F&G: Wolves not causing most elk losses

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Wolves have long been blamed for elk deaths in Idaho. But research is showing the predators have gotten a bum rap.

In its August newsletter, the Idaho Department of Fish and Game summarized recent elk studies and found only a minority of elk populations are declining and wolves are culprits in few.

A third of elk populations are increasing even though wolves have been in Idaho since 1995. Though statewide numbers have dropped some, claims that wolves are wholly responsible for declining elk populations aren't holding up.

Craig White of Fish and Game said the agency's wildlife division conducted elk studies in 11 of the 29 state elk management areas between 2005 and 2008. The sample included five of the six areas in the state with declining populations. White said biologists tried to collar approximately 30 female elk in each area, but didn't provide exact numbers.

"We selected areas we thought would be representative for a snapshot of what was happening across the state," White said.

Biologists found that wolves killed significant numbers of collared elk in only one area, the Lolo zone along U.S. Highway 12 in north Idaho. Over the three years, the report claims wolves killed 20 percent of the Lolo sample, or about six elk. Three-quarters of the collared elk survived, less than Fish and Game's survival goal of 88 percent.

White said deteriorating habitat in the Lolo zone has contributed to declining elk numbers since at least 1988, before wolves entered the picture. The population dropped by 40 percent during the severe winter of 1996-97 alone. Bears and cougars also kill many elk. Just across the border, Montana biologists are starting a similar collaring study in Ravalli County, where one factor of elk decline may be high human population growth.

The report said wolves caused the highest number of deaths in two other areas with declining

Ten of Idaho's 29 elk zones exceed the agency's goals for female elk, 13 meet the goals and six fall short. Since wolves returned to Idaho 15 years ago, the state's elk numbers have dropped from 125,000 to 100,000, according to Fish and Game.

GOODING — Twenty years have passed since Shaun Gough took an oath, a badge and a gun.

Much has changed in Gooding County since then: the population grew by more than 2,000, and dairies replaced potato crops as the main agricultural industry, to name a few.

One thing hasn't changed. The same mantra the Gooding County sheriff adopted as a deputy still holds strong: treat 'em right.

"Criminals are still people and deserve respect," Gough said. "I teach that of all my guys. Treat 'em right."

sharp and intense compared to his office's drab, brown uniform, but they are also compassionate eyes able to show empathy for his fellow man. The respect he has shown in his dealings with the people of Gooding

County, including criminals, became a staple of the department in 1997 when Gough first took office as sheriff.

Gough became a deputy in July 1990, when then-sheriff Robert Aja asked him to run a boat up and down the Snake River for the office's marine program. He was hesitant to get involved in law enforcement at first, knowing mostly a life of farming as a third-generation Gooding resident. That fact also posed a dilemma for him: could he arrest friends and family if called to do so? He wasn't sure, but he took the job with the intention of treating people well.

"I learned that you can still do the job," he said,

Pig wrestling a big draw at Jerome fair

JEROME — The Jerome County Fair guide lists 17 rules for Tuesday's team pig-wrestling competition.

Still, the concept is simple — catch the 250-pound, well-oiled pig and stick it in a 55-gallon barrel, rump first. Throw your hands up in the air when the task is complete — even if you're on the ground — and no foul language please, this is a family event.

At 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, the Lady Oinkers, a four-woman team sponsored by the Jerome Valley Country Store, will be among the 70 squads vying for the pig-wrestling championship. Pig wrestling is among the fair's nightly events, which also include a demolition derby, rodeos and a motocross competition as the fair continues through Aug. 7.

The Lady Oinkers have dabbled in the pig wrestling arts for eight years. It started when Trish Marshall, 35, first put a team together, if for no other reason than she thought it sounded fun and, as she repeatedly said, she's a little crazy.

"We do it because we are nuts and we're adults,"

The affidavits are a key component of a lawsuit filed in June by Rep. Shirley Ringo, D-Moscow, against the Legislature, the tax commisestablished by the Legislature and commission.

In their entirety, the sworn statements from longtime auditors paint a troubling picture of widespread tax-commission compromise and practices of closing

Marshall said. "This is the only time we get to go play in the mud."

They do it because they love it, because they can get muddy, to promote the Valley Country Store and because "it's a hoot," Marshall said.

Each year, the team changes its name and gussies up for the event. They'll go barefoot this year, dressed in swine feedbags stapled together and tied with baling twine as they attempt to keep one step ahead of the slippery swine.

Each of the four team members must start with one hand on the fence of the arena and run toward the 4-foot-tall pen that holds the pig. Marshall said hurdling over the fence is the preferred method, and whoever gets to the pig first grabs on while the others help haul the swine into the barrel. The Lady Oinkers took third place last year, finishing in 13 seconds – only two-tenths of a second out of second place. The team is known for its spunk and showmanship, as members have gone so far as to make mud angels in the pen after they barreled the pig.

"We basically wing it," Marshall said. "It's not about the win for us but it's about the fun and participation."

The team has taken practice runs in the Lincoln County Fair's pig-wrestling competition in the past, but this year its members are going in with big smiles and a focus on putting one pig in one barrel.

referring to maintaining relationships with community members, "even if you do have to arrest them at some point."

He quickly became chief deputy to Aja, knowing one day he would run for Aja's office, though not against his friend and mentor. Aja lost his office and was replaced by Jim Jax in a 1992 election. Gough was made a patrol sergeant.

"I just wanted to do the job regardless and do a good job," he said. He owed it to himself and to the people of Gooding County, he said.

In 1996, Jax decided to retire, and Gough thought he had something to offer the community. He ran for sheriff, not even 30 years old, and won 51 percent of the vote.

So far, county voters have approved of Gough's style of law enforcement. He ran unopposed in 2000 and 2004, and in 2008 defeated former Wendell Police Chief Kirtus Gaston by nearly 1,000 votes.

Through his years with the office, Gough has seen good and bad. The office faces budget issues brought on by the economic downturn. There have been suicides in the county jail, which isn't as adequate a facility as everyone would like, Gough said. He crosses paths with the survivors of a 1995 car crash which took the lives of three high school students, and said he still feels like crying with the ones who lived.

"I've seen a lot of tragic things," he said, "but you have to get through it."

But the job also puts him in a position to help people change their lives, if they're sincere about it like Matt

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Gooding County Sheriff Shaun Gough goes through a bag, looking for marijuana after a pipe was found during a July 20 traffic stop in Gooding.

Lemire was.

In 2002 Lemire and two other males set fire to a house to create a distraction while they robbed a gas station. They were caught and prosecuted for arson, robbery and grand theft. Only 20 years old, Lemire faced 20 years in prison.

"It's definitely safe to say my first carved-in-stone memory of Shaun was when he arrested me," Lemire said.

Gough put up with a lot of name-calling and disrespect, but he remained patient. He knew there was a chance to piece Lemire's life back together.

As Lemire moved through the court system, Gough attended every hearing. Lemire said it made him nervous, but only at first. Eventually Gough's presence was a comfort, Lemire said.

He pleaded guilty to the crimes but was given a suspended sentence. Gough was still there.

"I'm not sure what Shaun's exact job description entails, but I don't think it has anything to do with following the case of a misguided youth for almost eight years," Lemire added. The two continued to talk about what Lemire wanted to do with his life, his choices made and how to make amends. Determined to make good for his crimes, Lemire worked to pay back approximately $40,000 in restitution. For that, the state recently lifted his probation without objection from Gough or the Gooding County prosecutor's office.

Meanwhile, one of the other convicted robbers is serving 20 years in prison. "I'm proud of him," Gough said of Lemire. "That's where I get the satisfaction out of this job."

The two remain close to this day. Lemire is a foreman for Western Line

Builders, a power-line contractor, and competes in natural bodybuilding competitions.

"Thanks for not clocking out when your shift was over," is Lemire's message to Gough.

While not every encounter is as profound as Lemire's situation, Gough keeps up a relationship with the county residents through his children's 4-H activities or rodeos. He drops by local coffee shops every morning. When responding to a call at the West Point restaurant in Wendell recently, he stuck around for a burger and some conversation with owner Jeannie Arrendondo.

To Gough, it doesn't seem like it's been 20 years, he said. "As long as the citizens keep me in, I'll stay."

Lightning sparks fire near Bliss, burns 500 acres

Times-News

Wildland firefighters fought Friday evening to keep a lightning-sparked wildfire from growing in a grassy area southwest of Bliss.

The Flint Fire covered a 500-acre area by 9:15 p.m., just 10 miles southwest of where the Windmill Fire burned 2,700 acres earlier this month. U.S. Bureau of Land Management spokesman Brock Astle said response included nine engines, three dozers, a tractor with a disc, one helicopter, four Single Engine Air Tankers and one heavy air tanker.

The fire was reported at around 7 p.m., and no containment or control estimates were available, Astle said. The large response was an attempt to keep the flames under control in an area with lots of dry grass. Though fire officials were worried at first about the blaze's potential, they grew "a lot more optimistic" as the evening went on, he said. The aircraft made their last fire-retardant drops around 9:15 p.m. Lightning sparked one other fire in south-central Idaho on Friday evening, he said, a one-acre spurt south of Glenns Ferry that was quickly suppressed.

Ringo offers deal to Wasden on tax lawsuit

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Rep. Shirley Ringo has made an offer to Idaho Attorney General Lawrence Wasden.

If accepted, it could lead to the suspension of the lawsuit that the Moscow Democrat has filed against the state alleging secret tax breaks for privileged, connected individuals and corporations.

In a hand-delivered letter to Wasden that was written on Thursday, Ringo's attorney, Robert Huntley, proposes that an investigation panel be commissioned to look into the matter as an alternative to expensive litigation.

"I perceive you to be a man of integrity, and am hopeful you view me in the same light," wrote Huntley, a former justice of the Idaho Supreme Court. "We each, as lawyers, have sworn a Sacred oath to support and defend the Constitution of the State of Idaho and Laws enacted pursuant thereto. Having done so, we each place our personal integrity and our duties and reputations as Attorneys above partisan politics in the service of our clients and the People of Idaho."

Included with his letter were four affidavits of three retired longtime tax commission auditors and one manager. Huntley writes that they "clearly demonstrate that the public interest, including taxpayer/citizen confidence in the integrity and fairness of tax assessment and collection, requires investigation."

In the proposal, Huntley asks for a panel with the following five members: a neutral chairperson, appointed by the governor from the University of Idaho Law School or business schools of Idaho universities; a certified public accountant nominated by Wasden; a CPA nominated by Ringo; Wasden or a deputy attorney general of his choosing; and Huntley.

Under the proposal, the panel could be appointed by the governor or Legislature and would prepare a report by July 1, 2011.

"Since an attorney from each side of the litigation is a member of the Panel, it is likely that the result of the investigation will be that the case may be dismissed," Huntley wrote.

Bob Cooper, spokesman for Wasden, said the letter is under review and no response has been given yet.

agreements in tax disputes — called "C&Cs" — out of the public eye, often for far less than the amount influential individuals and corporations owed.

The Idaho Attorney General's Office, which is handling the lawsuit for the state, declined comment Friday, as is standard procedure for pending cases.

Robert Chatterton, an auditor for 33 years before retiring in 2006, wrote in an affidavit that the "C&C agreements did not sit well with the auditors for various reasons."

One case cited by retired auditor Gary Mattox has local ties. Mattox, who retired in 2006, said in his affidavit that a commissioner directed him to close the file on a business audit that turned up $80,000 of owed taxes while he worked out of the Twin Falls office. Mattox doesn't say when that happened or identify the business.

"The senior auditor noted that the taxpayer had a radio talk show and the culture was that we would compromise cases where political influence was involved," Mattox said in court filings. "The taxpayer was influential in the Twin Falls area and was influential with the Legislature."

Mattox describes his former co-workers as "very demoralized about the uneven and inequitable enforcement of the Tax Code."

"Auditors are reluctant to invest their efforts in the audit of a politically connected and influential company because the end result will be a (C&C) Agreement which generally results in the taxpayer paying less than is owed under a clear reading of the Tax Code and rules and regulations which guide assessments."

The third new affidavit came from Joe Schwartz, whose 20 years of service with the commission included 18 as manager of its Coeur d'Alene office.

In court filings, Chatterton provided examples without naming the corporations or taxpayers.

When dealing with a Montana company that did business in Idaho, he wrote, he was told to cancel a trip that was planned for an audit because the company had offered $150,000 and assurances that it was the highest amount of contested unpaid taxes. Later, audit paperwork from Montana showed that twice as much would have been owed with an audit.

"Some Tax Commission corporation income audits involve only a few thousand dollars, but other audits have more than $10 million at stake," Chatterton's affidavit states. "... I cannot say there have been under-the-table payments for any of these populations. But in the Smoky Mountain zone west of Ketchum, where wolves were said to have killed 5 percent of about 30 collared elk, other predators and hunters together killed 7 percent. The Sawtooth zone, west of Stanley, had similar results.

Conversely, the report showed that hunters were the biggest cause of elk kills in two other areas with declining populations: the Pioneer zone east of Ketchum, and Island Park near Rexburg. In the Island Park zone, hunters killed 17 percent of collared elk while wolves killed none.

White said Fish and Game ran a shorter study starting in 2008, collaring 6-month-old calves in just the Lolo and Sawtooth zones. In both areas, wolves killed around a third of the calves. But in the Sawtooth area, only one-third of calves survived, meaning other factors were also to blame.

The conclusion that wolves don't have a greater effect on elk runs counter to the expectations of many. In July 2009, an informal Fish and Game survey of 2,500 out-of-state hunters found that three in 10 didn't plan to visit Idaho because of the perceived effect of wolves on elk populations.

In the late '90s, even ecologists like Scott Creel of Montana State University expected wolves to kill a lot of elk. But after eight years studying the Greater Yellowstone ecosystem where wolves are numerous, he's learned that other factors are more likely to reduce elk populations.

Before wolves were reintroduced, elk populations were larger and elk stayed in the open, which is what hunters got used to, Creel said. Now, he said, elk may be acting like they did before wolves were eliminated.

Given time, Creel said, he thinks both populations would stabilize. He noted population sizes are only considered "good" or "bad" based upon arbitrary ideas of what the size should be.

"No predator has ever eliminated its food," Creel said. "Change is always the most dramatic at the beginning, then population numbers settle."

“Anyone who thinks this wasn’t a catastrophe must be far away from it.”

House Republicans wrong about Hart’s ethics

JEERS: To a special ethics committee of the Idaho House Representatives, for voting along party lines to clear Rep. Phil Hart, R-Athol, of conflict-of-interest charges related to his ongoing fights over federal and state income taxes.

The four Republicans on the committee voted to exonerate Hart; the three Democrats wanted him reprimanded and removed from the Revenue and Taxation Committee.

We agree with the Democrats: Hart ignored a House rule that requires conflicts of interest be disclosed before votes.

Public records show he owes nearly $700,000 in state and federal income taxes, penalties and interest.

One ethics charge against Hart remains, that he abused the legislative privilege from arrest or civil process during sessions by repeatedly citing it to seek delays in his state and federal income tax cases. The ethics committee will take up that allegation after the state Board of Tax Appeals rules on it in Hart’s ongoing case; its decision is pending.

It would have been easy for Hart to disclose that he was in litigation with the Idaho Tax Commission before voting on tax legislation, and to decline to serve on a subcommittee reviewing all new state tax rules.

State Rep. Wendy Jaquet, the Democratic co-chairwoman of the ethics committee, got it right when she pointed out that her constituents — and Hart’s — are paying their taxes, and Hart isn’t.

“I feel that he should not be on the Revenue and Taxation Committee because of the appearance of conflict,” she said.

CHEERS: To the city of Twin Falls, for an abundance of fiscal caution.

Twin Falls just released a five-year budget plan that envisions little new spending through 2015 in order to keep budgets in the black.

Because of the recession, the city was facing a $343,000 deficit in the 2011 fiscal year. That would have grown to $5 million in 2015.

Capital improvements were, in essence, frozen as officials scrambled to adjust spending and keep a state-mandated balanced budget. When it didn’t look as if the city’s revenue situation would improve, officials started planning for the long term.

Twin Falls lost tens of millions of dollars in property values in a single year. That’s a sobering statistic, and we’re pleased the city responded accordingly with its budget plans.

JEERS: To north Idaho’s Bonner County, where things keep getting curiouser. The Sandpoint City Council voted last week to quit adding fluoride to the municipal water system.

More than a dozen people argued against fluoridation at a recent council meeting, saying they were being medicated against their will.

Fluoride is added to drinking water to help reduce tooth decay. Sixty-two percent of Americans drink fluoridated water.

During the 1950s and ’60s, some foes of fluoridation suggested that the practice was a communist plot to undermine public health. The federal centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the surgeon general, the World Health Organization, the American Dental Association and the American Academy of Pediatrics all endorse fluoridation.

Last month, the Bonner County Republican Central Committee announced it wouldn’t accept the county fair’s “fiesta” theme. Too Latino-sounding.

Common sense seems to be vacationing elsewhere than Bonner County this summer.

Words of praise for an honest young man

On July 27, my husband and I were shopping at Famous Shoes. We stopped at Costco for a short time and then drove to our home in Paul. When we arrived, there was a message on our phone from D.L. Evans Bank saying a young man had turned my checkbook in at the bank.

They gave me his name and phone number so I called to thank him. He said he found it in the parking lot beside a car. I still don’t know how it fell out of my purse!

It makes you feel so good that there are still honest young people in our community. I can just imagine how much fun someone could have had if this young man had not found it.

I’m taking this way of thanking him publicly. He deserves a lot of credit for his actions. His name is Jerad Dovenmuhler. Thank you, Jerad.

Myths about the death penalty

Much of what we think we know about American capital punishment comes from the longstanding debate that surrounds the institution. But in making their opposing claims, death-penalty proponents and their abolitionist adversaries perpetrate myths and half-truths that distort the facts. The United States’ death penalty is not what its supporters — or its opponents — would have us believe.

David Garland

1. The United States is a death-penalty nation.

In fact, this country barely uses the death penalty today. Fifteen states and the District of Columbia have abolished capital punishment. Of the 35 “death-penalty states,” one-third rarely sentence anyone to death and another third impose death sentences but rarely carry them out. In many states, the only people to be executed are “volunteers” — death row inmates who abandon an appeals process that would otherwise keep them alive. Death sentences have decreased in recent years. One reason is that states now give juries the power to impose life imprisonment without parole. Another is that prosecutors advise victims’ families that they may be better off seeking a prison sentence instead of capital punishment. That way, they will not have to watch year after year as the murderer goes to court seeking to have the death sentence overturned.

2. The United States is out of step with Europe and the rest of the Western world.

This claim is true in one important sense: We have the death penalty and they don’t, even if we no longer have it in the full-blown sense. Since 1981, when France finally gave up the guillotine, Europe has been a death penalty-free continent, and commentators point to a “deep divide” between it and the United States.

But this sharp contrast is misleading. For most of the past 200 years, American states have been on the vanguard of death-penalty reform. Michigan abolished capital punishment for all ordinary crime in 1846, a century before most European nations did so. Northern states were ahead of the rest of the world in banning public execution. The United States led the effort to develop less painful execution techniques, replacing hanging first with the electric chair, then the gas chamber, and finally with lethal injection. In all these respects, the United States was no different than other Western nations.

3. This country has the death penalty because the public supports it.

It is true that, when asked by pollsters, a majority of respondents say they support the death penalty. But majorities in other Western countries support capital punishment, too. Their political leaders abolished the institution nevertheless. Each state can choose whether to have the death penalty. In this country, the Supreme Court is the one national institution that has the power to abolish capital punishment throughout the nation. It almost did so in 1972 in Furman v. Georgia. But the law-and-order movement of that period made the court’s decision deeply unpopular. States quickly passed new statutes and the court backed down soon after.

4. The death penalty works.

Proponents of the current system insist that it deters crime and guarantees that murderers receive the most powerfully retributive punishment. It may be the case that some death-penalty systems are effective deterrents. Singapore has a mandatory death penalty for drug trafficking and hangs offenders swiftly and often. In China, thousands of offenders are killed each year, many for economic crimes and corruption. But it stretches credulity to think that the death penalty, as administered in the United States today, can be an effective means for deterring murder. Last year, there were more than 14,000 homicides in the nation but only 106 death sentences. The chances of any particular killer being caught, convicted and sentenced to death are vanishingly small.

5. The death penalty doesn’t work.

The idea that the death penalty definitely works may be a myth — but this doesn’t mean that the opposite is true. Capital punishment is not, as its opponents argue, all costs and no benefits. They are right, however, that it is expensive. An Indiana study last month showed that capital sentences cost 10 times more than life in prison without parole. And the current system ensures neither deterrence nor punishment.

But the system serves some purposes nevertheless. In a nation where the prison system is so overused that the currency of imprisonment is largely devalued, the death penalty allows juries to make an emphatically punitive statement.

It’s time to change the terms of this all-too-familiar debate. Getting past the myths and looking at how the death penalty actually operates is one place to start.

States rights: A 19th-century concept rears its head again

Americans today have so many distractions that few realize their country has been gripped by a critical debate over states' rights that parallels the pre-Civil War argument over preserving the Union.

That's not to say people are ready to meet on the battlefield, brother against brother, to settle the current dispute. But today's arguments could have an effect on the role of the federal government that is just as profound.

From immigration and health-care reform to abortion rights and gay marriage, states are asserting the right to regulate the legal status and social conduct of their residents. Conservative courts may lean in their favor, and Congress appears too politically divided to put up a fight.

While Abraham Lincoln gets deserved credit as the savior of the Union, having won the Civil War, Andrew Jackson blocked a Southern march toward secession

Harold Jackson

30 years earlier.

Igniting the powder keg, as it would 30 years later, was South Carolina. The state had resisted an 1828 tariff on textiles that reduced English demand for American cotton. When Congress imposed a new but lesser tariff in 1832, South Carolina decided it was more than it could tolerate.

Its favorite son, John C. Calhoun, who also happened to be vice president, came up with a cockamamie idea he called "nullification," insisting that the individual states did not have to be subservient to federal authority.

Actually, I'm giving Calhoun too much credit. The Kentucky and Virginia legislatures also passed resolutions claiming they could nullify congressional acts in 1798 and 1799, but the idea was rejected by the other states.

As Calhoun explained the concept, the states were part of a compact allowing each to review acts of Congress and nullify the application of any they found unacceptable within their borders.

Under such guidelines today, it would be perfectly fine for Arizona to ignore federal immigration laws and impose its own.

Get the picture? Jackson did. Acting decisively to nip Calhoun's notion in the bud, he called nullification an "abomination" that would dissolve the Union.

That didn't deter South Carolina, which passed nullification in 1832, declaring itself exempt from the tariff laws recently passed by Congress.

Jackson's swift response came in the form of a proclamation that is worthy of review today as advocates of states' rights are insisting that federalism is unfairly cumbersome.

Jackson noted that South Carolina's law was founded "on the strange position" that the Constitution "permits a State to retain its place in the Union, and yet be bound by no other of its laws than those it may choose to consider as constitutional. ... If this doctrine had been established at an earlier day, the Union would have been dissolved in its infancy."

The law even included a provision for secession if it wasn't recognized. South Carolina held that it had a right to secede because the Constitution, as a compact, did not take away the states' sovereignty.

"Fallacious as this course of reasoning is," Jackson said, "it enlists state pride, and finds advocates in the honest prejudices of those who have not studied the nature of our government sufficiently to see the radical error on which it rests."

He said the terms used in the construction of the Constitution "show it to be a government in which the people of all the States collectively are represented." That Americans are "one people," Jackson said, is reflected in their election of one president and one vice president.

He further noted that although the states elect their own senators and representatives, they "are paid by the United States, not by the State; nor are they accountable to it for any act done in the performance of their legislative functions; ... it is their first and highest duty, as representatives of the United States, to promote the general good."

That should be drummed into the heads of today's members of Congress, who too frequently ignore the "general good" as they seek to ensure their reelection by appeasing local constituencies instead of standing up for what they know would be of greater benefit to the nation as a whole.

Of course, South Carolina being South Carolina, it cared not a whit about Jackson's resolution. So Old Hickory followed up by getting Congress to pass what became known as the Force Act, giving the president authority to employ state militias and federal troops to crush any rebellion.

The nullification law was subsequently repealed. And Congress did lower the tariffs. But Jackson predicted that slavery would be the next catalyst for a states' rights foray.

Today, on any number of issues, the states are saying they want to be left alone. Perhaps they need to be reminded of the motto this nation adopted soon after its founding in 1776: E Pluribus Unum — Out of many, one.

War on drugs makes HIV epidemic worse

Last week, thousands of scientists, physicians and activists fighting the HIV and AIDS pandemic around the world gathered in Vienna to discuss the latest breakthroughs — and frustrations.

Vienna was selected to host the biannual meeting of HIV experts because it is the gateway to one of the world's most rapidly growing HIV epidemics: that among heroin users in Eastern Europe. Outside sub-Saharan Africa, about one in three new HIV infections stems from injecting illegal drugs, and in some parts of Eastern Europe and Central Asia, 70 percent of those who inject illicit drugs are infected with the virus.

In response to these alarming statistics, this year's conference endorsed as its official statement the Vienna Declaration, a document I helped draft to draw widespread attention to how the U.S.-led war on drugs has played a central role in driving the HIV epidemic around the world.

Writing in the medical journal the Lancet, Michel Sidibe, the executive director of the Joint United Nations Program on HIV/AIDS and other prominent scientific leaders stated the situation succinctly: "The war on drugs has failed."

Criminalizing drug abuse drives addicts deeper underground and into the kinds of unsafe practices such as needle-sharing that spread infection. We have seen clearly that countries with the most draconian drug laws also have the highest rates of HIV infection among users. In Russia, for example, where one in 100 adults is now estimated to be HIV-infected, a fierce drug war has outlawed basic harm reduction tools, such as methadone maintenance treatment. Methadone is on the World Health Organization's list of essential medicines, but Russian physicians cannot even openly discuss the need to prescribe the treatment without fear of reprisals.

The mass incarceration of drug users is particularly alarming, given the spread of HIV in prisons. A Pew Trusts analysis of U.S. Department of Justice data noted that one in nine black males age 20 to 34 is in prison, many of them as a result of drug law enforcement. Given the link between prisons and HIV, it is not surprising that in places such as Washington more than 80 percent of HIV cases identified between 2001 and 2006 were among blacks.

Beyond HIV and AIDS, the declaration also notes that the war on drugs is ineffective. "National and international drug surveillance systems have demonstrated a general pattern of falling drug prices and increasing drug purity — despite massive investments in drug law enforcement."

There have been signs that the world may be heading toward more reasoned drug policies. Just before the Vienna conference, the Obama administration announced overdue and welcome steps to help fight the HIV epidemic among drug users. Most important, given the strong support for syringe exchange programs from the U.S. Institute of Medicine and WHO, the administration has reversed a longtime ban on funding clean syringe programs.

But there is still much that needs to be done. The Vienna Declaration calls for governments to "implement and evaluate a science-based public health approach to address the individual and community harms stemming from illicit drug use." Not surprisingly, considering that strident special-interest groups have long misled U.S. voters into believing that the drug war is an essential crime-reduction tool, most government delegations at AIDS 2010, including the U.S. government delegation, remained largely silent on the Vienna Declaration.

Decades of worldwide drug-related violence have made clear that drug prohibition enriches organized crime and causes bloodshed. But the devastating public health consequences of the drug war have been less recognized, and government acknowledgement of the link between the war on drugs and the HIV epidemic is urgently needed. The next International AIDS Conference will be in Washington in 2012. Before that meeting, governments around the world will be asked to state a formal position regarding the declaration.

In the meantime, the declaration also asks for several noncontroversial steps, including that governments "undertake a transparent review of the effectiveness of current drug policies." Given the international public health emergency presented by HIV among drug users and the estimated $2.5 trillion in tax dollars wasted on the drug war over the last 40 years, the U.S. should move forward with this simple call.

Evan Wood, a physician and associate professor of medicine at the University of British Columbia, directs the Urban Health Research Initiative. He wrote this commentary for the Los Angeles Times.

Time to scrap BP brand? Gas-station owners divided

By Harry R. Weber
Associated Press writer

NEW ORLEANS — BP gas station owners across the country are divided over whether the oil giant stained by its handling of the Gulf spill should rebrand U.S. outlets as Amoco or another name as part of efforts to repair the company's badly damaged reputation.

Some who saw their sales plunge after the spill say BP has already sought a fresh start by naming an American to replace its British CEO, so why not change the name on gas station marquees to Amoco, which once stood for American Oil Co.?

There is precedent for such a move. Think AirTran after the ValuJet crash and Xe Services after the killing of civilians by Blackwater Worldwide guards in Iraq.

But others worry that a name change is risky given all the marketing dollars already spent building up the BP brand.

After the spill, set off by an April 20 offshore drilling rig explosion, some BP-branded gas stations reported sales declines of 10 to 40 percent from Florida to Illinois. BP responded by offering distributors cash, reductions in credit card fees and help with more national advertising.

John Kleine, who heads a trade group that represents distributors of BP gasoline in the U.S., told The Associated Press that interest in changing names has not reached a fever pitch, but it has supporters and is percolating among station owners ahead of their annual convention with BP executives in October.

The BP name and green-and-yellow sunflower logo replaced the Amoco name and its blue-and-red torch inside an oval logo after BP acquired Amoco in the late 1990s. Bob Dudley, the American who will replace Tony Hayward as BP's CEO on Oct. 1, worked at Amoco Corp. for 20 years.

Kleine noted that many distributors would still like BP to try to rebuild its existing brand, and two BP officials said in e-mails that the company is not considering rebranding U.S. gas stations.

Donations at the check-out counter

Point-of-purchase giving easy for shoppers, charities

By Joyce Smith
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Your wallet is already out, so what better time to ask for a donation?

More and more, retailers are making it easy for you to support your favorite causes — and theirs — by asking for contributions at the cash register. Charities find it an effective way to raise money, and retailers use it partly to burnish their image.

With just the touch of the pen on the credit card machine, tearing off a coupon voucher, or by rounding your bill up to the nearest dollar, consumers are giving money for free vision care, eyeglasses and food for the poor; care for homeless pets; children's health and wellness; even literacy.

"It's good business to give back," said Mike Swenson, president of PR/causes at Barkley, a Kansas City-based marketing communications company that helps companies with their cause marketing promotions. "The 20-somethings and 30-somethings expect corporate USA and corporate global to be part of making society better, and they will reward those corporations with their pocketbook."

Although many companies take up collections for a few weeks throughout the year to support a food drive or a community walk, the "point-of-sale" contributions can extend that fundraising over many months or year-round.

Customers might choose to tack on a dollar during an occasional stop at a specialty store, such as Sunglass Hut or PetSmart. Or they could be like one woman who has included a $25 donation to a fundraiser for

Recovery loses speed; growth drops to 2.4%

Consumers spend less in 2Q

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The recovery lost momentum in the spring as growth slowed to a 2.4 percent pace, its most sluggish showing in nearly a year and too weak to drive down unemployment.

Consumers spent less, companies slowed their restocking of shelves and the nation's trade deficit dragged more on the economy in the April-to-June quarter. In a separate report, the Commerce Department said the recession was deeper than previously estimated.

Together, the reports raise doubts about whether employers will hire enough and consumers will spend enough to invigorate the economy. As unemployment remains near double digits, Congress could feel pressure to pass more stimulus measures to speed the recovery. So far, Republicans and some Democrats have blocked additional spending because of their concerns about the size of the deficit.

The report showed that the economy grew at a 3.7 percent pace in the first three months of this year, but the recovery has been losing power for two straight quarters. That raises concerns about whether it will fizzle out. Or worse, tip back into a "double-dip" recession.

President Barack Obama said Friday that his administration's bailout out of U.S. car companies saved more than 1 million jobs and kept communities that depend on the auto industry afloat. Speaking at a Chrysler plant in Detroit that recently hired more than 1,000 people, Obama said progress in the auto industry is one of the bright spots in the nation's economic recovery.

Some major employers restore 401(k) matching

By Rachel Beck
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — FedEx Corp. is reversing one of the uglier corporate trends of the recession: Starting in January, it will restore matching contributions to its employees' 401(k) plans. For some workers, that means retiring with tens of thousands more dollars socked away.

Hundreds of miles from FedEx headquarters in Memphis, a small hospital that serves a vast, poorer, rural area of Tennessee is doing the same. Starting last Monday, it began chipping in on 401(k)s for the first time since May of last year.

The two businesses are doing the right thing by their employees. There's a broader message about the economy in this, too, and it's a good one.

Neither company was obligated to reinstate its 401(k) match now. With one in 10 Americans out of work, employers have their pick of people to hire. They don't need to offer perks to be competitive.

"In normal times, if you want good employees, you need to offer a match," says Alicia Munnell, the director of the Center for Retirement Research at Boston College. "These are hardly normal times."

Amazon CEO hopes new Kindles stoke sales

By Rachel Metz
Associated Press writer

SEATTLE — Jeff Bezos isn't just confident you'll want a Kindle e-book reader. The CEO of Amazon.com is bracing for a future in which you'll also want ones for your kid heading to college, your spouse in a book club and perhaps even Grandpa.

And despite increased competition from Apple Inc.'s flashy iPad and other e-readers, that future could be coming soon — as early as August, actually, when online retailer Amazon.com Inc. releases two new Kindle models.

With both versions costing less than $200, and one not far above the $99 psychological tipping point for gadget-buying, Bezos expects people to buy multiple devices for their households. If he's right, the new Kindles could help cement the company's status as the reigning e-reader and e-book champ, even in the face of an ever-growing field of challengers.

Sitting at the head of a conference-room table at Amazon's new headquarters on a late July afternoon, Bezos flips over a skinny, dark gray device. It's the upcoming Kindle, and he's excited to show it off.

Bezos zips through the new Kindle's features, rattling off a bevy of percentages.

It's 21 percent smaller and 15 percent lighter than the Agency weighs skirting Congress on immigration

By Julie Hirschfeld Davis
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration, unable to push an immigration overhaul through Congress, is considering ways it could go around lawmakers to allow undocumented immigrants to stay in the United States, according to an agency memo.

The internal draft written by officials at U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services outlines ways that the government could provide “relief” to illegal immigrants — including delaying deportation for some, perhaps indefinitely, or granting green cards to others — in the absence of legislation revamping the system.

It's emerging as chances fade in this election year for a measure President Barack Obama favors to people suspected of being in the country illegally.

The 11-page internal memo, written in April to the agency's director, says: “This memorandum offers administrative relief options to promote family unity, foster economic growth, achieve significant process improvements and reduce the threat of removal for certain individuals present in the United States without authorization.”

It goes on: “In the absence of comprehensive immigration reform, USCIS can extend benefits and/or protections to many individuals or groups.”

The memo provoked a backlash by Republicans who called it evidence that Obama is looking for ways of relaxing immigration policies without political consensus to enact a new law.

“The document provides an additional basis for our concerns that the administration will go to great lengths to circumvent Congress and unilaterally execute a backdoor amnesty plan,” said Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, who obtained and circulated the memo. “The problem remains that if you reward illegality, you get more of it.”

Grassley led a group of conservative GOP senators who wrote to Obama in June asking him to promise that the administration wouldn't use its authority to “change the current position of a large group of illegal aliens already in the United States.”

Dems urge Rangel to resign

Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., leaves his office for a vote on Capitol Hill on Friday.

By Laurie Kellman
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama on Friday called ethics charges against Democratic Rep. Charlie Rangel “very troubling” and said he hopes the longtime lawmaker can end his career with dignity. Several House Democrats went further, flat-out urging the New York congressman to resign.

“He’s somebody who’s at the end of his career,” Obama said in an interview that aired Friday on “CBS Evening News with Katie Couric.” “I’m sure that what he wants is to be able to end his career with dignity. And my hope is that it happens.”

Obama, speaking on the issue for the first time, praised the 20-term Rangel for serving his constituents well but called the more than one-dozen tax and disclosure charges against him “very troubling.”

It was hardly an endorsement for the veteran lawmaker, but fell well short of the calls for resignation Rangel received on the eve of the House’s August recess. As House Democrats headed home, they wrestled with how to handle the matter in their districts ahead of the midterm elections.

Republicans, meanwhile, raced ahead with plans to make Rangel the face of corrupt Washington under the rule of Democrats who had vowed to clean up Congress.

For his part, Rangel met with perhaps his staunchest supporters, members of the New York state delegation, in the stately Capitol parlor named for the Ways and Means Committee that he headed until March.

“He indicated there was some sloppiness” in his official papers, Rep. Edolphus Towns, D-N.Y., told reporters, “but, you know, there’s no criminality here.”

House rules and credibility — not criminality — were the reasons cited by more than a half dozen House Democrats known to have called for Rangel’s resignation by late afternoon Friday.

A House panel on Thursday made public for the first time 13 charges of misusing his office and tax and disclosure violations against Rangel, 80, as it opened the trial phase of the ethics proceedings against him. If Rangel and the ethics committee do not settle the case, it goes to a public trial this fall, at the height of an election season in which every member of the House, 36 in the Senate and the Democratic majorities of both chambers are on the line.

Either conditionally or outright, Democrats calling for Rangel’s resignation included Rep. Walter Minnick of Idaho, Betty Sutton of Ohio, John Yarmuth of Kentucky, Zack Space of Ohio, Ann Kirkpatrick of Arizona and Mary Jo Kilroy of Ohio.

“Too many politicians, both Democrats and Republicans, have fallen victim to the idea that they are ‘different’ than regular folks and nothing could be further from the truth,” Kirkpatrick said in a statement.

“It is our job as members of Congress to hold each other accountable to a higher standard regardless of party,” she added. “If the serious charges against (Rangel) are accurate, he needs to resign.”

Oil spill cleanup entering new phase

Some say impact of leak has been overblown

BILOXI, Miss. (AP) — BP’s new boss says it’s time for a “scaleback” in cleaning up the Gulf of Mexico oil spill. Federal officials say there is no way the crude could reach the East Coast. And fishing areas are starting to reopen.

There were several signs Friday that the era of thousands of oil-skimming boats and haz-mat-suited beach crews is giving way to long-term efforts to clean up, compensate people for their losses and understand the damage wrought. Local fishermen are doubtful, however, and say oil remains a bigger problem than BP and the federal government are letting on.

Other people contend the impact of the spill has been overblown, given that little oil remains on the Gulf surface, but Bob Dudley, who heads BP’s oil spill recovery and will take over as CEO in October, rejected those claims.

“Anyone who thinks this wasn’t a catastrophe must be far away from it,” he said in Biloxi, where he announced that former Federal Emergency Management Agency chief James Lee Witt will be supporting BP’s Gulf restoration work.

After an April 20 rig explosion that killed 11 workers, BP’s blown-out well gushed an estimated 94 million to 184 million gallons of oil before a temporary cap stopped it July 15. Efforts to permanently plug the gusher had been expected to begin as early as Sunday, but the government’s point man for the spill said Friday that those plans hit a snag.

Crews found debris in the bottom of the relief well that ultimately will be used to plug the leak for good, retired Coast Guard Adm. Thad Allen said. The debris must be fished out before crews can begin a procedure known as a static kill that hopefully will make the rest of the job easier.

“It’s not a huge problem, but it has to be removed before we can put the pipe casing down,” Allen said.

The sediment settled in the relief well last week when crews popped in a plug to keep it safe ahead of Tropical Storm Bonnie. Removing it will take 24 to 36 hours and likely push the kill back to Tuesday, Allen said.

Once the relief well is ready, crews can begin the static kill, in which mud, and possibly cement, are pumped in through the temporary cap. The better that procedure seals the blown-out well, the easier it will be to plug it forever by pumping in cement from below using the relief well. The blown-out well could be killed for good by late August, though a tropical storm could set the timetable back.

As the work of plugging the well appears to reach the homestretch, so does much of the cleanup work. Relatively little oil remains on the surface of the Gulf, leaving less for thousands of oil skimmers to do.

Oregon district attorney says no Gore prosecution

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Attorney Don Rees cited “contradictory evidence, conflicting witness statements, credibility issues, lack of forensic evidence and denials by Mr. Gore.”

Rees also said Hagerty and her attorneys were uncooperative, witnesses could not remember anything unusual, Hagerty failed a polygraph examination and she would not say whether she was paid by a tabloid newspaper for her story.

Gore aides welcomed the news.

“Mr. Gore unequivocally and emphatically denied this accusation when he first learned of its existence three years ago,” spokeswoman Kalee Kreider said in a statement.

After a four-week investigation that included interviews with Gore, masseuse Molly Hagerty, her acquaintances and hotel staff, as well as testing a pair of stained pants belonging to Hagerty, Multnomah County District Attorney Michael Schrunk said Friday there was no basis for prosecution.

In a memo to Schrunk released with the decision, Senior Deputy District

Calif. wildfire jumps aqueduct, approaches hundreds of homes

PALMDALE, Calif. (AP) — A huge wildfire in the high desert wilderness north of Los Angeles jumped an aqueduct on Friday, rushing toward hundreds of houses as firefighters also tried to keep flames from damaging power lines that bring electricity to Southern California.

Some 2,000 structures were threatened and 300 homes were evacuated, Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger said.

Winds apparently carried embers across the wide concrete channel, with flames rapidly spreading to backyard fences at the edge of Palmdale. Plumes of smoke streamed across the city of 139,000 as a predicted afternoon increase in winds finally arrived.

Helicopters dipped buckets into the aqueduct to make rapid water drops. No homes immediately appeared to have been damaged. Numerous fire engines were in the area. A giant Boeing 747 supertanker arrived over Palmdale to join the battle.

“As you see, we are deploying everything that we’ve got,” Schwarzenegger said at the fire command post.

Sustained winds of 10 mph to 20 mph were reported, said Los Angeles County fire Inspector Matt Levesque.

“We are actively moving resources to defend that area,” he said.

Most of the homes in the area, however, are of recent construction with fire-resistant roofs, stucco walls, boxed eaves and landscaped with fire-resistant vegetation, he said.

No evacuations were ordered but were recommended.

Bill Clinton emerges on eve of Chelsea's N.Y. wedding

RHINEBECK, N.Y. (AP) — Bill Clinton made a long-anticipated appearance in the upstate New York village where his daughter is getting married, drawing crowds of onlookers Friday afternoon as preparations continued largely out of sight for the grand and secretive occasion.

The former president, looking fit and relaxed in blue jeans and a black knit shirt, walked with security a few blocks north from the picturesque village's main intersection to the restaurant Gigi Trattoria.

To questions blurted from the huge crowd he attracted, Clinton rattled off easy answers.

How are you?
"We're all fine."
"We love it here," he said. "Chelsea loves the area as well."

How's she doing?
"She's doing well."
Chelsea Clinton is expected to marry her longtime boyfriend, investment banker Marc Mezvinsky, at a ceremony Saturday evening attended by 400 to 500 people at the grand Astor Courts, an estate on the scenic east bank of the Hudson River. Rumors had abounded for weeks leading up to Friday, including one that Rhinebeck was an elaborate decoy planned by the media-shy Chelsea and that the wedding would be elsewhere.

The appearance of the former president put all the conspiracy talk to rest.

And what does he think of his soon-to-be son-in-law?
"I like him very much," the popular Democrat said, picking up more people with each passing step. "I really do. I admire him. Hillary feels the same way."

That would be Hillary Rodham Clinton, Chelsea's mother, a former first lady and U.S. senator from New York, and the sitting secretary of state in President Barack Obama's Cabinet.

The sight of an ex-president captivated many in the crowd. For the record, Dutchess County, which contains Rhinebeck, voted for Clinton and Al Gore in 1996.

"We thought it was great that he walked down here," said Carol Chestney, of Rhinebeck. "He could have

Marybeth Cale, also of Rhinebeck, said: "It's amazing, all this excitement. We're thrilled that he's here."

After lunch, Clinton slowly wound his way out of a restaurant, taking time to shake hands with the kitchen staff and customers, who took pictures of him with their cell phones. The restaurant's owner said it would be impolite to reveal what he had for lunch.

He emerged to an enthusiastic crowd of hundreds of people who shouted, "We love you!" and "Congratulations!" He took a moment to comfort a little girl who got jostled by the huge crowd but broke into a huge grin after the former president asked her name and whether she was all right.

There are still mysteries. The VIP guest list is said to include such A-listers as Oprah Winfrey, Steven Spielberg and some of the Clintons' powerful political allies, and the village was filling up with the curious hoping to catch a glimpse of an honored guest.

estimate of the Exxon Valdez disaster" in Alaska, he told The Associated Press. The size of the offshore area affected by the spill is likely more than 400 square miles, he added.

12-year-old girl injured on Wis. 'free fall' ride

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — A 12-year-old girl at an amusement park plunged more than 40 feet to the ground on Friday, seriously injuring herself when a safety net under a "free fall" attraction failed to catch her.

Police declined to identify the girl or to elaborate on her injuries, but said she was from out of state and was visiting the Wisconsin Dells with her family. The area is a popular Midwest tourist destination known for its amusement parks.

On its website, Extreme World amusement park describes its Terminal Velocity ride as a one-of-a-kind experience that offers an "unattached, controlled free fall." Participants are outfitted in a special harness, taken up in an elevator, and then dropped straight down into a "huge airtube supported net."

After the girl was released for her fall, "the net mechanism that was supposed to catch her and break her fall was not high enough above the ground to completely break the fall and she did hit the ground," Lake Delton Police Chief Thomas Dörner said.

Dörner said the girl was treated by amusement park employees and family before emergency responders arrived, around noon. She was eventually transported to the University of Wisconsin Hospital in Madison by helicopter.

Battling pornography

Photos by DREW GODLESKI/Times-News

Zane Austin and his wife, Roberta, share a moment recently at their Twin Falls home. The couple, members of River Christian Fellowship, help facilitate recovery group sessions for addicts of pornography and other ills. Two out of three marriages are affected by porn, according to the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers. 'I can sum it all up in one word for you,' Roberta Austin says. 'Adultery.'

Zane and Roberta Austin hold hands at their home recently in Twin Falls. They attribute their happiness and solid marriage to their hard work, their friendships in the church, and their God.

Twin Falls couple, churches help victims of porn addiction

By Rebecca De Leon ♦ Times-News writer

There's nothing wrong with it, really. They're just pictures, right?

Roughly 67 percent of young men and 49 percent of young women agree that viewing pornography is acceptable. About nine out of 10 men ages 18 to 26 reported using pornography, according to a recent study conducted by a team of university professors.

So what's the big deal? It's not illegal. Unless there are children involved, it's harmless, right?

Zane Austin, an avid member of River Christian Fellowship in Twin Falls, who helps facilitate recovery group sessions for all kinds of addiction, disagrees.

"It can easily be measured if Jesus was standing there in that room at that moment, would he be shedding tears or would he be joyful?" Austin said.

Austin and his wife, Roberta, are no strangers to addiction. Having overcome various addictions themselves, they offer their support to others in a general recovery group held at the Twin Falls Reformed Church by lending an understanding ear and sharing their love for Christ.

Although neither of them had an addiction to pornography, they have experienced the strain pornography puts on marriages. Two out of three marriages are affected by porn, according to a 2003 statement by the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers.

"I can sum it all up in one word for you," Roberta Austin said. "Adultery."

Once her husband realized how much his seemingly innocent actions affected his wife, Zane Austin was horrified and immediately set out to change his ways and eliminate any kind of pornographic or suggestive material from the household.

"I looked at it afterwards, after I thought about it, and I'm sure God was just crying tears of pain and anguish, because I knew better," Zane Austin said.

Obama’s man of faith has dual roles

By Christi Parsons
Tribune Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The young minister’s alarm goes off at 6 a.m., time for his own devotional and the one he will send to the president of the United States.

This particular morning, Joshua DuBois meditates on the disciple Peter’s first letter to the early church. The text he prays over and e-mails to Barack Obama half an hour later is about something else.

It’s a private start to the day for the president and the pastor, a spiritual BlackBerry session they guard carefully.

Hours later, they meet in a public setting, when the president arrives to give a speech at a community center. DuBois is wearing an ear bud and carrying a clipboard, standard equipment for a mid-level White House staffer. Obama climbs from his car and greets DuBois and another aide with a casual, “Hey, guys.”

A sheen of perspiration glistens at DuBois’ hairline as the group heads toward the stage area. He keeps a deferential step behind Obama.

Colleagues say DuBois is entitled to a spot on the platform, as director of the White House Office of Faith-Based and Neighborhood Partnerships. But DuBois has arranged for others from the White House to sit there.

As it happens, his particular gift is in need at the White House.

Obama hasn’t had a pastor for two years, since he had to answer for controversial speech by his last one, the Rev. Jeremiah A. Wright Jr.

Now, instead of aligning himself with a church or spiritual leader, the president seeks the guidance of many different people. Some are scholars; some pray in tongues. Some share his progressive views; others say they didn’t even vote for him.

They have one thing in common: DuBois.

In his official job, the 27-year-old Princeton-educated minister is the front door of the White House for religious and community leaders.

In his spare time, he arranges group phone prayer for the president and sets up one-on-one sessions. He solicits written devotionals from others and mixes them in with the ones he personally prepares. And he zealously guards the words that pass between him and the president.

“With Joshua, it’s never about Joshua,” says Michael Strautmanis, a White House aide and DuBois’ mentor. “It’s always about the other person — regardless of who that might be.”

As the community center event begins, the young minister takes his place in the wings to watch.

DuBois had a master’s degree in public policy and experience on Capitol Hill, not an uncommon pedigree for young Democrats knocking on Obama’s door.

Something set DuBois apart, though. He was a Pentecostal minister, ordained by the church he attended as an undergraduate at Boston University.

He grew up in Tennessee and Ohio with a stepfather who is a minister in the African Methodist Episcopal Church. In college, a friend introduced him to Pentecostalism, a strain of Christianity with a livelier worship style that includes prayer in unknown languages.

Pentecostals tend toward conservative views. They aren’t usually Democrats.

“Preaching, I don’t think it comes naturally to me,” he says, a smile materializing within the circle of his goatee. “But working with people, the one on one, that’s the best part of being a minister.”

DuBois showed up at Obama’s offices five years ago, in some ways a younger version of the then-senator from Illinois — a black man with Ivy League credentials and a brilliant father who bounced in and out of his life.

“I get them on the phone,” DuBois says of the other ministers, “but their connection is with the president. They’re friends of his now. They know his heart.”

Addiction

forums, and videos of sermons. Matthew Fradd, a Catholic minister and founder of the website, points out the church’s beliefs concerning the harmful effects of pornography on marriages today.

“... many people claim pornography to be a positive experience because it’s a ‘physical release,’” Fradd said in an e-mail to the Times-News. “How would this not also justify adultery? If a man cannot say ‘no’ to sex, what’s his ‘yes’ even worth? Are we the master of our passions or are our passions the master of us?”

“For me, I mean, I can’t speak for all women,” Roberta Austin said. “But I know I can’t be like those women. There’s no way. And the truth of the matter is, those women aren’t those women, either. It makes you feel very unwanted, undesired.”

April Garriss is a former porn star who now advocates against pornography on theporneffect.com and thepinkcross.org, two websites aimed at offering help to those who struggle with porn addiction and those who make pornography.

“Well, definitely the biggest myth that I have encountered is that the women in pornography love making porn, and are in the business because they love sex,” Garriss said in an exclusive phone interview with the Times-News. “This is absolutely not the truth.”

“All of these people that are involved in that, they’re somebody’s children,” Zane Austin said. “I’ll say women. They are somebody’s daughters. And they’re in that lifestyle and they’re in bondage and by me viewing that, I’m helping them stay in bondage. That’s how I feel in my heart.”

“None of them started looking at porn expecting to become addicted,” Garriss said about viewers of pornography. “These are good men — family-oriented, hard working, church going men, too — but they just can’t seem to overcome this. It’s a serious problem that no one seems to want to address.”

Religious denominations are now stepping up and offering help. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints established LDS Family Services, which has support groups dedicated specifically to men and their spouses who struggle with pornography addiction.

They use the 12-step program developed by Alcoholics Anonymous, but shape it toward pornography use and supplement it with Mormon scripture.

“We encourage people to get a sponsor, but for the support groups it’s not mandatory,” said Jason Jacobia, a licensed clinical social worker who trains volunteers to host group sessions. Jacobia says LDS Family Services, which offers services to people of any faith, works with an average of 60 people a week across southern Idaho to overcome pornography addiction.

Dr. Donald L. Hilton Jr. is a nationally recognized neurologist who also serves as program coordinator for a branch of LDS Family Services in San Antonio, Texas, that deals with pornography addiction. Hilton recently wrote an article titled, “How Pornography Drugs and Changes Your Brain.” In the article, he outlines how pornography use produces chemical reactions in the human brain that evoke the same feeling of euphoria as “hard-core” drugs, opening the issue to interpretation as more of a chemical addiction rather than an out-of-control perversion.

The Twin Falls Reformed Church also uses AA’s 12-step program supplemented by Biblical scripture.

“Of all the addictions, they say heroin users that are shooting and people with pornography and into that kind of sexual stuff have a very hard time walking away,” Roberta Austin said.

The couple has helped people with various kinds of addiction during their years of church service, including sex and porn addiction. They use their own experiences and apply it to support those who struggle with any kind of addiction, sexual or otherwise.

Long ago, it was a fellow church member who helped them strengthen their marriage — they had to be honest with each other, then take the necessary steps to make their marriage last.

“He was a godly guy at the church and we talked to him and his wife who were very solidly married and had gone through it,” Zane Austin said.

“We started all over again, like we were dating, even though we had been married for 10 years,” Roberta Austin said.

The couple attributes their happiness and solid marriage to their hard work, their friendships in the church, and their God.

About addicts and the road to recovery, Zane Austin said: “First off, are they going to admit they have a pornography addiction? If they say, ‘Yes, I do have a problem,’ do whatever it takes. First, seek some help, some professional help. If it’s from the Internet, first, take out the Internet. If you have to use the Internet, go to the library.”

As an alternative to throwing out the Internet, the couple praised x3watch, a free downloadable accountability program from xxxchurch.com that sends an e-mail to an “accountability partner” every time the computer visits a site with questionable material. The accountability partner, or sponsor, is put in place to encourage open, honest conversations about online integrity.

“If a person has a problem with pornography and is willing to acknowledge it, then the next step is make a choice,” Zane Austin said. “We all have choices. Are you going to continue or do you want to steer clear of this?”

Roberta Austin offered the next step in recovery.

“I think people that want to quit pornography need to seek council, but godly council,” she said. “That’s the only way it will work. Then, they need to get a partner. Somebody they can trust. Someone who won’t judge them. They need someone that’s going to be there for them. I don’t care if it’s three o’clock in the morning, they need to be there for them. And then from there, they need to address whomever they wronged. And then try to start over. If they do these things, I think they can break away from it.”

“They can break away from it,” her husband said. “It’s only by the grace of God that addictions can be broken successfully. There’s a difference between doing it with a willing heart and doing it begrudgingly. If you’re a spiritual person, you’re going to do it with a willing heart because you know that you are living a sinful lifestyle.”

“A woman is a woman is a woman,” his wife said. “A woman’s body is a woman’s body. And I’m not so sure it (pornography addiction) is sexual anymore. I think it becomes an addiction.”

Professor fired for remark on Catholic Church reinstated

By Manya A. Brachear
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — An adjunct religion instructor barred from teaching by the University of Illinois after defending the Roman Catholic stance on homosexuality has been invited back to teach this fall.

Adjunct associate professor Kenneth Howell was reinstated on Thursday — a day after the deadline when his lawyers said they would sue the university for violating his academic freedom if administrators failed to reinstate him.

University officials also announced they would sign Howell's paychecks, ending an unconventional decades-long practice by which the church compensated whoever taught Catholic studies at the state university.

Jordan Lorence, an attorney for the Alliance Defense Fund, a conservative legal consortium representing Howell, commended university officials for reconsidering their actions and reinstating the associate professor.

“The university has righted the wrong by letting Ken Howell back into the classroom.”

— Jordan Lorence, an attorney for the Alliance Defense Fund

“The university has righted the wrong by letting Ken Howell back into the classroom,” Lorence said. “They should never have removed him in the first place.”

Howell, who has taught on the Urbana-Champaign campus since 2001, was removed last month after explaining during class why the church believes that homosexual behavior violates natural moral law. He elaborated later in an e-mail that lawyers say circulated around campus, prompting one student to call it “hate speech.”

“All I ask as your teacher is that you approach these questions as a thinking adult,” Howell wrote. “That implies questioning what you have heard around you. Unless you have done extensive research into homosexuality and are cognizant of the history of moral thought, you are not ready to make judgments about moral truth in this matter. All I encourage is to make informed decisions.”

His subsequent removal generated outcry from alumni and students, including a Save Dr. Ken Facebook page. On Thursday, the page was filled with posts celebrating victory.

“I think the university realized from all this public criticism that they needed to examine their actions,” Lorence said. “I don’t think this was the university caving to improper pressure.”

But the reinstatement is only temporary. It does not affect an ongoing faculty review, which has been investigating whether Howell’s immediate removal violated his academic freedom or right to due process.

“We are going to be monitoring what happens now to make sure Ken Howell’s academic freedom under the First Amendment is protected,” Lorence said.

Store clerk’s religious talk dissuades robber

By James H. Burnett III
McClatchy Newspapers

MIAMI — Nayara Goncalves already experienced one of the “biggest moments” of her life: becoming a Christian.

The second came last Friday, when the 20-year-old cell phone store manager put her good works to good use — persuading a would-be armed robber to put away his gun and leave her store in the name of the Lord.

Every moment of the more than five-minute exchange between a calm Goncalves and the nervous, unidentified robber was captured on a store surveillance camera.

The robber walked into a MetroPCS store in Pompano Beach, Fla., around 10 a.m. on July 23, wearing a dark cap and jacket and holding an umbrella.

Nayara Goncalves, holding a Bible outside the Metro PCS store she works at in Pompano, Fla., was confronted by an armed robber as she worked in the store. But she engaged the would-be robber in religious-themed conversation and convinced him not to go through with the robbery.

He exchanged pleasantries with Goncalves, asking whether she was keeping dry, then asked to see a phone.

Moments later, he reached into his coat, apparently showing her a gun. He apologized: “I really hate to do this. ... Don’t be scared.”

“I’m not scared,” replied Goncalves, a devout Christian who was working alone. She calmly walked back to her cash register, telling the man, “You can do whatever you want, but I’m just going to talk to you about Jesus, my God, before you leave.”

The man momentarily paused, and said, “God bless you for that.”

Goncalves told him she is a Christian. He replied sheepishly, “So am I and I absolutely hate doing this. I do. I’m embarrassed to do this. But I have no choice.”

He said he had attended Calvary Chapel.

“Calvary Chapel? Pastor Bob?” Goncalves asks, saying she had visited there. Yes, the robber replies, “Pastor Bob.”

“I’m so sorry to put you through this,” he said.

Goncalves continued to talk to the man, giving soothing responses of “I know, I know,” as he opened up about his troubles — telling Goncalves he’s married, has a job, and that he needed $300 to stave off eviction.

As if sensing an opening, Goncalves continued, her voice breaking for a split second, “I don’t know what you’re going through. But all of us are going through a hard time right now.”

The man barely looked at her. “That’s why I refuse to do anything out in the streets. I’ve never done this before.”

She offered to connect him with friends to help him find a job. He said he had had one.

She suggested he seek a loan from a friend. He said he spent the last three days trying to do that, to no avail.

“I’m not very good at this obviously. If there’s no money in the register, can you show me?”

The man reasoned that since she wasn’t the store’s owner, “I wouldn’t be hurting you.” But her single break from the gospel truth came when she gently fibbed that her employer would take any stolen money out of her pay.

He threw in the towel.

“I don’t want to do that to you. I’m sorry,” he said, turning to walk away. “I understand you still have to call the police ...”

Ever calm, Goncalves called out to him as he walked off. “You know you don’t need to do that. You know Jesus. He can help you!” He blessed her a second time.

Emboldened, Goncalves urged him to “go back to church.” Before leaving the storefront, he called back: “You know one thing? Good is coming your way for what you did today.”

Then he confessed: “You wanna know something? It’s not real. It’s a BB gun. That’s how great I am at this.”

130-year-old remains reburied in Deadwood

DEADWOOD, S.D. (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest, a Taoist master and a Lakota holy man joined forces to help rebury 130-year-old remains uncovered in the western South Dakota town of Deadwood.

The remains were discovered in 2006 by workers dismantling a retaining wall in a Deadwood neighborhood. They were identified as being either an American Indian or Chinese man. The Chinese worked in Deadwood’s gold-mining industry years ago.

The remains were reburied Wednesday in Mount Moriah Cemetery. The ceremony began with a traditional Catholic prayer and scripture reading, followed by Chinese and Native American burial rituals.

“No matter what religious belief you are, whether you’re ... Lakota, Chinese, or even what your faith is, you have entitled burial rights as a human being,” said Terry Gray with the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

Gilbert Hom with the Chinese Historical Society said officials never considered fighting over the heritage of the remains. Taoist minister Master E-man of Los Angeles added that “No matter who it is, it’s our ancestor.”

“We pray simply with that faith that each one of us has,” said the Rev. Kerry Prendiville of St. Ambrose Catholic Church in Deadwood.

Facing life with our pants in place

It was a balmy summer evening about 12 years ago, and my wife, Anita, and I were downtown with our two youngest children, Elizabeth and Jon. We’d had a pleasant time visiting with old friends, and were chatting and playing as we walked a block-and-a-half along a busy thoroughfare to where the family van was parked.

As we approached a busy intersection, the light turned green and we hurried to get across. We were all holding hands — four abreast — as we jogged across the crosswalk. About halfway across, then-7-year-old Jonathan half-laughed, half-cried, “My pants are falling down!”

There were several factors contributing to Jon’s problem. First, he was wearing brand new school pants, and every parent knows that you never buy a first-grader clothes that fit exactly. You always give them room to grow, which is why Jon’s new pants were hanging pretty loose. Second, I was holding his left hand as we hustled across the street, leaving him with only his right hand to hold on to his pants as they started to slide down — and since Jon is left-handed, at that point in his life he was not especially good at doing things with his right hand.

VALUE SPEAK

And third — and I’m not sure how to say this delicately — Jon had no — you know — bum. I mean, of course he had one. But he’s always been kind of a tall, gangly guy, and there has never been a lot of meat on his bones. Especially not — you know — back there. Certainly not enough to hold his pants up. Hence, slippage.

All of which could have been overcome with a tightly cinched belt. But even though Jon had a belt on, it was fastened so loosely that — well, I don’t think it was fastened at all, come to think of it. It was just sort of looped through the belt loops and tucked in his pants.

Which were now nearly down to his knees.

Thankfully, 7-year-olds are inclined to view events such as losing one’s pants in public as humorous, and we were all laughing by the time we got to the other side of the street and got Jon’s underwear back under. When I asked him what happened, he said, “My pants are too loose!”

“That’s why you have a belt,” I said.

“But you were holding my hand so I couldn’t hold my pants up,” he said.

“But that wouldn’t have mattered if your belt was on tight.”

“But I don’t have a bum!” he said.

“But you don’t need a bum if you’re wearing your belt tight enough.”

“But I don’t like it when my belt is tight,” he said. “It feels like I can’t move.”

“Well, ‘not moving’ is sort of the point of wearing a belt,” I said. “Especially for your pants?”

We’re all kind of funny that way, aren’t we? We focus on Things We Don’t Have That We Just Know Would Make Our Lives So Much Better If We Only Had Them — you know, things like wealth, fame and movie-star looks — when we’re not taking full advantage of what we already have. And then we find ourselves halfway across the street with our pants around our knees looking for excuses, while the belt that could have prevented the problem just sort of hangs there, unused.

The fact of the matter is, we’ll probably never be rich enough, or smart enough, or attractive enough, or popular enough — at least, there will always be someone richer, smarter, more attractive or more popular. And that’s OK, because no matter who we are and no matter what we do, we have strengths, talents and abilities that make us unique. Interesting. Worthwhile. That’s what we need to stress in our lives, without stressing out over whatever it is we don’t have.

So life doesn’t catch us — you know — with our pants down.

Police aren’t eager to use their guns

Q: What is one of the biggest fears police officers are afraid they might ever have to deal with? — B. Ware

A: The biggest fear for most law enforcement, especially now, is unemployment (sad thing is you thought this was a joke). The second thing that we most fear is having to actually use that firearm on somebody and possibly end that person’s life. This would not only cause trauma for the officer the rest of his or her life, but the family of the person shot would have to live with that as well. I’m speaking for myself here but I would assume that no officer out there really took the job with the hopes of getting to shoot somebody.

Officer-involved shootings are also very costly. The time and money spent investigating what happened and the time and money spent proving what did happen can cost thousands of dollars. That money is usually from the taxpayers.

I have several friends who have been part of officer-involved shootings. They have told me that the incident stays with them throughout their lives. Sometimes it comes in nightmares. Other times it comes back with sights, sounds and even smells. The scientific name is post-traumatic stress disorder, but no matter what it’s called, it’s not a good thing to suffer from.

Q: Could I get into trouble if I let my child who does not have a driver’s license drive my pickup on private property? — G. F.

A: As long as the private property was yours or you had permission to be on somebody else’s property, you’re OK. I call this the “farmers in Congress” clause, because most kids on farms drive on the farm way (OK, a couple of years) before they ever get driver’s licenses.

The (farm) truck cannot be driven on any legal highway or street without a driver’s license, even if it was just to cut across to the other field (no chicken joke here). An unlicensed driver can drive a farm tractor on the road, though.

One thing I will leave you with is that should a kid, or anybody else, be drinking and driving on private property, he or she could still be charged with driving under the influence.

Local students selected for science academy

Students Sheldon Brown, Paul; Daniel Durand, Richfield; Nicholas Long, Rupert; and Cody Race and Amanda Olsen, Shoshone are among more than 40 Idaho high-school students selected to participate in the first Idaho Science and Aerospace Scholars Summer Academy next week.

At the academy, these students will have the opportunity to design a human mission to Mars alongside NASA officials and Idaho experts in science, technology, engineering and mathematics.

The event is part of the Idaho Science and Aerospace Scholars Program, a competitive program that challenges Idaho high-school juniors to take an engaging online course developed by NASA during the school year, and compete to attend a residential summer academy where they work on projects with scientists and engineers from NASA and across Idaho.

The academy will run from Sunday to Aug. 7 at Boise State University, Micro n Technology and the Discovery Center of Idaho, as well as the NASA Ames Research Center in California. During the academy, students will attend presentations given by NASA astronauts and work in teams to create space robots and land missions for rockets.

Based on the program’s initial success, NASA awarded a $1.2 million grant to the Idaho Department of Education to expand it to serve 400 students over the next two years.

Bowed legs are no laughing matter

DEAR DR. GOTT: Ten years ago I went to the Mayo Clinic with health problems. The rheumatologist was not helpful, nor did she tell me what was wrong. She only laughed at me, telling me how bow-legged I was. I was so shocked and hurt that I could barely drive myself home.

Last year I went to a different rheumatologist in a different state because of knee pain no one could explain. Again, the doctor did the same thing. I was so shocked I could barely talk.

I live in a rural area where doctors are limited. How do I talk to doctors that put me down like that? Both were average-looking and not anything special. So where do they get off putting a patient down? I see other people on the street who can barely walk that are far worse off than me in that department.

DEAR READER: Bow legs were not your choice. They either developed physiologically or pathologically. Generally speaking, physiologic bowing improves without treatment as a child grows. Unless treatment is given, pathologic bowing, which is due to a disease process, tends to worsen as a child grows.

ASK
DR. GOTT

Most babies are born with bowed legs because of the way an infant is curled up during the nine months a woman carries it. By about 18 months of age, the bowing self-corrects. By the age of 3 or 4, a knock-kneed alignment occurs. This, in most instances, corrects to some degree by the age of 5 or 6. There are occasions, however, when the bowing never fully corrects, and this is the reason some adults have bowed legs.

A number of diseases can cause pathologic bowing, with two of the more common ones being rickets and Blount’s disease.

Rickets results from a dietary deficiency of vitamin D, calcium and phosphorus. This is relatively uncommon in the United States because of vitamin supplements and diet but is still seen in less developed countries. It should be noted that even with a normal intake of vitamin D, a breakdown in the mechanism that uses vitamin D in the body can cause a rickets syndrome. The disorder causes cupping and widening of the growth plates that can be identified on a simple X-ray. Symptoms include bow legs and knock knees, swelling at the ends and sides of the bones, muscle pain, curvature of the spine, enlarged liver and spleen and a host of other conditions.

Blount’s affects the inner edge of the upper shin bone at the knee growth plate. It runs across the knee, causing a decrease in the growth plate closest to the leg’s inner side or inseam. The outside portion of the growth plate grows normally, which leads to bowing. The disease affects infants and teens. Both groups have a similarity in that the children are overweight for their age. The deformity is always tied with an inward direction of the foot and ankle. If detected early enough, braces can help. Diagnosis, as with rickets, can be made by X-ray, but simple positioning of the foot, not the knee, is critical for proper diagnosis.

Now, on to your less-than-professional medical contacts. I have no idea how bowed your legs are, but there is simply no excuse for such shenanigans by a physician, whether at the Mayo Clinic or the walk-in clinic on the corner in a small town. You were treated poorly. You cannot do anything about the inadequacies of such uncaring, bumbling individuals. If it ever happens again, simply inform him or her that you did not leave a side show to provide entertainment for the viewer: You expected to be treated with dignity. No matter how hard this might be, toughen up and don’t let another person get the upper hand. Were it me, I certainly would never expect to see a bill for services rendered. Laughter should be free and enjoyed by everyone involved.

Request a referral to an orthopedic specialist and get the answers you should have received 10 years ago. Good luck, and remember — hang tough! You can do this.

F-35 chances dim, but Idaho may get Italian mule

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — With Idaho now out of the initial running for an F-35 fighter base, the U.S. Air Force offered up a consolation prize: Instead of the supersonic Joint Strike Fighter, however, military brass are now dangling an Italian cargo mule, the C-27J Spartan.

The Air Force said Thursday that Gowen Field, an Air National Guard base in Boise, is one of two finalists to get the rugged twin-engine, medium-sized airlifter that plays turtle to the F-35s' Mach 1.5 hare, but can nevertheless land on dirt runways in the back of beyond, places like Afghanistan.

The airport at Great Falls, Mont., is the other finalist for an operational mission of the C-27J; installations in Ohio and Mississippi are up for training missions for the plane.

Col. Tim Marsano, an Idaho National Guard spokesman, said he doesn't know just how many C-27Js are in play. But Gowen Field

“We’re disappointed, but by no means are we defeated. This is just round one.”

— Idaho Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter, on the state not being named in the initial running for an F-35 base has room for at least eight planes, in addition to its A-10 Warthog tankbusters, because four C-130 cargo planes that exited in 2009 left vacant hangars that could be filled with the new Italian-bred planes immediately.

“The news about the F-35 today was somewhat of a setback,” Marsano conceded. “But we also know this is merely the first selection round. It’s far from over. We’re also encouraged that they’re looking at putting C-27Js at Gowen Field.”

The Air Force on Thursday chose bases in Arizona, Florida, Utah and Vermont as “preferred alternatives” for the F-35 Joint Strike Fighter.

Idaho officials had been counting on being a part of that elite group, for months singing the praises of a possible $1 billion boost to the state’s economy from up to 3,000 new personnel and 144 planes — if only they came. The Air Force decided new facilities needed to house the planes at Mountain Home Air Force Base and Gowen Field would cost too much.

As this rejection sinks in, however, people are now trying to understand just what the C-27J would mean.

One thing is clear: Its economic impact would be clearly smaller than that accompanying the F-35s — and perhaps even smaller than the C-130 Hercules planes that left last year. The C-130s, twice as big as the C-27J, had a crew of four people in the cockpit, plus at least one loadmaster. The C-27J has just two people up front and a loadmaster.

Still, Idaho’s rugged terrain and numerous back-country landing strips could make the state a perfect training location for the Spartan, made by Rome-based Alenia Aeronautica. The C-27J is already used by the U.S., Italian, Greek and Lithuanian air forces; Italy flew it in Afghanistan in 2008 and 2009.

“It can land on unimproved runways,” Marsano said. “It allows fixed wing capabilities in places where only helicopters may have been able to go in the past.”

But despite what seems to be the C-27J’s endearing, workaday personality, Idaho’s shot at winning this pudgy little plane hasn’t been much of a salve to Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter, a big F-35 supporter.

He’s not giving up on grabbing a piece of the Air Force’s newest, hottest jet. He’s instructed Idaho officials to continue to make the state’s case for the F-35, for Mountain Home Air Force Base and Gowen Field, in hopes of eventually winning planes as Lockheed Martin Corp. builds more.

“We’re disappointed, but by no means are we defeated,” Otter said. “This is just round one.”

Oxygen therapy planned for vets

POCATELLO (AP) — An eastern Idaho facility hopes to offer hyperbaric oxygen therapy to veterans dealing with traumatic brain injuries as part of a national study to determine the treatment’s effectiveness.

Idaho Doctors Hospital Healing Center is partnering with Bingham Memorial Hospital in Blackfoot to offer the oxygen therapy, during which veterans breathe pure oxygen in a pressurized chamber.

Doctors say that allows more oxygen to saturate tissues and possibly increase healing.

Jeff Hampsten of the center says he’s looking for donations to support the program that he says will cost about $8,000 per veteran.

“But if you can heal a soldier for $8,000, he then becomes a productive, tax-paying member of the community again,” Hampsten told the Idaho State Journal. “Right now, funding is the only obstacle.”

The Defense Department says more than 134,000 service men and women suffered traumatic brain injuries in 2003-09.

Paul Kotter, spokesman for Bingham Memorial Hospital, said the hyperbaric treatment also could help victims of automobile accidents, spider bites and strokes.

“It’s a great service that has a lot of value and worth,” Kotter said.

Eli Henderson, with Bingham Memorial, said hyperbaric treatment can often be cheaper and more effective than other treatments.

“It should be considered early on, rather than as a last resort,” he said.

Grizzly bear euthanized after mauling in Montana

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Wildlife officials euthanized a grizzly bear Friday after DNA tests determined that the sow and her cubs were responsible for a triple mauling that killed a Michigan man and injured two other campers.

Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks said in a statement that hair, saliva and tissue samples tested in a DNA identification lab in Laramie, Wyo., confirmed the adult bear was the same one that rampaged through Soda Butte Campground near Yellowstone National Park early Wednesday.

The sow’s three cubs will be “sent to a zoo as soon as possible,” the statement said.

State officials have asked if ZooMontana is interested in taking the cubs, said Jackie Worstell, executive director of the Billings zoo. Worstell said the zoo would add the cubs to its grizzly exhibit, which already features a Eurasian brown bear and another grizzly from Yellowstone.

Worstell said she doesn’t believe the cubs will have learned the predatory behavior that their mother displayed in the unprovoked attacks at the campground.

AP Photo/Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks Department
This image provided by the Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks Department on Friday shows a captured grizzly sow confirmed to be responsible for the mauling death of a camper near Yellowstone National Park in Montana. The bear was later euthanized.

“They’re so young and it was a one-time incident,” she said.

A final decision was expected late Friday or today, she said.

Officials will perform an autopsy on the sow to determine if any physical ailments or conditions caused her to attack the campers, said Chris Servheen, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service grizzly bear recovery coordinator.

Grizzly bears that display unprovoked aggressive behavior toward humans, or cause death or substantial human injury, should be removed from the population, under Interagency Grizzly Bear Committee Guidelines, an agreement among eight state and federal agencies, state wildlife officials said.

The sow and two of the three cubs were trapped by Thursday, and the last cub was captured early Friday. The bears — crying and scratching at the steel sides of traps — were taken from the Soda Butte Campground in a three-truck convoy to Bozeman.

Their departure brought relief among residents and visitors in Cooke City.

Brewer presses fight over immigration

PHOENIX (AP) — The fight over Arizona’s immigration law showed no signs of letting up Friday as the federal judge who blunted its force faced threats and the Republican governor who signed it considered changes to address any faults.

In the days since U.S. District Judge Susan Bolton put on hold the most controversial parts of the law, hundreds of e-mails and phone calls — including some threats — have poured into the courthouse.

Seventy people have been arrested in demonstrations. And a fund set up to help defend the new law added $75,000 Wednesday alone, giving the state more than $1.6 million to get Bolton’s ruling overturned.

Gov. Jan Brewer, who signed the law and appealed the ruling, has vowed not to back down, saying she’ll challenge Bolton’s decision all the way to the Supreme Court.

But Brewer said Friday she’d consider changes to “tweak” the law to respond to the parts Bolton faulted.

“Basically we believe (the law) is constitutional but she obviously pointed out faults that can possibly be fixed, and that’s what we would do,” Brewer told The Associated Press. She said she’s talking to legislative leaders about the possibility of a special session, but said no specific changes had been identified.

In her temporary injunction, Bolton delayed the most contentious provisions of the law, including a section that required officers to check a person’s immigration status while enforcing other laws. Bolton indicated the federal government’s case has a good chance at succeeding in its argument that federal immigration law trumps state law.

Hunt is on for southeast Idaho graffiti artist

POCATELLO (AP) — Merchants in Pocatello’s historic section are offering a $500 reward for help in catching a graffiti artist whose “BZR” mark has become as prominent as the signer is elusive.

The so-called “BZR Bandit” has left the letters at the top of some of the highest, hardest-to-reach places on buildings and signs in the southeast Idaho town.

“All these buildings in Old Town are cool and they don’t deserve that,” said Andrea Kern, an employee at Pegasus bookshop, which has been tagged several times. Kern has scoured social websites for clues to the person’s identity.

“If I catch him, he’s walking the plank,” she said.

Business owners say they fear glorifying the person by offering a reward but are tired of spending money to paint over the tough-to-reach graffiti placed on historic buildings that owners are trying to preserve.

“Then here comes this guy in the middle of the night and paints his mark in the most inaccessible and unreachable places he can get to,” said Lance Butters, owner of Molinelli’s Jewelers. “It’s a destructive pastime.”

A reward account has been set up at Key Bank, whose sign is one of the highest points in town and was previously defaced with the BZR initials.

Bonneville roughs up Green Sox

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — When it rained, it poured for the Burley Green Sox. Several rainstorms over the past three days forced the Green Sox to work diligently to make their field playable for the American Legion Baseball Class A State Tournament. But those downpours were nothing compared to the Bonneville flood on Friday night, as the Bees were unstoppable in their 18-0 win over the Green Sox.

“You have to tip your hat to Bonneville. They’re a solid club and they took it to us today,” said Burley head coach Devin Kunz. Bonneville advances to the semifinals, where it will meet Emmett at 7:30 p.m. today. Burley drops to the consolation bracket and will face Nampa at 12:20 p.m. If the Green Sox win, they will play again at 4:30 p.m. Bonneville pitcher Brandon Craig faced one over the minimum, striking out eight and walking one in the one-hit shutout. Burley’s only hit came from Jackson Kunz to lead off the game. With the possibility of playing two games today in the consolation bracket, Coach Kunz said he strategically managed his pitching staff. “We rolled the dice with (starter) Joe (Ferrin). We were hoping Joe could get us through the order a few times. If we had a lead late, we were going to go hard,” Kunz said. Ferrin only lasted into the second inning and five Burley pitchers combined to issue 12 walks.

“We knew in the back of our minds that we have two games (today) if we lost. We’ve got three healthy arms ready for two games

Ray Homolka has collected five victories this season in the Brennan's Carpet Pony Stocks division at Magic Valley Speedway. While he leads the division, Homolka faces a battle for this year's championship with second-place Todd Audet.

‘Rockstar Ray’

Homolka holds top billing in MVS Pony Stocks

By Linda Brittsan
Times-News correspondent

Ray Homolka just couldn't resist what he saw sitting in the field that day. “My grandpa and I bought a Ford Ranger from this guy and he had an old race car sitting out there,” Homolka recalled. “We looked at it a couple of times and then we decided to buy it.” Having been to Magic Valley Speedway as a spectator two or three times but with no experience driving a car on the track, Homolka's schooling on the finer points of racing began right away. “We thought the car was race-ready but it was more of a dirt track car,” he said. “The first year was kind of a mess, especially when everybody lapped me three or four times.” But the Pony Stocks driver was a quick learner. He and his grandfather, Raymond Homolka, drew on their mechanical abilities and put together a competitive team the next season, finishing fifth in the division in 2008. Last year, Homolka captured the track

TONIGHT AT MVS

The super fast Winged Sprint Cars will burn up the track tonight with their only appearance at Magic Valley Speedway this season. Additionally, the Mr. Gas Late Models, Maverik Pro Trucks, NAPA Street Stocks, Brennan's Carpet Pony Stocks and Quale's Electronics Jr. Stingers are also on the lineup. With only four races remaining on the schedule, Mr. Gas Late Models driver Mike Greco needs to take advantage of the few remaining opportunities to close in on points leader Rick Fowble. Meanwhile, Greco will have to outrun both Kris and Eddy McKean, who each trail him in the standings by 67 points. Kendel Woll is fresh off a main-event win last Saturday with the NAPA Street Stocks but John Newell keeps piling up points. Newell was aided in his quest for a second championship by receiving first-place points when John Hoogendoorn failed post-race inspection after the July 17 main event. The Maverik Pro Trucks Series drivers are also winding down their season as Jerry Rice holds a slim nine-point lead over Johnny Pierre in the race for the championship. It's Snake Night at the track and Mr. Gas sponsors the action as gates open at 4 p.m., with green flag racing slated for 6.

championship. This season, he has been on top in the standings since opening night. However, the path the 2010 championship could get rocky for ‘Rockstar Ray’ as he's known around MVS. As recently as a month ago, he held a 58-point lead in the standings over second-place Todd Audet. That cushion has dwindled to just 18 points going into tonight's racing. The combination

AP source: Yankees set to acquire Berkman

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Lance Berkman is headed to the New York Yankees, who plan to complete a deal to acquire the former All-Star from the Houston Astros on Saturday, a day after the World Series champions obtained outfielder Austin Kearns from the Cleveland Indians. New York will send a couple of prospects to the Astros, likely to be reliever Mark Melancon and infielder Jimmy Paredes, and Houston will pay part of what Berkman is owed, a baseball executive familiar with the discussions said Friday night. The executive spoke on condition of anonymity because the deal had not been announced. Berkman didn't play Friday night against Milwaukee, and his Astros teammates said their goodbyes. “Nothing's been completed,” Berkman said before the game.

A five-time All-Star, Berkman had full no-trade rights and his approval was necessary for a trade, accounting for the delay in its completion. “I'm from Texas. Heck, I played at Rice. This city is like the womb. I feel very comfortable here. To think about the possibility of going anywhere else is kind of scary,” Berkman said. After the game, Astros rookie Chris Johnson embraced Berkman. “It's really an odd feeling seeing his locker cleaned out,” Johnson said. “He came up and jumped on my back and gave me a hug and said, ‘Keep up the good work’ and, ‘Good luck!’ It was weird.” Kearns left Cleveland's game at Toronto in the seventh inning and was traded to the Yankees for a player to be named or cash. The former first-round draft pick is hitting .272 with eight homers and 42 RBIs. “That's great,” Yankees first baseman Mark Teixeira said. “Two quality guys.”

Cowboys win two, stay alive at state

Times-News

The Twin Falls Cowboys know how to bounce back. One day after a disappointing loss to the Boise Gems at the American Legion Baseball Class AA State Tournament, the Cowboys kept their title hopes alive with back-to-back wins in elimination games. Twin Falls routed Lewis-Clark 12-1 before outlasting Coeur d'Alene 5-3 in 10 innings. “These kids want to win,” said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir. “These kids are competitive. No matter what happens, I know these kids are going to go down swinging.” Twin Falls came out swinging against Lewis-Clark and grabbed a quick 3-0 in the first inning. When Zeb Sneed struck out the side in the bottom of the first, the Cowboys seized all the momentum. Zeb Sneed struck out 10 and scattered four hits against Lewis-Clark, while Cy Sneed added a three-run homer among the Cowboys' 15 hits. Jared Jordan played through back pain, while shortstop Michael Williams overcame the stomach flu to go 2-for-4 in the first game of the day. He came up even bigger against Coeur d'Alene.

Trailing 3-1 after a two-run shot by CDA's Mitch Bevacqua, Twin Falls got to 3-2 with Cy Sneed's solo home run in the seventh. An RBI double by Williams knotted the score in the eighth. In the 10th, Ryan Petersen and Zeb Sneed singled before Williams doubled in the go-ahead run. The Cowboys added one more run and then shut out Coeur d'Alene in the bottom of the inning to win it. The Cowboys face either the Boise Capitals or the Gems at 4 p.m. today, with a spot in the 7 p.m. title game on the line. A win there by Twin Falls would force a second championship game at 1 p.m. Sunday. The Capitals and Gems were tied 12-12 in the 11th inning at press time Friday after the Gems blew an eight-run lead. “Right now we've got something going and we're excited about it,” said Stadelmeir.

Broncos' Tebow: Bring on the shots

By Arnie Stapleton
Associated Press writer

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — Tim Tebow is ready for the shots, both on the football field and in the locker room. The two-time national champion from Florida practiced with other rookies Friday in advance of the start of the Denver Broncos' training camp and said he couldn't wait for the hard hits. Tebow, the 25th pick in the NFL draft, is fresh off putting his signature on two contracts, one of them a five-year deal to play for the Broncos and the other a multiyear deal to serve as a pitchman for Jockey underwear. Beyond the usual rookie ritual of carrying veterans' shoulder pads and maybe grabbing them a cup of coffee or a sandwich, Tebow knows he'll be catching a good amount of grief for his endorsement of the tighty whities. “A few people have said a few things to me about it,” Tebow said with a hearty chuckle. “Actually, Coach McDaniels was the first one to say something to me. But, you know, I'm sure I'll get some (more) of it, but it's all in good fun.” So, what did Josh Mc-

Daniels tell his prized pupil? “I told him they passed on me for him,” McDaniels cracked. “I turned it down.” Tebow said he was relieved to have a contract in hand so he could finally practice with the Broncos, who were still negotiating Friday with their other first-round draft pick, wide receiver Demaryius Thomas. Tebow said it felt good to work up a sweat again during the one-hour workout at Dove Valley but what he was really looking forward to was getting hit again. Tebow will get a taste of NFL hitting early on because the coaches are eager to see if they can have him run the ball like he did in college.

Oswalt pounded in Philadelphia debut

WASHINGTON — Craig Stammen carried a shutout into the seventh inning and the Washington Nationals roughed up Roy Oswalt in his Philadelphia debut, halting the Phillies' eight-game winning streak with an 8-1 victory Friday night.

Oswalt (6-13), a former 20-game winner acquired from Houston in a four-player trade Thursday, allowed five runs — four earned — and seven hits in six innings. He walked two, struck out four and hit two batters.

It was another tough start against Washington for the right-hander, who lasted only 2 1-3 innings, yielded four runs and was ejected for arguing balls and strikes when he faced the Nationals in Houston on May 31.

Stammen (3-4) went 6 1-3 innings, and gave up one run and five hits. He walked one and struck out five.

ASTROS 5, BREWERS 0

HOUSTON — J.A. Happ allowed two hits over six innings in his Houston debut, leading the Astros past Milwaukee.

Happ and two minor leaguers came to the Astros on Thursday in a trade that send Roy Oswalt to Philadelphia. Oswalt allowed four earned runs and seven hits in six innings in the Phillies' 8-1 loss at Washington on Friday night.

DIAMONDBACKS 9, METS 6

NEW YORK — Kelly Johnson and Miguel Montero homered in a five-run sixth inning, and Arizona stopped a seven-game losing streak.

Montero also doubled, singled and drove in four runs for the last-place Diamondbacks, who won for the first time since finishing a three-game sweep of the struggling Mets last Wednesday in Arizona.

BRAVES 6, REDS 4, 10 INNINGS

CINCINNATI — Jason Heyward doubled home two runs with two outs in the 10th inning, rallying Atlanta past Cincinnati.

Atlanta moved 3½ games ahead of second-place Philadelphia in the NL East.

Reds closer Francisco Cordero (3-4) walked two batters in the 10th. Heyward worked the count full, then hit a sinking liner that diving left fielder Jonny Gomes couldn't catch, allowing both runners to score.

ROCKIES 17, CUBS 2

DENVER — Carlos Gonzalez, Ian Stewart and Dexter Fowler homered and Colorado used a record-setting 12-run eighth inning to rout Chicago.

Gonzalez had four hits, two in the eighth when the Rockies set a major league record with 11 straight hits in the inning. The Rockies had 13 hits in the inning, a franchise record.

AMERICAN LEAGUE RAYS 3, YANKEES 2

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Wade Davis shrugged off a rocky start to pitch seven innings and Matt Joyce hit a three-run homer Friday night to lead the surging Tampa Bay Rays over the New York Yankees 3-2.

Tampa Bay forced Alex Rodriguez to wait at least one more day to join the 600-home run club, and the second-place Rays matched their longest winning streak of the season at seven games. The Rays pulled within one game of the AL East-leading Yankees with their 11th win in 12 home games.

BLUE JAYS 8, INDIANS 1

TORONTO — Jose Bautista hit a grand slam, his major league-leading 31st home run, Fred Lewis added a solo shot and Toronto beat Cleveland for its sixth win in seven games.

Bautista went 3 for 3 and walked twice before being lifted for a pinch-runner in the eighth inning.

TIGERS 6, RED SOX 5

BOSTON — Jhonny Peralta hit two homers in his first game since being traded and struggling Detroit withstood a grand slam by David Ortiz in the ninth inning.

Peralta, obtained from the Cleveland Indians on Wednesday, hit a solo homer in his first at bat in the second inning then connected again off Jon Lester, a two-run shot in the fifth.

WHITE SOX 6, ATHLETICS 1

CHICAGO — Lucas Harrell pitched six strong innings in his major league debut, Dayan Viciedo had three hits, and the Chicago White Sox got their 12th straight home win.

Gordon Beckham also had two hits and drove in two runs for the AL Central-leading White Sox, who are 19-1 at home since June 9. Chicago moved to a season-high 14 games over .500.

TWINS 5, MARINERS 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Matt Capps worked a scoreless ninth inning for a save in his first appearance with Minnesota, preserving a victory over Seattle.

Capps, acquired from the Washington Nationals the previous night, gave up a two-out single to Chone Figgins before striking out Casey Kotchman, ending the game with a pump of his fist. Of 94 career saves by Capps, he has 11 against AL teams.

Aide: Pitino never mentioned abortion

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Rick Pitino never said a woman who claimed the Louisville basketball coach got her pregnant after a one-night stand had to get an abortion but did advise she “go out of town” to get medical care, his longtime aide told a jury Friday.

The aide, Tim Sypher, was testifying against the woman, his ex-wife Karen Cunagin Sypher. He testified about helping her get an abortion at her extortion trial. The two divorced after she was indicted last year on charges of demanding cash and gifts worth millions from Pitino to keep secret their 2003 tryst on a restaurant table.

Tim Sypher, 49, testified that he called clinics in Indiana and Ohio before taking the woman, then known as Karen Wise, to Cincinnati, where she terminated the pregnancy on Aug. 29, 2003. Tim Sypher said he paid for the procedure from $3,000 Pitino gave to Karen Sypher for medical care.

“I just figured it was a good thing to do, go out of town,” Tim Sypher said. “Yeah, he (Pitino) said go out of town.”

Pitino, married and Roman Catholic, has said he intended for the money to be used for medical insurance, not an abortion. The Roman Catholic Church is opposed to abortion.

Karen Sypher, 50, has pleaded not guilty. After she was indicted, she told police Pitino raped her, but authorities didn't pursue charges.

Tim Sypher, who has worked for Pitino in various capacities since 1996, told jurors the coach called him on Aug. 23, 2003, and asked to use his condo to meet with a woman about a “supposed pregnancy.” That meeting took place just less than a month after Pitino and Sypher had sex after hours at Porcini, an Italian restaurant where they met a few hours earlier.

As Pitino and Sypher met downstairs, Tim Sypher said, he waited for about an hour in an upstairs bedroom.

“In a situation like that, you know, I just wanted the day over with,” Tim Sypher said. “I heard nothing.”

Defense attorney James Earhart asked Tim Sypher why Pitino called him, then a single 43-year-old, to take care of a pregnant woman.

“This is a situation that is potentially devastating to Rick Pitino, let's be honest,” Earhart said. “This doesn't need to come out.”

“True,” Tim Sypher said.

“... If he hadn't asked me, who then?”

Six days after the meeting at the condo, Tim Sypher drove Karen Sypher to a women's clinic in Cincinnati, where she had an abortion.

Attorney: Wright's ex got threatening visit

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Lorenzen Wright's ex-wife was threatened at her home by three men who were carrying guns and looking for the former NBA player about six weeks before he was shot to death, the woman's attorney said Friday.

Sherra Wright warned her ex-husband, the father of her children, about the visit by men dressed in sport coats with weapons tucked in their waistbands, lawyer Gail Mathes said. But she was frightened by their threats and didn't tell authorities about it until Monday, when she alerted police in the Memphis suburb of Collierville, near her home.

“She was told that if she said anything she would be killed, or her children,” Mathes said. “Mrs. Wright was terrified.”

The body of the 34-year-old athlete was found in woods in Memphis on Wednesday, six days after his family reported him missing. He was last seen around midnight July 18, when he stayed over at his ex-wife's house.

Sherra Wright told officers he left in the middle of the night with an unidentified person. Police records indicate Wright was probably carrying a large amount of cash when he disappeared.

An investigation is now under way by police in nearby Germantown, another Memphis suburb, about how a 911 call from Wright's phone early on July 19 was handled.

Autopsy results haven't been released, so it's not clear when Wright died or how many times he was shot. Police said the medical examiner had to use dental records to establish a positive identity, indicating the body might have been in the woods for some time before it was found by a police search team.

Memphis police are leading the homicide investigation and won't discuss a motive or if they have suspects. Memphis police Lt. Alan Ruhl said Friday that the department isn't discussing details of the case because the investigation is ongoing.

Rodney Bright, Germantown's deputy police chief, said department officials did not know about the 911 call until Tuesday, eight days after it was received by a dispatcher in the early morning hours of July 19.

Langer shoots 68, takes second-round lead

SAMMAMISH, Wash. — Bernhard Langer waited much of Friday morning for the soupy fog on the Sammamish Plateau to finally lift. He spent the evening waiting for someone to make a charge up the leaderboard.

In between, Langer put himself in position for a second consecutive major championship.

Langer overcame a shaky front nine with an eagle and birdie on the inward half to take the lead at 3 under in the second round of the U.S. Senior Open as many of the other contenders simply tried to stay close entering the weekend.

After a fog delay of more than two hours brought play to a halt just before 8 a.m., Langer shot a 2-under 68 making a number of key putts on the back nine when his round easily could have slipped away.

“You never quite know. It’s the type of golf course that any hole can get to you,” said Langer, coming off a victory last week in the Senior British Open at Carnoustie. “You just got to be careful and hit good shots.”

Langer was careful, not to mention a little fortunate with the putter Friday. He’s the only player with two rounds in the 60s on the par-70 layout at Sahalee Country Club, and will take a two-shot lead into the third round.

If successful this week, Langer would be the first player on the Champions Tour to win consecutive majors since Tom Watson in 2003 in the Senior British Open and Tradition.

While Langer managed to tame the ball-hawking tree limbs of Sahalee, others were far less successful. Only four players finished the second round under par, with another four sitting at even. First-round leader Bruce Vaughan gave back all of his 66 from Thursday before he made the turn.

Little known J.R. Roth had a 66, the best round of the day. He curled in a 25-foot bunker on the 18th to finish at 1 under for the tournament. John Cook (68) and Tommy Armour III (68) also were 1 under.

TSENG STAYS IN FRONT AT WOMEN’S BRITISH OPEN

SOUTHPORT, England — Taiwan’s Yani Tseng shot her second straight 4-under 68 on Friday to open a four-stroke lead in the Women’s British Open.

The 21-year-old Tseng, playing in calm, dry morning conditions at Royal Birkdale, had five birdies and bogey in the second round. She won the Kraft Nabisco in April for her second major title and third LPGA Tour title.

LPGA Championship winner Cristie Kerr

(67), Brittany Lincicome (71) and Amy Yang (71) were tied for second. Michelle Wie (76) was 10 strokes behind Tseng.

Rain washed over Royal Birkdale in the afternoon, making things difficult for the late starters — including defending champion Catriona Matthew of Scotland, who missed the cut by seven strokes after making a 10 at the par-four 13th hole.

OVERTON FIRES 62 AT GREENBRIER CLASSIC

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. — Jeff Overton shot an 8-under 62 to take a four-stroke lead midway through the inaugural Greenbrier Classic.

Overton, winless in five years on the PGA Tour, shot the low round of the tournament, using wedges on all but one approach shot during a bogey-free round on the Old White course. He was 14 under.

Boo Weekley, finally healthy after tearing a labrum in his left shoulder a year ago, was 10 under after a 63. Jimmy Walker (64) and double heart transplant recipient Erik Compton (68) were 9 under.

Big Ben glad to put offseason behind him

LATROBE, Pa. — Ben Roethlisberger is understandably glad that his troubled offseason is behind him. He’s about to find out if the Pittsburgh Steelers’ fans are ready to forget about it, too.

Roethlisberger ditched the oversized SUV he normally drives and, perhaps trying to reshape his battered image, arrived at training camp on Friday in a subcompact convertible that barely held the quarterback and injured offensive lineman Willie Colon. Several other linemen also traveled from Pittsburgh in a caravan of tiny cars.

“It’s good to be able to put a lot of things in the offseason behind you and move on and that’s what this is about,” said Roethlisberger, who is suspended for at least the first month of the season. “It’s about doing that and getting ready to play football, because that’s my No. 1 focus.”

Even if the Steelers’ No. 1 quarterback since 2004 will be No. 3 when practice starts Saturday.

While Roethlisberger can’t play until Oct. 17 at the earliest, coach Mike Tomlin said Byron Leftwich will take the majority of the snaps in practice and backup Dennis Dixon will follow. Roethlisberger won’t get nearly as much work as usual with the regulars, even though he will be the starter for most of the season.

“We’re going to be somewhat non-rhythmic,” Tomlin said. “We’re going to make sure that at the end of this thing, Ben has had a productive camp. But our focus, of course, is who’s going to be playing quarterback for us the week of the opener (Sept. 12 against Atlanta).”

COWBOYS’ BRYANT OUT 4-6 WEEKS WITH ANKLE SPRAIN

SAN ANTONIO — Cowboys rookie receiver Dez Bryant could miss the rest of training camp after the first-round draft pick suffered a high right ankle sprain near the end of practice Friday. The team said he will be out four to six weeks.

Bryant became entangled with cornerback Orlando Scandrick while trying to catch a pass that was thrown behind him on the next-to-last play of the day. It quickly became apparent that something was wrong.

Pittsburgh Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger carries bags in to the dormitory as he arrives at the team’s NFL training camp in Latrobe, Pa. Friday.

Bryant didn’t immediately get up, and when he finally did gingerly get to his feet while taking his helmet off, he took only a step before falling back to the turf. Bryant was reaching for his ankle and grimacing in obvious pain. Two trainers who checked on him helped him off the field.

Though the Cowboys have an extended camp with five preseason games because of their game in Canton, Ohio, next weekend, the injury could keep Bryant from playing until the regular season. The last preseason game is at home Sept. 2, which is five weeks away. The season opener is Sept. 12 at Washington.

HAYNESWORTH FAILS AGAIN, STILL CAN’T PRACTICE

ASHBURN, Va. — Early Friday morning, the cones were lined up 25 yards apart on the field for Albert Haynesworth’s conditioning test. He needed to complete the first part in 70 seconds or less to have a chance to pass. He clocked 71.

Another failed effort. Once again, the two-time All-Pro defensive tackle was not allowed to participate in practice at Washington Redskins training camp.

And so the Haynesworth saga drags on. By now, some coaches or organizations would have worked out some sort of a behind-the-scenes compromise in the name of team harmony and good publicity, especially with one measly second hanging in the balance. Not Mike Shanahan. The rules are the rules are the rules for the Redskins new coach, no matter who the player is.

“Either you play by the rules, you’re gone or you’ll get fined, one of the two,” fullback Mike Sellers said. “He’s a no-nonsense guy. A lot of the vets around here who are pretty much old-school guys appreciate it.”

3-PEAT: WR COLES SIGNS WITH JETS FOR THIRD TOUR

NEW YORK — Laveranues Coles is back with the Jets for the third time.

The veteran wide receiver signed a one-year contract Friday with the team he played with in two previous stints from 2000-02 and 2005-08.

The 32-year-old Coles, drafted by the Jets in 2000, spent last season with Cincinnati after leaving New York as a free agent. He struggled after signing a four-year, $28 million deal with the Bengals, catching 43 passes for 514 yards and five touchdowns.

Cincinnati released Coles in March, making him a free agent. He has a history of concussions and might have lost a step, but the Jets believe he can help quarterback Mark Sanchez and the offense.

BERRY TWEETS HIS DEAL IS DONE

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. — After being told safety Eric Berry had tweeted that he had come to terms with the Kansas City Chiefs, coach Todd Haley’s only comment was that he hoped it was true.

Typically, the Chiefs never announce signings or even confirm that they’ve come to terms until the player has passed his physical. Berry, the fifth overall pick in the 2010 draft, was not at the team’s first practice Friday at their new facility in St. Joseph.

But he said on his Twitter account that he soon would be.

“Bout to head to St. Joe!!! Aka the deals done,” he tweeted.

ESPN said the deal was for six years and $60 million, with $34 million guaranteed. That would make him the highest-paid safety in history. Messages to Berry’s agent were not immediately returned Friday and the Chiefs refused to comment.

SAINTS SIGN ROOKIE CB ROBINSON TO 5-YEAR DEAL

METairie, La. — The New Orleans Saints agreed to terms with first-round draft choice Patrick Robinson in time for him to get on the field halfway through the Super Bowl champions’ first training camp practice Friday morning.

Robinson got right to work, breaking a couple of passes early in seven-on-seven drills shortly after hitting the field.

“It made me feel good,” Robinson said. “I was trying to stay as calm as I could, and that was pretty much it, stay as calm as I could and be focused. Just being there is not enough. I think I have to make plays and start getting on the field more.”

Robinson will be trying to find playing time at one of the more talented positions on New Orleans’ team.

The 32nd overall selection out of Florida State, Robinson was the last of New Orleans’ six draft choices to sign a contract, agreeing to a five-year deal.

LIONS PRESIDENT LEWAND SUSPENDED 30 DAYS, FINED

DETROIT — Detroit Lions president Tom Lewand will be suspended for 30 days and fined $100,000 for violating the NFL’s personal conduct policy following his guilty plea to driving while impaired, the league announced Friday.

The suspension begins Aug. 25 and Lewand will be permitted back at work Sept. 24. Lewand, who met in New York at the league office July 16 with commissioner Roger Goodell, also will do community service.

In a letter to Lewand, Goodell said: “You occupy a special position of responsibility and trust, and — as you have publicly acknowledged — your conduct must be consistent with someone in that position.”

Newman, Hamlin say they were fined

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Asked the amount of his NASCAR fine, Ryan Newman kept quiet.

What did he do?

Shrugged shoulders.

Hey, maybe the threat of secret fines for speaking out against the stock car series is working after all.

NASCAR expects omerta (the code of silence) from its drivers when it comes to publicly lashing out against the sport. If they do, they’ll be fined.

Ask Newman or Denny Hamlin.

Both Sprint Cup star drivers acknowledged at Pocono Raceway they were the ones fined by NASCAR for making critical comments about the racing series.

“It’s not a good thing by any means for our sport,” Newman said Friday. “The less we talk about it, the more we can talk about the racing.”

Newman refused to disclose the amount of the fine or what he said. He implied that it was for comments he made after he crashed at Talladega Superspeedway.

Newman said in April that winning was “a lottery, racing for a championship shouldn’t be a lottery.” He added the wreck-heavy races at Talladega “affect our championship because it’s not racing.”

He was one of a few drivers Friday who blamed the media for stirring up controversy and an easy willingness to criticize the sport. Newman suggested if he was left alone for a few moments after his wreck instead of being instantly forced to answer questions, he might have cooled down and not been so quick to pop off.

“When you get a microphone stuck in your face when the adrenaline’s still rushing, don’t expect everything to be positive,” Newman said.

Or, he could have said “no comment.”

Hamlin said he was punished for comments he made on Twitter. He also did not reveal the amount of the fine.

People familiar with the penalties told the AP this week fines were levied because the comments were considered disparaging to the sport.

STEWART TAKES POCONO POLE

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — Tony Stewart unbuttoned the top button on his racing suit and let out a sigh.

Qualifying for the pole always makes a trip to Pocono Raceway more fun. Stewart zipped his No. 14 Chevy for a qualifying lap Friday of 171.393 mph around the 2.5-mile triangle track to start from the top for Sunday’s Pennsylvania 500.

“Man, it felt good,” Stewart said. “If you want a place where you want good track position, it’s here at Pocono.” Juan Pablo Montoya will start second in the NASCAR Sprint Cup race for an impressive follow-up to last week’s pole start but disappointing 32nd-place finish at the Brickyard 400.

Denny Hamlin will start third as he tries to sweep both Pocono races. Hamlin won the Pocono 500 in June.

Stewart’s had first-place finishes at Pocono in 2009 and 2003.

“Things can change really quick,” Homolka said. “You never know what you’re going to get when you go out there so you’re constantly working on the car. Then you don’t have a lot of time to work on stuff if something happens. There have been a couple of nights when my car has been just horrible. When it’s really hot, the track gets really slick. Every night is different but we’re still striving for the championship.”

He will have his work cut out for him. Both Homolka and Audet have proven themselves dominate drivers in the series this year with the pair battling for position

Although he has yet to be on top in the standings, Audet has been hot lately, winning back-to-back main events.

“I wasn’t sure I could catch up to him but I’m getting closer,” Audet said of his chances at the championship. “I just need to finish all the races — and one spot ahead of Ray.”

Said Homolka: “I think it’s going to go right down to the wire down to the very last night between Todd and me. It should be some really good racing the next few weekends. Todd’s got a ton of experience and he’s a pretty tough competitor.

“We get along, but once we hit the track the gloves are off. We’re both there to win it.”

Today is Saturday, July 31, the 212th day of 2010. There are 153 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On July 31, 1910, Dr. Hawley Harvey Crippen, whose wife, Cora, had disappeared from their London home, was arrested along with his mistress, Ethel Le Neve (posing as Crippen's son), aboard the steamship SS Montrose upon its arrival in Quebec, Canada. (Crippen was later convicted by a British court of murdering his wife and executed; Le Neve was acquitted of any involvement.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1777, the Marquis de Lafayette, a 19-year-old French nobleman, was made a major-general in the American Continental Army.

In 1875, the 17th president of the United States, Andrew Johnson, died in Carter County, Tenn., at age 66.

In 1919, Germany's Weimar (VY'-mahr) Constitution was adopted by the republic's National Assembly.

In 1948, President Harry S. Truman helped dedicate New York International Airport (later John F. Kennedy International Airport) at Idlewild Field.

In 1964, the American space probe Ranger 7 reached the moon, transmitting pictures back to Earth before crashing onto the lunar surface.

In 1969, the American space probe Mariner 6 flew by Mars, sending back images of the Red Planet.

In 1970, "The Huntley-Brinkley Report" came to an end after nearly 14 years as co-anchor Chet Huntley signed off for the last time; the broadcast was renamed "NBC Nightly News."

In 1972, Democratic vice-presidential candidate Thomas Eagleton withdrew from the ticket with George McGovern following disclosures that Eagleton had once undergone psychiatric treatment.

In 1989, a pro-Iranian group in Lebanon released a grisly videotape showing the body of American hostage William R. Higgins, a Marine lieutenant-colonel, dangling from a rope.

In 1991, President George H.W. Bush and Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev signed the Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty in Moscow.

Ten years ago: The Republican national convention opened in Philadelphia, with George W. Bush's name put into nomination for president. Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak survived a no-confidence vote. North and South Korea agreed to reopen border liaison offices and reconnect a railway linking their capitals.

Five years ago: Police arrested seven people during a raid on an apartment in southern England, bringing to 21 the number in custody in the relentless hunt for accomplices in the failed July 21 transit bombings in London. Jeong Jang shot a 3-under 69 to win the Women's British Open by four strokes.

One year ago: Three American tourists were arrested by Iran on suspicion of espionage during what their families have said was a simple hiking trip along the Iraq-Iran border; Shane Bauer, Sarah Shourd and Josh Fattal remain in Iranian custody. Space shuttle Endeavour and its seven astronauts returned to Earth, completing a long but successful construction job that boosted the size and power of the international space station.

OUR GREATEST ENJOYMENT IS YOUR EMPLOYMENT

IF JULY 31 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Have your fun in the sun or spend vacation time vacationing during the next few weeks. You will want to stay on your toes in September when a tendency to be gullible or to indulge in fantasies could distract you from what is truly important. Friendships and organizations could bring you both joy and irritation in October, but as long as you don't neglect your duties or ignore the rules at work everything should turn out fine. You may be more ambitious than usual in December and January but your belief system may clash with business practices. Wait until February to start a new job, a new study, or to make important commitments. During February you will have ample help from friends and advisors as well as more opportunities.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You should be sure to aim the arrow at something worthwhile if you are strung tighter than a bow. There may be enormous tensions building up in your life. Play sports or find suitable outlets.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You can be a friend indeed. People may value your presence because you are able to exercise the highest side of your social conscience in group situations. Companionship is more crucial than thrills.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The admonitions and stories you learned at a beloved grandparent's knee are often well worth remembering. If you don't have anything nice to say about someone, then it is best to say nothing at all.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A home isn't built just of brick, wood and metal. It is also constructed of memories. Before you throw out old toys or tear off wallpaper consider whether you should salvage something for memory's sake.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Soak up the sun and recharge your batteries. Improve your naturally sunny disposition by getting some much-needed rest. You may need extra patience to deal with super energetic and competitive companions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Birds of a feather often stick together. If you are invited to join an organization, and their values or cause match yours, go ahead and participate. You might form a lifelong friendship this weekend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Avoid the tendency to go to extremes or take unnecessary risks. For instance, you might start to exercise and decide it is better to do a 100 sit-ups instead of 20 and end up straining a muscle.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): There is no reason to be jealous. Just because people you envy have a number of major achievements underneath their belt doesn't mean they are immune to performance anxiety.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The bigger they are, the harder they fall. Don't launch major plans now, but start building confidence. Find some worthwhile project to tackle this weekend that will give you a sense of accomplishment.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Avoid conversations that could turn into adversarial confrontations. Competitive juices may flow more easily under these planetary formations, with a tendency to compete in the wrong venues.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If all the eggs are in one basket it is wise to pad them well. Take steps to protect your assets as well as your feelings. You might feel better overall if you insulate yourself from unpleasantness.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): The heart wants what the heart wants. Sometimes there is no rhyme or reason to an attraction or passion. You might be mesmerized by someone who you do not really understand, but you think you do.

DEAR ABBY: Our daughter gave birth to an adorable little boy three years ago. We love "Connor" dearly, but my husband is obsessed with him. He wants our grandson at our house every weekend from the time we are done working on Friday until Sunday evening or Monday morning.

My husband wants to take Connor everywhere we go. Abby, I love my grandson, but after raising our own children, I'd now like to focus on our lives and maybe have time for myself. If I say anything, my husband becomes furious and tells me I don't love our grandson. Of course I do, but I don't want every spare moment of my life wrapped up in him. Your advice, please?

— CONNOR'S G-MA IN VIRGINIA

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR G-MA: How does your daughter feel about this arrangement? What about Connor's father and his paternal grandparents? Shouldn't they be getting equal time with the child, too? If your daughter is a single mother, it is unfair for her to expect her parents to baby-sit Connor every weekend.

I agree that your husband's behavior is obsessive. You deserve time for yourself, so TAKE it. If your husband won't cooperate, schedule activities with some of your women friends. Do not allow yourself to be bullied into being an unwilling baby sitter because it isn't healthy for any of you.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 13-year-old girl and I really enjoy drawing. There's a 17-year-old boy in my school, "Christopher," who I am dying to draw. He has a wonderful profile, a fascinating smile, challenging hair that hangs over his eyes in an interesting way, great posture, grace and beautiful hands. Shall I go on?

Every time I see Christopher I want to grab a camera and get some good snapshots to use as a reference for sketching him later. I especially want to capture him in action — running, jumping, fencing or something like that. I also want to do a portrait of him.

How can I get some photos of him without being embarrassed or getting teased? There's one teacher who would definitely tease me if I'm too obvious.

— FUTURE FAMOUS ARTIST IN GEORGIA

DEAR ARTIST: Why not try the direct approach? Tell Christopher that you're working on an art project, and ask him if he would mind if you used him as a model. Tell him it wouldn't take up much of his time — but you'd like to snap some reference shots of him running, jumping, a three-quarter picture of his head and shoulders and his profile. He might be flattered at the idea. And if you get teased about it, say, "Dear Abby says, 'Art without passion is mechanical drawing.'"

DEAR ABBY: My daughter is being married on a very limited budget. She is thinking about handing out drink tickets at the reception to limit alcohol consumption. The reason is the cost. I think it sounds tacky, but it's better than a cash bar. What do you think?

— BUDGET-CONSCIOUS MAMA IN MISSOURI

DEAR MAMA: Nowhere is it written that alcohol must be consumed at a wedding reception. Many couples offer punch or cider to their guests instead, and that's what I recommend your daughter do.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

*"Up goes the lark, as if all were jolly!
Over the duck-pond the willow shakes.
Easy to think that grieving's folly."*

— George Meredith

"Duck or no dinner" is a British expression meaning "all or nothing." In a Spingold Knock-out Teams match from last summer's national championships, it was Steve Bloom who produced the duck, and it was his opponents who had no dinner. His play won the match for his team, and so his opponents got no dinner, because they had to prepare for their evening match.

Bloom (South) reached three no-trump after West had bid hearts. The lead of the heart king put him in a perilous spot, but East's jack was a welcome sight. Bloom ducked the heart king, then the heart queen, East discarding a low spade, suggesting an initial holding of five spades. West was now unable to continue hearts without costing himself a trick. He shifted to the club nine, ducked all around.

At this point Bloom had a fair idea of the defenders' hand-patterns. He decided to play for West to be 2-6-2-3, with a diamond honor. Accordingly, he cashed his clubs and spades, went to the diamond ace, and had reached a five-card ending in which West was down to the bare diamond queen and four hearts.

Bloom ducked a diamond to West, who was endplayed to lead a heart into dummy's tenace and concede the rest. Declarer won the heart cheaply and cashed the heart ace, pitching his two spade losers, and had two diamond winners at the death.

In retrospect East might have done better to pitch a club at trick two. Declarer might then have misguessed his opponents' hand patterns.

ANSWER: Your hand looks just too good to sell out by passing. Bid a natural two no-trump, showing a good 15 to 18. You may have a minimum hand, but that does not mean that bidding will lead to a bad result.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.
