Final rule affects Idaho land, waterways

New protections for bull trout reverse Bush policy

By Jeff Barnard
Associated Press writer

GRANTS PASS, Ore. — The Obama administration on Tuesday greatly expanded protections for waterways critical to the restoration of threatened bull trout, making it tougher for agencies to approve livestock grazing, logging and mining across a large swath of federal land in the West.

The final rule issued by U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service represented a major expansion of the streams, lakes and reservoirs protected as critical habitat for the fish, and a reversal of Bush administration policy on endangered species.

It primarily affects federal lands in Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Washington and Nevada. That includes 8,772 miles of streams and 170,218 acres of Idaho lakes and reservoirs, including the Bruneau and Jarbidge rivers in southwest Idaho and extensive river basins in central Idaho. Areas of Blaine, Camas, Elmore and Owyhee counties are included.

The new ruling protects 19,000 miles of streams, which is five times more than the 2005 rule, and 490,000 acres of lakes and reservoirs, which is more than three times greater than previously ordered. But the total is somewhat less than what Fish and Wildlife proposed protecting in 2009.

Faced with a lawsuit, Fish and Wildlife agreed last year to revise the 2005 critical habitat designation after an inspector general's report found it was among dozens of decisions improperly interfered with by former deputy assistant interior secretary Julie

Schools, taxes lead District 26 debate

By Amy Huddleston

JEROME — Close to 25 people met Tuesday evening at the Jerome County Judicial Annex to hear what candidates for legislative office had to say about education funding, raising taxes and other issues.

The four candidates seeking two Idaho District 26 House seats this fall answered audience questions at the forum, put on by Citizens Protecting Resources.

Scott McClure, a Democrat challenging Republican Rep. Bert Stevenson, said legislators need to collect money from delinquent taxpayers in Idaho and enforce an Internet sales tax, which could be used for things like education.

“That money belongs to you and to me. It also belongs to your children and my children,” McClure said. “If you had an extra $100 million in the budget that would certainly mitigate some of the problems.”

Incumbent Rep. Maxine Bell, a Republican, said this is the time to look at a way to restructure government. The co-chairwoman of the budget-setting Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee, she said it's been difficult to cut education.

“We are really working toward putting more money in education,” Bell said. “We could not do anything with the $3 million hole we were in and 68 percent of our

Burley teacher pleads not guilty to child-sex charges

Trial for Brinkerhoff slated for December

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Dressed in a suit and tie on Tuesday, suspended Burley teacher Michael Scott Brinkerhoff pleaded not guilty to child sex charges stemming from alleged inappropriate online interactions with a student.

Jury trial for Brinkerhoff was set for 9 a.m. Dec. 13 in 5th District Court in Burley, with a pretrial conference slated for 9:30 a.m. Dec. 7.

Brinkerhoff faces felony charges of sexual abuse of a child less than 16 years old and enticing children over the Internet. After being arrested in August and held in the Mini-Cassia Criminal Justice Center on $50,000 bond, he was released on Sept. 10 after posting $20,000 bond.

The 42-year-old Burley Junior High School teacher allegedly sent numerous sexually charged Internet messages to a 14-year-old female student while using the guise of a fictional 15-year-old nephew in Arizona. He has been suspended with pay, pending the outcome of the case.

13 seek to replace retiring Judge Smyser

Position to be held open until March due to funding crunch

By Eric Larsen
Times-News

There's no shortage of work for magistrate judges and apparently no lack of applicants hoping to perform it.

Thirteen Idahoans have applied to replace retiring 5th Judicial District Magistrate Judge Howard Smyser, who will hang up his robe on Jan. 11. Smyser has held the post since January 2001, said Trial Court Administrator Linda Wright.

Those applying include Gooding County Prosecutor Calvin Campbell, former Jerome County Prosecutor Jon Nicholson and former Minidoka County Prosecutor Nicole Cannon. Other area applicants include Mike Felton of Buhl, Jeremy Vaughn of Filer, Stacey Gosnell-Taylor of Jerome, and Ted Booth, Dave Haley, Brian Harper, Lisa Rodriguez and Tony Valdez, all of Twin Falls.

Theodore Fleming of Nampa and Pete Bredeson of Hayden Lake also applied for the position.

Wright said the 13 applicants is “a good number,” though she's seen as many as 25 people — typically Idaho attorneys — apply for magistrate positions in

Murder trial delayed until January

Arellano defense seeks dismissal

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — A man accused of murdering his wife on a Burley bar's dance floor won't face jury trial until at least late January.

Jose Manuel Arellano, 32, of Burley, saw his trial date delayed until 9 a.m. Jan. 24 after his defense requested the rescheduling Tuesday in 5th District Court in Burley. A pretrial conference was set for 9:30 a.m. Jan. 18.

Arellano faces charges of first-degree murder, attempted first-degree murder and aggravated battery stemming from a May incident during which he allegedly shot and killed his wife, Ramona “Monica” Nanez Arellano, 32, of Paul, while she danced with another man at the El him last week. Jensen also asked the court on Tuesday to continue the trial, which had been scheduled on Oct. 25.

Jensen said he requested the trial continuation because a psychologist performing investigative work on the case recently broke his leg in a hiking accident.

Cassia County Deputy Prosecutor Blaine Cannon said he wasn't surprised that Jensen was requesting additional time on the case but said he'd like to proceed as soon as possible because the case has numerous witnesses available to testify now.

Trial is expected to last seven days.

“The jury selection will be time-consuming, but once the evidence starts coming in it will be rapid,” Cannon said.

Although Brinkerhoff's defense attorney, Kent Jensen, said he had a conflict with holding the trial on Dec. 13, 5th District Judge Michael Crabtree asked that the date stand in case Jensen's conflict is resolved.

If convicted, Brinkerhoff faces a maximum penalty of 25 years in prison and a $50,000 fine for sex abuse of a minor less than 16, and up to 15 years in prison and a $50,000 fine for enticing a child over the Internet.

While the court docket posted outside the courtroom on Tuesday listed the case as sealed, Crabtree said no such court order has been issued.

budget is education.”

Stevenson emphasized the role he feels local control should play in riding out the education-funding troubles. By example, he said legislators want to let local school districts decide whether consolidating would save them money. Districts have been offered the choice, he said, but none have recently chosen to pursue it.

Candidates addressed the question of raising taxes or cutting the budget in coming years.

Bell said people are no longer able to pay much because of the lack of jobs. Her opponent, Democrat Cindy Shotswell, said there should be more accountability for tax exemptions granted in Idaho.

McClure said raising taxes to pay for things that were previously committed to is part of life, even if it something that is hard to do. Stevenson was against it, however, stating that increasing taxes will affect unemployment taxes.

Specifically addressing so-called “sin taxes” — taxes on things like beer, wine and tobacco — Bell said there aren't enough people paying such taxes to justify increasing them.

“We don't have enough sin in the state,” she said.

Shotswell turned the sin-tax question back on her audience, asking what they would suggest. Legislators have beat such issues to death, she said, and she believes Idaho residents who live with the problem every day may have the best ideas for solving it.

Otter grabs fundraising lead in governor’s race

BOISE (AP) — Republican Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter has regained the fundraising advantage in his bid for a second term by more than doubling the total raised by his Democratic challenger in the last three months.

Campaign disclosure forms filed Tuesday show Otter raked in more than $750,000 during the period. Campaign officials say Otter has another $67,000 in committed pledges that are being counted.

Meanwhile, Democratic candidate Keith Allred reports raising more than $372,000 during the period, which ended Sept. 30.

Applicants will go through an extensive interview process that includes checks into their tax histories and criminal records, surveys of attorneys from their districts, and reviews of public and reference comments.

The applicants will also interview in front of the district's 17-person Magistrate Commission chaired by District Judge G. Richard Bevan. The commission is comprised of county commission chairmen from each of the eight counties within the 5th Judicial District, Twin Falls Mayor Don Hall, Declo Mayor Jay Darrington, Castleford Mayor Ryan Blick, two attorneys at large, two electors at large and Magistrate Judge Thomas Borresen.

While the position will open after Smyser's retirement, it will be held open until March 1. Wright said that's due to cost-saving measures due to the state budget crunch. A senior judge will temporarily fill the position, serving from January until the permanent replacement starts.

Magistrate judges are paid $103,680 annually and receive state employee bonuses.

MacDonald, who resigned in 2007.

“We don't know if this decision will be challenged, but if it is we believe it will be sustained because we have made a scrupulous effort to apply the science as rigorously and as well as we can,” said Michael Bean, special counselor to the assistant secretary of Interior for fish, wildlife and parks.

The bull trout is not a trout, but a char. Its numbers have declined about 60 percent, and it has disappeared from about half its historical range due to logging, mining, dam construction and livestock grazing that have warmed and muddied the water it lives in and cut off migration routes. Nonnative fish species introduced for anglers compete for scarce habitat. It survives mostly in backcountry areas far from people.

“Protecting and restoring their habitat contributes not only to the recovery of the species, but to the water quality of rivers and lakes throughout their range,” Fish and Wildlife Pacific Regional Director Robyn Thorson said in a statement.

Typical of high-profile fish and wildlife, all the significant actions by the federal government to restore healthy populations have come out of lawsuits brought by conservation groups, many dating back to the Clinton administration.

The critical habitat designation leaves only a recovery plan to be done.

“Before, if they were going to log or mine any kind of project in bull trout habitat, they just had to see if it would cause the extinction of the entire population throughout the drainage. It's almost impossible to say that,” said Michael Garrity of Alliance for the Wild Rockies. “Now you can't adversely modify critical habitat with any project. So it's a much higher bar of protection for bull trout, which should lead to recovery.”

Garrity said they had a similar draft rule during the Clinton administration, but the Bush administration knocked that back to very little before the latest revision.

“We're going to uncork the good champagne with the idea that this battle is over, and the bull trout won,” Garrity said.

An economic analysis estimates the habitat protections will increase federal government spending by $5 million to $7.6 million a year over the next 20 years. Costs include more time for biologists to consider if federal projects will harm bull trout habitat, and for restoring habitat, improving fish passage around dams primarily in Oregon's Willamette Valley, and changing forest management.

Is your dog a Republican? My cat's a Democrat

Statistically, a Republican is far more likely to be a dog owner than a Democrat. As a political independent, I take strong exception. None of my dogs — and I have three — has ever voted for a Republican. I know because I checked their paw prints. Yet according to the BBC, 33 percent of American dog owners identify themselves as Republican, whereas only 28 percent of cat owners lean to the right. This is a slander and canard, related to the fact that cat owners are perceived as being smarter than dog owners. A Gallup survey of 2,524 households found that 47.2 percent of those households with a cat had at least one person educated to degree level, compared with 38.4 percent of homes with dogs. There are 2.0 people in my household educated to a degree level, thank you very much, and neither of them are cats. (Although Umbra, our 4-year-old black cat, has long been suspected of telling tales out of school, and she's a registered Democrat.) There are no income differences between cat owners and dog owners to speak of, as both cat and dog owners are each as likely as the other to be in either the top or bottom income quartile. (Income differences? Maybe not, but as the owner of a dog who chews, there are certainly expenditure differences.) I believe the statistics are skewed by the fact that Labrador retrievers, the most popular dog breed in America, look Republican. (A bit like George W. Bush, if you ask me.) Whereas the golden retriever, No. 4 on the list, looks more like Bill Clinton. Golden retrievers also have a reputation for being, well, randy. But we'll leave that subject until another election year.

DON'T ASK ME

Angle rewrites policy positions in Nevada race

By Cristina Silva
Associated Press Writer

LAS VEGAS — Republican U.S. Senate candidate Sharron Angle is distancing herself from an unusual foe: her own words. In recent weeks, Angle repeatedly has claimed that she never vowed to end Social Security or federal benefits for veterans. Democrats have widely circulated recordings of her making those very points in early campaign stops. The shift illuminates Angle's ongoing evolution from a hard-right state legislator to a slightly mellow national candidate amid attacks from Democrats and the occasional Republican leader. Her critics have admonished her for, among other things, deeming a BP fund of oil spill victims a "slush fund," suggesting tea party followers will resort to "Second Amendment remedies" if Washington is not reformed; concluding that unemployment benefits have "spoiled our citizenry;" and blasting Democrats for pushing public benefits to "make government our God." Her rival, Democratic Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, has pinned his re-election hopes on Angle's pronouncements, giving them center stage in a tsunami of TV spots that brand Angle as "too extreme." It is not clear what political philosophies Angle would take to the U.S. Senate. She has granted only a handful of interviews to mainstream publications since her upset victory in the June Republican primary, and often dodges reporters at public events. Angle embraces tea party support, calls herself a conservative Republican and insists her views are mainstream. Most recently, Angle assured her base that she never wanted to dismantle Social Security during an interview with a conservative radio host in front of hundreds of supporters. "That's all I said, that we can't allow our government to steal from us any longer," she said. "I used the word 'privatized' because I thought it only happened in the private sector." In previous interviews, Angle initially called for the end of Social Security, and then later embraced privatization. "I thought we would have to go just to the private sector for a template on how this is supposed to be done," Angle told supporters in August. "However, I've since been studying, and Chile has done this." She also denied that she had called for the end of the federal Veterans Administration. "What I said was we could do better," she said. When a reporter asked Angle in May whether the VA should cover her father's $800 monthly prescription bill, she said, "No, not if you're working toward a privatized system." In another change, Angle said of unemployment, "We pay into it, so in some respects, it is an insurance policy that we bought into with our paychecks." Previously, she described it as a "system of entitlement (that) has caused us to have a spoilage with our ability to go out and get a job." Reid has criticized Angle's original views on Social Security, the VA and unemployment benefits in a flood of attack ads. "Obviously these positions are far too extreme to be accepted by Nevada voters, so she's willing to do or say anything to hide her dangerous agenda including bald-faced lies she knows are falsifiable," Reid spokesman Kelly Steele said. "That's pathological." The nail-biting Senate race is this year's marquee political contest, with Republicans hungry to defeat the high-profile Reid and portray the midterm election as a referendum on President Barack Obama's sweeping social and economic agenda.

Judge: Stop 'don't ask, don't tell' immediately

Rights advocates warn troops not to reveal sexuality yet

By Julie Watson
Associated Press writer

SAN DIEGO — A federal judge ordered the military Tuesday to immediately stop enforcing its ban on openly gay troops, bringing the 17-year "don't ask, don't tell" policy closer than it has ever been to being abolished.

Justice Department attorneys have 60 days to appeal the injunction but did not say what their next step would be.

President Obama has backed a Democratic effort in Congress to repeal the law, rather than in an executive order or in court.

But U.S. District Judge Virginia Phillips' injunction leaves the administration with a choice: Continue defending a law it opposes with an appeal, or do nothing, let the policy be overturned, and add an explosive issue to a midterm election with Republicans poised to make major gains.

Department of Justice and Pentagon officials were reviewing the judge's decision and said they had no immediate comment.

"The whole thing has become a giant game of hot potato," said Diane H. Mazur, a legal expert at the Palm Center, a think tank at the University of California at Santa Barbara that supports a repeal. "There isn't anyone who wants to be responsible, it seems, for actually ending this policy."

"The potato has been passed around so many times that I think the grown-up in the room is going to be the federal courts."

A federal judge in Tacoma, Wash., ruled in a different case last month that a decorated flight nurse discharged from the Air Force for being gay should be given her job back.

Phillips, based in Riverside, Calif., issued a landmark ruling on Sept. 9, declaring the policy unconstitutional and asked both sides to give her input about an injunction. The judge said the policy violates due process rights, freedom of speech and the right to petition the government for redress of grievances guaranteed by the First Amendment.

Gay rights groups hailed Phillips' latest move, crediting her with what the administration and Washington have not been able to do.

"For a single federal judge to tell the government to stop enforcing this policy worldwide, this afternoon, with no time to think about it or plan for it, is almost unprecedented," said Richard Socarides, a former Clinton White House adviser on gay rights.

"This judge was sure. There was nothing in her mind that could justify this even for one more day, one more hour."

Gay rights advocates, however, tempered their celebrations, warning service members to avoid revealing their sexuality for fear that the injunction could be tossed out during an appeal and they would be left open to being discharged.

If the government does not appeal, the injunction cannot be reversed and would remain in effect. If it does, it can seek a temporary freeze, or stay, of her ruling. An appeal would go to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 9th Circuit. Either side could then take it to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Pentagon did not immediately comment, and a Justice Department spokeswoman said the government was reviewing the decision. Meanwhile, a group of 19 Democrat senators signed a letter sent to U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder urging him to let the injunction stand.

A "don't ask, don't tell" supporter said Phillips overstepped her bounds.

"The judge ignored the evidence to impose her ill-informed and biased opinion on our military, endangering morale, health and security of our military at a time of war," said Wendy Wright, president of Concerned Women for America, a public policy group.

Mormon church says cruelty to gays is wrong

By Jennifer Dobner
Associated Press writer

SALT LAKE CITY — The Mormon Church chided its members Tuesday to consider whether their attitudes toward all people — including gays — followed Christian principles, responding to activists' demand that a church leader withdraw anti-gay statements.

The Human Rights Campaign, the nation's largest gay civil rights organization, delivered a petition letter carrying 150,000 signatures to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints' headquarters, asking leader Boyd K. Packer to retract his statements in an Oct. 3 sermon that same-sex relationships are unnatural and can be overcome.

Packer, 86, is the second-highest ranking Mormon church leader and the next in line for the presidency of the 13.5 million-member faith.

Activists said such rhetoric is harmful, factually inaccurate and can result in the kind of bullying that leads some lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender youth to attempt suicide. At least four gay teens killed themselves last month across the country after reportedly experiencing anti-gay bullying and harassment.

In an official church statement about an hour after the activists delivered their petition, the spokesman Michael Otterson called those deaths tragic.

"We join our voice with others in unreserved condemnation of acts of cruelty, or attempts to belittle or mock any group or individual that is different — whether those difference arise from race, religion, mental challenge, social status, sexual orientation, or for any other reason," Otterson said. "Such actions simply have no place in our society."

Otterson said church history is replete with examples of discrimination against Mormons and that members should be "especially sensitive to the vulnerable in society," including gays.

The statement also reiterated the faith's belief that all sexual relations outside of marriage are wrong and said the church defines marriage as being only between a man and a woman. Since the 1990s, the church has worked to prevent the passage of laws legalizing same-sex marriage nationwide and helped generate millions to fund California's Proposition 8 in 2008.

The three-page statement fell short for activists seeking a reversal and an acknowledgment that same-sex attraction is an immutable human characteristic that cannot be changed.

"Unfortunately, the church did not use this golden opportunity to correct the record about their inaccurate and dangerous statements," HRC Vice President of Communications Fred Sainz, said in an e-mail to The Associated Press. "Every human being deserves the God given right to love and be loved. It's simply not reasonable to say 'don't act on temptations.'"

Mexican investigator probing lake shooting slain

By April Castro

AUSTIN, Texas — A Mexican police commander investigating the disappearance of an American tourist on a border lake plagued by pirates was killed, U.S. and Mexican officials said Tuesday.

Rolando Flores, the commander of state investigators in Ciudad Miguel Aleman who was part of a group investigating the reported shooting of David Hartley, was slain, said Ruben Rios, spokesman for the Tamaulipas state prosecutor's office.

Rios said authorities "don't know how or why he was killed. We don't have any details on how he died."

U.S. officials have said threats from drug gangs who control the area around Falcon Lake have hampered the search for Hartley.

Gov. Rick Perry said Tuesday that backing off when confronted by threats like the slaying of the police commander is "the worst thing we can do."

"I think their attempt is to intimidate law enforcement, no matter who they are or where they are," Perry told The Associated Press.

"The worst thing we can do is let the terrorists dictate the terms of how we're going to live."

Perry said the threat should be handled by upping "the numbers of law enforcement and military."

Hartley's wife, Tiffany, says she and her husband were attacked by pirates on the lake on Sept. 30, while they were returning to the United States from Mexico on Jet Skis. Hartley was shot and presumably fell into the lake.

Minnick says Labrador should pull new TV ad

By Todd Dvorak
Associated Press writer

BOISE — A new campaign ad by Republican congressional hopeful Raul Labrador takes aim at Democrat Walt Minnick's voting record and support for a pair of bills passed this summer that spent $68 billion to preserve teaching jobs and open credit to small businesses.

The 30-second television spot, the first aired by the Labrador campaign this election season, targets Minnick's "yes" votes for two bills approved by Congress this summer.

In August, the U.S. House approved a $26 billion emergency jobs measure that Democrats vowed would delay layoffs, restore teaching jobs nationwide and fill gaps in Medicaid funding reported by many states, including Idaho.

The other is a $42 billion measure approved by the House last month that created a $30 billion fund to encourage credit and lending to small businesses, and other $12 billion in tax breaks for small business owners.

The ad characterizes both bills as stimulus spending, buzz words Republicans are using in campaigns to hammer Democrats nationwide

Drug raid nets five biker gang members

SANDPOINT (AP) — Five members of a northern Idaho motorcycle gang are among 26 people indicted on drug charges following a yearlong investigation into an alleged international methamphetamine, cocaine and ecstasy ring.

Law enforcement agents said members of the Hermanos motorcycle gang, based in Sandpoint, were "foot soldiers" for a larger drug distribution operation.

Bonner County sheriff's Sgt. Marty Ryan told the Spokesman-Review that the Hermanos helped run drugs for the international Bandidos Motorcycle Club, which is considered a criminal organization. Bandidos members may already be entrenched in northern Idaho, Ryan said.

"We understand that biker mentality, that brotherhood," he said. "If they are foot soldiers for the Bandidos, that means Bandidos are now in our community, and I don't want that in our community."

A four-man team worked for about 12 months to build a case against the men, relying on anti-gang laws passed by the 2006 Legislature that make recruiting gang members a felony punishable by up to 10 years in prison.

"It had to be kept extremely secret," Ryan said. "To be able to pull this off in a community where people talk is extremely difficult."

Daniel J. Maddux, one of three people arrested so far, complained that the sting operation was little more than a "witch hunt."

Maddux owns the Long Bridge Bar and Grill, which was closed following the operation. The sheriff's office also is seeking Maddux's restaurant through civil forfeiture.

"I own a bar. People come and go," he told the newspaper. "You don't get the best people in here all the time, but we are trying to make a living, and what they do is what they do."

A grand jury began issuing indictments in August. Arrests began last week with a series of raids in the Sandpoint and Ponderay areas.

Bryan M. Lukezich, president of the Hermanos local chapter, is charged with felony counts of grand theft and recruiting gang members. Hermanos sergeant at arms James Ray Smith, road captain Steven Jay Beal and Hermanos members Dale Michael Champine and Jonathan B. Bates also are charged.

and curry favor with voters frustrated with bailouts, the 2009 economic stimulus package and the mounting federal debt.

Minnick "voted for $68 billion in more stimulus," the ad states.

But the Minnick Spokesman John Foster claims the spot is misleading and distorts the financing mechanics of both bills, which had support from some Republicans and are not designed to be paid for by adding to the federal deficit.

The emergency jobs and Medicaid bill was financed by cuts in other programs, including a $12 billion cut to food stamps, and a tax increase that limits the ability of some U.S.-based multinational companies to use foreign tax credits to reduce their U.S. taxes.

Much of the bill to help small businesses will be financed by allowing taxpayers to convert 401(k) and government retirement accounts into Roth accounts, in which they pay taxes up front on the money they contribute.

"These bills were paid for," said Foster, who called on Labrador to yank the ad. "And I don't think small business owners in Idaho would see a tax break as a bad thing. Apparently Raul Labrador does."

Labrador Spokesman Phil Hardy says the campaign stands behind the ads and has no intention of pulling them off the air.

Hardy says Minnick's votes are symbolic of the culture of careless spending permeating politics in Washington D.C.

"It's another sleight of hand trick by Congress," said Hardy. "It's saying we have no faith in Congress to successfully complete payment of these programs without further adding to the deficit in the short term, or long term."

With three weeks left before voters head to the polls, the Labrador ad is the latest in a race so far dominated on the airwaves by the better funded Minnick.

Unless Legislature acts, affordable housing is dead

Remember the notion of affordable housing – the idea that wealthy Idaho communities have an obligation to provide housing for the folks who teach the schools, fight the fires, tend the landscaping and make the lattes and capuccinos?
It’s dead.

On Monday, the Hailey City Council unanimously voted to repeal a five-year-old affordable housing requirement contained in the city’s subdivision ordinance.

City Attorney Ned Williamson initiated the repeal after several Idaho district courts have ruled that similar “inclusionary” community-housing requirements, as part of a subdivision ordinance, are illegal.

“It is regrettable that the city has to repeal a tool that is used nationwide to achieve community housing, but unfortunately we live in Idaho,” Blaine County Housing Authority Executive Administrator Kathy Grotto told the Idaho Mountain Express.

The Hailey community-housing requirements, put in place in 2005, called for 20 percent of housing units built in subdivisions with five or more units to be sold as deed-restricted community housing. Developers were given a 20 percent increase in density allowances to offset the requirement.

The city has 13 completed community-housing units under the affordable housing requirement. Seven are owned and six are being rented until they sell. Eight of the units are income-restricted. Five are workforce deed-restricted and limited to the local workforce.

Ketchum has made similar efforts, but as Idaho law is written Idaho cities have little power to enforce income equity in housing.

And it isn’t just relatively affluent resort cities facing this issue, as the Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Commission learned earlier this month. Developers looking to transform valuable north end property into commercial real estate asked for a change in zoning for the Lazy J Ranch mobile home development. P&Z said no, but the change is probably just a matter of time.

And when that finally happens, dozens of mobile home owners – mostly low income and elderly – will have no place to go.

Despite efforts by state Rep. Wendy Jaquet, D-Ketchum, the Idaho Legislature has steadfastly refused to change Idaho law to give cities legal grounds to impose affordable housing requirements. Property rights nearly always trump the public good in Idaho.

That must change, and sooner or later it will. Affordable housing is an economic necessity.

One-sixth of Blaine County’s workers live in Lincoln, Camas, Jerome, Gooding and Twin Falls counties because they can’t afford to live in Blaine.

Remedying that wouldn’t mean trampling property rights. It would simply require a decision that an essential public good – making it possible for folks to live in the community where they work – is a community decision.

High-dollar developers in Blaine County have paid their well-upholstered lawyers well to wash their hands of the responsibility of contributing to affordable housing.

That’s wrong, and only the Legislature can change it.

How did a master politician manage to foul up the politics?

For decades, the Democratic Party was torn by civil war.

Ross Douthat

On one side was the liberal left – populist in economics and dovish on foreign policy, in favor of lavish spending programs and suspicious of big business, and hostile to any idea that seemed to give an inch to the conservatives. On the other were the moderates and centrists – pro-market and pro-Wall Street, inclined to tiptoe rightward on issues like crime and welfare, and hawkish about deficits and dictators alike.

In the 1980s, these two factions vied for the opportunity to lose to Ronald Reagan. In the 1990s, they fought over the direction of the Clinton administration. In the 2000s, they feuded over whether to support the Iraq war.

But in George W. Bush’s second term, peace broke out. In part, this was because Democrats came to hate Bush so intensely that every other consideration faded into insignificance. In part, it was because the two camps converged on policy: the liberal left largely accepted that it had lost Clinton-era arguments over Nafta and welfare reform, the centrists mostly admitted that they’d been wrong about Iraq, and the two sides found common ground on health care, global warming and income inequality.

But peace was also possible because Barack Obama emerged to bridge the Democratic divide. The left initially wanted John Edwards as the 2008 nominee; the centrists wanted Hillary Clinton. But Obama united the party by persuading both factions that he was really on their side.

The left looked at him and saw a community organizer and Hyde Park intellectual who had been against the Iraq war before being anti-war was fashionable. Of course he was one of them!

The moderates listened to him and heard a postpartisan healer who promised to work with Republicans, cut middle-class taxes and send more troops to Afghanistan. Obviously he was a centrist at heart!

Once campaigning gave way to governing, it was inevitable that one faction or the other would be disappointed. But lately, Obama has managed the more difficult feat of alienating both of them at once.

The party’s centrists, from Blue Dog Democrats to Wall Street, insist that he’s turned out to be far more liberal than they expected. The health care bill was too expensive. The deficits are too big. He’s been too hard on business interests, and on Israel. And what happened to bipartisanship?

On the left, meanwhile, Obama is deemed a disappointment for all the things he hasn’t done. The stimulus should have been bigger. The financial reforms should have been tougher. He should have withdrawn from Afghanistan. He should have taken the fight to the Republicans, instead of letting them obstruct.

Both these arguments are self-serving, of course – a way for activists on both sides to imply, none too subtly, that the Democrats’ dispiriting poll numbers are all the other faction’s fault.

But the widespread appeal of these dueling critiques has left Obama increasingly isolated. And the White House’s attempts to preserve his above-the-fray mystique have backfired: they’ve made the president seem like an ideological enigma, and created the impression that he’s a bystander to his own achievements.

That impression took hold during the debates over health care and financial reform, where left-wing and centrist Democrats alike often complained that they didn’t know exactly where the White House stood. It’s been reinforced lately by Bob Woodward’s portrait of Obama’s Afghanistan deliberations, in which the hawks in the Pentagon and the doves in the Democratic base often seem like more powerful actors than the president himself.

As a result, what was once Obama’s great strength has been transformed into a weakness: neither the center nor the left really trusts him, and neither is prepared to stand by him at a time of crisis.

So the president finds himself alone. Many of the administration’s highest-profile centrists – Peter Orszag, Larry Summers, Rahm Emanuel – are either gone or on their way out. The left is wallowing in angst and disappointment. The White House spent recent weeks hectoring progressives about the need to turn out in November, but all these efforts earned was the mockery of Jon Stewart.

Can Obama rebuild his coalition? Perhaps, but not the way he did the first time. He won the White House by being all things to all Democrats (and quite a few independents and even Republicans as well), by making each faction see its own values reflected in his candidacy.

But the days of soaring above the grubbiness of politics are over. If Obama wants to save his presidency, he may have to do it the old-fashioned way: not by transcending his party’s divisions, but by uniting his supporters.

White House fails to enforce all immigration laws

I was preparing to applaud the Obama administration and specifically Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano for announcing the deportation of a record number of criminal aliens last year. According to the Washington Times, “the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement deported 392,862 aliens in fiscal year 2010, slightly less than a 1 percent increase over 2009 but short of the agency’s goal to remove 400,000 this year.”

What curbed my enthusiasm was news that removal of other illegal immigrants – those not convicted of crimes, though it could be justifiably argued that their status as illegal immigrants is, by definition, the breaking of American law – fell to the lowest number since 2007.

Dan Stein, president of the Federation for

Cal Thomas

American Immigration Reform, said that while it is nice that Secretary Napolitano believes removing people in the country illegally is an important function for the Department of Homeland Security, “policy directives from the highest levels of DHS clearly demonstrate that the administration is refusing to enforce laws against noncriminal aliens.”

That bad cop/good cop approach is designed to pacify those on the political right while the administration and some Democrats in Congress simultaneously lay the groundwork for legalizing those who broke our laws to get here and remain in the country illegally.

In a desperate last-minute pre-election move to win more votes for Democratic candidates, New Jersey Sen. Bob Menendez and Vermont Sen. Patrick Leahy introduced the Comprehensive Immigration Reform Act of 2010 prior to adjournment. This bill, if passed, would effectively grant amnesty to illegal immigrants currently in the country. No one expects the bill to pass when Congress returns for a lame duck session, especially if Republicans win a House majority and make substantial inroads to the Democrats’ Senate majority, or take back the Senate.

According to FAIR’s analysis, DHS data show the Obama administration has “dramatically curtailed all aspects of immigration enforcement against illegal aliens who have not committed violent crimes in this country.” FAIR says when it comes to enforcement of the law at work-sites, “administrative arrests have fallen by 77 percent, criminal arrests are down 60 percent, indictments are down 64 percent, and convictions have fallen by 68 percent since 2008.”

We have seen this political game played out over many years and with administrations of both parties. Big business, which mostly contributes to Republican political campaigns, wants cheap labor and so favors illegal immigrants. Democrats want the illegal immigrants because they see them as potential Democratic voters.

Lax enforcement of our immigration laws leads to more disrespect for those laws and serves as an incentive for more people to enter the country illegally.

Amendments would sidestep voter debt approval

Three proposed constitutional amendments on the November ballot would each make it easier for public entities to incur debt without voter approval. I believe voters should turn them all down.

I voted against all three measures when they came up on the floor of the House during the past legislative session. They all passed by wide margins, but the principles I used to consider each and vote “No” are still valid, perhaps more so given the concern we all have about increasing public debts.

The measures on the ballot are HJR 4, HJR 5 and HJR 7. The first deals with debt of public hospitals; the second, with debt by public airports and the third, with debt by public electric utilities. In the first two, voters are being asked to allow these entities to completely sidestep a vote of the people when issuing bonded indebtedness.

READER COMMENT
Rep. Stephen Hartgen

The arguments for each of these come down to government expediency. Since the debt is not being laid on the taxpayers directly, but is paid back by the revenue generated, proponents argue that voters should not be allowed to vote on the debt proposals.

The Idaho Constitution in Article VIII states clearly that subdivisions of government cannot generally issue bonded indebtedness without a two-thirds vote of the people. Debt, our framers believed, should be difficult to take on and a high level of support, over two-thirds, was considered proof that the voters would know what they were doing.

In the so-called “Frazier” decision (City of Boise v.

Frazier, 2005) the Idaho Supreme Court said that public entities needed approving two-thirds votes by the people.

Since then, there have been many efforts by local governments to chip away at this standard. Schools complain that the two-thirds vote is too rigid. Cities and counties frequently rush into court, invoking the “ordinary and necessary” clause before a judge as a way of getting around having to put a bond proposal to a public vote. These efforts often succeed due to poor public awareness.

Now, we have three public entities which want your permission to forego even these hurdles. Two of the three are asking for blanket exceptions going forward of bonding approval by the voters. If these are approved, you can bet more exceptions will be sought, the effect of which will be to further erode voter control of public debt. There are other reasons to vote “No” on these measures. In the case of the airport proposal, a close reading of the language shows it would allow an airport to use bonds to develop “projects or other property” including something off the airport site. The proposal does not even have to be airport related, but simply “deemed to be for a public purpose.”

This open-ended language is too broad and proponents admitted as much in House debate, saying we could rely on bonding attorneys to make sure inappropriate proposals would not be advanced. I do not think we should write into our Idaho Constitution any language which relies on advocate lawyers to be enforced.

In the case of the hospital proposal, the need has not been clearly shown. Community hospitals routinely make large purchases now for items such as CAT scanners and MRI machines, and bankers say they are more than willing to loan money for such items based on solid, business-plan principles. Hospitals can also convert to non-profit status if they feel the restrictions are too great, as was done in Twin Falls when the county hospital was taken over by St. Luke’s.

The electric utilities proposal is the least objectionable in that a majority vote of the people is required rather than two-thirds. Still, all three proposals essentially are end-runs around the Constitution. Idaho has been prudent in taking on public debt and this conservative posture has won the state an excellent bond rating. To allow our political subdivisions to add debt as proposed here would take us in the opposite direction. I am voting against these proposals in November. I hope you’ll do the same.

Stephen Hartgen (R-Twin Falls) has represented Twin Falls and Owyhee counties in the Idaho House of Representatives since 2008.

Five myths about the Mideast peace process

Yet again, Israelis and Palestinians are negotiating, and yet again, a U.S. administration is in the middle of the mud-dle. Is there any reason to believe that this time around, there will be a happy ending? Mutual suspicions, domestic political constraints and substantive differences between the parties are hampering the talks. And whatever the outcome, myths about Arab-Israeli peacemaking cause the Obama administration’s mediating role to be even more difficult.

1. Direct negotiations between Israelis and Palestinians are the key to reaching an accord.

History argues strongly to the contrary. With the exception of the Israeli-Jordanian peace treaty of October 1994, every negotiation that has resulted in an enduring Mideast agreement was brokered by the United States.

In the current phase of the peace process, direct talks that build trust between Israelis and Palestinians are vital, of course, but they are not sufficient to reach an agreement. Sooner rather than later, the United States will need to invest itself more heavily in the negotiations in order to bridge gaps on core issues such as borders and the status of Jerusalem; marshal the billions of dollars required to support an agreement; and probably deploy U.S. forces to the Jordan Valley to monitor security arrangements. Without active U.S. involvement, it is unlikely that an agreement can be reached and implemented.

2. Settlements are the main obstacle to peace-making.

On the Israeli side, there is indeed no greater obstacle. For more than four decades, the construction of Jewish settlements in the West Bank has reshaped Israeli politics for the worse, humiliated Palestinians and made an already complex process even more complicated. And Israel’s recent refusal to extend a moratorium on settlement construction has threatened to undermine the negotiations before they have a chance to get serious.

Successive American administrations have not taken the settlement issue as seriously as needed. But even if the settlement issue were resolved today, negotiations would still confront another galactic challenge: a crisis within the Palestinian national movement, pitting two authorities governing two discreet areas with two different security services, two different patrons and two different visions of the Palestinian future. The upshot of the battle between Hamas and the Palestinian Authority is that without a monopoly over the forces of violence in Palestinian society — without one authority to silence the guns and rockets — no agreement can be implemented.

3. The United States is an honest broker in the peace process.

It has been before and can be again. But in the past 16 years, under both Democratic and Republican presidents, we have failed to be as tough, fair and reassuring as we need to be to broker a solution. Our relationship with the Israelis is special — and it has to be because of Israel’s unique security position and the values that bind us — but if we intend to be a credible mediator, it cannot become exclusive.

4. Pressuring the Israelis is the only way to reach an agreement.

The idea that the United States can pummel a close ally into accepting a deal that undermines its security or political interests is flat-out wrong. The Middle East is littered with the failed schemes of great powers that tried to impose their will on small tribes.

Pressuring Israel has been an inevitable part of every successful negotiation in which the United States has been involved. But that fight must occur within a relationship of trust and confidence, and with U.S. willingness to offer not just the prospect of pain but the prospect for gain.

The Obama administration — which spent the better part of the past year not sure whether it wanted to punish the Israelis or pander to them — decided to make a comprehensive freeze on settlements the make-or-break issue. President Obama believed (wrongly) that he could push the Israelis into agreeing to such a freeze. Such declarations make the United States look weak and feeble.

The administration may be learning. To keep the current talks afloat, it seems to be offering both sides assurances on the substance of the negotiations: for the Israelis, security guarantees that might constrain Palestinian sovereignty; for the Palestinians, a commitment on the June 1967 borders, with land swaps from Israel proper for any West Bank territory the Israelis plan to annex.

5. Arab-Israeli peace is critical to securing U.S. interests in the Middle East.

It would help, but it wouldn’t come close to overcoming our challenges in a region so troubled and turbulent.

Aaron David Miller, a public policy scholar at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, has advised several U.S. secretaries of state on the Middle East peace process. He wrote this for The Washington Post.

Oil workers from the Gulf Island Fabrication Yard listen to Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal during a speech in Houma, La., where he spoke out against the six-month moratorium on deepwater drilling, saying it would kill thousands of Louisiana jobs. The Obama administration on Tuesday lifted the deepwater oil drilling moratorium that the government imposed in the Gulf of Mexico in the wake of the BP oil spill.

Administration lifts ban on deepwater drilling

By Matthew Daly
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration, under heavy pressure from the oil industry and others in the Gulf Coast, on Tuesday lifted the moratorium on deepwater drilling that it imposed in the wake of the disastrous BP oil spill.

The six-month ban had been scheduled to expire Nov. 30, but Interior Secretary Ken Salazar said he was moving up that deadline because new rules imposed after the spill have strengthened safety measures and reduced the risk of another catastrophic blowout.

“The policy position that we are articulating today is that we are open for business,” Salazar told a news conference.

The action comes as a federal judge weighs a drilling company’s bid to overturn the moratorium.

It also comes less than a month before midterm elections in which Democrats face widespread criticism for overextending government actions on the economy, including the health care overhaul, the economic stimulus plan and the drilling moratorium.

A federal report said the moratorium likely caused a temporary loss of 8,000 to 12,000 jobs in the Gulf region.

While the temporary ban on exploratory oil and gas drilling is lifted immediately, drilling is unlikely to resume for at least a few weeks.

Drilling companies must meet a host of new safety regulations before they can resume operations — including a requirement that the CEO of the company responsible for the well certifies it has complied with all regulations. That could make the person at the top of the company liable for any future accidents.

“Operators who play by the rules and clear the higher bar can be allowed to resume,” Salazar said.

The secretary said he knows that some people in the oil industry and along the Gulf Coast will say the new rules are too onerous.

“Others will say that we are lifting the deepwater drilling suspension too soon. They will say there are still risks involved with deepwater drilling,” he said.

The truth is, there will always be such risks, Salazar said. “As we transition to a clean energy economy,” he added, “we will still need oil and gas from the Gulf of Mexico to power our homes, our cars, our industry.”

The new rules imposed by the administration will make oil and gas drilling in the Gulf “safer than it has ever been,” Salazar said.

Salazar emphasized that the move would include new requirements for those seeking to drill exploratory wells. Those entities and the companies they represent will have to prove they have the appropriate steps in place to contain a worst-case scenario.

The new rules include many recommendations made in a report Salazar released in May, including requirements that rigs certify that they have working blowout preventers and standards for cementing wells. The cement process and blowout preventer both failed to work as expected in the BP spill.

Stream of U.S. jobs overseas shows no sign of abating

By Don Lee
Tribune Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Though some American firms are bringing overseas work back home, evidence is growing that companies are moving more jobs than ever to China and other countries — a trend that could exacerbate efforts to bring down the nation’s stubbornly high unemployment rate.

One sign of increased offshoring is the rising number of applications for federal Trade Adjustment Assistance, which usually goes to factory workers who lost their jobs because their work was sent overseas or was undercut by cheaper imports.

For the six months that ended Sept. 30, workers at about 1,200 offices and plants nationwide were approved for federal Trade Adjustment Assistance. That’s about 20 percent more approvals than in the same six-month period last year, according to the U.S. Labor Department.

In addition, the most recent Commerce Department data show that employment at the foreign subsidiaries and affiliates of U.S. multinational firms grew by 729,000 in two years, to 11.9 million in 2008 from 2006. Over that same period, domestic employment by such firms slipped by 500,000 jobs, to 21.1 million.

“The paradigm has shifted,” said John Challenger, chief executive of outplacement and consulting firm Challenger, Gray & Christmas. “Most companies see the next phase or era of growth as global. ... That’ll still create jobs here, just not on the scale when they were focusing on growth in the U.S.”

That trend could further stall the recovery, which many economists believe will continue to lack vigor while unemployment remains at current levels — 9.6 percent nationally.

Among the companies that have recently sent jobs overseas are Hewlett-Packard Co. in Palo Alto, Calif., and Hilton Worldwide, the McLean, Va., hotelier that maintained a reservations center in Hemet, Calif., employing 295 people.

Hilton’s filing and comments indicated it was moving the center to the Philippines to save money. “Across all aspects of its business, Hilton Worldwide is committed to maximizing operating efficiencies while maintaining service levels,” Hilton said in a brief statement.

Also moving to the increasingly popular Philippines this year were JPMorgan Chase’s telephone banking operations, from Troy, Mich.

Why you should feel up when the dollar is down

By Bernard Condon
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — The way investors have unloaded the U.S. dollar lately, you’d think it was kryptonite.

It has fallen 10 percent against the euro in just three months, and recently hit a 15-year low against the Japanese yen. You’d have to go back even further to find the American currency in a weaker position versus the Swiss franc or Australian dollar.

The decline has been so dramatic that fear is spreading of a “currency war” akin to the one in the Great Depression, when countries competed to drive their exchange rates lower.

It sounds like a downer: Strong countries are supposed to have strong currencies. But when a country is struggling to grow as the U.S. is now, a weak currency can act like a shot of adrenaline. Here’s how.

EXPORTS

A falling dollar is like slapping a “For Sale” sign on U.S. goods and services abroad. Consider the price of an iPhone in Paris before and after the dollar dropped. At exchange rates in July, a $99 iPhone with eight gigabytes of memory would have been worth about 78 euros. Now that price translates to 71 euros.

Cheaper prices bring higher sales, and hopefully more jobs at home for companies selling products overseas. The impact could be huge: Companies in the Standard & Poor’s 500 get

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Google goes deep with offshore wind project

NEW YORK — Google will invest heavily in a network of deepwater transmission lines to bring power from offshore wind farms, yet to be built, to states along the East Coast, the company said Tuesday.

The transmission lines, which could cost up to $5 billion over the next 10 years, would run as far as 20 miles offshore from Virginia to New Jersey. The initial phase of the project would be capable of delivering 2,000 megawatts of wind energy — enough to power about 500,000 homes.

Google will own more than a third of the project and has teamed up with other technology companies and investment firms to fund the rest.

“This will have a dramatic impact on accessing offshore wind, and we think it’s one of the things that’s almost required to take advantage of all of that potential,” said Rick Needham, Google’s green business operations director.

Also buying into the project is investment firm Good Energies, Japanese industrial conglomerate Marubeni and Maryland transmission company Trans-Elect.

Proposed FDIC rules would mean losses for creditors

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators are proposing rules that would mean shareholders and other creditors of big failed financial firms seized by the government should expect to suffer losses and won’t receive any taxpayer money.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. on Tuesday opened the rules to public comment. The agency was empowered under the financial overhaul law enacted last summer to choose which creditors of a failed firm could receive additional payments beyond those they would get in a normal bankruptcy proceeding.

FDIC officials said few creditors would get extra payments. They could include, for example, vendors enabling the government to continue essential company operations such as paying employees.

“It’s very important that the market understand that it’s not a bailout,” an agency official said in a conference call with reporters.

Despite freezes, U.S. still racking up foreclosures

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press writer

MIAMI – For most Americans at risk of losing their homes, the brutal business of foreclosure goes on.

Bank of America halted foreclosures across the country to address paperwork problems, but three other banks did so only in 23 states. Other banks holding millions of mortgages have not suspended any foreclosures.

Zahra Clare Baker, 10, gets help with her hearing aid during an event in May at Charlotte Motor Speedway in Concord, N.C.

Police treating missing N.C. girl case as homicide

By Mitch Weiss
Associated Press writer

HICKORY, N.C. — Investigators indicated Tuesday they believe someone killed a 10-year-old girl with disabilities who was reported missing over the weekend, and accused her stepmother of trying to throw off investigators with a fake ransom note.

Police said the search for Zahra Clare Baker has shifted to a homicide investigation, canceling a missing child alert for the shy but upbeat girl who used hearing aids and a prosthetic leg because of bone cancer.

The girl's stepmother, Elisa Baker, is the only person accused in the case so far. Hickory Police Chief Tom Adkins said she was charged with felony obstruction of justice after admitting she wrote the note, which asked for $1 million.

Complaints filed in court by a relative and neighbor in recent months portray Elisa Baker as nasty-tempered and willing to use a gun or her fists to settle arguments.

"It was unreal. She didn't get along with anyone in the neighborhood," said former neighbor Karen Yount, who filed one of the complaints.

At a news conference, Adkins said police can't find anyone outside the household who has seen Zahra alive in the last month. That uncertainty has stymied efforts to search for her, despite offers from volunteers in the city of 40,000 about 50 miles northwest of Charlotte.

"We understand the public wants to help find Zahra. The problem is we cannot confirm with any confidence how long Zahra has been missing," he said. "Without this information, we cannot positively select the area to search for her."

Adkins did not take any questions or further explain why the case was being treated as a homicide probe. A search warrant revealed on Monday that police dogs detected the smell of human remains on cars belonging to the father and stepmother.

Adkins said Elisa Baker has asked for an attorney, but none had been assigned late Tuesday.

The girl's father, Adam Baker, has not been charged in the case, though the chief said previously he hasn't been ruled out as a suspect.

The ransom note found Saturday was the first sign that officers who came to investigate a yard fire at the girl's home were faced with something more sinister. Zahra was reported missing that afternoon. The stepmother said she last saw Zahra sleeping in her room about 12 hours earlier, though Adkins has indicated he doesn't believe the timeline the couple gave him.

Near the burnt limbs and grass, the note had been left on the windshield of the car belonging to Adam Baker.

It was addressed to Adam Baker's boss, though police quickly determined that man's family was safe. Now, they say the note was a fake altogether.

"Mr. Coffey, you like being in control now who is in control we have your daughter," a search warrant quoted the ransom note as saying.

Adam Baker has said it was possible his wife could be involved in the disappearance, and other relatives echoed those remarks.

"I just think this was something for a long time that we knew was going to happen, everybody that was close to the family," relative Brittany Bentley said on CBS' "Early Show" on Tuesday.

Bentley, who is married to Elisa Baker's nephew, said she would have Zahra over for weekends and the girl would get mad when it was time to return home. The girl was being home-schooled, but had attended public schools in the past, police said.

Paula becomes Cat. 2 hurricane, threatens Cancun

By Gabriel Alcocer
Associated Press writer

CANCUN, Mexico — A strengthening Hurricane Paula roared toward Mexico's resort-dotted Yucatan Peninsula on Tuesday night.

The hurricane smashed homes and forced schools to cancel classes in Honduras early Tuesday, then grew into a Category 2 storm with top sustained winds of 100 miles per hour on its way to the Yucatan, the U.S. National Hurricane Center in Miami said.

Moving north at near 9 mph, Paula's center was expected to pass just to the east of Cancun on Wednesday morning, and was expected to decrease in forward speed after that, the center said.

It said the hurricane could get close to western Cuba by Wednesday night or early Thursday.

The center warned that preparations to protect life and property should be rushed to completion.

Dozens of boat owners in Cancun hauled yachts and other vessels to shore, while sea tour operators canceled reservations. At least one company, Transbordadores del Caribe, canceled ferry trips from Playa del Carmen to the resort island of Cozumel south of Cancun, though others were still operating while the still-mild weather.

Armando Galmiche closed down his water-skiing tour business in Cancun and canceled 15 reservation he had for Tuesday afternoon.

"It's already low season for tourism and, with this hurricane, things are going to get worse," he said, lamenting the loss of revenue.

Along Cancun's popular strip of night clubs and discotheques, workers took down billboards and other large objects ahead of heavy winds.

Peter Bruin, a 25-year-old tourist from Rotterdam, Netherlands, was taking a stroll along the city's hotel zone, unaware that a hurricane was heading to Cancun.

"I hadn't heard anything but I'm not afraid," Bruin said. "It will be my first hurricane experience."

Early Tuesday, heavy rains and high winds destroyed 19 homes in northeastern Honduras, said Lisandro Rosales, head of Honduras' emergency agency. Officials closed schools along the country's Atlantic coast and some airports were reported closed.

Tuesday afternoon, the hurricane was centered about 85 miles south-south-east of Cozumel.

Band jams on freeway causing traffic jam

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A rock band will have to face the music after blocking a Los Angeles freeway and performing atop its trailer.

California Highway Patrol spokesman Rick Quintero says a big box van decorated with Imperial Stars' logo stopped on the southbound U.S. 101 near Sunset Boulevard at about 10:30 a.m. Tuesday, blocking four of the five lanes. The driver took the keys and fled in another car, then three musicians climbed on top of the van and began to perform.

Quintero says they were arrested and the truck was finally towed away around noon after causing a mile-long traffic jam.

Quintero says the musicians could face charges of obstructing traffic.

The group, whose credits include "Traffic Jam 101," says on its website it is dedicated to helping homeless children.

Focus on the fresh

Jake Rice brings seasonal food to pub

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

At Von Scheidt Brewing Co. in Twin Falls, hamburgers and nachos are no more. Instead, high-quality cheese plates, spinach salads and veal sausages match the craft beer brewed on site, and fresh vegetable sides replace fries as entree accompaniments.

At his new culinary home, chef Jake Rice is showing that hearty pub food doesn't have to stray from fresh and seasonal.

Too many cooks, both in restaurants and at home, depend on pre-packaged, frozen or canned ingredients, Rice said. And too many bar customers equate beer with greasy finger foods.

But it doesn't have to be that way. Before Rice's arrival, Von Scheidt's menu consisted of burgers, fries and tacos — standard food for Twin Falls bars. Rice, who recently relocated from Hagerman, was a Von Scheidt regular when he and owner Pat Scheidt started discussing the idea of Rice taking over the kitchen. Rice, former co-owner of Ein Tisch Inn, revamped the pub menu and debuted his food in late summer.

The new menu at Von Scheidt (157 Second Ave. W., Twin Falls) has German- and Irish-influenced food, with some touches of Polish and Spanish fare. Irish potato pancakes, coq au vin, Wiener schnitzel and portobello mushroom with goat cheese replaced the packaged veggie burgers. A tri-tip sandwich — featuring meat smoked for about 90 minutes over cherry wood chips and served with caramelized onions, grilled red peppers and mozzarella — is less ethnic than the European food but satisfies diners' cravings for beef. He plans to rotate the dishes throughout the year to reflect what is in season.

Photos by ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

At Von Scheidt Brewing Co. in Twin Falls, chef Jake Rice displays market-fresh Annabel potatoes, used to make Irish potato cakes, new red potatoes for German potato salad and beets for his Russian beet salad.

It's still pub fare. But the lineup, Rice said, focuses less on piles of greasy fries and more on hearty, good-quality grub.

The feedback has been mostly positive, although some customers miss the fries or think the portions are skimpy.

Rice has brought a variety of flavors to Von Scheidt Brewing including German and Polish foods and other European pub food like lamb.

Those are fair points, and something Rice is struggling to address without hiking the price or sacrificing fresh ingredients. He might add French fries or onion rings — "People love their fried food," he said — but won't stray from his original goal of bringing seasonal food to Von Scheidt.

"To me, quantity is way less important than quality," Rice said.

His main lessons are transferable to the home. A salad doesn't need out-of-season greens, nor does a vegetable side dish have to depend on frozen or canned goods.

Veggies like potatoes, squash and carrots can keep all winter and are versatile enough to provide varied side dishes all season long. A shredded carrot salad might accompany one Von Scheidt entree, while grilled carrots, onions and peppers might adorn another plate.

Rice sprinkles cherry wood chips in a smoker that he uses to prepare tri-tip.

It's getting easier for both chefs and home cooks to access those locally sourced ingredients in southern Idaho — even after farmers markets wind down for the season this month. Suppliers like Idaho's Bounty and Local Dish sell local squash and potatoes year-round, and Idaho's Bounty even offers fresh greenhouse veggies in the middle of winter.

It's a far cry from the frozen bags of onion rings that many bars use to fill their customers' bellies, but Rice hopes the idea will catch on.

Gooding man dominates home-brew competition

Angie Baldwin of Gooding serves home-brew entries to the judging panels during Saturday's second annual Octoberfest Homebrew Competition in Buhl.

BLAIR KOCH/For the Times-News

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Justin Baldwin couldn't be beat during Saturday's second annual Octoberfest Homebrew Competition.

The Gooding man's robust porter earned first-place honors in both Brewer's Choice and Best of Show categories; second place went to his Vienna lager and Irish red, respectively, and his extra special bitter (ESB) cleaned up the third-place awards.

"There were a lot of really good beers entered and it would have been nice to see the awards spaced out, but I can't say I'm disappointed," Baldwin said. "That's what got me into brewing to begin with, the many varieties of beer you could make yourself. Everyone works with the same four essential ingredients — yeast, water, hops and grain — but everyone has their own take on it; that is what I find fascinating."

Beers were judged according to Beer Judge Certification Program style guidelines, in two best-of-show groups: Open Competition, judged by a trio of independent judges, and Brewers Choice, with contestants sampling and voting on their competition for the Brewer's Cup.

Judge Mike Tylka of Jerome has years (and several thousands of batches) of home-brew experience. Although beer entries varied from pale cream ales to dark and deep American stouts, he said all beers are measured on aroma, appearance, flavor and mouthfeel. Tylka said Baldwin's robust porter, one of two entered on Saturday, was "most appropriate to the style," with a roasty aroma and slightly strong malt character.

"It's hard to explain mouthfeel," Tylka said. "It's just the way it feels in your mouth, how the ingredients and character come off the tongue, the texture. This robust porter feels right."

Of course, Tylka didn't know it was Baldwin's brew when judging it. Novice to advanced home-brewers had an even playing field in the blind competition.

Robin Boling of Buhl was one of the newbies. He brought a batch of Strong Scotsman, a dark English ale.

"You can't always buy what you want to drink in the store," Boling said. "That is what drew me into home-brew, and I enjoy the strong, dark ales."

Boling didn't get much criticism on the judging

Country ham risotto dinner in 40 minutes

By Bonnie S. Benwick
The Washington Post

Using apples in savory dishes just seems right at this time of year. Here, a small amount of hard cider adds fruit-flavored depth to a classic treatment. Pancetta or prosciutto may be substituted for the country ham, which we bought in one thick slice at the deli department. If you don't eat pork, use smoked turkey breast instead.

Serve with a crunchy salad of parsley and thinly sliced fennel. Adapted from "An Apple Harvest: Recipes and Orchard Lore," by Frank Browning and Sharon Silva (Ten Speed Press, 2010).

APPLE AND COUNTRY HAM RISOTTO

4 servings

5 cups no-salt-added chicken broth, homemade or Kitchen Basics brand

3 to 4 ounces country ham, preferably in 1 slice (may substitute pancetta, prosciutto or smoked turkey)

4 tablespoons (1/2 stick) unsalted butter

A few sage leaves, plus

DEB LINDSEY/For The Washington Post

more for optional garnish
1 1/2 cups arborio rice
3/4 cup (half of a 12-ounce bottle) semi-dry hard cider, such as George Hornsby's

1 large firm apple, such as Stayman, Winesap or Rome
1-ounce block asiago cheese, for garnish

Coarse salt or Maldon sea salt, for garnish

Freshly ground black pepper

Heat the broth in a large saucepan over medium heat.

Cut the ham into 1/4-inch dice, to yield 6 to 8 tablespoons.

Melt 2 tablespoons of the butter in a large saute pan over medium heat. Add a few sage leaves, if desired, then the ham and rice, stirring to coat. Add the cider and cook for 2 minutes, stirring, until it is almost evaporated. Add 1/2 cup of the hot broth and cook, stirring, until it is almost absorbed. Repeat with additions of the broth, allowing them to be absorbed before the next round. (You don't have to stir continuously; when the level of liquid goes below the rice, add liquid and stir to incorporate.)

While the risotto is cooking, peel (if desired) and core the apple, then cut three-quarters of it into very small dice to yield 3/4 cup. Cut the remaining quarter of the apple into very thin slices.

Melt the remaining 2 tablespoons of butter in a small skillet or saute pan over medium-high heat. Add the diced apple and cook for 4 to 6 minutes, stirring to brown lightly without allowing the apple to get mushy. Transfer to a bowl and cover to keep warm. Add the apple slices to the skillet and cook for a minute or two, until they are slightly browned.

Add the sauteed diced apple to the risotto with the last addition of broth; by this time, the rice should be creamy and the liquid should be absorbed. (You might not need all of the broth; this should take 20 to 23 minutes total.) Remove from the heat. Cover and let stand for 3 minutes.

Divide among individual wide, shallow bowls. Use a vegetable peeler to shave a few curls of the asiago cheese over each portion, then treat each one to a sprinkling of salt, pepper and some of the sauteed apple slices. If desired, garnish with sage leaves.

Serve warm.

sheets returned to contestants, so he isn't sure what the judges found lacking in his beer.

"I'll probably carbonate it a bit more. I brew for myself and I'm quite pleased with it, so I don't think I'll change it much," Boling said.

Chris Welch of Twin Falls entered several varieties with his team, KGC Brewing.

"We're home-brew hacks," Welch said. "I've always wanted to brew, and these guys had space in their home and they let me into their group. We all share a love of beer. Obviously, we aren't drunks. We take brewing seriously. There is a lot of research and time spent just in planning what to brew."

Although none of the judges are certified through BJCP, they adhered to the standards for the 11 varieties of beer entered, referring to a style guideline for direction when necessary.

"We have to make sure that the beers are judged according to standards ... it can't just be our opinion," judge A.J. Gray said.

Before lifting each brew to their lips, judges considered the beer's appearance, color and aroma. Guidelines stipulate that extra special biters, for instance, are supposed to be golden to deep copper in color, with brilliant clarity in appearance. The head should be moderate and white or off-white in color. The taste should have caramel malt sweetness, supported with moderate hops flavor.

"There really is a lot to consider," Gray said.

Although essential brewing supplies can cost several thousand dollars, Baldwin said he's still using the same $150 worth of equipment he started with as a college student.

Photos by BLAIR KOCH/For the Times-News

Justin Baldwin, 33, of Gooding won every award during the Octoberfest Homebrew Competition. His robust porter pleased the palates of the judges' panel and his brewing peers to win first place in both the Brewer's Choice and Best of Show categories.

Octoberfest Homebrew competitor Robin Boling of Buhl considers an entry during Saturday's competition. Though Boling's home-brew didn't win awards, he said the chance to experience others' beers will help his craft.

"I like to think that it shows you can create commercial-quality beers without a lot of fancy and pricey equipment," Baldwin said. "It feels good to be self-sustaining, like hunting and gardening for your food."

Baldwin names his beers after various cattle diseases. He calls his robust porter Brucellosis; the ESB is Prolapse.

"It goes along the trend of the quirky names the commercial microbrewers have for their beers," Baldwin said. "I think it's kind of funny because you can't call in to work with a hangover because no one has sympathy for you. But if you say, 'I had five Prolapses last night,' you'll probably be told to go home."

Although the next Octoberfest competition is

"I was very impressed with the quality of beers that were entered, and I know I'm going to have to bring my game up," Baldwin said. "Having that competition makes it more fun."

This Halloween, a cake worth dying for?

By Michele Kayal
For The Associated Press

If calories are the only thing standing between you and that cupcake, consider yourself lucky. Ancient Celts worried about way more than waistlines.

"The ancient Celts used cakes as way to select people for sacrifice," says London-based baker Lily Jones — who also goes by Lily Vanilli — author of "A Zombie Ate My Cupcake" (Cico Books, 2010). "There's actually a dead body in the British Museum. He was a sacrifice victim that was selected by a cake. He was preserved in tar."

In those days, the baker would blacken part of the cake, which would be divided at a special ceremony. The person who received the black piece would "volunteer" for sacrifice, Jones says. Which makes you wonder why you'd sidle up cocoa powder graveyard, coconut jelly eyeballs jiggle atop white frosting, and cupcake tops blossom into bloody pink brains.

In her London shop, bleeding heart cupcakes are bestsellers, Jones says, and she gets lots of custom orders as well. The weirdest? A woman who asked for a cake that was an exact replica of her boyfriend's head.

"It was just a head on a plate," Jones says. "It looked a bit like the movie 'Seven' because I delivered it in a cake box. The receptionist recognized him in the box."

So basically a human sacrifice without the actual sacrifice.

Halloween will find Jones doing a dark, sinister tea party in an East London taxidermy shop. What will she go as to do justice to all her macabre confections? "I don't know yet," she says. "I make a pretty good Olive Oil from Popeye."

to the table in the first place. "I guess the offer of a slice of delicious cake was enough," she says.

But Jones' book gives new meaning to the idea of a cake good enough to die for. Tired of the pretty but poor tasting cupcakes being hawked on seemingly every street corner, Jones decided to turn the idea on its head — to make delicious cupcakes that looked grotesque.

Some foods freeze better than others

By Jane Touzalin
The Washington Post

Is there a good rule of thumb for which dishes are good to freeze and which aren't? I know that casseroles and soups are good. Mashed potatoes, as I discovered, are not. I'm trying to avoid cooking something great, freezing it and being disappointed as a result.

Like you said, casseroles and soups are good bets for cooking and freezing. So are stews, ragouts, goulash, chili, tomato sauces and baked meatloaf. Pasta dishes such as lasagna and ziti that are baked in tomato sauce also freeze nicely; same with rice dishes.

On the negative side, freezing can cause curdling or separating in certain foods that are heavy on these ingredients: milk, half-and-half, cream, sour cream, cream cheese, cottage cheese, buttermilk, yogurt, and sauces and fillings made with those ingredients; cheese sauces; custards; mayonnaise; and gravies thickened with flour.

Some other foods and food components that might not freeze well: Mature potatoes can become watery, crumbly and dark (new potatoes usually fare better); canned hams, other cured meats and cooked egg whites can get tough; frostings made with egg whites can get sticky and weep; gelatin dishes can weep; jam can get watery and runny; rice and pasta can become chewy or mushy if frozen by themselves instead of with a freezable sauce; fried foods get soggy; uncooked vegetables with a high water content tend to get mushy and soggy (celery, eggplant, tomatoes, cucumber); raw garlic can suffer, and so can imitation vanilla — but you wouldn't use that anyway, would you?

An autumnal muffin to top all other muffins

By Alison Ladman
For The Associated Press

The goal here was simple: an autumnal muffin to top all other muffins.

We wanted something over-the-top good. Something that will fill the house with warm bakery smells. Something you would see at a coffee shop and immediately think about how tight your pants will be in the morning. Something you buy and devour anyway, then go back for another.

And so we put our all into it — cinnamon, ginger, allspice, cardamom and cloves. We added brown sugar, and butter (of course!), vanilla and pumpkin. For good measure, we even added apples, pecans and dried cranberries.

The only way to push this even further would be to drizzle it with a lemon sugar glaze (1 teaspoon lemon juice to 1/4 cup powdered sugar). And whatever you do, be sure to eat them still warm from the oven.

FALL HARVEST MUFFINS

Start to finish: 45 minutes (20 minutes active). Makes 12 muffins.

For the topping:
4 tablespoons (1/2 stick) butter, softened
1/4 cup all-purpose flour
1/4 cup dark brown sugar
1/4 cup granulated sugar
1/2 teaspoon cinnamon
1/2 cup rolled oats
Pinch salt

For the muffins:
1 cup all-purpose flour

These muffins will fill your house with an inviting aroma and fill your mouth with the flavors of autumn.

|-------------------------------|--|
| 1 cup white whole-wheat flour | 1/2 teaspoon ground allspice |
| 1 1/2 teaspoons baking powder | 1/4 teaspoon cardamom |
| 1/4 teaspoon baking soda | 1/4 teaspoon ground clove |
| 1 teaspoon cinnamon | 1/2 teaspoon salt |
| 1 teaspoon ground ginger | 3/4 cup (1 1/2 sticks) butter, melted and cooled |

1 cup dark brown sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 cup canned pumpkin
1 apple, peeled, cored and grated (about 3/4 cup)
1/2 cup chopped, toasted pecans
1/2 cup dried cranberries together the melted butter and brown sugar. Whisk in the eggs and vanilla, then stir in the pumpkin. Gently but thoroughly mix in the dry ingredients, mixing until just incorporated. Stir in the apple, pecans and cranberries. Divide the batter between the prepared muffin cups.

Heat the oven to 375 degrees. Coat a 12-cup muffin tin with cooking spray or line with muffin papers.

To make the topping, in a medium bowl, rub together the butter, flour, brown sugar, granulated sugar, cinnamon, oats and salt until crumbly and well combined. Set aside.

To make the muffins, in a large bowl, whisk together both flours, the baking powder, baking soda, cinnamon, ginger, allspice, cardamom, clove and salt.

In another bowl, whisk

Sprinkle a bit of the topping over each muffin. Bake for 20 to 25 minutes, or until a wooden pick inserted in the center comes out clean. Allow to cool in the pan for 5 minutes, then finish cooling on a rack.

Preserve your fresh produce to enjoy it year round

By Colleen Newvine
Associated Press writer

It's easy to do — you get excited about spring planting and put in twice as many tomato plants as your family can keep up with. Or you go to a farmers market, get seduced by the scent of ripe peaches and buy several pounds, with the clock ticking on their freshness.

Intentionally or not, many people find themselves awash in fresh produce this time of year. Learning to preserve that bounty can mean enjoying fruits and vegetables — ones whose origins and additives you know — year round.

Bob McClure grew up pickling and canning with his parents and grandparents, putting up fresh produce every summer. He and his brother, Joe McClure, decided to turn pro about four years ago, launching McClure's Pickles in Brooklyn, N.Y., and Detroit.

Though the scale is much larger, the hand-packed, hand-sliced pickles are still based on their great-grandmother's recipe, and the ingredients include just cucumbers, vinegar, water, salt, garlic and dill.

Bob McClure teaches pickling classes at the Brooklyn Kitchen, a cooking supplies store. Drawing on his other career as an actor, he is engaging in front of a room of pickle novices, and can make sterilizing jars and lids, then boiling them to seal in the contents, seem easy.

Some of his pickling tips:

- Trim all your cucumbers to the same length, just a bit shorter than your jars, so they fit easily without smashing. Use the trimmings to pack into available spaces.

- Pour some hot vinegar over your fresh garlic for a minute before putting it into the jars. This helps keep the garlic from turning blue.

- Experiment with spices, such as adding more dill or hot peppers, but maintain the proportions of vinegar, salt and water to keep food safe.

- Keep cucumbers on ice until packing them in jars. This helps them stay crisp.

Pickling is just one method of preserving food, and canning is another. Sometimes they go together, but they don't have to. Other options including drying or salting, all with the idea of keeping food safe longer than it naturally would on the shelf or in the fridge.

Food writer Mark Bittman says people intimidated by the equipment and techniques of canning should try alternative methods of preserving fresh, local, additive-free produce: "Canning and jarring is a huge hassle," he says. "There was a time when people had no choice. Now we have freezers."

His own method: He chops fresh tomatoes, puts them in plastic bags and throws them in the freezer. When they thaw, the skins fall off.

Bittman is a New York Times columnist whose latest book is "The Food Matters Cookbook" (Simon & Schuster, 2010). As an advocate of eating less processed food, Bittman says, "If people have gardens and they want to preserve stuff, I think it's fabulous."

Linda Ziedrich, author of "The Joy of Pickling" (Harvard Common Press, revised edition 2009) and "The Joy of Jams, Jellies and Other Sweet Preserves" (same press and year), agrees you don't have to can to preserve.

"You can can your pickled foods but you don't have to," she said. Her pickling book includes recipes for two basic kinds of pickling, done with vinegar or fermented, and with or without traditional glass-jar canning.

Ziedrich said recent incidents of tainted eggs and spinach in the national food supply have some people worried about the safety of home canning. The risks at home are minimal if you follow a recipe from a respected source and use common sense, she said, but skipping canning is one way to allay some fears.

For example, in McClure's class, he told students that if a jar's metal lid doesn't give that satisfying "pop," creating a vacuum seal, the pickles are still safe to eat if you just put them in the refrigerator instead of on the shelf.

Linda Ziedrich, author of 'The Joy of Pickling,' shows dilly bean preserves at her home in Scio, Ore. Ziedrich grew up canning with her mother, but it was after she started doing it on her own that the bug really bit her.

For those who do want to try canning, both McClure and Ziedrich suggest taking a class to get started.

Also helpful for the newbie is a trustworthy source of tested recipes. McClure recommends Ziedrich's book; Ziedrich additionally points to county extension service publications and websites. The "Ball Complete Book of Home Preserving" comes from one of the biggest suppliers of home food preservation supplies.

Like McClure, Ziedrich grew up canning with her mother, but it was after she started doing it on her own that the bug really bit her — she started exploring all manner of pickled and fermented foods, from sauerkraut to kimchee to dilly beans, and learned to make jams without adding commercial pectin.

Jim Sanders, co-owner of Blanco Valley Farms in Blanco, Texas, has similarly grown both his commercial and home canning repertoire. He sells a variety of salsas, as well as candied jalapenos that are pickled, sweet and hot, and jars of pecan pie filling.

At home, Sanders experiments with reducing sugar, adding salt and boosting the acid content of his pickles, and has even developed a microwave method for canning to skip the boiling water.

Whatever the technique, he thinks it's worth the effort.

"There's no comparison between the wall of commercial pickles at the supermarket and ones that are homemade," he says. "That's like comparing a can of tuna to a fresh tuna steak — different animals altogether."

MCCLURE'S GARLIC AND DILL PICKLES

Makes 12 half pints or 6 pints.

6 pounds small pickling cucumbers
12 cloves of garlic (peeled and halved)
12 bunches of dill
3 cups of water
3 cups of distilled white vinegar
1/4 cup of pickling salt (kosher salt can be substituted)

Wash cucumbers, and place in a large deep bowl with ice. Cover and put in fridge.

Wash dill thoroughly and trim off roots.

Place peeled garlic in a small bowl and pour hot vinegar over it. Let stand for 1 minute, then pour vinegar out.

Fill a large pot with water. Place a jar in the pot and make sure the water is at least 1 inch above the top of the jar. Remove the test jar and bring the water to a boil.

In another large pot, combine the vinegar, water and pickling salt. Bring the brine to a rapid boil. Stir the salt to make sure it doesn't stick to the bottom of the pot.

While pots are getting up to a boil, take cucumbers out of the refrigerator and quarter them. Then take 1 spear and place it in a Mason jar to test its height. Make sure it stands 1/4 to 1/2 inch below the rim of the jar. Trim all the cucumbers to this size. (Keep the little bits for later.)

After water is boiling, submerge the Mason jars for about 90 seconds to sterilize them. Remove them carefully with jar tongs.

In each jar, place 2 halves of a garlic clove, one small handful of dill, then enough cucumbers to fill the jar, making sure cucumbers are below the "neckline." (If using pint jars, double the amount of dry ingredients in each jar.) Place 2-piece lids in boiling water for 90 seconds, then carefully remove them and place in a bowl.

Fill jars with hot brine.

Cap and seal the jars. Turn them over to make sure you have an adequate seal.

Place jars back in boiling water. Process the sealed jars in boiling water for 10 minutes.

Wait a week to two weeks before eating. Refrigerate after opening. Pickles will keep for up to one year if stored in a cool dry place.

Fill up on fiber, protein and fluids to slim down

By Jim Romanoff
For The Associated Press

Fill up to lose fat. If you're trying to lose weight, filling up on fiber and low-calorie liquids are key. Low-fat soups for example, especially varieties that are loaded with nutrient-rich vegetables, are an excellent way to go. They are both filling and low in calories.

Vegetables, besides being loaded with vitamins and minerals, primarily consist of water and fiber, which help to curb hunger.

And if you add grains such as rice or whole-wheat pasta, you get lots of soluble dietary fiber, which have been shown to be appetite-satisfying, while also helping the body maintain healthy blood sugar levels.

Low-fat proteins, such as white-meat chicken and turkey, tofu, low-fat cheese and yogurt, also help to fill you up. Beans and other legumes, such as lentils, are an excellent source of both rib-sticking protein and fiber.

This cheesy baked lentils, rice and turkey casserole is a heartwarming comfort dish that contains a little bit of all these foods.

Lean, ground turkey and rice are combined with canned lentil soup, which in the twist of a can opener provides protein, fiber and flavor to this dish. The recipe calls for fresh spinach, but sauteed Swiss chard or broccoli could be substituted.

CHEESY BAKED LENTILS, RICE AND TURKEY CASSEROLE

Start to finish: 1 hour 5 minutes (20 minutes active). Servings: 4.

- 1 teaspoon extra-virgin olive oil
- 8 ounces turkey breast, cut into bite-size cubes
- 1 small yellow onion, chopped
- 19-ounce can lentil soup
- 5-ounce package fresh spinach (about 2 cups packed)
- 3/4 cup converted (par-boiled) brown rice
- 1/2 teaspoon dried thyme
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon ground black pepper
- 1/4 cup water
- 1/2 cup grated reduced-fat Swiss cheese
- 1/2 cup grated extra-sharp cheddar cheese

Heat oven to 400 degrees. Coat a 2-quart baking dish with cooking spray.

In a large skillet over medium-high, heat the oil. Add the turkey and onions and saute until the turkey is no longer pink, about 5 minutes. Add the spinach and saute for another minute. Transfer the mix-

Satisfy your appetite with healthy, protein-rich ingredients and you may be on your way to losing weight. This casserole is full of low-fat proteins that will fill you up, not out.

Preserve

Reproduced with permission from Harvard Common Press. Makes 1 quart. If you'd like to put some on the pantry shelf, multiply the quantities by four. Give the jars a 10-minute, boiling-water bath, or immerse them in water heated to 180 to 185 degrees for 30 minutes.

- 1 1/4 pounds 4- to 5-inch pickling cucumbers, blossom ends removed
- 3 tablespoons plus 2 teaspoons pickling salt
- 1 quart plus 3/4 cup water
- 1 garlic clove, peeled
- 1 small onion, peeled
- 1 dill head
- 2 grape leaves (optional)
- 3/4 cup cider vinegar
- 1/4 cup sugar
- 1 teaspoon mixed pickling spices

Quarter the cucumbers lengthwise and put in a bowl. Dissolve 3 tablespoons salt in 1 quart of water, and pour the brine over the cucumbers. Top with a heavy plate that just fits inside the bowl. Let the cucumbers stand at room temperature for eight to 12 hours.

Drain the cucumbers, rinse and drain again. Pack them into a quart jar with the garlic, onion and dill head. Add the grape leaves, if you are using them; they help keep the cucumbers firm and green.

In a non-reactive saucepan, combine the remaining 3/4 cup water and 2 teaspoons salt with the vinegar, sugar and spices. Bring to a boil. Pour the hot liquid over the cucumbers and seal the jar. Let it cool.

Store the jar in the refrigerator for at least one week before eating the pickles. Refrigerated, they will keep for several months at least.

Vernon D. Leiser

NEWPORT, Wash. — Air Force Chief Master Sgt. (retired) Vernon D. Leiser passed away, surrounded by family, Monday, Oct. 11, 2010, at age 82 following a short illness.

He was born Jan. 3, 1928, in Greenwood County, Kan., to Albert Emil and Kathryn Ann (Burger) Leiser, the youngest of 11 children. Vern grew up on a farm on the plains of Kansas during the Great Depression. His father (who was born just eight years following the end of the Civil War) died when Vern was 6 years old, and he was subsequently raised by his mother and stepfather.

Vern graduated from Lamont (Kansas) High School in 1946 and, upon graduation, enlisted in the Army Air Corps (AAC). When the Air Force was created in 1947, he was given the choice of staying with the AAC or transferring over to the newly created Air Force. He weighed his options and decided that the Air Force was the right fit. This move proved to be the best one for him, because in just 12 short years, he achieved the highest enlisted rank (E9); a feat that, in the Air Force of 1958 as well as today, is normally accomplished in 18 to 20 years and frequently longer.

During his military career, he was known to be strict and mission oriented but fair. Chief Leiser served in Africa, Japan, Louisiana and North Dakota. Following his retirement in 1966, Vern settled in the Priest River area, purchasing 160 acres and building a home near Bear Paw Creek in Snow Valley. Shortly thereafter, he found employment as a hod carrier with Fred Lesiak, a local farmer and mason. In May of 1971, Vern went to work for the U.S. Forest Service. He was assigned to the Falls Ranger Station until it closed and was then transferred to the Priest Lake Ranger District. While employed with the Forest Service, Vern worked in the recreation department and the roads department. He retired from the Forest Service in November 1988.

His retirement years were spent involved in family history, church service (serving as bishop of the Priest River Ward of the LDS Church during the 1970s, as well as numerous other positions). At the time of his death, he was serving as executive secretary to the bishop.

Vernon Dale Leiser is preceded in death by his parents, two sisters and five brothers. He is survived by his loving wife and companion, Judy at the family home in Newport, Wash.; one daughter and two sons, Sandy (James) of Snowflake, Ariz., Mark (Michelle) of Hayden and Shane (Linda) of Twin Falls. He is also survived by four stepchildren, Mark Ford of Hawaii, Craig Ford of Meridian, Bob Ford of Mountain Home and Lynnette Ford of Newport, Wash. Also surviving are 16 grandchildren, 13 great-grandchildren, two sisters, and one brother (ages 88, 90 and 94).

The funeral will be conducted at 11 a.m. Saturday, Oct. 16, at The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 3261 Highway 2. A burial service with military honors from Fairchild Air Force Base will be conducted at the Newport Cemetery immediately following. Visitation will be held from noon to 7 p.m. Friday, Oct. 15, at the Sherman-Knapp Funeral Home and from 10 a.m. to service time Saturday at the church.

Sherman-Knapp Funeral Home in Newport, Wash., is in charge of arrangements. Family and friends can sign an online guestbook at www.sherman-knapp.com.

First of 33 men rescued from Chilean mine

The Associated Press

SAN JOSE MINE, Chile — The first of 33 men was rescued Tuesday night after 69 days trapped in a collapsed mine, pulled to fresh air and freedom at last in a missile-like escape capsule to the cheers of his family and countrymen.

Florencio Avalos, wearing a helmet and sunglasses to protect him from the glare of rescue lights, smiled broadly as he emerged and hugged his sobbing 7-year-old son, Bairo, and wife. He also embraced Chilean President Sebastian Pinera and rescuers.

Also on hand was Avalos' other son and father.

After the capsule was pulled out of a manhole-sized opening, Avalos emerged as bystanders cheered, clapped and broke into a chant of "Chi! Chi! Chi! Le! Le! Le!" — the country's name.

Avalos gave a thumbs-up as he was led to an ambulance and medical tests after his more than two months deep below the Chilean desert — the longest anyone has ever been trapped underground and survived.

Avalos, the 31-year-old second-in-command of the miners, was chosen to be first because he was in the best condition. He has been so shy that he volunteered to handle the camera rescuers sent down so he wouldn't have to appear on the videos that the miners sent up.

Pinera described how lovely it was to see Avalos' sons greet their father, especially young Bairo.

"I told Florencio, that few times have I ever seen a son show so much love for his father," the president said.

"This won't be over until all 33 are out," Pinera added. "Hopefully the spirit of these miners will remain forever with us. ... This country is capable of great things."

Minutes earlier, mine rescue expert Manuel Gonzalez of the state copper company Codelco grinned and made the sign of the cross as he was lowered into the shaft to the trapped men — apparently without incident. He was followed by Roberto Ros, a paramedic with the Chilean navy's special forces. Together they will prepare the miners for their rescue — expected to take as many as 36 hours for all to surface.

"We made a promise to never surrender, and we kept it," Pinera said as he waited to greet the miners, whose endurance and unity captivated the world as Chile meticulously prepared their rescue.

The last miner out has been decided: Shift foreman Luis Urzua, whose leadership was credited for helping the men endure 17 days with no outside contact after the collapse. The men made 48 hours' worth of rations last before rescuers reached them with a narrow borehole to send down more food.

Janette Marin, sister-in-law of miner Dario Segovia, said the order of rescue didn't matter.

"This won't be a success unless they all get out," she said, echoing the solidarity that the miners and people across Chile have expressed.

The paramedics can change the order of rescue based on a brief medical check once they're in the mine. First out will be those best able to handle any difficulties and tell their comrades what to expect. Then, the weakest and the ill — in this case, about 10 suffer from hypertension, diabetes, dental and respiratory infections and skin lesions from the mine's oppressive humidity. The last should be people who are both physically fit and strong of character.

Chile has taken extensive precautions to ensure the miners' privacy, using a screen to block the top of the shaft from the more than 1,000 journalists at the scene.

The miners will be ushered through an inflatable tunnel, like those used in sports stadiums, to an ambulance for a trip of several hundred yards to a triage station for a medical check. They will gather with a few relatives in an area also closed to the media, before being taken by helicopter to a hospital.

RUPERT — The beloved matriarch of our family, Alta Lowry, 99, passed away Friday, Oct. 8, 2010, in Rupert, Idaho, of old age.

She was born March 21, 1911, in the Haight House of Oakley, to Bert Leroy and Mary Ellen Tracy Bartholomew. Alta passed just a few short months before her 100th birthday, which was her stated goal after she reached 99 (but if life starts at conception, Alta reached her goal).

Alta lived a long, hard, industrious life and was one strong woman. She was one of 10 siblings, two brothers and two half brothers, four sisters and one half sister. She married David H. Lowry (1907 to 1966) on June 10, 1930. Alta and David raised their four children in Manti, Utah, Raymond (Afton), Gayland, Shannon (Joe) and Phil (Lucy). She was preceded in death by her husband, David; children, Gayland, Shannon and Phillip; grandson, Michael; and all her siblings except for her youngest half-sister, Dot. She is survived by her son, Raymond; eight grandchildren; 22 great-grandchildren; and 32 great-great-grandchildren.

Alta was taught very early in life to work hard, and she certainly made that her motto the rest of her life. After graduation from Manti High, she married and became a homemaker. Alta got a job making parachutes in Manti during World War II and then, during the '50s and '60s, owned and operated Lowry's Cafe in Mount

Alta Lorena Bartholomew Lowry

Pleasant, Utah, where she fed countless servicemen from the armory next door. Shortly after her husband died, Alta moved back to Oakley, where she was raised and lived there until she moved to nearby Rupert in her early 90s. She died at the Countryside Care Center in Rupert.

Alta was very creative and resourceful, but her lifelong hobby and love was making quilts, rag rugs and crocheted hangers, even up to the age of 98. The nurses at Countryside could not believe how ambitious and busy Alta kept herself in her old age. Truly, she was the "energizer bunny."

Alta was always giving a quilt, rug or a set of crocheted hangers to anyone that she thought could use them. Her quilts can now be found all over the world. Alta taught her grandkids how to quilt and crochet rugs and hangers and so the tradition will be carried on. Alta was not a materialistic person. She was very thrifty and did not waste anything. She was always giving her earthly possessions away. Alta was a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, Oct. 15, at the Hansen Mortuary, 710 Sixth St. in Rupert. A viewing for family and friends will be from 6 to 8 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 14, at the mortuary. A graveside service will be at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 16, at the Mount Pleasant Cemetery in Mount Pleasant, Utah.

The family wishes to thank the staff of the Countryside Care Center in Rupert for the wonderful care extended to Alta. And most especially, we express gratitude to Alta's son, Raymond, and his wife, Afton, for the immeasurable service they rendered Alta through so many years of her life.

Seniors lead way as Burley tops CRHS

Burley's Stephanie McGill (7) and Emily Wright (22) try to block Canyon Ridge's Staci Baird Tuesday at Burley High School.

RYAN HOWE/
Times-News

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — On senior night, Jessica Laumb had six kills, Melanie Garrard added five kills and Burley's senior pair got plenty of help from its younger teammates to take a four-set victory over Canyon Ridge on Tuesday.

Burley avenged its loss to the Riverhawks earlier this season by winning 25-20, 23-25, 25-19, 25-22. The Bobcats finished Great Basin Conference play 4-6 (6-13 overall).

"Having a conference win toward the end of the season is good for us," said Burley coach Tiffany Green. "This was a good win to get going into districts Monday."

The first set was tied 19-19 before Burley junior setter Delta

Jones, who finished with 24 service points and 35 assists, finished it off with her serving.

Canyon Ridge (4-12 overall, 2-7 GBC) earned the first six points of the second set, which it won, led by Eva Sites' eight kills and Staci Burk's seven kills.

Returning the favor, Burley jumped out to a 10-0 lead in the third set and maintained momentum for the rest of the match, led by Emily Wright's 10 kills and Allison Hepworth's seven kills and six blocks.

Erin Martinez led Burley with 12 digs and Green said Burley played better defensively by reading and anticipating Canyon Ridge's attack.

"The biggest difference was our passing," Green said. "And tonight I felt like we were really aggressive on the net. We had a lot of kids swinging and hitting instead of just tipping to get rid of it. We were placing the ball better."

For Canyon Ridge, setter Kylee Denney was the top server with 20 service points to go along with her 30 assists. Bre Burk led the defensive charge with 10 blocks.

Riverhawks coach Stacy Boer said Burley had more focus and energy this time around.

"It was their senior night and the crowd was loud," Boer said. "(Burley) was a different hitting team tonight, although our blocking and defense wasn't on tonight. We didn't block like we should have and our defense didn't move very quick."

Canyon Ridge hosts Twin Falls on Thursday. Burley finishes its regular season with a nonconference match Thursday at Century.

FOULING OUT:

One reporter's attempt to practice with college athletes

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

I've forgotten the pressure of the game — the way the orange ball becomes the world for awhile and the team can become like a family. I've also forgotten how to dribble effectively, and let's not get started on my ability to shoot a 3-point shot — or a layup for that matter.

But it all came back in a rush on Tuesday when I slipped on my old basketball shoes from my Filer Wildcat days and walked onto the court with the College of Southern Idaho women's basketball team.

Athletic Director Joel Bate and women's head coach Randy Rogers invited me to attend a practice in preparation for my Oct. 30 role on the Magic Valley Hoopsters team against the Harlem Ambassadors and to get a small taste for the rigors of college athletics.

Let me just preface this by saying that I may have played basketball in high school but I usually got the "hustle award" or "most spirited benchwarmer award" at sports banquets. I hung up those red and white shoes after I graduated and didn't look back — until now.

BSU reaching into its assorted bag of tricks

The Associated Press

BOISE — Boise State appears to be up to its old tricks.

After playing it straight early in the season, the No. 3 Broncos are once again digging deep into the chapter of the playbook devoted to tricks, fakes and other deceptive shenanigans.

Against Toledo on Saturday, Bronco quarterback Kellen Moore tossed the ball to wide receiver Chris Potter, who then lofted a 26-yard pass down the left sideline to tailback Doug Martin, setting up the Broncos first-and-goal at the 4.

In the second quarter, Broncos nearly pulled off another fake punt when Kyle Brotzman flicked a shovel pass to Tyler Shoemaker who caught the Rockets flat-footed and ran 59 yards. But the big play was wiped out by a holding penalty.

In beating Oregon State two weeks ago, receiver Austin Pettis took a handoff on what looked to be a reverse, only to pull up and fire a 5-yard TD pass to a wide open Tommy Gallarda in the corner of the end zone.

Coach Chris Petersen has developed a knack for catching opponents flat-footed. In his 4½ years at the helm in Boise he has compiled a highlight reel full of big plays built around fakes and gadgets that have duped defenses and changed the outcome of games.

"Usually it's something different that a team hasn't seen or hasn't seen for a while, maybe from us, that we think have a chance to work and be an explosive play," Petersen said. "That's really the thought behind it, no more or no less than that."

But there is so much more that goes into making those high-risk plays pay off.

There are the hours spent by Bronco coaches studying film and identifying weakness in opposing defenses and special teams. Each week, Petersen and his staff design a handful of new plays or tweak those

Bruins get 'wake-up' call against Minico

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

The Twin Falls volleyball team said it wanted to face some adversity before the Class 4A Great Basin Conference tournament next week.

The Bruins got it Tuesday night from Minico.

Trailing 2-1 after three sets, the Bruins had to rally, needing all five sets to defeat Minico 25-17, 24-26, 21-25, 25-15, 17-15.

"It was definitely a wake-up call tonight," said senior middle blocker Cheltzie Williams.

Williams, one of six seniors honored before the match on senior night, carried the Bruins when the team needed her most.

the fifth set and recorded her third block of the night to put the Bruins up 16-15. Two Minico attacking errors gave Twin Falls the win.

"This was just an awesome game from our team. We had some moments there in the end where we could put it away, but we just couldn't come through," said Minico coach Kris Christensen. "This is the best we've played against Twin Falls in a long time."

Chelsea Hepworth led the Spartans with 14 kills and 12 block assists. Ashley Parker added six kills and Hannah Bailly recorded 22 digs.

Kaylee Kostka dished out 21 assists.

The Spartans took advantage of sloppy play by the Bruins to take sets two and three.

"We more or less dropped the intensity in those sets," said Williams, who added 14 digs and 3.5 blocks on the night. Sierra Starley had nine kills and Jacquelyn Corr added seven.

Senior libero Mallory Jund recorded 30 digs, adding to her school record to give her 837 for her career.

Twin Falls remains undefeated in Great Basin Conference play and will host the district tournament next week after wrapping up the regular season at Canyon Ridge on Thursday.

"We needed a game like this tonight," said Twin Falls coach B.J. Price. "We faced some pressure and

TWIN FALLS 3, CANYON RIDGE 1

Nate Goss scored two second-half goals as Twin Falls beat Canyon Ridge 3-1 to stay alive in the Great Basin Conference boys soccer tournament. The matchup, the two teams' third in a seven-day span, was knotted up 1-1 at intermission.

Canyon Ridge beat Twin Falls a week ago, but took the loss after playing an ineligible player. The teams met in the tournament on last Thursday with the Riverhawks winning on penalty kicks. But Goss made sure things went the Bruins' way this time.

Twin Falls hosts Burley at 3 p.m. Thursday at Sunway Soccer Complex. The winner advances to Saturday's second-place match with a seed to the Class 4A state tournament on the line.

Lee pitches Rangers into ALCS

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Cliff Lee added another impressive line to his growing October resume, putting the Texas Rangers on his back and carrying them into the AL championship series for the first time.

Lee tossed another post-season gem and Texas won a playoff series for the first time, beating the Tampa Bay Rays 5-1 Tuesday night in a decisive Game 5 on the legs of some daring baserunning.

Lee struck out 11 in a six-hitter for his second win over Rays ace David Price in a series in which the road team won every game — a first in major league history.

"It was a lot of fun, I know that much," Lee said. "We had our back against the wall today and we came out and performed."

The Rangers will host the wild-card New York Yankees in the opener of the best-of-seven ALCS on Friday night. Texas' previous three playoff appearances ended with first-round losses to New York, in 1996, 1998 and 1999.

The teams split eight games during the regular season, with the Rangers winning the final four.

"They're a great team and that's why they are where they are," Lee said. "They're going to be a good challenge, just like these guys" homer in the ninth inning for Texas, which had been the only active major league franchise that hadn't won a playoff series.

Lee improved to 6-0 with a 1.44 ERA and three complete games in seven career postseason starts, striking out 54 and walking six in 56 1-3 innings.

The left-hander, acquired from Seattle in July, threw 120 pitches and walked none. He retired his final nine batters and prevented

Tampa Bay from completing an improbable comeback after losing the first two games at home.

When B.J. Upton popped out to shortstop for the final out, Lee didn't even watch the ball drop into Elvis Andrus' glove. He simply walked toward catcher Bengie Molina and the two hugged as Rangers players poured onto the field to mob Lee near the plate.

The Rays had the AL's best record this season, giving them home-field advantage in the playoffs. But they lost all three games at Tropicana Field, managing only two runs in the process.

"David pitched fine. We made too many mistakes — spring training mistakes," rays manager Joe Maddon said. "I want to congratulate the Rangers. Spectacular achievement they put forth this season."

The Rangers said it's the first time the road team has won every game in a post-season series, according to research by the Elias Sports Bureau.

This also was the first time a division series went the full five games since the Los Angeles Angels beat the New York Yankees in 2005.

A pair of Rangers runners scored from second base on infield grounders — thanks to heads-up baserunning by Elvis Andrus and Vladimir Guerrero.

It's the first playoff series victory in the 50-season history of the Washington/Texas franchise.

"It's something we're proud of," slugger Josh Hamilton said. "Hopefully, we can take it to the next level."

Back in the clubhouse, the first round of celebrating was with ginger ale so that Hamilton, who has battled alcohol and drug addiction, could take part. When he left the room, the Rangers brought out champagne.

Filer rebounded to defeat Minico in two sets, 25-17, 25-17.

Goodell says he will meet Favre if necessary

CHICAGO — NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said Tuesday there was no timetable for wrapping up an investigation of an Internet report that Vikings quarterback Brett Favre sent racy text messages and lewd photos to a former New York Jets game hostess.

“We’re just looking for facts now,” Goodell said at the NFL owners meeting. “I am going to deal with it as we get the facts.”

He said he had no plans to meet with Favre, “but if it is something that would help us get to a conclusion and it is warranted, I will do so.”

The investigation, announced last week, centers on a report by the sports website Deadspin that in 2008 Favre, then with the Jets, sent the photos and messages to Jenn Sterger.

Sterger’s manager, Phil Reese, declined to say if his client has talked with the NFL.

“This is something that allegedly happened two years ago,” Reese said in an e-mail to The Associated Press. “We don’t want a quick resolution, but the proper resolution.”

Favre could be fined or suspended under the NFL’s personal conduct policy.

“One of the reasons we instituted the personal conduct policy ... to make everyone understand their responsibilities,” Goodell said. “We’re not going down a line of speculation and hypothetical situations.”

REPORT: BEARS MAY START QB CUTLER

CHICAGO — The NFL Network is reporting that Chicago Bears quarterback Jay Cutler is scheduled to start against Seattle on Sunday, two weeks after suffering a concussion.

The Bears refused to confirm Tuesday’s report by the NFL Network, which cited a league source it did not identify.

Cutler was injured during a loss to the New York Giants.

Coach Lovie Smith said Monday he was “hopeful” that Cutler would be able to play. Bears spokesman Scott Hagel said the quarterback situation will be discussed Wednesday.

The Bears beat Carolina last weekend, but backup Todd Collins threw four interceptions before getting benched for Caleb Hanie.

KRAFT: CBA SOLUTION IN 2010 REALISTIC

CHICAGO — For now, optimism is the approach for NFL owners in negotiations with the players on a new collective bargaining agreement.

New England Patriots owner Robert Kraft said Tuesday it’s a realistic goal to reach a new CBA before the end of the season. At the conclusion of the league’s fall meetings, Kraft said “we’re moving ahead. I’d like to see this get done before the season ends.” Asked if that was a realistic objective, he added “to me it is.”

Even as the 32 owners were discussing strategies for negotiations with the NFL Players Association and the possibility of a work stoppage, many of them were expressing confidence that pro football is not headed for a lockout. The CBA expires in March, and union officials steadfastly claim they expect to be locked out if a new deal isn’t reached.

“It’s taken a lot of time and energy to build the league into what it is and we want to keep it going,” Colts owner

Jenn Sterger works on the sideline before the New York Jets play the New England Patriots in an NFL football game on Sept. 14 at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N. J. Last week, the website Deadspin posted a story which included several voicemails and graphic images allegedly sent by quarterback Brett Favre to Jenn Sterger, who worked for the Jets while Favre was with the team.

Jimmy Irsay said Tuesday. “I don’t think it’s doomsday, and we’re taking it a day at a time. Everybody is engaged, and from my perspective the key thing is to find a solution. That’s where both sides are.”

“I know that energy (to reach a deal) will be there.”

NFL EXPECTS TO REVIEW CONTROVERSIAL CATCH RULE

CHICAGO — Calvin Johnson’s no-catch just might become a catch in the future.

The NFL expects to review the rule that cost the Lions’ star receiver a potential winning touchdown in a season-opening loss to Chicago. After Johnson went to the turf with possession, he placed the ball on the ground as he ran to celebrate. It’s been one of the season’s most discussed — and dissed — calls.

“The going-to-the-ground rule definitely will be discussed,” NFL competition committee co-chairman Rich McKay said Tuesday at the league’s fall meetings. “It’s been discussed the last couple of years. It’s a difficult rule. It was made for on-field officials, not as much for people watching on TV.”

“There’s a definite conflict,” he added. “We have to go back and look if we extended it too far.”

Against Chicago, with Detroit trailing 19-14, Johnson leaped to grab a pass from Shaun Hill in the end zone. He got both feet and a knee on the ground before putting the ball on the grass and beginning to celebrate. It was ruled incomplete because Johnson didn’t maintain possession of the ball throughout the entire process of the catch.

Report: Agent admits paying college players

NEW YORK (AP) — A former sports agent tells Sports Illustrated he paid college football players early in his career, and several of them confirm it to the magazine.

In the Oct. 18 edition, Josh Luchs said he paid more than 30 players from 1990-96, including many who didn’t sign with him.

He said quarterback Ryan Leaf, the second pick in the 1998 draft who famously flopped in the pros, took more than $10,000, most of which he voluntarily paid back after signing with another agent. Leaf declined to comment on specific allegations.

Luchs told the magazine he also paid first-round picks Jamir Miller and Chris Mims. Miller, a linebacker from UCLA taken 10th by the Cardinals in 1994, declined comment. Mims, a defensive lineman from Tennessee taken 23rd by the Chargers in 1992, died in 2008.

The former agent also said that while he was recruiting Ohio State receiver Santonio Holmes in 2005, Holmes said he had been taking money from an agent for a couple of years. Holmes, now with the Jets, told the magazine that the story was untrue.

Luchs was suspended for a year by the NFL Players Association in 2007 over the handling of a commission check. He says he’s telling his story because “I don’t want my career to be defined by that suspension.”

Luchs says he didn’t pay players while working with Gary Wichard, the agent linked to the investigation of NCAA violations at North Carolina. But he says Wichard and John Blake, the Tar Heels assistant who resigned amid the investigation, worked together in violation of NCAA rules in 2002.

NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said Tuesday that the league has talked to college coaches and agents about reports that a coach was on an agent’s payroll.

“We had a report today from our college relations committee on our relationship with agents and college coaches. This is an area of great concern by the coaches on the college level, and we want to be responsive to that,” Goodell said in Chicago, site of the NFL’s fall meetings. “I think there is going to be an effort with college coaches and the agent community itself, possibly the NFL and NFLPA and to work together to bring a solution.”

Luchs also told SI that ESPN draft analyst Mel Kiper also helped Wichard recruit players, describing a 2000 meeting with Stanford defensive lineman Willie Howard in which Wichard had arranged for Kiper to call as he talked with the player.

Kiper told SI he “would never promote Gary or another agent to a player” and denied that the call was prearranged.

“Conversations with players, which are occasionally facilitated by agents, are a valuable way to get to know the players,” Kiper said in a statement through an ESPN spokesman. “These conversations have never compromised my integrity and my 32-year record supports that.”

Luchs sued Wichard for breach of contract after leaving his agency and lost the lawsuit. Wichard filed the grievance with the NFLPA over Luchs’ handling of the check.

Wichard and Blake declined comment through their lawyers.

Loss to Texas is Nebraska’s rallying cry

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — The red rubber bracelets Nebraska players wear say “FINISH” on one side, “0.01” on the other.

It’s a reminder of the Cornhuskers falling one second short of winning the Big 12 championship and earning a spot in a BCS bowl last year.

The Huskers’ foil, otherwise known as Texas, visits Memorial Stadium on Saturday. Barring a conference championship game rematch, it will be the last meeting between the traditional powers before No. 5 Nebraska leaves for the Big Ten next year.

Defensive lineman Jared Crick isn’t so sure a win on Saturday would make him and his teammates feel much better about the way last year’s game in Arlington, Texas, turned out.

No one around here has forgotten how one second was put back on the clock after a harried Colt McCoy threw out of bounds, giving Texas enough time to kick the field goal that beat Nebraska 13-12.

“The feeling after that game, it’s a taste in our mouths that we’ll never get rid of,” Crick said Tuesday. “Maybe this week we can get some retribution.”

That one loss inspired the bracelets, which were the brainchild of defensive back Wil Richards’ father, Dan Richards, and given to the players over the summer.

The message about finishing applies to everything that happens in practice and in games and reinforces the idea that success can’t be taken for granted, receiver Brandon Kinnie said.

“I don’t take it off,” said Kinnie, with his slightly faded bracelet on his right wrist. “I look at it before every game just to see the ‘finish’ part, to play every game like that.”

Nebraska (5-0, 1-0 Big 12) is coming off a 48-13 win at Kansas State, has its highest ranking since 2001 and has become a bona fide national-title contender. Texas (3-2, 1-1) has lost two straight.

Saturday’s game has huge implications for the rest of the season for both teams. But Nebraska coach Bo Pelini has spent the early part of the week fending off questions that look back, about exacting revenge for last year.

His players have mostly followed the party line, but Kinnie acknowledged that avenging the loss is “a tad” of motivation.

Kinnie said he’s still haunted by memories of catching what would have been the go-ahead touchdown pass in the fourth

“When the Longhorn and the ‘N’ on the two helmets get together, those kids are going to fight their guts out and both fan bases are going to be pumped.”

— Texas coach Mack Brown

quarter, only to be ruled just inches out of bounds on third-and-goal from the 11.

“I could have scored, and I believe we could have won,” Kinnie said. “We’re focusing a lot on this season, but you can’t help but have a little feeling about it from last year.”

The Huskers, who sacked McCoy nine times in a dominating defensive performance, rushed the field thinking they’d won when McCoy threw a pass out of bounds and the clock showed all zeros. But officials immediately asked for a replay, which showed 1 second left when the ball hit the railing of a luxury suite about 15 yards behind the sideline. The rules say the clock runs until the ball hits something.

Hunter Lawrence came on to kick the 46-yard game-winner.

“You go from an all-time high to an all-time low pretty quick,” Crick said.

Receiver Mike McNeill said, “We were angry, we were upset, sad. In some ways you felt you were wronged. It was definitely a tough loss and it was hard to walk off the field and not have won the game.”

The volatile Pelini shouted on his way to the locker room that time was put back on the clock to help get Texas into the BCS national championship game.

Pelini’s opinion has changed since then.

“In the end they got the call right,” he said. “You look back and you understand you didn’t make enough plays to win the football game, and we had our opportunities. We always talk about the margin of error being so small in whether you win or lose, and I think that game showed it.”

Texas coach Mack Brown said he doubts Nebraska needs to use revenge for fuel this week.

“They played as hard as they could in the championship game and they played great, and they’re going to play as hard as they can Saturday,” Brown said. “When the Longhorn and the ‘N’ on the two helmets get together, those kids are going to fight their guts out and both fan bases are going to be pumped.”

the court, but all of them are beautiful, quick and strong. Practice is not a tea party and neither is the life they live on a daily basis.

“It’s a full-time job. You have to show up on time, do things right, communicate,” said Felicity Jones, a 19-year-old returning sophomore. “We have class, travel, homework — sometimes you forget to eat because you are so busy.”

The players are required to attend study hall to keep up with their schoolwork. Rogers said the most challenging part for his athletes is time management. He predicts his team will go to nationals, although not without a lot of hard work first.

“My gut is that we will be pretty good,” Rogers said. “We have the talent. Our defense will be our strongest point.”

Laurel Kearsley, another 19-year-old returning player, is the youngest of 11 children and has been playing basketball since she could pick up a ball. She likes the busy lifestyle — balancing 17 credits, Monday through Friday basketball practices and poetry club.

“They treat us really well here at CSI. We get our education for free. I am way blessed,” Kearsley said. “It’s a big responsibility though, you hop on that court and you get it done.”

Kearsley and the rest of her teammates are getting it done one practice at a time. It’s a lot of work for these women who want what the rest of college kids want — to make a difference, to enjoy relationships with people and to do well at school.

“A lot of people think we get it handed to us. But it’s like a job,” Kearsley said as she patted her heart and smiled. “We have to do our part.”

DEAR ABBY: How do I get out of an affair that has been going on for two years? I started it at a bad time in my life — fights with my husband, the pressure of having three young kids, and a business we co-owned that was in financial difficulty. I know what I did was wrong. My husband doesn't know, and I don't think he suspects.

I'm afraid if I end the affair, I will get blackmailed or found out. My lover refuses to end it. He wants me and thinks he can treat me better than my husband. Any advice?

— STUCK IN HOT TEXAS

DEAR STUCK: Just this. A man who "refuses to end it" and implies that he would blackmail or betray you is not someone you would ever want to spend your life with. It's time to tell your husband everything — that you deeply regret what you have done, why it happened, that you want to heal your marriage and be free of this barnacle who refuses to let go. The longer you wait, the more difficult it will be. Do it now.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: My wife, "Marissa," and I are expecting our first child. My sister "Patti" has a little boy whom we all love and adore. When Patti learned that we're having a girl, she said we don't "deserve" to have one because she has always wanted a daughter. Then Marissa added fuel to the fire with a few well-chosen remarks of her own that she shared with friends and neighbors.

I just want all of this to stop and I don't know how to accomplish it. I'm upset with Patti for her behavior, and sad that my wife and sister are at odds. This is hurting everyone in the family. What should I do?

— STRESSED-OUT DAD-TO-BE

DEAR STRESSED OUT: Everyone needs to just calm down. Your wife and sister need to apologize to each other. Patti may have been joking when she said you don't deserve to have a baby girl. What she may have meant — and overstated — was that she was experiencing a twinge of jealousy.

Suggest to Marissa that your sister shouldn't have been taken literally, and that she apologize to Patti for "snapping." Ditto for your sister for her tactlessness. Then remind your sister that we don't live in a country with a one-child policy. If she wants to try for a daughter, she is free to do so, and in the meantime, she'll have a sweet little niece to spoil.

DEAR ABBY: My family moved to a new state last year. While there have been ups and downs, one of the things I miss most is my pets. Before we moved, we had a dog, a cat and some goldfish. Now we're in an apartment and can't afford all the fees associated with having pets. Also the apartment is too cramped to accommodate them.

My son "Toby" is 2. He loved each of the animals. He'd watch the dog run around, pet the cat and stare at the fish. The cat slept in Toby's nursery, the dog guarded him in his stroller, and the fish loved him because he fed them.

How can I encourage my son's natural love of animals? A few hours playing with a cat or dog would be fine.

— PETLESS IN MARYLAND

DEAR PETLESS: Buy your son more goldfish. Read him stories about animals, and take him to the zoo as often as you can manage. His love of animals has already begun and this will continue it to develop.

IF OCTOBER 13 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: All that glitters isn't gold, but you aren't likely to listen to anyone who tells you this between now and the end of the year. Try not to give your heart away or to waste your money on something that won't last or prove satisfying in the long run. By February you will be more sensible about material matters and can make sound business decisions. April and May are good months to put important plans into motion or to ask for advice from those who are wiser and worldlier than you are. If you are looking for true romance it might be in the stars next spring.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can't run your love life like a convenience store. And you can't handle your business, career, finances or job as though nothing else mattered. Put your impulse to be overly ambitious on hold.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): No one can prod or bully you into action. You are unable to cope with financial matters unless you examine them at a leisurely pace. Take your own sweet time to get warmed up and up to speed.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Never memorize something you can look up. It is great to have resources at your fingertips so that you can find the right reference when it is needed. You might feel challenged by a learning experience.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Use your head rather than your heart to overcome a passing controversy. Friends may give you constructive criticisms or offer you a viable testing ground so that you can tweak a project properly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You might be jealous of the tightfisted tightwads. You might envy people who have the self-control to save their money and who have money to spend when there is an emergency or a bargain to be had.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Even a sick puppy will wag its tail. Some people are kind and agreeable even when they are undergoing serious personal problems. Take into consideration the fact that a smile may be forced.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Charm can get you only so far and no further. The boss expects you to toe the line and deadlines might loom on the horizon. Don't let social activities interfere with the need to follow through on business.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Turn a confrontation into compromise. A minor conflict can make you aware of the buttons that need to be pushed in order to turn the tides in your favor. Be extra polite and watch your manners.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Design your own patch as part of your quilt of ambitions. The small things you do add to your experience and success, but you might not see immediate results until everything is pieced together.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Counteract stodginess with love. The very things that frustrate you early today can be a springboard for accomplishment later this month. Try not to get too stuck in a rut of your own making.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Suck up knowledge like a cold drink on a hot day. Since you are sharper than usual, this is a good time to ferret out key information or learn a new skill. Benefit from the latest science and technology.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Batten down the hatches. Whatever your particular passion may be, rest assured you will sail through difficulties with the necessary stamina to finalize it. Hold off on new undertakings or agreements.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Wrongs unredressed, or insults unavenged."

— William Wordsworth

I'm willing to bet that if this three-no-trump deal was slipped into a pairs game, most Souths would win the opening club lead in dummy, cross to hand with a diamond, then lead a heart to the king and ace. Eventually declarer would emerge with 10 tricks and no one would think anything more of the deal, even though declarer had done his best to go down in his contract and East had let it through! Can you see why?

On winning the opening club lead, declarer should immediately go after hearts by leading a low heart from dummy. As he can afford to lose two heart tricks, he must take insurance against a defender's holding two stoppers — which will be the case if East has the guarded heart ace.

On the actual sequence of play at the table, imagine that the heart king had been allowed to win. Now, when a second heart lead did not set the suit up, hearts would be dead. The point is that North had only one side-entry in the form of the diamond ace. Declarer can set up hearts but cannot reach them.

Ducking the first round of hearts preserves the needed additional entry in the suit itself. Declarer can win the return and play a heart to the king, ready to lead a third round if the defenders duck. If they take the ace, the suit will be good, and there is still an entry to the board.

ANSWER: In these auctions new suits by responder at the three-level are natural and game-forcing. Here, you are well-placed to give preference to three spades; your strong doubleton is just as good as three-card support. My second choice would be to tempore with a call of three diamonds, the fourth suit, asking for clarification.
