IDWR concludes more water rights affected in springs call

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

No one knows for sure how groundwater flows.

That uncertainty complicates already difficult water-rights disputes, and even water experts sometimes have to rethink their decisions. Such was the case when Idaho Department of Water Resources Interim Director Gary Spackman issued a recent finding that two Snake River trout producers deserve more water.

The July 19 final order determined that junior water users in water districts 130 and 140 must compensate for or shut off groundwater to an additional 54,000 acres, ramped up over five years, to offset the water promised to Blue Lakes Trout Co. and Clear Springs Foods. That's more than a third again what the groundwater users must already provide.

In a series of cases that have dragged out since 2005, the trout companies contended that groundwater users have reduced spring water the two are entitled to through their five water rights. Spackman's predecessor, former IDWR Director Dave Tuthill, initially ruled that only three rights were affected, requiring groundwater users to develop compensation plans to avoid shutting down water to 130,000 acres.

Challenges followed to the IDWR methods of calculating water amounts and the data itself, because very little water data exists prior to the late 1980s and early '90s. The state agency had to estimate water flows for 20 years earlier, when the rights were bought.

Questions were raised about seasonal variation in water amounts because groundwater users argued they shouldn't have to supply anything above low-season flow. The lack of data and the computer models used to make up for the missing data are just a few of the points that have one part of the case headed to the state Supreme HAGERMAN — A green compass dangled from 9-year-old Alexi Hagen's neck as she stuck a dusty finger into the sandbox to poke around for hidden cow bones. She scrunched her freckled nose and helped her partner find page 16 of their workbooks, where a cow skeleton diagram would help identify the bones.

"I told my mom I wanted to be a paleontologist when I grow up and she found this camp," Hagen said. "I really like finding stuff underground and I want to see if I can find a new type of animal one day."

She pushed a strand of bright red hair behind one ear and dug into the sandbox with a metal trowel, determined to find the bones buried in her square.

Otter's budget chief 'cautiously optimistic'

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

The state's budget has seen better days.

That's one story of the numbers that Wayne Hammon, Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's budget chief, showed in a presentation on Wednesday at the Twin Falls Rotary Club's luncheon at the Turf Club.

The figures also told a tale of cautious optimism that the economy and the state's budget have hit bottom, without the need for any more cuts to the budget.

"We've taken a slow, cautious conservative approach," Hammon said. "... I'm cautiously optimistic that we're going to be OK. I'm cautiously optimistic that we're done cutting things."

He said the state's

Documents detail search for captive Idaho soldier

BOISE, Idaho — In the minutes after Pfc. Bowe Bergdahl was reported missing last June, his U.S. Army comrades in southern Afghanistan began searching bunkers, latrines, vehicles, even Afghan National Police posts in a nearby settlement.

About five hours later, search dogs were on the ground.

Meanwhile, radio operators were already intercepting messages indicating the worst: One of their own was in enemy hands.

TWIN FALLS ALTERNATE ROUTE Cross canyon bridge project about to begin

Times-News

The wind, though only gusting slightly at 10 or 12 mph, posed too much risk for the construction crew working on the Twin Falls Alternate Route Monday morning. But while trying to plant 164-foot, 50-ton steel girders, it might be best to err on the side of caution.

Installation of the girders, originally slated to begin Wednesday, will likely be put off until Monday, where they'll show noticeable accomplishment in the construction of a 500-foot bridge across the Rock Creek Canyon.

Aside from that brief delay, the project has been zipping along when compared with the Idaho Transportation Department's original plans.

"They're way ahead of anything ITD could have envisioned," ITD spokesman Nathan Jerke said.

The contractor, W.W. Clyde Inc. of Springville, Utah, plans to have the alternate route completed by 2011. Jerke said the contractor will need to avoid any delays to meet that deadline, though there is no concern about it missing the April 2011 deadline contracted with ITD.

The federal stimulus-funded project cost $26.6 million and will create a 5.5-mile, four-lane bypass option for traffic heading past Twin Falls.

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Work continued Wednesday on the Twin Falls Alternate Route. Crews plan to install the deck of the Rock Creek Bridge starting on Monday.

completed their first day of Junior Paleontologist Camp on Wednesday. The three-day camp in the western Magic Valley, hosted by the National Park Service, gives children a chance to learn about paleontology, geology and ecology. Each day provides a different field trip and some classroom time for campers to learn about what they see in the field.

Today and Friday, camp participants will travel to Malad Gorge State Park, the Hagerman Fossil Beds National Monument horse quarry and the fossil prep lab for hands-on experiences with the sciences. The free camp provides participants with a backpack, hat, compass, magnifying glass and a water bottle.

Park ranger Jennifer Hamilton said the camp was designed to help kids become passionate about national parks, science and especially fossils and paleontology.

Hamilton, who organized the camp with fellow ranger Holly Bailey, said she is looking forward to the third day when campers visit Malad Gorge.

"It really ties in the story of the Earth and the story of this area," she said. "The kids are going to like the fossil beds the best, though."

She is happy with the turnout for the first camp and hopes next week's camp for youth ages 11 to 13 will have similar attendance. She said the Hagerman location makes it a little harder for some children to come out for all three days, but estimated that only three of this week's campers were from Hagerman.

"Each one of these kids represents a parent that drove them out here," Hamilton said. "Some of them like science and some of them are just here to have a good time. They are going to learn where rocks come from and some of the major geological events that have affected this area."

After rainy Wed., dance events still carry on today

BURLEY — Rain cancelled a planned parade and dancing on the Rupert Square on Wednesday evening.

But further events today and Friday tied in with the Idaho International Dance and Music Festival will continue as planned, organizers say.

Today, dancers will teach kids about their techniques, languages and home countries starting at 10 a.m. at Burley High School, before a gala performance at 7:30 p.m. at the King Fine Arts Center. A similar performance is also planned for 7:30 p.m. Friday.

Tickets to the evening events are $5, $10 and $12.50. They can be purchased at the Book Plaza, Burley; The Book Store, Rupert; and at the Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce, Heyburn.

Filer to honor fallen son with park dedication

By John E. Swayze

Times-News correspondent

TAKE PART

The public is invited to today's dedication of the new baseball dugouts at Filer City Park, in memory of Scott Turner. The ceremony begins at 8 p.m.

FILER — Scott Turner, 39, was a dedicated family man and gifted athlete whose life was cut short by an auto accident in 2006.

Now, his contribution to athletics and the friendships he formed along the way will be honored at 8 p.m. today with a public baseball-dugout dedication at Filer City Park.

At 8 years old, Turner took up baseball at Filer City Park and discovered a natural talent that his mother, Carolyn Turner, says led him through countless hours of running the bases and toward a love of competitive sports.

"Even from kindergarten, Scott and a group of friends were all extremely good athletes that the coaches kept an eye on and couldn't wait for them to grow up," she said. "He played softball, went to the state basketball championships in his senior year and was chosen to be part of the Shrine football game."

After graduating from Filer High School in 1984, Turner raised a family and developed a custom farming business. He continued to play volleyball and golf, and shared his passion for sports with younger generations of athletes by coaching tee-ball and soccer.

In memory of that passion, both the visitor and home dugouts at the Filer park were rebuilt over the past two years, using approximately $8,000 in donations and memorial funds.

"The bleachers hadn't been replaced in years," Carolyn Turner said. "This is just one more sense of closure for our family and a chance to give back to the community of Filer."

The dugout rebuild was made possible through volunteer labor and determination shown by Filer residents Erik Peterson and his son, Andrew. Andrew Peterson took on constructing the visitor dugout as his Eagle Scout project. Assisted by 10 volunteers and fellow scouts from Troop 7, the new cinderblock structure was completed with 260 hours of labor in March 2009.

Erik Peterson, who directed construction on the home dugout and remembers watching Turner perform on the high-school basketball court, said his son jumped at the chance to create a memorial to his friend.

"Scott worked for us while he was getting his own business started and Andrew looked up to him. The two of them kind of became best buds," Peterson said. "Work on the home dugout wasn't moving as fast as I would have liked, so I finished the roof work myself. Scott always gave 100 percent when playing sports or anything else he did."

Pina waives right to speedy trial

By Bradley Guire

Times-News writer

The retrial of Juan Carlos Fuentes Pina may not happen until April 2011, as the former murder convict waived his right to a speedy trial Wednesday in 5th District Court in Twin Falls. Pina was not in attendance, as he is incarcerated at a state prison in Orofino. His attorney, Andrew Parnes, presented the waiver to Judge Richard Bevan, who said that a trial date for next April is "likely."

Bevan also announced that he will voluntarily remove himself as presiding judge in the case, adding that Judge Randy Stoker is likely to be assigned to future hearings. Bevan presided over Pina's first murder trial in 2006. Pina was convicted of the first-degree murder of Jesse Naranjo, but the Idaho Supreme Court threw out the conviction last summer, citing that Bevan gave improper instruction to jurors.

No further hearings were set Wednesday.

Perez fails to answer misrepresentation suit

Celia Perez has not launched a defense in a civil suit alleging that she misrepresented herself to clients as a lawyer dealing with immigration courts, according to court records.

Perez failed to appear at a hearing in June, prompting an order of entry for default on July 19. Deputy Attorney General Stephanie Guyon provided a sworn affidavit to the 5th District Court in Jerome County that Perez was served with a summons to appear on Jan. 20 and that she has failed to answer the complaint.

Perez allegedly advertised and sold services as an immigration and naturalization consultant and told clients she was a lawyer, despite not holding a license to practice law. The Idaho Attorney General's Consumer Protection Division is suing Perez for restitution to clients, court costs and to prohibit her from undertaking the same business.

TFPD joins missing children program

The Twin Falls Police Department is now using the "A Child Is Missing" alert program, a national nonprofit organization which provides land line or mobile phone alerts to the public when someone is missing in the area.

The program is free, providing round-the-clock service, and uses sophisticated information-gathering, mapping and telephony technology to help law enforcement locate missing children and teens, missing elderly persons who often are suffering from dementia, missing college students and missing persons who are mentally or physically challenged or disabled.

"This is one more tool we have for quickly locating a vulnerable person," said Twin Falls Police Chief Jim Munn.

When police transmit a missing person report to a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., database, calls or texts are sent to subscribers with a message detailing the missing person's description, last known whereabouts and pertinent information. Also included in the message will be a police department phone number to report a sighting.

Nuclear developer buys Payette County land; Elmore County plant seems less likely

By Laura Lundquist

Times-News writer

One Idaho county may have lost a business for the lack of a plan.

Alternate Energy Holdings Inc. announced Wednesday that it had signed an agreement to purchase 6,000 acres next to its proposed nuclear power plant site in Payette County. The new property, which AEHI refers to as its "backup site," includes water rights and transmission rights-of-way needed for the new plant.

AEHI had started the application process for a site near Hammett in Elmore County for the plant in 2008. But Elmore County Commissioner Larry Rose said officials then found that the county's comprehensive plan wasn't current, having been last revised in 2004. Generating facilities were last addressed in a 1999 revision, he said, but officials then hadn't considered solar, wind or nuclear power. Rewriting the plan in order to consider AEHI's application dragged the process out.

Payette County's comprehensive plan was current, although County Commissioner Larry Church said officials had to change the plan to accommodate AEHI's proposal. The zoning change for 5,000 acres the company proposes to build a plant on was approved June 22. Now begins a several-month process of technical review and evaluation.

"We want to do it right," Church said. He added he knew AEHI was looking at the purchased property but wasn't aware they'd bought it.

Rose wasn't aware either, nor did he know his county had fallen to third in contention.

"That's their prerogative," Rose said. "It wasn't an issue of AEHI; we just needed to make sure we'd talked to everyone."

Court by December at the earliest.
In the meantime, the appeals court ordered Spackman to re-evaluate the final two water rights, giving benefit of the doubt to the senior water users — the trout producers — as the law directs rather than the junior users. That resulted in this month's order recognizing a violation of the two oldest water rights, which both sides said they may appeal.

Randy MacMillan of Clear Springs Foods said his company is happy about IDWR's reversal, even though it took five years to do it. While the agency's numbers may be correct, he said, the calculations used to produce them are not clear, so Clear Springs hasn't decided whether to appeal.

The Idaho Ground Water Appropriators also question the calculations, but don't suffer from indecision. Lynn Tominaga, the group's executive director, said groundwater users will ask for a hearing on the latest IDWR results. He said the timing of the order introduces confusion — the calculations are different from those used for the other three water rights pending before the state Supreme Court.

"A lot of the information is based upon an extrapolation of the data," Tominaga said. "It's not based on fact."
Those managing area groundwater districts won't have to respond to the order this year, so they'll just watch as another lobe of litigation develops.
"I don't know too much about the new report yet," said Lynn Carlquist of the North Snake Ground Water District, "But there's probably going to be more pumpers affected."

Budget

fare better in the crisis than other states like Oregon.
"We've reduced the size of state government back to what it was almost five years ago," Hammon said in an interview. "And so to think that that's going to come back overnight is unrealistic, but over the next three to four to five years we should be able to return service levels to where they were before."
For fiscal year 2010, which ended on June 30, the state's revenues were $2.26 billion, less than forecasts that ranged from $2.65 billion in December 2008 to $2.34 billion in January.

Hammon also defended the state's approach toward hiring additional auditors to collect unpaid taxes through the State Tax Commission, which has drawn some criticism for not being aggressive enough. He said it's important to ensure that there will be a return on the additional investment.

Potential funding increases for the commission are reviewed each quarter, based on the amount of additional revenues being collected, Hammon said.
While there's $255 million in uncollected taxes, only about $67 million of it is collectable, Hammon said, noting bankrupt corporations and inmates as examples of difficult or impossible cases.
Uncertainties still remain in Idaho's budgetary future.

The federal match for Medicaid increased from 70 percent to 80 percent due to the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act. At the end of December, it's due to return to 70 percent, unless Congress extends the higher match.
If Congress doesn't, that will leave a $71 million hole in this fiscal year's budget that the state will have to plug with its remaining rainy-day funds, Hammon said.
State lawmakers said that while recovery could be ahead, the coming months remain critical.
"The real good news here is we think we've hit bottom," said Sen. Bert Brackett, R-Rogerson, a member of the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee.

Rep. Stephen Hartgen, R-Twin Falls, agreed that it will likely take years for spending to return to pre-recession levels.
"We should be very cautious," he said.

Bergdahl

WikiLeaks' website include transcripts of Afghan radio transmissions intercepted after Bergdahl went missing from his base in southern Afghanistan — as well as reports from U.S. soldiers about talks with village elders about a possible prisoner swap.
The documents show Afghan tribal leaders assured U.S. officials Bergdahl was unharmed.
"The elders were asked by the Taliban to (do) a trade between the U.S. and Taliban," a U.S. soldier said in a report dated July 2, 2009. "The Taliban terms are 15 of their Taliban brothers in U.S. jail and some money in exchange for Pvt. Bergdahl."
Bergdahl's Taliban captors have released at least two videotapes of him, including one on Christmas Day showing him healthy but speaking critically about the U.S. military operation in Afghanistan.
The latest documents indicate the Taliban almost immediately seized on Bergdahl's value as a propaganda tool.

the media.
Reports of how Bergdahl landed in enemy hands are conflicting.
On July 2, 2009, two U.S. officials told the AP the soldier "just walked off" his base with three Afghans. On July 6, the Taliban claimed they'd captured a "drunken American soldier" Bergdahl said in a video he was taken captive when he lagged behind on patrol.
The leaked information does little to resolve the matter.
According to the documents, five hours after Bergdahl missed a morning roll call, U.S. soldiers in the area picked up a radio transmission indicating "an American soldier is talking and looking for someone who speaks English."
The next day, another intercepted conversation appears to mock U.S. soldiers' efforts to find him. It claims an unarmed Bergdahl was captured during an attack on his post in Paktika province near the border with Pakistan in an area known to be a Taliban stronghold.

On July 4, another report came in: "Missing U.S. soldier was last seen in a village. ... A bag was covering his head, and he was wearing dark khaki apparel." It said the soldier was being transported in a black Toyota Corolla, which was being escorted by three to five motorcycles.
Major John Redfield, spokesman for the U.S. Central Command in Tampa, Fla., didn't immediately comment Wednesday on the documents' authenticity.

Suicide: Idaho’s silent epidemic

Three hundred and seven Idahoans ended their own lives last year. Two hundred of them did so by pressing a firearm against the temple, into the mouth or under the chin and pulling the trigger.

Why? Economic problems chiefly, surmises the Idaho Council on Suicide Prevention in a just-released report. That’s 19 percent more suicides than in 2008. But in truth, the Gem State — which ranks 10th in the nation in self-induced deaths — does a lousy job at suicide prevention. Idaho is the only state in America that doesn’t have its own suicide prevention hotline.

Suicide is the second-leading cause of death for Idahoans 15-34. Idaho’s suicide rate is 36 percent above the national average. For every Idahoan who succeeds in killing himself or herself, three attempt suicide. The average total cost of treating suicide attempters is $8.2 million. The average work lost by people who try and fail to kill themselves is $7.9 million.

One case of a 51-year-old man who attempted suicide cost $1.3 million after he was released from the hospital. Skilled nursing care cost the state $555,200 over eight years.

That same amount of money would have hired 11 classroom teachers.

To some degree, suicide is endemic to rural states, where counseling services are few and far between. That’s exacerbated by the fact that Idaho has a critical shortage of physicians, especially in rural areas.

But then again, nobody on the state level considers suicide a severe enough problem to devote substantial resources to preventing it. Idaho lost its suicide prevention hotline in 2007. While residents can call the national suicide prevention hotline, its operators lack knowledge of local resources and don’t always make the critical follow-up calls state or local hotline operators often do.

While it lasted, the Idaho hotline did not have a functioning board, lost its nonprofit status and couldn’t get funding, the hotline’s former executive director Peter Wollheim told the Idaho Press-Tribune of Nampa.

Idaho must — must — restore a functioning suicide hotline. An Idaho State University study released this month concluded that Idaho could run a suicide prevention hotline for $100,000 a year.

“From the knowledge I have, I think that would be money well spent,” Coeur d’Alene Republican Sen. John Goedde told the Press-Tribune. Goedde lost his daughter to suicide in 2004.

It also must teach nursing home operators and emergency room workers to recognize the signs of impending suicide.

One hundred and eighty-five Idahoans under the age of 24 snuffed out their lives from 2004-2008. If we as a state were doing our jobs, most of them would still be alive.

Want the good news first?

It is pretty much a tossup for me: Who poses a greater long-term threat to America’s Gulf Coast ecosystem: the U.S. Senate or BP?

Thomas Friedman

Right now, from what I’ve seen flying over the Louisiana coast at the mouth of the Mississippi, my vote is the U.S. Senate. BP at least seems to have finally gotten its act together and is cleaning up the oil spill. The Senate, in failing to pass even the most modest bill to diminish our addiction to oil and begin to mitigate climate change, has not even begun to do its job.

I have to admit, I was surprised and pleased that it took us an hour of flying in our float plane over Breton Sound and Barataria Bay and across the marshes, bayous, barrier islands and open water that lie about 70 miles from the site of the Deepwater Horizon rig before we spotted any significant ribbon of oil. “There it is,” said our pilot, as he banked the plane for a better view of the small oil slick and as if he were pointing out a pod of whales we had been searching for all day.

Here’s the good news. Thanks to: the capping of the broken oil well; the cleanup efforts so far by a flotilla of shrimp boats converted to skimmers; the currents that have blessedly taken a lot of the spill away from the shore; the weathering process that is breaking down a lot of the crude into different compounds that dissolve, evaporate or get absorbed by microbes in the ocean; and the dispersants that have broken up the biggest oil slicks, there is less and less to see here on the surface. Walking along the beach on Grand Isle, the only inhabited barrier island on Louisiana’s Gulf Coast, it appears that our worst fears have not materialized — so far.

So much for the good news. The bad news is what you can’t see that is happening under the ocean’s surface and the stuff you can see that no one is talking about.

“From a biological perspective, we know what happens when oil hits the beach. We can see those impacts; we can mitigate those impacts; we can quantify those impacts,” said Keith Ouchley, the biologist who leads the Nature Conservancy in Louisiana.

The greatest concern, added Ouchley, is what impact the undersea oil concentrations could have on the billions of tiny larval fish, shrimp and other organisms that are at the bottom of the whole marine food chain — and we may not know that for many years.

What compounds that worry is that the marshes, sea grasses, oyster beds and barrier islands that provide the nurseries for those larval fish, shrimp and other marine life had already been dramatically weakened long before the BP spill. That was thanks to the building of levees that have prevented the rivers’ natural flooding of life-giving freshwater and sediments into the marshes, as well as the laying of oil and gas pipelines and shipping navigation channels all across the ecosystem.

Bob Marshall, an environmental reporter for The Times-Picayune of New Orleans, put the BP spill in the right context when he wrote: “We need to remember this is a temporary problem on top of a permanent disaster. Long after BP’s oil is gone, we’ll still be fighting for survival against a much more serious enemy — our sinking, crumbling delta. Our coast is like a cancer patient who has come down with pneumonia. That’s serious, but curable. After the fever breaks, he’ll still have cancer.”

That’s where the Senate has failed miserably. There are three things it should be doing for the gulf and our other vital ecosystems. First, taking out some minimal insurance against climate change by reducing our carbon emissions; this region is particularly vulnerable to sea level rise and the more intense storms that climate change will bring. Second, set us on a path to diminish our addiction to oil so we don’t have to drill in ever-deeper waters. And, finally, provide the federal funding to restore America’s critical ecosystems. The Senate abandoned the first two but is still working on the third.

The Senate’s failure to act is a result of many factors, but one is that the climate-energy policy debate got disconnected from average people. We need less talk about “climate” and more about how conservation saves money, renewable energy creates jobs, restoring the gulf’s marshes sustains fishermen and preserving the rainforest helps poor people. Said Glenn Prickett, vice president at the Nature Conservancy: “We have to take climate change out of the atmosphere, bring it down to earth and show how it matters in people’s everyday lives.”

The Right and the global climate

Climate change legislation has been dying in the Senate for months now, but Harry Reid’s decision to finally admit as much has supporters of cap-and-trade casting about for somebody to blame. They’ve blamed the Obama administration, for prioritizing health care reform over an energy bill. They’ve blamed the American people, for being too concerned with economic issues to grapple with longer-term threats. And they’ve blamed figures like Lindsey Graham and John McCain, erstwhile supporters of cap-and-trade who have steadily backpedaled away from it.

But most of all, they’ve blamed conservatives — for pressuring Republican lawmakers to abandon legislation they once supported, and for closing ranks against any attempt to tax and regulate our way to a lower-carbon economy.

Cap-and-trade’s backers are correct to point the finger rightward. If their bill is dead, it was the American conservative movement that ultimately killed it. Climate legislation wasn’t like health care, with Democrats voting

Ross Douthat

“yes” in lockstep. There was no way to get a bill through without some support from conservative lawmakers. And in the global warming debate, there’s a seemingly unbridgeable gulf between the conservative movement and the environmentalist cause. To understand why, it’s worth going back to the 1970s.

The ’70s were a decade for apocalyptic enthusiasms, and none was more potent than the fear that human population growth had outstripped the Earth’s carrying capacity. According to a chorus of credentialed alarmists, the world was entering an age of sweeping famines, crippling energy shortages, and looming civilizational collapse.

It was not lost on conservatives that this analysis led inexorably to left-wing policy prescriptions — a government-run energy sector at home, and population control for the masses overseas.

Social conservatives and libertarians found common ground resisting these prescriptions. And time was unkind to the alarmists. The catastrophes never materialized and global living standards soared. By the turn of the millennium, the developed world was worrying about a birth dearth.

This is the lens through which most conservatives view the global warming debate. Again, a doomsday scenario has generated a crisis atmosphere, which is being invoked to justify taxes and regulations that many left-wingers would support anyway.

History, however, rarely repeats itself exactly — and conservatives who treat global warming as just another scare story are almost certainly mistaken.

Rising temperatures won’t “destroy” the planet, as fear-mongers and celebrities like to say. But the evidence that carbon emissions are altering the planet’s ecology is too convincing to ignore. Conservatives who dismiss climate change as a hoax are making a spectacle of their ignorance. Their perspective is grounded, in part, on the assumption that a warmer world will be a richer world — and that economic development is likely to do more for the wretched of the Earth than a growth-slowing regulatory regime.

Liberals disagree. They think the skeptics underestimate the potential for catastrophe, and overestimate the costs of regulation. They look to the past for lessons, but their model is the Clean Air Act and its various modifications, which reduced domestic air pollution relatively cheaply.

But the Clean Air Act didn’t require collective action on a global scale. What’s more, a crucial technology, the catalytic converter, was already on the way as the act’s provisions went into effect. Cap-and-trade is more of a leap in the dark.

Liberalism specializes in such leaps. But you can see why conservatives might lean toward the wisdom of inaction. Not every danger has a regulatory solution, and sometimes it makes sense to wait, get richer, and then try to muddle through.

OTHER VIEWS

Here’s what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

... the big dry

Idaho Mountain Express, Ketchum

Über skeptics that share the delusion that global warming is a “hoax” may want to reconsider their iconoclastic dogma. There’s potentially bad news about life’s indispensable commodity for survival—water.

A new study by the Natural Resources Defense Council forecasts water shortages by 2050 in one-third of all U.S. counties ... brought on by climate change droughts and inevitable increased demand by a larger population and expanding industrial needs.

Idaho is listed as one of one of 14 hardest-hit states, with seven counties — Cassia, Oneida, Lincoln, Bingham, Minidoka, Canyon and Power — facing “extreme” impacts from water shortfalls. Twelve other counties in Idaho’s southern tier are forecast to endure “high” water shortage risks, while Blaine County and eight others are on the “moderate” impact list. The remaining 16, mostly in mid and north-western Idaho, face “low” risks.

The complete study is available online at www.nrdc.org/globalWarming/waterrustainability.

Simple mathematics makes the study credible. Even if annual precipitation remains stable, larger populations requiring more water-intensive food farms and personal consumption, industry’s appetite for water ... and urban landscaping will increase demand beyond supplies in some regions.

Prudence suggests that responsible public managers of water supplies begin now to develop workable strategies for ways to reduce public and industry consumption, increase storage, accelerate treatment and usage of sewage for agricultural and industry use, and, where applicable, modernize water desalinization technology for using sea water.

Waiting until 2050 will be too late.

... poor, or cheap?

Lewiston Tribune

Where would you rather educate your children? Mississippi or Idaho? Ridiculous question, right?

The Magnolia State is America’s perennial last-place finisher. As bleak as Idaho’s prospects ever got, it could always count on Mississippi to bring up the rear.

Except, it turns out, when it comes to spending money on its schools.

On that score, it’s the Gem State that is dangerously close to winning the dubious prize.

Only Utah spends less per pupil.

Moreover, those numbers don’t take into account the decision of Idaho Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter and the Republican-controlled Legislature to scale back public school spending by nearly $130 million this year.

Not that Idaho ever has been overly generous to its schools... While poor Southern states bettered themselves, Idaho opted to lavish income tax breaks on the wealthy in 2001 and property tax cuts for corporations in 2006.

Idaho falls behind its neighbors as well.

You’ll hear that’s just Idaho’s lot in life. This is a poor state. It does what it can for schools.

Nonsense.

Idaho isn’t that poor. It’s just cheap.

When it comes to median household income, Idaho ranks 35th.

A recent Idaho State Tax Commission study shows tax burdens in Idaho rank 46th among the 50 states and the District of Columbia ... Taxes here are lower than any of the 10 other Western states.

Compensate for Idaho’s comparatively lower incomes and the tax burden still comes in low — 42nd, nearly 10 percent below the national average.

Of course, Idahoans know they’re getting a good return on their money. Just because they’re tight with their schools doesn’t mean those students aren’t being educated. Costs, especially teacher salaries, may be higher in places like California or New York without delivering better results.

But at some point, it catches up.

If you’re spending less on teacher pay, other states are going to hire away the best prospects — and probably some of Idaho’s youngest, more mobile educators.

If you’re spending less per pupil, it’s going to translate into more kids assigned to each classroom, older textbooks, out-of-date technology and fewer electives.

It certainly shows up in terms of a comparatively lower rate of Idaho graduates attending college.

And it’s got to scare away economic development ...

... now it’s your problem

Idaho Statesman, Boise

Are there still Idaho families that believe the shaky economy and tumbling state revenues affect everybody else?

Furloughed state workers? Those are fat bureaucrats.

Freezes or cuts in teacher pay? Not me, thank goodness.

Months-delayed payments to Medicaid contractors? That’s somebody else.

But no buses for my child? No library books for my student?

That hits home.

Welcome to Fiscal Year 2011, the Year of the Reality Check.

The federal-stimulus bailout to state governments is largely spent. State reserves are mostly gone. What’s left is pain.

We’ve long believed that the true and full effects of the budget crisis won’t be felt until fall, when the backslapping over Idaho’s brave ... balanced budget is long forgotten. When parents have to rise on dark, chilly mornings to drive children who no longer have a school bus to ride. Or when workers have to explain to the boss, again, why they’re leaving at 3 p.m. to run home ...

Textbooks will have to last another year. Libraries will be loaning the same books; there’s no money for new ones. In districts where kindergartners are now on every-other-day schedules, working parents will have to arrange ... multiple day-care scenarios. Is this the two-day week, or the three-day week?

Can Idaho survive this? Of course. Will the effects ripple out of the schools, to the workplace, to the broader economy? To the ballot box?

We’ll see. We’ll see if the deliberations of the Legislature next spring, or the election of a governor, a state superintendent and legislators this fall, get more than the passing attention most Idahoans give to such boring stuff ...

But remember, busy parents and distracted taxpayers, as you rise to drive Janie to school next October, or cover the phones so her dad can run home at 3 p.m.

These aren’t somebody else’s problems anymore.

Fires threaten homes near Boise as wind fans flames

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — At least three homes were damaged and dozens more evacuated Wednesday as a wind-whipped grassfire northwest of Idaho’s capital city expanded to thousands of acres and threatened rural subdivisions. No injuries were reported.

Firefighting planes, water bucket-wielding helicopters and about 50 fire trucks, engines, water tenders, brush rigs and bulldozers were dispatched to the site about 15 miles northwest of Boise.

More than 300 firefighters from multiple agencies combined to fight the blaze.

The fire, which was reported early Wednesday afternoon, began burning as an electrical storm moved through the area north of the town of Eagle, near State Highway 16. Lightning is the likely culprit, said Mallory Eils, a Bureau of Land Management spokeswoman on the scene.

“There was definitely a storm that moved through,” Eils said, adding it was unclear just when crews would have the fire under control. “The smoke is definately dissipating, they (firefighters) are probably getting a bit of a handle on it. But we keep getting these gusty winds coming out of the west.”

No estimates for the blaze’s size were available, but it likely encompassed several square miles.

This area’s undulating sage- and cheatgrass-covered foothills have seen the arrival of several sprawling subdivisions in recent decades. Residents from evacuated homes were instructed to go to a nearby high school to wait out the flames.

Judge orders tougher look at heavy use of fire retardant

By Jeff Barnard
Associated Press writer

GRANTS PASS, Ore. — A federal judge Wednesday ordered the U.S. Forest Service to take a tougher look at the possibility that routinely dropping toxic fire retardant on wildfires from airplanes will kill endangered fish and plants.

U.S. District Judge Donald W. Molloy in Missoula, Mont., ruled that the current environmental assessment is inadequate in light of federal biologists’ findings that fire retardant that lands in creeks and on rare plants jeopardize the survival of endangered species and their habitat.

Molloy did not restrict the use of fire retardant this summer, but in a sternly written order gave the Forest Service until the end of 2011 to do a tougher environmental impact statement. He warned the agency could be found in contempt for failing to meet the deadline and refused to hear further arguments on the issue.

He also sent environmental analyses in support of the Forest Service assessment, known as biological opinions, back to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Marine Fisheries Service.

The judge wrote that they violated the Endangered Species Act by failing to put any real limits on firefighters from calling in retardant drops, despite finding that the mix of water and fertilizer could poison fish and their food and kill rare plants.

Andy Stahl of Forest

Service Employees for Environmental Ethics, which brought the lawsuit, said half the 20 million gallons of fire retardant dropped by the Forest Service in 2008 was dropped in California, where it has become a public relations display for television cameras that is rarely effective because it is used in windy conditions that cause it to be widely dispersed.

IDAHO Bill seeks to bring new federal judge to Idaho

BOISE — Idaho U.S. House members are leading a bipartisan effort to increase the number of federal judges in their home state for the first time since the 1950s.

Democrat Walt Minnick and Mike Simpson, a Republican, said Wednesday they’re co-sponsoring a bill that would direct the president to appoint a third U.S. district judge in Idaho.

The state’s federal criminal caseload has increased dramatically since 2000, from 83 cases a year to 230 cases a year.

Simpson says the increasing workload has resulted in Idaho’s two U.S. District judges carrying a disproportionate share of cases compared to their colleagues in other states.

MONTANA 1 dead, 2 injured in bear attack at campground

HELENA — At least one bear rampaged through a campground Wednesday near Yellowstone National Park in the middle of the night, killing one person and injuring two others during a terrifying attack that forced people to hide in their cars as the animal tore through tents.

Three separate attacks left a male dead and a female and another male injured at the Soda Butte campground. The female suffered severe lacerations from bites on her arms, and the surviving male was bitten on his calf. Both were hospitalized in Cody, Wyo.

Wildlife officials did not release the identities or ages of the victims. A response team was being sent to piece together what happened.

“We don’t know if it was one bear, two bears, a black bear or grizzly bear,” Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks spokesman Ron Aasheim said. “Obviously, the bear’s gone now. Will it come back tonight? That’s the question.”

Authorities were setting traps and seeking bear hair, saliva and droppings while measuring the bite wounds of victims to determine the type and number of bears involved in the attack.

Park County dispatchers took a 911 call early Wednesday from a male reporting that a bear had bitten his ankle and was tearing up tents, Aasheim said. Dispatchers got two more calls, including one from a man who said a bear bit the leg of his daughter’s boyfriend.

At 3:50 a.m., park officials went through the campground to advise campers to get into their cars. A half-hour later, the dead male was discovered at a campsite. Authorities then evacuated the campground, sending campers to nearby hotels.

AP survey: A bleaker outlook for economy into 2011

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economic recovery will remain slow deep into next year, held back by shoppers reluctant to spend and employers hesitant to hire, according to an Associated Press survey of leading economists.

The latest quarterly AP Economy Survey shows economists have turned gloomier in the past three months. They foresee weaker growth and higher unemployment than they did before. As a result, the economists think the Federal Reserve will keep interest rates near zero until at least next spring.

AP Economy Survey: gradual recovery

The findings of the new AP Economy Survey point to an economic recovery that will progress slowly through next year.

Yet despite their expectation of slower growth, a majority of the 42 economists surveyed believe the recovery remains on track, raising hopes that the economy can avoid falling back into a “double-dip” recession.

The AP survey compiles forecasts of leading private, corporate and academic economists on a range of indicators, including employment, consumer spending and inflation. Among their forecasts:

- Economic growth the rest of this year and early next year will weaken, to less than 3 percent. From January through May, the economy grew at roughly a 3.5 percent pace.

- The unemployment rate will be no lower at the end of the year than it is now — 9.5 percent. A majority think it will be 2015 or later before the rate falls to a historically normal 5 percent.

- State budget shortfalls pose a “significant” or “severe” risk to the national economy. The loss of tax revenue has forced state and local governments to cut services and lay off workers.

The weak economy leaves Democrats and Republicans on Capitol Hill vulnerable as they head into the November elections. Democrats, who now control both chambers, have the most to lose. The gloomier outlook is also a liability for President Barack Obama.

The economists have turned more pessimistic since the recovery hit turbulence in May. Europe's debt crisis sent tremors through

Wall Street, causing stocks to tumble and raising doubts about the durability of the rebound.

Since then, businesses have been slow to step up hiring. Americans' confidence in the economy has declined, leading shoppers to reduce spending. And the housing market has weakened further with the end of a homebuyer tax credit that had buoyed sales earlier this year.

Consumers aren't leading this rebound, as they usually do, despite ultra-low borrowing costs. Their spending growth will weaken in the

Disabled veterans tackle new obstacle — ENTREPRENEURSHIP

By Alexandra Zavis
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Sgt. Neil Avant was headed to a meeting with businessmen in Baghdad last year when a man wearing women's clothes with explosives hidden underneath blew himself up.

Avant's injuries, including nerve damage to both legs, ended his Army career at 33. Looking for a new vocation, he decided to open a green energy business. Earlier this month, he joined 19 other disabled veterans at an eight-day crash course in entrepreneurship.

His instructors at UCLA's Anderson School of Management were blunt. Why would anyone consult him, he recalled them asking, when there are numerous firms already offering to help customers convert to renewable energy?

“Man, this really is like boot camp, you know the way they break you down to build you up?” Avant said in between lectures on balance sheets and marketing strategies.

“I think I was a little too cocky. ... We were trying to do microloans and financing in a combat environment, and I was like, ‘If I can do that in Iraq, I can do it anywhere, right?’”

With jobs hard to find, starting a business can be an attractive option for veterans returning from Iraq and Afghanistan with debilitating injuries. Hundreds apply every year for the Entrepreneurship Bootcamp for Veterans with Disabilities, which is offered at six universities nationwide.

LAWRENCE K. HO/Los Angeles Times

Army veterans, from left, Kenneth Kraft, Kim Anglesey and Patrick Valdez take part in the Entrepreneurship Bootcamp for Veterans with Disabilities at UCLA Anderson School of Management in Los Angeles, Calif.

The all-expenses-paid program, funded by contributions from the business community, was founded by J. Michael Haynie, who served 14 years in the Air Force before joining the Whitman School of Management at Syracuse University as an assistant professor of entrepreneurship. “If we know anything from history, for veterans with disabilities the path to traditional employment is a challenge,” Haynie said.

Program participants say becoming entrepreneurs allows them to craft careers suited to their skills and limitations. Besides dealing with physical issues, many disabled veterans require care that can be difficult to fit into a traditional work-week.

“I probably have on average two to three medical appointments a week,” said Patrick Valdez Sr., who suffered back, shoulder and knee injuries during a 33-year Army career. “That's a lot to ask an employer.”

By starting a business selling promotional products, Valdez now controls his schedule. But he said he needed help adapting his military experience to the business world.

As a command sergeant major, he knew how to handle unruly soldiers. But, he said, when a vendor lets him down, “you can't call the guy in and chew his butt for half an hour.”

Haynie said the military cultivates many attributes of successful entrepreneurs, including the ability to assess risk, overcome obstacles, build teams and manage significant resources.

Out of the first class of 20 at Syracuse University in 2007, 14 are running their own businesses full-time, Haynie said. Four generated more than $1 million in revenue last year.

BP's waning Britishness causes few ripples in UK

By Jill Lawless
Associated Press writer

LONDON — Its chairman is Swedish, a growing chunk of its revenue comes from Russia and its incoming chief executive speaks with an American accent. So goes the Britishness in the company once known as British Petroleum.

BP PLC's appointment of Managing Director Robert Dudley to replace Briton Tony Hayward as CEO has drawn a muted reaction in Britain, however. While residents of Paris or Rome might be chagrined to see a foreigner running one of their country's corporate giants, politicians and the public here appear relaxed about it.

“British investors care about one thing and one thing alone,” said Matthew Gwyther, editor of Management Today magazine, “and that is the share price.”

“If the share price can be

Dairy Queen seeks ban of Blizzard rival

By Dakin Campbell and Andrew Frye
Bloomberg News

SAN FRANCISCO — International Dairy Queen, the ice cream maker owned by Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway Inc., has asked a California court to halt sales of frozen desserts marketed under a name similar to its Blizzard product.

Blizz Frozen Yogurt is causing confusion among customers familiar with Dairy Queen's best-selling item, the company said in a filing in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles.

The request seeks to block Yogubliz Inc.'s use of the Blizz name.

Yogubliz filed a pre-emptive suit in May, saying it received threats from Dairy Queen and that the two products are distinct.

Dairy Queen “is suffering irreparable harm and damage to the goodwill” of Blizzard trademarks, the company said in a July 26 filing.

Yogubliz's product is “likely to cause confusion, mistake and deception among consumers.”

Dairy Queen, which operates restaurants in every state but Vermont, was purchased by Omaha, Neb.-based Berkshire in 1998, according to the company's website.

Buffett, Berkshire's chief executive officer, built the parent company with investments in brands like Coca-Cola and American Express. Dairy Queen said Blizz Frozen Yogurt would dilute the distinctive quality of the “famous” Blizzard treat, according to the filing.

Companies face retirement plan deadlines

Memo to small business owners thinking about starting or contributing to retirement plans: Keep an eye on the calendar.

There are several deadlines in September and October that owners must meet if they want to set up plans known as SEPs or SIMPLEs or if they still want to make contributions for 2009 for many existing plans. The deadlines are set by federal tax law.

Contributing to retirement plans became less of a priority or even an impossibility for many companies that struggled with cash flow problems during the recession. But with business slowly turning around, many owners are thinking about restoring or increasing contributions. And some, knowing that they need to be competitive when it's time to start hiring, want to set up plans for the first time.

Luckily for time-pressed owners, a retirement plan can be set up quickly as long as it's a SEP or SIMPLE. Both were designed to minimize the paperwork and maintenance burdens on small businesses.

THE DATES

These are the upcoming deadlines that owners need to be aware of.

- Sept. 15. Corporations that obtained extensions of the March 15 deadline to file their 2009 returns have until this day to make retirement plan contributions and get a deduction.

Judge blocks parts of new Arizona law

By Jacques Billeaud
and Amanda Lee Myers
Associated Press writers

PHOENIX — A federal judge stepped into the fight over Arizona's immigration law at the last minute Wednesday, blocking the heart of the measure and defusing a confrontation between police and thousands of activists that had been building for months.

Coming just hours before the law was to take effect, the ruling isn't the end.

It sets up a lengthy legal battle that could end up before the Supreme Court — ensuring that a law that reignited the immigration debate, inspired similar measures nationwide, created fodder for political campaigns and raised tensions with Mexico will stay in the spotlight.

Protesters who gathered at the state Capitol and outside the U.S. Embassy in Mexico City cheered when they heard the news. The governor, the law's authors and anti-illegal immigration groups vowed to fight on.

"It's a temporary bump in the road," Gov. Jan Brewer said.

The key issue before U.S. District Judge Susan Bolton in the case is as old as the nation itself: Does federal law trump state law? She indicated in her ruling that the federal government's case has a good chance at succeeding.

Nora Nendivin, right, cries as she is hugged by Marcela Saragoza, both of Phoenix, as they celebrate at the Arizona capitol Wednesday in Phoenix.

The Clinton appointee said the controversial sections should be put on hold until the courts resolve the issues, including parts that required officers to check a person's immigration status while enforcing other laws.

In her preliminary injunction, Bolton delayed provisions that required immigrants to carry their papers and banned illegal immigrants from soliciting employment in public places — a move aimed at day laborers.

The judge also blocked officers from making warrantless arrests of suspected illegal immigrants for crimes that can lead to deportation.

"Requiring Arizona law enforcement officials and agencies to determine the immigration status of every person who is arrested burdens lawfully present aliens because their liberty will be restricted while their status is checked," Bolton wrote.

The ruling came just as police were making last-minute preparations to begin enforcement of the law and protesters, many of whom said they would not bring identification, were planning large demonstrations against the measure.

At least one group had planned to block access to federal offices, daring officers to ask them about their immigration status.

"I knew the judge would say that part of the law was just not right," said Gisela Diaz, 50, from Mexico City, who came to Arizona on a since-expired tourist visa in 1989 and who waited with her family early Wednesday at the Mexican Consulate to get advice about the law.

"It's the part we were worried about. This is a big relief for us," she said.

At a Home Depot in west Phoenix, where day-laborers gather to look for work, Carlos Gutierrez said he was elated when a stranger drove by and yelled the news: "They threw out the law! You guys can work!"

"I felt good inside" said the 32-year-old illegal immigrant, who came here six years ago from Sonora, Mexico, and supports his wife and three children.

"Now there's a way to stay here with less problems."

Opponents argued the law will lead to racial profiling, conflict with federal immigration law and distract local police from fighting more serious crimes.

Lawmakers vote to narrow cocaine sentence disparity

By William Douglas
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives passed a historic bill Wednesday that narrows sentencing disparities between crack and powder cocaine convictions, which civil rights and civil liberties experts say contributed to the disproportionate imprisonment of African-Americans in recent decades.

The Senate passed its version of the bill in March. President Obama, who during the 2008 presidential campaign said the current legal disparity "cannot be justified and should be eliminated," is expected to sign the legislation.

By voice vote, the House altered a law implemented in 1986 during the early phase of the crack cocaine epidemic. It required anyone convicted of possession of 5 grams of crack to be sentenced to at least five years in prison.

Many lawmakers and organizations such as the NAACP and the American Civil Liberties Union complained for nearly a quarter-century that the law was unfair because someone convicted of crack possession got the same mandatory sentence as someone convicted of possessing 100 times that amount of powder cocaine, a drug more popular among whites. The House bill raises the five-year mandatory minimum sentencing trigger for crack possession from five grams to 28 grams and eliminates mandatory minimum sentencing for simple possession of crack. Possession of 500 grams of powder cocaine carries a mandatory minimum five years in prison under the bill.

"In passing the Fair Sentencing Act today, the House sent a bill to President Obama that is a step forward in addressing the fairness of our sentencing laws," said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif.

FBI director defends bureau over cheating

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI Director Robert Mueller told Congress on Wednesday that he does not know how many of his agents cheated on an important exam on the bureau's policies, discussing an embarrassing investigation that raises questions about whether the FBI knows its own rules for conducting surveillance on Americans.

The Justice Department inspector general is investigating whether hundreds of agents cheated on the test. Some took the open-book test together, violating rules that they take it alone. Others finished the lengthy exam unusually quickly, current and former officials said.

The test was supposed to ensure that FBI agents understand new rules allowing them to conduct surveillance and open files on Americans without evidence of criminal wrongdoing. If agents can't pass that test without cheating, civil liberties groups ask, how can they follow them?

Asked about an Associated Press report about the cheating investigation, Mueller said he does not know how widespread the problem was.

"I've got a general idea, but I do not know how many," Mueller testified. "And I am not certain the IG knows how many either. He has pointed out instances orally to me where there may be persons in a particular office where it was widespread and may be attributable to a lack of understanding and confusion about the procedures."

In Columbia, S.C., for instance, agents said they got approval from the FBI policy office to print the test in advance and use it as a study guide, according to a letter to the inspector general from the FBI Agents Association. The head of the policy office later said that wasn't true, the letter said.

New York City declares war on bedbugs

NEW YORK (AP) — One of every 15 New Yorkers battled bedbugs last year, officials said Wednesday as they announced a plan to fight the spreading infestation, including a public-awareness campaign and a top entomologist to head the effort.

The bloodsucking pests, which are not known to spread disease but can cause great mental anguish with their persistent and fast-growing infestations, have rapidly multiplied throughout New York and many other U.S. cities in recent years.

Health officials and pest control specialists nationwide report surges in sightings, bites and complaints. In New York City, the pests have been discovered in theaters, clothing stores, office buildings, housing projects and posh apartments.

The stigma of having bedbugs — whose bites leave itchy red welts — and the elusive nature of the pests make it impossible to fully understand the problem, experts say.

In 2009, for the first time, Mayor Michael Bloomberg's administration included a question about bedbugs on its community health survey, and it revealed the finding on Wednesday: More than 6 percent of New Yorkers who responded said they had battled the pests in the past year.

IN SEARCH OF MINES

Off-road trip near Pomerelle recalls history and scenery

By Andrew Weeks ♦ Times-News writer

ALBION — The morning dawned chilly on July 15, when I met a group of off-road folks that day in Burley.

A few minutes after I arrived at the Mike Jackson home, our group of four — Jackson, his son Justin Jackson, Ryan Kent of Logan, Utah, and myself — climbed into his four-wheel drive pickup, trailer in tow, and headed to Pomerelle Mountain Resort.

It wasn't our final destination.

After unloading the Yamaha Rhino from the trailer and a Honda all-terrain vehicle from the back of the pickup, we headed into the woods to look for wildlife and old mines.

ATV rules worry officials

By Joyce Edlefsen
The Standard Journal

BOISE — A state agency has stepped up its off-highway vehicles education efforts since some states’ rules have changed and additional rules are expected to be proposed in the next Legislative session.

Meanwhile, Forest Service officials say they are concerned about the safety ramifications of youngsters driving OHVs on roads also used by logging trucks and recreational vehicles.

The 2009 Idaho Legislature passed a law that removes a requirement for individuals to have a driver’s license to operate all-terrain vehicles on certain roads. The regulation allows children under 16 to drive ATVs and motorbikes under the supervision of an adult on those roads.

The Idaho Department of Parks and Recreation says it is working to inform ATV, utility-type vehicle and specialty off-highway vehicle users — as well as other motorists who use forest roads — about the regulations and traffic safety.

Parks and Recreation Director Nancy Merrill says classes are available and people who intend to visit Idaho forests should consider taking them.

“The information presented in these classes will help our younger riders become better, more knowledgeable and safer riders,” she says in a news release.

The next scheduled OHV training program by the state Parks and Recreation Department will be held Aug. 14 at Action Motor Sports in Idaho Falls. Preregistration is mandatory. Two classes will be offered Aug. 14, a dirt bike class at 10 a.m. and an ATV class at 2 p.m.

According to Intermountain Regional Forester Harv Forsgren, the Forest Service is “deeply concerned” about the ramifications of untrained children on off-highway vehicles driving the same roads as passenger vehicles, recreation vehicles and logging and livestock trucks.

“During the summer, forest roads become crowded with cars, trucks pulling trailers, RVs, and larger vehicles including construction and logging trucks,” Forsgren says in a news release.

“OHV users — including unlicensed, underage users — and drivers of passenger vehicles will find themselves sharing many miles of national forest roads in Idaho. Drivers of all vehicles should stay alert to this and drive defensively.”

According to the news release, 7,700 miles of National Forest System roads are open to passenger vehicles in the region, with about 700 miles either paved or two-lane.

These are the type of roads where the Forest Service is most concerned for driver safety as travel speeds tend to be faster and drivers of passenger vehicles aren’t expecting to share the road with OHVs, the news release says.

While the Forest Service, state parks and local sheriff’s offices all provide information to the public about the rules and safety aspects of ATV and other off-highway vehicle use.

The state has a brochure detailing the state laws regulating OHV use. It’s available at many dealers and public agencies and online at www.parksandrecreation.idaho.gov.

A proposal to make training classes mandatory for youths using ATVs was rejected by this year’s Legislature, but similar legislation is likely to be proposed again in 2011. Utah and other states require such training.

McGrath returns to Powder Mountain race

Supercross star Jeremy “Showtime” McGrath will be the featured rider at the Monster Energy/Powder Mountain Motocross event Aug. 19-22 in Eden, Utah.

Last year’s inaugural event drew thousands of entries and 15,000 fans, making it the largest outdoor motocross event in Utah history.

“The Powder Mountain race was awesome last year,” said pro racer David Pingree. “That event has more potential than any place I’ve been in a long time and hopefully I can get back and be a part of it again.”

The track, designed by McGrath at Powder

Mountain, offers a full range of amateur classes — novice, veteran, pro and women’s. Cost is $50 per class.

Admission is $10 per person, per day and free for children ages 4 and younger.

“I can’t wait to get back to the Monster Energy/

Powder Mountain MX,” McGrath said. “It was one of the most fun weekends I had all year on my motorcycle. Great track, great fun and a nice crowd.”

Expedition

THE MOUNTAINS near Pomerelle are dotted with silver and gold mines, Mike Jackson said. He used to ride the trails as a teen, and only recently started exploring the area again.

“How often do you ride the trails,” I asked.

“About every 20 years,” he said with a laugh.

Parts of the trail system were overgrown with trees, and looked as if it’d been a while since other people had traversed it.

Our first stop was at a pleasant meadow where cows pastured amid a sea of plants, called “skunk cabbage.” Their thick, wide leaves usually emit a pungent smell, Jackson said, but on this cool morning the air smelled fresh.

It wasn’t long before the chill started wearing off, the sun beating down from a cloudless blue sky, and soon all of us had taken off the light jackets we had started out with that morning.

We jumped back onto our machines — Kent on the ATV, the rest of us in the Rhino — and headed to the first silver mine about 3 miles distant.

THE FAIRLY-EVEN trail soon became rocky.

“This isn’t the worst of it,” Jackson told me. I laughed.

A few minutes later my grip tightened on the hand bar as we crawled over rocks that would have been difficult for any dirt bike to traverse. But somehow, years ago, Jackson did just that.

“It seemed like a good idea at the time,” he said.

Now he wasn’t so sure.

But we weren’t on dirt bikes, and the ATV and Rhino performed just fine. I was impressed with their abilities — and the skill of the drivers — to maneuver over the rocky obstacles.

We didn’t experience any glitches along the way, though we did hear the “thump” of a large boulder hitting the undercarriage of the Rhino every now and then.

WE MADE IT over the rocks and found ourselves at an old silver mine hidden in the mountainside. A mound of rocks and debris lay piled over an impressive area, testifying to just how deep the mines go into the mountains.

“A lot of the (area’s) history is mines like this,” Jackson said. “They dug holes all over the mountains here, looking for gold and silver. And they got a lot of silver out of them.”

Now the place looked like remnants of a ghost town.

Photos by JUSTIN JACKSON/For the Times-News

Ryan Kent of Logan, Utah, rides an all-terrain vehicle on a trail ride in search of old silver and gold mines, July 15 near Albion.

The area was cluttered with old wood, metal objects and plenty of rocks that glistened in the sun.

Water trickled out of the mine, forming a small stream.

“It’s really dangerous to go back into these mines,” Jackson said. “As you can see, there’s water running out of it, so you’ve probably got stagnant air, algae and stuff, so its bad to breathe. Its shell rock, so its going to cave in, the timbers are all rotted out.”

“It’s fine to come out and look at them and say, ‘That’s neat,’ but going inside is a dangerous, dangerous venture.”

WE GOT ON our machines again, and a little ways farther stopped at a small, abandoned cabin. Curious, we thought, how it appeared to have been built between two large boulders.

Someone long ago had apparently tried to make a path near the cabin’s entrance, perhaps even attempting a flower garden, but now the place was overgrown with trees, tall grass and forest shrub.

Swarms of flies and other insects are the only ones to call it home now.

A DEER JUMPED out from the second mine we visited, startled by the approach of our trail machines.

The mine’s entrance was gated closed, so the deer likely had been resting in the shade near the cave’s opening or drinking the nearby water.

Justin quickly snapped some pictures of the doe as it scrambled up an embankment, fleeing the site. We later saw it run across the top of the hillside, where we could see that part of the mine had collapsed.

More silver and gold rocks glistened in the sun. Jackson picked up a couple of rocks and banged them together, trying to open them.

No gold, but it was worth a try.

OUR LAST STOP was at a collapsed mine on a mountainside, overlooking the valley floor. On the edge of the trail were clumps of colorful wildflowers, and several yards away, fallen timbers made zig-zig patterns on the forest floor.

We rested on the mound of mine tailings — crushed rock — took pictures and talked. The day was quickly passing, the sun climbing higher in the sky.

As was our routine, we climbed aboard our off-road machines and headed to our starting point — again traversing rocky terrain, traveling through thick woods and babbling brooks, and into the more fertile fields of skunk cabbage, leaving the cabin and deer and mines behind.

Video encourages riders to stay on trails, ride safe

BOISE — The Idaho Off-Highway Vehicle Public Outreach Campaign has produced a new 30-second public service announcement to encourage OHV riders to stay on trails and ride safe and responsibly on Idaho’s public lands.

The new video is live on YouTube and at www.stayontrails.com. There’s also a new blog about the PSA: <http://idahostayontrails.blogspot.com/2010/07/idaho-is-adventure-paradise-for-ohv.html>.

“Our public agencies continue to see isolated instances of irresponsible OHV riding in the national forests and BLM lands,” said Steve Stuebner, Idaho OHV campaign coordinator. “The PSA emphasizes what responsible riders already know — staying on trails and riding safe and responsibly will ensure that OHV riders have great access to trails and a long future.”

The campaign website is a one-stop source for OHV riders in Idaho. It features detailed descriptions and maps for 26 OHV rides in Idaho, and links to all the state’s OHV clubs.

The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — Here's a novice bass angler describing his first largemouth bass on a topwater lure. His eyes were as big as a child's eyes on Christmas morning. In animated fashion, he talked about the startling and ferocious surface explosion and ensuing battle. "The strike was so exciting," he said. "Why would anyone fish with a lure other than a topwater?"

Sadly, fishing experience will answer that question. Most of the time, topwater lures are not effective and anglers must rely on subsurface offerings. If topwater worked all the time, there would be no bass fishing lures other than topwater.

I've never met an angler who wasn't hooked on surface action. In Mexico, the guides often use a charming Spanglish word — top-ee-water — to coach their clients on what lure to try. It's a recommendation most often heard during warm months, mostly at dawn and dusk, when light conditions are low and fish are attracted by a surface commotion.

Cloudy conditions extend the length of time topwater lures are effective, as will a windy chop that breaks up sunlight penetrating the depths. Most topwater fanatics prefer very calm conditions when fish can home in on their lure from 10 feet or more. Wave action makes the lure more difficult to locate, but bass will bite topwater in windy conditions.

There's a reason for this. Largemouth bass are equal-opportunity predators. They'll eat anything they can choke down and are sometimes found struggling on the surface, their throats lodged by prey too big to swallow. It's the classic case of biting off more than you can chew.

Like trout in a stream, bass

Multiple treble hooks make topwater lures dangerous to remove from fish. Use a Boga Grip or other fish-handle device to control the fish, then use pliers or forceps to remove the hook.

in a lake will feed on surface insects as appetizers and, as an entree, eat the smaller fish also attracted by insects. They'll feed on ducklings or other birds that fall into the water, along with snakes, turtles, rats, mice, young muskrats or other small mammals.

A sick or injured prey fish often flounders weakly on the surface, advertising its vulnerability as surely as a three-legged zebra on the Serengeti Plain. Every predator is interested in an easy meal, and bass are no different.

All productive lures generate a form of adrenaline rush. The thrill is in the "thump" of a bass biting a plastic worm, the sideways jump of the line when a fish takes a jig, the bone-jarring collision when a bigmouth swimming north front-ends a crankbait headed south.

None of those thrills remotely equals the surface explosion that is a siren song for so many anglers, tempting them to tie on a topwater, even if they don't believe it will work. Like many television viewers, I sit mesmerized by slow-motion video of great white sharks striking seals, the ferocity of the attack often knocking the 400-pound mammals out of the water.

Unlike most viewers, I never watch Air Jaws video without thinking that those frightening shark attacks are just a bigger version of a bass biting a topwater lure. The following is topwater lore gleaned from accomplished anglers and 50 years of personal experience:

Chugger. This is a style known for its concave head, which creates a splashy disturbance when retrieved with short chugs or twitches of a fishing rod. The Heddon Lucky 13 is a prototype that popularized chuggers. One of today's most popular chuggers is the Rebel Pop-R. Strike King's Spit N King and Storm's Chug Bug are other good examples.

Prop bait. These are cigar-shaped floaters with propellers either on both ends or just on the rear of the lure. When retrieved, the prop makes a surface commotion and a sound that imitates a school of baitfish skittering for cover. Classic models include the Smithwick Devil's Horse and Heddon Torpedo.

Walking bait. This is a cigar-shaped lure balanced so it moves from side-to-side when retrieved with the right cadence and rod action. The action is called "walking the dog."

Heddon's Zara Spook is the best-known walking bait.

Frog baits. Floaters, like the Scum Frog and Snag Proof Frog, have been around for a long time and are designed to fish slowly through lily pads or weedy cover. The newest generation of frog baits are the fast-moving type with turbulent leg action. They are reeled quickly across the surface, often resulting in dramatic strikes. Examples include Zoom's Horny Toad, Stanley's Ribbet Frog and Strike King's Rage Toad.

Buzzbaits. These are modified spinnerbaits with specialized blades that keep the lure buzzing across the surface, kicking up a sputtering commotion and mixing in a clacking sound for good measure. Most lure companies that make spinnerbaits also have a buzzbait in their line.

Big horn sheep found in Oakley Reservoir

Question: "A friend of mine found a dead big horn sheep in Oakley Reservoir. He told me the department was trying to determine the cause of death. What did you find?"

Answer: There were actually two bighorn rams found dead in Oakley Reservoir at about the same time. They both were located by anglers. The first sheep was transported to the Magic Valley regional office by the angler.

A second ram was reported a few days later and Chad Wipperman, the local conservation officer, recovered the carcass. Both rams were necropsied at the Wildlife Health Lab in Caldwell. Dr. Mark Drew conducted the necropsies and submitted tissues for pathological examination.

His results showed both were 5-year-old rams, and both suffered significant trauma on their necks and down one side of the bodies, but the ultimate cause of death for both was drowning.

The real question is not "what was the cause of death, but what was the cause of the fall?" The answer to this question may never be known, but it could be as simple as two rams pushing on each other and losing their footing. Other possibilities include the presence of a predator chasing them, or possibly it was human caused along the road near the rim above the reservoir.

ASK THE OFFICER

The finders of the rams were allowed to recover and keep the heads after a big game mortality report was completed and a metal pin inserted into the horns. Idaho Fish and Game Commission rules allow recovery of wildlife parts from animals that have died of natural causes. In the case of bighorn sheep, however, the parts may not be sold or ownership transferred to another without authorization from the director of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

While Idahoans in general hate to see the loss of bighorn rams, one positive result of this event was a chance to examine the carcasses and determination that the animals were healthy and clear of any disease.

Chinook fishing to end next week

Fishing for ocean-run spring and summer chinook salmon in all Idaho waters, except the Boise River, will end Aug. 4.

Non-tribal chinook fishing will close on all waters of the Clearwater, Middle Fork Clearwater, South Fork Clearwater, Lochsa, Snake, Lower Salmon, Little Salmon and Upper Salmon rivers at the end of legal fishing hours the same day.

Salmon fishing waters close when anglers are close to reaching the non-tribal share of the runs. Spring and summer chinook also begin to reach spawning condition this time of year.

Anglers with a salmon tag will be able to keep chinook, generally caught incidentally to steelhead. Fishing for fall salmon opens in the Snake River Sept. 1.

F&G Commission to meet Aug. 16

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission will set wolf seasons when it meets Aug. 16 in Idaho Falls.

Commissioners will consider proposed season dates, harvest limits and methods of take on gray wolves. They also will consider proposed seasons on waterfowl and sage grouse.

Wolf seasons still are subject to a pending legal challenge. Fish and Game managers will present public comments on waterfowl season proposals collected from across the state and summarized for the commission.

Routine agenda items also include falconry seasons and limits.

Quick outing proves worthwhile for fish

By Brett French
The Billings Gazette

Lightning cracked on the horizon and water pelted the lake's surface like someone tossing handfuls of gravel from high above.

Suddenly, or should I say soddenly, fishing in the Beartooth Mountains on a Sunday afternoon didn't look like such a great idea.

It was one of those trips born late. My son, Alex, had Sunday off so I suggested a fishing trip. We didn't leave town until after noon, so driving two hours to reach my Beartooth Mountain honey hole seemed a bit optimistic. To try and close the travel-time gap, I loaded my underpowered and old Suzuki SP-125 motorcycle in the back of the pickup. The idea was that from the main road we'd unload the motorcycle to cover the roughly three miles of rocky four-wheel-drive trail before we started hiking into the lake.

Riding two people on a motorcycle over a rocky and bumpy trail is no fun for the driver or the passenger. Amazingly, my piddly motorpickle only stalled once along the route to the trailhead.

It was a beautiful hike going the rest of the distance, about a 30-minute walk. The wildflowers were in full bloom, the grass was green and tall and the views of the valley in the distance spectacular. The only concern was the large rocks along the trail that had been overturned by a bear.

So as I walked, especially in areas along the stream where the rushing water was loud, I clapped my hands and called out "Hey bear! Hey bear!" Apparently it worked because we never saw a bear.

I'd had good luck on this small lake tossing lures a couple of years ago. So I tied one on, tossed it out and immediately got a strike. I was pumped. But nothing happened after several more casts. So I moved and saw fish following my lure but not striking. So I moved again. This time I got a hit and a hookup but as I reeled the trout spit out the lure. Now I was frustrated.

After a close inspection I noticed that the hooks on some of my aged lures weren't very sharp. I hadn't brought my hook sharpener or even my Leatherman tool that has a file on it. So I found a suitably smooth rock and tried to grind my fish hooks to a finer point.

Unfortunately, without my reading glasses it was difficult to see what the heck I was doing. And when I tossed the lure out and got another hit and a miss, I decided to improvise.

Obviously the fish liked the lure enough to take a strike at it, so why change offerings. Instead, I decided to tie a stinger hook behind my lure.

Using some fly-fishing tippet material and a fly, I threaded a Royal Wulff behind my Vibrax brass spinner and cast it out. Again, no luck. They weren't falling for my silly ruse.

I was so engrossed in my trout pursuit that I didn't even notice the cow and calf elk meander into the shallow water at the opposite end of the lake. But there they were when I looked up, staring at me as if to mimic what I was thinking: "Where the heck did you come from?"

My camera, naturally, was zipped in the pocket of my rain jacket and as I moved to retrieve it they splashed noisily from the water in a retreat to a safer spot.

Frustrated with the fishing, I finally gave in and went through a bunch of different spinners and spoons before one in firetiger color caught a cutthroat. All of the sudden, I was in the zone, and although I still lost more fish than I caught, we came home with some nice fillets for dinner.

Unfortunately, my son had the same problems, losing fish right at the last minute. It was exasperating, but a good lesson on making sure the lure hooks are sharp, or that I at least buy some new lures every decade or so.

So despite the late start, rough ride in, rain, lightning and poor lure and angler performance, it was still a great trip. It probably could have been a lot shorter trip if we had landed more of the fish that got away — a trifecta of brown, cutthroat and brook trout — but why complain? Sometimes the least well-planned outings are the most fun, even when the weather doesn't cooperate. And the fish — lightly breaded and fried in olive oil and butter — couldn't have been tastier.

FISHING REPORT

Anglers at Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir are catching walleye, perch and smallmouth bass. Trout fishing has dropped off, but some are still being caught. The largest walleye reported to date was 11 pounds. Most anglers haven't been as fortunate, but 7- to 8-pound walleye have been reported. Anglers catching perch say they are good-sized fish. Most success reported is from anglers fishing from Grey's Landing to the upper end of the reservoir.

Most fishing success at Magic Reservoir is coming from boat anglers who are trolling. They're using a chartreuse wedding ring with a night crawler and are catching 1 1/2- to 3-pound trout. There are no reports of perch or bass being caught.

Anglers who've been to Roseworth Reservoir haven't been catching any fish.

Little Wood Reservoir — no report.

Lake Walcott and Sublett Reservoir — no report

Weeds at Carey Lake are making float tubing difficult. Perch fishing is good but they are only 6 to 8 inches. Some small bass and bluegill are being caught.

Anderson Ranch — no report

Anglers say the Big Wood River is fishing well. The stream is Wadeable, but caution is still advised. The green drake hatch is ending and anglers are switching to attractors, stimulants and adams.

Silver Creek anglers are using baetis in the evening and tricos in the morning.

South Fork of the Boise River — no report.

NOTE: For area ponds, check the fish-stocking schedule for locations recently stocked by Fish and Game.

Inguinal hernia repair usually safe, often uncomplicated

DEAR DR. GOTT: I read your column daily but have never seen you comment on an inguinal hernia. Can you address it? I am in my late 70s and suddenly have one. It is not incarcerated, and I am wondering if I need surgery. If so, can it be done with local anesthesia?

DEAR READER: An inguinal hernia occurs when a portion of the small intestine or internal fat protrudes through a weakened area in the lower abdominal muscles. This occurs on either side of the groin area between the abdomen and thigh, resulting in a bulge. Inguinal hernias are five times more common in males than in females and account for 75 percent of all hernias, of which there are several kinds. An inguinal hernia can occur at any time from infancy to adulthood.

DR. GOTT

There are two types of inguinal hernia — direct and indirect. A direct hernia is caused by degeneration of connective tissue of the abdominal muscles, common in older people. This type develops gradually because of continuous stress on the muscles involved. Factors include weight gain, lifting heavy objects, muscle strain, chronic cough and straining from constipation. Indirect hernias are congenital and much more common in males because of the way a male develops in the womb. Indirect inguinal hernias can occur in females as well; however, the condition is the result of a weakened area in the abdominal wall, not because of a weakened area of the inguinal canal.

Symptoms of either type include a bulge, pain, burning or discomfort — especially when lifting or otherwise straining — and weakness or pressure in the groin. Incarcerated hernias are so named because the bulge that protrudes is swollen and cannot be massaged back into the abdomen. When this occurs, the blood supply to that area may become compromised. Symptoms can include fever, increasing pain, tenderness, redness and an elevation in the patient's heart rate. This situation requires immediate attention.

Diagnosis of an inguinal hernia is made through examination by a physician and the medical history provided by patient.

Treatment for adults is surgery accomplished either through laparoscopy or open repair. The laparoscopic approach uses general anesthesia. Incisions are made in the lower abdomen. A thin tube with a video camera is then attached. The camera allows the area to be viewed on a monitor, and repairs are made using synthetic mesh. This procedure affords shorter recovery time but cannot be used on large hernias or on patients who may have had prior pelvic surgery. Open repair requires anesthesia into the abdomen or spine to numb the area. An incision is made in the groin, the hernia is repositioned into the abdomen, and the abdominal wall is reinforced with sutures. The area is then strengthened with synthetic mesh or screen in a procedure known as herniorrhaphy.

Post-surgical conditions can include wound infection, bleeding, pain at the site of the scar and injury to internal organs. Recurrence can occur. Generally speaking, however, hernia repair using either method is safe and most often uncomplicated.

To provide related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "An Informed Approach to Surgery." Other readers who would like a copy should send a self-addressed stamped No. 10 envelope and a $2 check or money order to Newsletter, P.O. Box 167, Wickliffe, OH 44092-0167. Pakistani jet crash kills 152, including two Americans

By Shaiq Hussain
The Washington Post

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — A Pakistani passenger plane crashed into the hills surrounding Islamabad on Wednesday morning and officials said all 152 people on board — including two Americans — were killed.

The Airbus A321, operated by Airblue, a private aviation service, was arriving from Karachi and trying to land in Islamabad in a heavy monsoon downpour. It crashed in the nearby Margalla hills.

Television footage of the fiery crash site showed fog and smoke rising from the mountains. Burning wreckage of the fuselage, wings and engines was scattered across the forest floor, and twisted metal parts hung from trees.

Although there were initial reports of five injured survivors being transported for medical treatment, the chairman of the Islamabad's Capital Development Authority, Imtiaz Inayat Ali, later said that all 146 passengers and six crew members were killed.

Richard Snelsire, a spokesman for the U.S. Embassy here, said two Americans were among the dead. Their names were not released, and no additional information about them was available.

The plane departed Karachi at 7:50 a.m. for the two-hour flight to Benazir Bhutto International Airport in the capital.

“It is not yet clear what is the actual cause of the plane crash,” Pervez George, a civil aviation authority spokesman, said in an interview, but he speculated that bad weather played a part. He said the control tower lost contact with the plane as it was about to land. “We got the news later that it had crashed in the Margalla hills.”

This 1851 illustration shows the HMS Investigator stuck in the ice on the north coast of Baring Island in the Arctic.

Ship lost for more than 150 years found in Arctic

TORONTO (AP) — Canadian archeologists have found a ship abandoned more than 150 years ago in the quest for the fabled Northwest Passage and which was lost in the search for the doomed expedition of Sir John Franklin, the head of the team said Wednesday.

Marc-Andre Bernier, Parks Canada's head of underwater archaeology, said the HMS Investigator, abandoned in the ice in 1853, was found in shallow water in Mercy Bay along the northern coast of Banks Island in Canada's western Arctic.

“The ship is standing upright in very good condition. It's standing in about 11 meters (36 feet) of water,” he said. “This is definitely of the utmost importance. This is the ship that sailed the last leg of the Northwest Passage.”

The Investigator was one of many American and British ships sent out to search for the HMS Erebus and the Terror, vessels commanded by Franklin in his ill-fated search for the Northwest Passage in 1845.

Environment Minister Jim Prentice said the British government has been notified that one of their naval shipwrecks has been discovered, as well as the bodies of three sailors.

Captained by Robert McClure, the Investigator sailed in 1850. That year, McClure sailed the Investigator into the strait that now bears his name and realized that he was in the final leg of the Northwest Passage, the sea route across North America.

But before he could sail into the Beaufort Sea, the ship was blocked by pack ice and forced to winter-over in Prince of Wales Strait along the east coast of Banks Island.

The following summer, McClure tried again to sail to the end of the Passage, but was again blocked by ice. He steered the ship and crew into a large bay on the island's north coast he called the Bay of Mercy.

There they were to remain until 1853, when they were rescued by the crew of the HMS Resolute.

John Callahan, politically incorrect cartoonist, dies

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — John Callahan, the quadriplegic cartoonist whose famously politically incorrect humor generated both praise and criticism, has died. He was 59.

Callahan died Saturday at Good Samaritan Hospital in Portland, Ore., after undergoing surgery and treatment for a chronic bed sore, said Kevin Mullane, a longtime friend.

Paralyzed from the chest down in a car accident in 1972 at age 21 and a recovering alcoholic since he was 27, Callahan began selling cartoons in the early '80s and went on to be internationally syndicated in newspapers and magazines.

Working on the premise that “anything in the world is fair game,” he was known as an equal opportunity offender whose diverse targets included the disabled, the homeless, fat people, Alzheimer's patients, feminists and the French.

“He had a big following,” said Deborah Levin, Callahan's former manager. “When he was published in the L.A. Times magazine, I received calls and letters (for him) from everyone from celebrities to prison inmates; It didn't matter. He spoke to all of us.”

“I thought what was refreshing about him was, in an age of political correctness, he was bucking the system,” said Bill Plympton, a two-time Oscar-nominated animator who first met Callahan in the late '70s when he showed up in his wheelchair at a cartoon class Plympton was teaching at Portland State University.

“He showed me his portfolio, and every cartoon was genius, a very wacky, crazy humor,” Plympton said.

BSU, Idaho presidents disagree over rivalry

Gov. Otter: 'I'd like to see series continue'

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press writer

BOISE — The war of words continues.
Boise State University President Bob Kustra says his remarks about a bitter football rivalry with the University of Idaho, in which he called Vandal culture “nasty” and “inebriated,” came out harsher than he intended.

But Kustra is defending his stance that there's no reason for the Broncos to continue traveling to northern Idaho to play the Vandals on their home turf in Moscow.
University of Idaho President Duane Nellis said he was disappointed by Kustra's comments.
“I'm sorry to hear that Bob feels so negatively about his visits to Moscow,” Nellis said in a statement.

Kustra's criticisms of the Vandals came during an interview with the Idaho Statesman editorial board Tuesday. Kustra later said in a prepared statement to Idaho media that questions about the rivalry “hit a sore spot” after someone sent him a recent opinion piece entitled “Reasons to Hate Boise State” from the University of Idaho student newspaper.

“It troubles me that the occasion of an annual football game causes the air waves and Internet to be full of disparagement of Boise State's students, faculty and programs, year after year,” Kustra said.
Boise State's pending move to the Mountain West

Conference from the Western Athletic Conference means the Broncos aren't likely to play the Idaho Vandals in 2011.
Boise State coach Chris Petersen put the future of the long-standing rivalry in further doubt Monday, saying his team should no longer travel to Moscow for games.
Kustra, when questioned about Petersen's remarks during his interview with the newspaper editorial board, said he didn't care if the Broncos ever play the Vandals again, the newspaper reported.

Boise State spokesman Frank Zang told The Associated Press on Wednesday that he was present during the interview and the university does not dispute the context of Kustra's remarks.
“He does recognize that they came out harsher than he intended,” Zang said.

Area schools benefit from 7-on-7 passing league

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

Jake Hollifield calls for the snap. His head swivels as he scans downfield, then he shuffles his feet, sets and fires a pass across the middle.
That sight will be a common one on Friday nights this fall.
But this was a Tuesday night.
In July.
Second-year Canyon Ridge High School football coach and athletic director Bill Hicks got the ball rolling on a weekly 7-on-7 passing league during July that saw eight teams from southern Idaho participate.
The league concluded with Tuesday night's outing at Twin Falls High School as Buhl, Canyon Ridge, Filer, Jerome, Twin Falls and Wood River took turns lining up against each other.
For players like Hollifield, the league has been extremely valuable. The only returning starter on Jerome's offense, Hollified is transitioning from a Y receiver — a hybrid tight end/slot position — to quarterback in the Tigers' spread offense.
“It helps get some reps in, find some guys that can play with you, that can catch,” said Hollifield. “Pretty much just have fun out here and get better.”
In the past, area schools have had to travel long distances and pay as much as $150 per player to take part in weekend passing leagues. But this summer, they've had to chance to make a short drive and play for free each week.
“It's very beneficial to us,” said Hicks. “I've done 7-on-7 my whole career. It's a good opportunity to get to know the kids and to get to know the other coaches involved with it.”
Minico and Highland High School of Pocatello also took part in the league, which rotated to different schools in the Magic Valley each week.
Teams match up for 10 plays during a 15-minute window before rotating to face a different squad. The seven offensive positions typically include a center, quarterback, running back and four receivers. It's basically two-hand touch football with no lineman, outside of the snapper.
“It's a great deal,” said Jerome coach Gary Krumm. “It's been super fun and we're kind of catching up with some of the other states. The other states are constantly playing 7-on-7 so it's kind of

Poster a show of reality in NFL

The HBO cameras are rolling in New York, where this season's “Hard Knocks” could make a star out of Jets coach Rex Ryan — and send parents across the country scurrying for the mute button on the remote control.

Then there's Cincinnati, where the T.O. & Ochocinco Show promises to be must-see reality of its own.
NFL training camps are opening across the country this week, much to the delight of football-starved fans. Along with the fun this season, though, comes a serious message about a serious issue the NFL tried for way too many years to ignore.
“Repetitive brain injury, when not treated promptly and properly, may cause permanent damage to your brain,” warns a new poster that will be displayed in all 32 NFL locker rooms.
Quite a change from just a few years ago, when the NFL all but dismissed mounting concerns about concussions and their long-term effects. The league even trotted out doctors to say there was no definitive connection between concussions and brain damage.
Now players have the information right in front of them: Concussions can lead to everything from memory loss to depression to dementia.

“It's a leap forward and it doesn't hold anything back,” said Chris Nowinski, a former college football player and professional wrestler who helped with the poster. “It clearly is a change in the thinking of the NFL.”
That change in thinking came under new commissioner Roger Goodell, who should get at least part of the credit for recognizing the problem and dealing with it. Though the change came grudgingly at first, the NFL now appears serious about trying to do something about what was one of the dirty little secrets of professional football.
It won't help players from the past who died young or were left brain-damaged because of repeated concussions. But it might save some lives

Cowboys rip Vallivue to advance at state tournament

Jordan hits slam in third straight game

Times-News

Hitting is contagious, and it's safe to say Jared Jordan's got the bug.
For the third straight game the Twin Falls Cowboys second baseman hit a grand slam, this time as part of a seven-run sixth inning that iced a Class AA American Legion Baseball State Tournament opening-round victory over Vallivue in Boise on Wednesday.
The 12-1 win, completed in seven innings by virtue of the 10-run rule, was the 40th triumph of the season for the Cowboys (40-10) and put them on the right track in their quest for their first state championship.
Michael Williams tripled and drove in two for Twin Falls, which got hits from seven different players in jumping on the lesser-experienced Vallivue squad right out of the gate.

“That team was hot, we knew it, but we weren't going to mess around with them,” said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir. “It was a great day for us. The first one is always the hardest because the jitters are coming, everyone's a little nervous and back on their heels. Today we showed we were the experienced team, and the one that had been there before.”
Cy Sneed and Zayne Slotten combined to give up just three hits, all singles, on the mound for the Cowboys.
Twin Falls capitalized on a pair of Vallivue errors in the first inning and plated four runs, kicked off by Braden Box's leadoff double. Titans pitcher Jacob Betancourt kept the Cowboys largely in check for the next four innings but was finally knocked out of the game in the sixth. He allowed nine runs, four of them unearned.

Completing the game short of the full-length nine-inning regulation was a big boost for the Cowboys as they look to preserve pitching to make a serious run at the title.
“That was definitely the right start we wanted,” Stadelmeir said. “Cy threw really well, limited his pitch count which was the best-case scenario. If you're going to win this thing you need to win four straight so we need him to bounce back.”

Lee rejects Angels, to stay in Chicago

HOUSTON — Chicago Cubs first baseman Derrek Lee has rejected a trade to the Los Angeles Angels, saying he prefers to finish the season with his team.

Lee says he "really kind of agonized over" the decision, but that he decided the best thing for himself and his family was to stay in Chicago.

The 34-year-old, who has a no-trade clause, also says he plans to play beyond this season and would like to do it with the Cubs.

Cubs manager Lou Piniella says he was "very pleased" to hear that Lee was staying with the team.

Lee is having a tough season, batting just .248 with 11 home runs and 44 RBIs. But his Gold Glove defense would have been a welcome addition to an Angels roster that already has used six players at first base since Kendry Morales broke his leg jumping on home plate after his walkoff grand slam on May 29. The list includes catcher Mike Napoli and second baseman Howie Kendrick.

Heyward gave Atlanta its first steal of home in a decade, and Tim Hudson shut down Washington the way he almost always does, helping the NL East-leading Braves beat the last-place Nationals.

The game was tied at 1 before Lee connected for his 13th homer, a two-run shot. His second one, a two-run shot, made it 5-1 in the seventh.

Manchester United throttles MLS All-Stars

HOUSTON — Manchester United turned the Major League Soccer All-Star game into its own showcase of talent.

Federico Macheda had two early goals, Mexican star Javier Hernandez scored in his debut for the Red Devils, and Manchester United routed the MLS All-Stars 5-2 on Wednesday night in the final exhibition game of its North American tour.

Darron Gibson and Tom Cleverley added goals for the Red Devils, tuning up for the start of the Premier League season next month.

Houston Dynamo star

Brian Ching had a goal and an assist for the All-Stars, who were hoping for a validating victory against one of the world's pre-eminent soccer powers. But Macheda scored twice in the first 13 minutes, quickly dashing the MLS team's hopes.

The Red Devils, who played without several top players, circled the field and applauded the fans after the game.

The sellout crowd was announced at 70,728, the largest for an MLS All-Star game since the first one in 1996 drew 78,416 to Giants Stadium.

Strasburg felt tight a 'couple days ago'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Most of his teammates already were out on the field for batting practice when Stephen Strasburg wandered into the home clubhouse at Nationals Park on Wednesday.

Shut down for at least two days — and perhaps three or four — because of a stiff pitching shoulder, Strasburg did not need to hurry to put on his uniform. Backup catcher Wil Nieves, whose locker is next to Strasburg's, turned to the rookie sensation and asked, "How you doing, man? You all right?"

Strasburg's answer — the one the Washington Nationals and their fans care so much about — was inaudible. About two hours later, though, standing against a cinderblock wall in the hallway outside that clubhouse, the prized right-hander spoke to reporters for the first time since being scratched Tuesday, shortly before what was supposed to be the 10th major league start of his much-hyped career.

Strasburg said he first sensed tightness in his pitching shoulder "a couple days ago," and he chalked it up to "kind of hitting the wall a little bit."

He said he felt "a lot better" and his range of motion is "starting to come back."

Washington general manager Mike Rizzo and trainer Lee Kuntz said Strasburg did not indicate he had a problem before Tuesday, when his pregame bullpen session was stopped about a half-dozen throws in.

"I wasn't really scared, because it's kind of something that I've had happen to me before," Strasburg said, referring to feeling stiffness in his right shoulder while in college at San Diego State. "It wasn't on just one pitch, so that's obviously a big thing."

He took anti-inflammatory medicine Wednesday and underwent treatment that Kuntz said included "stretching, strengthening ... using heat, using ice." But the No. 1 overall pick in the 2009 amateur draft did not toss a ball. Instead, during batting practice, Strasburg stood in the right-field grass, chatting with pitching coach Steve McCatty.

Washington Nationals pitcher Stephen Strasburg said he has hit the wall a little bit.

It's not exactly clear when he will next throw a baseball, much less pitch in a game; his next scheduled start would be Sunday.

"We don't have an update whether he's going to pitch Sunday or when he'll pitch again, if not Sunday," manager Jim Riggleman said. "We're just really going to give it another day or two before we do anything."

The Nationals have been quite careful in the way they have brought along Strasburg since giving him a record $15.1 million contract right before the deadline for getting deals done.

Even though Strasburg was dominant at times during spring training, he was moved to minor league camp in Florida, then began the season at Double-A Harrisburg. The righty was promoted to Triple-A Syracuse in early May, before making his highly anticipated major league debut June 8 — and, somehow, surpassing expectations by striking out 14 batters in a 5-2 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

He left that game after seven innings, part of a pattern of being eased into the rigors of the major leagues. The Nationals have said they would end Strasburg's season when he reaches 160 innings, even if that cap were to come in late August or early September.

nice to see."

For second-year Filer head coach Russ Burnum, it's a chance to continue building a program that's heavy on underclassmen.

"It's good for all of us," he said. "It gives the kids the feeling of football, gets them motivated. We can kind of get some timing down just a little bit and the kids get to experience the offense."

While most area teams run the ball more than they pass, Hicks said the 7-on-7 league can still be a boon.

"Some teams choose to run a passing league offense with five wide receivers or use a Cover 2 man (scheme) on defense, things you won't do during the season," said Hicks. "But if you stay true to what your offense does, it teaches your quarterbacks the reads and your receivers the routes. It's very beneficial."

Outings like the passing league are not allowed in August, but the four gatherings in July will certainly be evident when many area teams kick off practice on Aug. 9.

Said Hollifield: "Every little bit that you do in the off-season helps."

issued a statement Wednesday on the controversy surrounding the continuation of the football series.

"As a football fan and an Idahoan, I'd like to see the series continue," Otter said. "As Governor, I have no authority, no role and no interest in micromanaging our universities' football programs. That's why we hire university presidents, athletic directors and coaches. I have every confidence that they'll work things out." Kustra did not plan to do any follow-up interviews about his remarks, Zang said.

The annual matchup between the Broncos and Vandals has alternated between Boise and Moscow. The teams are scheduled to play each other on Nov. 12 in Moscow.

"In-state rivalries are meant to be fun," Nellis said. "Our long-time rivalry with BSU is important to the state, the economy, and the fans from both teams. We embrace and celebrate that rivalry and I very much hope it continues."

Haynesworth must pass test to practice

ASHBURN, Va. — Albert Haynesworth finally showed up for work — and quickly learned the Washington Redskins won't be cutting him any slack.

On the eve of the first day of training camp, Haynesworth ended his monthslong boycott of the team by meeting Wednesday morning with coach Mike Shanahan. Hardly sympathetic to the plight of a player who recently received a $21 million bonus, the coach wasn't about to let bygones be bygones.

Shanahan said Haynesworth must pass a conditioning test in order to practice. And, assuming the test is passed, the two-time All-Pro defensive lineman with the $100 million contract won't be practicing with the starting unit, at least not right away.

"I'm expecting him to be in great shape," Shanahan said. "And if he's not in great shape, then we're going to do what we need to do to get him in shape."

"Once he gets to that point, hopefully he'll fit into our system and do the things we want him to do. Because, if he does, he can be an excellent football player for us. If not, we're going to be very good anyhow."

Asked if he expected Haynesworth to be a part of the team in 2010, Shanahan would only say: "We'll see."

"All I can do is tell you we're going to give him every opportunity to show us what we can do," the coach said. "Hopefully he'll like the position that we play him in and give us everything that he's got."

The "position that we play him in" is the main point of consternation for Haynesworth. He's unhappy with the Redskins' switch to a 3-4 defense and would rather play for another team. Shanahan was ready to grant that wish in February and March — but the door was shut once Haynesworth collected the $21 million bonus on April 1, part of the seven-year contract he signed a year earlier. The deal is part of the enduring legacy of a decade of bad offseason signings under owner Dan Snyder.

BRONCOS ROOKIES GATHER MINUS TEBOW

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — Kyle Orton can't wait for rookie Tim Tebow to sign his contract and help shoulder the load at the Denver Broncos' training camp.

Not necessarily to split the snaps or siphon the media attention.

Orton has other things in mind for the first-round draft pick who is generating the kind of buzz in Denver that John Elway did as a rookie in 1983.

"Oh, that would fine," Orton said when asked after Wednesday's workout if he'd like to see Tebow in camp. "I've got these pads on. I need somebody to take them in for me."

Maybe it was good-natured rookie ribbing or perhaps it was a reference to the brouhaha at Cowboys camp where Dez Bryant insists he was unaware of the rookie ritual of carrying veteran shoulder pads after practice and refused to accommodate Roy Williams' request.

But it also showed quite clearly that Orton still considers himself the alpha dog at Dove Valley. He split snaps with Quinn on Wednesday when the unsigned Tebow missed the first day of workouts for rookies, selected veterans and players coming off injuries.

The 25th overall pick in the draft after winning two national titles and the Heisman Trophy at Florida, Tebow said last month that he didn't want to miss a single pro practice. But he can't show up without his signature on a contract.

So, he stayed away while his agent, Jimmy Sexton, and Broncos general manager Brian Xanders continued exchanging numbers. When finalized, Tebow is expected to get about $12 million over five years.

GATES GETS $36M CONTRACT EXTENSION FROM BOLTS

SAN DIEGO — Antonio Gates has caught plenty of big passes for the San Diego Chargers, and on Wednesday he hauled in the biggest contract ever given to an NFL tight end.

Gates agreed to a $36.175 million, five-year contract extension, with $20.4 million guaranteed, according to a person familiar with the deal, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because the figures weren't released. The deal averages $7.235 million per season from 2011-15.

A college basketball star at Kent State, Gates blossomed from a rookie free agent in 2003 to a superstar who is a three-time All-Pro and six-time Pro Bowler.

With three other star players unhappy about their contracts, talks with Gates apparently intensified this week. Gates and other veterans are due to report to training camp on Thursday, with the first full-squad practice on Friday.

"I've been blessed my whole career to be with one team," Gates said in a statement released by the team. "It's always good to get it out of the way. The goal is to win a championship. We all are human and it becomes a distraction even though you might not want it to be. It's always great to be able to go ahead and do what you need to do and get it out of the way."

CB GLENN SIGNS CEREMONIAL CONTRACT WITH TEXANS

HOUSTON — Cornerback Aaron Glenn signed a one-day contract with the Houston Texans on Wednesday with the intent of retiring with his hometown team.

Glenn played for five NFL teams between 1994-2008, including three seasons with the Texans (2002-04). Glenn is a native of nearby Humble and was taken by the Texans in the 2002 expansion draft.

"This brings closure, closure to a 15-year career," Glenn said. "Playing football is my life. To this day, it's still my life. My wife will tell you, it's hard for me to sit at home and watch a game because I get excited. Sometimes I want to take my son out and play 1-on-1 with him sometimes. But, it's a good thing. This is the right thing to do."

BENGALS REPORT FOR CAMP, T.O. TO FOLLOW

GEORGETOWN, Ky. — A flamboyant Cincinnati Bengals receiver has the whole team talking, and this time it's not Chad Ochocinco.

He's overshadowed by a player who has yet to arrive.

Terrell Owens was headed to the area Wednesday while his teammates-to-be tucked pillows and sound systems under their arms, unpacking for the start of training camp at Georgetown College. Owens wasn't expected to arrive until a day later.

The anticipation was already there.

"This just shows that we are building this team to go all the way this year," offensive guard Bobbie Williams said. "That's all you can ask an organization to do. So bring on TO! I'm excited."

Adding the 36-year-old receiver who has a history of clashing with quarterbacks came as a surprise. The Bengals had a chance to sign him after a tryout in March, but gave Antonio Bryant a four-year deal instead to line up opposite Ochocinco.

NFL RETIREES SUE ATTORNEYS AFTER SUIT SETTLEMENT

SAN FRANCISCO — A groundbreaking legal case that seemingly concluded last year with the NFL players union agreeing to pay former players a combined $26 million for failing to look out for their commercial interests has now gone into overtime.

Several of those retired players, including Paul Hornung, John Brodie and Marvin Cobb, who believe the settlement should have been larger sued their attorneys last week in San Francisco federal court.

The disgruntled players accuse the law firms of Manatt, Phelps & Phillips and McKool, Smith of failing to introduce during a 2008 trial a crucial piece of evidence.

The lawsuit also accused the law firms of excluding several retired players who should have been included in the official list of 2,062 former players who will share the settlement.

NFL ALUMNI OPEN HQ IN NJ WITH FOCUS ON RETIREES

NEWARK, N.J. — The NFL's newly reorganized Players Alumni Association officially opened its new headquarters Wednesday night with a focus on the needs of its retired players and their health.

With the league's administrators, owners, and some current and retired players in attendance, commissioner Roger Goodell said he realizes the importance of having an organization — a totally separate entity from the NFL — that serves former players.

— The Associated Press

Dahlberg

"I'm excited we're all moving in the same direction finally," said Nowinski, president of the Sports Legacy Institute and co-director of the Center for the Study of Traumatic Encephalopathy at Boston University. "I think the commissioner has made consistently great moves on this."

Goodell may not have had much choice. There was a growing amount of evidence on the effects of repeated concussions that was hard to ignore, and public campaigns by the families of former players were taking their toll.

Politicians were also getting involved.

"The NFL has had its four stages of grief: denial, more denial, some level of recognition and now research," New York congressman Anthony Weiner said at a hearing in May.

To Goodell's credit, he's now moving fast on an issue that effects millions of young athletes and is even more critical in a league built largely on the excitement of violent collisions.

Shortly after a survey of 160 NFL players by The Associated Press last season showed nearly one-fifth had either hidden a concussion or played while under the effects of one, Goodell issued stricter instructions for when players would be allowed to return to games or practices after head injuries.

The poster is a small part of the overall picture, but an important one. Whether players take it to heart is still to be determined; at least the message is in place.

It's a serious subject, as the heart-wrenching stories told by former players and their family members before Congress last year demonstrated. The fact the NFL took so long to recognize it as such is a disgrace.

Now the league has a second chance. As a result, players may live longer and more productive lives because of it.

IF JULY 29 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Although a vacation in August might be fun, especially if you are fulfilling a lifelong fantasy, there could be some small limitation that spoils the carefree aspect of your travels. Maybe you must take the computer along to check e-mail while away or perhaps you are stuck with a "staycation" due to financial obligations. In any case, your dedicated work ethic will get you where you want to go in the year ahead. You may be highly focused on business, career or finances in the fall and winter. Because you are willing to burn the candle at both ends to make ends meet, you will find some success at whatever you attempt. February is the very best month to launch important plans, accept opportunities, make crucial decisions or begin any matter that depends on good judgment.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Vote for what you hope for, not against what you fear. Because you are extraordinarily busy or overscheduled, you might make snap judgments. Don't lose touch with your highest ideals.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Watch out for the ripple effect. One small pebble thrown in the water can lead to widening surface disturbances. Frustrations may indicate a need for change, but a change could lead to more frustrations later.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You must train your eye on the target if you want to hit it. You must focus on the most significant details. More research and study is needed before you can accomplish your most treasured objectives.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Put all of your senses on alert since there is more than meets the eye. You might find that your intuitions are more accurate than usual or that observance of body language is helpful in a tense situation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you want to win at bingo, you need to at least have one bingo card. You may be trying to achieve something without using logic. Take baby steps and learn to walk before you enter the marathon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Causes are only lost when you give up. You may be somewhat frustrated by an endless stream of complications, but don't let them get you down. Don't begin anything of great importance now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The more you struggle, the tighter the noose. Quit worrying about circumstances that you can't control. You can only control your own actions and reactions. Let go of worry and fears that hold you back.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be skeptical rather than creating a spectacle. Even if the latest conspiracy theory contains grains of truth, they might be grains that will never flower into something useful. Don't make crucial decisions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Pineapples don't grow in a pine tree and don't taste like apples. Don't be misled by a name that doesn't necessarily describe the product. The time is not ripe for major expenditures or purchases.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may end up starving for attention if only fed a steady diet of hard work. You might feel on edge or at the end of your rope for a few hours today. Look forward to rest and weekend relaxation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): When you are drowning, almost anything can seem like a life preserver. Friends and well-wishers may lend you a hand. Your likability can be used to support you when the going gets rough.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): When you swim in a river of retrospection, you might not notice the sharks. Be aware that while achieving high-minded principles is worthy of effort, you shouldn't overlook obvious dangers.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"To mortify and even to injure an opponent, reproach him with the very defect or vice ... you feel ... in yourself."

— Ivan Turgenev

To mark the Summer Nationals currently taking place in New Orleans, here is a deal from last year's championships.

Steve and Betty Bloom are one of the most successful married partnerships playing bridge in the United States. Steve demonstrated his skill in this deal from early play in the Spingold Knockout Teams.

After Steve opened the South hand with a weak no-trump, North bid puppet Stayman, looking for a five-card major in her partner's hand. East overcalled in spades, and now, with no spade stop, it was easy for the Blooms to avoid three no-trump.

It might have been less clear why it was necessary to play four hearts on the 3-3 fit. As to blame, as Sherlock Holmes said, "I think we must ask for an amnesty in that direction."

The defenders, top-class Polish internationals, started with a spade to East's jack and a helpful (to Bloom) shift to the club nine, covered by the 10 and ducked.

Bloom played a heart to the jack and gave up a spade, ruffing the spade return in dummy, West pitching a club.

Bloom then played a diamond to the queen and passed the club jack, ducked all around. He crossed to the heart king and played the diamond jack, covered by the king and ace, West's 10 falling. Bloom cashed the heart ace and played a third diamond. West could take his heart trick when he wanted, but with only clubs left, had to concede the last three tricks to dummy. Contract made!

ANSWER: Your partner has shown 5-5 in the black suits, since he is a passed hand. (If he were an unpassed hand, this would show a strong no-trump.) Even though all your cards are in the opponents' suits, a two-spade bid seems reasonable. However, if your partner is going to bid on regardless of his hand, maybe passing would be wiser.
