GOP lawmakers laud Idaho's balanced budget

$8.26 million in building funds used to cover deficit

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter on Tuesday said figures that emerged from the closure of the fiscal year's budget show that the right, conservative approach was taken in balancing the state's budget.

For fiscal year 2010, which ended June 30, the state budget was balanced by transferring $8.26 million from the state's permanent building fund to its general fund.

Preliminary figures show that general fund tax collections for fiscal year 2010 were $86.5 million below the state's original forecast, the governor's office said. In June alone, monthly tax collections were $6.9 million short of what was expected, according to the governor's office.

Otter credited careful planning with avoiding an even bigger budget deficit. "When we found out that we were going to be considerably short of where we would have been, I can tell you that the $8.26 million dollar figure could have been a whole lot more if we wouldn't have gone out to the state agencies earlier and said, 'If you don't absolutely have to spend the money don't spend it,'" Otter said.

New BP cap set for slow tests of how it holds oil

By Tom Breen and Harry R. Weber
Associated Press writers

NEW ORLEANS — With a tight new cap freshly installed on its leaking well in the Gulf of Mexico, BP planned gradual tests starting Tuesday to see if the device can stop oil from pouring into the sea for the first time in nearly three months.

The cap would be just a temporary solution, but it offers the best hope yet for cutting off the crude that has fouled the Gulf since the Deepwater Horizon rig leased by BP exploded April 20, killing 11 workers.

Engineers will slowly shut down three valves that let oil flow through the 75-ton capping device to see if it can withstand the pressure of the erupting crude and to watch if leaks spring up elsewhere in the well.

BP at first said the tests should start by midday but later said that was overly optimistic. The start was pushed back several hours.

If pressure inside the cap stays in a target range for roughly six hours after the valves are closed, there will be more confidence the cap can contain the oil, National Incident Commander Thad Allen told a news briefing at BP's U.S. headquarters in Houston. That target range is 8,000 to 9,000 pounds per square inch, he said. Anything lower could indicate another leak in the well.

Allen and BP officials repeatedly cautioned there are no guarantees about the delicate work a mile below the sea. Allen urged Gulf Coast residents watching the possible fix evolve to be patient.

"They ought to be interested and concerned but if they hold their breath, they'll run out of oxygen. I won't be," Allen told The Associated Press after the briefing.

The tests could last anywhere from six to 48 hours, Allen and BP said.

Kent Wells, a senior vice president at the oil giant, declined to talk about BP's next steps until the test results are in hand.

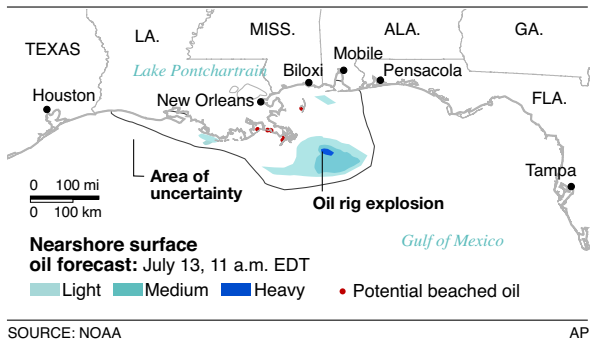

"It's not simple stuff. What we don't want to do is speculate around it," Wells said in a BP news briefing.

The cap's installation Monday after three days of undersea preparations was good news to weary people on the coast from Texas to Florida, who have waited for BP to make good on its promise to clean up the mess.

"Hopefully this is the moment when they get it cut off," said Prentiss Ming, 23, a Pizza Hut manager from Pensacola, Fla., who was on the beach there. "But you can't really believe it."

Still, even if the oil is stopped, the consequences

Burley U of I student dies of apparent alcohol poisoning

MOSCOW (AP) — Moscow police say a University of Idaho senior died of respiratory arrest, apparently due to alcohol poisoning after a night of drinking to celebrate his 21st birthday.

Emergency personnel responded to a report of an unconscious man at Sigma Nu fraternity at 2:42 a.m. Tuesday. They located Benjamin Harris of Burley on the third floor and began CPR. He was pronounced dead on arrival at Gritman Medical Center.

Assistant Police Chief David Duke says Harris may have had as many as 15 shots in two-and-a-half hours as he celebrated his birthday Monday night.

A preliminary investigation indicated Harris died of respiratory arrest caused by alcohol poisoning. The cause of death will be determined by the medical examiner after review of the toxicology reports.

T.F. parks dept. expects few major projects over next 5 years

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Don't expect many major improvements to Twin Falls' city parks over the next five years unless you're personally willing to pay for them.

The city budget is too tight for the parks and recreation department to push any major renovations, said Dennis Bowyer, the department's director. So the department will focus on public-private partnerships to pay for new projects instead, he said.

"We (the city) have to look at our priorities and what we can pay for," Bowyer said. "Building a new park, that's not a necessity."

But new parks and improved parks are still obviously a community priority: The Blue Lakes Rotary Club proved that with a proposed $100,000 equipment installation at South Estates Park, a 4 acre open space on the 600 block of Braden Court.

The service club has $40,000-plus guaranteed for the project, with another $10,000 grant from First Federal Bank already applied for. More money may also come from Glanbia Foods, which already donated $30,000 to the project, said public relations administrator Peggy Watland.

"We're excited to do it as a club and we're excited to do it long-term for the community," said club president Donald Acheson. The Rotarians also plan to install the equipment, designed for 2 to 5 year-olds and 5 to 12 year-olds, he said.

Bowyer said parks and recreation will need to rely on service clubs such as Rotary and grants for those types of projects. Five-year projections from the city — which keep flat revenue projections, Assistant City Manager Travis Rothweiler said — exclude major improvements past maintenance and necessities. But lack of major improvement is not the same as loss, Bowyer said.

"I don't see quality of life diminishing for people at all because we'll still have

PTSD treatment opened to more U.S. veterans

The U.S. has waged war in Afghanistan and Iraq for almost a decade, and thousands who served returned with injuries both physical and mental. Most associate such injuries with combat, but the Department of Veterans' Affairs formally acknowledged Monday that post-traumatic stress disorder der can affect those away from the front line.

The VA amended its benefit regulations, eliminating the requirement for veterans to prove they were involved in stressful events known to cause the disorder. All veterans could previously receive treatment for PTSD symptoms, but the requirement limited those who could receive disability benefits.

"Before this change, a soldier who had been in combat could get benefits, but others had more trouble, even if they had the diagnosis," said Josh Callahan of the Boise VA Medical Center.

The Boise VA center treats around 1,000 patients each year for PTSD-related symptoms. But before the change, only those with a combat-related diagnosis received full PTSD treatment at the hospital, said Boise VA psychologist Dr. Dudley Blake. The VA could provide no information on the number of Idaho veterans with recognized

I grew up along the Portneuf River — a French word, meaning “you're lost, but you're making good time anyway” — and some of my fondest memories are of French toast and french fries.

But like most of you, I've lived most of my life pretty darned skeptical of the French.

After all, I got a “D” in Mrs. Mealy's French class in high school. She observed that I spoke French with a “hyena” accent. A bad thing, I suppose.

Yes, I've had too many cheap BIC pens (they're manufactured in Lyons) crack and drip ink all over me, and yes, I've spent too many nights on the hard mattresses at Motel 6's (owned by France's Accor). But I just read a new book about the Statue of Liberty, and I'm feeling kinda bad about feeling bad about the French.

The French gave Lady Liberty to the United States, in case you slept through history class. And, according to Yasmin Sabina Khan's “Enlightening the World: The Creation of the Statue of Liberty,” they went to a lot of trouble.

Shoot, not every nation gives another nation a 151-foot, 225-ton lawn ornament. And we didn't get France anything.

So today, on France's 221st birthday, lift a glass of French-made Jameson's Irish whiskey or some Franco-Kentucky Old Turkey bour-

After all, they made the (Renault-owned) Nissan Sentra in your driveway and the (Michellin-owned) B.F. Goodrich tires that it sits on. Even in Idaho, France is where you least suspect it. I learned that a long time ago.

Years ago, I used to go fishing on the Malad River. The name comes from French word malade, which means sick man. Trappers, it seems, contracted giardia from drinking its waters.

I caught a mess of trout on one outing, took them home and fried them up.

And I got deathly, well, Malad.

Linderman appointed to fill Buhl council seat

By Blair Koch

Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Buhl Mayor Tom McCauley's first order of new business during Monday's City Council meeting was to appoint Bob Linderman to the council.

The vacancy was created by Richard VanZante's resignation. VanZante submitted a hand-written letter to the mayor, dated July 1, stating his immediate resignation. He was originally elected in 2007 and was re-elected in November.

VanZante said he'd been “soul searching” for several months.

“It is in my best interest and that of my family that I resign from the Buhl City Council,” VanZante said.

He could not be reached Tuesday for further comment.

During the meeting, McCauley thanked VanZante, who was not in attendance, for his service and said Linderman was highly recommended.

McCauley said he looks forward to the “new energy and ideas,” Linderman will bring to the table.

“Everyone seems to have the utmost respect for Bob, his attention to detail, caliber of integrity and background,” McCauley said.

Linderman, 48, will serve the remaining 3 1/2 years of VanZante's four-year term. He said he looks forward to giving back to his community.

Two years ago Linderman returned to Buhl after spending a year in Boise. He works for Valley Agronomics.

“We preferred the friendliness of a small town,” Linderman said.

Prior to his move to Boise, Linderman was president of the Buhl Chamber of Commerce and an active member of Kiwanis, West End Men's Association, West End Cemetery District and Buhl Planning and Zoning. He is currently a member of the chamber and Castleford Men's Club.

“It's taken a bit to settle into this job and I'm now able to get back into having an active roll. I do believe we have to commit to giving back to the community,” Linderman said.

He looks forward to helping Buhl complete its ongoing water and sewer project.

“I have every confidence in the sitting council and this being a smooth transition,” Linderman said.

Washington man charged with lewd conduct, sexual abuse

An Olympia, Wash., man faces criminal charges of lewd conduct with a minor under 16 and sexual abuse of a child under 16.

Steven Ray Joy, 29, was arraigned on the charges Monday in 5th District Court in Twin Falls, with total bond set at $150,000.

Police reports state that two alleged female victims accused Joy of inappropriate behavior on numerous occasions between 2000 and 2009 while they were minors and Joy visited family in Twin Falls.

Joy was interviewed about the accusations in January, when he was in the Ada County Jail on a probation violation. He claimed one alleged victim had suggestively touched him on one occasion, but otherwise denied any sexual contact with either female.

His preliminary hearings on both charges are set for July 23.

Jerome man charged with grand theft

A Jerome man was arraigned Thursday on a count of grand theft in 5th District Court in Twin Falls for allegedly stealing more than $9,000 worth of merchandise from Lowe's Home Improvement store in Twin Falls.

Steven Filo Grenz, 20, is alleged to have worked with a Michael Woods and Kourtney Rae Stewart Scott, a Lowe's employee, to leave with thousands of dollars worth of goods on three separate dates. His bond was set for $25,000 and a preliminary hearing was set for Friday.

No criminal charges have been filed against Woods or Scott.

According to police records, Grenz and Woods allegedly coordinated with Scott on a time to enter the store and which cash register she was working that day. The alleged thefts began in February and continued through late March.

Scott was originally questioned by store managers and then Twin Falls police in April before naming Grenz, Woods and two other men who were not fully identified in the police report. Scott claimed that she had known the men for about a year and that they asked her if people were ever caught stealing from the store. She also told police that she feared her car would be vandalized if she didn't go along with the plot.

Scott, who claimed she only received $50 from the men, said she would testify against Grenz and Woods, who she identified in a surveillance video from the store.

Police interviewed Grenz on April 19, when he was advised of his Miranda rights. He told police that he never stole. Police had trouble contacting Woods and have not been in contact with him since June, according to the report.

On June 13, Scott reported that Woods threatened her early that morning in the Times-News parking lot, where her husband is contracted as a newspaper carrier. Another carrier, Christina League, told police she overheard Woods say that “he would take care of Scott because she was a snitch.”

TFPD contacted Woods on June 15 to come in, but he did not. Police also tried to contact Grenz, but without success.

cement. That may not happen until mid-August.

Even if the flow of oil is choked off while BP works on a permanent fix, the spill has already damaged everything from beach tourism to the fishing industry.

Tony Wood, director of the National Spill Control School at Texas A&M-Corpus Christi said the sloppiest of the oil — mousse-like brown stuff that has not yet broken down — will keep washing ashore for several months, with the volume slowly decreasing over time.

He added that hardened tar balls could keep hitting beaches and marshes each time a major storm rolls through for a year or more. Those tar balls are likely trapped for now in the surf zone, gathering behind sand bars just like sea shells.

“It will still be getting on people's feet on the beaches probably a year or two from now,” Wood said.

But on Monday, the region absorbed a rare piece of good news in the placement of the 150,000-pound cap on top of the gushing leak responsible for so much misery.

Around 6:30 p.m. CDT, live video streams trained on the wellhead showed the cap being slowly lowered into place. BP officials said the device was attached around 7 p.m.

Residents skeptical if BP can deliver on its promise to control the spill greeted the news cautiously.

“There's no telling what those crazy suckers are going to do now,” Ronnie Kenniar said when he heard the cap was placed on the well. The 49-year-old fisherman is now working in the Vessel of Opportunity program, a BP-run operation employing boat owners to lay boom, ferry Coast Guard officers and deliver supplies.

As of Tuesday, the 84th day of the disaster, between 90.4 and 178.6 million gallons of oil have spewed into the Gulf of Mexico.

Thurber awarded probation for child sex crimes

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — A Rupert woman convicted of child sex crimes regained her freedom Tuesday but was placed on 12 years of probation after a judge's review of her performance in the state's retained-jurisdiction program.

Emily K. Thurber, 27, pleaded guilty to felony charges of conspiracy to commit sexual abuse of a minor under 16 and conspiracy to commit sexual battery on a minor under 16 in two separate cases. Nine other child sex charges were dismissed against her in a plea agreement.

Cassia County 5th District Judge Michael Crabtree sentenced Thurber in February to up to 12 years in prison on each charge to run concurrently and sent her to the Idaho State Corrections Department Retained Jurisdiction Program for 180 days.

Cassia County Deputy Prosecutor Blaine Cannon said he acknowledges that Thurber did well in the program and made some progress but said he thinks she still has a tendency to shift the blame to her co-defendant and former fiance, Joseph Lentz.

Lentz pleaded guilty to statutory rape and sex abuse of a child and was sentenced in 2009 to up to 16 years in prison after he allegedly participated with Thurber in three-way sexual encounters with children.

"I've always felt that the defendant was a more willing participant in her acts and more aggressive than she let on," Cannon said.

Cannon said he wanted to make sure Thurber understood that while she did well in the retained jurisdiction program, she still has a lot of work to do.

Thurber said she realized during the program that she had not taken full responsibility for her crimes.

"It was the best four or five months of my life. I learned a lot," Thurber said.

Thurber said she is ready to get a job and support her children.

After suspending Thurber's original prison sentence, Crabtree placed Thurber on probation for an indeterminate amount of time not to exceed 12 years.

Crabtree said if Thurber has sufficient supervision during probation and completes the necessary counseling that she is an "acceptable" risk to the community.

"Now you have the opportunity to change the entire path of your life," Crabtree said.

Washington/North College intersection to close Thursday

Times-News

Sections of Washington Street and North College road near the College of Southern Idaho will be closed Thursday, according to an Idaho Transportation Department release.

North College will be closed between Washington and Fillmore streets from 7 a.m. Thursday through Friday morning. Beginning at 8 p.m. Thursday, Washington will be closed to through traffic from Falls Avenue to Cheney Drive, and North College will be closed from between Blake Street to CSI's north entrance. The closures will extend through 7 a.m. Friday.

Through traffic should use Blue Lakes Boulevard, according to the ITD release, while access to residences and the north CSI entrance will remain open.

During the closures, crews will install and relocate underground water pipes, and place conduit for the Washington/North College intersection's new traffic signal.

Orofino-based DEBCO Construction is the contractor for the $6.5 million, federally funded project sponsored by the city of Twin Falls and administered by ITD.

Also Tuesday, ITD released that reconstruction of Airport Road south of Twin Falls is expected to be completed this week.

The project completes about 1.4 miles of roadway and a new bridge over the Low Line Canal, beginning at the intersection of Idaho Highway 74 and 3600 North Road, south to Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport.

The project is the second phase of reconstruction of the roadway that accesses the airport. Boise-based Knife River Corp. is the contractor of the $2.4 million federally funded project sponsored by the Twin Falls Highway District and administered by ITD.

Budget

actions were necessary. But Democrats still believe more could have been done to make the cuts less painful.

"Today's figures reaffirm the necessity of the actions we took and represent careful, prudent stewardship of our taxpayers' money," Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert and co-chairman of the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee, said in a statement. "While the armchair quarterbacks, pundits and the minority party criticized us, the fact is they were wrong. Public schools, public health and public safety would have been in even more dire straits under their misguided approach."

Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, and co-chairwoman of JFAC, added:

"The past couple of years have been tough. Nobody likes cutting services or reducing support for public schools. However, I have never shied away from doing what's right. I'm thankful that we have a Governor who's willing to join us in this heavy lifting and open to working with the Legislature in making the tough decisions necessary to ensure our State government lives within the people's means."

House Assistant Majority Leader Scott Bedke of Oakley said that the decisions reflect the economic slump.

"This is what it looks like to manage your way through a downturn in the economy rather than throw up your hands and surrender to wholesale shutdowns and tax increases," Bedke said.

"The minority party would have increased spending beyond our ability to balance the budget."

Democrats disagreed, and also took exception to how the budget was handled. Rep. Wendy Jaquet, D-Ketchum and a member of JFAC, said that while cuts to public education were unavoidable, the full $128.5 million that was trimmed could have been avoided.

There were "little pockets of money" that could have been picked up without tax increases, she said, giving freezing expansion of the grocery tax credit as an example.

"There was some money left on the table that could have been used to make things a little less hard," she said.

Keith Allred, the Democratic candidate running for governor, used the occasion to criticize Otter's budget approach, saying that Otter was wrong to build next year's budget based on the assumption that the economy will be just as bad.

"Butch Otter has shown us that he's out of ideas for how to lead Idahoans out of this economy," Allred said in a statement. "Instead of building fiscal year 2011's budget based on sound evidence and good planning, he's chosen to go down in history as the first governor to cut funding to our schools."

combat-related PTSD.

"The percentage of patients we see with PTSD symptoms hovers right around 4 percent, but that's less than the national level of 11 to 20 percent," Callahan said. The explanation for Idaho's lower percentage is unknown. Part of the reason may be that some states, such as Georgia and California, have a greater number of combat units, members of which have a higher risk of PTSD.

Blake said the change will open the door up to more claims and a larger range of disability.

"I've worked with dozens of veterans who couldn't verify the PTSD events, but they seemed just as authentically troubled," Blake said. He added that many eventually got the required documentation but it took longer.

Vietnam veterans, aged 55 to 64, are still the largest group of PTSD sufferers in the Idaho VA system, but that may be because people weren't as aware of the problem in the 1970s and '80s, Blake said. Today's veterans may have better support, but all are at risk in Iraq and Afghanistan, where "hot zones" have replaced an identifiable front.

"That's what is different about these wars. You could be a cook or a driver and be exposed to a violent situation," said Callahan, who is a veteran sufferer himself.

The Idaho Army National Guard 116th Cavalry Brigade Combat Team is headed for Iraq. Although their support mission is to provide training and security for convoys and installations, some may return with PTSD. The VA's announcement gives them the knowledge that, if they end up suffering from PTSD, they'll be taken care of, said Idaho National Guard spokesman, Lt. Col. Tim Marsano.

"Iraq is not a safe place,"

Marsano said. "The soldiers are going in with their eyes open but no one knows where a bomb could go off."

Not all PTSD results from enemy actions. Some soldiers, male and female, have suffered sexual assault at the hands of their comrades, Callahan said. Even if they sought help for their symptoms, they could never receive benefits because they didn't report the assault and thus couldn't prove it.

"They were put in that position because they were over there," Callahan said. "Now they can get help too."

List of alleged illegal immigrants mailed in Utah

By Brock Vergakis
Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — A list containing the names and personal information of 1,300 people an anonymous group contends are illegal immigrants has been mailed around Utah, terrifying the state’s Hispanic community.

Republican Gov. Gary Herbert wrote in a tweet Tuesday that he has asked state agencies to investigate the list — sent anonymously to several media outlets, and law enforcement and state agencies. A letter accompanying the list demands that those on it be deported immediately.

Most of the names on the list are of Hispanic origin. The list also contains highly detailed personal information such as Social Security numbers, birth dates, workplaces, addresses and phone numbers. Names of children are included, along with due dates of pregnant women on the list.

“My phone has been ringing nonstop since this morning with people finding out they’re on the list,” said Tony Yapias, former director of the Utah Office of Hispanic Affairs. “They’re feeling terrorized. They’re very scared!”

The list’s release comes as several conservative Utah lawmakers consider sponsoring a tough new illegal immigration law similar to the one passed recently in Arizona.

Arizona’s law, which takes effect July 29, directs police enforcing other laws to ask about a suspect’s immigration status if there is reason to believe the person is in the United States illegally.

Herbert has said a new immigration law likely will be passed when lawmakers convene in January, although he said it may be different from Arizona’s. Herbert spokeswoman Angie Welling was traveling back from Washington, D.C., Tuesday and could not immediately be reached for comment.

The letter included a long recipient list, including newspapers, broadcast outlets, The Associated Press, law enforcement and state agencies, various Utah officials, and the Immigration and Customs Enforcement office in Salt Lake City. The letters began arriving in mailboxes in recent days.

Dave Lewis, communication director for the state Department of Workforce Services, said his agency didn’t receive a copy of the list from the governor’s office until late Tuesday.

“We’ve got some people in our technology department looking at it right now,” he said. “It’s a high priority. We want to figure out the how’s and why’s.”

He said his agency is one of several with access to the information included in the list.

The letter says some names on the list were sent to the ICE office in Salt Lake City in April. It says the new list includes new names, for a total of more than 1,300.

Included with the new letter is one dated April 4 addressed to “Customs and Immigration” and from “Concerned Citizens of the United States.”

In the April letter, the writers say their group “observes these individuals in our neighborhoods, driving on our streets, working in our stores, attending our schools and entering our public welfare buildings.”

Soldier’s suicide reflects troubling trend

By Hal Bernton
The Seattle Times

LANGLEY, Wash. — Orrin Gorman McClellan grew up among the alder and cedar that cover his family’s 11-acre homestead on Whidbey Island. He relished painting, music and acting, playing the star role of Toad in a local production of “The Wind in the Willows.”

McClellan seemed an unlikely Army recruit. But in the post-9/11 world, he responded to talk of honor, service and camaraderie. After graduating from high school, without informing his parents, McClellan signed up for three years of active duty.

He served in Afghanistan, where he lost friends to enemy bullets, picked up the body parts of blown-up soldiers and wrestled with the emotions unleashed by combat missions.

“Have you ever felt that each word you say brings you further away from explaining yourself,” he wrote in an April 30, 2005, poem in a computer journal. “Everything you create puts a sour taste in your mouth and every action you take burns you with shame!”

In the fall of 2006, McClellan left the Army and came back to his Western Washington island and a strong support network eager to help him rebuild his life. But family and friends were not enough to save him.

This year, on May 18, McClellan took his life with a handgun.

McClellan is among the war casualties that the Department of Veterans Affairs has just begun to track — young men and women who served in the post-9/11 military, and killed themselves after struggles with post-traumatic stress disorder and other war wounds.

In 2007, the last year figures were available from the VA, the suicide rate for veterans ages 18 to 29 was 37.1 per 100,000. That’s more than 80 percent higher than the rate for the civilian population and the active-duty military.

“He never really came all the way home,” said his mother, Judith Gorman, a social worker skilled in counseling traumatized people. “If some good can come out of this, I would like communities to be able to recognize that we all have to be able to bear some of the burden. We can’t just expect veterans to heal ...

“We have to listen to their stories. Deep listening.”

During nine years of war, suicide rates among active-duty soldiers, once far

Perry McClellan, left, and Judith Gorman put a flagpole in front of their home to commemorate their son's life and service, June 21 in Langley, Washington. A talented artist, Orrin Gorman McClellan helped his parents create a new veterans center on Whidbey Island before taking his life in May.

“If some good can come out of this, I would like communities to be able to recognize that we all have to be able to bear some of the burden. We can’t just expect veterans to heal ... We have to listen to their stories. Deep listening.”

— Judith Gorman, whose son committed suicide after returning from a tour of duty in Afghanistan below the civilian population, have been on the rise. From January through June 10 of this year, 115 soldiers had taken their lives. The even higher rate of veterans taking their own lives after leaving the military also has raised major concerns.

More than 35,800 Washington state veterans have served in the Iraq and Afghanistan war era. If the national veteran suicide rates also are representative of the state level, then more than a dozen young Washington veterans kill themselves each year.

These veterans can turn to a network of hospitals, clinics and counseling centers that have benefited from increased federal funding. Washington state has developed a network of 37 counselors who offer free services to veterans, while King County voters approved a 2005 levy that expanded services to veterans.

These efforts have aided plenty of people.

But the failures are wrenching.

Orrin McClellan served with the 173rd Airborne Brigade Combat Team in a unit that called itself the Chosen Company, working in mountainous eastern Afghanistan. His photos and poems reflect the physical and emotional grind of serving in what was then a war largely forgotten back home.

But he took great pride in being a good soldier, and in the bonds forged with combat buddies.

His parents say McClellan was stung by the loss of an older soldier he particularly respected, and a young one he had befriended. He also had trouble reconciling the warrior creed of protecting the innocent and fighting a war rife with civilian casualties.

In July of 2005, near the end of his time in Afghanistan, McClellan wrote a bitter ode to military recruiters:

*“take your pleasantries your generalizations, good intentions,
sweet words, and half truths,
put them in a box.
drape a flag over it.
and bury it with the rest of the dead.”*

When McClellan left Afghanistan to return to his post in Italy, he was already struggling with PTSD and other ailments, according to Gorman.

McClellan was sent to Germany for a tonsillectomy, and his mother, without checking with the Army, flew there to watchdog his care.

She believes her intervention helped save his life as she fought for additional treatment of post-surgical bleeding and other complications.

But McClellan was disciplined by a superior for his mother’s unauthorized appearance, according to Gorman. Later, he would tell his family that his morale hit rock bottom after he was punished by being forced to hold concrete blocks while treading water, a practice that he said felt like drowning.

“I will be forever angry at how they treated him,” Gorman said. “They made him sign something saying that he had no control of his mother and tried to cut off family ties.”

Back on Whidbey Island in the fall of 2006, McClellan moved into a small cottage on his family’s property. On this familiar terrain, he tried to heal.

In the summer of 2007, McClellan left Whidbey Island to get a fresh start at Montana State University in Bozeman. But he struggled with alcohol and drugs. By February 2008, McClellan was back home.

That summer, a police reprimand for kicking over a barricade at a Whidbey Island music festival turned into an ugly incident. McClellan repeatedly urged police to shoot him, and he was arrested after a struggle.

By the spring of this year, McClellan appeared to be starting to put his life together. He and his fiancée, childhood friend Michelle McGowan, had moved into their own cottage by a lake and McClellan quit drinking hard liquor.

He was also helping to promote the Whidbey Island Veterans Resource Center, which his parents had established in 2009 to offer referrals, networking and other assistance.

Range fire burns at INL site; workers evacuated

BOISE (AP) — Firefighters at the Idaho National Laboratory are battling a range fire that has burned more than 23-square-miles and prompted the evacuation of employees.

INL officials say Tuesday’s blaze is not threatening any buildings. Officials also say they are still investigating how it started.

Late Tuesday, winds gusting up to 55 miles per hour were pushing the fire northeast toward Mud Lake.

Crews from four wildland fire units are on the scene, along with two bulldozers and air support provided by the Bureau of Land Management.

Four-time lottery winner has lots of money, mystery

By Paul J. Weber
Associated Press writer

BISHOP, Texas — The odds that Joan Ginther would hit four Texas Lottery jackpots for a combined nearly $21 million are astronomical. Mathematicians say the chances are as slim as 1 in 18 septillion — that’s 18 and 24 zeros.

Just as unlikely? Getting to know one of the luckiest women in the world.

“She wants her privacy,” friend Cris Carmona said.

On a $50 scratch-off ticket bought in this rural farming community, Ginther won $10 million last month in her biggest windfall yet. But it was the fourth winning ticket in Texas for the 63-year-old former college professor since 1993, when Ginther split an $11 million jackpot and became the most famous native in Bishop history.

But she’s a celebrity who few in this town of 3,300 people can say much about.

“That lady is pretty much scarce to everybody,” said Lucas Ray Cruz, Ginther’s former neighbor. “That’s just the way she is.”

At the Times Market where Ginther bought her last two winning tickets, the highway gas station is fast becoming a pilgrimage for unlucky lottery losers. Lines stretch deep past a $5.98 bin of Mexican movie DVDs, and a woman from Rhode Island called last week asking to buy tickets from the charmed store through the mail.

She was told that was illegal. The woman called back to plead again anyway.

The Texas Lottery Commission has seen repeat winners before, but none on the scale of Ginther. Spokesman Bobby Heith said the agency has never investigated Ginther’s winnings — three scratch-off tickets and one lottery draw — for possible fraud but described the verification system as thorough. Her other winnings — both from scratch-off tickets — were $2 million in 2006 and $3 million in 2008.

So how did Ginther do it, then?

Good luck pinning her down to ask.

Ginther has never spoken publicly about her lotto winnings and could not be found for comment. She now lives in Las Vegas after moving away from Bishop, and an answering machine message for a telephone number listed at her address says not to leave a message.

She asked the few people who’ve exchanged more than brief pleasantries with her not to grant interviews and sneaked into lottery headquarters in Austin to collect her winnings with the least publicity the state offers jackpot winners.

But spend a few hours in her hometown — and equal time scouring public records — and a contrasting profile emerges.

Her home address in Las Vegas is on a street called

A $40-million Extreme Payout scratch ticket, which costs $50, is shown Friday at the Times Market in Bishop, Texas, where Joan Ginther won $10 million last month.

Paradise Drive. When USA Today asked readers in 2000 to sound off on airline service, Ginther groaned over a flight attendant who carted away her cheese and crackers and a sundae too soon. Two years later, she grumbled to the Las Vegas Review-Journal about a proposed monorail running through her exclusive condominium towers.

“I moved here because I wanted to have a beautiful home with a great view and that’s what I have. I didn’t expect to have a monorail come down here with thousands of tourists every day,” Ginther told the newspaper, in what might have been the only time she was directly quoted in the media.

Nitpicking first-class service, and mad the view in her luxury home might be spoiled?

Bishop residents may not know much about Ginther — but they know that’s not her.

Here around the cotton farms and boarded-up downtown, Ginther, who over the years regularly visited the town to see her father who died in 2007, is called benevolent as much as she’s called lucky. They say she bought the church a van. Gave money to the family that runs the Days Inn off the highway. When she moved, she donated her home to charity.

Sun Bae, who owns the Time Market and sold Ginther her last two winning tickets, said she drives around in a bland Nissan sedan but once bought a nicer car for someone down on their luck. Bae said Ginther doesn’t even own a cell phone.

“She is a very generous woman. She’s helped so many people,” Bae said.

Calculating the actual odds of Ginther hitting four multimillion-dollar lottery jackpots is tricky. If Ginther’s winning tickets were the only four she ever bought, the odds would be one in 18 septillion, according to Sandy Norman and Eduardo Duenez, math professors at the University of Texas at San Antonio.

Exactly how often Ginther plays is unknown. But Norman and Duenez said that a habitual player winning four times over a 17-year span is much less far-fetched.

Transgender woman is first person charged under new hoax bomb law

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — A transgender woman who police say planted what appeared to be four pipe bombs then set fire to her trailer home and car became the first person to be charged under a new state law involving hoax explosive devices.

Catherine Carlson, 53, was charged in 3rd District Court with felony arson and planting a hoax destructive device. The latter charge was created under a law passed by the 2010 Legislature targeting those who try to incite public panic.

“The new law fits perfectly with this case,” Payette Police Chief Mark Clark said Tuesday.

Carlson could face a total of 15 years in prison if convicted of both charges. She was arrested Sunday in Payette. Police said an investigation later revealed the pipes contained no explosives.

About 50 homes were evacuated after firefighters responded to the trailer fire and found the pipes near a propane tank.

Authorities have said

Catherine Carlson, 52, discusses her encounters with local law enforcement, in December 2008 at her home in Payette.

Carlson indicated she planted the devices, set the fires then shed her clothing in a bid to draw attention to her plight as a transgender person.

In 2007, Carlson clashed with authorities over a traffic citation after they included her given name, Daniel Carlson, on some documents. The name Daniel Carlson is listed as an “aka,” or “also known as,”

on citation records.

Carlson fears court documents that make public her decision to legally change her name in the 1970s then alter her sex with an operation in 1980 could put her life in danger.

Clark said court documents in the current case only include Carlson’s current, legal name.

Efforts to contact Carlson in Payette County jail were unsuccessful.

At a hearing Monday, Carlson asked for permission from the judge to represent herself in the case.

Idaho lawmakers wanted to give law enforcement officials more authority to go after hoax explosive reports such as one in 2009 when suspicious devices were placed at a Boise shopping center.

The false alarm forced 2,000 people to evacuate and shuttered stores for hours.

Rep. Marv Hagedorn, R-Meridian, sponsored the new law that went into effect July 1 and carries a five-year prison term.

Carlson’s latest arrest came after her car was impounded on July 7 by police in Ontario, Ore., a town just across the Idaho border from Payette. Her mental health was evaluated, and she was released later that day, authorities said.

“Obviously, there’s some issues here” with mental health concerns, Clark said. “But there are also some very serious crimes.”

A call to the Ontario Police Department wasn’t immediately returned.

Maintenance budget for UI arboretum cut

MOSCOW (AP) — The University of Idaho has eliminated the annual maintenance budget for the 63-acre Shattuck Arboretum, at least temporarily.

UI financial vice president Lloyd Mues says the $42,000 cut is part of a $200,000 facilities cut needed to balance the university’s fiscal 2011 budget. The Lewiston Tribune reports the maintenance budget for the 63-acre collection of trees and other plants was cut by $10,000 last year.

Mues says the arboretum will get at least the same level of care as the university grounds get, and funding could be restored as early as next year.

Arboretum Associates board member Keith Bromley says volunteerism and other creative solutions are being discussed to help maintain the arboretum. He said fewer hours of pruning, watering, mowing and other maintenance tasks won’t immediately be catastrophic, but will lead to a lower level of beauty.

“We’re all very concerned about this, given the nature of the thing we’re dealing with,” Bromley said.

In a memo sent to employees in May, UI Assistant Vice President for Facilities Brian Johnson said the arboretum’s academic mission may be eliminated by stopping the detailed maintenance of information on all plantings.

But Mues says plant cataloging may continue, although university faculty, administration and supporters will likely discuss the matter.

Jerome County bites the bullet, calls jail bond issue election

The Jerome County Commission made a tough decision. And the right one. A third attempt in November at getting voters to approve construction of a new county jail will take the form of a bond issue proposal, not the lease-purchase scheme that failed in November 2009 and again in May.

The commissioners are under no illusion about the difficulty of pitching a general obligation bond to property taxpayers in a tough economy. There have only been four county jails built in Idaho in the past decade; statewide, eight of the last 10 bond issue proposals have failed. (The exceptions were Blaine County, where voters approved a new jail in 2007, and Elmore County, where a bond issue was passed in 2005).

On Aug. 3, Canyon County will try for the third time to get approval for a new jail. Kootenai County, where voters defeated a sales tax increase last November that would have added to the existing jail, will spend $5 million this year housing its inmates in other counties.

Both of Jerome County’s previous jail bond issues gained substantial majorities, but a two-thirds vote is required. And there is enough opposition within the county to a lease-purchase solution that it’s unlikely such a jail plan would pass anytime soon.

So the commissioners will do what their critics demanded: Put a general obligation bond up for a vote.

A bond issue is always an especially tough sell in Jerome County because in addition to supporting its own government services and schools, it already sends some of the property taxpayers’ money out of the county — by supporting the College of Southern Idaho as part of its community college district. Jerome School District’s patrons have approved just two bond issues in 35 years.

But the bottom line is this: Jerome County can’t put off building a new jail any longer; the present lockup is falling apart and it’s a lawsuit waiting to happen.

The Idaho Counties Risk Management Program, the county’s insurer, could close the jail at the stroke of a pen. The 35-year-old stockade fails to meet the requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act and falls short of National Fire and Life Safety rules and the minimum standards of the Idaho Sheriffs’ Association.

If the jail is closed, Jerome County will have no choice but to send all its prisoners — and it averages 65 inmates a day — to other county jails, where the going rate is about $50 a day per prisoner.

In the span of nine years through last year, the county spent more than $1.63 million to warehouse inmates elsewhere. And that was just the overflow jail population.

A bond issue isn’t the way the commissioners and Jerome County Sheriff Doug McFall wanted to go. But for now, it’s the only realistic path to getting a new jail built.

Our view:

Jerome County may be one of the hardest places in Idaho to pass a bond issue, but the county commissioners have little choice in their quest for a new jail.

What do you think?

We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Partisan gridlock? You ain’t seen nothin’ yet

Republican leaders feel good about their chances for big gains in November’s congressional elections, and they should. Polls show that most voters don’t think the Democrats’ stimulus plan has helped the economy and are ready to try something different. Charlie Cook, publisher of the Cook Political Report and Washington’s chief prognosticator of congressional elections, predicts that unless the economy turns around, the GOP will probably win the 39 seats it needs to take control of the House.

But there’s at least one potential problem for the Republicans: They haven’t settled on a unified national message yet — and a quiet civil war is brewing over what, if anything, it should say.

In one camp are House conservatives, led by Rep. Eric Cantor, R-Va., the House minority whip, who argue that Republicans won in 1994 because the Contract with America laid out by then-Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., articulated a coherent message around which candidates and voters could rally. The document got wide buy-in from congressional Republicans, with only two members of the House electing not to sign it.

Without that kind of clear, near-unanimous statement, Cantor and his allies argue, Republicans leave themselves vulnerable to being painted by Democrats as the “party of no” — and, worse, as the party that voters rejected in 2008.

Other Republicans worry about finding a tent large enough to include all GOP viewpoints. Trying to come up with a single platform, they believe, could be divisive, and the party should simply embrace a few broad issues such as cutting taxes and spending.

There’s a practical reason to embrace that argument. In a year when “Tea Party” activists would like to see the GOP embrace ideas as radical as abolishing the Internal Revenue Service and privatizing Social Security, articulating an agenda that can please every camp is difficult.

That isn’t stopping House Minority Leader John A. Boehner, R-Ohio, from trying. He has asked his lieutenants to work on an agenda that most House Republican candidates, incumbents and challengers alike, can run on. But it’s likely to be a cautious, consensus document; at this point, even its tentative title — Commitment to America — is tepid.

“We need to demonstrate

In a year when ‘Tea Party’ activists would like to see the GOP embrace ideas as radical as abolishing the Internal Revenue Service and privatizing Social Security, articulating an agenda that can please every camp is difficult.

two things,” said Rep. Kevin McCarthy, R-Calif., who’s running the message project. “One, that we learned our lesson from the time before. Two, that we actually have the ability to govern.”

This spring, McCarthy launched a glossy website, called America Speaking Out, to invite ordinary voters to send their ideas to the Republican leadership. The website, predictably, attracted a populist jumble of mainstream conservatism, Internet libertarianism and pranks. The outpouring is unlikely to have much influence on an actual platform. Instead, McCarthy and others will assemble in Congress’ back rooms in September to try to hammer something out.

The agenda will probably focus mostly on one issue, the economy, and it will try to reinforce the basic message the GOP has already been trying to convey: that the Democrats’ policies have failed, and that cutting taxes and spending will work better.

“There really is only one issue: the economy,” said David Winston, a Republican pollster who is advising Boehner.

Winston argues that the GOP should articulate a specific plan, but he also cautions against putting too much into it.

“One of the reason the door has opened for Republicans is that President Obama has focused on so many other things,” he added. “If you create an 87-point agenda, you’re making the same mistake.”

No matter what happens in November, we will have a divided government. If Republicans win a majority in the House, they will still be dealing with a Democratic president and, probably, a Democratic Senate. If Republicans fall short in the House, they may still reduce Speaker Nancy Pelosi’s majority enough to make bipartisan deals possible in the middle.

In that divided-government future, it would be a good thing if November’s elections produced a mandate for something specific, but that can only happen if Republicans and Democrats alike lay out specific agendas. The all-too-likely alternative is two years of partisan gridlock.

In high summer, the case against air conditioning

In a country that's among the world's highest greenhouse-gas emitters, air conditioning is one of the worst power-guzzlers. The energy required to air-condition American homes and retail spaces has doubled since the early 1990s. Turning buildings into refrigerators burns fossil fuels, which emit greenhouse gases, which raise global temperatures, which creates a need for — you guessed it — more air conditioning.

A.C.'s obvious public-health benefits during severe heat waves do not justify its lavish use in everyday life for months on end. Less than half a century ago, America thrived with only the spottiest use of air conditioning. It could again. While central air will always be needed in facilities such as hospitals, archives and cooling centers for those who are vulnerable to heat, what would an otherwise A.C.-free America look like?

• At work

In a world without air conditioning, a warmer, more flexible, more relaxed workplace helps make summer a time to slow down again. Three-digit temperatures prompt siestas. Code-orange days mean offices are closed. Shorter summer business hours and month-long closings — common in pre-air-conditioned America — return.

Business suits are out. And with the right to open a window, office employees no longer have to carry sweaters or space heaters to work in the summer. After a long absence, ceiling fans, window fans and desk fans (and, for that matter, paper-weights) take back the American office.

• At home

Homeowners pry open windows painted shut decades ago. In the air-conditioned age, fear of crime was often cited by people reluctant to open their homes to night breezes. In Washington, as in most of the world's warm cities, window grilles (not “bars,” please) are now standard.

In renovation and new construction alike, high ceilings, better cross-ventilation, whole-house fans, screened porches, basements and white “cool roofs” to reflect solar rays become de rigueur. Home utility bills plummet.

Families unplug as many heat-generating appliances as possible. Forget clothes dryers — post-A.C. neighborhoods are crisscrossed with clotheslines. The hot stove is abandoned for the grill, and dinner is eaten on the porch.

• Around town

Saying goodbye to A.C. means saying hello to the world. With more people spending more time outdoors — particularly in the late afternoon and evening, when temperatures fall more quickly outside than they do inside — neighborhoods see a boom in spontaneous summertime socializing.

Rather than cowering alone in chilly home-entertainment rooms, neighbors get to know one another. Because there are more people outside, streets in high-crime areas become safer. Deaths from heat decline: Elderly people no longer die alone inside sweltering apartments, too afraid to venture outside for help and too isolated to be noticed. Instead, people look out for one another during heat waves, checking in on their most vulnerable neighbors.

Children — and others — take to bikes and scooters for the cooling effect of air movement. Calls for more summer school and even year-round school cease. Our kids don't need more time inside, everyone agrees; they need the shady playgrounds and water sprinklers that spring up in every neighborhood.

Making Reaganism fit for a Tea Party

WASHINGTON — The Tea Party phenomenon is one of the significant puzzles of this year's politics — exciting to some people and alarming to others. By placing it in the historical context of other populist movements, Henry Olsen of the American Enterprise Institute has helped define it — and the important choice Republicans now face. In an article in the summer issue of National Affairs and a follow-up interview, Olsen, who worked as a legislative staffer in California before joining three conservative think tanks, briefly reviews the checkered history of American populism.

Until the 1960s, it was mainly a phenomenon of the left — led by such figures as Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, William Jennings Bryan and Franklin Roosevelt.

Conservative populism had an unsuccessful trial run in 1964 under Barry Goldwater but did not flourish until Ronald Reagan took on the Washington establishment in 1980. The differences between them were significant. Goldwater lost his presidential bid because “the tone and ideas of some of his extreme backers were viewed as odd and frightening by most voters, and the candidate's inability (or unwillingness) to disavow their words allowed (Lyndon) Johnson to paint Goldwater himself as odd and frightening,” Olsen says. “Instead of seeking to help honest folk restore the rights denied them by an adversary, too often Goldwater came across as wanting to lead victims in a violent battle against an implacable enemy.”

Olsen, like many others, finds Reagan as his model. “Throughout his career, he minced no words when describing the threats to freedom and prosperity posed by unlimited, centralized government,” Olsen says, “but when it came to his domestic opponents, Reagan avoided the classical-populist trap of vilifying his political adversaries as outright enemies.”

“The populist spirit is back with a vengeance today,” Olsen adds, fed partly by anger with Wall Street and partly by frustration with Washington. “Those who believe that the aggressive, angry pitch of the tea partiers' rhetoric will automatically alienate independent voters should think again. ... Successful populist movements define adversaries in stark and often abrasive terms.”

But this is not enough, he says, and it can be overdone. Bryan failed in part “because he made a majority afraid. Some libertarian populists, with their rejection of every facet of the modern welfare state, are likely to do the same — because even this center-right nation does not want to see the welfare state dismantled.” Republican Senate candidates in Kentucky and Nevada need to have those words imprinted on their brains.

The need for Republicans, then, is to do what Reagan did — “to propose alternatives that offer a real change of direction without seeming too radical.” He had an advantage that is too often overlooked. As the two-term governor of our most populous state, Reagan could answer those who viewed him as dangerous by pointing to the success he had achieved in managing California.

The new conservative populists, Olsen says, need their own positive vision, one that can “turn an intense but transient public sentiment into an enduring political force.”

When I asked Olsen if the House Republican plan to draft a new version of the 1994 Contract with America met that need, he responded as I would: Let's see what their ideas are.

The drafters have postponed the moment of truth by conducting a series of grass-roots hearings, soliciting ideas from the voters — and also, it turns out, in private sessions with Washington lobbyists.

Building a majority coalition will require a strong, sensible platform. And a clear separation from the kooks and cranks who sank both Bryan and Goldwater.

What we have to fear is, well, fear

WASHINGTON — It has been the most egalitarian of all the 11 recessions since World War II. In various ways, it has touched every social class through job loss, pay cuts, depressed home values, shrunken stock portfolios, eroded retirement savings, grown children returning home — and anxiety about all of the above. The Great Recession (as it is widely called) has changed America psychologically, politically, economically and socially. Just how will be examined and debated for years. Here comes a booming cottage industry of scholars, pollsters and pundits.

A new study from the Pew Research Center, based on an opinion survey in May of nearly 3,000 Americans and an exhaustive evaluation of economic data, provides a preview. Not surprisingly, it confirms that Americans have become more frugal; 71 percent say they're buying less expensive brands, 57 percent say they've trimmed or eliminated vacations. Life plans have changed; 11 percent say they've postponed marriage or children, while 9 percent have moved back with parents.

One interesting finding is that the elderly have been relatively sheltered. “Older adults (ages 65 and older),” according to Pew, “are much less likely than younger age groups to have cut back on spending, loaned or borrowed money, had trouble paying for medical bills or housing, or had to increase their credit card debt.” For example, 28 percent of Americans under 65 borrowed money from family or friends; only 5 percent of those 65 and older did. Confidence in retirement savings dropped most sharply for younger Americans (including those 50 to 64), not those 65 and over.

Robert Samuelson

But other sanctuaries from the Great Recession have been scarce. Previous recessions have focused their hurt on the young and unskilled. This remains true. Almost one-fifth of workers 16 to 24 were unemployed at the end of 2009, a near doubling since late 2007. Among those without a high school diploma, joblessness was 50 percent higher than the average. Still, the economic and spiritual damage extends much further, for many reasons.

First, the huge job loss: By most measures (length of unemployment, permanent firings versus temporary layoffs), joblessness is the worst since World War II. Unemployment among college graduates roughly doubled to about 5 percent. (Though today's unemployment rate has not reached the 10.8 percent level of late 1982, that mostly reflects the 1980s' younger work force, according to studies by John Schmitt, Dean Baker and David Rosnick of the Center for Economic and Policy Research. Younger workers change jobs more often and have higher jobless rates.)

Second, pay cuts: These have affected almost a quarter of workers, including nearly a fifth of those with family incomes exceeding $75,000. Some workers also have had to take unpaid leave or part-time work.

Third, the loss of housing and stock market wealth: This decline (more than 25 percent at its peak on an annual basis) has been concentrated among higher-income Americans, who own a disproportionate share of the wealth. A reverse wealth effect has gripped the upper middle class. Feeling poorer, people saved more and spent less.

Finally, children: All those jobless college grads and crashing kids must alarm their parents. Only 45 percent of Americans believe their children will enjoy higher living standards, down from 61 percent in 2002. Pessimism is greatest among those with family incomes over $75,000.

One paradox identified by Pew is that some groups that “have been hardest hit by this recession (including blacks, young adults and Democrats) are significantly more upbeat than their more sheltered counterparts (including whites, older adults and Republicans) about a recovery.” For instance: Blacks suffer higher unemployment than whites (15.4 percent vs. 8.6 percent in June) but believe more strongly that the recovery has begun (47 percent to 38 percent). Pew's explanation is politics. With a Democratic administration, Democrats are more upbeat and Republicans more glum. Another theory — more powerful, I think — is that the Great Recession, though jarring to almost everyone, has been most disruptive and disillusioning to those who were previously the most protected.

It punctured their cocoons so unexpectedly that they became more cautious and fearful, whereas those who even in good times faced job loss and income shifts (many blacks, the young and the poor) were less surprised. One legacy of the Great Recession is that insecurity and uncertainty have gone upscale. People feel more exposed. They tend to plan for the worst rather than hope for the best. Their reluctance to make major purchase commitments (a new car or home) validates their pessimism by retarding recovery.

Is this a passing mood or an enduring shift? Most Americans, Pew says, believe adverse economic changes will be temporary. Optimism will return. That depends on how quickly — and whether — the Great Recession releases its stranglehold on the American psyche.

Newsweek columnist Robert Samuelson writes about economics.

Small companies denied credit as big firms thrive

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Big companies are building up cash and are expected to report strong earnings starting this week. Not so for small businesses that can't get loans — or hire freely until they do.

The gap helps explain why the economic rebound isn't stronger and could even stall. Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke stepped up pressure this week on banks to break the logjam and lend more to smaller firms, which employ at least half of American workers.

Small business owners are relying on personal credit cards or raiding retirement accounts to stay afloat, the Fed chairman said.

Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke testifies on Capitol Hill in Washington. Bernanke stepped up pressure to boost lending to the nation's small businesses, a critical element to spurring economic recovery and reducing unemployment.

Bernanke and other regulators have urged banks for months to lend more to smaller companies. Lawmakers have complained that small businesses that want loans are having trouble getting them. Banks have countered by saying demand remains weak.

The Fed does have authority to create programs to increase lending, such as providing low-cost loans to banks. But economic conditions would probably have to weaken considerably before the Fed would propose such a move.

The Fed chief's latest comments came as legislative efforts to spur small-business lending have languished, and as the recovery has lost momentum. Bernanke spoke at a Fed conference held to explore ways to loosen lending to small companies.

"Making credit accessible to sound small businesses is crucial to our economic recovery," Bernanke said. "More must be done."

Nearly one-third of small business borrowers report difficulty arranging credit, the National Federation of Independent Businesses says. By contrast, big businesses, which start reporting their second-quarter earnings this week, have enjoyed easier access to loans and low interest rates.

Health care continues employment growth

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

Idaho's continued population growth — even through the Great Recession — made health care one of just four sectors of the economy to post an increase in jobs despite the economic slowdown.

A report released Tuesday by Health Care Business Scan, which collects data from state labor departments, found that health care jobs in Idaho jumped nearly 10 percent from 2007 to 2009, an average increase of 5,900. The other three sectors — private education, social services and utilities — added fewer than 1,600 jobs combined. Every other major sector of the private economy lost jobs during the recession.

South-central Idaho has the third largest number of health care jobs in the five-region area of Idaho, with more than 8,400 jobs in health-care related fields. Southwest and eastern Idaho were the only two regions to surpass south-central Idaho.

According to the report, the health care industry in Idaho is expected to add 5,000 jobs through 2011. Registered nurses, pharmacists, dental hygienists and physical therapists are expected to be the fastest growing occupations.

Job openings drop in May as hiring stays weak

WASHINGTON — Job openings dropped in May from the previous month and layoffs edged up, fresh evidence that employers are reluctant to add workers.

The decline in job openings comes after a sharp rise the previous two months, driven by temporary government hiring for the 2010 census and more openings in the private sector. As a result, the number of available jobs has rebounded since the depths of the recession but remains well below pre-recession levels.

The Labor Department said Tuesday that job openings fell to 3.2 million in May from 3.3 million in the previous month. April's upwardly revised figure was the highest in 18 months.

Federal budget gap tops $1 trillion through June

WASHINGTON — The federal deficit has topped $1 trillion with three months still to go in the budget year, showing the lasting impact of the recession on the government's finances.

In its monthly budget report, the Treasury Department said Tuesday that through the first nine months of this budget year, the deficit totals $1 trillion. That's down 7.6 percent from the $1.09 trillion deficit run up during the same period a year ago.

Worries about the size of the deficit have created political problems for the Obama administration. Congressional Republicans and moderate Democrats have blocked more spending on job creation and other efforts. Republicans also have held up legislation to extend unemployment benefits for the long-term jobless because of its effect on the deficit.

Building a better restaurant

Dale 'Papa' Kelsey launches restaurant tailored to community

By Joshua Palmer
Times-News writer

Dale "Papa" Kelsey knows restaurants — he has owned and operated his own chain of pizza and sub sandwich shops for almost 30 years.

So when residents of Buhl started murmuring that there were few quiet, relaxing family restaurants in town, Kelsey went to task to create something that would fit the towns need. That's when he came up with the idea for PK's Pasta Palace, an Italian restaurant with a Mediterranean feel and live music played on a grand piano.

The restaurant, which opened in late March, has so far been a big hit with locales.

"It's really what Buhl needed," said Charlene Howsden, a retired teacher living in Buhl. "It's something with a touch of class."

The unassuming exterior of the restaurant is hidden among other storefronts at 1016 Main St., but inside is a completely renovated interior that boasts a classy atmosphere designed and furnished by Real Deals Home Decor in Twin Falls.

Kelsey said the property owner gave him a "great deal" on rent for the space, which is next door to his primary business, Papa Kelsey's Pizza & Subs.

"It was a great opportunity because the landlord let me rent the space for just a couple hundred more per month," he said. "Part of it had to do with (the landlord's) ambition to bring more to the downtown area."

He would not say how much he spent on renovating the location, but he said there was a lot of effort put into making sure the business would succeed.

"Things are tight because of the economy, so people are eating out less," he said. "But I see opportunity out there for people who hustle, and keep an eye out for what people want."

It was a lesson he learned by building up the Papa Kelsey's Pizza & Sub chain, which has 13 locations in three states.

Kelsey said he tailored the business around comments he received from customers at his pizza and sub sandwich chain as well as from people in the community.

They asked for something classy, but family friendly. Something quiet, but with a little entertainment. So he serves dishes like Portobello

AGRICULTURE

The Associated Press

POCATELLO — A bumper crop of potatoes led to rock-bottom prices last fall, leading Idaho farmers to plant fewer acres of spuds this spring.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture says Idaho growers planted an estimated 295,000 acres this year, an 8 percent decrease from 2009 and the fewest acres planted since 1980.

In a separate forecast, The United Potato Growers of Idaho say 292,571 acres were planted, the lowest number of acres since 1965.

Idaho produces about 13 billion pounds of potatoes annually, about one-third of the nation's fall spud crop.

But prices dropped last year and Idaho growers suffered through a below-average year due in part to record yields that created more supply than demand in the market.

Potato yields in Idaho last year were 411 hundredweight per acre, breaking the previous record of 386 cwt.

Growers hope the reduced acreage this year will result in a better supply and demand situation, with prices rising as a result.

"It's like any business: supply and demand sets the prices. Too many widgets, the price is low,"

The U.S. Department of Agriculture and United Potato Growers of Idaho both say Idaho potato growers planted fewer acres of spuds this year. Growers hope fewer potatoes will mean better prices at harvest time.

American Falls potato grower Jim Tiede told the Idaho State Journal. "When you have a more balanced supply and demand situation, the price goes up."

Data released last week show the average grower return per hundredweight at $2.96, below the average $7 per hundred-weight cost of production. In the previous year, growers were getting a return equal to or within 10 cents of the cost of production, according to Britt Raybould, spokeswoman for the United Potato Growers of Idaho.

Despite the lower prices, Idaho's potato industry brought in a record $796 million in cash receipts last year.

FDA scientists debate safety of diabetes drug Avandia

By Rob Stein
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Federal scientists disagreed sharply Tuesday about whether the diabetes drug Avandia is unsafe and should be removed from the market.

The conflicting analyses were presented during the opening day of a two-day meeting of scientific advisers that the Food and Drug Administration convened in suburban Gaithersburg, Md., to evaluate the diabetes drug.

Approved in 1999, Avandia quickly became the world's most popular drug to treat Type 2 diabetes, the most common form of the disease. But in 2007, Cleveland Clinic cardiologist Steven Nissen published a study that concluded that the drug significantly increased the risk for cardiovascular problems, the leading cause of death among diabetics.

Sales of Avandia plummeted, and the FDA issued strong new warnings about the drug's safety. But after a panel of advisers voted later that year to keep the drug on the market, the FDA decided not to pull it.

Critics said the decision illustrated the agency's failure to protect the public from dangerous drugs, especially in the wake of high-profile drug safety concerns about the painkiller Vioxx and other medications.

There also have been allegations that GlaxoSmithKline, which makes Avandia, knew about the risks but hid them.

During Tuesday's hearing, the FDA's Thomas Marciniak presented a detailed critique of a study GlaxoSmithKline sponsored and has held up as the best evidence of the drug's safety. Marciniak said the company excluded important details about patients that would have shown that the drug increased the risk for heart attacks. Kate Gelperin, another FDA scientist, presented an analysis that concluded that Avandia increased the risk for heart attacks, heart failure and death.

But in an unusual display of conflict within the agency, other FDA researchers challenged Marciniak's analysis of the pivotal study, known as Record. Ellis Unger, for example, questioned Marciniak's interpretations of how the data were selected and agreed with the company's argument that the study showed the drug was safe. GlaxoSmithKline's Murray Stewart also defended the drug, arguing that other studies have found no increased risks.

Banking reform bill faces final vote this week

By Jim Kuhnhenn
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Obama on Tuesday secured the 60 votes he needs in the Senate to pass a sweeping overhaul of financial regulations, all but ensuring that he soon will sign into law one of the top initiatives of his presidency.

With the votes in hand to overcome Republican delaying tactics, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid on Tuesday took steps to end debate on the bill Thursday, setting the stage for final passage perhaps later in the day. The House already has passed the bill.

"This reform is good for families, it is good for businesses, it's good for the entire economy," Obama said as he prodded the Senate to act quickly.

Passage would represent a signature achievement for the president just four months after he signed massive health care legislation into law. The final vote comes amid lingering public resentment of Wall Street, but the legislation's symbolic and political impact is likely to be diminished by anxiety across the country over jobs and the economy.

Reid as much as acknowledged that political reality Tuesday, blaming "greed on Wall Street" for the country's economic troubles.

"It triggered the recession," he said. "It's what suffocated the job market and robbed trillions of dollars of people's savings — trillions!"

Support for the bill jelled Tuesday after conservative Democratic Sen. Ben Nelson of Nebraska announced he would vote for the bill after raising concerns the previous day.

Obama noted that the bill is getting backing from Republican Sens. Scott Brown of Massachusetts and Olympia Snowe and Susan Collins, both of Maine. Snowe and Brown announced their support on Monday.

"Three Republican senators have put politics and partisanship aside to support this reform, and I'm grateful for their decision," Obama said as he announced his nomination of Jacob Lew to be the new director of the White House budget office.

The 2,300-page bill aims to address regulatory weaknesses blamed for the 2008 financial crisis that fueled the worst recession since the 1930s.

It gives regulators broad authority to rein in banks, limit risk-taking by financial firms and supervise previously unregulated trading. It also makes it easier to liquidate large, financially interconnected institutions, and it creates a new consumer protection bureau to guard against lending abuses.

While Democrats are ready to cast the GOP as an ally of Wall Street, Republicans have portrayed the bill as government overreach that would make lending more expensive, increase costs for consumers and hurt U.S. businesses. Republicans repeatedly and fruitlessly tried to expand the bill to include changes to government-controlled mortgage finance giants Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac.

"The vast majority of our members felt that it was not a step in the right direction, that it perpetuated too-big-to-fail, that it was supported by Goldman Sachs and opposed by our community banks," Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky said.

A trade association representing community bankers, however, circulated a memo Tuesday saying some criticism that the bill would harm small banks "is so extreme it practically implies the end of life as we know it."

More cops charged in post-Katrina bridge shootings

By Michael Kunzelman
Associated Press writer

NEW ORLEANS — In a case that rocked a city already torn by the horrors of Hurricane Katrina, four police officers accused of gunning down two unarmed people in the storm's chaotic aftermath could face death themselves.

The officers who could face the death penalty were charged along with two others in a 27-count indictment unsealed Tuesday. Five former New Orleans police officers already have pleaded guilty to helping cover up the shootings on the Danziger Bridge that left two men dead and four wounded just days after the August 2005 hurricane. In one instance, a mentally disabled man was shot in the back and stomped before he died.

Prosecutors say officers fabricated witness statements, falsified reports and planted a gun in an attempt to make it appear the shootings were justified. It was a shocking example of the violence and confusion that followed the storm.

With 80 percent of New Orleans underwater, officers from a department with a history of corruption were forced to battle rampant crime, and some became criminals themselves. Dozens of officers were fired or suspended for abandoning their post. In a separate case, an officer is charged with shooting a man whose body turned up in a burned out car.

The latest indictments have also come shortly after the city's new mayor replaced its former police chief and invited a Justice Department team to overhaul the city's corruption-plagued police department, which already is the target of several federal investigations separate from the bridge shooting.

Reporting bad doctors

Dr. A. Clark Gaither is seen at his office in Goldsboro, N.C., Tuesday. Twenty-one years ago, a colleague smelled alcohol on Gaither's breath and anonymously reported him to the head of the residency program. The now-sober Dr. Gaither is grateful. 'I wish I knew who reported me,' he said. 'I'd like to give them a big ol' hug and thank them for saving my life.'

Study says many doctors don't blow whistle on colleagues with problems

By Carla K. Johnson
Associated Press writer

CHICAGO — Your doctor could be drunk, addicted to drugs or outright incompetent, but other physicians may not blow the whistle.

A new survey finds that many American physicians fail to report troubled colleagues to authorities, believing that someone else will take care of it, that nothing will happen if they act or that they could be targeted for retribution.

A surprising 17 percent of the doctors surveyed had direct, personal knowledge of an impaired or incompetent physician in their workplaces, said the study's lead author, Catherine DesRoches of Harvard Medical School.

One-third of those doctors had not reported the matter to authorities such as hospital officials or state medical boards. The findings, appearing in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association, are based on a 2009 survey of 1,891 practicing U.S. doctors.

Reporting a problem doctor can trigger important changes. Twenty-one years ago, a colleague smelled alcohol on a young physician's breath and anonymously reported him to the head of the residency program. A now-sober Dr. A. Clark Gaither is grateful.

"I wish I knew who reported me," Gaither said. "I'd like to give them a big ol' hug and thank them for saving my life."

Programs exist for retraining doctors with weak skills and getting addicted ones into treatment. But the survey results suggest doctors are not confident in the system, DesRoches said.

The American Medical Association and other professional groups say doctors have an ethical obligation to make such reports. And many states require doctors to tell authorities about colleagues who endanger patients because of alcoholism, drug abuse or mental illness.

Despite that, many doctors do not know what to do or where to start, DesRoches said.

In an accompanying editorial, one ethics expert called the findings "jarring."

"I don't think there's any excuse for less than 100 percent of physicians holding true to these ideals," said Dr. Matthew Wynia, director of the AMA Institute for Ethics.

He called for better protections for whistleblowers and more education for doctors on how to report a colleague.

The survey did not specify the type or severity of the impairment or incompetence, asking: "In the last three years, have you had direct, personal knowledge of a physician who was impaired or incompetent to practice medicine in your hospital, group, or practice?"

Most states have programs that not only get doctors into treatment but also advise their colleagues how to intervene. Most will keep reports anonymous. Some use the threat of medical board sanction to persuade doctors to go to rehab.

For Gaither, the first confrontation with concerned colleagues was in medical school. He reassured his fellow students he was fine. Even the second confrontation, from the program head who had heard the report of Gaither's alcohol-scented breath, did not take. Gaither signed a contract promising to stay sober, go to Alcoholics Anonymous meetings and submit to testing.

"I went home and drank that night," he said. "I was thinking with an addicted brain, and I was an alcoholic."

Finally, a third confrontation and the temporary loss of his training license forced Gaither into what he calls "a state of surrender." With help from the North Carolina Physicians Health Program, he got into a residential rehab program.

His last drink was Jan. 21, 1990. Gaither, now 55, finished his residency and became a family doctor. He practices in Goldsboro, N.C., where he started a free mobile clinic for the uninsured.

NEW YORK Judge: Delay in prosecution didn't violate detainee's rights

A federal judge in New York has ruled that a defendant held for nearly five years at a secret CIA prison and at the military detention center at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, did not have his right to a speedy trial violated and can be prosecuted for involvement in the 1998 East Africa embassy bombings.

The ruling, released Tuesday, is a significant victory for the government because it closes a legal avenue to challenge prosecutions for all high-value detainees who were held by the CIA and at Guantanamo Bay, including Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, the self-proclaimed mastermind of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

Although the government has postponed decisions on further federal prosecutions of Guantanamo Bay detainees, including Mohammed, the ruling keeps that option open. A loss would have effectively forced the government to keep all major prosecutions in military commissions, something it might yet have to do, but for political, not legal, reasons.

Ahmed Ghailani, a Tanzanian, had sought to have his indictment dismissed on Sixth Amendment grounds, arguing the government could have prosecuted him at the time of his capture in 2004 or could have questioned him for national security reasons, but it could not legally do both.

Court tosses FCC's fleeting expletives policy

NEW YORK — A federal appeals court on Tuesday struck down a government policy that can lead to broadcasters being fined for allowing even a single curse word on live television, saying it is unconstitutionally vague and threatens speech “at the heart of the First Amendment.”

The 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Manhattan threw out the 2004 Federal Communications Commission policy, which said profanity referring to sex or excrement is always indecent.

“By prohibiting all ‘patently offensive’ references to sex, sexual organs and excretion without giving adequate guidance as to what ‘patently offensive’ means, the FCC effectively chills speech, because broadcasters have no way of knowing what the FCC will find offensive,” the court wrote.

“To place any discussion of these vast topics at the broadcaster’s peril has the effect of promoting wide self-censorship of valuable material which should be completely protected under the First Amendment,” it added.

The court said the FCC might be able to craft a policy that does not violate the First Amendment.

MISSOURI NAACP condemns racism in tea party

KANSAS CITY — Leaders of the country’s largest civil rights organization accused tea party activists on Tuesday of tolerating bigotry and approved a resolution condemning racism within the political movement.

The resolution was adopted during the annual convention in Kansas City of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, spokesman Chris Fleming said. Local tea party organizers disputed claims of racism and called on the NAACP to withdraw the resolution.

It was not immediately clear how the resolution was amended during the debate, which was mostly closed to the public.

The original called for the NAACP to “educate its membership and the community that this movement is not just about higher taxes and limited government.” It suggested that something could evolve “and become more dangerous for that small percentage of people that really think our country has been taken away from them.”

“We felt the time had come to stand up and say, ‘It’s time for the tea party to be responsible members of this democracy and make sure they don’t tolerate bigots or bigotry among their members,’” NAACP President Ben Jealous said ahead of the debate.

CALIFORNIA ‘Octomom’ doctor accused of negligence

LOS ANGELES — The fertility doctor of “Octomom” Nadya Suleman implanted too many embryos in one patient, resulting in the death of a fetus, and failed to refer another woman to a cancer specialist after finding cysts on her ovaries, the state licensing board said.

The new allegations by the Medical Board of California bolster its ongoing negligence case against Dr. Michael Kamrava.

The board said a 48-year-old patient identified only as “L.C.” was implanted with seven embryos in September 2008 — several months after the 33-year-old Suleman had embryos implanted.

Implanting more than two embryos in a patient over age 35 meant Kamrava “placed L.C. at great risk for high-order gestation, which was confirmed by a quadruplet pregnancy that ended with catastrophic results,” the filing said.

Kamrava is scheduled for an Oct. 18 hearing before the medical board to determine if his license should be revoked or suspended. His public relations representative David Langness and his lawyer Henry Fenton said they could not comment on the open case.

Alleged ‘Barefoot Bandit’ returns to U.S. after pleading guilty in Bahamas

By Tony Winton and Juan McCartney
Associated Press writers

MIAMI — The American teenager who police call the “Barefoot Bandit” was deported to the United States on Tuesday, just hours after he pleaded guilty to a minor offense in the Bahamas.

Law enforcement officials escorted Colton Harris-Moore on a commercial flight to Miami to face prosecution for a two-year string of break-ins and plane thefts across the United States. The FBI took him off the plane and put him into a waiting car. Officials said the 19-year-old convict was taken to a federal jail in Miami, where he is scheduled to have an initial court appearance Wednesday. It’s likely he will eventually be taken to Seattle, where he was indicted.

Harris-Moore was on the plane with Bahamian authorities and FBI agents, but he did not know FBI agents were aboard, said John Gillies, FBI special agent in charge of the Miami office. The FBI did not have any authority to arrest Harris-Moore in the Bahamas and waited until he reached Miami to take him into custody, Gillies said.

Earlier Tuesday, Harris-Moore pleaded guilty in the Bahamas to illegally entering the country. He had been arrested in the island country Sunday following a high-speed boat chase.

The charge stemming from his alleged crashing of a stolen plane on Great Abaco Island carried a $300 fine. His lawyer, Monique Gomez, said the U.S. Embassy would pay it. Gomez said Harris-Moore wanted to go home.

The shackled teen smiled after the judge read the sentence. Bahamian police had earlier said that he would face other charges including illegal weapons possession related to a string of break-ins and thefts during his weeklong hideout in the country.

Colton Harris-Moore, the teenage fugitive police have dubbed the ‘Barefoot Bandit,’ is escorted to court in shackles and handcuffs Tuesday in Nassau, Bahamas. Harris-Moore, who was captured Sunday after a high-speed boat chase off Eleuthera Island, pleaded guilty to a minor offense.

sneakers without laces and kept his head down as armed officers escorted him to the courthouse. A police SWAT team stood by as authorities put up street barricades ahead of the hearing for the celebrity suspect.

Authorities say he earned the “Barefoot Bandit” nickname by committing some crimes while shoeless, and in February he allegedly drew chalk-outline feet all over the floor of a grocery store during a burglary in Washington’s San Juan Islands.

Harris-Moore is suspected in about 70 property crimes across eight states and British Columbia, many of them in the bucolic islands of Washington state. He is accused of stealing a plane from an Indiana airport to fly to the Bahamas.

His mother, Pam Kohler, seemed relieved.

“I’m really tired,” Kohler said from her home on Camano Island, Wash. “Yes, I look forward to seeing him.”

Asked what she planned to say to her son when she saw him, she said angrily, “What kind of question is that?” and hung up the phone.

His arrest came as a relief to people across rural Camano Island, Wash., where authorities say he learned to dodge police.

“There’s a lot of relief throughout the community,” said real estate agent Mark Williams. “I think the man’s luck just wore out. You run through the woods long enough, you’re going to trip over a log.”

Residents of the island

also lashed out at the teen’s mother this week, saying her decision to hire a well-known Seattle lawyer suggests she’s trying to profit from a crime spree that police say took her son from the cedar trees in Washington to the bright beaches of the Bahamas.

“Of course she wants the money. She doesn’t work,” said Joshua Flickner, whose family owns an island grocery store. “What makes me more angry than the fact that she’s trying to profit off this is that there’s any profit to be had.”

The mother’s attorney downplayed any profit motive, saying Kohler contacted him for advice after being inundated by requests from news reporters as well as inquiries about book and movie deals.

“Her feelings are relief and exhaustion,” O. Yale Lewis said. “Obviously, there is enormous interest in this story, and she wants to be careful about how to proceed. But her first concern has been to make sure her son is safe.”

“And I think she hasn’t given much thought beyond that,” he said.

Harris-Moore told police in the Bahamas that he came to the country, located off the Florida coast, because it has so many islands, airports and docks, according to an officer who spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to discuss the case.

The teenager claimed that he told islanders he was trying to get to Cuba so he could throw police off his trail, but he intended to make his way to the Turks and Caicos Islands south-east of the Bahamas, the officer said.

The suspect learned from the Internet that the British territory has a small police force and no marine defense force, according to the officer.

A SAVORY SUMMER

Chilled cherry soup offers iconic summer flavor in an unusual package and can be adapted to many kinds of fruit, said Hailey chef Chris Kastner.

On hot days, who wants to turn on a stove when the deck at your favorite restaurant beckons? If that restaurant is like most, there are special dishes on its summer menu that feature fruit, vegetables, fish, and light, citrusy beverages.

“It’s a real psychological thing, that fresh in summer is light,” said Tori Wakewood, owner of Tori’s Eatery in Twin Falls, who has been frequenting farmers markets as well as friends’ gardens to get ingredients. “The resources are really great right now during this time of year, so we try to ride on that summer bounty.”

In the warmer months, people tend to eat later and to eat less, said many restaurateurs, so appetizers, salads and lighter fare such as pizza earn high billing on their summer menus.

“In our business, I’ve noticed for the summer, people are not as hungry, or they’re hungry later,” said Holly Sutherland, manager of Tomato’s Italian Grill in Twin Falls. Its olive oil pizza with fresh basil and fresh tomatoes has proven especially popular this summer, as has one with spinach. The restaurant has put salmon on a salad for its soon-to-be-debuted hot-weather menu, and dressings are featuring pesto rather than heavier, creamier flavors.

Fish is also popular at Sage Mountain Grill in Albion, where halibut crusted with Parmesan on a bed of slow-roasted tomatoes competes with tilapia with capers and lemon.

Halibut and king salmon are also in high form at CK’s Real Food in Hailey, often paired with vinaigrette-topped salads. “They’re the closest wild fish we can get, and they’re both great in the summer,” said owner Chris Kastner.

Sage Mountain is debuting a new Italian menu this summer, and many of its dishes use the light, fresh flavors called out by chefs across the region. There’s an insalata caprese with basil, tomatoes and mozzarella cheese, and a prawn gamberi — tomato slices topped with large cocktail prawns and finished with a salsa verde made with basil, onion and lemon.

At Sage Mountain’s bar, a variation on a spiked Arnold Palmer mixes pink lemonade, raspberry iced tea and vodka. “It comes out sweet enough for the gals,” said owner Ina DiGrazia. “We’re trying to figure out what to call it.”

Fresh fruit and herbs have made their way into Tomato’s bar, as well, Sutherland said. Bartenders often muddle fruit, like berries or peaches, into a beverage, and they have created

Behind CK’s Real Food in Hailey, squash plants grow — not for their fruit, but for the blossoms, which chef Chris Kastner stuffs with Idaho goat cheese and beer batters for a light summer appetizer.

CHILLED EMMETT CHERRY SOUP

From Chris Kastner of CK’s Real Food in Hailey. This recipe has a fruit stock component and a fruit portion. It can be adapted for other fruits, such as nectarines or berries, but don’t mix too many varieties or the tastes will muddle. If you can get your hands on a lot of fruit, freeze it to add to the stock later.

- For the stock:
- 1 tablespoon fresh ginger, peeled and grated
 - 1 star anise pod
 - 1 2-inch cinnamon stick
 - 1 Serrano chili
 - 1 lemon, zested and juiced
 - 1 orange, zested and juiced
 - 1 bottle Moscato or Riesling
 - 6 cups drinking water
 - 1/2 cup sugar
 - 1 vanilla bean, split down the middle
- Combine all ingredients in a non-reactive pot, bring it to a simmer and keep it there for 20 minutes. Strain the stock, and freeze in 1-cup containers (or it will keep for two weeks in the refrigerator). Yields 9 cups, enough for three batches of soup.
- For the fruit:
- 4 quarts fresh pitted cherries (7 pounds before pitting)
 - 3 cups fruit stock (see above)
 - Kosher salt to taste
 - 1 tablespoon lemon juice
 - 1 tablespoon balsamic vinegar
 - 1 cup plain non-fat yogurt whipped with a whisk until smooth
- Combine cherries, a two-finger pinch of salt and fruit stock in a non-reactive pot, and bring to a simmer. After 25 minutes, puree and strain through a food mill or a bowl sieve. Add lemon juice and vinegar, and more salt to taste. Adjust the acidity with sugar if the soup is too tart, or with vinegar if it is too sweet. It should be on the tart end of balanced, as it is an appetizer, not a dessert. Serve in shot glasses with a few drops of yogurt drizzled on for small servings, or in a low, wide soup bowl with a yogurt drizzle for a more elegant look. Yields 9 cups of soup.

The kimchi fix is going global

By Jane Black
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — I made my first batch of kimchi months ago. Since then, there has been only a single 13-day period when I haven't had some in the fridge. Thirteen very long days.

What started out as a neat addition to a dinner party menu — “Let's try something from the new Momofuku cookbook” — turned into an all-out obsession with funky, spicy Korean fermented cabbage. It was terrific with the hanger steak at dinner and maybe better with steamed rice or poached eggs after a few more days in the fridge. Soon, I began to crave it, the same way most people yearn for chocolate cake. That's when I realized that kimchi also tastes pretty darn good right out of the jar.

My kimchi habit will no doubt be a great relief to the government of South Korea, which has made spreading the word about the country's national dish an official policy. The Korea Food Research Institute has a traditional-foods division charged with the “scientific research of Korean fermented foods such as sauces, alcohols and kimchi for their globalization,” according to its website.

At first, such a policy might seem odd; Americans have a fierce love affair with hamburgers, but I'm unaware of any government program to evangelize them. But in Korea, kimchi is a national obsession. Seoul has a kimchi museum with a vast collection of cookbooks, cooking utensils and storage jars. Families around the country own special refrigerators designed to maintain the optimal temperature for the stinky vegetables' fermentation and preservation. Perhaps the most famous example of the nation's kimchi fever is that South Korean scientists spent years developing a recipe for a bacteria-free “space kimchi” to accompany their first citizen's visit to the international space station.

“This will greatly help my mission,” Ko San, then a 30-year-old computer scien-

LINDA DAVIDSON/Washington Post

The Source by Wolfgang Puck restaurant in Washington launched a new Asian menu in its lounge including a dish of Korean short ribs with cabbage and radish kimchi. ‘People really recognize (kimchi) and love it,’ said executive chef Scott Drewno.

tist, said in a statement quoted by The New York Times before he was to blast off in 2008. “Since I am taking kimchi with me, this will help with cultural exchanges in space.”

Kimchi has been an integral part of Korean culture for thousands of years. The first record of it dates to the 7th century, according to Cecilia Hae-Jin Lee, author of “Quick and Easy Korean Cooking” (Chronicle Books, 2009), though it is believed that Koreans have eaten it for far longer. Modern versions didn't arise until the 15th century, when the first chili peppers arrived from the new world. About that time, cooks also began to add salted seafood, which gives the dish its pungent perfume.

Traditional kimchi, the kind I've been making, uses Napa cabbage. But there are seemingly infinite varieties. In Seoul, you might find baby ginseng kimchi, while north and south of the city, eggplant and pumpkin varieties are common. Historically, kimchi was made in late fall and buried in earthen jars to preserve it during the winter. Today, it is made year-round and varies with the season, incorporating Asian radishes in winter and cucumbers in summer.

Rice-based (and occupying) cultures such as Japan took a shine to kimchi long ago. The food's recent entrance into the American mainstream is driven by two larger trends. The first is a new fixation on all things fermented: pickles, dilly beans, sauerkraut and chowchow are now standard at gourmet groceries and farmers markets. Why not stinky pickled cabbage?

The second is broader awareness of, and familiarity with, Korean cuisine. Over the past 30 years, Americans have embraced sushi, pad Thai and the Vietnamese noodle soup pho. But Korean food has been a harder sell. In part, it's because the cuisine is newer to America. The largest wave of Korean immigrants arrived here in the 1970s and '80s. And it is only recently that a second, more assimilated generation has taken over.

I see the change at Korean restaurants. Eight years ago, when I worked near Koreatown in New York, I was relentlessly steered to the “safe” bibimbap despite my pleas for something else. Today, Korean chefs are willing to walk a newbie through a traditional menu. Hot young chefs, such as Momofuku's David Chang in New York and Kogi's Roy Choi in Los Angeles, are experimenting with using classic ingredients in new ways. “When chefs put kimchi in a quesadilla, they start to get the flavor out, and both Koreans' and Americans' impression that it's just too spicy starts to dissipate,” said Debra Samuels, co-author of “The Korean Table” (Tuttle, 2008).

These days, most Koreans buy their kimchi, says author Lee. But making it is cheap and easy — plus, you can avoid the commercial brands that add MSG.

First, salt the cabbage and let it sit overnight. That will flavor the leaves and draw out the moisture. Next, add any other vegetables: Scallions, chopped radish and mustard greens are traditional, but I like ribbons of carrots, too. Then, mix in garlic, ginger, Korean chili pepper, salted shrimp and/or fish sauce and a touch of sugar.

The amounts of each ingredient vary. I believe Chang's recipe, which calls for 20 cloves of garlic, might be addictive. But the quantity of garlic makes it awkward to talk to anyone who hasn't also been eating it. (That's why many Korean restaurants offer you strong peppermint gum after your meal.) Lesson: Make your kimchi to taste.

Many recipes make a gallon or more of kimchi. So once it's ready, there's the question of how to use it all. A Korean proverb says: If you have kimchi and rice, you have a meal. And that's certainly true. Other traditional dishes include kimchi pancakes, very fermented kimchi mixed with ground pork, scallions, flour and egg, then sauteed; and kimchi soup, which adds a few clams and fish stock or even water to chopped kimchi.

Cecilia Hae-Jin Lee's Napa Cabbage Kimchi is a quick and easy introduction to the world of this indispensable Korean condiment. Tiny salted shrimp provide a pungent kick.

Bill O'Leary/Washington Post

As part of its effort to globalize kimchi, the South Korean government collaborated with the Cordon Bleu to develop more Western-friendly recipes that are available at the Food in Korea Web site. Some, such as sesame kimchi twists and Camembert-and-sesame kimchi fritters, sound promising. The chocolate cake with kimchi and the napoleons filled with kimchi pastry cream? Not so much.

The best fusion idea I've heard yet is Lee's kimchi stuffing. Add old, very fermented kimchi to her usual bread, celery, onions and walnuts, and use kimchi juice as the liquid to bind it all together. “We used to make a traditional stuffing and the kimchi version, and after a while we thought, why bother with the regular one?” Lee said.

Step aside, bacon. Everything is better with kimchi.

NAPA CABBAGE KIMCHI

Makes about 2 quarts. The vegetables need to soak in saltwater for at least 6 hours and preferably overnight. The kimchi can sit at room temperature for up to 2 days and is ready to eat after 2 to 3 days. For longer fermentation, refrigerate. It is best eaten within a month. It is ideal after about 2 weeks. Adapted from “Eating Korean: From Barbecue to Kimchi, Recipes from My Home,” by Cecilia Hae-Jin Lee (Wiley, 2005).

- 1/2 cup sea or kosher salt
- 1 cup warm water
- 1 medium head Napa cabbage
- 1 Asian radish (nu or daikon)
- 6 cloves garlic, minced

- (about 2 tablespoons)
- 2-inch piece peeled ginger root, minced (2 tablespoons)
- 2 tablespoons Asian fish sauce
- 1 tablespoon jarred (wet) Korean salted shrimp
- 6 scallions, cut into 1-inch pieces (1/2 cup)
- Leaves of 1 bunch mustard greens, cut into 1-inch pieces (about 3 cups)
- 3 tablespoons coarsely ground Korean chili powder (medium or coarsely ground is best for kimchi)
- 1 teaspoon sugar

Dissolve the salt in the water in a liquid measuring cup.

Rinse the leaves of the cabbage and cut into 2-inch lengths (12 to 14 cups). Peel the Asian radish and cut into quarters, then cut into 1/2-inch slices.

Combine the cabbage and radish in a large bowl and pour the saltwater over them. Soak for at least 6 hours and preferably overnight.

Drain the soaked vegetables in a colander, squeezing out as much water as possible. Place the vegetables in a large bowl.

Combine the garlic, ginger, fish sauce and salted shrimp in a food processor or blender; process until finely minced.

Add the scallions, mustard greens, garlic-ginger mixture, chili powder and sugar; toss to coat evenly. (If you use your hands, wear food-safe gloves; the chili might sting or stain your hands.) The mixture will have the consistency of a well-dressed salad.

Pack into glass jars or a large food-safe plastic container. The kimchi will be ready in 2 to 3 days. It will grow increasingly pungent as it sits. It is ideal after about 2 weeks and best eaten within a month; if you plan to let it ferment for longer than 2 days, refrigerate it.

with ice cubes — freezing mint and lemon juice, or basil and sugar, to add to iced tea or water for a fresh treat.

“It's simple sugar with herbs so that when it melts, instead of making the tea watered down, it actually adds to the body of it,” she said. “It adds a really clean taste. It doesn't have to be much, just a little bit, and people say, ‘Mmm, what is that?’”

The key to all these summer recipes, though, is using what is fresh and local.

Roasted beets and nectarines, for example, are about to make an appearance on the menu at CK's, and local greens such as kale, chard and Asian lettuces already appear on most of its summer plates.

“In the dessert area, we use mint from our garden, in mint chocolate chip ice cream and sorbets,” Kastner said. “When strawberries were really abundant we'd freeze a bunch and make a puree out of it that we'd use to make sorbets.”

From fish to fruit, basil to beets, anything that is light and fresh is on the menu.

ORANGE AND HERB SORBET

From Tori Wakewood of Tori's Eatery in Twin Falls.

- 2 cups fresh squeezed orange juice
- 2 tablespoons chopped rosemary or mint
- 2 teaspoons orange zest (be sure not to include any white, or the bitterness will ruin the flavor)
- Dash of vanilla
- Sugar to taste

Follow the directions with a sorbet maker, or put the mixture in a plastic container in your freezer's ice box. To break the freezing liquid into thin shards, scrape the top with a fork's tines every few hours (depending on your freezer's temperature), starting 20 minutes after placing the sorbet in the freezer.

If you forget, and it does turn into ice cubes, just break those up and put in iced tea or water for a different kind of treat.

What’s for dinner? (You don’t want to know)

By Karen Youso
Star Tribune (Minneapolis)

Seen a fly in your soup lately? Well, that’s nothing compared with what you don’t see in your strawberry yogurt or the sprinkles on your doughnut.

Crushed bugs. You’ve been eating them for years. You just didn’t know it.

That’s right. The “color added” ingredient in some red, pink and purple foods is carmine, the dried and crushed bodies of the female cochineal insect. The cactus-loving insect is used to color ice cream, yogurt, fruit juices and more.

“They’re harvested in Mexico, processed in large plants. I’ve seen them,” said Gary Reineccius, professor of food science at the University of Minnesota.

You may not have known, because they were hiding under the “color added” listing on the label, but you soon will. Starting in January, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is requiring manufacturers to switch from the “color added” label listing to “carmine” or “cochineal extract.”

Consumers should know what’s going into their food “to promote safe, healthy diets,” said Michael Jacobson, executive director of the Center for Science in the Public Interest (CSPI) and part of the effort to require manufacturers to change their product labels.

Ingredients such as carmine have come under fire because they have been known to cause severe allergic reactions in some people. Those allergic reactions, along with a few subsequent lawsuits, have led some manufacturers to stop using carmine.

Other people with dietary restrictions, such as Jews and Muslims, may not consider some products kosher if these ingredients are included. But even those without restrictions might be a little squeamish if they knew just what was going into some of their food. The CSPI wants the FDA to go even further, labeling carmine as insects on packaging. After all, few people recognize carmine or cochineal as something that comes from insects, and even fewer would be curious enough to look it up online or in a dictionary to find out exactly what they’re eating.

People would be disgusted if they knew crushed bugs were in their food, Jacobson said. “We urge the FDA to at least indicate these ingredients are of insect origins, but the industry opposes that because nobody would buy the product.”

Using ingredients like carmine can be deceptive, according to Jacobson, because the color it gives to products makes it appear as though there is real fruit included when there often isn’t.

Some other surprising food

ingredients with an ick factor include:

- Shellac: The secretions from the lac beetle found in India and Thailand are used to give confections such as Skittles and candy sprinkles a shiny coating.
- “Nothing synthetic does this as well,” Reineccius said, adding that, yes, it’s the same shellac that’s used to finish wood. Jacobson said it can also be used on fruits and vegetables to seal them.
- Rennet: An enzyme taken from veal calves at the time of slaughter is added to milk to make cheese. At some point in ancient history, someone put milk in a bag made of a calf’s stomach and discovered that it curdled, and cheese was born. A non-animal version is microbial enzyme. It sounds better when it’s listed as “vegetable rennet” on cheese labels.
- Honey: The sweetener that’s been used for thousands of years is basically regurgitated pollen. Some prefer it because it’s completely natural, but many might just want to forget where it’s been.

- Castoreum: This one is bizarre, said Reineccius. It’s a secretion from the anal glands of beavers, used mostly in perfumes and sometimes to enhance raspberry flavor in candies and fillings. How did it make the jump from beavers to perfume?
- “Probably by accident,” he said. “More than likely somebody was hunting and, guess what, they used all of the animal. They said, ‘That’s an interesting aroma, and how can we use that?’”
- If you’d never imagined ingredients like these being used in your foods, you’d be even more surprised by what Jacobson says your food would look like without these products: Not different at all.
- “They’d use some other coloring,” he said. “They need to give it some color, and it just gives it what they consider the right color.”

Increasingly good wines are available at $12 and less.

Finding $12 wines that punch above their weight

Bloomberg News

Over the years I’ve spent very little time trolling through sales bins at wine stores because 90 percent of the time the offerings are poor sellers or excess inventory of undistinguished, already cheap wines.

But I’m not so flush these days that I can snub a good bargain, and out of professional interest I decided to check out some recent discount sales at fine wine stores and see what was worthwhile. I found that, as never before, much better wines are being offered at much better prices, owing to a huge post-recession wine glut.

Recent auction prices have shown that first-growth Bordeaux and the most illustrious Burgundies are going for record bids, but below that firmament, little is selling well, especially out of France.

More than Italy, Spain and South America, France has not been able to export enough interesting, full-flavored wines at moderate prices (under $15 a bottle) to keep sales from flagging, aside from a few successes like Gallo-owned $8 Red Bicycleette — even after a French court convicted 12 members of the Languedoc wine industry last February of illegally blending cheap merlot and syrah into 18 million bottles of the pinot noir-based label.

So when I spotted an ad — one of many these days — for deep discounts at the fine-wine store Zachys in Scarsdale, N.Y., that read “The $12 Sale Is Back!” I thought it worth a drive to see what’s going cheap. I chose a dozen or so bottles based on what looked intriguing, hedging my bets by siding with Chile, Spain and Italy.

After tasting all of them, alone and with summer food, I have to say I was really delighted with the majority.

Some of the wines had been marked down from as high as $23, though most had been about $17. At $12 a bottle, I would certainly drink the good ones any night of the week and happily even pay list price for some. Most important, my tastings showed that producers are shipping quality matched to price in just about every kind of varietal, from barbera d’alba to shiraz.

One of the most impressive was a full-bodied, fleshy Altos de Luzon 2006 from Jumilla in Spain, made with 50 percent monastrell, 25 percent cabernet sauvignon, and 25 percent tempranillo — a blend normally found in more expensive bottlings. It showed bold tannins and enough spice for a meal of roast chicken with white beans and tangy-hot salsa verde.

From Spain’s Ribera del Duero region came a solidly knit Creta Roble 2006, 100 percent tempranillo grown at 2,700 feet, where the coolness calms the grape and gives the finished wine a finesse as well as a nice bite of acid at the finish. I drank this with a very-rare porterhouse and nothing but a shake of sea salt and black pepper. Perfect!

A third Spanish bottling, Borsao Crianza Seleccion 2006, is another example of how modestly priced wines need not be one-dimensional. This is a blend of 50 percent grenache, 25 percent tempranillo, and the remainder cabernet sauvignon, so that the violet notes of the grenache play off the softness and tannins of the other two varietals. Curiously, though it began with good backbone, its power faded after two glasses.

A 2008 Barbera d’Alba from Stefano Farina in Italy’s Piedmont showed how good this workhorse grape can be when handled carefully, even this young. The ripe fruit, lovely fragrance and peppery undertone make it excellent with red meats like lamb or veal.

Mas du Fadan Les Fees 2007, from the Cotes du Ventoux in the southern Rhone region, had a characteristic purple color and big rustic smell, which partially derives from its not being filtered. It’s a bawdy beauty of a red wine, made for barbecued ribs on the grill and corn-on-the-cob.

Not every wine I tasted was as good as these. A Girard Sauvignon Blanc 2009 from Napa Valley was pale to the eye and palate, and a 2007 Lagone Aia Vecchia from Tuscany was all tannin and no taste. But for a dozen wines chosen more or less at random, I found a level of quality that puts much more expensive wines into focus.

Is a $50 bottle really that much better than a $12 bottle? The answer is not quite so easy as it once seemed.

This cake is so rich and moist that it needs no icing. Serve on its own, or with whipped cream and berries.

The batter can be combined in a food processor, up to the point of adding the flour.

The cake can be stored, covered, at room temperature for up to 3 days. Adapted from “Cooking From the Garden,” edited by Ruth Lively and Courtney Jordan (Taunton Press, 2010).

RASPBERRY FRANGIPANE CAKE

12 servings

14 tablespoons (2 sticks minus 2 tablespoons) unsalted butter, at room temperature, plus more for greasing the pan

1 cup sifted cake flour, plus more for the pan and berries

14 tablespoons (7 ounces) almond paste (do not use marzipan)

1 cup plus 2 tablespoons sugar

1 teaspoon vanilla extract

5 large eggs

1 1/2 cups fresh raspberries (berries cut in half,

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees. Use butter to lightly grease a 9-inch round cake pan, then dust with flour, shaking out any excess.

Combine the almond paste, the 14 tablespoons of butter and the sugar in the bowl of a stand mixer or hand-held mixer; beat on low, then medium speed until smooth and light. Add the vanilla and eggs one at a time, beating well and scraping down the sides of the bowl after each addition.

By hand, gently fold in the flour until barely incorporated.

Use a little flour to coat the raspberries, then fold them into the batter; avoid overmixing, or the cake will be tough. Pour the batter into the prepared pan; bake for 45 to 50 minutes, until the top is nicely browned and a toothpick inserted into the center comes out clean.

Cool completely before removing from the pan.

Egg-and-veggie dinner in 40 minutes

By Bonnie S. Benwick
The Washington Post

This dish could be served for breakfast, brunch, lunch or dinner. It's good enough to deploy as a staple in summer, when peppers and tomatoes are plentiful.

You might wonder: If it's basically eggs, bacon and vegetables, why does it take 40 minutes to prepare? Technique. Cooking the eggs slowly, with the vegetable base, yields the creaminess referred to in the title. A few minutes of stirring over low heat, as opposed to the usual scrambling, elevates the ingredients.

And about some of those ingredients: The onion, tomatoes and bell peppers are cooked with olive oil; this is called a piperade. Pancetta is a cured, rolled bacon that is not smoked. Piment d'Espelette is a sweet, coarsely ground version of dried Basque red peppers.

Serve with multigrain toast. Adapted from Sur La Table's "Eating Local," with Janet Fletcher (Andrews McMeel, 2010).

CREAMY EGGS WITH TOMATOES AND PEPPERS, BASQUE-STYLE

- 4 to 6 servings
- 3 ounces sliced pancetta (may substitute thick-cut bacon)
 - 1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
 - 1 medium yellow onion
 - 2 medium bell peppers, preferably of different colors, such as red and yellow or yellow and orange

- 3 medium cloves garlic
- 6 to 8 stems thyme
- Kosher or sea salt
- 6 to 8 Roma tomatoes
- 8 large eggs
- Large pinch crushed red pepper flakes
- Water (optional)
- Leaves from 3 or 4 stems curly parsley, for garnish
- Piment d'Espelette, Spanish smoked paprika or sweet paprika, for garnish

Place the individual plates in a 180-degree oven to warm. Line a separate plate with a few layers of paper towels.

Cut the pancetta into 1/2-inch dice. Transfer to a large skillet and add the oil. Place over medium heat and cook for 5 or 6 minutes, stirring once or twice, until the pieces are crisp and have rendered some fat. Use a slotted spoon to transfer to the paper towel-lined plate to drain.

Meanwhile, the following ingredients can be thrown into a mixing bowl as you work: Peel and cut the onion in half, then cut each half into very thin slices. Stem and seed the bell peppers, then cut the remaining flesh into very thin strips. Mince the garlic and leaves from the thyme stems.

Add those prepped ingredients to the skillet with the oil and rendered pancetta fat; place over medium heat and cook for 10 minutes, stirring occasionally, until the mixture has softened. Add a pinch of salt and mix well.

While the vegetables are cooking, cut the tomatoes in half lengthwise, then grate the cut sides against the large holes of a box grater positioned over a work bowl (down to the skins). The yield should be 1 1/2 cups. Discard the skins.

Crack the eggs into a large measuring cup and whisk lightly.

Cover the skillet containing the vegetable mixture and reduce the heat to medium-low; cook for 5 minutes, then uncover and add the grated tomatoes and any juices, the crushed red pepper flakes and a second pinch of salt; mix well.

Increase the heat to medium and cook uncovered for 3 to 5 minutes to form a piperade. If it seems dry, add up to 1/4 cup of water.

While the piperade's flavors are melding, chop the parsley to yield 2 tablespoons.

Reduce the heat to medium-low; add the lightly beaten eggs and begin to stir slowly with a flexible spatula, scraping the bottom and around the edges of the skillet. Cook for about 4 minutes, stirring slowly and occasionally, then add the pancetta; cook for 1 or 2 minutes, or until the mixture is fairly creamy and custardlike, and just set on the surface. (You are not making scrambled eggs, but if you do the dish is still edible). Taste, and add salt as needed.

Divide the mixture among the warmed plates. Sprinkle each portion with the piment d'Espelette, Spanish smoked paprika or sweet paprika. Garnish with equal amounts of chopped parsley; serve immediately.

Grilled polenta meets grilled marinated sirloin

By J.M. Hirsch
Associated Press writer

This highly flavorful steak is versatile enough to work for family-style dining, as well as a party-worthy appetizer. It all comes down to the polenta.

The dish starts by marinating thinly sliced sirloin in a potent blend of olive oil, balsamic vinegar and garlic. Because the steak is so thinly sliced, it thoroughly absorbs the marinade and cooks almost instantly on the grill.

The steak then gets served over polenta. This recipe calls for slicing a tube of prepared polenta into rounds, then brushing them with oil and briefly grilling them. Strips of steak then are piled onto each round and topped with sour cream blended with chives and shallot.

But for an alternative, cut that same tube of polenta into bite-size chunks. Toss the chunks in a saucepan with 1/2 cup of milk and a bit of grated Parmesan cheese. Heat and stir until smooth and creamy. Spoon some of the soft polenta onto serving plates, then top with steak and a dollop of sour cream.

GRILLED SIRLOIN WITH POLENTA AND SOUR CREAM

Start to finish: 1 hour (15 minutes active). Servings: 4.

Whether you want a dinner entree or a great party appetizer, this flavorful grilled sirloin fits the bill.

1/3 cup olive oil
1/3 cup balsamic vinegar
1 teaspoon kosher salt
1 teaspoon black pepper -

4 cloves garlic
1 1/4 pounds sirloin steak, | trimmed of fat and very thinly sliced
For the polenta:
18-ounce tube prepared polenta
2 tablespoons olive oil
Salt and ground black pepper |
|--|--|

Garlic powder
For the sour cream:
1 cup sour cream
1 shallot, finely minced
1 tablespoon finely
chopped fresh chives

In a blender, combine the oil, vinegar, salt, peppercorns and garlic. Puree until smooth, then pour into a stainless steel or other non-reactive bowl. Add the steak, mixing gently to coat, then refrigerate for 30 minutes.

Meanwhile, cut the polenta into 8 slices. Use a pastry brush to lightly coat both sides of each slice with oil. Sprinkle both sides of each slice with a bit of salt, pepper and garlic powder. Set aside until the steak is ready to grill.

In a small bowl, whisk together the sour cream, shallot and chives. Set aside.

Heat the grill to medium-high. Coat the racks with cooking spray or oil.

Grill the polenta slices for 3 minutes per side, or until bold grill marks appear. Use a spatula to carefully transfer the slices to serving plates.

Grill the steak for 1 minute per side. Mound 1 or 2 slices on top of each polenta round. Top each with a dollop of sour cream.

Herbs, garlicky dressing complement string beans

By Stephanie Witt Sedgwick
Special to The Washington Post

String beans are in abundant supply all summer long and, for some reason, particularly appealing at farm markets. Maybe what I like most is the process of picking through the mountain of beans and filling up my bag. It's a low-key form of foraging.

Whatever the reason, I'm always looking for new things to do with them. Since I'm also drawn to fresh herbs, I combined the two in this dish, in which a trio of herbs is chopped with garlic and olive oil to make a quick, flavorful dressing. Mixing the dressing with the warm beans brings out even more of the herb and garlic aromas. The dressing is garlicky; if you prefer a milder hit of garlic, cook the roughly chopped garlic in a little olive oil for 3 to 4 minutes before adding.

After assembly, the dish can be eaten warm right away or served at room temperature up to 2 hours later.

If you plan to make this dish in advance, add the step of shocking the just-cooked green beans in a bowl of ice water; that will help them stay green.

Freshly ground black pepper
1 medium clove garlic
2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil

Bring a large pot of salted water to a boil over high heat. Add the beans and cook for 6 to 7 minutes, until just tender.

Meanwhile, combine the parsley, dill and chives in a pile on a cutting board. Add salt and pepper to taste.

Chop the garlic into the pile of herbs so that the mixture ends up finely chopped. Transfer to a small bowl and add the oil; mix well. Taste and adjust seasoning as needed.

When the beans have cooked, drain them in a colander; transfer immediately to a bowl and add the herb pesto. Stir to coat evenly. Serve right away, or let cool to room temperature and serve within 2 hours.

Taking the fat out of creamed veggie dishes

By Jim Romanoff
For The Associated Press

Creamed vegetable dishes are delicious, comforting classics. But it can be a bit troubling to take nature's healthiest foods and essentially nestle them in a pool of fat.

Many recipes for creamed corn or spinach call for using a traditional white sauce made from whole milk thickened with a butter and flour roux. Others are primarily reduced heavy cream and sour cream, which don't have a stellar nutritional profile, either.

Yet creamy lower-fat vegetable dishes can be every bit as tasty and satisfying as their full-fat cousins.

One way to go is to make a low-fat white sauce by heating 3/4 cup of skim or low-fat milk until steaming. In a small bowl, whisk together 1 tablespoon of all-purpose flour with 1/4 cup of cold milk. Stir the flour mixture into the hot milk and cook, whisking constantly, until thick, 2 to 3 minutes.

Once thickened, add 1/4 cup of any extra-sharp sharp cheese (use full fat, because with its superior flavor even a little will go a long way) and a bit of Dijon mustard to make a cheesy sauce, or add herbs and spices, such as snipped chives and a pinch of nutmeg, to make a more traditional white sauce. Mix the sauce with any cooked vegetables you like.

You also can thicken a cup of skim or low-fat milk by stirring in 1 1/2 tablespoons of cornstarch as it heats, then

This recipe for smoky creamed corn with green chilies uses some cornstarch as a thickener, but also gets much of its velvety texture by pureeing two-thirds of the corn in a blender. A mere teaspoon of butter goes a long way in adding a familiar richness to the complex blend of sweet and spicy flavors.

The Washington Post

Chervil, an herb that's relatively uncommon and under-used in this country, lends a subtle licorice flavor to this bright-tasting side dish. You probably won't find chervil in clamshell packs at the supermarket; your best bet is a farmers market. If you can, do what we did: Buy the plant from a farmers market or nursery and give it a home in your garden.

Fennel and tarragon, both of which also have a licorice tang, can stand in for chervil if necessary, but in smaller

It's important not to over-cook the potatoes in this dish; if you do, they will start to fall apart when you toss them with the dressing. Adapted from "Cooking From the Garden," edited by Ruth Lively and Courtney Jordan (Taunton Press, 2010).

NEW POTATOES WITH CHERVIL VINAIGRETTE

4 servings

1 pound small new potatoes

3 tablespoons olive oil
1 tablespoon red wine vinegar or sherry vinegar
1/8 teaspoon salt
Pinch freshly ground black pepper
1 small shallot, minced (1 tablespoon)
10 to 15 stems chives, chopped (1 tablespoon)
Leaves from 2 stems flat-leaf parsley, chopped (1 tablespoon)
Leaves from 18 small sprigs chervil, chopped (2 tablespoons)

cover by several inches. Bring to a boil over medium-high heat, then cook for 10 to 20 minutes, just until tender; check often, as the cooking time will depend on the size and freshness of the potatoes. Drain, and allow to cool for a few minutes.

While the potatoes are cooling, whisk together the oil, vinegar, salt, pepper and shallot in a small bowl. Taste, and add salt as needed.

When the potatoes have cooled enough to handle, cut them in half and place them in a medium serving bowl.

Whisk the vinaigrette once more, and pour it over the warm potatoes. Toss gently until the potatoes are well coated. Just before serving, add the chives, parsley and chervil; toss to evenly distribute the herbs.

Iranian scientist again says CIA abducted him

By Greg Miller and Thomas Erdbrink
The Washington Post

An Iranian nuclear scientist who had gone missing in Saudi Arabia last summer stepped out of a cab in front of Iran's diplomatic mission in Washington on Monday, asking for a ticket back to his homeland. Shahram Amiri told officials that he had been abducted by U.S. intelligence operatives and had spent much of the past year in Tucson being questioned about Iran's nuclear ambitions.

Amiri's reappearance was as mysterious as his disappearance and came just weeks after a series of Internet videos added to the intrigue surrounding the case. In the videos, Amiri claimed alternately to have been kidnapped by the CIA and to have come to this country on his own accord to pursue a PhD.

The case has emerged as a source of embarrassment for both governments. The Obama administration faces the departure of someone whose defection had been considered an intelligence coup. Iran described Amiri's desire to the leave the United States as a setback for American efforts, but Amiri may have compromised the secrecy of Iran's nuclear endeavors.

According to an official familiar with the account Amiri gave at the mission, his pleas to be released were finally granted when he was brought to Washington and sent to a nondescript storefront where Iranian representatives work in a space officially operated by Pakistan's embassy.

Within hours of arriving at the mission, Amiri told state-run Iranian television that "my kidnapping was a disgraceful act for America. ... I was under enormous psychological pressure and supervision of armed agents in the past 14 months."

U.S. officials disputed Amiri's account, insisting that he defected voluntarily and provided valuable intelligence about Iran's nuclear program before increased worries over the safety of his family in Iran prompted him to seek a return. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton told reporters Tuesday that Amiri was and always had been free to go.

Turncoat Afghan soldier kills 3 British troopers

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — An Afghan soldier killed three British service members with gunfire and a rocket-propelled grenade in the dead of night, a betrayal that highlights the difficulties in rapidly building up Afghan security forces so that foreign troops can go home.

The soldier fled the base after carrying out the attack in southern Afghanistan early Tuesday, leaving his motive unclear. But the Taliban claimed that he was a militant sympathizer who was taken in by insurgents after the assault — one that could further weaken support in Britain for an unpopular war that has now taken the lives of 318 Britons.

In London, Prime Minister David Cameron condemned the killings as "appalling" but insisted the attack should not change NATO's strategy of working alongside the Afghan army. Four other British service members were wounded in the attack on a base in northern Helmand province that is home to members of the 1st Battalion Royal Gurkha Rifles.

Separately, the British Ministry of Defense reported that a fourth British service member — a Royal Marine from 40 Commando Royal Marines — was shot and killed while on foot patrol in Sangin district, which is next to Nahr-i-Saraj district where the attack by the Afghan soldier happened.

It was the second time in eight months that an Afghan turned against British troops partnering with local security forces. In November, an Afghan policeman killed five British soldiers at a checkpoint in Helmand.

Loren G. Benner

Loren G. Benner was born Feb. 16, 1943, in Ontario, Ore., to Homer M. and Mable Atherton Benner. He slipped away peacefully late Saturday night July 10, 2010, at home.

Loren grew up and graduated high school in Nampa. He joined the Army and served two years in Germany as a crypto operator. He maintained that high security clearance all his life. After serving his country, he returned home and went to work for AT&T in the construction department. He held many positions with then-US West. He retired from there after 35 years of service.

Loren married Cheryl Lemmon Benner in October of 1966. They have three children, 10 grandchildren, one great-grandson and another one due any day. Loren was called "Dad" by many as he was willing to help most anyone where or when he could. He had a rough exterior but to those who knew him, he had a heart of gold. He loved telling his stories and would embellish the facts to entertain the listener. He loved the out of doors and was one merit badge shy of his Eagle Scout Award. His family enjoyed camping with him because he made it entertaining and enjoyable. Loren loved to hunt and fish, play golf, bowl, ride his Gold Wing motorcycle, work with wood and recently, a return to photography.

His health was difficult for him in recent years and his ability to do most of the things he enjoyed diminished. He made the most of each day with a good attitude. He will be missed by many but not as much as by his family.

Services are under the direction of White Mortuary "Chapel by the Park" in Twin Falls.

WWI soldier buried at Arlington, 91 years after dying in France

By Michael E. Ruane and Edward Cody
The Washington Post

On June 8, 1921, an Army captain wrote Mrs. Nora Grady of New York to report that officials had been unable to find the body of her brother, Thomas D. Costello, who had been killed in France during the late war.

The captain reassured Mrs. Grady that the search would continue. But "some time may yet elapse before definitive information can be given in this case."

On Monday, 89 years later — and 91 years after Costello, a private in the 60th Infantry Regiment, was killed by German artillery in a patch of woods called the Bois de Bonvaux — his remains were laid to rest at Arlington National Cemetery.

He was buried at 11 a.m. on a hill beneath a freshly trimmed swamp oak, not far from his World War I commander, Gen. John J. "Black Jack" Pershing, who had led the "doughboys" to Europe in 1917.

A warm breeze rustled the leaves as a bugler played taps and a French Army colonel came by to pay his respects. "I wanted to show the gratitude of my country," said Col. Brice HouDET.

Costello's fairly complete skeleton was discovered by relic hunters in eastern France in 2006, along with the remains of several other soldiers, and artifacts such as a blue-beaded rosary, a smashed French coin, a pocketknife, toothbrushes and the remnants of boots and uniforms.

He was identified after an investigation by the Defense

Department's Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command that matched, among other things, dental records and evidence of the fatal head wound Costello had suffered.

Pentagon officials said it was one of only a handful of instances in recent years in which the remains of a World War I casualty were discovered and identified.

Also present Monday was a

Costello family descendant, Michael J. Frisbie, 43, a truck driver from Stockton Springs, Maine, who flew down for the funeral with his wife, Leanne, and daughter, Brittani. They sat in the green-covered graveside chairs reserved for family.

Frisbie, who had no idea he was a relative until he was contacted about two years ago by a Pentagon genealogist, said he believes that Costello was his great-great uncle. But the distance of the connection "doesn't matter," Frisbie said. "He's a fallen soldier, and if I can honor him, that's great."

The story begins on the evening of Sept. 16, 1918, as Costello's regiment was digging in after an advance under heavy artillery and machine-gun fire, according to the

The attack was part of the huge American-led offensive around Saint-Mihiel, France, that came as allied forces battered the German army in the closing months of the war.

As the men of Costello's Company H dug in about 7:30 p.m., an artillery shell struck a group of them. Costello, 26, was hit in the head by a shell fragment. A hole in his skull and fracture lines characteristic of "high-energy events" were evident when his remains were unearthed, investigators found.

First Sgt. Harold A. Engdahl witnessed Costello's death.

"I picked him up and endeavored to stop the flow of blood," Engdahl reported afterward. "But it was impossible with the means at hand. I tried to get him to speak but he never regained consciousness, and died in a very few minutes."

Costello was one of 42 men in his regiment killed during the six-day offensive, according to a history of the 5th Infantry Division, to which the regiment was attached.

A "Grave Location Blank" in his Archives burial file indicates that he was buried in the woods on Sept. 24, 1918, his grave marked with a cross, which later must have vanished.

Pentagon investigators reported that the remains were found at the edge of a potato field between the Bois de Bonvaux and the Bois de Grande Fontaine, near the town of Jaulny, about 200 miles east of Paris.

Martha Alma (Bates) Campbell

Martha Alma (Bates) Campbell died Sunday, July 11, 2010, at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center.

Martha was born Aug. 6, 1918, to Wilford and Eva Dunn at House Creek Ranch in the Three Creek area. She grew up on the 7U Ranch, where she worked with her parents. It was there that she learned to ride the horses. To stay warm she would ride her horse (Ribbons) bareback to the one-room school house. She graduated high school in Hollister, where she became an excellent student. She loved to spell words and though she was unable to recognize her letters following a stroke earlier this year, she was able to write and spell with ease. She believed in an education and continued hers when she graduated from the Twin Falls Business College.

Through a close friend, she met her eternal companion, Earl L. Bates; they were married in the Idaho Falls Temple in 1940. They were blessed with three children, Linda, Michael and Claudia. Martha loved to work and was never idle. She worked for the Twin Falls Title Company. For many years she and Earl ran Valley Taxi Cab out of their home. Martha found her calling when she started Bo Peep Daycare in 1962. She provided kindergarten and preschool for 46 years to thousands of children spanning three generations, many of whom would return to visit and thank her for their home away from home. She loved the children and made a positive difference in their lives.

Mom was blessed with a healthy and active life; in her 85th year, she enjoyed a white water rafting trip on the Salmon River. She always loved to dance and, in 2008, she married her dancing partner, John Campbell. John was kind and good to her for the past two years. They enjoyed dancing and working around the home; you would have thought they were in their '20s. Mom was young at heart and enjoyed helping those who could not do for themselves.

She was preceded in death by her husband, Earl L. Bates in 1968; and a daughter, Linda. Martha is survived by her husband, John Campbell; son, Michael Bates (Irina) of Salem, Ore.; daughter, Claudia Radmall (Gary) of Twin Falls; six grandchildren; and 18 great-grandchildren.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, July 16, at the Twin Falls LDS South Stake Center located on the corner of South Harrison and Orchard Drive. Burial will follow at Sunset Memorial Park.

Q How do I Avoid Caregiver Burnout?

A Caring for a loved one can be deeply rewarding but also very demanding. It can strain even the most resilient individual. There may be no limit to the care you want to provide your loved one but it is important to preserve your own health and well-being. The very person you are caring for may also suffer if you do not look after your own needs. Looking after yourself is a crucial part of being a good caregiver. Here are some tips to help prevent and alleviate burnout:

Accept help - take advantage of the many resources and tools available. In hospice, RESPITE care is available for your family member for five days at least every 90 days. Take a break—it can make all the difference—it's ok to ask for help.

Join a support group, stay informed - learn more about the condition your loved one is facing and how best to manage it. Stay connected - stay in touch with family, friends and other caregivers.

Stay healthy - maintain a healthy diet and regular exercise and pamper yourself

Celebrate what you do - think about the comfort, care and dignity you are giving your loved one. Be proud of what you do, you are part of a special group.

Don't struggle on your own, there is help. Take advantage of the local resources in your area. For more information, call Alliance Home Health and Hospice at 208-733-2234.

Finally: NL ends All-Star drought

By Janie McCauley
Associated Press writer

ANAHEIM, Calif. — One key swing by Brian McCann pulled the National League out of the All-Star shadows. McCann's three-run double in the seventh inning provided the NL all the offense it needed to capture its first Midsummer Classic since 1996 with a 3-1 victory Tuesday night. "Enough was enough," St. Louis pitcher Adam Wainwright said. In a year of dominant pitching, young starters David Price and Ubaldo Jimenez set the tone — and got even more help from the tricky shadows. Nearly the entire field at Angel Stadium was bathed in odd patterns of sunlight for a twilight first pitch, creating more awkward swings and misses than usual in baseball's annual talent show. Even that bouncing Rally Monkey on the big screen in a red AL jersey couldn't change things this time. The National League earns home-field advantage in this year's World Series. "It's a big deal. I think home teams play better at home," said NL manager Charlie Manuel, whose Phillies have reached the last two World Series and won in 2008. "It feels good, it feels real good. I talked to our guys before the game and told them how important home-field advantage was." The AL didn't go down without some ninth-inning drama, started by David Ortiz's leadoff single. But Jonathan Broxton sealed it, helped by an alert play from right fielder Marlon Byrd and shaky baserunning by Big Papi. Ortiz was on first with one out when John Buck hit a blooper that Byrd scooped up and threw to second for a forceout on the slow-moving Boston DH. With Alex Rodriguez standing on the steps in the AL dugout, Ian Kinsler flied out and the NL had its win. A-Rod never got in the game. "It felt awesome for us to get the win and break the See FINALLY, Sports 2

Tribe punishes Hawks

Buhl scores in variety of ways in rout of T.F.

By Michael Cole
Times-News writer

Buhl knows how to score runs. Whether its massive home runs or sacrifice bunts, the Tribe is keen on lighting up the scoreboard and advancing base runners. Buhl was at it again Tuesday as they beat the host Twin Falls Hawks 16-4 in Game 1 of their American Legion Baseball Class A doubleheader. The Tribe jumped out early on the Hawks, scoring five runs in the first two innings. Demonstrating that the Tribe will do anything to score, heavy hitter Isaac McCreery laid down a perfect bunt to advance a runner as part of a three-run second inning. "We needed to just get going and produce runs," said McCreery. "You have to do the small things and play baseball the way that it should be played. We try to work on helping each other out and do things that benefit the team." "We do the little things and respect the game of baseball," said Buhl coach Brady Swallow. "When the players do those little things and become confident and do what we ask them to do then they can swing away. That seems to produce a lot of runs for us." Although small ball was the game early, the Tribe's big bats took over and things quickly got out of hand for the Hawks. Cader Owen and McCreery both blasted home runs and ended the game with multiple extra-base hits.

Yankee owner Steinbrenner dead at 80

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — He was baseball's bombastic Boss. He rebuilt the New York Yankees dynasty, ushering in the era of multi-million-dollar salaries and accepting nothing less in return than World Series championships. He fired managers. Rehired them. And fired them again. He butted heads with commissioners and fellow owners, insulted his players and dominated tabloid headlines — even upstaging the All-Star game on the day of his death. Michael

Steinbrenner

Steinbrenner III, who both inspired and terrorized the Yankees in more than three decades as owner, died Tuesday of a heart attack at age 80. "He was and always will be as much of a New York Yankee as Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Joe DiMaggio, Mickey Mantle, Yogi Berra, Whitey Ford and all of the other Yankee legends," baseball commissioner Bud Selig said. Once reviled by fans for his overbearing and tempestuous nature, Steinbrenner mellowed in his final decade and became beloved by employees and rivals alike for his success. Steinbrenner was taken from his home to St. Joseph's Hospital in Tampa, Fla., and died about 6:30 a.m., a person close to the owner told The Associated Press. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the team had not disclosed those details.

"George was a fierce competitor who was the perfect fit for the city that never sleeps — colorful, dynamic and always reaching for the stars," former President Bill Clinton said. Yankees captain Derek Jeter added: "He expected perfection." In 37½ years as owner, Steinbrenner whipped a moribund $10 million team into a $1.6 billion colossus that became the model of a modern franchise, one with its own TV network and ballpark food business. Under his often brutal but always colorful reign, the Yankees won seven World Series championships, 11 American League pennants and 16 AL East titles, going on spectacular spending sprees that caused Larry Lucchino, president of the rival Boston Red Sox, to dub Steinbrenner's Yankees the "Evil Empire." He moved the Yankees from their

British Open: Woods going for more history at home of golf

By Doug Ferguson

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland — From the middle of the ninth fairway, just to the right of a pot bunker that he managed to avoid, Tiger Woods considered two options from 85 yards into a gentle breeze and executed both of them perfectly. He gave a hard rap with his new putter and sent the ball bouncing along the links of St. Andrews until it rolled onto the green and settled 12 feet left of the flag. Then with a sand wedge, Woods sent the ball into the air with just the right trajectory. It never left the flag and stopped about 6 feet away. Jazz add center Al Jefferson in trade with Timberwolves

By Jon Krawczynski
Associated Press writer

MINNEAPOLIS — In their quest to get more athletic, faster and financially flexible, the Minnesota Timberwolves were looking to move power forward Al Jefferson's slow-it-down, low-post game and chunky contract. The Utah Jazz were searching for a replacement for Carlos Boozer who can score and rebound on the block and divert some attention from point guard Deron Williams on the perimeter.

They found the right match in each other. The Timberwolves agreed to send Jefferson to the Jazz for two future first-round draft picks and center Kosta Koufos, the teams confirmed Tuesday. Utah used the traded player exception it got from Chicago in the Boozer deal to complete the transaction and give Minnesota even more salary cap flexibility going forward. Jefferson averaged 17.1 points and 9.3 rebounds last season for the Timberwolves in his first year back from a major knee injury in February 2009. But the Wolves have signed center Darko Milicic, agreed to terms with center Nikola Pekovic and traded for Michael Beasley to reshape a small front line into a bigger, and sleeker, unit. In the end, Jefferson was viewed as expendable because his style of play, while extremely effective on the offensive end, does not fit with what the Timberwolves want to do under coach Kurt Rambis. "With Kevin Love and Michael Beasley on the team, there wouldn't have been enough playing time for everybody to showcase Al," Timberwolves president David Kahn said in a conference call on Tuesday night. He will see plenty of action with the perennial playoff contender in Utah, teaming with Paul Millsap to help fill a void created when Boozer went to Chicago. "We are happy to acquire a young power player who has developed into one of the best low-post scorers in the league," Jazz GM Kevin O'Connor said in a statement provided by the team. "We gave up significant assets to obtain Al and we look forward to watching him progress with our team." Jefferson came to the Timberwolves in 2007 as the main cog in the blockbuster deal that sent Kevin Garnett to Boston. He averaged 23.1 points and 11 rebounds in 50 games the following season before he blew out his right knee in 2009. Jefferson was the last remaining player from that deal. Former general manager Kevin McHale was fond of Jefferson's footwork and See JAZZ, Sports 2

Agent: Ilgauskas to sign with Heat

MIAMI (AP) — Zydrunas Ilgauskas has dealt Cleveland another blow by planning to follow LeBron James to the Miami Heat.

The veteran center, who started playing for Cleveland in 1997 and has never suited up for another NBA team, expects to sign a two-year contract with the Heat later this week, agent Herb Rudoy said Tuesday. The two-year deal would come with a player option for the second season, Rudoy said.

“We’ve agreed to agree,” Rudoy said.

Ilgauskas’ decision became known less than a week after James — who played a role in recruiting the 7-foot-3 Lithuanian to South Florida — sparked outrage and outcry in Cleveland by going on a made-for-television special and saying he was joining the Heat.

This departure won’t generate the same reaction from Clevelanders, but it’ll hurt nonetheless.

Ilgauskas was a fan favorite for more than a decade, and when he returned to the Cavs after getting traded to the Washington Wizards this past season, a sellout crowd welcomed him with huge signs bearing the letter “Z” — his moniker. Ilgauskas never played for the Wizards, quickly getting bought out and then returning to Cleveland after a 30-day waiting period.

Playing with James again was a major factor in Ilgauskas’ decision.

“LeBron was very encouraging and explained the whole situation,” Ilgauskas told the South Florida Sun-Sentinel. “And, obviously, he’s my friend, and him being there made it a lot easier to choose.”

Playing as a reserve for the first time, Ilgauskas averaged 7.4 points and 5.4 rebounds last season. For his career, Ilgauskas has averaged 13.8 points and 7.7 rebounds, plus has played in two All-Star games.

BOBCATS SEND CHANDLER TO DALLAS IN 5-PLAYER DEAL

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The Charlotte Bobcats completed a wild 24 hours of trade discussions with a deal on Tuesday that does include center Tyson Chandler after all.

He’s just not heading to the team he thought a day earlier.

After a potential trade with Toronto fell apart, the Bobcats sent Chandler and fellow center Alexis Ajinca to the Dallas Mavericks for center Erick Dampier, forward Eduardo Najera, shooting guard Matt Carroll and cash considerations.

While the Bobcats get financial flexibility with Dampier’s non-guaranteed $13 million contract, the injury-plagued Chandler is off to this third team in a year after being acquired from New Orleans last summer.

“We could not be more excited to add Tyson Chandler,” said Mavericks general manager Donnie Nelson. “He is one of the most versatile big men in the league today. He gives our front line a defensive, shot-blocking, athletic punch we haven’t had here in awhile.”

Bobcats general manager Rod Higgins said the Bobcats will either waive Dampier or make another trade with him. That would allow the Bobcats clear about $7 million in salary-cap space because they dump Chandler’s $12.7 million contract and Ajinca’s $1.5 million deal and take in Carroll ($4.3 million) and Najera ($2.8 million).

KOBE BRYANT IS TRYING TO RECRUIT RAJA BELL TO THE LAKERS

LOS ANGELES — Kobe Bryant has done a lot of things in his career, winning five championships, two NBA Finals MVP trophies and a regular-season MVP award.

Now he’s doing something else — recruiting for the Lakers.

Derek Fisher credited the 12-time All-Star with being a main reason to return to the Lakers, and now Bryant will put aside past differences to meet with free-agent guard Raja Bell on Wednesday in Los Angeles.

Bryant once said he had “bigger fish to fry” than Bell after a squabble with the former Phoenix Suns guard, but now Bryant is hoping the Lakers can reel him in with what’s left of their midlevel exception: $1.77 million next season.

Bell, who will be 34 in September, played only six games with Charlotte and Golden State last season because of a torn ligament in his left wrist, but he is a career 41.1 percent three-point shooter and still capable of solid on-ball defense.

Bell to the Lakers is not a sure thing. He is having discussions with five other teams — Miami, Chicago, San Antonio, Portland and Utah — and will not make up his mind until next week, said his agent, Herb Rudoy.

Still, it’s interesting to note that the former adversaries will be meeting today.

“I think (Bryant) has a lot of respect for Raja and Raja has a lot of respect for him,” Rudoy said. “I think they would rather play with each other than against each other.”

HORNETS, GM JEFF BOWER PART WAYS

NEW ORLEANS — New Orleans Hornets general manager Jeff Bower stepped down on Tuesday, parting ways with a franchise that is trying to prove to restless All-Star Chris Paul that it is serious about winning.

The sudden announcement from the Hornets stated that Bower and the team “mutually agreed” on the move, but Bower was not made available for comment and he did not answer a call to his cell phone.

“We feel it is in the best interest for us and Jeff to part ways at this time,” Hornets president Hugh Weber said. “Our search for a new general manager is already under way. We will target basketball minds that are highly respected in the basketball circles.”

Cowboys sweep AA doublerheader

Times-News

The Twin Falls Cowboys made it 12 in a row as they swept the Boise Centennials 10-6 and 16-4 in an American Legion Baseball doubleheader Tuesday.

The Cowboys backed up pitcher Eric Harr with defense, and run producers Jared Jordan and Zeb Sneed helped the Cowboys seal up the victory in Game 1.

“We played hard all the way,” said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir. “Harr was throwing a lot of strikes and we played extremely good defense behind him. They fought back, but we found a way to win.”

The Cowboys pounced on Boise early in the nightcap and scored in all five innings.

Ryan Petersen and Michael Williams both homered for the Cowboys in the win.

“We are playing really well and that is a good thing for this time of the year,” said Stadelmeir.

streak,” Broxton said.

Until MVP McCann cleared the bases, Robinson Cano’s fifth-inning sacrifice fly stood as the lone run in a game expected to be decided by the loaded pitching staffs on each side. McCann’s deep fly ball to the warning track in right gave the NL hope in the fifth. When he made good with that bases-loaded double off Matt Thornton, Atlanta’s steady catcher hit second base and pumped his right fist. The three guys who scored headed to the dugout with a renewed swagger.

“You dream of moments like this as a kid. It was amazing,” said McCann, a five-time All-Star relatively unknown before this night.

Cano and his fellow Yankees All-Stars wore black armbands after the death of longtime New York owner George Steinbrenner from a heart attack earlier Tuesday in Tampa, Fla., at age 80. Pictures of The Boss showed on two video screens before a pregame moment of silence, and flags hung at half-staff.

looks to,” Yankees and AL manager Joe Girardi said. “A great man in baseball passed. He’s meant so much to not only this organization, but to the game of baseball, and to all of us personally.”

It took the NL 14 years to break through after several close calls. The National League lost the last two 4-3, including that 15-inning affair in 2008 at Yankee Stadium. The two before that were also one-run defeats. In 2002, they tied 7-7.

Phillies chairman Bill Giles had razed Manuel that his job was on the line if the NL didn’t finally win again.

“When the team gets going then every one gets going,” said Owen. “At district every one is going to be gunning for us so it is important for us to stay sharp.”

The Hawks looked deflated going into the bottom of the fifth inning as they trailed 16-0.

Marcus Lively looked for another shutout performance for Buhl, but the hustle from Jon Cron and Kaleb Price started a four-run Hawks’ rally that spoiled the shutout.

“We just have to hang in there and eventually guys are going to catch up to the pitcher. They just needed to settle down and not get anxious at the plate,” said Twin Falls assistant coach Nathan Bishop. Lively only gave up four runs and struck out nine in five innings.

“Marcus is a lot stronger and more confident,” said Swallow. “His speed and location are good. It is a different angle to have a tall lefty throwing off speed pitches. He has been throwing well since the Midseason Classic and has played nothing but solid baseball.”

Tour de France coming down to Schleck vs. Contador

SAINT-JEAN-DE-MAU-RIENNE, France (AP) — Not yet half way through, and the Tour de France is already looking like a two-man contest.

Andy Schleck of Luxembourg vs. Alberto Contador of Spain.

Schleck took the yellow jersey from a banged-up and bawling Cadel Evans in Tuesday's last ride on the high Alps in Stage 9, finishing 2 seconds behind French winner Sandy Casar and astiride defending champion Contador.

The race has another 11 stages to go, and it's possible that one of several pre-race title hopefuls could rebound. But it'd take guts, savvy and skill in the face of the mountain prowess of Schleck and Contador.

Seven-time Tour winner Lance Armstrong says he's out of contention.

This Tour favors strong climbers, with four punishing stages in the Pyrenees ahead in Week Three. A final time trial on the eve of the July 25 finish in Paris could play a role.

Schleck, the 25-year-old Saxo Bank team leader, has shown he's the unquestioned mountain master so far. He won Sunday's entree into the Alps in Stage 8, and lost only 2 seconds to the winner Tuesday.

Only Contador has shown any sign of being able to keep up.

"I think he and I are a little above the others," Schleck said of their duel Tuesday when he repeatedly tried to shake the Spaniard to no avail. "I didn't put time on Contador, but he couldn't drop me either."

Casar led a sprint among seven breakaway riders — including Contador and Schleck — at the end of the 204.5-kilometer (127-mile) Alpine ride from Morzine to Saint-Jean-La-Maurienne, containing three tough climbs.

Evans, the world champion and a two-time Tour runner-up, was dropped on the fabled Madeleine pass — the day's last big climb — and lost more than 8 minutes on Schleck and Contador.

Overall, Schleck leads his Spanish rival by 41 seconds, while Spain's Samuel Sanchez — who finished eighth, 52 seconds back — jumped to third and trails the leader by 2:45.

The shakeout is clear. A year ago, when the pack had gotten over the first high mountains, 14 riders were within 2:45 of leader Rinaldo Nocentini. At the same point in 2008, nine were within 2:32 of the leader: Evans.

Many pre-race prognosticators expected Contador and Schleck to duke it out in the mountains. The Spaniard is better in the time trials, and Schleck wants as big a lead possible going into the July 24 race against the clock.

Other contenders will be looking to pounce at any sign of frailty from them: Russia's Denis Menchov is fourth — 2:58 back. RadioShack rider Levi Leipheimer of the United States trails Schleck by 3:59, in sixth. Menchov's Rabobank teammate Robert Gesink of the Netherlands is seventh, 4:22 off the leader's pace. Luis Leon Sanchez is 4:41 back, in eighth.

Schleck all but challenged those behind him to give it their best shot in Wednesday's 10th stage, a 179-kilometer ride from Chambéry to Gap which has three medium- to high-level ascents.

"The others also can attack too, but they don't, so..." he said. "If I were in a position, 5, 6, 8, 9 minutes (back), I would tomorrow go all in and somehow try to turn this game around."

"Everybody's free to try that, but right now, it looks like, yeah, it's Alberto vs. me," he added.

Contador insisted it's not a two-man race. But he's watching Schleck most of all.

"There are still a lot of riders who can get away in breakaways, and there are still a lot of stages where they can attack from far out," Contador said, while acknowledging: "The gaps are bigger than expected."

Steinbrenner legacy more than feuds and bluster

Owning the New York Yankees, George Steinbrenner liked to say, was a lot like owning the Mona Lisa.

Not that he always treated his team like a piece of fine art. Some of the things “The Boss” did would have wiped the smile right off the famous model’s face.

This was a man who belittled players, infuriated fellow owners and drove managers to the depths of despair. Twice he received lengthy bans from baseball, and many in the game would have been happy had it been for good.

Steinbrenner threw money at weak-armed pitchers and changed managers almost as often as he changed ties. He gave “Mr. October” a stage to shine and mocked “Mr. May” when he didn’t.

Newsweek featured him on its Aug. 6, 1990, cover when he was suspended from baseball for more than two years as “The Most Hated Man in Baseball.” Sports Illustrated put him on its March 1, 1993, cover in his return, dressed as Napoleon and posing on a white horse.

“The Boss” always seemed larger than life. That might be even more true now that he’s dead.

His death, fittingly enough, came on the day of the All-Star game, with the usual complement of Yankees in the American League lineup. It wasn’t long before friends and former foes began swapping tales of all things George.

Most, of course, were about the legendary feuds and the clubhouse rants. The times he fired Billy Martin and the times he kept hiring him back.

The phantom punch he claimed he threw at a couple of boisterous Dodger fans at the 1981 World Series.

His character became a regular on the most popular

comedy show in the country. On “Seinfeld,” the actor portraying Steinbrenner once threatened to move the Yankees to New Jersey just to make people mad.

There’s so much material his obit could be turned into a book. The book could become a movie.

Lost in it all, though, is this: For all his bluster and all his blunders, Steinbrenner was always a man ahead of his time.

He rescued the pinstripes and restored a once proud franchise to greatness. Not afraid to spend money to make money, he changed forever how baseball did business.

“His impact on the game cannot be denied,” Chicago White Sox owner Jerry Reinsdorf said.

For that alone, today’s players should worship at the shrine of Steinbrenner. He was the first to open up the checkbook as free agency exploded, and with each succeeding player the contracts seemed to get bigger and bigger.

The average salary in the major leagues was just $36,566 when Steinbrenner parlayed a $186,000 investment into control of the Yankees in 1973. Ten years later it had risen to $289,194 and a decade after that, players were averaging more than $1 million a season.

His fellow owners thought he was mad. They couldn’t imagine risking their investments on high-priced employees and grumbled that Steinbrenner was ruining the good thing they all enjoyed.

Anger soon turned to envy, though, as the Yankees kept winning and Steinbrenner kept restocking the franchise. Baltimore owner Edward Bennett

Williams said in 1982 that the Yankees had so many good players they stockpiled outfielders “like nuclear weapons.”

For Steinbrenner, though, it was just good business. The millions he invested in Reggie Jackson early on helped win the Yankees championships and created a legend in “Mr. October.” Fans returned to the ballpark they had deserted in leaner years, and the team he and his partners bought for an $8.7 million net price would become a franchise valued by Forbes at $1.6 billion today.

Signing with the Yankees carried risk as well as reward because “The Boss” expected his workers to earn their money. Dave Winfield was such a disappointment that Steinbrenner called him “Mr. May,” during the 1985 season and the owner wasn’t afraid to let everyone know when his expectations were not being met.

Public humiliation was usually the weapon of choice, and Steinbrenner wielded it sharply. Pitcher Doyle Alexander found that out after signing a four-year, $2.2 million contract in 1982, then getting hit hard almost every time he took the mound.

After an August loss to the Tigers in which Alexander was shellacked, Steinbrenner issued this statement:

“After what happened tonight I’m having Doyle Alexander flown back to New York to undergo a physical. I’m afraid some of our players might get hurt playing behind him.”

Still, the players kept coming. They had no real choice. Steinbrenner was usually first with the checkbook, and his checks always had more zeroes in them than those written by other owners.

T.O. concerned NFL teams see him as a troublemaker

NEW YORK (AP) — Terrell Owens would like to point out that he’s never been disciplined by the NFL for off-field conduct, unlike some of the league’s “golden boys.”

No team has yet to sign him as a free agent, and the polarizing receiver worries they’re swayed by the perception he’s a troublemaker. A perception he believes he disproved with his agreeable behavior in Buffalo during a disappointing season last year.

“There were a number of times where prior I probably would have reacted, said something I wasn’t supposed to say,” Owens told The Associated Press on Tuesday. “I really had some restraint, very patient.”

Did any owners notice? “It’s almost like I didn’t play last year,” he lamented.

Training camps open for veterans in about two weeks, but Owens sounded as though he may even prefer waiting to sign until after the start of the preseason. The 36-year-old promises he’ll make sure to be in excellent shape. And like many players he believes camp is too long, anyway.

“Anything can happen from now to the beginning of the season,” he said. “Injuries, anything, to where I may be brought in to help a team win.”

As long as he signs early enough “to get some rhythm, some chemistry, learn the offense, and develop that camaraderie with the guys.”

Owens is clearly sensitive to the coverage he receives in the media. He disputed talk that he’s making exorbitant salary demands.

“They’re always focused on what has happened earlier in my career,” he complained.

“It’s not like I can’t play,” Owens added. “There is some type of influence that they’re making in the minds of teams and owners and GMs.”

What happened earlier in his career — in San Francisco, Philadelphia and Dallas — was that he too often said what he wasn’t supposed to. NFL executives are wary of players who might find trouble off the field as commissioner Roger Goodell has cracked down on misbehavior.

“If that’s the case,” Owens said, “then I definitely should be on somebody’s team.”

Sign T.O., improve your team’s image? In an off-season when Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger was suspended for six games for violating the NFL’s personal conduct policy, maybe that doesn’t sound so far-fetched.

“Some of the golden boys that they kind of highlight throughout the course of the season, those are the guys that are getting in trouble,” Owens said. “Somehow I get lumped into those topics, which blows my mind.”

“I’ve never been in any trouble. I know right from wrong. I try to make the right choices and judgments when I’m out in the public.”

What may be scaring off teams more is his production during his one season in Buffalo: 55 catches for 829 yards and five touchdowns. Not helping matters is the uncertainty surrounding the collective bargaining agreement.

“Now they feel like I’m slowing down or I can’t play,” Owens said. “But those numbers can be deceiving.”

He would also like to point out that the Bills’ coaching staff upheaval and offensive line injuries weren’t exactly conducive to offensive domination.

Owens plans to play two or three more seasons, after which his career aspirations include acting and interior design. He was in New York this week promoting his reality show on VH1, which had its second season premiere Sunday.

Ex-NFL star Taylor pleads not guilty to N.Y. rape

NEW CITY, N.Y. (AP) — Hall of Fame linebacker Lawrence Taylor pleaded not guilty on Tuesday to an indictment that alleges he had sex with a 16-year-old girl in a New York hotel room.

The former NFL star allegedly paid $300 to the girl, a Bronx runaway, for their encounter in May. Taylor pleaded not guilty through his lawyer to third-degree rape, patronizing a prostitute, sexual abuse and endangering a child.

In the gallery, before his case was called, Taylor, 51, smiled, looked around and said, “It must be a slow news day.” He also said to a friend, “You’re not playing golf today, are you?”

Earlier, when a reporter asked outside court if he was guilty, Taylor responded, “Grow up.”

Taylor was arrested May 6, after the girl’s uncle contacted New York City police. He could be imprisoned for up to four years if convicted.

Defense attorney Arthur Aidala said Taylor would challenge the girl’s identification of him. Aidala also said the defense would look into whether all statements made in the case were voluntary.

“A plea bargain is possible at any time in any case,” he said in response to questions. But in this case, “There is no plea bargain. There is no offer.”

One potential witness is a 23-year-old woman who told defense investigators that she heard the girl say after meeting Taylor, “It was weird. ... We didn’t even have sex.”

Aidala said Taylor is “doing the best he can under the circumstances.”

“Mr. Taylor is very much looking forward to going forward, putting this behind him, and going on to live his life,” the lawyer said.

was on the cusp of making or advancing in the playoffs last season. He specifically mentioned Cincinnati, though the Bengals signed Antonio Bryant after meeting with Owens in March, presumably ending their pursuit of other top receivers.

Owens expressed confidence he will be playing somewhere in the NFL when the season begins.

The People’s Champ eyes an Open title

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland (AP) — Phil Mickelson rolled in an 18-foot birdie putt on the final hole of practice — oh, how he’d love to be in that same position for a win at the British Open come Sunday — then headed off to take care of his other duties.

“Give me about 10 or 15 minutes,” the People’s Champion shouted toward the fans clamoring for his autograph. “I’ll be right over there, behind the stands, to sign for you.”

After collecting his valuables and taking a brief respite in the St. Andrews clubhouse, Mickelson popped out on cue behind a barrier along Golf Place.

He worked up and down the line, looking everyone in the eye as he signed. He bantered with the crowd. He put his signature on everything from visors to programs to flags. The only time he balked was when someone put forward a ball to sign — a no-no for Mickelson, who, like many athletes, knows that sort of keepsake will usually make its way straight to eBay.

“No balls. I don’t sign balls,” Mickelson said politely. “Anything else I can get for you?”

Some may believe this is all an act. Some may believe that Mickelson sets aside ample time for signing at every tournament merely to improve his image, not because he feels any genuine connection with the fans.

Just try telling that to those people who walked away with an autograph and a sense that he really cares about them. Just listen to the roars if Mickelson walks toward the 18th green with a chance to claim the claret jug and add a fifth major title to an already impressive resume.

“Yes, I got him,” he replied.

“Ohhhh, brilliant,” she said, breaking into a relieved grin.

Mickelson said he feels a “spiritual” connection with St. Andrews, the birthplace of golf and a course that he feels gives him a real shot at winning his first British Open title, with its wide-open spaces that allow one to pull out the driver all around the course.

Indeed, there’s nothing he loves better than just gripping and ripping, even if it means throwing caution to that persistent wind sweeping in off St. Andrews Bay.

The chance to share triumphs with his fans — and, yes, even the foibles — are just as important, he added, even if some in the media and maybe even a fellow golfer or two might be skeptical of his motives.

“I’ve been very fortunate to have support from fans,” Mickelson said. “It’s meant a lot to me over the course of my career. It’s made it fun to go to the golf course, and it’s made it fun to interact with people, and it’s made it fun to spend time after rounds signing autographs and interacting.”

“That interpersonal relationship that golf provides — the kind many other sports don’t, being in a stadium setting — is really one of our greatest assets in this sport. The ability to play pro-ams and interact with regular amateur golfers. The ability to have personal contact with fans after the round or beforehand. All that really makes the game of golf great.”

Of course, greatness inside the ropes is defined by major titles. For Mickelson, who has captured three green jackets at Augusta along with a PGA Championship, there would be no better place to win another than this place.

“A career just doesn’t feel complete unless you’ve won here at St. Andrews,” Mickelson said. “I think all the players feel the same way.”

It would be quite a feat to top what happened in April, when Lefty locked up another Masters titles and was greeted just off the 18th green by his wife Amy, who’s been battling breast cancer.

Woods

and the right one for this day.

“But it depends on the wind,” Woods said later during his practice round at the British Open. “If the wind is blowing hard, you can’t hit it in the air. You have to putt it.”

For Woods, the key to the British Open always has been about control.

This year, that holds true on and off the golf course.

His biggest test Tuesday came not from the gorse bushes and pot bunkers that dot the landscape on the Old Course, but from a full house of reporters who wanted to know as much about his personal life as how he plans to play the Road Hole.

Unlike his last big press conference at a major, he didn’t lose his cool.

Asked about his marriage at the U.S. Open, he snapped back, “That’s none of your business.” Asked on Tuesday if his divorce is final, Woods calmly said, “I’m not going to go into that.”

He did reveal details of a breakup — with his putter. Woods is changing the flat stick for the first time in 12 years, going to a Nike model that he says will allow him to cope with greens that are on the slow side.

One reporter grilled him on his language, his spitting, throwing clubs and his tantrums on the golf course, then asked if he had any plans to be respectful at the home of golf.

Of the 34 questions he fielded, only 16 of them were related to his game, the claret jug and St. Andrews. Then again, Woods already has answered plenty of questions about winning an Open at the home of golf.

The way he has played the last two times at St. Andrews, it looks as though he owns the place.

Woods captured his first claret jug in 2000 when he did not hit into a single bunker all week — talk about control — and won by eight shots with a record score to par of 19-under 269. He won by five shots when the Open returned to St. Andrews five years later.

Now, he has a chance at even more history in a gray old town dripping with it.

No one has ever won the claret jug three times at St. Andrews. Woods remains the betting favorite, and not even his biggest rivals dispute that he likely will be a factor.

tradition-rich “House that Ruth Built” into a new $1.5 billion Yankee Stadium. Call it the “House the Boss Built.” He appeared there just four times: the April 2009 opener, the first two games of last year’s World Series and this year’s home opener, when Jeter and manager Joe Girardi went to his suite and personally delivered his seventh World Series ring.

“He was very emotional,” son Hal Steinbrenner said then.

Steinbrenner’s larger-than-life outbursts transcended sports and made him a pop culture figure whose firings were parodied on the TV comedy “Seinfeld”

and even by Steinbrenner himself in commercials.

“George was The Boss, make no mistake,” said Berra, the Hall of Famer who ended a 14-year feud with Steinbrenner in 1999. “He built the Yankees into champions, and that’s something nobody can ever deny. He was a very generous, caring, passionate man. George and I had our differences, but who didn’t? We became great friends over the last decade and I will miss him very much.”

Steinbrenner’s death, about 14 hours before the first pitch of the All-Star game in Anaheim, Calif., was the second in three days to rock the Yankees. Bob Sheppard, the team’s revered public address announcer from 1951-07, died Sunday at 99.

A video tribute was shown and players bowed their heads during a moment of silence before the national anthem was played at Angel Stadium. Jeter and the Yankees wore black armbands, and the U.S., Canadian and California flags were lowered to half-staff.

New York was 11 years removed from its last championship when Steinbrenner, then an obscure son of an Ohio shipbuilder, headed a group that bought the team from CBS Inc. on Jan. 3, 1973, for about $8.7 million net.

Today is Wednesday, July 14, the 195th day of 2010. There are 170 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On July 14, 1960, British researcher Jane Goodall arrived at the Gombe Stream Reserve in the Tanganyika Territory (in present-day Tanzania) to begin her famous study of chimpanzees in the wild.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1789, during the French Revolution, citizens of Paris stormed the Bastille prison and released the seven prisoners inside.

In 1798, Congress passed the Sedition Act, making it a federal crime to publish false, scandalous or malicious writing about the United States government.

In 1853, Commodore Matthew Perry relayed to Japanese officials a letter from President Millard Fillmore, requesting trade relations. (Fillmore's term of office had already expired by the time the letter was delivered.)

In 1881, outlaw William H. Bonney Jr., alias "Billy the Kid," was shot and killed by Sheriff Pat Garrett in Fort Sumner, N.M.

In 1913, Gerald Rudolph Ford Jr., the 38th president of the United States, was born Leslie Lynch King Jr. in Omaha, Neb.

In 1921, Italian-born anarchists Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were convicted in Dedham, Mass., of murdering a shoe company paymaster and his guard. (Sacco and Vanzetti were executed six years later.)

In 1958, the army of Iraq overthrew the monarchy.

In 1960, Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas was nominated for vice president at the Democratic national convention in Los Angeles.

In 1966, eight student nurses were murdered by Richard Speck in a Chicago dormitory.

Ten years ago: A powerful solar flare disrupted some satellite and shortwave radio communications. The 13th International AIDS Conference came to a close in Durban, South Africa. Actress Meredith MacRae of TV's "Petticoat Junction" died in Manhattan Beach, Calif. at 56.

Five years ago: Chief U.S. Justice William H. Rehnquist, ending a two-day stay in the hospital, pledged to continue working as long as his health permitted. (Rehnquist died in Sept. 2005.)

One year ago: At her Senate confirmation hearing, Supreme Court nominee Sonia Sotomayor pushed back vigorously against Republican charges that she would bring bias and a liberal agenda to the nation's highest bench. Disgraced financier Bernard Madoff arrived at the Butner Federal Correctional Complex in North Carolina to begin serving a 150-year sentence. The American League continued its dominance over the National League with a 4-3 win in the All-Star game at new Busch Stadium in St. Louis.

TWIN FALLS

DEAR ABBY: My girlfriend, "Donna," and I have shared a wonderful relationship for nearly three years. During her college days she had a sexual encounter with her best female friend. (They had been friends since high school.)

Although they graduated from college five years ago, they continue to see each other. Donna tells me that nothing sexual goes on between them. Personally, I don't trust her friend. Please help me get over this.

— TONY IN WHITTIER

DEAR TONY: Forget about not trusting Donna's longtime friend. Do you trust Donna? You have been together nearly three years and obviously, you talk about everything. Ask her if, after experimenting with her friend, she still has hankering in that direction. If the answer is no, believe her.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I have been in a relationship with a lady for the past few months. How do I tell her that I want out without hurting her badly?

I have tried a couple of times to end things, but she gets hysterical, starts crying and accuses me of wanting someone else, which is not true. Please give me some advice.

— IN A FIX

PASCAGOULA, MISS.

DEAR IN A FIX: If you want out, prepare yourself for her emotional reaction. As you can see, she does not take this kind of news well. Tell her again that you want to end the relationship. When she starts crying and accusing you of wanting someone else, hand her a tissue and tell her you think she's "great," but you're not ready to settle down with anyone right now.

DEAR ABBY: My husband doesn't like to go to funerals. In the 25 years we have been together, I think he has only been to three — and that was only because he had been asked to be a pallbearer. Fortunately, we haven't had to deal with many losses on either side of the family.

We were talking recently and he shared that he would not go to his own mother's funeral! They have a very close relationship, and he explained that he only wants to remember her in life, not in a coffin. I feel he should set aside his own uncomfortable feelings and be there for the rest of the family — especially his brothers and sisters. What do you think?

— PAM IN

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO

DEAR PAM: Your husband's feelings may change when the inevitable happens. However, whatever he decides — and I cannot stress this strongly enough — you should back him up, be there for him and not judge him.

DEAR ABBY: I recently completed my first year of college. During the year, I met my current boyfriend. My goal this summer is to have him meet my parents. Because we live six hours apart, I thought it would be best if he stayed over at my parents' house — in the guest room, of course.

My father objected to it, but said that if it were deemed acceptable by you, he would reconsider. What do you say, Abby? Is there really a problem with having one's boyfriend sleep over at one's parents' house?

— CURIOUS CO-ED

DEAR CURIOUS CO-ED: If the sleeping accommodations are as you have described — and as long as there isn't any hanky-panky going on in the wee hours of the morning — I see no problem with it.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, also known as Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother, Pauline Phillips. Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Time, you old gipsy man,
Will you not stay,
Put up your caravan
Just for one day?"

—Ralph Hodgson

Today's deal features one of my favorite partners, Seymon Deutsch, with whom I was successful in the Venice Olympiad 22 years ago. Seymon's leap to four spades was full-blooded (a euphemism for a slight overbid). North asked for keycards (the four aces and the trump king). Over the one-keycard response, North could use the first step to locate the trump queen. Without it, Deutsch would have reverted to the trump suit at the cheapest level; with it, he could cuebid a king if he had one, or jump in the trump suit if he had nothing to cuebid, as here.

The awkward duplication in diamonds makes your slam a delicate one. Deutsch won the opening heart-king lead, drew trumps, played off the top diamonds, and tested the clubs. If they broke, he would have had a home for one of the heart losers. When they did not break, Deutsch had one more chance. He knew the hearts were breaking 6-1, so East had none left. Instead of ruffing the club loser, which would then have forced him to lead a heart sooner or later and concede two tricks in that suit, he made the opponents work for him.

He played dummy's last club and pitched a heart from hand. East was on play with only minor suits left. Whichever he led, Deutsch could discard his last heart from hand and ruff in dummy. Contract made!

ANSWER: The best way to keep the auction open is to give false preference by bidding two diamonds. Raising clubs gets the values across, but it is very awkward to raise a second suit with only three-card support. No other invitational call is close to describing the hand, and rebidding spades is very ugly indeed.
