That's just part of the latest salvo since a federal judge returned gray wolves to the endangered species list at the beginning of the month. On Monday, the Fish and Game Commission passed a resolution pledging its support for overturning U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy both in the courts and in Congress, and laid out its objections to his decision: it's "contrary to State management of wildlife, the intent and purpose of the Endangered Species Act and the clear

Zen and the art of starting a lawnmower

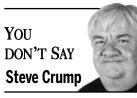

• oday's topic is mojo. Mojo is the alchemy of making things happen that shouldn't happen. You know, like compelling a vending machine to accept a $1 bill without spitting it back in your face.

In his classic 1974 book "Zen and the Art of Motorcycle Maintenance," philosopher Robert Pirsig had this to say about that:

"The test of the machine is the satisfaction it gives you. There isn't any other test. If the machine produces tranquility it's right. If it disturbs you it's wrong until either the machine or your mind is changed."

That's a philosophy exactly 36 years out of date. As evidence, I would submit a 2007 John Deere walk-behind lawnmower of my acquaintance.

It doesn't start. Heck, it

1. Pull the choke near the right fender while engaging the crank lever under the radiator, slowly turning it a quarter-turn clockwise to prime the carburetor with fuel.

2. Get into the car. Insert the key and turn the setting to either magneto or battery. Adjust the timing stalk upward, move the throttle stalk downward slightly for an idle setting and pull back on the hand brake, which places the car in neutral.

3. Sprint to the front of the car and crank the lever. Give it a vigorous half-crank, and the engine should start.

hasn't really started since, well, 2007.

But make no mistake: John Deere rules my household like Al Pacino's Tony Montana held sway over Miami in "Scarface."

It all began as a misguided attempt to Buy American. My wife wanted to get a Honda, of which she's reminded me daily ever since.

Instead, Sundays find me obsessed with green-andyellow, trying to persuade an internal combustion engine that doesn't wanna to combust.

Last Sunday the John Deere remained inert despite my vigorous exertions otherwise.

"It's trash," Victoria said. "It's a challenge," I allowed.

So I replaced the spark plug. Cleaned the air filter with a Power Wash. Scrubbed and de-grassified every square inch. Still wouldn't go.

That's because I don't have The Gift.

My dad had The Gift. When he was a 10-year-old on a farm south of Pocatello - it was, after all, the Great Depression – it was his job to go outdoors on frosty mornings and start his father's 1923 Model T.

Here's how that was supposed to go:

over. Assuming, of course, the aforementioned process hasn't broken vour arm first.

My father could make the Model T sputter to life every time. My grandpa never could.

And so it goes with John Deere lawnmowers. I don't have The Gift, so I spend Sunday afternoons at Lowe's, scratching my head.

The manual pull crank availeth not, causing me to utter oaths that would have mortified my mother. I turn the mower on its right side, and then its left. And then I repeat incantations, race around the mower, drop to my knees and chant "John Deere" three times.

Nada.

No mojo. No joy. Not much, anyway.

"Stuckness shouldn't be avoided," Pirsig advised. "It's the psychic predecessor of all real understanding."

So I guess it's my existential destiny to skulk around the grotesquely overgrown greensward on Sunday afternoons, shouting words I never read in the Bible. And if the mower never starts, that's well – my zen. Borrow your goat?

State board votes to close troubled charter school

By Jessie L. Bonner Associated Press Writer

BOISE – The state Board of Education is upholding the closure of a charter school that had been tangled in a debate over classroom use of the Bible and is now being shuttered over money problems.

The board further considered an appeal Tuesday from Nampa Classical Academy administrators, who vowed to shed their combative reputation and work with the state to stay open. The Idaho Public Charter School Commission decided earlier this year to close the academy, which opened last year and had more than 500 students enrolled for this fall.

The charter school appealed that decision to the board, which voted 4-3 to uphold the revocation despite a warning from public schools chief Tom Luna, who cautioned their actions would have severe ramifications for hundreds of students.

"We're talking about doing something that is maybe one of the most difficult and important decisions that this board will make and that is actually closing down a school," said Luna, who was among three board who voted against the measure.

A majority of the students who attend the academy are from middle- to lowincome families, said Mike Moffett, vice chairman of Nampa Classical Academy's governing board.

"That's the hardest part about this whole thing," Moffett said after the board voted, holding back tears. "Most of those kids have lost their only opportunity to have this type of education."

While other Idaho charter schools have been closed, this is the first to have its charter revoked by the state's 6-year-old charter school commission. The panel was created to give charter schools another route to approval, besides the local school district, and now governs about half of the charter schools in the state.

These schools are funded with public money but given more freedom in how they operate.

The movement to create new, more autonomous public schools allowed the Nampa charter school to establish a curriculum education grounded in grammar, logic, rhetoric, arithmetic, geometry, music and astronomy. The school also wanted to use the Bible and other religious texts for their literary and historic qualities, as part of a secular education program.

The plan, however, prompted the charter school commission to review use of religious texts in the classroom.

The U.S. Supreme Court banned ceremonial school Bible readings in 1963 but said "the Bible is worthy of study for its literary and historic qualities" so long as material is "presented objectively as part of a secular program of education."

Yellowstone Club's financial collapse pinned on founder

By Matthew Brown Associated Press Writer

BILLINGS, Mont. – A federal judge has pinned the financial collapse of Montana's ultra-exclusive Yellowstone Club on a series of fraudulent deals by founder Tim Blixseth, but says he doesn't have to repay all the resort's debts.

Attorneys in the case said Tuesday that Blixseth could end up on the hook for only $20 million to $65 million. That's versus more than $200 million in claims against the club that are still outstanding - money that for now will remain in Blixseth's pocket.

In a 135-page ruling, U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Ralph Kirscher slammed Blixseth for patterns of "self-dealing" and "deception" that allowed the real estate mogul to siphon hundreds of millions of dollars from the private ski club.

Yet Kirscher said some blame for the bankruptcy was shared by the financial giant Credit Suisse.

The firm arranged a 2005 loan to the club knowing Blixseth intended to take most of it - money he later used to buy multiple highend estates and luxury planes and to pad his personal bank accounts.

"Blixseth and Credit Suisse have done a lot of finger pointing in this case, but in the end their conduct several fraudulent transfers by Blixseth leading up to the bankruptcy and as part of his divorce. The judge rejected Blixseth's repeated claims that the club was in good shape when he left and that he was the victim of a conspiracy hatched by Edra and the club's new owner. Boston-based CrossHarbor Capital Partners.

"Blixseth testified at trial that he wanted to see the creditors of the Yellowstone Club paid and that the buck stops with him. The Court agrees," Kirscher wrote.

Yet in a major break for Blixseth, the judge denied repayment of the outstanding amount on the 2005 loan.

Thomas Beckett, a Utah attorney formerly involved in the case, said the decision could have been much worse for the embattled Blixseth.

"If the party who is suing you for $225 million is suddenly told they can't, on some level it's a good day," Beckett said.

The legal options remaining for Credit Suisse and its investors appear limited because the loan was issued on a nonrecourse basis. That means Blixseth cannot be held individually liable.

ARIZONA Authorities: Fugitives may be living off land

FLAGSTAFF - Authorities say an escaped Arizona inmate might have some survival skills, allowing him and his accomplice to hide out in remote locations.

The last credible sighting of John McCluskey and Casslyn Welch, his cousin and fiancee, was 11 days ago in Montana. Welch is accused of helping McCluskey and two other inmates escape from the state prison in Kingman, Ariz., on July 31.

Authorities said Tuesday that McCluskey and Welch might be living off the land, reducing the need for the pair to move around in public areas.

McCluskey and Welch have experience as long-haul truck drivers, and authorities say they're comfortable using trucks stops to shower and eat.

Å $35,000 reward is being offered for information that leads to their arrest.

IDAHO Attorney: Man videotaped kids over safety concern

BOISE – A lawyer for a Boise man accused of videotaping children playing in a front yard and pointing a loaded handgun at their mother says he acted as a concerned neighbor.

Police arrested 38-year-old Travis Brumley late Friday after finding him crouched behind a fence near the home in north Boise where the children were playing.

Brumley's attorney, Brian Blender, told a 4th District Court judge Monday that the man videotaped the kids because they were playing in the street and he wanted to show police that they were not safe.

Detectives say at one point, Brumley pulled a handgun on the children's mother after she confronted him.

Brumley faces two charges, felony aggravated assault and being in possession of a firearm while intoxicated, at an Aug. 30 preliminary hearing.

Fire-lobbing choppers ready for controlled burns ging liquid-fuel torches plan to ignite a controlled inferno in western Idaho forests later this

The controlled burns will be conducted from September to early November, with a special effort made not to disrupt hunting activities in the Weiser and Council Ranger Districts.

The choppers will drop burning gel or incendiary balls into remote reaches of the Payette, while more sensitive or accessible areas will see crews torching the forest by hand.

These burns duplicate natural fires that have long been suppressed, but traditionally helped to clear the area every 10 to 70 years, creating habitat that was more conducive to wildlife.

Reducing dry forest vegetation helps prevent intense wildfires that could damage watersheds or healthy forest stands.

Nampa to pay prosecutor directly for services

NAMPA - Nampa city leaders have agreed to pay Canyon County Prosecutor John Bujak directly for contract legal work instead of paying him through the county assessor's office.

The city council voted to make the switch on Monday, and to give Bujak a new contract starting Oct. 1. The payments to Bujak for handling the city's misdemeanor caseload drew public scrutiny earlier this year after details of the arrangement were reported in the media. The deal was also the subject of a lawsuit filed by a citizen concerned that Bujak could gain personally; a judge ruled that Bujak's agreement with the city and related financial documents weren't public record.

The Idaho Press-Tribune reports that the city is paying Bujak nearly $600,000 this fiscal year for the service. He assigns county prosecutors to do the work and then pays them with the money, and the leftover funds may be used at his discretion.

prompted (the club's) bankruptcies," Kirscher wrote.

Neither Blixseth nor his attorneys immediately returned telephone calls and an e-mail from The Associated Press seeking comment.

Built by Blixseth and his former wife, Edra, in southwest Montana's Madison mountains, the Yellowstone Club demands a multimillion dollar investment from would-be members.

Though it has since emerged from bankruptcy, in 2008 the club's reputation as a haven for the megarich disintegrated as the Blixseths went through a bitter and highly publicized divorce.

Within months of Tim Blixseth passing the keys for the club to Edra, the resort fell into massive debt. Unable to repay the $375 million loan Tim had taken out under the club's name, it declared bankruptcy in November 2008.

Gay aviator reaches deal to halt discharge – for now

By Jessie L. Bonner Associated Press writer

BOISE – An aviator has reached an agreement with the U.S. Air Force to temporarily block his discharge rary under the "don't ask, don't tell" law that bars openly gay and lesbian military members from military service.

The Servicemembers Legal Defense Network says an agreement reached in federal court Monday prevents the Air Force from discharging Lt. Col. Victor Fehrenbach until a hearing on a court order to stop his ouster from the military is held.

The servicemembers advocacy group, which seeks equal treatment of gays in the military, is representing Fehrenbach in his legal fight to keep his job and filed a federal lawsuit on his behalf last Wednesday.

The case was filed in sides to make their case at a Investigations, which found Idaho, where Fehrenbach is court hearing on a prelimi- them to be without merit,

Making middle school matter: An idea with Magic Valley roots ob Sauer didn't invent the concept of middle school accountability, but he's sure put the notion on the front burner in Idaho education.

Starting this school year, the Middle Level Credit System — a product of the Idaho State Board of Education's Middle Level Task Force - will require seventh- and eighth-grade students to complete at least 80 percent of the class credits they take to move to the next grade.

Students won't be able to advance a grade if they fail a full year in one subject, such as math. Those who don't meet requirements or who are in danger of failing will receive credit-recovery opportunities to help them become eligible to advance to the next grade.

Sauer, the state deputy superintendent of public instruction and accountability and a former principal at Wendell Middle School and the Bliss School, has nurtured the idea since he joined Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna's staff in 2007.

"Students understand that middle level doesn't count," Sauer said. "Now they can say, 'I have some responsibility in this?"

Some Idaho school districts implemented the program on a trial basis and found great success, he said. Sauer started a similar program at Wendell Middle School.

Individual districts will be permitted to develop their own plans to help students meet the requirements.

Extra funding wasn't appropriated for schools to implement the program, so districts will have to decide whether they'll need to hire more teachers to provide summer school or after-hours remedial

Our view: In his quest for a second term, Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna can point to student accountability as one the bigger achievements of his first term.

What do you think?

We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Partisanship turns off independent voters

ASHINGTON -Last November, as members of the House of Representatives considered the health care reform bill, President Obama made a dramatic trip to Capitol Hill. After closing down 16 blocks of Pennsylvania Avenue, a halfmile long White House motorcade whisked the presidential entourage past cheering tourists to meet with the House Democratic Caucus.

Despite the drama, these trips rarely occur if the outcome is unknown. No sense aggravating a bunch of taxi drivers if you're not going to win

When he arrived before the roaring group of lawmakers, the president oozed transformational hyperbole. Even lowly House members could "make history" by passing the measure, the president apparently told his audience, according to news accounts. But not everyone bought the narrative. "He can make history," one conservative Democrat reportedly said after the meeting. "But I'll be history if I vote for that thing."

Notwithstanding those concerns, we all know how the story ended.

Democratic partisans hoped enacting health care would boost the president's and Congress's sagging popularity, particularly with fickle independent voters who supported Democrats in 2006 and 2008, but have GOP's direction this year.

The same calculus moti-

Legislative success produces political popularity, Democrats argue. Bill Clinton and his party, after all, lost the majority in Congress in 1994 because they failed to pass health care, right?

Yet despite all the legislative notches carved in their belts, Democratic prospects for 2010 still look bleak. It turns out congressional productivity isn't political alchemy after all.

Some believe it's content, voter angst.

But beyond policy disagreements and a languid economy, I believe a third explanation deserves consideration, particularly when it comes to that often pivotal 10 percent to 15 percent of the electorate: Independents do not identify or lean toward one party or the other.

These voters, by and large, value balance. By more than a 2-to-1 margin, an April 2010 Resurgent Republic poll found independents favored a Republican Congress to serve as a check-and-balance on President Obama compared to a Democratic Congress to help the White House pass its agenda.

So what have these voters witnessed from Washington in the past 18 months? First, a president who promised to rise above partisanship. Second, a Democratic majority in Congress with the means to accomplish its goals without any Republican support.

Together, these two factors sowed seeds of doubt among independents.

A Republican political consultant I talked to elaborated. "What I've seen in polling and focus groups is that a red flag goes up with these independents when they watch what has happened over the past year or so. They wonder how it can be that nearly everyone from one party is for something and everyone from the other party is against it. Something fishy must be going on!"

Strong partisan behavior always aggravates voters with weak or nonexistent partisan ties. Collective decisions by the president and his party leaders in Congress to bypass Republicans over the past 18 months have contributed to a sharp decline in Democrats' standing with independent voters. And as a result, there won't be nearly as many cheerleaders in the majority party when Obama comes to call on the Hill this winter.

not volume, hurting the Democrats. But that argument explains only part of the problem. Other clouds contribute to Obama and his party's dreary political state. Indeed, nagging fears about the economy also deepen classes.

Electives will be the first to go for students who are behind, Sauer said, but the program's goal is to reduce dropout rates and provide advisory programs for students in their formative years.

"This is just one more tool to identify those students who need help," he said. "We want to provide the right support to the right students at the right time."

While school accountability is the philosophy that drives No Child Left Behind – the 2001 law that dominates public education in the United States - perhaps Luna's greatest achievement in his 3 1/2 years as superintendent in Idaho is insisting on student accountability.

The Middle Level Credit System is the centerpiece of that initiative, and a Magic Valley educator made it happen.

he annual analysis of Medicare's financial health released by the program's trustees on Aug. 5 led some Democrats to claim Medicare's imminent bankruptcy has been delayed, thanks to the creation of their health entitlement program. Only in Washington could the government raid one entitlement program to finance a brand-new one and still claim deficits have been reduced and entitlements have been reformed.

The trustees' report compares the revenue that supports Medicare's trust funds with the program's planned expenditures. Last year's report revealed a $38 trillion shortfall over the next 75 years. This year the shortfall appears to have decreased, but only after the Democrats' health bill cut $529 billion from Medicare. This apparent improvement was the basis for Democratic celebration even though the program remains tens of trillions of dollars in the hole.

With the same legislation that cut more than half a trillion dollars in Medicare spending, the Democrats created a nearly $1 trillion health-care entitlement. The Obama administration's own chief actuary has explained that in addition to the dubious assumptions on provider cuts and other claims of savings, the health-care law's Medicare cuts cannot be used to reduce Medicare's unfunded obligations and pay for a new entitlement. And the Congressional Budget Office said in March that the healthcare overhaul's Medicare savings "would be used to pay for other spending and therefore would not enhance the ability of the government to pay for future Medicare benefits." Put simply, Medicare is on course to collapse. Medicare and interest on the national debt alone will soon overwhelm the federal budget, crowding out all other national priorities. The CBO estimates Medicare will consume 12 percent of gross domestic product by 2080 (up from 3.6 percent of GDP today), bringing total health entitlement spending to 17 percent of GDP. Exacerbating our unsustainable trajectory, health spending explodes under the Democrats' health plan raiding Medicare, expanding Medicaid and creating two entitlements without any clue of how to finance the ones we have now. The economy simply cannot handle such crushing levels of taxation and the borrowing required to finance this spending: the CBO warned last month of a devastating debt crisis within two decades.

We do not have a choice as to whether Medicare will change from its current structure. It is being driven to insolvency. An honest debate requires a serious discussion of how Medicare will avert its collapse and be made sustainable.

The CBO has said that my reform plan, "A Roadmap for America's Future," would put Medicare on a sustainable path. The plan protects and preserves Medicare for those enrolled now and for those who will become eligible in the next 10 years, while reforming the program to ensure it will be there for younger generations. Future seniors would have access to the same coverage I enjoy as a congressman.

Far from the claims of "radicalism," this proposal is based on a key reform from the National Bipartisan Commission on the Future of Medicare, chaired by then-Sen. John Breaux, D-La. That commission in 1999 recommended "modeling a system on the one members of Congress use to obtain health care coverage for themselves and their families."

Future Medicare beneficiaries would receive a payment to apply to a list of Medicarecertified coverage options. The Medicare payment would grow every year, with additional support for those who have low incomes and higher health costs, and less government support for highincome beneficiaries. The most vulnerable seniors would receive supplemental Medicaid coverage and continue to be eligible for Medicaid's long-term care benefit.

If we act now, we can avoid disruptions for current seniors while advancing patientcentered reforms so Medicare will be strengthened for future beneficiaries. The alternative is the Europeanstyle death spiral of the welfare state.

A new breed of superhero wielding their swords and their brains, riding their fabulous horses (or racing on foot) and occasionally allowing themselves a romantic turn. But never does sex, romance or girlie frailty get in the way of the mission: Kill the enemy, stand and conquer.

And so it is today, in this summer of female action heroes. I am talking about Angelina Jolie as the protean CIA undercover agent Evelyn Salt in the film Salt, and Noomi Rapace as Lisbeth Salander, the enigmatic bisexual computer genius in the fiction monster hit of our young decade, Stieg Larsson's The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo and its sequels, The Girl Who Played With Fire and The Girl Who Kicked the Hornet's Nest.

Jolie, who made her action-hero mark as the leather-clad archaeologist Lara Croft in the box-office hit Tomb Raider movies, has turned the action up several notches as an icyhot American operative accused of being a Russian sleeper agent. She joked about wanting to play James Bond but may have gotten something better: a role originally written for Tom Cruise. Jolie transforms the testosterone-and-octane Salt into a compelling and intriguing character – yes, even more exciting than Jason Bourne, on whom Salt is pretty much modeled.

Salander is something else altogether. Frail and small (less than 90 pounds, under 5 feet tall), she's antisocial, sullen, cynical. She fears nothing. She outwits assassins. She outruns and outsmarts hired thugs and cretins. She learned cruelty early — as a child, her mother was abused — and grows up distrustful, reclusive, elusive and dangerous. She is a loner. She has a certain androgynous beauty, a pierced and tattooed body, chopped-up dark hair, and she treats sex as an exercise, without emotion or senti-since the mid-20th century there have been plenty of antecedents for Salt and Salander: Xena, Warrior Princess, the Powerpuff Girls, Wonder Woman, Sarah Connor in The Terminator, La Femme Nikita, Ellen Ripley (Sigourney Weaver) in Alien, Beatrix Kiddo (Uma Thurman) in "Kill Bill." It can't be an accident of timing.

And whether Salt and Salander are women as imagined by men may not really be important. I believe they are idealized women even if we don't want to kill people, in real life, we want to be as cool, competent, in control and right as they are. These outsize characters strike a chord deep in us — that's why we fill the theaters for "Salt" and why we buy Larsson's books by the millions.

This summer in particular. On cable there's Annie Walker (Piper Perabo), the muscled blond beauty who plays an undercover spy in the new USA show Covert Affairs. There's Jane Rizzoli (Angie Harmon) in TNT's new hit drama Rizzoli & Isles, who shoots, thinks and moves like the toughest cop around, all the while ignoring or unaware that she is drop-dead gorgeous.

None of these women are domesticated. They run with wolves, usually alone, sometimes in pairs, but always ahead of the game. In our dreams — and in our fears.

Luisita Lopez Torregrosa writes for Politics Daily. She wrote this commentary for the Los Angeles Times.

Why aren't girls allowed in all levels of scouting?

t the 11,500-foot pass, 51/2 hours after arising at 4 a.m. to climb 2,500 feet out of a canyon, our Scout crew of five girls and three boys faced a decision. Weary with full backpacks, we could head 3,000 feet down to our next camp, or up to the summit of the 12,441foot Baldy Mountain, the highest peak of Philmont Scout Ranch located near Cimarron, N.M. Baldy would add two hours of hiking and create a 14-mile day. No one hesitated. Shouts rang out. "Let's do it!" "To the top!" "Baldy!"

In medieval spirit, we formed a circle, raised our trekking poles and crossed them to bond us for the ascent. Despite 50-mile-anhour gusts, mild altitude nausea, and being distracted by a cute marmot, we made it to the summit. All-male crews congratulated us in awe as we lurched upward with lungs heaving. Most notable was our 13-year-old, 5-foot, 2-inch, 98-pound crew leader, Ariela Schear. All you could see of her from behind was her backpack.

The only height that now mattered was 12,441 feet. As we hiked down toward camp during our 10-night, 84mile trek, Scouts on horseback complained about being tired. Their guide shot back, "Tired? Those Scouts just did Baldy with full packs!"

This could be the future of a new Boy Scouts of America. This is its 100th anniversary, and, as many know, its future is uncertain. Scout membership has withered since the 1970s from 4.8 million to 2.8 million. While its "on my honor" community values remain timeless and its outdoor program is needed more than ever in a nation that is 27-percent obese, the Boy Scouts of America has diminished itself with stale positions on social issues.

One way it can modernize on a massive scale is to invite girls to participate, from Cub Scout to Eagle Scout.

Very young mixed-gender scouting is normal throughout Europe and in countries like Belize, South Africa, Singapore, New Zealand, and Japan. The Boy Scouts of America bans girls from traditional scouting until highschool-age Venturing, much too late to pique youth interest in mountains. So since 2003, my wife and an Eagle Scout mother, Michelle Holmes, has recruited elementary-age girls for Scout activities under the Scoutsaffiliated and coed Learning for Life after-school program.

Eight of our 11 Philmont girls since 2006 started as "Boy Scouts?' Most were Girl Scout dropouts seeking outdoor challenges. Five girls have returned to Philmont on more treks or on staff. A sixth worked at the Kandersteg International Scout Centre in Switzerland. We are not alone in desiring this kind of scouting. On this last trip to Philmont, which included four-story rock climbing and lumberjack pole climbing, many adult advisers of all-boy crews from the heartland states of Texas, Kansas. Missouri and Illinois said it broke their hearts to tell daughters who tagged along on scout trips that there is Scouts. It hurt so because there is no modern rationale. The Boy Scouts of America can mend these broken hearts. In our normal weekly

no place for them in Boy

troop meetings, our elected vouth leaders have swung back and forth between boys and girls with neither gender "taking over?" Eagle Scout Marcel Moran, a Harvard University senior and 2004 Philmont crew leader, supports female membership after seeing them go "toeto-toe with our boys to the tops of mountains, biking tens of miles and in service and leadership." Our first girl, Harvard junior Hannah Lyons-Galante, said of her pioneering 2003 year, "The boys still goofed off, played cards, told dirty jokes, but they respected me and we ended up having a great time together?' The boys respected her so much, they urged her to go to Philmont. She became our 2006 crew leader. Levie Fernandes, 15, vom-ited while climbing a steep Vermont trail on her first backpacking trip. But she said, "I wasn't going to give up. Scouts is about doing hard things and you're not supposed to give up when things get hard." Beau Rideout, 13, remains impressed with how 12year-old Madeline Desnoyers led the final climb in zero windchill at 3,300 feet on an overnight White Mountain snowshoe trip. "If the girls are willing to do the work," he said, "why shouldn't they be Eagle Scouts?"

Madeline, who has bicycled 300 miles across Ohio with her family, asks that question herself. In Cub Scouts, she did all the requirements for its highest award, the Arrow of Light. She is now working on Boy Scout "advancement." She wrote in an e-mail, "I am at least as capable of achieving Eagle Scout as any other scout in my troop, but I am not allowed to become one, because I am a girl ... I've always dreamed of being an Eagle Scout. I like hiking and nature, and I also want to prove that girls can do just as much as boys ... Eagle Scout is my goal as much as the next kid in scouting and I don't want anything to get in my way of reaching it?"

Salt and Salander flip conventional notions of gender roles.

Are these women the new models of millennial femininity? Do they sacrifice being "real" women to fit a male fantasy? Or are Salt and Salander the right ideal: brainy, independent, physically and emotionally tough, sexual but coldblooded? The movie critic Owen Gleiberman declared them "the new normal." But are they?

While a Tom Cruise action character could have a wife and kids, Evelyn Salt could not. Mothers define attachments; they aren't free to run for their lives. No mother would walk on a narrow ledge way above the ground or jump from a bridge railing onto a speeding truck below or wipe out a gang of Russian killers without breaking a sweat, mowing them down like a row of toy ducks at the country fair, after she watches them kill her husband with a shot to the head. Evelyn Salt had to be childless and a widow. Among reviewers and bloggers and commenters and my friends, women are split on this thing about Salt and Salander. Men swoon over Salt and back up Salander, but women are not so sure. Some adore Salander and, to a lesser extent, Salt. Some see them as weird, narcissistic and heartless, putting their careers above the gentler pleasures of womanhood. And many women, while applauding Salt's guts and Salander's sang-froid, take it all in as just pulseracing entertainment.

Fitting females to these kinds of violent, physical heroics is rare in the Western canon dating to the Greeks and Romans. But

Low Prices. No Hoops.

Some businesses (we won't mention any names) would have you believe that paying less for groceries is a privilege that has to be earned – by filling out a form, adding yet another piece of plastic to your already overburdened key ring, and putting up with "targeted mailings" (also known as junk mail). Call us old fashioned, but we believe every person who walks through our doors deserves the very lowest prices, period. And we're also convinced that – even in the 21st century – customers should always come before marketing databases. So although we may not be able to keep track of who you are, where you live, and how many mailers we've sent you in the last six months, we can offer you great prices and friendly service – without making you jump through a single hoop.

HilexPoly and a dubious headline ometimes a headline doesn't do a storr doesn't do a story justice. For example, the Associated Press blundered BITES a headline that read "Missippi's literacy program shows improvement." Or, there was the Tulsa (Oklahoma) World headline that stated the obvious, "Federal agents raid gun shop – find weapons." The Los Angeles Times overstated in a headline that "Police arrest everyone on February 22nd."

BIZ Joshua Palmer

Really? That's about 3.7 million people. In the battle to write snappy headlines on deadline, newspapers sometimes miss the mark, not realizing the overstatement or error until the next morning – when it's too late. On Aug. 8, we ran the following headline in the Times-News' Business section: "HilexPoly may be next on the endangered list."

The story was about how a wave of environmental initiatives in California, Oregon and other states might affect the company's bottom line.

HilexPoly is a sound organization - with the exception of some debt restructuring in 2008, the company has experienced steady growth. According to Dun & Bradstreet, it has outperformed most of its competitors despite the difficult economy. The Jerome plant is currently at capacity after expanding in late 2008, which added about 30 new jobs.

Company officials don't discount the fact that there are some headwinds, but they say the ship is still running lean and strong. "The bill in California

But the headline suggested that the company was in some sort of peril, which isn't true - HilexPoly is actually launching an ambitious lobbying effort against total bans on single-use plastic bags. The Times-News is following the company's lobbying efforts, as well as its aggressive recycling program. These stories are slated to be published within a couple of weeks. Officials at HilexPoly agreed the problem wasn't so much the story as it was the headline, which caused some employees to fear for their jobs. They shouldn't worry – the company is investing heavily in recycling operations, which most states favor over outright bans of single-use plastic bags.

It said the BHP Billiton bid is nonbinding and "opportunistic." "The fertilizer industry is emerging from the recent global economic downturn, and we feel strongly that PotashCorp shareholders should benefit from the current and potential value of the company," Potash said. "Global demand for food is steadily increasing, creating an attractive operating environment for the entire fertilizer industry and, with our premier position, PotashCorp is uniquely poised to benefit." Potash consumption has been growing over the past decade because of greater demand for fertilizer from developing nations. Potash is any of several compounds containing potassium, used chiefly in fertilizers. Its main markets are China, the U.S., Brazil and India. Last month the Canadian company reported its second-quarter net income more than doubled to $472 million, or $1.55 per share, as revenue surged 68 percent to $1.44 billion. BHP Billiton confirmed it made an approach to Potash. In a statement, it said Potash's board has not yet agreed to engage in discussions. BHP said it continues to review its options. BHP has been ramping up its Potash mining business in Canada for the past four years. It holds exploration permits for over 7,338 square kilometers in Saskatchewan, where its best prospect so far - the "Iansen Project" - is expected to begin producing potash from 2015. BHP bought out its Anglo Potash Ltd. joint venture in Canada for $282 million in 2008 and bought Athabasca Potash Inc. earlier this year for about $320 million, extending its potential exploration acerage in Canada to over 14,000 kilometers. The mining giant has said it sees potash as a relatively low cost business that offers it significant growth.

Patrick Gray Sharp died after a shootout with officers. but it's unclear whether he was killed by an officer's bullet or one of his own, McKinney police Chief Doug Kowalski said.

No one else was hurt during the Tuesday morning clash, which led a local college to lock down its campus and alert students and faculty to stay home.

Sharp may have intended to lure people from the police station so he could shoot at them from a field across the street where he had taken position, Kowalski said. He also may have intended to kill them by blowing up the trailer, he said.

Vibrantly colored spices sat in tins on the spotless counter, the table was decorated and set, and stacks of small white plates, ramekins and bowls sat neatly on the kitchen's breakfast bar, waiting to fill their role in the feast that was to come.

At the counter, Margaret Sinclair peeled cooked potatoes, then handed them to Susan Narasimhan, who mashed them with her hands.

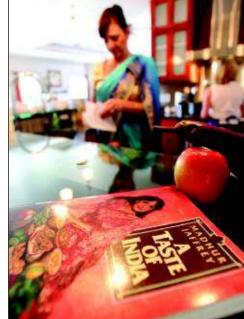

"These are still kind of hot, Margaret," Narasimhan said as the potatoes crumbled softly into the bowl.

"You weenie," Sinclair shot back. It wasn't the first time the two friends had spent days in the kitchen preparing for a 20course Indian Wazwan meal, held in Narasimhan's Twin Falls home. The dinner was one of three auctioned off at last September's Epicurean Evening, a fundraiser for St. Luke's Magic Valley Health Foundation.

Narasimhan and her husband, Twin Falls nephrologist Dr. Nagraj Narasimhan, started offering the meals for Epicurean Evening's auction at Sinclair's suggestion. Both Susan Narasimhan and Sinclair are board members for the foundation.

"The dinners were so well received that they caused a storm of bidding," Rebecca Southwick, the foundation's events coordinator, wrote in an e-mail to the Times-News. "However, we don't give out the

TSOONT VAANGAN

This combination of eggplant and apples, adapted from Madhur Jaffrey's "A Taste of India," is one of the more unique offerings in Susan Narasimhan's repertoire. Narasimhan uses the dish as a segue between spicy, savory dishes and dessert. Frying the eggplant and apples separately is crucial, she said, as the two cook at separate rates.

11/4 pounds eggplant, sliced

- 1 or 2 large tart apples, cored and sliced
- 3 tablespoons oil, plus more for frying 1/2 teaspoon fennel seed 1/4 teaspoon coriander 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon ground turmeric

1/4 teaspoon ground cardamom 1/2 teaspoon red chili powder 1 teaspoon sugar Vanilla ice cream Mint leaves, to garnish (optional)

Dry roast the fennel and coriander and grind into powder. Add remaining spices, oil and sugar and set aside. Saute apples in oil until soft, then remove from pan. Saute eggplant until brown and soft. Add apples, pour spice mixture over and saute over low heat, stirring gently, for about 10 minutes.

Serve on a small dish, alternating two slices each of apple and eggplant. Using a melon baller, scoop vanilla ice cream onto the side. Garnish with mint leaf and serve immediately.

The Wazwan feast is served throughout India but is most common in the north, which has a larger Muslim population than other parts of the country. Narasimhan learned of the feast not through her husband, who was born in Mumbai, but from the Internet while ordering spices.

Traditionally, Narasimhan said, Wazwan hosts slaughter a goat and use every part of the animal for the preparation. Because the Epicurean Evening bidders probably aren't fond of eating goat brains or eveballs. Narasimhan and Sinclair use Narasimhan's in-laws are fans of her Indian food, although they take note if it's not traditional.

"Sometimes I'm told it's not right," she said. "But other times, I'm told it's perfect."

Other parts of the Wazwan feast have been westernized. In India, food is served all together on one plate, and diners eat with their hands while sitting on the ground. Narasimhan and Sinclair plate each dish individually with garnishes, and fork use is encouraged.

Wafting the scents of licorice root and sassafras toward his nose, Kainoa Lopez of Bellevue steeps herbs in hot water in the first step of making BuckSnort Root Beer.

A different kind of microbrew Bellevue root beer recalls beverages of old

By Ariel Hansen

Times-News writer

BELLEVUE – When the taste hits your tongue, there's the sharpness of sassafras, the roundness of licorice root, the sweetness of molasses, and dancing over it all the sharp kick of wintergreen.

It's unmistakable: root beer.

Kainoa Lopez of Bellevue began brewing the iconic American beverage last year and sold his first frothy mugs and floats at the citv's Fourth of July parade. Since then, he has expanded to three regional farmers markets and a code requirements. handful of restaurants, making sure each batch he brews is small and all-natural and tastes just right.

"I had no idea this was going to take off like it has," Lopez said in the kitchen of his A-frame home where he mastered the recipe, which does not include preservatives or artificial flavors or colors.

He now produces BuckSnort Root Beer – titled after a childhood nickname - in a commercial kitchen to comply with health

"That's the greatest feeling ever, to have this small hobby, idea that you love, and turn it into a way to make a living," he said. "What more could a guy ask for?"

Although Lopez had brewed alcoholic beer in the past, his home brewing equipment was gathering dust while he telecommuted to an information technology job in San Francisco. It took being laid off – and a fortuitous

Reichl's newest book is the ultimate taste test

By Jennifer Barger The Washington Post

Legendary food writer Ruth Reichl's life has been a banquet of sorts. Her been-there. ate-that resume includes serving as the last editor of the late, great Gourmet magazine; critiquing restaurants for The New York Times and the Los Angeles Times; and penning both cookbooks and food memoirs. Her latest, "For You, Mom. Finally." ($13, Penguin), recently came out in paperback.

• In the book, you talk about what a lousy cook your mother was. Did that cause you to get into food?

A: I don't think it was so much that. But what it did was make me focus on flavor. I mean, if your earliest memories are thinking - "Is this food safe? Can I eat it?" - then you become focused on flavor in a way most people don't.

You started cooking • as a child? A: Yes. If you start cooking when you are young, everyone tells you how great it is! It never occurs to you that you could create a bad meal. Wasn't there a peri-• od where women didn't like to cook?

A: For my mother and her generation, they were barraged with the idea that you had to get freed from the kitchen and its drudgery. My mother prided herself on getting dinner on the table in 10 minutes, no matter what it tasted like.

What made cooking cool again? Food TV had a lot to do with it. It made cooking sexy and creative. • Where is food jour-Q: nalism headed now? A: It's oscillating between stupid food journalism and things that are getting into a lot of serious food politics, like good blogs and magazines like Gastronomica. How seriously should we take food criticism on blogs? A: I think blogs have made food criticism better. Right now, you've got a knowledgeable public, people who devour restaurants and reviews. They're informed as consumers. Still, a good critic should make you pay attention to things you didn't know before.

Has how recipes are written changed? A. Increasingly, they need to hold people's hands, telling them what "till golden" means and what sort of pan they should use. Many older recipes were, like, four sentences, because they assumed you knew everything.

What about restau-rants? How different are they from when you were reviewing them? A: The biggest change to me is that Americans are remaking their restaurants into what they want them to be, not just a European idea of putting your hands in your lap and having a waiter order for you. And the idea of luxury has changed. It used to mean ingredients like caviar and lobster; now it means something that was grown by the chef or locally sourced. People are really holding restaurants accountable now. It's fascinating.

Restaurants uncork more wines by the glass

By Michelle Locke For The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO Ordering wine by the glass used to mean scant choices and bland options. And only your tastebuds would tell you how long the wine had languished in an open bottle.

That's changed, with restaurants amping up the volume on what's available by the glass and making sure that the wines poured are at optimal freshness.

"It's one of the most exciting times to be drinking wines by the glass," said Talia Baiocchi, U.S. wine editor at winechap.com who recently researched and profiled wine-by-theglass programs at 30 New York City restaurants.

Why is wine breaking through the glass (serving) ceiling?

Reasons range from the economy – who has the wherewithal to spring for a bottle these days? - to an increasingly educated public not content with ordering the traditional "house

The result: "Restaurants have gone from being safe to being experimental," said Baiocchi. "It wasn't a place for the sommelier to necessarily show off their personality, which I think from the scene.

Take the Prohibition-Speakeasy Wine Club in Healdsburg, which offers about 30 wines by the glass, rotating the wines regularly including and "cult" favorites such as vintages from Sonoma County's Williams-Selyem winery.

The club is physically inviting, guests enter the bar by going into a phone booth and picking up the phone, which opens the bar's "secret" door. But owner Richard Rosenberg says the wines are the real attraction.

"The public has become more interested in different wines and different producers of different varietals and there are more varietals available than there have been in the past. That's the intrigue and that's what the big draw is?'

Prohibition uses a Cruvinet system which can handle up to 16 bottles at a time, keeping the wine fresh for up to 40 days.

Other restaurants are going to systems that can serve wine on tap, similar to beer delivery systems.

Kimpton Hotels & Restaurants, which has 55 restaurants and bars across the country, has launched a new Wine On Tap program. Emily Wines. master sommelier and director of wines at Kimpton Restaurants, (yes, her name is wildly apt for the job) is leading the draft wine program through a partnership with Free Flow Wines.

The idea is to provide fresh wine by the glass, strengthen relationships with local vineyards and reduce waste. No bottles, no corks, just refillable kegs, generally made of stainless steel or food-grade plastic, that use a mixture of argon and nitrogen gas to push the wine out.

"Every glass that we pour is just as fresh as the first one," said Wines.

It's a learning experience all round. Winemakers have been coming by restaurants to see how the wine is tasting and wait staff also are being educated on how to explain the wines. The idea is so new that in some cases winery officials have been dropping off and picking up the kegs themselves.

Cutting-edge knives need two kinds of care

By Bill Daley Chicago Tribune

Knives get their cutting bite thanks to rows of microscopic metal "teeth" running down the edge of blade. That's why, when talking about keeping knives sharp, a dental analogy seems so natural to Norman Weinstein, author of "Mastering Knife Skills" (Stewart, Tabori & Chang, 2008). "A dull knife is like going to the dentist and having no teeth." said the Brooklynbased chef, a knife skills instructor at Manhattan's Institute of Culinary Education. Restoring a knife takes two steps: sharpening and honing. Sharpening once every 9 to 12 months is like going to the dentist for your annual checkup. The old, dull bevel - the slanted edge - is ground off, and a new edge is established. Honing means running the edge of the knife along a rodlike device called a sharpening steel. This act, which takes 15 seconds at most, is a preventive measure akin to regular brush-ing. The microscopic teeth along the knife's edge will get out of whack during the normal process of cutting, slicing and chopping. Using a steel straightens and puts the teeth back into alignment to keep the blade keen. Use the steel regularly, consistently, and the knife will need sharpening less often.

Anyone can hone a knife at home if they have a steel and respect the angle of the beveled blade while doing

Lopez went through many batches before arriving at the right proportion of ingredients for his recipe, which he said inspires memories in his older customers. "A lot of our elders are like, 'Wow! That's what root beer used to be like!"" he said. "It feels like I'm connected to Americana in some way."

He is also proud to be connecting to a community of producers and consumers who appreciate handcrafted, locally made goods.

"If it comes from here, people in Idaho want to support it," he said. And though a 16-ounce glass costs between $2 and $3 depending on where it is sold, those consumers are prepared to pay the premium for that connection. "People are still willing to spend money on things that make them happy."

For the next year or so, Lopez plans to keep BuckSnort focused on root beer, but he's working on recipes for ginger beer, cream soda, birch beer and a few other exotic sodas as

Pulled pork can do more than fill a bun

By J.M. Hirsch Associated Press writer

We all know pulled pork makes a killer sandwich. But I wanted to see how it held up to another carb – pasta.

So I started by making a basic pulled pork. But instead of barbecue sauce. I used a blend of sun-dried tomatoes, roasted red peppers, creme fraiche and garlic. This combination would offer bold flavors and colors, and would work better with the pasta than barbecue sauce would.

But I did want a hint of that tangy, spicy barbecue flavor, so I spiced the sauce with red wine vinegar (cider vinegar would be good, too) and a splash of hot sauce. Diced canned chipotle peppers in adobo sauce would be a great alternative. Then I tossed the whole thing with pulled pork tenderloin and fresh cheese tortellini. While any pasta would work. I liked the creaminess added by the cheese in the tortellini.

Return the pork to a boil, then reduce heat to simmer and cooked for 40 minutes, or until an instant thermometer reads 160 degrees at the center of the pork, or until the meat is fork tender.

Drain the pork, discarding the solids in the water, then return the pork to the pan. Use 2 forks to pull and tear apart the meat into strands and chunks.

BuckSnort Root Beer is available by the glass at farmers markets in Hailey, Ketchum and Boise; McClain's Pizzeria and The Wicked Spud in Hailey; Local Dish in Twin Falls; and several restaurants in Boise.

It can also be ordered from Kainoa Lopez;

tion soon in the locally brewed root beer market, but he is unaware of any other soda microbrewers in south-central Idaho.

For consumers, what it comes down to is flavor.

"It's much more like drinking a wine than a Coke, because it's a very complex taste," said James Reed, co-owner of Local Dish in Twin Falls, currently the only place in that city to get BuckSnort. "I'm not a soda guy, but I'm starting to grab it to drive home with."

At midday the restaurant and store sells more of the root beer than any other drink. "It tastes so healthy, a good clean-tasting beverage, and we're selling the heck out of it. It's our flagship drink at our lunch service," Reed said.

And good for you, too. Lopez has traced back modern root beer to 19thpharmacies, century which dispensed it as an herbal tonic. He said Native Americans used sassafras to improve circulation, licorice to get digestion going, and wintergreen for colds and flu.

Just add vanilla, molasses and sugar cane juice, and you're back at the counter of an old soda fountain – or if you're drinking BuckSnort, perhaps a booth at a modern Idaho farmers market.

Neither Sinclair nor Narasimhan had to buy any new dishes for the event. Both women like to entertain at their homes and. between the two, had enough matching sets to cover the dinner.

Ingredients, though, presented another problem. Although she can order spices from the Internet or local stores, it's often easier to pick them up from an Indian market while in Boise, Narasimhan said.

The 20 dishes are prepared from scratch over the course of 3 1/2 days. Sinclair and Narasimhan take time off work to slice, dice, mix and saute. Some dishes, like the cucumber-yogurt dish raita, have to be prepared right before they're served. Others, like the vindaloo, can simmer on the stove a day or two before.

During the dinner, Narasimhan's husband acts as a waiter and tells diners what, exactly, they're eating. Sinclair stands at the counter, chopping vegetables and plating the next dish, while Narasimhan mans the stove and crock pot.

"He's the social butterfly. We're the kitchen help," Sinclair said.

The meals start about 7 p.m. and last about four hours. Each has basics, like samosas and tandoori chicken, but the vegetable dishes rotate to reflect what Narasimhan has access to. The dinner progresses from appetizers to meat and vegetable dishes

· When spice blends contain oil, use as little oil as possible for sauteing vegetables.

 Instead of toasting seeds in a pan, where they fly out as they pop, put them in a metal soup ladle and hold it over the burner. Make sure to cover the ladle with a spoon.

Use a mortar and pestle instead of a coffee grinder to grind spices. The consistency will be more coarse, and that's the point. Larger bits of seeds mixed together give more complexity to the dish. Taste the food as you go.

Indian food relies on a balance of salty, sour and spicy, and the only way to get it right is to take a bite.

Favas will nourish you, special friends

The Washington Post

Favas take time to prepare, so grab a glass of (perhaps something Chianti), sit on the deck and decompress.

The beans first must be removed from their cozy, down-insulated pods. Then the shelled beans must be dropped into boiling water, cooked for 2 minutes and dunked into an ice-cold water bath. Finally, the bitter outer skin must be removed, revealing a glistening, scrumptious, shamrockgreen nugget.

That nugget is the endosperm, the material that would have nourished the embryo as it grew and formed a new plant. In this case, the nugget nourishes the cook and special friends.

From gardener-cook Cynthia A. Brown.

FAVA BRUSCHETTA

Makes about 12 appetizer servings

2 pounds fava beans, in their pods outlined above for the favas: Peel them out of their pods, blanch in boiling water, shock in an icewater bath and then pop them out of their bitter seed coats.

Heat the oil in a large saute pan or skillet over medium heat. Add the onion and cook for 6 to 8 minutes, stirring occasionally, until it is translucent. Add the minced garlic and cook for 1 minute, stirring. Add the favas and mint; stir to incorporate. Cook for 1 minute to warm the favas. Season with the black pepper to taste.

Transfer the fava-onion mixture to a mixing bowl; use a potato masher to smash the beans into a rough paste. Add the yogurt and the cheese; stir until well incorporated.

Liven up your fruit salad ... with meat

By J.M. Hirsch Associated Press writer

Following the axiom that bacon makes everything better, I decided to use it to jazz up that staple of summer celebrations - fruit salad.

I started with a basic fruit salad of watermelon, strawberries and diced apples. I then dressed that with a simple vinaigrette of olive oil and lemon juice spiked with salt and pepper. You could stop right there, because a splash of acid (the vinaigrette) does wonders to bring out the sweetness of fruit.

Crumbled bacon and slivered fresh basil are used to top the salad, offering a savory, salty and (in the case of the basil) peppery contrast to the fruit. The bacon also adds a pleasant crunch. The salad also can be prepped in advance; just leave out the basil and bacon, adding just before serving.

Finally, if you simply can't accept bacon in a fruit salad (and refuse to accept the universal truth of bacon's ability to improve all things), substitute crumbled Parmesan (which is governed by a similar natural law) or feta cheese, which will add a similar salty, savory flavor.

A veggie burger that means business

By Jim Romanoff For The Associated Press

Whenever the word "veggie" modifies "burger," many people taste skepticism more than anything else.

While it's true that many veggie burgers are nothing more than mushy patties of ground up produce, this portobello burger with sun-dried tomato mayo is a burger of a different class.

Marinated and grilled just right, a large portobello mushroom cap can be just as toothsome and "meaty" as the real deal. And when oil you add accoutrements, like char-grilled red onion and red bell pepper, plus a slathering of savory sundried tomato mayo, you just might turn a meat eater into a vegetarian. At least until the next meal.

Celebrities' new books help keep you sated

By Michele Kayal For The Associated Press

As much as Americans love their food, they seem to enjoy it best with a dash of celebrity.

Luckily, the celebrity food world loves to keep people well fed. There is a stack of new books by big names to keep you sated through fall.

Super chef Mario Batali's "Molto Gusto" (Ecco, 2010) offers up perfect suppers and ideas for casual entertaining. Fava beans straight from the farmers market pair with zesty lemon and ricotta, and cherry tomatoes meet creme fraiche in elegant antipasti, most of which can be made well ahead of time.

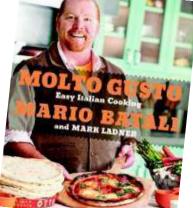

Fresh sardines get a cinnamon-scented marinade and well-toasted bread topped with peppered chickpeas or succulent eggplant makes for crunchymoist bruschetta. An entire chapter on pizza will please obsessives with its promises of a crisp yet pliant crust, and cooks who live on pasta will find a quick but satisfying meal in egg-bathed penne alla papalina.

True to Batali's signature emphasis on fresh, wholesome food, most recipes apply simple techniques to a handful of well-chosen ingredients. Bright, whitebackground photos of the dishes, redolent in greens and reds and purples, let you eat first with your eyes. A great book for anyone who likes good food without the fuss.

You know eating local has gone mainstream when Emeril Lagasse is leaning on a garden tool. In "Farm to Fork: Cooking Local, Cooking Fresh" (Harper Studio, 2010), the king of "BAM!" sniffs herbs and caresses tomatoes. Recipes for corn fritters and escarole soup with crushed red pepper promise good eating. Meanwhile, pumpkin pie gets extra mystique from a and anyone looking for simple, elegant food. And then we've got burgers. In "The Stuff Good Cookbook" (Wiley, 2010), "Top Chef" veteran Spike Mendelsohn reveals the secrets of his Washington eatery, where Capitol Hill staffers line up well before noon to score his farmhouse burgers made with local beef, rosemary-sprinkled fries and toasted marshmallow milkshakes.

Good Stuff sauce - a twist on thousand island dressing - shares the pages with chipotle pesto, Old Bay mayonnaise, and other burger-enhancing accoutrements. There's a salad chapter, if you care. And how do you make a burger even better? "Add cheese, add bacon," says Spike. A man who understands.

1 ripe avocado, pitted and sliced

1 small pink grapefruit, peeled and sectioned, with each section halved.

1 medium scallion, green part only, thinly sliced crosswise

1/4 cup sunflower seeds

Season the scallops with salt and pepper. Spread the Wondra or flour on a plate, then dredge the scallops through it, shaking off any excess.

In a large skillet over medium, heat 2 tablespoons of the oil. Add the scallops to the skillet and saute for 2 to 3 minutes per side, or until cooked through. Transfer the scallops to a plate and let stand until they are at room temperature.

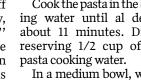

In a small saucepan, simmer the grapefruit juice until it reduces to 2 tablespoons. Transfer to a small bowl. Add the shallot, rice vinegar, sugar and 1/4 teaspoon of salt. Whisk until the sugar and salt have dissolved. Slowly whisk in the remaining vegetable oil, then whisk in the juices that have accumulated on the scallop plate until the dressing reaches the desired consistency.

"Sara Moulton's In Everyday Family Dinners" (Simon and Schuster, 2010), the executive chef of the former Gourmet magazine offers tempting dishes such as eggs and creamed spinach in phyllo cups, tandoori chicken wings, and appetizers like chorizostuffed mushrooms and panko-crusted scallops.

But the eggs require more than a half-dozen steps, including buttering phyllo. The chicken wings have to marinate for 8 to 10 hours. And scrumptious as the appetizers sound, I don't know any working mom or dad who's going to dish up three or four of them to "dazzle one and all with the variety," as Moulton suggests. A lovely collection of recipes, but very few that you're likely to tackle on a week day.

Gulf surface cleaner, but questions lurk below

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Researchers are warning that the Gulf of Mexico oil spill is a bigger mess than the government claims and that a lot of crude is lurking deep below the surface, some of it settling perhaps in a critical undersea canyon off the Florida Panhandle.

The evidence of microscopic amounts of oil mixing into the soil of the canyon was gathered by scientists at the University of South Florida, who also found poisoned plant plankton – the vital base of the ocean food web which they blamed on a toxic brew of oil and dispersants.

Their work is preliminary, hasn't been reviewed scientists, by other requires more tests to confirm it is BP's oil they found, and is based on a 10-day research cruise that ended late Monday night. Scientists who were not involved said they were uncomfortable drawing conclusions based on such a brief look.

But those early findings follow a report from Georgia researchers on Monday that said as much as 80 percent of the oil from the spill remains in the Gulf. Both groups' findings have already been incorporated into lawsuits filed against BP.

CIA terrorist interrogation tapes found

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The CIA has videotapes, after all, of interrogations in a secret overseas prison of admitted 9/11 plotter Ramzi Binalshibh.

Discovered in a box under a desk at the CIA, the tapes could reveal how foreign governments aided the United States in holding and interrogating suspects. And they could complicate U.S. efforts to prosecute Binalshibh, who has been described as one of the "key plot facilitators" in the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks. Apparently the tapes do not show harsh treatment unlike videos the agency destroyed of the questioning of other suspected terrorists. The two videotapes and one audiotape are believed to be the only existing recordings made within the clandestine prison system and could offer a revealing glimpse into a four-year global odvssev that ranged from Pakistan to Romania to Guantanamo Bay. The tapes depict Binalshibh's interrogation sessions in 2002 at a Moroccan-run facility the CIA used near Rabat, several current and former U.S. officials told The Associated Press. They spoke on the condition of anonymity because the videos remain a closely guarded secret. When the CIA destroyed its cache of 92 videos of two other al-Qaida operatives, Abu Zubaydah and Abd al-Nashiri, being waterboarded in 2005, officials believed they had wiped away all of the agency's interrogation footage. But in 2007, a staff member discovered a box tucked under a desk in the CIA's Counterterrorism Center and pulled out the Binalshibh tapes. If the tapes surfaced at Binalshibh's trial, they could highlight Morocco's role in a counterterrorism program known as Greystone, which authorized the CIA to hold terrorists in secret prisons and shuttle them to other countries.

ed by the disaster have yet to receive any emergency aid.

The floods began three weeks ago but the crisis could yet worsen, with authorities warning that the swollen Indus River may burst its banks again in coming days.

Pakistan's shaky government has been sorely tested by the disaster, which has affected about a fifth of the area of the vast country of 170 million people. It comes atop a pile of other challenges including a weak economy and a violent Islamist insurgency.

Pakistani President Asif Ali Zardari acknowledged Tuesday that the government had responded poorly to the widespread flooding. Zardari's reputation sank to new lows after he chose to visit Europe as the crisis was unfolding.

"Yes, the situation could be better. Yes, the arrangements could have been made better. Yes, everything could have been better. Alas! If we could have those resources," he told local aid groups in a meeting. "We have to move forward despite whatever criticism we get."

IRAQ Baghdad suicide bomb hits army recruits, killing 61

BAGHDAD – A suicide bomber sat for hours Tuesday among hundreds of unprotected army recruits before detonating nail-packed explosives strapped to his body, killing 61 people and casting new doubt on the ability of Iraqi forces as U.S. troops head home.

Bodies of bloodied young men, some still clutching job applications in their hands, were scattered on the ground outside the military headquarters in central Baghdad. Some of the estimated 1,000 men who had gathered there before dawn for a good spot in line were so desperate for work they returned hours after being treated at hospitals for injuries in the attack.

Though Iraq's military and police recruiting centers have been attacked repeatedly, there was virtually no security provided for the hundreds of men seeking to hand in applications on the last day of a nine-day recruitment drive at the headquarters for the Iraqi army's 11th Division.

The bomber, it appears, simply walked up and joined the applicants. Witnesses said he approached an officer collecting I.D. cards and set off a blast that split his own body in two.

image; one in every 20 has a more severe loss.

The authors of the report in the Journal of the American Medical Association eliminated ear infections, gunshots and exposure to loud noises in the environment as causes for the hearing loss, but could not identify a specific cause. A recent Australian study, however, found a 70 percent increased risk of hearing loss associated with the use of headphones in portable music, and many experts suspect they are the primary cause of hearing loss in teens.

"Personal stereos are the most important change in the culture in the last 15 to 20 years," said Dr. Tommie Robinson Jr., president of the American Speech-Language Hearing Association. "Everybody has their own little device now, and how many times have you passed somebody and could hear their music?'

S. CAROLINA Sheriff says mother killed kids before sinking car

ORANGEBURG – A South Carolina mother who claimed her children drowned when their car careened into a river was charged with murder Tuesday after authorities said she confessed to suffocating the two toddlers to be free of them and then faking the accident.

Shaquan Duley, 29, told investigators she was distraught about money troubles and unemployment, said Orangeburg County Sheriff Larry Williams. He said Duley told them she killed the boys – 2-year-old Devean C. Duley and 18-monthold Ja'van T. Duley – after arguing with her own mother about how she was raising the children.

"She truly felt, if I don't have these toddlers. I can be free," Williams said at a news conference.

Officials said they were unable to locate the children's father, who did not live with the family. Duley has another child, a 5-year-old girl, who was now with the grandmother.

Duley's mother declined to comment when approached at her home.

The state agency responsible for child welfare in South Carolina said it has had no involvement with Duley.

The Highway Patrol was notified around 6:15 a.m. Monday that a woman needed help getting her children out of a car. Duley, who did not have a cell phone, had walked some distance down the country road by the boat landing and flagged down a passing motorist to call the Highway Patrol.

Later that morning, authorities pulled Duley's Chrysler sedan from the North Edisto River in Orangeburg, some 35 miles south of Columbia, the state capital. The two boys were still strapped into their car seats.

When she was 16. she met her future husband, Roland Kuhn, when he came to work at the farm during harvest. In October 1940, they were married at her sister's home in Salt Lake City, Utah. Shortly thereafter, they moved to a farm near Hagerman, Idaho, where they started their family. In 1956, Gladys moved to Nampa with her family of seven children and her husband who had given up farming to sell Fuller Brush and Watkins products. It was here that she completed her life, providing strong, loving support for her husband, their children and the spouses, grandchildren and great-grandchildren who were to follow.

Life was not always easy and caring for seven children, including one having severe cerebral palsy, required at least 110 percent of her time. Gladys was proficient in sewing, canning, cooking and baking and still found time to help others in time of need. She always prepared at least three full meals a day, including homemade bread and at desserts. CSI softball adds Buhl catcher to 2011 roster By Mike Christensen

Times-News writer

Bailee Montgomery was already planning to attend school at the College of Southern Idaho. Getting to play softball for the Golden Eagles was a late bonus.

Montgomery signed with CSI last Friday and joins Utah product

Latieshia Webster in rounding out the Eagles' 2011 roster.

Montgomery told Karen Baumert she was planning to attend CSI this fall. A few weeks later, Montgomery was signing a NJCAA Letter of Intent. "We are very excited Bailee is going to play for us," said Nick Baumert. "Bailee is strong and athletic and has the potential to battle at the catcher position." Montgomery fills the roster vacancy created when outfielder MeChel Hunt decided not to return to the program. Montgomerv hit .484 as a senior. Her older sister Breht played for CSI in 2007. "It's fun to follow in her footsteps," said Montgomery, who acknowledged the challenge of going from Class 3A high school softball to the Scenic West Athletic Conference. "It's gonna be a big step," she said. "Once we all get to know each other, it'll be fine. I'm excited." Webster comes to CSI as a transfer from Colorado Northwestern Community College. Originally from West Valley City, Utah, Webster hit .304 for the Spartans with five home runs and 14 stolen bases last season. She threw out a SWAC-best 17 runners from her catcher spot. "Latieshia gives us versatility," Baumert said. "She has the ability to play infield or outfield and she can swing it. She also brings added experience, having played in one of the toughest conferences in the country." CSI returns seven sophomores from last year's 46-20 squad, while Montgomery and Webster are among 10 newcomers. The Eagles fell to Salt Lake in the Region 18 Tournament title game in May. Williams, Evans give Hokies potent 1-2 combination at running back

By Hank Kurz Jr. Associated Press writer

BLACKSBURG, Va. When Virginia Tech quarterback Tyrod Taylor turns to hand the ball off this season, his options might make up the best backfield in the country.

Williams and Ryan Darren Evans will finally play together in 2010.

Williams, a redshirt sophomore, ran for 1,655 yards last season and broke Atlantic Coast the Conference record for yards by a freshman running back. He got the chance only because Evans, who set the mark with 1,265 the previous year, tore his ACL early in preseason camp.

The possibilities are endless – pairing the speed and elusiveness of Williams with Evans' preference to barrel over tacklers.

"That's like my big brother," Williams said of Evans, a redshirt junior.

James tells GQ he isn't sure Gilbert ever cared

MIAMI (AP) - Adding a new layer to the rift between LeBron James and Dan Gilbert, the NBA's two-time reigning MVP and new Miami Heat forward has told GQ magazine that he isn't sure the Cleveland Cavaliers owner "ever cared" about him during their time together.

In an article released Tuesday, James spoke of how widespread criticism of his decision – and how he chose to make it a television event - is fueling him this offseason, plus reiterated how Ohio will always remain his home.

But perhaps his sharpest words were reserved for Gilbert, the owner who lashed out at him shortly after James announced that he would be joining the Heat.

"I don't think he ever cared about LeBron," James is quoted as saying. "My mother always told me: 'You will see the light of people when they hit adversity. You'll get a good sense of their character? Me and my family have seen the character of that man."

Gilbert did not immediately respond to a request for comment Tuesday.

James made similar remarks on the night Miami signed him to a six-year contract, doing so while sitting alongside the other two legs of the Heat superstar triangle, Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh.

Gilbert was clearly scorned by James' choice, firing off a now-infamous letter to Cleveland fans describing it all as "a shameful display of selfishness and betraval." He called James "narcissistic" and "self-promotional" and vowed the Cavaliers would win a championship before "the self-titled former king."

Further, in an interview the same night with The Associated Press, Gilbert said he felt James quit on Cleveland during the 2009 and 2010 playoffs. Gilbert ultimately fined was $100,000 by the NBA for what commissioner David Stern said were comments that fell into the category of being "a little extreme."

In the GQ article, James took exception to the "quit-

BALTIMORE – A pitching duel between an up-and-coming lefty and a veteran right-hander was decided by a utility player in the role of emergency starter.

Luke French took a one-hitter into the eighth inning, Matt Tuiasosopo homered and had a career-high four RBIs, and the Seattle Mariners beat Kevin Millwood and the Baltimore Orioles 4-0 on Tuesday night.

Tuiasosopo had an RBI double in the fifth and hit a three-run homer in the ninth. He learned 20 minutes before the game that he would start in place of Ryan Langerhans, who was a late scratch with a severe headache.

"I just wanted to go out there, and ... find a way offensively or defensively to help this team win a game. Just be loose and have fun," Tuiasosopo said. "Gosh, it feels really good."

Tuiasosopo came into the game with a .155 batting average, one homer and two RBIs in 71 at-bats.

Likewise, Green would like to help Burley level the playing field in the Great Basin Conference.

which the Bobcats earned a spot in the Great 8 round of the state playoffs, the team contender.

"Winning two games, that got the winning taste back about people and I think he's into us," Tolman said. "We can build on that. A lot of us

RBIs from 1946-60 with several teams. He led the league in a hitting category only once, and that was for triples.

But the fly ball that flew over the wall vaulted "The Flying Scot" to a place of almost mythic status. There have been plenty of historic home runs over the years -Bill Mazeroski, Kirk Gibson, Carlton Fisk and Joe Carter, to name a few – but Thomson's shot stands as the giant among them all.

The tall, lanky and selfeffacing Thomson, however, was stunned that in a lineup that included future Hall of Famers Willie Mays and Monte Irvin, he would hit the pennant-winning homer. He called himself "the accidental hero."

Thomson never quite understood all the fuss the system to steal signals from homer created. On its 40th opposing catchers.

know that we're there and we can do it, it's just getting the whole team together. one mind, one heart. If we can do that, it will make a big difference."

So far, Green has many kids believing. When he handed out pads, so many Coming off a 2-7 season in players showed up that he ran out and had to order new ones.

"So far everybody likes feels like it can become a him," Tolman said. "He's a really nice guy and I enjoy being around him. He cares going to help us get this program back on track."

> anniversary in 1991, he said, "I can't believe we're still talking about it."

> "Bobby Thomson will always hold a special place in our game for hitting one of the signature home runs in baseball history. 'The Shot Heard 'Round the World' will always remain a defining moment for our game, illustrating the timeless quality of the national pastime," commissioner Bud Selig said.

> The home run decided one of the most memorable pennant races, and later led to one of its most-debated questions: Did he know Branca was going to throw the high-and-inside fastball that Thomson hit out of the park?

> More than a half-century later, it was revealed the Giants during the season had used a buzzer-and-telescope defense, which has to replace seven starters in a season filled with high expectations. "For us to be able to work against those kind of guys is going to prepare 'em because you're talking about runimitate him and learn from him ning backs and a quarterback that are as good as anybody in America, and with our receiving corps, as well," defensive coordinator Bud Foster said. "To work against those guys every day is only going to prepare you for good things down the road."

Opposing defenses, meanwhile, will get a big dose of both backs from the Hokies.

"We're going to do what's best for the Virginia Tech program, and right now that's playing both of them," Hokies running backs coach Billy Hite said. "We're working on a few packages here where you'll see both of doing," Evans said. "If he breaks a long them in the ballgame at the same time?

Virginia Tech hopes to redshirt wanting to do it, too."

accelerating the growth of a young speedster David Wilson, another highly touted tailback who played mostly on return units and in mop-up duty last season as a freshman.

> As far as sharing carries, Williams and Evans think less may actually be more.

> "I'm pretty sure – and I could probably answer this for him too - but we probably won't want to come out of the game regardless of the situation," Williams said.

> 'But you know it makes us feel a lot better knowing that if we're tired or if we need a break, I know if I come out of the game, he's going to handle business and vice versa."

It might even lead to a friendly competition that leaves defenses hurting.

"I think it will be easier to get into a rhythm if we're both fresh and we're feeding off of what each other's run and gets tired, I'm going to be so hyped after that that I'm going to be

Defense attorney: Witnesses in Pitino trial may have lied

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - The attorney for the woman junior varsity matchups. Concessions will be availconvicted of trying to extort University of Louisville basketball coach Rick Pitino says prosecution witnesses may have lied during trial.

James Earhart made the allegation in a motion filed in U.S. District Court in Louisville asking for more time to request a new trial. The motion says "a key witness or witnesses" in the case of 50-year-old Karen Cunagin Sypher may have committed perjury. It does not provide specifics.

Earhart has asked U.S. District Judge Charles R. Simpson for 45 days to investigate and request a new trial.

Sypher was convicted earlier this month of extortion, lying to the FBI and retaliating against a witness. Prosecutors said Sypher demanded millions in cash, cars and a house from Pitino to stay quiet about their one-night stand at a Louisville restaurant in 2003.

Brett Favre is back in Minnesota

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. -Brett Favre is back in Minnesota, right on schedule.

For the second year in a row, the quarterback who spends his summers on the verge of retirement was driven to Vikings headquarters on the Tuesday following the team's first preseason game. Iust like last August, news helicopters followed his vehicle from a local airport and dozens of fans and media gathered at the entrance to Winter Park to greet him.

"Circus in Winter Park," tight end Visanthe Shiancoe tweeted.

Nothing the Vikings haven't seen before.

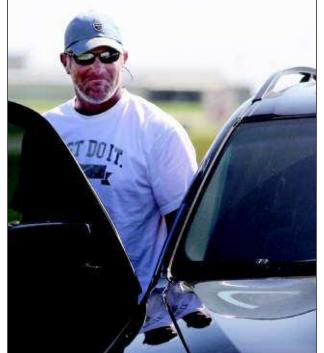

On Aug. 18, 2009, Favre boarded a private plane from Hattiesburg, Miss., and arrived in Minnesota. Coach Brad Childress picked him up facility. He practiced the same day and suited up for a preseason game three days later.

This time around, the Vikings sent three of Favre's closest friends on the team – Iared Allen, Ryan Longwell and Steve Hutchinson - to Hattiesburg to bring him a media schedule for back for one more shot at a Super Bowl.

Longwell filled the role of Favre's chauffeur and three local television stations broke into programming to show the kicker's black Favre is to be determined." BMW SUV rolling down the road.

Not to mention, soon after Favre showed signs of waffling this year, his agent said he'd play if he was healthy.

Tarvaris Jackson was in line to be the starting quarterback if Favre had not returned, and he said after practice that he wasn't bothered by hearing that some of his higher profile teammates

BENGALS LB MAUALUGA FINED TWO CHECKS

CINCINNATI (AP) Bengals linebacker Rey Maualuga was fined two game checks by the NFL on Tuesday and forfeited a two-week share of his signing bonus for a drunken driving conviction.

The NFL decided not to suspend Maualuga, who pleaded guilty to drunken driving charges in February.

"These past couple weeks and days I was wondering when I was going to find out. I found out this morning and I was ecstatic," Maualuga said. "We've got everything put behind us now and we can just concentrate on football."

Police in northern Kentucky said the second-year player from Southern California hit a parking meter and two parked cars while driving drunk in January. He was charged with drunken and careless driving. Maualuga apologized and entered a guilty plea.

Maualuga got a suspended seven-day jail sentence and had his driver's license suspended for 90 days. He was ordered to participate in an alcohol and drug education program.

The linebacker also was put on probation for two years and ordered to pay $884 in fines plus court costs. He was ordered to make restitution for damages from the accident.

He wasn't sure whether he would be suspended by the league under its substance abuse and conduct policies.

"I took care of what I could and let the league take steps they had to," he said. "I'm glad that everyone came together and took care of it."

Cycling chief: no contact from U.S. investigators president of Cycling International Union defended his organization Tuesday against accusations it covered up a positive doping test from U.S. probe into professional cycling.

Speaking to Youth Olympics, UCI chief Pat McQuaid also said that neither American prosecutors nor Interpol have asked for anything from his group.

Investigators have contacted sponsors and reportedly former teammates of Armstrong, who dominated cycling with seven Tour de France wins from 1999 to 2005. Their work gained were beating the system, global attention after disgraced rider Floyd Landis, who was stripped of his 2006 Tour victory, admitted doping and implicated Armstrong and other competitors.

McQuaid wondered whether the federal probe was based on facts or the product of Landis seeking revenge against the cycling community following the taint on his career.

McQuaid, who has been Lance Armstrong and UCI chief since 2005, questioned the motives of a denied any cover up. And he doubted the U.S. authorities would be in touch with the The UCI. because "this is not a Associated Press at the doping investigation as such."

"I know the actual facts and the work UCI did during that period in the fight against doping and I know we are completely in the clean from what we did," McQuaid said. "We were testing even at that time more than anyone else.

"If it's proven these guys they were beating the system put in place by the scientific authorities, by WADA and everyone else."

McQuaid dismissed any suggestion that the UCI covered up an Armstrong positive test in exchange for payments of $25,000 in 2002 for its anti-doping program and $100,000 in 2005 for the purchase of a Sysmex machine used for analyzing blood. If Favre proved anything training camp is no big deal for him. He delivered one of his finest seasons and brought the Vikings to the brink of the Super Bowl.

He took a beating at the Superdome, yet still threw Last year, Favre told the for 310 yards and a touchdown. But he also threw two interceptions, the last one in Saints territory at the end of regulation that cost the team a chance a game-winning field goal try.

Now, after another summer of indecision and another (classic) rock star-like arrival, it appears that Favre is back for one more shot at a second Super Bowl title.

"That's def(initely) a sign," Shiancoe tweeted, "that the 2010 season is here!"

Skelton, Hall battle for Cardinals' No. 3 QB spot

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) The tall and short of it is that the fight between two rookies for Arizona's No. 3 quarterback job goes on, despite John Skelton's smashing debut.

The tall would be the 6foot-6 Skelton, a raw talent with a rocket arm from Fordham who was Arizona's fifth-round draft pick. The short, relatively at least, is savvy, 6-foot-1 Max Hall, who went undrafted despite throwing for 11,382 yards and 80 touchdowns in three seasons as a starter at BYU.

Skelton rallied the Cardinals with two late fourth-quarter touchdowns, including the game-winning hopefully get his shot this 15-yard TD pass to Jason Wright with 1:53 to go, in a 19-16 victory over Houston on Saturday night. Hall didn't take a snap in the game.

Dave and I have enjoyed a strictly platonic relationship for nearly a year. He recently told me he's in love with me and wants us to be exclusive, with marriage as the ultimate outcome. I have been divorced for 20 years. My children are independent, thriving adults. Marrying again is not a priority in my life. Dave is kind, sensitive and thoughtful. I care for him deeply, yet I am skeptical about becoming seriously involved with a man who seems to be "hiding" something. Am I being overly critical, or is there something wrong with this picture? JADED IN JERSEY DEAR JADED: The situation you have described is unusual, but it doesn't necessarily indicate that Dave is "hiding" anything. He could be a simple man who enjoys the living arrangement he has with his folks and the lowest sex drive in New Jersey. Before making any hard and fast decisions, you and Dave need to have some frank, serious and ongoing conversations. You also need to determine how his parents will feel about "losing" their son after 49 years of togetherness.

Times News, Twin Falls, Idaho

Today is Wednesday, Aug. 18, the 230th day of 2010. There are 135 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On Aug. 18, 1587, Virginia Dare became the first child of English parents to be born on American soil, on what is now Roanoke Island in North Carolina. (However, the Roanoke colony ended up mysteriously disappearing.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1838, the first marine expedition sponsored by the U.S. government set sail from Hampton Roads, Va.; the crews traveled the southern Pacific Ocean, gathering scientific information.

In 1846, U.S. forces led by General Stephen W. Kearny captured Santa Fe, N.M.

In 1894, Congress established the Bureau of Immigration.

In 1910, floral delivery service FTD began under the name Florists' Telegraph Delivery (the "T" now stands for "Transworld").

In 1920, the 19th Amendment to the Constitution, which guaranteed the right of all American women to vote, was ratified as Tennessee became the 36th state to approve it.

1938, President In Franklin D. Roosevelt and Canadian Prime Minister William Lyon Mackenzie dedicated King the Thousand Islands Bridge connecting the United States and Canada.

In 1958, the novel "Lolita" by Vladimir Nabokov was first published in New York by G.P. Putnam's Sons, almost three years after it was originally published in Paris.

In 1963, James Meredith became the first black student to graduate from the University of Mississippi.

In 1969, the Woodstock Music and Art Fair in Bethel, N.Y. wound to a close after three nights with a midmorning set by Jimi Hendrix.

In 1976, two U.S. Army officers were killed in Korea's demilitarized zone as a group of North Korean soldiers wielding axes and metal pikes attacked U.S. and South Korean soldiers.

In 1983, Hurricane Alicia slammed into the Texas coast, leaving 21 dead and causing more than a billion dollars' worth of damage.

Ten years ago: Fresh from the Democratic National Convention, Al Gore and Joseph Lieberman shoved off from the banks of the Mississippi on a riverboat cruise to stir excitement for their freshly launched White House campaign.

Five years ago: Cindy Sheehan, who'd started an anti-war demonstration near President George W. Bush's Texas ranch nearly two weeks earlier, left the camp after learning her mother had suffered a stroke, but told supporters the protest would go on. A judge in Wichita, Kan. sentenced BTK serial killer Dennis Rader to ten consecutive life terms, the maximum the law would allow. Pope Benedict XVI began his first foreign trip as pontiff in low-key style, returning to his "beloved" German homeland.

One year ago: Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, during his first visit to Washington in five years, offered lavish praise of President Barack Obama; for his part, Obama spoke of an "extraordinary opportunity" for making peace in the Middle East. Ohio executed Jason Getsy, a murder-for-hire triggerman, for killing the mother of his intended target. Robert Novak, the combative TV and newspaper pundit, died in Washington, D.C. at 78. Former South Korean President Kim Dae-jung died at age 85.

IF AUGUST 18 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: In the month ahead, your experience and expertise will help you achieve your ambitions. Because you are inspired to reach for more than usual, you can gain more than usual. This doesn't mean you are all work and no play, as it is an excellent time to go off on a romantic holiday or weekend getaway with a special someone. In November, keep your nose to the grindstone and don't allow fantasies to have the upper hand. You will be much less gullible in late December, so you should examine closely any opportunity that comes your way. Next April and May, however, are the best months to make important decisions about your career, job or relationships.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Keep good manners in good repair. Remember to say the right thing at the most appropriate time, but even more important, know when to leave unsaid the wrong thing at the most tempting moment.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cold, hard facts cut through the fog. Balance the checkbook or perform other detail-oriented tasks. Remain centered on routines and be sure to maintain a good grasp of the financial situation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A word from the nerd might be more useful than a word from the wise. It could seem as though the wise people you know are much too softhearted when more practical solutions are called for.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The facts might require you to look at the results of a photo finish. Memories can be faulty and sympathies misplaced, so be sure to have concrete proof on hand. Sticking to the rules might be to your advantage.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Let the seeds of dissension and distrust fall on rocky ground. Refuse to sign a contract and avoid making a promise under these stars. A brief period of fussy thinking can lead you to form false assumptions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Intellectually, you prefer to appear as the hardnosed, classic conservative. Gentle tugs on your heartstrings may make you wish you could make an exception or were bound by far fewer constraints.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22.): Lovers should pay attention to their lessons. Listen with both ears and a faithful heart to understand the essential message being submitted. You may be wiser to show your affection than to discuss it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. Throw the dog a bone, but be sure it doesn't become a bone of contention. You can be generous and considerate to a fault. If you make someone feel they are helpless they might resent your input.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Championing the underdog may become an obstacle that impedes your progress like cholesterol clogs arteries. If you have developed a habit of being thrifty, don't change your habits now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stop overbooking your life. You might be running on an already overly tight schedule and tend to crowd too much into a day. You must learn to say that you would if you could - but that you can't, so you shan't.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. Read between the lines. Intuitive communication is necessary to strengthen ties and enhance the bonds of affection. A significant other might not speak out loud the words you yearn to hear.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Being materialistic isn't all bad. Keep the mind focused on the threedimensional things that you can contact through your senses. Don't let your imagination or sympathies control your actions.
