Luna, Olson face off in education debate

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna and Stan Olson faced off Tuesday night in a 60-minute Idaho Public Television debate broadcast live from the State Capitol in Boise.

Olson, a Democratic candidate and retired superintendent from Boise School District, is challenging GOP incumbent Luna, who is seeking a second four-year term.

Olson took Luna to task for a pay-for-performance plan for teachers that died in the 2008 legislative session. His criticism followed the same theme of his campaign: that Idaho needs a plan for education that involves everyone.

"It was not well-thought-out," Olson said of the 2008 proposal. "And it was a boondoggle."

Luna said he's been working with stakeholders since then to find a workable solution, adding that he's ready to propose a pay-for-performance plan once the economy improves.

Luna and Olson gave different answers when asked if they would support raising revenue to boost the public schools budget, and where new money should come from.

Olson said that before that happens, it's crucial to develop a plan that defines what the Idaho

Constitution calls a "thorough" system of education, including for rural schools.

"It's a political version and not a version that serves children effectively," Olson said of the current system.

Luna said that Idaho's losing revenue by not taxing online sales. That's one issue that Rep. Leon Smith, R-Twin Falls, has pursued in recent sessions, though no bills have passed.

Olson and Luna sparred over the effectiveness of the standardized achievement tests that are required under the federal No Child Left Behind Act.

Olson said the tests don't assess growth or provide enough specifics for helping teachers, and don't provide a high-bar assessment.

Luna said that Idaho's increased its percentage of schools making adequate yearly progress from 26 percent to 62 percent and attracted attention from other states.

A woman's work: Jerome police officer retires after 31 years

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

JEROME — Sgt. Patty Ward is quite the woman.

She killed her first elk when she was eight months pregnant, raised three children in Jerome, fished for steelhead on frozen banks with her husband and was the first female officer at the Jerome Police Department.

The 5-foot, 2-inch blonde has had to prove herself throughout her career in law enforcement — but she'll tell you with a smile that she's done it her way.

"It was hard at first," Ward said in her warm, encompassing voice. "It's a man's field so you had to be, I don't want to say strong enough, maybe just 'whatever' enough so the men would accept you. But you still wanted to be a lady too."

Born and raised in Jerome, Ward left for a year to attend Ricks College and returned to her hometown,

Otter won't take public stand on Idaho amendments

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Republican Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter refuses to take a public stand on three constitutional amendments on the Nov. 2 ballot, playing it safe on an issue that could alienate Idaho voters regardless of whose side he takes.

His Democratic rival Keith Allred supports the measures.

If they pass, they would allow local governments to finance projects or sign long-term contracts without first asking voters, if taxpayers don't cover the obligations.

The issue is politically dicey, having already divided the Idaho

Republican Party. A GOP-majority Idaho Legislature backed the amendments, but tea-party-leaning conservatives are fighting them fiercely.

Otter's caginess could help him retain voters from both camps.

"It's up to the people to decide on these issues — not the government," Otter spokesman Ryan Panitz said in a statement Tuesday. "So Gov. Otter does not want to unduly influence anyone's views on ballot measures that he did not initiate or champion."

The amendments are a response to a 2006 Idaho Supreme Court ruling that the Idaho Constitution required the city of Boise to ask voters before expanding an airport parking garage, even though it planned to use parking revenue, not taxes, to cover the debt.

That ruling has been interpreted broadly to apply to 20 public hospitals when they want to expand or buy expensive equipment, as well as 11 city-owned power companies like in Idaho Falls aiming to sign long-term energy contracts.

Allred said local elected leaders should be able to make such decisions without a vote, if taxpayers aren't asked to pay.

He contends Otter's reticence is politically calculated but illustrates a leadership void.

Milner rapids could be option in April

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Idaho Power appears to be giving area boaters more options for riding the waves but those waves don't come very often.

Idaho Power has asked the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for permission to extend the time period when Milner Dam operators can let water past the dam for flows for whitewater rafters and kayakers. The license change would extend the May-June window back to April 1.

Though boaters would have more options, they'd still be limited to the same total hours of whitewater flows each season that they were this year. Such releases would still be capped at four weekend days over the three months, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. each day, provided there was enough flow after irrigators took their share.

Releases are considered only after requested in advance by two or more boaters.

Lewis Wardle, senior biologist with the Idaho Power licensing program, said the utility meets every four years to review the license with interested parties, including the Idaho Department of Fish and Game and whitewater groups. Whitewater representatives, including Idaho Whitewater cofounder Rob Lesser, asked for the extension.

"We requested it because there's more chance that water will be available during that time," Lesser said. "The Milner is a short Class V rapid that needs at least 10,000 cubic feet of water to run it, and most of the time, it's unusual that the water is available."

Idaho Power has made four previous changes to the release times, said John Mark, FERC spokesman. The number of days allowed has dropped with each change since 1990, when water could be released for 12 eight-hour weekend days during April and May. The limit of four five-hour days has been in place since 2001.

"We don't want to turn the water on if no one's going to be there," Wardle said. "We do surveys and there just isn't the use that would justify more days."

Development, budget separate Blaine Co. Commission candidates

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — In Blaine County this fall, one candidate for county commissioner has served, but has never run for office; the other has run for many Blaine County offices but has never been elected.

District 3 County Commissioner Angenie McCleary was appointed to that office by Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter two years ago to fill the seat of retiring Commissioner Sarah Michael. McCleary is being challenged by Mickey Garcia, a Ketchum resident who has run before for commission seats and for Ketchum mayor and council.

The two candidates agreed that their major differences were related to the county budget and how the county addresses development issues.

Garcia said he would like to see the budget trimmed across the board. “I would start with 10 percent off everything, and when I got into it I’d find there would be things I couldn’t cut, so it would end up uneven,” he said.

McCleary

Garcia

Among the only specific areas Garcia identified for cost-cutting examination was the support staff for the county administrator.

McCleary said the recently changed budget process, which now apportions based on demonstrated need rather than historic allocations, has been a good match to her overall budget priorities.

“We’ve reduced the deficit from $600,000 to $100,000,” she said. “That’s a goal of mine to no longer need reserves to fund our budget; that’s not a sustainable practice.”

Garcia said he dislikes current county land-use planning, and feels it caters too closely to the desires of conservationists.

“As far as I’m concerned, they’re encroaching on private property rights too much,” said Garcia, who identifies 82 percent of Blaine County as already being either open space or under federal or state control.

McCleary said she has supported the county’s rules and designations for land use. “I believe in protecting our hillsides and our open space, and Mickey has more of a free-market, less-regulations (attitude),” she said.

Both mentioned transportation, and specifically the relocation of Friedman Memorial Airport, as issues that the commission will be dealing with in the next term.

“Moving to the new airport, we’ll have one (legal) sponsor, and I believe the county really needs to be responsible for that planning process,” McCleary said.

Garcia emphasized timely development of transportation infrastructure, saying that if Idaho Highway 75 had been widened when it was considered in the 1970s, it would have cost significantly less even adjusted for inflation.

Debate

The question came back when they were asked if they would take the 10th-grade Idaho Standards Achievement Test and let the scores be made public.

Olson jokingly noted that he’d not want to take the math portion as that’s been his challenge.

Luna pounced. He said that Olson’s unwillingness to take it shows it’s a tough test.

“Obviously it’s a difficult test because Mr. Olson won’t take it,” Luna said.

Olson criticized a lack of state-level planning for the economic downturn, saying that school districts planned several years ago for it on their own.

Luna, meanwhile, said that the state put away $500 million into rainy day funds, even when Democrats wanted to spend where she met her husband, Jeff Ward. She started working as a dispatcher and then took over secretarial duties when the Jerome Police Department was in the basement of the courthouse.

That piqued her interest in becoming an officer, and in 1983 she attended the Idaho Peace Officer Standards and Training Academy. Only one other woman went through training with Ward, and both faced proving that they could do the job as efficiently as the men.

“If they were going to let women in, I was the one that could do it,” said Ward. She has since seen the once male-dominated field turn into a place where women mix easily into what she calls the “law enforcement family” — though that family has room to grow. Nationally, women still make up only 4 percent to 15 percent of full-time sworn officers in U.S. police departments and sheriff’s offices depending on the agencies’ size, according to U.S. Department of Justice statistics.

In her 31 years of public service, Ward has seen six police chiefs come and go. She’s witnessed the advancement from typewriter that could erase letters to computers installed in patrol cars. She’s worked as a patrolman and a detective, dealt with both homicide and what she calls “the little things.”

Now, Ward works in administration. While she said she’ll miss the people, it is time to move on to something different.

“You kind of get to a point where you need to let the younger people take over,” Ward said. “It’s getting harder to compete with 20- and 30-year-olds.”

But Ward, 56, said she is still young enough to work and is looking forward to getting a job where people walk through the door excited to be there.

“It’s going to be weird to go to a job without a gun on,” she noted.

And when Ward retires her badge and her weapons, she will leave a legacy of compassion, toughness and a message of respect.

“I would like to say I’m leaving law enforcement because there isn’t a need — that everyone respected each other and themselves,” Ward said. “I’ve had to work toward respect. If I was going to work shoulder-to-shoulder with the men then I had to prove myself.

“I tell the women here, they need to remember that they can be ladies but there is a time to switch when you need to.”

Amendments

“Butch Otter can’t have it both ways,” Allred said in a statement. “He needs to tell voters about his position on these important constitutional amendments.”

Otter hasn’t always been so shy about ballot measures.

In 2006, for instance, he joined then-gubernatorial rival Jerry Brady to oppose a property rights initiative that would have required governments to compensate landowners if new land-use restrictions reduce their property’s value. It failed. Otter also backed a state constitutional ban on gay marriage.

But that was four years ago.

This year, internal Republican Party tensions have changed the calculus — and may be keeping Otter on the fence.

Right-leaning conservatives at the Idaho State Republican Convention in Idaho Falls in June passed a platform plank opposing the amendments, on grounds they take such decisions out of voters’ hands.

Meanwhile, pro-business moderates like state Sen. Joe Stegner, R-Lewiston, believe changes are necessary to help airports and hospitals invest and bolster development. Municipal leaders favor the amendments, including seven mayors from southwestern Idaho cities who signed a letter this week backing the airport measure on grounds it will help them complete a projected $738 million in infrastructure work by 2030.

“There is some controversy, particularly among conservative circles,” said Jim Weatherby, political scientist emeritus at Boise State University. “And it’s not an issue he (Otter) has to take a position on. It’s easy for a politician to say, ‘It’s the electors who have to decide, I’m not going to take a position.’”

David Frazier, the Boise activist who won the 2006 lawsuit over the airport garage, has been the most-vocal amendment foe. He tried to get Otter to weigh in, too, with no luck.

“I gave Allred credit for standing up and having an opinion, even if I disagreed with it,” Frazier said, adding that with Otter, “I asked him to comment. Quite frankly, I was looking for some support.”

Know what's hysterical? You, Mom and Dad

I know a couple whose kids aren't allowed to watch television or play video games. They're forbidden to drink cow's milk, are fed a sugar-free diet and haven't ever walked to school by themselves even though it's a block away.

Their folks would regard taking the kids to a fast-food restaurant as the definition of reckless endangerment.

Bedtime — these youngsters are 9 and 7 — is 8 p.m., summer and winter.

They're not permitted to read old books because of the infinitesimal risk that the ink might contain lead, and when the doorbell rings, they run to their rooms — stranger danger, you understand.

The youngest child, a girl, doesn't own a doll: Dolls harbor dust mites, you see, and she has allergies. The boy has yet to ride a bicycle — too dangerous and besides, Mom says, he's only in the fourth grade.

And they haven't had any immunizations after infancy because Mom and Dad are wary of the side effects of vaccines.

Are these parents extreme? Sure. Are they unusual? Not so much anymore.

That's why my new hero is Lenore Skenazy, a New York author, mother and nationally syndicated newspaper columnist who is dedicated to persuading parents to curb their hysteria before we turn into a nation of paranoid, risk-averse hermits.

According to the website STATS.org, Skenazy asked British author and statistician Warwick Cairns to calculate how long a parent would have to leave a child outdoors and unattended — statistically — before the kid was kidnapped and killed by a stranger.

Cairns reckoned it would take about 750,000 years.

But what about those killer toys — you know, smart parts and sharp edges?

On the basis of emergency room records in 2006, STATS.org calculates the odds of a non-fatal injury by a toy to a boy 5 or older is 1 in 898. For a girl, it's 1 in 1,428.

Last summer, the couple I described above decided to take the family to watch major league baseball in Seattle's Safeco Field — bringing along their own healthy snacks, of course.

They made the kids wear bike helmets to the game.

After all, the odds of a kid being killed by a ball in a given year are only 1 in 20.2 million.

Dems, GOP roll open election HQs

Signs, candidate info available at each spot

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

In case it wasn't already clear that it's election season, it's now official: the Twin Falls County Republican and Democratic campaign headquarters are in full swing.

The GOP headquarters has been open for about a month now, with a formal ribbon cutting today, said county Chairwoman Gretchen Clelland. The Democrats opened their headquarters' doors Tuesday afternoon.

DEMOCRATIC HEADQUARTERS

161 Fifth Ave. S., Twin Falls
Ribbon cutting: Oct. 18 (subject to change)
For more information or to volunteer, contact Chairwoman Deborah Silver at 420-1663.

REPUBLICAN HEADQUARTERS

430 Blue Lakes Blvd. N., Twin Falls
Ribbon cutting: today at 1:30 p.m.
For more information or to volunteer contact the campaign headquarters at 731-5982.

With individual campaigns already working for votes, the party election headquarters provide the local framework for statewide and local candidates.

Free campaign signs and literature for all races in the state are available at both locations, according to the party chairs. Both are also looking for volunteers.

"We'll put people to work," Clelland said.

Deborah Silver, the Twin Falls County Democrats chairwoman, said they are planning some door-knocking campaigns and phone calls from their headquarters; before its opening, volunteers' homes became phone banks for the party. Clelland said GOP candidates traditionally plan for a 72-hour campaign rush before Election Day, which the headquarters will help with. The Democrats are planning a get-out-the-vote campaign, Silver said, starting two weeks out.

Otter to sign temporary ban of fake pot chemicals

BOISE (AP) — Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter plans to approve a temporary ban of seven chemicals used to make incense that some people smoke to get a marijuana-like high.

The governor's office said Tuesday that Otter will give retailers until next Friday to return or destroy the substance often called "Spice." Otter is expected to sign the temporary ban on Oct. 15.

The rule was proposed by the Idaho Board of Pharmacy last Thursday and puts the chemicals into the same category as heroin, cocaine and other illicit drugs.

The governor's signature next week will mean that stores can't sell the substance.

File photo

Incense such as this has come under increasing scrutiny as people have begun using it as synthetic marijuana.

The ban would last until the next legislative session ends — giving lawmakers a chance to decide whether they want to make a law permanently banning the substance.

Twin Falls man changes plea to guilty in oxycodone case

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

A Twin Falls man changed his plea in federal court Tuesday in Boise.

Ryan J. Simmons, 21, was scheduled to face trial in U.S. District Court on multiple drug charges. Now, he has changed his plea to guilty and awaits sentencing.

He will be sentenced to one count of conspiracy to distribute oxycodone, a Schedule II controlled substance. As part of the plea bargain, seven counts of distributing oxycodone were dismissed. His sentencing is set for Jan. 3, 2011, in front of Judge Edward J. Lodge. He was remanded to the custody of the United States Marshal Services.

Simmons was one of four men who were indicted in federal court back in April. Co-defendant Troy D. Sabrosky, 20, recently changed his plea as well and awaits sentencing on Nov. 30. James Toliver Latham, 23, son of former auto dealership owner Robert Latham Jr., and Cooper T. Chapin, 23, are still awaiting trial, which was pushed back to Nov. 2.

Driver cuts off truck, abducted girl flees

By Olivia Munoz
For The Associated Press

FRESNO, Calif. — An 8-year-old girl who was abducted by a stranger while playing outside a Fresno home escaped from her captor Tuesday morning after a driver recognized the suspect's vehicle and cut it off, police said.

The child was found in Fresno about 11 hours after her disappearance at about 8:30 p.m. Monday triggered a statewide Amber Alert. Police arrested Gregorio Gonzalez, 24, who they said was a member of the Bulldogs street gang.

Gonzalez

Fresno Police Chief Jerry Dyer said the driver recognized the red pickup truck from media reports that showed surveillance video of the kidnapper's vehicle.

When the driver saw a girl's head in the window, he cut the truck off and forced it to stop, Dyer said. The suspect pushed the girl out of the car, and she ran to safety, he said.

The girl was taken to a hospital in good condition, but Dyer later confirmed she had been sexually assaulted. The police chief described her as "frightened, traumatized."

Authorities released the victim's name when issuing the Amber Alert, but The Associated Press does not identify victims of sexual assault without their consent.

"I was at the same time happy and grateful that my daughter had been brought home," the girl's mother told a news conference. "During the night, the hours seemed very long."

Police said quick action by Fresno resident Victor Perez helped the girl escape.

Perez told KFSN-TV he saw the truck's description on TV, then spotted it parked in front of another house. Perez jumped in his car and started following when he saw the truck pull away.

"I was yelling but I kept cutting him off so he would get off the road," Perez told KFSN. "At first, it was just like a simple question, 'I need to talk to you,' and (Gonzalez) goes, 'No, my truck is messing up. I need to leave,' so I said 'OK.'"

"I didn't see no little girl. So the second time I cut him off, the little girl stuck her head out. That's when I said, 'OK, that ain't your girl right there.' Because he was hiding her — like pushing her down."

"I thank God he put me here to help out that little girl — that's for sure,"

The truck was eventually spotted by authorities, who had received a tip about its whereabouts, and Gonzalez was arrested in the parking lot of a Fresno apartment complex.

Dyer said Gonzalez was on probation for a felony domestic violence conviction and had been arrested numerous times, including on suspicion of possessing a sawed-off shotgun.

Police had no motive for the kidnapping.

Medicaid program cuts back on Idaho dentists

BOISE (AP) — Roughly 150 dentists have been cut from the Idaho program that provides dental services to Medicaid patients, and the dentists said that will make it harder for those people to get dental care.

Boise pediatric dentist Roy Rogers said he'll lose more than half his patients when the new Idaho Smiles network goes into effect next month. The Idaho Dental Association said DentaQuest, the subcontractor that administers the provider network, is trying to control costs by cutting the biggest providers of Medicaid dental services.

Rogers said he already represented a bargain for the network, providing some services, like sealant and upgrading to white fillings instead of amalgam fillings, for free to Medicaid patients. The work was more about providing a service than it was about money, he said.

DentaQuest spokeswoman Amy Nelson told The Idaho Statesman that the company wouldn't give details about how many dentists will remain in the network. The company will meet the state's contractual access requirements, however, she said.

The contract calls for patients to have access to care within 30 miles of their home, get a routine checkup within 45 days of calling, and receive emergency care within 24 hours of calling.

"It is simply too early to be specific about the ultimate size of our dental network, but there clearly are economies of scale that are possible while maintaining access to high-quality dental care," Nelson wrote in an e-mail.

But Quinn Dufurrena, executive director of the Idaho Dental Association, said the switch won't pay off for patients.

"What they're doing is that they're creating such obstacles to the Medicaid patients so they won't use services," said Dufurrena.

Tom Shanahan, spokesman for the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, said the subcontractor is simply trying to provide the required care with less funding. The program covers about 190,000 Idaho residents, including adults and children with disabilities and low-income residents. The contract has paid out about $40 million in claims this year.

"They're looking for providers who will give them the most value," said Tom Shanahan, spokesman for Idaho Health and Welfare. "They do get to develop the network. It's their discretion."

The Idaho Dental Association said money could have been saved in other ways — such as limiting the variety of services offered to Medicaid patients.

Now Rogers said he fears thousands of kids will have difficulty finding new dentists. Many general dentists are unwilling to take the kids on as clients, because the reimbursement rates only cover about 40 cents per dollar, he said.

IRS backtracks on some tax liens filed against Hart

BOISE (AP) — The Internal Revenue Service is backpedalling in its tax case against an Idaho lawmaker, saying a new set of tax liens filed last week duplicate earlier claims.

The liens were filed last week against Rep. Phil Hart, R-Athol, for individual income taxes, penalties and interest totaling about $300,000. They target Hart's home, which sits on a 10-acre parcel in rural Athol and is owned by a trust he established in his daughter's name.

The IRS also has filed liens totaling nearly $500,000 against Hart over unpaid taxes in 1997-2003, 2006 and 2008. Idaho officials contend Hart owes $53,000 in state income taxes.

On Monday, IRS officials sought to set the record straight, saying the liens filed against Hart as a nominee of the trust duplicate those filed against him personally.

"Apparently nominee liens can and often do cover the same tax debt as individual liens," spokeswoman Karen Connelly told the Spokesman-Review.

Hart suspected that was the case last week. But the new set of liens is the latest development in his battle to contest his state and federal tax bill.

Hart is a tax protester who believes income taxes are unconstitutional. He stopped paying income taxes in 1996 when he filed a lawsuit against the IRS contending the tax is unconstitutional.

A federal tax judge in Spokane, Wash., rejected his argument in 2000, saying Hart had shown "an intentional disregard of the rules and regulations."

Wolf wearing tracking collar killed in Oregon

GRANTS PASS, Ore. (AP) — State authorities confirmed Tuesday that a federally protected wolf has been killed in northeastern Oregon.

Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife wolf coordinator Russ Morgan said the killed wolf was a 2-year-old Wenaha pack male recently fitted with a radio tracking collar. The silver male was captured and fitted in August, Morgan said.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which has jurisdiction since wolves were restored to the endangered species list in August, is investigating, he said.

Fish and Wildlife spokeswoman Joan Jewett said it had no comment.

The wolf was a subdominant male and the only member of the pack carrying a radio collar, allowing biologists to track the pack's whereabouts. The pack has four adults and at least two pups.

Wiped out in Oregon by bounty hunters more than 60 years ago, wolves first returned to the state in 1998 from Idaho, where they were introduced in a federal effort to get them off the endangered species list.

Two other wolves have been illegally shot since then. Two from the Imnaha pack were killed by government hunters for attacking livestock.

Ranchers angry over the state management plan's limitations on killing wolves to protect livestock spoke out last week at an Oregon Fish and Wildlife Commission meeting.

EDITORIAL

This land is your land (no fee required)

Thirteen years ago, the Forest Service started assessing folks trailhead parking fees to use the Sawtooth National Recreation Area and the Sawtooth National's Forest Ketchum Ranger District.

It was part of a nationwide “demonstration fee” initiative. The money, the agency said at the time, was to be used in maintaining trails and other improvements. Campers, hikers and off-roaders — and editorially, this newspaper — reacted angrily.

The SNF dropped the program after eight years, and the Forest Service changed the rules for what fees it charges and where. But it sure hasn't given up on the idea.

In 2004, Congress passed the Federal Lands Recreation Enhancement Act and the agency used it to create High Impact Recreation Areas in the most popular and heavily used parts of the national forest system. Fees were assessed to drive, bike, hunt, fish, or hike on millions of acres of public land.

The fees have been challenged in court by recreationists several times since, and the Forest Service has always appealed the rulings against it. But a September federal court decision in Arizona may change everything.

On Sept. 14, U.S. Magistrate Judge Mark Aspey in Flagstaff, Ariz., granted a motion by Jim Smith of Sedona, Ariz., to have his ticket for failure to pay a recreation fee dismissed. Smith had parked overnight at the Vultee Arch Trailhead in the Red Rocks HIRA in the Coconino National Forest. According to NewWest, there were no “amenities” (picnic tables, toilets, etc.) at end of a dirt access road. Then, Smith hiked into a remote campsite, also with no amenities, stayed overnight and returned to find a ticket on his vehicle because it did not display a Red Rock Pass.

The law prohibits fees for parking, general access, walking through federal land without using facilities and services, camping in dispersed undeveloped areas, or in any location that does not offer reasonable access to six specific amenities: permanent toilet, permanent trash container, picnic table, developed parking, interpretive signage and security services. The Vultee Arch Trailhead has none of these.

According to the Sedona, Ariz., Times, the nearest toilet is seven miles away and the nearest trash can is 10 miles away.

“This is a very important decision with national implications,” Kitty Benzar, executive director of the Western Slope No-Fee Coalition told NewWest.

We understand the compelling need for the Forest Service to raise money to make and protect improvements on public lands.

But they are, after all, the people's lands.

Most folks don't mind paying to use a campground. But charging them to stand on a trailhead and look at the scenery is absurd.

Bread and circuses (but mostly circuses)

Which state is having the most appalling campaign season? Wow, so much competition.

Gail Collins

There's Arizona, where Jan Brewer, the immigrant-bashing governor, stomped away from her horrible debate performance while reporters yelled: “Governor, please answer the question about the headless bodies!” Always hard to beat a state with a headless-bodies controversy.

Arizona got additional awfulness points when Brewer announced that she was not participating in any future debates since she only needed to do just that one to get public campaign funds. Still more when she said she would probably change her mind if her poll numbers dropped. Even more for the fact that they haven't.

California (Fourth Month Without a Budget!) has a governor's race that's degenerated into a debate over whether Meg Whitman should take a lie detector test to refute the weepy claims of her undocumented ex-housekeeper. And in South Carolina, the most impossible Republican in the Senate, Jim DeMint, is opposed by an apparently delusional Democrat named Alvin Greene. He's facing a felony charge and pushing a jobs platform that involves putting people to work creating action figures of Alvin Greene.

Whenever you're looking for a dreadful political culture, you have to consider Illinois ($13 Billion in the Hole and Still Digging!) and its unending Chicago versus Downstate feud. The Republican Senate candidate, Mark Kirk, is running an ad downstate that telescopes his entire biography into the sliver of his life he lived somewhere in Illinois besides the Chicago area. (“Mark Kirk: Born in Champaign, attended college in Carlinville, with mainstream Illinois values.”) This calls to mind the old saying that if a cat gives birth to kittens in the oven, it does not make them muffins.

Meanwhile, Kirk's ads demonize his Democratic opponent, Alexi Giannoulias, as a “Chicago politician,” which would seem to be the least of Giannoulias's problems, what with his family's bankrupt, sleazy-loan-making bank. Although to be fair to Kirk, The Associated Press reported that he managed, in a single interview, to refer to his opponent with the phrase “lent a tremendous amount of money to mobsters and felons” eight times.

I have to put in a plug for New York (Looking for Our Fourth Governor in Five Years!) where the Republican candidate, Carl Paladino, attempted to protect his love child from the prying news media by accusing his opponent, Andrew Cuomo, of having “paramours.” Paladino later admitted that he had no proof, then reversed the reversal.

Once again, it appears, New Yorkers will fail to achieve their dream of having a governor whose sex life is a complete mystery.

And everybody wants to talk about Delaware and Christine O'Donnell, the Republican Senate candidate who once had a date on a “Satanic altar,” leaving us with an image even more disturbing than Eliot Spitzer's encounter with a prostitute with his socks on.

O'Donnell keeps having resume problems, and it appears that she has particular trouble keeping track of where she went to college. She got her bachelor's degree last month, not in 1993. Also, the alleged stint at Claremont Graduate University was actually at a conservative think tank called the Claremont Institute. And rather than attending Oxford University, O'Donnell attended a course run by a group that had rented a room at Oxford University.

Colorado voters, in the fun-loving spirit that has filled so many Republican primaries this season, gave the gubernatorial nomination to a newcomer named Dan Maes, who had already been hit with one of the largest campaign finance violation fines in state history for claiming more than $40,000 in mileage reimbursements — which would suggest that he spent the last year driving the equivalent of more than a third of the way to the moon.

Now Maes is in resume trouble, too, for apparently making up a story about being an undercover operative for the Kansas Bureau of Investigation in Liberal, Kan. Liberal is best known as the home of a “Wizard of Oz” Museum, although, unfortunately, that had nothing to do with the investigation, which involved a drug ring but did not involve Dan Maes.

But for overall awfulness, I'm going to go with Nevada, where Harry Reid, the Senate majority leader, is in a battle with Republican Sharron Angle in a race in which the voters have made it clear they loathe everybody. Both Reid and Angle have decided the wisest course might be to stay out of sight and just run attack ads, helping to turn this into the Year of the Burrowing Candidate. They did both appear at a forum at a Christian school recently but made sure they were never on stage at the same time. This made for a rather noneventful event, except for the end, when two female Reid supporters and a male Angle fan got into a fistfight.

Ask your kids' teachers about education cuts

The state of Idaho is now running this grand campaign for post-education, I find this slightly confusing. Could this possibly be a campaign for and by the incumbents, the champions of education?

Gov. Otter and the Legislature just passed historical cuts to our educational system, ranking Idaho last in educational funding. Let's not forget the school districts that passed emergency levies to be paid by taxpayers on the local level. Nearly half of all educators leave the profession within the first five years. I'm curious to know how many teachers leave out of complete frustration toward the system that continually fails our children.

Without the proper nurturing and educating of our children K-12, this campaign for post-education is a moot subject.

As a side note, how would it make you feel if one morning your boss walked into your office and said, “Thank you for your wealth of knowledge, dedication and hard work; however, I'm going to have to impose mandatory furlough days. Oh, and by the way, so that you can continue your stellar performance, you will need to pay for your own supplies!”

How about asking your children's teacher?

Common sense will prevail in District 23

The public in Idaho should take notice of “Chisholm challenges Hartgen for House Seat” in District 23. In past elections involving Chisholm's campaigns, his common sense individual policies have been overlooked and disregarded by a code of silence implemented by the political elite, of which Hartgen was a member.

I'm sure that Stephen Hartgen never realized in his wildest dream that Bill Chisholm would challenge his seat in the Legislature. Hartgen is now without the sword and power of the Times-News while Chisholm is still armed with his sling and the single stone of common sense. Common sense should prevail.

Join the fun Oct. 23 at crisis center fundraiser

My new-found friends at the Pregnancy Crisis Center are amazing! They offer free pregnancy tests, free counseling, parenting classes, a baby store and whatever someone needs to start with a new baby. Things to help take the stress out of not knowing what to do with a new life on the way, especially for us first-time dads, as the director, Marilyn Scott, has told me from conception to 2 years old and all with donations and fundraising, no grants, no strings. And as luck would have, we in Magic Valley have an opportunity to help and have fun while we do it.

The center is having its 19th annual fundraising banquet Oct. 23 at the Radio Rondevo in downtown Twin Falls. It's a reservations-only deal, so please call Taylor or Marilyn at the Pregnancy Crisis Center (734-7372) by Oct. 15 to get in on the fun. The theme this year is “Auto Racing,” so of course there will be toy car racing, a silent auction and a live auction, lots of food, fun and festivities. After all, when was the last time you began dinner with, “Gentlemen! Start your engines!”

Idaho's post-recession job vacancy rate low

Times-News

Nearly a year after the worst recession in generations ended, the number of job vacancies in Idaho is fractional and only one in five is linked to economic growth, according to the Idaho Job Vacancy Survey Report.

Based on a survey of over 3,400 businesses during April and May, there were only 10,600 job openings across Idaho, which had a total of 590,000 nonfarm jobs last spring. That is a statewide vacancy rate of 1.8 percent.

By comparison, Washington had a 2.7 percent vacancy rate in spring 2010, and eastern Washington, which is economically similar to Idaho, had regional vacancy rates ranging from 2 percent to 2.5 percent.

The Idaho survey found 60 percent of the vacancies involved full-time jobs and 84 percent of the openings had been vacant less than 60 days.

But it also found that only 22 percent of the vacancies involved newly created jobs, meaning the overwhelming majority of job activity earlier this year involved personnel replacement for retirements, deaths or other reasons.

Job vacancies were most likely found in health care, accommodations and food service and retail trade. Three of every four openings required no more than a high school diploma. Only 14 percent required a college degree or more.

Consequently, over half the open jobs paid $10 an hour or less, and another quarter paid between $10 and $15 an hour. Less than 20 percent paid the $16.40 an hour needed to match the state's average annual wage from spring 2009 through winter 2010.

However, slightly more than half of the openings offered some type of group health insurance plan.

A third of the employers surveyed said their biggest problem in filling vacancies was finding workers with the desired or necessary education, experience or skills. But one in five said they had either not filed a vacancy or had no trouble filling one.

Regionally, the highest vacancy rates were in north central and east central Idaho at 2.5 percent. The vacancy rate was 1.9 percent in southeastern Idaho, 1.8 percent in the Panhandle, 1.5 percent in southwestern Idaho and 1.4 percent in south central Idaho.

Economic tension declined in August

By Martin Crutsinger and Mike Schneider
Associated Press writers

WASHINGTON — The nation's economic stress eased slightly in August thanks to lower foreclosure rates in the hardest-hit states, according to The Associated Press' monthly analysis of conditions around the country.

But the improvement was meager, and it added to evidence of sluggish economic growth. Even the dip in foreclosure rates resulted mainly from lenders delaying foreclosure proceedings rather than an improved housing market. Unemployment rates ticked up slightly, and bankruptcy rates remained unchanged.

Counties whose workers were concentrated in farming, mining, wholesale trade, information technology and professional, scientific and technical fields endured less stress in August, the AP's Economic Stress Index shows. By contrast, counties with many workers in real estate and retail sales tended to feel higher economic stress.

Stress declined in August in 33 of the 50 states and in two-thirds of the nation's 3,141 counties, the AP's index shows.

The index calculates a score for each county and state from 1 to 100 based on unemployment, foreclosure and bankruptcy rates. A higher score indicates more economic stress. Under a rough rule of thumb, a county is considered stressed when its score exceeds 11.

The average county's Stress score in August was 10.3, down slightly from July's score of 10.5. Forty percent of the nation's counties were found to be stressed. That was down slightly from 42 percent in July.

Nevada remained by far the most-stressed state in August, with a score of 21.58. California (16.291) displaced Michigan (16.288) for the second spot.

Trucking schools shift into high gear

By Gordon Dickson
McClatchy Newspapers

FORT WORTH, Texas — Michael Brock is hitting the open road in search of job security.

After two decades working construction jobs, he is tired of being laid off when times get tough. He enrolled at the C1 Truck Driving School in Benbrook, Texas, and plans to become a long-distance driver.

"Construction is not stable enough for me," Brock, 43, said last week during a class. "Driving a truck is a stable industry. As long as you keep your report clean, you've got a job."

Americans as a whole may be struggling to find work after a long recession, but there are jobs aplenty in the cab of an 18-wheeler. Trucking companies are reporting a shortage of drivers nationwide, which could delay shipments and ultimately raise the price of goods.

"During the recession, companies had to cut the work force, so now that freight volumes are "Driving a truck is a stable industry. As long as you keep your report clean, you've got a job."

— Michael Brock, student of the C1 Truck Driving School in Benbrook, Texas

picking back up they don't have the work force to accommodate the demand," said Brandon Borgna, spokesman for the American Trucking Association in Arlington, Va. "A lot of drivers are older. There isn't that younger generation stepping in."

But filling those jobs could prove tough. New federal rules that clamp down on drivers and companies with poor safety records could force veteran drivers to quit or retire and scare off new drivers with a blemished past.

And an economist says he's skeptical when businesses claim to have a driver shortage. He said the current need for drivers may be short-lived, lasting only as long as companies restock shelves after the recession.

Nonetheless, schools that train truckers to get their commercial licenses are preparing for an enrollment spike.

"It's going to be hot and heavy," said Tim Megard, vice president of operations for C1 Truck Driver Training, an Indiana-based company that operates schools in four states. "The big companies will be taking out ads."

Megard said that C1's schools train about 4,000 entry-level drivers nationwide per year and that enrollment has risen since midyear.

At the Benbrook campus, about 29 students enroll each week. They undergo about a week of classroom work, followed by two weeks of instructor-guided driving practice at a dirt lot along Benbrook Highway.

Two-thirds of C1's students have jobs lined up at graduation, Megard said. Some companies even cover tuition.

Among the students at C1's

Benbrook school is Jill Wieder-Merrell, 50, who plans to work for Arkansas-based USA Truck upon graduation.

Wieder-Merrell's husband already drives for USA, and the couple plan to work as a team on cross-country trips.

Federal safety rules restrict truck drivers' hours on highways, but the couple can cover more ground if they take turns behind the wheel.

The downside to driving a truck isn't the pay — entry level salaries of nearly $40,000 are common. Instead, the biggest complaint is time away from home. Many first-year employees drive for six days at a time, with one day off per week.

But it's a lifestyle that's comfortable for Wieder-Merrell, who has no children.

"I'm from a small town to begin with, and there's a lot of close friends, and we go to the local store and have coffee," she said. "And from what I have seen, that's how truck stops go."

Gain in services powers stocks; Dow up nearly 200

By Seth Sutel
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Stocks surged to their highest level in five months Tuesday after a measure of the most important driver of the U.S. economy surged ahead in September, a hopeful sign for the country's main source of employment.

A surprise move by the Bank of Japan to cut its key interest rate to virtually zero also lifted stocks worldwide. The dollar fell as investors shed defensive assets, and a gauge of U.S. stock market volatility fell.

The Institute for Supply Management reported that its index of business activity at U.S. service companies expanded again last month, and far faster than analysts were expecting. The ISM's measure of service companies encompasses a wide range of industries including finance, health care and trade.

It was the ninth-straight month of expansion in service businesses, which have been growing at a slower pace in the U.S. relative to the much smaller manufacturing sector. Service providers account for about 83 percent of all private employment in the U.S.

Traders are also hoping to get more positive news from the beginning of corporate earnings reports this week and from another key economic indicator, the Labor Department's monthly jobs survey on Friday. PepsiCo Inc. and Alcoa Inc. report results on Thursday.

In corporate news, Mexican broadcaster Grupo Televisa said it would invest

$1.2 billion in Univision Communications, expanding a license deal between the Spanish-language media heavyweights. Televisa's U.S. shares rose 9.8 percent.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 193.45 points, or 1.8 percent, to close at 10,944.72, its highest close since May 3 and its biggest gain since Sept. 24. The Dow is still 2.3 percent below its 2010 high reached on April 26, and is up 5 percent for the year so far.

Times Sq. bomber sentenced, warns of more attacks

By Tom Hays and Larry Neumeister
Associated Press Writers

NEW YORK — The Pakistani immigrant who tried to detonate a car bomb on a busy Saturday night in Times Square accepted a life sentence with a smirk Tuesday and warned that Americans can expect more bloodshed at the hands of Muslims.

“Brace yourselves, because the war with Muslims has just begun,” 31-year-old Faisal Shahzad told a federal judge.

“Consider me the first droplet of the blood that will follow.”

His punishment for building the propane-and-gasoline bomb and driving it into the heart of the city in an SUV in May was a foregone conclusion, since the charges to which he pleaded guilty carried a mandatory life sentence, which under federal rules will keep him behind bars until he dies.

But the former budget analyst from Connecticut used the courtroom appearance to rail against the U.S., saying the country will continue to pay for occupying Muslim countries.

“We are only Muslims trying to defend our religion, people, homes and land, but if you call us terrorists, then we are proud terrorists and we will keep on terrorizing you until you leave our lands and people at peace,” he told U.S. District Judge Miriam Goldman Cedarbaum.

Shahzad

Shahzad — brought into the courtroom in handcuffs, and wearing a long beard and white skullcap — had instructed his attorney not to speak, and Cedarbaum told prosecutors she didn’t need to hear from them.

That left the two free to spar over his reasoning for giving up his comfortable life in America to train in Pakistan and carry out an attack authorities say could have killed an untold number of pedestrians.

“You appear to be someone who was capable of education and I do hope you will spend some of the time in prison thinking carefully about whether the Quran wants you to kill lots of people,” Cedarbaum said.

Shahzad responded that the “Quran gives us the right to defend. And that’s all I’m doing.”

The judge cut him off at one point to ask if he had sworn allegiance to the U.S. when he became a citizen last year.

“I did swear, but I did not mean it,” Shahzad said.

In his address to the court, he said Osama bin Laden “will be known as no less than Saladin of the 21st-century crusade” — a reference to the Muslim hero of the Crusades. He also said: “If I’m given 1,000 lives, I will sacrifice them all.”

Shahzad smirked when the judge imposed the sentence. Asked if he had any final words, he said, “I’m happy with the deal that God has given me.”

VERMONT Police: Body is missing 78-year-old grandma's

WATERBURY — The curious disappearance of a 78-year-old grandmother is now a murder mystery: A body found in the woods by two bird hunters has been identified as hers, and police Tuesday called it a homicide.

Investigators used dental records to identify the remains of Pat O'Hagan, a vibrant widow who lived alone in rural Sheffield, a town of about 700 residents in Vermont's verdant northeastern corner that has no stores or stoplights. O'Hagan, who had nine grandchildren, was reported missing Sept. 11 after not appearing for a date with a friend to go to a rug-hooking session.

Tightlipped police investigators, who have said O'Hagan was forcibly abducted, said Tuesday they know the cause of death but won't divulge it, saying they want to preserve the integrity of the investigation.

ILLINOIS Hands-only CPR saves more lives in cardiac arrests

CHICAGO — Hands-only CPR doesn't just eliminate the “yuck factor.” A new study shows it can save more lives.

It's the first large American study to show more adults survived cardiac arrest when a bystander gave them continuous chest presses to simulate a heartbeat, compared to traditional CPR with mouth-to-mouth breathing.

“Anyone who can put one hand on top of the other, lock their elbows and push hard and fast can do this. No risk, no fear of causing harm,” said lead author Dr. Ben Bobrow of the Arizona Department of Health Services in Phoenix.

“We want to take away all the reasons bystanders do nothing when they witness another person collapse.”

KANSAS Women testify about sex with HIV-positive airman

WICHITA — Two women testified at a military hearing Tuesday that they would not have had sex with an airman had they known he was HIV positive, and one said she believed him when he said he wasn't because he was in the Air Force.

Tech Sgt. David Gutierrez has been charged with violating military law by having unprotected sex with at least 11 people without telling them he was infected.

The two women who testified Tuesday detailed numerous encounters where they had unprotected sex with Gutierrez, including at several so-called swinger parties in the Wichita area. Some of their sexual encounters were videotaped by the 43-year-old airman's wife, they said.

One woman, from Topeka, testified she asked Gutierrez whether he had any sexually transmitted diseases and believed him when he assured her he didn't.

Asked why she believed him, she tearfully replied, “Because he is Air Force. They have integrity. I trusted him.”

Sludge flood in Hungary called ‘ecological disaster’

KOLONTAR, Hungary — A lethal torrent of toxic red sludge from a metal refinery engulfed towns in Hungary, burning villagers through their clothes and threatening an ecological disaster Tuesday as it swept toward the Danube River.

The flood of caustic red mud triggered a state of emergency declaration by Hungarian officials. At least four people were killed, six were missing and 120 injured, many with burns.

Hundreds were evacuated in the aftermath of the disaster Monday, when a gigantic sludge reservoir burst its banks at an alumina plant in Ajka, a town 100 miles (160 kilometers) southwest of Budapest, the capital. The torrent of sludge inundated homes, swept cars off roads and damaged bridges.

Named for its bright red color, the material is a waste product in aluminum production that contains heavy metals and is toxic if ingested.

In Kolontar, the town closest to the plant, Erzsebet Veingartner was in her kitchen when the 12-foot-high wave of red slurry hit, sweeping away everything in its path.

“I looked outside and all I saw was the stream swelling like a huge wave,” the 61-year-old widow said Tuesday as she surveyed her backyard, still under 6 feet of noxious muck.

“I lost all my chickens, my ducks, my Rottweiler, and my potato patch. My late husband's tools and machinery were in the shed and it's all gone,” sobbed the woman, who gets by on a $350 monthly pension. “I have a winter's worth of firewood in the basement and it's all useless now.”

Emergency workers wearing masks and chemical protection gear rushed to pour 1,000 tons of plaster into the Marcal River in an attempt to bind the sludge and keep it from flowing on to the Danube some 45 miles away. Nearby, desperate villagers waded through the toxic mud trying to salvage possessions with little more than rubber gloves as protection.

The 1,775-mile-long Danube passes through some of the continent's most pristine vistas from its origins as a Black Forest spring in Germany to its end point as a majestic stretch of water emptying into the Black Sea.

Now a murky green — not blue as immortalized in the Strauss waltz — the river flows through four former communist nations. One of the continent's greatest treasuries of wildlife, it has been the focus of a multibillion dollar post-communist cleanup. Cormorants, swans and other birds are now common sights on the river.

Still, high-risk industries such as Hungary's Ajkai Timfoldgyar alumina plant are still producing waste near some of its tributaries, posing a threat to the waterway.

Man is convicted on 16 of 17 counts in deadly home-invasion case

By Elaine Griffin and Josh Kovner
The Hartford Courant

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — It's a word Dr. William Petit Jr. has waited to hear since his family was killed in a brutal Connecticut home invasion more than three years ago.

On Tuesday, Petit heard the word “guilty” uttered 16 times inside a hushed and crowded courtroom. Each time he said it, the middle-aged jury foreman nodded confidently while looking at Steven Hayes, the man in the courtroom responsible for the murders of Jennifer Hawke-Petit and her two daughters, Hayley and Michaela.

Petit, who was badly beaten but survived the July 23, 2007, break-in, attack and arson at his Cheshire home, sat in the gallery with his head down, fighting back tears. An emotionless Hayes, once a burly man in his police mug shot but now thin and scraggly at 47, never looked at the jury. He stared straight ahead toward the judge's bench as the counts were read.

The foreman's colleagues — seven women and four men — were just as resolute with their verdicts. When polled as a group, their affirmations of “yes” to each guilty verdict were clear and bold, including when asked about the one charge Hayes was acquitted of: first-degree arson.

Hayes was found guilty on 16 of 17 counts, including three counts of murder, six counts of capital felony, the sexual assault of Hawke-Petit, four counts of first-degree kidnapping, third-degree burglary and the baseball-bat assault of Petit.

Conviction on the capital felony charges means Hayes automatically faces a hearing for the death penalty in which jurors will decide whether Hayes lives or dies. That phase will begin Oct. 18.

Shortly after the verdict was read, Petit, with his father, William Petit Sr., gripping his arm for support, spoke to reporters in the rain on the courthouse steps. Johanna Petit Chapman, his sister, rested her head on her brother's arm before he spoke.

Keeping his composure as he patiently answered questions, Petit said he believed Hawke-Petit and the girls were praying for him and his family so they would have the strength to endure.

“We did our best to keep our faith in God that justice would be served,” Petit said. “There is some relief, but my family is still gone. It doesn't bring them back. It doesn't bring back the home that we had, but certainly a guilty verdict is a much better sense of relief than a verdict of not guilty.”

GOP-allied group to spend $4 million on ads

By Jim Kuhnhehn
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — A deep-pocketed alliance with ties to top Republicans Karl Rove and Ed Gillespie is pumping more than $4 million into key Senate races in a single week of advertising, a crucial infusion to counter a surge in Democratic Party spending as Election Day draws near.

The new wave of ads by Crossroads Grassroots Policy Strategies and its affiliate, American Crossroads, comes during the final, most intense weeks of the congressional campaign. The money, together with that of other groups aligned with the GOP, represents a new beachhead in this year's less regulated world of money and politics.

For the two Crossroads groups, the new spending means they have poured nearly $14 million into fiercely competitive Senate races in eight states — Florida, Illinois, Kentucky, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Nevada, Colorado and Washington — since August.

Overall spending this year in House and Senate races by candidates, outside groups and the political parties had reached $220 million as of mid-September, according to a Wesleyan University analysis of ad data from Kantar Media/CMAG. Most was by candidates, but nearly one-fifth came from interest groups, a vast majority favoring Republicans.

Crossroads' efforts are among the most prominent examples in the increased political activity by tax-exempt nonprofit groups, illustrating new terrain in campaign finance. A landmark Supreme Court case, Citizens United v. Federal Election Commission, opened the way early this year for corporations and unions to spend money in elections. New FEC guidelines and lower court rulings have also contributed to a more free-wheeling environment.

As a result, the Internal Revenue Service has come under increasing pressure from Democrats to act against conservative or GOP-allied groups, placing the tax agency in an awkward position of being dragged into a political fight that it can't possibly address until well after the Nov. 2 elections are over.

On Tuesday, two organizations that advocate for tougher campaign finance rules filed a complaint with the IRS asking it to investigate the tax-exempt status of Crossroads GPS.

GREGG MIDDLEKAUFF'S QUOTE OF THE DAY

Great women are not considered so because of personal achievements, but for the effect their efforts have had on the lives of countless others. From daring feats of bravery to the understated ways of a compassionate heart, great women possess a common strength of character. Through their passion and persistence, they have advanced womanhood and the world.

New language found in isolated part of India

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — A previously unknown language has been uncovered in the far reaches of northeastern India, researchers reported Tuesday.

Koro, a tongue brand new to the scientific world that is spoken by just 800 to 1,200 people, could soon face extinction as younger speakers abandon it for more widely used languages such as Hindi or English.

Koro is unlike any language in the various branches of the Tibeto-Burman family, a collection of 400 related languages used by peoples across Asia, according to the two National Geographic fellows who announced the discovery. The findings will be published in a future issue of the journal Indian Linguistics.

The researchers, linguists K. David Harrison of Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania and Gregory D.S. Anderson, director of the Living Tongues Institute for Endangered Languages in Salem, Ore., said they are not sure yet how old Koro is or how it developed. But they believe it could yield a wealth of knowledge about the way humans develop and use language.

Wisconsin but developed as a chef in California's Bay Area, will gather information from the farmers and chefs about how they got started with artisanal products and how they have marketed them to reach the level of support that Wisconsin cheeses now enjoy worldwide. She hopes to bring the information back to Idaho to share with producers here.

"You need marketing done on a large scale these small producers can't," she said, describing the long-term vision she has to drum up support for small-scale Idaho cheeses. "Then it starts to look like a trend, like a market (for distributors)."

When it comes to marketing, winning awards doesn't hurt. Ballard Farms recently brought home a blue ribbon for its brand-new truffle cheddar from the American Cheese Society. "People appreciate good cheeses, that market is always there," Ballard said.

The Gooding farm also makes various flavors of cheddar and curds, Gouda, baby Swiss, feta and a Greek-style halloumi. Sheehan said she knows of only one other U.S. producer of that last kind of cheese, which is delicious grilled or added to salads.

Although Sheehan said artisanal cheesemakers can charge a premium for their product, because it is seen by the market as providing added value, Ballard said his farm tries to keep cost to the consumer low.

At Local Dish, Ballard Farms' mild white cheddar from Gooding is piled atop a German spiced bratwurst from the Boise area.

Gooding-area Ballard Farms cheeses are available at Local Dish, as well as Buhl-based Cloverleaf Creamery's milk and butter.

Photos by ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

"It's easy to price yourself out of the market," he said. "We want everybody to have a chance to eat it."

If they aren't already,

Sheehan said, locals need to realize what a great product is already being made in their backyards. "Eat more of it, drive the demand, build the business."

PAPA'S BEST MACARONI & CHEESE

- 1/4 cup cream
- 1 cup whole milk
- 1/3 pound cream cheese
- 1/3 cup evaporated milk
- 1/2 cup (1/4 pound) fresh hard grating cheese, such as the Borrego from Blue Sage Farms
- 1 cup grated cheddar (Lynn Sheehan recommends Ballard Farms' white cheddar)
- Dash hot sauce
- 1/4 teaspoon paprika
- Salt and pepper, to taste
- 1 pound elbow macaroni
- 3 strips cooked bacon, crumbled (optional)
- Toasted breadcrumbs, to taste (optional)

Combine cream, milk, cream cheese and evaporated milk in a saucepan, and heat gently. Whisk periodically until the cream cheese is melted and all ingredients are combined. Whisk in grated cheeses, hot sauce and paprika, and add salt and pepper to taste.

Cheese sauce may be refrigerated at this point, or used immediately, tossed over hot cooked pasta.

Optional topping: Mix crumbled bacon and toasted breadcrumbs and sprinkle atop plated macaroni and cheese.

Macaroni and cheese may also be baked. Toss cooked pasta in the cheese sauce, then place in a buttered 11-by-13-inch baking dish. Sprinkle with additional grated cheddar, top with bacon and breadcrumbs, and bake in a 375-degree oven until brown and crisp, approximately 20 minutes.

Recipe from Ketchum chef Lynn Sheehan.

GOAT CHEESE SOUFFLE

- 1/4 cup dry breadcrumbs
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 3 tablespoons cake flour
- 1 cup milk
- 10 ounces goat cheese (or blue cheese, feta cheese or similar cheese)

ARIEL HANSEN/Times-News

This recipe for macaroni and cheese is deliberately similar to the classic Kraft boxed recipe, but made with local cheeses and all-natural ingredients.

- 3 egg yolks
- Salt and pepper to taste
- 7 egg whites

This recipe requires eight 8-ounce ramekins (or two 6-cup muffin pans), and a high-sided baking dish that the ramekins or muffin pans fit into.

Preheat oven to 425 degrees, with the rack in the center.

Butter the ramekins or muffin pans, fill with breadcrumbs, then turn them out, leaving breadcrumbs stuck to the sides.

Melt butter in a stainless sauce pan over medium heat. Whisking constantly, add flour.

Whisk in the milk and cook for about 3 minutes, until the mixture has thickened like a thin pudding.

Crumble 3/4 of the cheese into a large mixing bowl, reserving the remainder. Pour the hot milk mixture over the cheese and mix well. Add the egg yolks and mix; season with salt and pepper.

Using an electric mixer, beat the egg whites until stiff peaks form. Fold half the whites into the cheese, then fold in the remaining half.

Divide half the souffle mixture among the ramekins. Crumble the reserved cheese into the ramekins, then top with the remaining souffle mixture.

Place the ramekins in the large baking dish and pour in boiling water until it is halfway up the sides of the ramekins (it is often easier to pour in the water once the dish is in the oven, rather than try to move it with the water in it). Bake for 25 minutes or until the souffles are golden.

Remove from the oven and let stand, still in the water, for 15 minutes.

Using a towel to hold the ramekins, run a knife around the inside rim to loosen. Turn the souffles out on a baking sheet. The souffles may be held at room temperature for up to six hours before final baking.

When ready to serve, bake the souffles in a 375 degree oven for four to six minutes, or until the souffles quiver when you shake the baking sheet and are golden brown.

Recipe from Ketchum chef Lynn Sheehan.

Prepared polenta makes easy, delicious lasagna

By J.M. Hirsch
Associated Press writer

For most people, the only time lasagna lands on the weeknight table is when they prepare it ahead during the weekend. Or when it came out of a box.

Even the no-boil noodles usually are too much trouble for Monday-through-Friday cooking. That's why I like to use prepared polenta (the sort sold in shelf-stable tubes). Using polenta instead of noodles not only is faster and easier, it also produces a heartier meal.

Because the polenta is already cooked and only needs heating, all you have to do to assemble the lasagna is slice the polenta, layer it with cheese, sauce and whatever else motivates you, then pop it in the oven. Because polenta comes in a variety of flavors, it also is an effortless way to add extra flavor to the dish.

I kept this recipe pretty basic. The sauce is just jarred pasta sauce doctored with chopped Italian-style chicken sausage. But you could easily add whatever you like, as well as add additional layers of vegetables, including thinly sliced onions, peppers, mushrooms, even roasted slices of eggplant.

Just be aware that the more you add and the deeper you make the lasagna, the longer it will take to cook.

QUICK POLENTA LASAGNA

Start to finish: 45 minutes (10 minutes active). Servings: 6.

Two 18-ounce tubes prepared polenta

- 1 cup ricotta cheese
- 2 cups grated mozzarella cheese (divided)
- 1 teaspoon garlic powder
- 1/2 teaspoon ground black pepper
- 1 egg
- 1 1/2 cups jarred pasta sauce
- 6 ounces Italian-style

cooked chicken sausages, finely chopped

1/4 cup grated Parmesan cheese

Heat the oven to 400 degrees. Coat a 2-quart casserole dish with cooking spray.

Slice each tube of polenta into 9 rounds. Arrange 9 rounds in a single layer over the bottom of the pan. Set aside.

In a medium bowl, mix together the ricotta cheese, 1 cup of the mozzarella, garlic powder, pepper and egg. Spread the mixture in an even layer over the polenta.

In a small bowl, mix together the pasta sauce and chopped sausage. Spread half of the mixture over the cheese. Arrange the remaining 9 rounds of polenta in a single layer over the sauce, then top with the remaining sauce.

Sprinkle the Parmesan cheese and the remaining 1 cup of mozzarella over the sauce. Spray a sheet of foil with cooking spray, then use it to cover the lasagna and bake for 20 minutes. Remove the foil and bake for another 15 minutes, or until the cheese is lightly browned. Let stand for 5 minutes before serving.

This polenta lasagna is faster, easier and even heartier than its noodle-based cousin.

Home beer brewers can compete in smackdown

Times-News

Homebrewers can see how their beer stacks up at the second annual Octoberfest Homebrew Competition this weekend.

Participants should bring a six-pack of each beer they want to enter between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. Saturday, to Mimi's Flowers and Gifts, 289 Clear Lakes Road in Buhl. Cost is $5 for the first entry and $3 for each subsequent entry. Judging begins at 2 p.m. The contest is sponsored by the Southern Idaho Homebrewers Club.

Beers will be judged according to Beer Judge Certification Program style guidelines. Competition will be in two best-of-show groups: The Open Competition will be judged by independent judges for donated prizes and money. In Brewers Choice, contestants may sample and vote on the competition beers; the winner takes home the Brewer's Cup.

In addition to the home brewing contest, the Octoberfest festival hosted by Mimi's includes live music starting at 11 a.m. Saturday, vendors, children's activities, food and a chili cookoff.

Prepare this noodle dinner in 20 minutes

By Bonnie S. Benwick
The Washington Post

This recipe sounds generic, but it (along with 499 others) comes from a new book by Tom Hudgens, who cooked in the mess hall of Deep Springs College, a small, all-male liberal arts school on a cattle ranch and organic farm in California's Sierra Nevada desert. The broccolini goes right in with the pasta near the end of its cooking, for easy cleanup. Serve with garlic breadsticks. Adapted from Hudgens' "The Commonsense Kitchen" (Chronicle, 2010).

WIDE NOODLES WITH BROCCOLINI, FETA, LEMON AND PINE NUTS

4 servings

Kosher salt

8 to 10 ounces dried wide egg noodles
1/2 cup pine nuts
1/2 medium lemon
12 ounces broccolini
1 or 2 pinches crushed red pepper flakes
2 teaspoons extra-virgin olive oil
Few grinds of black pepper
4-ounce block feta cheese (do not use crumbled)

Bring a large pot of salted water to a boil over high heat. Add the noodles and cook according to the package directions. Meanwhile, toast the pine nuts in a small, dry skillet over medium heat for 2 to 3 minutes, until lightly browned, shaking them often to keep them from burning. Remove from the heat to cool. Use a Microplane grater or zester to yield 1/2 teaspoon of lemon zest. If the broccolini stems are thick or tough, scrape them down with a vegetable peeler. Cut into smaller pieces as needed. When the pasta is almost done, add the broccolini and cook just long enough to blanch it (no more than 4 minutes), until it is bright green and crisp-tender. Drain the pasta and broccolini into a large colander, reserving at least 1/4 inch of the cooking water in the bottom of the pot. Transfer the pasta and broccolini to a wide, shallow serving bowl. Add the toasted pine nuts, lemon zest, crushed red pepper flakes to taste and 1 teaspoon of the oil; toss to incorporate. If the pasta seems dry, add some of the reserved cooking water and toss to combine. Season with black pepper to taste. Add half of the feta cheese, crumbling it in your fingers as you work, then toss to incorporate. Crumble the remaining feta over the top, then drizzle with the remaining oil. Serve immediately. Per serving: 460 calories, 17 g protein, 50 g carbohydrates, 23 g fat, 6 g saturated fat, 75 mg cholesterol, 360 mg sodium, 5 g dietary fiber, 4 g sugar.

Meat-free cookbook takes aim at burger set

By Jennifer Barger
The Washington Post

Even the most knuckle-dragging cave-people among us sometimes eat a vegetarian meal. (Really, a bowl of Mini-Wheats counts, if you forgo the bacon chaser.) But the chasm between carnivores and veggies often seems widest when it comes to lunch and dinner, where many meat poets hanker for the satisfying crunch of bacon on a sandwich or the sizzle of steak on a plate.

But when cookbook author Kim O'Donnel started trying to go vegetarian a few nights a week, she found that it was easier than she'd suspected to whip up satisfying dishes without a trip to the butcher counter or seafood case. We chatted with her about her new book, "The Meat Lover's Meatless Cookbook" ($19, Lifelong Books).

What's the key to creating a vegetarian dish that'll satisfy, say, a steak gal? The food should stick to your ribs and feel substantial. For that, beans and legumes in one-pot dishes can really help. People forget, but beans are plants!

Are there secrets ingredients you use to ramp up the flavor when you can't use, say, a bit of bacon or some anchovy paste? One of them is smoked paprika, which transforms dishes by lending smoke. And chipotle chilies in adobo are a terrific flavor booster.

What about cheese? I think adding it is always nice on veggie dishes, if you aren't serving vegan friends. Yeah, Parmesan cheese — we take it for granted, but it's such a good way to amp up salt and nuttiness in a dish. And nuts add a fatty richness to things.

The book doesn't include fake bacon or veggie burgers. Why not? I use tempeh and tofu in it, which, to me, are more like whole foods than fake meat. I was trying to make the point that you don't always have to mimic meat.

What do you do to make tofu and tempeh tasty? I think tempeh can be challenging! I usually marinate them and pan-fry them. It's usually important to season them and mix them with other things. I do a jerk-style tempeh with coconut rice and red beans that is really good.

What do you have in here that's really good for vegans? I have this recipe for Chickpea "Crabcakes" with Old Bay that's totally delicious.

Kale chips are simply roasted kale leaves, coated with olive oil, salt and (optional) pepper flakes.

When cookbook author Kim O'Donnel started trying to go vegetarian a few nights a week, she found that it was easier than she'd suspected to whip up satisfying dishes without a trip to the beef or seafood case.

What vegetables do you think we should give a second chance? Take the dreaded broccoli and cauliflower and just roast them. It takes a whopping 10 minutes, and they both just mellow and get really good. And winter squash and sweet potatoes also turn out so well.

KALE CHIPS

Makes enough chips for four sandwiches or a bowl of TV snacks.

- 1 bunch (4 to 5 cups) Lacinato kale (also sold as Dinosaur kale)
- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon red pepper flakes (optional)

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees.

With a sharp knife, remove the stem and middle rib of each kale leaf so that all you have left are leaves. Wash the leaves, then dry thoroughly, preferably in a salad spinner. With a knife, cut the leaves into small pieces (ideally 3 inches long, 2 inches wide).

Transfer the leaves to a medium-size mixing bowl and add the olive oil, salt and red pepper flakes (if using). With your hand, coat leaves with the seasonings; the leaves will glisten a bit.

Place the kale in a single layer on a baking sheet, giving the leaves plenty of room to roast. Cook for eight minutes, maybe a few seconds more. Remove from the oven and enjoy.

Best eaten within 24 hours, stored in a paper bag.

CHICKPEA "CRABCACKES"

Makes 8 patties

- 1 cup dried chickpeas
- 1 1/2 cups finely chopped onion (not quite 1 large onion)
- 2 cloves garlic, crushed
- 1/2 cup fresh cilantro or parsley, or 1/4 cup each, chopped
- 1/2 teaspoon baking powder
- 2 teaspoons Old Bay seasoning
- 1/8 teaspoon cayenne
- 1/2 teaspoon dry mustard
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon ground black pepper
- 1/2 cup vegetable oil
- 8 soft hamburger buns or English muffins

Cover the chickpeas with water and soak for at least eight hours at room temperature. Drain and set aside. You will end up with two cups of soaked chickpeas.

Using a food processor or heavy-duty blender, pulverize the chickpeas, using the "pulse" function. Pulverize until the beans just form a paste that sticks together when you squeeze it in your hand. Be careful not to overprocess the chickpeas; too smooth, the batter will fall apart when cooking.

Add the rest of the ingredients (except the oil) and combine using the "pulse" function. After being pulsed approximately 12 times, the batter will be somewhat grainy and speckled with herbs.

Refrigerate the batter for about one hour, until firm.

Meanwhile, make the yogurt remoulade or cocktail sauce. Remove the batter from the fridge and shape into patties, using a scant 1/3-cup measure. Be careful not to overhandle the batter. Preheat the oven to 350 degrees.

Place the patties on a plate or baking tray and cover with plastic wrap. Return to the fridge and chill for an additional 10 to 15 minutes.

In a shallow 12-inch skillet, heat 1/4 cup of the oil over medium-high heat. Gently place the patties into the hot oil in small batches (don't crowd the pan) and fry the first side until golden brown, about three minutes. (If you're the impatient sort, set a timer and relax. These things don't like to be fussed with.)

Gently turn onto the second side and cook for an additional three minutes. Transfer to a baking tray to finish cooking in the oven for eight minutes. (Before frying the next batch, heat the remaining oil.) The patties will have a somewhat drier appearance on the outside, which is a good thing.

Serve on a bun with the remoulade, cocktail sauce or a schmear of mustard-mayo.

Melissa Clark: Recipes are only 90 percent of it

By Michele Kayal
For The Associated Press

The pork ribs arrived in the CSA box. A quick dig through the fridge turned up a withering green tomato. An orange and the usual garlic and herbs sat a bit farther back.

“The way dishes come together in my head, they come together 90 percent,” says Melissa Clark, whose new book “In the Kitchen with a Good Appetite” (Hyperion, 2010) encourages playing with your food until it tastes good to you. “You say ‘This is what I have in the fridge, this is what I’m hungry for, this is what I bought.’”

A dash of this, a squeeze of that, a sprinkle and a grind later, and Clark had a delectable pork dinner (you can find the recipe on her blog, melissaclark.net).

This is called improvisation. And it scares a lot of people. But Clark swears anyone can do it. “You have to take that last 10 percent and make it your own,” she says. Here’s how:

• Focus on balance. Complexity comes from balancing sweet, salt, acid and pungent. Sweet can be sugar, honey, hoisin. Salt can be capers, pickles, anchovies. Acid equals vinegar or citrus. Pungent is your garlic and onions. Some ingredients do double duty, like Clark’s orange, which provided both sweet and acid. Make sure each is represented in your dish and it’s hard to screw up.

• Play with your proteins. Recipe calls for chicken but you’ve eaten it all week? Use pork instead. Or turkey. Try lamb in place of beef.

• Grind, squeeze, dash. Cooking integrates flavors, but it also softens them. So be sure to re-season when the dish comes off the heat. That could mean a grind of salt; a squeeze of citrus or a smidge of zest; a dash of hot sauce, vinegar, vermouth; or another flavor you like to help brighten the dish.

• Start slow. Can you scramble an egg? So scramble one — and add a little cheese. Or tarragon. Or chorizo. “Whatever you’re confident making, make it and take it to the next level,” Clark says. Just don’t experiment 30 minutes before a dinner party.

• Trust yourself. Your palate is as good as anyone else’s. Honest. If you like a flavor, use it.

• Always have a Plan B. It’s true, you might screw up. But what’s so bad about breakfast cereal for dinner now and then? “My emergency food is tomato on toast,” Clark says. “My husband has peanut butter.”

FIGGY, PIGGY DRUMSTICKS AND THIGHS

Start to finish: 40 minutes. Servings: 4. From Clark’s “In the Kitchen with a Good Appetite.”

- 8 strips bacon (8 ounces), halved
- 4 cloves garlic, thinly sliced
- 3 each of chicken legs, drumsticks and thighs (about 2 1/2 pounds total)
- 1 teaspoon kosher salt
- Ground black pepper
- 11 or 12 fresh figs, halved or quartered if large
- 12 sprigs fresh thyme
- 2 tablespoons vermouth

HUSH! Frito-Lay to pull most noisy SunChips bags

By Emily Fredrix
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Frito-Lay hopes to quiet complaints about its noisy SunChips bags by switching out the biodegradable bags for the old packaging on most flavors.

The company is switching back to original packaging, which is made of a type of plastic, for five of the six varieties of the chips. It will keep the biodegradable bags for its sixth variety, its original plain flavor. That’s its second best-selling, after Harvest Cheddar.

The snack maker said the switch started in the middle of September and should be complete by middle to late October.

The bags were launched in April 2009 with a big marketing effort to play up their compostability because they’re made from plants and not plastic.

But the technology Frito-Lay used to make the packaging results in a bag that’s stiffer than the plastic packaging — and louder. Customers complained. Groups on Facebook abound with names such as “I wanted SunChips but my roommate was sleeping...” and “Nothing is louder than a SunChips bag.”

Spokeswoman Aurora Gonzalez said the company received complaints about the noise from the bags, although it also received thanks from customers who liked being able to recycle them.

So the decision was made to remove the bulk of the biodegradable line.

“We need to listen to our consumers,” she said. “We clearly heard their feedback.”

Frito-Lay, a unit of PepsiCo Inc., based in Purchase, N.Y., is developing its next generation of biodegradable bags and will use what it learned with the SunChips effort, she said.

More and more companies are trying to develop sustainable packaging, not just to save on costs but because it’s what shoppers want, said Bob Stolmeier, business development manager for Zip-Pak, who works with companies to create packaging. But there’s a limit to how much shoppers will sacrifice in the name of sustainability, and apparently noise is one of the sore spots.

“There’s no reason to offer solutions that the market would not accept,” he said.

Colorful and delicious sweet potato biscuits

By Julie Rothman
The Baltimore Sun

Ronald Collins from Nottingham, Md., was looking for a recipe for making sweet potato biscuits like the ones his best friend’s mother made when they were growing up on the Eastern Shore. Louise “Buttons” Bassett from Berlin, Md., sent in a recipe that she said was given to her by the late Betty Kelly, a longtime friend and native of Salisbury, on the Shore. She said the recipe has never failed to give her delicious biscuits.

I found the biscuits to be denser in consistency than more traditional ones, but they had a delicate sweet flavor and a beautiful deep orange color. They would be lovely to serve at Thanksgiving or any fall-themed meal.

SWEET POTATO BISCUITS

Makes: 10-12 biscuits.

- 2 cups cooked, peeled and mashed sweet potatoes
- 3/4 cups sugar
- 1/4 cup butter or margarine
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 2 tablespoons double acting baking powder
- 2 cups flour (or more as needed)

Add sugar and butter to the mashed sweet potatoes while they are hot, incorporating them completely. Sift flour, salt and baking powder together in a separate bowl, then add to potatoes and mix well.

Turn out dough onto floured surface and knead until dough is smooth. If the dough is too sticky to handle, add a little flour at a time until a good and workable consistency is achieved. Place dough in a plastic bag and refrigerate until cool. When ready to bake, knead the dough again for a few minutes on a lightly floured surface, then roll out to about 1/2-inch thickness. Cut with biscuit cutter and place on a lightly greased or parchment-lined cookie sheet about 1 inch apart.

Bake in a 400 degree oven for 15 to 20 minutes, or until lightly browned on top.

Frank Charlton

Frank Charlton, of Twin Falls, died at home Friday, Oct. 1, 2010, of natural causes.

He was born April 27, 1927, in Buhl to Frank and Vernie Charlton. He was the sixth of seven children. He spent his early years in Melon Valley, where he enjoyed hunting, fishing and the ranch chores. He graduated in 1945 from Buhl High School, where he was an outstanding athlete in football and track. He was proud of his state championship in the 880 relay, and his team members remained lifelong friends. Upon graduation, he joined the Navy; he was sent to basic training in San Diego, Calif., and was assigned to duty in Saipan, where he served until the end of the war. He was a Yeoman 1st Class. After leaving the service, he attended Southern Idaho College of Education in Albion, Idaho, where he again excelled in football and track. At the Northwest Region AAU Track meet, Frank won the 100-yard dash with the phenomenal time of 9.7, giving him the title of “fastest man in the Northwest.”

It was at Albion where he met his wife, Mary Christensen, whom he married June 26, 1949. After graduating with a degree in education in 1950, he accepted a job as head football and basketball coach at the original Eagle High School, a school of 100 students in Eagle, Idaho. There he taught business classes in addition to his coaching duties. In 1952, he transferred to Meridian High School, where he taught for 17 years and served as the head football and track coach and assistant basketball and baseball coach. He enjoyed success at Meridian and especially enjoyed the camaraderie of the coaches in the SRV Conference. He served as the president of the Idaho Coaches Association for several years. From there he went to Nampa High School for two years.

At that point, Frank received his master's degree in educational administration from the College of Idaho and returned home to Buhl as the high school prinicipal. He put together an outstanding teaching and coaching staff who remained some of his most cherished friends. In 1972, he found his dream job at Twin Falls High School as principal. He loved the community of Twin Falls, he loved Twin Falls High School, and he particularly loved the members of his staff. He always sought to make Twin Falls High School the best school in the state, both academically and athletically. During that time period, he also served as the secretary of the District IV Activities Association. He retired from Twin Falls High School in 1989 and returned to ranch chores he enjoyed as a youth. For the remainder of his life, many students, players and staff members contacted him to express appreciation for the positive impact he had on their lives.

He survived by his wife, Mary (Chris); children, Patrick and Cheryl Charlton of Vallivue, Shelley and Scott Coats of Rupert; and eight grandchildren, Dara and Regan Charlton and Alison, Shelby, Pete, Kristina, Jennifer and Charlton Coats. He is also survived by his brothers, Harold and Bob Charlton; and his sister, Burnice Comstock. He was preceded in death by his parents and three brothers.

A service will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 9, at the Kimberly LDS 2nd Ward building, 222 Birch S. in Kimberly, with Bishop Jared Walker presiding. Burial will follow at the Rock Creek Cemetery. A viewing is scheduled for 6:30 to 8 p.m. Friday, Oct. 8, at Rosenau Funeral Home, 2826 Addison Ave. E. in Twin Falls.

A scholarship for a Twin Falls High School scholar and athlete has been established in Frank's name. Contributions may be sent to The Frank Charlton Memorial Fund at any Farmers National Bank. The family would like to thank Idaho Home Health and Hospice for their care and outstanding service. Family and friends are encouraged to share thoughts and remembrances of Frank at www.rosenaufuneralhome.com.

Duo wins Nobel Prize for super-strong, super-thin carbon

By Malcolm Ritter and Karl Ritter
Associated Press writers

Michael Strano, a chemist at MIT, said trying to predict its uses would be “folly ... We can't even imagine the uses we're going to find.”

But he and others have some ideas. Graphene's electrical properties mean it might make for faster transistors, key components of electronic circuits, and so lead to better computers, the Nobel committee says. As a single layer of carbon atoms it's tiny, which could pay off in more powerful cell phones, several scientists said.

Also, since it's practically transparent, it could lead to see-through touch screens and maybe solar cells, the committee says. It might also pay off for big TV screens.

Its tremendous strength could produce new composite materials that are super-strong and lightweight, for use in building airplanes, cars and satellites, the committee says.

So why aren't pencil leads super strong, if they contain graphene? Breaking a lead generally involves a shearing off between graphene sheets rather than breaking the sheets themselves, explained James Tour of Rice University. And while a person can tear up a single sheet of graphene, it's still stronger than a one-atom-thick sheet of anything else. “There's nothing stronger,” Tour said.

Graphene has not made its mark in ordinary consumer products yet, although some prototype electronic display screens and composite materials have been created, Strano said.

By Rachel D'Oro
Associated Press writer

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — George Rogers, an unassuming giant among Alaska's founding fathers, has died at 93.

Rogers died at his Juneau home on Sunday, said his daughter, Sidney Fadaoff. He had been ailing for a year, but his condition worsened a week ago, she said. His exact cause of death was not disclosed.

Rogers was considered an economic architect who helped shape the territory into the nation's 49th state.

He was a technical consultant to the Alaska Constitutional Convention that convened in the 1950s before Alaska became a state in 1959.

When the convention secretary took a sick leave, Rogers stepped in to do that job as well, said Vic Fischer, a former Democratic legislator, a convention delegate who became a good friend of Rogers.

“He was totally modest and unassuming,” Fischer said. “Even while he was managing the convention, hardly anyone outside the convention was aware of that. That was very typical of his way of functioning.”

Rogers served as an economic adviser to two territorial governors, developing a revenue system. After statehood, he persuaded lawmakers to pass a bill creating the University of Alaska Anchorage's Institute of Social and Economic Research and was an early member and chairman of the board of trustees for the Alaska Permanent Fund Corp., which manages the state's oil savings and investment account.

Rogers was born April 15, 1917, in San Francisco. After studying economics at the University of California, Berkeley, where he met his wife Jean, he arrived in the territory of Alaska in 1945 on a World War II assignment from the Army. His mission was to help the Army serve fish on Fridays.

“They said, ‘George you're going to Alaska to roll back the price of raw fish,’” Rogers told the Juneau Empire in 2008.

He never planned to stay past the war and wanted to pursue a doctorate at Berkeley. Territorial Gov. Ernest Gruening talked him into remaining longer with assurances of getting him into Harvard instead.

“I couldn't resist that. I stayed on,” Rogers told the Empire.

Rogers returned to Alaska after graduating from Harvard in 1950 and continued his government work in various roles, including the quest for statehood and the constitutional convention.

Among his other accomplishments, he served on the Juneau assembly, acted in community theater and documented his travels with sketches that captured the essence of the places he visited, according to Fischer.

“I would describe George as a renaissance man,” he said.

Partida's goals lift Canyon Ridge over Twin Falls

DREW NASH/Times-News

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

Twin Falls won the battle against Canyon Ridge in their shared venue. The Riverhawks made sure they turned the tables in the Bruins' backyard.

Jesse Partida capitalized on two goaltender gaffes Tuesday, turning them into Canyon Ridge goals and lifting the Riverhawks boys soccer team to a precious 2-1 win over Twin Falls at Bruin Stadium, in the regular-season finale for both teams.

"We just take what the other team gives us," said Partida, who sandwiched his goals around a Chris DeLaCruz penalty kick for Twin Falls. "We really wanted to beat them here. We had heard they were undefeated here and we wanted to get a win."

It was the first match for Canyon Ridge (3-11-2, 1-7-2 Great Basin Conference,

Vale leads Burley girls soccer to win

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — It's hard to keep Aubrie Vale down.

For the previous three Burley girls soccer games, Vale sat on the bench nursing an ankle injury. She could barely tolerate it.

"It was hard," she said. "I was yelling on the sideline and I almost jumped off the bench and went out there."

Finally cleared by the doctor, Vale got back on the field for the regular-season finale Tuesday and immediately made her presence known by scoring each of the Bobcats' goals in a 2-1 win over Minico at Skaggs Events Center.

"It feels really good to score," said Vale, a sophomore forward. "It was good just playing with the team, scoring and winning against Minico."

Vale said her physical therapist said she shouldn't play the entire game, but "I was playing really good and I didn't want to come out."

The first goal came in the fourth minute when Megan Graham headed the ball ahead to Vale and she tapped it past the charging Minico keeper.

Vale scored again in the 49th minute on an assist from Caitlyn Bennett.

Burley forward Aubrie Vale (8) shoots against Minico goalkeeper Selena Carrillo Tuesday at Burley High School.

"She's definitely a force up top for us," Burley coach Sara Edwards said of Vale.

Pressure from Minico forward Makenzie Haynes forced an own goal by a Burley defender in the 60th minute.

Burley (5-11-0, 5-5-0 GBC, 12 pts) earned the third seed heading into the District IV tournament and will host sixth-seeded Minico (1-14-1, 0-9-1, 1 pt.) in the first round at 1 p.m. on Thursday.

"I feel good about (districts)," Edwards said. "We've got our players back that have been injured or suspended, so we've got our whole team going into it."

Former Golden Eagles star Art Parakhouski playing in Latvia

Times-News

Former College of Southern Idaho player Art Parakhouski has started his professional basketball career in Latvia.

Parakhouski had 17 points and five rebounds in his first game with BC VEF Riga, a team based in Riga, Latvia, that plays in the Latvian Basketball League.

The 6-foot-11 Parakhouski was projected by many to be a second-round pick in June's NBA Draft, but was not selected. He played for the Boston Celtics in the NBA summer league in Orlando, but after playing for his national team in Belarus, he chose to stay in Europe.

In a recent e-mail with CSI marketing coordinator Jason Vickrey, Parakhouski wrote, "Overall I'm doing OK, just practicing a lot twice a day for 2.5 hours each. Don't even have time to do something else."

Parakhouski spent two seasons at CSI, averaging 14.0 points, 8.1 rebounds and 1.4 blocks as a sophomore in the 2007-08 season. He finished his college career at Virginia's Radford University where he tallied 21.4 points, 13.4 rebounds and 2.1 blocks as a senior last season.

Minico boys soccer draws with Burley

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Normally when rivals Minico and Burley meet, it's for bragging rights. But at Tuesday's boys soccer match, much more was on the line.

On the final day of the regular season, with District IV tournament seeding up for grabs, Burley and Minico played to a 1-1 draw.

The Bobcats (7-2-7, 2-1-7, 13 points) secured the district's third seed and will host No. 6 Canyon Ridge at 3 p.m. Thursday. Minico (7-7-2, 3-5-2, 10 points) finished as the fifth seed and will travel to No. 4 Twin Falls on Thursday.

Tuesday's game was vastly different from Burley's 4-1 home victory over Minico on Sept. 16. The Spartans played with much more energy, showing they're ready for postseason play.

"I think they proved it today," Minico coach Armando Tapia said of his team. "They came in ready to play and dominated the ball. They fought hard, they kept their cool and they kept pushing until the very last minute."

Additionally, Tapia eluded that the playing field — literally — was leveled.

"This is the benefit of playing on a good old-fashioned grass soccer field," he said. "I was never able to get used to that fake turf (at Burley's Skaggs Events Center)."

MLB playoffs start with 3 Cy Young winners

By Mike Fitzpatrick
Associated Press writer

First playoff appearance in 15 years. Packed house in Philadelphia. Goose bumps galore.

By the time Joey Votto and the Cincinnati Reds have a chance to soak it all in, Phillies ace Roy Halladay will be in the middle of his windup.

"You've got to start somewhere," said Reds manager

Dusty Baker, taking his third NL team to the postseason. "It's sort of like a kid coming out of college. Everybody wants to know what is his job experience? And sooner or later you've got to work to get that experience, and that's where we are right now."

The anticipation is over, the also-rans are out and the pressure is on. Everyone knows what's at stake in October.

Ryan Howard and the Phillies are swinging for their third straight pennant. Texas is trying to win a playoff series for the first time. The wild-card Yankees hope to repeat as World Series champs.

Postseason baseball begins today, with a trio of Cy Young Award winners on the mound: Halladay, Cliff Lee and CC Sabathia.

In the first of three marquee pitching matchups, Lee gets the ball for the Rangers against the Tampa Bay Rays, who will throw an ace of their own under the roof at Tropicana Field. David Price has blossomed into the elite starter almost everyone expected, going 19-6 with a 2.72 ERA for the AL East champions.

First pitch, 11:37 a.m. MDT.

"Should be a pretty fun matchup to watch," said Rays third baseman Evan Longoria, all set to play after missing the final 10 games of the regular season with a strained left quadriceps.

Texas' dangerous lineup features playoff newcomers Josh Hamilton and Michael Young, but the Rangers are the only current major league franchise that hasn't won a playoff series.

Lee was acquired from Seattle in July to help change that. The left-hander went 4-0 with a 1.56 ERA in five postseason starts for the Phillies last year.

"I expect as much out of myself as anyone expects out of me. You can call it pressure, call it what you want. But I'm not nervous or worried or any of those kind of words that would go along with pressure," Lee said Tuesday. "I'm looking forward to it, and it's going to be a challenge and a lot of fun."

Next up, Halladay and the Phillies host Cincinnati at 5:07 p.m. EDT.

With three aces in the rotation and a playoff-tested team, Philadelphia is heavily favored to reach its third consecutive World Series. The last National League club to do that was the St. Louis Cardinals from 1942-44.

But the Reds, led by Votto, a top contender for NL MVP, can slug with just about anybody and they have an overpowering arm to bring out of the bullpen in rookie Aroldis Chapman.

Halladay, obtained from Toronto last December, will be making his playoff debut after 13 stellar seasons. He'll face Edinson Volquez, who returned this year from right elbow surgery and went 4-3 with a 4.31 ERA in 12 starts.

Cincinnati, winner of the NL Central, is in the postseason for the first time since 1995.

"I could sit here forever and talk about Halladay," Phillies manager Charlie Manuel said. "He's very dedicated, he's very intense, he wants to win, he definitely wants a ring. He wants to be the best pitcher in baseball, but he also wants to be on the best team. He definitely puts his team before himself, and he's definitely inspirational

AP source: Pistons to sell team to Mike Ilitch

DETROIT (AP) — The Detroit Pistons have found a new owner and he knows Motor City sports.

The Pistons have decided to sell the team to Detroit Tigers and Detroit Red Wings owner Mike Ilitch, a person involved with the process said Tuesday. The person, who spoke to The Associated Press on the condition of anonymity because of a confidentiality agreement, said both sides were negotiating financial terms.

Forbes last year valued the team at $479 million, but a weak economy, the threat of an NBA lockout next year and a motivated seller — Karen Davidson — likely mean the price is lower.

Ilitch Holdings spokeswoman Jennifer Haselhuhn said the organization signed a nondisclosure agreement earlier this year and cannot comment. Mayor Dave Bing, former Pistons star, said Tuesday “the deal is not done, but we remain optimistic.”

Ilitch, the Little Caesars pizza mogul, has said he was motivated to buy the Pistons in part to make sure another buyer didn’t move the NBA club out of town.

If the sale goes through, the 81-year-old Ilitch would be the only person to own and control teams in three of North America’s four major professional leagues. Ted Turner once owned the Atlanta Braves, Hawks and Thrashers.

The Pistons sale could have significant ramifications for where the area’s pro teams play — in Detroit or its suburbs.

If Ilitch owns both the Red

Wings and Pistons, he could likely leverage a deal with Detroit and Wayne County officials to finance a new arena in the city because they wouldn’t want him move the storied hockey team to The Palace in suburban Auburn Hills, where the Pistons play.

The Red Wings, who play at 31-year-old Joe Louis Arena, have been contemplating whether to build a new arena, renovate their current home or move at least temporarily to The Palace.

BYU coach gets more hands on amid struggles

By Darnell Dickson
(Provo, Utah) Daily Herald

Bronco Mendenhall, while rebuilding BYU's football team into four consecutive 10-win seasons, has prided himself on the increasing ability to delegate.

That mantra took a sudden turn for the reverse over the weekend, and the sixth-year head coach elaborated for the first time this week why he chose to fire his defensive coordinator, Jaime Hill, over the weekend.

It was a conspicuous move, to say the least. Hill, an aide since 2006 and the defensive coordinator since Mendenhall stepped aside in 2008, was the first such termination of a head coach whose trademark has been subtle changes and staff stability. It is certainly an unorthodox move even by the national-landscape standards, as coordinators rarely get dumped right in the middle of a year.

But when push came to shove, when a season-opening win was countered by four consecutive losses — including the final straw of sorts, a 31-16 loss at Utah State on Friday — Mendenhall chose to make his most drastic change.

He will now organize the defense again, also call its plays again, and the coach hopes his touch is felt much deeper than gamedays.

“As a leader, there are pivotal times where there become...you can call them feelings, instincts, promptings, whatever you would like,” Mendenhall said.

“And that’s exactly what I felt, and I chose to act on it immediately. I don’t expect it to be popular with anyone, other than I think I did the right thing for myself and our program. And it certainly was not easy, and it doesn’t mean I don’t care for coach Hill and his family, because I do.”

Hill told the Daily Herald

over the weekend he was steamed to be made the “fall guy” for the Cougars’ worst start since 1973, LaVell Edwards’ second season. This was Hill’s longest stint in a particular place in a career that has roamed around for about 30 years from small-college ball to a year in the NFL and a few seasons in Canada’s professional ranks.

The Cougars are currently ranked among the worst defenses in the country in a variety of key statistics. The offense is similarly awful, for starters averaging about a measly 15 points per game, but as of now Mendenhall would require no reorganization of staffers.

Hill, to his dismay, was not afforded an opportunity to stay on staff. He said he would have understood if the result of Saturday’s noon meeting was that his boss was taking back the play-calling duties. Mendenhall about a month ago, after the season-opening win against Washington, patted his own back for feeling it not even necessary to sit in on defensive staff meetings -believing at least publicly that Hill was doing a standout job.

The relationship quickly dissolved way past any compromise.

“I didn’t think that would be effective,” Mendenhall said of keeping Hill on staff, “again with just some fundamental leadership philosophical differences.”

There was “more to it” in the decision to fire Hill than the current state of the defense. Hill was adamant that he did not resign, though given the choice.

Mendenhall praised Hill for his years of service. He brought the coach on in 2006, needing someone to help him run a defense that was less “gimmicky” than the 3-3-5 scheme Mendenhall brought to Provo from New Mexico.

Half of baseball's playoff teams watch wallets

NEW YORK (AP) — It's not just the usual suspects in the playoffs this year.

Texas, ranked 23rd according to Major League Baseball's latest payroll figures, won the AL West. Tampa Bay, just 20th, beat out the high-spending New York Yankees and Boston to win the AL East.

Cincinnati won the NL Central and is going to the postseason for the first time since 1995 despite ranking 19th. No. 16 Atlanta won the NL wild card.

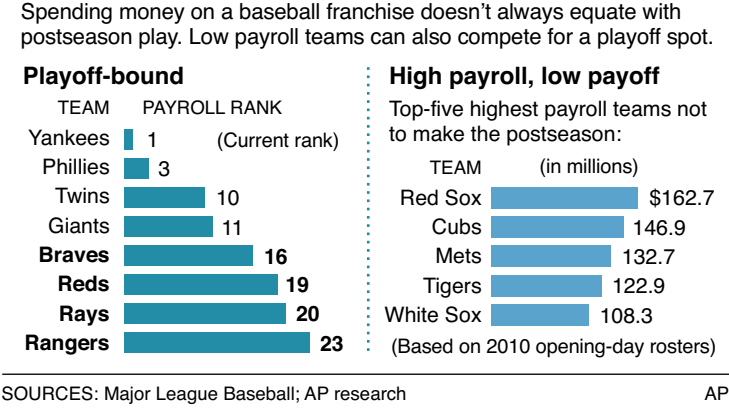

It's the first time since the playoffs expanded in 1995 that as many as four postseason teams came from the bottom half by payroll.

What in the name of the almighty dollar is going on?

At least thus far this season, youth and tight budgets have prevailed.

"Just the way the economics of the game are," Reds general manager Walt Jocketty said. "There's such a wide discrepancy in revenues at different clubs. You have to survive and compete, and you have to find new ways to do it."

The price of success

Tampa Bay with an average age of about 28½ by season's end, is the youngest playoff team and 19th in the majors by age, according to STATS LLC. Texas is 17th and Minnesota 15th, both at 28-plus, while Cincinnati is 12th at 29.

Whether relative inexperience will hurt these teams in the crucible of October baseball remains to be seen, but young legs and arms got them this far.

More and more, teams are willing to take a chance on youth — especially those prized players not-yet-eligible for salary arbitration or free agency.

"You don't see people giving up as many of their (former) draft choices as they use to," Twins President Jerry Bell said. "George Steinbrenner, he didn't care. Everything was about win now. But teams are pulling back a little more and being a little more apt to hold on to their minor league players. And obviously we believe that's the way to go."

The golf courses of the U.S., Caribbean and Asia will be filled this month with players from teams that failed. The second-, third- and fifth-through-ninth biggest spenders as of opening day were all flops: Boston, the Cubs, the Mets, Detroit, the White Sox, the Angels and Seattle.

Baseball Commissioner Bud Selig is absolutely glowing when talking about the success of the small markets. It's not just because he used to own the Milwaukee Brewers. Boosting the little guys has been a primary goal since he became commissioner in 1992. Revenue sharing has improved the fortunes of the clubs with less to spend, with $433 million transferred to the poorer teams in 2009 and an estimated $401 million this year, according to MLB.

"When you've got Cincinnati winning and San Diego up there, and even San Francisco and Colorado and Tampa, it's a great sign," he said. "There's no doubt, as I study things, that we have more competitive balance than we've ever had in our history."

Fans spend empty their wallets to see a winner, and teams unload their treasury to produce one. When they fall short, owners look to assess blame — witness the firing of Mets general manager Omar Minaya this week, partly because $36 million pitcher Ollie Perez had as many wins this year as Kukla, Fran and Ollie — O.

Successful teams, with the exception most notably of the star-filled Yankees and Phillies, largely added experienced players to their prospects.

"You do need a core group," Bell said. "I think you need a sprinkle of veterans here and there. I don't think you need too many, but a couple are of them are awful nice to have around. People look up to them. You know, we've got (Carl) Pavano now who's kind of had a rebirth here. He's kind of a leader. And (Jim) Thome obviously. Yeah, you need some of that."

St. Louis Blues' Chris Porter and Chicago Blackhawks' Fernando Pisani vie for puck during the third period of a preseason game Sunday in Chicago. The NHL season begins Thursday.

Blackhawks' repeat Stanley Cup chances challenged by salary cap

NEW YORK (AP) — Forget about celebration hangovers and short summers, the biggest threat to the Chicago Blackhawks' hopes to repeat as Stanley Cup champion might be the salary cap.

The cloud that has hung over the NHL since the end of the lockout in 2005 literally shadowed the Blackhawks' parade just days after they claimed their first title since 1961 with a six-game win over the Philadelphia Flyers.

Gone is 25-year-old postseason hero Dustin Byfuglien, who scored a team-high 11 playoff goals — including five game-winners, top goalie Antti Niemi, and others who provided key roles in the run to the championship. In all, the Blackhawks sent away eight players to get under this season's salary ceiling of $59.4 million.

"Everybody was talking about players getting traded and what the team was going to look like next year, while at the same time we're trying to enjoy what we just did," Blackhawks captain Jonathan Toews said. "It's not easy for those guys and it's not easy for the rest of our team. Now we're at that point where it's all behind us: the salary cap, the trades and this and that. We're ready to move forward with the guys we do have."

While Chicago was clearly the best team in June, the Blackhawks certainly will face strong claims to that distinction as hockey gets rolling again Thursday when the regular season opens with a five-game slate.

"That's the worst part about it, seeing some of your best friends leave," star forward Patrick Kane said. "Not that they were some of our best players, but they were obviously instrumental in what we did."

"If you look at our team this year, it's kind of a new team. It's a new challenge. Of course you want to keep that team together, but it's just not the way the NHL works anymore. You've got to make changes."

And the rest of the league has noticed.

The Detroit Red Wings, the NHL's last repeat champion in 1997 and 1998, might be poised to reclaim the Western Conference title they held the two previous years. They also might have an advantage with a less condensed schedule instead of last season's jam-packed one that accommodated the long break for the Vancouver Olympics.

With Pavel Datsyuk, Henrik Zetterberg, and ageless defenseman Nicklas Lidstrom healthy and hungry, the Red Wings are happy to slip under the radar and let the Blackhawks carry the burden of the bull's-eye. Detroit was knocked out in the second round by regular-season Western champion San Jose and now seems to have lost some of the intimidation factor.

"I don't know. I was reading the other day that we're not that good," Red Wings coach Mike Babcock said with a smile. "We are good. I just know that we're going to end up with a lot of points."

That will be necessary again in the wide-open West, where it took 95 just to qualify for the postseason.

Seventh-place Nashville got in with 100 points, and clubs such as the Colorado Avalanche, Los Angeles Kings and Phoenix Coyotes that finished at the bottom of the standings in 2009 all made surprise trips to the playoffs.

"It's not a whole lot of point differential between eighth and fifth," Kings forward Anze Kopitar said. "It's one of those things where we can all thrive on it and take it to our advantage because everything is so close in the West. Pretty much anybody can win."

Out East, the Flyers and Montreal Canadiens nabbed the final two places with only 88 points — one more than the ninth-place New York Rangers — but then surged all the way to the conference finals over overwhelming favorites such as the Washington Capitals, New Jersey Devils and Pittsburgh Penguins.

Montreal knocked out powerhouses Washington and Pittsburgh in the first two rounds. Philadelphia ousted Boston to reach the conference finals after trailing the series 3-0, and then 3-0 in Game 7.

The Penguins reached the Stanley Cup finals in 2008 and 2009, splitting the final series with the Red Wings in those seasons, but were stunned in the second round by the upstart Canadiens. The only thing that kept that from being the most surprising result in last season's playoffs was Montreal's comeback from a 3-1 deficit to Presidents' Trophy-winning Washington in the first round.

"I think teams are still hunting us down during the regular season," Capitals defenseman Mike Green said. "We did well in the regular season, but once the playoffs came around for whatever reason we couldn't succeed. That might play into our advantage come playoffs. Maybe they'll underestimate us and you never know."

Not likely with Alex Ovechkin still lurking in the nation's capital.

Ovechkin might have the individual statistical edge over Pittsburgh captain Sidney Crosby — the Washington star's biggest rival — but he hasn't turned that into playoff success.

Prosecutor convinced all cyclists are doping

ROME (AP) — Italy's anti-doping prosecutor is convinced that all cyclists are doping, a belief reinforced by four years of work as one of the world leaders in the effort against drugs in sports.

"I'm not the only one saying it. Lately, all of the cyclists I've interrogated have said that everyone dopes," the 78-year-old Ettore Torri told The Associated Press on Tuesday in his first interview in two years.

Torri has been at the forefront of the anti-doping fight since he took over in 2006, prosecuting Giro d'Italia champions Ivan Basso and Danilo Di Luca and other Italian standouts, such as Alessandro Petacchi and Riccardo Ricco, on behalf of the Italian Olympic Committee known as CONI.

"The longer I'm involved in this, the more I marvel at how widespread doping is," Torri said. "And I don't think it will be eradicated. Because it just evolves continuously. There are new substances coming out that can't be tested for."

Torri said legalizing doping would be a possible solution if that didn't harm the health of cyclists, noting that anti-doping authorities prosecute only a small percentage of offenders.

"It's not fair when we single out one rider in a 100," he said. "If the other 99 have doped, too, but are not prosecuted, it's not fair."

As for the recent doping allegations against Tour de France winner Alberto Contador, Torri said CONI "was the first to attack the Spanish system, which was an invulnerable tower."

While Torri has no direct knowledge of the case against Contador, a couple of years ago he went after another Spaniard, Alejandro Valverde, for his involvement in the 2006 probe known as Operation Puerto.

Valverde was banned from races in Italy, a suspension that was extended worldwide after years of litigation.

Contador was provisionally suspended by the International Cycling Federation (UCI) last week after a small amount of the banned drug clenbuterol was discovered in his system. Contador blamed contaminated beef for the result.

"He can blame it on a filet he ate, but that's not enough," Torri said. "He needs to prove it."

Torri's nearly 50 years of service in Rome's public prosecutor's office has helped him maintain relations with the courts in his current job.

He's following court cases in Perugia, Padua, Como, Mantova, Sardinia and Rome. He said doping is more widespread at the amateur level, noting how the winner of this summer's Maratona dei Dolomiti — one of the country's biggest amateur races — tested positive.

"As long as doping is a viable economic option, it's always going to exist," he said. "It needs to be made so that it's no longer worth it economically."

Torri cited a blood and muscle enhancer called AICAR, which a lab in Cologne recently developed a test to detect.

"Anti-doping is always behind the dopers. For example, anyone who used (AICAR) until yesterday got off," he said. "Every time we develop a test, we've already lost 50 percent of those who have doped with a substance."

to all of our players and he plays a big role in the make-up of our team."

The 8:37 p.m. game is a familiar matchup. Sabathia and the Yankees face AL Central champion Minnesota in a first-round series for the fourth time since 2003.

New York won all three previous meetings, including last year en route to its 27th World Series title, but this time the Twins have homefield advantage at their spacious new ballpark, Target Field.

Wednesday night will mark the first outdoor postseason game in Minnesota since 1970, and the temperature is supposed to be in the 60s.

"It's hard not to look at the past, that is pretty obvious," Twins first baseman Michael Cuddyer said. "But it's a totally different team than those first two times we played the Yankees."

It might be a different New York team than last season, too. Derek Jeter and the Yankees staggered to a 9-17 finish that cost them the AL East crown.

Francisco Liriano pitches the opener for the Twins, who hung a picture in their clubhouse of the back page of a recent (New York) Daily News that read "Bad news: Yanks must go on road for playoffs. Good news: They play the Twins. E-Z Pass."

"We tried to wrap this thing up and didn't get it done," said Andy Pettitte, who will start Game 2 for New York. "The bottom line is we're the world champs until someone knocks us off."

All division series are best-of-five. The fourth matchup gets under way Thursday night, when retiring manager Bobby Cox and his wild-card Atlanta Braves play at NL West champion San Francisco.

ANSWER: You are too strong for a simple bid of four spades, since it is easy to envision quite moderate hands opposite where slam might be laydown. At the same time you don't want to risk the five-level unnecessarily, so cue-bid four clubs, planning to bid four spades over a red-suit response. This sequence simply suggests a good four-spade bid, in case partner has extras.

BUCHANAN STREET
177 - Jane George - C-21 GVP Realty

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend, "Ronnie," and I have a very active and "different" sex life. I'm happy I have found someone who is so compatible, but it has also presented a problem for me when we're out with friends.

Our bedroom activities occasionally include a third party — a female. I'm perfectly happy with this arrangement because I am the one who initiated it. However, I have a problem with Ronnie's recruiting practices. He seems to think that because I have one friend who has joined us, all of them are fair game. Most of my friends are not aware of our activities. They're mainstream, and it's embarrassing when he propositions them. I try to blame it on booze, but they get offended. I have lost one good friend over it.

I have tried repeatedly to explain to Ronnie that there's a time and a place for everything. He just doesn't get it. He says not to worry about what others think. I don't want to end what we have, but I need him to understand that our sex life is not open for discussion among our tight-knit group of friends. Any suggestions?

— EMBARRASSED IN JERSEY

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR EMBARRASSED: Because you have explained to Ronnie that what he's doing is making you uncomfortable, that not all of your friends are into threesomes and it has already cost you one friend — then face it. He doesn't want to "get it." Or, this may be his way of letting you know that he wants to do some recruiting of his own.

Before any more of your private business is broadcast, you will have to decide if Ronnie's ability in the bedroom makes up for the fact that he's embarrassing in other important social situations. Only you can decide that one.

DEAR ABBY: You probably have heard things like this before, but I don't know where to turn.

I have been dating "Jeff" for five years and we have a lot of fun together. Last week Jeff proposed marriage and — I choked! Now I'm having doubts about everything, and he's getting impatient with me because I haven't given him an answer.

Things are not going the way I had hoped, Abby. Everything is falling apart. Does this happen often? How do I know if he's the right one?

— PANICKED IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR PANICKED: It doesn't happen "often," but panicking at making a lifetime commitment certainly isn't unheard of. You need to relax, calm down, and realize that you have spent five enjoyable years with Jeff or the relationship would have ended. Then ask yourself how you would feel about a lifetime of similar experiences, and you'll have the answer you're looking for. I hope you'll be very happy together.

DEAR ABBY: I was friendly with a woman I'll call Paula. In the past, whenever I'd buy a lottery ticket I'd promise to buy her a house if I won.

Our friendship has become strained. In fact, we're no longer friends at all. It has been a year and a half since I've spoken to her.

Am I legally bound to buy Paula a house if I win? She's the kind of person who would take you to court and generally try to ruin your life. Could you please give me some advice and help me out of this jam?

— WINNER-TO-BE IN STAUNTON, VA.

DEAR WINNER-TO-BE: Yes. A verbal agreement is only as good as the paper it is written on.

IF OCTOBER 6 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Between now and the first of the year, you must take care of old bills and obligations that have been neglected. If you do not, they may become more complicated and hold you back. In February or early March, there might be an encouraging turning point when you can abandon a troubled path and accept a smoother one. Old, outworn motivations no longer ring your chimes and by moving on, you will improve your life. You are wiser than usual then, so can put key plans into motion or ask for favors and advice. Your popularity gains ground in February, making it a good time to apply for new jobs, make an important change of career or meet members of the opposite sex who have romantic ideas in their hearts.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Take time to go tilting after windmills. This is a great time for a vacation or to escape into the fantasies of a book or movie. This is not a great time to make new business plans or to pursue ambitions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Patch it up. Take a few minutes to make a phone call or send out an email that begs for forgiveness. There might be a great opportunity to patch up a misunderstanding or put a relationship back on track.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Pollyanna paid it forward. Find something good to say. Maintain an optimistic outlook even if your close companions try your patience. Soften harsh criticisms by responding with infinite kindness.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make the most of your gender-based skills. You could be enormously talented at doing the coquettish frothy thing if you are a woman or emanating an aura of suave, debonair chic if you are a man.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are easily amused and bemused. Don't be disappointed if someone seems bent on opposing your every wish. Take shocking remarks in your stride and find something worthwhile in something contrary.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Mix up your mojo. Look for the best and highest. Resistance to change might be a good thing to practice under these stars. Buying brand new gadgets may only serve to add confusion and chaos to your life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): There is safety in numbers. You may wish to escape from the herd and do things your way, but all you will do is create a commotion. Stick to a group and activities that enhance the community welfare.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Meditate on what makes the most sense. The serenity prayer makes the point that you must be wise enough to know the difference between the things you can change and the things that you can't.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be calm, cool and collected. Unexpected reactions or unforeseen changes in your professional life or family are possible. Be poised to overcome emerging situations that could cost you money.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You probably know the oft-repeated quotation about "the best laid schemes of mice and men." Strive to build a better mousetrap, but wait to put out the bait. Don't expect everything to go smoothly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Reinvent some parts of your life so that problems become assets. If you are continually called upon to take care of the bills or handle the investments, perhaps you should take an accounting course.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Shameless self-promotion can disturb the harmony. You could expect to be the center of attention in inappropriate situations and your efforts to get attention could produce a boomerang
