Memo prompts concern of Congress being bypassed in making immigration policy

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Sens. Mike Crapo and Jim Risch are among 12 U.S. senators calling for a hearing in response to a leaked internal Department of Homeland Security memo about reforming immigration.

Idaho Republicans Crapo and Risch, along with their Senate colleagues, signed a letter sent last week to the Senate Homeland Security and Government Affairs Committee chairman that calls for a hearing for members to “question the author and recipients of the memo, as well as other officials from the Department.”

The memo, entitled “Administrative Alternatives to Comprehensive Immigration Reform” has made waves in GOP circles, particularly for its reference to options called “meaningful immigration reform absent legislative action.”

“We fully understand that the memo was a draft and

DANCING THROUGH LIFE T.F. woman joins Dallas Cowboys Cheerleaders

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

It seems to happen when people least expect it, the way famous starlets go from being just a girl who waits tables on the weekends to becoming a sort of celebrity, seemingly overnight.

A modern-day Cinderella story, perhaps, but Nicole Bulcher will tell you it was a lot of work made easy by what she attributes to being right where she needed to be.

A graduate of Twin Falls High School and the University of Idaho, the 23-year-old has the ambition to become an international human rights lawyer but along the way she has made a few stops. One in Malta for a study abroad experience, a few weeks in Los Angeles taking dance lessons and most recently back in Twin Falls where she was working as a barista for Java Jungle, waitressing at Canyon Crest and substituting teaching for the Twin Falls School District, all while studying for the LSAT and looking at law schools.

But then she got a whole new break and put her school dreams on hold to do something that requires a whole new kind of workload as one of the Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders (DCC).

Bulcher and one of her best friends from U of I made the trip to Texas along with more than 500 other hopefuls for two weeks of spring auditions and three demanding elimination

T.F. Council to consider ban on texting while driving

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Those used to darting their eyes between a cell phone and the road beware — that may net you a $50 fine in the near future.

An ordinance up for consideration by the Twin Falls City Council tonight would outlaw reading or sending text messages or e-mails while driving. Looking up phone numbers or names on your phone would not be punishable, according to the ordinance, and the ban would not apply to emergency service workers in the line of duty.

Councilman Greg Lanting, who began pushing for the ban in fall 2009, said he took up the mantle after seeing reports that distracted driving may be worse than drunk driving. The city’s traffic safety commission put the debate on hold during the last legislative session, where a statewide ban passed both the House and the Senate but was tabled in the House while reconciling the two bills.

The Senate had made texting while driving a misdemeanor if it caused a wreck, punishable with up to a $300 fine and/or 90 days in jail. The House measure more closely resembled the proposed Twin Falls ordinance.

One study, done by the Virginia Tech Transportation Institute, put the Twin Falls Mayor Don Hall said he is reserving judgment until after tonight’s public hearing, but believes more people should be aware of the dangers of text messaging while driving — but another issue is the government’s role in banning it.

K-9 PTSD? Some vets say dogs stressed by war, too her into a building, she would stiffen her legs and resist. Once inside, she would tuck her tail beneath her body and slink along the floor. She would hide under furniture or in a corner to avoid people.

A military veterinarian diagnosed her with post-traumatic stress disorder — a condition that some experts say can afflict dogs just like it does humans.

“She showed all the symptoms and she had all the signs,” said Master Sgt. Eric Haynes, the kennel master at Peterson Air Force Base. “She was terrified of everybody and it was obviously a condition that led her down that road.”

A year later, Gina is on the mend. Frequent walks among friendly people and a gradual reintroduction to the noises of military life have begun to overcome her fears, Haynes said.

Court of Appeals denies Burley man's attempt to withdraw guilty pleas

Times-News

A Burley man's 2005 conviction for robbery and attempted rape will stand, the Idaho Court of Appeals recently decided.

The appellate court on Thursday reaffirmed 5th District Judge Michael Crabtree's decision to deny Christopher R. Schultz's attempt to withdraw his guilty pleas to the charges.

Schultz had argued that the state breached a plea agreement he entered into while in juvenile court by ignoring its recommendations when he was later sentenced as an adult. However, the Court of Appeals opinion states that Schultz "failed to establish error in the district court's determination that defense counsel's juvenile waiver hearing recitation did not constitute a final plea agreement."

Schultz was 17 when he entered pleas in adult court about invading a Burley woman's home with a knife in order to rape and kill her. He wasn't successful on either count, as his victim escaped by throwing a purse at him and fleeing the scene. Schultz took the purse from the scene, for which he was charged with robbery, in addition to burglary, attempted rape and weapons enhancements on each charge.

Prior to his scheduled jury trial, Schultz pleaded guilty to robbery and one weapons enhancement, and entered an Alford plea to attempted rape. The remaining charges were dismissed in accordance to a different plea agreement than the juvenile one.

Crabtree sentenced Schultz to 15 years to life in prison for robbery and a concurrent 15- to 30-year sentence for attempted rape with a weapons enhancement.

The Court of Appeals previously declined to rule on which plea agreement superseded the other, which led Schultz to file a motion to withdraw his guilty pleas.

Mini-Cassia jail holds anti-meth art contest

By Judy Albertson
Times News writer

Mini-Cassia Criminal Justice Center Cpl. Shelley Reincke has brought out the art at the Burley jail.

She said while trying to conjure up a positive program for inmates, she realized there was an untapped depth of talent among their ranks. Piggybacking off the Idaho Meth Project's Paint the State competition, Reincke organized an unaffiliated, institution-wide art contest with an anti-meth angle.

"I thought no one knows meth better than those in here that have tried it firsthand and have lost the battle," Reincke said. "No one has lost more to the drug than those who made the wrong choice and ended up in here."

Reaction to her project was mixed, though Reincke said inmate response was generally positive, with many inmates saying they'd like to have their art displayed in a place where it might help children learn the anti-meth message. Inmates had a month to complete their pencil drawings, and upon judging the 10 entries, Reincke said one stood out as the clear winner.

"On one side it had what had been and on the other what was now, due to meth," she said. "And in the middle a message written that stated, 'On the left that's me. On the right that's me also. We have a responsibility to educate and prepare our children for the obstacles that lay ahead. I often ask myself if I am part of the problem or part of the solution. I believe I have been part of the problem for some time now. I also believe that I can change. What part do you play?'"

Reincke said she'd like to hold similar contests in the future, and said the next art contest will have the theme — picked by this contest's winner, whom she declined to identify — of "The happiest time in your life."

Reincke said most users regret using meth, but their recidivism rate at the jail is high.

"This is our winner's 33rd time being here, yet he regrets using," she said. "But he is a very interesting individual. He had a very bad childhood."

But what's the top prize for a jail art contest?

"I had planned on getting the winners art supplies, but the inmates asked if they could get things like Smack Ramen noodles or other commissary-type items that they could eat in here. So that's what they got," Reincke said. "But one inmate said, 'It isn't about the prize, it's about having something positive to do.'"

Blaine County Fair: a summer ritual

By Karen Bossick

Times-News correspondent

CAREY — As a third-generation 4-H'er, Amanda Kumiko Kent can attest to the value of those summer rituals known as county fairs.

The 4-H animal shows and market sales teach youngsters like she once was things like responsibility and even how to be methodical as they figure out how much and what kind of feed will produce the best growth in their calf or lamb.

"The money they get from the sale most of the time goes to college. But I heard the other day about a youngster who plans on using it for a car," said Kent, now associate extension educator for University of Idaho Blaine County.

Fairs have changed over the years. The Blaine County Fair and Rodeo, which runs today through Saturday, now offers an ATV and motorcycle rodeo, in addition to the traditional horse rodeo on Friday and Saturday.

And the push pedal sewing machine that was on the cover of Kent's grandmother's 4-H handbook certainly isn't what today's young sewers are stitching their fair entries on.

Thelma Cameron, of Carey, said there are actually more kids and more animals now than there was when she was a kid at the Blaine County Fair, meaning fairs are retaining their value in the 21st century.

The Blaine County Fair made a big push this summer to try to get more entries from gardeners, cooks and sewers in Sun Valley, Ketchum, Hailey and Bellevue, said Jodi Olson, of Carey.

The fair also is offering free bus transportation for the second year in a row to try to get people from Sun Valley, Ketchum, Hailey and Bellevue to attend the fair on Friday and Saturday.

Friday will feature the traditional family barbecue from 6 to 8 p.m., accompanied by the Western music and cowboy poetry of Saddle Strings, a group from Heber City, Utah, from 5 to 8 p.m. The Little Kids Rodeo will follow at 8 p.m.

Saturday will feature music by Saddle Strings beginning at 10:30 a.m. The 4-H Buyer's Luncheon will commence at noon followed by a Market Animal Sale at 1:30 p.m. A Rodeo will be held at 8 p.m.

Fair Board President Tracy and Kyle Green, president of the Blaine County 4-H Leader's Association, will also hold a ribbon cutting for the new Jim Boswell Memorial Stage at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday at the fairgrounds.

"There's always two sides to the story," Hall said. "A lot of folks believe this is government intrusion, they don't need to be told not to do this, and some people think existing ordinances already take care of that, (ordinances against) inattentive driving and things like that."

Inattentive driving is 2.1 percent of all citations given to motorists, according to the Idaho Transportation Department.

While Hall said he supports more local control of laws and ordinances, he said enforcing a texting ban in Twin Falls may be tricky when people from outside the city limits come to town. If the ban passes, he said he expects police to educate as much as enforce.

"It could also be tricky to prove someone is texting and not looking through their phonebook — police would need to see your thumbs working or subpoena your phone records, Hall, a former police officer, said.

Lanting expects simply codifying the ban will impact people's habits.

"The police tell us that 80 percent will follow the rules as soon as you pass them and get the word out about them," he wrote in an e-mail. "The rest may need the $50 fine as an incentive."

Lanting wrote that he could be for a complete ban of cell phone use while driving, unless used with a hands-free device. He called the ordinance "baby steps to work on something that will actually pass the council."

Lanting and Hall cited a College of Southern Idaho survey that shows students there would welcome a texting ban. Teater said national surveys show overwhelming support for the same and he condemned the Idaho legislature for not passing a ban last session.

"In the case that it hasn't been passed or it has been held up in procedural, it's a failure on the part of our legislators," he said. "Quite frankly, that's going to cost human lives as a result."

K-9 PTSD

Haynes describes her progress as “outstanding.” “Pretty fabulous, actually,” added Staff Sgt. Melinda Miller, who’s been Gina’s handler since May. “She makes me look pretty good.”

PTSD is well-documented among American servicemen and women returning from wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, but its existence in animals is less clear-cut. Some veterinarians say animals do experience it, or a version of it.

“There is a condition in dogs which is almost precisely the same, if not precisely the same, as PTSD in humans,” said Nicholas Dodman, head of the animal behavior program at Tufts University’s Cummings School of Veterinary Medicine.

But some veterinarians dislike applying the diagnosis to animals, thinking it demeans servicemen and women, Dodman said. He added that he means no offense to military personnel when he uses the term.

Jack Saul, a psychologist on the faculty at Columbia University’s Mailman School of Public Health, said PTSD is a diagnosis developed for humans, not dogs.

“That’s not to say that animals can’t be traumatized. It sounds like this dog was traumatized from the experience of extreme stress and fear,” Saul said. “That causes an alteration in the animal’s nervous system similar to an alteration of the nervous system in humans.”

The military defines PTSD as a condition that develops after a life-threatening trauma. Victims suffer three types of experiences long afterward, even in a safe environment. They repeatedly re-experience the trauma in nightmares or vivid memories. They avoid situations or feelings that remind them of the event, and they feel keyed up all the time.

Gina plays with a ball at the kennel on July 29 at Peterson Air Force Base in Colorado Springs, Colo. Gina was a playful 2-year-old German shepherd when she went to Iraq as a highly trained bomb-sniffing dog with the U.S. military, but months of door-to-door searches and noisy explosions left her cowering and fearful. After she came home to Peterson Air Force Base in June 2009, a military veterinarian diagnosed her with post-traumatic stress disorder.

When Gina returned to Peterson last year after her six-month deployment in Iraq, she was no longer the “great little pup” Haynes remembered.

She had been assigned to an Army unit, and her job was to search for explosives after soldiers entered a house. The troops sometimes used noisy, blinding “flash-bang” grenades and kicked down doors, Haynes said, and Gina was once in a convoy when another vehicle was hit by an improvised bomb.

Back home at Peterson, Gina wanted nothing to do with people.

“She’d withdrawn from society as a whole,” Haynes said.

Haynes, who has worked with more than 100 dogs in 12 years as a handler and kennel master, said he has seen other dogs rattled by trauma, but none as badly as Gina.

Haynes and other handlers coaxed Gina on walks, sending someone ahead to pass out treats for bystanders to give her. They got her over her fear of walking through doors by stationing someone she knew on the other side to reward her with pats and play. They eased her farther into buildings with the same technique.

“She started learning that everyone wasn’t trying to get her,” Haynes said. “She began acting more social again.”

On a sunny afternoon last week, Gina dashed across her training yard, jumping over obstacles on command and deftly pushing a ball with her forelegs and chest. On a visit to a store on base, she trotted calmly down the aisles and sat quietly when a woman bent to pet her.

“She’s such a lovable dog,” Miller said, describing how the 61-pound Gina will lie in her lap. “I could literally hold this dog like a baby!”

But Haynes said they’re careful not to let their affection interfere with good training. Treating Gina like a human — for example, comforting her when she’s frightened — can leave her thinking that her handler is pleased when she’s afraid.

“She’s just gorgeous and I love her, but you also have to balance it with — you have to do what’s right,” he said.

Gina has resumed some of her duties, searching cars for explosives at Peterson or other nearby military facilities. Eventually, she may be able to return to the kind of hazardous duty she did in Iraq, but that’s at least a year away, Haynes said.

“We’re not planning on doing it anytime in the near future because obviously, we don’t want to mess up everything we’ve already fixed,” he said.

Dodman said he doubts Gina can recover completely.

“It’s a fact that fears once learned are never unlearned,” Dodman said. “The best thing you can do is apply new learning, which is what (Gina’s handlers are) doing,” he said.

Haynes acknowledged that’s a concern, and although he hopes Gina recovers 100 percent he doesn’t know if she will.

“Anytime someone has that much fear about anything, then obviously it will be hard just to get it fixed,” he said.

“But, I mean, we don’t really have many other options,” Haynes said. “You can’t really give up on them. They’re your partner.”

Molina to make extra $55M payment

Times-News

Medicaid billing company Molina Healthcare must pay $55 million to Idaho Medicaid providers to smooth out financial troubles caused by sporadic payments from the company, according to a release from the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare.

Molina, which took over Medicaid billing duties for Idaho in June, has underpaid many health care providers in the state. Many small providers rely on Medicaid payments to stay afloat. Statewide, $24 million is paid out weekly in Medicaid costs. The program is designed for the disabled, low-income elderly, children and pregnant women.

California-based Molina took over billing duties for Idaho in June. Molina officials blamed lack of staff for the problem. Officials pledged an additional 40 people to smooth out the project.

“We are committed to serving our client, the state of Idaho Medicaid program,” said Terry Bayer, chief operating officer for Molina Healthcare, in a statement. “As such, we are bringing all necessary resources to resolve issues with the local providers and ensure success.”

Filer, Harrison intersection closed through midweek

Due to a broken water line, traffic will continue to be detoured around the closed intersection of Filer Avenue and Harrison Street through midweek.

Harrison Street between Filer Avenue and Falls Avenue is closed except to local traffic, with one lane open to northbound traffic only. This construction is associated with the arsenic project.

- Washington Street South between Orchard Drive and South Park Avenue has been limited to one lane, open to northbound traffic only. Southbound traffic will be detoured. This particular detour should be in place through mid-August. This construction is part of the arsenic project.

- Major road construction continues on Washington Street North with two lanes open. The speed limit has been lowered to 25 mph for the entire stretch of Washington from Addison Avenue West to Pole Line Road. The west side of the North College Road that intersects with Washington is closed.

- For the time being, motorists traveling to the Walmart area are advised to use Pole Line Road and turn onto Washington Street North at the stoplight.

- Expect lane closures and short delays on Eastland Drive South near Kimberly Road and also Floral Avenue as more construction associated with the arsenic project takes place.

- Due to construction, Falls Avenue West remains open to local traffic only.

rounds. Forty-four women were chosen to attend the eight-week training camp of fitness conditioning, daily rehearsals and dance training. On July 22, Bulcher was chosen to join the elite group of 34 women who get to wear the famous blue and white, star-studded uniforms.

“I still don’t think any of it is real,” Bulcher said. “Maybe when I run out on the field for the first time or maybe when we start signing autographs, I am not sure when it will hit me.”

The whirlwind trip has left her very thankful for all of the help her strangers-turned-friends have given her. When she found out she needed to stay longer than originally planned, she faced the issue of not having a car on hand or a place to stay. One of the returning veterans, Meredith Oden, took Bulcher under her wing and helped her find a family to stay with while she was in the training camp.

“I felt like the kid from The Blind Side,” Bulcher said, laughing when she described the first time she met the family. “I was expecting a normal lunch but they took us to the Ritz-Carlton, I’ve never eaten such a beautiful lunch!”

Bulcher has been exposed to more than just the Ritz. CMT’s fifth season of Making the Team, a show about the DCC will be putting her on air for a few interviews and shots of the girls trying out.

Texas, Bulcher said, is a whole new culture for her.

“I love Texas. They have big hair down here and everyone is really conservative,” Bulcher said. “I’ve already started picking up the word y’all. It’s just so much easier to say.”

The rigor of being a cheerleader has just started for America’s Sweethearts. Bulcher said the rule of thumb for the girls is to “look good in their uniform and be healthy!”

Between staying fit and working at a middle school as an ESL teacher’s assistant during the day and cheer practices at night, it is sure to be a busy season for the curly-haired beauty who has taken dance lessons since she was three.

Bulcher was the captain and choreographer for the U of I’s dance team and taught hip-hop lessons for the University’s wellness classes.

“The biggest part of preparing for this was when I took dance lessons in LA,” Bulcher said. “Dancing for U of I helped me to be a stronger person and mentally tough.”

And if there is one thing Bulcher wants people to know about her new role?

“People don’t realize what standards the DCC adhere to,” she said. “We are a very professional, classy organization. It’s different than other teams, many of the women are engaged or married and most of the girls are Christians. They are beautiful women. I am really excited for this.”

needed to threaten a moving carrier at sea.

The weapon, a version of which was displayed last year in a Chinese military parade, could revolutionize China's role in the Pacific balance of power, seriously weakening Washington's ability to intervene in any potential conflict over Taiwan or North Korea. It could also deny U.S. ships safe access to international waters near China's 11,200-mile-long coastline.

While a nuclear bomb could theoretically sink a carrier, assuming its user was willing to raise the stakes to atomic levels, the conventionally-armed Dong Feng 21D's uniqueness is in its ability to hit a powerfully defended moving target with pinpoint precision.

The Chinese Defense Ministry did not immediately respond to the AP's request for a comment.

Funded by annual double-digit increases in the defense budget for almost every year of the past two decades, the Chinese navy has become Asia's largest and has expanded beyond its traditional mission of retaking Taiwan to push its sphere of influence deeper into the Pacific and protect vital maritime trade routes.

"The Navy has long had to fear carrier-killing capabilities," said Patrick Cronin, senior director of the Asia-Pacific Security Program at the non-partisan, Washington-based Center for a New American Security. "The emerging Chinese antiship missile capability, and in particular the DF 21D, represents the first post-Cold War capability that is "The Navy has long had to fear carrier-killing capabilities. The emerging Chinese antiship missile capability, and in particular the DF 21D, represents the first post-Cold War capability that is both potentially capable of stopping our naval power projection and deliberately designed for that purpose."

— Patrick Cronin, senior director of the Asia-Pacific Security Program at the nonpartisan, Washington-based Center for a New American Security both potentially capable of stopping our naval power projection and deliberately designed for that purpose?"

Setting the stage for a possible conflict, Beijing has grown increasingly vocal in its demands for the U.S. to stay away from the wide swaths of ocean — covering much of the Yellow, East and South China seas — where it claims exclusivity.

It strongly opposed plans to hold U.S.-South Korean war games in the Yellow Sea off the northeastern Chinese coast, saying the participation of the USS George Washington supercarrier, with its 1,092-foot flight deck and 6,250 personnel, would be a provocation because it put Beijing within striking range of U.S. F-18 warplanes.

The carrier instead took part in maneuvers held farther away in the Sea of Japan.

U.S. officials deny Chinese pressure kept it away, and say they will not be told by Beijing where they can operate.

"We reserve the right to exercise in international waters anywhere in the world," Rear Adm. Daniel Cloyd, who headed the U.S. side of the exercises, said aboard the carrier during the maneuvers, which ended last week.

But the new missile, if able to evade the defenses of a carrier and of the vessels sailing with it, could undermine that policy.

"China can reach out and hit the U.S. well before the U.S. can get close enough to the mainland to hit back," said Toshi Yoshihara, an associate professor at the U.S. Naval War College. He said U.S. ships have only twice been that vulnerable — against Japan in World War II and against Soviet bombers in the Cold War.

Carrier-killing missiles "could have an enduring psychological effect on U.S. policymakers," he e-mailed to The AP. "It underscores more broadly that the U.S. Navy no longer rules the waves as it has since the end of World War II. The stark reality is that sea control cannot be taken for granted anymore."

Yoshihara said the weapon is causing considerable consternation in Washington, though — with attention focused on land wars in Afghanistan and Iraq — its implications haven't been widely discussed in public.

Analysts note that while much has been made of China's efforts to ready a carrier fleet of its own, it would likely take decades to catch U.S. carrier crews' level of expertise, training and experience.

But Beijing does not need to match the U.S. carrier for carrier. The Dong Feng 21D, smarter, and vastly cheaper, could successfully attack a U.S. carrier, or at least deter it from getting too close.

U.S. Defense Secretary Robert Gates warned of the threat in a speech last September at the Air Force Association Convention.

"When considering the military-modernization programs of countries like China, we should be concerned less with their potential ability to challenge the U.S. symmetrically — fighter to fighter or ship to ship — and more with their ability to disrupt our freedom of movement and narrow our strategic options," he said.

Gates said China's investments in cyber and anti-satellite warfare, anti-air and anti-ship weaponry, along with ballistic missiles, "could threaten America's primary way to project power" through its forward air bases and carrier strike groups.

The Pentagon has been worried for years about China getting an anti-ship ballistic missile. The Pentagon considers such a missile an "anti-access," weapon, meaning that it could deny others access to certain areas.

The Air Force's top surveillance and intelligence officer, Lt. Gen. David Deptula, told reporters this week that China's effort to increase anti-access capability is part of a worrisome trend. He did not single out the DF 21D, but said: "While we might not fight the Chinese, we may end up in situations where we'll certainly be opposing the equipment that they build and sell around the world."

Questions remain over when — and if — China will perfect the technology; hitting a moving carrier is no mean feat, requiring state-of-the-art guidance systems, and some experts believe it will take China a decade or so to field a reliable threat.

Others, however, say final tests of the missile could come in the next year or two. Former Navy commander James Kraska, a professor of international law and sea power at the U.S. Naval War College, recently wrote a controversial article in the magazine Orbis outlining a hypothetical scenario set just five years from now in which a Deng Feng 21D missile with a penetrator warhead sinks the USS George Washington.

That would usher in a "new epoch of international order in which Beijing emerges to displace the United States." While China's Defense Ministry never comments on new weapons before they become operational, the DF 21D — which would travel at 10 times the speed of sound and carry conventional payloads — has been much discussed by military buffs online.

A pseudonymous article posted on Xinhuanet, website of China's official news agency, imagines the U.S. dispatching the George Washington to aid Taiwan against a Chinese attack.

The Chinese would respond with three salvos of DF 21D, the first of which would pierce the hull, start fires and shut down flight operations, the article says. The second would knock out its engines and be accompanied by air attacks. The third wave, the article says, would "send the George Washington to the bottom of the ocean."

grant "deferred action" in cases when removal of an individual is not in the public interest. The memo's language has prompted concerns on Capitol Hill that so called "back-door amnesty" without transparency or legislative input will come about.

"It's something he believes Congress needs to look at," said Brad Hoaglund, a spokesman for Risch.

Leslie Phillips, a spokesperson for the committee, said in a statement that Sen. Joseph Lieberman, I-Conn., its chairman, has asked Department of Homeland Secretary Janet Napolitano for more information about the leaked memo. Phillips didn't say if there will be a hearing.

Immigration has emerged as a key issue for states, especially after a controversial state law in Arizona passed that put stronger requirements in place for police to check the immigration status of individuals.

Though parts of the law have been struck down by a federal judge, the debate isn't expected to subside.

Nor is the GOP request the only effort for a hearing after the memo was leaked.

U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, of Utah, was among Republicans who asked last week for a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Committee about the administration's memo.

Ariz. escapees believed to be in Yellowstone area

By Susan Montoya Bryan
Associated Press writer

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — The search for two men who escaped from a private Arizona prison and their suspected accomplice has turned to the vast Yellowstone National Park area after one of the inmates was linked to a double homicide in New Mexico and efforts to find them intensified.

The U.S. Marshals Service said Sunday information developed within the past two days indicates Tracy Province, John McCluskey and Casslyn Welch may be hiding in portions of the park that span Montana and Wyoming. The agency also said investigators believe Province has separated from McCluskey and Welch.

It doesn't appear any of the three are expert campers or have wilderness survival skills, said Thomas Henman, supervisory deputy with the U.S. Marshals Service in Phoenix.

"From the start, we believed these individuals would be staying at campgrounds and truck stops and other places like that. This keeps to that pattern," Henman said. He added authorities believe the three might be sticking to back roads and smaller state highways.

Federal investigators in Montana and Wyoming and law enforcement authorities with the National Park Service are working with investigators from Arizona to follow leads in the Yellowstone area.

The manhunt for the three intensified Saturday after forensic evidence linked at least one of the inmates to the killings of an Oklahoma couple who was traveling through eastern New Mexico earlier this week.

The badly burned skeletal remains of Linda and Gary Haas — both 61 and from Tecumseh, Okla. — were found in a charred camper Wednesday morning on a remote ranch in Santa Rosa. The couple's pickup truck was found that afternoon 100 miles west in Albuquerque.

Henman and New Mexico State Police spokesman Peter Olson both called the search for the two inmates an urgent situation given the double-homicide in New Mexico.

"They are very dangerous individuals, very desperate individuals, and the longer they're out there, the more desperate they become and the more dangerous they become," Henman said Sunday.

Province, McCluskey and Daniel Renwick escaped from the medium-security Arizona State Prison near Kingman on July 30 after authorities say the 44-year-old Welch of Mesa threw wire cutters over the perimeter fence. Welch is McCluskey's fiancée and cousin.

The three later kidnapped two semi-truck drivers at gunpoint and used the big rig to get away, authorities said. The group left the drivers unharmed in the truck at a stop just off Interstate 40 in Flagstaff and then fled.

Renwick was arrested Aug. 1 in Colorado.

Province was serving a life sentence for murder and robbery out of Pima County, Ariz. McCluskey was serving a 15-year prison term for attempted second-degree murder, aggravated assault and discharge of a firearm out of Maricopa County, Ariz. Renwick had been serving a 22-year sentence for second-degree murder.

Authorities said the movements of the two inmates and their accomplice have been unpredictable so they will continue with the nationwide manhunt until all three are arrested. Publicizing their photographs in newspapers and on television, including a segment Saturday night on "America's Most Wanted," has helped generate tips, investigators said.

A series of billboards featuring the three are also planned.

"We're hoping the right lead will come in and we'll be able to move quickly on it," Olson said.

Storms spawn tornadoes in North Dakota, Minnesota

GRAND FORKS, N.D. — Strong storms spawned several tornadoes that touched down in southeast North Dakota and western Minnesota, including one that appeared to have struck a farm house. No injuries appear to have been reported.

A video shot by a storm chaser showed a tornado touching down near a farm house in Wilkin County, Minn., and debris flying into the air as the funnel tore into the building.

The home destroyed in the video was near the tiny community of Campbell, Minn., according to a dispatcher with the Wilkin County Sheriff. But the owner, Al Kosel, 76, and his family weren't home, and there were no injuries, she said.

The storms started in North Dakota and moved east into Minnesota, said Tom Grafenauer, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service office in Grand Forks. Touchdowns were reported between about 6:15 p.m. and 7 p.m. near Tyler, N.D.; Tenney, Minn.; and Fergus Falls, Minn.

"Most of this action was in Minnesota," Grafenauer said.

One tornado appeared to be on the ground for 20 or 30 minutes, he said.

Dave Langenwalter told KVLY-TV in Fargo that he and his son had just gone into their basement when a tornado touched down just yards from their house near Tyler, N.D. The outbuildings were flattened and his garage was gone, believed these individuals would be staying at campgrounds and truck stops and other places like that. This keeps to that pattern," Henman said. He added authorities believe the three might be sticking to back roads and smaller state highways.

Debris flies through the air as a tornado moves through rural Wilkin County, Minn on Saturday. The National Weather Service says several tornadoes touched down in southeast North Dakota and western Minnesota. No injuries appear to have been reported.

he said. His car apparently was picked up and dropped several yards away. Langenwalter found it behind a nearby grove of trees.

Richland County Chief Deputy Gary Ruhl told the television station that "at any given time" there were four funnel clouds in his county in the state's far southeast corner.

One tornado "came from the southwest, came through this farmstead and leveled everything off. It crossed the river into Wilkin County (Minnesota) and also destroyed a farmstead over there," Ruhl told KVLY-TV.

It wasn't clear Sunday morning exactly how many separate tornadoes touched down or what the extent of the damage was. A National Weather Service storm survey team was in the area assessing the damage and trying to determine exactly what happened, Grafenauer said.

Breitbart: Enemy of the left with a laptop

By Michael R. Blood
Associated Press writer

LOS ANGELES — Andrew Breitbart strips off his blazer, windmills it over his head and lets it fly to the stage with a matador’s flourish. He booms into a microphone, sneering, taunting. Breath sprints to keep up with words.

A Breitbart boil is under way, before a cheering throng of tea partiers on a moonlike strip of Nevada desert back in March.

A finger stabs overhead as the conservative online publisher declares Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., a racist. An arm lances outward as he decries Republican leaders as apolo-gists. Voice rising, Breitbart pledges $10,000, then $20,000, then $100,000 for the United Negro College Fund if proof is found to cor-roborate claims of racial name-calling during tea party protests on Capitol Hill.

“They decided to play low-ball, hardball tactics,” Breitbart seethes. “Well, we’re going to have to play it right back at them.”

You could argue he has done just that.

Two weeks ago, Breitbart posted an edited video that left the impression that Shirley Sherrod, then a little-known black federal employ-ee, was racist. Within days she was out of a job, the doctored tape proved wildly misleading and President Barack Obama was on the phone with her trying to make things right.

Sherrod says she plans to file a lawsuit against Breitbart, and he’s being blamed for committing the same online sins that he says are endemic in the U.S. media: political bias and lack of fairness. But despite calls, even from some conservatives, for Breitbart to apologize to Sherrod, he has done nothing of the sort.

“What would warrant an apology?” he told CNN. “I’m not the one that threw her under the bus.”

Love or hate him, you can’t avoid Breitbart on cable TV these days. But who is this 41-year-old father of four from Los Angeles, who has emerged as one of the most incendiary figures from the Beltway to Hollywood, a minor-league Limbaugh who mixes shock-jock calculation, conservative credo and answer-to-no-one swagger? Who is this icon of the smash-mouth politics that divide America?

Breitbart vaguely resem-bles a younger version of the actor Carroll O’Connor, with gray hair and pale blue eyes. He has the kind of build that suggests he’s not averse to polishing off his kids’ left-overs.

In the quiet of his Los Angeles living room, where the California sunshine floods through skylights and toys occupy corners, Breitbart is practiced and polite. Dressed in a blue blazer, jeans and but-ton-down shirt, he’s nothing like the combative partisan seen hissy-fitting on YouTube clips.

Kids’ artwork is taped to the walls, and he chats ami-ably with his wife about din-ner and a visit from his in-laws. There’s a large-screen TV and pool table, and a book on see-through houses rests nearby.

Breitbart talks about his views with the zeal of the con-vert that he is. A personality ago, he was a cookie-cutter Hollywood liberal. But his passion for his brand of con-servative politics is shot through with the keen busi-ness sense of an up-and-coming media mogul: He knows that what he says sells.

As with the Sherrod video, he is skilled at finding issues that push conservative but-tons while at the same time pulling Internet traffic to his websites, driving up advertis-ing rates. He’s a man with an agenda, and it’s as much busi-ness as politics.

“I’m committed to the destruction of the old media guard,” Breitbart has said. “And it’s a very good business model!”

Conservative online publish-er Andrew Breitbart is seen during an interview on Feb. 11 at his home in Los Angeles. Love or hate him, you can’t avoid Breitbart on cable TV these days. The 41-year-old father of four from Los Angeles has emerged as one of the most incendiary figures from the Beltway to Hollywood, a minor-league Limbaugh who mixes shock-jock calculation, conservative credo and answer-to-no-one swagger. He is the face of the new conservative outrage, exemplar of the smash-mouth politics that divide America.

“I do what I do because the mainstream media chooses not to do it. The game of the left controlling the narrative ... is ending.”

— Andrew Breitbart, a conservative online publisher who uses his websites and public appearances to challenge what he perceives as liberal bias in the media, academia and Hollywood

He did not speak with Sherrod before the clipped video went up, and he says he was unaware of the complete speech at the time. By his account, he posted the clip to expose racism within the NAACP, which last month passed a resolution con-demning what it said were racist elements within the tea party. He wrote that the 1986 video shows “nodding approval” in the crowd to Sherrod’s remarks, which he sees as evidence of bigotry.

It’s not the first time he’s been involved in a controversy over edited tapes. Last year, one of Breitbart’s websites debuted the hidden-camera sting videos made by James O’Keefe III and Hannah Giles that brought down the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, or ACORN. Giles posed as a prostitute, and the videos show ACORN staffers offer-ing advice on taxes and other issues. Critics said the heavily edited tapes shaped a decep-tive narrative, a charge Breitbart denies.

He relishes his public role as provocateur. He told reporters from the stage of a tea party convention in February, “It’s not your business model that sucks, it’s you that sucks.” And this on Sen. Edward Kennedy’s death: “If you can’t say something nice about a person, then say mean things about them instead,” Breitbart wrote. “Especially if they are unapologetic manslaughterers.”

Breitbart’s home turf is a colony of conservative web-sites anchored to news aggre-gator Breitbart.com, which gets more than 2 million vis-itors each month. He’s a regu-lar on Fox News, and has a book on the way.

News cycle by news cycle, fact by fact, Breitbart uses his websites and public appear-ances to challenge what he perceives as liberal bias in the media, academia and Hollywood, the broad forces that shape American lives. His loudmouthed style is a radical departure from con-servative voices of the past, like William F. Buckley Jr.

“I do what I do because the mainstream media chooses not to do it,” he says. “The game of the left controlling the narrative ... is ending.”

And yet a centerpiece of the Breitbart operation is, in effect, a handshake with the devil, as he sees it: the main-stream media. His most pop-ular site, Breitbart.com, showcases content he buys from The Associated Press and other mainstream news organizations. It was launched under the motto: “Just the news.”

Breitbart TV, another grab-bag, rounds up video clips. From there it’s a hard right turn, and it’s clear after a few clicks Breitbart isn’t promot-ing an impartial media. A quartet of sister sites offer conservative analysis, com-mentary and blog posts that pass judgment on news sto-ries or delve into other topics of the day — a sort of online bulletin board for conserva-tives. There’s Big Journalism, Big Hollywood, Big Peace and Big Government. (He uses the modifier “Big” to mock the media slang Big Tobacco and Big Oil).

Some past headlines, “NY Times admires Taliban,” “Who really needs a journal-ism degree?” and “Left Admits Racism Charges Against Tea Parties a Tactic, Not a Truth.”

Not surprisingly, the left sees Breitbart as another entertainer-pundit on the fringes of journalism, where facts are disposable and atti-tude trumps intellect.

“I call it thuggery in the national discourse,” says Democratic strategist Karen Finney, a Clinton White House veteran “It’s damaging to our country.”

But his take-no-prisoners approach goes down well with conservatives who feel their political leaders have been too hesitant, too timid. Breitbart “intends to offend the other side,” says Republican strate-gist Jonathan Wilcox, who teaches a course on politics and celebrity at the University of Southern California. He’s “an oppositional figure at an oppositional time.”

Breitbart’s personality is reminiscent of the manic, stop-and-go driving in his hometown of Los Angeles, and right now we’re at stop.

When asked what he does other than pounding a laptop or hanging out with tea partiers, he has to pause. He’s a devoted Los Angeles Dodgers fan, and has traveled the country to cheer on his favorite team. He spends a lot of time with his in-laws at their home in Venice, near the beach, and a getaway usually means a meal with the kids at California Pizza Kitchen.

“When you have four kids ... unless you have the televi-sion on it’s pure mayhem,” he says. “It’s just pure chaos.”

Larry Solov, his business partner and lifelong friend, says the blogger has two speeds: lighthearted jokester and fiery culture warrior.

“They flip back and forth,” Solov quips. “And there is not that much in between.”

Breitbart is part of a small cluster of Hollywood conser-vatives that includes comedi-an Dennis Miller and Joel Surnow. While he told tea partiers in Nevada that he’s not rich, he doesn’t live like Joe the Plumber either — a Range Rover is parked in his driveway, and the neatly-tended homes in his hillside neighborhood go for more than $1 million.

When Breitbart tells his story, it can feel rehearsed, a tale told many times. He’s quick to needle the teenager and young man he once was, talking about his journey from college party boy and lapsed music critic to 21st century Internet mogul, as he’s been called by talk-radio host Laura Ingraham.

He grew up in an affluent bubble in the Brentwood sec-tion of Los Angeles (home to Arnold Schwarzenegger and Harrison Ford), not far from where he lives today with his children and wife Susie, the daughter of actor Orson Bean.

The son of a restaurateur, he attended private school and emerged liberal. Politics was just a word.

That began to change at Tulane University in New Orleans, where Breitbart par-tied and mustered average grades but was exposed to a grittier version of America. In a city long troubled by crime and poverty, he started think-ing about social problems and “the Great Society trash can,” a reference to welfare pro-grams in the 1960s.

A defining moment came as he watched the 1991 Senate hearings on Clarence Thomas’ nomination to the Supreme Court. Breitbart grew indignant as Democratic senators grilled the nominee, in his view unfairly; he believed the allegations of inappropriate behavior lev-eled at Thomas paled in com-parison to Kennedy’s Chappaquiddick scandal. Breitbart considered the media, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the National Organization for Women complicit in what he saw.

“I went in expecting to root against Clarence Thomas and I came out doubting the Democratic Party and liberal-ism,” he says.

He eventually changed his party registration to Republican and never looked back. He wrote recently on an Atlantic magazine website that there was a time when he read the Los Angeles Times, the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner, British music mag-a-zines and what he called his Bible, satirical Spy magazine, but those habits died with the Internet. Now, his reading tastes lean right.

All that would be just per-sonal footnote if he hadn’t met Web pioneer Matt Drudge of Drudge Report repute in the mid-1990s. Breitbart became his long-serving underling. He was also there during the forma-tive days of the Huffington Post.

In interviews, Breitbart usually refuses to talk about Drudge, who is known for fiercely guarding his privacy (and didn’t respond to AP requests for an interview), but he does say this: “I owe him everything.”

“If he had been left of cen-ter, he would have been on the cover of Rolling Stone and Wired and Vanity Fair a mil-lion times,” Breitbart says. “My greatest takeaway from Matt Drudge ... was his sense of individualism, to follow your path. And so, Drudge is Drudge and I’m me.”

Breitbart’s talk of new media revolution is as much throwback as innovation. The confrontational right-left voices in today’s national dia-logue recall newspapers of the 18th and 19th centuries, which had little use for milquetoast neutrality.

“When you have a more open, competitive landscape, you need to do something to differentiate yourself. One way is to have a point of view,” says Rich Gordon, director of digital innovation at Northwestern University’s Medill School of Journalism.

Is it journalism?

“It’s a different brand of journalism than I grew up with in the 20th century,” Gordon says. “We seem to be going back to the future.”

Breitbart rattles off ideas for more than a dozen inter-linked sites and blogs, some of which he says could launch later this year: Big Education would take on teacher unions and political correctness in schools; Big Tolerance, to “show that blacks, gays, Hispanics, Jews, are not all of one progressive mindset.”

Solov, his business partner and friend, considers the company’s finances private and wouldn’t say if it turned a profit last year. Breitbart says advertising pays for a small staff — Internet traffic to his site gets a big boost from his old friend Drudge, whose site links stories to Breitbart’s online turf.

There are those who think Breitbart’s future is in the Beltway culture he despises. One reader posted this, “Andrew for president 2012.”

Breitbart looks momentar-ily bemused when asked if he harbors political ambition.

“I’m less of a senator than I am a pied piper or Johnny Applesseed,” Breitbart says. “Being a senator would diminish my power.”

Mahan victor at Firestone

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

AKRON, Ohio — Hunter Mahan took a big step toward joining the elite in golf on Sunday, winning his first World Golf Championship title to lock up a spot on the U.S. Ryder Cup team.

Four shots behind to start the final round at Firestone, Mahan ran off five birdies on the front nine to take the lead, then had three clutch par saves down the stretch to finish off a 6-under 64 and a two-shot victory over Ryan Palmer.

It was the second victory this year for Mahan, and the $1.4 million he earned moved him to No. 2 in the Ryder Cup standings with only the PGA Championship remaining before the top eight Americans qualifying.

The battle for No. 1 was far less inspiring.

Tiger Woods will remain atop the world ranking for the 270th consecutive week, despite the worst tournament of his career. Woods closed with a 77 to finish at 18-over 298 — his highest score on the PGA Tour as a pro or an amateur — and finished one spot out of last place.

That cleared the way for Phil Mickelson to replace him at No. 1, provided Lefty finished in fourth place alone.

Mickelson was even worse. He shot 41 on the front nine, including a three-putt from 4 feet, and shot 78 to tie for 46th.

“It didn’t feel like it was far off,” Mickelson said. “But it turned out to be.”

Mahan was right on the money.

He shot 30 on the front nine to surge past Sean O’Hair, then scrambled his way to victory. Mahan saved par with a 15-foot putt on the 15th, made a tough par from the front of the 16th green after hitting his second shot into a flower bed, then saved his biggest fist pump for an 8-foot par putt on the 17th hole.

Mahan, who shot 65 in the final round to win the Phoenix Open in February, finished at 12-under 268. He became the third American with multiple victories on the PGA Tour this year, and likely will move to a career-best No. 12 in the world.

The Ryder Cup was a big bonus.

“That was my goal at the beginning of the year, to make the team on my own,” Mahan said.

Mahan has played on the past three U.S. teams — two Presidents Cups and one Ryder Cup — as a captain’s pick. He was determined to make the team on his own this year, but had only one top 10 since Phoenix and during one stretch missed four straight cuts.

This week didn’t look promising when he opened with a 71, but Mahan shot 67 on Friday and got back into the hunt with a 66 in the third round. He became the first player to win Firestone with an opening round over par since Greg Norman in 1995.

“Not making any bogeys on a Sunday is a good feeling,” Mahan said.

Willie Dalton wins Super Stocks battle at MVS

By Linda Brittsan
Times-News correspondent

Willie Dalton is no one-hit wonder. Surviving setbacks and a three-lap shootout to the checkered flag, The Budweiser Super Stocks driver came back to win his second main event of the season Saturday night at Magic Valley Speedway. Dalton began the 35-lap race from the front row, but fell back to fourth by lap nine leaving the battle for the lead up to Brennan VanderMeer and Steve Edens.

A hard-charging Daniel Shirley knocked Dalton for a spin two laps later and after restart, Kris McKean began to make his move to the front, capturing it at lap 14.

Seven laps later VanderMeer slowed on the track after contact with Jimmy Hall and the front stretch wall and the caution flag waved once again.

The next restart began with McKean in front, but after some confusion on the track, the yellow flag was brought out and McKean exited to the pits to take care of a flat tire.

This time Dalton found himself back up front for the restart with aggressive Jimmy Hall along side. But with three laps remaining in the race, Hall and Shirley drove themselves out of contention after getting together in turn four.

The bad news for Dalton on this final restart points standings leader McKean was back in the picture after winding his way through the field.

However, in the shootout for the win, Dalton was able to hold off both McKean and Jimmy Hall to take the trip to Victory Lane.

Fortunately for Dalton, the encounters on the track had stayed behind him.

“My car wouldn’t handle all night, and I was just hoping for a good top five finish,” Dalton said. “When that last caution came out I was just trying to figure out who was going to start on the outside of me. I knew Kris was back there but then I saw the truck (Jimmy Hall) pull up next to me, and I thought as long as I was careful going into the corners, maybe we could pull it off. Then we took the green, and I just crossed my fingers and put my foot in it. It was crazy I was surprised I won it.”

Ray Homolka spent the entire event trying to catch up to the hooked-up Audet, but as the race continued caution-free, Homolka’s efforts went unanswered. At the checkered, Audet had a 4.615 margin of victory over the points standing leader.

GILLIGAN FINISHES ON TOP WITH QUALE’S ELECTRONICS HORNETS

Looking to always keeping the Hornets division drivers guessing as to what kind of race they’ll be participating in, the main event race was ran clockwise through the road course track.

With Bob Gilligan in the lead, Brandon Mortensen made a bold move to take the position away but the maneuver backfired as Gilligan held steady and Mortensen went sideways, allowing three cars to get around him.

Jeff Peck and Ty Garibay fought a fierce battle for second for several laps, but Peck kept running into trouble and could only bring his damaged car to a fifth place finish for the night. Garibay finished in the runner-up position while Mortensen came back to finish third.

RUMSEY IN WITH PRO 4’S VICTORY

Eddie Secord and Steve Thompson were the top two contenders for the win throughout most of the first half of the 100-lap A-main event race, but traffic issues at lap 48 caused the two to spin out in turn four and after a red flag delay on the track, the pair were mired back in the field for the restart.

Bud Rumsey soon took over for the remainder of the race, eventually motoring to a seven second win over Rob Powers.

Thompson, who set a new track record in qualifying with a speed of 82.053 seconds around the one-third mile track, wound up finishing 17th while Secord battled back to finish third. Local driver Bruce Quale came through with a very respectable seventh place result.

Cowboys beat Bengals 16-7

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press writer

CANTON, Ohio — Terrell Owens chatted amiably with his former Cowboys teammates. Chad Ochocinco wore gold shoes for his few plays.

Otherwise, the Cincinnati Bengals barely were noticeable Sunday night as Dallas won 16-7 in the Hall of Fame game.

In a game that might have made Class of 2010 inductees Emmitt Smith and Jerry Rice wince, the offenses generally sputtered and there were eight sacks. Neither team could get going with the ball in a sloppy affair. Clearly, none of the aura of the NFL’s career leaders in rushing and receiving rubbed off.

At least some of Saturday’s other inductees — the ones who played defense, Dick LeBeau, John Randle and Rickey Jackson — could appreciate the lack of scoring and the takeaways. Dallas picked off three passes and recovered a fumble; Cincinnati also recovered a fumble.

Nobody could be impressed by the slew of penalties, 16 overall, 12 by Cincinnati for 90 yards. Then again, it was the preseason opener.

The Cowboys hope this is the opening step, small as it was, toward becoming the first team to play in a Super Bowl in its home stadium. That goal will take months before it can be achieved, of course, and the most memorable item this weekend for them will remain Smith’s entry into the Hall of Fame.

“Having Emmitt inducted into the Hall of Fame is special,” All-Pro linebacker DeMarcus Ware said. “For us now playing for the Cowboys, it does make it extra special.”

AP photo

Dallas Cowboys quarterback Stephen McGee (7) is sacked by Cincinnati Bengals’ Geno Atkins, left, and Michael Johnson (93) in the second quarter of the Hall of Fame NFL football game Sunday in Canton, Ohio.

Most of the regulars worked short shifts. At least the Cowboys’ starters looked sharp during their minimal stints.

Tony Romo led them to the Cincinnati 2 with a steady opening drive before they stalled and David Buehler kicked a 20-yard field goal. Romo was 5 for 10 for 59 yards.

“You just have to continue to work on the things we’ve been doing through the offseason and in training camp,” Romo said. “You’re never sure until you get into a game-like mode, and some of the new stuff, it was nice to see it work out really well. It’s a start. We have to build off of it, but we still have a ways to go, and we’re on the way.”

Dallas certainly needs better protection for its quarterbacks after

Juan Pablo Montoya wins at Watkins Glen to take Sprint Cup

By John Kekis
Associated Press

WATKINS GLEN, N.Y. — Juan Pablo Montoya finally had a race without a mistake, and he proved invincible.

The hard-driving Colombian erased 113 races of futility Sunday, winning a duel with Marcos Ambrose and the Sprint Cup race at Watkins Glen International.

“It’s about time,” Montoya said after celebrating with his crew in Victory Lane. “We’ve lost a lot of them, gave away a lot of them. It gets frustrating, everybody fighting. There’s so many things I have to learn. I still make a lot of mistakes. It’s experience. We’ve just got to learn from it.”

Frustration mounted when crew chief Brian Pattie’s pit strategy backfired at the previous two races. A late four-tire call likely cost Montoya a win at the Brickyard 400, and he finished 16th a week ago at Pocono after starting second, another questionable pit call the culprit that led to harsh words over the radio.

A prerace talk at Watkins Glen with team co-owner Chip Ganassi helped clear the air. Montoya went out, withstood repeated stalking and challenges from Ambrose and won going away.

Montoya led 74 of 90 laps and beat Kurt Busch to the line by nearly 5 seconds for his second career victory, the other coming on NASCAR’s other road course at Sonoma in 2007, 113 races ago. Montoya gave Earnhardt Ganassi racing just its third victory of the season.

Ambrose was third, his third straight top-three finish at Watkins Glen, followed by AJ Allmendinger and pole-sitter Carl Edwards. Jamie McMurray, Tony Stewart, Kyle Busch, Jeff Burton and Jeff Gordon rounded out the top 10.

It was the first career victory for Pattie, who fought back tears after watching the No. 42 take the checkered flag.

“It’s huge,” Pattie said. “I still want to win on an oval. He wants to prove his point. The Brickyard was my fault. Hope this makes up for it. Trophies mean a lot. It’s pretty cool.”

Montoya made the Chase for the Sprint Cup last year, made a strong run early in the 10-race postseason, and finished eighth in points. His chances of making the Chase this year vanished early. He’s failed to finish seven of the first 21 races and is well out of contention.

Vargas, Kotchman lead Seattle past Royals

SEATTLE — Jason Vargas allowed just one run in six solid innings to win his seventh game at home this season, and Casey Kotchman's two-run single in the sixth gave Seattle the lead for good in the Mariners' 3-2 win over the Kansas City Royals on Sunday.

Vargas (8-5) improved to 7-2 at Safeco Field this season, taking a shutout into the sixth inning. It was his second consecutive victory after going more than a month without a win.

BLUE JAYS 1, RAYS 0

TORONTO — The Blue Jays' Brandon Morrow lost a no-hit bid with two outs in the ninth inning on a single by Evan Longoria, then stuck out his 17th batter of the game to finish off a 1-0 victory over the Tampa Bay Rays on Sunday.

The three-game sweep was crippling for the Rays, who have lost a season-high five straight after briefly moving ahead of the New York Yankees in the AL East earlier in the week.

TWINS 5, INDIANS 4

CLEVELAND — Jim Thome hit a two-run shot for career homer No. 578 and the Twins rallied for five runs in the fifth to pull within a half-game of the AL Central-leading White Sox.

Thome's drive against his former team came against David Huff (2-11), helping the Twins take two of three in the series and earn their 12th win in 16 games.

manager Buck Showalter.

Felix Pie homered for the Orioles, who took the lead for good with a two-run sixth. Since Showalter made his debut in the dugout Tuesday, Baltimore has swept three games from the Los Angeles Angels and won two of three from the first-place White Sox.

TIGERS 9, ANGELS 4

DETROIT — Johnny Damon drove in three runs, Alex Avila and Will Rhymes had two RBIs apiece and the Tigers snapped a four-game losing streak while avoiding a series sweep.

ATHLETICS 3, RANGERS 2

OAKLAND, Calif. — Kurt Suzuki hit a tiebreaking sacrifice fly in the seventh inning, Trevor Cahill allowed six hits through eight and the Athletics beat the first-place Rangers.

Rajai Davis and Coco Crisp also drove in runs for the A's, who won for the eighth time in their last 10 home games. Josh Hamilton and Nelson Cruz drove in runs for the Rangers, who have lost four of their last seven.

YANKEES 7, RED SOX 2

NEW YORK — Derek Jeter passed Babe Ruth on the career hits list and drove in three runs and Dustin Moseley filled in admirably for an injured A.J. Burnett, leading the New York Yankees to a 7-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox on Sunday night.

REDS 11, CUBS 4

CHICAGO — Joey Votto and Jonny Gomes scored four runs apiece to back a strong start by Travis Wood, and the Cincinnati Reds beat the Chicago Cubs 11-4 on Sunday for their ninth win in 11 games.

Wood (3-1) took a no-hitter into the sixth inning before fading late. Votto backed him with a two-run homer in the eighth and had two hits, and Gomes set a career high with four walks, coming around each time. .

PADRES 10, DIAMONDBACKS 1

PHOENIX — Mat Latos pitched six scoreless innings in a combined three-hitter, Jerry Hairston Jr. created havoc from the leadoff spot and San Diego avoided a three-game sweep by the last-place Diamondbacks.

San Diego was in dire need of a win after losing six of nine, including two against Arizona. The Padres got it behind a four-run fourth inning off Joe Saunders (1-1) and another solid outing by Latos (12-5).

DODGERS 8, NATIONALS 3

LOS ANGELES — Ted Lilly overcame a rough start to win his second straight outing with Los Angeles, and the Dodgers capitalized on two Washington errors during a four-run first.

Lilly (5-8) pitched six innings in his 300th major league game and 275th start, allowing three runs and six hits, including back-to-back homers by Michael Morse and Justin Maxwell in the second.

BRAVES 6, GIANTS 3

ATLANTA — Derek Lowe pitched into the sixth inning before leaving with an injury and David Ross hit a two-run homer, helping the Braves get the victory.

Lowe (11-9) was bothered by cramping in his right hamstring. The right-hander allowed two runs and five hits in 5 1-3 innings.

PHILLIES 6, METS 5

PHILADELPHIA — Raul Ibanez sparked a five-run third inning with a three-run homer, and Philadelphia backed Roy Halladay with a dozen hits.

Ibanez clubbed a hanging knuckleball from R.A. Dickey off the batter's eye. Jayson Werth had three hits, including a solo homer, and Brian Schneider and Ross Gload also drove in runs for Philadelphia.

BREWERS 11, ASTROS 6

MILWAUKEE — Casey McGehee hit a three-run homer and Lorenzo Cain drove in the first three runs of his career, helping Milwaukee complete a three-game series sweep.

McGehee drove a ball into the Brewers' bullpen in left-center field in the fourth to make it 11-4, after just missing a three-run homer in the first with an RBI double off the wall.

ROCKIES 8, PIRATES 4

PITTSBURGH — Carlos Gonzalez hit his 25th homer and finished with four hits, helping the Rockies salvage a split of the four-game series.

Gonzalez went 4 for 5 with his eighth homer in his past 11 games, drove in three runs and scored twice, helping Colorado win for the seventh time in 10 games. He went 9 for 18 in the series.

Lochte finishes with another big win

By Chris Foster
Los Angeles Times

IRVINE, Calif. — Ryan Lochte stood on the podium, bright green sneakers on his feet and glittering gold medal around his neck. It was another reminder that this was his week.

Lochte brushed up for the Pan-Pacific Championships by dominating a star-studded field in the 200-meter backstroke at the U.S. national championships Saturday in Irvine.

"I knew I had to get out fast and hold on for dear life," Lochte said. "Those last 50 yards I could see that everyone coming and thought, 'This is going to be bad.' "

It wasn't.

Lochte's time of 1 minute 55.58 seconds was the second-fastest in the world this year. He easily outdistanced defending world champion and rival Aaron Peirsol, who finished second, and Tyler Clary, who finished third. Michael Phelps was fourth.

"I don't ever want to do that ever again," Phelps said. "When you get into the pool with guys like Lochte and Peirsol, it's tough. I mean, Peirsol is one of the best finishers in the world."

Peirsol put on a burst at the finish Saturday, but there was too much water to make up. Lochte, the 2008 Olympic gold medalist in the 200 backstroke, went out fast and buried the field, finishing .70 seconds ahead of Peirsol.

"He swam that race like you're supposed to swim it," Peirsol said. "He basically called our bluff. I didn't even see him until the second turn and by then I was too far back to catch up."

It was a good week's work for Lochte, who also won the 200 and 400 individual medleys, though he brushed it off as a run-of-the-mill performance.

"I knew my times weren't going to be spectacular because of the year I have had," said Lochte, who has battled a groin injury. "I got started late in training and had some bumps in the road. I know next year is going to be faster for me."

The week has had upheavals.

On Wednesday, David Plummer beat Peirsol in the 100 backstroke. It was Peirsol's first loss in the finals in that event at a United States' national championship since 2000. On Friday, Phelps' 38-race winning streak in the 200 individual medley was ended by Lochte. It was Lochte's first victory over Phelps in a major meet.

Phelps won three events during the meet, but admitted being disappointed with his performances.

"I was setting myself up for this," Phelps said. "I'm only going to be happy if I'm perfect. If I'm not perfect, I'm going to be hard on myself."

Phelps said that he would have to re-establish his training regimen.

"I knew with the way the year was going that I would be disappointed," he said. "The only way to change that is to get back to basics in my training schedule."

On the women's side, Dana Vollmer swam the second-fastest time in the world this year to win the 100 freestyle (53.94) and Rebecca Soni swam the second-fastest time in the world to win the 200 breaststroke (2:21.60). But it was a remember-me swim by seven-time Olympic medalist Amanda Beard that caught everyone's eye.

Beard went from sixth to second in the last 50 meters to qualify for the United States' Pan-Pacific team ... if she can get some child care.

Beard, who has an 11th-month-old son, said she would make decision by Sunday whether to compete in the meet.

"Anyone want to be a nanny?" Beard joked to the crowd after the race, but later said, "My husband said to go, that this was bonding time for him and his son. I have never been away from him for more than three hours at a time."

Lunde rallies to take Turning Stone title

VERONA, N.Y. — Less than five years after Bill Lunde quit competitive golf, he earned a spot in next week's PGA Championship by winning the Turning Stone Resort Championship on Sunday.

Lunde shot 6-under 66 and rallied for the come-from-behind victory with a 17-under 271 total on the 7,482-yard Atunyote Golf Club layout. He earned $720,000, a PGA Tour exemption through the end of 2012 and 250 FedEx Cup points for his first PGA Tour win in 53 career starts.

"I started driving it really well, hitting it down the fairway," Lunde said. "So that kind of changed the whole game. I went from scrambling to make pars to having 9 irons that I could hit close."

"All these guys out here, you're never far from playing good. You can sit here and say, 'I'm playing awful, I don't know how I'm going to break 80 today,' but you're never that far off."

J.J. Henry finished runner-up at 16 under after he tied the course record with a 63. Jerry Kelly, Josh Teater, Michael Sim, Billy Mayfair and Alex Cejka tied for third place at 15 under. Cejka was the leader after the second and third rounds, but closed with an even-par 72.

Lunde made the weekend cut by one stroke at 3 under and vaulted into contention with a 64 on Saturday. He still trailed Cejka by four shots heading into the final round. Lunde climbed to the top of Sunday's leaderboard with six birdies and a 30 on the front side. He first reached 17 under with a birdie at No. 9.

FROST WINS RECORD-SETTING VICTORY AT CHAMPIONS

BLAINE, Minn. — David Frost jumped out fast Sunday with a brilliant front nine and finished with an 11-under 61 to earn a record-setting victory at the 3M Championship.

It was the first career Champions Tour win for Frost, whose 25-under 191 was two shots better than the previous tournament scoring record set by R.W. Eaks in 2008. His final-round score beat by one the tournament's previous lowest round set by Dana Quigley in 2008.

Frost also tied the tour record of 25-under for a 54-hole tournament previously set by Loren Roberts at the 2006 MasterCard Championship at Hualalai and equaled by Bernhard Langer at the 2007 Administrastaff Small Business Classic.

Battling clammy hands in the heat and humidity, Mark Calcavecchia, tied with Frost for the lead after 36 holes, shot a 4-under 68, and finished second, five shots behind.

Mahan

He left that to everyone else around him.

O'Hair, who shared the 54-hole lead with Palmer, made two birdies on the opening four holes to take an early lead, then didn't make a bogey the rest of the round. Palmer went out in 36, started the back nine with back-to-back birdies and never made another.

The Texan had his chances. He hit a 402-yard drive on the par-5 16th, which had the tees moved up to make the hole play only 602 yards, but his second shot went through the green.

He chipped to 12 feet and missed his birdie putt, then missed another birdie from about 20 feet on the 17th to end his chances. He closed with a 69.

"I can't be disappointed," Palmer said. "I played good today being under the gun. You've got to hand it to Hunter Mahan. He went out and did what I expected somebody to do, and shot a low round. I didn't lose the golf tournament."

Retief Goosen, the 36-hole leader until a triple bogey on the opening hole Saturday, closed with a 65 and tied for third with Bo Van Pelt, who shot a 67. O'Hair shot 71 and wound up alone in fifth.

Mahan became only the fifth player to win a World Golf Championship at Firestone, a short list with Woods winning seven times. Typical of this event, however, there was drama on the 16th.

Woods finished his round some three hours before the leaders teed off.

Cincinnati had five sacks, including two by linebacker Michael Johnson.

The Bengals made plenty of offseason news with the additions of Owens and Pacman Jones, who was not signed by any teams last year because of his previous off-field issues and missed the season. Neither former Cowboy had much impact, although Owens caught two passes for 18 yards and was thrown to four times by Carson Palmer.

"We're a work in progress," Owens said. "We're getting there. It felt just like practice."

It often looked like it, as well.

Buehler added field goals of 34 yards in the second quarter and 23 yards in the third. The last kick was set up when linebacker Brandon Williams returned an interception of Jordan Palmer — Carson's younger brother and Cincinnati's third-string quarterback — 36 yards to the Bengals 9-yard line.

Dallas capped the one-sided victory when Brandon Sharpe picked off Jordan Palmer's fourth-quarter pass and dived untouched into the end zone for a 6-yard score.

Bengals rookie Jordan Shipley ran back a punt 63 yards in the final minutes, and Jordan Palmer hit rookie tight end Darius Hill for a 1-yard TD with 51 seconds remaining.

Cincinnati's best player was punter Kevin Huber, who averaged 46.4 yards on 10 punts.

After 25 years, a mixed report card for Right to Work

Forget the divisive abortion and gay marriage debates that came later: The 1985 campaign that made Idaho the 21st Right to Work state was easily the bit-terest in our history.

Over the veto of then-Gov. John Evans, the Legislature voted to outlaw “union shops,” where workers are obliged to pay dues as a condition of employment.

Twenty months later, a majority of Idaho voters — 54 percent — approved the change.

Idaho’s labor unions fought Right to Work as if their lives depended on it, and in many ways they did. And 27-year-old Gary Glenn, a fire-brand conservative activist who ran the Right to Work campaign, took no prisoners.

“The tactics on both sides were equally despicable,” former Idaho Association of Commerce and Industry Executive Director Steve Ahrens told the Idaho Statesman. “They ranged from scurrilous to reprehensible.”

But what’s been the economic impact of 25 years of Right to Work?

Depends on whom you ask. For starters, union membership has shrunk from 12 percent of the Idaho workforce in 1985 to 6 percent today. Partly as a consequence, Idaho wages have declined from 84 percent of the national average in 1985 to 75 percent before the beginning of the Great Recession.

But it would be naïve to suggest that Right to Work wasn’t a major factor in Idaho’s explosive job growth from 1986 through 2008.

Start-ups, small businesses and tech — enterprises that sort badly with union rules — thrived. Equally important, Right to Work served to stabilize the labor market.

And companies like Dell simply wouldn’t have come to Idaho if they had to deal with union shops.

Still, as much as any other single factor, Right to Work began the polarization of Idaho politics that has left us with a process that is at times dysfunctional. It weakened Democrats and Republican moderates in the long run, and left conservatives in power who can’t always see eye to eye.

But it’s a stretch to say that Right to Work in itself gutted organized labor in Idaho. Economic change — the decline of traditional Idaho industries like timber, rail and mining — was more responsible.

Jim Kerns, the president of the Idaho AFL-CIO during the Right to Work campaign, told the Statesman that Right to Work means no strike is going to be successful in Idaho. The may be true, but organized labor isn’t exactly dead.

Nobody — including the conservatives in the Legislature — makes a serious decision about public schools without consulting the Idaho Education Association. Merit pay for teachers — an idea that Republican Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna strongly endorses and of which the IEA is skeptical — won’t happen without the teachers union’s buy-in.

And there are pockets of strength among public employee unions, such as the Boise police and the Twin Falls firefighters.

So is the state as a whole better for Right to Work? A qualified yes.

In the past quarter century, Idaho has earned a reputation as a good place to do business. And as difficult as the state’s current economic recovery is, it would be slower with a significant number of unionized workplaces.

Still, some toxic residue of the Right to Work debate lingers. Its passage emboldened Republican conservatives to the point where they feel they can make Idaho’s important decisions heedless of Democrats and GOP moderates.

Phil Batt leveraged the success of Right to Work to return the Idaho Republican Party to dominance. But he was the last governor who deemed it his moral responsibility to pay more than lip service to those with whom he disagreed politically.

Idaho crossed a watershed with Right to Work. It’s not the same state it was before 1985, and never will be again.

That’s good. And sometimes, not so good.

Our view: Right to Work, on balance, made Idaho a more prosperous state. And a lot more polarized.

Low Volt-age, steep price

Let us compare the Volkswagen and the “Voltswagen.”

Jonah Goldberg

The original Volkswagen was intended as the “people’s car” (that’s what Volkswagen means). The idea of a cheap, safe, reliable car for the working man was popular before Adolf Hitler embraced it, but as a self-proclaimed man of the people, he made the idea his own. Whereas industrialists and aristocrats didn’t think the common man needed a car (“the people’s car is a bus” was their refrain), Hitler sided with one of his heroes, Henry Ford, arguing that everyone deserved his own ride. He ordered the German Labor Front, the union arm of the Nazi Party, to start building a people’s car. When it looked like the car might be too expensive, the Labor Front created a savings program that promised a car for even the poorest workers.

At the 1934 Berlin Motor Show, Hitler proclaimed: “It is a bitter thought that millions of good and industrious people are excluded from the use of a means of transport that, especially on Sundays and holidays, could become for them a source of unknown joy.”

And then there’s the electric-gas hybrid Chevy Volt, aka the “Voltswagen.” At $41,000, about as much as the average American makes in a year, this is no people’s car. GM, owned by the government and the labor unions, is pitching it to affluent hipsters who don’t need a lot of space for a family. Deloitte Consulting says that the demand for such cars is from “young, very high income individuals” from households that make more than $200,000 a year, which is why the Volt will be rolled out in upscale, trendy urban markets. (Meanwhile the Chevy Cruze, the gas-only version of the Volt, has more room inside and is a mere $17,000.)

Because the Volt’s sticker price might be too high for even that crowd, the government is offering a federal subsidy of up to $7,500 (Californians have a state subsidy, too), which means that working-class people will be helping to pay for playthings for upper-income people.

“Like the EV1 that GM tried to peddle in the California market,” Kenneth Green, an environmental scientist at the American Enterprise Institute, says, “the Volt is a vanity car for the well-off that will be subsidized by less well-off taxpayers at all stages, from R&D to sales and to the construction of charging stations.”

Indeed, the Volt’s price is $41,000, but the cost is much higher. “Government Motors” is already selling the car at a loss. According to the blogger Doctor Zero, if you apply the subsidies that have gone directly into the car to just the first 10,000 vehicles, the cost is more like $81,000 per car.

Of course, electric-car boosters say this sort of thing is necessary to get the industry up and running (To which Green responds: “Supporters claim that electric cars need subsidies because they’re still in their infancy. Electric cars have been around for over 100 years. That’s some infancy.”)

But would it be a good thing if we all switched to electric cars? The point is to reduce CO2 emissions, right? But in some regions, we get our electricity from CO2-spewing coal. The more electricity pulled from the grid, the more coal is burned, essentially replacing dirty oil with dirtier coal (which is why some coal backers see much promise in electric cars). Studies confirm that China — which is allegedly “beating us” in the race to a green economy — would produce vastly more greenhouse emissions if it switched to electric vehicles.

The expected response to that is that we need stuff like CO2-free windmills to generate electricity. Don’t get me started on the Volkspropeller.

Regardless, no matter how you crunch the numbers or the science, there’s no disputing that this is a political car, designed to meet the demands not of an economic market but of an ideological one, directed by the collusion of big business and big government. In this sense, the Volkswagen and the Voltswagen have a lot in common.

If the government wasn’t taking taxpayer money and spending it on toys for upscale urban liberals (Obama’s strongest base of support outside of black voters and labor unions), there’d be no reason to care about the Volt. If rich people want to be “early adopters” and buy expensive gadgets that help them preen the plumage of their political sanctimony, that’s great. It’s not so great when the government gets involved in wealth redistribution, and it’s outrageous when it involves redistributing wealth upwards.

Democratic candidates have come forward at all levels as candidates for county commissioner (Eller-Twin Falls), legislative representatives (Bill Chisolm in 23, Scott McClure and Cindy Shotswell in 26), superintendent of schools (Olson), governor (Allred), and U.S. senator (Sullivan) among others. Parents thank all who helped their daughter

Last weekend (July 31-Aug. 1), our daughter, sister and wife Jenny DeWaal attended the Spudman triathlon in Burley to support her husband. Jenny was seriously injured while attempting to help a race participant who had crashed on her bike. As a family we would like to thank all of the volunteers and spectators at the race that came to her aid. We would especially like to thank the dear sister who found someone to give Jenny a LDS priesthood blessing and the brother who gave the blessing. We know the blessing was an important part in getting her through such a traumatic accident. We would also like to thank all of the spectators that took care of Jenny and her family directly following the accident (especially shielding the kids from the chaotic scene). Lastly we would like to thank all medical personnel: the EMT’s that transported her to the Burley hospital, the doctors and nurses that cared for her in he hospital, and the Life Flight staff who cared for her on the way to SLC. Jenny was recently moved from the ICU and is expected to be home in one week. She has a long recovery ahead, but all indications point to a full recovery. We are grateful to the community of Burley for all of their support and love.

Dr. Jonathan Myers, medical director of Inpatient Rehabilitation Services, talks to his wife about admitting a patient in his office at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center in Twin Falls.

St. Luke's doctor pushes for improved rehabilitation facility

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Every morning, Dr. Jonathan Myers visits each of his patients undergoing rehabilitation. Few who return his firm handshake know that he was in their slippers just a decade ago.

St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center hired Myers as its physical rehab specialist less than a year ago. Shortly after taking the job, Myers buried himself in the task of convincing both St. Luke's doctors and the public that St. Luke's new Twin Falls medical center should include an in-patient rehab unit after it opens in 2011. He must be a good salesman, because the plan for the medical offices wing now shows a rehab unit occupying the third floor.

"It was a grand gesture on the part of the doctors because they had to give up precious new office space," Myers said. "But patients are definitely going to benefit because they won't have to go to Boise."

As part of his residency, Myers said he worked at the nation's top-rated facility, the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago, so he's using ideas he saw there. In addition to 14 special rooms and a state-of-the-art gym almost double the size of what St. Luke's has now, Myers included in the plan a practice "apartment" that isn't handicap-friendly to help patients adapt to regular life.

"I like to call myself a 'disability specialist,'" Myers, 33, said. "I'm always thinking, 'How can I make these patients more functional?'"

Other facilities in Twin Falls offer some rehab services, but Myers said the in-patient unit offers higher-intensity therapy — patients receive three hours of therapy each day — and the care covers all the bases because a team of providers meets at least every week to discuss each patient's care.

"I equate the job of a rehab doctor to that of a general contractor," Myers said. "I oversee all parts of the team to make sure the patients recover as quickly as possible."

John Groesbeck, St. Luke's chief financial officer, said Myers convinced him that an in-patient unit was necessary by presenting research that showed the healing process is enhanced when a patient can be near family.

But Myers doesn't need research results; he's experienced the benefit of family firsthand.

When he was 22, Myers was a paralyzed from the neck down when he suffered a spinal cord injury in a car accident. Myers said no one knew whether he'd recover.

"Yes, I was wearing my seat belt," Myers said. "People always ask me that."

Myers had been accepted to the University of Iowa medical school but deferred admission for a year while he spent three months in a Butte, Mont., hospital and eight months in out-patient rehab. Myers said his parents scoured the nation for the best rehab facilities, but he chose a small unit in Des Moines, Iowa, because that's where his family was.

With the help of his parents, Myers was able to enter medical school the next year and get to most of his classes using just a cane. Except for a few scars, the only outward hint of his ordeal is a limp.

"I am a little more empathetic because things wouldn't occur to me if I hadn't gone through it," Myers said. "But it also gives me an advantage in convincing people to do their therapy because I know what it takes."

Myers also knows money is what it takes to make his rehab unit a reality. It's going to take $5.4 million to fill the empty space on the third floor, and he's starting at zero. So between his in-patient rounds and seeing out-patients three days a week, he's applying for funds from St. Luke's Magic Valley Health Foundation and helping organize fundraisers, including St. Luke's Epicurian Evening on Sept. 10 and this year's Festival of Trees.

Based on what he has overcome so far, Myers will find his funding.

Laura Lundquist may be reached at llundquist@magicvalley.com or 735-3376.

Too much fun in the sun can damage your eyes

By Ray Segebrecht
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — At 5 p.m., as Jose Vega uncaps a tiny, $100 tube of ointment, he thinks of work. As a chef at Jabinero's, he should already be spreading ingredients — onions, peppers, meats — across the restaurant stovetop. But instead, he's spreading ointment over two rows of stitches in his eyes, and he can't come close to that stove for five more weeks.

That means for another five weeks, wife Tanya Vega will have to keep the family of five afloat with nonstop nightly shifts at St. Luke's Hospital on top of nursing school classes. Vega, who had his third pterygium — a layer of tissue that grows over the eye, starting at the inside corner — removed last week, has to stay clear from sun and heat that long to recover.

The pterygiums, which Vega got subjecting his eyes to too much sunlight, are just one of many problems the sun can cause in human eyes, said Vega's surgeon Carl Stout, of Discover Vision. Others, he said, vary from a keratitis — a sunburn on the eye — to both a higher risk, and a faster onset, of more serious conditions like cataracts and macular degeneration.

The danger for all eye damage from the sun is significantly greater in the summertime. In summer, people are closer to the sun, and its light is more intense, like when people visit the equator. A number of seasonal activities, such as water sports and games on concrete, only raise that risk by exposing people to reflected light, too.

But unfortunately, a lack of awareness on the harm of sunlight to eyes, and what people need for full protection, is also great, Stout said. As a result, doctors are trying to educate their patients in each exam, and nationally, the American Academy of Ophthalmology recognizes July as UV Safety Awareness Month.

"It's just one more thing that we can protect ourselves from, if we're a little aware of the problem," said Lee Duffner, AAO correspondent and Hollywood, Fla., ophthalmologist. "If we're totally unaware of the problem, nobody's going to do anything."

• • •

Of the sunlight's three kinds of ultraviolet, or UV, light — UVA, UVB and UVC — only the first two types, common for sunglass labels, enter the atmosphere to be of concern. Most eye problems occur due to UVB

Traditional treatment gains popularity despite warnings

By Charity Brown
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Brenda Thompson gets a treatment called ear candling from Schyla Poyndexter-Moore at the Secrets of Nature restaurant and health-food store in the District of Columbia.

A hollow candle, or a piece of fabric soaked in beeswax or paraffin, is placed in the ear canal with a paper plate resting on the head to prevent burns from the wax.

Then, the candle or fabric is lit. According to its supporters, the practice is a remedy for removing earwax and cures ailments such as ear infections, sinusitis, migraines, postnasal drip and cancer, and improves general health.

The origin of this technique is unknown, but some say it can be traced to the era before Christ, to ancient Egypt and/or India. Within the past decade, its popularity has increased. Beauty salons and spas offer candling, also known as ear coning and thermal auricular therapy, and kits are available at health-food stores.

Medical research, however, holds that the practice is both ineffective and dangerous. It showed up in February on the Food and Drug Administration's equivalent of the FBI's most-wanted list.

The FDA has received reports of burns, perforated eardrums and ear-canal blockages that required outpatient surgery from the use of ear candles. Particular concern has been voiced over the practice of coning on children. Because kids tend to move around more, the likelihood of their being burned is higher, and their smaller ear canals may make them more susceptible to injury.

What's more, earwax, which candling is supposed to remove, is a good thing. Wax traps dirt, debris and dust and contains antimicrobial agents to stave off infection.

light, which has a shorter wavelength that can penetrate the cornea.

Some of these conditions, like keratitis, can develop in a day or afternoon, especially at a pool or lake where water reflects the light. But the risk for most of them, and especially the more serious ones like cataracts, macular degeneration or pterygiums, rises more gradually with light exposure. Like with pterygiums, the damage is cumulative over the course of years.

“The interesting thing about a lot of UV damage that occurs as adults is you don’t really see it until adulthood,” said optometrist Jason Rogers of Overland Park, Kan.

Rogers said he always recommends people exercise caution and always wear sunglasses because they often can’t properly perceive the level of harm they are doing. The cornea of the eye has more nerve endings than any other part of the body, but the damage often needs to reach the point of a keratitis for people to feel pain.

Even with a keratitis, or sunburned eye, people often can’t pinpoint the pain they do feel, Rogers said, because they’ve been swimming and assume the discomfort is due to chlorine. And if they could, he added, the study of UV damage to eyes hasn’t reached a place where they can look back and count their exposure to their current level of risk, like with sunburns, anyway.

• • •

Doctors recommend people consider three main factors when buying sunglasses: the lenses, their intended use and the frame. So far, most of the country isn’t paying attention.

According to an Eye-Q survey released by the American Optometric Association, the majority of Americans prioritize style, comfort or price ahead of protection.

For lenses, Stout said he advises that most important element to have is UV 400 protective coating or, in percentages, lenses that provide 99 to 100 percent UVA and UVB protection. Rogers said that with eyes, all people are at equal risk, so he always gives the same message: unlike with skin cancer, everyone needs the same level of UV protection, regardless of ethnicity or eye color.

“You can look at different ethnic backgrounds and which one has a higher risk for a certain type of skin cancer,” Rogers said. “But for eye stuff, it’s across the board.”

As for lenses with full protection, Stout said people still have a pretty wide range of flexibility. Some who spend a significant amount of their time by water often prefer polarized lenses because they reduce glare off of the water. Others, who need precise vision far away like for driving, pick amber ones because they seem to enhance details at a distance. Stout said he usually suggests a lens that is dark grey — the color of the visors pilots use — because it allows a person to see things as they naturally appear.

Low-carb diets may give you the edge against some heart disease risk factors

By Jeannine Stein
Los Angeles Times

The fascination with low-carb versus low-fat diet continues; the latest news comes from a study in the Annals of Internal Medicine that found that people on both diets lost about the same amount of weight over two years. However, the low-carb group had an edge in raising HDL (good) cholesterol and lowering diastolic blood pressure.

The study looked at 153 people who were randomly assigned to a low-carb diet, and 154 to a low-fat diet. The low-carb group limited carbohydrate intake to 20 grams per day for the first 12 weeks, then gradually increased fruits, vegetables, whole grains and dairy foods until they reached a desired weight. The low-fat group kept daily calories to 1,200 to 1,500, and fat to 30 percent of their diet.

Both groups also took part in a two-year behavioral program that focused on how to manage relapses, self-monitoring, and an emphasis on moderate physical activity.

Participants in both groups lost about 11 percent of their beginning weight at six months and a year after the study started,

Every two hours, Jose Vega uses ointment to help his right eye, lined with two rows of stitches, heal from surgery. The cost of the ointment and the operation — his third due to perygiums, or growths caused from excessive UVA light exposure — has put a financial strain on his family of five in Kansas City.

When you buy sunglasses, keep in mind ...

- UV protection: Wear only sunglasses that offer UV 400 — or 99 to 100 percent — protection against UVA and UVB rays.
- Frames: Choose a pair that wraps around your eyes to block light from the sides. Pick one with lenses large enough to cover your eyelids and the skin around your eyes, too, to protect against skin cancer.
- Function: Some people who spend a significant amount of their time by the water often prefer polarized lenses because they reduce glare off of the water. Others, who need precise vision far away, as for driving, pick amber ones because they seem to enhance details at a distance. Lens that are dark gray — the color of the visors pilots use — allow a person to see things as they naturally appear.
- Brand: Don't pick out an expensive designer pair and assume you are paying for the best lenses for your eyes. Often, you're just paying for the frame and good optics, or clarity, in the lenses. Harmful UVA and UVB rays can still pass through to the eyes. Any optometric or ophthalmologic facility and many stores offer sunglasses with full UV protection.
- Lens color: A darker lens does not necessarily mean a more protective lens. Read the UV protection label.

cer, everyone needs the same level of UV protection, regardless of ethnicity or eye color.

“You can look at different ethnic backgrounds and which one has a higher risk for a certain type of skin cancer,” Rogers said. “But for eye stuff, it’s across the board.”

As for lenses with full protection, Stout said people still have a pretty wide range of flexibility. Some who spend a significant amount of their time by water often prefer polarized lenses because they reduce glare off of the water. Others, who need precise vision far away like for driving, pick amber ones because they seem to enhance details at a distance. Stout said he usually suggests a lens that is dark grey — the color of the visors pilots use — because it allows a person to see things as they naturally appear.

UV-what?

- The different kinds of ultraviolet — or UV — light rays:
- UVA: Long wavelength
- Harm the membrane covering the white part of the eye.
 - Can cause a cinguecula, or a thickening of the membrane, and eventually pterygiums, or growths.
- UVB: Shorter wavelength
- Penetrate the cornea, or middle, of the eye.
 - Can cause short-term problems like a keratitis, or sunburn, on the eye.
 - Can lead to a higher risk, and faster onset, for long-term conditions such as cataracts and macular degeneration.
- UVC: Shortest wavelength
- Don't penetrate the atmosphere and aren't a concern.

but gained some of the weight back. After two years, both groups had a 7 percent weight loss.

Although some health issues didn't vary between the groups, others did. The low-carb group had a substantially greater decrease in diastolic blood pressure (the bottom number that measures the heart at rest, in between heartbeats) than did the low-fat group at three and six months. The difference still remained after two years.

The low-carb group also had greater increases in HDL cholesterol than the low-fat group throughout the study. The study authors wrote that although macronutrients could have an effect on HDL levels, the mechanism isn't known and requires further research.

The authors concluded, “These long-term data suggest that a low-carbohydrate approach is a viable option for obesity treatment for obese adults.”

Eye examinations can indicate health problems

By Jane Glenn Haas
The Orange County Register

There's more to a vision test than checking your vision. During a routine exam, eye doctors can detect chronic diseases like diabetes, hypertension and even high cholesterol. And since most people 50-plus wear eyeglasses, optometrists can be the first to discover these physical changes.

“Most of my patients are 60-plus, and I routinely see these problems in their retinas,” says Dr. Roger Phelps, an Ojai, Calif., optometrist and spokesman for VSP Vision Care insurance.

Q: I thought cataracts were the major problem showing up in aging eyes?

A: I send three to four patients a week for cataract surgery. They come in thinking they just need new glasses, and I discover the cataracts. Cataracts may affect vision, but they do not cause permanent damage.

Q: You said most older people need glasses?

A: There is a natural change in the eyes called presbyopia, or “old eyes.” The eyes naturally become weaker with age.

People often get their first pair of reading glasses over-the-counter and then find their eyes continue to get weaker. Glasses do not weaken the eyes. The ability to focus on near objects, presbyopia, is natural.

Q: Does everyone have vision problems with age?

A: You need an annual eye exam. A lot of things show up this way, even brain tumors.

Q: Let's talk about glaucoma.

A: You don't know you have glaucoma, usually. It's a problem of pressure in the eyes and damaging the nerves until you don't see. Baseline readings and other parts of an eye exam often let us catch the problem before the patient loses vision.

Q: Any difference between men and women?

A: Manly men don't wear glasses. One of the biggest issues for men is eyeglass frames. We have some really good frames, not feminine, but often men go for the big, fat double-bar bridge thing. Glasses are a fashion item now for women. That's good for us because women are more likely to have annual exams.

Q: Macular degeneration ... anything new there?

A: Macular degeneration is the leading cause of blindness for people over 70. It used to be there was nothing we could do about it. Now we can send these patients to retinal specialists. I have sent more than a dozen patients to specialists to dry up macular degeneration.

Q: Your release says 60 percent of Americans see an optometrist annually as compared with 21 percent seeing a physician each year. Who pays for this care?

A: Well, almost anyone 65-plus has something to medically watch that shows up in the eyes. And most of them have Medicare. Medicare does not pay for routine exams but will pay for medically necessary eye care.

Q: So the routine exam, unless I have additional coverage, is not paid by Medicare and is often not included in regular employee insurance plans. But you say the out-of-pocket expense is worth it.

A: What an optometrist can see in your retina could be life-saving.

Your produce needs a good washing

Prof. Carl Winter, director of the FoodSafe Program at UC Davis, heard about the new study linking certain kinds of pesticides with an increased risk of attention-deficit/hyperactivity disorder in children, and he became quite concerned. Not so much about the study itself, but the possibility that parents might now be less likely to serve fruits and vegetables to their kids.

“The most important thing consumers can do is eat fruits and vegetables,” he said. “There's not, at this stage, the evidence that this causes ADHD. There seems to be a correlation, but not a cause-and-effect relationship. We need to take these things seriously, but at the same time we don't want to unnecessarily scare consumers into avoiding fruits and vegetables.”

The bigger danger, Winter says, is from bacteria that could cause illness. Contamination can happen anywhere along the food-supply chain, and such illnesses cost the U.S. an estimated $152 billion a year in health-care costs.

That's why it's important for people to wash their fruits and veggies. About.com has rounded up a list of tips from various sources, including the CDC. Here are a few:

- Rinse the produce under running water, but only when you're ready to prepare it. Foods have natural coatings, and washing them off could make them spoil faster.

- Wash hands thoroughly before preparing foods, and keep countertops clean.
- Wash foods even if they have a skin you plan to peel away, like carrots and cucumbers.
- Remove the outer leaves of lettuce and cabbage, then wash the rest.
- Don't bother with the expensive sprays and rinses. They're a waste of money.

“No matter what food you have, you don't know who touched it before you got it, and for that reason you should do what you can to take care of it,” Winter said.

Parents can also reduce their chances of exposure by buying only organic produce.

The study, published in the Journal of the American Academy of Pediatrics, analyzed urine samples from 1,139 children age 8 to 15. Nearly 95 percent of the kids had at least one chemical byproduct (called metabolites) of a class of pesticides called organophosphates in their systems. There are about 40 organophosphates in use in the U.S. One of them, malathion, was used widely in California in the 1980s to eradicate the Mediterranean fruit fly, which posed a controversial problem for then-Gov. Jerry Brown.

Researchers found that kids with the highest levels of malathion metabolite in their urine were associated with a 55 percent higher risk of having ADHD.

About 10 percent of the children in the study pool had the disorder, slightly above the national average.

The study speculates that most of the children got exposure to the pesticides from residue on foods. It notes that a 2008 report showed 28 percent of frozen blueberries, 25 percent of strawberries, and 20 percent of celery contained one type of organophosphate.

IF AUGUST 9 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You seem to have the bull by the horns for the next four weeks where business, career and finances are concerned. Your astute observations may make you seem like you have a crystal ball on your desk. If you are single, a new romantic interest could light up your life, as well. Wait until November to test the waters and find out if this new hookup really has your best interests at heart or is just a passing fancy. Your judgment will be better than usual in November and any opportunities that knock on your door will probably be worth pursuing. Early next May, you will have even better luck with anything you initiate or plan.

ARIES (March 21-April

19): Expect the unexpected. Someone in your inner circle could drop a bombshell that will leave your jaw dragging on the floor. Hold off on major initiatives or decision making until later in the week.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Bad taste is still bad taste no matter what the latest polls tell you. Don't go in for a ridiculous fad just to please your peers. Stick with what you know works and don't let anyone sway your decision.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do your homework. Don't take something as gospel just because that was what you were told. Dig beneath the surface to find the true story. Don't depend on anyone to come through for you with a new project.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Choose a direction. Find the most constructive path to take in your endeavors as aimless meandering could lead you absolutely nowhere. Don't waste your time debating a meaningless and trivial issue.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Too much of a good thing can get old. Just because something made you smile once is no reason to beat it into the ground. Keep things fresh; be a little more lenient and open-minded when dealing with others.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): If you talk the talk, be prepared to walk the walk. Being a chatterbox wastes valuable time and energy. You may encounter a tendency to blow things out of proportion with respect to responsibilities or work.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): As the old saying goes, "If everyone jumped off a building, would you do it, too?" This applies to ridiculous fads. Save time and money by being your own person and leave the latest "thing" to the wannabes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Before you are confident, you had better have something to be confident about. Putting too much faith in your abilities could leave you prone to making a costly and avoidable mistake. Stay alert.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Jumping to conclusions could set you up for a fall. You are quick to make snap judgments regarding situations or people, but intuitions are slightly off. Take time to gather more information before making decisions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Remember that everyone told Columbus that the world was flat. You are champing at the bit to unveil innovative new idea. Take extra time for experimentation and let positive results speak for themselves.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Leave fashion statements to models. In the workplace, make sure that it is all business. Win kudos from higher-ups by showing that you are a professional. A rebel without a cause can get the boot.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You won't get far by trying to be somebody else. Succeed by being you. Role models are fine but you can't copy someone's style entirely. Only shallow people care about outward appearances.

Get In The Habit!
Read the Classifieds Every Day

DEAR ABBY: My widowed father-in-law is 77 and my mom is 71. I try to spend time with them so they won't be lonely. The problem is they now have only one interest — gambling. They are only happy if someone will take them to a casino. A simple dinner or movie is no longer wanted.

I don't mind going once in a while. The closest casino is 90 miles away. But it ends up being an all-day affair, with me gambling money I would prefer not to let go of that way. I have brought books and spent time reading in the car or in restaurants, but that's not quality time, either.

They think that because my husband is successful, I should have no problem with money. Abby, I am careful how I spend money. You can't be in a casino for four hours and not lose a lot of money. Now they're mad at me because I don't want to take them anymore. Mom even wanted to stretch out the trip to an overnigher. Help!

— BETTING I'M RIGHT IN OHIO

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEARBETTING: You are a caring wife and daughter. But it appears your mother and father-in-law are less interested in spending time with you than in spending time in the casino. If they can afford it, that should be their privilege, but you are all adults — and if your concept of a social get-together involves more than sitting in front of a slot machine or repeating, "Deal me in!" then you're right to refuse to be used as transportation. Many seniors visit casinos in groups, using buses to get there and back, and so can your relatives. Don't feel guilty about it.

DEAR ABBY: My darling wife passed away after 38 years of marriage. After she died, her sister and I began talking on the phone as a way to get me through a very difficult time. A year later, I finally asked her to dinner.

We have discovered we have feelings for each other. Do you think there is anything wrong with this, and are we wrong for spending time together?

— CONSOLED IN ALABAMA

DEAR CONSOLED: Not only is there nothing wrong with it, there is a lot right with it. After being in-laws for nearly four decades, you have a wealth of shared history. And that can be the basis of a strong relationship.

DEAR ABBY: On April 6, you printed my letter about having been sent a photocopy of a high school graduation announcement. No picture was included, nor a card — just the photocopy folded into a cheap envelope. (The "real" ones had been sent to more "important" people!) You called me to discuss my letter, and your call made my day.

My mom happened to call me right after I got off the phone, and when I told her my letter was being printed in your column, she informed me that she had actually received a photocopy of a thank-you card that day, from the same person I was talking about in my letter. These people continue to floor me.

Anyway, I hope this is the last "photocopy" story you'll be getting about them. But who knows? There could still be photocopies of wedding invitations and birth announcements in the future.

— EVEN MORE FLABBERGASTED IN THE SOUTH

DEAR EVEN MORE FLABBERGASTED: Indeed there could. Obviously the folks you described in your letter aren't Dear Abby readers. It's lucky you have a sense of humor. With friends like those you need one.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"The quarrel is a very pretty quarrel as it stands; we should only spoil it by trying to explain it."

— Richard Sheridan

If you want to do well at pairs, there are two essential ingredients — skill and luck. This deal, from the Women's Pairs at San Remo last summer, features current world champion Nevena Senior, formerly of Bulgaria, now part of the English ladies' squad that took the world title in Beijing in 2008.

Against three diamonds West led the heart king and continued the suit when East encouraged. East won the trick, cashed a third heart, and switched to the spade 10. That ran to dummy's king. Declarer now drew trumps, West discarding a club on the second round.

From the cards played so far, Nevena Senior thought it likely that West had 5-2-1-5 distribution, so she cashed the spade ace and played a club to dummy's 10. East could win, but was endplayed. East had no spade to lead, a heart would give a ruff-sluff, and a club would give up a trick to North's king.

Very nicely done, but can you see how the defenders might have done better? Had East not encouraged a heart continuation at trick one, West ought to have found a club shift. That would let the defenders take their four top winners, exit with a trump, then sit back and wait for their spade trick. One of the hardest things to do at the bridge table is give up on an apparently successful plan to change it for a better one.

ANSWER: Clubs look like a more promising line of attack than spades. (Partner might have a reasonable club suit and have stayed silent, but not a spade suit.) However, I prefer a heart lead through dummy, the suit that declarer strongly rates to be short in. I'd lead the seven, though some partnerships prefer the six, second from a bad suit.
