Like public schools, online academy feels budget crunch

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Technology is rapidly changing public education, but that pace will be slowed as Idaho's public schools deal with a state funding shortfall.

The Idaho Digital Learning Academy, a state-funded agency that provides online courses to students in schools across Idaho, will have to limit its enrollment and has increased its costs from $50 to $75 per course. The belt-tightening comes in response to a 22 percent reduction in its state funding, and includes other steps including furlough days and an overall 8 percent reduction to teacher pay.

"It's not something that we wanted to do," said Alyson Outen, communications director for IDLA. "We're hoping it's a short-term situation because the school districts are really relying on us. As their funding gets cut, they rely on us more and more."

The reductions come as public schools and students are increasingly using IDLA online courses — both for supplemental elective courses and more crucial needs such as recovering high school credits that struggling students may need to graduate on time.

IDLA's enrollment has grown by 50 percent a year since its 2002 genesis, and it had an enrollment of 14,300 students last school year. For this school year, enrollment will be capped at 15,000 students due to decreased funding.

"We wouldn't be able to accommodate a 50 percent increase," Outen said of the school's budget situation. "We would be deficit spending if we did."

At the same time, IDLA is in the early stages of planning fundraising efforts aimed at helping the school enroll students beyond the cap.

Electronic calls are fair game this year in Idaho wolf hunts

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Idaho wildlife officials will allow trapping and the use of electronic calls in this year's wolf hunt.

Members of Idaho's Fish and Game Commission said Wednesday night they hope the measures will help reduce the state's wolf population, The Spokesman-Review reported. The decision comes the same week that Montana more than doubled its quota for this year's wolf hunt.

Idaho's population is estimated at a minimum of 835 wolves, while Montana had at least 524 wolves at the end of last year.

Hunting seasons in both states could be halted by U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy. He is expected to make a ruling in a lawsuit seeking to restore Endangered Species Act protections for wolves in the two states. The commission will set quotas for Idaho's fall wolf hunt in August.

Advocates for public wolf hunts hailed the states' decisions, although some said they would still like to see stronger action. Some hunters say they've seen fewer elk since wolves were reintroduced.

"We just need to get rid of some of these wolves, so that people who want to put an elk in the freezer can get one," said Rick Huddleston of St. Maries.

But opponents of hunting wolves said Idaho's changes are going too far.

"We're taking them down to numbers where they aren't able to do the job they're meant to do in nature," said Nancy Taylor, a member of the North Idaho Wolf Alliance, noting that predators help keep ecosystems in balance.

BEATING BACK THE BLAZE

Hot, dry weather blamed for 3 Twin Falls County fires

Hot temperatures over the past few days made conditions right for a few fires Friday afternoon in Twin Falls County.

A call about a fire near Shoshone Falls Park came in to the Twin Falls Fire Department at 2:12 p.m. Three engines and two water tenders responded, along with an engine and tender from Rock Creek Fire District. The fire burned 4 acres before it was put out a few hours later.

No structures were destroyed but the fire came within 100 feet of Steve Caward's home, the last house on the road that leads to the park. He was home and was alerted by a passer-by.

"I opened the door and saw the flames," Caward said. "The wind turned and it started moving toward us fast."

Caward had an outdoor sprinkler system and said he was able to turn the water on the flames as the wind turned again.

Twin Falls Fire Department Battalion Chief Ron Aguirre said firefighters found two ignition sites, but didn't know if one caused the other. Caward said the two sites were about 300 yards apart on opposite corners of his property.

"I wouldn't be surprised if it's intentional," Caward said.

Aguirre said the conditions might have been right for dry lightning but had no reports of lightning. The fire department is still investigating the blaze.

The Bureau of Land Management reported two small fires, about a mile apart, that flared up about 5 miles southeast of Hollister. One was 10 acres, while the Cowboy Fire burned 2 acres.

A helitack helicopter was deployed and the Salmon Tract Rural Fire Department provided assistance. Both fires were out by late Friday afternoon. Their cause remains under investigation.

Rally in Valley revs up for weekend

Biker benefit expected to attract more than 500 to Murtaugh Lake

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

The bikes started to roar into Murtaugh Lake Park late Friday afternoon for the fifth annual Rally in the Valley.

More than 500 people are expected to attend the three-day event hosted by the Snake River Bros, a nonprofit dedicated to raising money to help children and families in need of medical assistance. Roger Bolton, Harley-Davidson aficionado and one of the group's founding members, said the rally is the nonprofit's biggest fundraiser of the year. Last year $22,000 was raised for their cause. Bolton expects to raise as much through this year's event, which continues through Sunday.

Friday's events were set to start after a larger crowd showed up. A biker rodeo, tattoo contest and live music were scheduled to make it a lively night for those sporting leather vests and colorful tattoos. A tour of the Magic Valley was planned for Saturday morning with the finals rodeo following in the evening. The event attracted people from as far as Texas and Salt Lake City.

Larry Herro started touring motorcycle rallies as a vendor in 1966 and said he's only missed two of the annual rallies in Sturgis, S.D., though this was his first trip to Rally in the Valley. His wife, Lee Annette Herro, installs LED lights on bikes and has even picked up the nickname, "the queen of lights" from Willie G. Davidson, senior vice president of Harley-Davidson Motor Co.

"I only missed one of the rallies because I was in the Army and they couldn't figure out how to make it emergency leave," Herro said. "The rallies are always fun

As a rapt nation watched, LeBron James decided, stunning Cleveland fans

By Meghan Barr
Associated Press writer

CLEVELAND — The elimination ceremony boiled down to a single sentence, uttered by the most coveted bachelor of them all.

And it ended, as such endings always do, with tears — and the self-righteous fury that inevitably follows being rejected live on national television. Millions of Americans glued to their television screens watched in anticipation and curiosity as LeBron James

"This shocking act of disloyalty from our home grown 'chosen one' sends the exact opposite lesson of what we would want our children to learn."

— Cleveland Cavaliers owner Dan Gilbert, in a furious open letter to fans about LeBron James' decision to play for the Miami Heat handed that coveted final rose to the Miami Heat, eliminating his remaining suitors in one cruel instant.

In Cleveland, grown men cried into their beers. And for crestfallen viewers in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, the moment of truth stung like a personal betrayal.

contestants get mercilessly booted into oblivion in front of the cameras — but we certainly don't want to be the rejects ourselves, thank you very much.

And that's exactly what happened Thursday night. The morning after, people are wondering: How did a decision by one basketball player jump clean out of the realm of basketball and become an American cultural moment that will be talked about for years to come?

That's called masterful marketing. James played coy for weeks, dragging out his decision as the frenzied speculation went into overdrive. Rather than leave his home turf, he invited teams from various cities to come visit him instead. Meanwhile, hope and anxiety built like a balloon about to pop.

Wendell struggles to meet federal mandate on handicapped access

By Blair Koch

Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — A year has passed since the city of Wendell undertook a U.S. Department of Justice mandate to ensure access to city facilities for the disabled.

Much work still remains, as the city apparently has the will, though not the funds, to meet the DOJ's Project Civic Access Initiative.

"It's kind of a waiting game until our accountants give us a clear picture of what we need to do," said Mayor Brad Christopher-son.

The undertaking stems from a resident's complaint years ago to the department regarding handicapped accessibility at Wendell's former city hall.

The old city hall was torn down after the city moved its offices into a former elementary school building on First Avenue in 2005, but Wendell is moving forward to make programs, services and facilities comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

Public Works Director Bob Bailey said the city still needs to fix accessibility issues at City Park and McGinnis Park and pool.

"We've got 32 yards of concrete to pour for sidewalks," Bailey said. "That alone is going to cost about $4,000 but that is the cost for what we know we've got to fix. Other costs could come up for work we come across."

So far the city has upgraded the City Hall parking lot to clearly post handicap parking and van accessibility, moved toilet and stall walls in city hall restrooms and lowered mirrors and towel dispensers.

Bailey said city crews are trying to keep costs low, as the mandate was passed after the city set this year's budget and money for the improvements was not set aside.

"We're using wood from the old gym that the city is demolishing to make frames for the concrete," Bailey said. "We're aware of the financial situation and doing everything we can to keep the costs minimal."

Bailey plans to move forward with pouring sidewalks at the end of the month.

The city is now planning its budget for fiscal year 2011 — which begins in October — but with a recent audit highlighting the city's $500,000 deficit, funds are going to be tight.

The city didn't immediately know how much money has been spent on the accessibility project. City Clerk/Treasurer Mickey Walker said, "It's all come out of the general fund."

Addressing accessibility issues on walkways and curbing along city streets is the next portion of the project being considered. The city is working with J-U-B Engineers of Twin Falls to determine which paved areas need to be improved.

Idaho Highway 46 runs through Wendell as Idaho Street, and Bailey said the city is working with the Idaho Transportation Department to see when it plans to work on the roadway.

"We're hoping that we can hold off on improving the sidewalks and curbs on Idaho Street because the state is supposed to be coming through and doing that within the next few years. However, with state budget concerns no one knows when exactly that will be," Bailey said. "It would save the city a lot of money."

He hopes the city will have a clear picture of the remaining costs involved in time for this year's budgeting process.

"One way or the other, we have to complete this project," he said. "The city doesn't really have the option of not doing it."

— especially the rodeos."

The couple travel around the U.S. in their RV to as many rallies as they can before settling down for three months in their home in Buckholts, Texas.

While the bikers waited for the night to get started, impromptu competitions started on the grass. The "slow ride" competition started as practice for the rodeo but continued as more participants bellowed into the ring. Contestants were expected to go as slow as possible without putting their feet down to steady them. It was just the start to more competitions ranging from a "plank ride" to the much anticipated "weenie" bite — a competition that requires the biker to ride slowly under a hot dog dangling from a string, while his partner stands up and tries to bite the sausage as close to the string as possible.

Krislynn Moser, 18, has attended the event for the last four years and said it gets better every time.

"There are always new people and new ideas," she said. "Everybody works together. We're like a big happy family."

Academy

IDLA offers 165 courses. Some focus on essentials like math and English, while others offer students more specialized subjects like Mandarin Chinese.

Even in the summertime, IDLA courses are popular.

In Twin Falls School District, for example, student participation in IDLA courses increased from last year. There were 185 IDLA courses taken by the district's students in 2009, which increased to 354 this year, said district spokeswoman Beth Pendergrass.

In rural school districts, IDLA brings an edge to education where options would otherwise be limited. In Gooding School District, for example, the only face-to-face language course in Spanish, but IDLA brings other language courses to students, said Heather Williams, superintendent of Gooding School District.

While the cost is increasing for courses, the bigger challenge will be the limited number of students that IDLA can accept, Williams said.

"That's going to be significant for our district if we're unable to get students in courses," she said.

John Graham, superintendent of Filer School District, said the district used an IDLA course for the classroom portion of its driver's education program after a retirement. At the same time, he's not expecting a major impact on his district, which has been in more of the exploration phase of IDLA courses.

"We're starting to get into it," he said.

Idaho Power strikes up first large solar energy agreement

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Idaho Power Co.'s proposed energy agreement with a solar company is a first for both entities.

Idaho Power entered into a 20-year agreement on June 8 with Grand View Solar PV One to receive supplemental power. It has bought solar power from small residential projects but this will be Idaho Power's first contract with a larger provider.

Grand View Solar PV One will develop a field of solar panels on 180 acres leased from J.R. Simplot Co. 16 miles west of Mountain Home Air Force Base. Company owner Robert Paul of Desert Hot Springs, Calif., said this is his first solar installation but he has worked in wind power for 30 years.

"Large solar projects are just now becoming feasible," Paul said. Solar panels have become more efficient, and the push for renewable energy has encouraged agencies to support solar energy, he added.

The location is close to the Canyon Creek electrical substation so Paul said he won't need to construct a substation, saving a couple million dollars.

"And southern Idaho has excellent solar resources," Paul said. "Everyone thinks about New Mexico or Arizona, but Idaho's better than you'd think."

Assuming the application for the development is approved, Paul said construction should be finished this fall. The project needs to be online by January 2011, according to the agreement.

The solar power falls under the Public Utility

Regulatory Policies Act of 1978, which requires power companies to offer to buy power from qualifying small producers. Although the project's total capacity will be 20 megawatts, under the act, Idaho Power won't pay the agreed rates for any more than an average of 10 megawatts monthly. Based upon average home use, that would power almost eight homes monthly.

But Paul doesn't intend to stop there.

The proposed field is just the first of two projects. Paul said he is working with Simplot to develop another solar panel field nearby, which will go through a separate permit process. Paul said the solar permitting process is similar to that for wind, so he knows what to do.

"The 10 megawatt limitation is per permit, not per developer, so he could be paid for up to 20 megawatts," said Idaho Public Utilities Commission representative Gene Fadness.

Idaho Power applied to the PUC for approval of the deal and the commission has now posted the proposal for public comment.

"We rarely get comments on these," said Fadness. "Most people are supportive of solar energy."

Comments are being accepted through Aug. 19 at www.puc.idaho.gov. Click on "comments & questions," fill in the case number (IPC-E-10-19) and add your comments. Comments can also be mailed to P.O. Box 83720, Boise, ID 83720-0074 or faxed to 334-3762.

LeBron

Preliminary Nielsen Co. ratings showed more than seven of every 100 homes with TV sets were tuned in to the ESPN special. In Cleveland, the attention was extraordinary: one in every four homes watched James announce he was leaving his hometown. Nielsen's estimate of how many people watched nationwide, expected on Friday, was delayed until Monday.

"It built suspense. It kept sequencing or ratcheting up what would the choice be," said Gerry Patnode, who leads the school of business at York College in York, Pa. "Everybody started to speculate what it would be like if LeBron came to my city?"

It was also, at another level, a bit of well-played psychological warfare. James tapped into fans' insecurity, their need for constant vindication, says Dr. Alan Hilfer, director of psychology at Maimonides Medical Center in New York.

"Everybody wanted to be able to say, 'he chose us,'" Hilfer says. "That means we're the good guys, we're a good city. We're a good team."

But for all the hype and the oft-repeated comparisons to Michael Jordan, James hasn't won a single championship in his young career, a fact that was duly noted on the front page of the Cleveland Plain Dealer on Friday morning in the form of a full-length image of James seen from behind as he walks away. An arrow pointing to the fingers on James' right hand is accompanied by this caption: "7 years in Cleveland. No rings."

As the city's anger swelled on Thursday night, with people burning jerseys in the streets, Cleveland Cavaliers owner Dan Gilbert penned a furious open letter to fans, sounding very much like a jilted boyfriend penning a bitter missive about an old flame.

"This shocking act of disloyalty from our home grown 'chosen one' sends the exact opposite lesson of what we would want our children to learn," wrote Gilbert, who also called James a "coward" and a "narcissist."

Like many a prodigal son, James must now deal with the disillusionment of people like Gilbert, who is acting like a disappointed father, Hilfer says.

"The loyalty factor is something that everyone can be forgiven for," says Hilfer. "The fact that he wasn't loyal was unforgivable."

The sports memorabilia business Fathead Inc., a company owned by Gilbert, offered LeBron James wall graphics online Friday at price reduced from $99.99 to $17.41. (Famous traitor Benedict Arnold was born in 1741. Coincidence?)

Most experts say James should have seen the vitriol coming from miles away.

"Surely he's seen enough of those old TV sitcom episodes where somebody tells three people they're going to go to the prom," says Robert Thompson, a pop culture expert at Syracuse University. "It never ever works well."

It was like the finale of the cult ABC drama "Lost," which finally ended in May to much fanfare, Thompson says. Like "Lost," James set himself up with too many complications, too many plot twists, to allow for a satisfying ending, Thompson says.

QUOTABLE

“We can’t allow the lowest common denominator states, like Massachusetts, to set standards for the country.”
— Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Values Coalition, after a judge in Massachusetts ruled the federal law banning gay marriage is unconstitutional

CSI’s music man gets overdue recognition

CHEERS: To Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter for recognizing one of Twin Falls’ best-kept secrets.

College of Southern Idaho conductor and music professor George Halsell is one of three recipients of the biennial Governor’s Award for Excellence in the Arts.

The award is presented by Otter and the Idaho Commission on the Arts, which received 41 nominees for its Governor’s Awards in the Arts this year, including 18 for the award Halsell received.

Halsell has been an advocate for the arts in Twin Falls since he arrived in the Magic Valley in 1994 to take a position as music professor. He’s currently chairman of the CSI Advising Committee, president of the Magic Valley Arts Council and a member of the Danny Marona Performing Arts Scholarship Fund Board, in addition to teaching music full-time to CSI students.

What perhaps propelled Halsell to the top of the governor’s list, however, was his Symphony in Five Episodes, a symphony that Halsell composed, directed and conducted himself, which was presented to the public in November 2009.

“It was both amazing and beautiful,” said longtime Twin Falls arts advocate Marty Mead.

This award was given to Twin Falls residents Del Parkinson in 1988, Mead in 1992 and Jean B. King in 2002.

JEERS: To U.S. Sen. Jim Risch, for his abrupt about-face of the Central Idaho Economic Development and Recreation Act of which he was a co-sponsor.

Rep. Mike Simpson, the bill’s author, told the Idaho Statesman that Risch now opposes CIEDRA as it’s written and only agreed to co-sponsor it with Republican Sen. Mike Crapo as a favor to Simpson.

The congressman isn’t pleased.

“If somebody is going to support something and then oppose it, that doesn’t help,” Simpson said.

Simpson’s bill would protect 332,000 acres of the Boulder and White Cloud mountains as wilderness, give congressional assurance that a major trail through the area would stay open and close others, transfer lands and funds to local governments and authorize a private foundation to buy out grazing permits that face federal closure. Simpson has worked with all of the affected parties for more than a decade to craft the bill.

Risch said he doesn’t like the changes made in the bill in negotiations involving Simpson, Crapo and the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee’s Democratic leadership — though he stayed on as co-sponsor after those changes.

The negotiations led to the removal of language that would have required the Forest Service to replace any trails closed after the bill became law with new trails elsewhere.

Risch said it was Simpson’s responsibility to find a consensus with motorized users. Simpson said he has compromised as far as possible to protect their interests but they have said they will never support the bill.

“That’s a premise I’m unwilling to accept,” Risch said.

It was a radio and newspaper media campaign against the bill and its co-sponsors by the Idaho Recreation Council that triggered Risch’s concerns, Simpson said. The congressman met with Crapo and Risch May 19 and told them “it’s going to get hot in the kitchen,” Simpson said.

“If you want to get out, now is the time to get out,” Simpson said he told the senators. “They both said no.”

Jim Risch took a walk on this issue. That’s disappointing.

CHEERS: To Blaine County Sheriff Walt Femling, for reminding Hailey Mayor Rick Davis that he’ll enforce the law, no matter what Hailey’s priorities are.

Davis announced last month that officers in his town would essentially look the other way if they found evidence that an adult had less than 3 ounces of marijuana — unless they also discovered signs of another crime. This comes after city voters twice passed a slate of initiatives aiming to ease marijuana laws.

But Femling says his officers will continue to enforce marijuana prohibitions.

And Bingham County Sheriff Dave Johnson, vice president of the Idaho Sheriffs Association, wants Attorney General Lawrence Wasden to intervene.

Davis says he was only hoping to find a solution to a three-year conflict between city leaders and citizens about how Hailey enforces Idaho’s anti-marijuana laws. Since 2007, voters approved several pro-marijuana initiatives: One to allow medical marijuana, another to legalize industrial hemp and a third to make enforcement of anti-pot laws the lowest priority for Hailey police.

The initiatives were largely gutted by a court earlier this year, when Fifth District Judge Robert Elgee ruled in 2009 that cities cannot preempt state drug laws. But an oversight council was created to pursue resolution of the issue.

As we said editorially two weeks ago, there’s no place for laws that public officials enforce and laws they don’t. We appreciate Davis’ dilemma, but Femling is right.

American Legion thanks supporters

The Twin Falls American Legion Post 7 was able to send seven young men to Boy’s State this year because of the generosity of community sponsors. The Rotary Club, Lions Club, Canyon Motors Subaru, Everton Mattress, Cohen and Associates, Kurt’s Pharmacy and Costco all helped us to make it possible for these high school juniors to attend.
The program at Boy’s State prepares these young men to participate in the civic life of their community, state and nation. Without these sponsors, we would not have been able to send this many boys. Thanks from them as well as Post 7.

The train wreck that is Michael Steele

WASHINGTON — When one of our two major political parties does not hold the White House and has no clearly identifiable prospective presidential nominee for the next election, it often falls to that party’s national chairman to become its temporary leader and spokesman.

Jules Witcover

Such is the circumstance these days in the Republican Party, with Democrat Barack Obama in the Oval Office and the job of 2012 GOP standard-bearer up for grabs among a field of retreads and wannabes of little notoriety or distinction.

Thus it is the Republicans’ great misfortune, not to say embarrassment, that the national chairman is Michael Steele, the flashy but abysmally misinformed former lieutenant governor of Maryland, the first African American to be the titular head of the party of Lincoln.

If his election to the post was to be an inducement for black voters to stampede to the party, it has been a distinct failure — and ill timed to boot, with the first African American, a Democrat, in the White House. The GOP continues to be a nearly all-white party, as its congressional delegation conspicuously shows and as just about any Republican state convention will testify.

More pertinent than Steele’s skin coloration is his runaway mouth, which has really got him in trouble within his own party this time, with his preposterous comments on the origins and paternity of the American military involvement in Afghanistan. At a Connecticut fund-raiser last week, Steele was caught on tape making this astonishing claim: “This was a war of Obama’s choosing. This is not something the United States has actively prosecuted or wanted to engage in.”

In one fell swoop, Steele denied to former President George W. Bush one of the few legitimate claims for foreign-policy leadership of his eight years in the Oval Office — the invasion of Afghanistan in retaliation for the 9/11 terrorist attacks on American soil. The purpose of the invasion, which seems to have momentarily escaped Steele, was to hunt down and capture or kill Osama bin Laden and his al-Qaida cult members who had planned and carried out the foul deed. Never mind that the objective has been unaccomplished to this day; that was the imperative response for the American president.

Digging himself deeper, Steele said Obama, “Well, if he’s such a student of history, has he not understood that that’s the one thing you don’t do is engage in a land war in Afghanistan? ... Because everyone has tried for a thousand years of history has failed.”

It didn’t take long for other Republicans to come down on him, eventually including such Senate luminaries as the party’s 2008 presidential nominee John McCain and Lindsey Graham of South Carolina. By then Steele was in retreat on the war: “We must also remember that after the tragedy of 9/11, it is also a necessary one.”

Beyond demonstrating Steele’s short memory or his capacity for twisting history to his partisan purposes, the chairman’s faux pas was a reminder of the critical strategic pivot that Bush made in then invading Iraq under false premises. It was a tragic detour from the justifiable basis for going into Afghanistan in the first place.

In the general scheme of things, what the national chairman of either party says seldom matters much, but such comments do carry some weight when nobody else is officially speaking for the party. For the GOP, this is particularly troublesome when its leadership in Congress is known primarily for its obstructionism of Obama’s agenda, earning it the unhelpful label of the Party of No.

The absence of an opposition party agenda — one is said to be in the making through polling the Republican grass-roots, but there is nothing to show the voters yet — doesn’t give Steele any political cover from his inane misreading of the recent history of the American engagement in the Middle East.

Certainly Steele knows better than to call Afghanistan a war “of Obama’s choosing.” It’s just that he seems to let his mouth run ahead of his brain, a chancy proposition for the party chairman by default, with no other official spokesman around. He should jump before he has to be pushed overboard.

Boyfriend's back and there's gonna be trouble

Let's consider the latest developments in the Levi Johnston saga. When we last left Levi, he was fighting with his ex-girlfriend, Bristol Palin, over the custody of his son, Tripp. Also, he was talking trash about Tripp's grandmother, the former Republican vice presidential nominee.

This was last summer, when he was showing up everywhere from Vanity Fair to Playgirl, complaining about how Sarah Palin made him cut off his mullet before the Republican convention and how on the day Tripp was born "I didn't think Sarah wanted my mom around all the cameras because she had been arrested for selling prescription medication a week and a half earlier."

But this week Johnston sent out an olive branch, via People magazine. "Last year, after Bristol and I broke up, I was unhappy and a little angry. Unfortunately, against my better judgment, I publicly said things about the Palins that were not completely true," he said.

We have been dealing with a lot of imperfect apologies recently, but this one hits a new level of unsatisfactory.

At the very least, we need to know which of the gossip he was dishing was true, and which not completely. The part about how Sarah fights a lot with Todd? Or that she never cooks? Personally, all I want to know is whether Levi was being straight when he said that the former governor of Alaska doesn't really know how to shoot a gun.

Johnston also told People that he hoped that the Palins would "forgive my youthful indiscretion." This does not really sound like something that would come from a high-school dropout who gave his son the middle name of Easton because that is his favorite hockey equipment company. In fact, the last time I heard anyone refer to a "youthful indiscretion" was in 1998, when 74-year-old Henry Hyde, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, was confessing to an adulterous affair he had conducted when he was 41.

Bristol responded to her ex-boyfriend's statement with one of her own, saying that "part of co-parenting is creating healthy and honest relationships between the parents." Also not the kind of word choice you normally hear from a 19-year-old.

Last year, when his illegitimate fatherdom fame was at its height, Levi had acquired management and was talking about writing his memoirs or pursuing an acting career. But it appears that he has not actually been able to turn his failure to use a condom into a permanent job.

Bristol has been far more successful. She is currently the teen ambassador for the Candie's Foundation to prevent teen pregnancy. She is also available to speak about her experiences — for fees of $15,000 and up.

Earlier this year, Rachel Maddow reported on MSNBC that Bristol had filed paperwork to establish her own company to provide "lobbying, public relations and political consulting services." This may have been done for tax purposes, but the fact is that for a foe of teenage pregnancy, Bristol has been making unwed motherhood look like a pretty attractive gig.

This week, she made her acting debut on the series "The Secret Life of the American Teenager" where she had been cast in the role of an unmarried teen mom named Bristol.

"The Secret Life of the American Teenager" is a product of the ABC Family network, and it consists mainly of attractive kids hanging around talking about their feelings. The show is so utterly detached from reality that the teenage boys talk about their feelings even when there are no teenage girls around to appreciate the effort.

The plots all seem to revolve around who is pregnant, formerly pregnant or worried about being pregnant. In the Bristol episode, there was a great deal of speculation about whether the main character, Amy, was "pregnant again."

Amy plays the French horn — this comes up quite a bit — and she had actually gone off to a camp for young musicians in New York City in hopes of furthering her ambition to get into Juilliard. It was possibly the coolest music camp in the history of band instruments, since every camper got her own personal apartment in Manhattan. Then Bristol appeared at Amy's door to offer to show her how the subway works and let her in on the camp's secret theme: "We're all teen moms. And musicians."

To summarize: Bristol Palin is a teenager whose out-of-wedlock baby has turned her into a national celebrity and gotten her a cameo role on a popular TV show. Where she explains to the lead character that her status as an unwed mother wins her a slot in the world's greatest music camp.

The only person who's actually been doing anything for the battle against teen pregnancy is Levi Johnston. Don't have unprotected sex with your boyfriend, girls. Look what he might turn into.

You can't play the economy like a fiddle

Let's say you're the leader of the free world. The economy is stuck in the doldrums. Naturally, you want to do something.

Many economists say we need another stimulus bill. They debate whether the stimulus should take the form of tax cuts or spending increases, but the ones in your party are committed to spending increases. They trot out a plausible theory with computer models to go with it. If the federal government borrows X amount of dollars and pumps it into the economy, that would produce Y amount of growth and Z amount of jobs. In a $14 trillion economy, you'd probably have to borrow hundreds of billions more to have any noticeable effect, but at least you'd be doing something to help the jobless.

These Demand Side theorists are giving you a plan of action. But you're not a theorist. You're a practical executive, and you have some concerns.

These Demand Siders have very high IQs, but they seem to be strangers to doubt and modesty. They have total faith in their models. But all schools of economic thought have taken their lumps over the past few years. Are you really willing to risk national insolvency on the basis of a model?

Moreover, the Demand Siders write as if everybody who disagrees with them is immoral or a moron. But, in fact, many prize-festooned economists do not support another stimulus. Most European leaders and central bankers think it's time to begin reducing debt, not increasing it — as do many economists at the international economic institutions. Are you sure your theorists are right and theirs are wrong?

The Demand Siders don't have a good explanation for the past two years. There is no way to know for sure how well the last stimulus worked because we don't know what would have happened without it. But it is certainly true that the fiscal spigots have been wide open. The U.S. and most other countries have run up huge, historic deficits. And while this has helped save public-sector jobs, we certainly haven't seen much private-sector job growth. It could be that government spending is a weak lever to counter economic cycles.

The theorists have high IQ's but don't seem to know much psychology. Lord Keynes, though a lesser mathematician, wrote the state of confidence "is a matter to which practical men pay the closest and most anxious attention."

These days, debt-fueled government spending doesn't increase confidence. It destroys it. Only 6 percent of Americans believe the last stimulus created jobs, according to a New York Times/CBS News survey. Consumers are recovering from a debt-fueled bubble and have a moral aversion to more debt.

You can't read models, but you do talk to entrepreneurs in Racine and Yakima. Higher deficits will make them more insecure and more risk-averse, not less. They're afraid of a fiscal crisis. They're afraid of future tax increases. They don't believe government-stimulated growth is real and lasting. Maybe they are wrong to feel this way, but they do.

The Demand Siders are brilliant, but they write as if changing fiscal policy were as easy as adjusting the knob on your stove. In fact, it's very hard to get money out the door and impossible to do it quickly. It's hard to find worthwhile programs to pour money into. Once programs exist, it's nearly impossible to kill them. Spending now creates debt forever and ever.

Moreover, public spending seems to have odd knock-off effects. Professors Lauren Cohen, Joshua Coval and Christopher Malloy of Harvard surveyed 42 years of government spending increases in certain Congressional districts. They found that federal spending increases dampened corporate hiring and investment in those districts. You wish somebody could explain that one to you before you pass on more debt burdens to your grandchildren.

So you have your doubts, but you are practical. You want to do something. Too much debt could lead to national catastrophe. Too much austerity could lead to stagnation.

Well, there's a few short-term things you can do. First, extend unemployment insurance; that's a foolish place to begin budget-balancing. Second, you need to mitigate the pain caused by the state governments that are slashing spending. You need a program modeled on Race to the Top. You will provide federal money now to states that pass responsible long-term budget plans that will reduce spending and pension commitments. That would save public-sector jobs and ease contractionary pressures without throwing the country into a fiscal-debt spiral.

But the overall message is: Don't be arrogant. This year, don't engage in reckless new borrowing or reckless new cutting. Focus on the fundamentals. Cut programs that don't enhance productivity. Spend more on those that do.

You don't have the ability to play the economy like a fiddle. You do have the ability to lay some foundations for long-term growth and stability.

Whirlwind exchange

Spy swap becomes reality

By Jennifer Loven
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — It took less than month for the largest U.S.-Russian spy swap since the Cold War to unfold from an idea secretly hatched in the Oval Office to reality on a remote stretch of Vienna airport tarmac.

The whirlwind exchange took place Friday in a choreographed script of spy novel intrigue. Two planes, one from New York, the other from Moscow, arrived within minutes of each other and parked nose-to-tail. Their passengers — 10 Russian sleeper agents arrested in the U.S. and four prisoners accused by Russia of spying for the West — were ferried to each other, and the planes departed again just as quickly.

The whole thing, a soundless drama seen only at a distance through camera lenses, took less than an hour and a half — displaying the efficiency of this extraordinary new chapter in U.S.-Russian relations.

The 10 Russian agents who had blended into U.S. communities, including Anna Chapman, the woman who had caught Americans' fancy with her Facebook photos, soon landed in Moscow. And four other Russians accused of spying for the West headed the other way, two of them arriving at Dulles International Airport outside Washington at the end of the capital's workday.

Their chartered aircraft, a

Two men stand on the gangway of a Russian plane believed to be carrying candidates for a 14-person spy swap as part of the largest spy swap since the Cold War have parked on the tarmac at Vienna's Schwechat airport, on Friday.

maroon-and-white Boeing 767-200, had stopped briefly at a southern England air base, where a U.S. official said two of the four were dropped off before the plane continued across the Atlantic.

The swap idea was Washington's, first raised with President Barack Obama nearly a month ago when the FBI and Justice Department officials who had been watching the 10 Russian agents hiding in suburban America for over a decade informed the president it was time to start planning their arrests, according to two White House officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity under ground rules set by the White House.

What was known as "the illegals program" had been first brought to the White House's attention months before, in February, triggering weeks of meetings about how and when to proceed, the officials said. It became clear in early June that at least two of the Russians were making plans to leave the U.S., meaning the whole operation now had to be rolled up more quickly than originally thought.

The timing of the arrests was deliberated with Obama on that June 11 Friday afternoon in the Oval Office, along with the expected charges for the individuals and the potential impact on Washington's freshly "reset" relationship with its former Cold War rival. Also considered, the officials said, was the matter of what should happen afterward. One of the recommendations was to propose a swap to Russia.

The arrests were not planned to facilitate such a trade, said a separate U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity to discuss matters of intelligence. But since the Russian agents never penetrated the U.S. government, it seemed Washington could benefit more from using them for barter than as prisoners to be locked up for years.

The president approved. Thirteen days later, Obama hosted Russian President Dmitry Medvedev at the White House for the first time, the two chummy over hamburgers in nearby Arlington, Va., and showing off a rapport to reporters that would have been unthinkable during the nations' diplomatic low points. But transparency goes only so far. Though preparations for the arrests were moving forward — and would take place just three days later — Obama kept quiet, the White House officials said.

At that point, White House aides and their counterparts from several agencies, including the CIA, FBI, Justice and the State Department, were meeting early every morning — "too early," complained one aide — via secure videoteleconference.

Shortly after the June 27 arrests, CIA Director Leon Panetta provided Russia's spy chief, Mikhail Fradkov, the names of four prisoners being held in Russia that the U.S. wanted to free, the officials said.

This was no dragged-out negotiation. By the following Saturday — the July 4 holiday weekend in the States and less than a week and three phone conversations after the arrests — Panetta and Fradkov, the head of Russia's Foreign Intelligence Service, had agreed to the deal by phone, the officials said.

A flurry of bureaucratic wrangling followed. Russia required signed confessions from the four in order to make way for pardons from Medvedev.

And court appearances and plea deals were hastily arranged in the U.S. for the Russians.

One U.S. condition of the swap was that the deal not be accompanied by any retaliatory steps against Americans. The officials also said that Washington got everything it asked for out of the case — emphasizing that the U.S. didn't ask for any prisoners beyond the four.

The officials also said that all of the children of the Russian spies had left the United States for Russia or were in the process on Friday of leaving.

Idaho won't regulate resale of compressed natural gas

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

Idaho will be one of only a few states that do not tax the sale of compressed natural gas — the leading alternative fuel for vehicles and heavy machinery. The Idaho Public Utilities Commission said Thursday that it will not impose tariffs or regulate the sale of compressed natural gas, which is often used in vehicles and heavy equipment in place of gasoline. Companies that buy, package and sell the compressed gas asked Intermountain Gas earlier in the year to sell them natural gas so they could resell it for use in vehicle fleets. Intermountain Gas asked for the commission's approval to not consider the utility in violation of state law or tariff provisions if it sold to third parties for resale to vehicle fleets. Intermountain Gas anticipates other potential resale transactions may be proposed by other entities due to the price, availability and environmental benefits of using natural gas as a transportation fuel. Some Western states, including Washington, Utah and Wyoming, permit public CNG fueling stations. The Treasure Valley Clean Cities Coalition submitted comments supporting Intermountain Gas, saying the commission should not regulate the resale of compressed natural gas for transportation purposes. The coalition is a proponent of expanding compressed gas as a motor fuel alternative that will reduce dependency on foreign oil, improve air quality and promote local economic development. In a copy of the statement to the commission, Intermountain Gas stated it had liability concerns about resellers, asking the commission to not hold the company liable for compressed gas that is resold by third-party. The commission said it will continue to enforce its safety rules and regulations up to the point that Intermountain's facilities connect to a customer's metering device. Intermountain proposes to sell natural gas to resellers using its existing tariff rates.

Private jets rest wing-to-wing on the tarmac at Friedman Memorial Airport in Hailey. Media and technology moguls are meeting in Sun Valley for the 28th annual Allen & Co. media summit. Airport Manager Rick Baird told the airport's board of directors earlier this week that 80 percent of the aircraft are over Friedman airport's design limit — adding that it's further evidence the area needs a newer, larger airport.

Blaine airport sites narrowed, process delayed

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — For most in Blaine County, the goal is clear: Build a functional, self-sustaining airport to replace Friedman Memorial, which the Federal Aviation Administration says is too restricted to support current air traffic in and out. The devil, of course, is in the details. For months, even years, the county and the City of Hailey, who are co-sponsors of Friedman, have argued about how to reach that goal. They've been joined in discussion — and often disagreement — by the cities of Ketchum and Sun Valley, local flyers, and others with often-competing interests. Meanwhile, the FAA has moved at the speed of government, with its byzantine process recently resulting in two decisions. First, one potential airport site in the Bellevue Triangle is no longer on the table, because it doesn't meet minimum instrument approach requirements. This leaves two replacement airport sites: one near the border with Lincoln County along Idaho Highway 75, and one near the border with Camas County along U.S. Highway 20. Second, the draft environmental impact statement for the remaining two sites has been delayed by at least six months, until February 2011, because the FAA couldn't get geotechnical and other analytical requirements done in time to meet an earlier deadline. It has also expanded the scope of a financial feasibility analysis, doubling the requirements and increasing the price of this study. The delay has given local players more time to outline the roadmap from Friedman to the replacement airport.

“We were moving in the right direction by trying to be inclusive,” said Blaine County Commissioner and Friedman Memorial Airport Authority member Larry Schoen. The county commission late last year created an advisory committee to help it gather information to make decisions about the replacement airport, but for the past several months that committee has faced criticism for its role — or lack thereof — in decision-making.

PT Cruiser, retro hit, symbolized Chrysler's fall

By Dee-Ann Durbin
Associated Press writer

DETROIT — A decade ago, the PT Cruiser roared onto the road with trendsetting looks and Al Capone swagger. In a sea of bland Honda Civics and Toyota Camrys, it was a retro hit. Chrysler could barely keep up with demand. On Friday morning, the last Cruiser rolled off the assembly line in Mexico, finally killed off after years of declining popularity. Chrysler sold just 18,000 last year, compared with nearly 145,000 in 2001. What happened in between is symbolic of the larger problems that helped drive Chrysler into bankruptcy — and a cautionary tale for its new owners, who are planning to release a similarly stylish car later this year. Love it or hate it, the

A row of unsold 2007 PT Cruisers sit on the lot of a Chrysler-Jeep dealership in the east Denver suburb of Aurora, Colo. Chrysler ended production of the PT Cruiser Friday, a decade after the retro-styled wagon roared onto the road with its trend-setting looks and Al Capone swagger. Cruiser was a head-turner. With flared fenders, a sloping hood and tall doors, the Cruiser was a cross between an old-time milk truck and luxurious sedans of the 1930s. Its looks were different from anything on the road. It spawned imitators like the retro Chevrolet HHR, and appreciation for the historical American design embodied by cars like the Ford Mustang and Chevrolet Camaro. The Cruiser was a demographic-buster: It appealed to everyone from retirees to customizers to young people looking for something spacious and inexpensive, said Aaron Bragman, an analyst with IHS Automotive who owned a turbocharged PT Cruiser GT. But Chrysler failed to invest in the car or think of ways to expand its appeal beyond new paint colors or a convertible top. Although fans clamored for two-door and panel van versions, Chrysler never made a significant update. While the Cruiser was waning, Chrysler was starved for resources. After a nine-year partnership with Daimler AG, the company was sold in 2007 to private equity firm Cerberus Capital Management, which led it into bankruptcy last summer. Chrysler's said the PT

Cruiser is a product of a different time. Increasingly, automakers are building cars that will have appeal around the world to make sure they can recoup their significant research and development costs. The company doubts something as distinctly American as the Cruiser would be desirable outside the U.S. Chrysler has about 5,700 PT Cruisers left for sale and has been selling about 1,000 per month. Prices start at about $19,000, and the company is offering end-of-the-model-year deals like $2,000 cash or no-interest financing for five years. Because Chrysler made so many Cruisers, the car is unlikely to attract collectors, so its price will probably depreciate just like most other cars, said Dave Kinney, publisher of “Hagerty's Cars That Matter,” a guidebook of classic car prices.

Filer agrees to support program

City gives $2,000 to rural development effort

By John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

FILER — The Filer City Council has agreed to become part of a new effort to improve economic development in rural communities. Joe Herring, with Region IV Development, asked the city Tuesday to commit $2,000 in funding support for the Southern Idaho Rural Development program. He also requested that a council member serve on the organization's board of directors. Councilman David Gaither volunteered to serve as the board's Filer representative. In addition to community representatives, the board of directors will also consist of members from the county, Region IV Development, Southern Idaho Economic Development Organization and the Idaho Department of Commerce.

Region IV Development will use $27,000 from the Idaho Department of Commerce to hire a person who would determine available resources and help match small towns, with companies interested in moving to Twin Falls County. “We'll start advertising for the position this week, and I anticipate our first board meeting will happen in the first or second week of September,” Herring said. “The funding you provide would be for a one-year period and nobody I talked to has had any hesitation.”

Shrinking costs give solar energy a new allure

By Gerry Smith
Chicago Tribune writer

CHICAGO — The biggest obstacle to the growth of solar energy — its cost — has started to decline. The price of photovoltaic solar panels dropped more than 40 percent last year due to a glut in global supply, according to the Solar Energy Industries Association. The drop in price is driving renewed interest in solar energy, said Howard Nationwide, there are more than 22,000 megawatts of large-scale solar projects under development, or enough to power 4.4 million homes. And government incentives are helping drive the industry. A 30 percent manufacturing tax credit has resulted in the construction of 58 new facilities to produce solar energy equipment, according to Jared Blanton, a spokesman for the Solar Energy Industries Association.

Feds say new well cap could contain Gulf leak by Monday

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The BP oil leak could be completely contained as early as Monday if a new, tighter cap can be fitted over the blown-out well, the government official in charge of the crisis said Friday in some of the most encouraging news to come out of the Gulf in the 2½ months since the disaster struck.

If the project planned to begin this weekend is successful, it would simply mean no more oil would escape to foul the Gulf of Mexico. The well would still be busted and leaking — workers would just funnel what comes out of it to tankers at the surface. The hope for a permanent solution remains with two relief wells intended to plug it completely far beneath the seafloor.

“I use the word ‘contained,’” said retired Coast Guard Adm. Thad Allen. “‘Stop’ is when we put the plug in down below.”

Crews using remote-controlled submarines plan to swap out the cap over the weekend, taking advantage of a window of good weather following weeks of delays caused by choppy seas.

The cap now in use was installed June 4 to capture oil gushing from the bottom of sea, but because it had to be fitted over a jagged cut in the well pipe, it allows some crude to escape into the Gulf.

AP photo
A worker shovels oily sand on the beach on Grand Isle, La., Friday. Hundreds of workers were on the island to clean up oil from the Deepwater Horizon oil spill.

The new cap — dubbed “Top Hat Number 10” — is designed to fit more snugly and help BP catch all the oil.

During the installation, the gusher will get worse before it gets better. Once the old cap is removed, oil will pour into which will be capable of sucking up more than 1 million gallons a day when it is fully operating, should be working by Sunday, Allen said.

The government estimates 1.5 million to 2.5 million gallons of oil a day are spewing from the well, and the existing cap is collecting about 1 million gallons of that. With the new cap and the new containment vessel, the system will be capable of capturing 2.5 million to 3.4 million gallons — essentially all the leaking oil, officials said.

The plan had originally been to hook up the Helix Producer and install the new cap separately, but the favorable weather convinced officials the time was right for both operations.

“Everybody agrees we got the weather to do what we need,” Allen said. He said the calm weather is expected to last seven to 10 days.

In a response late Friday to Allen’s request for detailed plans about the new cap, the Helix Producer and the relief wells, BP managing director Bob Dudley confirmed that the leak could be contained by Monday.

But Dudley included plans for another scenario, which includes possible problems and missteps for the installation of the cap that would push the work back until Thursday.

Duck boat, 2 bodies pulled from river

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Two days after a barge crashed into a stalled tourist boat, leaving two Hungarian tourists missing, authorities retrieved two bodies from the Delaware River, including a girl identified as one of the victims. Identification of the second body was pending.

The body of a girl later identified as 16-year-old Dora Schwendtner was spotted by a crew on a fishing boat before dawn Friday about two miles downriver from the site of Wednesday’s crash.

The second body was retrieved later in the day, after a barge brought in to help to lift the duck boat off the river’s bottom was moved.

Authorities could not immediately confirm whether the body was that of Szabolcs Prem, 20, the other missing Hungarian tourist.

The six-wheeled duck boat, carrying 35 passengers and two crew, was struck by the barge on Wednesday around 2:40 p.m.

The tourist boat’s crew told investigators they shut off the engine after white smoke that smelled like burning rubber came out of the hood.

It was stalled five to 10 minutes before the crash.

Crew members said they told passengers to put on life jackets just before the barge struck the boat.

Within seconds it capsized and sank, though all but two people were rescued without serious injury.

On Friday, pulling the bodies and the amphibious boat from the water closed the recovery efforts that attracted scores of onlookers to the river’s banks and caused the Delaware River to be closed to pleasure boats.

Now, investigators are left with several questions: How did the crash happen? What caused the duck boat to spew smoke? Did its skipper let other vessels know?

Google wins permission to keep website in China

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Google won permission Friday to maintain its website in China and keep its foothold in the world’s most populous nation after bowing to pressure to eliminate a virtual detour around the country’s online censorship requirements.

Entering search requests at Google.cn from within mainland China now requires an extra click, a change made last week to appease communist regulators. Users who click anywhere on the page are then taken to a site based in Hong Kong, which isn’t subject to Beijing’s censorship rules.

Since March, Google had been automatically rerouting search requests from the mainland to the Hong Kong service.

The small concession was enough to persuade China’s regulators to renew Google’s Internet license for at least another year, the company said. There was no immediate statement on the website of China’s Internet regulator, the Ministry of Industry and Information Technology.

It’s the latest twist in a diplomatic dance that’s been unfolding since Google vowed in January to end its four-year practice of omitting search results that the Chinese government considers subversive or pornographic. Google reversed course after blaming

A Chinese flag flutters outside Google’s China headquarters in Beijing earlier this year. On Friday, said Beijing has renewed the license it needs to continue operating a website in China.

Chinese computer hackers for an attack aimed at stealing the company’s technology and e-mail information from human rights activists.

As soon as Google published a Jan. 12 blog post publicly challenging China’s censorship policies, “it became clear that Google.cn could never operate the same way again,” Internet analyst Scott Kessler of Standard & Poor’s said.

Even if Web surfers in mainland China click on Google.cn to get to the Hong Kong search engine, China’s government can still block results by using technology controls commonly known as its “Great Firewall.”

Google and the Chinese government have been trying to uphold their conflicting principles while protecting their economic interests.

Google Inc., based in Mountain View, Calif., wants to remain in China because the country is expected to be an Internet gold mine for decades. China’s government seems to realize losing a technology powerhouse would be a setback in its effort to cultivate more innovation and raise its citizens’ standard of living.

The latest compromise threatens to curtail Google’s growth in China simply because it requires hundreds of millions of users to take an extra step to get to Google’s search engine. The single additional click could diminish traffic and send Web surfers to more convenient options, such as the homegrown Baidu.com.

If that happens, Google will have fewer opportunities to show the ads that bring in virtually all its revenue.

5 charged in freight train cargo theft

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Five men were indicted Friday on charges of trying to snatch nearly $200,000 worth of 3-D televisions from a freight train in a nighttime heist captured on video by investigators tailing them in the Southern California desert.

The men were arrested June 25 after unloading 45 televisions from a BNSF Railway train parked near Ludlow, a Mojave Desert town in San Bernardino County, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials said.

The arrest followed a two-month investigation involving secret recordings of conversations between a confidential informant and the suspected ringleaders, Leo Meza-Cruz and Filemon Rios-Ramos.

According to the indictment, the two men used coded language to discuss their plans to scout trains leaving the Los Angeles area, identify those with valuable cargo, and follow until there was an opportunity to steal the goods. Meza-Cruz told the informant he was following a train full of televisions, and Rios-Ramos described buying a truck to haul the stolen TVs.

Three other men jumped on the train, broke into a railroad car and unloaded large boxes of the 52-inch televisions, authorities said.

Grainy night-vision video showed them carrying the boxes away from the tracks and hiding them in the brush.

“Not only did this theft scheme result in significant property losses, but given the tactics often employed by rings like this, there could also be serious safety issues,” said Claude Arnold, special agent in charge for ICE’s Homeland Security Investigations in Los Angeles.

He said thieves in Arizona cut the air hoses on a BNSF train’s brakes in an attempt to stop it and steal merchandise. They were arrested and charged in that case, a BNSF spokeswoman said.

1.8 million acres of Alaska drilling leases go up for bid

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The Interior Department is offering oil and gas leases on 1.8 million acres of Alaska’s National Petroleum Reserve while promising to protect critical migratory bird and caribou habitat.

Interior Secretary Ken Salazar said Friday that the Bureau of Land Management will offer 190 tracts, covering more than 2,800 square miles, with bids to be opened Aug. 11 in Anchorage. The sale is one of dozens, mostly in Western states, that Salazar announced in November.

The petroleum reserve on the North Slope was originally created by President Warren Harding in 1923 and covers 23 million acres — an area slightly smaller than the state of Indiana. It currently has 310 authorized oil and gas leases totaling more than 3 million acres.

BLM has withdrawn for lease sale consideration lands in a buffer zone around Teshekpuk Lake, citing its importance to migratory birds. The area contains significant molting habitat for black brant, Canada geese and greater white-fronted geese.

The buffer zone also includes calving grounds for the Teshekpuk caribou herd, an important source of subsistence hunting for North Slope villages. In recent years, the herd has almost doubled in size — reaching about 70,000 animals.

Salazar said the lease sale reflects the Obama administration’s efforts to encourage environmentally responsible energy development to ease the nation’s reliance on imported oil.

Eric Myers, of Audubon Alaska, considered BLM’s plan “quite reasonable,” saying the agency provided additional areas for drilling while protecting special wildlife habitat.

But Brendan Cummings, an attorney for the Center for Biological Diversity, said the reserve is the country’s largest and most intact unprotected wilderness area, and protecting Teshekpuk Lake isn’t enough.

“They’re not going to cut out its heart, but they’re still cutting off an arm and a leg,” he said.

Police lose sight of 'Barefoot Bandit'

Officials think teen may have fled island

MARSH HARBOUR, Bahamas (AP) — A fugitive U.S. teenager who has successfully eluded teams of local police and FBI agents may have slipped off the island where he allegedly crash-landed a stolen plane nearly a week ago, police said Friday.

Authorities are investigating a report that Colton Harris-Moore, dubbed the "Barefoot Bandit," has fled Great Abaco Island and was spotted on Eleuthera, about 40 miles to the south, two police officials said.

The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to comment publicly on the search. Bahamian National Security Minister Tommy Turnquest declined to comment.

It was unclear how the 19-year-old fugitive might have escaped the island, but a powerboat was stolen in Marsh Harbour.

The 44-foot boat was reported missing Thursday from the marina on Great Abaco Island, said Harry Mountain, a regional manager for The Moorings hotel and marina resort in Marsh Harbour.

Investigators have been searching the 120-mile-long, boomerang-shaped island for Harris-Moore since he allegedly crashlanded a stolen plane in a marsh at its southern tip Sunday. Working with the FBI, island soldiers and police have also been patrolling ports and airports to cut off potential escape routes for the wily convict, accused of dozens of burglaries in the U.S.

The marina where the boat was stolen is next door to a restaurant, Curly Tails, where the teen was allegedly caught on surveillance footage during a break-in about 4 a.m. Tuesday. Police were investigating at least six other burglaries stretching from the island's southern point to Marsh Harbour, a town of about 5,500 people.

About a dozen boats are stolen from the area each year, mostly by drug traffickers who target those with powerful outboard engines, said boat renter Tim Roberts.

The latest theft, however, involved a cruiser with an inboard engine — a boat resembling one which Harris-Moore allegedly stole while fleeing the law in the United States.

Harris-Moore, who grew up in the woods of Washington state's Camano Island, has been on the run since escaping from a halfway house more than two years ago. The teen had several run-ins with police by the time he was 13 and is suspected of stealing cars, boats and at least five planes during his run, despite no formal flight training.

Harris-Moore earned the "Barefoot Bandit" nickname because he allegedly went shoeless for some of his crimes and once left behind chalk footprints as his calling card.

Man awarded $1 in Calif. Taser lawsuit

VENTURA, Calif. (AP) — A man who sued a California police department after he was shocked twice with a Taser has been awarded $1 in damages.

A federal court jury in Ventura County awarded Max Vasquez the minimum figure earlier this month in his excessive-force lawsuit.

Vasquez claimed a Santa Paula officer jolted him twice — including once while he was partially handcuffed — during his arrest three years ago on suspicion of domestic violence and resisting an officer. The charges were later dropped.

Last year, Santa Paula agreed to pay $250,000 in a lawsuit by a man who claimed he suffered a serious back injury when he was taken to the ground and shocked twice in 2006.

Spain bulls gore runner during festival

PAMPLONA, Spain (AP) — One man was gored and two others injured in a panic-filled third running of the bulls Friday at Spain's San Fermin festival that saw at least three people sent airborne by the beasts.

One of the six bulls caused more chaos when he separated from the pack and prompted several minutes of fear as he charged runners and tried to break through wooden barriers separating onlookers from the bull run.

Professional bull keepers, helped by experienced runners, finally coaxed the bull into the arena to end the run lasting 6 minutes and 23 seconds — more than double the usual time.

Navarra Hospital's Dr. Fernando Boneta said one person was gored in the thigh. Two others were hospitalized for head and rib injuries that happened when they fell or were trampled.

The goring victim was a 20-year-old Briton, and the other victims were a 39-year-old Briton and a 46-year-old Spaniard, the Navarra region's government said in a statement. They were identified only by their initials.

Thousands of people took part in the morning dash ahead of the bulls and six bell-tinkling steers who try to keep the beasts together along the 930-yard (850-meter) course from a holding pen to the northern town's bull ring.

Light early morning rain left the route in Pamplona's historic old quarter slippery, prompting the bulls and the runners to repeatedly skid and fall on the cobblestoned streets.

Some of the most dramatic moments occurred when several runners just missed being gored by bulls that used their snouts and foreheads to slingshot the runners into the air and crashing down on the streets.

Two people who were gored in Thursday's run remained hospitalized on Friday.

The runs, eight in all, are the highlight of Pamplona's nine-day street festival, which also features around-the-clock drinking that attracts tens of thousands of people, many from abroad, eager to party.

The event is broadcast live on Spanish television and the bulls that run each morning are killed in the evening in the bullring, their meat served up in Pamplona's restaurants.

Dozens of people are injured in the runs each year.

Website posts recording of racist Gibson rant

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mel Gibson is heard using a racial epithet and calling his ex-girlfriend a "whore" in a recording released by a celebrity news website Friday.

The two-minute recording posted by RadarOnline.com includes segments in which a voice sounding distinctively like the Academy Award-winner is heard telling his then-girlfriend, Oksana Grigorieva, that she is dressing too provocatively and that it would be her fault if she were raped. He uses the N-word at one point, and the recording is laced with his profanity.

Grigorieva recorded the actor-director because she was afraid he might harm her, the website reported.

The actor is heard on the recording harshly criticizing Grigorieva for the way she dresses. He accuses her of lying to him about having breast implants.

"They just look stupid," Gibson tells her at one point in the recording. "Keep them if you want. They look like a Vegas bitch, a Vegas whore."

"You look like a (expletive) bitch in heat, and if you get raped by a pack of (N-word), it will be your fault," Gibson is heard telling Grigorieva. "You provoked it. You are provocatively dressed."

Alan Nierob, a spokesman for Gibson, did not immediately respond to requests for comment.

A phone message left for Grigorieva's attorney, Marci Levine, was not immediately returned.

Apps bring religion into the 21st century

By Annysa Johnson
Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

MILWAUKEE — Most days after work, Diane Werle can be found hunkered down and reading her Bible, often at a neighborhood coffee shop.

A devout Christian, Werle covers at least a chapter a day. And she takes detailed notes, often flipping from book to book researching and double-checking passages.

There was a time when Werle carried her leather-bound and dog-eared Bible everywhere she went, scribbling in the margins as she read. These days she accesses the Word and makes her notes on her iPod Touch.

“It’s nice to have a portable and easily accessible copy with you when you’re out and about,” said Werle, who attends the non-denominational New Day Church in Greendale, Wis. “You never know when you might get into a discussion with a friend about what it does or doesn’t say, or run into someone who has questions.”

Werle is among the millions who have turned to hand held technology to further their faith and spirituality. Software developers have obliged, creating hundreds of applications for smart phones and other mobile devices that do everything from translating ancient texts to alerting a user when it’s time to pray.

Though data on religion-related apps is hard to come by, industry observers say it’s a small but growing niche in what is projected to be a $25 billion industry by 2015, according to some estimates.

“Religion is starting to catch up with the technology, and that’s making it more accessible,” said Daniel Ionescu, a London-based writer for PCWorld Magazine.

For the uninitiated, apps are programs that users download free or for a fee to their iPhones, Android devices, BlackBerry phones and other handhelds.

Apple dominates the industry with more than 225,000 apps at its online App Store, followed by the Google-based Android Marketplace with more than 30,000, though other smaller competitors abound.

Throughout the Milwaukee area, people of faith are embracing the technology.

“I tell people I’m compensating for my 17th-century looks,” said Rabbi Benzion Twerski of the Orthodox Congregation Beth Jehudah on Milwaukee’s north side, who sports both an iPhone and iPad.

Twerski has apps that let him read the Torah, the Talmud and the Siddur, the book of daily prayers; recite the appropriate blessings for meals depending on the food that’s served; and vet the thousands of ingredients in his work inspecting Kosher food factories around the state.

“When I used paper ... I could be sitting a long time. Now, it takes me just seconds to look for an ingredient,” he said.

Donald Rappe, an associate professor in the Department of Theology at Mount Mary College, uses apps to help him translate ancient Biblical texts, bone up on his Hebrew and pull down scholarly lectures by colleagues in his field.

Green religion movement hopes spill wins converts

By John Flesher
Associated Press writer

NEW ORLEANS — Where would Jesus drill? Religious leaders who consider environmental protection a godly mission are making the Gulf of Mexico oil spill a rallying cry, hoping it inspires people of faith to support cleaner energy while changing their personal lives to consume less and contemplate more.

“This is one of those rare moments when you can really focus people’s attention on what’s happening to God’s creation,” said Walt Grazer, head of the National Religious Partnership for the Environment.

Activists in the movement often described as “green religion” or “eco-theology” are using blogs and news conferences to get the word out. Some are visiting the Gulf, inspecting oil-spattered wetlands and praying with idled fishermen and other victims.

And believers in the stricken coastal regions are looking at the consequences of the oil’s reach and asking what good can come out of it.

During worship services on a recent Sunday, pastor Eddie Painter of Barataria Baptist Church in the fishing village of Lafitte told his congregation a silver lining in the tragedy might be renewed government commitment to restoring the region’s battered coastal marshlands.

“I actually didn’t think I would be as deeply affected as I was by seeing oil in the water, the birds with oil stains, the marsh grass that had turned a shiny brown,” said the Rev. Jim Ball of the Evangelical Environmental Network, who recently toured Louisiana’s Barataria Bay by boat.

Another delegation was scheduled to arrive in New Orleans on Tuesday for an interfaith prayer service and tour. Among the participants are Jim Wallis of the progressive Christian group Sojourners and Rabbi David N. Saperstein of the Religious Action Center of Reform Judaism. Both have served on President Barack Obama’s Advisory Council on Faith-Based and Neighborhood Partnerships.

Their appearance is being coordinated with the Sierra Club, which has forged alliances with organized religion since its former director, Carl Pope, acknowledged in a 1997 speech the environmental movement had erred by shunning such ties.

“Different people have credibility with different segments of the population,” said Lindsey Moseley, the group’s Washington representative. “The oil spill is ultimately a matter of values, which for many people are rooted in deeply held religious beliefs.”

Organizations including the National Council of Churches and the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops have issued statements calling for soul-searching. Some are providing ecologically themed online resources — prayers, liturgy, scripture readings — for use in worship services.

Surfing for spirituality

Website invites users to review, recommend houses of worship

By Patricia Montemurri
Detroit Free Press

We use dating websites to find soul mates. Now, some entrepreneurs want to take that to a higher level and help you find the perfect spiritual home.

Consider ChurchRater.com, a church-shopping website that allows users to rate churches. ChurchRater — founded by a Catholic, a Christian, a Jew and an atheist — invites users to review and recommend churches.

In Michigan, for example, users have posted reviews of about 15 churches. Christ Church Cranbrook is commended for its “sermon after-party,” where the pastor takes questions. At Base Church in Waterford, the preacher was criticized for using “amen” as punctuation.

Pastor Devine Meyers of Base Church chuckled at the assessment of his reliance on amens.

“I kind of ding myself on that all the time — so he’s right,” said

Meyers. He lauded the aim of the website: “It keeps you honest. It keeps you focused.”

“The whole issue of how to use the Web and communications is gigantic “for churches, said the Rev. Gary Hall, rector of Christ Church Cranbrook in Bloomfield Hills, Mich. “People really find churches on the Web. ... more on the Web than any other medium.”

Younger faith-seekers are tech-savvy spiritualists.

“They’re not wedded to the books the way we are in traditional churches,” said Hall. “They meet in coffeehouses and non-traditional places. And they do a lot of information-sharing on the Web.”

Since its Feb. 1 launch, ChurchRater has drawn more than 43,000 unique visitors, said Tyler Mahoney, 23, who was raised Catholic. One of the site’s co-founders, Mahoney is pursuing a master of divinity degree at Duke University.

The site’s founders also include Jim Henderson, a Seattle

A screen shot of the website ChurchRater.com.

Christian pastor, and Matt Casper, a San Diego atheist, who co authored the book “Jim and Casper Go to Church,” which chronicles a soul-searching road trip. The final cofounder is Julian Zegelman, a San Francisco attorney who is Jewish.

It was natural for Drew Proctor, 24, a college graduate currently working at Starbucks, to take his spiritual quest on the road, and online. He’s sampled several Detroit-area churches and written about them on ChurchRater; among them Christ Church Cranbrook, Woodside Bible in Troy; and Base Church and St. Andrew’s Episcopal in Waterford.

He’s trying new places, he said, because “I wanted to find my own church and my own place, where people didn’t know me since I was this big.”

Proctor posted a review of St. Andrew’s, impressed by a plain-talking interim pastor and a small congregation who recognized him as a newcomer. Yet even “though I felt like an outsider invading a private gathering,” wrote Proctor, “...they were so excited to have a new person, I didn’t feel like I crashed the party.”

Proctor said he was most impressed, so far, by one of the area’s most well-known churches, the imposing landmark that is Christ Church Cranbrook.

“Cranbrook is concerned about the message connecting, and doesn’t want the ceremonial trappings to get in the way,” wrote Proctor. “Cranbrook inspires me and gives me a little bit of faith for the future of Christianity.”

Hall acknowledged that some flocks will find sites like ChurchRater threatening.

“If you get a good review, it’s great,” said Hall. “Whether we like it or not, this is the world we’re going to be working in.”

Heat wave humanity

It was hot that summer in Yuma, Ariz. Which, admittedly, is a little like saying that it was cold at the North Pole.

Or rainy in Seattle. Or dry in the Dust Bowl. Or wacky in Washington, D.C. Cited by no less an authority than the Guinness Book of World Records as “the sunniest place on earth,” Yuma regularly appears on national weather reports as the city with the highest temperature in the United States.

Still, it is worth noting that it was hot that summer in Yuma. Unusually hot — even for Yuma. Oppressively hot. Maybe a little like what folks are experiencing in the eastern United States this week. So hot that a local weather guy actually fried an egg on a sidewalk during a newscast. So hot that the perspiration was trickling down your back before you could get from your front door to the driveway. So hot that if you stood on the street for too long your rubber-soled shoes would melt into the pavement.

That hot.

And not just during the day. For a three-week period of time it didn’t get below 100 degrees — day or night. I don’t know if that was a record or anything. I just know it was hot.

Constantly. Persistently. Incessantly.

Hot.

Part of my reason for being in Yuma that summer required that I spend a certain amount of time each day canvassing neighborhoods, knocking on doors and talking to people. I’d been doing this for more than a year in cities throughout Southern California and Arizona, and I’d grown pretty comfortable with rejection. I’d had dogs turned loose on me, water sprayed on me, epithets hurled at me and on one occasion, a gun pointed at me. I figured I’d seen just about everything you could see in the world of door-to-door contacting — especially after that lady in Pacific Beach, Calif., answered her door, you know, naked — but I wasn’t prepared for what I saw in Yuma.

I’ll never forget the first time it happened. It was a humble home in the southwestern part of town, and although it was still relatively early in the day, the temperature was already approaching 110 degrees. The woman who answered the door wore an expression I was used to seeing:

VALUE
SPEAK

Joseph Walker

impatience mixed with slight agitation. I started to explain why I was there, but she cut me off with a wave of her hand.

“I don’t want to hear about it,” she said.

I wasn’t surprised, and I braced myself for the door slam that was sure to follow. But instead of slamming her door shut, she pushed it open wider.

“Why don’t you come in out of the heat,” she said. “I’ll get you some water.”

I hesitated for a moment. The only people who had ever invited me into their homes before were people who wanted to hear what I had to say. I wasn’t exactly sure how to respond to someone who wanted to reject me and protect me — all in the same breath.

Eventually I came to my senses enough to go into her home and enjoy a few minutes of her kind hospitality. We chatted as I sipped my water, and then she sent me on my way — refreshed, both body and spirit, by her kindness. This same scenario played itself out numerous times during the following two weeks of intense heat. Nobody wanted to actually talk to me, but nobody wanted to watch me suffer. So I met a lot of nice people, and I drank a lot of water.

And then, when the temperatures started to cool, the doors started slamming again.

I learned a lot from the people of Yuma that summer — a lot more than they learned from me, I’m afraid. They didn’t care about my message, but they did care about me. And they didn’t allow their discomfort with my appearance on their doorstep to get in the way of their humanity. They knew it was hot, and that I needed water. At that moment, that’s all that mattered.

I find myself remembering Yuma every time I hear about a heat wave somewhere. And I find myself hoping that there are still people who will care and share.

No matter how hot it gets.

Henderson earns womanhood award

Stephanie Henderson recently received her Young Womanhood Recognition Award through the Young Women’s program of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

To earn the award, girls between the ages of 12 and 18 set goals in eight value areas — faith, divine nature, individual worth, knowledge, choice and accountability, good works, integrity and virtue — and strive to achieve them through church and community service and self-improvement projects.

Henderson’s projects included participating in the Youth Cultural Celebration at the opening of the Twin Falls Temple, assisting young mothers with their children, reading the Book of Mormon, organizing and presenting a modesty fashion show, making a collection of favorite recipes and doing her family history.

She maintains a 4.0 grade-point average, is in the National Honor Society and is the second counselor in her Young Women’s group in the Wendell 1st Ward. She likes to dance and spend time with family and friends. Her parents are Heath and VaLeen Henderson of Wendell.

of the Qur’an and another that tells him when it’s time to pray, wherever he is in the world.

“It goes with me everywhere,” said Daniel Johnson, president of Wisconsin Lutheran College, who uses his iPhone to access the Bible, daily devotions, Christian music and sermons. “There’s not been a time in the history of man when it’s been as convenient to focus on one’s relationship with the Lord.”

Little is known about religious app consumers. But if the Internet story is an indication, they’re likely people who already lead strong religious lives, said Lee Rainie, director of the Pew Research Center’s Internet and American Life Project.

“It takes awhile for any new technology to establish a presence and meaning with people who are less connected to religion — or sports or finance,” said Rainie.

“We don’t know yet how this might be transforming people’s spiritual lives. But it’s interesting to see that a lot of churches, and more broadly denominations, are hoping ... new technologies will give them new pathways to younger seekers,” he said.

It has certainly changed the way many users experience their faith. It’s not unusual, said Twerski and others, to see worshippers consult their hand-helds during services in synagogues, churches and mosques.

Like any new technology, the advent of the app has sparked discussion about the nature and boundaries of its uses. Some of that is centered on the industry itself, which operates on a dual model: a content gatekeeper system favored by Apple vs. the open format of the Android Marketplace.

The difference was highlighted last year when Apple rejected the Me So Holy app — which lets users superimpose their faces onto images of Jesus and other religious figures — as “objectionable.” The app is now available on the Cydia Store, a kind of black market for people willing to “jailbreak,” or alter, their Apple devices to download apps not available at the App Store.

Catholic Church seeks pardons in Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — The Roman Catholic Church is petitioning Chile’s government for prisoner pardons that would include people responsible for crimes against humanity.

The church is asking for the pardons as part of the commemoration of the 200th anniversary of Chile’s independence on Sept. 18. The church proposes pardons for those older than 70, any with a terminal decease and women who are mothers.

The controversy centers on the inclusion of some convicted of committing crimes during the 1973-90 dictatorship of Gen. Augusto Pinochet. According to official statistics, 3,065 opponents of Pinochet’s regime were killed and 1,200 more disappeared.

Buhl native receives life achievement award

Buhl native Karen M. Johnson was honored recently with The College of Idaho's Half-Century Life Achievement Award at the Class of 1960's 50-year reunion on The College of Idaho campus in Caldwell. The award recognizes Johnson's career in promoting women in all aspects of sports.

Johnson graduated from Buhl High School in 1956 and received a bachelor's degree in physical education and biology from The College of Idaho in 1960. She earned a master's degree in physical education and served as an assistant professor of physical education and athletics for California State University in Los Angeles. Johnson then moved to Washington, D.C., and became executive director for the National Association for Girls and Women in Sport and the vice president for the American Alliance for Health, Physical Education and Recreation. In 1979, she returned to California State University in Los Angeles as an associate professor of physical education. In 2001, she was named professor emeritus of kinesiology and physical education. Johnson's awards include the Frier Award — the highest honor given by the United States Volleyball Association — and an award named after her, the United States Volleyball Association Karen M. Johnson Human Resources Award for commitment to increasing the diversity of leadership and participation in volleyball. She also was a member of the United States Olympic Committee's Task Force on Women from 1989 to 1992. Information: www.collegeofidaho.edu.

RUPERT KIWANIS DONATES TO MINIDOKA SCHOOLS

Rupert Kiwanis Club past president Dan Gammon recently presented an $8,000 check to Minidoka County School District, giving $1,000 to each of its eight school libraries.

Kent supervises the K-Kids at Heyburn Elementary and applied to Kiwanis for a donation for new books. Kiwanis members felt if one library was in need, so were the others, so they decided to donate to all of them. They said they felt it reflected their motto about helping children and the benefit of reading.

Photos of crime can be used as evidence

Q: I've seen pictures on social networking websites like Facebook and Myspace that show underage kids drinking and even using drugs. Could these kids be charged with any crime based off of such pictures?

A: The kids could be charged if the location and date of the pictures are known. It wouldn't be as easy to prove the crime as actually catching them in the act, but a picture could be used as evidence toward a charge of possession of alcohol or drugs. It could also be used as the basis to pursue a search warrant if it's provable that the picture is of a recent event.

Another factor that might be easier to prove is that if an adult is pictured with juveniles using drugs or alcohol, the adult could be charged with contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Mainly, the pictures would have to offer evidence that they were taken in the pictured adult's home.

The simple answer for the police to determine that would be for them to recreate the picture from inside the adult's home — minus the teenagers, that is.

As far as police go, when we see images on the Internet of illicit incidents, it provides us information about certain individuals that we can use in other investigations. We might not be able to charge anybody based upon the pictures because the location is unknown, but we do get to see who runs in the same circles. That can help in many factors of other investigations.

Finally, you'll seldom see charges based only from pictures on the Internet because the cost to try and prove a crime beyond a reasonable doubt would be more than the price paid by the criminals. This, however, shouldn't put criminals at ease because nothing ventured still means nothing gained.

Q: I live in the country and continually find dogs at my house that have been dumped. Sometimes they have been abused. What can I do if I see somebody dumping a dog?

A: This is a problem that I witnessed a lot while growing up in Albion. Many a dog was dumped on the highway leading to Albion. The good news is that my best friend — my dog — growing up was one of those dumped dogs. Dumping a is a misdemeanor in Idaho, if police can catch the person in the act or otherwise prove it.

If you don't or can't keep your dog or other animal, there are agencies and people that will take the animal from you and try to find it a home. Please don't just dump them off somewhere. Think of how it would feel if you were taken out to a strange area and then just left there.

Surgeon failed to properly inform patient about procedure

DEARDR. GOTT: In mid-September 2009, I had a lung lobectomy and was in the hospital for about 2-1/2 weeks. There were complications, including atrial fibrillation and a delay in the lung sealing, which caused the drain tubes to remain in for most of my stay.

I was told that I would be in the hospital between five and seven days and back at work within three months. As yet, I have not been able to return to work.

Prior to the surgery, the only thing that was brought to my attention was that sometimes things “go wrong,” and when I was discharged from the hospital, I was given minimal instructions. For some naive reason, I thought that if I woke up from the anesthesia that things had “gone right.”

While the doctor did mention separation of my ribs, he did not tell me that I would have severe pain for months following the surgery. I was also never told that some nerves would be severed and that both pain and nausea could result.

It is now May 2010, and I am still having problems. I tremble most of the time and have started to feel like one of those dolls with my head bobbing. My bra is very uncomfortable, as the right breast is numb, and I often feel as if barbed wire is being rolled over my skin. This sensation is getting less frequent, and I am starting to notice a slight improvement from a few months ago.

My family physician helped relieve the nausea and pain with two medications. I took both for only six to eight weeks and then weaned off in order to avoid side effects.

To make matters worse, it is questionable that I even needed the surgery.

Few options were discussed with me. Because I have had few medical problems in my 64 years, I was not versed in the correct questions to ask. After the surgery, it turned out that I had a mostly self-contained infection and not cancer, which was indicated before the surgery.

I am having difficulty

Dr. Gott

Continued from Religion 3 exercising. I seem to strain the muscles on my right side whenever I do even light stretch-band exercises. I walk on a treadmill but am only able to do about 10 minutes at a time before I get winded.

Since leaving the hospital, I have had no more atrial fibrillation, which is a blessing, and I have been able to wean down my Coreg to 6.25 milligrams, which has helped restore some of my energy. When I was on a higher dose, all I wanted to do was sleep for the first several months. I also take extra vitamins A, B and D to help repair the nerve damage and boost my immunity.

How long can I expect these problems to last? Why don't surgeons tell you what to expect prior to surgery and then later in the hospital-discharge instructions? I was totally blindsided by these complications, many of which happened after my discharge.

Please advise patients to get a second opinion and ask surgeons to be up front about what to expect following any surgical procedure. I encourage everyone to get a second opinion, even if they feel that the surgeon knows his stuff.

I realize that removal of a lung is an intense operation, but I feel that I would have been better prepared to handle the complications if I had known that they could happen.

DEAR READER: Whether or not you were medically naive, it is no excuse for your surgeon to have neglected to inform you what the surgery entailed, both during and after. I am also shocked that you were urged to have removal of a lung without even undergoing further diagnostic testing to determine whether your "lung tumor" was truly a lung tumor. Surgical removal of any organ should be done only when and if there is medical necessity, and there are numerous tests available to determine what type of tumor or other abnormality is present. You have endured months of complications and pain for a lung infection that could probably have been treated with oral medications.

As to your question about why surgeons don't inform patients, I would certainly hope that this is not the norm. When I was in active practice, patients were always informed about possible complications of surgery and provided with alternative options, as well as the surgeon's opinion of which would be best. This also held true for diagnostic testing, such as imaging studies that involved dyes, tissue biopsies and more.

I urge you to get a referral to another surgeon or a pulmonologist, who can review your operative report, examine you, and offer suggestions regarding treatment of your complications. You will also benefit from pulmonary rehabilitation, which aids your body in adjusting to having only one lung in a controlled, safe manner. Speak to your family doctor about these steps.

Danielle Madson

BUTTE CITY — Danielle Madson, 70, of Butte City, Idaho, passed away peacefully at her home with the love of her life, Ed, at her side Sunday, July 4, 2010.

Danielle was born Aug. 14, 1939, to Darrell D. and Ellen Irene Sears Darling in Rupert, Idaho. She was the second to the oldest of 11 children. She grew up in her earlier years in Glenns Ferry and Jerome, Idaho. She attended her school years in Jerome, where she was active in many school activities. She graduated in 1957 from Jerome High School. Daneille was active in Job's Daughters, where she held many positions. She was known to be a friend to everyone she met. She also attended FHA National Convention in Chicago, representing Jerome High School.

Danielle met and married Ed Madson on Feb. 16, 1958, in Jerome Idaho, and they made their home in Monterey, Calif. They were blessed with four children and lived in various places until Ed was discharged from the Navy. They then made their home in Jerome. Danielle was a wonderful homemaker and liked to take care of her home and garden. She full heartedly supported and followed Ed in many endeavors. She loved to accompany Ed to various horse racetracks in many states in the Northwest for 20 years. Her last and final move was to Butte City, Idaho, where she continued on as a loving wife and homemaker. She will be dearly missed by all her family and friends as she was a very sweet and big-hearted lady to all she knew.

Danielle is survived by her husband, Ed Madson of Butte City; four children, Shawna (Wade) Armstrong of Blackfoot, Sherri (Doug) Rupe of Blackfoot, Danny (Lisa) Madson of Idaho Falls and Dennis Madson of Washington; 12 grandchildren; 29 great-grandchildren; and 10 brothers and sisters, Merlin (Betty) Darling of Texas, Ruby (Ray) Kays of Oregon, Gail (Wally) Peterson of Jerome, Carol (Kelly) Jackson of Twin Falls, Royce (Nancy) Darling of Kimberly, Larry (Brenda) Darling of Eagle, Rita (Rich) Hills of McCall, Marion "Snooks" (Barry) of Filer, Cary (Tammie) Darling of Hailey, and Cory (Donalyn) Darling of Oregon. Danielle was preceded in death by her parents; and a great-granddaughter, Hanna Isabelle Covington.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Monday, July 12, at the Lost River Funeral Chapel, 345 Sunset Drive in Arco. Family will meet with friends and relatives one hour prior to the service.

Jon DeForrest Shurtleff

R A N C H O MIRAGE, Calif. — Jon DeForrest Shurtleff was born June 29, 1943, the second son of Lamond (Pondy) and Frances (Polly) Shurtleff in Twin Falls, Idaho. Jon moved on to his next expression of life peacefully in his sleep Saturday, July 3, 2010, in Rancho Mirage, Calif., where he had retired in October 2008 with his longtime partner, Bob Lusk, who survives him. He is also survived by his brother, David Shurtleff and his wife Jacqui; many nieces and nephews; grandnieces and nephews; and many friends and acquaintances whose lives he had touched.

Jon grew up in a house that looked like a barn next to a house that looked like a chicken coop (so he and childhood and lifelong friend, Linda McRoberts Carnine, dubbed them), where neighbors were the same for 30 years and the keys to the house were found twice a year for vacations.

Jon and Linda created annual leaf mansions and a red- and white-striped cardboard box "cat house" (they didn't know why that amused the adults), which the cat didn't like but the ducks and dogs did.

When Jon quit years of piano lessons (Polly was agast, "He'll never play again!"), he and Linda staged piano concerts and Episcopal Church organ duets. Jon went on to play the organ and piano for many churches.

Jon's creative abilities for color and design were evident to all at a very early age. He studied art and biology at the College of Idaho, interior design and architecture at the University of Idaho and Art Center School in Los Angeles. This all led to an outstanding interior design career with an unusual talent for incorporating people's "stuff" (excluding the "junk" he insisted must go), be it commercial or residential, into art. Jon and brother David, an architect, had several projects together, a natural outcome of a mother interior designer and father who could build anything.

In 1988, Jon "put on another hat" as administrator/minister of the "Center of Peace," a metaphysical/spiritual community in Boise, Idaho, of which he and Bob, along with many others, were founding members. Jon, a natural teacher, created more beauty on the planet by showing people how to enrich their lives by teaching Science of Mind principles as written by founder Ernest Holmes (Ernest's middle name was Shurtleff).

Jon's love freely given in the many quiet and unseen ways, as ministers do, personified the teaching. For 20 years of remarkable consistency, Jon and Bob made every service at the center an artistic sanctuary through meditation, environment, music and spoken word.

Ernest Holmes said, "The Principle of Life cannot know death. The expression of dying is but the laying off of an old garment and the donning of a new one." Jon was love, loving and, most of all, loved, and his physical form on this plane shall truly be missed. Namaste, Jon.

Idaho residents, others invert U.S. flags in protest

By John Miller

Associated Press writer

BOISE — Idaho residents have joined the ranks of those from Wisconsin to Washington, D.C. in flying upside-down American flags to express concern about everything from the nation's moral decline to an intrusive government to President Barack Obama's election.

Greg Murray, who is flying an inverted "Old Glory" on his property in Pocatello, says the state of the nation — beset by deficit, mired in an economic slump and struggling to find its compass — makes his protest timely. Objectors have torn his flag down twice since he put it up in early May, so he's bought extras, just in case.

"The path we're going down is a sinking ship," said Murray, an 60-year-old insurance adjuster originally from North Carolina. "What's happened to American values, they've been corrupted by this socialistic trend. Everything right now is upside down."

Idaho seems a hotbed for this type of political unrest.

After all, delegates to Idaho's Republican Party convention two weeks ago passed a slew of salvos targeting the federal government — and mirroring some of Murray's concerns.

In late 2008, the Canyon County man flew his flag upside down after Obama was elected, calling the vote "un-American."

In late 2008, the Canyon County man flew his flag upside down after Obama was elected, calling the vote "un-American."

As recently as late June, there was an upside-down flag flying atop a prominent desert hillock along Idaho's U.S. Interstate 84.

And a public, taxpayer-funded charter school in Nampa inverted its American flag last month, as its founder expressed anger over the state's effort to shutter facility amid cash woes and a dispute over using the Bible in its curriculum.

Some veterans groups say protesters are abusing the "Stars and Stripes" for their own political aims.

According to the U.S. code governing American flag etiquette, it should never be displayed with the stars representing the union at the bottom — "except as a signal of dire distress in instances of extreme danger to life or property?"

Deke Johnson, a retired U.S. Air Force fighter pilot who flew F-100s and F-111s in Vietnam in 1967 and 1968 and is now assistant quartermaster at the Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 63 in Boise, says those who fly the flag upside down are bending the meaning of a powerful symbol for their own purposes.

"To fly the flag upside down is an affront — just like burning the flag," Johnson told The Associated Press. "There's other ways to do it, without using the flag. Get a big sign. Walk up and down the street. Do what you can to let people know. Write letters to the editor. But don't use the flag?"

Idaho's flag flip-flopers aren't alone.

A northeastern Wisconsin man was arrested this month after allegedly cutting down an upside-down U.S. flag a neighbor had hoisted to protest local politics.

On April 15, tea party protesters who descended on Washington, D.C., carried inverted American flags as part of their efforts to vilify the U.S. tax code. Two days later, protesters at a similar rally in Mississippi followed suit.

And in Los Angeles, the Veterans Administration is being sued by the American Civil Liberties Union for allegedly denying an Army veteran his free-speech right to display an upside-down American flag.

At the Nampa Classical Academy in southwestern Idaho, school founder Isaac Moffett hung the flag upside down at the school in June for at least a half day, to protest what he called the state's "tyranny."

Idaho has revoked the school's charter and has moved to end public funding. Even before its current financial woes, Nampa Classical waged a fight with Idaho in federal court for banning the Bible as a historical teaching tool.

His brother, Michael Moffett, the school's vice chairman, says the flag protest wasn't endorsed by the school's board, but says the sentiment behind his brother's action did resonate: Nampa Classical is being targeted by an intrusive government intent on bending the school to its will, he said.

"Short of taking up arms, there isn't much we can do," Michael Moffett told the AP. "The Nampa Classical Academy is just one area where the government is being heavy-handed. You see it with health care. You see it with federal government not wanting to take care of immigration. People are not far from the breaking point!"

Simpson says he won't sign oath

BOISE — U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson is the latest Idaho Republican who won't sign a so-called "loyalty oath" that was included in the party's platform at its convention two weeks ago.

Simpson joins state Rep. Maxine Bell and Sen. Joe Stegner in expressing concern about the oath, which asks candidates for elected office to sign a statement saying they support the GOP platform — or list the areas where they disagree.

Simpson told The Associated Press he takes one oath: to defend the U.S. Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

Former state Senate Majority Leader Rod Beck, a delegate at the GOP convention in Idaho Falls, succeeded in having the provision added to the platform.

Beck says it will help primary voters determine if elected officials support Republican principles.

Feds charge man in officer assault

LEWISTON — A misdemeanor charge of assault has been filed against a man accused of attacking an Idaho State Police trooper during a chase last year. The chase ended with police fatally shooting another man.

The Lewiston Tribune reports that an indictment charging 39-year-old Ricardo D. Rodriguez was unsealed Thursday in Coeur d'Alene's U.S. District Court.

Authorities say the May 18, 2009 car chase began when Trooper Jeffery Talbott attempted to pull over 50-year-old Randall Vernon Ellenwood for speeding and a complaint of reckless driving. The Idaho State Police says the chase ended when Ellenwood and his passenger, Rodriguez, got out of the car and began battering Talbott.

The police say Talbott only fired his weapon after the men began battering him. Ellenwood died and Rodriguez was critically injured in the shooting; Talbott has since been cleared of any wrongdoing by the U.S. Attorney's Office.

Woman imprisoned in abuse case freed

CALDWELL — A judge has freed a woman who spent six months in prison after being convicted of helping her husband abuse their three adopted children.

Kaylynn Gaunavinkaka was sentenced in January to up to 10 years in prison. Instead, she will spend the next eight years on probation, as long as she completes counseling and other requirements.

The Idaho Statesman reports that Third District Judge Bradley Ford agreed to release the 36-year-old Thursday after reviewing positive assessments from those who evaluated her in prison.

UN condemns S. Korea ship sinking

Council falls short of directly blaming N. Korea for incident

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press writer

UNITED NATIONS — The U.N. Security Council on Friday condemned a deadly attack on a South Korean warship that killed 46 sailors and pointed a finger toward North Korea but didn't directly blame the reclusive communist nation.

North Korea's U.N. Ambassador Sin Son Ho called it "our great diplomatic victory," stressing again that his country had nothing to do with the sinking of the 1,200-ton Cheonan on March 26. U.S. State Department spokesman Mark

Toner said he wouldn't react "to overblown rhetoric."

North Korea previously warned that its military forces would respond if the council questioned or condemned the country over the sinking, and ambassador Sin compared the situation on the Korean peninsula to a "trigger" that may explode "at any moment." At the same time, he said North Korea will make "efforts" to continue the denuclearization process through six-party talks, which Pyongyang abandoned in December 2008, and to replace the Armistice Agreement that ended the 1950-53 Korean War with a new peace treaty.

The statement about the ship sinking, approved by all 15 council members, expressed "deep concern" over the findings of a South Korean-led international investigation that concluded that a North Korean torpedo fired by a North Korean submarine sank the Cheonan.

The statement, read by the council president, condemns the attack and calls for "appropriate and peaceful measures to be taken against those responsible."

But it doesn't identify who is responsible and notes North Korea's response "that it had nothing to do with the incident."

North Korea has called for a new joint investigation by both Koreas and demanded that its inspectors be allowed to go to the site of the sinking near the tense Korean sea border. Sin again pledged that his government will "do our utmost to dig out the truth behind this incident."

South Korea had wanted the council to condemn the North. But China, the North's closest ally and a veto-wielding council member, opposed direct condemnation for the sinking or a third round of sanctions against North Korea.

While U.S. Ambassador Susan Rice and South Korean Ambassador Park In-kook insisted the council statement makes clear that North Korea was responsible for the attack, some diplomats and analysts privately called it weak for not directly blaming Pyongyang.

"The message to North Korean leadership is crystal clear," Rice said. "The Security Council condemns and deplores this attack." She said the council's use of the word "attack" and its expression of "deep concern" about the investigation's findings show how all members viewed the sinking.

U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton said the statement "underscores the unity of the international community and the reality that a peaceful resolution of the issues on the Korean Peninsula will only be possible if North Korea fundamentally changes its behavior."

Ex-S.F. cop writes letter apologizing for shooting

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The former San Francisco Bay area police officer convicted of killing an unarmed black man in an Oakland train station wrote a letter apologizing to the victim's family, saying he'll forever "live, breathe, sleep and not sleep" with memories of the "terrible event," according to a copy released by his lawyer Friday.

Johannes Mehserle said in the handwritten letter that he "never intended" to shoot 22-year-old Oscar Grant, who died of a gunshot wound to the back after being pulled off a Bay Area Rapid Transit train on New Year's Day 2009.

The emotional letter is dated July 4, four days before a Los Angeles jury convicted him of involuntary manslaughter.

"For now, and forever I will live, breathe, sleep, and not sleep with the memory of Mr. Grant screaming 'You shot me' and putting my hands on the bullet wound thinking the pressure would help while I kept telling him 'You'll be okay!'" Mehserle said in the letter, released by attorney Michael Rains.

Thursday's verdict outraged Grant's family and touched off violent protest in Oakland, where the case has enflamed racial tensions.

Mehserle, 28, testified during his trial that he struggled with Grant and saw him digging in his pocket as officers responded to reports of a fight at a train station.

Fearing Grant may have a weapon, Mehserle said he decided to shock Grant with his Taser but pulled his .40-caliber handgun instead. Grant was shot as he lay face-down.

The jury found that Mehserle didn't mean to kill Grant, but that his behavior was still so negligent that it was criminal.

AP photo

Graffiti and smashed windows are seen on the windows of a drug store in Oakland, Calif., Friday. Angry protests erupted after a jury convicted a police officer of a lesser charge for killing an unarmed black man on a crowded train platform on New Year's Day in 2009.

Angry protesters eye sentencing in killing

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The involuntary manslaughter conviction of a white former transit officer in the death of an unarmed black man set the stage for a sentencing that could be just as explosive as the trial depending on how the judge interprets the verdict.

Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Robert Perry has a tremendous amount of discretion in handing down punishment Aug. 6 against Johannes Mehserle — anywhere from probation to 14 years.

A sentence on the low end could further inflame tensions among the hundreds of angry people who took to the streets of Oakland Thursday over what they believe should have been a murder conviction.

Those protesters could find some satisfaction in the way Perry decides to apply a finding by the jury that Mehserle used a gun to commit the crime.

Involuntary manslaughter convictions call for two to four years in prison, but Perry could tack on an additional three to 10 years due to the gun enhancement.

"I think he could get substantial time, by that I mean like six years," said John Barnett, a defense attorney from Orange County who represented one of four Los Angeles police officers acquitted of beating Rodney King in 1992. "There is going to be a lot of pressure to give him state prison."

Prosecutors wanted Johannes Mehserle convicted of murdering Grant.

Instead, jurors decided Mehserle didn't mean to kill Grant, but his behavior was still so negligent that it was criminal.

The judge has the option of tossing out the gun enhancement, though experts say that seems unlikely because of Perry's no-nonsense reputation on the bench.

Legal experts also said a sentence of probation appears remote, especially since Mehserle was taken into custody immediately after the verdict and booked into the Los Angeles County Men's Central Jail, where he will be kept apart from the general population.

"It is probably politically difficult to give him probation," Santa Clara University law professor Edward Steinman said.

Mehserle was arrested two weeks after the shooting and has remained free after posting $3 million bail in February 2009, meaning he would have no credit for time served if he is sentenced to prison.

Some experts doubt that Mehserle will receive the maximum sentence and question whether an on-duty police officer should be punished with additional state prison time for using a service weapon.

The gun enhancement law was passed to additionally punish armed muggers, robbers and other criminals for endangering lives during their crimes.

Using it in a shooting death that resulted in an involuntary manslaughter conviction is redundant and illogical, said Stanford University law professor Robert Weisberg.

Pair of suicide bombs kill 62 in Pakistan tribal area

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) — A pair of suicide bombings killed 62 people Friday outside a government office in a region along the Afghan border where the Pakistani army and U.S. missiles have had some success in decreasing the number of such attacks.

The assault, which wounded at least 111 people, was one of the deadliest in Pakistan this year. There was speculation that the bombers were targeting anti-Taliban tribal elders visiting the government office in the village of Yakaghund, part of the Mohmand tribal area in the country's northwest.

The attackers struck within seconds of each other as two U.S. senators met with Pakistani leaders in the capital, Islamabad, to discuss their countries' cooperation in the fight against terrorism, much of it being waged in the lawless tribal belt bordering Afghanistan where al-Qaida and the Taliban have long had redoubts.

One of the bombs appeared fairly small but the other was huge, officials said. At least one bomber was on a motorcycle.

The bombers detonated their explosives near the office of Rasool Khan, a deputy Mohmand administrator who escaped unharmed. The tribal elders, including those involved in setting up militias to fight the Taliban, were in the building, but none was hurt, according to Mohmand chief administrator Amjad Ali Khan.

Video footage showed dozens of men searching through piles of yellow brick and mud rubble for survivors. Women and children were among the victims.

Abdul Wadood, 19, was sitting in a vehicle at the time of the bombings.

"I only heard the deafening blast and lost consciousness," said Wawood, who was being treated for head and arm wounds in Peshawar, the main city in the northwest, about 15 miles away. "I found myself on a hospital bed after opening my eyes. I think those who planned or carried out this attack are not humans."

NATO accepts blame for killing 6 Afghan civilians

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — NATO took the blame on Friday for accidentally killing six civilians and wounding several others in eastern Afghanistan — just a day after five Afghan soldiers died in a botched coalition airstrike.

The back-to-back incidents come as international troops are trying to gain the trust of the Afghan people and improve coordination with Afghan security forces in hopes of handing over more responsibility for security to them nearly nine years into the war.

NATO said an assessment team, comprising both coalition and Afghan forces, determined that the civilians were killed when artillery fire fell short of its target Thursday in Jani Khel district of Paktia province.

A full investigation is under way.

Initially, the coalition reported that eight Afghan civilians had been injured and taken to a nearby NATO outpost for treatment, and that one subsequently died. Later, it was determined that the bodies of those killed had been removed before NATO units arrived on the scene following the errant rounds, NATO said in a statement.

During the past two days, Afghan and NATO leaders have had meetings with local elders and community leaders in Jani Khel to discuss the incident.

NATO officials "offer sincere condolences to those affected and accept full responsibility for the actions that led to this tragic incident," the coalition said in a statement.

Norwegian terror trial could face problems

OSLO, Norway (AP) — The arrest of three suspected al-Qaida members planning bomb attacks and operating in Norway went smoothly, but a conviction might be harder to get.

Despite tightening anti-terrorism laws since 9/11, Norwegian prosecutors have yet to try a successful case, and experts say the latest arrests may run into problems faced by earlier cases.

The arrests might not end in a conviction because of the country's strict conditions for conspiracy cases, three Norwegian terror experts said Friday.

The judiciary prefers "to convict for acts rather than intention" because the latter is difficult to prove, said Tore Bjoergbo, a terrorism expert at the Norwegian Police University College.

"We tend to let 10 guilty people go free rather than put one innocent person in prison," he said.

Norway's Police Security Service

arrested three residents of Norway on terrorism charges Thursday. Norwegian and U.S. officials said they were plotting to carry out an attack, organized by al-Qaida operatives in Pakistan, on an unknown target using powerful peroxide bombs similar to ones aimed for detonation in New York and Manchester, England.

A 39-year-old Norwegian of Uighur origin and a 31-year-old citizen of Uzbekistan were detained in Norway while a 37-year-old Iraqi was held in Germany, where he was vacationing, police said.

Norwegian officials allege the men conspired to commit an act of terror, a crime under Norway's 2003 anti-terrorism statute with a maximum sentence of 12 years.

Bjoergbo said much hinged on whether the suspected al-Qaida plotters had actually purchased bomb-making materials.

"If they talk on the phone or in the car about something they would like to do without making any serious preparatory acts, such as buying chemicals in a quantity that doesn't make sense for domestic purposes, then they are generally not going to be convicted," he said.

Winning a conviction in Norway, where the peculiarities of the legal system have helped thwart past trials, will likely prove much more difficult than in other European countries or in the United States.

In Norway's most notorious terrorism case, and the first to cite the 2003 terror law, three men were accused of a 2006 plot to blow up the U.S. or Israeli embassies.

Evidence included surveillance tapes of the men discussing how to attack the buildings, and prosecutors presented drawings and plans for rocket launchers.

HOME AT THE POOL

Biedenbach family makes swimming a year-round affair

By Stephen Meyers
For the Times-News

The Biedenbach family goes through seven gallons of milk each week.

The four children eat cereal every morning before swim practice at 6:30. After three hours of swimming, the kids come home and have a second breakfast.

"It's all about food in our family," Noella Biedenbach said.

And swimming.

Swimming takes the Biedenbachs somewhere new every weekend. The family has traveled to Boise, Caldwell, Moscow and even Seattle this season.

"We had a nice family vacation," Hannah, 15, said of the nine-hour drive to Seattle.

With her four kids competing in 32 races, Noella Biedenbach will do a lot of cheering this weekend at the YMCA/City Pool.

She's also running the Fifth Annual Summer Heat Invitational Swim Meet as president of the Magic Valley Marlins swim team.

"It's difficult sometimes when hosting the meet," Biedenbach said.

"Sometimes I cheat and say, 'Yea that was awesome,' if I miss one of their races."

All four of her children: Abby, Hannah, Colton and Landon compete year-round for the Marlins.

They all started at a young age with swimming lessons and have competed for the Marlins for eight years.

"It's a lot of fun to do together as a family and all four seem to really enjoy the sport," Noella said.

But with four children swimming year-round, Noella is surprised by her grocery bill every week.

"They don't tell you the most expensive cost with four kids swimming is the grocery bill," she joked.

Hannah and Abby many times compete against each other in the pool, which makes cheering a difficult task for Noella.

"My husband lines up at the starting line and I'll run to the end and we shout each name," she said. "Or I'll just yell, 'Go girls!'"

Abby and Hannah won't even talk before their races, ignoring each other before they dive into the pool to compete.

"On one hand you want to cheer on and support your sister, but on the other hand, you want to kick her butt," Abby said.

But once a race is over, the two congratulate each other

GUEUGNON, France — Lance Armstrong has his mind on the mountains.

The seven-time Tour de France champion is in 18th place after Friday's stage, which was won by Mark Cavendish for his second straight sprint-finish victory. If Armstrong is going to make a move, it may come in the climbs.

The weather was hot — 95-degree heat — and some tempers even hotter for the 141-mile sixth stage from Montargis to Gueugnon. Two riders broke out into a bike wheel-whacking brawl after the finish line.

"Guys were suffering the whole stage," Armstrong said.

Cavendish called the stage — the longest this year — his hardest

The Heat is on as Miami signs stars

By Tim Reynolds
Associated Press writer

MIAMI — Done deal. LeBron James and Chris Bosh are members of the Miami Heat.

The Heat completed sign-and-trade deals with Cleveland and Toronto on Friday night for their two newest superstars. The Heat sent two future first-round and two second-round picks to the Cavaliers for James, while packaging two first-round picks to the Raptors for Bosh.

James, Bosh and Dwyane Wade all signed six-year contracts Friday night, each leaving millions of dollars on the table in order to provide the Heat flexibility to build a championship roster. They could have made $16.6 million apiece this season, but took less money — none would say how much less — to get the deals done.

Earlier Friday night, dressed in a white Heat uniform for the first time, James took a look at his new home crowd, folded his arms across his chest and nodded.

Reveled in Cleveland, revered in Miami. Welcome to South Florida, LeBron.

"It feels right," James said.

"To be in this position, to wear the Heat uniform, everything is nice. We're going to make the world know that the Heat is back."

Naturally, James promised championships. Multiple championships.

Let a new era of Heat basketball begin.

"That's the only reason I'm here, man," James said.

With 13,000 fans chanting "Yes We Did!" and "Beat L.A." — already eyeing the two-time defending champion Lakers — all amid an atmosphere more suited to a rock concert than a basketball game, the Miami Heat welcomed the NBA's newest trio of superstars Friday night for a celebration unlike just about any other

Cleveland rocked by losing its superstar

By Tom Withers
Associated Press writer

CLEVELAND — Charred remains of a torched LeBron James jersey were scattered among ashes and 10 spent wooden matchsticks on a sidewalk across the street from Quicken Loans Arena.

Over on Ontario Street, workers prepared to remove a massive 100-foot-high billboard of James, his arms outstretched, that has been a downtown tourist attraction for years.

Now, it's only a painful reminder of another Cleveland sports loss.

"It's a disgrace," Reverend Jesse Harris said, standing with a few onlookers under James' imposing figure. "It's time to bring it down."

One day after James ripped this city's heart out by saying he was leaving for Miami, Cleveland distanced itself from a family member.

LeBron James, the school-boy star from Akron who revived a downtrodden NBA franchise and raised championship hopes for seven seasons with the Cavaliers, is no longer welcome.

By 10 a.m. Friday, every No. 23 jersey bearing James' name inside the Cavaliers' temporary gift shop at the arena had been boxed up and taken away. Every banner with the MVP's face on it stripped from the walls. Every figurine, T-shirt, coffee mug and pennant associated with James was gone.

Upstairs in the team's offices, employees tossed mementos of James in garbage cans.

This wasn't a cleaning. This was a cleansing.

In a matter of hours, James went from the most-adored athlete in Cleveland history to its most hated. From hero to villain before the sun rose.

Defending champ Stricker leads Deere Classic by one stroke

SILVIS, Ill. — As he chatted about his day at the John Deere Classic, Steve Stricker was reminded that he now held the tournament's 36-hole record.

"So far," he said with a smile.

Stricker had good reason to be cautious because Paul Goydos, who had sent a buzz through the golf world by shooting only the fourth 59 in PGA Tour history on Thursday, was just starting his round.

But the deft putting touch that had put Goydos in golf's most exclusive club deserted him Friday and he settled for a 68, leaving him one stroke behind Stricker, the defending champion, heading into Saturday's third round.

"Reality kicked in today," Goydos said.

Stricker, who almost matched Goydos with a 60 in Thursday's round, came back with a solid 5-under par 66 for a two-day total of 126, which is 16 under at the TPC Deere Run. The old 36-hole record was 127 by David Frost in 2000, the first year the tournament was played at Deere Run.

earlier this year, Stricker hole with accurate overcame a bogey on his fifth approaches that left him with makeable birdie putts.

"It's always tough to follow up a good round with another good round and for whatever reason, I thought I did a pretty good job of that today," Stricker said.

Goydos appeared to be on his way to another sizzling round when he birdied his 11th hole, the par-5 No. 2, to go 17 under and move ahead of Stricker by a stroke. Then his game unraveled.

He failed to break par on any of the last seven holes and bogeyed two of them. After needing only 22 putts on Thursday, he slogged through this round with 32, essentially the difference in his scores.

"Yesterday was one of the greatest putting rounds maybe of all time and today was not," Goydos said. "But that's not — I think they call it the Sports Illustrated jinx. It's just a reversion to the norm. Things tend to want to work their way to the center."

Still, he admitted: "I hit some pretty squirrely short putts coming in."

Mariners trade ace Cliff Lee to Texas

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Cliff Lee is suddenly in the starting rotation for the AL West-leading Texas Rangers, who pulled off a big deal despite bankruptcy proceedings and unsettled ownership.

The Seattle Mariners sent the ace left-hander and reliever Mark Lowe to the Rangers on Friday for rookie first baseman Justin Smoak and three minor leaguers. Texas also receives cash as part of the deal.

It was the third trade in less than a year for Lee, who went 8-3 with a 2.34 ERA in 13 starts for Seattle. He can become a free agent after this season.

For now, he will be starting for the Rangers (as early as Saturday against Baltimore), who landed one of the most coveted players on the trade market despite financial constraints that made it uncertain if they could make such a move before the July 31 non-waiver trade deadline.

General manager Jon Daniels has repeatedly said the Rangers had some financial flexibility to make a deal, but he had never been specific on how that could work.

“Everybody knows our situation. When we take on salary, we have to look at that and see if we can justify it within our budget,” team president Nolan Ryan said. “As long as we stay within our budget, we don’t really have restrictions on us to where we can’t do things.”

Considering that a bankruptcy judge in May approved a multimillion-dollar loan from Major League Baseball to keep the Rangers afloat during bankruptcy proceedings, there are sure to be those who question the team’s ability to make such a deal.

“I’d guess they’ll be some unnamed sources, but I don’t expect a lot of phone calls,” Daniels said when asked if he anticipated any backlash from other teams.

The 31-year-old Lee has a $9 million salary this season and is expected to command a lucrative, multiyear deal in the offseason — unless Texas signs him to an extension before that.

Back-to-back homers lift Braves past Mets

NEW YORK — Melky Cabrera and Omar Infante hit back-to-back homers with two outs in the seventh inning off knuckleballer R.A. Dickey, and NL East-leading Atlanta beat New York 4-2 on Friday night.

Infante, the All-Star utility player, had four hits and scored twice to help the Braves open a four-game lead over New York, their biggest margin of the season.

Billy Wagner made his first appearance at Citi Field against his former team and received mostly boos when he was announced. He pitched a perfect ninth for his 20th save.

Troy Glaus had a two-out RBI single and Cabrera scored on shortstop Jose Reyes’ two-out error in the first as Atlanta improved to 21-25 on the road. The Braves took two of three from the Phillies before coming to New York, where they were swept in a three-game set April 23-25.

PHILLIES 9, REDS 7, 10 INNINGS

PHILADELPHIA — Ryan Howard hit a two-run homer in the 10th inning after Philadelphia scored six runs in the ninth to tie it.

Staked to a 7-1 lead by the ninth, Reds starter Mike Leake appeared to be cruising toward his first career complete game. Greg Dobbs hit a three-run homer and pinch-hitter Cody Ransom followed with a tying, two-run shot off Francisco Cordero to make it 7-1-all.

CARDINALS 8, ASTROS 0

HOUSTON — Adam Wainwright pitched eight scoreless innings and Matt Holliday hit a three-run homer for St. Louis.

Albert Pujols drove in three runs and Kyle McClellan pitched a perfect ninth to complete the shutout for St. Louis and end a three-game skid.

BREWERS 5, PIRATES 4, 10 INNINGS

MILWAUKEE — Ryan Braun’s two-out single scored Rickie Weeks from second base in the 10th inning and Milwaukee snapped a five-game losing streak.

Milwaukee tied it at 4 in the ninth on George Kottaras’ RBI triple off Octavio Dotel, who blew his fourth save in 23 chances. The Pirates have lost four consecutive games and 22 of their last 24 on the road.

NATIONALS 8, GIANTS 1

WASHINGTON — Stephen Strasburg gave up a homer to the first batter he faced. then shut down San Francisco, allowing three hits in six innings, and tying, two-run shot off Adam Dunn hit two homers for Washington.

It was Strasburg’s first win in nearly a month.

Strasburg (3-2, 2.32 ERA) finished with eight strikeouts and one walk. The No. 1 pick in the 2009 draft struck out Pat Burrell swinging at a 98 mph fast-ball to end the sixth.

NATIONAL LEAGUE RED SOX 14, BLUE JAYS 3

TORONTO — Jon Lester pitched six innings to win his third consecutive start and Boston hit four homers in a 14-3 victory over Toronto on Friday night.

Kevin Youkilis, Adrian Beltre, Mike Cameron and Bill Hall connected for Boston, which snapped a four-game skid and improved to 6-1 against the Blue Jays this season. Hall finished with three hits and four RBIs.

WHITE SOX 8, ROYALS 2

CHICAGO — Mark Buehrle pitched shutout ball into the eighth inning and A.J. Pierzynski hit two home runs as Chicago won its sixth straight.

Buehrle took a line drive off his right (non-throwing) wrist on Scott Podsednik’s leadoff single in the first, but was not seriously injured. The left-hander allowed six hits in seven-plus innings and was replaced by Sergio Santos after walking David DeJesus to start the eighth.

INDIANS 9, RAYS 3

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Jayson Nix homered for the sixth time in his last seven games and Jhonny Peralta hit a three-run homer for Cleveland.

Cleveland went ahead 3-1 on Nix’s solo shot off James Shields (7-9) in the fifth. Peralta’s three-run drive off Andy Sonnanstine and an RBI double by Jason Donald made it 8-2 in the eighth.

TIGERS 7, TWINS 3

DETROIT — Magglio Ordonez drove in three of Detroit’s seven runs over two innings.

AL Central-leading Detroit won its fourth straight and for the 16th time in 18 home games.

The Twins have lost three straight and six of eight. Minnesota has slipped to third place and trails the Tigers by three games after having a 1½-game lead on them at the start of the month.

Cowboys smash five homers in AA sweep

Times-News

The Twin Falls Cowboys blasted five home runs and got a no-hitter from Cy Sneed in sweeping host Idaho Falls 8-0 and 15-4 in a Class AA American Legion Baseball doubleheader Friday.

Sneed struck out 11 in his Game 1 no-no, while Zeb Sneed and Michael Williams hit back-to-back home runs in the first inning, with Zeb Sneed’s bringing in three runs. Jared Jordan added a two-run homer, while Eric Harr went 3-for-3 with a double.

Game 2 was more of the same as Zeb Sneed went 3-for-4 with a homer and Braden Box hit a two-run shot.

Ryan Petersen doubled twice, tripled and had four RBIs, while Williams went 3-for-4.

“Best we’ve played in a while all the way around,” said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir, whose team moved to 27-9 (13-3 in Area C).

The Cowboys face a tough test today, visiting the Boise Gems for a 2 p.m. doubleheader.

MCCREERY, HAMILTON HIT GRAND SLAMS IN BUHL WINS

Isaac McCreery and Matt Hamilton each hit grand slams as Buhl routed host Marsh Falls 11-1 and 15-3 in a pair of five-inning run-rule wins Friday.

McCreery’s slam came in a seven-run third inning that included Hamilton’s solo home run in Game 1. Buhl trailed 3-1 in Game 2 but broke things open. In addition to Hamilton’s grand slam, J.D. Leckenby had a three-run triple and Marcus Lively smacked a three-run double as Buhl made the most of its six hits.

Marsh Falls issued several walks and committed four errors to aid Buhl’s cause in the nightcap. Marco Avelar and Heston Jenkins got the wins on the mound, combining to give up only three walks.

Buhl (24-4, 21-3 Area C) is at Bear Lake today for a 1 p.m. doubleheader.

Kyle Korver leaves Jazz, joins Boozer with Bulls

CHICAGO — Carlos Boozer smiled slyly Friday at the Berto Center when asked about former Jazz teammate Kyle Korver.

One hour after Boozer’s introductory news conference ended, it became clear why: Korver and Boozer will be reunited because Korver accepted a three-year, $15 million offer from the Bulls.

Korver, 29, led the NBA last season with a 53.6 percentage on 3-pointers. In seven seasons, he has shot 41 percent from that distance.

Korver, who has averaged 9.9 points in 517 career games with the 76ers and Jazz, will likely come off the bench. Whatever his role, he will provide a desperately needed space-the-floor shooter to give Derrick Rose more room to operate.

Parakhouski solid in summer league finale for Celtics

Former College of Southern Idaho center Art Parakhouski had nine points and seven rebounds in his NBA summer league finale on Friday. Parakhouski made 4 of 6 shots from the field in 22 minutes as his Boston Celtics lost 86-68 to the New Jersey Nets in Orlando.

Parakhouski played in four of five games at the weeklong league for the Celtics, who finished 1-4. Undrafted out of Radford (Va.) University, Parakhouski is hoping to earn a contract with an NBA team, but could also pursue a career in Europe. He plans to his home country of Belarus to play for his national team this summer.

restricted free agent.

The deal was struck shortly after the New Jersey Nets presented a front-loaded offer sheet that would have been difficult for Charlotte to match because it’s close to hitting the luxury tax, a payroll figure owner Michael Jordan said the team would not exceed.

Agent Brian Elfus said two other unnamed teams also expressed interest in the athletic shot blocker, whom the Bobcats considered as one of their top off-season priorities.

“Tyrus is happy this deal is done,” Elfus said. “He’s very happy about returning to Charlotte and playing for coach (Larry) Brown.”

KNICKS AND FELTON NEAR DEAL

Amar’e Stoudemire asked for a point guard and the Knicks are close to delivering the hottest one on the free agent market, reportedly agreeing in principle Friday to a multi-year deal with the Charlotte Bobcats’

Raymond Felton.

Whether Felton is whom Stoudemire envisioned running pick-and-rolls with in his quest to return the Knicks to respectability and beyond does not seem to matter, because Tony Parker and Chris Paul are not coming to Madison Square Garden, at least not yet.

And with Felton apparently ready to come on board, perhaps not at all.

“We feel like we’re close (with Felton),” team president Donnie Walsh said. “We have no contract right now, so in my world, until you get a contract, it’s not done.”

According to Yahoo! Sports, Felton’s agent, Tony Dutt, has said the deal tentatively agreed upon by his client likely will not be for longer than three years.

Financial details have not been finalized, but Felton was expected to garner a contract that surpassed at least monetarily — the four-year, $16 million deal Steve Blake received from the Lakers.

team in history.

“We know what the fans want,” James said.

James, Heat favorite Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh all arrived accompanied by plumes of smoke, lifted into the air on a forklift for their grand arrival.

Great fanfare. Great expectations.

“It’s still surreal, man,” Wade said earlier. “Me, Chris and ‘Bron. We ready. We want to go to the gym now.”

Wade was in the middle as the trio was lifted skyward for the entrance — Bosh on his right, James on his left. Bosh pointed to the fans and screamed, while Wade aimed his index fingers at the crowd and James strutted about to the fans’ delight.

They walked down the stairs to a long runway, slapping high-fives with fans, clapping their hands and soaking in the atmosphere.

Meanwhile, behind the scenes, the Heat continued working on sign-and-trade deals for both players, and tried to clear space for Udonis Haslem — Wade’s teammate for seven seasons and someone the 2006 NBA finals MVP wants back for the next chapter.

“This is surpassing a dream come true,” Wade said. “You always want to put yourself in the best position possible. To have an opportunity to team up with arguably the best trio to ever play the game of basketball is amazing.”

Heat broadcaster Eric Reid called them the “Three Kings” as the program got under way an hour behind schedule, presumably because of the trade talks, which Heat president Pat Riley said were all formally completed around 11 p.m. but did not offer the terms. Keys to the city were set to be awarded to each star, and Gov. Charlie Crist was in the stands, along with several city and county officials.

Cleveland, whose economic woes had been softened by James’ arrival and superstar ascension, never saw it coming.

Sure, there were reports he was leaning toward Miami but until James uttered: “I’m taking my talents to South Beach,” no one here thought it was possible he had played his last game in a wine-and-gold uniform.

“I understand why he left, but he should have done it on a better note,” said Bobby Beese of Norwalk, Ohio. “It wasn’t right.”

Even those outside Cleveland felt it was mishandled.

“It seems everybody has a bad taste in their mouth, unless you’re in Miami,” Orlando Magic coach Stan Van Gundy said.

“We’re always competing in something,” Hannah said.

Both girls run cross country in the fall and are involved in FFA. They’re also serious students, having both skipped a grade.

Abby, only 16, will be a senior at Twin Falls High School this year and Hannah, 15, is a junior.

But they manage all of their responsibilities while swimming 11 months out of the year.

And as president of the Magic Valley swim team for the past six years, Noella is with her children every competition and practice.

“It’s a lot of work, but it’s so neat to see so many kids compete,” she said. “We’ve had a number of kids with disabilities swim and parents get so excited when their children make it to the other end of the pool. That’s what keeps me coming back every year.”

RAIN HALTS PLAY AT U.S. WOMEN’S OPEN

OAKMONT, Pa. — Cristie Kerr didn’t need to sink a long putt to gain a potentially significant advantage in the U.S. Women’s Open, or whip a 290-yard drive down one of Oakmont Country Club’s slender fairways.

No, she only needed it to rain.

A relentless string of thunderstorms that began with 100 of the 156 golfers still to begin or complete the second round caused play to be suspended at mid-afternoon Friday. Twenty-eight of the 31 golfers who were within three shots of the lead had played only a few holes or hadn’t teed off.

Except for Kerr, the world’s No. 1 player, and first-round leader Brittany Lang, who shared the not-very-crowded clubhouse lead at 1-over 143. Sophie Gustafson was at even par, but she had 17 holes left in her round.

Kerr finished her even-par 71 before the pelting rains flooded Oakmont’s famed Church Pew bunkers and saturated its super-fast greens. Those greens were beginning to turn a Cleveland Browns-like shade of brown — never a welcomed sight in Steelers-mad Pittsburgh — following four consecutive days of 90-degree weather.

CLARKE STILL IN FRONT, MICKELSON MISSES CUT AT SCOTTISH OPEN

LUSS, Scotland — Darren Clarke was nearly flawless in miserable conditions in the Scottish Open, opening a four-shot lead on a dreary Friday at Loch Lomond.

Clarke chipped in for birdie on the tough 16th and holed a series of 20-foot birdie putts on the front nine for a 4-under 67.

Perhaps more impressive than being at 10-under 132 going into the weekend is that Clarke has made only one bogey — a three-putt from 20 feet on the par-3 11th hole on Friday.

He has played cleanly in conditions that caused Phil Mickelson to take a quintuple-bogey on the 18th hole in missing the cut, and Ernie Els to make consecutive double bogeys as he was trying to finish.

Former BYU back Unga works out for pro scouts

PROVO, Utah (AP) — When BYU opens the football season at home against Washington in September, Harvey Unga won't be taking handoffs up the middle, catching swing passes or scoring touchdowns for the Cougars.

He hopes to be wearing a different uniform, watching his former teammates from a distance.

Unga's football career continued to progress this week even as he looked back and reflected on what he had done in three years as a Cougar. Unga worked out for 20 NFL scouts at BYU's practice facility in preparation for next week's NFL supplemental draft.

Former BYU running back Harvey Unga receives passes during a workout for more than 20 NFL scouts at the BYU practice field Thursday in preparation for next week's NFL supplemental draft.

Unga's agent Eric Metz said he was slowed down by a minor sprained ankle and had been commuting to Chicago to witness the birth of his son.

Still, Unga was happy with his effort.

"I felt good about everything. I had a pretty good turnout. I'm just thankful for the guys that came out. I gave it all that I could and I don't know what they expected out of me," Unga said. "I'll pray for the best and see what happens."

Unga had a 35-inch standing vertical jump. He benched pressed 225 pounds 19 times. He was timed in the 40-yard dash at 4.63. Not bad for a 244-pound running back. He also caught a variety of passes at different angles and didn't drop a ball.

"We've been getting feedback ever since he declared for the draft. Everybody says the same thing. It's the same thing you've seen on film and you see in the statistics," Metz said. "You've got a guy who has run for nearly 3,500 yards. He's scored 45 touchdowns. He caught 102 balls and he adjusts to the ball very well. That, coupled with that great character, makes him a highly thought of prospect."

In January, Unga debated on whether to return for his senior season or enter the NFL Draft. He opted to return to BYU, but this spring withdrew from the university when it was revealed that he had violated the Honor Code.

"I'm going to plead the Fifth on that one. That's between me, my fiancée, our family and the man upstairs," Unga said. "I apologize for not answering, but that's between us. I'm looking forward for her and my little boy to come out here next week and we'll tie the knot and see what happens."

For Unga, the workout wasn't a time to dwell on what could have been at BYU this year. He worked out on the practice field one last time, putting his BYU playing days and his past behind him and moving on.

"If I was bitter, that's the wrong thing to do. I made the mistake," Unga said. "I'm a grown-up, I'm a man now and I'll deal with it. I signed an Honor Code when I got here, I had a violation."

Bowyer scrambling to make Chase

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — After watching a win slip away in a frustrating finish at Daytona last week, Clint Bowyer finds himself stuck in a big group of marquee drivers scrambling to make the Chase.

Bowyer was in position to win at Daytona International Speedway a week ago, but a caution flag came out just before the last lap and the race went into overtime. Bowyer slipped back into the pack after the restart, spun out and finished 17th.

When he woke up the next day, the frustration hadn't gone away.

"Oh, it carried on for a couple of days," Bowyer said. "I haven't been that upset in a while. I was so frustrated. I hated it for these guys (his crew). They work so hard on these cars and we were so close. I wanted to be able to do that for them."

And do it for his Chase chances.

Instead of getting a nice points boost for a victory, Bowyer now is 14th in the standings heading into Saturday night's race at Chicagoland Speedway. And he's not the only good driver who's concerned.

With eight races remaining before the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship, less than 100 points separate 11th-place driver Dale Earnhardt Jr. from Ryan Newman in 15th. Stuck in between them are Carl Edwards, Mark Martin and Bowyer. Only the top 12 drivers after the Sept. 11 race at Richmond are eligible to compete in NASCAR's version of the postseason.

Bowyer and others say it's not too early to start worrying about points.

"Oh, yeah," Bowyer said. "Everybody does. The Chase is on."

Although Earnhardt is 11th in points, he didn't necessarily seem convinced he's got the 11th-best performing team in the sport right now.

"I think that'd be slightly generous," Earnhardt said.

And Earnhardt admitted he was nervous about the upcoming stretch of races.

"I'm nervous about losing points, not making the Chase, just having a bad week," Earnhardt said. "I don't think I'm any more nervous about it than I usually am. Everybody hates to fail."

Eight races is a long time in NASCAR. But with so many other good teams scrambling alongside him to make the Chase, Bowyer said it will be tough to make a major move in the points.

"Eight races seems like a lot, but I'll tell you it's not much," Bowyer said. "As good as the drivers and the teams are in front of us that we're going to have to beat out of that thing, you don't just knock out 100 points, 200 points a race. You're going to have to chisel away at it — maybe 10, maybe 20 (points) at the most a race. So it's going to take time."

BUSCH WINS NATIONWIDE RACE AT CHICAGOLAND

JOLIET, Ill. — Kyle Busch pounced on Joey Logano on a restart in overtime, then pulled away to win the Nationwide series race at Chicagoland Speedway on Friday night.

It was the seventh Nationwide victory of the season for Busch, who also won the Nationwide race at Chicagoland in 2008.

Toyotas swept the top five spots as Logano finished second, followed by Brian

MCMURRAY ON POLE IN ILLINOIS

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — Finding speed hasn't been a huge problem for Jamie McMurray this season. It's the consistent results that have so far eluded him.

McMurray won the pole position for Saturday night's race at Chicagoland Speedway, turning a lap of 183.542 mph in his Chevrolet on Friday.

It is the third pole of the season and sixth of his career for McMurray, who won the Daytona 500 in February but has been struggling of late.

"We've had good speed all year, and we haven't been able to capitalize on enough good finishes," McMurray said. "We've had good results. It seems like we either have a chance to win the race or we finish 30th, and we've got to get a little bit better, more consistent there. But again, the speed is the hardest thing to find."

McMurray said he and the No. 1 team concentrated on trying to run the low groove at the bottom of the track in practice. Based on his observations of past races at Chicagoland, McMurray believes it will pay off in today's race.

McMurray was followed in qualifying by the Chevrolets of Jimmie Johnson and Tony Stewart.

Scott, David Reutimann and Jason Leffler.

Danica Patrick finished 24th, her first finish inside the top 30 in five Nationwide races this season. Patrick was two laps behind the leaders at the finish.

New method of finding HGH may hurt urine test

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — A new test that provides a breakthrough in detecting human growth hormone in blood is expected to become available soon and make it more difficult for athletes to use HGH without getting caught.

It's a test some experts consider so good, however, it could blunt the push for the urine-based test sought by some in baseball and football, possibly stalling promising research that has already cost many thousands of dollars.

The new test, called a biomarkers test, scans the blood for chemicals the body produces after HGH use, which are detectable for up to two weeks. The test, expected to be available in the coming weeks or months, is a complement to — or maybe an improvement over — the current test, called an isoform test, which scans blood for synthetic HGH.

The isoform test detects synthetic HGH in the blood for only about 48 hours after use, making it easier for users to avoid detection.

"Anytime we have more tools, it's a good thing," said Larry Bowers, the lead scientist for the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency. "We view the two tests as working together. One doesn't replace the other, but it certainly gives us a wider window and a greater opportunity for catching people."

Following these developments anxiously are scientists from a Virginia lab called Ceres Nanosciences, where a $65,000 grant from USADA has been used to fund research that could someday lead to a urine test for HGH — the only HGH test Major League Baseball players would have to submit to under the current "Joint Drug Agreement" between baseball and the union.

Buoyed by success from the early phases of their testing, which the Ceres scientists say has debunked long-held claims that HGH particles can't be effectively captured in urine, Ceres is now applying for a grant to take the experiments to the next step.

"To move forward after this, we desperately need money," said Lance Liotta, lead scientist on the Ceres HGH project. "Funding is critical for us. If all the money goes toward the blood test that other people are working on, then they're missing a fantastic opportunity in urine that they shouldn't dismiss off-hand."

Ceres' best chance for funding is from the Partnership for Clean Competition (PCC), a collaborative founded in 2008 by the NFL, Major League Baseball, USADA and the U.S. Olympic Committee that has provided $1.3 million in grants for promising anti-doping research over the last two years.

The founders of the PCC, which delivers grants after receiving advice from a scientific advisory board chaired by Bowers of USADA, have different agendas when it comes to finding the perfect HGH test.

"We're optimistic but realistic" about the possibility of a urine test, USADA CEO Travis Tygart said. "Right now, and for the foreseeable future, we have to collect blood to detect and deter HGH."

Drivers seek first wins at Magic Valley Speedway

Although they're in the top five in the point standings, Budweiser Super Stocks drivers Daniel Shirley and Brennen VanderMeer are still seeking main-event wins at Magic Valley Speedway in Twin Falls. The two youngest drivers in the series this season, they have proven themselves worthy of the competition and one of them could climb out of the car into the winner's circle tonight.

Holding second and third place in the standings, Casey Pehrson and Chase Carraway will also be in hot pursuit of a first main-event win in the NAPA Street Stocks. Likewise, Quale's Electronics ride so far.

Armstrong

"For us, these days are days when you can't necessarily win the Tour, but you can certainly lose it," Armstrong said, warning as he often does of the dangers of flat stages that end in frenzied sprints.

The top of the standings didn't change much. Barring crashes or mishaps, they rarely change a lot on flat stages. But with the Tour about to leave the lowlands, the climbers could take step up while the contenders test their rivals for weakness.

Today's seventh stage is a 103-mile route along six low-to mid-grade climbs in the Jura range from Tournus to Station des Rousses. But the first real shakeout of climbers' legs looms in Sunday's stage, featuring two tough climbs including an uphill finish into the Morzine-Avoriaz ski station.

"I would look for more animation and more attacks on Sunday," Armstrong said.

But will he attack?

"Probably not. I still would wait and watch the other guys," he said, anticipating that he'll need to conserve energy for four rides in the Pyrenees in Week Three that are likely to have more impact on who wins.

Armstrong's last competitive test in mountains came in the Tour of Switzerland last month, where he finished an impressive second. He said he's in even better shape now.

Today is Saturday, July 10, the 191st day of 2010. There are 174 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On July 10, 1940, during World War II, the Battle of Britain began as Nazi forces began attacking southern England by air. (The Royal Air Force was ultimately victorious.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1509, theologian John Calvin, a key figure of the Protestant Reformation, was born in Noyon, Picardy, France.

In 1890, Wyoming became the 44th state.

In 1919, President Woodrow Wilson personally delivered the Treaty of Versailles (vehr-SY') to the Senate, and urged its ratification. (However, the Senate rejected it.)

In 1929, American paper currency was reduced in size as the government began issuing bills that were approximately 25 percent smaller.

In 1951, armistice talks aimed at ending the Korean War began at Kaesong.

In 1962, the Telstar 1 communications satellite was launched from Cape Canaveral.

In 1973, the Bahamas became fully independent after three centuries of British colonial rule.

In 1985, the Greenpeace protest ship Rainbow Warrior was sunk with explosives in Auckland, New Zealand by French intelligence agents; one activist was killed. Bowing to pressure from irate customers, the Coca-Cola Co. said it would resume selling old-formula Coke, while continuing to sell New Coke.

In 1991, Boris N. Yeltsin took the oath of office as the first elected president of the Russian republic.

In 1999, the United States women's soccer team won the World Cup, beating China 5-4 on penalty kicks after 120 minutes of scoreless play at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, Calif.

Ten years ago: Texas Governor George W. Bush, facing a skeptical audience, told the NAACP convention in Baltimore that "the party of Lincoln has not always carried the mantle of Lincoln," and promised to work to improve relations. Israeli President Ezer Weizman resigned, effectively ending a seven-year term that turned sour when he was found to have acted improperly by accepting gifts while in office.

Five years ago: A search-and-rescue team found the body of a missing U.S. commando in eastern Afghanistan, bringing an end to the desperate search for the last member of an ill-fated, four-man special forces unit that had disappeared the previous month. Nineteen-month-old Suzie Marie Pena was struck and killed by a SWAT team bullet during a shootout between Los Angeles police and her father, who was using the toddler as a shield; Jose Raul Pena also died. Hurricane Dennis roared quickly through the Florida Panhandle and Alabama coast with blinding squalls and crashing waves.

One year ago: General Motors completed an unusually quick exit from bankruptcy protection with promises of making money and building cars people would be eager to buy. Pope Benedict XVI stressed the Catholic church's opposition to abortion and embryonic stem cell research in his first meeting with President Barack Obama at the Vatican. Embattled Illinois Sen. Roland Burris announced he would not run for a full term in 2010. Jonathan Sanchez pitched the majors' first no-hitter of the season in San Francisco's 8-0 win over the San Diego Padres. British conductor Sir Edward Downes, 85, and his wife, Joan, 74, ended their lives together at an assisted suicide clinic in Zurich, Switzerland.

IF JULY 10 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You have a year ahead in which you can achieve your most important ambitions if you work hard, but this month you are ready to embrace your fantasies. You need those fantasies to act like a carrot so that your work will seem worthwhile. This is a good time for a trip to Disneyland or a visit to the circus because your imagination can make things seem more desirable and fun. A whirlwind romance might brighten your summer. September and October are the best months to make success of anything close to your heart or to make changes and crucial decisions about your career or job. By this time next year, you could be sitting on easy street and receive some well-deserved rewards.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Love means never saying you're sorry. If you don't say you are sorry, however, it is possible that someone will leave you at the door. It might be best to not do anything you will be sorry for this weekend.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Avoid making crucial decisions, especially if they involve a romantic relationship. It may be difficult to strike a delicate balance between standing up for your rights and being understanding.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone might provoke you with an attitude of "I'd rather fight than switch." The antagonism in the air can be channeled into constructive outlets if you don't get bogged down in petty quarrels.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Don't fritter cash away on little things. You will want to have extra resources on hand when a really big thing comes your way. Avoid taking risks because what you lose today might never be replaced.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Pushovers push back. Be gentle and considerate with loved ones this weekend. You take the chance that an unreasonable or temperamental retort is the last straw and someone will give up on you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): All's well that ends well. Minor aggravations and misunderstandings may dissipate quickly, but may leave mistrust in the air. Jumping into a new project without preparation may not be wise.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Heel. Like a dog that has slipped its leash, you might run wild or take impulsive risks. A fragile relationship might not withstand a sudden about face or change. Don't risk being put in the doghouse.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Trust once broken is hard to mend. Adding a little excitement into your primary relationship is fine as long as you don't go too far. You should be extra considerate in public places and remain dependable.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Silence is golden — or at least worthy of attention. A loved one in an amorous mood could be deterred if you gab about trivial things to spice things up. Love doesn't need more spice now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Keep your doubts and worries to yourself. Minor spats will blow away quickly if you prove you are trustworthy. Look forward to an evening designed for seductive romantic encounters.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Being overly sensitive can cause a split. The problem is that you are not sure if you can trust someone. Your doubts make you receptive to any symptom of disloyalty. Don't jump to wrong conclusions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Avoid the attraction of extravagant actions and sweeping statements. Tensions or stress can put you and a hookup at odds. Even if both parties want to apologize reestablishing trust might be difficult.

QUESTIONS OR TO COME SEE. CALL 420-4129

DEAR ABBY: I'm a boy in eighth grade with a big problem. My parents constantly talk about their finances in front of me. We are not poor, but we're far from rich. It bothers me when they talk about how much money they owe or if they're in debt or not.

I have asked my parents several times not to talk about money in front of me. However, they insist that I'm old enough to hear about it. I'm a natural worrier, and when they talk about financial issues it makes me think something terrible is going to happen to us. What should I do?

— STILL A KID
IN LINWOOD, N.J.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR STILL A KID: One of the hardest things for many people to talk about is money — or lack of it. And yet, not talking about it can cause more problems than airing the subject. Your parents may be trying to educate you about finances because many schools don't do it. But if it becomes too stressful for you, then leave the room.

DEAR ABBY: Although I don't think my last name is a particularly difficult one, people often struggle with it when they go to write it after I say it. I understand this and it does not bother me. As a matter of habit, I routinely spell my name immediately after I say it, to assist the person who is writing it down.

A security guard who works at a client's building I visit a few times a year has reacted in a hostile manner because I spell my name when she asks for it. She may be under the impression that I think my name is beyond her capabilities — which isn't true.

Abby, is spelling my name condescending or disrespectful to someone in a business setting? Is my routine practice annoying or is the guard overly sensitive?

— BILL "X" IN GEORGETOWN, DEL.

DEAR BILL "X": She may be overly sensitive or, because you have already spelled your name for her several times, she may be under the impression that you think she's not very bright. Perhaps in the future you should modify your delivery: "My name is Bill 'Xybleniwicz.' I'll spell it for you if you'd like me to..."

DEAR ABBY: For the past several years I have worked in a medical office. I see patients every three months or as little as once a year.

Two years ago, my mother was diagnosed with cancer. She passed away last spring. Because of the stress of my dear mother's illness and death, my weight has fluctuated.

Some of my patients don't hesitate to point out how "chunky" I have become. One woman even went so far as to ask if I was "happy with the way I have let myself go." Abby, how do I defend my weight gain without getting into my personal life?

— IMPATIENT WITH MY PATIENTS IN RHODE ISLAND

DEAR IMPATIENT: Please accept my sympathy for the loss of your mother. I'm sure the last two years have been painful. I see no reason why, if someone is so insensitive as to mention your weight, you shouldn't let the person have the truth with both barrels. If that doesn't shame him or her into an apology, nothing will. However, because you prefer to conceal it, try this response: "You know, I gained this weight the old-fashioned way — one bite at a time, and that's the way it'll have to come off."

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

Yesterday's Jumbles: LISLE SANDY GENDER HIATUS
Answer: When the hippie got a G.I. haircut, he was — "DIS-TRESSED"

THAT SCRAMBLED WORD GAME by Mike Argirion and Jeff Knurek

WHAT SHE MAY HAVE BEEN AFTER WHEN SHE CALLED HIM BY HIS FIRST NAME.

Now arrange the circled letters to form the surprise answer, as suggested by the above cartoon.
