Idaho part of effort to overturn wolf ruling

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Idaho joined Montana and Interior Secretary Ken Salazar this week in appealing a U.S. District Court ruling relisting wolves as endangered species in the Intermountain West.

Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter and Attorney General Lawrence Wasden led the pack Thursday to ask the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to reverse U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy’s Aug. 5 decision that restored federal protections to wolves in Idaho and Montana.

Going at it from a different angle, U.S. Sens. Mike Crapo and Jim Risch, both R-Idaho, introduced a bill Wednesday to remove the wolves from the endangered species list altogether.

Under the Endangered Species Act, wolves are managed as a single population. If a population spans more than one state, Molloy ruled, protection cannot be removed on a state-by-state basis. In this case, Salazar had tried to delist wolves in Idaho and Montana, but not Wyoming.

“We’re seeing a troubling pattern of behavior here, with Judge Molloy consistently ruling in support of federal control over our land, our resources and our way of life in the West,” Otter said in a press release, referring to another of the judge’s decisions this week that upheld federal control over regulating firearms.

However, Garrick Dutcher of Ketchum-based Living With Wolves called Idaho’s appeal just an 11th-hour election-year stunt, and claims by Otter of livestock carnage overstated, saying attacks on livestock have fallen this year.

“This is not a state sovereignty issue,” Dutcher said. “Sadly, the waste of taxpayer funds to pursue this appeal is not about wildlife

Pro skateboarder from Twin Falls ranks 10th in world

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Professional skateboarder Shawn Black shot about 10 feet into the air vertically, grabbed his skateboard and almost got it back under his feet.

He landed hard on the concrete of Harmon Skate Park, but tucked his shoulder and rolled with the spill, a maneuver learned over decades of wrecks and more than a dozen broken bones.

“That’s the kind of wreck to put a smile on your face,” he said when he got up. Sure enough, the 39-year-old father had the grin of a teenager.

That enthusiasm has taken him through a sometimes tumultuous time as a skateboarder in Twin Falls. Emotions ran high a decade ago when skateboarders and a security guard at the Lynwood Shopping Center fought over a zero-tolerance skating policy, prompting vitriol over the “spike-haired, cigarette- and pot-smoking delinquents,” as one letter writer to the Times-News put it at the time.

Now, Black is getting accolades from the Twin Falls City Council for volunteering his time in skateboarding clinics, with Councilman Will Kezele saying “it is citizens

Twin Falls School District weighs options for spending federal funds

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

It’s extra money, but it also means extra decisions to make.

Twin Falls School District officials are in the early stages of sorting out what to do with $1.3 million in federal funding on its way from a jobs bill passed by Congress. The bill aimed to give a boost to schools dealing with declining revenues.

The school board on Wednesday decided to go forward with a plan to survey school-district employees, get more details on the utility costs of adding school days to the schedule, and get a report from district administrators on what approach could potentially benefit students the most.

Twin Falls School District balanced its budget with less money by trimming 14 days from teachers’ contracts, along with an optional 192nd day from their schedules. The result left teachers with 177 days in their contracts instead of 191. That cut their salaries by an average of 7.8 percent.

Students currently face eight fewer days in class, four of which are half-days of school. The remaining lost days include a paid holiday and five days for professional development needs like workshops, training and school retreats for staff.

School officials agreed that whatever decision comes should be made with the interests of students at the forefront.

“I just want to make sure we have student focus,” said Ted Popplewell, director of elementary programs.

To be sure, the unexpected federal dollars will not fix all the district’s budget woes. Idaho schools are receiving $26 million of the $10 billion approved nationwide. However, $128.5 million was cut from Idaho’s public schools budget for this year.

Twin Falls School District’s budget, for example, has about $3.3 million less to work with for this school year.

An analysis presented by Bob Seaman, director of fiscal affairs, showed that the cost of restoring each full student-teacher contact day would be $160,140, not including utility costs.

The one-time federal funding isn’t without strings.

If school districts use it, they’re required to use the total amount of funding spent on salaries and the number of contract days given this year as a baseline starting point for negotiating what educators receive in the following school year.

Schools can only use it for salaries and benefits of both teachers and support staff like aides, counselors and maintenance workers.

The money can pay for rehiring former employees, hiring new employees or retaining existing employees. But it can’t go for administrative costs, including salaries of administrators.

There’s also a deadline. If districts use the money, they’ll have to spend it this school year or the next school year.

Buhl-Wendell roads turn into Idaho Highway 46

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

It’s been more than a decade since the Idaho Transportation Department agreed to take over nearly 15 miles of road between U.S. Highway 30 near Buhl and Interstate 84 near Wendell.

On Sept. 15, a unanimous vote by the ITD board finalized that agreement and immediately turned that stretch of highway into part of Idaho Highway 46. That route already runs north 43 miles from Wendell to U.S. Highway 20, east of Fairfield.

Buhl Highway District Director John Zamora said the transfer will likely free up some district funds, though the amount is not yet known. His district was formerly responsible for the road, commonly known as Clear Lakes Road, north from 4200 East to the boundary of Twin Falls and Gooding counties at the Snake River.

Roadway under the jurisdiction of the city of Buhl and the West Point and Wendell highway districts was also transferred.

“That road, because of the high traffic volume, was quite a big expense,” Zamora said. “We expect that the district will save some money as (ITD) takes it over.”

Zamora said it took a few years to negotiate the 70-foot right-of-way with private-property owners along the route. Completed in 2009, it was required by ITD when the agency agreed to take over ownership of the road in 1997.

Last year, the Wendell Highway District sponsored and completed a $1.1 million, federally funded improvement of a one-mile section of the Rex Leland Highway south of Wendell.

Winter maintenance and snowplowing by ITD will begin this year, with improved safety features and signage planned for 2011.

“Bringing the entire roadway up to a state standard will take years,” ITD District Engineer Devin Rigby said in a press release. “We will begin with small, critical safety projects and begin planning for major upgrades if funding becomes available in the years to come.”

State Rep. Stephen Hartgen, R-Twin Falls, who attended the September ITD meeting, applauded the move as a necessary step in increasing economic vitality for rural cities along and near the route.

Kimberly man arrested in trailer crash

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

A crash Wednesday involving four horses, a mule and a Kimberly man resulted in no injuries but one arrest.

At about 8:30 p.m., Wednesday, Clifford W. Gambrel, 52, was driving a white Ford pickup truck that crashed while pulling a trailer carrying the animals east-bound on U.S. Highway 30.

Gambrel was arrested for driving under the influence, obstructing a peace officer and an open-container violation after crashing at the intersection of the highway and 3900 North, near Filer.

Neither he nor the animals were injured.

When Twin Falls County Sheriff's Deputy Rick Beem arrived on the scene, he reported seeing Gambrel evacuating the livestock from the overturned trailer. The pickup was still upright.

Once the trailer was clear, Gambrel was instructed to provide his driver's license, registration and proof of insurance. Beem used his flashlight to help Gambrel find the documents in the cab of the truck, where Beem reported seeing multiple cans of beer and spilt beer in the floorboard.

Gambrel allegedly told the deputy that he had gotten lost on a construction detour and crashed the trailer. Beem wrote he noticed the smell of alcohol, heard Gambrel slur his speech and observed bloodshot eyes. Gambrel allegedly refused to answer questions about the beer.

According to the report,

Gambrel soon became aggravated when Beem asked him to stand by the rear of the truck so he could retrieve the driver's license. He continued to approach until the deputy placed him in restraints and took him to the Twin Falls County Jail. Another deputy arrived to secure the scene.

Gambrel became more combative, refusing a breathalyzer at the county jail and allegedly telling Beem, “If you ask me to take this test I'll tell you to stick it up your (butt).” Beem then transported Gambrel to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center for a blood draw.

The results of the test for blood alcohol content are pending.

Gambrel posted a $1,100 bond and was released. He must appear in Twin Falls County 5th District Court by Thursday.

Thunderstorms trigger outages in S. California

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Thunderstorms spit lightning and unleashed down-pours across warm and humid Southern California on Friday, causing widespread power outages and injuring one man.

About 31,000 Southern California Edison customers lost power when storms hit Orange County about 9 a.m., and more outages were expected into the evening as storms continued elsewhere, the utility reported.

Fullerton College canceled classes and closed its 22,000-student campus due to an outage, the school's website said.

In San Bernardino County, a 50-year-old man was injured by a lightning strike on a crane at a construction site next to a hospital in Fontana.

management and reality; it is about politics.”

Bob Clark, associate regional organizer of the Sierra Club wolf program, said his group — which fought delisting in court — isn't saying state fish and game departments aren't capable of managing wolves. And it respects the states' right to appeal.

“The courts are used by both sides,” Clark said. “But delisting wolves along political boundaries doesn't meet the requirements of the Endangered Species Act, which demands decisions based not upon emotion or politics but on the best-available science as recently upheld by Salazar,” he continued, referring to the Interior secretary's Wednesday move to issue rules to protect scientific integrity.

Meanwhile, the clock's still ticking on an ultimatum by Otter to stop monitoring, providing law enforcement support or investigating wolf deaths in Idaho.

Otter told Salazar that he'd negotiate a new agreement for the state to manage wolves until this Thursday. But if an agreement isn't struck by then, the Idaho Department of Fish and Game will cease to carry out its wolf management responsibilities.

“(City residents are) just starting to catch up with the times, really,” Black said. “They mistook skateboarding for vandals. In reality, (skateboarders) just wanted a place to do it.”

Black has also reached new personal highs over the last decade, including a 10th-place Master's World Bowl Ranking through World Cup Skateboarding. He aims to go higher if he makes it to a Houston competition at the end of this month.

But he doesn't call himself the best in the world, the state or even Twin Falls. Thanks to the skate park, talent in the city has bloomed for years, he said, to the point where the Harmon Skate Park needs to be expanded. He compared having just that park, about the size of a tennis court, to having just one basketball court for the entire community.

He plans to lobby for the expansion of that park. He's also looking forward to when the Jerome Skateboard Park gets going — he said it will be “world class.” Meanwhile, he'll keep practicing — though he describes it as “more of a

Search teams seek U.S. man shot in Mexican waters

By Paul J. Weber
Associated Press writer

SAN ANTONIO — Texas officials renewed warnings Friday about pirates marauding on a U.S.-Mexico border lake after a Colorado tourist was gunned down in Mexican waters while his wife dodged bullets and raced her Jet Ski back to American soil.

Search teams combed the U.S. side of Falcon Lake for David Michael Hartley, 30, whose wife told police he was shot in the back of the head Thursday after being ambushed by gunmen on boats.

The gunmen are suspected pirates who have turned Falcon Lake, a water-skiing and bass fishing hotspot down the border from Laredo, into uneasy waters for fishermen and boaters. There have been at least five reported run-ins with pirates on the lake this year, though prior holdups had never been deadly.

The Texas Department of Public Safety said Friday that Hartley was believed to be killed, but nearly 24 hours after the shooting, there was still no word whether the oil industry worker had been found. U.S. Border Patrol spokesman Narcizo Ramos said he didn't know whether Mexican authorities were searching their side.

The shooting led Texas DPS to again urge boaters to stay on the U.S. side of the 60-mile lake, five months after issuing its initial advisory following three pirate attacks.

But state Rep. Aaron Pena, a south Texas lawmaker briefed on the pirates earlier this year, said it has become dangerous enough to stay off the lake altogether.

"I wouldn't do it," Pena said. "When I go out there

I have all the protection Texas can provide. But the average fisherman doesn't have that."

Pena said he has no doubts the pirates are working with Mexico's drug gangsters. The cartels that control the area wouldn't let the pirates operate otherwise, he said.

While Hartley's fate remained unclear, Zapata County Sheriff Sigifredo Gonzalez said 29-year-old Tiffany Hartley fears her husband is dead. She circled back to rescue him but had to retreat when she heard bullets whizzing by.

Gonzalez said he had contacted the Mexican consulate to ask them to search for Hartley on its side of the lake.

Some campers along Falcon Lake had taken to arming themselves following the state's first warning in May. In one incident that month, state officials said five armed men boarded a boat on the U.S. side of the boundary.

The pirates either use powerful AK-47s or AR-15s to threaten their victims, Texas DPS said. The agency believes the pirates use local Mexican fishermen to operate the boats to get close to American fishermen.

SIRCOMM insurance carrier to cover Hagerman tower repairs

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

Good thing they were up to date with the premiums.

The Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center's Joint Powers Board met on Monday. One item of discussion was the financial fallout from losing equipment from the dispatch center's Hagerman tower — another victim of the Long Butte Fire.

The outcome: SIRCOMM's insurance carrier will pay to replace $87,000 in equipment, according to board Chairman Tom Mikesell. There's also the possibility that federal funds could cover some of the costs. Regardless, SIRCOMM will not have to reappropriate money from the fiscal year 2011 budget to cover the cost.

"New equipment is on order," said Mikesell, a Twin Falls County commissioner. Following the loss of the equipment, SIRCOMM set up a temporary mobile communications unit.

The tower itself was not damaged.

Also, SIRCOMM received an Idaho Emergency Communications Commission grant for more than $30,000 to pay for an additional dispatch station in its Jerome office, which will serve as a redundant backup if the city of Twin Falls' dispatch center goes down. It marks another step toward the agency and the city renewing ties since the city split from SIRCOMM in 2003.

The Joint Powers Board also heard an update on the narrowbanding effort, federally required adjustments to its radio frequencies. There were a few technical glitches that caused static in areas where two towers' signals cross, but those are being ironed out, Mikesell said. More narrowband-capable equipment may be purchased in fiscal 2011 as the agency has nearly $180,000 in carryover money from fiscal 2010.

The next Joint Powers Board meeting is scheduled for Oct. 18.

West Nile found in T.F. animals

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

The Magic Valley almost squeaked through the season without a skeeter-related incident, but West Nile scored a hit in the final days.

Two animals recently tested positive for West Nile virus in Twin Falls County, the only cases reported this year. The South Central Public Health District has reported no cases of human infection. Epidemiologist Mary Jensen said only two human cases have been reported statewide.

Kirk Tubbs, manager of the Twin Falls County Pest Abatement District, said his team has trapped mosquitoes around the county throughout the season and none of the samples tested positive for the virus. Tubbs said the district plans to suspend testing for the season because few mosquitoes remain and fewer are showing up in the traps.

"But as long as the weather holds, we'll keep trapping," Tubbs said.

Two animals recently tested positive for West Nile virus in Twin Falls County, the only cases reported this year.

While Twin Falls County has an active abatement program, Jerome, Gooding and Cassia counties have none and animals are often transported between counties. Last year, one animal in Twin Falls County and one in Jerome County tested positive.

Tubbs said this eleventh-hour appearance of the disease may have been brought on by migrating birds. If infected birds pass through the area on their way south, mosquitoes can bite the birds and then transfer the disease to the animals they bite. But Tubbs said West Nile's not likely to spread far this late in the season.

The public can report areas in need of treatment to the abatement district. More information can be found at www.tfcpad.org or by calling 733-2338.

NATO convoys attacked

Incident shows vulnerability of supply lines

By Chris Brummitt
Associated Press Writer

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Assailants launched two separate attacks on tankers carrying fuel for foreign troops in Afghanistan on Friday, showing the vulnerability of NATO supply lines a day after the Pakistani government itself shut one down.

The events stand to complicate a difficult war in Afghanistan, especially if the Torkham border crossing along the fabled Khyber Pass remains closed for long. They are a reminder of the leverage Pakistan has over the United States just as Washington seeks the help of its uncomfortable ally at a crucial point in the 9-year-long conflict.

They also highlight the importance of recently opened supply routes into landlocked Afghanistan through central Asian states to its north. Those routes are safer, but the Pakistani lines from the Arabian seaport of Karachi north to Kabul and Kandahar in Afghanistan are cheaper and account for most of NATO's non-lethal supplies.

Pakistan shut down the Torkham border crossing — the most important NATO supply into Afghanistan — on Thursday in apparent protest of a NATO helicopter attack that killed three Pakistani soldiers on the frontier. It was the third such incursion into Pakistan in less than a week.

The other NATO supply line through Pakistan remained open — the Chaman crossing in Baluchistan, where it seemed likely the tankers were heading.

A lengthy closure of Torkham would place intense strain on the U.S.-Pakistani relationship and hurt the Afghan war effort. But a long shutdown continued to be seen as unlikely.

Senior U.S. officials acknowledged high tension between the two capitals that crested with the border closure.

On the Pakistani side, the incursions into Pakistan by U.S. forces fighting in Afghanistan provoked an unusually strong government condemnation. On the U.S. side, publication of a video that may show Pakistani military officers summarily executing insurgents threatened to undermine public and congressional support for U.S. aid.

Keeping the crossing closed briefly could also allow hot tempers to cool, and provide Pakistan's fragile civilian government a visible symbol that it is willing to stand up to its U.S. backers.

Pakistani officials gave mixed signals Friday.

In Brussels, Pakistani Ambassador Jalil Abbas Jilani met with NATO leaders and lodged a formal protest over the border incursions. In Pakistan, government officials said they had to take a stand.

"If the NATO forces keep on entering into Pakistan and carrying out attacks, then (the) only option we have — we should stop the movement of the containers," Defense Minister Chaudhry Ahmed Mukhtar said.

Grand jury indicts accused kidnappers

PLACERVILLE, Calif. (AP) — A grand jury has indicted the couple accused of kidnapping and raping Jaycee Dugard, who was held captive for 18 years in Northern California, officials said Friday.

Phillip and Nancy Garrido were each indicted on 18 counts plus multiple special allegations in a process that will eliminate the need for a preliminary hearing where their alleged victim may have testified.

Phillip Garrido

El Dorado County District Attorney Vern Pierson said outside court the indictment was sought to protect the privacy of Dugard and spare her and her family from having to take the witness stand until the trial.

Using a grand jury also prevented much of the evidence from becoming public during the preliminary hearing that had been scheduled to begin next week but was canceled in light of the indictment.

"It's a better way to get a case to a final conclusion and move it along to trial" when it has attracted a lot of publicity, Pierson said.

62 mpg for new cars? It's the U.S. target for 2025

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cars and trucks averaging 62 miles per gallon? Seems extraordinary now, but the government suggested Friday that automakers could be required to build new lineups by 2025 that make today's high-mileage hybrids seem conventional and turn gas guzzlers into relics of the past.

It's all included in potential efficiency ranges the government is considering for new cars and trucks starting in 2017. By a decade and a half from now, in 2025, a carmaker's fleet of new vehicles may need to meet a standard somewhere from 47 mpg to 62 mpg, the Transportation Department and Environmental Protection Agency said.

Those mileage gains that would be the equivalent of an annual decrease in carbon dioxide emissions per mile of 3 to 6 percent.

The new standards, while several years away, are closely watched by the auto industry as it develops future vehicles and environmental groups trying to curb oil dependence and reduce greenhouse gas emissions. President Barack Obama has pushed for tougher fuel efficiency standards, and new rules could take on added significance if Congress is unable to pass energy legislation capping greenhouse gases blamed for global warming.

The government envisions gas-electric hybrids making up about half the lineup of new vehicles under the most aggressive standards, while electrics and plug-ins would comprise about 10 percent of the fleet.

After little progress during the past three decades, rules adopted earlier this year will lift the new vehicle fleet average to 35.5 mpg by 2016, an increase of more than 40 percent over current standards.

The administration's release on Friday of a technical analysis started the work on mileage standards for the 2017-2025 model years. The government intends to issue a proposal in September 2011 and a final rule by late July 2012.

The administration wants to "keep the momentum going to make sure that all motor vehicles sold in America are realizing the best fuel economy and greenhouse gas reductions possible," said Transportation Secretary Ray LaHood.

EPA Administrator Lisa P. Jackson said the next round of mileage standards "will accelerate the environmental benefits, health protections and clean technology advances over the long term."

Fuel efficiency standards are designed to improve gas mileage across each automaker's lineup and across the nation's entire fleet of new vehicles. Vehicles must meet differing standards based on their dimensions. Compact cars must get better mileage than sport utility vehicles, for example, but requirements for all types of vehicles will go up.

Friday's "notice of intent" provides an overview of the possible standards, describes the technologies that would be needed to achieve the goals and seeks feedback from the public.

SEATTLE (AP) — Those who have seen the photos say they are grisly: soldiers beside newly killed bodies, decaying corpses and severed fingers.

The dozens of photos, described in interviews and in e-mails and military documents obtained by The Associated Press, were seized by Army investigators and are a crucial part of the case against five soldiers accused of killing three Afghan civilians earlier this year.

Troops allegedly shared the photos by e-mail and thumb drive like electronic trading cards. Now 60 to 70 of them are being kept tightly shielded from the public and even defense attorneys because of fears they could wind up in the news media and provoke anti-American violence.

"We're in a powder-keg situation here," said Eugene R. Fidell, president of the National Institute for Military Justice and a military law professor at Yale University.

Since the images are not classified, "I think they have to be released if they're going to be evidence in open court in a criminal prosecution," he said.

Maj. Kathleen Turner, a spokeswoman for Joint Base Lewis-McChord the near Seattle, where the accused soldiers are stationed, acknowledged that the images were "highly sensitive, and that's why that protective order was put in place."

She declined to comment further.

At least some of the photos pertain to those killings. Others may have been of insurgents killed in battle, and some may have been taken as part of a military effort to document those killed, according to lawyers involved in the case.

Among the most gruesome allegations is that some of the soldiers kept fingers from the bodies of Afghans they killed as war trophies. The troops also are accused of passing around photos of the dead and of the fingers.

Four members of the unit — two of whom are also charged in the killings — have been accused of wrongfully possessing images of human casualties, and another is charged with trying to impede an investigation by having someone erase incriminating evidence from a computer hard drive.

"Everyone would share the photographs," one of the defendants, Cpl. Jeremy Morlock, told investigators. "They were of every guy we ever killed in Afghanistan."

After the first slaying, one service member sent urgent e-mails to his father warning that more bloodshed was on the way. The father told the AP he pleaded for help from the military, but authorities took no action. A spokesman said Friday that the Army was investigating.

NATO claims insurgent captures; 2 coalition soldiers are killed

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — NATO said Friday it captured several insurgent leaders in recent days and detained at least 438 suspected militants over the last month, as three coalition soldiers were killed in southern Afghanistan.

Afghan and coalition forces also killed at least 15 insurgents in a firefight in eastern Kunar province who were trying to set up an attack position, the coalition said. It said initial reports indicated there were no injuries to civilians.

NATO said Afghan and international forces captured a senior Taliban leader based in the Panjwai district of Kandahar province Thursday. A military operation called "Dragon Strike" is under way in Kandahar, the heartland of the Taliban insurgency, to clear the area of militants.

The captured Taliban leader helped militants obtain weapons and bomb components and provided training and bed-down locations for the Taliban leadership, NATO said.

BITTERSWEET GOODBYE

Rahm Emanuel gone, Rouse in as chief of staff

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama on Friday said a bittersweet goodbye to the energetic and fierce manager of his White House, chief of staff Rahm Emanuel, and elevated a quiet and seasoned adviser, Pete Rouse, to the most important gate-keeping job in American politics.

“We could not have accomplished what we’ve accomplished without Rahm’s leadership,” Obama said. Emanuel is departing after nearly two grueling years to run for Chicago mayor.

The announcement was such a poorly kept secret that Obama joked it was “the least suspenseful announcement of all time,” but it represented an important moment of transition for the presidency.

What Emanuel leaves behind is more than a staff job. It is the most demanding and influential position in the White House — save for Obama’s. The person who holds it is entrusted to help shape the president’s thinking, prioritize his time, manage scores of egos and issues and keep the White House focused on its goals.

The mood at the White House reflected that this was no ordinary staff change. Cabinet members and senior staff members packed the ornate East Room, a setting often reserved for visits of heads of state, for the official word that Emanuel, the hard-charging leader of the staff, was on his way out.

Rouse, named interim chief of staff, is a calm, trusted senior adviser to Obama who has spent much of his career as a chief of staff in the Senate.

“There is a saying around the White House: ‘Let’s let Pete fix it,’” Obama said. “And he does.”

In a nod to the political sensitivities of Emanuel’s move, he never directly mentioned that he was running for mayor, and Obama didn’t touch that, either. Emanuel, sure to be cast as an outsider by his competitors in the upcoming mayoral campaign, did not want to announce his run from Washington.

But Emanuel did call Chicago “the greatest city in the greatest country in the world.” And he told Obama, “I’m energized by the prospect of new challenges, and eager to see what I can do to make our hometown even greater.” The president and Emanuel, confidants and friends, hugged three times during the event.

“Mr. President, I thought I was tough,” Emanuel told Obama. “I want to thank you for being the toughest leader any country could ask for in the toughest times any president has ever faced.”

In an unusual display of emotion, Emanuel appeared to choke up as he spoke of his family’s immigrant background, and the opportunities he himself has been afforded.

Rouse, befitting his style, stood quietly by the president and never spoke. Obama described him as never seeing a television camera or a microphone that he liked — unlike the boisterous Emanuel. The differences were even apparent on stage — Rahm with his trademark hands on hips, Rouse still and stoic.

N.J. student’s suicide resonates on Rutgers campus and beyond

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) — “Things will get easier; people’s minds will change,” Ellen DeGeneres pleads in an Internet video, staring into the camera, her voice breaking. “And you should be alive to see it.”

Just as the murder of Matthew Shepard galvanized the gay community around hate-crime legislation more than a decade ago, the suicide of a Rutgers University student whose sex life was splashed on the Internet has activists rallying around their latest cause: telling tormented gay teens they just need to hang on for a while, that they’ll live through it.

Bullying and harassment of young gays and lesbians, and the suicides they have caused, have long been a major topic in gay publications and among activists. But celebrities and others have seized on Clementi’s shocking suicide to call attention to the issue.

Prosecutors say Clementi’s roommate and another student used a webcam to broadcast on the Internet live images of the 18-year-old Rutgers University freshman having an intimate encounter with another man. Clementi jumped off the George Washington Bridge three days later. His body was identified Thursday.

“To this poor kid, it’s better to be dead than to have people know he’s gay,” said Jean-Marie Navetta, a spokeswoman for Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays. “Therein lies the real tragedy here.”

Clementi’s death was part of a string of suicides last month involving youngsters who were believed to have been victims of anti-gay bullying. Fifteen-year-old Billy Lucas hanged himself in a barn in Greensburg, Ind. Asher Brown, 13, shot himself in the head in Houston. And 13-year-old Seth Walsh of Tehachapi, Calif., hanged himself from a tree in his backyard.

The outpouring of emotion over Clementi’s death recalls the reaction to the killing of Shepard, a gay, 21-year-old student at the University of Wyoming. He was found beaten and tied to a lonely fence post in 1998.

Two men were convicted in the slaying. Several states passed hate-crime laws in the aftermath of the crime.

Police: Texas 4-year-old runs over, kills newborn

BURLESON, Texas (AP) — Police say a 4-year-old boy in Texas managed to start a van then run over a woman and her 3-week-old child, killing the newborn.

Police Cmdr. Chris Havens says the mother was hospitalized after the accident Thursday night in Burleson, 10 miles south of Fort Worth.

Havens did not identify those involved in the accident nor provide details of the mother’s condition.

He says the 4-year-old climbed behind the wheel of the vehicle, started the van and put it in gear. He had a 5-year-old passenger.

Police say the woman saw what was happening and ran outside with her baby in her arms to try to stop the van. Police did not explain the relationship between the woman and the children in the vehicle.

Attorney: Suspects inflicted terror

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — Two Connecticut men charged with killing a woman and her two daughters in a 2007 house invasion inflicted unimaginable terror on a model family that had enjoyed its final pleasant summer day together, prosecutors told a jury during closing arguments Friday.

Prosecutor Gary Nicholson said it was impossible to recreate the fear the two girls, 11-year-old Michaela and 17-year-old Hayley Petit, felt when the men tied them to their beds and poured gasoline on or around them before setting their Cheshire house on fire.

“Hayley and Michaela Petit knew that the end was near,” Nicholson said. “They knew they were about to die.”

The jury in New Haven will begin deliberating Monday in the trial of Steven Hayes, who along with Joshua Komisarjevsky is accused of killing the girls and their mother, Jennifer Hawke-Petit. The girls’ father, Dr. William Petit, was beaten with a baseball bat and tied up in the basement, but managed to escape and make it to a neighbor’s house to get help.

If Hayes is convicted, the same jury will consider whether he should receive the death penalty in a separate penalty phase. Komisarjevsky will be tried next year.

“When news headlines are saying ‘Whitman hired an illegal alien,’ you have a problem.”
— Jack Pitney, political scientist at Claremont-McKenna College, about gubernatorial candidate Meg Whitman

Here’s an idea: Give the money back

CHEERS: To the Twin Falls City Council, for declining to spend the last $100,000 of the now-defunct downtown Business Improvement District’s money without consulting business owners.

The BID ceased to exist on Thursday. A committee made up of two council members and more than half a dozen city staff members met last month to decide how to spend almost $100,000 of surplus money from the BID, left over after the council returned the 2010 BID fees.

The resulting plan — to spend $13,000 on two years of Christmas sprays, $50,000 on downtown parking improvements and $31,000 to match money spend by downtown business owners to repair sidewalks or install new landscaping — was rejected by the council earlier this week.

The $50,000 was largely the issue: The business owners present and the council disagreed on if it was set aside for parking. The plan failed on a 4-3 vote.

The end compromise was to create another committee or to host a town hall meeting to address the money.

Business owners were angry about using up the defunct BID’s remaining budget on downtown projects. No phone calls were made to consult former BID members, they said, and the council was being cavalier with decisions and rhetoric.

The BID is no more, dissolved by the City Council in April following a failed petition drive by BID critics.

Council members David E. Johnson, Trip Craig and Will Kezele and Mayor Don Hall opposed the plan, saying they felt uncomfortable spending the money without input from any downtown business owners.

They’re right.. JEERS: Hyperbole abounds in election years, but the Idaho Hospital Association has gone too far this time.

The IHA is running TV ads encouraging voters to approve an Idaho constitutional amendment that would permit public hospitals, which are primarily located in small towns and rural areas, to invest in new medical equipment, facilities and technology to better meet the health care needs of patients in their communities. As it stands, such expenditures much be approved to two-thirds of voters.

The IHA says passage of the amendment would help insulate Idaho from the strictures of the health care reform passed by Congress and signed by President Obama earlier this year.

Actually, it wouldn’t. The proposed Idaho amendment, which we support, would give public hospitals the resources they need to attract the best medical personnel, spur the economy by creating jobs and increase operational efficiency through long-term contracts. But whether the amendment passes or not, Obamacare — in all of its manifestations — is still coming to Idaho unless Congress rescinds it.

We understand that health insurance reform is unpopular in Idaho and that the IHA might see it as an attractive mechanism to get the constitutional amendment approved. But the organization is not being straight with the voters.

CHEERS: To state Rep. Scott Bedke of Oakley, the third-ranking Republican in the House of Representatives, for keeping an open mind about a proposal that would include Idaho in the Streamlined Sales Tax Project, a compact of 22 states seeking a coordinated process for collecting sales tax on Internet purchases made by their residents.

State Rep. Leon Smith. R-Twin Falls, says unless Idaho signs on to the initiative the state’s businesses will be at an unfair disadvantage. Estimates from the Idaho State Tax Commission show a potential $12 million to $30 million gain in revenue.

But Bedke, the assistant majority leader and member of the House Revenue and Taxation Committee who has been skeptical of Smith’s idea in the past, didn’t entirely rule out the change at the Idaho Chamber Alliance Regional Legislative Policy Summit in Twin Falls last week.

“This might be the year, Leon,” Bedke said.

That’s a small sign that the House’s most influential Republicans understand the need for finding more tax revenue to forestall further cuts in public schools, higher education, corrections and Health and Welfare. Earlier this year, Rev and Tax’s influential chairman, Rep. Dennis Lake, R-Blackfoot, said that revenue enhancement is on his radar.

If so, that’s a welcome change.

The real Tea Party movement lacks a leader

There are actually two Tea Party movements in America today: one you’ve read about that is not that important and one you’ve not read about that could become really important if the right politician understood how to tap into it. The Tea Party that has gotten all the attention, the amorphous, self-generated protest against the growth in government and the deficit, is what I’d actually call the “Tea Kettle movement” — because all it’s doing is letting off steam.

Thomas Friedman

That is not to say that the energy behind it is not authentic or that it won’t be electorally impactful. But affecting elections and affecting America’s future are two different things. Based on all I’ve heard from this movement, it feels to me like it’s all steam and no engine. It has no plan to restore America to greatness.

The Tea Kettle movement can’t have a positive impact on the country because it has both misdiagnosed America’s main problem and hasn’t even offered a credible solution for the problem it has identified. How can you take a movement seriously that says it wants to cut government spending by billions of dollars but won’t identify the specific defense programs, Social Security, Medicare or other services it’s ready to cut — let alone explain how this will make us more competitive and grow the economy?

And how can you take seriously a movement that sat largely silent while the Bush administration launched two wars and a new entitlement, Medicare prescription drugs — while cutting taxes — but is now, suddenly, mad as hell about the deficit and won’t take it anymore from President Obama? Where were you folks for eight years?

The issues that upset the Tea Kettle movement — debt and bloated government — are actually symptoms of our real problem, not causes. They are symptoms of a country in a state of incremental decline and losing its competitive edge, because our politics has become just another form of sports entertainment, our Congress a forum for legalized bribery and our main lawmaking institutions divided by toxic partisan-

The important Tea Party movement, which stretches from centrist Republicans to independents right through to centrist Democrats, understands this at a gut level and is looking for a leader with three characteristics. First, a patriot: a leader who is more interested in fighting for his country than his party. Second, a leader who persuades Americans that he or she actually has a plan not just to cut taxes or pump stimulus, but to do something much larger — to make America successful, thriving and respected again. And third, someone with the ability to lead in the face of uncertainty and not simply whine about how tough things are — a leader who believes his job is not to read the polls but to change the polls.

What is America’s core competency and strategic advantage, and how do we nurture it? Answer: It is our ability to attract, develop and unleash creative talent. That means men and women who invent, build and sell more goods and services that make people’s lives more productive, healthy, comfortable, secure and entertained than any other country.

Leadership today is about how the U.S. government attracts and educates more of that talent and then enacts the laws, regulations and budgets that empower that talent to take its products and services to scale, sell them around the world — and create good jobs here in the process. Without that, we can’t afford the health care or defense we need.

This is the plan the real Tea Party wants from its president. To implement it would require us to actually raise some taxes — on, say, gasoline — and cut others — like payroll taxes and corporate taxes. It would require us to overhaul our immigration laws so we can better control our borders, let in more knowledge workers and retain those skilled foreigners going to college here. And it would require us to reduce some services — like Social Security — while expanding others, like education and research for a 21st-century economy.

In other words, it will require a very smart, subtle and focused plan to use our now diminishing resources in the most efficient way possible to get back to our core competency.

Any Tea Party that says the simple answer is just shrinking government and slashing taxes might be able to tip the midterm elections in its direction. But it can’t tip America in the right direction. There is a Tea Party for that, but it’s still waiting for a leader.

Unsolicited advice from outside agitators

Louis Brandeis and William Brennan — who probably thought as deeply about law and society as any two 20th-century Americans — both regarded the states as our “laboratories of democracy.” If they were to revisit that famous concept today, they’d almost surely have to conclude that many states’ distinctive experiments in social progress are being frustrated by the contamination of outside pathogens.

Take, for example, the case of Iowa, where a little more than a year ago, a unanimous state Supreme Court recognized the right to marriage equality. This November, three of the court’s seven justices will appear on the ballot, and Iowans will have a chance to vote on whether they should retain their seats. The state’s judges are appointed by the governor, but voters get a chance to approve the selection within 12 months and every eight years subsequently.

Tim Rutten

So much for Iowans’ right to manage their own state’s constitutional affairs.

In the half-century since Iowa adopted the so-called merit selection system, no justice of the Supreme Court has been voted off the bench.

Now that may change because national organizations affiliated with the religious right are funding and directing a campaign to unseat the three justices, two of whom were appointed by then-Republican Gov. Terry Branstad, as was the opinion’s author, Justice Mark Cady. That hasn’t kept a variety of GOP presidential hopefuls from weighing in against the justices. Nor has it dissuaded the National Organization for Marriage and the Tupelo, Miss.-based American Family Association — traditional Republican allies — from pouring in money to defeat them.

In part, they fear the success of Iowa’s democratic experiment with marriage equality because the state court’s ruling so directly addressed the proper role of religious conviction in this question. As Cady wrote for a unanimous court, there is a “religious undercurrent propelling the same-sex marriage debate,” but Iowa’s “constitution does not permit any branch of government to resolve these types of religious debates and entrusts to courts the task of ensuring that government avoids them. This approach does not disrespect or denigrate the religious views of many Iowans who may strongly believe in marriage as a dual-gender union, but considers, as we must, only the constitutional rights of all people, as expressed by the promise of equal protection for all.”

Brian S. Brown, president of the National Organization for Marriage, frankly told The New York Times recently that his organization wants to force the Iowa justices off the bench as a lesson to judges in other states. The campaign “sends a powerful message,” he said. So much for Iowans’ right to manage their own state’s constitutional affairs.

California is all too familiar with this sort of corrosive intrusion. The campaigns for and against Proposition 8, which overturned the recognition of marriage equality by this state’s Supreme Court — and was, in turn, rolled back by a federal court ruling — were the most expensive ever waged anywhere in this country over a social question. Most of the money supporting the measure, particularly in the campaign’s crucial early stages, came from outside California. Utah was the biggest source of donations with $2,774,809; of that, $1 million came from a single individual, software magnate Alan Ashton, a devout Mormon with familial ties to the church hierarchy. Connecticut was next with $1,422,854, $1 million of that from the Knights of Columbus, a Roman Catholic fraternal organization.

Now, outside energy interests are providing crucial backing for Proposition 23, which wants to gut California’s attempt to take action against the emissions fueling global warming. Two Texas oil refiners — Valero Energy Corp. and Tesoro Corp., both based in San Antonio — already have contributed $4 million and $1.5 million, respectively, to the measure’s campaign. An oil-refining subsidiary that belongs to Charles and David Koch, neither of whom lives in California, has thrown in an additional $1 million, and they are supporting Republican senatorial candidate Carly Fiorina, who backs Proposition 23. As the Wall Street Journal recently reported, Charles Drevna, president of the National Petrochemical & Refiners Assn., sent his members an e-mail soliciting still more contributions: “I am pleading with each of you — for our nation’s best interest and for your company’s own self-interest.”

The interests of Californians, or of residents of other states that might want to emulate a successful democratic experiment here, are of little interest in these calculations. If those heedless and venal interests are allowed to prevail, American democracy’s laboratories soon will be empty shells.

Extending tax rates will boost economy, jobs

It has been said a lie can make it half way around the world before the truth can even put its boots on. No one is suggesting that those who advocate for inaction on looming tax increases are lying, but they certainly are misinformed. And the truth is catching up with them.

Even President Obama’s former director of the Office of Management and Budget, Peter Orszag, favors extending current tax rates, at least temporarily. The president’s former chair of The Council of Economic Advisors, Christina Romer, has written persuasively about how “tax increases are highly contractionary” — meaning they weigh down economic growth.

It’s dawning on the public and many members of Congress that raising taxes on anyone is a bad idea in a tough economy. A recent CNBC poll found that 55 percent of the public believe “increasing taxes on any Americans will slow the economy and kill jobs.” A panel of leading economists surveyed by CNNMoney.com also favors extending the cuts for all Americans, as do a growing number of Democrats in the House and Senate.

The truth is, extending current tax rates for all taxpayers is exactly the right medicine for what ails our tepid recovery — it would boost consumer spending, bolster small businesses, relieve the tremendous sense of uncertainty paralyzing businesses of all sizes, and help create jobs.

Nearly all economists would agree on one thing — we will not have a robust recovery until consumers start prying open their pocketbooks.

Consumer spending, after all, represents 70 percent of our economy. Doesn’t it make sense to leave more money in the hands of consumers by extending the tax cuts?

Some argue that high earners — families making more than $250,000 — don’t need their current tax rates extended. In fact, households making more than $250,000 account for almost one-quarter of all consumer spending in a normal economy, according to Mark Zandi, chief economist for Moody’s Analytics. He says increasing their taxes would cost 770,000 jobs by mid-2012. Does that sound like a good idea?

Thomas J. Donohue

Extending current tax rates for high income earners would also dramatically benefit small businesses, which create 60 percent 80 percent of new jobs. Why? Because many of them file taxes on their personal returns.

Extending current tax rates for high income earners would also dramatically benefit small businesses, which create 60 percent 80 percent of new jobs. Why? Because many of them file taxes on their personal returns.

Opponents of extending all current rates cite statistics from the Joint Committee on Taxation, which indicates an increase in the top two marginal rates will impact only 3 percent of taxpayers with business income.

While accurate, that number is misleading. The 3 percent figure includes in the universe of small businesses anyone who’s made some pocket change selling things on eBay.

The fact is nearly half of the net income of sole proprietorships, partnerships, and S corporations — the ones creating new jobs — will be subject to higher rates. So those who think they are soaking the rich are really socking it to small businesses.

Extending current tax rates could also help boost investment. At stake are rates on capital gains, which could rise 33 percent, and dividends, which could rise by as much as 164 percent, if current rates aren’t retained. Such increases would discourage badly needed investment and hurt all taxpayers who receive dividends from investments in 401(k)s and other retirement accounts.

In one bold move, extending current tax rates for all tax payers would substantially boost investor, business, and consumer confidence and infuse our economy with fresh momentum. It would allow workers to keep more of the pay they earn. It would encourage investment and growth. And it would reward the success of businesses and workers who pour their heart, and dreams into what they do.

Misinformation on extending the current 2001 and 2003 tax rates got a head start out of the gate, but the truth is catching up. It’s time for Congress to do the right thing for our economy, workers, and businesses and extend current tax rates and extend them now.

Dumb moves in politics, broadcasting

Butch Otter’s supporters have been on the news claiming that his Democratic opponent had nothing to do with stopping the big blunder Otter tried to push through the state Legislature last year. They aren’t defending Otter’s dumb move; they’re just saying that they don’t want the other guy getting the credit for stopping Otter’s dumb move. Talk about dumb and dumber!

I understand that with Sarah Bailin’ Outta Here leading the Tea Party movement, they’ve now adopted a new slogan, “Run, Forrest, Run.”

Voting is kind of like driving: “R” for going backward and “D” for going forward.

Last year, the Federal Communications Commission changed all television broadcasting from analog to digital. Theoretically, this was an upgrade.

Now we get to enjoy those odd little squares jumping all over the screen like a bad DVD or the picture just stops dead while the sound continues or the sound isn’t in sync with anybody’s lips, like a Japanese movie from the ’60s, or the volume is significantly different when you change channels or the screen goes black and informs you that the signal is lost. Hmmm, a lost signal, hello AT&T.

With the analog system, you never lost the picture unless there was a power outage or bad weather knocked your antenna off the roof.

We were told that digital communication was necessary for emergency reporting and response purposes. I hope those folks aren’t losing their signal, too. That could be bad.

The switch to digital was going to improve broadcast TV. We were promised a sharper, more defined picture. They just didn’t promise us that there would always be a picture.

Progress, two steps forward and three steps back. Are you Republicans behind this?

C’mon, ‘fess up!

There is a way to boost Jerome revenue

If the city of Jerome could use more revenue, I have the perfect solution. It could enforce the city ordinances on dogs’ excessive barking. If the city doesn’t know where to find those offenders, I can provide specific locations in my neighborhood.

I lived in a town that now gives one warning. On the second complaint, the offender is charged $300. There is one policeman for the whole town, and he takes care of everything. Maybe the city of Jerome could consider a similar ordinance or at least enforce the ones we have. This would solve two problems. (1) It would take care of my sleep deprivation due to barking dogs. (2) Increase city revenue.

Maybe I could approach Jerome City Council and give it my proposal.

Sugar beet case becomes even more complicated

By Cindy Snyder
Times-News correspondent

The already complicated legal wrangling over whether sugar beet growers can plant genetically modified seed next spring was compounded this week when a federal judge indicated the U.S. Department of Agriculture had illegally approved the planting of biotech seedlings.

Plaintiffs in the case asked for a temporary restraining order against the USDA's Animal Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS) after the agency granted special permits to seed companies within two weeks of an order that essentially re-regulated the technology. After reviewing the request, Judge Jeffrey S. White said Tuesday that APHIS had likely violated environmental regulations when it issued permits in early September to plant stockings without public comment. Stockings planted this fall will produce seed next year and be planted by growers in the spring of 2012.

Duane Grant, chairman of the Snake River Sugar Cooperative, describes the case as a fairly technical dispute and a precursor of bigger things to come.

Seed companies were in the midst of planting stockings for 2012 when Judge White ruled in mid-August that APHIS had been wrong to deregulate Roundup Ready sugar beets in 2005 without completing a full environmental impact statement. That ruling stopped the planting of any genetically modified beet stockings as of Aug. 13.

The decision also recognized that APHIS has the regulatory authority to determine if any interim measures would be approved.

But when APHIS announced on Sept. 1 that it would issue permits to seed companies for non-flowering growth of sugar beet seedlings, plaintiffs — including the Center for Food Safety — asked for a temporary restraining order to stop the planting.

One of the key points in the case is that the permits were granted without a public comment period, a violation of environmental law.

While Judge White's comments seem to indicate that he is willing to grant the temporary restraining order, he has not done so yet. Instead, the judge has asked the plaintiffs to submit a brief by Oct. 4 outlining exactly what remedies they wish to see imposed. A hearing on the requested remedies is set for Oct. 22.

In the meantime, the federal government has requested a change in venue. Judge White is expected to rule on that request at the same time.

What all this means for the sugar beet industry is unknown at this time, but the latest round in the ongoing legal fight comes just as growers are harvesting.

Grant was unwilling to comment on the judge's latest ruling but did say, "As events unfold, it will become more clear as to what impact this ruling will have on the ability of U.S. sugar beet farmers to utilize exactly the same weed control methods that have been broadly used by corn, soybean, cotton and canola farmers for the past fifteen years."

Idaho recovers nearly $1 million in Medicaid fraud settlement

Times-News

BOISE — Idaho will receive $ $985,105 as part of a $72.5 million settlement with Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corporation and Novartis Vaccines & Diagnostics Inc., Attorney General Lawrence Wasden said. Wasden's Medicaid Fraud Control Unit joined with 49 states, the District of Columbia and the federal government in the settlement.

The agreement with Novartis resolves allegations that the company promoted the use of tobramycin, a cystic fibrosis drug, which is marketed under the trade name TOBI, for uses not approved by the Food & Drug Administration. The settlement also resolves claims brought by three former employees of Chiron Corporation, the company that manufactured and marketed TOBI before it was acquired by Novartis in 2006.

The participating states and the federal government alleged that from January 2001 through July 2006, TOBI was marketed for off-label indications that were not medically accepted indications for which the state Medicaid programs provided coverage. The off-label marketing included promoting the drug for diseases other than cystic fibrosis and for use in cystic fibrosis patients under the age of six.

As a result of this settlement, Novartis will pay damages equal to double the amount the state expended for prescriptions written as a result the company's off-label marketing. Half of Idaho's share of the settlement will go to the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, Division of Medicaid, to reimburse the department for improper claims. The other half will go to the state's general fund and will be available for appropriation by the Idaho Legislature.

A team representing the National Association of Medicaid Fraud Control Units conducted settlement negotiations with Novartis on behalf of the states.

U.S. auto sales see small increase with new models

By Dee-Ann Durbin and TomKrisher
Associated Press writer

DETROIT — New models and Labor Day promotions didn't do much to fire Americans' appetites for new cars in September.

Sales at Chrysler Group LLC and Ford Motor Co. rose slightly from August. They fell at General Motors Co. and Honda Motor Co. and were flat at Toyota Motor Corp. Car companies say a recovery is still happening, but it's not as strong as they had hoped following a terrible 2009.

"We're not going to bust loose as you sometimes see after a downturn, but we'll see steady growth," said Don Johnson, GM's vice president of U.S. sales.

There were a few winners. Redesigned crossovers, which are SUVs on car frames, saw big jumps across the industry. Sales of the 2011 Ford Edge, Jeep Grand Cherokee and Toyota RAV4 doubled, while General Motors' GMC Terrain surged more than 200 percent. With gas prices relatively low and credit loosening, buyers have been gravitating toward bigger vehicles.

Some new small cars also saw strong sales, including Ford's Fiesta subcompact, which gets up to 40 miles per

Economy gets lift from government aid

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — A flurry of new data Friday showed the economy is improving — with temporary help from the government.

Consumer spending rose in August and incomes increased by the largest amount in eight months, the Commerce Department said. Still, the income gain was propelled mostly by the government's short-term extension of unemployment aid, not wage gains.

A big jump in government building projects lifted construction spending in August, Commerce said in a separate report. That offset the weakest level in private construction spending in 12 years.

Separately, a private trade group said manufacturing activity expanded in September for the 14th straight month, although it was the slowest pace in 10 months.

And auto sales were a little better in September, thanks to the introduction of new car models and Labor Day promotions. Sales at Chrysler Group LLC and Ford Motor Co. rose slightly from August. They fell at General Motors Co. and were flat at Toyota Motor Corp. Car companies say a recovery is progressing, but it's not as strong as they had hoped following a terrible 2009.

The reports point to an economy that is growing, but at a sluggish rate and not fast enough to drive down the 9.6 percent unemployment rate.

Consumer spending rose 0.4 percent in August, matching the July growth rate. Spending by Americans accounts for 70 percent of total economic activity. Until it returns to a stronger pace, the rebound from the recession will be held back. And spending isn't likely to see a big gain until income growth accelerates.

"Consumers are spending moderately, saving moderately and making money moderately, which all point to moderate economic growth," said Joel Naroff, chief economist at Naroff Economic Advisors.

The overall economy grew at an annual rate of 1.7 percent in the April-June quarter. Many economists expect growth to be around 2 percent for the rest of the year, mainly because of the weak growth in consumer spending.

"Consumption growth is unlikely to gain any real momentum when incomes are rising only modestly and households are still saving," said Paul Dales, senior economist at Capital Economics.

A few myths about domestic violence

It's October, which means it is also domestic violence awareness month. Last year I gave you a month's worth of information about what domestic violence was. I figured this year I'd stick to one column about what domestic violence isn't, since there seems to be some myths out there. Some of these myths even continue to get passed on unknowingly by law-enforcement officials. First of all, domestic violence is not a private matter that goes on behind closed doors and is nobody else's business. The truth is that

POLICEMAN
DAN

domestic violence affects all of us when we don't get involved. It's known that a majority of criminals out there grew up in violent homes. We also know that these criminals lead to future generations of criminals who continue to commit the violence they witnessed from their homes. Victims of these abusers can also become drug users or alcoholics because these help dull the pain. Of course, the children also suffer because they are often ignored or abused themselves. One other myth that I want to dispel is that alcohol and drugs are the cause of domestic violence. While violence can be an effect of alcohol or drugs, the fact is these are not the actual cause. Domestic violence is about control and not actual physical violence. When we excuse behavior as drug- or alcohol-induced we minimize the underlying problem and further the victimization process.

Domestic violence is not about anger problems. Domestic violence, as I said earlier, is about control and anger is another tool used to control. The problem with this myth is that sometimes people who commit domestic violence are given anger-management counseling as a mandate of their sentencing. The truth is that anybody with an anger-management problem gets angry at whomever they are around, while a person who uses domestic violence waits until they see their significant other to take out their anger.

The last myth is that domestic violence is a man-versus-woman issue. Domestic violence can affect every type of relationship you could imagine (yes, even the ones you might not approve of). The main goal again is to control the actions of the other person in the relationship. If you would like me to talk to your group about domestic violence, feel free to e-mail me and I'll see what I can do to get the information out. I'm not trying to change the world on how much domestic violence affects it; I'm just trying to change my corner of it.

Diabetes not always caused by excess weight

DEAR DR. GOTT: Can you please discuss lifestyle risks for diabetes other than weight? I have three friends who are thin and have all developed type 2 diabetes. Although they are not overweight, they have terrible eating habits. I went to the supermarket with one of them and watched as she loaded her cart with pancake mix, syrup, diet soda and several boxes of processed frozen dinners that were advertised as healthy but contained huge amounts of sodium. Her concession to the fact that she has diabetes was buying light syrup and some bananas. She did not have a single vegetable other than what was included in her frozen meals. She also leads a sedentary life. She is constantly complaining about her "bad genes." When I suggested that her diabetes might be due to her eating and exercise habits, she explained that she is not obese and therefore did not cause herself to become diabetic. I don't know what her doctor has told her regarding lifestyle, but in general it does seem to me that type 2 diabetes is looked upon as your fault if you are heavy but beyond your control and the result of "bad genes" if you are thin. I think this is a dangerous mentality and also quite untrue.

ASK

DEAR READER: Absolutely. Type 2 is the most common form of diabetes. It is commonly associated with being overweight, but this does not mean that simply being overweight will cause you to develop diabetes. Rather, excess weight is simply a risk factor. Other risk factors include a family history, leading a sedentary life, age, ethnicity and more. Diabetes may be associated with other health conditions, such as high blood pressure and abnormal cholesterol levels. Type 2 diabetes is caused when cells become resistant to insulin and the pancreas is unable to make enough insulin to overcome the resistance. When this occurs, the cells no longer take in sugar, causing it to build up in the bloodstream. The exact reason why this happens is unknown. Symptoms can include increased thirst, extreme hunger, slow-healing sores, frequent urination, unexplained weight loss, fatigue, frequent infections and blurred vision. Complications can arise from untreated or poorly managed diabetes. Short-term complications need to be addressed immediately because, if left untreated, they can lead to seizures and/or coma. Short-term issues include hyperglycemia (high blood sugar), hypoglycemia (low blood sugar) and increased ketones (potentially toxic acids) in the urine. Long-term complications develop gradually. If the diabetes is left untreated or poorly treated, these can become permanent or life-threatening. Long-term issues include cardiovascular disease, bone and joint problems, skin and mouth conditions, and nerve, eye or kidney damage. Type 2 diabetes is often preventable if proper steps are taken to manage risk factors. It is important to maintain a healthful diet and exercise routine. Remember to include plenty of fruits, vegetables and whole grains while reducing your intake of animal products and sweets. Simply substituting sugar-free products for normally sugar-laden treats is not helpful. Any excessive intake of simple or complex sugars (carbohydrates) can result in high blood-sugar levels. A registered dietitian is an excellent resource in developing a meal plan.

Exercise can lower blood sugar and decrease insulin resistance. For those with diabetes, aerobic exercise is the most beneficial and should be included most days of the week for at least 30 minutes per day. In those who develop the condition regardless of lifestyle changes, treatment is available. These include medication to stimulate the pancreas to produce more insulin, inhibit the production and release of glucose causing cells to need less insulin to transport sugar, block the action of enzymes that break down carbohydrates, or make tissues more sensitive to insulin and insulin injections. As you can see, simply being overweight isn't enough to cause diabetes. While your friends may be thin, they likely have risk factors for developing diabetes and have, thus far, failed to make the necessary changes. They are accountable for their health, and blaming "bad genes" is just an excuse. They must change their lifestyles and not rely only on medication to solve this problem. People who are overweight can benefit greatly from losing weight, and in some cases, that may be all that is necessary to improve or even reverse type 2 diabetes (or high cholesterol or high blood pressure). Those with normal weights still need to be accountable and make changes. To provide related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Living with Diabetes." Other readers who would like a copy should send a self-addressed stamped No. 10 envelope and a $2 check or money order to Newsletter, P.O. Box 167, Wickliffe, OH 44092. Mom accused of faking son's cancer arraigned

By Corey Williams
Associated Press writer

ROSEVILLE, Mich. — An unemployed Detroit-area mother accused of drugging and shaving her healthy 12-year-old son so he appeared to have cancer, then accepting thousands of dollars in donations for his treatment, was arraigned Friday on charges of fraud and child abuse.

A Roseville district court judge ordered Carol Lynn Schnuphase, 47, of Warren, held on $100,000 bond.

“A mother, no less, goes so far as to shave the head every other week, shave the eyebrows, and maybe the worst thing of all, to crushing up drugs to put in his apple-sauce to make him appear lethargic,” said Macomb County Prosecutor Eric Smith.

A hospital has tested the boy and declared him cancer-free, although he was going through opiate withdrawal, Smith said. Authorities haven’t yet determined what drugs were in the boy’s system and are awaiting hospital test results.

Court records indicate Schnuphase told her son he had leukemia.

Authorities say Schnuphase elicited donations from individuals, groups and members of at least one church who believed they were helping to pay for her son’s medical care as he underwent chemotherapy.

Smith said she received $7,500 from a church fundraiser, in addition to other donations, and that her son was given gifts including an Xbox video game system.

“People, out of the goodness of their hearts, seeing what they think this poor child is going through have given cash, given an Xbox, given presents trying to lift his spirits,” Smith said. “This poor child, thinking all along that he is dying of cancer. It never ends; the shock.”

The charade appears to have started in December, and eventually Schnuphase’s family members and relatives of her deceased husband reported her to police.

After authorities removed the boy from her home earlier this summer, Schnuphase told past donors her son had died and that she needed money for his funeral and burial, Smith said.

“We see greedy people all the time and people scamming for money all the time, but we never see it to this level,” he added.

“It appears as though the money is for the same thing all of us spend our money on: car payments, food, housing,” Smith said. “There appear to be no gambling debts or anything else. This appears to be just a mindless greedy action.”

Schnuphase was arrested Thursday after visiting the boy, who is in foster care, defense lawyer Dominic Greco said.

“They grabbed her after they had made arrangements with her to turn herself in today,” he said.

Wearing a powder blue hooded pullover jacket, Schnuphase stood before Judge Marco Santia quietly answering questions about where she lived.

Greco told the judge she was standing mute to the charges. A preliminary hearing was set for Oct. 13. Greco said he thinks that bond was set too high.

“She doesn’t have any money. All the money in her account, she was saving up for bond,” he said.

Schnuphase faces two counts of fraud over $1,000, which carry sentences of up to five years. She also is charged with one count of second-degree child abuse, a felony with a sentence of up to four years.

American succeeds Hayward as BP CEO

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — They were both pivotal figures following the worst offshore oil spill in U.S. history: one for angering Gulf residents with his ill-conceived comments about wanting his life back and by attending a weekend yacht race, the other for his ubiquitous presence along the crude-stained shores.

It seems fitting that both Tony Hayward and Thad Allen were officially replaced on the same day Friday. They are gone from their roles as BP PLC chief executive and national incident commander, respectively, but will not be soon forgotten as the damage from the spill endures and investigations continue.

Another round of federal investigative panel hearings is set to begin Monday.

The shakeup at BP, which owned the well that blew out on April 20 and was leasing the rig that exploded, didn’t end with Hayward. This week, Hayward’s replacement — Bob Dudley, the first American to ever head the British oil giant — fired the executive responsible for deepwater wells like the one that blew out in the Gulf and announced a new unit to police safety practices throughout the company.

Dudley will be operating with a thin margin for error while trying to move BP past the Gulf disaster. Besides covering a financial tab that’s around $10 billion and growing, Dudley must overcome the adversarial relationship between BP and Washington and the citizens of the Gulf left behind by Hayward. BP has said it plans to recommend Hayward for a non-executive board position at its Russian joint venture, TNK-BP.

U.S. apologizes for 1940s syphilis study in Guatemala

By Lauren Neergaard
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — American scientists deliberately infected prisoners and patients in a mental hospital in Guatemala with syphilis 60 years ago, a recently unearthed experiment that prompted U.S. officials to apologize Friday and declare outrage over “such reprehensible research.”

The discovery dredges up past wrongs in the name of science — like the infamous Tuskegee syphilis study in this country that has long dampened minority participation in medical research — and could complicate ongoing studies overseas that depend on cooperation from some of the world’s poorest countries to tackle tough-to-treat diseases.

Uncovering it gives “us all a chance to look at this and — even as we are appalled at what was done — to redouble our efforts to make sure something like this could never happen again,” said Dr. Francis Collins, director of the National Institutes of Health.

The NIH-funded experiment, which ran from 1946 to 1948, was uncovered by a Wellesley College medical historian. It apparently was conducted to test if penicillin, then relatively new, could prevent some sexually transmitted infections. The study came up with no useful information and was hidden for decades.

“We are outraged that such reprehensible research could have occurred under the guise of public health,” Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton and Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius said Friday.

President Barack Obama called Guatemala’s president, Alvaro Colom, later Friday to apologize. Clinton had called to apologize the night before.

“Obviously this is shocking, it’s tragic, it’s reprehensible,” said White House press secretary Robert Gibbs. “It’s tragic and the U.S. by all means apologizes to all those who were impacted.”

Guatemalan Embassy official Fernando de la Cerda said his country hadn’t known anything about the experiment until Clinton called to apologize Thursday night.

“We appreciate this gesture from the USA, acknowledging the mistake and apologizing,” he said. “This must not affect the bilateral relationship.”

Strict regulations today make clear that it is unethical to experiment on people without their consent, and require special steps for any work with such vulnerable populations as prisoners.

But such regulations didn’t exist in the 1940s.

The U.S. government ordered two independent investigations to uncover exactly what happened in Guatemala and to make sure current bioethics rules are adequate. They will be led by the prestigious Institute of Medicine and the Presidential Commission for the Study of Bioethical Issues.

Wellesley College historian Susan Reverby made the discovery while combing the archived records of Dr. John Cutler, a government researcher involved in the Tuskegee study that from 1932 to 1972 tracked 600 black men in Alabama who had syphilis without ever offering them treatment.

She discovered that Cutler also led the Guatemala project that went a step further: A total of 696 men and women were exposed to syphilis or in some cases gonorrhea — through jail visits by prostitutes or, when that didn’t infect enough people, by deliberately inoculating them. They were offered penicillin, but it wasn’t clear how many were infected and how many were successfully treated.

She reported that the U.S. had gained permission from Guatemalan officials to conduct the study, but did not inform the experimental subjects.

Author Pelzer speaks to benefit Safe House

Dave Pelzer, whose book “A Child Called ‘It’” was a New York Times bestseller for more than six years, will give a motivational presentation at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the College of Southern Idaho Fine Arts auditorium.

Having grown up in a home of almost unspeakable abuse, Pelzer draws from personal experiences for his writing. His most recent book, “Help Yourself for Teens,” advocates accountability and resilience for youth despite any past or present trials they may have faced. The CSI presentation, “We Are Worth It,” is designed to help people find the confidence to overcome negativity that surrounds them and to release feelings of bitterness, anger and depression.

In addition, Pelzer will also give a presentation to Jerome High School students at 10 a.m. Wednesday. Both appearances were organized by JHS senior Mattie MacGregor as her senior project, and are sponsored by her and the CSI Student Senate.

“I noticed in my school just how kids treat each other,” MacGregor said. “I just thought with a story like his, it might wake us up a little.”

Admission to the CSI event is free and the presentation is designed for all ages. Donations to Magic Valley Safe House will be taken at the door.

Twin Falls running back Trell Dowd (16) holds onto the ball as Wood River defender Alex Thomas (72) shoots for the tackle Friday night at Twin Falls High School.

Twin Falls clinches playoff berth with win against Wood River

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

One play aside, the Twin Falls Bruins are living the charmed life.

Despite missing several starters due to injury and having a handful of others playing though at less than 100 percent, the Bruins clinched a playoff berth at the first opportunity and made their homecoming a success by cruising to a 34-14 win over Wood River on Friday night.

Twin Falls bounced back from an overtime loss at Pocatello that came on a 2-point conversion in the extra session and seized control of the game to guarantee its second straight winning season and wrap up one of three District IV berths to the sub-state playoff round.

“Our coaches try to keep playoffs and stuff out of it ... we try to go game-by-game,” said senior quarterback T.J. Ellis. “But to get back is definitely nice.

“Tonight we felt it was better to run the football with all the guys we have out. We wanted to establish the run and I thought we were able to do that.”

Ellis was efficient in the few opportunities he was given to throw with a 10-for-13 passing performance for 152 yards and a pair of touchdown tosses to Ricky Akridge. Ellis also orchestrated a picture-perfect option run that ended in a 20-yard touchdown dash for Zach Davis.

The top performance didn’t come from one of the usual suspects, nor even from one of their replacements. The Bruins (5-1, 3-0 Great Basin) piled up 346 total yards, led by Trell Dowd’s 73 rushing yards, including a 31-yard run for the opening score.

But placekicker Ben Worst stole the show, hitting four extra points and two field goals — including a 52-yarder as time expired in the first half.

“I was just glad the coaches have that kind of faith in me to hit one that long,” said Worst, who also plays on the Bruins’ boys soccer team. “I try to treat it the same as an extra point. Everything’s the same, but you just put a little more power into it.

The Wolverines (2-3, 0-2), who dressed just 19 players, took a while to get started. They struggled to get first downs, let alone points, until Alex Padilla took a second-half kickoff back 95 yards untouched to get his team on the board.

He added a 3-yard rushing score in the fourth quarter, but the game had

BSU tries to get up for lowly Aggies

By Jason Chatraw
Times-News Correspondent

BOISE — When third-ranked Boise State visits New Mexico State tonight, the Broncos’ biggest challenge might be finding a way to get excited about playing against one of college football’s most beleaguered teams.

After a visit by ESPN’s College GameDay television program and a school-record sellout crowd on hand to watch Boise State dispose of then-No. 24 Oregon State last week, the Broncos will play before a smaller and more subdued crowd in Las Cruces.

“It’s easy to get hyped when everyone outside the game is hyped up and you’ve got a sold-out stadium,” Boise State receiver Austin Pettis said. “Going there, it’s a challenge for us to make sure we can bring that same energy as a team.”

As 43-point underdogs, nobody is giving New Mexico State (0-3) a chance, but the Aggies have made some modest improvements under second-year head coach DeWayne Walker.

He has struggled early this season, rushing for 100 yards and two touchdowns in three games. But Boise State head coach Chris Petersen still respect Smith’s skills.

“Seth Smith is very good,” Petersen said. “There are certain people from certain places who stick out from the year before. He’s one of those guys. And I think they’ve upgraded their backfield for sure.”

Part of that upgrade is sophomore running back Kenny Turner.

Minico throttles Jerome

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Although the current Minico seniors were sophomores at the time, “Escape from Spartanville” is still fresh on their minds, and they went looking for payback Friday night.

The last time Jerome visited Rupert, the Tigers won on the last play of the game in the 2008 state semifinals.

“We lost to them two years ago and we didn’t go to the state (championship). Then last year we got pummeled by them,” said Minico senior Moi Rice. “We wanted to come out and show them what Minico football is about. We wanted to show the crowd that Minico football is back.”

Minico made that statement clear Friday, celebrating homecoming by blasting Jerome 43-19 and improving to 2-0 in the Great Basin Conference (3-2 overall).

“I’m excited for our kids. The whole evening was awesome,” said Minico coach

Flinn, Buhl trounce rival Filer

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

Jessie Flinn has a good pair of hands.

The senior receiver caught four passes for 92 yards to help Buhl to a 30-16 win over Filer in their Sawtooth Central Conference match.

But one catch stood above the rest.

Facing a fourth-and-eight from the Filer 25-yard line, Buhl lined up with three receivers and went to the air. Quarterback Camden Gillens dropped back and heaved the ball to the right corner of the end zone into triple coverage.

The 5-foot-7 Flinn jumped above each of the defenders to snag the ball for an improbable touchdown catch.

“Camden just threw it up and trusted me to make a play. I just worked my magic and did what I had to do to come down with the ball for the touchdown,” Flinn said. That catch jump-started a 21-point second quarter for the Indians.

Quarterback Camden Gillins orchestrated a prolific pass offense for the Indians, racking up 203 passing yards in the first half.

“Our receivers ran great routes tonight. It feels great to finally put some points on the board and be effective on offense. We moved the ball great tonight,” said the air. Quarterback Camden Gillens dropped back and heaved the ball to the right corner of the end zone into triple coverage.

Micah Schneiderman had a 63-yard catch and run, finally being caught at the 1-yard line, setting up an Evan Wray 1-yard plunge into the end zone.

Schneiderman wasn’t done there.

Canyon Ridge outlasts Burley for homecoming win

By John Derr
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — It was the running attack of the Bobcats versus the passing game of the Riverhawks. Three yards and a cloud of dust versus a quick strike aerial attack.

Trailing by a point on its homecoming night, Canyon Ridge put together a game-winning drive in the final quarter to defeat Burley 21-14 in Great Basin Conference football action Friday night.

“It is not about how you start it’s about how you finish,” said Canyon Ridge quarterback Tyler Myers. “In the first half we didn’t execute.”

Leading 14-13 at the break, Burley twice drove the ball into the red zone in the second half. Both times penalties cost the Bobcats. The first time, a flag took away a 17-yard scoring run by junior running back Antonio Ramirez. The second pushed them back after getting inside the 5.

“We are frustrated,” said Burley coach Jeff Green. “Right now what we execute in practice, we can’t transfer to the game.”

After struggling to move the ball in the second and third quarters, Canyon Ridge finally regained its form.

CSI spikers end skid, top CNCC

Times-News

The College of Southern Idaho volleyball team rediscovered its winning ways Friday night, topping Colorado Northwestern Community College 25-11, 25-18, 25-12 in Rangely, Colo.

The No. 11 Golden Eagles entered the night with a three-match losing skid, but quickly dispatched the Spartans to move to 1-1 in Scenic West Athletic Conference play.

"I've really enjoyed this week with how they've responded," said CSI coach Heidi Cartisser. "The things we worked on showed on the court."

Rosie Becerra had 10 kills for CSI with only two hitting errors, while Alyssa Everett's eight-kill night was error-free. Kianna Niu recorded a team-high 16 digs.

The Golden Eagles stay on the road today for a SWAC match at Eastern Utah.

"It'll be a battle," said Cartisser.

In other Friday SWAC action, No. 10 North Idaho defeated Eastern Utah 25-17, 25-20, 23-25, 30-32, 15-8, while Snow straight-setted No. 2 Salt Lake 25-20, 25-17, 28-26.

the ball at their own 29 with just under 10 minutes left in the game. Myers connected with Nick Kytile, his favorite target on the night, then scrambled for 15 yards to move into Burley territory.

Myers knew it was time to step up.

"I knew I had to be a leader," he said.

A Burley penalty coupled with two receptions by Colton Sweesy put Canyon Ridge at the 2-yard line.

Myers and Kytile hooked up again for a score and a 2-point conversion for the lead.

"We work on it every day, it is all about trust for us," said Kytile of his connection with Meyers as the two combined on seven receptions for 127 yards.

Burley got the ball back and tried to go to the passing game. It didn't work as the Riverhawk defense sacked Jake Mills twice and forced a punt. The Bobcats only hope was to get a stop. Kytile tallied 24 yards on three carries with Myers chipping in nine yards as Canyon Ridge ran out the clock.

"We practiced hard this week. We needed this if we want to go to the playoffs," said Kytile.

The Bobcats took the opening kickoff and went on a 16-play, 70-yard drive that ate up over seven minutes on the clock. Canyon Ridge responded one play later on a 65-yard pass from Myers to Kytile as the Riverhawks went up 7-6.

Burley looked to drive again, going for it on fourth-and-two. Canyon Ridge stuffed it, then converted on its own forth-and-one with Myers and Kytile hooking up again.

Sawyer McMillan took it the final two yards for the score.

The Bobcats went for it again, deep in their own territory, but an interception by Alex Carrasco diverted disaster. Burley took advantage of the opportunity, driving 77 yards with Parker Arritt taking it the final 12 yards. He chipped in the two-point conversion to lead 14-13 at the half.

With a short week due to teacher in-service, both teams take a break from conference play next week and play on Thursday. Burley (0-2, 0-4) hosts Kimberly while Canyon Ridge (0-2, 1-3) hosts Buhl.

touchdowns passes — a 44-yarder in the second quarter and a 27-yard reception in the fourth quarter to put Buhl up 30-0.

"All the credit goes to the offensive line. They did a great job giving us time back there to throw. It was a good game for me, I had been in a dry spell for the first four games, so this feels great," said Schneiderman, who finished with five receptions for 139 yards.

Filer, however, was not marching anywhere on offense. Plagued by false starts, an ineffective running game and a weak passing attack, the Wildcats managed to break midfield only once in the first half.

Only until late in the fourth quarter did the Wildcats get on the board.

Ryan Orr ran in from 1 yard out and Jordan Brown caught a 26-yard touchdown pass from Matt Ramseyer.

But it was too little too late for Filer as chants of "Warm up the bus!" rained down from the amped Buhl student section on homecoming night.

"It always feels great to beat Filer," Schneiderman said. "They're our rivals and to beat them on homecoming is awesome."

The game was tied 20-20 at intermission, but Hagerman took control by scoring the first 20 points of the second half.

Shoshone quarterback Garrett Sant threw four touchdowns in the loss, hitting Gage Roberts twice. Cody Race and Matt Walsh also caught scoring passes.

Running back Tim Hoopes ran for two touchdowns, caught a scoring pass and threw a TD on a halfback pass as Carey shredded Clark County 54-6.

The game ended with our three minutes left in the fourth quarter on the mercy rule.

Carey quarterback Caleb Cenarussa threw for about 250 yard as the Panthers rolled on offense.

"We really had a great air attack today," said Carey coach Lane Kirkland, whose team moved to 5-1 and bounced back from last week's home loss to Pahrangat Valley of Alamo, Nev.

"It was a great game for us to get back and get recommitment to the winning side of the spectrum," said Kirkland.

Lighthouse Christian 52, Jackpot 6

Quarterback Logan Bosma threw for 165 yards and four touchdowns as Lighthouse Christian thumped Jackpot 52-6 on Friday.

Jackpot jumped out in front first with a touchdown but its celebration was cut short as the Lions cruised from there.

The Lion defense was equally impressive as they allowed only one touchdown and held the Jaguars to a total of 26 offensive yards in the win.

The Lions wrapped up the victory at the 4:17 mark of the third quarter as Garrett Goetle caught a 10-yard touchdown pass from Bosma to invoke the mercy rule.

Oakley 42, Raft River 14

Oakley kicked it into second gear in the fourth quarter to pull away from Raft River and take 42-14 win on Friday.

Oakley held the lead throughout the game but Raft River threatened late in the third quarter. The Trojans ran out of gas, though, and the Hornets scored 18 points in the fourth quarter to put the game away.

Oakley's quarterback Stephan Ortiz threw for two touchdowns and rushed for one in the win.

"Overall this was a great football game," said Raft River coach Randy Spaeth. "Being down 16-0 at the half and coming back 16-8 third was great. This team is getting better and better. Oakley played hard and was a great test for our kids."

Raft River (1-4) host Challis next week.

Utah State ends 10-game skid vs. BYU

LOGAN, Utah (AP) — Diondre Borel passed for 192 yards and ran for 68 more, throwing for one touchdown and running in another as Utah State ended a 10-game losing streak to BYU with a 31-16 victory Friday night.

Derrvin Speight ran for 91 yards and two touchdowns as the Aggies (2-3) handed BYU its fourth straight loss and a 1-4 record for the first time since 1973.

After enduring a few heartbreaks and a handful of blowouts in every meeting since 1993, the Aggies finally beat BYU again. A swarm of rowdy blue-clad fans stormed Merlin Olsen Field, celebrating Utah State's first win in the series since a 58-56 thriller in 1993.

Fans were already over the railing for the final 30 seconds, chanting "Ga-ry! Ga-ry!" for second-year coach Gary Andersen and they took a knee and ran out the clock. Jake Heaps passed for 270 yards, but had to throw a lot to get those. He finished 27 of 55 with two interceptions and no touchdowns. BYU ran for just 65 yards and never recovered after falling behind 17-0.

It was the kind of game fans who had endured a lot over the years in a one-sided rivalry could really sit back and enjoy.

While Utah-BYU is the headline rivalry in the state, the fans in northern Utah like to make it clear that they also have a long history against the Cougars and cherish every victory that comes against the private school to the south. Those wins were limited to basketball until Friday, when Borel gave Utah State a 7-0 lead on a 79-yard pass to Xavier Martin with 6:57 left in the first quarter.

The Aggies added a 34-yard field goal by Braeden Loveless, then Borel scored on a 1-yard run to put the Aggies up 17-0.

Fans sensed a pending end to the futility and grew louder, then took it up several decibels later in the second quarter. BYU got within 17-3 on a field goal and Kerwynn Williams sprung the kickoff for a 67-yard return. Williams broke at least four tackles on his way to the 33-yard line with 3:38 left in the half.

Speight scored on a 1-yard run with 49 seconds left in the half.

Bryan Kariya scored on a 2-yard run with 3:44 left in the third quarter. It was BYU's first touchdown in the second half since the season opener and came only after Utah State was called for holding on fourth-and-goal from the 4.

BYU didn't score again until 31 seconds remained and Utah State fans even got to cheer on that when the Aggies blocked the extra point.

already been settled by that point as Wood River mustered just 104 yards of total offense.

"I don't think we were mentally prepared to play this game. They're a great team and they play really tough, but we weren't mentally ready," Padilla said. "When we got that kickoff return we started to get going, but it was too late."

Twin Falls gets a bye week before heading to cross-canyon rival Jerome on Oct. 15, looking to assure itself of a top-two finish in the Great Basin Conference.

"We're going to use the bye week to get healthy," Ellis said. "Guys will be coming back and they'll be chomping at the bit to get back on the football field. I think that's going to be a great thing for us."

and we're not making mistakes," said Minico quarterback Kade Miller, who threw two touchdown passes, one to Rice and another to Tyson Carrick. "Our line has been blocking well and I feel like we're clicking. We came out and just wanted it more. We went 110 percent the whole time."

Jerome's Salvador Mercado nailed field goals of 34 and 35 yards in the first half, but the Tiger offense was hindered by three dropped passes.

Additionally, Jerome gave up a blocked punt and a fumble, both of which Minico turned into points.

"Minico is just a lot more physical than we are up front. They kind of pounded us and we are young and inexperienced and made a lot of mistakes," said Jerome coach Gary Krumm. "We've got to get tougher physically and mentally. We have two games left — if we want to make it to the playoffs we've got to change some things."

Jerome sophomore quarterback Simon Espinoza completed 14 of 28 passes for 186 yards, including an 84-yard touchdown to D.J. Worthington. Espinoza also ran for a 22-yard score late in the fourth. The Tigers gained 304 yards of offense, led by Dylan Dowton's 85 yards on 26 carries.

The Tigers (2-4, 2-1 GBC) have a bye week before hosting Twin Falls Oct. 15. Minico travels to Wood River next week.

Idaho State faces defining contest at Portland State

By Mark Liptak
Times-News correspondent

POCATELLO — In every season there comes a game that means the difference between a good season and a bad one. There's a sense that game is tonight for Idaho State. The Bengals (1-3, 0-2 Big Sky) visit Portland State (6 p.m., Big Sky TV) facing the same issues they have had the past two years, namely a quarterback controversy, an inconsistent offense and an inability to win games they are favored in.

Last week's blowout loss to Northern Arizona on homecoming caused many fans to the program's progress and the pressure is on head coach John Zamberlin to deliver wins. He is keeping things simple today.

"Our goals are number one to have fun and number two to win a conference road game," he said.

ISU has lost 16 consecutive conference road games (23 overall) and the home team has won the last 10 meetings between the two clubs.

The Vikings (1-2) are coming off a bye and are playing their first "home" game this year although the game won't be played at PGE Park which is being renovated. The game will take place at Hillsboro Stadium, a high school field.

As far as the Bengal quarterback situation, neither Kyle Morris nor Russel Hill distinguished themselves last week, which prompted offensive coordinator Phil Earley to say the time was rapidly coming to pick a guy and ride him out for good or bad.

Idaho St. at Portland St.

Radio: 930 AM

Zamberlin was asked who will make the final decision on the issue.

"It would be me," he said. "But I would take a lot of input from Phil on it. He's a good coach and I respect his opinion."

Zamberlin plans to name today's starter shortly before the game.

Portland State is led by quarterback Connor Kavanaugh who runs new head coach Nigel Burton's Pistol offense, which has the quarterback in the shot-gun formation on almost every play. Zamberlin has seen enough of Kavanaugh to be impressed.

"He's mobile and can really move around, we'll have to get pressure on him" said Zamberlin.

Notes: The Bengals will get a boost today as lineman David Tyler returns to offensive guard and receiver Kelvin Krosch is expected to make his season debut. Krosch is 6-5 and offers a big target for ISU's quarterbacks. ... Linebacker A. J. Storms is leading the Big Sky in tackles. ... Freshman Phillip Pleasant, who started the year on defense and was briefly switched to receiver, is now at running back. He carried one time in the loss to NAU.

No. 1 Alabama vs. No. 7 Florida
6 p.m. (CBS)
Line: Alabama by 8.
Series Record: Alabama leads 20-14.
Last Meeting: Alabama 32-13, 2009 SEC championship game.
WHAT'S AT STAKE
Not an SEC title for a change. At least, not yet. The winner will be regarded as the team to beat in the league and possibly nationally. The loser still controls its own destiny for getting to the SEC championship game and perhaps playing for a national title shot. Plus, Alabama (4-0, 2-0 SEC) has won 28 consecutive regular-season games, only four more than the current Florida (4-0, 1-0) binge.

KEY MATCHUP
Alabama QB Greg McElroy might have had his best game against the Gators in last year's SEC championship game. Now, he's facing a defense that leads the nation with 12 interceptions and is second in the league against the run. McElroy typically makes few mistakes but was picked off twice against Arkansas.

PLAYERS TO WATCH
Florida: QB John Brantley. Assuming Trey Burton won't repeat his six-touchdown performance, Brantley will be targeting a young secondary that has been stung for some big plays — and made some. If RB Jeff Demps isn't 100 percent, it will put even more pressure on Brantley to come through. He has thrown only one interception while Alabama's defense has made eight.

Alabama: RB Mark Ingram. Sure, the strength of Florida's defense has been in stopping the run, but the Heisman Trophy winner has been at his best in big games. He's coming off a 157-yard, two-touchdown performance at Arkansas that included the winning score.

FACTS & FIGURES
It's the first regular-season meeting between the SEC's biggest current powers since 2006. Alabama has won eight straight against ranked teams and is 6-2 against Top 5 teams over the last three years.

No. 8 Oklahoma vs. No. 21 Texas at Dallas
1:30 p.m. (ABC)
Line: Oklahoma by 3½.
Series Record: Texas leads 59-40-5.
Last Meeting: Texas 16-13, 2009.

WHAT'S AT STAKE
A win in the Red River Rivalry would allow Texas (3-1, 1-0 Big 12) to move on after a surprising 34-12 loss at home to UCLA last week, while a loss could make a quick exit from the national title race for the Longhorns after they played in the BCS championship game in January. Oklahoma (4-0, 0-0) can move to 5-0 for just the second time in six years, after doing so every year from 2000-04.

KEY MATCHUP
Oklahoma RB DeMarco Murray vs. the Texas defense. The Longhorns had been the top rushing defense in the country through the first three weeks of the season, before UCLA gained 264 yards on the ground in its upset win last week. The last time the team with fewer yards rushing won the Red River Rivalry was 1997.

PLAYERS TO WATCH
Oklahoma: LB Tom Wort. Coach Bob Stoops says that it sometimes appears that Wort is to blame for the Sooners' poor rushing defense because he's covering up for other players who are out of position. At other times, he's guilty of overpursuing. Either way, he's in the middle of a defense that ranks 93rd against the rush.
Texas: QB Garrett Gilbert. Oklahoma's Sam Bradford and Texas' Colt McCoy managed to win their first Red River Rivalry game. Now, the focus turns to whether Gilbert can continue that trend after committing three turnovers in the loss to UCLA.

FACTS & FIGURES
The Longhorns have won four of the last five rivalry games after losing five straight. Oklahoma WR Ryan Broyles has at least 100 yards receiving in seven straight games and leads the nation with 10.3 receptions per game.

No. 17 Iowa vs. No. 22 Penn State
6 p.m. (ESPN)
Line: Iowa by 7.
Series Record: Tied 11-11.
Last Meeting: Iowa 21-10, 2009.

WHAT'S AT STAKE
This is a chance for Iowa (3-1, 0-0 Big 10) to cement its status alongside Ohio State as a serious contender for the Big Ten title. The Nittany Lions (3-1, 0-0) are still an unknown quantity, and a night win in Iowa City could vault them back into the national discussion.

KEY MATCHUP
Penn State OL Chima Okoli vs. Iowa's DL. Okoli will get his first start against perhaps the nation's best defensive line. The Hawkeyes have been moving around Adrian Clayborn, Christian Ballard and Mike Daniels to create favorable matchups, and if Penn State shows a weakness it'll be exploited.

PLAYERS TO WATCH
Penn State: QB Robert Bolden will attempt to do what former Penn State star Daryl Clark could not: beat the Hawkeyes. If Bolden, a freshman, can't handle the raucous atmosphere in Iowa City, it could be a long night for the Nittany Lions.
Iowa: RB Marcus Coker. The true freshman will back up starter Adam Robinson, who'll need some breathers in what's expected to be a physical matchup. Coker looked strong in his debut last week, but that performance came against overmatched Ball State.

FACTS & FIGURES
Penn State has racked up the fewest penalty yards of any team in the country. Both team's losses came on the road to ranked opponents. Penn State fell 24-3 at No. 1 Alabama and Iowa lost 34-27 at No. 14 Arizona. Iowa defensive coordinator Norm Parker will miss his fourth straight game because of complications from diabetes. Penn State held Temple to eight first downs in a 22-13 win last week.

No. 11 Wisconsin vs. No. 24 Michigan State
1:30 p.m. (ESPN)
Line: Wisconsin by 2.
Series Record: Michigan State leads 27-21.
Last Meeting: Wisconsin 38-30, 2009.

WHAT'S AT STAKE
Michigan State (4-0, 0-0 Big Ten) doesn't have to play Ohio State this season, so a win over Wisconsin (4-0, 0-0) would put the Spartans firmly in the Big Ten title hunt. The Badgers have high expectations as well. They get Ohio State at home in two weeks and would love to start with a conference road win at a place they've historically had success.

KEY MATCHUP
Wisconsin RBs John Clay and James White vs. Michigan State RBs Le'Veon Bell and Edwin Baker. Both teams have no shortage of options for moving the ball on the ground. Clay, the reigning Big Ten offensive player of the year, has 501 yards rushing and six TDs this season, averaging 6.5 yards per carry. Michigan State has run for over 200 yards in every game.

PLAYERS TO WATCH
Wisconsin: TE Lance Kendricks has become QB Scott Tolzien's favored target while WR Nick Toon (turf toe) is sidelined with an injury. Kendricks had a six-catch, 103-yard performance against Austin Peay following his seven-catch, 131-yard effort against Arizona State.

Michigan State: LB Greg Jones creates havoc for any opponent, and the Badgers must find a way to slow him down. The reigning Big Ten defensive player of the year already has 33 tackles, two interceptions and three forced fumbles this season.

FACTS & FIGURES
Spartans coach Mark Dantonio is expected to be in a coaching box above the field after missing last week's game following a mild heart attack. This is only the third time in the series that Wisconsin and Michigan State enter the game ranked in the Top 25. The matchup is one of just three between 4-0 teams, along with Florida-Alabama and Stanford-Oregon.

Stanford hopes to build on success against Oregon

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — Leave it to a Stanford coach to quote Ralph Waldo Emerson when asked about his team's dominance.

Coach Jim Harbaugh isn't quite ready to get caught up in recent successes as the No. 9 Cardinal (4-0, 1-0 Pac-10) get ready for a visit to Autzen Stadium today (6 p.m., ABC) to face fourth-ranked Oregon (4-0, 1-0).

"As long as all that is said is said against me, I feel a certain assurance of success," Harbaugh said, quot-

Stanford at Oregon
6 p.m., ABC

ing the 19th century philosopher. "But as soon as honeyed words of praise are spoken for me, I feel as one that lies unprotected before his enemies."

Uh-huh, sure. But who could blame Harbaugh for basking a little?

Stanford hasn't started a season 4-0 since 1986. The team hasn't been ranked in the top 10 since 2001.

Now that they've returned to the top tier of the rankings — after more down seasons than anyone cares to remember — their first opponent is the formidable Ducks.

Harbaugh called the clash between the two teams "monumental."

There really couldn't be any more hype than there already is: There's the rankings, Autzen Stadium, a national TV audience, a visit from ESPN's GameDay. The list goes on.

"As a kid you always watched College GameDay and you're always watching the games in prime time. To finally be in that slot is a dream come true," said Stanford linebacker Shayne Skov. "For the guys who had to go through the tough seasons, the five-year guys, it's a step in the right direction to how we want to send them off. It's a great opportunity for the program."

The Cardinal have not played in a game where both teams were ranked inside the Top 10 since 1970, when No. 10 Stanford defeated No. 4 Arkansas 34-28. That was the last time they won a game while ranked in the Top 10 — they've lost six straight since then.

Saturday's game will be the first time Oregon and Stanford have faced each other as ranked teams. And the Cardinal are looking for their first 5-0 start since 1951, when they won the Pacific Coast Conference and a Rose Bowl berth. Oregon, the defending Pac-10 champion, has won 12 straight games at Autzen overall, and nine straight Pac-10 matchups. The team has hosted 70 straight sell-out crowds.

This season, the Ducks' unique spread option offense is giving opponents fits, but after New Mexico, Tennessee, Portland State and Arizona State, the Cardinal are going to be considerably more challenging — and partly because of their similar reliance on their ground game.

Rain delay suits U.S. fine at Ryder Cup

NEWPORT, Wales — Boy, did that rain delay work out just fine for the Americans. They were able to get dry, do some shopping at the merchandise tent and claim the momentum on a water-logged day at the Ryder Cup.

The U.S. team rallied for a narrow lead by the end of play Friday, clearly the biggest beneficiary of the Cup's first weather suspension since 1997. Phil Mickelson got going, Stewart Cink kept rolling in long putts and the rookie team of Bubba Watson and Jeff Overton held its own.

The Americans were down in three fourball matches and leading only one when drenching showers halted play at midmorning. Celtic Manor spent more than $1 million on a complex drainage system, but it was no match for showers that turned the course into a version of Venice, impromptu canals popping up all over the place.

The start was bad enough. Even worse were the rainsuits worn by the Americans, a gaudy getup that looked more suited for basketball team warmups — and didn't work anyway. During the break, the PGA of America dispatched officials to the merchandise tent to buy up about 20 new suits in case it starts raining again this weekend, always a possibility in soggy Wales.

But the clouds finally broke late in the day and the U.S. team was feeling a lot sunnier about the way things stood: Cink and Matt Kuchar were 2 up on Rory McIlroy and U.S. Open champion Graeme McDowell through 11 holes; Watson and Overton were 1 up on Luke Donald and Padraig Harrington through eight; and Tiger Woods and Steve Stricker were all square with Ian Poulter and Ross Fisher.

The only Americans trailing were Mickelson and Dustin Johnson, but even they left the course with good vibes.

They lost three of the first six holes, with Lefty dumping his first shot after the break into a pond. But Johnson bailed him out with a birdie at the seventh, and Mickelson ripped off three birdies in a row around the turn to leave Lee Westwood and PGA championship winner Martin Kaymer only 1 up through 11 holes.

"It was tough day, a tough start," American captain Corey Pavin said. "Obviously I'm pleased with the way U.S. came back and performed this afternoon. I'm very proud of the guys."

His European counterpart, Colin Montgomerie, took heart from Poulter rolling in a clutch 15-foot putt at the 10th just before the last light faded, giving the home team a bit of a boost. The Englishman turned toward what was left of the gallery and pumped his fist defiantly.

"We had a good first hour of play or something, and then that two hours of play there was obviously in the Americans' favor," Monty said. "But at the same time, there's no match that is anymore than 2 up or 2 down, so everyone is still in the game."

With no match settled on a day when eight points were supposed to be handed out, this will be remembered as the day it rained and rained and rained at the first Ryder Cup held in Wales.

DE JONGE AND HAAS SHARE SECOND-ROUND VIKING LEAD

MADISON, Miss. — Brendon de Jonge used a fast early start to shoot his second straight 66 on Friday, then sat back and waited to see whether anyone could catch him.

Bill Haas answered the challenge with another 66, joining de Jonge at 12 under after two rounds. Neither leader had a bogey during their second round at Annandale Golf Club.

De Jonge, who made his 30th start this year at the Viking Classic, never held a second-round lead before, although he has finished in the Top 10 six times this year. He said his second round was not perfect, but close enough.

SENIOR TAKES FIRST-ROUND LEAD ON CHAMPIONS TOUR

CONOVER, N.C. — Peter Senior eagled the final hole for a 7-under 65 and a one-stroke lead over Bernhard Langer, Fred Couples and Tom Kite at the Ensure Classic on Friday.

The 51-year-old Australian eagled the 18th hole in windy conditions at the Rock Barn Golf and Spa to take his first lead on the Champions Tour.

"Despite the wind, which gusted up to 25 mph and frequently changed direction on the tree-lined, 7,090-yard course, Senior had an error-free round, making five birdies in addition to his eagle.

Bowyer accepts championship chances are over

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — Clint Bowyer said Friday he's accepted that his championship hopes are over and will focus on helping his Richard Childress Racing teammates chase the Sprint Cup title.

An appeals committee this week denied RCR's appeal to have Bowyer's championship-ending penalty overturned. He was docked 150 points by NASCAR because the car he drove to victory Sept. 11 at New Hampshire failed inspection.

Bowyer said Friday at Kansas Speedway he's disappointed the appeal was denied, but wants to move past the controversy.

Childress has one hope left, a hearing before NASCAR chief appellate officer, John Middlebrook. The former General Motors executive is NASCAR's version of the Supreme Court, but Bowyer said he isn't expecting to win.

"I told Richard it's not worth fighting," he said. "Their minds are made up, and it is what it is."

Bowyer is 12th in the standings and trails leader Denny Hamlin by 235 points with eight races remaining in the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship. Teammate Kevin Harvick is fifth in the standings and Jeff Burton is seventh.

Kahne wins pole at Kansas Speedway

Kahne drove his Ford to a quick lap of 174.644 mph on Friday, earning his third pole of the season. Menard ran 174.469 mph on the 1.5-mile tri-oval. Both are leaving RPM after the season.

"To me it shows that myself and Paul and our teams are still really interested in running strong and not backing down just because we have other things we're going to do in the future," Kahne said. "At the same time, it shows that RPM is giving us great race cars. We still have great packages. We just need to put it together."

Kahne will drive next year for Red Bull Racing as he prepares to move to Hendrick Motorsports in 2012. Menard will join Richard Childress Racing in 2011.

Jeff Gordon, who won the first two Cup races at Kansas Speedway in 2001 and 2002, qualified third at 174.430 in his Chevrolet. He was the highest qualifier among drivers in the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship.

"I think the best thing I can do is be the best teammate I can be," Bowyer said.

Chen gem drops Rays to second

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bruce Chen threw a two-hitter for his first major league shutout Friday night, leading the Kansas City Royals to a 7-0 victory over Tampa Bay that dropped the Rays to second place in the AL East.

The Rays fell a half-game behind the New York Yankees, who were rained out in Boston. Tampa Bay has two games left with the last-place Royals, while the Yankees have to play three at Fenway Park.

Chen (12-7) struck out a season-high seven in his first complete game since April 15, 2005, with Baltimore against the Yankees. This was the third complete game of his 12-year career.

ORIOLES 10, TIGERS 6, 1ST GAME

BALTIMORE — Jeremy Guthrie allowed two hits over eight shutout innings, Nick Markakis homered and Baltimore beat Detroit for a doubleheader sweep.

In the opener, Chris Tillman (2-5) pitched seven innings of three-hit ball and Adam Jones drove in four runs to lead the Orioles.

CHICAGO — Shin-Soo Choo hit a two-run homer, Fausto Carmona pitched six strong innings and Cleveland extended its season-best winning streak to seven games with a victory over Chicago.

NATIONAL LEAGUE PHILLIES 11, BRAVES 5

ATLANTA — Jimmy Rollins' grand slam capped a five-run sixth inning and the Philadelphia Phillies kept Bobby Cox and the Braves from moving closer to a wild-card berth.

Rollins made his third start since returning from a tight right hamstring. Ryan Howard had two hits, including a two-run single in a four-run eighth. Carlos Ruiz had three hits.

Atlanta has a tribute planned for Cox on Saturday. The Braves are trying to send their longtime manager into retirement with one final post-season appearance.

CUBS 2, ASTROS 0

HOUSTON — Casey Coleman pitched seven strong innings and drove in a run, leading the Chicago Cubs.

Cincinnati will begin the postseason on the road.

James on display as Heat host scrimmage

HURLBURT FIELD, Fla. (AP) — LeBron James came down the court, headed toward the baseline and made a nifty behind-the-back pass to rookie center Dexter Pittman near the basket.

Pittman missed the layup. That's when he — and the rest of the Miami Heat — saw what having James as a teammate can mean.

The NBA's two-time reigning MVP slammed Pittman's miss home, one of many moments that left guests from the U.S. Air Force howling when the Heat held their first full preseason scrimmage Friday night. It was the first time Wade, James and Chris Bosh played together in a game situation as Heat teammates.

"There's no time to waste," James said. It was the seventh practice session out of eight the Heat scheduled for their weeklong trip to an Air Force installation in Florida's Panhandle, and by far, this had the most fanfare.

An emotional video montage — replete with moments that included Wade, James and Bosh representing their country at the Beijing Olympics — played before the game, immediately prior to the presentation of colors. About 225 Air Force guests were invited for each half, and the gym was cleared after the first 20-minute period to allow more airmen to fill the bleachers.

After the game, Staff Sgt. Kevin Kirkland told James that, when he was deployed to Afghanistan last year, he would watch Cleveland games that began at 2 a.m.

"Appreciate it," James said, nodding and smiling.

Wade and James guarded each other for much of the early going, and each had their first highlight-reel moments of the season.

Wade lobbed a 40-footer after getting fouled that bounced off the backboard and went in, and probably should have counted but was whistled off. James had the night's two most spectacular dunks and gave the fans a broad grin each time.

And for the second half — well, second game, really, since the scoreboard was wiped clean after each half — Wade, James and Bosh were all put on the same team.

They were sitting together at a Miami Dolphins game last weekend when it hit them: This power triumvirate is real now.

"We just looked around," Wade said. "And then 'Bron looked at both of us and said, 'This is crazy. What y'all doing here? What am I doing here? What are we doing here together?'" There's still those moments ... where you don't understand how it came together. But it did. And it's a special thing, especially with three guys that really enjoy each other's company."

Understandably, after a hard week of work, there's some tired legs on the Miami team bus.

James shot 5 of 14. Wade shot 4 of 11. Bosh missed his first six shots before making seven of his final nine.

"It's been very intense," James said.

"I've never been in a more competitive camp than this," said Wade, whose sons sat behind one bench.

That's why Heat coach Erik Spoelstra — as always — isn't overly concerned with how the offense is performing, not in the first week of practice.

"When we go live, I have not noticed a dip in the intensity," Spoelstra said.

If Lance Armstrong doped, teammates say they saw nothing

PARIS (AP) — For Lance Armstrong, it became a tradition.

On the triumphant last day of his Tour de France victories, the champion cyclist and his teammates celebrated by riding past chattering crowds and the leafy trees that line Paris' most famous boulevard, the Champs-Elysees. They radiated bonhomie, smiling and sometimes waving star-spangled banners. Armstrong and Co., the scene suggested, was one big and happy cycling family.

Reality, however, was not so cut-and-dried.

Even with riders who were integral to Armstrong's unprecedented run of seven consecutive Tour wins, the single-minded Texan remained somewhat aloof. His teammates watched Armstrong's back on France's sun-seared roads, elbowed aside rival teams, carried his water bottles, shared meals, bus trips, and helped to construct the story of the cancer survivor who tamed cycling's most mythic race. But, some of them also say, they never got to intimately know the man in the winner's yellow jersey. After they and the crowds went home, some never had much contact with Armstrong again.

That contrast between the public and guarded sides of the man who revolutionized France's storied race with his modern American ways could become a hurdle for U.S. investigators trying to corroborate allegations from Floyd Landis. One of 23 support riders without whom Armstrong might not have won so many Tours, Landis claims that doping was part-and-parcel of being on his teams and that Armstrong cheated, too.

Armstrong has always insisted that he rode clean. He says Landis lacks credibility. After quitting Armstrong's team, Landis won the 2006 Tour but was stripped of the title for doping. Having denied it for years, Landis now acknowledges that he cheated but says others did, too.

The elaborate and systematic doping Landis describes — he alleged, most notably, that Armstrong and his riders shot-up in full view of each other in 2004 — would have required considerable levels of trust, connivance and conspiracy to remain hidden. But that stands at odds with the way some riders recall life inside Armstrong's U.S. Postal squads. Simply put, some say, Armstrong never let them get that close.

Steffen Kjaergaard rode at Armstrong's side for his second and third wins, in 2000 and 2001. He remembers the victory parties and the one-starred Texas flag that Paris' famous Crillon Hotel flew in Armstrong's honor. But he says he is stumped by Landis' allegations because coming "from a team that I was a member of, that is so far from what I have been a part of, or seen, or dis-

TDF winner Alberto Contador denies blood doping

MADRID (AP) — Three-time Tour de France winner Alberto Contador denies that his positive test for a banned drug stems from blood doping rather than contaminated steak, his spokesman said Friday.

The French sports daily L'Equipe reported Friday that the German lab that found a tiny amount of the banned drug clenbuterol in Contador's urine sample also found plastic residues of the kind that might turn up after a transfusion of blood from a plastic bag.

German television station ARD also reported that plastic traces were detected.

Contador spokesman Jacinto Vidarte told The Associated Press the Spanish rider "categorically denies having a blood transfusion."

"There is nothing to that," he said. "It is a science fiction story."

Vidarte said no one at the International Cycling Union, which announced Contador's positive test Thursday and his temporary suspension, has told Contador that plastic residues were found.

Vidarte said the World Anti-Doping Agency has not validated a method for detecting plastic from blood transfusion bags.

WADA director general David Howman, however, told the AP that a method was "fully validated and has been used in the food industry for years."

"Its use for anti-doping purposes is partially validated and evidence from it, among others, can be used before tribunals," Howman said.

The detection method has been developed by the WADA-accredited lab in Barcelona.

Douw de Boer, a Dutch anti-doping expert hired by Contador to analyze his positive test result, has seen the report compiled by the German lab in Cologne and saw no mention of plastic residues, Vidarte said.

Contador on Thursday denied using clenbuterol and said the trace elements found in his urine came from beef he ate during this year's Tour — once on July 20 and again on a rest day July 21, the day the drug was found in his urine.

If Contador is found guilty of doping, he faces the loss of his Tour de France title and a possible two-year ban.

Professor Michel Audran, a leading expert in blood doping, told the AP that the Barcelona lab published a study last year showing that the amount of plastic traces in people receiving a blood transfusion is twice as big as those found in the general population's samples.

"If we find a high amount of plastic traces in Contador's samples, the blood transfusion can't be ruled out," he said.

UCI president Pat McQuaid refused to comment on specifics of the Contador case Friday.

covered myself?"

"If some of that is just a little bit true, I must have been extremely naive," he says.

"No, no," he chuckles when asked if he ever saw Armstrong take performance-enhancing drugs. "Floyd's stories ... are hard to believe."

Peter Meinert-Nielsen, a Dane who rode with Armstrong on his first Tour win in 1999 until he dropped out on stage 13 with a bad knee, says the Texan "was always friendly and a great person to be with" but that unlike in other sports, friendships rarely blossom in cycling because riders don't often train together.

"You are more or less only together when you ride. You don't get a close relationship," he says.

"Cycling is a working place like any kind of working place. There are some people you get along with better than others. Lance and I got along pretty well. He asked that I be on the team that rode the Tour de France. He knew he could rely on me as a helper. He knew that if I had been told something I would do it. He trusted me. He knew I would ride 100 percent for him."

"He is the greatest personality I have ever been racing with. He had a great power. I am certain it was a strong will and authority that made him win. He's a one of a kind," Meinert-Nielsen says. Although he also adds that if there was any doping then he wouldn't have been privy to it "because I wasn't with him, I didn't share a room with him."

Idaho looks to rebound against Western Michigan

By Josh Wright
Times-News correspondent

MOSCOW — After perhaps the most bitter loss of the Robb Akey era, the Idaho Vandals did all they could Sunday to address what went wrong at Colorado State and simply move on.

But then came the usual early week sessions with the media, when Idaho coaches and players had to rehash all the unsightly details — over and over again.

Akey, Idaho's fourth-year coach, acknowledged the Vandals "were supposed to win" against the Rams, who were on a 12-game skid before booting a game-winning field goal as time expired. Aaron Lavarias, a senior defensive end, said it felt like Idaho lost three times because of the team's blown leads and crippling mistakes.

"It leaves a real bad taste in your mouth," Lavarias said. "We want to come out here ... and take it to Western Michigan and get back on a winning streak."

Still seeking its first road victory of the season, Idaho (2-2) will close out the non-conference portion of its schedule today in Kalamazoo, Mich., against Western Michigan (1-2). The game, scheduled for noon (MDT), will be televised on KTVB 24/7.

The Broncos of the Mid-American Conference were off last week, giving them two weeks of preparations for the Vandals. The extra time should benefit WMU, but both clubs are familiar with each other after the Broncos came to Moscow in 2008 and prevailed 51-28.

passing leader who graduated this past year. But its calling card is still a prolific passing offense.

Led by redshirt sophomore quarterback Alex Carder, Western Michigan has the fourth-ranked aerial attack in the nation.

Last week against another first-year starter in Pete Thomas of Colorado State, the Vandals' secondary — which Akey said was "soft" in coverage — gave up 386 passing yards. The forgettable performance came after Idaho had allowed a total of 361 yards through the air in its first three games.

"If we're going to be a better defense, we've got to perform more consistently than that," Akey said.

Akey was pleased with the way the Vandals responded in a set of up-tempo practices throughout the week. Part of the sense of urgency comes from wanting to lock up a second-straight nonconference winning record, and part comes from hoping to avoid a two-game losing streak going into next week's bye.

Idaho should have a full complement of receivers and running backs with the recovery of Kama Bailey. The versatile junior sustained a shoulder injury at CSU, but was able to return to practice by midweek.

high school until he shot two men in a gunfight as a teenager in Orlando, received a second chance at football — and he looks to be a factor in the Aggies' game plan Saturday.

Facing solid running back tandems in games against Virginia Tech and Oregon State, Boise State's defensive line has looked ferocious in becoming the nation's 29th-best run defense this season.

If the Aggies falter on the ground, they will turn to junior quarterback Matt Christian to jumpstart their offense, which will also be a challenge.

Christian is 50 of 94 passing for 570 yards with three touchdowns and one interception. But going up against the 17th-ranked pass defense in the country doesn't give Christian much hope for the career night he will need to pull the upset.

New Mexico State has played well on special teams thus far, and that is an area that the Broncos are looking to tighten up after giving up a punt return for a touchdown and fumbling away a punt against Oregon State.

"It'll be a good challenge," Petersen said of righting the special teams' ship. "We have to pick up all phases of our special teams. It starts with our kickers — if we can place it where we want to with coverage, it gives us a good chance. We're all in this together."

Boise State (3-0) will once again look to junior running back Doug Martin to carry the load on the ground. Martin, who rushed for 138 yards against Oregon State and has 326 yards on the season, watched teammate D.J. Harper go down last week with a season-ending knee injury for the second straight year.

Now the once-crowded backfield is thinned out, making room for Martin to shine even brighter with Jeremy Avery, who will fill in for Harper.

Senior receiver Titus Young, who leads the Football Bowl Subdivision in all-purpose yards with 208 per game, will also factor

WHAT'S AT STAKE
Boise State needs to keep looking tough against a soft schedule. It's the WAC opener for both schools, and New Mexico State arguably defines why nobody expects the Broncos to lose again in the regular season. The Aggies are 0-10 against the Broncos, who are 5-0 in Las Cruces. Boise State returns home next week for a non-conference game against Toledo, then finishes a seven-game WAC stretch.

KEY MATCHUP
Boise State QB Kellen Moore against New Mexico State's defense. Aggies coach DeWayne Walker relinquished the responsibility of calling defensive plays after his team allowed 501 yards in last week's 42-16 loss at Kansas, saying it will help him focus on his team's overall picture. Moore threw for 288 yards and three TDs in last week's 37-24 win over Oregon State. Now that LBs coach Dale Lindsey is signaling the Aggies' schemes, will it have any effect on Moore?

PLAYERS TO WATCH
Boise State: WR Austin Pettis. Boise State's do-it-all man caught the game-winning TD pass in an opening 33-30 win over Virginia Tech, a game where he also blocked a punt. Last week, Pettis threw a 6-yard TD pass, the first of his career, in

DeWayne Walker
Boise State's defeat of Oregon State.
New Mexico State: KR Taveon Rogers leads the WAC and ranks 21st in the nation, averaging 28.8 yards on returns. He broke a 54-yarder last week at Kansas, setting a school record with 219 yards on six returns. In a between-the-seams statistic, Rogers is trying to help New Mexico State to its 14th straight year where a kick returner averages at least 20 yards per return.

FACTS & FIGURES
Boise State begins its final push through the WAC before joining the Mountain West next season. The Broncos are 9-0 in WAC openers since joining the league before the 2001 season, including 4-0 on the road. ... At No. 3, the Broncos are the highest ranked team to visit Las Cruces. ... NMSU is 1-15 against ranked opponents since 1999. The lone victory came that year when the Aggies stunned No. 22 Arizona State 35-7 in Tempe, Ariz. ... The NMSU-BSU series dates to 1996, when the visiting Broncos won 33-32. In the first three meetings in Las Cruces, Boise State won by a combined eight points. In their last two trips, the Broncos have won by a combined 89-25, including a 58-0 win in 2008.

Refugees have difficult task finding spiritual home

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of two articles on refugees and their search for religious fulfillment in south-central Idaho.

On Saturdays, the Twin Falls First United Methodist Church is filled with lively music that praises God. But unless you're from Burundi, you're not likely to understand it.

As hundreds of refugees have settled in Twin Falls, churches are seeing more worshipers from other cultures. While many of those refugees are Christian, language barriers and different worship practices make finding a spiritual home a difficult task.

Pastor Ratu Kabakoro and his wife, Summer, helped Bhutanese refugees of Nepali origin start their own Sunday service at First Southern Baptist Church in Twin Falls. The Kabakoros initially got involved with the refugees by volunteering. They used the church van for grocery store runs for families without driver's licenses.

"All we were doing as a church was just reaching out to them and being a helping hand," Ratu said.

Then some of the Christian families started attending services and sending their children to Sunday school. The Kabakoros were thrilled and hoped everyone would worship together.

It quickly became apparent, though, that the Nepali-speaking refugees weren't completely understanding the sermons. Their English was conversational at best, Summer said, and spiritual words like "grace" and "redemption" aren't easily translated or explained.

"They were starving spiritually," she said.

Cultural differences also made some interactions awkward. The Bhutanese would often talk through the service, or get up and walk out in groups in the middle of the sermon — acts that aren't impolite in their culture. Some congregants would shoot the

Marriage matters

Experts share advice for improving your relationship

By Natalie Hollingshead
Daily Herald correspondent

PROVO, Utah — Off-again, on-again may not be a phrase most people think of when they talk about marriage. After all, marriage is a long-term commitment. For Latter-day Saint couples married in one of the church's temples, the union is thought of as eternal.

No matter how long-lasting, however, relationships go through cycles. This is especially true with married couples who may go through periods of time when they feel very close to one another, followed by spans of feeling more distant.

But couples don't have to just grin and bear it. There are ways to close in on the good times and make the distant times fade further away. The Daily Herald consulted three expert sources for their sure-fire marriage advice.

Close in on a closeness that works for you

Couples should realize that change is normal before they start to stress about how they feel about one another on a day-to-day basis, says Klayne Rasmussen, a licensed marriage and family therapist in Farmington. Feeling really distant isn't healthy, but there are certainly times in every marriage when a couple just isn't in sync, he said.

Rasmussen refers to this closeness as intimacy, but he isn't referring to sexual intimacy. He's talking about real intimacy — a closeness defined by the degree of emotional safety in a relationship.

"This includes access and the ability to share your feelings, who you are with each other, knowing that it isn't going to be used against you in the future," said Rasmussen. "Many couples don't know how they 'do' intimacy."

Every couple does it differently. Most have a natural, comfortable level of intimacy established back when they first met, even though they may not realize it, Rasmussen said.

"I refer to it oftentimes as the Goldilocks Factor," he said. "It's not too much, not too little, it's just right for that couple."

Rasmussen has developed a marital model of intimacy, which he teaches to clients and attendees at marital retreats put on by his practice, IntraLife Systems. In the model, there is a range of normal everyday closeness called the Operational Zone. "This is where everything is good and there are no real concerns," he said.

Is it wrong not to help someone because it means you'll have to sacrifice?

YOUR SACRIFICE MUST MAKE A DIFFERENCE

The Rev. Duke Tufty, Unity Temple on the Plaza in Kansas City: If you help another and sacrifice something in the process, you will feel good about it if it makes a positive difference at that time and into the future.

On the other hand, if your sacrifice doesn't make a difference, you will not feel good about it.

For instance, say I have a friend, and on the last week of every month he comes to me asking for help. He needs $20 because he is out of groceries and has no money until payday. This happens time and time again, with the $20 never getting repaid. Am I really helping him, and is my sacrifice making a difference, or am I enabling him to be irresponsible with his finances and encouraging him to live beyond his means?

In this case my sacrifice of $20 is not helping create a better condition; it is just maintaining a bad one.

On the other hand, if I told him I would never give him money again, but I would teach him the basics of budgeting and pay for him to go to a money management course, my sacrifice would make a positive difference.

The right or wrong of a sacrifice is whether it will permanently improve a condition in a person's life or assist in maintaining a bad condition in a person's life.

JESUS CALLS US TO BE GOOD SAMARITANS

The Rev. Pat Rush, pastor, Visitation Catholic Church, Kansas City: We generally consider the Ten Commandments as the benchmark for right and wrong, and there is no commandment that requires us to help others at a sacrificial cost to ourselves.

Jesus, however, goes beyond the commandments, telling us to love our neighbor as ourselves and teaching that there is no greater love than to lay down one's life for one's friends. The first letter of John tells

Monastery plans spark debate

Monks' proposal raises questions

By Bob Moen
Associated Press writer

MEETEETSE, Wyo. — Plans by a group of Roman Catholic hermit monks to erect an outsized monastery in northern Wyoming have pitted neighbor against neighbor and aroused debate with religious undertones.

At the center of the Wyoming controversy is a remote ranch where the Monks of the Most Blessed Virgin Mary of Mt. Carmel want to build a 144,000-square-foot French Gothic-style monastery and coffee roasting barn. The monastery will feature a church that seats 150, with one spire rising 150 feet.

The proposal triggered a clash between ranchers who live miles apart, trying to protect their quiet, rural open spaces, and the hermit monks who live a secluded, Spartan life of prayer and meditation and are looking for more room to meet their expanding order and maintain their privacy.

And it's forced the monks to temporarily abandon their seclusion as they seek permission to build.

"They're hermits and they don't interact very much with the public," said Michael LaBazzo, an attorney representing the monks. "They have recently, but not by choice."

The plan has cleared a planning and zoning board but still needs approval from Park County commissioners, who will discuss it Tuesday.

The monks now occupy a small monastery near the hamlet of Clark, about 40 miles east of Yellowstone National Park. They belong to an order rooted in the 16th century that requires they sustain themselves through mostly manual labor.

Dave Grabbert stands Aug. 26 on the 2,500-acre ranch in northern Wyoming that he wants to sell to a Carmelite monk order's foundation. The monks want to build a 145,000-square-foot monastery, which would be located at the foot of the mountain pictured behind Grabbert.

They dress in handmade full length robes, sleep in small individual housing units called hermitages with no radio, no TV, no Internet. They raise and grow most of their own food, funding their operation by making and producing their own brand of coffee called Mystic Monk. They market mugs, bag clips, T-shirts, travel mugs and a CD of their Gregorian chants over the Internet and with mail-order catalogs.

Masses are celebrated in Latin. No women are allowed to join. The Rev. Daniel Mary created the Wyoming monastery in 2003.

And the order is growing.

The original two members now number 18. They occupy about 40 acres nestled in the Beartooth Mountains.

To maintain their seclusion, the monks have their eyes on a 2,500-acre ranch about 50 miles away in a rugged area with creeks fed by looming mountains. The area has few roads, a few widely dispersed ranch homes, a few scattered oil and gas wells. The ranch is about 14 miles from the nearest public road, and the nearest town, 20 miles away, is Meeteetse, population about 350, that is most famous for the arrest of outlaw Butch Cassidy in 1894.

They plan to build a monastery mainly of stone with 30 separate hermitages for monks, a small dormitory for men in training to become monks, a commons area and a church spire rising the equivalent of 15 stories high.

Ranch owner Dave Grabbert, whose family has held the property since 1938, has agreed to sell to the religious order, and he describes the two monks he has met as personable, intelligent and "just decent guys."

"I don't care if they're Hindus, Buddhists or what they are, but being decent people, that's really a plus in this day and age," Grabbert said. "Not everyone is."

Some of his neighbors object to the sale, citing concerns about traffic, wildlife, water — and questioning whether the massive stone structure fits with the rural landscape.

"The plans look like someone took an old cathedral and just dropped it onto our beautiful landscape," Mary Elliott, who lives about 15 miles from the site, wrote to the Planning and Zoning Commission. She noted the religious order wouldn't be paying property taxes.

"As their contribution to this community will be prayer rather than property taxes the town will take a large loss on the currently paid property taxes," Elliott wrote. "As for prayer, I am sure we are all grateful for that but are capable of doing that ourselves."

us that we are reborn as God's children and are called to become like him. We become like God by practicing divine virtues such as compassion, mercy, justice and — above all — love, virtues that lead us to sacrifice for others.

Driving Interstate 70 from Colorado recently, I saw a sign that warned against picking up hitchhikers because of the proximity of a prison. Certainly we must sometimes weigh the risks of helping others against our safety and other concerns. But to live as God's children is to make sacrifices for others, such as giving time or money or donating blood or even a kidney to another in need.

Although we revere the soldier who throws himself on a grenade to protect his colleagues, few of us will literally lay down our lives for another. But all who follow Christ are called to be Good Samaritans over and over again as we grow to resemble the God whose children we are.

Pair recognized with Bethine Church Award

Two Sawtooth Valley residents have been recognized by the Sawtooth Society with the 2010 Bethine Church Award.

Nancy B. Williams of Stanley received the private sector award, while Kelly Jardine, who for the last several years was the U.S. Forest Service's deputy area ranger for the Sawtooth National Recreation Area, received the public sector award.

The award is named for Bethine Church, the Sawtooth Society's founding president. The honor recognizes up to two individuals for exemplary service toward the protection and betterment of the natural, historical and recreational qualities of the 756,000-acre SNRA.

"Both Nancy and Kelly epitomize the giving nature that the award is meant to recognize," said Society President Paul Hill.

The recipients were honored at an event in the Sawtooth Valley on Sept. 23.

The Sawtooth Society, formed in 1997, is a non-profit and nonpartisan organization dedicated exclusively to serving as an advocate for the SNRA, preserving open space and enhancing its recreation facilities and services.

Refuge

Bhutanese dirty looks, Summer said.

But more importantly, the Kabakoros were concerned that the Bhutanese weren't able to worship how they wanted. So Ratu encouraged them to start their own service. At first, the refugees demurred, but with a little prodding and support from Ratu and Summer, started putting together their service.

Their first meeting, which took place in September, drew about 50 people. One of the refugees led the service, which included Bible readings and songs, all in Nepali. The Kabakoros' daughter Selah has even learned some of the Nepali songs, one of which has a similar melody to a Western hymn.

"For us, it is really a glimpse of what heaven will be like," Summer said.

At the Twin Falls First United Methodist Church, Burundian refugees have started their own service on Thursdays and Saturdays. The priest preaches in Swahili and the Saturday meetings are hours-long, said Duke Wiseman, who helped the refugees organize the services.

Ibrahim Nzigirabarya, who attends on Saturdays, said American churches are slightly different than what he is used to. In Burundi, sermons focus less on Jesus and more on God and the holy spirit, he said. There also is more singing and dancing in Burundian services.

Not all refugees organize their own services. A handful of Eritrean refugees from northern Africa attend St. Ignatius Orthodox Church in Twin Falls.

When the first Eritreans arrived in Twin Falls about a year ago, they walked across town to worship, said Alexandra McKeever of St. Ignatius. Now, congregants have organized carpools to help several Eritreans attend, and one older gentleman wears traditional Eritrean dress, McKeever said.

Father Mark Kerr of St. Ignatius said the refugees' worship styles are similar, although the language barrier sometimes presents problems. But they are at home in his church.

"They seem to be a pretty religious people, a pious people," Kerr said.

For just as the body is one and has many members, and all the members of the body are one, so it is with Christ.

All his children

I'm not a betting man, but if I were I'd give about 1,000-to-1 odds that within two minutes after time expires in some big football game this week-end, somebody will stick a microphone in the face of some sweaty player who will gratefully thank God for helping his team to victory.

This will be faith-affirming to some viewers, while skeptics will wonder if God really cares which team wins football games. As for me, I'll be thinking about a lovely high school senior named Colleen.

And smiling. Wistfully. Please allow me to explain. There were two high schools in the city in which I grew up. For most of my early life, I lived in Bountiful Braves territory. Our cross-town rivals were the Viewmont Vikings, and the rivalry was intense. Tempers almost always flared during games, and not just on the field.

One time during a basketball game, their cheerleaders stole some prop from our cheerleaders and our letter-men stormed across the court to get it back. Police had to step in to help the respective school administrators calm things down. It was fierce and, in a weird adolescent (sorry for the redundancy) way, sort of fun.

But my Dad ruined all of that when, midway through my junior year, he moved our family to a new house smack dab in the middle of Viewmont territory. Suddenly I was not only sleeping among the enemy, I was living and working and going to church with them, too.

Turns out, they weren't all that bad. In fact, some of them were pretty cool. Jim was the student body president at Viewmont; he was also my friend. Scott was one of the greatest guys I'd ever met, and he and I quickly bonded and became like brothers. Clyde was — OK, Clyde was cocky. But hey, we had cocky athletes at Bountiful, too.

But there was nobody at Bountiful quite like Colleen. Sure, we had beautiful girls at my school. Lots of them. But Colleen was — what's the next level beyond beautiful? Stunning? Gorgeous? Exquisite? She was all that and more. She had a buoyant personality. She was kind and caring, smart and humble. Most incredible of all, she seemed to sort of like me. There is nothing more attractive in a woman than that. And so I sort of liked her right back.

VALUE SPEAK

During the football season my senior year, we traveled across town to Viewmont for the big rivalry game. A region championship was at stake. Emotions were high. The police even brought the guard dogs, who had to be going crazy trying to sniff their way through autumn air thick with the mixed aromas of field turf, sweat, Ben Gay, hair spray, Brut and Clearasil.

While fanatical, partisan energy swirled all around me, I sat in the bleachers feeling — I don't know — ambivalent. I wasn't apathetic. I cared about the game. I just didn't care who won it. There were people on both sides — players, cheerleaders and fans — who I cared about. I wanted them all to be happy and successful (except for Clyde, who, unfortunately, had a great game). And so I found myself paying little attention to the scoreboard, and just hoping that all of my friends played well, had fun and were safe.

And I'm guessing that's sort of how God feels as He looks down on all of the football games each week-end, from high school to pro (assuming, of course, that He is inclined to check in on such things — and why wouldn't He, with such great seats?). He probably won't be doing any cheers or singing any school songs or throwing the TV remote at the wall when His team fumbles.

My guess is — brace yourselves, Cowboy fans — He doesn't even have a team that He favors. I'll bet He'll just be hoping that all His children do well, have fun and are safe. In fact, I'll give you 1,000-to-1 odds on that.

Even though I don't think He's a betting man, either.

Vatican taps investigator for group tied to Legion

By Nicole Winfield
Associated Press writer

VATICAN CITY — The Vatican has named a Spanish archbishop to investigate a cult-like group affiliated with the Legionaries of Christ, the conservative religious order disgraced by revelations its founder sexually abused seminarians and fathered three children.

Monsignor Ricardo Blazquez, archbishop of Valladolid, Spain, will head the probe into the so-called consecrated women of the Legion's lay movement Regnum Christi, according to an internal e-mail from the Legion's administrative branch. The Vatican confirmed the nomination late Wednesday.

Regnum Christi is a community of some 70,000 Catholics in 30 countries who have regular jobs and families yet help promote the movement's aim of bringing people closer to Christ through missionary-type work.

Some 900 of Regnum Christi's most devout are "consecrated women," single lay Catholics who make promises of poverty, chastity and obedience much like nuns do and work full-time for Regnum Christi, recruiting new members by running schools, summer camps and adult programs.

In an investigative report over the weekend, The Associated Press exposed the cult-like conditions in which these women live. According to the testimony of former members and Regnum Christi's own unpublished statutes and rules, family members are kept at a distance, minute rules dictate nearly every hour of the day, members are told how to eat, speak and dress and what types of TV they can watch — all in the name of God's will.

The Vatican announced in May it was investigating the consecrated members after a series of abuses came to light during an eight-month Vatican probe into the Legion, a secretive religious order beloved by Pope John Paul II but now discredited by the revelations of the double life led by its founder, the Rev. Marcial Maciel.

Maciel had been dogged for decades by allegations he sexually abused seminarians. But his Vatican protectors prevented any action from being taken against him until 2006 — a year after Pope Benedict XVI was elected pope — when the Vatican ordered him to a lifetime of penance and prayer.

He died in 2008 at age 87. Benedict in May appointed a papal delegate to take over the Legion and rewrite its constitutions. The delegate in turn named four commissioners to help, including Monsignor Brian Farrell, a high-ranking Vatican official and Legion priest, as well as the Rev. Gianfranco Ghirlanda, a canon lawyer and former rector of the Jesuits' Pontifical Gregorian University in Rome.

Their names, and that of Blazquez, were announced in an internal e-mail obtained Wednesday by the AP from Grupo Integer, the Legion and Regnum Christi's administrative and management branch.

Current and former consecrated members say the last few months have been full of upheaval.

"It's not an easy time. I certainly never dreamed things would turn out this way," Mary Mather, who was consecrated in 1996 and now runs Regnum Christi youth programs in Chicago, said during a conference call this summer with the Legion's communications' director.

Idaho Public Television to air 'God in America'

Times-News

Idaho Public Television will air a three-part series called "God in America" beginning Oct. 11.

The series, which airs at 9 p.m. Oct. 11-13, is an in-depth exploration of the 400-year history of the intersection of religion and public life in the United States, from the first European settlements to the 2008 presidential election.

A co-production of "American Experience" and "Frontline," this six-hour special presents two parts each night and examines how religious dissidents helped shape the American concept of religious liberty and the controversial evolution of that ideal in the

The series also looks at how religious freedom and waves of new immigrants and religious revivals fueled competition in the religious marketplace, how movements for social reform — from abolition to civil rights — galvanized men and women to put their faith into political action, and

On the other ends of the spectrum are the Intimacy Zone, for times when couples feel very close, and the No-Zone, where the relationship is not functioning well.

With this model, Rasmussen teaches that intimacy isn't an everyday occurrence. "Intimacy happens in moments," he said. "It's not a constant thing."

Although it may not be realistic to expect a continuous connection with a spouse, it is helpful to be aware of behaviors that bring that loving feeling. Or, what makes it go away. Disagreements, disappointments and even regular day-to-day events can make couples feel distant.

"Every behavior we do in a relationship manages that closeness," Rasmussen said. "Some behaviors bring you closer together, others push you farther apart or help you maintain a comfortable distance. Do whatever you can to understand how you do true intimacy."

Couples often feel closeness and understanding when working through problems together, says Ron McMillan, co-author of the New York Times bestseller "Crucial Conversations."

"If you're not able to solve problems together and talk through issues and resolve them, any problem will trip you up," said McMillan, co-founder of

"We belittle the other person or say things that inflict harm. When someone is hurting you then you don't feel safe with them."

— Ron McMillan, co-author of the New York Times bestseller "Crucial Conversations"

VitalSmarts in Provo. (VitalSmarts is a corporate training and organizational performance company.) "If you're able to talk through problems you can endure anything."

But talking through anything requires, well, talking, and many couples say this isn't their strength. McMillan says one thing every couple can do to improve their communication is to make it safe for spouses to talk.

McMillan and his co-authors undertook a 12-year study of hundreds of business people identified by their peers as good communicators. One of the things learned in their research is that master communicators made it safe for other people to talk to them. These communicators could talk to virtually anyone in a company, above or below them, about nearly everything, he says.

"If I don't feel safe talking to you I am very reluctant to disclose anything," McMillan explained. "If I really understand that your intent is to help and not hurt, then I am very willing to disclose to you."

According to McMillan, there are two critical factors that make people feel safe to talk. The first is mutual purpose and the second is mutual respect. To illustrate mutual purpose, McMillan gave the example of a couple arguing about money. If that couple stops to discuss the bigger picture of why they are talking about money — because they want to get out of debt, because they want to purchase a home — they are establishing a mutual purpose, McMillan says. This makes a couple feel united, like they are standing together to accomplish things.

The second factor, mutual respect, is typically where conversations go awry.

"This is where most of us blow it," McMillan said. "We belittle the other person or say things that inflict harm. When someone is hurting you then you don't feel safe with them. It starts feeling like your intent isn't to help me. All of a sudden I start questioning that mutual purpose."

Communicate positively as often as you can

Too often, couples only talk to each other about problems or issues. Listing everything that is wrong in a situation or relationship is an easy way to talk oneself into a depression, said John Bytheway, well-known Latter-day Saint speaker and author on a newly released talk on CD.

One way to increase positive exchanges is to write a note or send a text, he suggests. "Sometimes we think that is a very simple thing. Well, so was Moses raising the brazen serpent," Bytheway said in the talk, "5 Things You Can Do Today to Bless Your Marriage," (Deseret Book, Salt Lake City).

Two messages are conveyed when a spouse takes the time to write a note. The first is the actual words, or the intended message, and the second is what communicators refer to as a meta-message. Meta-messages includes things like, "She was thinking about me," and "he was thinking about me."

"This has a tremendous amount of power," Bytheway said. "Don't ever underestimate a little note like that. It's huge. This will change the spirit of your marriage immediately. It's not expensive. It's not time-consuming. It's not rocket science and you can do it tonight."

Nada Lois Phillips Kimbrough

JEROME — Nada L. Kimbrough, lifelong resident of Jerome, went home to be with our Lord Jesus Christ on Thursday, Sept. 30, 2010. She was 96.

Nada was born Sept. 16, 1914, at Preston, Idaho, the fifth of 10 children born to William S. Phillips and Lois Vay Maxfield Phillips. At an early age, she moved to the Buhl area, where she was reared and educated.

She married Ernest D. Kimbrough on Oct. 19, 1929, in Caldwell. Together they raised four children. Ernie and Nada farmed at Buhl and Castleford for many years before settling in Jerome in 1948, where they farmed until they started Kimbrough Livestock Trucking. Nada worked many jobs in Jerome and was an avid bowler for many years.

She is survived by two daughters, Darlene (Billy Joe) Johnson of Jerome and Nadene (James) Gillespie of Twin Falls; and daughters-in-law, Della Kimbrough of Twin Falls and Lola Kimbrough of Kimberly. She is also survived by 14 grandchildren, 54 great-grandchildren, 77 great-great-grandchildren and many extended family members and friends. She was preceded in death by her husband; and two sons, Clifford Kimbrough and Marvin Kimbrough.

A visitation will be held Sunday evening, Oct. 3, at Farnsworth Mortuary Chapel, 1343 S. Lincoln in Jerome, where family and friends may call from 6 to 8 p.m. and again Monday, Oct. 4, one hour prior to the service. The funeral will be conducted at 2 p.m. Monday, Oct. 4, also at Farnsworth Mortuary, with Pastor David Callen officiating. Interment will follow in the Jerome Cemetery.

Lucille Arkoosh Wilson

HAMMETT — Lucille Arkoosh Wilson, 92, of Hammett, passed away peacefully Thursday, Sept. 30, 2010, at her home while surrounded by family and close friends.

A rosary will be held at 7 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 3, at Our Lady of Limerick Catholic Church. A funeral Mass will be held at 11 a.m. Monday, Oct. 4, at Our Lady of Limerick Catholic Church in Glenss Ferry, and burial will follow at the Glenn Rest Cemetery in Glenss Ferry. Arrangements are under the direction of Rost Funeral Home, McMurtrey Chapel in Mountain Home.

Lucille was born April 6, 1918, in Gooding, where she and her five siblings were raised on a sheep ranch. Following high school, Lucille traveled to South Bend, Ind., to attend St. Mary's College, where she earned a degree in education. Following college, Lucille returned to Idaho, where she met Wilbur F. Wilson at a Wool Grower's convention in Boise. The couple was married April 16, 1945, at St. John's Cathedral in Boise. After their marriage, Lucille returned with Wilbur to Hammett to continue the Wilson farming and ranching tradition and raise a family.

Lucille and Wilbur had two daughters, Mary Alyce Wilson and Ann Teresa Wilson. Lucille and Wilbur raised their daughters on the ranch in Hammett and passed the ranching tradition on to them. Lucille's Catholic faith was the foundation of her spiritual life. She enjoyed gardening, cooking, baking and reading. She loved to throw parties; she loved to be outside in the summer sun. But most of all, Lucille loved her family and friends. Her time spent with Wilbur, on the ranch and in the mountains, created lasting memories and stories, which she recounted joyfully until her life's end.

Lucille was preceded in death by her husband, Wilbur F. Wilson; three brothers; and one sister. She is survived by her two daughters, three grandchildren, four great-grandchildren and one sister, as well as the Zabala family of Indian Cove, Idaho.

To honor Lucille, contributions may be made to Our Lady of Limerick Church, P.O. Box 216, Glenss Ferry, ID 83623, or the American Heart Foundation, 270 S. Orchard, Suite B, Boise, ID 83705.

Maid dispute could hurt Whitman's Latino strategy

By Samantha Young
Associated Press writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The airwaves in California have been dominated by images of a teary immigrant housekeeper claiming she was mistreated by her billionaire employer and turned away when she asked for citizenship help.

It's far from the message Republican Meg Whitman wants to send to the state's crucial Latino voting bloc as she runs for governor.

Whitman is accused of knowingly having the illegal immigrant housekeeper from Mexico on her payroll for several years in a revelation that has throttled her campaign just as she prepares for a Spanish-language debate Saturday against Democratic opponent Jerry Brown. She needs Latino voters to win in Democratic-leaning California.

Whitman has sought to cast the story in a positive way — careful not to demonize the housekeeper while calling her an extended member of the family. Whitman noted how she and her husband paid her the usual $23-an-hour fee even when they were away on vacation and said the woman is being manipulated by Democratic operatives connected to the campaign of Brown.

Even so, the image of a tough-on-immigration gubernatorial candidate getting ensnared in a messy controversy over the legality of her household help is not helpful to a Republican trying to attract the Hispanic vote.

sonal one for many in the Hispanic community, and such a scenario playing out in a campaign could hurt Whitman, some experts say.

"The message she sent is a distant, patronizing figure who is willing to use immigrants but doesn't understand their plight," said Louis DeSipio, chairman of Chicano-Latino Studies at the University of California, Irvine. "To the extent Meg Whitman did reach out to Latinos, she's probably lost that initiative."

Whitman addressed the

AROUND THE WEST

IDAHO CWI: Logo on campaign flier 'inappropriate'

BOISE — The College of Western Idaho says the school's logo was inappropriately used on a campaign flier.

The flier advertised a town hall meeting on the Nampa campus with Democrat Stan Olson, who is challenging Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna, a Republican.

College spokeswoman Jennifer Couch says both candidates were invited to a question-and-answer session Wednesday, though Luna was unable to attend.

Couch says the flier, which included a photo of Olson, improperly gave the impression of support from CWI. The college hosts candidates and elected officials for speaking engagements but does not give endorsements.

Olson campaign manager Nick Swanson apologized, saying the campaign erred and didn't mean to give the impression that the college was endorsing Olson.

Ex-Canyon County worker sentenced for theft

NAMPA — A former Canyon County employee convicted of embezzling from the Sheriff's Mounted Posse has been sentenced to up to a year in jail and ordered to pay $11,000 in restitution.

Cori Hampton pleaded guilty in July to two felony counts of grand theft by unauthorized access. The Idaho Press Tribune reports 3rd District Judge Juneal Kerrick also sentenced Hampton Thursday to five years of probation, 90 days of labor with the Sheriff's Inmate Labor Detail and 60 days of other community service.

Prosecutors say Hampton took the money while serving as volunteer treasurer/secretary for the posse from 2006 to 2009. She left her job as a clerk in the county commissioner's office in September 2009.

Canyon County prosecutor resigns over contract

NAMPA — Canyon County Prosecutor John Bujak has resigned after two years in public office over his contract to handle misdemeanor prosecutions for the city of Nampa.

Canyon County Commissioners say they accepted Bujak's resignation early Friday. Deputy prosecutor Tim Fleming is scheduled to take over Bujak's duties as interim prosecutor.

Commissioners confirmed that Bujak owed the county about $288,000 at the end of their fiscal year, which fell on Thursday, after covering expenses from his contract with Nampa city officials.

County Clerk Bill Hurst told the Idaho Press-Tribune a $71,000 that Bujack wrote him Thursday had not yet cleared.

Bujack unseated four-term county prosecutor Dave Young in 2008, leaving his job at a Nampa law practice.

College offers math course for parents

IDAHO FALLS — Stevens-Henager College is offering a "Math for Moms and Dads" course at its Idaho Falls education center.

Dean of education Kary Ledbetter says the goal of the three-week class is to help parents help their children with their math homework.

Idaho Falls pediatrician Eric Olson tells the Post Register he's taking the class to get a better idea of how his 12-year-old son learns math.

Traci Phippen, a substitute teacher and parent, also wants to learn how schools are teaching math skills so she can better explain it.

Jennifer Ellsworth says she couldn't help her older son with his homework when he reached sixth grade, and she wants to be able to help her daughter with that level of math next year.

Tamarack Resort group hopes to open ski slopes

BOISE — A group of homeowners at the defunct Tamarack Resort in central Idaho says it's working to open the ski slopes this winter.

The group is selling season passes, plans to hire 65 workers, and hopes to get five lifts running on Dec. 20 and continue through April 3, operating Thursdays through Sundays.

Tim Flaherty, Tamarack Municipal Association general manager, said the group hopes to hire many former Tamarack workers.

"Word is getting out among the mountain pros that winter sports are returning to this resort, and we're grateful to be able to secure the services of these experts," Flaherty told the Idaho Statesman.

Homeowners have contributed $250,000 to reopen the lifts, said Tamarack homeowner Doug Dvorak. He also said the association anticipates ticket sales will bring in $1.5 million to cover a $500,000 projected payroll.

On another front, Tamarack Resort has moved to have a federal judge appoint a restructuring officer to help sell the resort.

Tamarack lawyers asked U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Terry Myers to let Michael Fleischer oversee the sale. The resort shuttered lifts in controversy head-on during a news conference Thursday in Santa Monica and will get another chance today when she and Brown meet in their second debate in Fresno. This one is sponsored by Univision and is targeted toward a Hispanic audience.

At the same time, the controversy also could risk Whitman's support among two other key voting blocs: independent voters, who comprise about 20 percent of the electorate, and conservatives, who might question why Whitman didn't report her housekeeper to federal immigration authorities when she acknowledged being in the country illegally in June 2009.

Nancy Bolanos, a 31-year-old medical biller in Fresno, is a registered Democrat who said and she's getting annoyed by the governor's race because it's getting "dirty." She said Whitman's stance on immigration has turned her off on the candidate.

"I was leaning towards Meg Whitman until the whole immigration thing came on," Bolanos said.

March 2009. It failed to repay a $250 million loan to investors led by Credit Suisse Group, and interest and penalties have been piling up while the case languishes in the courts.

UTAH Jury gets case in Utah library explosion trial

SALT LAKE CITY — A federal jury in Utah has adjourned for the weekend without reaching a verdict in the trial of an Illinois man accused of bombing a downtown Salt Lake City library in 2006.

Court officials said the jury went home after closing arguments Friday in the trial of Thomas Zajac. Jurors are due to return for deliberations on Monday.

The 57-year-old Zajac is fighting charges that could get him decades in prison in the September 2006 blast that damaged a library window and forced 400 people to flee. No one was injured.

Prosecutor Eric Benson told jurors Zajac was angry about his son's 2004 drunken-driving arrest by Salt Lake City police.

MONTANA Minimum wage going up

HELENA, — Montanans making minimum wage will get a raise Jan. 1.

State Labor Commissioner Keith Kelly said Friday the cost-of-living increase is 10 cents an hour, bringing the minimum wage to $7.35.

Montana voters passed Initiative 151 in 2006 that sets the state minimum wage at the greater of either the current state or federal minimum wage. It also added a cost-of-living adjustment to the state minimum wage based on the Consumer Price Index.

Tester pushes U.S. to bring back old guns

HELENA, — U.S. Sen. Jon Tester is pushing the State Department to bring back thousands of old WWII-vintage rifles from South Korea so citizens can buy them through a government program.

The State Department previously rejected South Korea's proposal to sell its surplus of American-made M1 Carbines and M1 Garand rifles to U.S. buyers.

Tester says that agency is wrong to declare the firearms could "be exploited by individuals seeking firearms for illicit purposes."

PUBLIC COMMENTS SOUGHT ON LOW-INCOME WEATHERIZATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

The State of Idaho will accept public comment on its American Recovery and Reinvestment Act funding plan for the U.S. Department of Energy's Low-Income Weatherization Assistance Program. The ARRA State Plan is available for review at Community Action Partnership Association of Idaho, located at 5400 W. Franklin Rd., Suite G in Boise, Idaho. A public hearing on the plan will be held from 9:00-10:30 am on Thursday, October 7, 2010 at Community Action Partnership Association of Idaho, located at 5400 W. ON PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO THE CASSIA COUNTY CODE'S ZONING REGULATIONS CONCERNING REZONE OF AREA AT 600 WEST 0 SOUTH (OLD HOBSON BEET DUMP) FROM RESIDENTIAL AGRICULTURAL ZONE TO INDUSTRIAL COMMERCIAL ZONE.

BE IT KNOWN that the Board of County Commissioners for Cassia County, Idaho shall hold public hearing on the proposal and recommendation to amend the Cassia County Zoning Regulations and Zoning Map to change the zoning district designation from Residential Agriculture Zone to Industrial Commercial Zone for the old Hobson Beet Dump, commonly known to be located at 600 West 0 South, Cassia County, Idaho. The legal description of the area proposed for zoning change designation is on file at the Office of the County Administrator, Room #4, Cassia County Courthouse, 1459 Overland Avenue, Burley, Idaho. This legal description and other matters filed of public record pertaining to this petition may be viewed by the public during normal business hours at the Office of the County Administrator.

This hearing will be held on Monday, the 18th day of October, 2010, beginning at 11:00 a.m., at the Cassia County Commission Chambers, Room #3, Cassia County Courthouse, 1459 Overland Avenue, Burley, Idaho.

The matter of proposed changes and amendments and repeals to the zoning ordinance were heard before the Cassia County Planning and Zoning Commission on Thursday, September 16, 2010. The Petition for rezoning in this matter was filed by Bowen Oil Company. At conclusion of that hearing the Planning and Zoning Commission recommended adoption of the proposed change.

All interested persons and citizens shall have an opportunity to be heard on this matter. At the public hearing, those signing up to testify concerning the proposed amendments will be allotted time to do so, with the total hearing time being divided in equal measures amongst those signing up. The Commission reserves the right to limit repetitive testimony and to halt irrelevant testimony. Spokespersons for those groups sharing the same or similar testimony are encouraged.

PUBLISH: October 2, 2010

Today is Saturday, Oct. 2, the 275th day of 2010. There are 90 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Oct. 2, 1985, actor Rock Hudson died at his home in Beverly Hills, Calif. at age 59 after battling AIDS.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1780, British spy John Andre was hanged in Tappan, N.Y. during the Revolutionary War.

In 1835, the first battle of the Texas Revolution took place as American settlers fought Mexican soldiers near the Guadalupe River; the Mexicans ended up withdrawing.

In 1869, political and spiritual leader Mohandas K. Gandhi was born in Porbandar, India.

In 1944, Nazi troops crushed the two-month-old Warsaw Uprising, during which a quarter of a million people were killed.

In 1958, the former French colony of Guinea in West Africa proclaimed its independence.

In 1967, Thurgood Marshall was sworn as an associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court as the court opened its new term.

In 1970, one of two chartered twin-engine planes flying the Wichita State University football team to Utah crashed into a mountain near Silver Plume, Colo., killing 31 of the 40 people on board.

In 1990, the Senate voted 90-9 to confirm the nomination of Judge David H. Souter to the Supreme Court.

Ten years ago: In his first public address since a disputed election, Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic branded his opponents puppets of the West. (A wave of unrest aimed at driving Milosevic from power swept Yugoslavia, and the government responded by arresting dozens of strike leaders.)

Five years ago: A tour boat capsized on New York's Lake George, killing 20 elderly passengers. Playwright August Wilson died in Seattle at age 60. Actor-comedian Nipsey Russell died in New York at age 87.

One year ago: The International Olympic Committee, meeting in Copenhagen, chose Rio de Janeiro to be the site of the 2016 Summer Olympics; Chicago was eliminated in the first round, despite a last-minute in-person appeal by President Barack Obama. A man accused of stalking ESPN reporter Erin Andrews and secretly videotaping her inside her hotel room was arrested at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport. (Michael David Barrett later pleaded guilty to interstate stalking and was sentenced to 2 1/2 years in federal prison.) Marek Edelman, 90, the last surviving leader of the ill-fated 1943 Warsaw ghetto revolt against the Nazis (not to be confused with the above-mentioned 1944 uprising), died in Warsaw.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend, "Jake," dumped me two years ago. Since then, we have tried to remain friends. He texts or calls to check up on me, tells me he misses me, calls me pet names and recites lines from my favorite movies.

Although I appreciate Jake's efforts to stay friends, I'm confused because he was the one who broke off our relationship. He has said in the past that letting me go is something he will always regret, but he hasn't made an attempt to get back together.

Abby, I feel that Jake is stringing me along. I enjoy our friendship, but in my heart I'll always want more. I can't shake the feeling that he still loves me. At what point should I just give up and let go?

— LEFT HANGING

Jeanne Phillips

DEAR LEFT HANGING: How about right now? But before you do, tell Jake that this "friendship" has prolonged the pain of your breakup, that what you feel for him isn't platonic — and you will always want more. If he does still love you, it will be his opening to declare himself. However, if he doesn't, then for your sake, cut the cord, because you won't be free to find someone else until you do.

DEAR ABBY: I was married in Las Vegas six months ago in a quickie wedding so my husband could put me on his health insurance. I used my late grandmother's ring for the ceremony, assuming that "Harry" would buy one for me shortly. It still hasn't happened, and he makes it very clear he doesn't intend to. Harry claims we don't have any money. However, we are buying a house, and he constantly spends money on his hobbies.

I am starting to regret the whole package — not having a real wedding, no ring, no proposal. I am so resentful I am considering ending our marriage over it. I need to know if there's a way to fix this.

— RINGLESS IN RICHMOND, TEXAS

DEAR RINGLESS: When most mature couples marry, they have gotten to know each other well enough to know if their values and priorities are similar. Apparently, you and Harry tied the knot so quickly there wasn't time for that to happen. A way to "fix this" would be through marriage counseling — provided you and Harry are willing to spend the money that way. Please suggest it.

DEAR ABBY: After my wife's funeral, many of our friends returned to the mortuary to collect the flowers they had sent. Some of them were very rude, insisting that because they had sent them, the flowers belonged to them.

This has upset our daughter, who was in charge of sending thank-you notes. Now she doesn't know who sent what because we were too distracted to look at the cards on the flowers. Is this something new, or are those people just rude?

— WIDOWER IN LIVINGSTON, MONT.

DEAR WIDOWER: When flowers have been sent — whether for a birthday or for an occasion like a funeral — they are no longer the property of the sender. They belong to whomever they were sent to. What your "many friends" did was insensitive and rude.

As to what your daughter should say in her thank-you notes, I suggest a short message to those who signed the memorial book at the funeral service: "Our family thanks you for attending Mother's funeral, and for your compassion during this sad time. Your thoughtfulness is deeply appreciated."

IF OCTOBER 2 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Keep it under wraps. Between now and the first of the year, don't make any major purchases, borrow money on credit or make significant changes or decisions. This is a period of time when you must tend to existing responsibilities without voluntarily taking on any additional ones. As luck would have it, you may be forced to take on extra obligations at work or due to children, but you will bear up well if you do your duty. Things begin to change for the better in December. January is a very good time to cash in on new opportunities, ask for favors or make and launch important plans.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Flirt until it hurts. A little giggle in your walk and a little giggle in your talk is all you need to attract someone's attention. Your light-hearted banter might turn on someone's deep-seated passions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Let someone else demonstrate a willingness to please you for a change. There is a glow of affection surrounding someone close. Set the mood by creating an atmosphere of relaxation and good cheer.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Bookkeepers balance the books, but the heart doesn't need an accountant. It is pleasant to reciprocate gift giving or invitations, but feelings are in a class by themselves. The more you give, the more you get.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You can set the record straight. Get key relationships back on track by offering sincere apologies or planning for joint adventures. Good guidance is available under these stars so listen to suggestions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Secrets sell. Leave some questions unanswered. An aura of mystery and glamour may attract the kind of attention you yearn to receive. Investigate new information carefully and you may unearth the truth.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be shrewd, but never crude, rude or lewd. Remember to say the right thing at the right time, but even more important, leave unsaid the wrong thing at the most inappropriate moment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Money can't buy you love, even if you spend freely. No matter how you look at it, you are likely to make a mistake if you spend money the minute you receive it. Hold off on big purchases or agreements.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your heart might pound when you think of love while the planet of love, Venus, travels through your sector of the zodiac. An unexpected message, card or gift may show up making your day memorable.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): It all adds up: one plus one equals two. Hook up with a special someone for sports, travel or games of chance. Call on a friend "in deed" to help you out if there are chores to be done this weekend.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are no longer a victim of moral ambiguity. You can now see clearly without needing to weigh right and wrong against expediency. Social activities thrive when they involve sports or exercise.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Seal deals through sheer sex appeal. You draw others closer through pure physical allure or can dazzle them by flaunting the appearance of power. Don't be afraid to share a secret passion.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You seem to have a view through a cosmic magnifying glass. It is easy for you to see where it is in your best interests to be a team player and where you should stand up for principles independently.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"To fall into a habit is to begin to cease to be."

— Miguel de Unamuno

Poland and Sweden have in the past adopted an unusual approach to selecting their national teams: Ten prequalified pairs from each country played the second stage of their respective trials against each other. Today's deal from those trials is a rarity because after West failed to find the killing lead against six spades, the only way for him to defeat the spade slam was to sacrifice his trump trick.

North-South found their way to a highly ambitious slam, one apparently doomed on West's natural lead of the heart ace. However Zdzislaw Laszczak, having put far too much faith in his opponents' bidding, elected to lead a club.

Declarer, Marten Gustafsson, won, played a diamond to his king, ruffed a club in dummy, then cashed the diamond ace to discard his losing heart. A diamond ruff in hand now set up the suit.

Despite this great start, declarer still needed trumps to be 2-2, with West holding the spade king and no more clubs, or he could force the dummy. Accordingly, Gustafsson led a low spade from hand toward dummy's queen. If West takes the king and returns a heart, declarer ruffs in hand and plays a spade to the queen. Dummy is now high.

Laszczak, despite being disconcerted by the knowledge that cashing the heart ace would have defeated the contract, was still focused enough to resist the automatic play. Instead, he played low on declarer's trump lead. Although dummy's queen won, the diamond suit was now dead, and the contract had to fail.

ANSWER: If your partner was weak with both majors, he would surely have passed three diamonds (or have bid spades earlier). I'd take this call as a game-try for diamonds, with spade values. Your extra diamond length should be enough for game, but just in case, stop off in four hearts along the way. The earlier bidding has made it clear that you can't hold more than a doubleton heart.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

CONFERENCE

How to attend

The 180th Semi-Annual General Conference of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will be held today and Sunday. Today's general sessions begin at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. The priesthood session for men and boys ages 12 and older begins at 6 p.m. Sunday general sessions begin at 9:30 a.m. (with the weekly half-hour broadcast of "Music and the Spoken Word") and 2 p.m.

All sessions are held in the Conference Center at 60 W. North Temple St. in Salt Lake City and have a duration of approximately two hours.

Ticket holders should be in their seats a half-hour prior to the start of each session. No one younger than age 8, including infants carried by parents, will be admitted. Sunday dress is encouraged. Language-translation headsets and American Sign Language interpretation are available.

Unoccupied seats are released to people in long lines of standby conferencegoers that curl around nearby Temple Square. Those wishing to stand by should arrive early and look for the end of the line that forms at the north gate of Temple Square. (Lines on the Conference Center premises are typically for ticket holders.) Overflow seating for all sessions is available in the Tabernacle, Assembly Hall, both Temple Square visitors' centers and the Joseph Smith Memorial Building.

The priesthood session can only be viewed at LDS meetinghouses (typically stake centers) that are equipped to receive church satellite broadcasts, or at the Conference Center and church facilities on Temple Square.

Biography of church president published

Daily Herald

Did you know that Latter-day Saint Church President Thomas S. Monson loves hunting and fishing, musical theater and Birmingham roller pigeons? That his favorite television show is "Perry Mason," and he's a diligent journal writer?

On Monday, Deseret Book will release "To the Rescue: The Biography of Thomas S. Monson," ($34.99) by award-winning screenwriter and author Heidi S. Swinton. The 588-page book chronicles the life of a man millions of Mormons revere as a prophet of God, and people throughout the world celebrate as a great humanitarian. The book is peppered with Monson's personal stories — some old favorites, many never heard before.

The following is an excerpt from the introduction of "To the Rescue," republished with permission.

It was a rainy, lackluster Sunday, December 2, 1979, when a gregarious Apostle of God with his long and purposeful stride entered the dreary Dresden hospital in the German Democratic Republic. The moment was quintessential Thomas S. Monson. Following a prompting, he had flown more than 5,200 miles and crossed behind the Iron Curtain at Checkpoint Charlie for one purpose — to give Inge Burkhardt a blessing.

Internet-savvy Latter-day Saints are called to testify about their beliefs at the new Mormon.org

By Cody Clark, Daily Herald

Speaking to newly minted graduates of Brigham Young University-Hawaii in 2007, Elder M. Russell Ballard of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles challenged his listeners to take advantage of the ongoing evolution of Internet self-publishing to share their religious beliefs with others. "The Internet allows everyone to be a publisher, to have his or her voice heard," Ballard said, "and it is revolutionizing society."

Ballard's message to departing BYU-H students, repeated for the benefit of LDS church members worldwide when his remarks were reprinted in Ensign magazine a few months later, is simple: Use the Internet to tell the world what you believe.

Earlier this summer, the church's Missionary Department delivered a powerful tool for Latter-day Saints looking for assistance in answering Ballard's challenge. The church's proselytizing arm has given a sweeping makeover to Mormon.org — the official website for people who want to learn about Mormons from Mormons — inviting ordinary church members to become the frontline soldiers of its online missionary effort.

Instead of having Mormon.org be focused on answering common questions about church doctrine (a function that it still serves), the redesigned site is geared first and foremost to present mini-portraits of individual church members. Visitors can browse profiles and read about the lives and personal faith of someone who looks like them, or works in a similar profession,

Members wanted

Ron Wilson, manager of Internet and marketing for the Missionary Department, said that church members who were told about the new Mormon.org when it was still in development responded enthusiastically. "The comments from the members are, 'Oh, finally,'" Wilson said. "Finally the church is letting us speak and giving us a presence to do this."

Ballard said that members are needed to participate in both large and small conversations about the church and its beliefs that take place continually online, whether or not anyone is present to accurately represent LDS teachings and practices. Latter-day Saints, Ballard said, "cannot stand on the sidelines

TO SIGN UP

To create a profile on Mormon.org, you need to have an LDS Account, which assigns each church member a unique username and password for use in accessing church websites. Members commonly use their account information to view ward and stake membership directories online, or when using ldsjobs.org, the church-sponsored employment search website. Head to mormon.org/create. If you have an LDS Account already, simply log in. If you don't have one, then you'll be prompted to create one. Follow the step-by-step process from there.

Artist Friberg brought Book of Mormon to life

Daily Herald

"Book of Mormon Stories" may be a catchy tune familiar to every Primary child. Trying to form a mental picture of many of those stories, however, would be impossible for many adults were it not for the work of renowned artist Arnold Friberg.

Friberg died July 1 at the age of 96 — but not before leaving a lifetime of exhilarating art that will continue to inspire viewers long after his passing.

Friberg's paintings truly brought the Book of Mormon to life for millions of readers. His depictions — from a strapping Nephi to a stripling warrior, from Abinadi appearing humbly before King Noah to Christ appearing in glory, and from Lehi and his family first spotting the land of promise to Mormon and Moroni overlooking the final destruction of their people a thousand years later — certainly augmented the reading experience for anyone who studied them.

Courtesy photo

LDS artist Arnold Friberg died July 1 at the age of 96, but not before leaving a lifetime of exhilarating art that will continue to inspire viewers long after his passing.

His illustrations were even a portal to conversion for some.

Vern G. Swanson, director of the Springville Art Museum, was a 14-year-old in Oregon when missionaries gave him a Book of Mormon. It was Friberg's paintings that immediately caught his attention.

"I was excited about the illustrations," said Swanson. "I could see truth in them — strength, beauty and truth. I was converted to the church through Arnold Friberg's paintings."

Another artist, Derek Hegsted, called Friberg his inspiration.

"He made the Book of Mormon live in a way nobody has since," Hegsted said. "He brought a spirit of confirmation with a couple of brush strokes. Where prophets took pages to portray a scene, he was able to do it with a few strokes of the brush."

Friberg also was known for his paintings of George Washington and Moses, the latter of which inspired scenes in Cecil B. DeMille's famous film "The Ten Commandments."

Friberg was honored posthumously Sept. 16 by Utah Valley University with the unveiling of a bust of the artist before dignitaries and family members in the Lakeview Room on the fourth floor of the UVU Library. The bust was sculpted by artist Ed Fraughton.

In an interview at age 92, Friberg was asked why he continued to paint.

"Do you want me to starve to death?" he retorted. "I've never held a job. I started out as a sign painter. I have to keep working. I hear people retire at the age of 50; I was just getting started."

Friberg studied at the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts and in 1940 moved to New York City and studied art with fellow student and peer Norman Rockwell.

"Norman Rockwell used actual people," Friberg said when asked about some of the people he painted in "The Risen Lord." "I don't do that. I just build characters. I like it to look as though it's been around for a couple of years. I use models, but I don't paint portraits."

Then without missing a step he added, "I'm not going to tell you any more (about how I work) because then you'll know how and I won't have a job anymore."

Super-size genealogy

New library in Riverton a giant leap forward for family history research

By Cody Clark, Daily Herald

Members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Utah and around the world have for many years gone to family history libraries at stake centers near their homes to search for information about their ancestors. For many church members, especially in Utah and other neighboring states with highly concentrated LDS populations, that may be about to change.

Earlier this summer at the church-owned Riverton Office Building (formerly owned by technology company Intel) in Riverton, FamilySearch public affairs director Paul Nauta introduced media members to the church's latest innovation in family history research: a state-of-the-art, 10,000-square-foot family history center with 126 computers and all of the latest genealogical technology.

"We closed 24 family history centers serving 88 stakes" in the south Salt Lake County region, Nauta said. "By pooling all of those resources, we can have a much better facility."

Nauta said that the new Riverton FamilySearch Library is a pilot project that, should it become popular with members, the church hopes to replicate elsewhere. The center is open six days a week and provides regular opportunities to take classes

Some of the features of the new library are also available via FamilySearch (www.familysearch.org), the church's ever-expanding online portal for family history research. FamilySearch employee Suzanne Curley said that the Riverton FamilySearch Library features research bays where visitors can do live online training sessions.

Curley said that the church frequently struggles to keep its many stake-level family history centers up-to-date, and that centralizing operations will make it easier, in the future, to stay abreast of new technology and stay connected to deepening pools of genealogical data. Most of all, she said, the center has a large concentration of tools and resources that will make it easier for people to do one-stop shopping for family history data.

"One of the center's greatest benefits," Curley said, "is to help people save time."

Daily Herald

A view of the new FamilySearch Library in Riverton, Utah.

Searching for Cody Clark

How much do you know about your own family tree? To demonstrate the breadth of information available at their new Riverton FamilySearch Library, FamilySearch officials invited the Daily Herald to meet one-on-one with a FamilySearch consultant.

I provided a standard four-generation pedigree chart, and FamilySearch consultant Tim Bingaman walked me through a small survey of historical documents — the sort of stuff that's more or less at the fingertips of someone skilled at using FamilySearch — that contain information about some of my ancestors.

Here are some of the things we found:

- My great-great-great-grandfather Benjamin Waldron, born in England in 1795, was a Captain of Ten in the Joseph Outhouse Company when he emigrated to Utah in 1856. (Source: "Mormon Pioneer Overland Trail, 1847-1868")
- Benjamin Waldron was married to Sally Lapham of New York (born 1799) until her death in 1855. Sally was the mother of my great-great-great-grandfather Gillespie Walter Waldron. Following Sally's death, however, Benjamin remarried, this time wedding a woman named Harriette from his native England. (Source: United States Census, 1850 and 1880)

- My great-grandfather Wallace Rich Clark, the son of Gillespie Waldron's daughter, Ann Elizabeth Waldron, applied for a marriage license on Sept. 5, 1911. His license to marry Jean Boyce was issued the next day, Sept. 6, 1911. (Source: "Marriage Records, 1887-1965," Salt Lake County, Utah)

Biography

Inge had been in the hospital nine weeks with complications from gall-bladder surgery that developed into pneumonia and a string of other ailments. The doctors recommended a second surgery — of questionable efficacy — in an operating room that had no heat and archaic equipment. When Elder Monson heard of her plight, he got on a plane. Without any prior planning, yet bidden by the Spirit and by his love for the Burkhardts, he traveled across the globe to minister to a single soul.

"We joined our faith and our prayers in providing her a blessing," Elder Monson recorded in his journal. The scene as he departed the hospital grounds will always stay with him. "When looking upward we saw Sister Burkhardt from her bedroom window waving farewell to us."

Looking upward is what Thomas S. Monson does best. He often quotes the verse:

But chief of all Thy wondrous work,
Supreme of all Thy plan,
Thou has put an upward reach
Into the heart of man.

The Burkhardts were trapped, as were a thousand other Latter-day Saints, in a country overrun with guards and guns. The government officials allowed religious worship, but anyone participating was suspect. Henry Burkhardt, president of the Dresden Mission for ten years, was singled out by the Communist government as the Church's representative in the land. It was hardly an honor. He did not advance at work; his children were denied educational opportunities; he and Inge were watched all the time.

Thomas S. Monson, following a prompting, flew more than 5,200 miles and crossed behind the Iron Curtain at Checkpoint Charlie for one purpose — to give Inge Burkhardt a blessing Dec. 2, 1979.

Ask Henry to recall the single most significant experience he had with Elder Monson during the two decades when the bold young Apostle supervised and visited East Germany, and the tears come quickly. Henry will bypass the meeting he attended with the nation's supreme leader, Erich Honecker, when Elder Monson asked for and received approval for missionaries to serve in East Germany, then known as the German Democratic Republic — though that day was deserving of front-page news. He will not point to the serene morning on the hill overlooking the Elbe River when Elder Monson blessed the land "for the advancement of the work" of the Lord Jesus Christ and His gospel and made seemingly impossible promises to the Saints held hostage by a totalitarian government. Nor will he describe the many meetings held in rattletrap cars parked on gloomy streets to avoid the ever-present listening devices as a small huddle of men learned from an Apostle how to move the Church forward in a godless land.

No. What stands out in Henry's mind is that day at the hospital when Elder Monson came just to bless Inge. It was a rescue mission.

While in the country, Elder Monson agreed to an impromptu meeting with the active priesthood leaders in the area; on short notice, thirty-seven of the thirty-nine attended. They met in the Leipzig "chapel," the men bundled in tattered clothing because the furnace had long since quit working. But there was "no lack of warmth in the hearts of the members," Elder Monson noted. "They had their scriptures with them, sang with gusto, and reflected a spirit of devotion to the gospel." And then he flew home.

Such is the ministry of the man — Thomas S. Monson, sixteenth President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, prophet, seer, and revelator.

Jesus Christ, in His ministry at the meridian of time, "went about doing good ... for God was with him." "4 He blessed the sick, restored sight to the blind, made the deaf to hear, and caused the halt and maimed to walk. He taught forgiveness by forgiving, compassion by being compassionate, devotion by giving of Himself, and love of His Father in Heaven by loving others — one at a time.

In like manner, Thomas S. Monson has spent his life going about doing good. He has lifted, encouraged, listened, counseled, and shared personal experiences, always for one single purpose — to encourage faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Mormon Tabernacle Choir sounds off about recording milestone

By Cody Clark, Daily Herald

In the notoriously fickle music industry, even the hottest recording artist can fall as flat as week-old soda in just a few short years. So it's no small accomplishment that the Mormon Tabernacle Choir has maintained the popularity of its music for an entire century.

At a press conference earlier this summer acknowledging the milestone, choir director Mack Wilberg said that the choir owes its continuing success to the sustained excellence of past choir members. "Those of us who are currently in the choir salute those who have come before us," Wilberg said.

On Sept. 1, it was 100 years to the day since the choir's first-ever recording session. Assistant Church Historian Richard E. Turley Jr. said that the Columbia Phonograph Company used large flared horns — microphone technology was in its infancy at the time — to capture the sound of the choir. Turley said the horns were hung on a line fixed to the balcony at either side of the Tabernacle (where the choir still rehearses).

"They had all of the musicians pack themselves tightly together," Turley said, so that they could sing directly into the horns. The choir members stood so close together that the women had to remove their hats.

It's no small accomplishment that the Mormon Tabernacle Choir has maintained the popularity of its music for an entire century.

The choir's first recording was of the hymn "We Thank Thee, O God, For a Prophet." Turley said that the sound quality wasn't considered good enough to produce records, however, so the original recording has been lost. The second attempt, "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy," was more successful, and the recording has been preserved to this day.

Choir general manager Scott Barrick said that the milestone is impressive not only because the choir, first organized in 1847, has been recording since 1910, but because of the consistency of its output. The choir has made more than 175 recordings in all — moving from vinyl, to cassettes, CDs and now digital sound files — Barrick said.

That includes 33 recordings just since 2003, the year that the choir created its own recording label. "It's an amazing, wonderful thing for each choir member to be a part of this legacy," Barrick said.

To commemorate its milestone achievement, the choir released the compilation CD "100 Years: The Most Requested Songs" a few months ahead of the Sept. 1 anniversary. The new recording rose to No. 1 on Billboard's Classical Albums chart and was still hovering in the Top 10 on Sept. 1 after 12 weeks in release.

Barrick said that Wilberg chose the songs that were included on the new CD, which features four newly released tracks — "Glorious Everlasting," "Danny Boy," "Bethlehemu" and "All People That on Earth Do Dwell" — in addition to such longtime favorites as "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Come, Thou Fount of Every Blessing," "Amazing Grace" and "Come, Come Ye Saints." In all, there are 32 songs on two discs.

One item certain to be of particular interest to students of history is that "100 Years" also comes with a bonus CD/DVD that features six vintage audio recordings, including the 1910 version of "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy," and 11 video recordings of choir performances filmed

Choir personnel manager Scott Woodbury, who sang bass in the choir for 16 years, said that he thought frequently during his own performances and recording sessions about the choir's long history of excellence. "We rerecorded some of the songs that I grew up singing that my mother had recorded," said Woodbury, whose mother was part of the choir for 20 years.

Lorraine Rowberry, a current choir member and soprano, said that hearing the vintage recording of "Let the Mountains Shout for Joy" was very moving. "I'm grateful that they tried to do the recording and that they were successful in doing the recording," Rowberry said. "How fun for us to be able to hear them."

The Vienna Boys Choir, which made its first recording in 1905, is the only recording artist, collective or individual, with a longer recording history than the Mormon Tabernacle Choir. Because the choir is an important ambassador for the church, the first thing that many people around the world associate with the word "Mormon," its legacy of recording will only continue to grow.

"Recording and broadcasting and touring and giving concerts," Barrick said, "that's how the choir fulfills its mission."

No discussion of the church in cyberspace is unimportant, Ballard said: "Perceptions of the church are established one conversation at a time."

The hope is that Mormon.org will be an easy way for people in the church to address a responsibility that all members have, but that relatively few are eager to embrace: Jesus Christ, as recorded in the New Testament, told his disciples to "teach all nations." Section 88 of the church's Doctrine and Covenants makes the message more explicit, directing Latter-day Saints that it "becometh every man who hath been warned to warn his neighbor."

Yet, for many Latter-day Saints, the repeated invitation to talk about their beliefs is easier heard than heeded. "Members of the church are sometimes nervous about talking to their friends or families" about their beliefs, Wilson said. People hesitate out of fear, he said, that they will alienate a friend or relative by dwelling on the sometimes contentious topic of religious belief.

Gary Lawrence, a polling and research expert who lives in California, said that all of the hesitation is muddying the waters. Lawrence, who has written a book about the subject, "How Americans View Mormonism: Seven Steps to Improve Our Image," said that 49 percent of all Americans — half, essentially — have a generally unfavorable view of Latter-day Saints. In many cases, he said, it's because they've never actually met one.

Courtesy LDS church

A view of the Salt Lake Temple. Mormon.org is a way for church members to share their beliefs with non-members across the globe.

Lawrence said he thinks Mormon.org is a step in the right direction. "I think it shows that we're learning how to explain ourselves."

In their own words

There are about 4,000 member profiles currently posted at Mormon.org, and Wilson said that there are roughly 20,000 more on the way. A profile includes the member's name and whatever biographical details they choose to include, photos (and video, in a few select instances) and a series of each individual member's responses to various prompts: "How I live my faith," or "Why attending church services has helped me," and so forth.

Jeff Decker, a married father of four who lives in Springville, is one of the members whose profile is part of the new site. Decker, 44, served an LDS mission to Argentina and met his wife at Brigham Young University, where he studied Spanish, history and art, or, as he put it, "Nothing I've applied in life."

Decker teaches Primary with his wife. He's been in an elder's quorum presidency.

He sounds like a typical unlikely candidate to be profiled on a website. "I'm not really computer savvy. I don't have MySpace or Facebook," Decker said. "I think that YouTube and all that are a pretty low form of pop culture."

Wilson said that the content of member profiles is up to the individual members who create them. "We don't edit at all," Wilson said. "I purposely made sure that we don't even have the ability to edit a profile."

Since profiles do contain member's individual responses to questions about LDS beliefs and practices, the church may point out potentially misleading information, when it finds it, to a profile's creator.

Even then, Wilson said, "We don't coach people, or tell them what to say."

People who visit the site may find typos, creative spellings or grammatical quirks. "There are some people who have written in all lower case," Wilson said, or — long live the Internet! — using all capital letters.

Helping kids behave in church

By Natalie Hollingshead
Herald correspondent

Taking young children to church can be a less-than-religious experience. Unlike many religious denominations where small children attend a nursery while parents and older children worship, Latter-day Saint families sit together for the main service, Sacrament Meeting.

This mixed company can make reverence a little tricky. Noisy outbursts, fidgety bodies and crushed Cheerios spread across the pew have caused many parents to wonder, “Why do I even bother?”

If you’ve ever asked yourself that question, take heart: You’re not alone.

The Daily Herald interviewed local child care experts for their thoughts on taking children to church. Read on for their tips on how to get through Sacrament Meeting with young children without throwing a tantrum of your own.

Remember the ultimate goal: If you’re bringing children to church, you likely want to share your beliefs with them as they mature. Taking a toddler to church regularly is a good way to let he or she know that church is a place that is important to you, says Genan Anderson, early childhood education program coordinator at Utah Valley University. Anderson, who has a Ph.D. in marriage, family and human development, is a mother to five and grandmother to 17.

“Try to remember what your ultimate goal is,” Anderson said. “You want going to church to be a positive thing. You want it to be someplace they want to go.”

Don’t get cross, spank or demean a toddler if he or she has trouble sitting still, she says. “Part of it is to separate the child’s behavior from your ego as a parent,” she said. “If you birthed a wiggly child that doesn’t make you less of a parent. If they can’t sit still in Sacrament, it’s not that they are naughty, it’s just that their little bodies can’t sit still.”

Loving tenderness: Anderson’s philosophy with her children and grandchildren is to make church a cuddling time. “Oftentimes as parents we are so busy going here and there and everywhere that we don’t have time to just hold and pet and otherwise have that physical contact with our children,” Anderson said. Have a child sit next to you with your arm around them, gently scratch their back or hold small ones on your lap so they learn to associate church with feelings of quiet, closeness and love.

Lower expectations, appropriately: Some toddlers aren’t snugglers. Others simply can’t sit still. “The expectation needs to match the child,” Anderson said. “Some children can at a fairly early age sit and stay inside a pew. Others, the minute they figure out they can go under the pew they go up the front or out the back and who knows where to find them.”

When they are around 8 years old, however, most kids should be able to sit quietly, said Martha Hammond, a mother to eight and grandmother to 18. “The most important thing is to talk about the expectations at home over and over and over,” said Hammond, a counselor in her Orem stake’s Primary presidency. “I always told my kids that ‘There are no books, no toys, no food, no nothing’ until after the Sacrament.”

Parents with wiggly children may want to set goals before each meeting. Gradually increase the time spent sitting inside the chapel. “If you have a child that literally can’t sit still, plan to attend Sacrament Meeting in the hallway,” Anderson said. “I try to make it so that what happens in the meeting is a little more appealing than what happens outside the meeting.” She gives snacks inside the meeting, but no treats when sitting in the foyer. Don’t let a child wander freely and don’t take them constantly in and out of the chapel.

Bring reinforcements: One method for helping children to behave in church is to bring a few toys they can play with. Stick with uncomplicated toys that encourage quiet behaviors, like board books or coloring books and crayons. “Obviously, any toys that make noise I would suggest against at church,” said Sara Earl, director of Adventure Time Preschool and Childcare in Provo. “Avoid hard toys that make noise when you bang them together.” It’s not a great idea to bring cars or Transformers that invite vocal play, such as car noises. Soft toys like blankets or small stuffed animals are tactile and usually soothing.

Keep books and the like LDS-themed if you can, Hammond suggests. Read and explain them to children before Sunday so that they can sit quietly and look at the pictures without asking loud questions, she says.

No matter what you pack, be careful not to overdo it. “Less is generally better than more,” Anderson says. “Bring the least amount you’ll need to entertain. This is especially true with 18-month to 2-year-olds. When they see the bag they have to have everything emptied out before they decide what to play with.”

Snacks are also a good idea. Stick with a few small treats kids can easily hold in their fingers, one at a time, and pop straight into their mouth, Earl suggests. “Things like granola bars tend to crumble and get messy after kids suck on them,” she said. A drink in a sippy cup is a good idea for very small children to avoid trips to a water fountain.

Switch up what you bring: At Adventure Time, “rainy day bags” are pulled out when inclement weather prevents kids from going outside. These bags contain special new activities that excite the toddlers and keep their attention well because they aren’t used often, Earl says. This same concept is useful for a Sunday bag. Include in it a few toys that weren’t played with during the week (bring more if you have several children). Rotate what few items you do keep in the bag, switching one toy out each week, Anderson says.

Set the tone at home: Let kids know beforehand how you’d like them to behave at church, Hammond says. Even little kids may understand and be more likely to behave. Talk during Family Home Evening about appropriate Sunday behaviors, suggests Hammond, who is writing a book on keeping the Sabbath Day holy. Teach children to fold their arms during prayer and sing during hymns. Talk about what the Sacrament is and what it represents. And, most importantly, follow your own counsel. “I’ve learned that a large percentage of the problem is with the parent, not the child,” she said. “If your Sunday mornings are chaotic, how can you expect your children to be still at church?” Lay clothes out and make breakfast the night before if you have 9 a.m. meetings. Make sure you have time for family prayer. Have everything ready to go so children learn that “reverence is more than just quietly sitting,” Hammond said. “It may sound like a lot but if you really want your children to know what reverence is, it starts with you.”
