Driver goes wrong way on interstate, killing family of 4

Wendell man faces charge of vehicular manslaughter

Times-News

Four lives were lost and a Wendell man potentially faces years behind bars after a fatal wrong-way crash Thursday night on Interstate 84.

Four members of a California family were killed instantly when Eusebio Jacobo Pineda, 45, of Wendell, collided with their vehicle on Interstate 84 near Glenns Ferry.

Pineda was driving east-bound in the westbound lane.

Pineda faces four counts of felony vehicular manslaughter, according to Idaho State Police.

A 2010 Mazda sedan driven by Amado Herrera, 48, of South El Monte, Calif., and carrying family members Luz Herrera, age unknown, Ivett Herrera, 18, and Antoni Herrera, 9, was struck at 8:49 p.m. by a 2001 Ford F150 driven by Pineda, according to an ISP release.

Herrera and his passengers were all wearing seat belts, but were killed upon impact from the head-on crash.

Hearing officer backs two changes in canal companies' license

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

An Idaho Department of Water Resources hearing officer is recommending the agency's director change two restrictions on a water license issued by the director's predecessor.

In 2008, then-director Dave Tuthill granted a license to the Twin Falls and North Side canal companies for their 1977 hydropower permit to withdraw Snake River water at Milner Dam. The plant is operated by the Idaho Power Co. on behalf of the canal companies. But the license came with a couple of catches that the canal companies challenged, prompting an administrative review.

The opinion released in late July by hearing officer and former Idaho Chief Justice Gerald Schroeder didn't touch on one of the issues — whether aquifer recharge rights upriver can impinge on the hydropower right.

But Schroeder decided the IDWR director could not specify an expiration date for the license — listed in the license as when the power plant's federal license to operate expires in 2038.

The director has legal authority to set a time period on a power permit. However, Schroeder wrote, the period should establish a date for review of the license, not expiration of the permit. If the permit expired, he wrote, the canal companies would have to apply for a new permit, forcing them to accept a right with a lower priority than before.

Canal company attorney Shelly Davis said the law also states any time-period limits should be added shortly after a permit is issued. However, the law was written after the permit was issued in 1977.

Pearl Harbor survivor Richard Hansing laid to rest

By Ben Botkin

One by one, the sailors of the Navy honor guard marched down the aisle of the packed funeral home, each stopping to salute Richard "Dick" Hansing.

Hansing was a sailor of a rare sort.

He was one of the veterans who experienced the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941. The 90-year-old sailor was laid to rest Friday in Twin Falls Cemetery, taking with him memories of a historic event more often relayed by history books than by eyewitnesses.

With the passage of time, the ranks of Pearl Harbor attack survivors are rapidly thinning. Once numbering in the tens of thousands, they are a dying breed of old, hardy veterans who still carry memories of Pearl Harbor nearly 70 years later.

They were the first to serve in World War II, enlisting before the U.S. entered the war following the attack. Hansing enlisted in 1939 at the age of 19.

Many survivors of the attack went on to serve through the duration of WWII. And some, like Hansing, answered the call once again and served in the Korean War.

"The good Lord was looking after me," Hansing said in a 2001 interview with the Times-News.

Bellevue man charged with DUI after chase

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — Stephen Kolp, 50, of Bellevue, has been charged with excessive driving under the influence after allegedly driving dangerously and at high rates of speed in Blaine County on Aug. 6.

"The guy was just totally out of control. He was running people off the road, running off the road himself," said Kim Coonis, a Hailey resident who witnessed many of Kolp's alleged actions.

Coonis said she was driving south on Idaho Highway 75 near St. Luke's Wood River Medical Center when Kolp's vehicle appeared at her rear bumper, driving fast and attempting to pass on both sides of her car along the two-lane highway.

Coonis reported the reckless driver to emergency dispatch on her cell phone. Before the deputies arrived, Coonis said, she sped up in an attempt to get away from Kolp, who eventually passed her when the road widened into two lanes. Coonis continued following the driver toward Hailey, relaying his actions to police over the phone until deputies met them near Buttercup Road, which meets the highway between East Fork and Hailey.

"At one point I was doing 85 and he was getting away from me, and I couldn't get any faster (safely)," she said. "He was all over the place. I've never seen anyone that bad before. This guy was a bat out of hell — he was on a mission."

Support for gas pipeline evaporates over agreement with WWP

By Adella Harding and Julie Wootton
Elko Daily Free Press

ELKO, Nev. — A multicounty coalition is demanding that El Paso Corp. back out of an agreement the natural-gas giant struck with two environmental organizations regarding a pipeline proposed to run across four western states.

The company last month promised $20 million in conservation funds for Western Watersheds Project, based in Hailey, and the Oregon Natural Desert Association, in return for their pledge not to block the 680-mile Ruby Pipeline, which would run from Wyoming to Oregon.

But the agreement with Western Watersheds — long known for its attempts to unseat ranchers from grazing on public lands — has stirred emotions along the pipeline's predominantly rural route.

Elko County, Nev., Commissioner Demar Dahl is now the chairman of a coalition of a dozen counties that met in Salt Lake City on Thursday to air their objections to the deal.

One county's already gone one step further. Dahl and fellow Elko County Commissioner Sheri Eklund-Brown said after Thursday's meeting that Lincoln County, Wyo., officials announced they are appealing the U.S. Bureau of Land Management's rights-of-way decision for the pipeline.

According to the Salt Lake

Tribune, Lincoln County Commissioner Kent Connelly said the county will sue the BLM in federal court to block the pipeline, and he invited other counties to join the action.

In effect, a deal struck to preserve the momentum on a project that's now under construction instead threatens to delay or derail the work.

The funds, including $15 million for Western Watersheds over 10 years, will be administered by three-member boards with diverse representatives. The groups won't receive any funds directly.

Western Watersheds Executive Director Jon Marvel said last month that he expects the money to eventually be used to buy grazing permits from willing ranchers and retire them. But during an Aug. 4 Elko County Commission meeting that lasted 2 1/2 hours, Jim Cleary, president of El Paso Western Pipeline Group, said the fund won't be "a treasure trove that's available to Western Watersheds Project" and will not be used to outbid grazing permit licensees who are renewing their permits, among other assurances.

MORNING BRIEFING

Pat's Picks

Three things to do today

Pat Marcantonio

● Help the defending national champion College of Southern Idaho volleyball team by registering for the Golden Eagle 5K run/walk at 7 a.m. The race starts at 8 a.m. at the Eldon Evans Expo Center and costs $25 to enter. All proceeds will go toward team travel and activities.

● Have a yearning for fresh produce, unique crafts or shaved ice? You can satisfy each craving at the Twin Falls Farmers Market, which boasts about 40 vendors weekly. Today is canning day, with specials on canning vegetables and fruits, canning classes, demonstrations and drawings. But that's only the beginning. The market runs from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. each Saturday on North College Road across from the expo center.

● As an animal lover, how can I pass this one up? Animal communicator Robin Rommey will tell you what your pet is thinking during a fundraiser for the Twin Falls Animal Shelter from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. at Wynwood Assisted Living, 1367 Locust St. N., Twin Falls. Readings are $5 (limited to one pet per person) and donations are accepted for the accompanying dog wash.

Water

The information was available 20 years prior, so this wasn't exactly timely," Davis said.

Tuthill also limited the annual volume of water that the canal companies could use — allowing them to divert more than 5,700 cubic feet per second of Snake River water, but only up to 2.39 million acre-feet each year.

If the power plant used 5,700 cfs all year, it would far exceed the volume limit. Schroeder recommended that the annual limit either be removed or increased to match the amount used by the power plant in the late 1990s.

It is not unusual for a water right to have a limiting annual volume. But hydropower rights are slightly different: most power plants use water without removing any from the system, a use dubbed "non-consumptive." The water is still available for downstream users, and a judge in 1999 determined volume limits are unnecessary for hydropower.

The difference for Milner Dam is that no users on the river below are allowed to depend on water above the site.

Twin Falls Canal Co. General Manager Brian Olmstead knows the case has a long way to go. But he said Schroeder's conclusions were a step in the right direction.

"If the water's there, we should be able to use it," Olmstead said.

IDWR Interim Director Gary Spackman will now review the recommendation and write another final order in four to six months.

"Parties can still file exceptions," said Chris Bromley deputy attorney general for water adjudication. "It's still got many lives to go."

Chase

As the pursuit approached Hailey, officers turned off their lights and sirens and slowed, and Kolp's vehicle slowed as well as it came into town.

"The vehicle ended up sideswiping another vehicle at the intersection of Galena and Main, then stopped at the spotlight at Bullion and Main," said Lt. Jay Davis, spokesman for the Blaine County Sheriff's Office. A deputy pulled in front of Kolp's car when it stopped, and reportedly saw him slumped over the wheel. "The individual was highly intoxicated, and attempted to get out of the vehicle. They (deputies) were having problems getting him to get out, he was so intoxicated."

The car was still in gear, and to stop it from moving, deputies pushed Kolp back into the car and reached in to put the vehicle in park before arresting him.

Coonis said at one point, the deputies had their guns drawn, ordering Kolp out of the car. He was arrested at about 8:20 p.m., and was released later that night on bond. No court case number is yet available for the incident, but Davis said Kolp is being charged with excessive DUI and that alcohol is the only drug suspected of being in his system.

"We're happy the citizens took it upon themselves to report the reckless driving and the incident that was taking place, because drunk drivers are very dangerous on the road," Davis said.

Coonis said that, based on what she witnessed, it is amazing that nobody was hurt during the pursuit.

"Something was watching along that road, because he got close (to a crash) many times," she said. "It was a very harrowing 22 minutes."

Hansing

Hansing had finished working the night shift in the ship's engine room when the attack began.

"I had just taken my dungarees off and put on my shorts, white socks and white undershirt when the call to general quarters went out," Hansing said in a 2007 Times-News interview.

Of the nearly 1,500 crew members aboard the battleship, 50 were killed in the attack, during which the Nevada took eight direct bomb hits and a torpedo hit before running aground in a channel.

His younger brother, Dave Hansing, was 11 at the time, and remembers his family waiting three or four days before hearing word that the sailor survived.

Pearl Harbor was only the beginning of war for Richard Hansing. He was transferred to the USS Northampton, which was sunk in 1942. Later, he participated in the Battle of the Philippine Sea in 1944. During the Korean War, he returned to the Navy and worked on returning aircraft carriers into commission.

After the war, Hansing farmed in the Twin Falls area. But he never forgot Pearl Harbor.

In his later years, he was generous in sharing his wartime experiences and spent money from his Social Security check on gasoline to travel to area schools and talk about the war.

Leroy Kohntopp, former president of the now-disbanded local chapter of the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association, knows of just three other south-central Idaho servicemen left besides himself who are Pearl Harbor survivors.

The Magic Valley chapter disbanded in 2005, when it had just 16 members left, down from 47 in the mid-1970s.

"When they came together, they wanted to come together again not to rehash things but to just have pure fellowship as American citizens," Kohntopp said of the association.

He remembers Hansing as a talkative, actively involved member of the chapter who loved telling school classes about his experiences.

Arthur Herriford, president of the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association, said the end of the Magic Valley chapter reflects a nationwide trend. The association is encouraging chapters to merge with others after becoming too small to continue, though there's been little success with that, he said.

"We've had many of our chapters disband because of the diminishment of survivors," he said.

In its earlier days, after starting in the 1950s, the association had between 18,000 and 20,000 members — about a quarter of the roughly 82,000 survivors of the attack.

Now, they number about 3,100 nationwide.

"I'm one of the younger ones," said Herriford, who at 88 is one of the few survivors younger than 90.

Every year, the association has members who make the trip to Pearl Harbor for an anniversary of remembrance. They'll go again this December, but are considering the possibility of not returning again in the future. That decision, Herriford said, will be up to the delegates of the association.

Hansing went in 2006 to Pearl Harbor, knowing it would likely be one of the final gatherings for his generation.

At the cemetery on Friday, a 21-gun salute from members of the Twin Falls Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 2136 honored Hansing. An honor guard of sailors in crisp, white uniforms carried his casket to its final resting place. Dog tags dangled from a rifle stuck in the ground next to boots.

The sailor was home.

Gooding County Fair and Rodeo starts Monday

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

GOODING — The Gooding County Fair and Rodeo may officially start Monday but that doesn't mean the action isn't already under way.

On Thursday, more than a dozen Gooding County 4-H members dressed in their Western best, saddled their horses and worked to impress the judge during the 4-H horse show.

It was the first show for Gooding's Sydney Gough, 9, a 4-H member with The Rookies club.

Two shows in, she was up two blue ribbons, awarded to her for her top finish in her youth class.

"You have to learn a lot and keep a record book," Gough said, who will also show and sell a market lamb in hopes of earning a few dollars.

That's the motivation for Quinton Mitchell's participation in showing and selling a pig at this year's fair. Last year, his second-place pig earned him $700.

"It's mostly the money and it would be great to win like I did last year," Mitchell said.

While many Gooding County kids and families come to the fair as the culmination of an animal project or other effort, the crowds come for the pro rodeo that take place Thursday through Saturday nights.

"We put on two hours of entertainment with a rodeo thrown in," said Fair and Rodeo Manager Don Gill.

Participation in the rodeo has exploded over the past five years; Gill gives credit to the stock contractors for having more than 600 cowboys try to enter. The rodeo caps contestants at 421.

"A lot of rodeos use just one stock contractor but we've stuck with using two. ... Because of the bulls and bucking stock, the cowboys have a lot better odds for winning cash prizes," Gill said.

The stock contractors, Burns Rodeo Company and Korkow Rodeos, are returning for the fifth straight year.

Burns, headquartered in Laramie, Wyo., contracts or subcontracts up to 35 rodeos each year.

Pierre, S.D.-based Korkow's "A Team" stock has been selected by top cowboys to buck at every NFR since the rodeo's inception in 1959.

755-acre fire continues to burn near Fairfield

Times-News

The Deer Park Fire continued to burn Friday in rough terrain that limited firefighting efforts, and nearby areas of the Sawtooth National Forest remain closed to hikers and campers.

The 775-acre fire is burning 13 miles northwest of Fairfield on Forest Service land in the mountains. Forest spokeswoman Julie Thomas said the fire started a week ago, and while its cause remains under investigation, lightning is suspected.

Thomas said this week's cooler temperatures and rain have helped slow the fire's progress.

The blaze was 60 percent contained on Friday, and around 180 firefighters are working on the fire. No fire engines have been used due to the inaccessible terrain, but three helicopters have worked on the fire and air tankers have dropped several retardant loads to keep it from moving south-west.

"We're trying to keep the fire from moving over a certain ridge and entering the Boise River drainage to protect the fisheries there," Thomas said.

The Fairfield Ranger District has closed parts of 12 national forest trails. The public is advised to use caution on area roads due to fire vehicles and fire-related activities. For information on closures, visit www.fs.fed.us/r4/sawtooth.

'Research hunt' for wolves dropped

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Wildlife officials are dropping their proposal for a "research hunt" for gray wolves in the Northern Rockies.

Instead, they are considering proposing a possible "conservation hunt" to trim the predators' population in the name of reducing livestock attacks.

Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks attorney Bob Lane said Friday his agency could not justify carrying out a research hunt aimed at reducing rather than studying wolf populations.

Idaho has also considered a research hunt, but Lane says the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service said it would not condone such a proposal.

“We just want equal rights. We’re tired of being second-class citizens.”
— Amber Fox, 35, who went to Beverly Hills, Calif., in hopes of marrying her partner in their home state

Elanco moves livestock center closer to reality

CHEERS: To Elanco, an animal health company based in Greenfield, Ind., for pledging $1 million over five years to help build the Idaho National Center for Livestock and Environmental Studies in the Magic Valley.

The financial commitment lent momentum to a campaign to raise $5 million from industry to make the dairy research facility a reality.

“This will help us leverage additional donations from the private sector because it shows that significant members of the livestock industry are still serious about this, despite the troubles in our economy,” University of Idaho President Duane Nellis said.

Nellis said the U of I expects to buy property for the center before the end of the year.

Costs are estimated at up to $35 million, with $5 million coming from the dairy industry, $10 million from the U of I and $10 million from the state.

The center still faces a significant obstacles.

The Legislature in 2007 earmarked a $10 million contribution for the livestock center. But faced with plunging revenues this year, both Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter and lawmakers decided the money was needed elsewhere and pulled back the funds, promising to restore them in the future.

Now, the Elanco commitment may serve to move the project off dead center, leaving a clear path toward its eventual completion.

JEERS: To the State Board of Education, for accepting Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna’s proposal to scrap a standardized science test required to graduate from high school in Idaho.

We understand that the test, given to 10th graders, has its drawbacks. But Idaho isn’t doing a good enough job in graduating students proficient in science.

And science is where the jobs with be in the next 30 years.

The Legislature must sign off on the change, but the chairman of the Senate Education Committee sounds skeptical.

“It was a difficult battle when the increased high school gradation requirements were brought to the Legislature,” Sen. John Goedde, a Coeur d’Alene Republican, told The Associated Press. “It’s unfortunate that we’re moving backward.”

Luna’s problem with the standardized test is that science classes vary from district to district and students are only tested twice — in the fifth and seventh grades — before they are tested by the state in the 10th grade.

“When you only test them in fifth and seventh grade, that’s not enough,” Luna said. “We have no way of identifying who needs remediation along the way.”

The board told Luna to develop end-of-course assessments in science that students will have to pass in order to graduate, but in the meantime Idaho is without a definitive measure of aptitude.

A 2006 report from the American Association of Universities found that U.S. students are far less likely to earn undergraduate science or engineering degrees than those in other countries, and that the performance of American students in math and science declines as they reach higher grades and lags “significantly” below those of many other nations.

“This is not just unique to Idaho, although I think it’s more acute in Idaho,” University of Idaho President Duane Nellis said. “It is a real concern, and it’s very revealing and fairly graphic, the decline of students tracking in this area.”

CHEERS: To economic development officials in Burley, Heyburn and Minidoka County, for attracting another solid employer.

Gem State Processing, a new potato dehydration plant that will bring 50 jobs to the area, broke ground this week at the Burley/Heyburn Industrial Park.

“The development will help diversify the local economy and create jobs,” Manning said, adding that most of the new hires will be local residents.

The Mini-Cassia area has had a remarkable run of attracting jobs, even during the worst of the Great Recession — Gossner Cheese, Pacific Ethanol, Hy Line and Dutchman. That’s a tribute to Manning, elected officials and the area’s capable, cost-effective work force.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A right of accused was taken away

The recent suspension of Idaho Criminal Rule 25(a) is an unjustified taking of the right of every person accused of criminal acts to disqualify one judge from presiding over their criminal prosecution.

The Idaho Supreme Court’s failure to properly police this criminal rule when its illegal use by prosecutors Thomas and Loebbs was brought to their attention by Judge Elgee is troubling.

Justice Eismann’s claim that the rule has been misused by the lawyers and citizens of this state so as to justify suspension of the rule is inexcusable.

The Idaho Criminal Rule allowing disqualification of one judge at the discretion of the accused has been a component of the state of Idaho’s attempt to treat its citizens in a fundamentally fair manner since long before Justice Eismann assumed the bench. In my 25 years of practicing law in the criminal courts of southern Idaho, I have seen Idaho Criminal Rule 25(a) used for improper reasons by a lawyer representing an accused once.

Justice Eismann seeks to reduce the expectations of the criminally accused of being treated in a fundamentally fair manner without legitimate justification.

If Justice Eismann was concerned about the misuse of 25(a) by Messrs. Thomas and Loebbs, he was given the opportunity to impose appropriate sanctions against them by Judge Elgee.

Justice Eismann’s attempt to now justify the suspension of this historical right is simply a seizure of the liberties of the people of this state.

Ethanol can go it alone after 30 years of federal subsidies

Corn-based ethanol has been America’s leading bio-fuel for more than 30 years and has blossomed into a thriving business.

American farms and refineries now generate half of all ethanol produced around the globe.

Despite being a mature and profitable industry, corn ethanol producers are lobbying hard to extend perks they have enjoyed for three decades. The debate is heating up on Capitol Hill because the two main subsidies — a tax credit for blending ethanol with gasoline and an import tax on foreign ethanol, particularly Brazilian sugarcane ethanol — expire at the end of the year.

A diverse group of critics — including meat producers, anti-hunger activists, taxpayer advocates, free-market groups and environmental organizations — argue the subsidies are unnecessary and expensive.

These strange bedfellows, who rarely agree on much else, are urging Congress to reform the existing ethanol policies. Defenders of the subsidies counter that the United States would suffer catastrophic job losses without them, domestic bio-fuel production would plummet and America would become more dependent on foreign energy.

To learn what would really happen, Americans have only to turn to leading agricultural economists at Iowa State University, in the heart of corn country. The researchers at Iowa State found consumers would benefit from ending the tax credit and trade protection. Key findings from the study, which was published last month, included:

- Elimination of the subsidies would have practically no short-term impact on U.S. corn and ethanol demand. That’s because Congress already mandates the use of renewable fuels like ethanol, and those requirements will triple from 13 billion gallons today to 36 billion gallons by 2022. As a result, corn ethanol production would continue to increase to 14.5 billion gallons by 2014 even without tax credits or tariffs.

- In a time of soaring budget deficits, $6 billion annually is real money. Ending the ethanol subsidies would save that amount. Yet some Washington politicians want to spend an additional $30 billion for five more years of subsidies to corn ethanol.

- The study estimates that without continued subsidies ethanol producers would lose only about 300 jobs in 2014 — an estimate that’s miles away from the corn lobbyists’ dire warnings of losing up to 160,000 jobs. Spending $6 billion per year to save perhaps 300 jobs is a high price to pay — $20 million per year for each job lost!

- Because of strong demand in Brazil — the world’s second-largest ethanol market — imports are constrained and would rise only modestly to about 740 million gallons in 2014 — less than 5 percent of the total U.S. market.

- Ending the subsidies would reduce ethanol prices by 12 cents per gallon in 2011 and 34 cents per gallon in 2014. Because most gas sold in the United States contains 10 percent ethanol — a limit the Environmental Protection Agency may increase to 15 percent this fall — lower, non-subsidized ethanol prices would lead to modest savings at the pump.

The bottom line is that competition works. The market for corn-based ethanol will still grow. Productive farmers and ethanol refiners will keep their jobs. But Americans also would have access to clean and affordable sugarcane ethanol. American consumers and taxpayers will benefit.

Brazil ended government subsidies for ethanol more than a decade ago and eliminated its ethanol tariff early this year. It is time for America to do the same. As the world’s top producers of ethanol, the United States and Brazil should lead by example in creating a free market for clean, renewable energy.

Consumers win when businesses have to compete in an open market, because competition produces higher quality products at lower costs. The same principle holds true for renewable fuels. Competition will create a race to the future and generate better alternatives for all Americans.

Five myths about America's midterm elections

With Tuesday's elections in Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia and Minnesota over and the internecine feuds that mark primary season finally winding down, voters and pundits can begin turning their attention to this year's real political fight: November's general election, when all 435 House seats, along with 37 Senate seats, will be up for grabs. Midterm elections are a uniquely American ritual and they have, over the years, given rise to their share of homegrown political wisdom. But not all of that wisdom is borne out by recent history.

1. Midterm votes foretell future election results.

Midterm elections are largely determined by short-term factors, including the popularity of the president and the state of the economy. As a result, they rarely indicate anything about longer-term trends, and they have no value in predicting the results of the subsequent presidential and congressional elections. Presidents whose parties have suffered major midterm losses have gone on to win reelection easily two years later. So even if Republicans make major gains in 2010, as is widely expected, it won't tell us anything about what will happen in 2012.

Alan Abramowitz

2. It's an anti-incumbent year.

We hear this almost every time midterm elections come along at a time of widespread voter discontent. But even when voters seem very unhappy, the vast majority of incumbents in both parties are reelected. Despite Congress' low approval ratings this year, only a handful of incumbents have lost their primaries, and there were peculiar reasons for several of those defeats. While a second round of incumbents are likely to lose their seats in November, it is unlikely that more than 10 percent of lawmakers will be ousted. Even in 1974, which was the worst midterm for incumbents in the past 50 years, 87.7 percent of Congress won reelection. Voters are highly selective in voting out incumbents in the general election — even when polls suggest that they are eager to clean house.

3. The president's message is crucial.

In fact, his message has little effect on midterm elections. If voters are unhappy with the president and the economy is bad, even a great communicator such as Ronald Reagan can do little to prevent significant losses by his party. The same is true for presidential advisers. Karl Rove looked like a genius in 2002 because George W. Bush was still enjoying strong public approval in the aftermath of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. Four years later, in 2006, Rove didn't look so smart when voters took out their dissatisfaction with the president and the Iraq war on Republican congressional candidates.

4. It's all about the economy.

Not always. A down economy generally makes the president's party look bad and contributes to significant losses by that party in the midterms. But a poor economy does not automatically mean electoral disaster if voters are concerned about other problems, such as scandals or wars.

In 1966, for instance, the economy was booming, but Democrats suffered big losses in the midterm elections, in part because voters were unhappy with President Lyndon Johnson's handling of the Vietnam War and his response to domestic unrest, and in part because the pendulum was simply swinging back toward the middle after big Democratic gains in 1964. In 2006, the economy was in decent shape, but growing opposition to Bush's conduct of the war in Iraq and high-profile Republican congressional scandals contributed to big GOP losses.

5. Midterms provide mandates.

To the degree that voting results in congressional districts around the country add up to any unified message, it is a judgment on the party in power — and usually a negative one at that. But the winning party, aided by a media that wants to dramatize election results, tends to spin this judgment as a sign of public support for its policy goals.

If they win big in November, Republicans will no doubt argue that they have received a mandate to pursue their agenda — and more important, to block or even try to reverse the president's agenda. Democrats similarly claimed their own mandate when they recaptured Congress in 2006. But such declarations can backfire: After their big win in 1994, congressional Republicans, led by Newt Gingrich, acted as if the president were irrelevant and they were in charge of the government. That gave Clinton an opportunity to portray the Republicans as arrogant and extreme, and it ultimately contributed to his easy reelection in 1996.

Alan Abramowitz, teaches political science at Emory University. Norman Ornstein is resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute. They wrote this commentary for The Washington Post.

Thinking the unthinkable: Downsize defense

As Republicans take their case to the voters in November about the Obama administration's massive overspending and record debt, they should seriously consider what could be a rare bipartisan objective: cutting defense spending.

Defense Secretary Robert Gates — a George W. Bush appointee and an Obama holdover — has announced plans to reduce what he calls the “cumbersome” American military hierarchy. Gates also wants to cut spending by more than one-quarter on support contractors and close the Joint Forces Command in Norfolk, Va., which, according to The Washington Post, “employs about 2,800 military and civilian personnel as well as 3,300 contractors, most of them in southeastern Virginia.” Gates' proposal got the attention of Sen. James Webb, Virginia Democrat and Virginia Gov. Bob McDonnell, a Republican. Closing a national security facility would cost jobs and Virginia, which recently announced a budget surplus and houses the Pentagon and other military venues, doesn't want to regress.

It is one of Washington's major embarrassments that no matter which party controls Congress, members use defense spending to create jobs and do favors for political contributors in their states and districts. But like the bipartisan Base Realignment and Closure process, which operated through Republican and Democratic administrations and resulted in the closing of 350 outdated military bases, a similar approach to cutting unnecessary defense spending might also produce benefits to taxpayers.

The problem has been that the Left too often wants to cut defense for its own anti-war and political agenda and the Right thinks all defense spending is good and to cut it is unpatriotic. So how about starting with the most outrageous and unnecessary spending, which should make harder cuts a little easier?

Citizens Against Government Waste (www.cagw.org) offers some useful places to begin. In the 2010 defense budget, “$3,385,000,000 was added anonymously for four projects. According to the Honest Leadership and Open Government Act of 2007, signed into law on Sept. 14, 2007 by President George W. Bush, members of Congress are required to add their name to each earmark. However, they continue to violate this law by adding anonymous earmarks to fund projects — often big-ticket items — at the expense of taxpayers.” Why can't Congress live under laws it passes to regulate itself?

Another anonymous earmark for $250,000,000 was added, “For advance procurement of components for the two DDG-51 destroyers planned in fiscal year 2011. According to a Sept. 29, 2009 Associated Press article, the DDG-51 destroyer is “to be built in Pascagoula, Miss., home to Republican Sen. Thad Cochran,” ranking member on the Appropriations Committee. “Sens. Roger Wicker, R-Miss.; John Kerry, D-Mass.; (former senator) Paul Kirk, D-Mass., and Rep. Travis Childers, D-Miss., added $8.1 million for a hybrid drive system for the DDG-51 destroyer.”

Spending may be Washington's last bipartisan activity.

Again anonymously, $2.5 billion was earmarked for “10 additional C-17 aircraft. In a floor statement posted on his website, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., joined his opposition to the C-17 funding: ‘what we would do in this bill is effectively fund the purchase of new aircraft that we neither need nor can afford with critical sustenance money. That would have a significant impact on our ability to provide the day-to-day operational funding that our servicemen and women and their families deserve.’”

It will take more than spending reductions to make the Pentagon — and the American economy — healthy again. Ultimately, the political leadership must develop a policy about the proper role of the United States in the world and what weapons are necessary to fight modern wars against terrorists.

President Obama has said (and so have his predecessors) that he doesn't like the pork in defense bills, but he has to sign what Congress sends him. The least he could do is to shame those members who won't attach their names to spending measures, or who support spending for weapons the Pentagon neither wants, nor needs.

Wasting money on the Department of Defense may strengthen the political careers of politicians, but it weakens our defenses.

Repair? No, majority says repeal ObamaCare

The “Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act” was hardly the most popular bill when President Obama signed it into law in March. And its appeal has only declined since then.

When House Speaker Nancy Pelosi and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid muscled the telephone-book-size bill through Congress by the narrowest of partisan margins, most major surveys found only a minority of Americans believed the country would be better off because of its passage. Most Americans weren't buying the official line: that the law would curve health care spending downward and reduce the deficit.

The latest polls show that six out of 10 American voters favor outright repeal of ObamaCare. And who can blame them? Who really believes that over the next 10 years Congress will enhance the solvency of Medicare, create two new entitlement programs, secure an estimated $575 billion in “savings” through Medicare payment cuts, preserve access to Medicare benefits, spend an additional $1 trillion to expand coverage and reduce the deficit? If you do, congratulations — you qualify for membership in the Flat Earth Society.

ObamaCare can be repealed. It was enacted by a narrow partisan majority, with provisions quickly slapped together to meet artificial political deadlines. Lawmakers arrogantly dismissed the legitimate concerns of a majority of their countrymen. The torture of its costly implementation is stretched out over eight years. Americans can tolerate a lot, but that's probably too much.

Robert Moffit is senior fellow in the Center for Health Policy Studies at The Heritage Foundation. He wrote this commentary for McClatchy-Tribune News Service.

Display suggestions for sculpture welcome

My name is Brock Bartlett. My brother Zack and I were the state award recipients for the Paint the State Idaho Meth Project public art competition. The competition involved teens 13 to 18 years of age making public art pieces to express the dangers of methamphetamine and promote the anti-meth slogan, “Not Even Once.”

Every entry carried a powerful message with it. We decided to accept the challenge by creating a three-dimensional sculpture to illustrate the anti-meth message. We appreciated the opportunity to participate in the Idaho Meth Project competition along with many other creative and talented participants.

Our project was forged from 20-gauge cold-rolled sheet steel, custom fitted over a steel rod and rebar skeleton in the form of two outstretched hands reaching skyward. Both hands are wrapped in steel chains anchored into the base rock. The rock itself consists of a synthetic rock cement mixture over a foam-core center. The rock is finished in a concrete stain that mimics natural rock. The rock base is carved to look fractured as though the hands are desperately attempting to break free. The overall weight of the sculpture is approximately 900 pounds. The dimensions are approximately 9 feet tall by 3 feet wide by 4 feet deep. The inscription, “Meth Not Even Once,” is recessed three-quarters of an inch into the face of the rock.

We were inspired to create this sculpture because we knew that it would deliver the message of the instant enslavement that meth will produce upon its first use.

We are seeking suggestions for a permanent display site for the sculpture.

Republican Party was once respectable

With each new crisis popping up daily, I can just imagine what John McCain, who said our economy was strong just before it went down the toilet, and Sarah Palin would be doing now had they been elected. John would be drooling uncontrollably and bumping into walls in a Phoenix nursing home; Sarah would have quit by now and gone back to Wasilla. That's what she does when the pressure's on.

President Obama is doing better than anyone else could in his position, despite having to fight every step of the way against opposition that should be part of the solution.

The Republican Party has done absolutely nothing to help bring the country out of this devastating economic mess.

I'm not against the Republican Party. It was once a respectable part of our government and very likely will be again someday, maybe. It just needs to change its job description from stonewalling at all costs to helping move the country forward.

Butch Otter hired an out-of-state consulting firm to determine why Idaho wasn't taking in enough revenue to repair our roads. Cars and trucks pay millions in highway use taxes but the revenue goes into the general fund and gets wasted on other nonsense like hiring out-of-state consulting firms.

Can't Idaho's transportation and revenue departments solve their own problems? The Idaho Department of Transportation had a good, honest director but she wouldn't give Otter's campaign contributors all the big contracts that he'd promised them, so he fired her. Now his buddies all get those contracts.

The economic recovery has slowed and, while many Idahoans are unemployed and losing their homes, Mike Crapo's new priority is to end presidential power to create national monuments. Hello, Earth to Mike!

We Idahoans deserve better than these two dipsticks!

IDAHO Man beaten to death in fight over tools

MARSING — Owyhee County officials say a 22-year-old Marsing man is charged with second-degree murder for beating another man to death during a fight over some tools.

KTVB-TV reports that Silvestre Gonzalez was arrested early Sunday after a fight that killed 49-year-old Bradley Schlotka, also of Marsing.

Witnesses told investigators that Schlotka threw the first punch and the fight ended with Gonzalez kicking and punching Schlotka in the head as he lay on the ground.

Deputies arrived at about 9 p.m. Saturday and found Schlotka face down in the dirt, still breathing, but with a weak pulse. He died a short time later.

Gonzalez was arraigned Monday and remains jailed on $250,000 bail. A preliminary hearing is scheduled for Aug. 23.

Federal disaster aid approved for northern Idaho farmers

BOISE — The federal government has cleared the way for north-central Idaho farmers to apply for disaster relief for crop damage caused by heavy rains and frost in earlier this year.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture issued a disaster declaration this week for Lewis County. The order also enables farmers in neighboring Clearwater, Idaho and Nez Perce counties to apply for relief.

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack says the order should help hundreds of farmers who suffered damage to dry bean, peas and bluegrass crops between late April and June.

All farmers in the four counties can qualify for low interest emergency loans from the Farm Service Agency. Farmers have eight months to apply for the aid.

ARIZONA Fugitive's female accomplice faces drug charges, linked to white supremacists

FLAGSTAFF — Authorities say the accomplice of an Arizona fugitive was acting as a drug mule for a white supremacy group weeks before she helped him escape from prison.

But Casslyn Mae Welch wasn't charged with narcotics violations until she was tied to the escape of three inmates from the Arizona state prison near Kingman.

Mohave County sheriff's spokeswoman Trish Carter says investigators were performing random checks of vehicles in the prison's parking lot in June when they discovered what was believed to be marijuana and heroin in Welch's vehicle. Welch was visiting her fiance and cousin, John McCluskey, at the time.

Authorities say Welch threw wire cutters over a prison fence, allowing McCluskey and two others to slice their way out on July 31. She and McCluskey remain fugitives.

Pipeline

Cleary said his company didn't expect the "firestorm" of criticism lit by the binding contract, and various Elko County officials laid into El Paso for its actions. Cleary did say his company is "not about breaching (its) contracts."

"You guys went into bed with the worst there is," Commissioner John Ellison said.

At Thursday's meeting, Eklund-Brown said, the various counties agreed that the agreement is precedent-setting and could have longer-lasting impacts than the economic benefits of the pipeline.

"It's opening a Pandora's box for other environmental groups, including WWP, to continually file suit and be rewarded with the expectation of a financial buyout," she said.

The counties also asked El Paso to provide a full copy of the agreement — the company maintains it is private — and reserved the right to reconsider permits granted for the pipeline, based on a review of the agreement.

Dahl said the counties decided "to drive along with our concerns" despite news of another $15 million pending agreement between El Paso and the Public Lands Council, a group representing livestock ranchers across the West.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission on Aug. 2 gave its approval for construction to start on the pipeline. The project is already being challenged by the Sierra Club, which announced on Aug. 6 an appeal of the U.S. Bureau of Land Management's approved rights-of-way.

This report combines several recent Daily Free Press articles.

Accident

Pineda's truck rolled after impact. He was transported by air ambulance to Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise with non-life-threatening injuries. It is unknown whether he was wearing a seat belt, according to ISP.

An arrest warrant was issued for Pineda later in the day, and he was set to be held in the Elmore County Jail following medical clearance. His bond was set at $250,000.

ISP said that alcohol is a contributing factor in the crash, but Pineda's blood-alcohol content level is pending final analysis.

According to online court records, Jacobo Pineda pleaded guilty in Gooding County to driving under the influence in 1994.

Westbound lanes of I-84 were blocked for approximately four hours and traffic was diverted as crews investigated and cleaned the scene. The crash remains under investigation by ISP troopers, who were assisted by Elmore County sheriff's deputies, emergency medical personnel and the Idaho Transportation Department.

Superfund cleanup in Silver Valley draws local opposition

By Nicholas K. Geranios
Associated Press writer

KELLOGG — People who live around a toxic former silver mining complex in Idaho have a message for federal environmental officials who want to expand a lengthy cleanup effort: Go home, your help is no longer wanted.

Despite the government's best intentions, some locals think a prolonged federal presence will scare away businesses by sending a message that the Silver Valley is a dangerous place to live. Residents and politicians in this conservative region also believe it's a waste of taxpayer dollars and that the real intention of the government is to shut down the remaining mines.

"They've got their environmental science degree from some place like Berkeley and they drive their Prius to the back hills of Idaho and here are a bunch of miners and they want to do what they think is best for us," said attorney James McMillan.

The Environmental Protection Agency has spent nearly 20 years cleaning up the Superfund site in Kellogg that was once one of the most-polluted places in the country, with arsenic and lead stripping the hill-sides of vegetation and poisoning the blood of children.

The cleanup efforts have greened the mountains and improved human health, although pollution still exists. Some streams and rivers are so polluted that stretches have no aquatic life, and migrating swans that land on them die.

The EPA wants to expand the cleanup to outlying and aquatic areas — some 300 square miles of the Coeur d'Alene River Basin. The expanded cleanup could take up to 90 years to complete.

While some people support the effort, others say the work should wind down and the EPA should leave.

Two public hearings in the past week drew more than 200 people each, many voicing opposition to the expansion of what is already one of the nation's largest Superfund sites.

The opposition was so heated that EPA has agreed to extend the public comment period beyond Aug. 25 to give people more time to study the plan.

Business leaders worry an expansion will hurt the remaining mines in the area, and Republican Idaho Gov. Butch Otter complained about the long timeframe for the work.

"I will not support an open-ended bureaucratic process that amounts to a blank check for the EPA," Otter said at a meeting Monday.

Environmental groups support the expansion, which would cost an estimated $1.3 billion over the next 50 to 90 years to clean up waterways polluted by mining waste. Lead exposure has been documented in thousands of residents, plus 27 wildlife species.

"It captures the scope and scale of the problem?" said Terry Harris, executive director of the Kootenai Environmental Alliance, of the expansion plan. "We need to get on with the cleanup."

He believes people who call for the EPA to end its work are unrealistic.

"I don't know that the law and science will allow EPA to walk away from what is an enormous problem," Harris said.

Numerous managers and employees of the Lucky Friday Mine, which employs 350 people in the area and is looking to expand, used the public meetings to express concern about their jobs.

They are worried the EPA's real intention is to kill the remaining mines.

Dan Opalski, head of Superfund work for the EPA regional office in Seattle, disputes that allegation.

"We can be supportive of responsible mining," Opalski said. "We understand that part of our cleanup being successful is for the valley itself to have a level of economic health?"

Opalski defended the work done so far, pointing to the dramatic reduction in the blood lead levels of children, which at one time was among the highest recorded in the nation. Lead interferes with the nervous system and can lead to learning disorders.

The new work would add 425 jobs to an existing EPA work force of 200 in one of Idaho's most depressed regions, the EPA has said.

The new plan targets old mine sites and waste rock piles, which leach lead, arsenic, cadmium and other heavy metals downstream. Frequent flooding spreads the metals and people who use the shoreline for recreation can be exposed, EPA said.

The plan's length and price tag reflect what is required to make the area healthy for people and wildlife, Opalski said.

The old Bunker Hill Mining Co. mined and smelted lead and silver here for decades, ignoring its own findings that it was poisoning its work force and their families.

In a sluggish economic summer, no easy fix

Fed has limited options available to boost economy

By Jeannine Aversa
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve has little power left to lift the economy out of its rut. Congress, with an election looming, has no appetite for more stimulus. Shoppers are reluctant to spend, and businesses are slow to hire.

Let's face it: There is no easy or imminent fix for the flagging recovery.

The sluggish economic summer wore on Friday with news that Americans spent less at most retail stores in July. Earlier this month came word that the trade deficit is ballooning and companies are not adding jobs fast enough to bring down unemployment.

Typically, the Fed can lower interest rates to encourage Americans to borrow money and spend it, invigorating the economy. But the benchmark interest rate controlled by the Fed has been almost zero for more than a year now.

The Fed this week took a new step by announcing it would use the proceeds from its huge portfolio of mortgage securities to buy government debt. The idea is to make cheap credit a little cheaper, particularly for things like mortgages.

Brothers expand with Buhl Drug

Photos by BLAIR KOCH/For the Times-News

The automated drug-dispensing machine, the Parata Max, like the one pictured here and used at the Twin Falls' Dick's Pharmacy, will be used at Buhl Drug. The pharmacy will be the fifth owned and operated by the Fuchs brothers of Twin Falls. The new technology is typically used in much larger markets but the Fuchs expect the Buhl store to grow and say the machine and moving to the community are worthy investments.

Store will feature cutting-edge pill dispensing technology

BUHL — Buhl customers of Dick's Pharmacy in Twin Falls won't have to make the drive to pick up their prescriptions much longer.

In September, the owners of the pharmacy are opening Buhl Drug, to be located in the former and currently vacant Movie Gallery building at 419 South Broadway Avenue.

The store will be the fifth pharmacy owned by brothers Daniel Fuchs, Ken Fuchs and Doug Fuchs, all of Twin Falls and all licensed pharmacists. The three own a pharmacy in Burley and four pharmacies in Twin Falls.

They say the Buhl store, by far the largest at about 3,500 square feet, will be their flagship store.

"We really think it will be one that Buhl will enjoy and be proud of," said Doug Fuchs. "We plan on offering a complete line of over the counter medication, some (durable medical equipment) and other health supplies."

The store's opening dovetails with the closing of Sav Mor Drug, which was recently purchased by Ridley's Family Markets. It's full circle for the Fuchs, who were partners in the Sav Mor, with Pharmacist Kent Alexander, a decade ago.

Alexander will work part-time in Buhl Drug and says he's looking forward to seeing some familiar faces.

"A lot of our customers are Buhl customers and former customers of ours," said Alexander.

Many Buhl residents haven't forgotten another face they'll see at Buhl Drug: John Crawford, who owned and operated Sav Mor from 1955 to 1994.

At 81-years-old, Crawford didn't keep his license in retirement but said he'll be in the store often.

Auto sales boost otherwise weak retail sector

By Martin Crutsinger and Christopher S. Rugaber
Associated Press writers

WASHINGTON — Americans spent less at most retail stores in July and inflation remained tame as high unemployment and weak job growth fueled fears of a slowing economic recovery.

A busy month for car dealerships and higher gas prices was enough to lift overall retail sales 0.4 percent last month, the Commerce Department said Friday. It was the first overall gain in three months.

Still, most retailers reported declines. Excluding autos and gasoline sales — which accounted for one-fourth of the July figures — retail sales fell 0.1 percent last month. Sales were down 1 percent at department stores and also dropped at specialty clothing stores, furniture stores, hardware stores and appliance stores.

"While retailers have seen a solid gain in activity compared to last year, the more recent three month trend has been negative and that is not good news," said Joel Naroff, president of Naroff Economic Advisors.

The Consumer Price Index rose 0.3 percent in July, the Labor Department said. But that was mostly because of rising gas prices. After stripping out volatile food and gas prices, the so-called "core" index increased 0.1 percent. Over the past year, consumer prices rose 1.2 percent — the slowest pace in 44 years.

The Commerce Department also reported that inventories held by businesses rose for a sixth straight month in June. But inventory sales declined for a second month in a row, another sign of weak demand among consumers.

Auto sales represent such a large portion of monthly data and gas sales change rapidly from month to month. So economists prefer to look at the retail sector without those two categories. And retail sales figures are not adjusted for price changes.

JetBlue memo questions flight attendant's motive

By Samantha Bomkamp
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — A rogue JetBlue flight attendant's explanation that an uncooperative passenger caused him to lose his mind and slide down a parked plane's emergency chute may not hold water, the airline says in an internal memo.

And even if it's true, a bad day at work is no excuse for flight attendant Steven Slater's behavior, JetBlue says in the memo obtained Friday by The Associated Press.

Slater went onto the public address system

Slater

Monday on a plane at New York's Kennedy Airport after a JetBlue flight from Pittsburgh, cursed out a passenger he said had treated him rudely, and then slid off the plane.

He was arrested, charged with criminal mischief, reckless endangerment and trespassing, and released on bail. Slater's attorney says a passenger's "lack of civility" prompted his behavior.

Slater has been hailed as a working-class hero on social networking sites for the ultimate take-this-job-and-shove-it moment.

Florida shoppers take advantage of back-to-school sales tax holiday

By Annie Greenberg
Associated Press writer

SUNRISE, Fla. — Francesca Tillem took the day off from work Friday to shop during Florida's back-to-school sales tax holiday, pushing a huge shopping cart alongside her two daughters.

"I'm getting everything today. I got here at 10 a.m. and will stay here until they close," Tillem, 45, said while at Sawgrass Mills Mall in Sunrise.

"I have to get polos for their school uniforms, sneakers, shoes, underwear, everything," she said of her shopping experience with her children, who will be starting the sixth and eighth grades.

The tax break, which started at 12:01 a.m. Friday and runs through midnight Sunday, lifts sales tax on certain school supplies priced less than $10 and certain books, clothing, footwear and accessories less than $50. This weekend is the first back-to-school tax holiday since 2007.

Stores across the state are expecting heavy traffic from shoppers looking to save.

Christine Bergman, a 40-year-old mother of two, said she and her kids were window shopping on Thursday so they can beat the crowds when they buy their merchandise tax-free on Friday. She

The problem there: Americans who are worried about their jobs, not to mention volatility in the stock market, don't want to borrow. They saved 6.2 percent of their disposable income this spring. Before the recession, it was more like 1.2 percent.

"You can't force people to take out a loan or spend money that they don't want to spend," says Alice Rivlin, who served as the Fed's No. 2 official in the late 1990s.

Sure, the Fed still has options. It could launch another trillion-plus-dollar program to buy government debt or mortgage securities like it did when it was battling the recession and financial crisis.

But the Fed is unlikely to commit that much money unless things get a lot worse. Plus there are risks. Regulators don't want to push interest rates on mortgages so low that they encourage speculative buying, like the kind that inflated the housing bubble.

Or the Fed could cut to zero the rate it pays banks to keep money parked there, a move aimed at getting banks to lend more. But banks are not exactly feeling free with their cash, either.

"It's a pervasive level of uncertainty that people and businesses feel about their economic futures," says Ken Mayland, president of ClearView Economics. "It's frozen them into inactivity."

Congress has the power to regulate the economy by adjusting tax rates and passing stimulus programs — the side of the equation known as fiscal policy, as opposed to the Fed's monetary policy.

But there is little interest on Capitol Hill to undertake a major new stimulus effort. The midterm elections are less than three months away, and Republicans and Democrats alike fear voters are worried about the federal budget's $1.4 trillion — and rising — deficit.

A scholar of the Great Depression, Fed chief Ben Bernanke has warned Washington policymakers not to repeat mistakes made during the Great Depression by pulling in government stimulus too quickly.

Bernanke also suggested recently that extending the Bush tax cuts, at least for a while, would be "one way" to "maintain a reasonable degree of fiscal support — stimulus — for the economy."

But Democrats and Republicans are divided on what to do. Most Republicans want to make permanent the tax cuts enacted under President George W. Bush in 2001 and 2003. That would amount to nearly $3 trillion over the next decade. Democratic leaders want the cuts for the wealthiest Americans to expire.

That leaves the work of jump-starting the economy for the time being to everyday Americans and businesses, who can spend money and accelerate the cycle of growth. But both are in a frugal mood.

Mortgage rates have sunk to record lows: Rates on 15-year mortgages dropped to 3.92 percent this week, 30-year mortgages to 4.44 percent. Still, people aren't scrambling to buy homes or refinance the ones they already have.

Businesses, meanwhile, are sitting on a record $1.84 trillion pile of cash, according to the Fed.

They aren't using the money to expand operations or hire new workers because they, too, have doubts about the strength of the economic recovery.

The economy grew at a 2.4 percent pace in the second quarter, about half as fast as it was growing late last year. And it may turn out, as the manufacturing sector is hurt by declining exports, that growth right now is even slower than we think.

person than John," said Doug Fuchs. "We've been thinking of coming to Buhl for many years and it was John that got us to move over now."

They say the recent closing of Movie Gallery gave them a great building with ample parking, something that isn't available at many vacant storefronts in Buhl.

"We looked at the old Pioneer Floors building downtown but it came down to parking. There may be enough parking now but we worried that once the building next door was filled that it would be a problem," Fuchs said. "This building is in great shape and we won't have to do much to get the pharmacy ready to open."

They will, however, have to have the building inspected to receive licensure by the state pharmaceutical board and the federal Drug Enforcement Administration.

"There are specific things we have to have, a restroom for employees, certain books, scales and measuring tools, a counseling area for patients and things like that," Fuchs said.

One of the biggest investments in Buhl Drug is the purchase of Parata Max; an automated pill dispensing machine costing several hundred thousand dollars.

The machine is capable of filling a prescription in under 20 seconds, including labeling and capping the bottle.

"Every prescription is double counted but the machine adds that extra layer of quality control," said Dan Fuchs.

The machine holds over 200 of the most popular pill-form prescriptions, like diabetes and pain management medications.

It has two central processing units, a cooling system and is cutting-edge technology, said Pharmacy Technician Dan Adolf, who works at Dick's Pharmacy, in Twin Falls, which was opened by the Fuchs brothers' father decades ago.

"It basically does half of our work for us, in the fact that having the machine allows us to fill that many more prescriptions a day. It typically fills 350 to 500 prescriptions a day," Adolf said. "But it helps with other efficiencies as well, including inventory management. The capabilities are huge and smaller markets like Buhl typically wouldn't have a machine like this. In fact, because they are so new, the machines are only in a few cities across the country."

weekend, but I'm still happy to have something," she said.

Bergman, who teaches 7th grade at a school in Miami, said she and other teachers were more lenient on required school supplies during the years where there were no tax breaks.

"Teachers backed off, we didn't push the kids to have as many supplies," she said. "We were very sensitive to people losing their jobs."

Rick McAllister, president and CEO of the Florida Retail Federation, said people have been known to come down to the Panhandle from Georgia and Alabama to take advantage of the tax breaks.

The popular measure failed to pass in the state Senate the last two years because of tight budgets. McAllister said this year, the trade group emphasized to the Legislature how the sales tax holiday actually boosts revenue for the state.

He explained that since people are already out shopping for back to school, they end up buying other things that aren't tax-exempt.

At a news conference Thursday, he said instead that Slater was upset because he suffered a gash on the head while trying to help a passenger with a bag and was further angered by a passenger who insulted him at the end of the flight.

Maruster also sought to assure employees that if Slater's lawyer's account of the flight attendant's injury was true, JetBlue would take action.

Allen: Relief well required despite plugging success

By Bettina Boxall
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Although BP's Gulf well appears to be plugged from the top and bottom, the federal spill commander said Friday that government and company officials have agreed a relief well should be completed to ensure a permanent seal.

Retired Coast Guard Adm. Thad Allen on Thursday raised the possibility that last week's "static kill" operation, in which the well's inner casing was jammed with cement, might have made that final step unnecessary. A four-hour pressure test was conducted to figure out whether oil was still flowing freely from its deep reservoir into the outer ring of the well bore.

The readings indicated the flow had indeed been blocked by last week's cementing. "We have sealed the well at this point," Allen said Friday.

But engineers can't tell whether that bottom plug of the outer ring, called the annulus, is good and solid, or thin and flimsy.

So they are not yet declaring victory over a well that created one of the world's largest oil spills, shut down a third of the Gulf to fishing and wiped out much of the region's summer tourist season.

"Everybody is in agreement we need to proceed with the relief well. The question is how to do that," Allen said after consulting with the head of BP, as well as the secretaries of energy and the interior.

Paradoxically, the success of the static kill has complicated the final phase of the relief well maneuver. "We probably did too good a job," Allen said.

Not only did the static kill stuff the well's casing with dense mud and cement, it seems to have forced cement down into the oil reservoir and back up into the base of the annulus. That has trapped what BP estimates to be 1,000 barrels of oil between the bottom and the top cap.

Scientists are worried that when the relief well pours more mud and cement into the bottom to thoroughly seal it, the increased pressure could force the trapped oil upward, perhaps damaging the capping apparatus, or downward, breaking the bottom seal.

OBAMA, FAMILY TO MAKE TRIP TO GULF

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama is heeding his own advice to American vacationers, taking his family to the Gulf Coast this weekend to help the sagging tourism industry.

The president will arrive Saturday and spend just over 24 hours in the Panama City, Fla., area, a quick jaunt in contrast to the family's upcoming 10-day vacation to Martha's Vineyard, known as a destination for the wealthy and privileged.

White House officials dismiss questions about the length of the family's stay, saying that has no relation to the president's commitment to the region's recovery.

"The president is deeply committed to the folks in the Gulf region," said White House spokesman Bill Burton. He said Obama wants to ensure the people of the Gulf Coast are "made whole again after what was a terrible catastrophe."

Obama's been promoting the idea of Gulf travel as a way for Americans to help the region's recovery. The White House says the Obamas and daughter Sasha (her sister Malia's at summer camp) plan to spend much of their time in the Gulf enjoying the area's recreational activities.

The president and first lady Michelle Obama also will meet with small business owners to discuss the recovery efforts. They'll be joined by Navy Secretary Ray Mabus, a former governor of Mississippi chosen by Obama to develop a long-term Gulf Coast restoration plan.

More immigrants getting driver's licenses

Washington, N.M. and Utah don't require proof of citizenship

By Tim Korte and Manuel Valdes
Associated Press writers

BURIEN, Wash. — Carlos Hernandez packed up his family and left Arizona after the state passed its sweeping immigration crackdown. The illegal immigrant's new home outside Seattle offered something Arizona could not: a driver's license.

Three states — Washington, New Mexico and Utah — allow illegal immigrants to get licenses because their laws do not require proof of citizenship or legal residency. An Associated Press analysis found that those states have seen a surge in immigrants seeking IDs in recent months, a trend experts attribute to crackdowns on illegal immigration in Arizona and elsewhere.

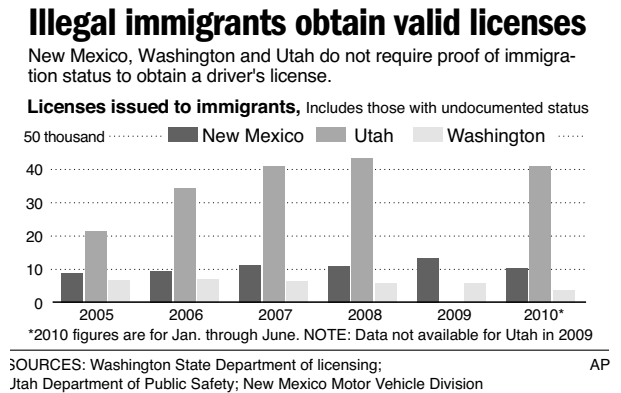

"It's difficult being undocumented and not having an identification," said Hernandez, of Puebla, Mexico. "You can use the Mexican ID, but people look down on it." An American driver's license is also a requirement for many jobs.

The immigration debate has thrown a spotlight on the license programs, which supporters say make financial sense because unlicensed drivers typically do not carry car insurance. Opponents insist the laws attract illegal immigrants and criminals.

"Washington state and New Mexico have been magnet states for the fraudulent document brokers, human traffickers and alien smugglers for years," said Brian Zimmer, president of the Coalition for a Secure Driver's License, a nonprofit research group in Washington, D.C.

State officials in New Mexico dispute that claim.

He said there is mounting evidence that the spike in license applications is a result of pressure on immigrants in states such as Arizona and Oklahoma, where police have been authorized to help enforce federal immigration laws.

Republican lawmakers in New Mexico and Washington state have pushed to tighten the laws in recent years, only to be thwarted by Democrats. The issue is less heated in Utah, where illegal immigrant licenses carry only driving privileges. People cannot use the IDs to board a plane, get a job or buy alcohol, for example.

Candidates in New Mexico's governor's race have made the licenses a campaign theme, with the Republican saying she would revoke IDs granted to illegal and legal immigrants since the state enacted the law in 2003. The Democratic candidate opposes illegal immigrant licenses but prefers a softer approach.

The AP analysis of data in the three states revealed some striking numbers: The rate of licenses issued to immigrants during the 10 weeks that followed approval of the Arizona law reflected a 60 percent increase over the annual average for last year.

By comparison, the rate of licenses issued to non-immigrants during the same period increased only modestly.

Among the other findings:

- New Mexico issued 10,257 licenses to immigrants through the first six months of 2010, compared with 13,481 for all of 2009. The pace has intensified since April, when neighboring Arizona passed its immigration law. The figures include both illegal immigrants and legal residents from outside the U.S.
- New Mexico issued about 417 licenses a week to immigrants from the day after Arizona passed its law through July 1. That is a big jump from the 323 per week it was issuing from Jan. 1 to the day before the law passed.
- Utah handed out 41,000 illegal immigrant licenses for 2010 through June 7, compared with 43,429 for all of 2008.
- Washington granted 3,200 licenses to people from outside the U.S. through June, exceeding the pace of 5,992 for all of 2009.

Accused serial stabber is from Israel, had roots in north Virginia

By Maria Glod and Caitlin Gibson
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The man arrested Wednesday and accused of being the "Flint serial killer" is a Christian from Israel who tried unsuccessfully to put down roots in Northern Virginia and once worked with troubled children at a Leesburg, Va. mental health facility, according to friends and court records.

Elias Abuelazam, 33, married twice and tried to settle down in the region, first in Fairfax County and then in Leesburg. Both marriages ended in divorce, and after the last one in 2007, Abuelazam's life became more nomadic. He bounced between Loudoun County, Michigan, Florida and Israel, the friends and court records say.

Nothing in Abuelazam's past could have predicted what authorities say he has done since May, the friends said. Over the past 11 weeks, Abuelazam began randomly stabbing and attacking men — most of them black — in Michigan, Virginia and Ohio, police say.

About 10 p.m. Wednesday, U.S. Customs and Border Protection agents paged him over a loudspeaker at Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta International Airport, where he was about to board Delta Flight 152 for Tel Aviv.

Abuelazam was being held Thursday in Georgia, awaiting extradition to Michigan to face charges in one of the stabbings.

Police in Michigan said Thursday they think he fatally stabbed five men in the Flint area and slashed nine others. Leesburg police said he stabbed two men there and attacked a third with a hammer last week. He is also suspected of stabbing a man Saturday outside a Toledo church. Sixteen of the victims were black; one was a dark-skinned Hispanic man; and one was white.

"There's no understanding why he would have done such a thing," said Virginia Scott-Bey Kage, whose 15-year-old son, Anthony, was stabbed Aug. 3 as he jogged in Leesburg.

Leesburg Police Chief Joseph R. Price said Thursday that he was confident that the attacks were racially motivated. "My belief is he selected the victims in Leesburg based on the color of their skin," Price said.

That doesn't jibe with the way friends and family remember Abuelazam. "I just can't see him doing this," said Paul Lozinsky, 39, who worked with Abuelazam at the Piedmont Behavioral Health Center, now called North Spring Behavioral Healthcare, in Leesburg in the early 2000s. "I can't believe he's the type of guy who would do this. He was a nice guy to me. We got along together."

But Lozinsky and others said that although they found Abuelazam friendly, they weren't really friends. His private life was a mystery. Even Lozinsky's brother Daniel, whom Abuelazam asked to testify at his first divorce proceeding, said they didn't socialize outside work and had not kept in touch.

Russia: Iran's nuclear plant to start next week

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia's nuclear agency said Friday that it will load fuel into Iran's first nuclear power plant next week, moving ahead with launching the facility despite Iran's stubborn defiance of international demand to halt uranium enrichment.

Rosatom spokesman Sergei Novikov said that uranium fuel shipped by Russia will be loaded into the Bushehr reactor on Aug. 21, beginning the startup process.

"From that moment the Bushehr plant will be officially considered a nuclear-energy installation," he told The Associated Press.

The United States has called for Russia to delay the startup until Iran proves that it's not developing nuclear weapons. Russian officials said that the latest U.N. sanctions against Iran won't affect the Bushehr project.

3 troops killed in Afghanistan; U.S. nabs militants

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Three international coalition service members were killed in the south of Afghanistan, while U.S. and Afghan forces stepped up operations in the east against a Taliban faction linked to al-Qaida, arresting several key militants, military officials said Friday.

Britain's Ministry of Defense said one British soldier was killed Friday by small-arms fire in the Sangin district of Helmand province. Another serviceman who was injured Tuesday in an incident involving a helicopter at a patrol base in the Nahri Sarraj district of Helmand died Thursday at a hospital in Britain, it said.

NATO also reported the death of a third coalition service member after an insurgent attack Friday in southern Afghanistan. NATO did not disclose the nationality of the service member or details about the death.

In the east, NATO said a raid on Thursday in the Manduzai district of Khost province led to the capture of a deputy commander of the Haqqani group who had been supplying weapons to other members of the network. The commander was not identified but NATO said he was among "several" Haqqani group members rounded up in the raid.

Another Haqqani weapons supplier, who also was not named, was picked up Wednesday in Pakiya province, NATO said in a statement.

Rain refreshes Moscow, but wildfires still burning

By Vladimir Isachenkov
Associated Press writer

MOSCOW — Heavy downpours cooled the Russian capital after weeks of no rain and unprecedented heat, but dozens of wildfires still raged around Moscow on Friday and a new blaze was spotted near the country's top nuclear research center.

The city remains largely free of the clouds of suffocating smog that affected it earlier, but meteorologists say smoke from burning forests and peat bogs may choke the city over the weekend if the wind direction changes.

The Emergency Situations Ministry said its teams have managed to reduce the area covered by wildfires, but more than 500 are continuing to burn across the country, including 29 around Moscow. It said about 14,000 firefighters are battling blazes around the Russian capital.

Russia was receiving help from the United States, which on Friday began deliveries of firefighting equipment valued at $2.5 million (0x1282 million), the U.S. Embassy said. The state of California also has contributed fire-protective clothing.

A new wildfire also started east of the nuclear research facility in Sarov, 300 miles (480 kilometers) east of Moscow. The blaze spread quickly, prompting firefighters in the region to call in reinforcements from neighboring areas, according to the region's emergency headquarters.

A volunteer firefighter from Moscow, Russia, who refused to be identified, tries to extinguish a forest fire that came close to a village about 46 miles east of Moscow early Friday.

Earlier this month, massive wildfires around Sarov, the birthplace of Soviet nuclear weapons, prompted the state nuclear agency to move all explosive and radioactive material as a precaution.

Reinforcements, including aircraft and robots, helped stem the blazes.

Sergei Novikov, a spokesman for the Rosatom state atomic corporation, said that the radioactive and explosive materials were moved back to Sarov after the fire situation had stabilized, and there was no immediate need to move them out again.

“There is no threat now to the state nuclear center,” he told The Associated Press.

Another potential danger comes from wildfires in areas contaminated by the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear disaster, which could raise radioactive particles into the air and spread them over broader territory. The authorities have insisted that all wildfires in the Chernobyl-affected regions have been quickly dealt with and radiation levels have remained normal.

The national weather service on Friday said it had dispatched a team of radiation experts to constantly monitor the radiation level in the western Bryansk region, the area of Russia that suffered most from the Chernobyl catastrophe in Soviet Ukraine.

Emergency Situations Minister Sergei Shoigu took aim at reports of fires in the Bryansk region, which he said had alarmed Europeans.

“I am speaking officially: There is not a single wildfire in the Bryansk region,” Shoigu said during a televised meeting with his subordinates. He said some small fires had broken out but all were extinguished within two hours.

8 Detroit firefighters hurt battling blaze

DETROIT (AP) — A burning two-story building partially collapsed on Friday, injuring eight firefighters who responded to the blaze on Detroit's east side, police said.

Clouds of dark smoke shrouded the scene mid-morning but then weakened into a lighter white fog as crews poured water on top of the building, which housed a phone business, beauty salon and liquor store.

“It's real dramatic,” said

Walter Young, 62, a passer-by. Officer N. Gray said five firefighters were trapped before being rescued. At least one firefighter was in critical condition.

“This is really quite shocking. It's a punch to the gut,” said Joshua Elling, director of a neighborhood business association.

The building is about five miles from downtown Detroit and just west of the suburb of Grosse Pointe Park.

Man accused of shoving woman into NYC subway train

NEW YORK (AP) — A man abruptly pushed a woman into the side of a moving New York City subway train, then told bystanders he couldn't explain his behavior, authorities said. The woman was hit but survived.

Jose Rojas, 25, was held without bail after his arraignment Thursday on attempted murder and assault charges, while victim Ute Linhart was hospitalized with broken ribs, a crushed sinus cavity and other injuries.

Rojas menaced another man on a Manhattan subway platform Wednesday night before walking up to Linhart, according to a court complaint.

Then she was suddenly shoved forcefully into a northbound R train rushing into the 28th Street station, the complaint said. The impact hurled her back toward the platform.

“As the impact happened, I'm thinking, ‘I'm going to be dead,’” Linhart, 39, told the New York Post. “Then I realized that I was in so much pain, I couldn't possibly be dead.” Bystanders stopped Rojas from running away, and he told them: “I don't know why I pushed her,” the court complaint said.

Linhart, the creative director of a company that designs T-shirts and other merchandise for musicians, told the Post she'll never take the subway again.

Rojas is due back in court Tuesday. If convicted, he could face up to 25 years in prison.

Calif. says Bell got $3 million in illegal taxes

BELL, Calif. (AP) — The tiny blue-collar city that granted huge salaries to its top officials may have to repay nearly $3 million in illegal property taxes, a state official said Friday.

An audit showed that the Los Angeles suburb exceeded a state cap when it raised its property tax rate in 2007 to pay for pension obligations, California Controller John Chiang said.

Chiang sent a letter Friday to the Los Angeles County auditor-controller, instructing the agency to reduce the tax rate. The drop would mean a $250-a-year reduction on the tax bill for a $275,000 home, Chiang's office said.

The county apportions the property taxes collected by local governments.

“These unlawful taxes must stop immediately,” Chiang said in a statement. “Homeowners and property owners should not pay the price for this poor fiscal management.”

A call to the auditor-controller's office seeking comment was not immediately returned.

Bell's interim chief administrative officer, Pedro

Carrillo, said he would submit a resolution on Monday asking the City Council to immediately reduce the property tax rate to the lawful limit. Carrillo said he had not determined the financial impact on the city yet and it was unclear whether the overcharge would be returned to property owners. It might go into a state education fund.

The city will comply with “what the law requires us to do,” he said. “We're trying to figure out if the excess will be returned.”

The Los Angeles Times reported last month that Bell had the second-highest property tax rate in the county.

The audit was prompted by revelations that the city of about 40,000 — which is one of the poorest communities in the county — was paying its chief administrative officer more than $1.5 million a year in salary and benefits. In addition, the police chief made more than his counterpart in Los Angeles, and the mayor and three City Council members were earning about $100,000 a year for part-time work.

Judge doubts gay marriage ban's backers can appeal

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The federal judge who overturned California's same-sex marriage ban has more bad news for the measure's backers: He doubts they have the right challenge his ruling that gay couples can begin marrying next week.

Chief U.S. District Judge Vaughn R. Walker on Thursday rejected a request to delay his decision on Proposition 8 from taking effect until high courts can take up an appeal lodged by its supporters. One of the reasons, the judge said, is he's not sure the proponents have the authority to appeal since they would not be affected by or responsible for implementing his ruling.

By contrast, same-sex couples are being denied their constitutional rights every day they are prohibited from marrying, Walker said. The ban's backers “point to harm resulting from a ‘cloud of uncertainty’ surrounding the validity of marriages performed after judgment is entered but before proponents' appeal is resolved,” he said. “Proponents have not, however, argued that any of them seek to wed a same-sex spouse.”

Walker gave opponents of same-sex marriage until Aug. 18 at 5 p.m. to get a ruling from the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on whether gay marriages should start before the court considers their broader appeal. Their lawyers filed a request asking the 9th Circuit to intervene and block the weddings on an emergency basis late Thursday.

Jerome priest celebrates
50 years of ministry

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

Andrew Baumgartner knows about service. It’s something he’s been doing for half a century, something that has helped shape his life and made him the person he is today.

Baumgartner, or Father Andrew, as he is best known, is a priest at the Monastery of the Ascension in Jerome. He recently celebrated 50 years of ministry.

The path of his life’s work was laid out before him in Genesee, Idaho, where he was raised. During his grade-school years, Benedictine sisters encouraged him to pursue the priesthood.

“Every boy was a good boy and had a future vocation in the priesthood,” the 76-year-old Benedictine priest said about the philosophy of the church at the time. Things have changed since then. “Now the church wants you to go to college and be exposed to the world.”

He went to boarding school in western Oregon in 1948, and joined Mount Abbey in 1954. Six years later, on May 26, 1960, he was ordained a priest.

In 1979 he was sent to Idaho to help work on the monastery in Jerome, and in the early ‘80s returned to the monastery, where he’s lived ever since.

It’s a quiet life, but a busy one. The monastery’s mission statement is “Hospitality,” and people throughout the year often visit the facility for their own spiritual retreats, sometimes receiving counsel from the priests, he says.

Besides ministering to others, including his fellow monks — seven priests and four non-ordained brethren — his responsibilities include office manager, where he oversees the facility’s financial matters. He said the monastery is supported through donations and farm products grown on its nearly 400-acre spread.

Being a priest hasn’t secluded him nor the other monks from real-world challenges, he says, nor has it prevented them from experiencing life’s joys.

Each year the monks get three weeks of vacation, and Father Andrew has used his to hike the Pacific Crest Trail, a 2,650-mile trail that stretches from Mexico to Canada. During three hikes, he’s walked more than 5,000 miles. His first hike was in 1985 when he traveled more than 2,200 miles. Later, on another hike, he trekked 900 miles of it alone.

The hike is, in some ways, like the ministry: not everyone can handle it, he said. Some people don’t like the seclusion; they’re afraid to spend too much quiet time alone.

To Father Andrew, however, the hikes, like the ministry, is where he has found God.

“It’s been a great life,” he said. “It’s been difficult at times, as human life is. It’s enriching, satisfying, and demanding at times.”

Observing Ramadan? There’s an app for that

By Samantha Henry
Associated Press writer

PATERSON, N.J. — The most ancient traditions of Islam are going high-tech, with a slew of modern offerings for those observing the holy month of Ramadan, which began this week.

Cell phone applications such as “iPray” or “iQuran” offer a beeping reminder of requisite prayer times, while the “Find Mecca” and “mosque finder” programs help the Muslim traveler in an unfamiliar city find the nearest place to pray.

“When I saw these applications for the first time, I thought: this is amazing,” said James Otun, who has several Islamic applications on his Apple iPhone and iPad. “Whoever came up with this idea: God bless him or her.”

The applications aren’t just for Ramadan; there are Islamic-themed programs that help users find the nearest Costco offering foods prepared according to Islamic dietary rules, learn the correct Arabic pronunciations in a daily prayer, or count how many pages of the Quran they’ve read that day — all on a mobile phone.

There also are applications, or apps, for the holy books of several other religions, from the Catholic Holy Bible to the Bhagavad Gita, a sacred Hindu scripture.

The first time Sumeyye

Kalyoncu heard the Adhan — or call to prayer — through surround-sound speakers on her iPhone dock, she was overcome with nostalgia for her native Turkey. Such applications are especially popular in the U.S., Kalyoncu said, as U.S. mosques do not broadcast daily calls to prayer from external loudspeakers, as they do in Muslim countries.

“These are traditions and these have been in our lives for ages, like almost 15 centuries, so they seem very old,” Kalyoncu said. “I think this is like combining together the technology and the things that we do daily.”

Kalyoncu uses an iPhone app called iPray Lite, keeping track of requisite daily prayers with a program that simulates the clicking sound of prayer beads or the turning wheel of a handheld metal counter Muslims use to keep count of prayer repetitions. Using headphones, the 24-year-old says she can now fulfill her daily spiritual obligations by counting prayers on her iPhone while on the commuter bus to Manhattan from her Edgewater home.

Apple spokeswoman Trudy Muller said the company doesn’t track the more than 225,000 apps for its phones by category so she doesn’t know how many are Islamic-themed. The programs aren’t just offered by Apple;

Faith affects couples’ happiness, study says

Donna St. George

African American couples are more likely than others to share core religious beliefs and pray together at home — factors that have been linked to greater happiness in marriages and relationships, according to a study that has just been released.

In what is described as the first major look at relationship quality and religion across racial and ethnic lines, researchers report a significant link between relationship satisfaction and religious factors for whites, Hispanics and African Americans. The study, released Tuesday, appears in this month’s issue of the Journal of Marriage and Family.

True to the aphorism, couples who pray together stay together, study co-author Bradford Wilcox, director of the National Marriage Project at the University of Virginia, said. “African American couples are more likely to have a shared spiritual identity as a couple.”

The study found that 40 percent of blacks in marriages and live-in relationships who attended religious services regularly had a partner who did the same, compared with 29 percent of non-Hispanic whites and 29 percent of Hispanics.

White couples, in general, reported greater relationship satisfaction than other groups, presumably because of income and educational advantages, the study says. But the racial gap lessens when religious similarities come into the mix.

“What this study suggests is that religion is one of the key factors narrowing the racial divide in relationship quality in the United States,” Wilcox said.

The strongest difference-maker for couples was spiritual activities such as praying or reading the Bible at home. “Praying together as a couple is something that is very intimate for people who are religious,” Wilcox said. “It adds another level of closeness to a relationship.”

Evangelical Lutheran church loses members, sees increase in giving

CHICAGO (AP) — The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America lost almost 91,000 members and 48 congregations last year, but saw a slight increase in per-congregant giving.

In 2009, the denomination dropped to 4.5 million members and about 10,300 congregations, according to a report released Tuesday by David Swartling, the ELCA secretary.

Total offerings in congregations dropped by nearly 3 percent, to about $2.6 billion, but average giving per baptized member increased by a similar percentage, to $492.

Less than one-third of baptized members attended weekly worship last year, a drop from 2008.

The ELCA, which is the largest Lutheran body in the United States, is dealing not only with the impact of the recession, but also with the fallout from the denomination’s vote last year to lift the celibacy requirement for gay clergy.

More heeding the call at California seminary

By Neil Gonzales
Contra Costa Times

WALNUT CREEK, Calif. — From a young age, Juan Alejo has aspired to live a priest's life.

"Since I was a kid, I heard this call," said Alejo.

Now the 35-year-old, who is heeding that summons by attending St. Patrick's Seminary & University in Menlo Park, Calif., is among a growing number of men flocking to seminaries in recent years to become Roman Catholic priests.

That growth is prompting the school to plan for a major campus expansion that could cost up to $50 million.

The increase in seminarians at St. Patrick's reflects an uptick in their numbers nationwide after decades of enrollment declines. The number of men interested in joining the priesthood is rising despite highly publicized cases of sexual abuse by priests.

"It's a national thing we're experiencing," the Rev. James McKearney, St. Patrick's president, said of the upward trend in those pursuing priesthood.

"There's been a lot of anxiety in light of the fact that the church has been getting a lot of bad press," McKearney said, "but the vast majority of priests are good men. (St. Patrick's seminarians) want to be good priests as opposed to those who haven't lived their vows. They are not dissuaded by the bad press."

In the coming academic year, St. Patrick's is expected to have more than 100 seminarians following a steady rise since 2006 when it served 88 students.

The projected enrollment includes 34 new students, according to the school.

"We haven't seen that in many years," McKearney said. "It's an exciting time."

Mary Verducci, St. Patrick's project manager for institutional advancement, partly attributed that population surge to a growing confidence in the seminary's Sulpician approach to priestly ordination. That approach includes participation in daily prayers and other spiritual exercises.

Seminarians are also drawn to the school's high academic standards and multicultural student body, Verducci said.

"Right now, we're at maximum capacity," she said.

All the seminarians live on campus, she said, and school leaders hope to launch a capital fundraising campaign soon to accommodate the increased enrollment.

One option is to build a two-story housing complex costing about $50 million, she said. An alternative is to renovate an existing building for about $15 million.

Other seminaries across the country are experiencing similar growth and need to expand, said the Rev. Shawn McKnight, executive director of the secretariat of clergy, consecrated life and vocations for the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops in Washington, D.C.

"There was a sharp decline in men going into the priesthood 15 years ago," McKnight said. "That seems to be coming back."

According to a report from the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate in Washington, D.C., the enrollment at college seminaries numbered 1,443 in

Fr. Juan Lopez, left, gives communion after his ordination June 7, 2008, at Cathedral of St. Mary of the Assumption, in San Francisco. Lopez studied at St. Patrick's Seminary and University in Menlo Park, Calif.

2009-10 _ up from a low of 1,248 in 2004-05.

The church's recruitment efforts in communities and parishes that encourage young men to consider priesthood have helped boost enrollment, McKnight said.

"They are hearing that and feel more comfortable in answering the call," he said.

Alejo was partly inspired by his older brother, who has taken the vows of chastity, poverty and obedience.

But Alejo has always been a spiritual person and discovered for himself his true vocation, he said.

"I feel I would like to serve people, especially the poor," he said. "It's in the heart that we answer God's call."

Benedictine monks suing state over casket sales

By Alan Sayre
Associated Press writer

NEW ORLEANS — An order of Benedictine monks wants to sell simple cypress caskets to help make ends meet, but the monks say the funeral industry is thwarting their efforts.

The monks of St. Joseph Abbey in St. Tammany Parish sued Louisiana regulators Thursday, charging the Louisiana Board of Embalmers and Funeral Directors is attempting to maintain a casket cartel through regulation dominated by the funeral industry.

The regulators told the monks not to sell the caskets because they are not licensed funeral directors.

The 36 monks of the 121-year-old abbey decided a few years ago to sell caskets with simple white cloth interiors for $1,500 to $2,000 to support the abbey, which does not receive funding from the Roman Catholic Church.

About 50 to 60 of the caskets were sold, beginning in 2007, before the funeral board, acting on a complaint filed by a funeral home, subpoenaed the order in March and threatened fines, said lawyer Jeff Rowes of the Arlington, Va.-based Institute for Justice. The monks tried to get an exemption from the regulations in 2008 and 2010, but legislators rejected the requests.

Rowes said there is no justification for a state "to regulate the sale of wooden boxes."

"The only reason they are enforcing it is to protect the profits of a powerful industry," Rowes said.

The board consists of four embalmers, four funeral directors and a citizen member at least 60 years old. The monks have been told they need funeral director licenses, and their abbey has to be licensed as a funeral home since they Deacon Mark Coudrain walks past finished caskets that are being stored in a former chapel at St. Joseph Abbey, in Covington, La. offer free storage for purchased caskets.

Michael Rasch, a board attorney, said he had not seen the lawsuit and could not comment. But he said: "The board is simply enforcing the law that's passed by the Louisiana Legislature."

Getting a funeral director's license is no small task. State law requires at 30 semester hours of college and a one-year apprenticeship during which the candidate must preside over at least 25 funerals. A funeral home license requires embalming by a licensed embalmer. The abbey does not intend to offer that service, Rowes said.

Abbot Justin Brown said making and selling caskets is in keeping with a 1,500-year tradition of self-support. "For centuries, Benedictine monks have been entrepreneurs," he said.

The monks of St. Joseph Abbey for years farmed and harvested wood, a business that sustained heavy damage from Hurricane Katrina in August 2005, Brown said. The caskets drew public attention at funerals for monks and two Louisiana bishops, leading to requests to purchase them. In 2007, the monks converted part of the abbey into a woodworking shop. Three monks usually work on the caskets.

"All we want to do is sell these simple wood caskets to our friends and the public," Brown said.

Rowes said he expects the dispute eventually will go to the U.S. Supreme Court. Federal circuit courts of appeal already have disagreed on similar laws in other states.

Louisiana law applies only to caskets sold by retailers physically located in the state.

The lawsuit points out that do-it-yourself casket plans are available on the Internet and independent casket retailers offer discounts. Wal-Mart began selling caskets on the Internet in 2009.

Still, the study shows that religion did not have positive effects for all.

When one partner attends services regularly and the other does not, relationship satisfaction is lower.

Two non-religious partners are more content together than partners with different practices, the study says.

really faith-based.

Fincham suggests maybe it's not religion but something else about the people who embrace it, or some other activity that couples do together.

The study's results are based on a recent analysis of a 2006 U.S. survey of 1,387 adults ages 18 to 59. Nearly 90 percent were married; the others were living together.

The authors noted limitations of the study, such as relying on interviews with one partner rather than both. They controlled for income, age and education but not for other factors that might lead to relationship satisfaction, such as personality traits.

When piety cuts into the partying

Some Muslims follow Ramadan but few other rituals

By Raja Abdulrahim
Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO — As men and women in makeshift togas danced and jumped to booming house music, Omar Younis made out with a woman he had met just a few hours earlier at her 25th-birthday dinner.

A friend of a friend, the woman was Younis' fixation of the night. He had accompanied her from the restaurant to a karaoke bar — where he promised to get up and sing just for her but never did — and was now at a San Francisco nightclub, hoping to end the night with her. As make-believe Romans danced in the dimly lit club, Younis and the woman, an aspiring actress, kissed in various alcoves as his friends watched with amusement.

At the bar, Younis, a 27-year-old with Middle Eastern good looks, had been drinking a vodka and cranberry, followed by swigs from a beer. At the club, he ordered a drink for himself and finished off his date's brew. Ken Maxey, another friend, mused that no one watching Younis now would guess he was a Muslim.

Indeed, the lively club scene seemed a long way from Younis' upbringing in an observant Muslim home in a Cleveland suburb, where his parents were principals of a weekend Islamic school and he won a Koran memorization contest. Because of his religious beliefs, Younis did not attend dances in high school.

Islamic practice doesn't play a significant role in Younis' day-to-day life now, but when Ramadan began this week, he, like other Muslims, began abstaining from eating and drinking during the day.

The Barnes & Noble mobile interaction designer said he would also swear off drinking alcohol, smoking pot and socializing with women during the holy month, and would avoid bars and clubs. He planned to spend most nights at home, alone, breaking his fast the traditional way, with a few dates — the fruit, not the females.

Ramadan remains sacred even for many Muslims like Younis, who don't practice their religion on a daily basis and bend, or break, many of its rules. For some, observance of the holy month is the only religious ritual they still follow.

"I know that Ramadan is a (basis) of forgiveness, I use that literally to cleanse my soul and I feel if I was to bypass it, that would be tragic," he said. "I feel that Ramadan is a gift for me and to other Muslims, and it would be like refusing a gift from God."

Zareena Grewal, a professor of American and religious studies at Yale, likened these Muslims to Islam's version of Christmas Christians. During the month, mosques teem with congregants, some of whom haven't been there since the previous Ramadan.

Grewal, who grew up in the United States but has lived across the Middle East and Pakistan, said most Muslims worldwide probably don't pray five times a day but wouldn't think of spurning Ramadan. The repentant quality of the month has made it the one act of worship they observe, she said, and in Muslim countries or communities where everyone is fasting, not doing so can paint one as an outcast.

"If you're not fasting you're just seen as a buzz kill, you're bringing down the mood, this is the holiday season," she said.

Younis' evolution from pious to party boy was gradual. He said he wishes he could practice his religion fully and blames outside influences, like a stone slowly eroding under rushing water.

The middle child of five, Younis grew up in an Iraqi American family where Arabic was spoken at home and his parents were liberal and loving. When his father, a college professor, became too busy to run the weekend Islamic school, Younis' late mother, who wore the hijab, took it over. His parents never drank alcohol.

"It was in no way part of my family life," he said. "It was known this is haraam (forbidden) and when I would hear people try to justify (alcohol), I would laugh and quote from the Koran."

At home, the children were reminded to pray five times a day but not pressured to do so. As a child, Younis would join his father whenever he saw him praying. As he got older, he would remember to pray on his own. At 7, he began observing the traditional dawn-to-dusk fast for the entire month of Ramadan.

His religious life now bears little resemblance to what it was 10 years ago. But Ramadan has remained a constant.

There have been moments when Younis says he thinks about how much easier it would be not to fast during Ramadan. But giving it up is not something he has ever seriously considered.

"I really fear what that explicit action of disobedience would mean for me, punishment-wise," he said. Then he acknowledged: "It sounds crazy, given that I do other things that are explicitly forbidden."

Blessing integral to Kansas town's history

By Amy Bickel
The Hutchinson News

ST. JOHN, Kan. — Looking over the valley where he soon would build a town, William Bickerton knelt and prayed to God that no cyclone would hit his colony of followers disillusioned with the Mormon Church.

As long, that is, as the faithful would continue to reside there.

Nearly 140 years have passed since that blessing on the hill — nearly 140 years since the town of St. John's beginnings. And, over the years, many a tornado has come close to the county seat's borders, but none has done damage.

This, however, is more than a legend of blessings preventing cyclones. St. John's tale is as rich as the fertile fields surrounding it. It's a story of faith, mixed amid local legend.

Yet, in this town of 1,200, the history of this its upbringing is sometimes forgotten.

"Some people think we were settled by Catholics," said David Robinson, one of the dozen or so Church of Jesus Christ members still meeting.

And, he noted, few really know of St. John's past, of the leader named Bickerton or of the present church today.

There's no mention, on St. John's community or government Web pages, of its founding. Nor is Robinson's Church of Jesus

The Brethren congregation church, built in the late 1800s in St. John, Kan, is the site where colony leader William Bickerton staked the first church of Zion Valley, which became St. John.

Christ listed among the community's handful of places of worship.

David Losey, the elementary school principal who has lived in the area 13 years, said he didn't know of how St. John was founded.

He did know of the tale of the blessing.

St. John's past is rich and complex, said Michael Hathaway, the curator at the Stafford County Museum.

"It's a fascinating history," he said, adding that "most really don't know the history."

The Church of Jesus Christ, also known by some across the country as Bickertonites, incorporated in Pennsylvania in 1865. However, the organization traces its roots to Joseph Smith and the 1830 founding of the Mormon Church, according to Gary Entz, a McPherson College history professor who wrote about the origins in a research paper published by the Kansas State Historical Society.

Bickerton, considered by followers as the successor to Joseph Smith, led a sect that denounced polygamy and other doctrinal changes that had taken place at the end of Smith's life and during the tenure of Brigham Young.

It wasn't long after severing his connections with the Latter-day Saints that Bickerton had the first of several epiphanies that told him his path would lead to Kansas. Sitting in the home of his brother one day in West Virginia in the 1870s, "My attentions were forcibly drawn to Stafford County, Kansas," Bickerton said, according to the book "No Cyclone Shall Destroy: The Story of St. John, Kansas."

In the fall of 1874, Bickerton came to Stafford County and blessed the site.

That night, he and a few other men camped at the future site of St. John, making a small corral of buffalo bones to keep out wild animals. The next spring, he led 35 families by ox-driven wagon to the site, naming it Zion Valley. They built a church on the same site where Robinson's church sits today, Robinson said. Meanwhile, a post office was in Bickerton's own home.

That same year, the Kansas Legislature dissolved Stafford County, turning it over to Barton, Pawnee and Pratt counties. Two townships were excluded, however, and Robinson says he thinks this was, in part, an act to sabotage the colony's success. However, with the help of then Gov. John P. St. John, the Kansas Supreme Court declared the move unconstitutional, restoring Stafford County's boundaries, except for a sliver given to Pawnee County.

In an effort to get the county seat, colonists proposed to eliminate the "Mormon" name of the town — Zion. They voted to officially change it to St. John in honor of the governor, according to Entz's research. Meanwhile, the governor asked another favor, Robinson said. Gov. St. John, instrumental in helping exodusters find settlements in Kansas after the Civil War, requested that Stafford County and the St. John area take in a colony.

Nokia has a Ramadan suite for its cell phones that consolidates everything worshippers need to know to observe Islam's holiest month, in which Muslims worldwide observe daily daylight fasting.

Some apps are free. Those that are not generally range from about 99 cents to $2.99, although some are more expensive.

The dates of Ramadan still are determined by the lunar calendar, and calculations can differ among Islamic communities around the world. In North America, many Muslims will mark the first day of Ramadan on Wednesday.

But Islam never has been at odds with innovation, said Zinnur Tabakci, who runs an Islamic religious book and gift shop in Paterson, N.J..

"Islam is not against technology. Now you can do it easier, faster," said Tabakci, who recently supplemented the strings of traditional prayer beads and religious texts he sells with a wall of mobile phone accessories to keep up with demand.

"Islam started 1,400 years ago, and at that time, they didn't have that much technology, but they knew everything," he added.

The mosque Tabakci attends in Paterson, called Ulu Cami, or "Great Mosque," has gone high-tech, too. After 16 cameras were installed for security purposes, one innovative mosque attendee began using them to broadcast services live over the Internet so those too sick or otherwise unable to attend could watch daily prayers online from home. Mosque leaders say the live broadcasts have become especially popular among relatives of immigrants who like to tune in from overseas to hear the same prayers as their loved ones in New Jersey.

Otun, a technology aficionado, says the apps on his iPhone and iPad make him a more observant Muslim. From the beeping reminder to stop and pray during his busy schedule running a limo service, to an app that tells him which nearby restaurants serve food prepared within Islamic guidelines, Otun says there's no longer an excuse to live an unobservant life.

"If you forgot to pray, you might not be responsible, because you're human; you forget and you can make it up later," said Otun, 35. "But not now that you have those apps, that might change things in God's level."

Otun's favorite application, called Find Mecca, is a compass-like program with an electronic indicator that changes from red to green when you've reached the requisite prayer angle of 58 degrees, Northeast, to ensure you're facing Mecca from any location — a requirement of all Muslims when praying.

Ann Nye

MALTA — Annie Fern- ande Francois Lucienne Alphonsine Hanchir Nye, our beloved wife, mother, grandmother and friend, age 81, passed away peacefully at her home on Wednesday, Aug. 11, 2010.

Ann was born on Nov. 4, 1928, in Aywaille, Belgium, to Adolphe and Germaine Beaufays Hanchir. In 1950, she came to the United States and married Afton Don Nye for time and all eternity in the Salt Lake LDS Temple on Oct. 3, 1950. To this union, five children were born, Shirley (Bill) Morris of Washougal, Wash., Elizabeth (David) Kimber of Grouse Creek, Utah, Stephen Nye, André (Carol) Nye and Robbin (Jeff) Thomas, all of Malta.

Her lifelong dream was to become a nurse and she accomplished that dream in 1964. She spent her nursing career at the Minidoka Memorial Hospital in Rupert, where she developed lifelong friendships and became a favorite nurse of many of the patients there. She had a special way with the geriatric patients and was truly an angel to them all.

She was a convert to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and had a strong testimony of our Savior, Jesus Christ. She enjoyed serving in all capacities but her favorite callings were working in the Logan LDS Temple and her temple mission to the Frankfurt Germany Temple with her husband in 1994-95. While serving in Germany, she was able to visit her relatives in Belgium, whom she had not seen in many years. Some of her children were able to go to Europe, and she loved showing them where she grew up and introduced them to family and friends.

She had a great love for her husband's family, for the community of Malta, and for the United States.

She enjoyed doing puzzles, growing beautiful flowers, cooking, watching old movies, reading, collecting beautiful and unique crystal pieces and traveling with her husband and children. She was an accomplished accordion player and took up playing the piano and organ after all of her children left home.

She is survived by her husband of 59 years; two sons; three daughters; 18 grandchildren; 17 1/2 great-grandchildren; and several nieces and nephews.

She was preceded in death by both parents; one brother, Gaston; a sister, Jeanne; and two nieces.

We would like to give a special thanks to Dr. Kerry W. Saurey, Dr. Joseph R. Peterson, the doctors and nurses at Minidoka Memorial Hospital, Countryside Care and Rehabilitation, and the staff of Intermountain Home Health and Hospice (Tina, Debbie, Mario, Misty, Tiffany and Vanessa).

Ann will be missed by many, but her memory will live on in our hearts forever.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Monday, Aug. 16, at the Malta LDS Church, with Bishop Jeff Johnson officiating. Burial will be in the Valley Vu Cemetery. Friends may call from 6 until 8 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 15, at the Rasmussen Funeral Home, 1350 E. 16th St. in Burley, and from 10 until 10:45 a.m. Monday at the church.

Sharon Lee Custer (Sharon Syputa) passed away on Thursday, Aug. 12, 2010, at her home, after a battle with cancer. She was elated to be going home to be with her Lord Jesus and with her soul mate, Gary Lee Custer, who passed away in August of 2009. Sharon was happier here in Twin Falls and with Gary than she had ever been in her entire life.

Sharon was born in Chrisman, Ill., on March 11, 1938. Throughout her life, Sharon was a servant of the Lord, always finding ways to help others. She moved to Twin Falls in 2004, when she married Gary, and became instrumental in the Magic Valley in working to help individuals with addiction issues. She helped to pull together several local physicians and 14 different denominations to help her in this fight. She directed and co-founded the Miracle Valley Ministry Center and was a member of the executive board for SIPAD, Southern Idaho Partners Against Drugs. She was also a member of CERT, the Crisis Emergency Response Team in Twin Falls and donated her time in counseling at the Pregnancy Crisis Center. She worked as a chaplain at the St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center. She co-taught Sunday school at the First United Methodist Church with her husband, Gary.

While living in Illinois, Sharon owned a successful real estate company and was a real estate broker in Addison, Ill. She also worked as a legal secretary in Chicago. In North Carolina, Sharon began her counseling career, specializing in theophostic therapy, a combination of counseling practices shown to have a remarkably high success rate. She worked with the Bethesda Counseling Group in Horse Shoe, N.C., where she was part of a Team Divorce Recovery Group.

Sharon held several degrees and licensures, including a Doctor of Philosophy in Clinical Christian Psychology and a Doctor of Theology; she was also a licensed clinical pastoral counselor and board certified in crisis and abuse therapy, death and grief therapy, sexual therapy, integrated marriage and family therapy, group therapy, alcohol and drug therapy, and temperament therapy.

She held numerous memberships in her work serving the Lord, including with the Sarasota Academy of Christian Counseling and the American Association of Christian Counselors, and she was a professional clinical member of the National Christian Counselors Association.

Consistently, Sharon's main mission in life was to tell people about the love of Jesus and the comfort they would feel in truly knowing him. Her daughters recall her always carrying a Bible and witnessing to others; her daughter, Shawn, has vowed to continue her mother's mission of spreading the word of the Lord.

With her warm and generous nature, Sharon had many, many friends. She opened her heart to so many people, both professionally and personally, and she will be deeply missed by both family and friends.

She was preceded in death by her husband, Gary Lee Custer.

She is survived by five children, Paula Jordan (Gary) of Carrolltown, Texas, Shawn Mahan (Ron) of Cotter, Ark., Greg Custer (Christy) of Twin Falls, Jeff Custer (Kelly Hall) of Bothell, Wash., and Kelli Custer of Denver, Colo. She was also blessed with grandchildren, Nathan Lindgren, Megan Jordan, Samantha Somrek, Kole Brahm, Rachel Custer, Benjamin Custer, Stephanie Custer and Ian Custer; and one great-grandchild, Jackson Lindgren.

Sharon was looking forward to a big celebration in heaven, where she would be welcomed as a true servant of Jesus as demonstrated by her many loving acts. She also knew that Gary would be there to celebrate with her.

The funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 17, at Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home, 2551 Kimberly Road in Twin Falls. Visitation will be from 6 to 8 p.m. Monday, Aug. 16, at the Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home. Condolences may be left at www.magicvalleyfuneral-home.com.

Doctor who isolated measles virus dies at 89

By Thomas H. Maugh II
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Dr. Thomas C. Peebles, a World War II bomber pilot who isolated the measles virus, setting the stage for development of the vaccine that freed the world from the deadly scourge, died last month at his home in Port Charlotte, Fla. He was 89.

Peebles also led a team that showed the tetanus vaccine could be given every decade instead of every year, developed a way to add fluoride to children's vitamins to prevent tooth decay and founded one of the country's first health maintenance organizations.

The measles discovery came in only his third year after graduation from medical school while he was working in the Children's Hospital Boston laboratory of Dr. John F. Enders, who won the 1954 Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine for isolating the polio virus.

Enders assigned his young protege to investigate the cause of measles, which in the mid-1950s infected nearly every American child before age 15 and killed about 450 each year. When an outbreak occurred at a nearby elementary school, Enders collected blood samples and throat swabs from infected children, telling them that they were "standing on the frontiers of science."

Attempting to grow the suspected virus in dishes containing human tissues, Peebles found suspicious blobs of damaged cells in the culture taken from an 11-year-old named David Edmonston. Nobody else in the lab thought he had found the virus, however, and Enders removed him from the project.

Peebles kept working on his own time and eventually isolated the virus. When he injected it into monkeys, they developed measles.

"I am sure, as is often the case in scientific endeavor, that much of the successful recognition and isolation of this virus lay in perseverance, newness to the field, and failure to be bound by the preconceived ideas that caused others in the laboratory to miss this new effect," he wrote later.

Using the newly developed virus strain, called Edmonston B, the Enders team developed a measles vaccine that was licensed in 1963 and the measles rate began falling sharply.

Later during the 1960s, Peebles led a Harvard team that studied the tetanus vaccine. They found that the vaccine contained tens to hundreds of times the necessary dose of the tetanus antigen, creating a danger of allergic reactions that was greater than the risk of developing tetanus. They proved that a lower dose was safe and that it could be given much less frequently than was the current practice.

While he was working at the hospital, Peebles also ran a private practice out of his home. During routine examinations, he noticed that children living in communities where water was fluoridated had fewer cavities. Organizing a clinical trial among his own patients, he developed a fluoride additive for vitamins that reduced cavities among children in non-fluoridating communities.

Thomas Chalmers Peebles was born June 5, 1921, in Newton, Mass., a suburb of Boston. His father was a professor of German at Boston University and his mother practiced homeopathy. The young Peebles enrolled at Harvard, majoring in French in hopes of emulating his father.

Graduating in 1942, he enlisted in the Navy, seeking an "exciting" position. He went to flight school, almost washing out because of a bad exam. A paperwork foul-up allowed him to take the flight test, however, and he graduated, flying B-24 Liberators in the South Pacific.

Allan Humpherys

KIMBERLY — Allan Stratford Humpherys, age 84, returned to Heavenly Father and loved ones on Sunday, Aug. 8, 2010.

He was born April 4, 1926, in Idaho Falls, Idaho, to Harold Joseph and Vera Stratford Humpherys. He was the oldest of six children and he spent his childhood and youth in Thayne (Star Valley), Wyo.

Allan served in the U.S. Navy in the Pacific arena from 1945 to 1946. He served an LDS mission in the California North Mission from 1948 to 1950. Allan attended Utah State University, receiving his Bachelor of Science in agricultural engineering and his Master of Science in civil engineering. His work often took him to various countries throughout the world.

Allan married Adele Ralph of Ogden, Utah, on Dec. 21, 1956, in the Logan LDS Temple. They began their married life in Logan, and eventually settled in the Twin Falls, Idaho, area in 1964. They built a family home in Kimberly, Idaho, in 1966, where he lived until his death.

They are the parents of nine children, Shirley (Mike) Bond of Rupert, Idaho, Diane (Leonard) Morrow of Pleasant Grove, Utah, Richard (Jill) Humpherys of Gilbert, Ariz., Cheryl (Renn)

Daniels of Alpine, Utah, Loralee Humpherys of Santa Rosa, Calif. Dwight (Jacqueline) Humpherys of Pinetop, Ariz., Bryce (Kimberly) Humpherys of Prosser, Wash., Carolee (Kari) Moulton of Driggs, Idaho, and Shauna (Brian) McAllister of Reading, Mass. They have 27 grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren. Also surviving Allan are his siblings, LaFawn May, DeVerl, Keith, HL (Harold Lorraine) and Dee.

Allan was a devoted husband, loving father and a compassionate grandfather. He is preceded in death by his parents, Harold Joseph and Vera Stratford Humpherys, and by his wife, Adele Ralph Humpherys.

The funeral for Allan will be held at 10 a.m. Monday, Aug. 16, at the Kimberly LDS Stake Center, 3857 N. 3500 E. in Kimberly, Idaho. Interment will follow at the Twin Falls Cemetery in Twin Falls, Idaho. Friends may call from 5 to 7 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 15, at Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home, 2551 Kimberly Road in Twin Falls, and for one hour prior to the service, from 9 to 10 a.m. at the stake center.

All services and arrangements are under the direction of Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home. Those wishing to share condolences may do so at www.magic-valleyfuneralhome.com.

BLM probes foal death at wild horse roundup

Twin Falls mayor gets ride in F-15

By Nate Poppino
Times-News writer

A few careers back, before he was mayor of Twin Falls, Don Hall spent four years in the U.S. Marine Corps.

He recalls sitting out on airfields and watching fighter jets do touch-and-go landings.

“And I just drooled and dreamed of the day that I could go up in one,” he said. “I’ve always wanted to.”

Two weeks ago, Hall, an honorary commander with Mountain Home Air Force Base, got his chance.

During one of his regular trips to the base to learn about its various aspects and operations, Hall mentioned his dream of going up in a jet. Base officials soon tabbed him for one of their occasional orientation flights — used as an educational tool — and on July 29 Hall joined Idaho Lt. Gov. Brad Little to prepare for rides on F-15E Strike Eagles.

The pair got the full experience, Hall said, including training on how to safely eject from the jet, a mission briefing before their flight and a reminder about what cockpit equipment they probably shouldn’t touch while airborne.

Then came the big moment. Ensnconed in the cockpit, Hall’s pilot asked him if there was anything he wanted to do while in the air.

“I said, ‘Let’s take off really fast — go straight up,’” Hall recalled. The pilot was happy to oblige, he said, rushing the jet up to a cruising altitude of 15,000 feet.

In two of the two-seat F-15s, Hall and Little got a full tour of south-central Idaho, passing over Anderson Ranch Dam, the Sun Valley area, the mountains near Challis, Craters of the Moon National Monument and Twin Falls. Sprinkled throughout were loop-de-loops and other maneuvers — “such a weird, absolute sensation,” Hall said — and a low-altitude pass 1,000 feet above Craters.

Hall said he was able to spot the scene of the July 22 Auger Falls Fire, and even got to take the stick himself for a minute during a simple, high-altitude stretch. Base officials said he would experience up to 6 Gs of pressure, but he said his jet got up to 8.5 Gs.

Back on the ground with his dignity and his latest meal intact, Hall said he learned a great deal from the flight that will now help him teach others about the base. He was most impressed by the training and professionalism the pilots and other base staff displayed.

“It was a phenomenal, once-in-a-lifetime experience,” he said.

Chemist offers possible cause of chronic infection

DEAR DR. GOTT: I’ve been a chemist and forensic scientist for more than 50 years, and in your column you address a woman’s questions regarding chronic vaginal inflammation and repeated yeast infections. Years ago, I had a legal case involving a woman who used Premarin cream packaged in metal-walled “tooth-paste”-type tubes. Her complaints and symptoms were much the same as your reader’s. In working as her expert witness on that case, I opened up and examined the offending Premarin tubes she had used. What I found was a badly designed delivery system that could not fail to cause horrific injury to anyone that used the product, down to its completely collapsed, scrolled-up endpoint.

Such tubes are made of soft metal-like zinc but with an internal layer of polymer plastic coating

ASK DR. GOTT

the interior surface to prevent metal contamination or any reactive ingredients from chemically reacting with the metal walls. The defect comes when the user squeezes and deforms the tube walls to such an extent that the internal plastic layer fractures into small chips and delaminates from its attachment to the wall. What results are a myriad of small and almost microscopic flakes of the lining plastic, with sharp points and razor-sharp edges like broken glass mixing into the cream product as it is delivered.

Such a production of tissue-cutting particles will cause visible to microscopic lacerations in the delicate barrier tissues it comes into contact with and thus allow infections to occur or reoccur.

This should be the first thing a woman needing such a product should look at and demand an alternative to. Plastic-walled cream-delivery tubes or pre-filled syringe packaging would eliminate this kind of injury. Inform and warn your readers, please. Perhaps others have experienced the same, and an informed buying public has a great deal of economic clout when it comes to forcing improvements in product designs.

As an aside, the case was ultimately settled quietly after I demonstrated to both sides that this was the defect in the product leading to her injuries. I am not sure whether the makers of such products have changed from that design of packaging and delivery or not. But in my considerable experience with product-defect cases, including medical device-based cases, it is a rarity that the manufacturer has voluntarily eliminated such a defect. It’s usually an economic decision for them, and the cost of a few legal cases a year is just cranked into a slightly higher product price in the following years. The actual costs of their errors is in reality much greater when you factor in those who have sustained injury or worse but have not filed for or prevailed in legal actions.

DEAR READER: I have chosen to print your letter almost in its entirety because it is a well-written, informative piece. I thank you for bringing an alternate cause to the table, one I had never even thought to consider.

I, like you, am unaware of what type of packaging Premarin and similar estrogen creams come in; therefore, I am hoping that this letter is either late (in the case of newer, safer packaging) or will bring greater attention to this issue.

If packaging has not been improved, there may be many women suffering the effects who either don’t know the cause or are too embarrassed to bring up the issue with their general physicians or gynecologists.

Vaginal infections are often minor and disappear with treatment, but if left untreated can result in considerable symptoms and problems. I urge any woman who has symptoms of a vaginal infection to speak with her gynecologist so that she may receive appropriate treatment early before the infection can take hold and cause even greater discomfort, embarrassment and, perhaps, even damage.

As I have said many times in the past, there is no reason to be embarrassed by symptoms for any condition. Doctors have been there and done that. Any physician worth his salt will do his best to get to the bottom of the problem and offer help, support and treatment.

Readers who would like related information can order my Health Report “Vaginal Infections and Disorders” by sending a self-addressed stamped No. 10 envelope and a $2 check or money order to Newsletter, P.O. Box 167, Wickliffe, OH 44092-0167. Be sure to mention the title or print an order form off my website at www.AskDrGottMD.com.

Twin Falls battalion chiefs recognized

Two Twin Falls Fire Department battalion chiefs were recently recognized by Mayor Don Hall and Councilman Will Kezele for an award they received from Region 10 of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. The plaque recognizes what the EPA called “a textbook example” of how several agencies worked cooperatively in responding to a mercury spill in September 2009. Joining the fire department in that response was the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality, South Central Public Health District, Region V Hazmat Team, Twin Falls School District and the EPA itself.

Sandau, others honored at dinner

Kevin Sandau was a recent recipient of the 2009-2010 FLAME Award at the Twin Falls County Juvenile Probation 15th-annual Volunteer Recognition Dinner.

Mediators, diversion board members, school-lunch buddies and their guests attended the event at The White House on Blue Lakes Boulevard in Twin Falls.

The FLAME Award is given to an individual each year in recognition of their extraordinary commitment to the Magic Valley youth. Sandau has worked in the field of juvenile justice for many years, and is currently the supervisor and chief probation officer of the county’s juvenile probation program.

Others recognized include:

It’s your reflexes vs. the radar

I want to start out this week explaining why it is that when you see a cop and get pulled over, why you are going faster than you thought. I know some of you will still probably say that I’m wrong and it’s all a trap to get revenue, but there really is a reason that you get stopped and possibly ticketed.

Here is why you were going faster than you actually thought you were: You see, there is this thing called reactionary time and it affects all of us.

I’ll set up a scenario to help explain this. When you are driving down the road and see a police officer sitting alongside it, your first reaction is to hit the brakes (I do it too, even on patrol). The next reaction is to look down at your speedometer to see how fast you were going. This reaction time can take anywhere from three-fourths to one full second to complete. During that time, the amount of pressure you applied to the brakes can slow you anywhere from five to 10 miles per hour. When you look at your speedometer, you’re actually going five to 10 mph less than you initially were.

Now the next time you get pulled over, you’ll know why the speed you thought you were going seemed to be much less than the speed the officer informed you of. This information can save you wasting a day in court if you get the ticket, with what you observed from your speedometer as an argument.

ASK POLICEMAN DAN

I also need to report that most radars are checked at least daily (most do it after each ticket written) to make sure that they’re working properly. Most speedometers never get checked other than the date the vehicle was manufactured. This makes the excuse of the radar not agreeing with your speedometer a waste of time, too.

Q: I have heard of people carrying I.C.E. with them. What is I.C.E.?

A: I.C.E. is short for In Case of Emergency. I have been informed by Carmen Assendrup of several ways to use I.C.E. to help if you get hurt and can’t communicate. The first, obvious thing to do is keep a card in your wallet or purse with the name of an emergency contact, with I.C.E. written on top of it. This card could also be put in a conspicuous place on a motorcycle or even in a car.

The second thing that you could do would be to put I.C.E. in your cell-phone directory with the emergency contact name behind that. If you wanted and the contact person agreed, an address could also be added in the directory in case the call goes unanswered.

If any of you out there think of other ways to use I.C.E., let me know; I would like to learn what other ideas are out there and share them.

Officer down

Please put these officers, killed in the line of duty, and their families in your prayers. God bless these heroes.

- Patrolman Glen Agee, Jackson Police, Mississippi
- Chief of Police William T. (Bill) Bauer, Wyoming Police, Illinois
- Deputy Christopher Dewey, Mahnomen County Sheriff, Minnesota
- Officer Jeremy Hubbard, Cowden Police, Illinois

Be safe, I’ll talk to you next week. Email your questions to policeman-dan@yahoo.com.

Jerome firefighters to fill the boot for MDA

Jerome firefighters from Local No. 4589 will be out in the city from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Aug. 20 and 21 with boots in hand, as they kick off their annual Fill-the-Boot fundraising campaign for the Muscular Dystrophy Association (MDA).

Firefighters will stand at the intersection of Main Street and Lincoln Avenue, asking motorists to drop donations into their boots.

The International Association of Fire Fighters raised $28.5 million for MDA last year, making the grand total for the 56-year tradition more than $434 million.

Proceeds raised during the street-side campaign will help support MDA services and research programs, including MDA Summer Camp, support groups and local clinics. In the last five years, MDA has provided more than $500,000 in services to individuals living in Idaho.

MDA is the nonprofit health agency dedicated to curing muscular dystrophy, ALS (Lou Gehrig’s disease) and related diseases by funding worldwide research, along with comprehensive health care and support services, advocacy and education. The majority of contributions to MDA come from individual donors. MDA maintains clinics at the Idaho Elks Rehabilitation Hospital in Boise.

CSI Community Ed fall catalogs available

Catalogs are now available for fall-semester classes through the College of Southern Idaho’s Community Education Center. The noncredit enrichment classes are scheduled through the end of 2010.

Classes through the center represent a wide variety of interests, skills and viewpoints and each is tailored by the instructor. More than 100 class options are available in a variety of subjects, including arts and crafts, music, literature, photography, computers, healthy lifestyles, personal development, money matters, languages, home and garden, and dance and fitness for all ages.

Additionally, the center’s Ed2Go online program offers hundreds of online, instructor-facilitated development and employment-training courses. Each Ed2Go online course last six weeks, with two new lessons being released each week and new sessions beginning every month.

Information: 732-6442, communityed.csi.edu, or course catalogs are available throughout the greater Twin Falls area, including at the Chamber of Commerce and on the CSI campus.

Gooding tennis team reinstated

$6,700 keeps program alive

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

The Gooding High School tennis program is back in business.

Faced with the task of raising just more than $3,800 in about three weeks, Troy Hurd and the others involved in an effort to save the program gathered $6,700. With the goal met, the Gooding school board officially reinstated Gooding tennis at its meeting Tuesday night.

"The community of Gooding helped out great," said Hurd, who added that 23 businesses and 47 individuals contributed to the fund, while additional money was raised through a car wash and garage sale.

Gooding's tennis program was cut by the board in a 3-2 vote May 11 as part of a budget proposal by Gooding athletic director Chris Comstock. The budget, which also axed the freshman boys and girls basketball teams, was aimed at meeting a mandated 10- to 15-percent cut in spending.

Led by Hurd, a group of Gooding parents put together a proposal to reinstate the tennis program. The Gooding school board voted 3-2 July 13 to do just that, as long as those backing the proposal could gather the funds necessary to support the team's 2011 season by Aug. 5.

"I'm really excited that we got it back and I'm very thankful that the school board gave us the chance to raise the money," said Gooding tennis coach Joyce Sage. "The community really pulled together."

Comstock said he was happy to see tennis reinstated, adding that he hated to cut any programs, but had to find a way to trim the budget. He said the money raised will pay the head coach's stipend and also cover travel costs, equipment, uniforms and awards. Any money left over after the season will remain in the fund for future seasons.

Comstock praised the efforts of those who worked to save the program.

"The board gave them those guidelines and they went out, worked hard and raised the money and were able to support their program and then some," said Comstock.

Sage said 23 students participated in the program last year. She held her annual tennis camp in July and said with younger players showing interest, the team should grow in numbers this season.

SHEBOYGAN, Wis. — Tiger Woods ate breakfast three times before he teed off in the first round of the PGA Championship. It was time for dinner when his second round began Friday.

Bubba Watson walked off Whistling Straits atop the leaderboard after opening with a 68. He waited 30 hours for his next shot.

And then there's Nick Watney.

"I was talking with my caddie this afternoon, and we were talking about something that happened this morning," he said. "But we both thought it was yesterday. So it's been a long day. I'll have no trouble sleeping

Not much is clear in the final major of the year.

At least not yet.

After two days — but not two full rounds — Matt Kuchar was atop the leaderboard after another rock-solid round on a soft course. He nearly holed out from the 13th fairway again during a stretch of three straight birdies that led to a 3-under 69.

Division leads up for grabs tonight at MVS

The intensity continues to build at Magic Valley Speedway as both the Mr. Gas Late Models and Budweiser Super Stocks are down to their final three racing events of the season.

Only 40 points separate leader Rick Fowble and Mike Greco in the Late Models division entering tonight's action, but Eddy McKean is on the rise, having won the last two main-event races. Greco is still seeking his first main-event win, something that would greatly help his cause in catching Fowble.

Willie Dalton gained some ground on Daniel Shirley in his battle for second place in the Street Stocks with a main event win last weekend, but Kris McKean added to his division lead with a late-race surge to finish as runner-up.

Also taking the track tonight are the Quale's Electronics Hornets and Jr. Stingers, which both boast some of the tightest points races at MVS.

Action in the NAPA Street Stocks division returns after a week off and the Vintage Sprint Cars will make the rounds in their final event of the season at MVS.

The No. 19 Cup car of NASCAR driver Elliott Sadler will also be on display this Washington Redskins quarterback Donovan McNabb scrambles during the first half of a preseason game against the Buffalo Bills in Landover, Md., on Friday.

McNabb throws TD in 'Skins debut

LANDOVER, Md. — Donovan McNabb threw a touchdown pass in his Washington Redskins debut, Albert Haynesworth looked suitably motivated in his debut as a $100 million backup, and the new-look Buffalo Bills looked like the same old Buffalo Bills.

McNabb went 5 for 8 for 58 yards in two series Friday night and hit first-year player Anthony Armstrong for a 4-yard touchdown in the Redskins' 42-17 win over the mistake-ridden Bills. It was a first-glimpse preseason game that shows Washington's new coach Mike Shanahan is quite a bit further along than Buffalo's new coach Chan Gailey.

It's been a little over four months since the Easter Sunday trade that brought McNabb to the Redskins, and it's still a jarring sight to see No. 5 in something other than a Philadelphia Eagles uniform. After a couple of wayward throws on his first series, he went 4 for 5 for 47 yards on his second drive and showed he still has some speed in his 33-year-old legs by scrambling to convert a third-and-1.

Hall of Fame welcomes Malone, Dream Team

By Brian Mahoney

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — Larry Bird stopped just short of calling the Dream Team the best squad ever assembled.

With the talent standing behind him, he wouldn't get much argument if he had.

The members of the 1992 Olympic champions joined him on stage Friday as they were inducted into the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame. Michael Jordan, Magic Johnson and the rest of the famed squad were Bird's teammates in his last competitive games, a powerful and popular group widely credited for the growth of international basketball.

"Pretty good way to go out, winning the gold medal," Bird said.

Fighting a bad back and nearing retirement, Bird had to be talked into playing in Barcelona by Johnson, his friend and a rival since their college days.

"I called your butt up and I said you're going to play, we need this thrill one more time," Johnson said.

Their predecessors from the 1960 Olympics, a group led by Oscar Robertson and Jerry West, also were enshrined during the ceremony at Symphony Hall. Dream Teamers Scottie Pippen and Karl Malone were inducted as individuals.

Pippen opened his acceptance speech by praising the Jordan, his fellow six-time NBA champion from the Chicago Bulls for being "the best teammate."

"MJ, you have touched so many people's lives, but none quite like mine," Pippen said.

from Central Arkansas when the Bulls got him in 1987, Pippen was the first player inducted. With Jordan standing nearby on stage as his presenter, Pippen said he would "cherish their relationship forever."

"Who knew that No. 23 would be here 23 years later presenting me to the Naismith Basketball Hall of Fame?" Pippen said.

The presenter does not speak, and Jordan also didn't speak when the Dream Team assembled on stage. His tough for him to keep his balance. After the siren sounded to suspend play, Woods opted to finish the sixth hole. He chipped out of deep grass below the green and left himself a 5-foot birdie putt that spun 270 degrees around the cup and sent him home somber.

“Had to hang in there, and did a good job with that,” Woods, who remained at 1 under, told a PGA official.

The fog played havoc on the starting times. Whistling Straits delivered its own share of misery, too, starting with European Ryder Cup captain Colin Montgomerie. He played in the same group with Kuchar and was 26 shots worse over two rounds, going 78-83.

Phil Mickelson took some unusual routes from tee-to-green, although some of his misses were so big that he wound up in the gallery, where the grass had been trampled. Mickelson carries extra gloves in his bag for souvenirs when he hits a fan, and he handed one out on the 15th hole, complete with a frown sign inside the “o” in “Sorry.”

Pauley, Seattle edge past Indians

CLEVELAND — David Pauley earned his first career win, helping make Daren Brown's road debut as the Seattle Mariners' interim manager a success with a 3-2 win over the Cleveland Indians.

Pauley (1-4) gave up two runs and seven hits over six innings in his 11th start and 19th career appearance. The right-hander worked in nine games for the Boston Red Sox in 2008 and entered his sixth start of the season for Seattle with a career record of 0-7 and 6.40 ERA.

The Mariners beat Cleveland's Fausto Carmona (11-10) to snap a seven-game road losing streak.

Orioles 5, Rays 0

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Jeremy Guthrie scattered two hits over six innings, Adam Jones hit a two-run triple and Baltimore beat Tampa Bay.

Guthrie (7-11) struck out three and walked four in his third consecutive win. It was also his first victory (1-4) in seven career starts at Tropicana Field.

Twins 4, Athletics 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Carl Pavano pitched into the seventh inning for his 15th win, Danny Valencia had two hits and two RBIs and Minnesota held on to beat Oakland.

Pavano (15-7) allowed two runs and 10 hits over 6 1-3 innings and matched the Yankees C.C. Sabathia and the Rays David Price for the most wins in the American League.

and Texas beat Boston to cap its biggest comeback victory this season.

Cruz hit the ball deep into the left-field seats on a knuckleball thrown by Wakefield (3-9), the seventh Boston reliever.

White Sox 8, Tigers 4

CHICAGO — Gordon Beckham hit a three-run homer and Mark Teahen, fresh off the disabled list, added a two-run shot, helping the Chicago White Sox beat slumping Detroit.

After losing five of seven to fall out of the AL Central lead, the White Sox received a timely visit from their favorite opponent. They are 7-2 against the Tigers this season and 65-36 against them since the start of 2005.

National League Rockies 5, Brewers 4

DENVER — Troy

Tulowitzki hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning and Colorado rallied to beat Milwaukee.

With runners on second and third and no outs, Kameron Loe (2-3) relieved starter Yovani Gallardo and Tulowitzki hit an 0-1 pitch off the glove of a leaping Ryan Braun at the left-field wall. Tulowitzki stood near first base before resuming his home-run trot after it was clear Braun was unable to catch the ball.

Mets 1, Phillies 0

NEW YORK — Knuckleballer R.A. Dickey threw a one-hitter, allowing a sixth-inning single to pitcher Cole Hamels, and the New York Mets shut out the Philadelphia Phillies once again at Citi Field.

The Mets blanked the high-scoring Phillies for the fourth straight time at home. New York outscored their NL East rivals 16-0 during a three-game sweep in late May, a string started by Dickey.

Braves 1, Dodgers 0

ATLANTA — Tim Hudson extended his dominant stretch of starts with three-hit ball for eight innings and Brooks Conrad homered in the seventh for Atlanta.

Cardinals 6, Cubs 3

ST. LOUIS — Albert Pujols homered for the sixth time in 11 games and Jake Westbrook got his first win in three tries since joining St. Louis at the trade deadline.

Reds 7, Marlins 2

CINCINNATI — Scott Rolen snapped out of a slump with three hits against an ineffective Josh Johnson, helping Edinson Volquez and the Reds get the victory.

National 4, Diamondbacks 2

WASHINGTON — John Lannan pitched seven strong innings, Ian Desmond had three hits and Washington snapped a five-game losing streak.

Lannan (4-5) allowed two runs and four hits to win his second consecutive start and earn his first win at home since Aug. 5, 2009, against Florida.

Astros 4, Pirates 1

HOUSTON — Carlos Lee hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning to power the Astros to the victory.

Houston was down before Lee connected against All-Star reliever Evan Meek (4-4), belting a drive to the Crawford Boxes in left.

Chipper Jones plans surgery, comeback attempt

ATLANTA (AP) — Chipper Jones said Friday he will report to spring training next year with the Braves as he attempts a comeback from major knee surgery.

Jones, speaking for the first time since the team announced he tore his left ACL and will miss the rest of the season, said he will have surgery on the knee today.

The 38-year-old Jones says now is not the right time to “make a decision to quit.”

“I’m going to go through the process just like I’m getting ready for spring training,” he said. “I don’t know how the knee is going to respond.

“I’ll try to get ready for spring training and we’ll see how it feels after that.”

The expected recovery time is about six months, giving him a chance to be ready for spring training in 2011.

Jones said earlier this season he would consider retirement after the season.

He was hurt in Tuesday night’s game at Houston. Jones fielded Hunter Pence’s grounder near third base, jumped in the air while making the throw to first, then collapsed to the ground in foul territory. Pence was out on the play.

“The play he got hurt on might have been the best play I’ve ever seen him make,” said Braves general manager Frank Wren, who sat beside Jones at Friday’s news conference. “I mean, that was a Brooks Robinson play.”

Jones missed all of 1994, which was expected to be his rookie season, with the same injury to the same knee.

“I know I lost a step the first time I had this surgery,” Jones said. “If I lose another step I’m going to be going backward.”

Jones said he’ll be able to walk away from the game if he finds in spring training he cannot play at an acceptable level.

“Yeah, and I’ll know pretty quick,” he said.

Jones said he is encouraged by medical advances since his 1994 surgery. He said today’s surgery will be an arthroscopic procedure.

remarks last year during his enshrinement speech drew some criticism after he singled out individuals whose slights had provided him with motivation.

Malone struggled with his emotions throughout his speech, especially at the end when he recalled his mother, saying she had died seven years ago Friday.

“I’m here because of her,” he said.

Malone also thanked late Utah Jazz owner Larry Miller for believing in him. Malone is a two-time MVP and second on the league’s career scoring list, and said his success came from staying true to his Louisiana roots.

“I hope I did it the way my peers did it before me,” Malone said. “I didn’t do anything but try to play hard.”

Earlier Friday, West said he believed his group of college players that won its eight games in Rome by 42.4 points per game was “the greatest amateur team that ever played.”

Bird seized on that to get the last word on the debate of which was the better team.

“I don’t know who had the best team, but I know the team in 1960 was a hell of a lot tougher than we were,” he said. “I couldn’t imagine the ‘92 team getting in a covered wagon for eight days, going across the country, jumping in the Atlantic Ocean, swimming for six days, then walking 3,000 miles to the Coliseum in Rome for a dollar a day.”

Cynthia Cooper, the first Hall of Famer from the WNBA, coach Bob Hurley of St. Anthony’s High School in New Jersey, and Lakers owner Jerry Buss also were inducted.

No apologies were necessarily when he scrambled his way to a 69, putting him at 2-under 142 and still very much alive in his quest to move to No. 1 in the world for the first time.

“This is a penalizing golf course to not play from the fairway,” Mickelson said. “And I certainly explored a lot of areas here. First 27 holes for me to keep it around par was a feat, and I drove it better the last nine holes. ... I just want to be in a position where if I play like I know I can, I can make up some ground. And I feel like I’m within striking distance.”

Join the crowd.

Bryce Molder, once regarded as a can’t-miss kid when he played on the same Georgia Tech team as Kuchar, made an impressive debut in his first PGA Championship. He made five birdies in a six-hole stretch and wound up with a 67.

That put him in a large group at 5-under 139 that included 19-year-old S.Y. Noh (71), 21-year-old Rory McIlroy (68), short-hitting Zach Johnson (70) and big-hitting Dustin Johnson (68).

back to the first game you played,” McNabb said. “Your adrenaline is high, and you have to settle down a little bit. The second time we went out, after our first drive, it led to us putting up some points. Then good things happen. There are a lot of things we have to work on, but I thought offensively we were able to progress.”

McNabb’s favorite target was tight end Chris Cooley, who caught three passes for 33 yards — a surefire harbinger of the regular season, especially with the Redskins still trying to figure out their receiver corps. McNabb’s last throw was the TD to Armstrong, who has made a surprisingly strong case for a roster spot.

Clinton Portis, with more competition than usual at camp, got more than his usual work for a first preseason game, carrying six times for 22 yards. Brandon Banks, an undrafted rookie receiver from Kansas State listed at 5-foot-7, made some look-at-me noise with a dynamic 77-yard punt return down the right sideline for a touchdown in the third quarter.

Eagles 28, Jaguars 27

PHILADELPHIA — Playing their first game without Donovan McNabb, the Philadelphia Eagles showed they have capable quarterbacks.

Starter Kevin Kolb was impressive and backup Michael Vick displayed flashes of his old self before rookie Mike Kafka rallied the Eagles to a 28-27 victory over the Jacksonville Jaguars in their preseason opener

Friday night.

Pro Bowl kicker David Akers made all five of his field goals, including a 36-yarder that gave the Eagles a one-point lead in the fourth quarter.

Jaguars backup Luke McCown picked apart Philadelphia’s junior-varsity secondary, throwing for 244 yards and three touchdowns. But the focus was on Kolb, anointed the starter and given a contract extension after McNabb was traded to Washington in April.

Kolb was 6 of 11 for 95 yards. Vick was 11 of 17 for 119 yards and ran for 50 yards. He made a couple spectacular plays, but also lost a fumble and threw an interception.

Falcons 20, Chiefs 10

ATLANTA — Matt Ryan played two decent series. Matt Cassel played four average ones.

Both quarterbacks lacked solid protection in the preseason opener, but Ryan’s Falcons got better play from their rookie reserves in Atlanta’s 20-10 victory over the Kansas City Chiefs on Friday night.

Dexter McCcluster, a second-round pick, made a few dazzling moves as a tailback and a slot receiver for Kansas City. But Dimitri Nance and Shann Schillinger helped put the Falcons ahead to stay early in the third quarter.

Nance, an undrafted rookie free agent from Arizona State, ran for a 3-yard touchdown to make it 10-3. Schillinger, a sixth-round cornerback, set up the score by picking off Brodie Croyle’s throw and returning it 29 yards.

NASCAR Martin now at ease with future secure

BROOKLYN, Mich. — Now that it's over, Mark Martin can admit that the speculation about his future at Hendrick Motorsports was weighing on him.

Confident that he'll be in Hendrick Motorsports' No. 5 car through the end of the 2011 season, Martin said the team mood feels much lighter this week.

"I think as hard as we tried to not let it have any effect on us, I think it did have an effect on how you feel," Martin said Friday at Michigan International Speedway. "It was fine for a while, but it wore on a long, long time."

Martin's place at Hendrick was subject to speculation after the team signed Kasey Kahne without having an open seat for next season.

Martin insisted all along that he wasn't going to be forced out a year early to make room for Kahne, and lashed out at reporters after facing persistent questions about his future. The situation was settled this week when it was revealed that Kahne will drive for Red Bull Racing next year, then go to Hendrick in 2012.

Martin said he regretted venting his frustration in public.

"I reflect back on how I reacted in Indy and regret what I said there," Martin said. "That came from the heart and not from the head. It was grinding on me, and I apologize for what I said and wish I hadn't said what I said. I should've just continued to hold on to the high road just a little bit longer, and it would've been all OK. Anyway, we're moving forward now."

Teammate Jimmie Johnson said Hendrick will benefit from knowing for sure that Martin will stick around for another year with a solid succession plan in place.

"I've always said that I've been in a very tough position as a driver at Hendrick Motorsports because Mark Martin brings so much to the table that I don't want to see him go anywhere," Johnson said. "At the same time we have Kasey Kahne, who is going to bring a ton to the table as well and be there to work with him and develop that relationship. I guess I always try to find the positive in things and we have two very good situations."

But that doesn't mean the NASCAR world suddenly will be free from speculation about the future of Martin, who once held a "Salute to You" tour to celebrate his impending retirement with fans. That was five years ago.

Now he'll definitely be out of Hendrick's No. 5 car after the 2011 season. But Martin, 51, doesn't know what he'll do after that and isn't in any hurry to decide.

"I'm going to let it ride pretty deep into next year, I think, before I make any kind of decision," Martin said. "Because I want to take the one that is most fulfilling to me, whatever that might be, whatever it entails. That's what I want to do."

Martin insists it is his choice to leave the No. 5 after next season.

"It's still looking too far forward to think about what might happen in (2012)," Martin said. "That was just too far out for me to make that type of commitment, so life's good right now."

And Martin made it clear that he doesn't hold any resentment toward Kahne — instead, he insists he cares deeply about finding a suitable replacement for a team he loves, and began recruiting Kahne before team owner Rick Hendrick did.

NASCAR driver Mark Martin signs autographs at Michigan International Speedway in Brooklyn, Mich., Friday.

Kahne wins pole for Michigan Cup race

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) — Kasey Kahne's future has been settled. The present doesn't look too bad for him, either.

After finally finding out where he'll be driving next season, Kahne turned in an impressive performance for his current team Friday, with a lap of 187.183 mph to win the pole position for Sunday's Sprint Cup race at Michigan International Speedway.

Kahne isn't sure whether facing an unsettled future affected his driving in recent weeks, but he does know it's nice to know he'll be driving for Red Bull Racing next season.

"I don't know how much that's been on my mind," Kahne said. "It's hard to say. I feel like I'm focused pretty good each week and really trying to do the right thing. It's something I definitely think about a lot. So I think that can help me some."

It is Kahne's second pole of the season and the 18th of his career. Jimmie Johnson qualified second, followed by Clint Bowyer, Tony Stewart and Juan Pablo Montoya.

It has been a big week for Kahne, who currently drives for Richard Petty Motorsports but has signed a contract with Hendrick Motorsports. Because Hendrick doesn't have a seat open in 2011, it was announced this week that Kahne will spend next season with Red Bull.

Kahne said he is looking forward to the move.

"I want to win races and I want to run competitively and make the Chase — things that I think you can do there," Kahne said. "Red Bull has shown that they can do (it) in the past. I feel like we'll be able to do it next year."

For now, Kahne is trying to finish the season strong for his current team.

"It's nice to have that done with and to know for myself where I'm going, to know what I'm doing and focus on the end of the year," Kahne said.

Bowyer's run was a boost for a team that comes into Sunday's race 13th in the points and is scrambling to become eligible for the Chase for the Sprint Cup.

"It was a well-needed run," Bowyer said. "Obviously these are important times for us, the situation we are in racing for this Chase spot. Starting up front at a big race track like this, to be in the clean air and having an opportunity to have a good pit stall goes a long ways toward a good run on Sunday. I'm very happy with the guys. Our cars are running well. We just keep having crazy things happen."

Johnson has yet to win a pole this season.

Carroll, Bradford get started today

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press writer

For those with little interest in NFL preseason football, understanding the excitement Pete Carroll and Sam Bradford are feeling is impossible.

It should be understandable considering Carroll will coach his first pro game in a decade and Bradford will play in his first NFL game tonight.

Enticed by $30 million and full power of football operations, Carroll left behind a dynasty at Southern California to become coach-vice president of the Seattle Seahawks. He'll lead them against the Tennessee Titans at Qwest Field, his first game on an NFL sideline since Jan. 2, 2000 at the helm of the Patriots.

Before his three seasons in New England, Carroll coached the Jets for a year.

"I can't wait to see the fans and see the crowd. I've heard so much about it," Carroll said. "There's no way I imagine anything close to what it's going to be like going in there for the first time when we're really cranking it up and it's game-time."

"We'll get to see how far we've come."

Folks in St. Louis will get to see how far top overall draft choice Bradford has come when the Rams host Minnesota. The quarterback's contract guarantees him $50 million and if all incentives are reached, the six-year deal is worth at least $78 million.

Bradford won't start — coach Steve Spagnuolo will go with journeyman A. J. Feeley for a dozen or so plays.

"Then Sam will get in there," Spagnuolo said. "Then, we'll decide how far we'll go with Sam based on how the game's going. I would think he would get through the second quarter. Then, whether we bring him out in the second half or not, we'll decide. We may not."

Bradford will take whatever he can get.

"I'm really excited and looking forward to getting out there and playing in an actual NFL game," Bradford said. "The butterflies aren't there yet but I'm sure they will be ... In college, you don't have preseason games. I'm going to treat it like the first game of the St. Louis Rams quarterback Sam Bradford drops back to pass during practice this week in St. Louis.

Also opening their preseason schedules tonight will be Tampa Bay at Miami; Detroit at Pittsburgh; Cleveland at Green Bay; Houston at Arizona; and Chicago at San Diego.

Carroll declined several previous offers to return to the NFL, and his Trojans were a powerhouse throughout his nine seasons at USC. He went 97-19, winning seven consecutive Pac-10 titles and two national championships.

It was something of a shock, then, when the Seahawks persuaded him to come to the Pacific Northwest.

His enthusiasm, though, is not at all surprising.

"No, I don't know if there's 'just any game' to me," he said. "This is huge. It is what it is, the first game of preseason. But to us, this is the first major test and it's our first opportunity to make major assessments."

In St. Louis, the assessment of Bradford also will begin, although expectations are low after the Rams went 1-15 last year. Besides, Bradford could be a backup when the schedule begins, if not for long after that.

For now, he gets to face the Vikings, an NFC favorite with a staunch defensive line.

"I'm kind of anxious to see how I react to a defense I haven't seen, an NFL defense that I haven't gotten reps against to see what the speed will be like during a game," Bradford said. "From everyone I've talked to, they say the speed definitely picks up during the game. I want to see how I react to all of that."

So does the rest of the league.

Steelers coach Mike Tomlin is noncommittal about using Ben Roethlisberger against the Lions. Roethlisberger's six-game suspension, which could be shortened by commissioner Roger Goodell, does not begin until after the preseason.

"I want to play — I want to be out there with the guys. I'd like to play the whole game," Roethlisberger said. "If coach says I'm not going to play, it's his call."

And Tomlin isn't making that call public yet.

"We're going to make you come to the stadium to check that out," Tomlin said.

Merriman signs tender, reports to Chargers

SAN DIEGO — Shawne Merriman signed his $3,269,000, one-year tender with the San Diego Chargers on Friday, admitting his two-week holdout didn't accomplish anything.

The star outside linebacker won't play in Saturday night's exhibition opener against Chicago, but coach Norv Turner expects him to be ready by the following weekend's game against Dallas.

Merriman, once one of the most-feared players in the NFL, stood on the sideline watching Friday's walk-through, the sleeves on his jersey rolled up to expose his tattooed arms.

"I think it was time for me to come in and get ready," said Merriman, who's trying to regain the form that resulted in 39½ sacks in his first three seasons. "You can't show up game one, game two, whatever, and expect to be ready. The only way to emulate football is to play football."

Merriman softened his stance on a handful of issues, including one in which he was quoted as saying he wanted the Chargers to tell him he wouldn't be traded during the season.

"Everybody's on the trading block, so I don't think that was a question at all. I think it was more of it being talked about so much. We have bigger fish to fry, and that's to play the Kansas City Chiefs and get ready for them," he said, referring to the season opener on Sept. 13.

"At no point in time did I want my conversation on where I'm going to play or what's going to happen be bigger than us getting ready for a game. At some point, it got there. That's what I wanted to stay away from. But I'm happy to be back here for another year, to come out and finish what we started with these guys. There's no better way to do it."

So did he accomplish anything by not being in camp?

"No I didn't accomplish anything at all because I always knew that I was wanted here and that was one of the biggest reasons for getting some things sorted out," he said.

49ERS RB GLEN COFFEE LEAVES TEAM, FOOTBALL

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Running back Glen Coffee left the San Francisco 49ers on Friday morning, telling the team he no longer wants to play football.

It was another sudden blow in a tumultuous week for the 49ers, who saw defensive lineman Kentwan Balmer leave the team Monday. Balmer, the team's first-round draft pick in 2008, missed practice for the fifth straight day Friday. His absences have been unexcused since Wednesday.

"We just respond to this and move forward," coach Mike Singletary said. "We're dealing with this in stride and continuing to have our best practice. The thing that we're trying to do as the 49ers is that we're trying to find 53 men that love the game of football"

Coffee apparently isn't one of those. In a statement released by the team, the second-year veteran said, "I feel it is best for me that I move on from football."

Coffee, San Francisco's third-round draft pick in 2009, was the team's second-leading rusher as a rookie last season with 226 yards, but he averaged just 2.7 yards per carry and scored one touchdown.

Coffee was in competition this summer with rookie sixth-round draft pick Anthony Dixon to be the team's top backup to Pro Bowl halfback Frank Gore. The 49ers are looking to ease the workload this season on Gore, who is coming off his team-record fourth consecutive 1,000-yard rushing season.

Singletary, who said Coffee "was having a fine camp," said Coffee's abrupt decision caught the team by surprise.

Coffee didn't show up for Thursday's afternoon practice and then informed Singletary of his decision Friday morning.

TY WARREN PLACED ON IR, BURGESS REPORTS

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — Bill Belichick's defensive rebuilding project just got bigger with defensive end Ty Warren sidelined for the season by a hip injury.

The New England Patriots placed Warren on injured reserve Friday after he missed most training camp practices and Thursday night's 27-24 win over the New Orleans Saints in an exhibition opener.

"Tough break, but we have to move on," Belichick said. "He's missed quite a bit of time the last couple of years, so we've had to deal with that anyway. Unfortunately, that's part of the game. We'll just move ahead."

Fortunately for the coach, line-backer Derrick Burgess reported Friday and was reinstated from the reserve-did not report list after considering retirement. He gives the Patriots an outside pass rusher, mitigating somewhat the loss of Warren. Burgess passed his physical and conditioning test Friday and is expected to practice Sunday after Saturday's day off.

He had 38 sacks in four seasons with the Oakland Raiders, then was traded before last season. He had five sacks with New England.

RAIDERS FRUSTRATED AFTER FIRST-TEAM OFFENSE STRUGGLES

ALAMEDA, Calif. — The talk of a revitalized offense for the Oakland Raiders under new quarterback Jason Campbell and coordinator Hue Jackson has been put on hold after the exhibition opener.

The first-team offense struggled to move the ball and was unable to generate any points in a little more than a quarter of action in Thursday night's 17-9 victory over the Dallas Cowboys.

The Raiders scored all of their points — including a late interception return for a touchdown by Jerome Boyd — in the fourth quarter, long after most of the regulars on both teams had called it a night.

"It's a guy here and a guy there," coach Tom Cable said Friday. "It looks to be probably a little better than what I thought last night after the game. So I think we can fix it, and fix it rather quickly."

Campbell was 7 for 13 for 49 yards in his first game with the Raiders, with most of his completions coming on short passes underneath.

The Raiders will be counting on much more from Campbell when the regular season starts. They acquired him in a draft-day trade from Washington and then cut loose former No. 1 overall pick JaMarcus Russell shortly after that.

The Raiders generated only one first down in three drives in the opening quarter with Campbell and the first-team offense. Cable then sent them out for an additional series that was a little more successful, although Dallas was resting some of its starters by then.

SIDES NEGOTIATE BUT 'NOTHING TO REPORT'

NEW YORK — The NFL and the players association met Friday for a negotiating session toward a new collective bargaining agreement, with a league spokesman saying there "was nothing to report."

Both sides have met infrequently this year, the final one before the CBA expires next March. The last meeting was in June, when they discussed adding two games to the regular season and reducing the preseason from four games to two.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

Today is Saturday, Aug. 14, the 226th day of 2010. There are 139 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On Aug. 14, 1935, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the Social Security Act into law.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1848, the Oregon Territory was created.

In 1900, international forces, including U.S. Marines, entered Beijing to put down the Boxer Rebellion, which was aimed at purging China of foreign influence.

In 1908, a race riot erupted in Springfield, Ill. as a white mob began setting black-owned homes and businesses on fire; at least two blacks and five whites were killed in the violence.

In 1909, the newly opened Indianapolis Motor Speedway held its first event, a series of motorcycle races.

In 1945, President Harry S. Truman announced that Japan had surrendered unconditionally, ending World War II.

In 1947, Pakistan became independent of British rule.

In 1969, British troops went to Northern Ireland to intervene in sectarian violence between Protestants and Roman Catholics.

In 1980, President Jimmy Carter and Vice President Walter Mondale were nominated for second terms at the Democratic national convention in New York.

In 1980, workers went on strike at the Lenin Shipyard in Gdansk, Poland, in a job action that resulted in the creation of the Solidarity labor movement.

In 1980, actress-model Dorothy Stratten, 20, was shot to death by her estranged husband and manager, Paul Snider, who then killed himself.

Ten years ago: On the opening night of the Democratic National Convention in Los Angeles, President Bill Clinton offered a triumphant review of his years in office, and exhorted delegates to propel Al Gore on the road to succeed him.

Five years ago: Israel sealed the Gaza Strip to Israeli civilians, signaling the start of the historic withdrawal from the Gaza Strip. A Cypriot plane crashed into a hill north of Athens, killing all 121 people on board. Cristeta Comerford was named the new White House executive chef, the first woman to hold the post.

One year ago: President Barack Obama denounced what he suggested was news media overemphasis on scenes of angry protesters at town-hall meetings on health care, telling his own town hall-style meeting in Belgrade, Mont. that "TV loves a ruckus." Charles Manson follower Lynette "Squeaky" Fromme, 60, convicted of trying to assassinate President Gerald Ford in 1975, was released from a Texas prison hospital after more than three decades behind bars.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Behold now this vast city (London); a city of refuge, the mansion-house of liberty, encompassed and surrounded with His protection."

— John Milton

How would you tackle today's deal from a duplicate at London's Young Chelsea Bridge Club? You are in four spades on the lead of the heart queen. North had a maximum for his initial raise, so he bid four hearts over your game-try of three hearts, a more accurate help-suit try than three clubs, since possessing the club king is not that important here. You naturally corrected to four spades.

The key to this deal (and to so many others) is to combine all your chances. The urgent need is to dispose of your third-round heart loser if possible. So win the heart king and play a diamond. West rises with the ace and plays another heart, which you win with the ace as East follows. The play in hearts suggests the suit is 3-3 (East would probably have echoed with a doubleton), so cash the diamond king while pitching a heart, ruff a heart with the spade 10, and now play the spade ace and another spade. West does best to win and exit with his last spade, but you win in dummy, cash the long heart while discarding a club, and lead a club to your eight. This endplays West, who must either give you a ruff and discard or lead a club into your tenace.

Even if East were able to win the spade king and switch to a club, when you play the eight, it would endplay West.

ANSWER: You may well ask what four diamonds shows. The answer is a good raise to four hearts with four trumps and a very good six-card diamond suit. With your two working cards, you are fractionally too good to bid only four hearts. A call of five hearts suggests a slam-try with no control in the black suits. Let partner bid on if he can control those suits.

IF AUGUST 14 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You may be challenged by unpredictable people and impulsive behavior that distract you from what is really important. During the upcoming month, strive to remain as professional as possible, even in your private life. By treating your love life with the same consideration you reserve for your job or business you will find that you can come to an understanding or safely weather any brief storms. Do not begin anything new, make important changes, or burn any bridges in January or February when you may be inundated by doubts or mistrust. Next May you might be blessed by a lucky opportunity but you also will find that your judgment is at its best and you can make sound decisions in all departments of your life.

HOROSCOPE Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Keep your head out of the clouds. You may hope that romance is budding with a special someone but the reality may be a different story. Blow off some steam with some good old physical activity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You can't debate with a fact. No matter how much you may want to rationalize your own viewpoint, the evidence is against it, so accept it and move on. Lend a sympathetic ear to a friend in need.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Let someone else take over the driver's seat for a while. Play "follow the leader" as you let a trusted companion make the plans for the day. Enjoy a trip or a barbecue in the backyard with favorite people.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Home is where the heart is. You'll get the most out of your weekend by spending it with close friends and loved ones. Romantic pursuits may seem promising, but are destined to end up at a dead end today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Explore your creative side. Too much focus on work may be diminishing your other talents. You need to create. Pick up a paintbrush, mold clay, or sing a song. Hold off on spending until next week.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't run your household like a business. You may be the ace of your staff at work, but at home a little more care is needed. Try not to be insensitive to the needs of your loved one and give them more quality time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Nice guys finish last. You may try to be diplomatic regarding a business matter, but a certain situation calls for decisiveness. A few toes might get stepped on in the process, but so be it. Lay down the law.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The only thing to fear is fear itself. Don't let doubts and vague concerns hold you back from accomplishing your goals. The only real consequence is failure and you can always start over again.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do or do not, there is no try. You can discuss a matter until blue in the face, but if you don't take action no one will take you seriously. Agreements or contracts made today can meet with complications.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't be overconfident in your own abilities. Your discretion is likely to be slightly off center so it would be wise to hold off on making major decisions, purchases or undertaking new projects.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If it isn't broken, don't fix it. You are right on track with your long-term goals but impatience may have you feeling like you need to take action. Don't rock the boat, be patient, and let nature run its course.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Change isn't always a good thing. Do not accept radical ideas simply because they are different. Determine whether these ideas actually have any real merit and if they don't, stick with what has worked before.

DEAR ABBY: I am a girl who has had my heart broken for the first time. I know I should get over this boy, but I can't stop thinking about him. My mom loved him. We hung out every weekend for six months.

I thought I might have been pregnant. I'm not -- but I want to be. I know I'm not ready to be a mom, but I want someone to love me and depend on me. I need someone who won't leave me. I know my baby wouldn't.

Should I become a mom? How do I get over my boyfriend? Do I stop talking to him and just be his friend? Abby, tell me the right way.

— LOVESICK IN YUCCA VALLEY, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne
Phillips

DEAR LOVESICK: Becoming a mother is not the way out of your heartache. Any young woman considering having a child must ask herself how she can provide financially and emotionally for that child. Most teenaged girls who become pregnant do not complete their high school education, and it has a negative impact on their ability to provide for themselves and their children.

The right way to work through this breakup is to talk to your mother or another trusted adult about your feelings. Stop trying to maintain contact with your former boyfriend. To continue will only prolong your pain. Dedicate yourself to achieving the most you can for yourself in sports and academics. It will give you less time to brood, and the more you achieve the more sought-after you will become.

It won't happen overnight. It will take time, concentration and dedication. If you take my advice you will come out of this disappointment a much happier person. But having a baby is NOT the answer.

DEAR ABBY: Eight months ago I began a weight-loss program the same week as my best friend, "Darby." We both have the same amount to lose, but she is using an expensive "liquid fast" combined with a private personal trainer at a gym. She has already spent a few thousand dollars.

I am working completely on my own, and have lost 30 pounds. Darby has lost 32.

She came over to visit and brought with her a huge stack of her old clothes, saying they no longer fit, but implying they would fit me! I do weigh a bit more than she does, but I am 4 inches taller.

I was offended, but too shocked to say anything. I put the clothes in my coat closet to dispose of later. What should I have said to my "friend"? I am really hurt.

— INSULTED IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR INSULTED: How about this? "Thank you. Perhaps I can have them taken in or lengthened -- or save them for a short, fat friend!"

DEAR ABBY: When I am the guest in someone's car, I always offer money for gas -- $20 if it's a day-long trip, for example. If I'm short of cash, I'll tell the driver in advance and contribute once I get the money.

I know someone who seldom contributes money for gas when we travel long-distance together. He's not unemployed or financially strapped, either. Is this rude on his part?

— SIGHTSEER IN JERSEY CITY

DEAR SIGHTSEER: It qualifies as insensitive -- and possibly cheap. Before agreeing to another jaunt with this person, be sure you have an agreement in advance about how much he will be ponying up for petrol.
