Mountain, where the kids learned to ski, and cheered at their athletic and musical events. He also loved working on the family's small cattle ranch and hiking and backpacking in the Idaho mountains.

In the 1980s, he first tried his hand at running just two weeks prior to running his first road race in which he won his age group at the Rim-to-Rim Run in Twin Falls. His favorite race was the 13-mile uphill "Run to the Angel" in Wells, Nev. At one point, he held the state record for the 5K in his age group for the Idaho Senior Games, and he ultimately tallied well over 10,000 miles on the road. Harold was also a longtime member of the Gooding United Methodist Church, where he thoroughly enjoyed singing in the choir and performing in the Christmas cantatas.

Beginning in 2003, Harold put his considerable determination into a struggle with Alzheimer's disease. This included 13 visits to California to participate in clinical trials attempting to find new medication for the disease. Harold passed away peacefully at home with his wife, children and grandchildren at his side the evening of Thursday, 1 July 2010.

He is survived by his wife, Jeanne Sadler Brown; his children, Hal Brown (Nicole) and Darcie Hansen (Jamie); grandchildren, Alise and Jesse Hansen; and three sisters, Ferne, Barbara and Annette.

A memorial service and reception will be held at 11 a.m. Wednesday, 7 July 2010 at the Gooding United Methodist Church.

In lieu of flowers, Harold's family requests donations to Idaho Home Health and Hospice, 826 Eastland Drive, Twin Falls, ID 83301; or Gooding High School athletics.

Becky Lea Ann Massie

Becky Lea Ann Massie, 50, of Twin Falls, died Thursday, July 1, 2010, at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center in Twin Falls.

Becky was born May 9, 1960, in Twin Falls, Idaho, the youngest of 10 children of Claude and Goldie Plew Massie. She grew up and attended schools in Twin Falls. Becky married Rod Pooler in 1979 in Twin Falls and together they had two boys, Josh and Matthew. They were later divorced. Becky worked as a waitress at Ranchers Café and the Depot Grill for many years until she was forced to retire due to ill health.

Becky enjoyed reading, crocheting, writing poems, gardening, cooking and doing crafts. Her love was her family and spending time with them. She will be deeply missed by all of her family and friends. She may be gone, but she will live on forever in our hearts.

(Jon) Crane of Hansen and Carolyn (Rhett) Butler of West Jordan, Utah; her four brothers, Clyde (Ruth) Massie and James (Deanne) Massie, both of Filer, Ron Massie of Boise and Wayne (Geri) Massie of Pullman, Wash.; two grandchildren, Joziah Pooler and Gabriel Matthew Pooler, whom she loved dearly. She was preceded in death by her parents, Claude and Goldie Plew Massie; and her brother, Dan Massie in 2002.

A celebration of Becky's life will be held as a private family gathering at a later date. Arrangements and cremation are under the direction of White Mortuary and Crematory "Chapel by the Park" Twin Falls.

Gloria Gay Williamson

SAN ANDREAS, Calif. — Gloria Gay Williamson died in San Andreas, Calif., on Saturday, July 3, 2010, with family at her side. She was 63. For the past three years, she has lived in Valley Springs, Calif., with her daughter and son-in-law, enjoying what she loved — visiting with family, watching movies, going to plays, getting her nails done, eating out and playing a mean game of Yahtzee. But most importantly, she looked forward to Theodore's phone call each night at 8 p.m.

Gay was successful in everything she put her mind to. She graduated from the College of Southern Idaho in 1992 with an associate's degree. She loved to cook and, in 1997, she became the proud owner of The Peppermill Restaurant in Jerome, Idaho. She worked many types of jobs over the years: working in a Tupperware plant, driving a dump truck in strip mines, cooking in restaurants, cooking in camps for firefighters, but the biggest job was raising her children.

She is survived by her husband of 35 years, Theodore "Ted" Williamson; daughter, Tina (Michael) Karratti; son, Roger "Butch" Old Mouse; stepson, Tracy (Mitzi) Williamson; stepson, Brian Williamson; daughter, Julie "Varmint" (Gordon) Burgess; daughter, Stacy (Jeff) Martin; daughter, Lisa "Ralph" (Matt) Wareham; grandsons, Terrance, Derek and Tynel; granddaughters, Ashli, Kayla, Amber, Olivia, Katie, and Kaylani; brother, Raymond (Cheré) Peterson; sister, Lisa (Bob) Sisk; sister, Nadine Hintz; and multiple nieces and nephews.

She is greatly missed by friends and family. There will be a private family gathering for her in Roseville, Calif.

Robert Lavelle Hildreth

brother-in-law, he met his future wife. On Sept. 6, 1969, he married Sharon Eichelberger. To this union was born two daughters. They made their home in Buhl.

Robert left the tire store to go to work for the city of Twin Falls Street Department. He was quickly promoted to street superintendent, where he remained for 34 years. After retirement, he kept himself busy by driving school bus for the Buhl School District.

Robert's greatest joys in life came from his wife of 40 years, his daughters and his four grandchildren. He loved them and they loved him.

Robert is survived by his wife, Sharon Buhl; daughters, Brenda Brewer of Filer and Ronda (Scott) Cole of Buhl; grandchildren, Jenifer, Tyler, Kayla and Bryedon; brother, Gerald Hildreth of Twin Falls; sister, Naomi Arnett of Mesa, Ariz.; and countless others who called him uncle, cousin, brother-in-law, son-in-law and friend. He was preceded in death by his parents, Millard and Mary Hildreth; sister, Gayle Clark; brother, George Hildreth; and niece, Peggy Hamby.

A funeral service will be conducted at 10 a.m. Friday, July 9, at the First Christian Church in Buhl. A visitation will be from 5 to 7 p.m. Thursday, July 8, at Farmer Funeral Chapel in Buhl.

David Owen Hamilton

JEROME — Our dad, David Owen Hamilton, almost 80, graduated from this earthly life Saturday, July 3, 2010.

What an example of love and courage he left for all of us! He was born July 17, 1930, at home in Riverton, Utah, to Owen and LaVetta Hamilton. He lived in the same home for all of his childhood.

Dad married his high school sweetheart, Rita Baker, in 1949. They lived many years in Riverton, and together they had six children. He served in the Korean War and still makes us proud for representing our country and freedoms! In 1965, we moved to Twin Falls, Idaho, where many of our childhood memories were made.

We'll remember dad for all the fun family camping, fishing and hunting trips. Whether we were riding horses at Alturas, climbing in the "cattle rack" to go get geodes, getting poles for our pasture, tubing and hot chocolate at the South Hills, Dutch oven and yummy cooking at family campouts, packing and hiking with the Scout troops — it was always an adventure with dad.

Dad was a great entrepreneur. He loved meeting and talking with people. For many years, he worked as a milkman for the dairies; ventured into sales; and finally found his niche in the motel business. Many of his kids and grandkids will remember the donuts and pop he fed us at the motels each morning.

Dad married Bonnie Lue Maxfield in 1992. They have had a good life and marriage together. She has truly been his sweetheart. As his children, we have loved that he called her his "Bonnie Boo," and she called him her "Davey." Dad was active in the LDS Church, serving in many capacities, but his favorite callings were Scoutmaster and greeter for the meetings.

Dad left us behind to join his parents; his son, Bob; and granddaughter, Lacey; to prepare a home in heaven for all of us. His living legacy includes his remaining children, Tom, RaeAnna, Kent, Kim and Scott and their spouses; 30 grandchildren; and 52 great-grandchildren. He is also the first of his siblings to cross to the other side, paving the way for Betty, Gladys, Clyde and Drew to follow. Thank you, Dad, for the memories. We love you, and we will miss you!

The funeral will be conducted at 11 a.m. Saturday, July 10, at the Jerome LDS Stake Center, 25 N. Tiger Drive in Jerome. The family will greet friends and family from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday, July 9, at Farnsworth Mortuary, 1343 S. Lincoln in Jerome. Interment will be in the Jerome Cemetery with military honors.

We, as a family, would like to thank Dad and Bonnie's many friends at BridgeView Estates, as well as the professionals of Hospice for their loving help and service as we prepared for Dad's departure to heaven. In lieu of flowers, we would ask that contributions be made to Hospice Visions, Inc., 209 Shoup Ave. W., Twin Falls, ID 83301, on behalf of Dad, so that others may continue to enjoy the legacy of terminal care with dignity.

Christy Ann Catmull

PAUL — Christy Ann Catmull, 41, of Paul, Idaho, passed away Saturday, July 3, 2010, at home unexpectedly.

Christy was born April 24, 1969, in Rupert, Idaho, to Brent and Jackie (Cole) Catmull. She graduated from Minico High School in 1989. Christy was active in the LDS Church, Emerson 1st ward, and held a stake calling helping with sacrament services at Countryside Care and Rehab at the Minidoka Hospital.

Christy loved spending time with family and friends.

She loved camping; riding her horse, Scout; playing with her dog, Petey; doing crafts; talking on the phone with friends and shopping. She was an avid country music fan. She grew up participating in Special Olympics. Christy touched the lives of many even though she faced adversity through her life. She set an example for all of those around her as a beacon of love. Christy will be greatly missed by many.

Christy is survived by her parents Brent and Jackie Catmull; her sisters, Brenda (Dave) Wilcox and Shiloh (Justin) Manning; and her nieces, Cheyenne Wright and Caitlyn Wilcox. She is preceded in death by her grandparents, Ferrell and Leah Catmull and Noble and Pauline Cole; her aunts, Mary Catmull, Laura Catmull and Beth Cole; and her uncle, Ron Cole.

Her parents would like to thank her special friends and

Idaho's
4-alarm doctor shortage
emergency

It's official: Idaho is the riskiest place in America to get sick. According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, the Gem State has the lowest number of active physicians per 10,000 population in America.

So if you have a doctor, hang on to him or her for dear life. According to the American Medical Association, 40 percent of Idaho physicians are 55 or older and 21 percent are past retirement age. The Gem State has the sixth-oldest doctor workforce in America.

And because of what are likely to be long-term decreases in the amount compensation the federal government pays for Medicare patients, that number is likely to slide further, dramatically and soon.

This is an acute medical emergency, and one that's gone largely unrecognized by most legislators and Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter.

State Rep. Fred Wood, R-Burley, is an exception.

Wood, a retired emergency room physician, opposes the creation of a stand-alone medical school at Idaho State University because it would cost too much, but he understands the absolute necessity to get doctors into small towns.

Idaho is sending physicians-to-be through the WWAMI Program — a multi-state medical education enterprise at the University of Washington — and has bought several seats at the University of Utah Medical School. But depending on whose estimates you believe, that's about half as many med school students committed to Idaho as we need.

We must — must — find a way to create more medical residencies in Idaho, because doctors tend to practice in areas where they do their residencies.

There are rural Idaho communities — including several in the Magic Valley — just one physician retirement away from a full-blown medical emergency.

We're grateful for folks like North Canyon Medical Center Director Earl Fitzpatrick of Gooding who understand the incontestable necessity of recruiting and keeping doctors. But Fitzpatrick is the exception.

So here's a suggestion for Otter if he's reelected in November: Put Wood and Fitzpatrick at the head of a governor's blue-ribbon task force on rural health care.

And take their suggestions like lives depended on them — because they do.

Our physician shortage in rural Idaho has already cost us the lives of many of our fellow citizens, and it's only going to get worse.

There is no higher priority in this state right now than making sure residents of the 38 of 44 counties classified as rural can actually see a doctor.

Our view:
As a state, we'd better figure out what it takes to get physicians to practice medicine in small-town Idaho — and soon.

Oil: the real green fuel

A rolling “dead zone” off the Gulf of Mexico is killing sea life and destroying livelihoods. Recent estimates put the blob at nearly the size of New Jersey.

Alas, I'm not talking about the Deepwater Horizon oil spill. As terrible as that catastrophe is, such accidents have occurred in U.S. waters only about once every 40 years (and globally about once every 20 years). I'm talking about the dead zone largely caused by fertilizer runoff from American farms along the Mississippi and Atchafalaya river basins. Such pollutants cause huge algae plumes that result in oxygen starvation in the gulf's richest waters, near the delta.

Because the dead zone is an annual occurrence, there's no media feeding frenzy over it, even though the average annual size of these hypoxic zones has been about 6,600 square miles over the last five years, and they are driven by bipartisan federal agriculture, trade and energy policies.

Indeed, As Steven Hayward notes in the current Weekly Standard, if policymakers continue to pursue biofuels in response to the current anti-fossil-fuel craze, these dead zones will get a lot bigger every year. A 2008 study by the National Academy of Sciences found that adhering to corn-based ethanol targets will increase the size of the dead zone by as much as 34 percent.

Of course, that's just one of the headaches “independence” from oil and coal would bring. If we stop drilling offshore, we could lose up to $1 trillion in economic benefits, according to economist Peter Passell. And, absent the utopian dream of oil-free living, every barrel we don't produce at home, we buy overseas. That sends dollars to bad regimes (though more to Canada and Mexico). It may also increase the chances of disaster because tanker accidents are more common than rig accidents.

But wait a minute — isn't that precisely why we're investing in “renewables,” to free ourselves from this vicious petro-cycle? Don't the Billy Sundays of the Church of Green promise that they are the path to salvation?

This is infuriating and dangerous nonsense, as Matt Ridley demonstrates in his mesmerizing new book, “The Rational Optimist.” Let's start with biofuels. Ethanol production steals precious land to produce inefficient fuel inefficiently (making food more scarce and expensive for the poor). If all of our transport fuel came from biofuel, we would need 30 percent more land than all of the existing food-growing farmland we have today.

In Brazil and Malaysia, biofuels are more economically viable (thanks in part to really cheap labor), but at the insane price of losing rainforest while failing to reduce the CO2 emissions that allegedly justify ethanol in the first place. According to Ridley, the Nature Conservancy's Joseph Fargione estimates rainforest clear-cutting for biofuels releases 17 to 420 times more CO2 than it offsets by displacing petroleum or coal.

As for wind and solar, even if such technologies were wildly more successful than they have been, so what? You could quintuple and then quintuple again the output of wind and solar and it wouldn't reduce our dependence on oil. Why? Because we use oil for transportation, not for electricity. We would offset coal, but again at an enormous price. If we tried to meet the average amount of energy typically used in America, we would need wind farms the size of Kazakhstan or solar panels the size of Spain.

“Fossil fuels have been one of the great boons both to humanity and the environment, allowing forests to regrow ... and liberating billions from backbreaking toil. The great and permanent shortage is usable surface land and fresh water. The more land we use to produce energy, the less we have for vulnerable species, watersheds, agriculture, recreation, etc.”

If you remove the argument over climate change from the equation (as even European governments are starting to do), one thing becomes incandescently clear: Fossil fuels have been one of the great boons both to humanity and the environment, allowing forests to regrow (now that we don't use wood for heating fuel or grow fuel for horses anymore) and liberating billions from backbreaking toil. The great and permanent shortage is usable surface land and fresh water. The more land we use to produce energy, the less we have for vulnerable species, watersheds, agriculture, recreation, etc.

“If you like wilderness, as I do,” Ridley writes, “the last thing you want is to go back to the medieval habit of using the landscape surrounding us to make power.”

The calamity in the gulf is heartrending and tragic. A thorough review of government oversight and industry safety procedures is more than warranted. But as counterintuitive as it may be to say so, oil is a green fuel, while “green” fuels aren't. And this spill doesn't change that fact.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Cost of arsenic bond seems exorbitant

I am a senior citizen concerned with the arsenic bond the city is now dealing with and the cost to the city's paying customers which was reported at 14,644.

Beginning in June, each customer will have $11.15 added to their water bill. This will be $133.80 per year per customer, plus an additional $78.05 for the seven months of 2010 for a total of $2,085.05 for the 15-year period. Multiplying $2,085.05 by the customer base of 14,644 customers comes to $30,533,472.20, which is $12,033,472.20 above the projected $18.5 million cost of the project.

Seems a little exorbitant to me — how about the other 14,643 customers?

A different view of school board meetings

As a citizen of our community and a taxpayer, I have paid attention to the reduction in state funding at all levels. When you look at the gross imbalance of taxable sales vs. tax-exempt sales, what the Legislature did to public education is a travesty and they should be held accountable.

I attended both the due process hearing on Memorial Day of this year and the followup meeting on Friday as a concerned member of the community. After reading Carol Olsen's letter to the editor last week, I felt compelled to respond. Her description of Kathie Palmer's testimony as an eloquent speech was what I would describe as a rant at best and at times a screaming rant.

Ms. Olsen, you left a few details out. You must have stepped out as Ms. Palmer shook her finger at the board and said things like “shame on you.” With great emotion (the screaming part), Ms. Palmer said to the board that by having this meeting on Memorial Day they were spitting on the graves of the fallen servicemen. This is what brought about the standing ovation. It was also the comment that Trustee Young responded to.

Ms. Olsen, the hearing was recorded by a court reporter so maybe you could or should check the record before going public with half of the story.

During the Memorial Day meeting, the Twin Falls Education Association had 15 or so witnesses testify in support of their proposed salary package. Many spoke to the point in a professional manner while several others were condescending, belittling and outright personally insulting with their comments to the board. It is difficult to understand how one would expect a favorable decision when the board was treated in such a disrespectful manner.

The editorial in Monday's Times-News was right on. If you are angry, contact your legislators.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Doonesbury

Mallard Fillmore

By Bruce Tinsley

China’s ‘Henry Ford moment’

If these factory strikes continue, China may have to go communist. It’s tempting to wonder which way China will go. Will it side with demands for higher pay and let strikes broaden? Might it clamp down on this budding Solidarity-style movement to protect the all-important export machine? Or will workers demand a true Communism — not just one that abhors Google?

So far, China has taken the first path, going more the way of capitalism than Communism. It raises the specter of a “Henry Ford moment” in the most populous nation, with both good and bad implications for the global economy.

First, the good news. China’s leaders are taking a page from the industrialist who built Ford. In 1914, Ford doubled the average automaker’s wage to $5 a day. It made his Model T more affordable to them and provided a model for a stable workforce that formed the core of the U.S. middle class.

It’s a dynamic China needs more of, and signs are that it’s spreading before our eyes. The positive domino effect it unleashes would create a growing domestic market for products factory workers produce. It would accelerate China’s shift from exports to a consumer-led economy.

Toyota, Honda and Nissan, all targets of recent strikes, aren’t in China just to exploit cheap labor. They’re there to tap the biggest market for automobiles. They want to sell their products to their own employees, a la Henry Ford.

All the chatter about foreign companies closing Chinese factories and shifting production elsewhere misses the point. China, for all its quirks and challenges, is THE car market of the next 20 years. It makes no sense to build sedans or trucks in Vietnam or Indonesia to sell in China. Foreign factories are largely in China to stay.

The problem for manufacturers is that workers know it. Average workers also doesn’t need access to Google’s search engine to know that state-owned companies often treat them better than foreign ones. Perhaps that’s why many of the headline-grabbing walkouts have been among foreign operators. And few workers are about to take on the Chinese state. The risks for any Lech Walesa wannabe in China are clear enough.

Growing pains associated with this phenomenon will spread. Foxconn Technology Group, the maker of Apple’s iPhones and Hewlett-Packard’s computers, has grappled with a spate of worker suicides. The Taiwanese company can’t seem to up wages fast enough to placate staff.

Corporate boardrooms the world over will need to adjust. Big, unpredictable wage spikes on the world’s factory floor will hit profitability and affect inflation rates globally. While everyone knew this was coming, it’s arriving sooner than many thought.

Now for the bad news: the environment. Anyone who’s traveled to a major Chinese city recently knows the drill. Take Shanghai. You get in the elevator of your hotel all excited that you’ll have a bird’s eye view of what many consider to be the current center of the world economy.

You walk into your room on the 50th, 60th or 80th floor of the city’s latest architectural monstrosity and make a beeline to the window. You pull back the curtains and what can you see? Often, nothing. Massive clouds of smog and soot stand between you and the nearly 20 million people below.

Cities and rivers are already plagued by pollution that can only get worse as larger disposable incomes give Chinese workers the itch to buy more Ipods, cars and houses. As factory output grows unabated and more and more vehicles hit the roads, China’s environmental challenge rises exponentially. Yes, China is working on going green — just not fast enough.

China has 1.3 billion people. The question is whether its air is ready for 500 million vehicles churning out emissions. The hope is that China’s leaders will prove as adept at keeping growth on a sustainable path as they have navigating the global crisis. It would be quite a feat.

Yes, China is run by very smart people, yet no industrializing economy has avoided some kind of crisis. If you are wondering what might slam China, runaway pollution deserves a place at the top of the risk list.

Consumers coming into their own is a natural part of an economy’s maturity, something Henry Ford showed America. In China’s case, the ride could be a bumpy one.

Why immigration is a national security issue

The police chief of a town in a violent border region is found decapitated, his head in his lap, hours after gunmen with Kalashnikov rifles killed the deputy police chief and his bodyguard in a nearby municipality. Assassins kill the leading candidate for governor in a neighboring border state. Military and intelligence forces respond to a credible threat to blow up a dam that, if successful, could flood an area with 4 million residents.

Iraq? Afghanistan? No — Mexico in recent months, just across the Rio Grande from Texas. The police killings were in Nuevo Leon, the assassination in Tamaulipas, and the dam is at Falcon Lake, straddling the border between Tamaulipas and Starr County.

Too often, discussions about the border, including President Barack Obama’s address last week, devolve into the passionate debate about immigration. That debate and the emotions it engenders tend to obscure a more fundamental issue: Our nation’s porous border is a threat to U.S. national security.

Migrants from Mexico and elsewhere in Latin America who come here to pick crops, wash dishes and clean houses don’t represent a fifth column of foreign invaders. They are people looking for better lives, discouraged from seeking legal entry by an immigration system that stubbornly refuses to acknowledge the powerful current created when the world’s wealthiest nation shares a 2,000-mile border with a developing nation.

But here’s an inescapable truth. The same routes and crossing points, the same coyotes and smugglers who manual laborers rely on to enter the United States can also be used by intruders with far less benign objectives.

The most obvious examples are the drug cartels battling each other and the Mexican government for control of the lucrative trafficking routes into the United States. The armed groups that have turned Ciudad Juarez, across from El Paso, into a war zone — 200 people dead in only one week last month — have distribution networks that crisscross this country.

The cartels, their paramilitary enforcers and street gangs move illicit drugs north and cash and guns back south. In the multi-billion-dollar drug trade, the border is irrelevant. And there’s no reason to believe the people doing the beheadings and assassinations will indefinitely be solicitous about keeping violence on one side of an international boundary, as the alleged plot to blow up Falcon Dam suggests.

There are some less-obvious examples as well. In May, the Department of Homeland Security warned law enforcement officials in Texas of the potential illegal entry from Mexico of a suspected member of the al-Shabaab terrorist group, an al-Qaida affiliate in Somalia.

Why would terrorists from Somalia or anywhere else choose to clandestinely enter the United States from Mexico? Because if millions of Mexican laborers can do it, so can they.

That’s the troubling fact at the heart of what the U.S. government calls “special interest aliens” — illegal immigrants from countries that pose a national security threat. Hundreds of them are apprehended in the United States each year. No one knows how many are being missed.

A recent report from the U.S. Southern Command obtained by the Washington Examiner raises a warning flag on the special interest alien problem. “Of particular concern is the smuggling of criminal aliens and gang members who pose public safety threats to communities throughout the border region and the country,” it cautions. “These individuals include hundreds of undocumented aliens from special interest countries, primarily China, but also Afghanistan, Iran, Iraq, and Pakistan.”

People who wish to do harm to the United States can and are entering the country undetected. That ought to be the starting point of any national discussion about the border.

When ‘helicopter parents’ suffer

A woman I’ll call Erica, a 45-year-old mother of three, has a system for monitoring her children’s television and movie watching. Three systems, actually: one for the 9-year-old, one for the 13-year-old and one for the 16-year-old. To implement these systems, she told me, she often watches television with her children. She also tries to accompany them to movies outside the home. Finally, she requires them to discuss with her the content, whether she watched it with them or they viewed it alone.

When people worry about today’s hyper-involved parenting — or helicopter parenting, as some have dubbed it, for its constant hovering — that worry is almost always directed at children. Critics fret the children of helicopter parents will lack maturity, self-reliance, self-esteem and good old-fashioned gumption. For example, a recent study of 300 college freshmen by Neil Montgomery, a psychologist at Keene State College, found students with helicopter parents were more dependent, more neurotic and less open than other students. Another report, by Barbara Hofer, a psychologist at Middlebury College, found a connection between how frequently Middlebury students communicate with their parents and how dependent they are on their parents.

But after interviewing nearly 100 parents for my own research on contemporary parenting practices, I’m more worried about the mothers. Erica’s TV policy is exhaustive and exhausting. And among the affluent parents who take similar approaches to child-rearing, TV is just the beginning. The same kind of intense, highly personalized care goes into overseeing children’s computer use, friendships, extracurricular activities and schoolwork.

This type of parenting isn’t practiced by all: American parenting styles are starkly divided by class. Compared with professional, middle-class parents, parents of lower educational and professional status are more likely to impose nonnegotiable limits on their children’s behavior. Rather than sitting down and watching television with their children, for example, they simply block certain channels. Rather than looking over a child’s shoulder while he or she is using the computer, they rely on software to prevent access to certain Internet sites.

Helicopter parenting is more time-consuming and more emotionally demanding than other parenting styles. And much of its work falls on women. Since 1965, the amount of time mothers spend on all child-care activities has risen, even though the majority of mothers are now in the labor force; the increase has been particularly sharp among highly educated mothers.

According to sociologists Suzanne Bianchi, John Robinson and Melissa Milkie, adults in 2000 spent less time with their spouses than adults did in 1975, as they spent more time at work and with their children. The higher divorce rate among women with high-pressure careers could be both a cause and a consequence of intense devotion to children.

When people turn inward to their families, their communities also pay a price. In a series of studies, sociologists Naomi Gerstel, Sally Gallagher and Natalia Sarkisian have shown that, parenting practices notwithstanding, marriage is a greedy institution. Compared with singles, married people are less likely to visit relatives, less likely to take care of elderly parents and less involved with neighbors and friends.

I suspect the tendency to turn inward must be even more intense among hyper-vigilant parents. And this withdrawal may extend to parents’ broader social and civic engagement and to friendship. The time married parents spend visiting with friends and relatives outside the nuclear family has declined dramatically: Married fathers spent almost 40 percent less time and married mothers spent almost a third less time socializing in 2000 than they did in 1965.

Many of the helicopter mothers I’ve spoken to say their daughters are their best friends. At first, I wondered why these women wouldn’t prefer to spend their free time with people their own age. But as I looked more closely at the way they are tackling parenthood, I understood: They have no free time.

Margaret K. Nelson is the A. Barton Hepburn professor of sociology at Middlebury College.

GREGG MIDDLEKAUFF'S QUOTE OF THE DAY

What happens when you believe something with all your heart?

Belief fuels enthusiasm, and determined enthusiasm explodes into passion. It fires our souls and uplifts our spirits.

Eating champ Kobayashi leaves N.Y. jail after hot dog fracas

NEW YORK (AP) — Japanese eating champion Takeru Kobayashi, arrested at a July Fourth hot dog-eating contest, was freed Monday after a night in jail, looking a little weary and saying he was hungry.

Kobayashi, wearing a black T-shirt bearing the message "Free Kobi" in green letters, was freed by a Brooklyn judge after he pleaded not guilty. The slim, boyish 32-year-old said he consumed only a sandwich and some milk in jail.

A contract dispute had kept Kobayashi out of Sunday's annual Nathan's Famous International Hot Dog Eating Contest, but he showed up anyway.

"I was there as a spectator, just to cheer on my buddies," he said through an interpreter outside court Monday. Fans chanted for him, and "in the heat of it, I jumped on the stage, hoping they would let me eat."

His attorney, Mario D. Romano, said his client was waved up onstage after spectators began chanting

Kobayashi

"Let him eat!" "Shortly after he got on the stage, he was grabbed from behind by officers," Romano said.

Kobayashi was charged with obstruction of governmental administration, resisting arrest, trespassing and disorderly conduct.

Kobayashi, who's currently living in New York, had refused to sign a contract with Major League Eating, the fast food equivalent of the NFL. On his Japanese-language blog, he said he wanted to be free to enter contests sanctioned by other groups.

But a few days ago, he told Japan's Kyodo News: "I really want to compete in the (Coney Island) event."

Joey "Jaws" Chestnut, of San Jose, Calif., won by downing 54 hot dogs in 10 minutes.

After witnessing the drama involving Kobayashi, Chestnut said, "I feel bad for him."

Chestnut claimed the mustard-yellow champion's belt and a $20,000 purse but was disappointed with his own performance. The 26-year-old was aiming for a record 70 dogs in 10 minutes. Last year, he ate

EASY LIVING, OFF THE GRID

Photos by ARIEL HANSEN/Times-News

Thin film photovoltaics power Hailey-area home

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — There are no power lines along the winding dirt road up to Scott and Ardath Kimmich's home in Croy Canyon. Not because they don't have electricity, but because they make it themselves.

The south side of the 5,000-square-foot house's roof is covered with thin film photovoltaic cells, bonded directly to the metal roof so they are nearly invisible to the casual viewer.

But at the Kimmich house, there rarely is a casual viewer — because Scott is proud of the system he designed and installed when he built the home 11 years ago, and eager to share the details.

"This is a terrifically successful project; I surpassed my own expectations for it," he said. "We're living the 21st century dream, but we started dreaming it in 1999."

When he began sketching out the house in the mid-1990s, he said, Idaho Power told the couple it would cost $56,000 to bring electricity to the old mine claim site.

So Scott, who had long been interested in alternative energy and self-sufficiency, penciled out the costs of a thin film (amorphous) photovoltaic system, complete with inverter and batteries. For $38,000, he figured out, he could build a system that would not only provide all the electricity the generously sized house needed, but would fit Ardath's request that it be aesthetically pleasing.

Compared with more traditional crystal silicon panels, which are usually mounted on posts and then attached to a pole or a roof, thin film panels are more forgiving of temperature changes, allow snow to easily slough off, and are barely noticeable in design.

With modern inverters, there are none of the power fluctuations that old solar systems used to have, and the panels the Kimmiches installed provide enough electricity for a Viking range, electric guitar amps, flat-panel televisions and plenty of comfort.

"We're always bright lit, we

An old carbon-arc lantern, refitted to run on a small incandescent bulb, is a joke that Scott Kimmich built into his efficient Hailey-area home. Most of the bulbs in the house are compact fluorescent or LED, but the home's solar panels produce enough electricity for power hogs like a Viking range and toaster oven.

The only maintenance Scott Kimmich has done to his photovoltaic electrical system since he installed it 11 years ago is to add water to this bank of batteries, he said. The home has a backup generator to accommodate long periods of cloudy weather, but it runs just a few hours a year.

never worry about it," Ardath said.

Scott said the even flow of electricity through the inverter compared with the flow from the electric grid lengthens the life of appliances and light bulbs, as well.

Ardath loves the independence the system provides. "The thing that really got me is, if I'm going to spend a lot of money making house payments, it goes dark and cold and you can't flush the toilets because of somebody else

(during a power outage). We have to trust our homes."

Their family got to experience some of that reliability last Christmas, when the entire Wood River Valley lost power for several days; they celebrated at the Croy Canyon home instead of downtown Hailey, and a relative was able to get needed oxygen.

The system has been basically maintenance-free, Scott said, aside from adding water to the lead acid battery bank every few months.

"I've spent more time repairing the dishwasher," he said with a laugh.

Today, a system like the Kimmiches' is eligible for governmental rebates, and solar panels are now viewed by the real estate industry as an improvement, much like a hot tub or a deck, to bump up the value of a home.

But the cost of adding a thin film photovoltaic system is still fairly high, at about $8 a watt. And a system that generates 1,500 to 2,000 watts would offset a third to half of an average middle-class home's energy, estimated Scott, a retired engineer who consults with homeowners to help them make decisions about photovoltaic systems.

"It does feel good to help somebody take their residential load off the grid and help them become more independent," Scott said. "I'd love to see everybody be subsidized for solar panels on all the roofs across the nation."

According to Solar-Buzz.com, the cost for a thin film photovoltaic cell is about $4.21 a watt, but that doesn't include installation or the inverter and battery array you need to complete your system. RenewableEnergyWorld.com estimated a similar price of $5.02 per watt for

Hand pruning, taken literally

By Lee Reich
For The Associated Press

Right now, you have with you a most useful pruning tool — two different kinds of pruning tools, in fact: your hands, and your thumbnail. Let's start with the first.

Use your hands to rip unwanted stems from plants. Yes, it seems brutal, but this method of pruning can sometimes do a better job and leave the plant healthier than can a precision cut with fancy pruning shears. Hand pruning — by ripping off stems — is the best way to get rid of suckers, which are vigorous, usually vertical, stems.

On apple trees, suckers often pop up from the upper sides of limbs. The problem with apple suckers is they're usually not fruitful, they shade the rest of the tree and they rob other branches of nutrients.

On tomato plants, suckers grow wherever a leaf meets the main stem. Sucker growth causes tomato plants trained to grow up stakes or inside cages to become congested with stems. That makes it harder to find fruits and the resulting dankness promotes diseases. Just rip those suckers off.

So what's wrong with using pruning shears on suckers? Pruning shears can infect a healthy plant with diseased sap picked up from a sick plant. Your hand, grabbing only the outside of a stem, is unlikely to transmit disease from one plant to the next.

Also, suckers cut back with pruning shears often rebel with one to four vigorous, new suckers poking up right where you cut. Such regrowth is rare when you grab a sucker in your hand, then give it a quick downward jerk, because then buds hidden at the base of a shoot come off also. Hand pruning is most effective with suckers still young and succulent.

Now for the thumbnail. This tool has a different use than your whole hand.

Your thumbnail is ideal for pinching out just the tips of shoots. Why would you want to do that? For one thing, to promote bushiness. Of your zinnia plant, for example. Or your cushion 'mums. Or your potted avocado, which thus far is perhaps nothing more than a single, gawky stalk.

Sometimes the best way to prune your plants is by using your own two hands.

Pinching out the tip of a shoot with your thumbnail is also useful for temporarily checking the shoot's growth. Do this when more than one stem is trying to become the main trunk of a young tree. Too many "top dogs" leads to weak limbs, so pinch out the tips of all but the best shoot to give that shoot the opportunity to jump ahead of the pack and become the future tree trunk.

The advantage of pinching the tips of such shoots rather than just lopping off whole shoots is that pinching is less debilitating to a young tree, which, after all, you want to grow as much as possible.

Use your thumbnail also to pump more energy into flowers and fruits. "Dinnerplate"-size dahlias come from pinching off blossom buds forming along the stems, leaving just the flower on the top of the stem. (In addition, start with a naturally, large-flowered variety.)

And large, luscious peaches and apples are what result when you pinch off enough fruitlets to put a few inches of space along the stems between those that remain.

Especially this time of year, while flowers are in bud, fruits are small, and stems still succulent, your hands offer two convenient and low maintenance pruning tools. Use them!

The right decking material is good long-term investment

DEAR JIM: I want to build a deck off my family room sliding glass door.

I want it to be as environmentally friendly and energy efficient as possible. What design and material suggestions can you give me? — Robert C.

DEAR ROBERT: A deck can actually be energy efficient in several ways. If having a deck allows you to spend more time outdoors, then you should be able to set your central air condition thermostat higher during the times you are primarily outdoors. Setting it higher even for just a few extra hours per day can significantly reduce your electric bills.

A properly designed deck with a pergola or some type of tall side wall can also provide shading for your house. This is particularly helpful if it can shade the glass patio door. A tremendous amount of heat transfers in through a large glass door when it is exposed to the direct afternoon sun.

In addition to saving energy, you can make environmentally friendly choices for the decking materials. For the deck framing, engineered lumber can be used instead of standard solid 2x lumber. Engineered lumber is stronger and often made from smaller wood pieces so less prime wood is required overall.

The choice of decking is most important. Pressure-treated wood is abundant and the least expensive material to use. The only environmental drawbacks to wood are its limited life and the harsh cleaning and sealing chemicals which must be applied every year or two to extend its life.

Trex just developed a new decking material, Transcend, which is the most environmentally friendly material available. It is made from 95 percent recycled materials, primarily from plastic bags and sawdust. I just replaced my 10-year-old deteriorated wood decking with it.

Transcend is different from other composite decking in that it has a thin polymer top cap. This makes it easy to clean without harsh chemicals and it does not stain or support mildew growth as many composite materials do. It is more expensive than wood, but considering its very long life and minimal maintenance, it is a good long-term investment.

Building a vertical wall on the southwest side of the deck is most effective

SENSIBLE HOME

for shading. This also provides privacy. The simplest design uses just standard posts covered by lattice. The openings in the lattice allow some breezes to pass through. Planting climbing vines along the lattice also enhances the cooling by natural transpiration from the plants.

Another option for the shading wall is to install horizontal slats. By tilting them at the proper angle, the direct afternoon sun can be blocked while providing ample area for breezes. The best angle for the slats depends upon your area's latitude and the deck's orientation to the sun. Make some cardboard slats to test for the best angle.

To block the sun from a more overhead direction, build a pergola over the deck. This is attractive, and by allowing plants to grow up and over it, it can provide additional shading.

DEAR JIM: My central air conditioner outdoor condenser unit is mounted on a concrete slab. It was level when it was installed several years ago, but now it looks tilted. Will this reduce the efficiency of the unit? — Doris M.

DEAR DORIS: The outdoor condenser unit for a central air conditioner can have a slight tilt and still work fine. Check with your heating and cooling contractor for manufacturer's recommendations for the maximum tilt.

Since these concrete slabs are seldom installed on footers, they all will settle and tilt a little. The fact that you noticed it means it might be extreme. Contact a contractor who specializes in leveling slabs and patios.

Gardening books to boost your know-how

By Joel M. Lerner
Special to The Washington Post

A well-informed gardener is more likely to be a successful gardener. Here are some useful books.

"Urban and Suburban Meadows," by Catherine Zimmerman (Matrix Media Press, 2010), is a practical compilation of information collected from Zimmerman's background growing up on a small farm in the 1950s and '60s and her training and certification in horticulture and organic gardening. She captures the enjoyment of having a meadow garden and takes you through the steps of how to create one for yourself. $29.95.

"Grow Your Own Drugs," by James Wong (Reader's Digest, 2010), contains recipes and growing guidelines to create natural remedies and cosmetics. Recipes include those for heartburn (seaweed stomach soother), insect bites and stings (plantain cream), blemishes (witch hazel gel), and sunburn (carrot and aloe cream). $19.95.

"The Pruning Book: Completely Revised and Updated," by Lee Reich (Taunton Press, 2010), is the most thorough book I have ever used on the subject of pruning. Reich offers the latest theories on pruning, including roots, fruit trees, neglected shrubs, tender plants, topiaries, vines and bonsai. $21.95.

"The Lives of Trees," by Diana Wells (Algonquin, 2010), reads like a novel. The information is presented in mostly three-page abstracts about each plant, offering history, philosophy, prose, anecdotes and information about the plant's culture. $19.95.

"How to Plant a Tree: A Simple Celebration of Trees and Tree Planting Ceremonies," by Daniel Butler (Penguin, 2010), offers hints of what draws people to the landscape and why we want to connect with trees and nature. $15.95.

"All New Square Foot Gardening Cookbook: Taking the Harvest to the Table" by Mel Bartholomew

(Cool Spring Press, 2009) is the perfect book for planning your vegetable garden. $19.95.

"New Backyard Idea Book" by Natalie Erman Russell (Taunton Press, 2010) is for amateur gardeners who have difficulty visualizing what they want for their landscape design. $19.95.

"Patio & Stone" by Tom Wilhite and the editors of Sunset Books (2009) offers a way to accessorize your landscape. Natural stone symbolizes permanence, and this book brings masonry to you in a visually stimulating fashion with color photographs of stonework and companion plants. $22.95.

small-quantity buyers, again exclusive of installation and a complete system.

Thin film panels do require metal roofing, so if a homeowner is planning to replace the roof already, that's a great time to consider photovoltaics, Scott said, but virtually any roof can be retrofitted to accommodate them.

The Kimmiches hope to spread the word about how efficient and reliable thin film photovoltaics can be. To that end they've put the Croy Canyon home up for sale, listed at $3.995 million, with the intention of building a similar but smaller project in downtown Hailey where it will be more visible.

In the meantime, they are enjoying the quiet and independence of their canyon retreat.

With an in-floor radiant heating system, pictured, and a photovoltaic inverter and battery system, Scott Kimmich's home is efficient and technologically advanced.

"It's so comfortable we hardly want to go anywhere," Scott said, describing the winter warmth and summer cool that the home's passive solar design makes possible, as well as the modern technologies the couple enjoys. Instead of giving anything up, their solar home allows them to choose relative luxury but live consciously.

"We believed it was time for a change, and the only thing we could change was our own lives," Scott said.

Gardens are made in the shade

By Susan Smith-Durisek
McClatchy Newspapers

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Chris Miller’s life definitely is made in the shade. At her business — Bluegrass Hosta Farm, just west of Georgetown, Ky. — Miller and her husband, Tom, spend hours with their shade-loving plants. But in the spring and early summer, Chris Miller finds little time to relax. She is hard at work, creating display gardens, propagating plants and welcoming visitors who share a fondness for the more than 950 hosta varieties she grows and markets. Newcomers looking for their first fantastic foliage plant or, as she quips, seasoned “hostaholics” searching for the next specimen for their collection, can find treasures at the farm. While most garden centers have sizable supplies of hostas, Miller’s garden is a rare find, where friendly horticultural expertise, artful presentation and a broad selection of one plant come together. Shade-loving, easy-care hostas were brought to the United States from their native China, Korea and Japan around the late 1700s. They have grown in popularity in U.S. gardens during the last 30 years, and breeders have responded with a diversity of variations. Tom Miller says there now are about 1,500 introductions each year. They can vary in size from the miniature Blue Mouse Ears to the giant Green Dragonet. Leaf colors can range from pale mint green to electric chartreuse; there are blues with a soft waxy surface, bright golds, whites and even some new red features that combine into endless, subtle variations. Leaf shapes — some floppy rounded hearts, others upright pointed-end ovals — and textures — smooth to corrugated — add to the mix, creating a tempting palette for budding garden designers. Names tickle the imagination: Marilyn Monroe, with its wavy edged leaves; Praying Hands, whose upright leaves twist at the top; Woolly Mammoth, with round, corrugated leaves. Chris Miller says Liberty, which has green-centered leaves balanced by a wide, creamy gold border, “is so showy that it’s going to grab people.” Flowers, which take second billing to the leaves, are an added bonus when they appear in mid-summer. “I look for unique and unusual qualities like different forms, improved flower show and coloration when I choose hostas,” Chris Miller says. When the Millers founded their farm in 1993, Tom Miller asked his wife, “What are you going to do, plant all 12 acres?” Her reply, “I’d like to. I want to plant my own park!” Miller carried out her “park” plan by establishing a tree canopy to provide the right light conditions, gradually adding beds. Most have a focal point, like the Yin/Yang miniature bed, featuring the classic symbol formed with light and dark mulch and dotted with painted bowling balls. It’s planted with X-Ray, Pandora’s Box and other tiny temptations. The gardens also features companion planting ideas, such as Japanese maples, and brunneras, and give Miller opportunities to discuss planting and cultivation ideas while giving tours. Some of her suggestions: • Pot-in-pot planting under trees helps to prevent tree roots from competing with hostas for water. It also defines space for hosta roots, which expand to fill containers, then send more energy to above-ground development for mature shape and size. You’ll need sturdy plastic pots with drainage holes. An empty “socket pot” is buried in the ground; a second removable pot, the same size or slightly smaller, containing soil and the plant, is put into the socket. • Hosta leaves might change colors, depending on the amount of sun they receive and the season. Hot summer weather melts the waxy coating, or bloom, from blue leaves, making them greener; golds and yellows deepen to greener shades in the shade. • Divide hostas in spring, or early fall so they have a chance to become re-established in the ground before extremes of summer and winter weather. Miller rinses soil off the roots, then teases apart nodes, cutting only when necessary to avoid diseases. • When choosing a hosta, be aware of its mature size and form. Sometimes little potted plants grow up into Big Daddy hostas.

Fashion inspires sleek, colorful kitchen design

By Caryn Rousseau
Associated Press writer

CHICAGO — From the runway to the kitchen: Many houseware and kitchen design companies are looking to the world of fashion for hints and clues to inspire their lines. “What we’ve generally found, if something is hot in the runways in fall it’s going to take hold and move into the home a few months later,” says Kristin Martin, brand manager for cast iron at the cookware maker Le Creuset. Le Creuset is just one example of a houseware or kitchen design company that gets design ideas from runway shows and fashion magazines. For example, Martin said, last fall Le Creuset designers noticed an eggplant purple color “all over the runway.”

This March, the company launched its new color: a purple called cassis. “It definitely influenced our decision because it was a color people were excited about,” Martin said. “Because people were excited about it in terms of fashion, they were going to be excited about it in terms of their homes.” Cookware, she said, is “not just a tool, it’s a statement. And that’s the same thing with fashion — you are making a statement when you wear it.” The subject intrigued the folks at the faucet maker Brizo, which sponsored a panel discussion about kitchen fashion, form and function at the recent Kitchen and Bath Industry Show in Chicago. Brizo also sponsors New York fashion designer Jason Wu, who made first lady Michelle

Obama’s inaugural gown. “It seems all of us, although in different areas of design, look to each other for inspiration,” said Wu, who spoke on the Chicago panel. Judd Lord, Brizo’s director of industrial design, said the company looks to fashion mainly for shape, form and pattern ideas. “How it’s flowing, what the form it’s taking as it’s coming down the runway, where the belt line is being placed or the sleeves,” Lord said. “It’s things like that that will draw a designer’s eye.” At the luxury appliance maker Thermador, whose ranges, refrigerators and dishwashers shine in stainless steel, designers look to fashion accessories such as watches and jewelry for trends, said company industrial design manager

Graham Sadtler. “Whether it’s a gloss metal finish or matte or a certain treatment on the metal, (that) is one of the biggest things we look at that influences our design,” he said. Kitchen designer Cheryl Kees Clendenon of Pensacola, Fla., said she turns to fashion magazines for inspiration and rips out pages when she finds striking textures or materials. “It regenerates my enthusiasm for what I do,” said Clendenon, who has been a kitchen designer for 11 years and also was on Brizo’s panel. “I can look through fashion magazines and even though I can’t personally wear those clothes, it’s the idea part of it.” Clendenon adds fashion to her designs in small ways, through layers, kitchen rugs or a backsplash, for instance.

That keeps a kitchen from looking or feeling dated, she said. “What we design needs to live for a while,” she said. “You can’t change your kitchen design as often as you can your clothing.” Wu said he loves to cook and finds a sense of design in the way meals are plated. His own kitchen has an open design, gray palette and island cabinet. “I think everything I do is a piece of me and what I’m about,” Wu said. “I think the kitchen is no different.”

Answer:

Thanks for your comments! The SAFETY FOAM combined with the Johnny Mop and Bowl Caddy is how the pros clean toilets. As you know, the key is the technique...it is critical to lower the water level with the Johnny Mop so the SAFETY FOAM is not diluted when it comes in contact with hard water build up and toilet bowl scum. Come back in and see me again...I'll demonstrate even more tricks.

P.S. Hurry in! SAFETY FOAM is on sale now for only $5.00 per quart!

4 ways to get organized this summer

By Jura Koncius
The Washington Post

We are a nation looking for help with our overabundance of stuff. So what better way to start out the summer than to target a few clutter-clogged zones in our homes and organize them?

We've seen more self-help organizing books ever since this category became popular in the prosperous 1990s, according to Lauren Nemroff, senior editor of books for Amazon.com. Interest exploded recently with the coverage of hoarders on shows such as "Oprah" and the steady stream of DIY cable series starring professional organizers.

"The current emphasis on organization and de-cluttering can also be seen as a psychological response to the economic downturn," Nemroff wrote in an e-mail. "Most people are looking to do more with less, and gain a sense of control over their lives and stuff."

Gretchen Rubin, author of the recent best seller "The Happiness Project," thinks living an orderly life definitely makes people happier. She follows her own rules daily to ensure her surfaces are clean and her mementos are filed.

"In the context of a happy life, a messy coat closet should be trivial," said Rubin, who often blogs and tweets de-cluttering advice to her faithful. "But there is something about getting ahold of physical clutter that makes people feel energized, freer and happier. Order contributes to inner calm for most people."

To get you jump-started, we spoke to organizers about practical ways to tame four trouble spots in many homes: the junk drawer, hall closet, kids' school papers and photo storage. Check out their ideas to get motivated so by summer's end, you will be cleared out, sorted through and in control.

The hall closet

By Jura Koncius
The Washington Post

Problem: The hall or coat closet is a public storage spot shared by the entire family. It often bulges with not only jackets, trench coats and umbrellas but vacuum cleaners, boots and tote bags. Because it isn't coat season right now, it's a good time to reassess what really belongs in there. That list of essentials would be different for apartments or condos without benefit of other storage. The challenge is how to make the most of this compact space and keep it uncluttered.

Expert: Alison Lukes Teer, a professional closet organizer and wardrobe stylist. Lukes, whose business is Washington's Alison Lukes et Cie, once worked for fashion designer Michael Kors. Every consulting job, she says, begins with a closet clean-out.

The fix: The hall closet is the junk drawer of closets, Teer said. "Because your hall closet is used every day and because it is a multi-person closet, it tends to gather a lot of random junk": golf clubs, jogging strollers, balls, cleaning supplies and ski boots.

But this is valuable real estate in your home. It should contain only things you are using right now. Edit with this in mind: Mittens and scarves should be moved into a storage box and stashed elsewhere for the summer, the same for sunhats and beach bags for the winter. Raincoats and vests are year-round essentials.

Teer weeds out dated, worn or outgrown coats. "Make sure what's in there is actually something you use," she said. Hang each family member's coats together "so people can keep ownership of their own area of the closet." At her home, "I hang them long to short with my husband's first, then my son's, and then mine, short to long." Longer coats end up on either side of the closet, freeing room in the center to store items.

If you have no other space in your home to store brooms or vacuums, hang them on the closet back wall on a sturdy rack. Neatness matters here more than in any other closet in the house. "The coat closet should always be organized so that a stranger coming in to hang a coat would not be appalled when the door is opened," Teer says.

- Tips
- 1. Accessorize with products to increase storage. A hanging pocket organizer for the door is a place to stash dog leashes, sunscreen, gloves or diapers. Hooks affixed at your preschooler's level on the back of the door allow him to hang up his own jackets.
  - 2. Go for a hanger upgrade and invest in a set of matching wooden hangers for everything. (Ikea has eight-packs for $4.49.) Keep two or three empty hangers for visitors' coats. Invest in a collapsible rolling clothes rack for holidays and parties when you have more guests.
  - 3. Make a note on your calendar to empty and sort through coat closets twice a year. In March or April, clear out winter accessories such as hats and boots. In September, put away stray flip-flops and visors, and restock cold weather gear.

Kids and paper

By Jura Koncius
The Washington Post

Problem: Organizing kids' papers actually has two parts. First, parents must create order for dealing with permission slips and information a child brings home for them to read and sign. A parent should also set up a system for pre-serving report cards, artwork, school pictures and other paper that filters through children's lives, and maintain a family calendar.

Second, parents must teach children how to maintain order for themselves. They need to learn how to have a place for everything in their bedroom, desk and backpack. Household routines keep a family running smoothly.

Expert: Sandra Forbes, a professional organizer and mother of seven in suburban Washington. Her firm, Forbes Organizing, advises working moms and develops home management techniques.

The fix: Forbes said kids need different guidance during three stages of their education. In elementary school, the challenge for children is bringing paper home and bringing paper back to school. In middle school, organizing all the supplies and books they need for every class becomes vital. In high school, the issue is time management.

At each stage, a parent needs to work with their child in developing systems that help everyone get out the door on time in the morning and into bed at a decent hour. Some kids need a checklist on the front door of what they need to bring to school every day, from lunch money to band instruments. Some families load backpacks at night and set them by the door or other "launch pad" before bedtime.

Creating a designated home study area is essential. "They should have all the supplies they need to do their work," she says. "Then they don't get up to get something and get distracted."

Keeping a family binder in your kitchen or on your desk gives a home to all the essential paper that's constantly arriving from teachers, band leaders and coaches. Forbes uses a three-ring binder with tabs for each child. Using clear sleeves, Forbes organized schedules, phone lists and academic and sports calendars. You can use a similar binder for report cards and awards. She purges unneeded papers at the end of the school year and starts over. "Piled-up paper is a lack of making decisions," she said. "You want to avoid that."

Tips

- 1. Keep a bright-colored file labeled "pending" for permission slips and any other paperwork that is due sometime in the future. It prevents last-minute panic.
- 2. Forbes uses the Microsoft Outlook calendar as a master clearinghouse for family dates. She clicks and drags e-mails into her calendar so all the information she needs on an activity is in the same place.
- 3. A weekly cleaning by each child of his own bedroom floor can turn up missing items and keep the room orderly so kids can focus on studying. Clean out backpacks, where children tend to stuff old papers and food wrappers in there. This weekly ritual often turns up missing library books, too, she said.

Problem: an overstuffed drawer that has become a catch-all for the small items of life, many of which have no assigned storage places in your home. Your crammed junk drawer is an embarrassment to your family.

Expert: Stacey Platt, a New York professional organizer and author of "What's a Disorganized Person to Do?" (Artisan Books; $16.95).

The fix: Platt prefers to start any organizing project with a clean slate. She advises you to empty the drawer, turn it upside down and shake out dust, then wipe clean. Invest in small organizing trays to keep things in order.

Then begin your sort-and-toss cycle. Throw out whatever actually fits the definition of junk: soy sauce packets, grungy plastic forks, inkless pens and ancient crumpled receipts. Put items back where they belong: screws into the toolbox, keys on your key rack, stray change in your wallet.

Platt says that "good junk" is whatever you actually use frequently and need to put your hands on quickly. Some might be duplicates of useful things you keep in other rooms. Frequently, the household junk drawer includes scissors, tape measure, tape, Post-it notes, a screwdriver, a few rubber bands (not 50), a highlighter and a glue stick.

"Cleaning a junk drawer is something you can do in a very short amount of time," Platt said. "It is instant gratification, a little organizing project that ... brings immediate results!"

- Tips
- 1. Loose keys are a challenge, especially if they are unmarked. From now on, if someone gives you a key to their house, bike or boat, put it on a small keychain and label it with the person's name or some other identifying code. Keep all keys together on a rack or in a metal box. Platt has one client who puts all unidentified keys in a folder labeled "dead keys."
  - 2. If you unearth chargers and cords in your junk drawer, figure out what they belong to and put them in small plastic bags marked with their gadget of origin. Stash these in a separate tech supplies drawer or box.
  - 3. A junk drawer is not a great resting place for batteries. Many are probably dead. Put all your family's fresh batteries in a plastic shoe box with a label on it so anyone can find a battery quickly when needed.

Photographs

Problem: Photographs may be one of your family's most prized possessions, but their preservation, organization and presentation are often in chaos. Crumbling photo albums and drugstore film-processing envelopes full of unsorted memories are scattered throughout many homes.

Today's photography, almost exclusively digital, is often accessed only in multiple computer folders. Many households have not merged shoeboxes of photos with their online photo libraries because it's a complicated, time-consuming chore.

Expert: Judy Parkins, owner of Gently Organized in suburban Washington. Her specialty is home filing systems. Recently, Parkins decided to round up all her family photos and make order out of them.

The fix: Parkins began by researching the best way to create a digital archive so all photographs would be accessible to her four grown children and other relatives. Even though she owns a scanner, she thought it would take too much time to do it herself. She looked into photo-scanning services that would convert hers into digital files.

"I found that these are fast and affordable and ideal for uncluttering and organizing generations of photo memories," she said. She chose scanmyphotos.com.

Each scanning service gives you instructions for how to send your photos to them. Parkins unearthed her photos from bookshelves, closets and the attic. She emptied photo albums and placed loose photos together in stacks in a mailing box, as instructed. She threw out her old-fashioned magnetic albums and posted any reusable albums on freecycle.org.

Parkins set up a workstation on a folding table in her office to allow her to do a little bit each day. Her 4,300 photos eventually were sent back on two DVDs. (You can also order books of all your photos printed out.) Parkins's original photos were returned, and they are sitting in two boxes on her office shelf.

"I'm so happy to have this done," says Parkins. "My children now have access to them 24-7."

- Tips
- 1. Be ruthless when editing. Do not keep blurry photos. Do not keep photos of someone you don't recognize or a vacation you don't remember.
  - 2. Save photos by having three backup files at all times: One on DVD or an external hard drive, one on your computer hard drive and one with an online digital sharing service such as Flickr, iPhoto, Picasa or Snapfish.
  - 3. Keep photo organizing up to date. At least once a year, go through your latest digital photos and delete anything out of focus or duplicated. Add the rest to your online digital sharing service. Parkins uses Flickr Pro. This job never really ends as kids and grandchildren can continually add their newest photos to your family's online archive.

Cheap ways to rid clothes of odors

By Aimie Blanchette
Star Tribune (Minneapolis)

I buy most of my clothing from thrift and consignment stores. These clothes have a sickly, perfume-y odor that doesn't come out until I've washed them at least three times. Is there anything I can do to remove the odor without washing the clothes so much?

The best way to remove these kinds of odors is a process that professionals use called "ozone generation," says Duane Schumann, production manager for Treasured Garment Restoration in Stillwater, Ohio.

"An ozone generator is a machine that creates a third molecule of oxygen, which basically suffocates any living organisms that create odors," he said. This service runs about $15 to $30 per garment, but Schumann shared cheaper alternatives you can try at home:

- Hang your clothes in a confined area, such as a closet, with the rinds of a few lemons on a plate. The rinds will work as a sponge to absorb the odor. The process takes up to a week, depending on the severity of the smell. You might have to replace the rinds with fresh ones halfway through.

- Air out your garments in direct sunlight on a sunny day. The ultraviolet light will kill the bacteria, but beware — sun also can cause bright colors to fade.
- Take advantage of the natural ozone created on a stormy day. Hang your clothes outside where they won't get wet. "Whenever there's electrical discharge from lightning, that's the best time to deodorize anything," Schumann said.

- Use air and fabric deodorizers such as Glade Fabric and Air Odor Eliminator.
- Wash clothes in regular detergent and rinse once. Add a cup of white vinegar to the final rinse cycle.

SUMMER IN STYLE

By Jura Koncius
The Washington Post

Lynni Megginson is an expert in designing rooms for fun. She has been a designer for more than 20 years and her hew gig is doing Virtual Golf Rooms with her business Virtual Golf Girl. Here she answers questions about this and rooms where you can have friends over for a playdate.

I have a screened-in porch that I want to add more privacy to. Blinds or some type of curtain would work. But, where could I buy such a thing and, yes, cost would be a factor since it is outdoors. I'm willing to spend up to $200 to achieve some privacy.

I would look into the woven wood blinds that are available on the market now. They will allow light to filter through while giving you privacy as well. They are easily cleaned if they get dirty, and give you a great natural look that will be fabulous in a porch or outdoor setting! We love the ones from Graber and Dalphis ... good values and lots of fabulous textures and colors!

I'm hosting a baby shower in July with about 20 people. That's going to be crowded for my living room, but it would work on my deck, if it's not too hot. (Of course, I will ask the mom-to-be what she prefers and that will ultimately dictate where we go.) What do I need to do to make the deck comfortable for a party?

Good for you. And nice of you to ask the mom-to-be what her choice is. I wonder if you are doing this during the day or evening? Keep in mind that mosquitoes usually come out around dinner time. Since you are having 20 people and there will be gift opening, you should try and have seating for everyone. Borrow stacking plastic chairs from a friend if you need to. You could put the food inside to keep bugs away from it, and have people go in there to help themselves, and then move outside to eat. Set up a drinks area and keep ice in a cooler.

Do you have any suggestions for setting things up for a party?

Hosting parties is one of my favorite things to do, and I think it's important to make sure you've got a good flow between the food and beverages in different "stations." For example, putting pretty desserts in the dining room with some champagne separated from tubs of beer and chips with salsa that may be set up in the kitchen. Always have a great flow so your guests can keep moving between different areas and keep the party exciting for your guests.

What's some of your favorite furniture to put in a golf room? You have to take turns swinging the club, what would you suggest for comfy seating for observers?

In the DC Design House we had a wonderfully cushy velvet sofa behind the stance mat with portable accent chairs upholstered in a striped ottoman cloth that pulled the colors together. The seating really depends on how the room will be used. Many times we will combine our golf rooms with a theater room and install theater type seating that's comfortable as well as stylish (no more puffy chairs!). If it's going to be a true golf room, you could use leather arm chairs, or add a game table with side chairs that can be moved around the room if necessary.

What is the best flooring to use in the basement for a man cave? Sometimes the cement is damp; does that cause mold under the carpet?

I always use a jute pad under any carpeting in the basement because it's natural and can act as an absorbent instead of a barrier. When water pools under foam padding between carpeting that is when you can have mildew begin to build up. I have found that nylon carpeting that has a texture to it works really well in basements because it stands up to a lot of wear and tear and lasts forever. Setting up a dehumidifier during wet weather can help with the "musty" smell basements sometimes emit too. In a pinch I keep on hand some of those absorbent crystals for moisture to offset dampness as well.

Tackle your clutter zones

By Heidi Stevens

Peter Walsh has you all figured out.

You bought the melon baller because it was on sale and, heck, you like melon. You've held on to that 3-year-old magazine because you will make the recipe on Page 127. Some night. And those new black pumps do not look exactly like your four other pairs.

You've got yourself some clutter, my friend. And Walsh, best-selling author, host of TLC's "Clean Sweep" and Oprah Winfrey's go-to organizational expert, wants you to clear it out. Now.

"Later is the best friend of clutter," he says. "Clutter is really just decisions delayed."

We chatted with Walsh about tackling five common clutter zones.

That kitchen drawer

"Take the pizza rolling slicing thing and all those other items you bought for less than $5.99 that you just knew you'd always use and put them in a cardboard box," says Walsh. "Whenever you use one of the items, put it back in the drawer. At the end of the month — with the exception of the turkey baster — whatever is still in the cardboard box you've got to ask yourself, 'Will I ever use these?'"

Peter Walsh.

The bedroom closet

"We wear 20 percent of our clothes 80 percent of the time," Walsh says. Which means the vast majority of your closet is filled with — you guessed it, clutter. Walsh suggests the "reverse clothes hanger trick."

"Take everything on a clothes hanger and turn it around back-to-front. For the next three to six months — you decide — every time you wear something hang it back the correct way after you launder it. Whatever is still hanging back-to-front, ask yourself: 'Will I ever wear this item?' It's an efficient, non-traumatic way to see what you wear and what you don't."

Your shoes

"To understand how many shoes you have, you have to release them from captivity," he says. "Find the largest room or hallway in your house and line them up. Every pair of shoes you have. Just the visual of that can often throw people into coma."

Sort the shoes by type — running shoes, sensible pumps, sandals and so on. Then give yourself a ratio. "Let's say it's 10-to-1. For every 10 you keep, get rid of one pair," Walsh says. "Five-to-1 if you're brave. Three-to-1 if you're a true pioneer."

The car

"One: Get in the habit that whenever you gas up the car, in those two minutes you declutter and throw out any trash.

"Two: Get milk crate-size containers, and put them in the way back. Whenever the kids bring something into the car — sports gear, book bags — it goes in their crate. "Whenever you go shopping, put the groceries in the crates. Nobody leaves the car empty-handed when you get home. Everyone has to carry their crate into the house."

The garage

"Divide your garage into clear zones: one area for gardening equipment, one area for holiday decorations, one area for luggage, one area for tools," Walsh says. "Establishing zones is a functional way of keeping the place organized and the volume of stuff in control."

"Say the holiday decorations zone is three shelves that will hold two plastic totes each and that's the limit for holiday decorations. Once they expand beyond six totes, you have to do some purging and discarding."

Lawn & Garden Directory

FLOWER BULBS

When you add bulbs to your flower garden plans, you get two great benefits (besides their spectacular blooms):

- Flower bulbs come back each year, after being dormant over winter months. Many bulbs are hardy and reliable, meaning you can "forget" about them... and they'll present themselves sure enough every spring.
- Just like perennials, you can plant bulbs according to flowering times for a constant array of color.
- For a garden that blooms all season, plant a number of bulb types with succeeding flowering times.
- Intersperse flower bulbs into several types of blooms, ground covers, shrubs, and along sidewalks or garden paths. Be creative and plant them in patterns!

LEGAL NOTICE

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game was informed by the Bureau of Fisheries that if incidental mortalities among ESA listed natural origin fish encountered in the Lower Salmon River fishery continue to accrue at the observed rate and exceed the number expected for that fishery, there is an increased likelihood that anglers in the Lower Salmon, South Fork Salmon and the Upper Salmon rivers will be precluded from accessing the remaining available harvestable shares of hatchery returns before the overall fishery related incidental mortality limit for ESA listed natural origin fish is reached. To reduce fishery related incidental mortalities of ESA natural origin Chinook salmon so that sport anglers in Lower Salmon, South Fork Salmon, and Upper Salmon rivers can continue to fish on the harvestable share of hatchery Chinook salmon returns managers recommend that the sections of the Lower Salmon River Chinook Salmon fishery downstream of the Highway 95 Time Zone Bridge and the sections upstream of the mouth of Short's Creek be closed to Chinook Salmon effective end of fishing on Wednesday July 7, 2010.

THEREFORE, Pursuant to his authority under Idaho Code Section 36-106(e)(6)(A), the Idaho Department of Fish and Game Director hereby closes sections of the mainstem Salmon River from the Rice Creek Bridge upstream to a posted boundary about 200 yards downstream of the Hammer Creek Boat ramp, from a posted boundary about 200 yards downstream of the Hammer Creek Boat ramp upstream to the Highway 95 Time Zone Bridge near Riggins and from the mouth of Short's Creek upstream to the upper most boat ramp at Vinegar Creek to the harvest of Chinook salmon, effective the end of fishing hours on Wednesday, July 7, 2010.

Copies of Order 10-19 are available at the Idaho Department of Fish and Game headquarters, 600 South Walnut, P.O. Box 25, Boise, ID 83707.

Dated this 1st day of July 2010.

Times-News magicvalley.com

The Times-News is seeking a professional advertising salesperson. The principal duty of this salesperson will be to sell "win-win" print, online and mobile advertising packages offered by the Times-News, www.magicvalley.com and a variety of specialty and niche publications.

The Successful Candidate will demonstrate:

- A natural inquisitiveness about what constitutes customer success and an ability to ask open-ended, thought-provoking questions;
- A pattern of success in marketplaces that are extremely competitive;
- The ability to consistently listen;
- An ongoing history of success in a fast-paced business;
- An assertive approach to achieving revenue and customer satisfaction goals;
- The ability to communicate personal, quantifiable components of customer service excellence;
- A solid commitment to ongoing self-improvement.

Past sales experience may be helpful but possessing innate curiosity and a competitive approach is far more important. The Times-News offers an excellent benefit package including medical, dental, vision, life, paid vacation and sick days, flexible spending account(s) and a 401(k) program.

Please apply online at

Today is Tuesday, July 6, the 187th day of 2010. There are 178 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On July 6, 1885, French scientist Louis Pasteur tested an anti-rabies vaccine on nine-year-old Joseph Meister, who had been bitten by an infected dog; the boy did not develop rabies.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1535, St. Thomas More was executed in England for high treason.

In 1777, during the American Revolution, British forces captured Fort Ticonderoga.

In 1809, French troops arrested Pope Pius VII, who had excommunicated Emperor Napoleon I; the pope was confined for about five years.

In 1917, during World War I, Arab forces led by T.E. Lawrence and Auda Abu Tayi captured the port of Aqaba (AH'-kai-buh) from the Turks.

In 1928, the first all-talking feature, "Lights of New York," had its gala premiere in New York.

In 1944, an estimated 168 people died in a fire that broke out during a performance in the main tent of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus in Hartford, Conn.

In 1945, President Harry S. Truman signed an executive order establishing the Medal of Freedom.

In 1957, Althea Gibson became the first black tennis player to win a Wimbledon singles title as she defeated fellow American Darlene Hard 6-3, 6-2.

In 1988, 167 North Sea oil workers were killed when a series of explosions and fires destroyed a drilling platform.

In 1989, the U.S. Army destroyed its last Pershing IA missiles at an ammunition plant in Karnack, Texas, under terms of the 1987 Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces Treaty.

Ten years ago: The German parliament offered a formal apology to Nazi-era slave and forced laborers as it passed a bill setting up a $5 billion compensation fund. The body of 19-year-old Cory Erving, son of basketball star Julius "Dr. J" Erving, was found in his car at the bottom of a Florida pond; he'd been missing since May 28. Venus Williams beat her younger sister Serena 6-2, 7-6 (3) to reach the Wimbledon final; their singles match was the first between sisters in a Grand Slam semifinal.

Five years ago: New York Times reporter Judith Miller was jailed after refusing to testify before a grand jury investigating the leak of undercover CIA operative Valerie Plame's identity (Miller was jailed for 85 days before agreeing to testify). London was selected to host the 2012 Olympics. The Group of Eight summit opened in Gleneagles, Scotland. L. Patrick Gray, the acting FBI director during Watergate, died in Atlantic Beach, Fla. at age 88. Author Evan Hunter died in Weston, Conn. at age 78.

One year ago: Robert McNamara, the Pentagon chief who'd directed the escalation of the Vietnam War despite private doubts, died in Washington, D.C. at 93. President Barack Obama opened a two-day Moscow summit, the first of its kind since the early part of the George W. Bush presidency. Doctors at four hospitals in four states (Maryland, Missouri, Oklahoma and Michigan) finished transplanting eight kidneys over three weeks in what was described as the largest chain of donations in history.

DEAR ABBY: On May 13, "Diana in Lakewood, Calif.," asked you how to reuse or donate little jewelry boxes. You offered some great tips, but you should have let folks know about two terrific resources for giving away or recycling odd things.

Freecycle.org is an online network where people can give away or find free stuff in their local neighborhood. It is a great way to recycle items — like the jewelry boxes — to a local thrift store, a crafter or a teacher.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Earth911.com is also an amazing directory of local reuse and recycling options. I work at a thrift store for home improvements. (Instead of donating clothing or furniture, some people give us lumber, kitchen cabinets, hardware, etc.) Most people don't know that stores like ours exist. Reusing items from your neighbors wastes no energy and builds a sense of community. Abby, thanks for touching on this important topic.

— RUTHIE M.

IN EDMONSTON, MD.

DEAR RUTHIE: Many readers wrote to remind me that one man's trash is another man's treasure, and we all must do whatever it takes to keep items out of landfills. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I am an activity director at a small long-term-care facility and would love to receive those jewelry boxes. People don't realize how grateful we are to provide a home for their extra greeting cards, craft supplies, fabric scraps, wrapping paper, games, cards — the list goes on and on. Diana should consider contacting her local nursing home activity director and put those boxes to good use.

Budgets are tight. With every cut our state and federal governments make to nursing homes, activity directors are always happy to give new life to no-longer-needed items.

— THE ACTIVITY

GODDESS,
BUHL, IDAHO

DEAR ABBY: I have another suggestion for Diana in Lakewood. Quit buying so much stuff!

Recycling is only a partial solution to a wasteful lifestyle. Millions of tons of plastic, no matter how many times it is recycled, end up in our oceans, where Texas-sized flotillas of plastic goo will outlast us all. The key is to generate less in the first place.

When considering a purchase, consider all four "R's": Reduce, Reuse, Recycle and Repair. In this case, the option to "Reduce" should be observed by either buying less jewelry, or asking the vendors to quit over-packaging the stuff.

— DR. JAMES HAYES-BOHANAN,
PROFESSOR OF ENVIRONMENTAL GEOGRAPHY

DEAR ABBY: Diana should donate the boxes to Goodwill, Salvation Army, Habitat for Humanity, preschools, Girl Scouts and Sunday schools — not the landfill!

— ELSIE K.
OAK RIDGE, TENN.

DEAR ABBY: Perfectly good items should never be tossed into a landfill. There is always someone who can use whatever it is as long as it's in good condition (and sometimes even when it's not). It should be the responsibility of the consumer to find that someone. While it may not be a legal responsibility, it is the right thing to do.

— ROSIE W. IN DENVER

DEAR ABBY: Most malls and department stores open gift-wrapping booths at holiday time. They are usually set up to raise funds for a specific charity. Diana can contact mall management and find out if it plans to have one and if so, what agency will be operating it. Then she can contact the agency and arrange to donate all of the boxes. Believe me, small boxes are always needed.

— LYNN IN
CAMBRIDGE, ONTARIO

IF JULY 6 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: This is a good time for a vacation or a romantic escapade with a lover. You are willing to overlook the facts and live in a world of make-believe, like someone who visits Disneyland. However, if you just hooked up with someone, don't expect to live happily ever after—you are probably fascinated by the frosting and haven't yet the cake. Your ability to be accurate and punctual is more important this summer than your need for group activities. Spend more time building your business or studying than partying. September is your best month for financial decisions and implementing business strategies and November is the worst time to make major purchases or decisions.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Keep your money in your pocket and your heart rolled up in your sleeve. For the next few days there is a tendency to be misled by intuitions. Someone might attempt to play on your sympathies.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): All that glitters isn't gold or even bling. You may be like a magpie that treasures anything that has a sparkle. A new relationship you begin now might be passionate—but could be based on a misconception.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Fools and their money are soon parted. You don't want to be foolish and waste your resources on something that is not as good as advertised. Turn the key and lock your piggy bank for a few days.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Decisions may be made without your knowledge. If you are anxious to preserve the harmony you must be willing to listen to explanations. Focus on the sensibility and reasonableness of a proposal.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You might be attracted by the bait, but you must think carefully before you get reeled in. Wait to make important decisions. Don't settle for something just "good enough" if waiting will get you the best.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A touch of irony goes a long way. There may be a bite to someone's words, but it is acceptable in the proper situation. In hindsight it may seem less than desirable. Speak clearly so you are not misunderstood.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Zip your angry lips. It is better to tame secret hostilities than to voice them. The fact is that a gut-wrenching reaction may be based on unfounded suspicions instead of what is truly occurring.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Creditors have better memories than borrowers. Keep the balance sheet in your favor. Your passion for sensual pleasures and expensive playthings can be a focus point that turns into a point of contention.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Just take a bite of the pork chop; don't go whole hog. Intense ambition could cause you to bite off more than your fair share. There is a tendency to hide your wants and needs from others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Joys shared are doubled. Invite people to look at your favorite pictures or lend a good book to a friend. Someone close could get carried away with a hare-brained scheme or exaggerate a situation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The more you look for answers, the more questions you find. Someone may withhold the facts you need and you won't be able to pry them out. You are only seeing the surface of a complicated situation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A lighter touch will do the trick. Don't be heavy handed or adamant about getting what you want. You might have to hide your irritation if a loved one or friend tries to outdo you in your area of expertise.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

Mark it down: BSU will beat Virginia Tech

Don't bet against Chris Petersen. Not in big games. Not with this group of players. Not with an entire summer and fall camp to prepare. Petersen just doesn't lose these games. When Boise State tangles with Virginia Tech on Labor Day in a season-opening showdown between two Top 10 teams, the Broncos will win. That's what Petersen's teams do in these games. At least with his current roster, which returns largely intact from last year's 14-0 Fiesta Bowl champions. Remember Sept. 3, 2009? BSU faced Oregon in a season-opening battle of top 20 squads. The Broncos dominated the Ducks, holding them without a first down for 2 1/2 quarters in a not-as-close-as-the-score-indicated 19-8 win. And those Ducks were no slouches. They were Pac-10 champions. They played in the Rose Bowl. But they could do nothing against BSU. Not with this crop of Broncos. Not with Petersen at the helm. Remember Jan. 4, 2010? BSU took on favored TCU in the Fiesta Bowl. The Horned Frogs were unbeaten, with several marquee wins. Many thought they belonged in the BCS National Championship game. But against the Broncos, the

Mike Christensen

Frogs had no legs. Petersen and company befuddled TCU QB Andy Dalton with a shifting 4-2-5 defense that held the Frogs to their lowest scoring output of the season. Petersen thoroughly out-coached TCU's Gary Patterson, one of the best sideline bosses in the business. That's what Petersen does — especially with a month or more to prepare. With 22 of 24 Fiesta Bowl starters on the field, expect Petersen to deliver again when the Broncos and Hokies meet Sept. 6 at FedEx Field in Landover, Md. If the game was still slated for its original midseason date of Oct. 2, the field might be leveled. BSU is tough to beat with a week to prepare, evidenced by Petersen's 49-4 record through four seasons. But give the Broncos an off-season or a bowl season to gear up and the result is almost guaranteed. Sixty-two days from now, the Virginia Tech Hokies will add a witness learned first-hand: Don't bet against Chris Petersen.

Stoudemire agrees to sign with Knicks

LeBron mum on his decision

The Associated Press
NEW YORK — Amare Stoudemire is headed to the New York Knicks, and both sides are hoping he's not coming alone. The Knicks said Monday they intend to sign Stoudemire to a contract later this week when the free agent moratorium period ends. Stoudemire's agent, Happy Walters, said the deal is for the maximum allowed, which would be nearly $100 million over five years. Wearing a blue Knicks hat, Stoudemire said he looked forward to rebuilding a franchise and bringing the Knicks back to the top — maybe with a player such as LeBron James or Dwyane Wade with him. "I feel great about being a pioneer and showing my leadership," he said at Madison Square Garden, where signs throughout the entrances showed the player pictured in a Knicks uniform and reading "Welcome, Amare Stoudemire." The deal can't be signed until Thursday, after the salary cap for next season has been set. It was a desperately needed score in free agency for the Knicks, who spent two seasons clearing enough cap space to afford two top players. They met with James, Wade and Chris Bosh last week and believe they could still land one of them. Stoudemire has already started recruiting, saying he spoke to James' people and directly to Wade last week. And he said he won't be affected if those players say no to New York. "Totally comfortable, totally confident that my leadership qualities will uplift all of us to do something great this upcoming season," Stoudemire said. "So again, the Knicks are back." Florida Gov. Charlie Crist, left, shakes hands with Albert, the Gator mascot, at the 2007 Florida-Georgia football game in Jacksonville, Fla. Science is confirming that the success of major college teams in the two weeks before an election can have a measurable impact on how well incumbent politicians do at the polls, researchers report.

Study: Some voters may make end run around logic

By Randolph E. Schmid
Associated Press writer
WASHINGTON — Science is confirming something successful politicians seem to know instinctively — support your local football team. The success of major college teams in the two weeks before an election can have a measurable impact on how well incumbent politicians do at the polls, researchers report in Tuesday's edition of Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. "Events that government had nothing to do with, but that affect voters' sense of well-being, can affect the decisions that they make on election day," the researchers said. That's why incumbent politicians try to score some good news just before elections, and their opponents try to block that effort. The new study looked at elections for president, governor and senate between 1964 and 2008 and compared them to football results for 62 major college teams. The researchers found that wins in the two weeks before an election boosted the vote share of incumbents in the county where a school is located by 1.05 to 1.47 percentage points — enough to make a difference in a close race. And for teams they termed "powerhouses" the impact was even greater, giving the incumbents between 2.30 and 2.42 percentage points more than in years when the local team lost. Powerhouses were defined as teams that had won a national football championship since 1964, or were among the teams with average attendance of 70,000 or more from 1998 to 2008. Neil Malhotra, an assistant professor of political economy at Stanford University, and colleagues, decided to look at the relationship between football and politics because they wondered if elections were affected by "irrelevant" information. There has been a lot of discussion of the rationality of the American public when it comes to voting, Malhotra said in a telephone interview, but there have also been studies indicating people can be "predictably irrational." For example, a prior study looked at disasters such as floods and hurricanes, and found that people later tended to vote against incumbents. "Just because government didn't cause the problem doesn't mean people won't hold them responsible," Malhotra observed. But, in a disaster, governments do tend to get involved, at least afterward. So the researchers turned to an area even more unrelated to government: sports. It tends to be a subconscious response, Malhotra explained, with people making a decision on whom to vote for acting on their mood. The effect tends to disappear when the bias is brought to people's attention, he added. There are, of course, large parts of the country where college football outcomes would never be considered "irrelevant." The study did not report results by individual school or conference, but combined the results from 1964 to 2008 to incorporate winning and losing years and several elections. Malhotra's team also did a second experiment, during the 2009 NCAA basketball tournament, known as March Madness. In that case they surveyed 3,040 people who lived in areas with teams in the tournament, asking each to name their favorite team. The respondents were divided into two groups, one of which knew the results of their team's play before being surveyed and the other, which did not know the results. After the third and fourth rounds of the tournament participants were asked to rate the performance of President Barack Obama. Obama, an avid basketball fan, got a 2.3 percentage point boost for each win from folks who knew how their teams were doing. The survey confirmed the football results, the researchers said, showing that well-being induced by game results affected people's evaluations of the incumbent.

SPA, Belgium — On a day of chaos and crashes, riders tumbled like dominoes in the rain and littered the road in a scene Lance Armstrong called "surreal." The seven-time champion did not escape the mayhem at the Tour de France on Monday. He was left searching for his bike, nursing scrapes and bruises to his hip and elbow and joking about the decision to come out of retirement. He was in good company, joining dozens of riders who hit the asphalt on a slippery downhill run some likened to ice skating. Sylvain Chavanel of France was among few to avoid trouble. He sped to victory after breaking away early in the 125-mile trip from Brussels to Spa and taking the yellow jersey from Switzerland's Fabian Cancellara. With the pack banged-up, he finished

Rafa, Serena pull away from the rest at Wimbledon

By Howard Fendrich
Associated Press writer
WIMBLEDON, England — It was the middle Sunday at Wimbledon, the tournament's traditional day off, and the best players in men's tennis were scattered around the All England Club's practice courts. Rafael Nadal was there, going through a relatively light training session. To his right stood Roger Federer, hitting on the next court over. To Nadal's left was Andy Roddick, also on an adjacent court. Andy Murray was out there, too, along with Novak Djokovic and Robin Soderling. All were in close quarters that afternoon. A week later, it's clear that the gap between 2010 Wimbledon champion Nadal and the rest — including Federer — is quite pronounced. "His backhand's good. His serve's good. His forehand's good. His movement is good. He does everything really, really well," Murray said after being picked apart by Nadal in a straight-set semifinal. And Murray went on to add this: "He's one of the greatest players ever." For years, Federer was No.

1, Nadal was No. 2, and no one else was even close. They combined to win 17 of 18 Grand Slam titles in one stretch. But it appears to be a fading rivalry, because their last match against each other at a major tournament was 1 1/2 years ago. Indeed, right now, Nadal is alone at the top, much the way the woman who is No. 1 See WIMBLEDON, Sports 2

Cyclones rally for win over Pocatello

Times-News

The Jerome Cyclones overcame a 9-1 deficit to beat visiting Pocatello 14-13 in the opening half of a Class AA American Legion Baseball doubleheader Monday in Jerome.

Cameron Stauffer's two-run walk-off double capped a six-run seventh inning for Jerome (9-8, 8-6 Area C).

"We didn't roll over and die," said Jerome coach Kenneth James. "That was the key. We kept fighting"

The Cyclones dropped the nightcap 8-4. They had nine hits, all singles, but couldn't get the timely hits when needed against Pocatello pitcher George Casper. Pocatello's Scott Nielson had two homers, including a three-run shot.

WOOD RIVER 36, BEAR LAKE 27

Wood River blasted 36 hits in a wild 36-27 win over Bear Lake in Class A American Legion baseball action Monday. The Wranglers trailed 24-9 entering the sixth inning, but scored six runs to avoid the run rule. A 13-run seventh inning put them on pace for a win in the nine-inning affair.

Bear Lake crushed 27 hits of its own. Wood River was led by Tyler Peters who reached base on nine of his 11 at bats. He had a triple, three doubles and three singles. Kevin Abbott came on in relief for the Wranglers and got the win.

Wood River hosts the Twin Falls Hawks today.

PARAKHOUSKI GRABS 10 BOARDS IN SUMMER LEAGUE DEBUT

Former College of Southern Idaho center Art Parakhouski pulled down a team-high 10 rebounds in his NBA summer league debut in Orlando.

The 6-11 Belarusian scored four points and added a block in nearly 18 minutes off the bench as his Boston Celtics lost 87-82 to the Oklahoma City Thunder.

Parakhouski will play each day through Friday in the weeklong league as he tries to earn a contract with the Celtics or another NBA squad. Parakhouski played at CSI from 2006 to 2008 before finishing his college career at Radford University in Virginia. He went undrafted, but was invited to play for the Celtics in Orlando.

nearly four minutes ahead.

With so many riders were in crashes, organizers said they briefly considered canceling the stage altogether. But under the race rules, the spills were too spread out to warrant a cancellation.

Armstrong returned to the RadioShack team bus with his team outfit torn and a bloody scrape on his thigh. His team said he also injured his elbow but otherwise was all right.

"You had people everywhere. It was surreal. When I got back on my bike ... I saw crash, after crash, after crash," Armstrong said, noting riders laid out on the ground. "It was like war."

Chavanel began the stage in 87th place and knocked everyone on the leaderboard down a notch: Cancellara dropped to second, 2 minutes, 57 seconds behind. Germany's Tony Martin is third, 3:07 back.

Armstrong sits fifth, 3:19 back, and defending champion Alberto Contador of Spain is seventh, 3:24 behind. The Spanish two-time Tour winner bruised his right hip, knee and elbow but was expected to start Tuesday.

Some riders believed a motorcycle crash in the race caravan before the pack passed left oil on the road, creating an especially slick mix with the rain.

On the descent from the midlevel Stockeu Pass, Armstrong, Contador and 2009 runner-up Andy Schleck all went down. Armstrong said he knew he was not badly hurt, but he did have other concerns. "I knew I was fine," he said. "My first thought was: 'Where is my bike?' I tried to find my bike. You know in the rain these guys are very good downhill.

I'm not one of them. But even the good ones, with something like that: No chance. Absolutely no chance."

Everybody finished, except French rider Mickael Delage, who slammed into a road barrier early in the stage. The Omega Pharma-Lotto rider was taken to hospital with a concussion, a broken bone in his face and shoulder, knee and hand injuries.

Scrapes and bruises were reported by the dozens, and nearly every team was affected. Some riders estimated at least half the 194-rider peloton had fallen. A post-stage medical report listed 23 as at least slightly injured during the day.

On the Garmin-Transitions team alone, Americans Tyler Farrar and Christian Vande Velde and Julian Dean of New Zealand were taken to a hospital for evaluation.

"Riding downhill was almost like ice skating," said Johan Bruyneel, the RadioShack manager and Armstrong's longtime mentor. Teammates Andreas Kloeend and Levi Leipheimer fell. "Almost half of the peloton crashed today," Bruyneel said.

The spills wreaked havoc on organizers and riders alike. Some took longer to rejoin the race than others.

After Schleck dropped several minutes back of the pack — threatening his Tour title ambitions — the main bunch appeared to slow down, with his Saxo Bank teammate Cancellara at the front.

Between Schleck, under an escort from his older brother and teammate Frank, and Chavanel's group at the front, confusion broke out in the pack about how to respond in a sporting and competitive way.

and won Wimbledon, Serena Williams, has distanced herself from the pack — in the rankings and on the court.

Williams won all 14 sets she played at the All England Club this year and set a tournament record with 89 aces. She's won five of the last eight Grand Slam titles. The only other woman who's even reached two major finals in that span is Dina Safina. She lost both, then made a first-round exit at the French Open in May and withdrew from Wimbledon with a back injury.

Williams' older sister Venus is now 30, hasn't won a Grand Slam tournament in two years, hasn't even made it past the quarterfinals at the last four majors and dropped to No. 4 in Monday's rankings.

"It's not just about how many Slams you win or how many tournaments you win — it's just your game overall. And (Serena's) definitely got all the goods," 18-time major champion Martina Navratilova said. "It would have been fun to play her, but at the same time, I'm glad that I didn't have to."

Stoudemire

The move reunites Stoudemire with Mike D'Antoni, his former coach in Phoenix. Stoudemire averaged more than 20 points in every season they were together and immediately becomes the best player D'Antoni has coached since leaving the Suns after the 2007-08 season.

"He's a dominant offensive player for sure, in a variety of ways," D'Antoni said.

The question now is can he help land James.

They could have ended up together in February, when the Suns considered trading Stoudemire to Cleveland before the Cavaliers instead took a deal with Washington for Antawn Jamison.

Stoudemire would instantly become the best teammate James has ever had in the NBA, but James would have to leave behind his hometown team and the extra $30 million the Cavaliers could pay him for the partnership to happen now.

"Playing with LeBron would be great," Stoudemire said. "But again, I'm not sure what his decision is and where he's leaning. If he's leaning more toward New York, then that's a great start for us."

If James has made up his mind, he's not saying so.

The NBA's most wanted man offered no clues about his highly anticipated free

Sean Rodriguez singled to open the inning.

Randy Choate (2-2) struck out the only batter he faced — bailing the Rays out of a bases-loaded jam in the top of the seventh — to get the win.

TIGERS 12, ORIOLES 9

DETROIT — Brandon Inge drove in four runs and Carlos Guillen knocked in three for Detroit.

The Tigers led 8-7 after the third and managed to keep the lead the rest of the way.

Inge, Guillen and Johnny Damon each had three of Detroit's 17 hits. Brennan Boesch was the only starter without one, but became the first Tigers rookie to walk four times in a game since Steve Boros in 1961.

WHITE SOX 9, ANGELS 2

CHICAGO — Carlos Quentin hit two late home runs and Gavin Floyd pitched seven solid innings to lead Chicago.

Dayan Viciedo and Alexei Ramirez homered for the White Sox. Viciedo hit his first major league homer, connecting off Angels starter Scott Kazmir in the seventh inning.

INDIANS 9, RANGERS 3

ARLINGTON, Texas — Matt LaPorta hit a two-run homer, then later took an accidental elbow to the head and left the game Monday night as Cleveland beat Texas.

Jayson Nix homered twice and rookie Carlos Santana also connected to help the Indians win for the seventh time in nine games.

Halladay throws 7th complete game

PHILADELPHIA — Roy Halladay pitched his major league-best seventh complete game and Greg Dobbs hit a two-run homer as Philadelphia beat Atlanta 3-1 on Monday night.

Halladay (10-7) allowed five hits and struck out seven to record his second straight complete game. The All-Star right-hander outdueled Derek Lowe (9-7) and needed just 93 pitches to finish.

Chipper Jones homered for the NL East-leading Braves.

Lowe allowed two runs and six hits in seven innings, striking out six. Dobbs hit a two-run homer off Lowe in the sixth for a 2-1 lead.

MARLINS 6, DODGERS 5

LOS ANGELES — Wes Helms hit a bases-loaded two-run single in the third inning after Florida scored its first three runs on a sacrifice fly, a groundout and a throwing error, and the Marlins beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 6-5 on Monday night.

Nate Robertson (6-6) allowed four runs and seven hits in six innings, struck out two and walked one in winning for the first time since June 18 against Tampa Bay.

REDS 8, METS 6

NEW YORK — Joey Votto swatted a pair of home runs and Cincinnati took advantage of a rare overturned call by the umpires to earn a wild victory over the New York Mets.

Drew Stubbs and Corky

Miller each drove in a pair of runs during a strange six-run fifth inning, one that included everything from a run-scoring triple by rookie pitcher Travis Wood to Mets manager Jerry Manuel getting tossed for arguing with the umpires.

AMERICAN LEAGUE RAYS 6, RED SOX 5

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Jason Bartlett's sacrifice fly in the seventh inning snapped a tie and Tampa Bay rallied from a four-run deficit against Daisuke Matsuzaka to beat Boston.

John Jaso drove in two runs with a bases-loaded single that made it 5-5 and chased Matsuzaka in the sixth. Bartlett's sacrifice fly off Ramon Ramirez (0-2) drove in pinch-runner B.J. Upton after Matt Joyce and

Germany getting even at 2010 World Cup

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — One by one, Germany is settling old scores.

First came England. Not only did the Germans beat their old rivals, they finally got payback for that goal-not-a-goal in 1966. Then it was pesky Argentina, in what's fast becoming the World Cup's version of Yankees-Red Sox.

Next up: Spain, the team that beat Germany in the European Championship final two years ago.

"We are not speaking of revenge," German coach Joachim Loew said. "That hasn't been on my mind at all"

Keep telling yourself that, Jogi. But when the DVD of this World Cup is released, don't be surprised if the subtitle is "Germany Gets Even."

Bitter rivals and grudge matches are part of what make sports so fun. Notre Dame-Purdue might be a good little game, but it's not nearly as enthralling as that annual Irish throwdown with USC. Booring Brett Favre was considered heresy in Green Bay until he put on a purple jersey.

And all these German back stories have been almost as juicy as the games themselves.

It's been more than 40 years, and the Germans are still nursing a grudge about Geoff Hurst's just-over-the-line goal (or was it?) that helped England win its only title in 1966. Never mind that Germany got its revenge four years later, coming from behind to knock England out in the quarterfinals, or that it's won two more titles since then.

Anytime it plays England it's high drama, and the teams' second-round matchup in South Africa was no exception. Germany's 4-1 rout, England's worst loss at a World Cup, would have been satisfaction enough. But England was robbed of Frank Lampard's goal late in the first half that would have tied the score and, possibly, changed the direction of the game.

"The goal was very important," England coach Fabio Capello said. "We could have played a different style."

FIFA president Sepp Blatter later apologized to the English, but there was no mea culpa from the Germans. They'd already moved on to their latest squabble with the Argentines.

Argentina and Germany's relationship has been testy since they traded World Cup titles in back-to-back finals in 1986 and '90, and now it's just downright ugly. After Germany eliminated Argentina on penalty kicks in the quarterfinals four years ago, the teams exchanged punches and kicks in a display so undignified it would have embarrassed even Don King.

The Germans managed to keep their hands and feet to themselves this time, yapping instead about Argentina being disrespectful hotheads. Argentina coach Diego Maradona claimed he wasn't going to stoop to Germany's level, but that didn't stop him from mocking instigator Bastian Schweinsteiger, asking if the German midfielder was "nervous."

Apparently not, because the Germans dismantled the Argentines in their 4-0 victory in the quarterfinals Saturday, a thrashing so thorough it left Lionel Messi in tears.

For those keeping score, that's Germany 2, Old Foes 0.

"I am just pleased that we are in the semifinals," Miroslav

Governor pushes Congress on immigration reform

The Associated Press

SUNNYSIDE, Wash. — Congress must tackle comprehensive immigration reform to ensure a stable work force for the state's agriculture industry, Gov. Chris Gregoire said last week in the second day of a two-day swing through eastern Washington farm country.

Her remarks came a day after President Barack Obama pushed for immigration reform that includes a pathway to citizenship for an estimated 11 million illegal immigrants in the U.S.

In Washington state, the $38 billion agriculture industry represents 12 percent of the economy and employs 160,000 people. Thousands are estimated to be in the country illegally.

"I've seen the need of our farmers. People don't understand that farm work is not just for anybody. It takes skill, it takes training," Gregoire said. "For the good of our state, for the good of agriculture, I want to see Congress tackle immigration reform."

That reform should include a path to citizenship for undocumented workers, border protection and a viable guest worker program, she said.

Gregoire

"Everyone has to pay taxes, and that may mean they have to pay back taxes," she said.

Dubbed the "Feeding Washington" tour, Gregoire and several of her agency directors stopped in Walla Walla and Yakima on Thursday to discuss water issues, then visited vineyards in the booming Red Mountain wine region.

On Friday, they picked cherries at Agriculture Director Dan Newhouse's 600-acre farm near Sunnyside, before continuing on to tour a fruit packing operation in Brewster and a biofuels company in Odessa.

The Brewster company, Gebbers Farms, fired an undisclosed number of undocumented workers following a U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement audit in December. The company has declined to comment on how many workers were let go — believed to be in the hundreds — but Gebbers Farms has reportedly brought in workers from Jamaica since then under a federal guest worker program.

The guest worker program is expensive and the paperwork required is extensive, deterring many farmers from using it, said Dan Fazio, a labor specialist for the Washington state Farm Bureau.

Fewer than 20 of the state's thousands of farmers are using the so-called H-2A program.

The agriculture industry has three choices, Fazio said: automate harvests to reduce the need for labor, push for a functional program to bring in workers from another country and offer citizenship after several years, or move labor-intensive farming out of the U.S.

"Americans need to decide if they want to produce fresh fruits and vegetables in the United States," he said. "And we can't do it here unless we automate it or find a stable work force."

Blogging farmers

Dairyman Ray Prock tweets with his cell phone June 28 at Ray-Lin Dairy in Denair, Calif. To increase farmers' presence online, Prock helped kick off a grass-roots movement to encourage direct communication with consumers over the Internet. Prock and a handful of other farmers have started AgChat Foundation, an organization aimed at encouraging farmers to get on YouTube, MySpace, Facebook, Twitter and other sites to explain what they do on the farm and answer questions from the public.

Farmers defend way of life with Facebook, Twitter

By Juliana Barbassa
Associated Press writer

DENAIR, Calif. — When a video of dairy cows being punched and prodded with pitchforks was recently released by an animal rights group, it made the rounds on YouTube and generated the expected angry responses.

But it also raised a flurry of outrage from another corner of the Internet: Farmers fought back, blogging, tweeting, uploading their own videos and chatting on Facebook to defend their industry and explain the abuse did not represent their practices.

Growers aren't usually thought of as a wired, social-networking bunch. But frustration at being the targets of tech-wise environmental or animal rights groups has inspired them to get involved with social media and answer in kind.

Armed with smart phones that allow them to post status updates from a tractor seat and increasingly comfortable issuing pithy one-liners on the short-messaging site Twitter, they're going online to tell their own stories, connect to a public they feel doesn't understand them, exchange information and break the isolation they feel on the farm.

"There is so much negative publicity out there, and no one was getting our message out," said Ray Prock Jr., a second-generation Central California dairy farmer whose blog posts and tweets relay information on everything from emergency drills for handling manure spills to lactose intolerance.

Prock was among those who responded to the video, taking time out from his family vacation to vent his frustration.

"Every other farmer I know who cares for animals has at one time or another put those animals' well being ahead of their own or their families' time or needs," he wrote on his blog.

Prock's wife and two children live on the 240-acre farm, and his 9-year-old son has started helping his father, uncles and grandfather care for the family's 450 cows.

"This is where my family lives — I care for the air, and the water, the environment, the cows," Prock said, walking through the open, airy barns. "This is what I wish I could show people."

The dairy industry in particular has been the focus of undercover videotaping by animal rights groups. In one video released on YouTube, a cow too weak to walk to slaughter is run over by a forklift operator. In another video posted in October, workers at a Vermont slaughterhouse kicked day-old calves.

Animal rights advocates turned to social media because they didn't have the money to counter advertisements paid for by farm marketing groups, said Nathan Runkle, director of Mercy For Animals, the organization responsible for the video showing the cows being prodded with pitchforks. He said farmers would do better to focus their efforts on reform because without bad practices, there'd be no bad publicity to counter.

Farmers say the videos are shocking but don't represent how most of them treat their animals.

They worry Americans won't realize this because they're several generations removed from life on the farm, don't know any farmers and have little idea how their food is produced. The only information about food and farming that most people get comes from the Internet, and exchanges were taking place on sites like YouTube or Twitter without any input from farmers.

"We weren't part of the conversation," Prock said. "And if we aren't telling our story, other people will, and they'll tell it the way they want to."

Farmers find an opportunity in immigrant veggies

By Stephen Singer
Associated Press writer

SOUTH DEERFIELD, Mass. — Maxixe, a Brazilian relative of the cucumber, is relatively unknown in the U.S., but it may one day be as common as cilantro as farmers and consumers embrace more so-called ethnic vegetables.

Agriculture experts at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and elsewhere are teaching farmers to grow non-native vegetables that appeal to a growing market of African, Asian and Latin American immigrants. These immigrants and their children already account for more than one-third of produce sales in supermarkets, said Frank Mangan, a plant and soil sciences professor at UMass. And as other customers become more familiar with ethnic foods, experts expect sales to grow even more.

The number of Massachusetts farmers markets that carry ethnic vegetables jumped by 25 percent in a year, to 202 last year, said Scott Soares, commissioner of the state's Department of Agricultural Resources.

Bob Ehart, public policy director of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture, said the organization doesn't track the popularity of ethnic crops, but the trend in Massachusetts appears to be happening in other states as well.

Sales of ethnic vegetables have benefited from

"buy local" marketing campaigns and federal farm legislation giving states grants to expand specialty crop production, he said. There's also been a greater emphasis on marketing specialty vegetables, with New York and New Jersey starting programs aimed at selling produce to ethnic groups.

Glen Hill, executive director of the Minnesota Food Association, noted that cilantro was considered a specialty item 25 years ago, but "now it's on everything." Bok choy, a Chinese cabbage, also was once considered exotic.

"Now, it's another leafy green," Hill said.

His association helps Hmong, Kenyan, Mexican and other immigrant farmers adapt to U.S. agriculture and introduces them to local markets where they've been able to sell growing amounts of mustard greens, beans and other ethnic crops.

"We see a huge demand for it across the board, from restaurants to small stores, big stores and farmers markets," he said.

With maxixe, Mangan and others at UMass grow chipilin, a legume from Mexico and Central America; jilo, an eggplant-like crop grown in Brazil and West Africa; and hierba mora, a member of the tomato family.

They sell vegetables grown at their research farm to Whole Foods Market and other groceries in New York, Washington, D.C., New Jersey, Rhode Island and elsewhere.

Bad crop: Ohio wheat reportedly hit hard by vomitoxin

The Associated Press

TROY, Ohio — A toxin found at high levels this season in wheat has meant lower income for some Ohio farmers.

Levels of vomitoxin are the worst in seven to 10 years in some areas, said Pierce Paul, a plant pathologist and small-grains specialist with the Ohio State University Extension Service. He says the toxin has thrived in parts of the state due to a cool, wet May that allowed fungus to grow.

The toxin limits use of the wheat for humans, and Paul said producers should be wary of feeding the infected wheat to livestock, particularly swine.

Roland Sink, who raises wheat in Miami County in southwest Ohio, said this year's crop is the worst he's harvested in 40 years. He says he's lost about $9,000 on this year's 125-acre crop.

Sink, 60, said he lost an average of $1.25 per bushel because of vomitoxin and the wheat's low weight. The current bushel price is $4 and his worst load of wheat was docked by almost $3 per bushel, he said.

Vomitoxin can decrease the appetite of animals and long-term exposure can lead to gastrointestinal and immune system problems in people, according to information about wheat damage on the extension service's website. The site says milling and manufacturing can reduce levels of the toxin, and that finished products — such as flour — must have less than 1 part per million of the toxin if being used as food for people.

Tri-State Grain Inspection

Service Inc. in Cincinnati tests wheat harvests for vomitoxin, and generally does fewer than 10 tests each day.

On Thursday, the company did nearly 50 tests, and it expected to do dozens more, said agency manager Damon Sampson. Tests have shown levels of the toxin ranging from 5 parts per million to 16 ppm.

Jim Routzahn, plant superintendent at the Troy Elevator, said levels are the highest he's seen in 38 years. Some farmers have lost $2 or more per bushel, and many are disgruntled.

"It's taking a lot of money out of their pockets," he said.

At Brubaker Grain & Chemical in West Alexandria, Gary Brubaker said this year's crop has the poorest quality in three decades, and he's not sure where the company will sell the most damaged wheat.

Health overhaul provisions start to kick in

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The first stage of President Barack Obama’s health care overhaul is expected to provide coverage to about 1 million uninsured Americans by next year, according to government estimates.

That’s a small share of the uninsured, but in a shaky economy, experts say it’s notable.

Many others — more than 100 million people — are getting new benefits that improve their existing coverage.

Overall costs appear modest at this point, split among taxpayers, employers and individuals who directly benefit, although the biggest part of the health care expansion is still four years away.

For weeks, the White House has been touting the new law’s initial benefit changes, even as Obama dares Republicans to make good on their threat to repeal his signature social policy achievement. Now, a clearer picture is starting to emerge from the patchwork of press releases.

In 2014, government tax credits will help uninsured workers and their families pay premiums, and Medicaid will take in many more low-income people. Eventually, more than 30 million will gain coverage, sharply reducing the number of uninsured and putting the nation on a path to coverage for all citizens and legal immigrants.

Political salesmanship and an attempt to address some glaring health insurance problems are key elements of the strategy to explain the initial changes resulting from the law. After battling for a year to pass the legislation, Democrats desperately wanted to have tangible accomplishments to point to in high-stakes congressional elections this fall. But they also have to deflect lingering questions, often stirred up by opposition candidates, and doubts about the effectiveness of the overhaul and its costs.

“We’ve seen increasing numbers of people losing their health insurance, particularly in this recession,” said Sara Collins, vice president of the Commonwealth Fund, a New York-based health research clearinghouse. “Providing this early relief will help people who are particularly affected by the downturn.” Collins reviewed coverage estimates in federal regulations for The Associated Press.

Among the beneficiaries will be many people locked out of insurance because of medical problems.

The Raether family of suburban Milwaukee will gain from two of the changes: Elimination of lifetime coverage limits and a ban on insurers turning away children in poor health.

Four-year-old daughter Mira, who was born prematurely and has kidney problems, exhausted the lifetime limit on her parents’ policy earlier this year. Mira now has temporary Medicare coverage because of a kidney transplant, but her parents were worried about what would happen when they have to get her back on private insurance.

“A huge weight has been lifted,” said Sheryl Raether, the mother. “She has ongoing health care needs, and I was afraid she’d hit another lifetime limit.” Medicare not only covers seniors, but people of any age with permanent kidney failure.

ELUSIVE PROGNOSIS

Experts seek to determine damage to the Gulf

By David A. Fahrenthold
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — How dead is the Gulf of Mexico?

It is perhaps the most important question of the BP oil spill — but scientists don’t appear close to answering it despite a historically vast effort.

In the 2 1/2 months since the spill began, the gulf has been examined by an armada of researchers — from federal agencies, universities and nonprofit groups. They have brought back vivid snapshots of a sea under stress: sharks and other deep-water fish suddenly appearing near shore, oil-soaked marshes turning deathly brown, clouds of oil swirling in deep water.

But, with key gaps remaining in their data, there is wide disagreement about the big picture. Some researchers have concluded that the gulf is being spared an ecological disaster. Others think ecosystems that were already in trouble before the spill are now being pushed toward a brink.

“The distribution of the oil, it’s bigger and uglier than we had hoped,” said Roger Helm, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service official and the lead scientist studying the spill for the Interior Department. “The possibility of having significant changes in the food chain, over some period of time, is very real. The possibility of marshes disappearing ... is very real.”

Helm said that his prognosis for the spill had worsened in the past week — as the amount of oily shoreline increased from Louisiana to Florida, despite cleanup efforts. “This just outstrips everybody’s capability” to clean it up, he said.

This research has mainly occurred in the background, as public attention has focused on the “open-heart surgery” at BP’s leaking wellhead.

The patient is a 600,000-square-mile sea, which contains swirling currents, sun-baked salt marshes and dark, cold canyons patrolled by sperm whales. Complicating matters is that even before the spill began in late April, the patient was already sick.

Brian Wimberly, a local teacher, sits alone on a 2.5-mile-long stretch of beach on Monday, in Biloxi, Miss. Despite no signs of oil on the beach, tourists were still avoiding it.

SPILL NOW HITTING ALL GULF STATES

Tar balls from the Gulf oil spill found on a pair of Texas beaches were confirmed Monday as the first evidence that gushing crude from the Deepwater Horizon well has reached all the Gulf states. A Coast Guard official said it was possible that the oil hitched a ride on a ship and was not carried naturally by currents to the barrier islands of the eastern Texas coast, but there was no way to know for sure.

The amount discovered is tiny in comparison to what has coated beaches so far in the hardest-hit parts of the Gulf coast in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and the Florida Panhandle. It still provoked the quick dispatch of cleaning crews and a vow that BP will pay for the trouble.

“Any Texas shores impacted by the Deepwater spill will be cleaned up quickly and BP will be picking up the tab,” Texas Land Commissioner Jerry Patterson said in a news release.

In recent years, Louisiana has been losing a football field’s worth of its fertile marshes to erosion every 38 minutes. In the gulf itself, pollutants coming from the Mississippi’s vast watershed helped feed a low-oxygen “dead zone” bigger than the entire Chesapeake Bay. Measuring the spill’s damage, then, requires distinguishing it from the damage done by these other man-made problems.

So far, even the simplest-sounding attempts to measure the spill’s impact have turned out to be complex.

The official toll of dead birds is about 1,200, a fraction of the 35,000 discovered after the Exxon Valdez spill in 1989. But this, too, has been called into question. Officials can only count the birds they can find, and many think a number of oily birds have sought refuge in the marshes.

“It’s an instinctive response: They’re hiding from predators while they recover,” said Kerry St. POx233, head of a government program that oversees Louisiana’s Barataria Bay marshes. “They plan to recover, of course, and they don’t. They just die.”

Other scientists have focused on more subjective measures of the gulf’s health — not counting the dead, but studying the behavior of wildlife, the movements of oil and the state of larger ecosystems. For them, solid answers are even more elusive.

For example: Is the oil killing off Louisiana’s coastal marshes? state officials have said in interviews that they’ve seen it coating the grasses and mangroves that hold the region’s land in place.

“The marsh grasses, the canes, the mangrove are dying. They’re stressed and dying now,” said Robert Barham, secretary of the state’s Department of Wildlife and Fisheries. “There’s very visible evidence that the ecosystem is changed.”

But Paul Kemp of the National Audubon Society said he flew over the same area and saw a different picture: The oil’s damage was relatively small, at least in comparison with the marsh’s existing problems.

“Here, we have a patient that’s dying of cancer, you know, and now they have a sunburn, too,” Kemp said. “What will kill coastal Louisiana is not this oil spill. What will kill coastal Louisiana is what was killing it before this oil spill,” including erosion and river-control projects that have reduced the buildup of new land.

Further offshore, federal scientists and university researchers have disagreed about the existence of “plumes” or “clouds” of dissolved or submerged oil. Several educators have reported finding underwater oil dozens of miles from the spill: Sometimes, they reported it was so well dissolved that the water appeared clear. In other situations, they found what they thought to be oil globs the size of golf balls.

Just around the leaking BP wellhead, a Texas A&M University scientist reported finding pockets of water with very low dissolved oxygen. That might be a sign that bacteria were consuming oil from the spill — but, in the process, the water became suffocating for other sea life.

The government has presented a very different picture of the deep gulf.

An official at the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) said his agency had found evidence of significant submerged oil — 1 to 2 parts per million — from the BP spill only within six miles of the well.

AROUND THE WORLD

ISRAEL Country eases Gaza blockade

KEREM SHALOM CROSSING — Israel is easing its blockade of Hamas-ruled Gaza to allow in virtually all consumer goods, but the new rules are unlikely to restore the territory’s devastated economy or allow rebuilding of all that was destroyed in last year’s war.

The White House welcomed the changes that were announced Monday as Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu flew to Washington for a meeting with President Barack Obama. International Mideast envoy Tony Blair said Israel’s measures “should have a dramatic influence on the daily lives of the people of Gaza and on the private sector.”

The new blockade rules come in response to an outcry following a deadly Israeli raid on a blockade-busting flotilla at the end of May.

MONTANA Delegation pushes for asbestos cleanup

BILLINGS — Montana’s congressional delegation is pushing the Environmental Protection Agency for assurances it will not pull out of the asbestos-contaminated town of Libby before its cleanup work is complete.

Health workers say at least 400 people have died in rural Libby from contamination caused by a now-closed W.R. Grace vermiculite mine.

U.S. Senators Max Baucus and Jon Tester and Rep. Denny Rehberg have recently asked the EPA to clarify its plans for the 3,900-person town.

The EPA in May finalized its cleanup strategy for the first two of eight contaminated areas, including a town park. Some Libby residents and local elected leaders fear the EPA is rushing to finish its work, leaving the town at risk.

NEW YORK Imam entangled in terrorism case deported

An imam who pleaded guilty to lying to the FBI during the investigation into a suicide bomb plot against New York City subway stations has been deported.

The lawyer for Ahmad Afzali (AKH'-mahd ahf-ZAH'-lee) says Afzali and his wife left on a Saudi Arabian Airlines flight to Jeddah on Monday afternoon. Two immigration agents accompanied him to the plane to ensure he got on. Afzali’s lawyer says some of Afzali’s last words on U.S. ground were: ‘God bless America.’

Afzali’s wife Fatima got a position teaching English in Saudi Arabia. Afzali isn’t quite sure what he’s going to do there. The Afghanistan-born imam has lived most of his life in Queens.

He was sentenced April 15 to time served and deportation. Najibullah Zazi pleaded guilty in plot disrupted by federal and NYPD officials.

Temps soar to near 100 in East

Hot weather is expected this week in the United States, with temperatures en route to 100-plus degrees in some places. Temperatures reached into at least the 90s Monday from Maine to Texas, into the Southwest and Death Valley.

In the East, warm air is “sitting over the top of us, and it’s not really going to budge much for the next day or two,” said Brian Korty, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Camp Springs, Md. He said after that, a system coming in off the Atlantic Ocean would bring in cooler temperatures.

Monday was a day off for many to mark Sunday’s Independence Day holiday. The extended weekend aided utilities by lowering demand for power, said Lissette Santana, a spokeswoman for PPL Electric Utilities in Allentown, Pa.

For others, though, there was no getting away from the heat.

Richard Willis, 52, was one of a few dozen homeless men in Franklin Square, a small park in downtown Washington. He spent his day drinking water and staying in the shade.

“That’s all you can do, really,” said Willis, who wore jeans and a long-sleeve shirt and sat under a tall tree near a fountain.

PUERTO RICO Official warns of dengue fever outbreak

SAN JUAN — Puerto Rico’s top health official warned Monday that the U.S. island could face its worst-ever dengue fever outbreak if people don’t act quickly to destroy breeding areas for disease-spreading mosquitoes.

Health Secretary Lorenzo Gonzalez Feliciano issued the warning after a 37-year-old woman from the northern town of Hatillo died of the hemorrhagic form of the tropical virus. Her death was the third fatality from dengue fever so far this year on the island.

Unless islanders take urgent measures to eradicate bug breeding areas by draining standing water near their houses, the Caribbean territory will experience a public health crisis in coming months, Gonzalez said.

Study shows teenagers benefit from later school day

CHICAGO (AP) — Giving teens 30 extra minutes to start their school day leads to more alertness in class, better moods, less tardiness, and even healthier breakfasts, a small study found.

“The results were stunning. There’s no other word to use,” said Patricia Moss, academic dean at the Rhode Island boarding school where the study was done. “We didn’t think we’d get that much bang for the buck.”

The results appear in July’s Archives of Pediatrics & Adolescent Medicine. The results mirror those at a few schools that have delayed starting times more than half an hour.

Researchers say there’s a reason why even 30 minutes can make a big difference. Teens tend to be in their deepest sleep around dawn — when they typically need to arise for school. Interrupting that sleep can leave them groggy, especially since they also tend to have trouble falling asleep before 11 p.m.

“There’s biological science to this that I think provides compelling evidence as to why this makes sense,” said Brown University sleep researcher Dr. Judith Owens, the study’s lead author and a pediatrician at Hasbro Children’s Hospital in Providence, R.I.

An Archives editorial said the study adds to “a growing body of evidence that changing the start time for high schools is good for adolescents.”

The fact that the study was in the exclusive setting of St. George’s School in Middletown, R.I., doesn’t necessarily weaken the results. Owens acknowledged that there might be more hurdles to overcome at poorer, public schools, including busing schedules, parents’ work hours and daycare for younger siblings. While these issues have killed many proposals elsewhere, some public high schools including those in Minneapolis and West Des Moines have adopted later starting times.

Mel Riddile, an associate director at the National Association of Secondary School Principals, favors later class times for teens but said most districts oppose it.

it’s not about learning,” he said. “With budget cuts, it’s going to make it more difficult to get this done.”

Many parents and teachers at St. George’s were opposed but reluctantly agreed to the study after a presentation by Owens, whose daughter was a junior there.

Overall, 201 high school students completed sleep habit surveys before and after the nine-week experiment last year. The results were so impressive that the school made the change permanent, Moss said.

Living with corpses

Officials: Widow tended to remains of husband, twin sister

By Michael Rubinkam
Associated Press writer

WYALUSING, Pa. — The 91-year-old widow lived by herself in a tumbledown house on a desolate country road. But she wasn't alone, not really, not as long as she could visit her husband and twin sister.

No matter they were already dead. Jean Stevens simply had their embalmed corpses dug up and stored them at her house — in the case of her late husband, for more than a decade — tending to the remains as best she could until police were finally tipped off last month.

Much to her dismay. "Death is very hard for me to take," Stevens told an interviewer.

As state police finish their investigation into a singularly macabre case — no charges have been filed — Stevens wishes she could be reunited with James Stevens, her husband of nearly 60 years who died in 1999, and June Stevens, the twin who died last October. But their bodies are with the Bradford County coroner now, off-limits to the woman who loved them best.

From time to time, stories of exhumed bodies are reported, but rarely do those involved offer an explanation. Jean Stevens, seeming more grandmother than ghoul, holds little back as she describes what happened outside this small town in northern Pennsylvania's Endless Mountains.

She knows what people must think of her. But she had her reasons, and they are complicated, a bit sad, and in their own peculiar way, sweet.

Dressed smartly in a light blue shirt and khaki skirt, silver hoops in her ears, her white hair swept back and her brown eyes clear and sharp, she offers a visitor a slice of pie, then casts a knowing look when it's declined. "You're afraid I'll poison you," she says.

Jean Stevens, 91, holds a photograph from the 1940s of herself and her late husband, James, outside her home in Wyalusing, Pa. Authorities say Stevens stored the bodies of her husband, who died in 1999, and her twin, who died in October 2009, on her property.

On a highboy in the corner of the dining room rests a handsome, black-and-white portrait of Jean, then a stunner in her early 20s, and James, clad in his Army uniform. It was taken after their 1942 marriage but before his service in World War II, in which he fought in the Battle of the Bulge. After the war, James worked at a General Electric Corp. plant in Liverpool, N.Y., then as an auto mechanic. He succumbed to Parkinson's disease on May 21, 1999.

Next to that photo there is a smaller color snapshot of Jean and June, taken when they were in their late 80s.

In many ways, Jean shared a closer bond with her twin than her husband.

Though June lived more than 200 miles away in West Hartford, Conn., they talked by phone several times a week, and June wrote often.

The twins — who, as it happened, married brothers — were honored guests at the 70th reunion of the Camptown High School Class of 1937.

Then, last year, June was diagnosed with cancer. She was in a lot of pain when Jean came to visit. The sisters shared a bed, and Jean rubbed her back. "I'm real glad you're here," June said.

On Oct. 3, June died. She was buried in her sister's backyard — but not for long.

"I think when you put them in the (ground), that's goodbye, goodbye," Stevens said. "In this way I could touch her and look at her and talk to her."

She kept her sister, who was dressed in her "best housecoat," on an old couch in a spare room off the bedroom. Jean sprayed her with expensive perfume that was June's favorite.

"I'd go in, and I'd talk, and I'd forget," Stevens said. "I put glasses on her. When I put the glasses on, it made all the difference in the world. I would fix her up. I'd fix her face up all the time."

She offered a similar rationale for keeping her husband on a couch in the detached garage. James, who had been laid to rest in a nearby cemetery, wore a dark suit, white shirt and blue knitted tie.

"I could see him, I could look at him, I could touch him. Now, some people have a terrible feeling, they say, 'Why do you want to look at a dead person? Oh my gracious,'" she said.

"Well, I felt differently about death."

Part of her worries that after death, there's ... nothing. "Is that the grand finale?" But then she gets up at night and gazes at the stars in the sky and the deer in the fields, and she thinks, "There must be somebody who created this. It didn't come up like mushrooms."

Chinese court sentences U.S. geologist to 8 years

BEIJING (AP) — An American geologist held by Chinese state security agents who stubbed lit cigarettes on his arms was sentenced to eight years in prison Monday for gathering data on China's oil industry — a case that highlights the government's use of vague secrets laws to restrict business information.

In pronouncing Xue Feng guilty of spying and collecting state secrets, the Beijing No. 1 Intermediate People's Court said his actions "endangered our country's national security."

Its verdict said Xue received documents on geological conditions of onshore oil wells and a database that gave the coordinates of more than 30,000 oil and gas wells belonging to China National Petroleum Corporation and listed subsidiary PetroChina Ltd. That information, it said, was sold to IHS Energy, the U.S. consultancy Xue worked for and now known as IHS Inc.

The sentence of eight years is close to the recommended legal limit of 10 years for all but extremely serious violations. Though Xue, now 45 and known as a meticulous, driven researcher, showed no emotion when the court announced the verdict, it stunned his lawyer and his sister, his only family member allowed in the courtroom.

"I can't describe how I feel. It's definitely unacceptable," Xue's wife, Nan Kang, said by telephone, sobbing, from their home in a Houston, Texas, suburb where she lives with their two children.

U.S. Ambassador to China Jon Huntsman attended the hearing to display Washington's interest in the case. He left without commenting and the U.S. Embassy issued a statement calling for Xue's immediate release and deportation to the United States.

Xue's sentence punctuates a case that has dragged on for more than two-and-a-half years and is likely to alarm foreign businesses unsure when normal business activities elsewhere might conflict with China's vague state security laws.

Dutch enviro agency admits mistake in UN climate report

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — A leading Dutch environmental agency, taking the blame for one of the glaring errors that undermined the credibility of a seminal U.N. report on climate change, said Monday it has discovered more small mistakes and urged the panel to be more careful.

But the review by the Netherlands Environmental Assessment Agency claimed that none of the errors effected the fundamental conclusion by U.N. panel of scientists: that global warming caused by humans already is happening and is threatening the lives and well-being of millions of people.

Mistakes discovered in the 3,000-page report by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change last year fed into an atmosphere of skepticism over the reliability of climate scientists who have been warning for many years that human-induced emissions of greenhouse gases could have catastrophic consequences, including rising sea levels, drought and the extinction of nearly one-third of the Earth's species.

The errors put scientists on the defensive in the months before a major summit on climate change in Copenhagen in December, which met with only limited success on agreeing how to limit carbon emissions and contain the worst effects of global warming.

The underlying IPCC conclusions remain valid, said Maarten Hajer, the Dutch agency's director. The IPCC report is not a house of cards that collapses with one error, but is more like a puzzle with many pieces that need to fit together, he said.

Horses dragged driver as he tried to stop rampage

BELLEVUE, Iowa (AP) — The buggy driver whose horses trampled spectators at this town's Fourth of July parade had tried desperately to stop the rampage, clinging to the reins as the animals dragged him down the street, his family said Monday.

Mardell Steines was in the buggy with his wife, Janet, his daughter-in-law, his 7-year-old grandson and his 5-year-old granddaughter on Sunday when the horses bolted toward the end of the parade, injuring 24 people and killing Janet Steines.

Police said the horses were spooked after they rubbed heads and the bridle fell off one of them. The animals went on a rampage over six blocks, plowing through spectators and children stooping to snatch up candy that had been tossed along the parade route.

"If he ever envisioned a situation would happen that would cause harm to others, it would have destroyed him," said Ken Walsh, whose daughter was in the buggy. "He was trying his damndest to get those horses under control."

The buggy struck a combine in the parade and a road sign, Walsh said. Janet Steines was thrown out and struck a concrete driveway. She died at the University of Iowa Hospital in Iowa City.

The hitch came undone and the carriage separated from the horses, running over Steines as he held onto the reins, said Walsh, 61, whose daughter, Jenny Steines, is married to Steines' son.

Steines' shirt was shredded as the horses dragged him down the street, Walsh said.

Meanwhile, Jenny Steines clutched her children as the carriage rolled over. The roof protected them and they emerged with only bumps and bruises, Walsh said. He wasn't sure when Mardell Steines let go of the reins, but said he refused medical treatment.

The horses finally rammed into the Maquoketa State Bank float at an intersection. The horses went down, and people leaped on them to hold them down, witnesses said.

Melissa Schmidt, 40, of rural Bellevue, said she was watching the parade with her 6-year-old son Adam and her 4-year-old son Aden. She heard the horses running and their chains rattling. She jumped up and the next thing she knew, Aden was lying on his back with his hands in the air. She turned and saw Adam covered in blood.

Schmidt said she screamed, then dropped to her knees and cradled one son in each arm until paramedics arrived.

"I don't think I've every prayed so hard in my life,"

Adam was still hospitalized Monday with a compound fracture of his right leg, bruises on his kidney, liver and right lung, and extensive road rash.

Schmidt said she knew the Steines from church and that they were good people. She planned to attend Janet Steines' funeral Friday.

Along with Steines and Schmidt's two children, 22 others were injured, police said.

At least 15 of the injured were children, according to information provided by police, who said two victims still hadn't been identified.

Most victims had been released by Monday afternoon, but at least three remained hospitalized. More information on their conditions wasn't available.

John Sawicki of Mount Prospect, Ill., watched the horses from his hotel's balcony and said he tried to scream at people to move, but no sound came out because he was so shocked.

"They were flying right down the sidewalk," said the 42-year-old, who was in town to visit his mother. "I felt so helpless."
