BLM seeks input on long-awaited management plan

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Southern Idaho residents can now help guide the way a remote, yet vital, stretch of public land will be managed over the next two decades.

A draft management plan for the U.S. Bureau of Land Management's Jarbidge field office could affect how ranching, energy development, wildfires, endangered species and other issues are handled across 1.4 million acres of public land in southwestern Idaho and northern Nevada.

The draft plan and an environmental impact statement were released Friday. The public has 90 days to comment on the findings.

The groups that created the draft came up with five management objectives to guide their proposed actions over the next 15 to 20 years, in addition to one option that represented no action. Out of those five, they chose as their preferred objective to restore the area ecosystem's ability to function naturally through restoration and managing land uses — the latter include such diverse categories as recreation, grazing, energy development and environmental value.

As a draft plan, the focus on restoring the ecosystem isn't final yet, noted BLM Acting Idaho State Director Peter Ditton.

Rodeo life more than 8-second ride for cowboys

Wes Stevenson tips his hat and swings over the gate onto the beast's back while Shouse Arena spectators await Thursday's next ride at the Magic Valley Stampede rodeo at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds in Filer.

'Some scary stuff'

Twin Falls County Commissioner Terry Kramer holds a jar that previously held herbal incense that people have smoked as synthetic marijuana. Kramer said he hopes to see some regulation, such as an age restriction, placed on the sale of the substance to prevent abuse.

T.F. County is latest to battle synthetic pot

It's not marijuana, but it has similar intoxicating elements and worrisome side effects.

Herbal incense, sold under brand names like Spice, Haze, K2 or Black Mamba, is legally sold in tobacco shops and convenience stores across the country. While it's labeled as "not for human consumption," some people are smoking it to get high just the same. Taking the lead from other lawmakers, area officials are taking a harder look at the products used as synthetic marijuana.

"It's some scary stuff," said Twin Falls County Commissioner Terry Kramer.

This summer, the commissioner addressed the issue at a local emergency planning meeting, and he's looking into a county ordinance to control sale of the substances.

Incense effects mostly unknown to health officials

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Normally, people consider anything labeled "herbal" to be benign and often soothing. If so, the herbal incense some people use as a substitute for marijuana is an exception to the rule.

Local and state governments have become aware over the past six months of people using various brands of incense as a drug, and many want to ban the product. In the meantime, health agencies have started campaigns to educate people about the potential dangers of smoking incense.

On Aug. 26, the Idaho Office of Drug Policy presented its most recent information on the incense and its regulation in other states to the Idaho Board of Health and Welfare. Sharon Burke of the Office of Drug Policy said her office is still researching the best approach for regulation in Idaho.

"We would like to get something out before the Legislature meets," Burke said. "We already have some policy-makers interested in carrying a bill."

The incense, sold under brand names such as Spice, K2, Black Mamba and Red Magic, has been legally sold in Europe since 2002. The K2 brand claims its incense can "uplift and elevate your senses."

But in January 2009, a German laboratory identified synthetic chemicals in the mixtures similar to cannabinoids,

Afghanistan: Special-ops on show to woo war skeptics

By Kimberly Dozier
Associated Press writer

News analysis

KABUL, Afghanistan — The new top commander in Afghanistan is talking up a weapon that has been kept in the shadows for years — special operations missions to kill or capture key insurgents — to try to convince skeptics the war can be won.

More than previous commanders, Gen. David Petraeus has released the results of special operations missions — 235 militant leaders were killed or captured in the last 90 days, another 1,066 rank-and-file insurgents killed and 1,673 detained — to demonstrate the Taliban and their allies are also suffering losses as NATO casualties rise.

Petraeus told reporters traveling Friday with the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. Mike Mullen, that in the past 24 hours, special operations forces carried out eight missions, capturing three targeted individuals. Four more were believed killed or detained, Petraeus said.

Accentuating the positive is part of Petraeus' media style, developed when he commanded U.S. forces in Iraq and was widely credited with helping turn the tide in that war.

Those skills are part of what the White House knew it needed when President Obama selected the four-star general in July to replace Gen. Stanley McChrystal, after remarks critical of the administration appeared in Rolling Stone magazine.

Since taking command, Petraeus has used a series of high-profile media interviews to try to reverse the wave of pessimism about the war in Congress and the American public.

Pat's Picks

Three things to do today

Pat Marcantonio

● Sasha Cohen, Olympic silver medalist and two-time world silver medalist, performs at Sun Valley Resort's Summer Ice Show at dusk at the Sun Valley Ice Rink. Tickets are $32 to $98, depending on whether you want dinner.

● Wine tasting, crafts, art and classic cars make up Pine-Featherville Days from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the Pine Senior Citizen Center, 2 miles north of Pine. Admission is free. In addition to the activities, the place is beautiful.

● And the Labor Day celebrations continue today — this one in Jarbidge, Nev., starting at 1 p.m., with bingo and later live music at the Outdoor Inn. Take U.S. Highway 93 south to Rogerson, then turn west on Three Creek Road. Go to Jarbidge.org for more information.

Have your own pick to share? Something unique to the area and that may surprise people? E-mail me at patm@magicvalley.com.

"The alternative we ultimately choose may change based on comments we receive on the draft EIS or on additional information that might become available," Ditton said in a press release.

Much has changed with respect to public-land management since the last Jarbidge-area plan was written in 1987. At that time, almost half the district was already classified as being in "poor" environmental condition.

Scientists have since learned more about preserving ecosystems, but that knowledge hasn't been added to BLM plans. Wildfires have become more frequent in the Jarbidge area, populations of species such as the sage grouse have declined, and relations between the various groups that use the public land have become more contentious.

It all came to a head in 2005 when the Hailey-based Western Watersheds Project sued the BLM for issuing 28 10-year grazing permits in the Jarbidge district. The environmental advocacy group alleged that the BLM itself had determined that the grazing allotments failed to meet the agency's own ecological standards.

The court concluded the BLM had violated two federal laws in issuing the permits, and the case ended in a settlement where the BLM agreed to revise its Jarbidge plan.

That put the revision on an accelerated schedule, but it still took longer than BLM officials planned, BLM spokeswoman Heather Tiel-Nelson said.

"These plans are an all-consuming effort," Tiel-Nelson said. "It's research-driven, so there's a lot of data and then you have to bring all the interested groups together."

Revised plans for the BLM's Shoshone and Burley field offices are waiting in the wings. The two districts will be combined in one plan, Tiel-Nelson said, but none of the work has been done yet due to a lack of funding.

Air Force looks at Gowen Field for new transport

BOISE (AP) — U.S. Air Force officials came to Boise last week to scrutinize facilities at Gowen Field for an Italian-made military cargo plane that could be stationed here.

Col. Tim Marsano, an Idaho National Guard spokesman, says the team surveying beddowns for an operational mission of the C-27J Spartan was pleased with what it saw.

He says officials thought

Gowen, with its vacant hangar space, was "a good facility."

Idaho learned in July neither Mountain Home Air Force Base nor Gowen were among the first sites to win the F-35 Joint Strike Fighter, but the Air Force dangled the Spartan as a consolation prize. Gowen Field and a facility in Great Falls, Mont. could get the planes, which can land on dirt runways in places like Afghanistan.

"I don't know if we can ban it or not," he said. "We should at least consider some control."

Officials are most concerned that the incense isn't only available in tobacco shops. Various brands are also available in convenience stores and from retail websites, places that sell the products without the burden of age restrictions.

Because of the products' legality, area law-enforcement agencies haven't widely cited minors in possession, much less adults. That's changing in some counties, though, as prosecuting attorneys in Canyon and Cassia counties have said they'll pursue misdemeanor charges of possession of inhalants against minors caught with the substances, as well as criminal charges against anyone who provides the substances to a minor.

People who normally undergo drug testing, such as military members or those on probation, have gravitated to smoking the incense products because the synthetic chemicals produce a high but aren't detected by routine blood or urine tests. That's beginning to change: On Aug. 11, NMR Labs, a Pennsylvania forensics laboratory, announced it developed a legally defensible blood test for the synthetics. Kramer said that the county has come across a similar urine test to detect the synthetic chemicals and is mulling its potential applications.

"We're looking into banning (use of the substances) as a condition of parole," he said, adding that other officials such as judges, drug counselors and probation officers will have to be part of any decisions made.

One area businessman agrees that there needs to be some control over the sale of the products, but he doesn't want to see an outright ban.

Allen Nagel, owner of Hayze Spice Co. LLC, of Twin Falls, said the government should step in and monitor the sale of the products.

"If anyone is caught selling it to minors, it should be no different from (selling) alcohol or cigarettes," Nagel said. He sells his herbal incense product, called Hayze Spice, through his Twin Falls retail tobacco store on Washington Street North and to other retailers across the country, all of which have an age limit of 18 to enter.

"I've never sold it to minors," he said. "You have to be 18 to even go in my shop."

Nagel said he started selling different brands of incense in late 2009. But after researching some of the side effects users complained about, he decided earlier this year to manufacture his own incense blend, which he claims is free of pesticides and chemicals like acetone. Even so, his Hayze Spice remains clearly labeled as "not for human consumption."

Regardless of claims about his product compared to others, Nagel said he wants other shops — tobacco specialists or any convenience stores — to adopt an age restriction on purchases until legislation is passed in Idaho.

"I'm inviting other shops that sell similar products to change the age limit to 19 to keep it out of the schools," he said.

Two area lawmakers have plans for future legislation.

Rep. Rich Wills, R-Glenns Ferry, and Sen. Denton Darrington, R-Declo, told the Times-News recently that they are working toward introducing a bill at the 2011 Legislature. Wills said he's had a lot of contact with the public regarding synthetic marijuana, as has Darrington.

Wills said details aren't concrete on the specifics of any bill they will draft.

"We do need to work on getting a handle on that," Darrington said. "I don't know what our approach will be."

Calif. city to subpoena official in salary probe

BELL, Calif. (AP) — The City Council in a small blue-collar city near Los Angeles has voted to subpoena the records of its former city manager, whose huge salary prompted an investigation of possible fraud.

City Attorney James M. Casso said Friday the records could help the city determine whether Robert Rizzo engaged in unlawful and wasteful activities.

Rizzo was forced to resign earlier this year after residents learned he was being paid nearly $800,000 a year.

Markcus May to answer for allegedly shooting Buhl man

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

A Buhl man testified against his alleged shooter Friday in 5th District Court in Twin Falls.

Markcus May, 24, is set to be arraigned in district court after Magistrate Judge Roger Harris found probable cause to formally charge him with one count of aggravated battery, three counts of aggravated assault, one count of burglary and one count of eluding peace officers.

Twin Falls County Senior Deputy Prosecutor Stan Holloway successfully argued for the state, calling four witnesses at the preliminary hearing — including James Lambert, whom May allegedly shot on May 27 in Buhl.

May ran from police and was shot himself during his apprehension, and has remained in custody at the Twin Falls County Jail. He was found to be in possession of a 9 mm pistol, the same caliber of gun which police believe was used to shoot Lambert.

The Filer police officer who wounded May was recently cleared of any wrongdoing by Ada County prosecutors, who handled the officer-involved shooting investigation.

May's arraignment date was not set at Friday's hearing.

Rodeo

Eight seconds and another short wait later, the announcer's deep voice comes over the speaker. "Eighty-three points for the cowboy from Lubbock, Texas!"

It's a good score for a Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association Rodeo — one that will help Stevenson in his quest to claim the world championship.

Five students from the College of Southern Idaho rodeo team stood near the gate before the rodeo started. Dressed in pink shirts for "Tough Enough to Wear Pink" night, the cowboys waited for their cue.

Just Scherer, a 19-year-old bull rider and bullfighter, says the team was there to help with everything from "strippin' chutes" to untying calves and setting up barrels.

"Everyone is a big family," he says, brushing at his black felt hat. "We're old-style, you know? Everyone leaves their cars unlocked and we score a 93 and then turn around and tell your friend that you hope that he beats you."

Scherer is determined to be a PRCA cowboy one day. The practice he gets helping behind the chutes is just part of that journey, he says.

What does it take to be a rodeo cowboy? Scherer says it's all about hard work, determination and an attitude that strives for a life that can be harder than getting bucked off of a fiery bull.

Ample travel and injuries are just some of the realities cowboys face. Bull rider Shane Proctor of North Carolina has had more than 10 concussions, but he says they were all worth it. He rides in 45 rodeos per year, traveling the circuit with his wife, who he says is used to watching the injuries and accidents since both her brother and husband are involved in rodeo.

Saddle bronc rider Wade Sundell says the rodeo in Twin Falls this year is a way to fix and redeem what happened on the dirt arena last year. According to the cowboys who wait with him before their time to get in the chute, Sundell has a good chance of winning the world championship. Last year he won an estimated $200,000.

The cowboy life isn't for everyone, but Sundell says he loves the lifestyle.

"You're free to do whatever you want, whenever you want," Sundell says. "I never get nervous before I get on. I just think, 'I'm gonna beat this sucker up!'"

Playing up missions by special operations forces — Navy SEALs, Delta Force, Army Rangers and Green Berets — offers a way to demonstrate that the U.S. and its NATO partners are taking the fight to the Taliban.

Petraeus has shared key heretofore classified data with reporters at a level of detail that surprised many U.S. officials here and in Washington.

A senior official in Kabul downplayed the notion that publicizing these details is calculated to win public support, saying it simply highlights one of the war's successes. The official spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss the commander's strategy.

Special operations missions are now at their highest tempo, with nearly 4,000 carried out between May and August, according to officials here.

U.S. officials are sensitive to the suggestion that Petraeus is using the spec-ops successes for public effect, perhaps because it harks back to the largely discredited body counts of the Vietnam war.

But back in Washington, the release of information was warmly welcomed in some quarters, offsetting the daily drumbeat of rising U.S. casualties. At least 28 U.S. service members have been killed in the past week.

Special operations troops have been in Afghanistan since the conflict began in 2001, working with the anti-Taliban Northern Alliance to drive the Taliban from power after the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks in the United States and later to pursue al-Qaida leaders.

Last fall, McChrystal, who commanded special operations forces in Iraq, stepped up the tempo, broadening their mission to include killing or capturing midlevel commanders in the Taliban and their allies in the Haqqani network.

What's new is that Petraeus and his aides are talking about it.

By highlighting their successes, Petraeus could earn bankable political capital that he will need if he recommends that Obama slow the drawdown of U.S. troops that the president promised will begin next July.

This does not mean that Petraeus is shifting emphasis from traditional counterinsurgency strategy — clearing territory, holding it, building on it, and then turning it over to the Afghan government.

In an interview Tuesday with The Associated Press and two other news organizations, Petraeus spoke of spec-ops successes, but added: "You don't kill or capture your way out of an industrial-strength insurgency."

Earl’s might quickly dissipates

Storm hits Massachusetts with wind, rain, surf

CHATHAM, Mass. (AP) — The remnants of Hurricane Earl dumped wind-driven rain on Cape Cod’s gray-shingled cottages and fishing villages Friday night, but its close brush with the Northeast was less intense than feared only hours earlier.

Earl swooped into New England waters as a tropical storm with winds of 70 mph after sideswiping North Carolina’s Outer Banks, where it caused flooding but no injuries and little damage.

The storm’s approach disrupted vacations on the unofficial final weekend of the summer, but the swirling rain it brought to Cape Cod, Nantucket Island and Martha’s Vineyard on Friday was typical of the nor’easters that residents have been dealing with for generations.

Winds on Nantucket, closest to the storm’s center, were blowing at around 30 mph, with gusts above 40 mph. The island got about 1.5 inches of rain through 11 p.m., with more expected. Flooding of low-lying areas was expected and damage from tropical storm-force winds was still possible, officials said.

The well-to-do resort island and old-time whaling port briefly saw some localized flooding, but it was typical of summer storms and had cleared within hours, Nantucket Assistant Town Manager Gregg Tivnan said. There were no evacuations, power outages or even reports of trees down, he said.

“The south side of the island certainly did take a hit. We’ll assess the damage and the erosion to the beach tomorrow, but so far don’t have any report of major damage,” Tivnan said late Friday.

In the hours and days before the storm, vacationers had pulled their boats from the water and canceled Labor Day weekend reservations on Nantucket. Shopkeepers boarded up their windows. Swimmers in New England were warned to stay out of the water — or off the beach altogether — because of the danger of getting swept away by high waves.

A passer-by walks past a store-front window featuring a sign depicting Hurricane Earl, in Chatham, Mass., on Friday. The storm has since been downgraded to a tropical storm.

Airlines canceled dozens of flights into New England, and Amtrak suspended train service between New York and Boston.

The storm was expected to pass about 50 to 75 miles southeast of Nantucket after midnight Friday. It had accelerated throughout the afternoon and evening and, National Weather Service meteorologist Rebecca Gould said, was expected to “fly by Nantucket.”

The storm weakened faster than predicted and would continue to diminish, Gould said. “We may still see some wind damage on the outer Cape and Nantucket, but it’s not going to be substantial by any means,” she said.

Earl dulled quickly over the course of 36 hours. At midday Friday, it had dropped to a Category 1 storm — down from a fearsome Category 4 with 145 mph winds a day earlier. At 11 p.m., it was downgraded to a tropical storm.

Officials had warned New England residents against complacency, but many in Chatham, a fishing village at Cape Cod’s eastern edge, didn’t seem worried.

Tourists strolled past the bookstores, cafes and ice cream parlors on Main Street, where a few stores had put plywood over their windows, including the Ben Franklin Old Fashioned Variety Store. “C’m on Earl, we’re ready for you,” a handwritten note read.

Late Friday, when it appeared Earl would not deliver its strongest punch, the town’s beach turned festive. People ran on the sand and a teenager in an alien-like suit measured wind speeds.

“We’re having a great time,” said Jodie Charest, 36, of Chatham, who was there with her daughters, Alexis, 15, and Molly, 8. “We just ran down to the beach ... enjoying the rain in our faces and just enjoying the wind in our hair.”

Professor in ’03 plague scare sets off airport shutdown

By Jennifer Kay and Curt Anderson
Associated Press writers

MIAMI — The suspicions airport security officials had when they saw the metal canister grew when they learned about the man who brought it in from the Middle East: a scientist who sparked a bioterrorism scare after he reported missing vials of plague samples seven years ago.

Officials shut down most of Miami International Airport overnight, roused nearby hotel guests from their beds and detained Dr. Thomas Butler until Friday morning, when he was released without charges, a senior law enforcement official said.

Tests on the canister found nothing dangerous, said the senior law enforcement official, who spoke on condition of anonymity because he wasn’t authorized to release the information. Homeland Security spokesman Nicholas Kimball said the item resembled a pipe bomb.

Butler’s former lawyer said the incident appeared to be a “fantastic overreaction.”

Butler, 70, is a world-renowned plague researcher who quickly became the focus of a federal investigation in 2003 when he reported that 30 vials of plague samples possibly had been stolen from his Texas Tech University lab.

He was later acquitted of smuggling and illegally transporting the potentially deadly germ, and of lying to federal agents about the missing vials. Jurors found Butler guilty of the mislabeling and unauthorized export of a FedEx package that contained plague samples he sent to Tanzania.

He was also convicted of fraud and theft and sentenced to two years in prison for defrauding Texas Tech about illegally negotiated contracts he had with pharmaceutical companies with which he also had clinical studies contracts.

Before Butler’s trial, leading scientific organizations expressed concern about the criminal case against him and its effect on infectious disease research. Four Nobel laureates said in an open letter that Butler had been “subjected to unfair and disproportionate treatment.”

Jonathan Turley, a George Washington University law professor who represented Butler in his unsuccessful appeals, said the scientist “has spent his entire life protecting and healing people in some of the most impoverished areas of the world. He would never do anything that would endanger people.”

The senior law enforcement official told the AP that a Transportation Security Administration inspector noticed an odd container around 9 p.m. Thursday as Butler was going through customs. He had arrived on a flight from the Middle East, where he had been teaching at a Saudi Arabian university.

The inspector ran Butler’s name through a database and discovered that he had been tried on the plague-related charges. Officials decided to evacuate the airport and detain Butler, who cooperated fully, the law enforcement official said.

Ground beef outbreak puts focus on meat oversight

By Martiga Lohn
Associated Press writer

ST. PAUL, Minn. — The first known U.S. outbreak linked to a rare strain of E. coli in ground beef is prompting a fresh look at tougher regulations to protect the nation’s meat supply.

Three people in Maine and New York became ill this summer after eating ground beef traced back to a Cargill plant in Wyalusing, Pa. Cargill Meat Solutions, a subsidiary of Minneapolis-based Cargill Inc., recalled about 8,500 pounds of ground beef on Saturday, and regulators warned consumers to throw out frozen meat purchased at BJ’s Wholesale Clubs in eight eastern states. The ground beef had a use-by-or-freeze-by date of July 1.

Dr. Elisabeth Hagen, who was appointed undersecretary of food safety at the U.S. Department of Agriculture nine days before the recall, has signaled interest in expanding federal oversight of meat beyond the most prevalent strain of E. coli.

“In order to best prevent illnesses and deaths from dangerous E. coli in beef, our policies need to evolve to address a broader range of these pathogens,” Hagen said in a statement.

The New York Times first reported the USDA interest in federal oversight of other strains of E. coli following the Cargill recall.

The federal government currently requires meat plants to test for the most virulent strain of E. coli, O157:H7, which causes an estimated 70,000 illnesses a year. They don’t have to test for six other less common strains of E. coli, including the O26 version that sickened those involved the Cargill recall.

Industry officials said tests aren’t widely available to detect the other strains of E. coli.

They also said more testing isn’t the most effective way to keep meat safe. J. Patrick Boyle, who heads the American Meat Institute, warned Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack in a letter last month that more testing would cause “more harm than good” by imposing new costs and diverting attention from efforts to prevent toxins from getting into the food supply.

“Testing doesn’t make food safe in and of itself. You have to have some preventive measures in place,” said James H. Hodges, the trade group’s executive vice president.

Cargill spokesman Mike Martin said Friday that the latest outbreak shows the need to keep searching for solutions to reduce the potential health risks. He said Cargill worked with disease investigators to trace the outbreak and voluntarily recalled the product. He added that none of the three people who became sick were hospitalized.

“Certainly I think we need to take a fresh look at this because of the apparent linkage of O26 to beef,” Martin said.

Hundreds of varieties of E. coli live naturally in the intestines of cattle and other animals without making them sick. For people, symptoms of E. coli infection include bloody diarrhea, dehydration and in severe cases, kidney failure.

Consumers can avoid getting infected from tainted meat by cooking it thoroughly and using a meat thermometer to make sure it reaches an internal temperature of at least 160 degrees.

The BJ’s Wholesale Clubs affected by the voluntary recall are in Connecticut, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, New Jersey and Virginia, according to the company’s website.

Mother of slain camper files claim

Filing asks for $10M after prison escapee allegedly killed son

PHOENIX (AP) — The mother of an Oklahoma man believed to have been killed by an Arizona prison escapee has filed a $10 million claim against Arizona and a wrongful death lawsuit against the private company that operates the prison that housed the fugitive.

The Thursday claim, filed by Vivian Haas against the state, is the precursor to a lawsuit. The wrongful death lawsuit was filed against Management & Training Corporation of Delaware on Wednesday. The company operates the private prison near Kingman where three fugitives escaped on July 30.

Police believe one of those escaped inmates, John McCluskey, shot Gary Haas and his wife, Linda, near Santa Rosa, N.M., in the days following the escape as the fugitives grew weary of traveling in a car and targeted the Haases for their camping trailer.

"Mrs. Haas is devastated by the loss of her son, particularly in the brutal and abrupt manner that he was taken from her," the Haas family said in a prepared statement. "It is her intention to see to it, as much as possible, that no other family ever has to suffer this same type of horrific, senseless loss."

The inmates' escape led to a manhunt that stretched from Arizona to the Canada border.

The Arizona Republic

reported that the claim against Arizona notes the state's failure to maintain custody of the inmates, to properly train and supervise personnel at the prison and to promptly notify law enforcement officials in the area after the escape.

"I have conveyed my condolences to the Haas family and friends, however, I cannot comment on pending litigation," Department of Corrections Director Charles Ryan said in a statement.

Management Training Corp. could not be immediately reached for comment.

Reviews of the July 30 incident have painted the picture of a prison where corrections officers became lackadaisical and predictable in their movements, and where equipment failures – including false alarms – were so common that they were frequently ignored.

Corrections officers failed to check an alarm that sounded when McCluskey, Tracy Province and Daniel Renwick cut through one of two security fences surrounding the privately run prison near Kingman.

Investigators have said McCluskey's fiancée, Casslyn Welch, threw cutting tools over the fence to the men, who snipped through chain link and barbed wire to flee into the desert. It was more than two hours before staff at the private prison notified the state corrections officials of the escape.

Judge blocks charges against military supplier

ATLANTA (AP) — The federal case against a Kuwait-based food supplier accused of defrauding the U.S. government of $68 million was dealt a stinging setback after a judge moved to block the charges.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Alan Baverman recommended that fraud charges against the Public Warehousing Co. not go forward because the indictment had not been properly served. A federal judge must now sign off on the move.

Prosecutors then asked Friday to have remaining charges dropped against the company's U.S.-based subsidiary, Agility DGS Holdings. Prosecutor Barbara Nelan said she didn't want the subsidiary to be a "straw man" that took the fall for its parent company's wrongdoing.

The moves aren't likely to be the end of the case. Nelan said that investigators are still gathering details on the company's contracts and she did not rule out a new indictment for the companies.

"This investigation is broadening every day," she said.

The food supplier's attorneys, too, are bracing for new charges. Tom Bever, who represents Agility DGS Holdings, urged the judge to order prosecutors to hand over more than 15 million pages of discovery, even if the case is dismissed, so they can prepare for a new round of charges.

Prosecutors in November unveiled the indictment charging the Kuwaiti company with manipulating a complex funding formula to defraud the U.S. government of at least $68 million in contracts to supply troops in Iraq, Kuwait and Jordan.

But since then, federal authorities have been locked in a legal battle with the Kuwaiti company's attorneys over whether the company was properly served with the charges.

Baverman sided with the supplier in a 91-page filing Thursday, finding that attempts to serve the Kuwaiti parent company with indictments were "insufficient."

The indictment claimed that the Kuwaiti company provided false invoices and statements to a logistics center and knowingly inflated prices since 2003. And it said the company received rebates and discounts from vendors that it did not pass on to the government as required by the contract.

The company was also charged with inflating fees by asking vendors to manipulate the way the products were packed, enabling it to bill the government twice as much as it should have.

Agility said in a statement that it welcomed the judge's findings, and that it hopes to resolve the dispute outside of the courtroom but it is prepared to "defend itself vigorously if that dialogue is not fruitful."

"Those helicopters are rather easy to get out of, a plastic bubble," she said. "They're not as cumbersome as an all-metal helicopter."

The helicopter was carrying a non-hazardous liquid fertilizer, Lehman said, which spilled onto the road and had been washed away.

Lehman said the National Transportation Safety Board would investigate the cause of the crash.

 — Sophie Esch, 28, a graduate student at Tulane, after hearing of the latest mishap in the Gulf of Mexico — a fire on an oil platform just 200 miles west of the site of the massive spill

Kimberly steps up to help a good Samaritan

CHEERS: To the City of Kimberly, for lending a hand to one the Magic Valley’s legendary humanitarians.

The city has donated property on Taylor Street to Cecile Griffith and her End End Providers. There are plans for a 40-by-80-square-foot building to house the philanthropic organization’s operations.

Griffith, a Kimberly hairdresser and business owner, has been helping struggling Magic Valley residents during the Christmas season for four decades. Last year, the East End Providers assisted 465 families with food, coats and gifts, all gathered as donations from the public, businesses and civic groups.

Most of the items collected have been stored in Griffith’s business and others.

Space there is limited, so the new structure will help Griffith and her small army of volunteers aid more people.

It’s nice to see government make common cause with real people for the good of the community. And even nicer to see Griffith get the tools she needs to expand her amazing work.

JEERS: To Republican legislative leaders and Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter’s reelection campaign organization for getting their facts wrong.

A press release issued Friday quoted Rep. Dennis Lake, R-Blackfoot; Sen. President Bob Geddes, R-Soda Springs, and House Speaker Lawrence Denney, R-Midvale, as minimizing Democratic gubernatorial nominee Keith Allred’s involvement in persuading the Legislature in 2006 to raise the state’s homeowner’s exemption from property taxes and index it to changes in the Idaho Housing Index. The governor’s campaign manager Debbie Field issued a second release, saying “The fact of the matter is, the governor’s opponent is taking credit for passing a bill that he had nothing to do with.”

That’s simply not true, and it’s astonishing that Field — who was a member of the House Revenue and Taxation Committee at the time — and the legislators would make such statements.

Records from the 2006 Legislature show Allred was pivotal in linking the homeowner’s exemption for owner-occupied homes to the Idaho index, instead of the federal Consumer Price Index, The Associated Press reported. Making that switch has saved Idaho homeowners millions, because the Housing Price Index has risen faster than the CPI.

Sen. Brent Hill, R-Rexburg, remembers it was Allred who suggested the Housing Price Index during a presentation to the Senate Local Government and Taxation

Committee. And former Sen. Hal Bunderson, R-Meridian, who chaired the same committee in 2006, said: “Keith was an integral part of our effort to index the homeowners’ exemption to the Idaho House Price Index. It was Keith who brought the index to our attention.”

In fact, Denney and Geddes opposed the final version of the bill in part because of changes Allred helped get the Senate to adopt.

Geddes is quoted as saying that Otter signed the bill — Dirk Kempthorne was governor at the time. And Field contends that Allred never spoke at public meetings about the bill and never testified before the Legislature, which is flat wrong.

What’s going on with the Otter campaign?

CHEERS: To Hailey’s Maggie Springer, for extraordinary devotion to a good cause.

This week Springer received the Distinguished Service Medal, a plaque from the Idaho National Guard designating her a “100 Percent American Soldier” and another plaque making her a member of the Guard.

She’s become synonymous with supporting American service members, beginning at an early age by playing the trumpet at military services in Blaine and Lincoln counties.

In the aftermath of the Sept. 11 attacks, Springer used her own money to buy 1,100 “Picture Me With You” bears, which she contributed to the New York City fire and police departments for kids who had lost parents in the terrorist attacks.

She raised money for a granite memorial honoring 50 Idaho soldiers killed in Iraq and Afghanistan, which will be unveiled in front of the Ada County Courthouse in Boise on Sept. 11 this year. And Springer organized an annual Memorial Day Service at the Hailey Cemetery.

Those who have borne the battle for America appreciate all that she has done, and so should the rest of us.

The crisis of spiraling college tuition

The cost of college has become unpatriotic.

In a speech to the Urban League in July, President Obama bemoaned the nation’s drop from first in the world to 12th in measures of college completion. This situation is “economically indefensible” and “morally inexcusable,” he said, and “all of us are going to have to roll up our sleeves to change it.”

Derrick Z. Jackson

Graduation rates aside, the most morally inexcusable aspect of college is the unbridled cost of getting in. It is clear who should be first to roll up their sleeves: college presidents. Obama should declare their tuitions and fees a state of emergency and call a national summit to hold these institutions accountable.

At this very moment, loaded minivans and U-Haul trucks are crisscrossing America in the transport of the nation’s 23.7 million undergraduate college students. They are arriving with dreams no less lofty than students of previous generations. A record 74 percent of female high school graduates and 66 percent of male high school graduates enrolled in college in 2009. While these high numbers might seem encouraging, the problem is that most of these students are also guaranteed unprecedented debt burdens no matter their final GPA.

Since 1990, according to the Chronicle of Higher Education, the price of tuition, fees, room, and board at private and public four-year colleges has risen between three and four and a half times the increase in average family income. At least 58 colleges now charge between $200,000 to $225,000 for four years. Mark Taylor, the chair of Columbia University’s religion department and author of a forthcoming book on college reform, recently estimated in The New York Times that at current trends, those costs will zoom to $330,000 in 2020 and $525,000 in 2028.

“Even in the worst economic times since the Great Depression, universities behave with no conscience. Since the 2007-08 school year, according to the Department of Education, private not-for-profit colleges have raised tuition and fees 6.6 percent — well beyond the rate of inflation. State schools — fighting budget cuts from their state legislatures — raised them 9.1 percent”

For most families, it is impossible to put away enough money to prepare for such a burden. Last month, a Fidelity Investments survey found that 67 percent of parents have begun saving for college, compared with 58 percent in 2007. But the savings is only expected to cover 16 percent of college costs.

Obama, to his credit, has enacted major student loan reforms and boosted the Pell Grant program. But these steps will never keep up with rises in tuition, which have created one of the world’s worst gaps between tuition rates and available subsidies.

Even in the worst economic times since the Great Depression, universities behave with no conscience. Since the 2007-08 school year, according to the Department of Education, private not-for-profit colleges have raised tuition and fees 6.6 percent — well beyond the rate of inflation. State schools — fighting budget cuts from their state legislatures — raised them 9.1 percent. We just had a fractious national debate on health care, but the growth of college tuition rivals that of hospital costs.

College presidents have plenty of excuses. To hear many tell it, rising tuition is like a Cold War arms race, in which each school must build fancy new structures or prop up the football team to maintain competitive advantage over one another. No one has called them on their excuses. It will be interesting to see if Obama can, since he received $23 million from education interests in his election, compared to $1.7 million for rival John McCain. Employees of Harvard, Stanford, Columbia, and the University of California alone gave nearly $7 million to Obama, according to the Center for Responsive Politics.

To be sure, some cost critics blame the federal government for providing too much aid, which seduces colleges to be lazy with costs. Parents also bear tremendous responsibility, so caught up in the arms race that too few stop to ask, “Is that $50,000-a-year school really going to make my kid three times happier than that $17,000 state school?”

The reasons are complex, but the outcome is simple. Soon, not only the so-called “best” colleges but also state schools will be beyond the reach of the middle class. Obama should use the full power of his office to make clear that colleges cannot keep pushing up the cost of the American Dream.

Coffee club had fun with cardboard boat

We would like to thank the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce and Longview Fiber for sponsoring the Great Cardboard Boat Races on Aug. 21 at Dierke’s Lake.

The Old Coots Coffee Club is a group of retired guys who get together twice a week for coffee and whose average age is 76 years young. We laughed for three weeks planning and building our boat and haven’t stopped yet. We didn’t make it very far, but oh, what fun it was!

Our boat consisted of 16 sheets of cardboard, 3½ gallons of glue, 10 bolts, nuts and washers, 1½ gallons of paint, eight dozen doughnuts and eight gallons of coffee (suppose that’s why we sank?)

We are already planning for next year, so watch out for the Old Coots Coffee Club you “young’ns.”

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

My summer home, shared with all Americans

During the bitter-sweet days of September light, when a low-angled sun is unwavering in its withdrawal, I always have trouble saying goodbye. How to shutter the season? How to close the summer home with a memory to last through the dark months?

Growing up, I looked with nose pressed against a mythic window of class at those who played in their waterfront compounds at Hayden Lake in Idaho. And when I came of age, I heard about the Hamptons and Cape Cod, Aspen and the San Juan Islands, where the ZIP code itself was supposed to guarantee happiness.

We had nothing to call a second home, and then I saw in a month's travel that we had everything. Not long after I was old enough to cast my first vote, I realized that with American citizenship came a birthright to my summer home.

With my friend Tim Williams, I stuck my thumb out on a freeway toward the Rockies, east from our West; two Tims on the road. We saw mountain ranges in Montana named Beartooth and Big Horn, and rivers honoring presidents Madison and Jefferson. We traveled over one road labeled Going-to-the-Sun, and heard whispered stories about another heading toward Craters of the Moon.

We slept on hard ground in the high, wind-raked expanse of Wyoming's brown grasslands, and then thrilled at the very sight of the first 14,000-foot mountains to appear in Colorado. Here was Rocky Mountain National Park, a popout card come to life, and Garden of the Gods, a rare act of apt cartographic imagination.

It was ours, Tim and I came to understand, all of it. We owned it — lake, mountain and forest, meadow, desert and shore. Public land. We could put up our tents and be lords of a manor that no monarch could match. We could hike in whatever direction our whims took us, without fear of barbed wire or stares backed by shotguns. We could raft into frothy little streams, light out for even bigger country, guided only by gravity.

Glacier National Park in Montana is home to the Going-to-the-Sun Road. The immensity often gets lost in the superlatives stirred up by the most outrageously scenic sites. But in the aggregate, this is what every citizen owns: 530 million acres, of which 193 million are run by the Forest Service, 253 million by the Bureau of Land Management and 84 million by the National Park Service. The public land endowment is more than three times the size of France.

"Absolutely American, absolutely democratic, they reflect us at our best rather than our worst." That was the encomium for the parks by Wallace Stegner, the Best Westerner. It's worth noting, at a time when a loud fringe of political life fits the Stegner description of us at our worst, how this miracle of public land came to be.

Gifford Pinchot and Teddy Roosevelt applied the political muscle for land on the other side of the no trespassing sign — against powerful opposition in their own Republican Party. Pinchot was a quirky patriot, the first chief of the Forest Service, and one of Roosevelt's top aides. His guiding philosophy for forest reserves, now equal in acreage to the state of Texas, was, "the greatest amount of good for the greatest amount of people in the long run."

His refrain was part of the ongoing rebellion against the Mother Country. It was only in this century, after years of fighting over whether "common" people would have access to some of the hills and dales of old England, that the British public won the right to walk freely through a portion of their country. In addition, what is called "common land" makes up less than a million acres in England. They also have a handful of national parks, though some include big swaths of private ownership.

By contrast, my summer home — which I share with 310 million fellow Americans — is so vast that a dozen lifetimes would not present enough years to sample its variety.

The Rock of Alcatraz is my land, as are the rocks of Acadia National Park on the other shore. A few years ago I stood atop the highest point in the lower 48 states, Mount Whitney in California, and looked down toward the lowest point, in Death Valley; nearly all the eye takes in belongs to you and me.

I found in these last days, a fitting piece of ground from which to say goodbye fitting home for the gods. But thanks to two presidents named Roosevelt, the domicile of the gods is part of my summer home, and yours.

Jet-setting with the rich and the Palin

Sarah Palin is going to Iowa to be the headliner at a Republican fundraiser. In the state that will be the first to hold a contest in the 2012 presidential campaign, even if it has to do it in 2011.

Her staff says this means nothing whatsoever, but let us acknowledge that Palin is on a roll. She's got her own TV show, not counting Fox News. And she twitters! Or somebody does it for her. Hard to tell which. Her tweet on the president's Iraq speech was: "may make u want to dig out ur old Orwell books so rewrite history can be deciphered."

On the one hand, the sentence construction does have that Sarah ring to it. On the other, how many of you think that Palin has old Orwell books hanging around the house? May I see a show of hands?

And she endorses candidates. In the Republican primary for the United States Senate race in Alaska, her pick, a hitherto unknown person named Joe Miller, beat the incumbent, Lisa Murkowski. Whether Palin's backing made any difference to the 28 percent of eligible voters who flocked to the polls is unknowable. But Palin's endorsement did inspire the Tea Party Express to give Miller nearly $600,000 for TV commercials, which he used to brand Murkowski as a liberal insider who changes her positions "more often than a moose sheds its antlers" and as a member of a family that regards itself as entitled royalty.

"We stayed on the high road," Murkowski said when she finally conceded on Tuesday. She originally got her Senate seat from her father, Frank, who held it before her and then decided to appoint Lisa as his successor when he moved on to the state's governorship. So the royalty ad may have had a point, although I'm sure the bit about the antlers was over the top.

Almost no one expected her to lose — certainly not the Alaska Democratic Party, which had dumped its nomination on Scott McAdams, the affable mayor of Sitka, a town with 9,000 people and no road access.

He seems to be an intelligent and well-spoken guy. But the choice was apparently based on the fact that the party's state convention was held in Sitka and McAdams was, if not well known, at least extremely handy.

Anyhow, Miller's victory was another big win for Palin in this year's primaries, and it was followed by the news that she was going to appear at a fall fund-raiser in Iowa — the Iowa of Iowa presidential caucus fame. "Iowa Republicans are going to look favorably on anybody that has come to this state this year to help us win in 2010," the state party chairman told The Des Moines Register.

So very hard to imagine Palin as a presidential candidate. So very easy to imagine her on a reality TV show. Sarah Palin's Alaska, is set to premiere in November on TLC, the cable network that was known in happier days as The Learning Channel. One of the episodes will reportedly involve an educational visit to Alaska by Kate Gosselin and her twins and sextuplets, who also have a reality show on TLC that used to be known as Jon & Kate Plus Eight until her husband ran off with a large number of different women.

Kate Gosselin appeared last year on Dancing With the Stars, and Bristol Palin will be competing on it this fall, holding what is apparently the Recent Break-Up slot in the competition. While Levi Johnston, the father of her baby, runs for mayor of Wasilla, Alaska, on his own reality show. The Palins are now reality TV royalty, like the Blagojeviches and the Ozzy Osbournes.

In her spare time, the former governor of Alaska is making speeches at $75,000 a pop. To which she must be flown first class, as per her standard contract, or in a private plane that "must be a Lear 60 or larger." This is a new, emerging Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous version of Palin. In her public comments, Sarah is still just a down-home gal, making moose chili for the kids and assuring an NRA convention that she and Todd prefer sleeping in the back of their truck to paying for a motel room.

A new Vanity Fair profile by Michael Joseph Gross suggests that Palin does still cut costs by being an extremely bad tipper. The piece also resurrects the charge that she does not actually hunt, and claims that Todd had to scour the neighborhood to find some moose to put in that chili when a TV crew came to call.

This is not the first time Palin's hunting creds have been questioned. I think it is time for her to take a pool of reporters out into the woods, bring down a moose and dress it on the spot. Maybe she could compete with other allegedly outdoory politicians, like Joe Miller. Maybe they could call it "Shooting With the Stars."

This handout photo provided by the State Department shows Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton and Mideast peace envoy George Mitchell during a trilateral meeting with Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Thursday in Clinton's office at the State Department in Washington.

Clinton: Time is now for Mideast peace

By Matthew Lee
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton sought to inject urgency into Israeli-Palestinian peace talks Friday, warning the negotiations may be “the last chance for a very long time” to reach an agreement.

In an unusual joint interview with Israeli and Palestinian television broadcasters a day after she presided over the launch of the first direct talks in two years, Clinton said the rise of Iranian-backed extremist ideology in the Middle East is a major reason why time is short.

Iran's suspected nuclear ambitions have surfaced as a new motivating factor for a Mideast resolution. There have been growing Israeli warnings that the nation might take military steps to blunt Iran's nuclear program, and even some of Israel's Arab neighbors have shown concerns.

The administration believes that a successful Mideast peace deal would limit Iran's ability to use Mideast tensions to justify its behavior.

“I think that time is not on the side of either Israeli or Palestinian aspirations for security, peace and a state,” she said. Iranian-sponsored “rejectionist ideology” and a “commitment to violence” by those opposed to peace make reaching an agreement quickly all the more necessary, she said.

“The United States,” Clinton added, “wants to weigh in on the side of leaders and people who see this as maybe the last chance for a very long time to resolve this.”

Shortly before the interview, Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad dismissed the peace talks, saying “the fate of Palestine will be decided in Palestine and through resistance and not in Washington.”

Iran supports the Palestinian militant group Hamas, which controls the Gaza Strip, which along with the West Bank is supposed to form an eventual Palestinian state. Hamas also rejected the talks this week.

The Obama administration wants a peace deal concluded within a year and both sides pledged Thursday to try to meet that goal in successive rounds of talks. Despite early positive signals from Israeli and Palestinian leaders, hopes for an agreement rest on overcoming significant obstacles and decades of hostility and suspicion.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas will meet for a second round of talks in Egypt on Sept. 14 and 15 and thereafter about every two weeks while lower-level negotiations continue on ironing out specifics of compromises that both sides will have to make.

After the meeting in Egypt, Netanyahu and Abbas will likely see each other, as well as President Barack Obama, again on the sidelines of the upcoming U.N. General Assembly session in the third week of September.

Bombing in Pakistan prompts fears of sectarian violence

The Washington Post

SUKKUR, Pakistan — A suicide bombing at a Shiite demonstration in the western Pakistani city of Quetta left at least 55 people dead Friday, triggering fears of an outbreak of sectarian violence as the nation continues to struggle with ruinous floods.

The strike followed a suicide attack that killed at least two people in northwestern Pakistan at a mosque of the Ahmadi sect, another religious minority whose members are the frequent victims of Islamist extremists. On Wednesday, suicide bombers struck a Shiite march in the city of Lahore, killing at least 30 and sparking riots.

The Pakistani Taliban, an offshoot of the Afghan group, claimed responsibility for the Lahore bombing. The United States added the militant organization, which American officials say was behind the failed May 1 Times Square bomb attempt, to its terrorism blacklist this week. A Pakistani Taliban leader said Friday that the group plans more strikes in the United States and Europe. Attacks by Islamist radicals slowed during the past month as Pakistan coped with its worst-ever natural disaster, which has left 1,600 people dead and displaced millions. Although it was unclear whether militants were offering a reprieve or were themselves weakened by the floodwaters, this week's bombings seemed to mark an end to that lull.

The bombing in Quetta injured at least 100 people. It occurred in a busy commercial area as Shiite Muslims — a minority in a nation where most people are Sunnis — gathered for a procession to express solidarity with Palestinians. Similar marches were held elsewhere in Pakistan.

Television footage showed vehicles and motorbikes aflame in deserted streets. According to the news network Express 24/7, surviving protesters fired guns, contributing to the injuries.

Quetta is in the province of Baluchistan, one of Pakistan's least populated and poorest regions. The province has also been hit by flooding, but the government has restricted the movement of international aid agencies in the area, where separatists have been waging a low-level insurgency for years.

Monsoon rains that sparked flooding in late July let up this week and floodwaters continued to recede, allowing more Pakistanis to return to the cities and villages they had evacuated weeks before.

Despite hiring, U.S. unemployment rate seems frozen

Rate has exceeded 9% for 16 straight months

By Christopher S. Rugaber
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Unemployment is stuck at high levels even though some companies are hiring. The problem, government data show, is that too few jobs are being created for the growing number of people looking for work.

Private employers added a net total of 67,000 jobs in August. But the unemployment rate rose to 9.6 percent from 9.5 percent, the Labor Department said Friday, because the number of job-seekers overwhelmed the

IDAHO RATE EDGES UP

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho unemployment rate has increased for the first time since February.

The state Department of Labor says Idaho's unemployment rate edged up to 8.9 percent during the month of August, a slight increase from 8.8 percent in July. The agency released the latest unemployment numbers on Friday.

Congress in late July extended benefits for the long-term unemployed, which included 8,000 people in Idaho, but state officials say more jobless workers got discouraged at their job prospects and dropped out of the labor force.

Unemployment rates for counties, metropolitan areas and cities will be released Sept. 17, part of a recent change the Department of Labor made to improve the accuracy of its reports.

that streak into next year. If it does, it would break a record of 19 straight months above 9 percent, set from 1982-83, after a severe recession.

Nearly 15 million people are unemployed this Labor Day weekend, and the sluggish economy is putting pressure on President Barack Obama and the Democrats ahead of the November midterm elections. Obama said Friday that he intends to unveil a new package of proposals that will likely include tax cuts and spending to spark job growth.

Nursing homes redefined

Facilities broaden offerings to turn a profit

By Matt Sedensky
Associated Press writer

MIAMI — Seniors amble the nursing home's halls, while children from around the world visit for biofeedback treatments. One floor down from the hospice, middle-aged workers fill its pain management clinic. A rehabilitation center attracts people of all ages.

For decades, the mission at Miami Jewish Home and Hospital was simple: To care for the old. But like nursing homes around the country, the facility is changing how it does business because of consumer demands and the economic realities of selling a service nearly no one wants.

Elmaze Joseph, left, works with therapist Jocelyne Denis doing foot exercises on Aug. 19 at the Miami Jewish Home and Hospital in Miami. Across the U.S., facilities are widely expanding in-home care and assisted living, and looking to new ways to generate income beyond their traditional role of housing the elderly during the last years of their lives.

up more and more to the reality that their old model of doing business is not going to hold up in the 21st century," said Elinor Ginzler, an expert on long-term care at AARP.

Another provider that's changed its mix of services is Ecumen, which operates 70 senior communities in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North Dakota and Idaho.

In 2004, Ecumen derived more than 80 percent of its $99 million in revenues from traditional nursing homes. Five years later, revenues climbed to $126 million while nursing homes' share fell to less than 60 percent, as Ecumen markedly expanded assisted living complexes that allow seniors to be more independent. A $2.5 million loss in 2005 became a $937,000 profit last year.

"We were heavily invested and reliant on a product that wasn't very popular," said Mick Finn, one of the company's a vice presidents. "That's a no-win proposition for any business."

Meanwhile, managers of its facilities were challenged to find new ways to make money off their existing services.

One began offering meals from its cafeteria pickup service to community members. Another started an online business selling incontinence products. A third opened its fitness classes to nonresidents.

"It was either diversify or die," said Eric Schubert, another Ecumen vice president.

Even as the number of older Americans surges with the aging of the massive baby boom generation, demand for nursing homes is decreasing. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimate that the number of nursing home residents fell from 1.63 million in 1999 to 1.49 million in 2004, the last year for which data is available. Meanwhile, the number of nursing homes decreased by nearly 16 percent over the two decades ending in 2004.

Estelle Soury, left, from St. Jullien L'Ars, France, watches her son, Quentin, take his first steps ever, in a biofeedback lab Aug. 19 at the Miami Jewish Home and Hospital in Miami. Therapists Maria Verela and Nedgyne Cheremond, right, watch also.

Jayco cuts 10 percent of its T.F. workforce

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Jayco Inc. has cut 10 percent of the workforce at its Twin Falls plant, the recreational trailer manufacturer confirmed Friday.

The layoffs were completed on Thursday, said Akos Sefcsik, director of operations for Jayco in Twin Falls. He declined to provide a figure for how many employees were laid off, but told the Times-News in November 2009 that the plant planned to operate with a payroll of more than 180 employees after hiring 30 during a company-wide production increase.

Sefcsik said the company has had a good summer, but that dealers have not been replenishing their inventories and reordering what they sell.

"I'm assuming some of it has to do with the tight credit market," he said.

Jayco will also institute a two-week shutdown to adjust its inventories,

Texas AG opens inquiry into Google search rankings

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Google Inc.'s methods for recommending websites are being reviewed by Texas' attorney general in an investigation spurred by complaints that the company has abused its power as the Internet's dominant search engine.

The antitrust inquiry disclosed by Google late Friday is just the latest sign of the intensifying scrutiny facing the company as its enters its adolescence. Since its inception in a Silicon Valley garage 12 years ago, Google has gone from a quirky startup to one of the world's most influential businesses with annual revenue approaching $30 billion.

A spokesman for Texas Attorney General Greg Abbott confirmed the

What now for Gulf of Mexico? Fire complicates oil drilling debate

By Matthew Dally
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — What now for the Gulf?

News of another oil rig fire in the Gulf of Mexico, so soon after the BP oil spill, has set off a wave of anxiety along the Gulf Coast and prompted calls for the government to extend its six-month ban on deepwater drilling.

Just when it seemed the Obama administration might be ready to lift the unpopular ban, the fire raises es new questions about the dangers of offshore drilling, leaving the industry wondering when it can get back to work.

"Anything that casts any kind of shadow on the industry right now certainly complicates lifting the moratorium," said Bruce Bullock, director of the Maguire Energy Institute at Southern Methodist University in Texas. "It makes it difficult to continue to say that (the BP spill) is an aberration."

But while initial reports were frightening, Bullock and other experts said Thursday's platform fire is unlikely to have a lasting effect.

Unlike the April explosion of the Deepwater Horizon rig — which killed 11 people and led to the largest offshore oil spill in the nation's history — the fire at the Mariner Energy Inc. platform 100 miles south of Louisiana killed no one and sent no crude gushing into the water.

NEW YORK (AP) – The stock market had its first winning week in a month thanks to better news on the economy.

The Dow Jones industrial average jumped 128 points Friday, its fourth straight day of gains. The strong start to September marked a turnaround from a dismal performance in August.

A better-than-expected report on employment Friday was the latest piece of improving news on the economy. Stocks also gained earlier this week following signs that manufacturing was gaining in the U.S. and China.

Even after its four-day run, which added 438 points to the Dow, the index is still 6.8 percent below the 2010 high it reached on April 26. Stocks had eased slightly after a report showed that the services sector didn't grow as fast as hoped in August.

The Labor Department said private employers added 67,000 jobs in August, more than analysts polled by Thomson Reuters had forecast. But that's still a far cry from what economists say is a healthy level for the economy.

Report: Blackwater created shell companies

WASHINGTON (AP) — The security company Blackwater Worldwide formed a network of 30 shell companies and subsidiaries to try to get millions of dollars in government business after the company faced strong criticism for reckless conduct in Iraq, The New York Times reported Friday.

The newspaper said that it was unclear how many of the created companies got American contracts but that at least three of them obtained work with the U.S.

military and the CIA.

Sen. Carl Levin, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has asked the Justice Department to see whether Blackwater misled the government when using the subsidiaries to gain government contracts, according to the Times.

It said Levin's committee found that North Carolina-based Blackwater, which now is known as Xe Services, went to great lengths to find ways to get lucrative government work despite criminal charges and criticism stemming from a 2007 incident in which Blackwater guards killed 17 Iraqi civilians. A committee chart outlines the web of Blackwater subsidiaries.

Messages left late Friday with spokespeople for the Michigan Democrat and Xe were not immediately answered.

The 2007 incident and other reports of abuses by Blackwater employees in Iraq led to criminal investigations and congressional hearings, and resulted in the company losing a lucrative contract with the State Department to provide security in Iraq.

But recently the company was awarded a $100 million contract to provide security for the agency in Afghanistan, prompting criticism from some in Congress.

CIA Director Leon Panetta said that the CIA had no choice but to hire the company because it underbid others by $26 million and that a CIA review concluded that the contractor had cleaned up its act.

Last year, Panetta canceled a contract with Xe that allowed the company's operatives to load missiles on Predator drones in Pakistan, and shifted the work to government personnel.

However, the Times quoted former Blackwater officials as saying that at least two Blackwater-affiliated companies, XPG and Greystone, obtained secret contracts from the CIA to provide security to agency operatives.

The newspaper said the network of subsidiaries, including several located in offshore tax havens, were uncovered as part of the Armed Services Committee's examination of government contracting and not an investigation solely into Blackwater.

But Levin questioned why Blackwater would need to create so many companies with various names to seek out government business, according to the Times.

BIRTHRIGHT CITIZENSHIP

‘Birth tourism’ a small portion of immigrant babies

By Bob Christie and Paul J. Weber
Associated Press writers

SAN JUAN, Texas — When Ruth Garcia's twins are born in two months, they'll have all the rights of U.S. citizens. They and their six brothers and sisters will be able to vote, apply for federal student loans and even run for president.

Garcia is an illegal immigrant who crossed into the country about 14 years ago, before her children were born, and the citizenship granted to her children and millions others like them is at the center of a divisive national debate.

Republicans are pushing for congressional hearings to consider changing the nation's 14th Amendment to deny such children the automatic citizenship the Constitution guarantees. They say women like Garcia are taking advantage of the constitutional amendment and paint a picture of pregnant women rushing across the border to give birth.

While a recent Pew Hispanic Center study shows 8 percent of the 4.3 million babies born in the U.S. in 2008 had at least one illegal parent, a closer examination shows that most children of illegal immigrants are born to parents like Garcia who have made the United States their home for years.

Out of 340,000 babies born to illegal immigrants in the United States in 2008, 85 percent of the parents had been in the country for more than a year, and more than half for at least five years, Jeffrey Passel, a senior demographer for Pew, told The Associated Press.

And immigration experts say it's extraordinarily rare for immigrants to come to Miguel, 3, plays with his father, Miguel, an illegal immigrant, on Aug. 27 in San Juan, Texas. Miguel and his wife, who remain in the U.S. as illegal immigrants, have two children born in the U.S.

An advertisement for medical services in the United States flashes across a screen in Mexico last month. Republicans are pushing for congressional hearings to consider changing the nation's 14th Amendment to deny such children the automatic citizenship the Constitution guarantees.

Republican leaders share Struck's beliefs on the issue. Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina has been a vocal advocate for changing the Constitution, and he helped the issue gain momentum heading into the midterm elections.

“Women have traveled from across the world for the purpose of adding a U.S. passport holder to their family, as far away as China, Turkey and as close as Mexico,” said Jon Feere, legal analyst for the Center for Immigration Studies, which advocates for strict immigration laws.

Still, changing the Constitution is highly unlikely, legal scholars say. Measures have been introduced in each two-year congressional session since 2005, but none has made it out of committee. Constitutional changes require approval by two-thirds majorities in both chambers of Congress, an impossibility now because Democrats have the majority in both houses and most oppose such a measure. Even if Republicans gain power in November and legislation is passed, an amendment would still need to be ratified by three-fourths of the states.

the U.S. just so they can have babies and get citizenship. In most cases, they come for economic reasons and better hospitals, and end up staying and raising families.

Garcia's husband has been deported and she earns a living selling tamales to other immigrants who live in fear of being deported from the slapdash, impoverished colonias that dot the Texas-Mexico border.

“I think that children aren't at fault for having been born here,” Garcia said. “My children always have lived here. They've never gone to another country.”

Under current immigration law, Garcia and others like her don't get U.S. citizenship even though their children are Americans.

With an estimated 11.1 million illegal immigrants living in the United States, the issue strikes a chord with many voters — people like retired Air Force nurse and pediatric nurse practitioner Susan Struck, 66, of Double Adobe, Ariz.

“People come over ... and they have babies with U.S. birth certificates, then they go back over the border with that Social Security number, with that birth certificate,” and have access to public services, she said at a recent event near the border organized by conservative tea party activists.

Zebra-painted horses walk Moscow intersections

MOSCOW (AP) — A peculiar sight greeted drivers in Moscow on Friday: zebras walking back and forth across some of the city's busiest intersections.

It was part of a police campaign to call attention to the importance of crosswalks, known as zebra crossings, which are routinely ignored in the Russian capital, contributing to the horrific number of pedestrians who are mowed down by cars.

The drivers who slowed down, and there were some, might have noticed that the zebras were actually light gray horses painted with black stripes. On their backs they carried yellow signs reading: “Careful, children are on their way to school.”

Drivers are aggressive and impatient in fast-paced

A policeman watches a horse painted as a zebra at a crossing Friday in downtown Moscow, Russia.

Moscow, where it's not unusual to see cars zipping down sidewalks or blowing through red lights. Crosswalks often exist only in theory, with drivers explaining that it is too risky to stop because the car behind them is unlikely to extend the courtesy.

In the first six months of this year, 378 people were killed and more than 6,600 injured on pedestrian crossings in Russia, according to police. In Moscow alone, 43 people were killed, including two children.

Anyone who has sat behind the wheel in Moscow knows that pedestrians are a big part of the problem, often darting across multi-laned avenues or stepping off curbs without bothering to look left or right.

Many of the worst offenders are children, said Galina Pravdyuk, a police officer who runs educational programs in Moscow schools. She spoke Friday to a class of schoolchildren who visited an intersection being patrolled by a big striped horse called Vorobei, or Sparrow.

Pravdyuk told the children they were never safe crossing the street, even when the green walk light was on.

A car's brakes can fail and there was even a case when a car went through a red light because the driver had died of heart failure, she said.

CHILE NASA advises Chile on trapped miners

SAN JOSE MINE — A team of NASA doctors and engineers recommended Friday that Chilean authorities regulate the day-and-night sleep patterns of 33 trapped miners, boost their Vitamin D intake and phase in an exercise program as their nutrition improves.

The NASA team is in Chile to help rescuers develop plans for maintaining the health of miners, who have been buried nearly a half-mile underground since a mine collapse on Aug. 5. The miners organized themselves and rationed food for more than two weeks until they were discovered alive Aug. 22.

Since then, the miners have been receiving food, water and medicine through three bore-holes.

The NASA team, which spoke at a news conference late Friday, said regulating sleep patterns requires establishing a “lighted community area” that is always lit and a “dark sleeping area” that is always shuttered. Regulating the time the miners eat and exercise would help them get in a pattern, NASA experts said.

Geologists and engineers are working to open a rescue shaft to the workers, but the government has said it could take up to four months to drill the hole. Possible alternative plans, set to get under way over the next week, could be faster.

NEW ZEALAND Powerful 7.1 quake hits South Island

WELLINGTON — A powerful 7.1-magnitude earthquake struck much of New Zealand's South Island early Saturday and caused widespread damage, but there were just two reports of serious injuries. Looters broke into some damaged shops in Christchurch, police said.

The quake, which hit 19 miles west of the southern city of Christchurch according to the state geological agency GNS Science, shook a wide area, with some residents saying buildings had collapsed and power was severed. No tsunami alert was issued.

GNS Science initially reported the quake as magnitude 7.4, but later downgraded it after re-examining quake records. The U.S. Geological Survey, in America, measured the quake at 7.0.

Christchurch Mayor Bob Parker declared a state of emergency four hours after the quake rocked the region, warning people that continuing aftershocks could cause masonry to fall from damaged buildings.

IRAN Mobs attack home of opposition leader

TEHRAN — Pro-government crowds swarmed outside the battered home of a key Iranian opposition leader Friday after militiamen attacked with firebombs and beat a bodyguard unconscious in a brazen message of intimidation and pinpoint pressure on dissent.

The assault on Mahdi Karroubi's five-story residence late Thursday — just hours before major state-backed rallies — displayed the growing tactics of trying to isolate and harass top opposition figures after relentless crackdowns appear to have driven protesters from the streets.

The 72-year-old Karroubi, a cleric and former parliament speaker, has been the most public protest leader in recent months — and has paid the price with repeated damage to his car and tense confrontations with backers of the Islamic state. But the latest backlash, described by a pro-reform website, was by far the most aggressive.

Mobs of hard-line militiamen — known as Basij — began breaking down the front door of Karroubi's residence before being driven back by warning shots from guards, according to the Sahamnews website, which supports Iran's pro-reform movement.

Karroubi was at home at the time, but was not injured, his son Hossein told The Associated Press.

HONDURAS Official: Honduran helped survivor flee

TEGUCIGALPA — A Honduran who survived the massacre of 72 migrants in Mexico helped untie the only other survivor — a wounded Ecuadorean — and the two fled together, an official said Friday.

In an interview with El Heraldo newspaper, Honduran Deputy Foreign Minister Alden Rivera revealed details for the first time about the escape.

Mexican officials had previously said there was only one survivor of the massacre — the Ecuadorean who stumbled wounded to a military checkpoint and alerted marines. The Mexicans said when they learned that a Honduran also survived, they kept it a secret to protect him. But Ecuadorean President Rafael Correa revealed the information earlier this week.

Investigators believe the Zetas drug gang kidnapped the migrants and gunned them down after they refused to work for the cartel.

Marines found the bound, blindfolded bodies slumped against a wall last week after raiding the ranch in the northern state of Tamaulipas, which has been embroiled in a vicious turf battle between the Zetas and their former employer, the Gulf Cartel.

UNITED STATES Fox: Kara DioGuardi departs ‘Idol’

LOS ANGELES — Kara DioGuardi is following Ellen DeGeneres and Simon Cowell out the door at “American Idol.”

Her departure leaves Randy Jackson, who's been with the singing contest from the start, the last judge standing, for now. Steven Tyler and Jennifer Lopez are the reported front-runners for the panel.

Entertainment mogul Simon Fuller, creator of the British show “Pop Idol” that was the template for the U.S. series he produces, called DioGuardi a standout songwriter whom he planned to work with in music “for many years to come.”

DioGuardi, whose exit had been rumored, is a hit machine whose songs have been recorded by Gwen Stefani, Faith Hill, Marc Anthony and others, including past “Idol” winners.

“I felt like I won the lottery when I joined ‘American Idol’ two years ago, but I feel like now is the best time to leave ‘Idol,’” DioGuardi said.

Hanson attends Boys and Girls Clubs regional competition

Brianna Hanson, a six-year member of the Boys and Girls Clubs of Magic Valley, represented Idaho at a recent regional competition of Boys and Girls Clubs of America in Newport Beach, Calif. Hanson qualified for the regional competition by being named Idaho Youth of the Year by six state Boys and Girls Clubs serving more than 11,000 youth. At the regional competition, she was judged on a speech, formal interviews with individual judges and written essays covering such subjects as school, family, community service and club experience. The regional competition included state winners from several western states and winners from military base competitions on the Pacific Rim. These winners were picked from an estimated 1 million youth served by the clubs in the region. Though Hanson was not selected as the regional winner, she performed extremely well in all aspects of the competition, said Sam Fowler, executive director of the Magic Valley clubs. "Brianna is one of the brightest kids I have met in nearly 20 years of working with youth," Fowler said. "She is without peer in relating comfortably to anyone, from a small child at the club to a parent or board member. Now we know she can relate comfortably to accomplished judges, as well." For her participation in the state and regional competitions, Hanson has received $8,500 in scholarships from Toyota, Charles Schwab, Micron, Reader's Digest and an anonymous donor. In addition, she was recently inducted into the Chance Rowe Memorial Hall of Fame at the Boys and Girls Clubs of Magic Valley in Twin Falls, earning her another $1,000 scholarship. She is majoring in child psychology this fall at the University of Idaho.

Pulmonary hypertension needs treatment

DEAR DR. GOTT: In a recent column, you addressed the condition of pulmonary hypertension and said to see a pulmonologist and get a chest X-ray to detect this. I did just that for my 9-year-old daughter, but the pulmonologist did not detect pulmonary hypertension from the results of the X-ray. He felt her breathing issue was due to allergies and treated her with allergy medication. Thank goodness for her pediatrician. She felt something was still wrong and sent her for an echo. The technician immediately caught that she had something wrong with her and only told me that the results from the echo were sent to a pediatric cardiologist to be read. So the diagnosis came from a cardiologist, who is the one who treated the pulmonary hypertension. I felt compelled to write to you because this disease is so rare. If left untreated, the person can die in just years. Since my daughter was diagnosed in September 2009, I have been doing a lot of reading about pulmonary hypertension. If you want to pass along a great website to anyone who asks about this condition, I recommend www.PHAssociation.org. My daughter's doctor is affiliated with the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, and this is the only website he totally endorses for information regarding PH.

ASK
Dr. Peter Gott

DEAR READER: Pulmonary hypertension (PH) is a complex condition. It is defined as continuous elevation of blood pressure in the pulmonary arteries. It can lead to an enlarged heart, which may eventually lose its ability to pump blood throughout the body. There are two major categories of PH. The first is idiopathic. This type occurs sporadically in the population or is genetic. The second type is associated with other disorders, such as scleroderma, lupus, HIV, sickle-cell anemia and others, but it may also be associated with the use of illicit drugs. It can affect both children and adults but is most common in women. It is often misdiagnosed several times because early symptoms are not specific and can be attributed to other, more common conditions such as asthma or allergies. According to the Pulmonary Hypertension Association, as many as 100,000 Americans may have PH, but thousands remain undiagnosed, and even more are misdiagnosed, delaying treatment. Diagnosis can be confirmed by several tests. A chest X-ray can be used to determine if the pulmonary arteries and right ventricle are enlarged. An echocardiogram (heart ultrasound) can show the size and thickness of the right ventricle, determine how well it is working, and estimate the pressure in the pulmonary arteries. An electrocardiogram (EKG) shows the heart rate, whether it is abnormal and may show whether the right ventricle is enlarged or strained. Right-heart catheterization can find leaks between the left and right side of the heart and show how well the heart is pumping. Unlike the other tests, this procedure is invasive, requiring insertion of a long, flexible tube into a major artery, which is then threaded into the right ventricle. It also carries rare but serious risks, such as heart attack or stroke. Once diagnosis is made, testing to determine whether there is an underlying cause and what it is may be done. This can include lung-function tests, blood tests and more. Exercise testing is used to determine the severity of PH. There are four classes. The first has no limits, meaning activity does not cause PH symptoms. The second has slight or mild limits, meaning regular physical activity causes symptoms, and while at rest there are none. Class three continues to present no symptoms at rest, yet activity (even limited amounts) can cause symptoms. Class four is the most severe. Any physical activity can cause symptoms that may be present, even at rest. There are several treatment options available today. The prognosis for treated adults is upward of 15 to 20 years. Children undergoing treatment have an even better outcome than adults. Women with PH should not become pregnant and give birth because there are life-threatening risks to both mother and child, even with treatment. There is also a risk of the child developing pulmonary hypertension. A review of reports published between 1978 and 1996 found that between 30 percent and 56 percent of women with PH died within 35 days after childbirth. Unfortunately, you and your daughter have experienced a fairly typical road to diagnosis. Unless a physician knows to look for it, PH is often misdiagnosed as something else. I congratulate your daughter's pediatrician for sticking to her guns with regard to diagnosis. Everyone diagnosed with PH should be under the care of a pulmonary-hypertension specialist, but care providers can also be any physician or nurse who has undergone special training in the diagnosis and treatment of PH. *Peter H. Don't hesitate to act against school bullies

Q: I think my child is being bullied, but he won't confide in me that it's going on. What are some ways that I could find out if bullying was actually happening and what could I do to stop it?

—Mary S.

A: The sad thing about bullying is that getting your child to admit he or she is a victim is sometimes the hardest thing to deal with. Children sometimes don't like to report bullying for fear that it'll only get worse. These children, however, might give you subtle clues that it is a problem for them.

If he or she was very outgoing, then suddenly became quiet and liked to be alone, that could be a clue. Other signs include dramatic grade changes, or notices from school that your child has started being late or tardy for classes when that never happened before. Drug use could be another sign.

Stopping bullying has gotten a little easier with the anti-bullying law passed several years back (I.C. 18-917A). It made it an infraction to intentionally intimidate a student by basically any means. This has not totally stopped bullying, but it has given law enforcement a few more teeth to take a bite out of that crime.

Finally, one good way to help prevent bullying is to give your child extra lunch money (just kidding). What I would say is that if your child comes to you with a bullying problem, don't ignore it. If you have to go to the school or law enforcement and report it, then do that. We all know what happened when the bullying issues were ignored at Columbine and other schools.

Q: I have lived in Heyburn most my life and recently read that the police department is in jeopardy of being taken away, and I don't want this to happen. How can I help to make sure that does not happen?

—Tony

DAN
Dan Bristol

A: The first thing that you could do would be to attend city council meetings and get to know your council (they really don't bite). Many people complain once to the council and are never seen there again. By showing up to every meeting you show that you really do have a vested interest in your city and its decisions. I spoke a few columns back about getting involved, and this is one good way to do that.

One other thing that you can do is to contact your mayor and council and let them know how you feel. If you approve or disapprove of how things are going, let them know. My feeling here is that if you don't communicate with officials at any local, state or federal level they will assume that you are OK with what they are doing (OK — no comments about the federal level).

Remember that you hired the public servants by voting for them, and it is your job to make sure that your interests are being looked at.

Bishop Kelly rallies past brave Minico

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

RUPERT — The Minico Spartans had the upset in their grasp, and then watched it slip away late in a 13-6 loss to No. 1-ranked Bishop Kelly.

“One or two big plays can change a game, and that’s what happened tonight,” said Minico coach Tim Perrigot.

With Minico leading 6-0 early in the fourth quarter, the Knights got a piece of a Minico punt, and Cody McCarthy scooped it up and ran 20 yards for the tying touchdown.

“Momentum change right there, that’s what won them the game,” said Minico punter, wide receiver and defensive back Eddy Espinoza. “They just needed one spark, and that was it.”

Bishop Kelly went ahead on its next possession. With 6:05 remaining, Jesse Rohr passed to Andy Harrington for a 19-yard touchdown on a fourth-and-three play.

“Minico played a helluva ball-game,” said McCarthy. “They play extremely hard, and honestly they worried us. They’ll have one helluva season this year. We just came out on top tonight. We got a few breaks that went our way, and that’s just football.”

In a tremendous back-and-forth defensive battle, BK came up with the final stand and time ran out on the Spartans’ final drive.

“It was a great litmus test,” Perrigot said. “It’s frustrating to lose, but you want your kids to battle and be in position to win games, and that’s where we’re at right now.”

Espinoza had two interceptions. His first set up the Spartans’ touchdown in the first quarter as quarterback Kade Miller threw a 17-yard strike down the middle to Moi Rice.

After halftime, however, BK’s defense stiffened. Excluding Minico’s final drive, the Spartans only managed two first downs in the second half.

Minico was stellar defensively as well, behind the play of guys like Matt Maier, Jordan Roland, Dalton Mickelsen, John Walker and Michael Garner. Minico forced three turnovers. Three times BK drove the ball inside Minico’s 10-yard line, and each time the Spartans made defensive stands.

“The thing we’re going to take from this is losing isn’t a lot of fun and we don’t like it,” Perrigot said. “Hopefully we don’t have to experience that much more this year.”

Next Saturday, Minico will play Elizabeth (Colo.) at Holt Arena in Pocatello.

Riverhawks top Filer to begin season

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

Two teams in different stages of building their programs took the field Friday.

In only its second year of existence, Canyon Ridge started the season 1-0 for the first time in school history with a 27-12 win over rebuilding Filer on Friday.

Riverhawk running back Nick Kytle produced yards all over the field, catching a 45-yard pass from Tyler Myers in the final minute of the second quarter to give the Riverhawks the 21-0 lead at halftime.

Kytle caught six passes for 100 yards and gave the Filer defense fits all night.

“He just really got after it and was all over the field for them. He’s a good player,” said Filer head coach Russ Burnum.

Tied after a scoreless first quarter, Canyon Ridge did most of its damage in the second period.

Braydon Metcalf put the Riverhawks on the scoreboard with a 1-yard run on a drive setup by a Jordan Brown fumble on the 18-yard line. Sawyer McMillan added another 1-yard run on the ensuing possession.

Filer’s offense didn’t click as well in the first half.

The Wildcats only managed one first down in the first half.

“The intensity just was not there for us tonight,” said Burnum, who’s team was plagued by penalties, fumbles bles and two interceptions.

“It is the first game of the season and you never know what to expect out there.”

The Riverhawks lived in the Filer backfield, sniffing out the runs from the Double Wing attack.

“The guards led to it the entire game. Our coaches prepared us well for it. We were able to read it all night,” said Canyon Ridge linebacker Derek Bastian.

The Riverhawks kept Filer with that one first down until midway in the third quarter.

Finally in the fourth quarter,

Filer broke free on Ryan Orr’s 20-yard scamper down the sideline. Juan Delgado added a 5-yard touchdown reception with four minutes remaining, but it was too little too late.

Filer (0-1) travels to American Falls next week.

Kytle and all of Canyon Ridge took great pride in winning its first season-opener.

“Like coach said before the game, we’ll look at records and see that the first time Canyon Ridge went 1-0 to start the season was in 2010. That’s a pretty cool feeling,” Kytle said.

Canyon Ridge (1-0) hosts cross-town rival Twin Falls next week. Not that they’re looking forward to it or anything.

“Now we’re ready to face Twin Falls. It’s going to be fun,” Kytle said.

Jerome falls short against Columbia

JEROME — The effort was there. The execution — not quite.

Columbia held Jerome to 53 second-half yards and the Wildcats scored two touchdowns without reply to head out of town with a 20-13 win Friday.

The Tigers headed into the halftime locker room with a 13-7 lead but the Jerome defense couldn’t get off the field in the third quarter as Columbia (1-0) converted on several third-down opportunities and went ahead to stay on the first of two Jake Arslanian touchdown runs.

“We got to run six plays in the third quarter,” said Jerome coach Gary Krumm. “The defense played well but we just couldn’t get off the field.”

Bruins pound way past Bulldogs

By John Derr
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — One thing is sure: the Bruins own Canyon County.

For the second week in a row, Twin Falls gutted out a victory over a team from Nampa. But instead of coming from behind late, the Bruins scored early and late on their way to a 14-0 victory over the Nampa Bulldogs to remain undefeated on the season.

“It is a good start, we are off on the right foot,” said Twin Falls quarterback T.J. Ellis. “The guys have stepped up.”

The Bruins topped Skyview High of Nampa on a last-second touchdown pass to open the season a week ago, while Nampa crushed Caldwell 45-0.

The Bruins took Friday’s opening kickoff and put together an 11-play, 65-yard drive, finished off with a 21-yard touchdown pass from Ellis to Jayson Welker.

Then the scoreboard froze. The Bruins forced back-to-back fumbles and started in Bulldog territory three times, but could not capitalize.

“They surprised us with four down linemen,” added Ellis. “Once we changed our blocking it all worked out.”

The Bruin defense kept the pressure up all night, constantly chasing Nampa quarterback Hayden Wright out of the pocket. The Bruins bent a little, but didn’t break as they consistently put the Bulldogs in third-and-long situations.

“We watched a lot of film on them and stopping their running game would be tough, but we were up to the challenge. We got a lot of big stops. Defense wins games,” said defensive back and running back Mark Christensen, who tallied a pair of sacks, a fumble recovery and ran twice for nine yards.

Cody Quinn ran for three second-half touchdowns and hauled in two TD receptions as the Castleford football team beat host Hagerman 56-34 on Friday.

The Wolves (1-0) jumped to a 36-14 lead before the Pirates (1-1) rallied. Zac Reid hit Ryan Luttmir for two scoring passes in the third quarter and Kad Kress caught a 25-yard pass from Reid as Castleford got within 42-36.

But Quinn's late TD runs sealed the win for Castleford, who also got two scores from Destry Weekes.

"They're a tough team to play," Hagerman coach Ron Echols said of Castleford. "They can run up the middle or spread it out and throw. They're tough to prepare for."

Carey

recorded 19 kills and Alyssa Everett added 12.

"They only had one blocker up in the middle so we tried to force all the balls there," CSI coach Heidi Cartisser said. "When we were able to run the middle they really couldn't stop it."

The Golden Eagles rotated players freely as the match progressed, allowing the Grizzlies to come back into the match before putting them away in the fourth set.

In the opener, Rosie Becerra registered 23 kills as CSI outlasted unranked Arizona Western 25-18 23-25 25-20 23-25 15-10.

"Rosie was studly," Cartisser said. "They didn't really do anything to stop her. We couldn't get her the ball enough."

Cartisser said Arizona Western did a good job keeping the ball up and in play, citing that as the reason the match extended so long.

Elisa Brochado had 10 kills and chipped in with 13 digs for a double-double. Carey had 10 kills and Everett and Ariel Medina each added nine.

CSI plays unranked Western Wyoming and No. 5 Western Nebraska today.

BUTTE COUNTY 15, GOODING 8

Gooding suffered five fumbles in a 15-8 loss at Butte County on Friday.

"The turnover bug got us," said Gooding coach Cameron Andersen.

The Senators had three trips inside Butte County's 10-yard line that came up empty, getting stuffed at the 1-yard line on one series and fumbling twice.

"We should have won the game," said Andersen.

Casey Pierson ran for more than 150 yards to fuel Gooding, while Jake Davis scored from 2 yards in the fourth quarter for the team's lone score.

Gooding (0-1) hosts Salmon next Friday.

Broncos tailback makes transition from defense

BOISE (AP) — A year ago, Doug Martin was focused on tackling ball carriers, chasing receivers and learning his assignments as Boise State's newest defensive back.

This year, the third-ranked Broncos' Mr. Do-It-All starts the season as the No. 1 tailback.

Doug Martin

The promotion is hardly a surprise for teammates, especially his former pals on defense who consider him the most punishing of the Broncos' running backs.

It's no shocker to coaches, who think so highly of Martin's athleticism and work ethic they're willing to put him anywhere to just get him on the field. He will also see some action on special teams Monday in the Broncos' season opener against No. 10 Virginia Tech.

"Since Doug has been here, there has been nobody we've been jumping up and down more about than him because he's just so versatile," coach Chris Petersen said. "He can play everywhere. Then you watch how he attacks practices and workouts. There's one speed. There's probably not a more impressive total package than him."

But Petersen also played down the significance of making Martin the starter.

In recent years, Petersen has steered away from relying on one back. The Broncos also head into this season of high hopes and even higher expectations with a talented group of veteran tailbacks.

Martin will split the workload with Jeremy Avery, who rushed for 1,151 yards last season, and D.J. Harper, who went down with a season-ending knee injury in the third game last year but has looked healthy and sharp in fall camp.

"I think he looks just as he did last year, if not a little stronger, a little bigger," Broncos quarterback Kellen Moore said.

It was Harper's injury that forced Martin's switch from the defense, a move that helped stabilize an offense that rushed for 2,606 yards and 30 touchdowns.

Martin, who at 5-foot-9, 212 pounds runs with a mix of speed and power, appeared to get better with each game as he became more comfortable with the playbook and avoiding tacklers. He ended the season with 756 yards and a team-best 15 TDs — his last proving to be the game-winner in Boise State's 17-10 victory over TCU in the Fiesta Bowl.

Despite his emergence this year as the top back for one of the nation's top teams, Martin said he intends to keep success in perspective, knowing the margin separating him from his friends Avery and Harper is thin.

"We knew going into fall camp it was going to be a competitive battle for the starting job," Martin said before Petersen tapped him as the starter Monday. "We're really happy for each other. Most of the time, we have a package for two of us being on the field at the same time, and some with all three of us on the field. So we're all going to get involved."

That's a prospect that could cause trouble for defensive coordinators all season. In some packages, Avery may be lined up as a receiver, adding even more to an already potent offense.

Moore is one of the nation's top quarterbacks and an early season Heisman Trophy contender. His two favorite targets from last season — Austin Pettis and Titus Young — return for their senior seasons. Last year, Pettis and Young combined for 142 catches, nearly 1,900 yards receiving and 24 of Moore's 39 touchdown passes.

"People don't give them enough credit that they deserve," said Virginia Tech defensive coordinator Bud Foster, whose group has seven new starters. "You've got a great quarterback. Their running game is completely underrated ... and you've got two receivers that are as good as anybody in the country."

"But then what makes them ... they try to keep you off-balance, throwing, running, different formations," he said.

Despite all those veterans and last season's resume, the Broncos' offense has some questions up front. After weeks of juggling and experimenting, Petersen and his staff have yet to settle on the five linemen who will square off against the Hokies' defensive front at FedEx Field on Monday night.

"We know who we want out there, but we just haven't been able to get it done with the injuries," Petersen said. "Whatever it is, we're going to be comfortable with it. It's not like we're in a situation of 'oh my gosh, what are we going to do?'"

CSI men complete 2010-11 roster

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

That sigh of relief heard at College of Southern Idaho gymnasium on Friday came from CSI men's basketball coach Steve Gosar.

Gosar announced Friday the 15th and final scholarship signing for the 2010-11 basketball season.

"I'm so glad it's done," said Gosar.

The Golden Eagles added 6-foot-3 shooting guard Terrance Lafayette to the lineup Friday. A Louisiana product, Lafayette comes to CSI from God's Academy, a prep school in Dallas, Texas. He also played at Christian Life Academy in Texas.

"He's athletic," said Gosar. "He's got really quick feet, he's a really good defender and he has an ability to play above the rim."

Lafayette joins a guard line that includes sophomores Pierre Jackson and Issiah Grayson along with freshmen Kevin Attilla, Jerrold Brooks, Fabyon Harris and Darius Smith. CSI's wing players are Eagle High products Mitch Bruneel and Ben Van Lith.

The front line includes sophomores Kenny Buckner and Dennis Mikelonis along with freshman Paul Bunch. Three international players — Gerson do Espirito Santo Junior of Brazil, Nemanja Grujicic of Serbia and Chris Patton of Australia — round out the unit.

Walk-ons include Twin Falls product Jon Pulsifer and Cameron Bowen of Coleville, Utah. Guard Athley Lwal is also expected to be a walk-on this season, but is currently stuck in Canada battling immigration issues. His return is uncertain.

"I like what we've put together," said Gosar.

CSI opens the season Nov. 4 at Phoenix (Ariz.) College.

NCAA rules Masoli eligible, can play immediately

OXFORD, Miss. — In another surprising twist to a month-long saga, Mississippi quarterback Jeremiah Masoli has been cleared to play football just one day before the start of the season.

Three days ago, the NCAA ruled that the former Oregon quarterback had to sit out a season after enrolling at Mississippi. But the university appealed that decision and announced Friday that the NCAA Division I Subcommittee for Legislative Relief had overturned the first ruling.

Ole Miss coach Houston Nutt said he couldn't talk about specifics of Friday morning's appeals hearing, but was thrilled with the committee's decision.

"It's a big lift for us and the team's really excited," Nutt said. "We feel very fortunate. Jeremiah and his family were in tears they were so happy afterward."

"It's a great feeling," Masoli is expected to be the Rebels' starting quarterback this season, though Nutt said sophomore Nathan Stanley will start against Jacksonville State on Saturday because of the short notice.

Masoli played for Oregon the past two seasons, leading the Ducks to the Rose Bowl in 2009. But he was kicked off Oregon's team earlier this summer after two run-ins with police. He pleaded guilty to a second-degree burglary charge and was also cited for misdemeanor marijuana possession.

Masoli had already received an undergraduate degree from Oregon, and decided to transfer to Ole Miss where he entered the Parks and Recreation graduate program. The NCAA will often waive a one-year residency requirement for athletes who enter a graduate program not offered at the previous school, but initially didn't clear Masoli because "the waiver exists to provide relief to student-athletes who transfer for academic reasons to pursue graduate studies, not to avoid disciplinary measures at the previous university."

AP SOURCE: INVESTIGATORS SUBPOENA UNC'S AUSTIN

Investigators from the North Carolina Secretary of State's office have subpoenaed Tar Heels defensive tackle Marvin Austin, a person familiar with the situation said Friday.

The person spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because the investigation is ongoing. Austin is one of 13 players who did not travel with the 18th-ranked Tar Heels to Atlanta for Saturday's opener against No. 21 LSU because of an NCAA probe.

Secretary of State Elaine Marshall's office is reviewing whether North Carolina's sports agents laws have been broken in the wake of the NCAA investigation into the school's football program.

The NCAA probe initially focused on whether Austin and receiver Greg Little got improper benefits from agents and has now expanded to possible academic violations.

George Jeter, a spokesman for the Secretary of State's office, declined to comment on the subpoena.

"All I can say is it's an active, ongoing inquiry at this time," he said.

Earlier Friday, the school said it had declared Austin, defensive ends Robert Quinn and Michael McAdoo, cornerbacks Kendrick Burney and cornerback Charles Brown, and receiver Greg Little ineligible "for violating school and/or NCAA rules."

FOLES' BIG DAY HELPS ARIZONA ROUT TOLEDO 41-2

TOLEDO, Ohio — Nick Foles threw for 360 yards and accounted for three touchdowns to help Arizona pound Toledo 41-2 on Friday night.

Foles tossed two TD passes and ran for another score as the Wildcats recorded their first road victory outside the Pac-10 in nine seasons. Nic Grigsby added two touchdown runs.

Foles completed 32 of 37 passes with an interception that occurred when a ball went off the hands of running back Taimi Tutogi and bounced to Toledo defensive back Diauntae Morrow.

"He's trying hard, and he learns from his mistakes," Krumm said. "There's no one who watches more film than Jake ... he'll get there. We just need some people to step up and help him out."

It doesn't get any easier for the Tigers (0-2), as Middleton brings its double-wing offense to town next Friday.

the game. It is a blast," he said.

After stopping Nampa on the opening drive of the second half, Twin Falls threatened after a 55-yard run by Josh Settlemoir, but came up empty.

The Bulldogs went back to a fullhouse backfield, chewing up yards and clock as they moved past midfield. A penalty nixed a touchdown and Nampa's fourth fumble of the game ended the threat.

With a mix of pass and run beautifully orchestrated by Ellis, the Bruins killed the clock against a weary Nampa defense.

"We were trying to run the ball and stay in bounds. The guys stepped up and we got a couple big third downs," said Ellis, who went 13-for-22 for 128 yards while rushing for 21 yards.

The Bruins' kept their clock-killing drive alive with a fake punt at the 38-yard line, getting the yardage on a direct snap to Settlemoir.

"The coaches called it, I got great blocking and got as many yards as I could," said Settlemoir.

Four plays later he iced the victory with a 23-yard touchdown run as Twin Falls took 10 minutes off the clock. Settlemoir finished the game with 93 yards rushing and 31 receiving.

"My stats don't matter as long as I help the team win," said Settlemoir.

ISU football opens with Montana Western

By Mark Liptak

Times-News correspondent

POCATELLO — Idaho State coach John Zamberlin knows the importance of today's season-opener with Montana Western.

"It's really important that we come out of the gate strong and set the tone for the season," Zamberlin said of the 3:30 p.m. matchup at Holt Arena with the NAIA school from the Frontier Conference.

While some might roll their eyes when Zamberlin says the Bengals can't overlook anybody, the fact is after two wins in two seasons, they really can't. Not even a Montana Western squad that went 4-6 last season and is 0-1 this year.

Montana Western picked up just 249 yards of offense and threw four interceptions in a 20-3 loss to Montana State-Northern last week, but Zamberlin insisted the Bulldogs have some good players.

"Their quarterback (Zach McRae) is a transfer from Montana and they have a receiver from Hawaii (Kahai Sevilla) that I really like."

Sevilla had four catches for 57 yards last week, while running back Charlie Dotson rushed for 62 yards.

The Bengals go in with question marks due to injuries suffered in fall camp, the biggest being at quarterback where senior Russel Hill won't get the start. Hill suffered a sprained knee ligament in the middle of August and Zamberlin won't rush him back.

"We won't put him in harm's way," said Zamberlin. "We've got to look at the big picture. ... It's a long season."

In Hill's place, redshirt freshman Kyle Morris will get the start. Morris has played well in ISU's fall scrimmages.

Running backs Jahmel Rover and Stew Tracy were also slowed by injuries and combined for one carry in fall camp, while receivers Kelvin Krosch and Eric Jacobsen were slowed by appendicitis and a high ankle sprain, respectively. Krosch is academically ineligible. Linebacker Phil Arias has also been hampered.

Without those players, ISU's depth will be tested. Still, the Bengals have never lost in nine outings against the Bulldogs, including a 111-0 win in 1931. The two schools last played in 2005 with the Bengals winning 37-0.

QB weekend at BYU includes UW coach

PROVO, Utah (AP) — BYU is honoring some of its former great quarterbacks this weekend as the Cougars host Washington in the season opener.

One of them will be busy coaching the opponent.

Former Cougar Steve Sarkisian is entering his second season as Washington's coach. He's one of eight BYU quarterbacks selected to all-America teams that will be honored at halftime today.

While the seven others will have a chance to be nostalgic, Sarkisian said his duties as head Husky outrank any loyalty to his alma mater.

"It's a business trip, for sure. I had some great moments there, some great wins there," Sarkisian said. "But ultimately, my concern is about these 105 kids that we have in this program and the 76 of them traveling with us to Provo. This is their weekend. This is their day, and so that'll be my focus."

BYU's quarterback weekend is also a fundraiser to endow scholarships. Former Cougars Virgil Carter, Gifford Nielsen, Marc Wilson, Jim McMahon, Steve Young, Robbie Bosco, Ty Detmer and Sarkisian are all scheduled to take part. These are the players who established BYU's quarterback tradition and they will be there to see the next two candidates.

Instead of one starter, coach Bronco Mendenhall announced this week that junior Riley Nelson and freshman Jake Heaps will share the job.

Nelson backed up Max Hall last season and played eight games as a freshman at Utah State in 2006 before leaving on a Mormon church mission, then transferring to BYU.

Heaps' only experience so far is fall camp and spring practice, which he took part in after enrolling early after choosing BYU over his home-state Huskies. He was Washington state's AP player of the year last fall at Skyline High School in suburban Seattle, passing for 3,191 yards and 45 touchdowns.

Heaps is a drop-back passer who fits the classic style of a BYU quarterback. Nelson is a bit more of a mix who is capable of running the ball.

Mendenhall said both played well enough during the first month of practice to make using a two-QB system the Cougars' best option this season.

Washington coach Steve Sarkisian, right, will lead his team, including Huskies quarterback Jake Locker, left, against BYU today. Sarkisian played quarterback at BYU in the 1990s.

Washington at BYU
5 p.m.
TV: CBS College
Radio: 1160 AM

Mendenhall said he didn't ask for feedback after making the decision.

"When I announced it there were a lot of nodding heads. Kind of the quiet support and those that have made a comment say it was the right decision and they're behind it 100 percent, which is the easy thing to say now," Mendenhall said. "For fans, for media and for everyone else, if it doesn't go well that'll be when the tough part comes."

The Huskies have no such questions at quarterback. The job still belongs to Jake Locker, who returned for his senior season rather than going to the NFL after passing for 2,800 yards and 21 touchdowns last fall. The first game of his unofficial Heisman Trophy campaign comes with a chance to avenge Washington's heartbreaking loss to the Cougars two years ago.

Locker's second rushing touchdown of the game put the Huskies just an extra-point kick away from tying the game with 2 seconds left, but after tumbling into the end zone, he threw his hands — and the ball — in the air and was called for excessive celebration.

The penalty pushed back the extra-point kick, which was blocked by BYU's Jan Jorgensen to preserve the Cougars' 28-27 victory. The penalty call was widely viewed as much more excessive than Locker's celebration and may have cost the Huskies a chance to take BYU to overtime.

"I think looking back on it I told them after the game I'm sorry that we were put in that situation and we lost the game because of it but I'm not sorry for what I did because I was enjoying the game, I was having fun. I wasn't trying to embarrass BYU at that point," Locker said. "I had scored a touchdown that had the potential to tie the game with no time left on the clock and to me that's pretty exciting."

And his plans for any post-TD revelry this week? "I'll take the ball to the referee this Saturday for sure," he said.

TODAY'S OTHER BIG GAMES

No. 6 TCU vs. No. 24 Oregon State, 5:45 p.m. (ESPN)

Line: TCU by 13½.
Series Record: First meeting.

What's at Stake

After finally becoming a BCS buster last season, but losing the Fiesta Bowl, TCU wants a do-over. The Horned Frogs will almost certainly have to go undefeated in the regular season to have that chance. A tough opening test for new QB Ryan Katz and Oregon State, which got close to the Rose Bowl last season. The Beavers still have the Rodgers brothers, RB Jacquizz and WR James.

Key Matchup

Quizz Show vs. TCU defense. Jacquizz Rodgers ran for 1,440 yards and a Beavers-record 21 rushing TDs last season. Is he worthy of Heisman Trophy consideration? A strong showing in the nationally televised matchup could plant an early seed in the minds of Heisman voters. TCU is without All-American DE Jerry Hughes and LB Daryl Washington, both picked in the first two rounds of NFL draft.

No. 7 Oklahoma vs. Utah State, 5 p.m.

Line: Oklahoma by 34.
Series Record: Oklahoma leads 4-0.

Last Meeting:

Sept. 15, 2007, Oklahoma 54-3

What's at Stake

Oklahoma can become the seventh Division I program to reach 800 wins if it avoids starting a second straight season with an upset loss to a Utah-based team — last season it was BYU at Cowboys Stadium. The Aggies are trying to win their season opener for just the fourth time in 24 tries and the first time since 1997.

Key Matchup

Utah State QB Diondre Borel vs. Oklahoma CBs. Borel threw only four interceptions in 366 pass attempts while leading the nation's 12th-best offense last season. The Sooners are breaking in a pair of new starters in the defensive backfield in Demontre Hurst and Jamell Fleming, and freshman Aaron Colvin is also expected to play.

No. 18 North Carolina vs. No. 21 LSU at Atlanta, 6 p.m. (ABC)

Line: LSU by 3.

Series Record: First meeting.

What's at Stake

North Carolina gets a shot to measure itself against an SEC school, though the Tar Heels will be without 13 players, including six starters from last year's defense, due to an ongoing NCAA investigation. The Tigers, national champs only three seasons ago, believe their program has lost considerable respect after a pair of mediocre seasons and want an early, nationally televised win against a major conference foe.

Key Matchup

North Carolina's WRs against LSU's defensive backfield, led by junior cornerback Patrick Peterson, a national defensive player of the year candidate. The top returning Tar Heel is Greg Little, whose status is unclear because of the NCAA probe. That means the remainder of a young receiving corps could be challenged to move the ball against Peterson and sophomore Morris Claiborne, widely regarded as one of the better CB tandems in the nation.

Yankees win seventh straight

NEW YORK — Curtis Granderson drove in three runs with a pair of doubles, Brett Gardner hit a run-scoring triple and scored three times, and the New York Yankees beat the Toronto Blue Jays 7-3 on Friday to match a season high with their seventh straight victory.

Mark Teixeira had an RBI double for the AL East leaders, who chased Brandon Morrow (10-7) after three innings, ending his five-game winning streak.

RAYS 4, ORIOLES 1

BALTIMORE — Matt Garza pitched into the sixth inning to earn his 14th win and Carl Crawford had three hits and an RBI for Tampa Bay.

The Rays stayed 1½ games behind the first-place New York Yankees in the AL East and extended their wild-card lead over Boston to seven games. Tampa Bay has won five of six and nine of 12.

TWINS 4, RANGERS 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Denard Span delivered the go-ahead single in the seventh inning, emergency starter Matt Fox pitched 5 2-3 innings in his major league debut, and depleted Minnesota beat Texas.

Fox allowed two runs and four hits, giving the Twins' staff a major boost after scheduled starter Nick Blackburn was forced to pitch in Thursday's 13-inning loss to Detroit.

TIGERS 9, ROYALS 5, 11 INNINGS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Will Rhymes hit a two-run triple in a four-run 11th inning to lift Detroit.

Rhymes' triple to right-center field off Jesse Chavez (2-3), the sixth Royals pitcher, scored Alex Avila, who had singled, and Casper Wells, who reached on a Josh Fields fielding error. After Johnny Damon walked, Ryan Raburn's single to right scored Rhymes. Austin Jackson's suicide squeeze bunt scored Damon with the final run.

NATIONAL LEAGUE PHILLIES 1, BREWERS 0

PHILADELPHIA — Cole Hamels dominated over seven innings and Philadelphia capitalized on a Milwaukee miscue to score the only run they would need in a 1-0 victory Friday night.

Hamels (9-10) continued to receive little run support, but didn't need much as he breezed to his second straight win and ran his consecutive scoreless innings streak to 18. He allowed three hits and struck out seven.

MARLINS 6, BRAVES 1

MIAMI — Logan Morrison hit two stand-up RBI triples, and Florida's Andrew Miller worked five innings for his first win in more than a year.

Atlanta's loss, combined with Philadelphia's 1-0 win over

Milwaukee, cut the Braves' NL East lead over the Phillies to one game.

CUBS 7, METS 6

CHICAGO — Alfonso Soriano and Blake DeWitt hit three-run homers for Chicago.

David Wright hit a two-run double and scored in the first inning as the Mets took a 3-0 lead against Randy Wells. With the Cubs ahead 7-4, Wright homered off Andrew Cashner leading off the seventh, giving him three hits.

PIRATES 8, NATIONALS 5

PITTSBURGH — Ryan Doumit had three hits, including a home run, and two RBIs, and Garrett Jones drove in three runs to lead Pittsburgh.

Pittsburgh's three rookie regulars also made contributions as Pedro Alvarez hit a two-run double in the fifth, Jose Tabata had two hits and two RBIs and Neil Walker extended his hitting streak to 10 games.

CARDINALS 3, REDS 2

ST. LOUIS — Rookie Jaime Garcia beat the Reds for the fourth time, halting St. Louis' five-game losing streak and ending Cincinnati's four-game run.

St. Louis scored in consecutive innings for the first time in seven games, getting two in the first and one in the second.

MORGAN GETS 8 GAMES FOR NATS-MARLINS BRAWL

The Associated Press

Nyjer Morgan's wild week has landed him an eight-game suspension, one of nine punishments handed out Friday by Major League Baseball following a brawl between Washington Nationals and Florida Marlins.

MLB suspended Nationals outfielder Morgan and fined him an undisclosed amount for three separate incidents over the past week. Friday's penalty is in addition to a seven-game suspension he received Aug. 25 that is currently under appeal.

Six players, both managers and a coach were cited after a review of Wednesday night's odd and ugly game in Miami, won 16-10 by the Marlins. Florida pitcher Chris Volstad was suspended for six games, pitcher Alex Sanabia for five, first baseman Gaby Sanchez for three, and manager Edwin Rodriguez for one. Volstad and Rodriguez also were fined, as was pitcher Jose Veras.

All the Marlins players who were issued suspensions plan to appeal. Same for the Nationals.

"Whether I believe it's fair or not doesn't really matter," Sanchez said. "You're going to get punished, especially when a brawl like that happens."

For Washington, pitcher Doug Slaten and third base coach Pat Listach were suspended for three games, and manager Jim Riggleman for two games. Riggleman and Listach also were fined.

Isner, Querrey, Nadal reach 3rd round

NEW YORK (AP) — "Let's go, Ryan!" Clap-clap-clap-clap-clap.

"Let's go, Ryan!" Clap-clap-clap-clap-clap.

On his way to victory at Louis Armstrong Stadium on Friday, the highest-seeded American man left in the U.S. Open, No. 18 John Isner, could hear the wild cheering and chanting going on at the adjacent Grandstand in support of another American man, Ryan Harrison, a qualifier who was the lowest-ranked (220) and youngest (18) player still in the tournament.

Isner, striving to be known for more than winning the longest tennis match in history, reached the third round by beating Marco Chiudinelli of Switzerland 6-3, 3-6, 7-6 (7), 6-4.

Harrison, striving to show he belongs at this level, came as close as possible to winning without doing so, wasting three match points in the fifth-set tiebreaker and losing 6-3, 5-7, 3-6, 6-3, 7-6 (6) to Sergiy Stakhovsky of Ukraine.

This was the second Grand Slam tournament of Harrison's nascent career, and the first at which he won a match — and what a victory it was, an upset over 15th-seeded Ivan Ljubicic.

For Isner, this is the first major tournament he's played since Wimbledon in June, when he hit a record 113 aces during an 11-hour-plus, 183-game, first-round marathon spread over three days. He beat Nicolas Mahut in a 70-68 fifth set, and while appreciative of the significance of that match, Isner is quite ready to move on.

"I don't want that to be, like, the lasting image of my career," the 6-foot-9 Isner said after finishing with 24 aces against the 63rd-ranked Chiudinelli. "So that's up to me to make it not that way. It's up to me to do well in big tournaments, tournaments such as this."

He can match his best Grand Slam showing if he beats No. 12 Mikhail Youzhny to make it to the fourth round.

Isner, who won an NCAA championship at the University of Georgia, was joined in the third round by No. 20 Sam Querrey, a 6-2, 6-3, 6-4 winner Friday against Marcel Granollers of Spain. Of 15 U.S. men originally in the draw, four are left: Isner, Querrey, No. 19 Mardy Fish and wild card James Blake. Fish and Blake play third-round matches Saturday.

For comparison's sake, there are nine Spanish men in the third round, seven of whom won Friday, led by No. 1-seeded Rafael Nadal.

Murray beat Jamaica's Dustin Brown 7-5, 6-3, 6-0, and other seeded winners included No. 8 Fernando Verdasco, No. 10 David Ferrer, No. 23 Feliciano Lopez and No. 31 David Nalbandian. The only seeded man to exit Friday was No. 29 Philipp Kohlschreiber, who lost 4-6, 6-3, 1-6, 6-1, 6-3 to former top-10 player Gilles Simon. Now Simon will try to end Nadal's 17-match winning streak in Grand Slam tournaments.

Nadal saved all seven break points he faced in his 6-2, 7-6 (5), 7-5 victory over 39th-ranked Denis Istomin in Arthur Ashe Stadium at night, after 2000-01 champion Venus Williams easily got past 185th-ranked qualifier Mandy Minella of Luxembourg 6-2, 6-1.

"I had no idea what my opponent played like," Williams said afterward, but apparently it didn't matter, and she accumulated a 29-5 advantage in winners while her injured sister Serena watched from the stands.

Woods struggles in rainy Boston

NORTON, Mass. — Zach Johnson and Jason Day beat up on the course and beat the weather at the Deutsche Bank Championship.

For Tiger Woods, it was the other way around.

Johnson strengthened his Ryder Cup case Friday by rolling in putts from everywhere in easy scoring conditions ahead of Hurricane Earl, giving him an 8-under 63 and a share of the lead with Day.

Woods had two bogeys in four holes when the first patch of rain arrived, and it didn't get much better. He had two more bogeys and was in last place until he fought back for a 72, leaving him three shots below the projected cut. If he doesn't make the cut Saturday, Woods will not advance to defend his title next week outside Chicago.

"I'm going to have to shoot something good tomorrow, hopefully move up a little bit," Woods said. "Obviously, get off to a better start than I did today."

Scoring was so ideal that Johnson and Day had a 63 and still only had a one-shot lead — over eight players. That group included Ryder Cup hopeful Ryan Palmer, Rory McIlroy and Geoff Ogilvy, who had the best score of anyone in the afternoon.

That they finished the first round was a bonus considering the Earl forecast. More surprising was that the wind never arrived, and late starters only had to cope with the nuisance of an occasional shower.

"It had the potential to be the most lopsided draw in history," Ogilvy said, noting that gusts upward of 50 mph were expected. "It was way better than we assumed it was going to be."

Woods' problem was putting his tee shots into the short grass — he missed eight of 14 fairways — and not converting enough putts. He officially entered the BMW Championship next week, a formality, and now has to finish inside the top 70 in the FedEx Cup standings. Woods started the week in 65th place.

CALCAVECCHIA LEADS FIRST TEE OPEN

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Mark Calcavecchia shot an 8-under 64 at Del Monte to take a two-stroke lead over Tom Pernice Jr. in the Champions Tour's First Tee Open.

Calcavecchia, in his first season on the 50-and-over tour after winning 13 times on the PGA Tour, capped his bogey-free first round with a birdie on the par-5 ninth.

Pernice played at Pebble Beach, the site of the final round Sunday. Fred Couples, Bob Tway, Tom Kite, Wayne Levi and 2006 winner Scott Simpson opened with 67s at Del Monte, and Chip Beck and Olin Browne had 67s at Pebble Beach.

Roethlisberger suspension reduced to 4 games

NEW YORK — Ben Roethlisberger is getting time off for good behavior.

He'll be back on the field for the Pittsburgh Steelers two games earlier than expected after convincing NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell he is turning his life around.

The star quarterback, accompanied by team president Art Rooney, met with Goodell early Friday and was told he could return on Oct. 17 against Cleveland after missing four games.

He was suspended in April for six games for violating the league's personal conduct policy, but Goodell said at the time he would review the player's behavior over the next few months. Goodell was satisfied that Roethlisberger has followed the league's guidelines and stayed out of trouble.

"You have told me and the Steelers that you are committed to making better decisions," Goodell said in a letter to the two-time Super Bowl winner. "Your actions over the past several months have been consistent with that promise and you must continue to honor that commitment."

Roethlisberger was accused of sexually assaulting a Georgia college student following a night of drinking in a Milledgeville, Ga., bar on March 5. He was not charged by Georgia authorities.

The league said the "reinstatement is contingent on Roethlisberger continuing to adhere to the program established by our advisors and avoiding any further violations of the personal conduct policy."

Roethlisberger is the first player suspended by Goodell under the NFL's personal conduct policy who was not arrested, charged with or convicted of a crime. However, Goodell said in April the policy allows him to impose such a penalty when the league's integrity and reputation are at stake.

"I have learned a lot over the past several months about myself as a person," Roethlisberger said in a statement. "I am committed to continuing on this path of being the type of person my family raised me to be, and exceeding what is expected of me as the quarterback of the Pittsburgh Steelers."

AP SOURCE: GIANTS ACQUIRE QB SAGE ROSENFELS

NEW YORK — The New York Giants have acquired quarterback Sage Rosenfels from the Minnesota Vikings for an undisclosed draft pick.

A person within the league who is familiar with the trade confirmed the Giants have dealt for Rosenfels to back up Eli Manning. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the deal has not officially been announced.

The Giants lost backup Jim Sorgi with a shoulder injury and he was placed on injured reserve. Rosenfels was third string behind Brett Favre and Tarvaris Jackson in Minnesota.

Rosenfels is entering his 10th NFL season as a backup quarterback.

IDAHO'S KOMAR, BYU'S HALL MAKE CARDINALS ROSTER

TEMPE, Ariz. — Former University of Idaho receiver Max Komar has made the Arizona Cardinals' 53-man roster. The undrafted receiver caught 10 passes for 158 and a touchdown during the preseason.

Meanwhile, Arizona coach Ken Whisenhunt says he has told rookie quarterbacks Max Hall of BYU and John Skelton they have made the team's roster. The fate of Matt Leinart remained uncertain. Whisenhunt says he met with the former Heisman Trophy winner on Friday and told him the team was not yet prepared to take any action regarding him.

Whisenhunt has not named a starting quarterback but all signs point to Derek Anderson, with Arizona reportedly trying to trade Leinart. If no deal is made, the Cardinals could release the former Southern California star, the 10th-overall draft pick in 2006.

Outside linebacker Cody Brown, a second-round draft pick out of Connecticut a year ago, was one of 16 players cut the by the team.

U.S. faces a navigable road at basketball worlds

ISTANBUL (AP) — All around them, the Americans find compelling matchups for the round of 16: a rematch of the 2006 title game; a coach facing a home country he led to an Olympic gold medal; two bitter rivals to get it all started.

All the while, a fairly navigable road right to the semifinals was emerging for the United States.

Elimination games at the world championship begin Saturday, including a surprisingly early matchup between Spain and Greece, two of the pre-tournament favorites. The Spaniards routed the Greeks for the title four years ago in Japan.

The final day of pool play began with the possibility of one those teams looming as a quarterfinal opponent for the U.S. Instead, after facing Angola, a team the U.S. traditionally just shoves out of the way, the Americans would get the winner of Russia-New Zealand, neither considered a contender.

The U.S. wasn't sharp in its final two games of pool play, but guard Chauncey Billups compared those matchups against Iran and Tunisia to an NBA team taking it easy in its final two regular-season games before the playoffs start.

"That's over with now, and now we can get to the meat and potatoes," Billups said.

The main courses in the knockout stage come right away. Serbia and Croatia, who fought a war in the early 1990s, play the opening game Saturday at the Sinan Erdem Dome. Spain and Greece follow in the nightcap.

On Sunday, it's Slovenia-Australia, followed by unbeaten host Turkey against France. The U.S.-Angola and Russia-New Zealand games are Monday, before Lithuania faces China and Argentina plays Brazil on Tuesday.

The final matchup features Brazil coach Ruben Magnano trying to knock off some of the same players he led to gold in the 2004 Olympics and silver in the 2002 worlds.

"Major tournaments, like the world championships and the Olympics can be very cruel at times," the Argentine said.

The long rest before Brazil's game gives Anderson Varejao more time for to recover. The Cleveland Cavaliers forward grabbed 12 rebounds Tuesday in just his second game after sitting out the first three with a sprained right ankle. He'll have to key the defensive effort against Argentina's Luis Scola of the Houston Rockets, leading the tournament with 29 points a game.

"To try to stop him, it's not easy, we know that," Varejao said. "It's for a reason he's the scoring leader in the tournament, but we believe we can do that, we can do a good job against him."

The winner of that game, or unbeaten Lithuania, is the most likely opponent for the Americans if they reach the semifinals.

And the Americans are predicted to get there, no matter how inconsistently they played during the group stage.

"When it comes to basketball, people expect us to win and play well all the time and win every tournament, win every game," center Lamar Odom said. "And basketball's played all over the world now, there's a balance of talent spread throughout the world."

What did we learn about the NFL this preseason?

By Jaime Aron
Associated Press writer

The Dallas Cowboys and New York Jets are supposed to be among the ranks of Super Bowl favorites. They sure didn't look like it during the preseason.

Of course, those games also didn't count.

That's the trouble with trying to make sense of the preseason. We don't know how much to take from the things we saw the last five weeks.

Are the 49ers (4-0) really that good? The Colts (0-4) certainly aren't that bad. (The 0-4 Bears, however, might be.)

Since the standings aren't a good barometer, let's instead turn to some story lines that emerged from preseason. There are plenty to follow headed into Thursday night's opener in New Orleans, with Brett Favre and the Vikings taking on Drew Brees and the Super Bowl champion Saints:

DILEMMA IN DALLAS, NERVOUS IN NEW YORK

Tony Romo led just one touchdown drive in four preseason games, and it covered all of eight yards. The worrisome part for Jerry Jones' crew is how many drives fizzled because of a shoddy offensive line and sloppy play close to the opponent's goal line.

The Cowboys say bland play-calling and a patchwork line are to blame. They insist everything will click once the season starts, with the debut of rookie receiver Dez Bryant giving them another boost. What else can they say?

Whatever Jets coach Rex Ryan has to say is probably funny, filthy or both if you've seen his starring performance in "Hard Knocks."

But the most foul words

New York could hear are "sophomore slump," as in Mark Sanchez regressing in his second season. He doubled Romo's preseason TD production with two amid excuses, er, explanations similar to those heard in Dallas. The club has another lingering issue with star cornerback Darrelle Revis still holding out.

LAMBEAU LEAK

Cleveland, Seattle and Kansas City all posted their highest point totals of the preseason against Green Bay.

So the Packers don't even want to think about what good offenses might do against their club.

Defensive coordinator Dom Capers can offer the same plausible reasons as the offensive coordinators on the Cowboys and Jets — Green Bay wasn't going to show more than it had to in exhibition games. However, mounting injuries in the secondary (safety Atari Bigby, cornerback Al Harris) are a huge concern for a unit that already seemed overmatched against the top quarterbacks last season. Kurt Warner and the Cardinals racked up 51 points in the Packers' last game that counted, a playoff loss.

Green Bay defenders have the benefit of practicing against a great quarterback: Aaron Rodgers, who led the Packers to seven touchdowns in 13 drives this preseason.

REPLACING ROETHLISBERGER

Pittsburgh was hoping Byron Leftwich could be enough of a game manager to get his club through Ben Roethlisberger's suspension, which commissioner Roger Goodell on Friday cut to four games. But Leftwich got hurt in the preseason finale, leaving coach Mike Tomlin to choose between Dennis Dixon and Charlie Batch.

Dixon is young, athletic and error-prone. He might be put on a short leash or find himself behind Batch, another game manager type. Then again, the Steelers had such little faith in him as Roethlisberger's stand-in that they signed Leftwich.

FAVRE'S TARGETS

Soon after the 40-year-old quarterback was pried from Mississippi by several Minnesota teammates, he started losing his receivers: Sidney Rice underwent hip surgery, then Percy Harvin had a flare-up of his migraine problems that was so severe he was rushed to a hospital.

Harvin is back and thinks his migraine issue might be under control. Rice, however, is on the physically unable to perform list for at least six games. That led to a trade for Greg Camarillo and the signing of Javon Walker, who'd been unemployed since Oakland dropped him last season.

Grandpa Brett might just have to give the ball to Adrian Peterson more often.

CAROLINA'S SHUTOUT

The Panthers took 253 snaps this preseason. None resulted in a touchdown.

That's right, their offense went 0-for-the-preseason. The best they could muster was an offensive player, running back Mike Goodson, going 91 yards on a kickoff return.

Sure, Carolina was missing receiver Steve Smith, running back Jonathan Stewart and right tackle Jeff Otah. Matt Moore was taking over as the No. 1 quarterback for the first time and rookie Jimmy Clausen was trying to steal the job. But, still — 253 straight plays without a touchdown?

At least the defense is doing fine without Julius Peppers. The Panthers allowed the fewest yards and second-fewest points. The D even scored a touchdown, on a fumble return by defensive end C.J. Wilson.

Pacquiao focuses on Margarito, not Mayweather rant

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Boxing champion Manny Pacquiao dismissed a derogatory online video posted by Floyd Mayweather Jr., calling it an “uneducated message” and choosing to instead focus on his upcoming fight with Antonio Margarito.

In the widely circulated video, Mayweather goes on an expletive-filled and sometimes racist rant against Pacquiao, the newly elected Congressman from the Philippines who faces Margarito on Nov. 13 at Cowboys Stadium near Dallas.

Mayweather said during the video, which appeared this week, that he’s on vacation “for about a year” and would easily defeat Pacquiao after that.

“I just heard about that, but I didn’t see the video,” Pacquiao said Friday, at the final stop of a three-city tour to promote his fight. “But it’s an uneducated message.”

Mayweather, at times interacting with fans by phone on the video, claims Pacquiao “can’t speak no English” and has “never seen a contract he didn’t like.” There are also suggestions that the Filipino sensation has used performance-enhancing drugs, assertions raised previously by the Mayweather camp that resulted in a defamation lawsuit that is still pending.

“It’s a really cheap low blow, but again, consider where it came from,” said Freddie Roach, Pacquiao’s trainer. “We tried to fight him. He said no. He doesn’t want to fight.”

Roach said he hadn’t seen the Mayweather video.

Mayweather’s chief adviser, Leonard Ellerbe, did not return messages left by The Associated Press. His publicist, Kelly Swanson, said in an e-mail that she had seen the video but had not been in touch with Mayweather or Ellerbe and couldn’t comment.

Fans have been calling for Mayweather to fight Pacquiao, but negotiations have repeatedly broken down for what could have been the richest fight in boxing history.

When a deal wasn’t reached in January, Pacquiao instead fought Joshua Clottey, defeating him in March at Cowboys Stadium. When negotiations broke down again this summer, Pacquiao turned his attention to Margarito, whom he’ll fight for a vacant junior middleweight title.

It is unclear when the Mayweather video was made, but it appeared online this week when Pacquiao and Margarito were in the midst of their promotional tour. After stops in Beverly Hills and New York, the media tour wrapped up Friday at Cowboys Stadium — in an end zone plaza instead of on the field, which was being prepared for a college football game.

When asked about the possibility of a Mayweather bout Friday, Pacquiao responded: “I’m not looking for that fight. I’m satisfied with what I’ve done in boxing already.”

Pacquiao said he’s only planning a couple of more fights before retiring, though he gave no indication of who the opponents might be. The seven-division champion said earlier this week that he would still face Mayweather if he accepted the fight.

Todd duBoef of promoter Top Rank said he had heard about the Mayweather video but “probably” didn’t have any interest in seeing it. Mayweather used to be a Top Rank fighter.

DuBoef also said he doesn’t want to hear Mayweather asking to fight Pacquiao, especially after his team denied that the second round of negotiations even took place this summer.

“It’s sad,” duBoef said. “You hope that people are a little more mature than things like that. ... We’ve tried this twice (to make the fight). We tried it twice and you denied there were negotiations. Enough of that.”

DuBoef said that Pacquiao (51-3-2, 38 KOs) was ready to fight and not interested in waiting any longer on a bout with Mayweather, who is 41-0 after a unanimous decision in May over Shane Mosley. Mayweather took that fight after the Pacquiao deal fell through.

That was Mosley’s first fight since beating Margarito in January 2009, and the last time that Margarito fought in the United States. He was suspended for one year because a plaster-like substance was found in Margarito’s hand wraps before his bout against Mosley in Los Angeles.

New gene doping tests developed

LONDON (AP) — Two groups of scientists have developed tests for gene doping in what the World Anti-Doping Agency hailed Friday as a major breakthrough in fighting the next frontier in cheating in sports.

Scientists in Germany said they have come up with a blood test that can provide “conclusive proof” of gene doping, even going back as far as 56 days from when the doping took place.

And a U.S.-French research team has devised its own method for detecting genetic doping in muscles.

The discoveries raise the possibility that a valid gene-doping test can be implemented by the 2012 London Olympics.

“This is a really significant and major breakthrough,” WADA director general David Howman told The Associated on Friday in a telephone interview. “This is a project we’ve been engaged in since 2002. Now we’ve reached the situation where we’re pretty certain that it can be detected.”

The Holy Bible sits open at the front of the Filer Mennonite Church.

Mennonite groups differ but share roots

FILER — The Filer Mennonite Church and the Church of God in Christ, Mennonite, invite any and all to their Sunday worship services, regardless of who they are or where they come from.

The two Mennonite churches come from the same roots, but practice their beliefs differently. Mennonites are Bible-believing Christians who began developing their identity during the mid-16th century when Menno Simons, a Dutch priest, broke away from traditional Protestant formation to convert to Anabaptism. Anabaptists are called so because of their belief in rebaptizing adult believers. Their rejection of infant baptism made them radical at that time, according to John D. Roth, a Goshen College professor of history and director of the Mennonite Historical Library.

“Mennonites are known for their emphasis on issues such as peace, justice, simplicity, community, service and mutual aid,” Roth said on mennonite.net.

Clothing

Plain clothes Mennonites and Amish are often mistaken for the same denomination, when in fact, they are very different.

The Amish branched away from the Mennonites in the late 1600s. Amish wear plain clothes, reject the idea of modern technology and live in tightly-knit communities that are often separated from society. Church of God in Christ, Mennonite women wear simple, modest dress and devotional prayer covering on their heads, while men have groomed beards. But unlike the Amish, this Mennonite congregation accepts technology — other than television — and its members are involved with the community and welcome anyone who is interested to join their congregation.

“God made man and woman,” said Wayne Amoth, minister at the Church of God in Christ, Mennonite. “The beard is a doctrinal position. A beard is a sign of masculinity, and long hair is a sign of femininity. And God says that these are good.”

Amoth said the Bible celebrates masculinity and femininity and is very clear about the differences in gender and why women should wear devotional prayer coverings but men do not cover their heads to pray, citing 1 Corinthians 11:1-16.

Their neighbors, the Filer Mennonite Church has open doors and smiling faces for anyone who wishes to attend their Sunday services or become involved in charity efforts as well. While they advocate a simple lifestyle, they don’t regulate dress for their congregation members.

Service

Both Mennonite churches in Filer are involved in improving the welfare of others, especially the underprivileged.

“Our hearts are hurting for those who are hurting,” Amoth said. His denomination helps people in various parts of the world with non-profit organization Christian Service International, which sends missionaries to different countries to help build schools, provide medical and dental supplies and to spread the word of God.

“We help them help themselves,” Amoth said.

The Filer Mennonite Church supports the Mennonite Central Committee, a non-profit organization dedicated to disaster relief by sending supplies for food, water, education, general health and other emergency disaster funds and supplies.

Gary Hooley’s wife, Lois Hooley, had a school kit on display during an interview. It was a school kit complete with four notebooks, a package of colored pencils, a ruler, four pencils and an eraser.

“This simple package will serve four children,” she said.

The Filer Mennonite Church also supports the Mennonite Economic Development Association, which uses microfinancing to help build economies of impoverished residents of foreign countries.

Pacifism

Pacifism is another doctrine all denominations of Mennonite have in common.

“Many people would raise the question, ‘How could you shoot someone if you think they’ll believe in God?’” said Lyman Mueller, of the Filer Mennonite Church’s leadership board.

The Mormon church’s proxy baptism is a practice that takes place in the church’s temples, such as this one in Salt Lake City.

Mormon, Jewish leaders tackle proxy baptism

By Jennifer Dobner
Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — The Mormon church says it has changed its genealogical database to better prevent the names of Jews killed in Nazi concentration camps from being submitted for posthumous baptism by proxy.

In a joint statement issued Wednesday, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and a coalition of Jewish leaders said a new computer system and policy changes related to the practice should resolve a yearslong disagreement over the baptisms.

Mormons believe posthumous baptism by proxy provides an opportunity for deceased persons to receive the Gospel in the afterlife. Baptisms are performed in Mormon temples with members immersing themselves in a baptismal pool as proxies for others. The names used in the ceremonies are drawn from a church-run genealogical database.

Faithful Mormons use the practice primarily to have their ancestors baptized into the 180-year-old church and believe the ceremonies reunite families in the afterlife.

But the practice also includes proxy rites for others around the world from all faith traditions. The church also believes departed souls can accept or reject the baptismal rites in the afterlife and contends the offerings are not intended to offend anyone.

Jews are offended by the idea that Mormons are trying to alter the religion of Holocaust victims, who were murdered because of their religion.

In 1995, the church inked an agreement with the New York City-based American Gathering of Holocaust Survivors that prevented Mormons from performing baptisms or other rites for Holocaust victims, except in the very rare instances when they have living descendants who are Mormon. The church also agreed to remove the names of Holocaust victims already in the massive database.

Database monitoring since then, however, has found that the agreement had failed to prevent both the submission of names and the baptismal rites from continuing. That sparked a dispute between the Mormons and the American Gathering over a breach of the agreement. The Jewish group withdrew from discussions with the church in 2008, saying the issue could not be resolved.

Church officials say conversations were renewed last year after a coalition of Jewish rabbis and community leaders led by former New York Attorney General Robert Abrams were invited to Salt

Do miracles happen today?

McClatchy Newspapers

LIFE ITSELF IS A WONDER

The Rev. Duke Tufty, Unity Temple on the Plaza, Kansas City, Mo.: I understand a miracle to be an extraordinary event attributed to some supernatural agency, “super natural” meaning beyond the realm of nature. I believe there is no realm beyond nature; there are only aspects of nature that are currently beyond our ability to perceive. There is much more we don’t know about nature than what we do. As our consciousness expands, we will discover aspects of nature that will astound us and be deemed miraculous. Scientists are moving closer to proving that we as human beings have many more senses than the five we are aware of. Would the display of a sixth sense seem to be a miracle? We live in a three — dimensional world, yet once again many scientists think there are at least 12 dimensions to our existence. If we awakened to higher dimensions, would they not seem to be miraculous? Jesus displayed incredible abilities of healing and left us with the message that what he did we can do also. Would we deem it to be a miracle if we were able to heal ourselves or others by harnessing our innate energy? The very fact that our universe began as nothing but a vast expanse of ash and today we live on this planet of abundance is nothing short of a miracle. The path of life is paved with miracles that will never cease.

GOD IS INVOLVED TODAY

The Rev. Justin Hoye, pastor of St. Mary’s Catholic Church, Nevada, Mo., and St. Bridget’s in Rich Hill: Absolutely! The Gospels of the New Testament demonstrate that the person of Jesus Christ worked miracles among those to whom he ministered. These miracles testified to his authority to do the works of God in our world, and these miracles were not done for show. Christ’s miracles provide a window into the priorities and concerns of God: feeding the hungry, healing the sick and reconciling the sinner. Remaining open to the possibility of miracles existing today demonstrates an understanding that God is the primary agent in our world. Whereas a deist might believe that God created all that is seen and unseen but is not involved with the day-to-day workings of creation, a belief in miracles reaffirms faith in God’s nearness and involvement in life now. That is, miracles profess that God is intimately involved in our world, my world, your world. While God normally and routinely involves secondary agents — us — in bringing about good works in our world, some events occur beyond the consequence of our agency. To believe in the existence of miracles today affirms a belief in the care and concern with which God cares for his people — as exhibited by Jesus Christ in the New Testament — and with which God continues to feed our hungers, heal our sicknesses and free us from slavery to sin.

Is Glenn Beck’s rise good for Mormonism?

By Felicia Sonmez
The Washington Post

Like conservative commentator Glenn Beck, Stephen Owens is a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. His in-laws traveled from Utah to Washington last weekend to join Beck’s rally on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial. Owens himself, however, said he has always “kind of rolled my eyes” at Beck’s outspoken views. And when the 42-year-old Salt Lake City lawyer read that Beck publicly questioned President Obama’s “version of Christianity” the day after the Washington rally, he was so angry he penned a letter to the local newspaper. “I think it’s arrogant of anyone to say whether someone is a Christian or not,” said Owens. “My view of that is, if someone says, ‘I follow the teachings of Jesus Christ,’ then they’re Christian, and who am I to say, ‘No, you’re not,’ let alone 1/8 to 3/8 of the president of our country? I was offended at that.” Owens’ comments speak to the mixed reviews that Beck’s higher profile has received among members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Some view Beck’s rise as a sign of Mormonism going mainstream, while others worry that he is a divisive figure who is unrepresentative of Mormon values. Michael Otterson, managing director of public affairs for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said that opinion on Beck is just as divided among Mormons as it is elsewhere. “Views on Glenn Beck would be right across the spectrum,” Otterson said. “It depends on where individual Latter-day Saints are. Some would embrace him completely and others would, no doubt, be at odds.” Otterson also noted that there are more than 6 million Mormons in the United States and that prominent Mormons in the political arena run the ideological gamut from Senate Majority Leader Harry M. Reid, D-Nev., to former Massachusetts Gov.

Glenn Beck speaks at the Restoring Honor rally in front of the Lincoln Memorial on Aug. 28 in Washington, D.C.

Mitt Romney, a Republican. “It really underscores that members of the church are free to have their separate political views and express them whatever way they like,” Otterson said, adding that Beck “would be the very first person to say that he does not speak for the church.” Philip Barlow, the Arrington Chair of Mormon History and Culture at Utah State University, said that Beck is “something of a polarizing figure” among the Mormon community. Barlow noted that Beck’s statement that the Constitution is an “inspired document,” his calls for limited government and his emphasis on not exiling God from the public sphere “have considerable sympathy in Mormonism.” But Barlow added that Beck’s claim that social justice is “a code word for Nazism and fascism” as well as some of his more inflammatory remarks about his political adversaries have turned off some members of the church. “One wouldn’t describe Glenn Beck as always being civil in his descriptions of his opponents,” Barlow said, noting that The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints recently issued a statement calling for “civil discourse” on the topic of immigration. Mormons have faced considerable obstacles when it comes to politics and perceptions among the American public. A Time Magazine poll released last week showed that 29 percent of Americans hold unfavorable views of Mormons, compared with 43 percent who had unfavorable views of Muslims, 17 percent who felt unfavorably toward Catholics and 13 percent who viewed Jews unfavorably. During his 2008 presidential bid, Romney’s Mormon faith was viewed by some as a liability. A Pew survey at the time showed that 25 percent of Americans — including 36 percent of evangelical Republicans — expressed reservations about voting for a Mormon for president. And while Mormons consider themselves to be Christians, key tenets of the Latter-day Saints church are disputed by mainstream Christian denominations — a disparity that critics say adds to the irony of Beck questioning another person’s Christian faith. White House spokesman Robert Gibbs responded to Beck’s comment, saying President Obama is a “committed, mainstream Christian.” Gibbs was asked about Beck’s assertions Thursday at the White House press briefing. There are more than a dozen Mormon members of Congress from across the political spectrum, from Reid on the left to Utah Republican Sens. Orrin G. Hatch and Robert F. Bennett on the right. But Beck, whose Washington rally last weekend drew upward of 87,000 people, may be the highest-profile Mormon on the national stage. Owens expressed concern that some may come to see Beck as representing the views of most Mormons. “I know he doesn’t speak for the Mormon Church. And yet, everyone seems to know he’s LDS,” Owens said. “And when he’s so outspoken religiously, that bothers me, because I’m worried people in the public will mesh the two — Mormonism and him as a political commentator.”

Ex-Tony Alamo church members sue other members

TEXARKANA, Ark. — Six former members of convicted preacher Tony Alamo’s church are now suing other church members and church-controlled businesses. The lawsuit filed last Friday in federal court in Texarkana claims the members knew or should have known Alamo was sexually abusing children and did nothing to stop it. It asks for at least $150,000 per plaintiff, compensation for past physical pain and suffering, past and future mental anguish and past and future medical expenses. Alamo was convicted last year of taking underage girls across state lines for sex and sentenced to 175 years in prison. He is asking for a new trial. Five of the six who filed the lawsuit say Alamo took them as wives and had sex with them when they were underage. The sixth says she was being groomed to be a child bride but escaped.

Faith-healing couple plead not guilty to manslaughter after infant death

OREGON CITY, Ore. — An Oregon couple who belong to a church that practices faith healing have pleaded not guilty to manslaughter charges in the death of their infant son. Attorneys for Dale R. Hickman and Shannon M. Hickman entered the not guilty pleas Monday during an arraignment before Clackamas County Circuit Judge Jeffrey Jones. The judge set a tentative Nov. 19 trial date for the Hickmans, who are members of the Followers of Christ church in Oregon City. Their son was born in September 2009, about six weeks premature. No one with medical training attended the birth, and no one called a doctor or ambulance. An autopsy determined the infant died of staph pneumonia and complications from a premature birth, including underdeveloped lungs.

Lake City to tour a newly constructed temple and its downtown genealogy library to better understand the process. Under new church policies, members will be required to certify names submitted to the database for baptism. Further safeguards include monitoring those names for submissions that don’t meet policy standards and the removal of records, church spokesman Michael Purdy said in a story posted on a church-owned newspaper’s website. Abrams, who discussed the baptisms issue with American Gathering leader Ernest Michel before talking with Mormon leaders, said he believes the Mormon church is sincere in trying to address Jewish concerns. Abrams said church leaders have assured him that members who fail to comply with church baptism policies will face sanctions that include losing their access to church temples. “They have made this extraordinary exception to the doctrine for Holocaust victims,” Abrams told The Associated Press on Wednesday. “Their doctrine seeks to offer baptism to the souls of all people who have ever lived on the face of the earth and one grouping has been carved out. That is an act of extraordinary sensitivity and commitment, which is understood and appreciated by the Jewish community.”

A telephone message left at Michel’s office in New York City was not immediately returned Wednesday. New Jersey-based Jewish genealogy expert Gary Mokotoff, who was part of the American Gathering group that had negotiated with the church, said the rules and safeguards will correct past problems — if they are enforced. Past promises of reprimands and the removal of names have not always been kept, and recent checks of the database by independent Salt Lake City researcher, Helen Radkey, have found baptisms were performed for Holocaust victims as recently as May, he said.

Muslim liberal arts college opens in California

By Raja Abdulrahim
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — At a fundraiser in February for Zaytuna College, organizers seemed intent on preempting critical questions.

“Why a Muslim College in America?” the Anaheim, Calif., event was headlined, as if anticipating the query from audience members. And throughout the four-hour gathering, the speakers repeatedly stated why they believed such an institution was needed, calling it an idea whose time has come.

Hatem Bazian, a University of California-Berkeley lecturer in Near East studies and a co-founder of Zaytuna, said that touch of defensiveness came after more than a year of crisscrossing the country and gauging sentiment from the American Muslim community.

“There’s still some lack of clarity from the members of the community whether this is something that is needed at this point or not,” Bazian said after the fundraiser. “People need to feel this is something that is needed for them to invest in it.”

Zaytuna, which hopes to become the first accredited, four-year Muslim liberal arts college in the United States, last week welcomed its first students to its rented space in a Baptist seminary in Berkeley, Calif. The college, which has about a dozen faculty members, will offer two majors at first, in Arabic language and Islamic law and theology.

Muslims in the U.S. have founded schools, mosques and religious organizations. An accredited college is the next step, Zaytuna’s founders say. They cite a long tradition of other faiths founding their own educational institutions and seminaries.

“If you have distinctive views of the world, it’s important to have institutions to pass on that view,” Zaytuna founder Sheikh Hamza Yusuf said. A convert to Islam and Northern California native, Yusuf is considered one of the leading Islamic scholars in the U.S.

But the college, which has been in the works for several years, is more than just an item on a religious community’s to-do list.

Zaytuna (which means “olive” in Arabic) stems from a growing desire in many parts of the U.S. Muslim community for leaders and imams who understand Islam within a Western context.

“In order to have an American Muslim identity, we needed leaders who were raised in institutions here to lead those communities,” said Imam Zaid Shakir, another of the founders. Shakir, who converted to Islam while serving in the Air Force, is a respected Islamic scholar who has studied in Egypt, Syria and Morocco.

McClatchy photo

To date, Muslim religious leaders have mostly come from abroad. And although they have extensive knowledge of the Islamic texts, the Koran and Arabic, they are often unfamiliar with the American culture in which Islam is practiced, Shakir said.

Nowadays, employment ads for imams in Muslim American magazines seek candidates who are fluent in Arabic and English, able to work with youths and engage in interfaith activities.

The goal of the new college, Shakir said, is “to graduate culturally fluent, Islamically trained human beings.” Of those, he said, some may hope to become imams, some to go into a graduate or professional program and some “may want to be housewives or open a halal meat shop.”

The college is not a seminary but does include an imam certification program over three summer semesters.

Fatimah Knight, one of 15 members of Zaytuna’s first freshman class, said she considered Yusuf and Shakir, the college’s two main leaders, ideal to lead the effort because they understand the thinking of Muslims in America. When Yusuf gives a speech, he quotes from Ralph Waldo Emerson as well as the Koran, she said.

“And I think it’s very appealing to Western Muslims because it’s very much how we are,” said Knight, who plans to major in Islamic law.

Poll: Most in N.Y. want Muslim center moved

NEW YORK (AP) — Most New Yorkers want a planned Islamic center and mosque near ground zero to be moved farther away, according to a New York Times poll of city residents.

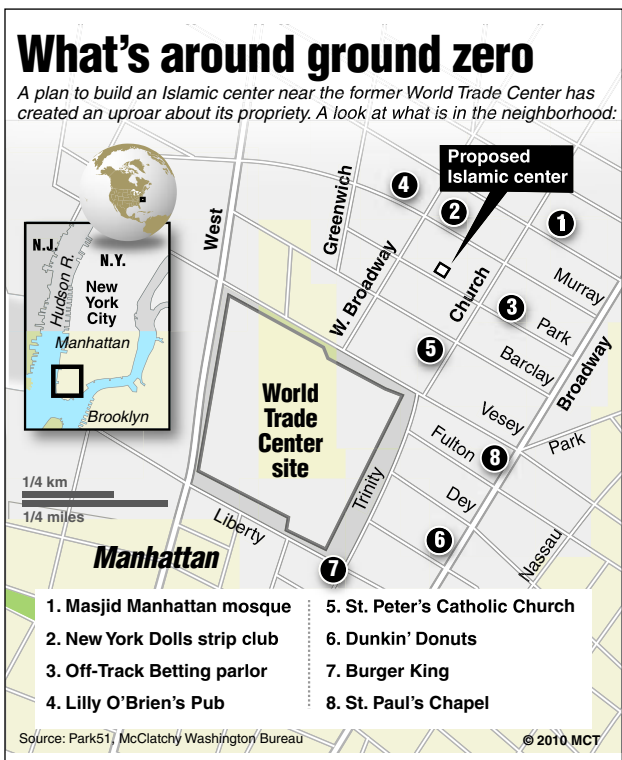

Supporters of the 13-story complex two blocks from the World Trade Center site say it would promote interfaith dialogue.

But according to the poll, about two-thirds of

New York residents believe that while Muslims have a right to construct the center near ground zero, they should find a different location.

Even some who favor the complex say it should be relocated; 38 percent of them say they would prefer it be moved.

The poll of 892 adults was conducted Aug. 27-31. The margin of error is plus or minus 3 percentage points.

YOUNG WOMEN RECOGNITION

Justina Anderson recently completed a second Young Womanhood Recognition Award.

She completed the first when she was 15, but as a new program with a new value came out this past year, she did the program again, added the new value of Virtue and received a second award and necklace. She also received a “Honey Bee” award for serving and assisting other girls working on their goals.

Her Young Women’s leader says she is a great example to other girls about going the extra mile and achieving all you can in life.

Anderson is in the Twin Falls 7th Ward, Twin Falls Stake.

The Times-News welcomes news of Young Women Recognition awards. Send information to Ellen Thomason at ellen@magicvalley.com. Deadline is 5 p.m. Wednesday for publication on the Saturday religion page.

Reverent

They referred to the “Golden Rule” of treat others how you would want to be treated.

“Violence breeds violence,” Gary Hooley said.

The Church of God in Christ, Mennonites agree with the philosophy.

“We are nonresistant,” Amoth said. “The Sermon on the Mount taught us to turn the other cheek.”

Both churches discourage its members from joining the military, but only the Church of God in Christ, Mennonite church also discourages participation in law enforcement.

“It’s not that we’re not thankful or unpatriotic,” Gary Hooley said. “We don’t shun the military. It’s just that Jesus’s love crosses borders. He loves everyone, Germans, Americans, etc.”

Nonconformity

The “Principles of Faith I Believe In,” a brief breakdown of basic beliefs the Church of God in Christ, Mennonite, states, “We believe in non-conformity to the world, in fashion, costly array, bodily adornment and carnal pleasures.”

This is one of the reasons — in addition to scriptural references — why the women in this denomination don’t wear makeup or lavish jewelry. The denomination also does not go to movie theaters, own televisions, or attend dances. They do, however, use other kinds of technology.

“With certain electronic devices, like this one,” Amoth said, motioning to his digital Bible. “We control what we use.” There are many things on television and in movies that members of the church do not desire to be exposed to.

When asked about avoiding dances, Amoth replied, “It tends to be more sensual.” He agreed members avoid the situation altogether. Alcohol consumption and smoking are also prohibited.

“The Bible describes what sin is,” Gary Hooley said. “It indicates you’re not in love with Jesus if you enjoy sin.”

“There is variation in personal taste for technology,” his wife, Lois, added. “Whether or not you have a TV or a radio is a personal choice. We don’t have a TV in our home, but it’s more of a personal thing.”

The Filer Mennonite Church does not lay out many rules or restrictions on the use of technology or dress, but rather, leaves it open to individual interpretation.

“None of us are perfect,” Gary Hooley said. “You can pick inconsistencies in all of us, but it’s not like we’re not trying.”

Sexual immorality

Both churches believe in sexual purity before marriage, faithfulness to the spouse during marriage and that marriage should only be between a man and a woman. Although this principle is important for the churches, they differ on how they approach sexual deviance.

“Young people should be morally pure,” Amoth said.

The result of fornication, homosexual acts or adultery is excommunication.

“It is to keep the church pure and bring the person back to Christ,” Amoth said. Excommunication is defined in the church as the first step in a process of repentance and self-examination, Amoth said, quoting 1 Corinthians 5.

The Filer Mennonite Church takes a different approach.

“No one has ever been asked to leave,” Lois Hooley said.

The church officially discourages alcohol use, but adultery is more serious.

“We will pray and initiate conversation one-on-one with the person,” Mueller said. “But sometimes, they don’t want to listen to you. Either they distance themselves, or they change their ways and come back around. But we don’t remove them.”

Respect for others

Staying true to their pacifist and welcoming beliefs, each church had nothing but respectful things to say about the other.

“We have the same roots, we just practice differently,” Gary Hooley said. “We think they’re great people.”

“They are our neighbors and they are just following the Bible the way they see it,” Amoth said in a separate interview.

“Our way is not the only way to practice, it’s just our way,” Lois Hooley said.

Charles D. Capps

Charles D. Capps passed away Sept. 2, 2010. He was born in Richfield, Idaho, Feb. 10, 1931, to Ruby (Hawkins) Capps and Clive J. Capps. Charles was raised by his stepfather John H. Falck.

Charles graduated from Jerome High School in 1949. He married his high school sweetheart, Virginia Mae Brandon, July 8, 1950. Charles served nine years with the Idaho National Guard 116th armored cavalry. Charles was executive director of the Twin Falls and Jerome Housing Authority. He retired in 1996. He was a member of the Twin Falls Reformed Church and previously served as a Deacon and Elder at the First Presbyterian Church of Twin Falls. Charles loved the Lord, his family and friends. He enjoyed fishing, bird hunting with his wife and kids, hiking, camping and restoring leather horse collars. He was a cherished husband, father, grandfather, great-grandfather and friend, and will be missed by all. Charles was preceded in death by his parents; stepfather; brothers, Glen and Kenneth; and sister, Delores Davis. He is survived by his wife, Virginia; brother, Doug (Cherie); sons, Richard (DelRee), Robert (Jan) and James (Michele); grandsons, Brandon Capps and Tucker Johnson; granddaughters, Jennifer Gillmore, Candice Leavitt, Chelsea Capps; and three great-grandchildren.

A celebration of life service will be held at 11 a.m. Sept. 8, 2010, at the Twin Falls Reformed Church, 1631 Grandview Drive. The family would like to express gratitude to our caregivers, Phyllis, Mary and Lina, and also, Cindy of Guardian Hospice care. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to Research for ALS at www.alsa.org (The ALS Association, 1275 K St. NW, Suite 1050, Washington D.C. 20005) or a charity of your choice.

Roadwork planned at Yellowstone Park

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Visitors to Yellowstone National Park can expect traffic delays at Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone starting next week.

Work to repave the road out to Artist Point is scheduled to begin Tuesday.

Yellowstone officials say visitors can expect delays up to 30 minutes while the road is repaved. Some temporary road closures also will be necessary.

The road will be closed between 8 p.m. and 8 a.m. each night next Wednesday through Friday.

Damaged valve leads to 40,000 sockeye deaths

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — More than 40,000 sockeye salmon that were destined to help bolster Idaho's breeding program died while at an Oregon hatchery late last month, wiping out about a quarter of the young fish slated for release in central Idaho mountain lakes next May.

The dour news comes just as Idaho had been celebrating robust numbers of endangered sockeye salmon returning to Redfish Lake near Stanley this summer.

A damaged valve at the Oxbow Fish Hatchery, located in Cascade Locks, Ore., is the culprit, the Department of Fish and Game said.

On August 25, workers at the facility east of Portland along the Columbia River noticed sockeye numbers in an outdoor raceway were just over half what they should have been. They discovered many sockeye had been drawn through the damaged valve and into a void beneath the raceway, where they perished.

The fish, from brood year 2009, previously had numbered 94,826; after the accident, the inventory was just 51,609.

There are still another 100,000 sockeye from 2009 at the Sawtooth Fish Hatchery near Stanley, but the losses in Oregon mean state Fish and Game biologists will only have about 150,000 smolts in May 2011 to release ahead of a 900-mile journey from Redfish Lake to the Pacific Ocean.

That will reduce the number of sockeye salmon returning to Idaho's captive brood-stock program from 2012 to 2014, said Jeff Heindel, Fish and Game's conservation hatcheries supervisor said.

Still, Heindel told federal officials at the NOAA National Marine Fisheries Service responsible for protected species in an Aug. 30 letter that he's optimistic this setback won't hurt overall recovery efforts.

"While an unfortunate loss ... this loss does not impact the current recovery efforts for Snake River sockeye," Heindel wrote. "Genetically diverse groups of captive brood are currently cultured at primary broodstock stations in both Washington and Idaho; current and future egg production will not be limited as a result of this loss at Oxbow."

Idaho's Snake River sockeye were listed as endangered in 1991.

But so far this year, Idaho is seeing more sockeye return to Redfish Lake than have arrived in years.

State biologists expect as many as 1,500 fish will make the trip into Idaho's mountains by this fall, up from last year's 833 and well above the three sockeye that made their way back in 2006.

So many have arrived that an Idaho hatchery near Boise that was collecting the fish is full.

As a result, some sockeye are being allowed to swim into Redfish Lake under their own power, the first time that has happened in two decades.

Ariz. governor says she was wrong about beheadings

PHOENIX (AP) — Gov. Jan Brewer rose to national fame defending the state's immigration law and warning of rising violence along the U.S.-Mexico border, including a claim that headless bodies were turning up in the Arizona desert.

But the claim has come back to haunt her after her stammering debate performance in which she failed to back it up and ignored repeated questions on the issue from a scrum of reporters.

Brewer has spent the time since backtracking and trying to repair the damage done from her cringe-worthy debate against underdog challenger Terry Goddard.

"That was an error, if I said that," the Republican told The Associated Press on Friday. "I misspoke, but you know, let me be clear, I am concerned about the border region because it continues to be reported in Mexico that there's a lot of violence going on and we don't want that going into Arizona."

She said she was referring to beheadings and other cartel-related violence in Mexico in comments she made earlier this summer about decapitated bodies found in the state's southern region.

Brewer's candidacy caught a big break in April, when she signed a controversial new state immigration law that put local police officers on the front lines of enforcing federal immigration law. At the time, Brewer's primary campaign faced serious challenges, but signing the bill cleared her path to what proved to be an easy primary win on Aug. 24.

A veteran Arizona political observer said her latest gaffes may not sway many voters but could put a charge into Goddard's campaign.

AP photo

Republican Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer waits for a Arizona gubernatorial debate to begin Wednesday in Phoenix.

"I think it gave him an opening," said Bruce Merrill, a longtime pollster and retired Arizona State University journalism professor.

Goddard can now play the debate clips over and over as he attacks her competence to lead Arizona.

Brewer stumbled through her opening statement of the debate Wednesday. She lost her train of thought for more than 10 painful seconds as she laughed, looked down at the table and finally regained her composure.

Goddard, who trailed by 20 points in a July poll, said he brought up the beheadings comments because Brewer hadn't acknowledged she was wrong.

"It's a kind of fear-mongering that has hurt our economy. It has driven jobs away," he said. "She wouldn't come off it."

Brewer apparently first referred to beheadings during a June 16 interview with Fox News, talking about "the kidnappings and the extortion and the fact that people can't feel safe in their community" in discussing controversy surrounding the immigration law.

She went further in a June 27 interview on

IDAHO BACKS ARIZONA ON IMMIGRATION

BOISE (AP) — Idaho is backing Arizona's law meant to curb illegal immigration. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter said Friday he's filed a court brief backing Arizona's appeal with the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Otter says states should be able to concurrently enforce federal immigration laws, provided they don't create new categories of aliens.

Arizona's law would generally require officers enforcing other measures to check immigration status of people they suspect are illegal immigrants. There are several lawsuits challenging the measure, including cases filed by the U.S. Justice of Department and civil rights groups. In July, U.S. District Judge Susan Bolton put key parts of Arizona's law on hold. Idaho says it is now among 11 states that have joined in an appeal of Bolton's ruling filed by Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer.

Phoenix television station KPNX when asked about the earlier beheadings claim.

"Oh, our law enforcement agencies have found bodies in the desert, either buried or just lying out there, that have been beheaded," Brewer said.

In fact, there have been beheadings in Mexico in violence associated with criminal cartels that include those active in cross-border smuggling.

And some violence has spilled over the border, including the March slaying of a southern Arizona rancher, Robert Krentz. Law enforcement officials have said they believe Krentz was killed by an illegal immigrant, likely a scout for drug smugglers.

Deal to clean up LA-area nuclear accident site

LOS ANGELES (AP) — More than five decades after a partial nuclear meltdown just outside Los Angeles, state and federal officials Friday announced agreements to remove all contamination and return the atomic energy and rocket engine test site to its natural state.

Residents who have fought for years for cleanup of the Santa Susana Field Laboratory heralded the agreements signed by the Department of Energy, NASA and state officials. The agreements, which commit to a 2017 cleanup date, must still go through a public review process before they are finalized.

"It's more than we'd hoped for a long time," said Marie Mason, head of a homeowner's association whose four members have all been sick with leukemia, breast cancer or serious thyroid conditions. "We are thrilled."

During the Cold War, workers at the site, then-operated by Rocketdyne, tested more than 30,000 rockets and experimented with nuclear reactors on the hilltop where now-hollow gray buildings sit like tombstones.

By the time the lab was shuttered, testing and several nuclear accidents since 1959 left a toxic stew of radioactive and chemical contamination that many believed trickled into the communities below, causing breast cancer, thyroid conditions and a rare eye cancer among infants.

The cleanup has taken decades to hammer out, in part because of a complex web of owners and responsible parties.

For example, NASA owns the rocket-testing areas. The Department of Energy owns the buildings where the partial meltdown occurred. Boeing owns much of the property underneath.

Boeing said in a statement that it had only just learned of the agreement and was reviewing it. But even without Boeing on board, proponents of the deal said it would require a high-level cleanup in the most-polluted parts of the site.

"We have been arguing and wrestling and wrangling and going back and forth about how clean this should be, and this is a huge breakthrough for us," said Rick Brausch, who is overseeing the cleanup for the state Department of Toxic Substances Control.

Brausch and others could not estimate the expense. Studies of the site have already cost tens of millions of dollars.

Idaho AG's office says ISU meeting legal

POCATELLO (AP) — The Idaho Attorney General's office says Idaho State University did not violate the state's open meeting law when a parking advisory board met behind closed doors in May.

Assistant Chief Deputy Brian Kane says in a letter dated Wednesday and obtained by the Idaho State Journal that the advisory board was created internally by the school and not by Idaho statute. Kane says that means the board is not a public agency under the Idaho Open Meeting Act and for that reason didn't violate the law.

LA sheriff says almost all pot clinics criminal

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles County sheriff has escalated his war of words against California medical marijuana dispensaries, saying as many as 97 percent operate as criminal enterprises.

Some of the pot shops get marijuana from Mexican drug cartels, and most dole out pot to people with no medical need for it, Sheriff Lee Baca said.

"Millions of dollars are being made for profit, and it's all illegal," the sheriff said this week.

Baca presented no evidence to support his claim. His comments coincided with a recent announcement that he would lead efforts against a November ballot measure to legalize marijuana for personal use in California.

Critics said his claims about the dispensaries were politically motivated and untrue.

"When they run out of scare tactics, they come out with stuff like this," said Michael Backes, a board member of the Cornerstone Research Collective, which provides marijuana to patients in the Eagle Rock area of Los Angeles.

EMPLOYMENT

Today is Saturday, Sept. 4, the 247th day of 2010. There are 118 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On Sept. 4, 1781, Los Angeles was founded by Spanish settlers under the leadership of Governor Felipe de Neve.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1886, a group of Apache Indians led by Geronimo surrendered to Gen. Nelson Miles at Skeleton Canyon in Arizona.

In 1888, George Eastman received a patent for his roll-film box camera, and registered his trademark: "Kodak."

In 1893, English author Beatrix Potter first told the story of Peter Rabbit in the form of a "picture letter" to Noel Moore, the son of Potter's former governess.

In 1917, the American Expeditionary Forces in France suffered their first fatalities during World War I when a German plane attacked a British-run base hospital.

In 1948, Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands abdicated after nearly six decades of rule for health reasons.

In 1951, President Harry S. Truman addressed the nation from the Japanese peace treaty conference in San Francisco in the first live, coast-to-coast television broadcast.

In 1957, Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus used Arkansas National Guardsmen to prevent nine black students from entering all-white Central High School in Little Rock. Ford Motor Co. began selling its ill-fated Edsel.

In 1969, the Food and Drug Administration issued a report calling birth control pills "safe," despite a slight risk of fatal blood-clotting disorders linked to the pills.

In 1971, an Alaska Airlines jet crashed near Juneau, killing all 111 people on board.

In 1984, Canada's Progressive Conservatives, led by Brian Mulroney, won a landslide victory in general elections over the Liberal Party of Prime Minister John N. Turner and the New Democrats headed by Ed Broadbent.

Ten years ago: French investigators announced that a stray length of metal which had gashed a tire of a supersonic Concorde, leading to a fuel tank fire and the plane's fatal crash the previous July, probably came from a Continental Airlines plane that had taken off on the same runway four minutes earlier. (Continental has denied any responsibility.)

Five years ago: Six days after Hurricane Katrina left a devastated New Orleans in chaos, police stormed the Danziger Bridge, shooting and killing two people and wounding four others. (Four police officers are facing federal charges in the shooting; five former officers have pleaded guilty to participating in a cover-up of the shootings; a sergeant and a retired sergeant also are accused in the cover-up.)

One year ago: A German army colonel called in a U.S. airstrike on a pair of hijacked tanker trucks in northern Afghanistan, resulting in civilian casualties. (German officials said up to 142 people were believed to have died or been injured; Afghan leaders estimated 30 to 40 civilians were killed.) Defense Secretary Robert Gates expressed disappointment at news outlets that had used a picture taken and distributed by The Associated Press depicting a U.S. Marine mortally wounded in combat in Afghanistan.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"A ROMAN Master stands on Grecian ground,
And to the people at the Isthmian Games ...
Proclaims THE LIBERTY OF GREECE...."
— William Wordsworth

As a commentator at world championships, I was constantly amazed by the skill of Lorenzo Lauria. His play in today's deal was most impressive.

In three no-trump on repeated heart leads (suggesting West had started with five), you win the second and plan to cash as many clubs as you can before deciding whether to set up a diamond for your ninth trick, or to fall back on the spade finesse.

On your third club winner, West discards the diamond three, while East lets go of the diamond six. You lead a spade to the king, then cross back to the club seven, on which both opponents again let go of small diamonds.

I just had time to say, "I've seen this sort of position for 50 years and no one has ever successfully dropped a doubleton queen offside" when Lauria did find the play!

Lauria had decided that the diamond discards suggested West had begun life with either a small doubleton spade or the doubleton queen. If so, why had East not pitched a spade? After all, he knew he could afford one.

Lauria had reasoned as follows: "East thinks if he discards a small spade, it might persuade me to play for the drop. Since East wants me to think he is keeping spades because he has something, he really has nothing in the suit. If he had started life with queen-fourth of spades, he would have pitched one to make me play for the drop."

ANSWER: If your partner has come into the auction with a relatively poor suit, he rates to have either extra length or extra high-cards. Either way, bidding three no-trump now seems the practical option. If nothing else, it should teach your partner that two-level overcalls are not to be taken lightly.

DEAR ABBY: A few weeks ago, I met a group of friends at a local pub. "Charlie" was the designated driver. As the evening progressed, I noticed Charlie was drinking beer. When I mentioned it, he said he'd had only three. Then he insisted he was fine and "it was only beer."

I tried to explain the danger of driving while "buzzed" and told him I'd walk home. Charlie then became insulted that I didn't trust him to know his limits. He said I should relax and quit being so uptight.

A few days later, some of my friends told me I had caused "unnecessary drama" that night and that my standards for the designated driver were "unrealistic." They also said that Charlie wasn't drunk and was totally capable of driving. But the fact remains, our designated driver wasn't sober, and I wasn't comfortable getting into a car with him.

I voiced my opinion; now I'm being punished for it. Did I judge Charlie too harshly?

—VALUES MY SAFETY, DAVIS, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR VALUES YOUR SAFETY: Not in MY book, and not in the one published by the California Department of Motor Vehicles. In its California Drivers Handbook, under the section titled "Designated Driver Program," it lists the requirements for someone to be a designated driver. Among them: "Must abstain from consuming alcoholic beverages for the duration of the outing." That means not drinking anything with alcohol in it. Zilch!

You were right to speak up. In the future, if you decide to socialize with these folks, arrange to meet them. And if the location is not within walking distance, take a cab.

DEAR ABBY: "Tracey" is beautiful, caring and fun to spend time with. I fell hard for her and knew I could love her forever. When she broke up with me to "be on her own," I was very hurt.

My best friend, "Henry," says he started sleeping with Tracey right after our breakup. I was his best man when he married "Jill." Now Henry has left Jill for Tracey, and I am left with a sick stomach. How do I heal my wounds while supporting Jill, which keeps them painfully open?

—HEARTSICK IN OHIO

DEAR HEARTSICK: One way would be to remind yourself that as "caring and fun" as Tracey was to be with, she had no reluctance about dating a married man. Another would be to level with Jill, explain that spending time with her is a painful reminder of the way you were dumped, and take a break from it until you have healed.

DEAR ABBY: I became fast friends with one of my husband's co-workers after meeting her at a happy hour. We had fun going out, usually to dance clubs.

One night when my husband tagged along, I overheard her tell him, "If you weren't married, I could be with you." When I confronted her about it the next night, she apologized, saying she had been feeling no pain and can't believe she said it. My husband chalks it up to her being stupid drunk, but I can't let it go.

Now when I see her at work functions, I am cordial and she acts like nothing ever happened. We could have been great friends if she hadn't said what she did, but each time I think I can bury the hatchet, I get angry and upset all over again.

Should I just get over it? Or am I justified in feeling I can't be friends with someone I can't trust?

—DISTRUSTFUL IN ILLINOIS

DEAR DISTRUSTFUL: You're justified. And I'm saying it cold sober.

IF SEPTEMBER 4 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You might be distracted by instances of inaccuracy during the next few weeks. Perhaps you add up the bank balance incorrectly or turn right when you should turn left. But overall you shouldn't worry that people will think badly of you. Your charisma shines like a beacon for the next several months. If you are looking for a new job or wish to change careers, then put something in motion in late October or early November. If you are already self-employed, your business decisions will be sound. If, however, you are looking for a commitment from a loved one or have your eye peeled for a suitable soul mate, you will find that your love life takes an upswing between now and December.

HOROSCOPE Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You might be a weekend warrior, but that doesn't mean you can't be a weekend lover, too. Your deeds of derring-do impress a prospective lover or provide a chance to get physical in more ways than one.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Exude charm and impress others with your integrity and dedication. The good opinions that result will pay off sooner than you think. Polish your reputation by being seen in public with your latest conquest.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Quit banging your head against a brick wall and reassess long-term goals. Pick up the phone and talk things over with trusted friends. You may be amazed at helpful insights that quickly heal problems.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are more aware of your own feelings than someone else's. Trust that others are willing to go an extra mile to bring a smile to your face. A new hook up could lead to a fulfilling relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The sincere and honest approach is a magic formula that puts relationships back on track. Put your best foot forward where romance is at stake or make a good first impression with prospective in-laws.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Pick and choose does not translate to picky and choosy. This is an excellent time to decide on major purchases or to become the owner of something of lasting value. Be discriminating about possessions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are equipped with bell, book and party. You might not believe in witchcraft or even own a broom, but there is definite magic in the way you spellbind a certain someone. Pursue a romance with glee.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Flattery will get you somewhere. People in general welcome well-intentioned kindnesses and simple courtesy, but it is even more effective close to home. A special someone will show appreciation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You could be prepared for an ordinary weekend, but a secret admirer or a pleasant surprise could prove enchanting. An e-mail or phone call could send you off on fanciful amorous adventures.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your animal magnetism is likely to attract a complementary other. Abandon worries and put your dancing shoes on. Enjoy freedom from uncertainties and escape into hours of romantic bliss.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are at your attractive best. A flirtation could brighten up the day. Because you are such a live wire, you electrify your audience. New relationships started under these stars could be long lasting.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Life is a smorgasbord, so grab a plate and stand in line to taste whatever looks appetizing. You can mingle with trustworthy companions if single or share a feast of romantic playfulness with your mate.

WARNING
When purchasing a vehicle, make sure that the title is in the name of the seller. Under Idaho motor vehicle code a vehicle cannot be sold unless the title is in the name of the seller (exception: Idaho licensed dealer). The seller shall provide the new purchaser a signed bill of sale showing the following: Full description of the vehicle, vehicle identification number, amount paid and name(s) and address of the new purchaser. The bill of sale must be signed, dated and show actual mileage at the time of sale. If you have any questions, please contact your local assessor's office.
