A NEW SPIN ON STILL LIFE

JEROME — Cinderella and her group of little mice sat frozen in the midst of colorful balls of twine. A pink, unfinished dress was displayed above them and music from the classic Disney movie played in the background.

"Teacher! How will I get the marker off?" One of the mice rubbed at the whiskers on his face and looked around at the rest of the 3-year-olds dressed in gray.

Canyonside Christian School's halls were brimming with literary characters on Wednesday during the Jerome school's fourth annual "wax museum." Students and their teachers dressed in costumes from books they were reading and posed for five minutes as if they were made of wax. They then "thawed" to answer questions from parents and teachers as if they were the characters.

The morning was basically a series of book reports come to life. Props and backdrops were set up in the rooms to allow for authentic character representations. Dalmatian puppies and their tormenter, Cruella de Vil, walked down the hall past another room filled with lions sitting in front of a safari scene — music from the "Lion King" mixed with the student's roars behind homemade masks.

School board member Jamie Shetler, the mother of two Canyonside students, said the day encourages reading. The third-grade classroom has been reading the book, "The Whipping Boy" by Sid Fleischman and most of the class was dressed as characters from the book, ready to pose for their audience.

"Kids get really excited about it and we have had overwhelming support from our parents," Shetler said. Some parents make the costumes at home but other outfits are bought at party stores.

Her son Alex dressed up as Captain Hook and teamed with Aron Pittcock, who was Peter Pan for the day, and their Tinker Bell friend, Kourtney Henderson.

When asked why the boys wanted to be Captain Hook and Peter Pan, they said they just wanted to fight with their swords.

Kourtney, 9, said she wanted to be Tinker Bell because "In the movie, Tinker Bell is inspiring because she does lots of stuff" and "My hair matches hers."

Renee DeJong, a Wendell mother of three, said the event has gotten bigger every year and parents look forward to a chance to do something in lieu of Halloween.

"There is a lot of parent and family involvement," she said. "It's a great alternative to Halloween and it keeps kids interested in reading."

Three vie for T.F. seat

Aims for commission spot vary from efficiency, to maintaining GOP values, to tax lobbying

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Three people are vying for the Twin Falls County Commission: a Republican and two who want you to look past party affiliation.

D. Leon Mills, the GOP candidate, Gary Eller, a Democrat, and Randy Carpenter, an independent, are aiming for departing Commissioner Tom Mikesell's District 2 seat.

Carpenter is running on an efficiency platform: As the owner of a small contracting firm that's weathered the recession, he said he knows how to find efficiency.

"I have a business that's had to downsize, and it's easy to find ways to save money if you really need to," he said. "(The county has) a $40 million budget, I'm sure we can take a few million probably right off the top without costing any jobs."

Further, he said if he wins, he would donate half of his $67,000 commissioner salary to making Twin Falls County more energy efficient. He said it is more symbolic than impactful, but he hopes

GOP candidates snub AARP survey

Reasons include 'loaded' questions, political disagreements and black-and-white options

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

There are a lot of blanks in the AARP voter's guide this year, and mostly on the right side of the column.

ABOUT THE SURVEY

You can read the full survey at www.aarp.org/yourvote. Here are the questions the AARP survey asked candidates:

- How do you propose to resolve Idaho's worsening state budget problems?
- What is your position on ensuring health care workers honor patients' living wills, advance directives, or other end of life care and instructions?
- Where do you stand on limiting the role and influence large campaign contributions have in Idaho politics?
- How do you propose we bring more physicians into Idaho, and encourage more to accept patients under Medicare?

Almost every Republican incumbent and unopposed candidate from the Magic Valley declined to answer the questionnaire. Their reasons ranged from the AARP endorsing health care reform to worrying about being painted into a corner with their answers. Almost every Democrat — challengers and incumbents — answered the survey, as did most non-incumbent Republicans and independent conservatives.

The AARP voter's guide for Idaho's elections, released Tuesday, is based on the surveyed concerns of its Idaho members, said David Irwin, AARP director of government affairs and communication. The candidates were asked to answer four questions and given about 125 words to do so. The questions also had a multiple-choice aspect.

State Rep. Stephen Hartgen, R-Twin Falls, said he doesn't answer every questionnaire and FILER — They're too young to vote, but that didn't diminish the enthusiasm of fourth-graders from Filer Elementary School who cheered the arrival of a bus full of Republican candidates, including Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter.

The bus pulled into a grocery store parking lot across the street from the Filer school on Thursday afternoon, one of nearly 90 campaign stops across the state planned this week and next for the GOP Bus Tour.

Because Idaho history is taught in the fourth grade, the campaign stop gave students an opportunity to learn about the state's government first-hand for a bit from Otter. Otter was joined by Secretary of State Ben Ysursa, U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo and Lt. Gov. Brad Little — all candidates who face Democratic challengers in contested Nov. 2 elections.

They shook hands with schoolchildren, and then Otter introduced the other candidates, describing their jobs in simple terms that are easy for youngsters to grasp.

"The guy who helps me the most is Brad Little, the lieutenant governor," Otter said.

for this one, it was the "loaded" questions that dissuaded him.

"I thought the way the questions were worded limited the ability of the respondent to answer the questions accurately," he said. "I think I said in my e-mail back to them that I'd be glad to discuss individual issues and bills as they come up in the Legislature, but the approach that they asked for struck me as leaning in a more liberal direction and I didn't feel I could adequately answer the questions in the way they were framed."

Lee Heider, the unopposed candidate for the District 24 Senate seat, was more blunt for his reason for not answering.

"Anyone that supports (President Barack) Obama is not on my list of people to respond to," Heider said. "When I know people are liberal and they're not going to endorse me, I don't see the point in filling out their questionnaire."

A. Barry Rand, the AARP CEO, personally donated $8,900 to Obama's campaign in 2008, according to political news website Politico.com.

Heider said he supports older, retired people — "I am one," he said — and thinks most people in his district know his stance on issues. He's also making rounds to various groups to speak with them in person, he said.

son, he said.

Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, was the sole Magic Valley Republican incumbent in a contested race to answer the survey. She, like Hartgen and Heider, said there are few reasons for candidates to answer questionnaires because the answers are very black and white, while legislating requires working in shades of gray.

She said it's not possible to give adequate parameters to why she would or would not support something when answering such questionnaires. Bell said she answered the survey as broadly as she could because of the issues facing AARP members.

Irwin said the questionnaire included the in-depth answer section to alleviate candidate concerns and that the questions came directly from Idaho AARP members — a conservative-leaning group of independents, he said.

"From our end, it doesn't really hold a whole lot of water that we're not providing a lot of wiggle room," Irwin said. "If some candidates feel the question is leading, we do have a position on the issue. They are free to disagree. And you know what, disagreement is healthy."

Crapo visits Buhl constituents, presents 'Spirit of Idaho' award

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Thursday was busy for Sen. Mike Crapo, even before he spent the afternoon campaigning with the GOP Bus Tour, which made several stops across the Magic Valley.

The Republican senator spent his morning in Buhl; his first stop coming at Buhl City Hall, where he presented residents Monte and Dianne Bruhn a Spirit of Idaho award to honor the couple's volunteer efforts to offer wounded veterans with top-notch Idaho hunting experiences.

Monte Bruhn said the experience was an honor that should be shared with the many donors and volunteers dedicated to the Doug Bridges Memorial Hunts program, named after Army Cpl. Doug Bridges of Buhl, who was killed in action while serving in Iraq in 2006.

"There are so many people involved in the hunts, from our friends, family and neighbors to people out of state that I've never even met before," he said.

After the award presentation, Crapo attended a meeting at the 8th Street Center sponsored by the Buhl Chamber of Commerce. Although there were just 18 people in attendance, Crapo's time was spent answering questions about topics dominating national discussion — the economy, immigration reform and health care reform.

Crapo told attendees that after the November elections the Senate may have enough votes to "topple" certain parts of health care reform but won't likely be able to repeal the bill completely.

Pat Hamilton, vice president of operations at Farmers National Bank, wanted to know when Washington would address immigration issues.

"No one wants to talk about it ... maybe it's too political," Hamilton said. "But when are we going to fix it? It's just Band-Aids on it right now."

Crapo agreed with Hamilton, saying that immigration won't likely be brought up anytime soon, as the issue is polarizing.

"We are a nation of immigrants but we are a nation of law," Crapo said.

A possible solution would be overhauling the nation's guest-worker program so that business's labor needs are met without undermining standing law, he said.

Chamber President Janet Franklin said business unrest is affecting growth.

"Is Congress or the president aware of how unsure businesses are? Businesses don't know what to do because they don't know what is going to happen," Franklin said.

Solutions, Crapo said in an interview, are formed by lawmakers making time to talk face-to-face with constituents.

Burley dedicates long-planned Snake River walking path

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Words like partnership, asset and dreams were used Thursday as community leaders gathered to officially open Burley's new walking path along the Snake River.

"This has been a dream for a lot of people for a lot of years," said Scott Horsley, president of the Oregon Trail Recreation District.

Horsley said the recreation district put just less than $160,000 into the 4,000-foot-long stretch of path that runs from the Burley Municipal Golf Course marina to Scholer Park but the project was really spurred by the district's partnership with the city, benefactor Lex Kunau and city taxpayers.

"Come on out and wear out the cement," Horsley said.

Oregon Trail Recreation District Director Zeke Zimmerman, who was one of the project's visionaries years ago and steadily worked toward making the project a reality, said the other day he came out to do a final inspection on the two pieces of the old Jackson Bridge that were installed over a portion of the Goose Creek drainage on the path. He wanted to get there before the sun came up, and when he did, leaves along the path were turning fall colors and the Snake River was still and beautiful.

"It was like an epiphany," Zimmerman said.

Burley Mayor Terry Greenman said the path is the first phase of a planned greenbelt walking path that will eventually run the length of the river to the city's new marina on Bedke Boulevard. The city donated labor and in-kind services toward the project.

Greenman said the plans will also tie the path into the bridge between Burley and Heyburn so people can access the walking paths on both sides of the river.

Zimmerman said the district has applied for a grant to begin the work at the marina on the west side of town. If the grant is received, that work will likely start next June with the path stretching toward the Overland Bridge. The two ends will eventually meet in the middle.

Mini-Cassia Chamber of Commerce Executive Director Kae Cameron said the new path is a wonderful asset that the community can be proud of.

"It's a very nice addition to a lot of other nice things," said Kunau.

Donations for benches that will bear their benefactors' names on them, as well as for tables that will be placed along the path, may be made at Burley City Hall or by calling 878-2224.

it would spur people to find efficiencies in their homes also.

He called his candidacy one to make a point that ideas exist outside of party lines.

"An independent is beholden to none except the voters," he said. "Whether I win or not, my whole goal is to get some ideas into the system."

He describes himself as a Libertarian Democrat — someone who respects individual liberty and responsibility but believes the government creates a framework for people to work in.

"If we want to be free, we need to get to work not just on raising expectations of our leadership, but also expectations of ourselves," he said.

Eller, a rancher, is pushing for a variety of specific initiatives ranging from xeriscaping in the county to fighting to place the proposed Gateway West power line project on public land, and through sage grouse territory, instead of through private ranches and farms.

"I don't believe it will destroy the sage grouse breeding ground. It will interrupt it, no doubt about it," he said. But "I think the sage grouse is far more adaptable than (biologists) are giving it credit for."

Eller, a former Army lieutenant colonel and school teacher, said some of his tax ideas would require lobbying the Legislature because commissioners cannot enact them. He wants to create a sales-tax holiday leading up to the school year and to institute a sales tax for Internet sales in the state.

"I do think it's an infringement on local businesses here," he said of tax-free Internet sales.

Mills said he is running on traditional Republican values: lower taxes, less government and fewer laws.

He said he has no intentions of raising taxes or laying folks off; he disagrees with laws that people vote against in elections.

Flu shots available at SCPHD

Public flu shot clinics have started at South Central Public Health District Offices in Bellevue, Burley, Gooding, Jerome, Rupert and Twin Falls, according to a Thursday SCPHD release.

The shots include vaccine that protect against both the seasonal flu and the H1N1 flu. Injectable vaccines cost $23, while the FluMist nasal spray costs $30 for adults. A high-dose flu shot is available for people older than 64 and costs $38, and SCPHD will bill Medicaid and Medicare Part B.

For flu vaccination schedules, call your nearest SCPHD office or visit www.phd5.idaho.gov.

According to a SCPHD release, it is recommended that everyone older than 6 months receive a flu vaccine, and people vaccinated last year will need a new vaccine this year. It is also recommended that people wash their hands often, particularly after sneezing or coughing, avoid touching their eyes, nose and mouth, cover coughs and sneezes, and stay home when sick to prevent the spread of the flu.

Was the mayor a killer?

On May 21, 1938, the body of Salt Lake City jewelry salesman George Leland Olson was found stuffed into the back seat of his Ford sedan, which was parked behind the old Park Hotel in downtown Twin Falls. There was a .25-caliber slug in his neck.

The evidence swiftly pointed to the man whom Olson came to Twin Falls to see: former mayor Duncan McDonald Johnston.

Johnston, who owned a jewelry store downtown, had been a high-flyer in Twin Falls politics. In 1933, at the age of 34, he had swept the longtime incumbent Twin Falls mayor out of office and his coattails transformed the Twin Falls City Council with Democrats and New Dealers.

Near the top of Johnston's reform agenda was cleaning up the Twin Falls Police Department, which had a reputation for corruption. In 1936, the mayor hired Howard Gillette to do the job.

Gillette was a straight-arrow cop who — one year after Johnston was swept out of office in a Republican landslide — had no trouble arresting his former boss for murder.

Johnston, it turns out, bought jewelry from Olson — but it being the Great Depression, not many folks in Twin Falls were in the market for rings, brooches and watches. Johnston owed

YOU DON'T SAY
Steve Crump

Olson money, and according to historian Jim Gentry, Olson had orders from his boss to collect the cash or close Johnston down.

And then there was the matter of $15,000 worth of jewelry that Olson was said to have with him.

When Johnston's alibi didn't check out, Gillette had his store bugged and ordered Officer Craig Bracken to sneak into the basement and stake out the ex-mayor.

Unaware he was being watched, Johnston walked downstairs and removed a piece of concrete wall, revealing a hiding place. As Bracken watched, Johnston took a small piece of folded cloth from inside the wall.

You can guess what was inside.

Bracken arrested Johnston, and police searched the store. Beneath the basement floor, they found a .25-caliber automatic Colt handgun.

In December, a Twin Falls County jury convicted Johnston of first-degree murder, and he was sentenced to life in prison, but the conviction was later overturned. The former mayor was tried a second time and convicted again in April 1940.

According to Gentry's "In the Middle and On the Edge," a history of the Twin Falls area, Gov. Chase Clark received a strange letter — postmarked Klamath Falls, Ore. — in March 1941.

Inside was a note — with the words cut from a newspaper — confessing to the murder and saying Johnston had been framed. "I believe Duncan Johnston innocent ... framed ... by a community that let a thousand personal considerations blind them."

A short time later, Clark got a second anonymous letter confessing to the murder — and saying Johnston had hired the writer to kill Olson.

In early 1942, according to Gentry, Johnston asked for a pardon, claiming he hadn't killed Olson. Though his petition was rejected, the appeal raised doubts among pardon board members.

Then Johnston escaped from the old Idaho State Penitentiary, but was recaptured in December 1942.

Five months later, Johnston's fourth petition for a pardon was turned down, but he was finally released in January 1944, "much to the disgust of most Twin Falls residents," Gentry wrote.

Things worked out better for Gillette. He retired as chief of police in 1962.

Gooding woman dies after crash

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

A Gooding woman died Thursday night in a Boise hospital as a result of injuries she suffered in a single-vehicle crash on Interstate 84 near Jerome.

Mary R. Estep, 82, was flown to Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise following a one-vehicle crash at 1:10 p.m. Tuesday. She and her husband, William Estep, 82, were traveling westbound on the interstate near milepost 168 when William Estep stepped on the accelerator instead of the brake while taking the off-ramp. William Estep was treated at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center in Twin Falls.

One arrested in Golf Course Road crash

A 26-year-old Jerome man was arrested Wednesday after allegedly running a stop sign and sending two people to the hospital after he crashed into their vehicle at about 8:20 p.m.

Joseph O'Donnell is accused of failing to yield at the intersection of 400 South Road and Golf Course Road, according to the Jerome County Sheriff's Office. O'Donnell was heading westbound on 400 South, driving a 1998 Chevrolet pickup, when he struck a 2000 GMC pickup that was northbound on Golf Course Road.

Three occupants of the GMC were injured. One was treated for minor injuries, while two were taken to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center in Twin Falls. One of the passengers was later transported via air ambulance to Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

The victims' names have not been released.

O'Donnell was not injured, and alcohol is believed to be a factor in the crash.

Trevino attorney files to delay trial

Counsel for accused murderer Thomas Trevino Jr. has asked for more time to prepare a defense.

Keith Roark of Hailey is representing Trevino, 30, of Twin Falls, for allegedly killing Jill Gelever in July. According to Roark's motion to continue, filed this week in Twin Falls 5th District Court, Roark has asked Judge Randy Stoker for more time as he is also scheduled to defend Gerry Salgado, who faces a first-degree murder charge in Cassia County. That trial is scheduled for Jan. 3, while Trevino's trial is scheduled for Jan. 31.

Accused embezzler pleads not guilty

A Filer woman accused of stealing thousands from her former employer pleaded not guilty on Tuesday in Twin Falls 5th District Court.

Tina Langdon, 37, was arraigned on one count of grand theft, as the state has alleged she stole nearly $100,000 from an area car dealership for which she worked as an office manager.

Her trial is scheduled for Jan. 12.

Judge delays rape trial of Twin Falls man

Twin Falls 5th District Court Judge G. Richard Bevan granted the state's request to continue a rape trial until 2011.

Justin R. Wicklund, 25, of Twin Falls, was set to face a jury trial on Tuesday, but the state filed a motion to continue this week due to "officer and testing unavailability." Further details were not recorded in the case file.

Wicklund faces charges of rape, aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and domestic battery after his girlfriend accused him of raping her at gunpoint in July.

The new trial date was set for Jan. 4.

Reid, Angle trade barbs in Nevada Senate race

By David Espo
AP Special Correspondent

LAS VEGAS — In a crackling campaign debate, Republican challenger Sharron Angle attacked Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid as a career politician Thursday night who lives in a fashionable Washington condominium and has voted to raise taxes 300 times. The four-term veteran called his tea party-backed rival extreme and an ally of special interests.

“My opponent favors big banks, she’s against Wall Street reform,” Reid said, adding that her views are sympathetic to big health insurance companies.

Angle played the aggressor from the opening moments of the hour-long debate, at one point taunting the Democratic leader to “man up, Harry Reid” as she urged him to concede that Social Security faces financial difficulty.

PBS station, there was little or nothing the two agreed on — not taxes, not health care, immigration, energy policy or federal spending.

Reid took aim at Angle’s statement that it’s not the job of a senator to create jobs. “What she’s talking about is extreme,” he said.

“Harry Reid, it’s not your job to create jobs,” she replied sharply. “It’s your job to create policy” that leads to the creation of jobs.

With their debate, Reid and his challenger shared a local stage and a national spotlight, the only joint appearance of a campaign pitting the embodiment of the Democratic establishment against a challenger who was little known outside Nevada before winning the nomination in an upset.

For Angle, a 61-year-old former state lawmaker, the encounter was a chance to counter Reid’s months-long attack on her as an extremist who is bent on destroying Social Security and other government programs.

For Reid, who is 70 and seeking a fifth Senate term, it marked an opportunity to persuade skeptical constituents that he deserves re-election at a time when unemployment in Nevada, at 14.4 percent, is the highest in the country.

The two rivals had a quiet, private word in the moments before the debate began and shook hands and exchanged pleasantries once it had ended. In between, she frequently looked at Reid when it was his turn to speak.

The debate unfolded at a particularly critical moment in their race, with early voting set to begin over the weekend and polls showing an extremely tight contest.

Under the debate ground rules, moderator Mitch Fox posed questions to the candidates by turn, and at one point, asked Angle the same question twice after she sidestepped when asked if health insurance companies should be bound by any coverage mandates.

“The solutions to the health care insurance cost problems are simple and they reside within the free market,” she said.

Reid pounced on her reply. “Insurance companies don’t do things out of the goodness of their heart; they do it because of the profit motive,” he said. “We need them to be forced into” covering mammograms, colonoscopies and other tests, as well as autism and other conditions.

Angle’s reference to Reid’s Washington condominium appeared part of a campaign-long effort to make him look like he has lost touch with the state that he has represented in Congress for decades.

She returned to the same theme nearly an hour later, much more pointedly, when she said he had gone into public service with little money and now was among the wealthiest men in the Senate.

“How did you become so wealthy on a government payroll?” she asked accusingly.

As he had at other points, Reid said Angle had her facts wrong. He said he had practiced law before entering politics, had been successful at it and has managed his investments well in the years since.

Both candidates unveiled new television attack ads in the hours leading up to the debate.

Previewing her attack in the debate’s opening moments, Angle’s commercial Reid, saying he has voted to raise taxes more than 300 times.

Reid’s ad called Angle a “wild” legislator who would force pregnant rape victims to give birth and dismantle Social Security.

Soaring Hoover Dam bypass complete

By Oskar Garcia
Associated Press Writer

BOULDER CITY, Nev. — A soaring bridge that will let drivers bypass Hoover Dam — and steer clear of its security checkpoints and gawking tourists — is set to open after nearly eight years and $240 million worth of work.

The 1,900-foot engineering wonder perched 890 feet above the Colorado River is expected to drastically cut travel time along the main route between Las Vegas and Phoenix, as motorists will no longer have to make their way across the dam’s winding two-lane road at a snail’s pace.

“I know that the Hoover Dam is one of the wonders of the world,” U.S. Transportation Secretary Ray LaHood said at a dedication ceremony Thursday. “I don’t know who gives that designation, but I hope the bridge will become another wonder of the world.”

LaHood and a delegation of government officials, including Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer and U.S. Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada, heralded the span linking the Silver and Grand Canyon states as a crucial example of work being done nationwide to update the country’s infrastructure.

LaHood said the bypass is one of 15,000 transportation projects that include updating 4,000 miles of road.

“Daring projects do not solve today’s problems — they support tomorrow’s possibilities,” he said.

The dedication gave Reid an opportunity to tout his work as the country’s most powerful U.S. senator less than three weeks before Election Day.

“It’s about as spectacular as you can get,” Reid said of the bridge. You look over these stark mountains, the river below us, the great blue skies and the dam behind us — it’s wonderful.”

The bridge, which officially opens next week, is named for former Nevada Gov. Mike O’Callaghan and Pat Tillman, the former NFL player who quit the Arizona Cardinals to join the Army Rangers and died under friendly fire in Afghanistan. Family members of O’Callaghan and Tillman watched the dedication ceremony from the span along with hundreds of construction workers and their families.

People snapped photos and walked along the bridge Thursday before the ceremony, many taking long pauses to stare at the 75-year-old dam below — itself regarded as an engineering marvel.

It took five years and 21,000 workers to build the dam, and it cost $165 million.

Officials said the bridge contains about 16 million pounds of steel, 30,000 cubic yards of concrete and 2 million feet of cable. The $240 million price tag includes costs to build roads and smaller bridges leading to the picturesque span.

Cars previously were routed across Hoover Dam to cross the border between Arizona and Nevada, and checkpoints added after the 9/11 attacks often caused miles-long backups. Federal officials also heavily restricted the types of vehicles and cargo that could cross the dam, sending semis and other large vehicles an extra 23 miles through the resort town of Laughlin.

The new four-lane bridge allows travelers to bypass the dam much more quickly and with no checkpoints.

Brewer said the bridge will save both time and money by restoring commercial access.

“It also becomes a crucial part of a possible future interstate between Phoenix and Las Vegas,” she said.

Permanent absentee voter initiative for Idaho called off

BOISE (AP) — A signature-gathering effort aimed at eventually allowing Idaho voters the option of permanently requesting an absentee ballot so they could vote by mail each election has been called off.

Organizers with Idaho Vote By Mail have so far have gathered about 10,000 signatures and won't be able to reach 51,000 signatures by February 2011.

"I didn't want people working on it for another couple months knowing we weren't going to make it," said Larry Grant, a former Democratic congressional candidate who led the effort.

Grant hoped to get the citizen initiative on the November 2012 ballot. Idaho voters currently have to file a new request every election to vote by mail.

"We may revive it next cycle," Grant told The Spokesman-Review. "We'll see what happens."

The Idaho Legislature has repeatedly killed bills aimed at allowing more mail-in voting. "Two years ago we tried to get permanent absentee voting through the House State Affairs Committee," said Secretary of State Ben Ysursa. "We were not successful."

Ysursa, the state's chief election official, has supported more mail-in voting, as have the state's county clerks, who run elections. But they've been stymied by Republican majority lawmakers who fear straying too far from casting a ballot in person at a polling station opens the system to potential fraud.

"I continue to champion absentee voting, both in permanent absentee status or vote by mail," Ysursa said. "But we have to be pragmatic. That has run into hard ground in the House. But we have to continue to try."

Great Falls to lose F-15 fighter jets

By Matt Volz
Associated Press writer

HELENA, Mont. — The Montana Air National Guard will lose its F-15 fighter jets to another base, the Air Force confirmed Thursday.

The loss of the fighter jets had not been previously announced, though the future of the F-15 mission was questioned Wednesday after the Air Force announced Great Falls as its preferred location for four C-27J transport aircraft.

Moving the F-15s out of Great Falls to California is part of a larger reduction announced earlier this year, Air Force spokesman Gary Strasburg said Thursday.

"The plan is to move those aircraft to Fresno once an environmental impact statement is completed on the new location," he said.

That impact study has not yet begun and a date for the move has not been set, but it is expected to happen before delivery of the transport planes, Strasburg said.

"It's anticipated that the environmental impact statement would be completed at Fresno and the F-15s be gone before the C-27s arrive (in Great Falls)," he said.

The Air Force said Wednesday the Montana Air National Guard's base in Great Falls beat out Boise, Idaho, as the preferred location for the new C-27J transport mission.

The cargo planes' short take-off and landing capabilities give troops access to airstrips otherwise unreachable by fixed-wing aircraft, the Air Force said.

A final decision will be made in June, and if approved, the planes' expected delivery would be in 2014.

There are more than 900 men and women with the 120th Fighter Wing and its 18 F-15 fighter jets. It was not immediately clear how many jobs would be attached to the C-27J mission, and Strasburg said that number has yet to be determined.

Boise panel tells Simplot's 'JUMP' to take a leap

BOISE (AP) — A building project nicknamed "JUMP" aimed at honoring potato magnate J.R. Simplot has so far stumbled with leaders of Idaho's capital city.

The latest misstep for Jack's Urban Meeting Place, the $70 million proposal's formal name, was a 4-3 vote Wednesday by the Boise Design Review Committee rejecting the Simplot Family Foundation's latest plan.

The project had already been scaled back from a $100 million investment.

"Naturally, we're very disappointed in the committee's 4-3 vote," Simplot spokesman David Cuoio told the Idaho Business Review. "We had hoped for approval of the project so we could move forward with bringing 700 to 800 jobs and injecting tens of millions of dollars into this area."

The foundation wants to build working studios, event spaces, antique tractor sculptures, a plaza and a 650-seat outdoor amphitheater on a 7-acre vacant lot near Boise's downtown.

Hal Simmons, Boise Planning Division director, said Design Review Board members who voted against the proposal were concerned it didn't meet goals and policies contained in the downtown plan. Simmons said those concerns included not enough pedestrian activity, that the most visible aspect would be a garage with three stories above ground, and that it didn't adequately connect the Pioneer Pathway to Broad Street.

"While I accept Design Review's decision, I still very much want JUMP to succeed and to fulfill the promise it brings to downtown Boise," said Boise Mayor David Bieter in a statement. "I will do everything I can within the law to help the project proceed and will be talking to the Simplot family to assure them they still have many paths to approval."

If Jerome voters reject new jail this time, all bets are off

Once more with feeling: Jerome County needs a new jail. Not next year. Not five years from now. Not sometime in the nebulous — and hopefully more prosperous — future. As soon as possible.

That’s why we’re supporting the bond issue proposal on the Nov. 2 ballot for a $13 million jail.

Jerome County commissioners have tried to get a new jail built twice before, but through a lease-purchase plan rejected by the voters. We said editorially both times that a bond issue would be the better approach, and we’re gratified that the commissioners have chosen that route.

The preferred, 80-acre site located east of Jerome near the airport will cost the taxpayers $430,000 if the sale goes through. The county has paid $10,000 in earnest money, with stipulations attached to the sales agreement. If all the stipulations are met, including Federal Aviation Administration approval of building height and easement concerns, the earnest money would be applied toward the purchase price. If not, the money would be returned to the taxpayers.

Commissioners say they’d use whatever land isn’t needed for the jail for other purposes — perhaps relocating the county’s ambulance service — or sell the rest.

This isn’t a great time to be asking taxpayers for more money. There have only been four county jails built in Idaho in the past decade; statewide, nine of the last 10 bond issue proposals have failed.

A bond issue is always an especially tough sell in Jerome County because in addition to supporting its own government services and schools, it already sends some of the property taxpayers’ money out of the county — by supporting the College of Southern Idaho as part of its community college district. Jerome School District’s patrons have approved just two bond issues in 35 years.

On Aug. 3, the third attempt by Canyon County commissioners to get a new jail approved was defeated 43 percent to 57 percent. Kootenai County, where voters beat back a sales tax increase last November that would have added to the existing jail, will spend $5 million this year housing its inmates in other counties.

The Idaho Counties Risk Management Program, Jerome County’s insurer, could close the jail at the stroke of a pen. The 35-year-old stockade fails to meet the requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act and falls short of National Fire and Life Safety rules and the minimum standards of the Idaho Sheriffs Association.

If the jail is closed, the county will have no choice but to send all its prisoners — and it averages 65 inmates a day — to other county jails, where the going rate is about $50 a day per prisoner.

In the span of nine years through last year, the county spent more than $1.63 million to warehouse inmates elsewhere. And that was just the overflow jail population.

So if Jerome County’s taxpayers say no to the bond issue proposal, they’ll be signing off on an open-ended commitment to pay other counties to take care of their prisoners.

Because it’s far from certain there would be a fourth jail ballot proposal anytime soon. If the wake of the August bond issue failure, Canyon County commissioners have backed off trying to persuade voters to approve a new jail.

Meanwhile, Nampa police are releasing multiple offenders with just a citation because there’s no room in the Canyon County Jail. The lockup is so chronically overcrowded that it’s under judicial mandate not to add any new prisoners.

There’s a backlog of 6,000 unserved warrants and about 13,000 jail book-ins every year in Canyon County, which means that scofflaws — not just shoplifters and pot smokers, but real, hardened criminals — remain on the street.

That’s where Jerome County is headed if this bond issue fails.

A political moderate’s survival guide

I don’t know who first described politics as the “art of compromise,” but that maxim, to which I have always subscribed, seems woefully unfashionable today.

Sen. Susan M. Collins

It’s a tough time to be a moderate in the U.S. Senate. Sitting down with those on the opposite side of a debate, negotiating in good faith, attempting to reach a solution — such actions are now vilified by the hardliners on both sides of the aisle. Too few want to achieve real solutions; too many would rather draw sharp distinctions and score political points, even if that means neglecting the problems our country faces.

But in modern times, I have not seen the degree of bitter divisiveness and excessive partisanship now found in the Senate. I imagine that is one reason that, just weeks from the November midterms, the American people are so angry with incumbents of all political persuasions, and particularly those who are in charge.

The way out is far from clear, but I would suggest that a divided government and a more evenly split Senate are more conducive to bipartisanship than the super-majorities and one-party control of the White House and Congress that we see today.

It wasn’t always this way. There were times when those who worked to avert legislative implosions were more welcome. In 2005, a group of senators came together to negotiate an agreement for considering judicial nominees. This “Gang of 14,” of which I was part, sought to avoid what was known as the “nuclear option,” a change in the Senate rules that would have brought about a legislative meltdown.

Democrats had used the filibuster to prevent the confirmation of some of President George W. Bush’s appellate court nominees. With the rallying cry that nominees deserved an “up or down vote,” Republican Senate leaders threatened to change the rules to prevent filibusters from being used to block judicial confirmations. Democrats countered that the rights of the minority had always been protected in the Senate and warned that if the rules were changed, the Democrats would block action on everything.

While leaders on both sides hardened their positions, the 14 of us — seven from each party — joined to forge a solution. We established a new standard, stating that we would support filibusters of judicial nominees only in “extraordinary circumstances.” The Democratic senators in our coalition supported cloture for five of the seven filibustered nominees, resulting in their confirmation. In turn, we seven Republicans agreed to oppose the “nuclear option,” thus thwarting the plans of the GOP leaders.

Students of American culture might ask whether incivility is a strictly

Washington phenomenon or a reflection of changes in our society at large. That question reminds me of the response that then-Sen. Lowell Weicker gave to an unhappy constituent who his colleagues as “a bunch of liars, thieves and womanizers.” Weicker calmly replied: “Well, it is, after all, a representative form of government.”

I will not try to play sociologist and weigh in on this issue except to say that there are indications that as a people we are becoming less civil — just witness the attack journalism on cable television, the growing incidence of bullying in schools, the use of the Internet to smear those one does not like and the popular appeal of shows in which people are fired or voted off islands.

I am more confident in asserting that even if Washington leads the nation in incivility, it is not likely to change until those outside Washington demand it. What gets rewarded gets done, and for those of us in Congress, reelection is the ultimate reward. Voting out of office — or not electing in the first place — those who put partisanship over progress and conflict over compromise would create a very different legislative climate, one in which the objective is to solve the problem, not to win the debate.

It may not be easy to feel passionate about civility and compromise, but it is easy to feel passionate about a vibrant, just and prosperous America. To achieve that, however, we need to get passionate about electing legislators who not only work hard but work together.

Not long ago, I happened upon George Washington’s “Rules of Civility and Decent Behavior,” a transcription of various guides to etiquette, written when Washington was but a teenager.

There are 110 points. First of all, be respectful. Second, if you itch, be careful where you scratch. Third, don’t scare your friends. Fourth, in the presence of others, avoid humming or drumming your fingers.

It is not until No. 110 that young George got to the heart of the matter: “Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.”

That little spark lights our way much more brightly than bomb-throwing, scorched-earth, incendiary political rhetoric ever will.

Sen. Susan Collins, a Republican, has represented Maine in the U.S. Senate since 1997.

Support Stennett for senator in District 25

Please join me in supporting Michelle Stennett for State Senate District 25.

This race is much more than a contest between political party affiliations. It is all about background, relevant experience and personal character. Our state senator must have the background to meet the challenges facing our community — to business, agriculture and tourism. Michelle has resided in our district for 25 years and has worked in small business and in agriculture. She understands these issues because she has personally lived them as a longtime member of our community.

Michelle has an agreeable and insightful personal style. She already proved she can promote our community’s interests in Boise through thoughtful collaborative work in this session, where she stepped in for Clint. She is a “people person,” possessing the personality and skills required to get the state’s attention focused on helping our district.

A recent newcomer, opponent Donoval has the opposite style. He is highly combative and, even in the short time he has lived here, typically threatens to take legal action against people who don’t share his views. His platform seems oblivious to how the division of state and local governments operate. His materials indicate that he would be working to have our local jurisdictional authority dictated from Boise, something I suspect most residents here would vehemently oppose. Donoval’s combative style will not work in Boise and could do great damage to our community.

Join me: Vote to elect Michelle Stennett — the thoughtful, respectful and local candidate.

Calling all people who knew Clarence Bisbee

Clarence Bisbee and his wife, Jessie; perhaps you or your parents only just met them or, hopefully, knew them well. The possibility of recording oral history of their lives here in Twin Falls between 1906 and 1954, is fading quickly. Their artwork, portraits of your grandparents and photographs of early Twin Falls Tract development will forever create interest and educate.

Hello, my name is Ron Yates, I wish to interview area residents that have met photographer Clarence Bisbee or his wife, Jessie. These interviews will hopefully shed more light upon Twin Falls’ most important man behind the camera. Bisbee’s promotional photographs are why so many of our grandparents moved to the Twin Falls irrigation tract.

The Twin Falls Historical Society owns many items that will help my research. To illustrate a complete image of the Bisbees, it is equally important to know their mannerisms, tone of voice, dress, church they attended or social groups they were members of.

Please understand your memories, newspaper clippings or photos of the Bisbee’s are “a key for the lock.”

Yes, there will be a book about our photographer friends, please assist me with the details within your memories.

You’ll always discover someone you’ve met, and often yourself, in history; it’s a small world.

As an example, last June, while researching for the 100th anniversary celebration and re-enactment of Twin Falls first Flag Day, June 17, 1910, I discovered that the mother of my fellow Twin Falls City Historic Preservation Commission member, Norman Tilley, attended the event at age 16. She and her brother met Ezra Meeker (Oregon Trail pioneer), and rode in his covered wagon. She wrote about the experience in a national magazine of the day.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

An X-ray of the dysfunction eating away at our future

I still find it amazing that with all the climate, security, health and financial interests America has in reducing its dependence on oil, our Congress could not work out an energy bill over the past two years — especially when China, Japan and the European Union are all hurtling ahead on clean-tech. The fact that we failed to pass an energy bill — cap-and-trade, a carbon tax, efficiency standards, I don't care which — is actually a reflection of a broader U.S. power failure. It is the failure of our political system to unite, even in a crisis, to produce the policy responses America needs to thrive in the 21st century. As the Wall Street Journal columnist Gerald Seib once noted: "America and its political leaders, after two decades of failing to come together to solve big problems, seem to have lost faith in their ability to do so. A political system that expects failure doesn't try very hard to produce anything else." It is a shame because America, while often paralyzed from the top down, is alive from the bottom up. The more I travel around our country, the more I meet people who didn't get the word — that we're supposed to be depressed and on our backs — and they're out experimenting with education, innovating with technology and using the Web for start-ups. But our political system is not empowering, enhancing and inspiring their efforts at the speed and scale that we need. If you want to see in stark relief all the forces undermining our system's ability to make smart, strategic, long-term decisions, read

Ryan Lizza's article in the Oct. 11 issue of The New Yorker, explaining just how the bipartisan effort by Senators John Kerry, D-Mass.; Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., and Joseph Lieberman, I-Conn., to produce an energy-climate bill and enhance clean-tech innovation was killed this year. Entitled "As the World Burns," Lizza's piece is an X-ray of the dysfunctions eating away at our future: politicians who only know how to read polls, never change them; media outlets serving political parties; special interests buying senators; mindless partisanship; an epidemic of low expectations for our government. And us — we elected them all, and we tolerate them. Here are a few graphs from Lizza's piece: Mindless tribal partisanship: Lizza describing what happened to Sen. Graham when it became clear in his home state of South Carolina that he was supporting a clean energy bill with Democrats: "Graham was holding a town-hall meeting in the gym of a high school in Greenville, S.C. His constituents were not happy. One man accused him of 'making a pact with the Devil.' Another shouted, 'No principled compromise!' One audience member asked, 'Why do you think it's necessary to get in bed with people like John Kerry?'" Graham, dressed in a blue blazer and khakis, paced the floor, explaining that there were only 40 Republicans in the Senate, which meant that he had to work with the 60 Democrats. A man in the bleachers shouted, "You're a traitor, Mr. Graham! You've betrayed this nation and you've betrayed this state!" A TV network acting as the political enforcer of the Republican Party: Lizza: "Back in Washington, Graham warned Lieberman and Kerry that they needed to get as far as they could in negotiating the bill 'before Fox News got wind of the fact that this was a serious process,' one of the people involved in the negotiations said. 'He would say: The second they focus on us, it's gonna be all cap-and-tax all the time, and it's gonna become just a disaster for me on the airwaves. We have to move this along as quickly as possible.' Special interests buying policy: Lizza: "Then Newt Gingrich's group, American Solutions, whose largest donors include coal and electric-utility interests, began targeting Graham with a flurry of online articles about the 'Kerry-Graham-Lieberman gas tax bill.' Politicians who put their interests before the country's: Lizza: "Then, suddenly, there was a new problem: Harry Reid, the Senate majority leader, said that he wanted to pass immigration reform before the climate-change bill. It was a cynical ploy. Everyone in the Senate knew that there was no immigration bill. Reid was in a tough re-election, and immigration activists, influential in his home state of Nevada, were pressuring him." A political system that cannot manage multiple policy shifts at once — even though it needs to: Lizza: Obama aide Jay Heimbach attended meetings with the three sponsoring senators, "but almost never expressed a policy preference or revealed White House thinking. 'It's a drum circle,' one Senate aide lamented. 'They come by: How are you feeling? Where do you think the votes are? What do you think we should do? It's never: Here's the plan, here's what we're doing.' " I just have one thing to add: We need to do better. ... *Thomas Friedman is a columnist for The New York Times. Recession has pushed young couples closer together

The recession has taken a toll on the institution of marriage, we keep hearing. Last month, for instance, when it was reported that the proportion of Americans aged 25 to 34 who are married fell below the proportion who have never married, it was quickly attributed to the economic downturn. Young adults, according to this narrative, have less money to spend on a wedding and are less eager to enter into a lifetime commitment during times of uncertainty.

Again last week, when a report from the Pew Research Center noted that, for the first time, college-educated 30-year-olds were more likely to have been married than were people the same age without a college degree, the news was interpreted as another side effect of the recent recession. After all, the downturn has been especially hard on young men with no college degree.

But if you look at marriage in the United States over the past century, this interpretation doesn't stand up. Marriage and divorce rates have remained remarkably immune to the ups and downs of the business cycle. Unfortunately, the marriage statistics are easy to misread.

It's misleading to count the wedding rings among people in their 20s and early 30s, because the median age at first marriage in the United States has risen to 28 for men (from 23 in 1970) and 26 for women (from 21 in 1970). The fact that these folks aren't married now doesn't mean they won't marry — many of them just aren't there yet.

Look instead at 40-year-olds, and you see that 81 percent have married at least once. Yes, this number used to be higher — it peaked at 93 percent in 1980 — but, clearly, marriage remains a part of most people's lives. These statistics are not a perfect barometer either, however, because they reflect weddings that were celebrated years earlier.

Justin Wolfers

To most accurately track marriage rates, you need to focus on the number of wedding certificates issued. In 2009, the latest year for which we have data, there were about 2.1 million marriages in the United States. That does represent a slight decline since the recession began. But it's the same rate of decline that existed during the preceding economic boom, the previous bust and both the boom and the bust before that.

Indeed, the recent modest decline in marriage continues a 30-year trend. And even as the number of marriages falls, divorce is also becoming less prevalent. So a greater proportion of today's marriages will likely persist 30 years into the future. This is not to say that marriage looks the same today as it always did — over the past several decades, there has been a tremendous shift in married life.

It used to be that a typical marriage involved specialized roles for the husband and wife. Usually he was in the marketplace, and she was in the home, and this arrangement led to maximum productivity.

But today, when families have easy access to prepared foods, inexpensive off-the-rack clothing and labor-saving technology from the washing machine to the robot vacuum cleaner, there's much less benefit from either spouse specializing in homemaking. Women, now better educated and with greater control over their fertility, are in the marketplace, too, and married couples have more money, more leisure time and longer lives to spend together. Modern marriages are based not on the economic benefits of playing specialized roles but on shared passions.

This new model of "hedonic marriage" has had an effect on who marries, and when — as research I have conducted with my better half, the economist Betsey Stevenson, has documented. In the old days, opposites attracted; an aspiring executive groom would pair up with a less-educated bride. And they would wed before the stork visited and before the couple made the costly investment of putting the husband through business school.

But today, that same young executive would more likely be half of a power couple, married to a college-educated woman who shares his taste in books, hobbies, travel and so on. Indeed, marriage rates for college-educated women rose sharply through the 1950s and '60s, and have remained remarkably stable since. These women tend to marry after they have finished college and started their careers.

The decline in marriage, it turns out, is concentrated entirely among women with less education — those who likely have the least to gain from modern hedonic marriage.

This is not to say that the economic downturn has had no effect at all on domestic life. Census data show that the number of unwed couples living together rose sharply last year. With rents high and jobs hard to come by, it's no surprise that people are doubling up.

Still, given that the marriage rate remains on trend, the rise in cohabitation isn't coming at the expense of marriage. Instead, many young couples who might otherwise merely be dating are moving in together. Some of them, no doubt, will eventually marry. Truly, the recession has not torn young couples apart; it has pushed them closer together.

Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

Idaho State Journal, Pocatello

Idaho Sen. Mike Crapo has the dubious distinction of having received four notices in the last year from the Federal Election Commission for receiving contributions from individuals that exceed legal limits.

Crapo and fellow Republican Marco Rubio, of Florida, have both received four notices, accounting for one-third of all such notices issued since major fundraising began last year.

The FEC, which monitors contributions, cited instances in which contributions in excess of $2,400 have been received. Under federal law, individuals can only donate $2,400 in the primary and a similar amount in the general election.

The FEC didn't elaborate how much the flagged donations were and did not choose to levy any fines for the violations.

Crapo's campaign blamed the problem on another federal law which mandates that all contributions be deposited within 10 days of receipt.

The campaign has resolved all of the issues, which can be accomplished by refunding the donation in part, putting the money toward the next election cycle or reattributing the donation to a spouse or other family member.

"We remedy excessive contributions quickly and completely and we follow the law carefully when this occurs," said Crapo spokesman Jake Ball.

Granted, nearly half of Crapo's war chest of $2.6 million comes from individual contributions, meaning the task of keeping the books is a busy job. Nevertheless, adequate safeguards ought to easily spot problems involving excessive donations.

While such oversights are likely just that, they reflect poorly on the organizational skills of Crapo's office.

... more whistleblowers

Lewiston Tribune

Since 2008, eight former and current auditors within the Idaho State Tax Commission have publicly accused their bosses, the political appointees on the tax commission, of cutting sweetheart deals with big corporations. The confidential deals have the corporations paying pennies on the dollar, the auditors say.

And now it's nine. On Oct. 3, Douglas Thornton of Lewiston, who spent 27 years with the commission before retiring, had this to say in a letter to the Lewiston Tribune:

"A conservative estimate would be that these deals cost the state $40 million per year," he wrote. "Why are the taxpayers and voters of this state not outraged that politicians have covered this up? Why have your elected officials not weighed in on this issue? Is it just apathy?"

In addition to Thornton, there are:

- Stan Howland, the first auditor to go public. He retired in 2008 after bringing his allegations to the Legislature.
- Paul Chugg, an auditor at the commission.

- Joe Schwartz, who managed the tax commission's Coeur d'Alene office.

- Gary Mattox, an auditor who worked on sales tax cases.

- Robert Chatterton, an auditor who retired in 2006.

- Barbara Nichols, who currently manages a staff of 12 responsible for the audits of multistate corporations.

- Steve Fields, an income tax auditor who retired last year.

- Terry Harvey, who continues to work as an auditor.

All have signed affidavits in support of Rep. Shirley Ringo's lawsuit to stop the Tax Commission's practice and/or to launch a statewide probe of the agency.

... The universe of people working in the field of auditing multistate/multinational firms doing business in Idaho is quite small. Possibly no more than 20 people have specialized in this field in the last 25 years.

... And remember, none of the remaining staffers has stood up and defended the tax commissioners ...

But it's more than numbers. These whistleblowers represent the core of the auditing program ...

... these auditors are the constant. It's the tax commission members that have changed over the course of their careers. And only under the latest makeup of that commission have these veterans stepped forward. For all, it means putting their professional reputations under a microscope. And for the three still working at the tax commission ... the risk is even greater.

People who have spent decades in the anonymous environment of tax disputes don't spontaneously seek the spotlight. Somewhere along the line, their mutual sense of right and wrong has been violated.

This protest is an act of conscience. Do not take it lightly.

One reason for housing glut: Fewer new households

By Alan J. Heavens
The Philadelphia Inquirer

PHILADELPHIA — U.S. household formations are at their lowest since 1947, data from the Census Bureau show. And that's helping to keep the supply of unsold homes at near-record levels nationwide, even though relatively few houses are being added to the inventory.

Between March 2009 and March 2010, the number of households rose just 357,000, according to the census data. In the previous 12 months, the number increased only 398,000, the third-smallest increase on record since World War II.

Between 2002 and 2007, before the economy started on its downward trajectory, household formations averaged 1.3 million a year, U.S. census data show.

“That’s the consequence of the consumer fear of what’s happening with the economy and with the job market,” said Lucien Salvant, a spokesman for the National Association of Realtors.

“When people are afraid of losing their jobs or not being able to get into the job market, they are not thinking about buying a home,” Salvant said. “Many opt to stay at home with parents, or to share rentals with friends.”

The nation’s gross vacancy rate — the proportion of housing units that are vacant — stood at 14.5 percent at the end of the second quarter of 2010, census data show.

In a well-functioning economy, household formations “would be closer to 1.25 million,” said Mark Zandi, chief economist of Moody’s Analytics in West Chester, Pa.

During normal times, builders need to add about 1.7 million houses a year to meet underlying demand stemming from, among other things, the need for replacement homes and the desire for second homes, as well as conversions from nonresidential to residential uses and increases in the number of households.

For example, about 250,000 new homes are needed per year to replace houses that are destroyed by fires and natural disasters or that wear out from neglect or old age. Demand for second homes combined with other miscellaneous factors accounts for 50,000 to 100,000 new houses a year.

Household growth typically requires 1.3 million to 1.4 million units.

“The sharp drop in household formation largely explains why the housing glut remains stubbornly high, despite the plunge in housing starts in recent years,” said housing economist Patrick Newport, of IHS Global Insight in Lexington, Mass.

Two major sources of household formation — immigration and marriage — remain well below the averages of recent years.

The National Center for Health Statistics reports that the number of marriages per thousand population fell from 8.2 in 2000 to 6.8 in 2009. Divorces per thousand population fell from 4.0 in 2000 to 3.4 in 2009.

There are no hard data on “doubling up” — young people sharing rentals or moving in with their parents in a tight job market — though anecdotal evidence indicates the latter has become more commonplace in recent years.

During the late 1990s and in the first years of this decade, the housing industry banked on immigration for a good part of its growth.

The Twin Falls Walmart stays busy on a warm Thursday evening. Walmart is doubling the amount of select food crops it buys within Idaho.

Walmart aims to stock more local produce

By Michelle Chapman
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Walmart Stores Inc. plans to double its sales of locally sourced produce in the U.S. by the end of 2015.

The move by the world’s biggest retailer is part of a new sustainable agriculture strategy that looks to steer more business to small and medium-sized farmers globally while also reducing farming’s environmental impact.

If Walmart meets its goals in the U.S., local produce will still make up only 9 percent of the produce it sells. But because of the the retailer’s sheer scale, it has the potential for a sizable impact. More than half of Walmart’s $405 billion is annual revenue is from food.

“Our efforts will help increase farmer incomes, lead to more efficient use of pesticides, fertilizer and water and provide fresher produce for our customers.”

— Wal-Mart President and CEO Mike Duke said in a statement

In other countries the goals are bolder. Walmart said it would source 30 percent of its produce in Canadian stores locally by the end of 2013, and set a goal of 100 percent when local sources are available.

Walmart plans to buy more of select U.S. crops. It also plans to train 1 million farmers and farm workers in emerging markets in crop selection, sustainable farming practices and other subjects and selling $1 billion in food sourced from 1 million small and medium-sized farmers.

Walmart said Thursday that it will start asking suppliers about water, energy, fertilizer and pesticide used per unit of food produced. The retailer also wants to lower food waste at its stores, with plans for a 15 percent reduction at emerging-market stores and clubs and a 10 percent reduction at stores and clubs in other markets by 2015’s end.

“Our efforts will help increase farmer incomes, lead to more efficient use of pesticides, fertilizer and water and provide fresher produce for our customers,” President and CEO Mike Duke said in a statement.

The retailer’s other goals include expanding the practice started at Walmart Brazil of sourcing only beef that doesn’t contribute to the Amazon rainforest’s deforestation. It also wants to require sustainably sourced palm oil for all of its store brand products worldwide by the end of 2015.

Walmart said it talked to various suppliers, universities and non-government organizations to come up with its goals.

Walmart Stores, based in Bentonville, Ark., runs more than 8,400 locations in 15 countries.

Trade deficit widens sharply to $46.3 billion

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The U.S. trade deficit widened sharply in August, reflecting a surge in imports of consumer products as businesses restocked their shelves in hopes of a pickup in consumer demand.

The politically sensitive deficit with China climbed to an all-time high, a development that was certain to increase pressure on the Obama administration to take a tougher line on trade issues including China’s tightly controlled currency.

The Commerce Department said Thursday the deficit in August increased 8.8 percent to $46.3 billion. Exports edged up a slight 0.2 percent, but this increase was swamped by a 2.1 percent jump in imports.

So far this year, the trade deficit is running at an annual rate of $502.5 billion, up 34 percent from the $374.9 billion deficit for all of 2009, which had been the smallest imbalance since 2003.

Last year’s deficit was just half the total of the previous year and reflected the country’s deep recession, which cut sharply into demand for imports. Economists had expected the deficit to rise this year but had forecast that a rebounding global economy would also boost demand for exports.

In the April-to-June quarter, the surge in imports swamped the rise in exports. Trade was the biggest drag on the economy during the spring, subtracting 3.5 percentage points from growth. As a result, the overall economy, as measured by the gross domestic product, grew at just 1.7 percent in the second quarter, down from growth of 3.7 percent in the first three months of the year.

Economists believe trade will be less of a drag on GDP in the July-September quarter, but Jennifer Lee, an analyst with BMO Capital Markets, said that the bigger-than-expected widening of the August deficit would ensure that GDP growth for the third quarter will remain at an anemic pace below 2 percent.

Mortgage rates hit decades-low of 4.19 percent

By Alan Zibel
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Rates on 30-year mortgages fell to 4.19 percent, the lowest level in decades. They were pushed down by lower Treasury bond yields.

Investors are buying up Treasury bonds in anticipation of a move by the Federal Reserve designed to lower mortgage rates and yields on corporate debt.

As a result, the average rate for 30-year fixed loans dropped to the lowest level on records dating back to 1971, mortgage buyer Freddie Mac said Thursday. It’s down from 4.27 percent the previous week.

The average rate on 15-year fixed loans fell to 3.62 percent, the lowest on records dating back to 1991.

Rates have mostly fallen since spring as investors shifted money into the safety of Treasury bonds. That demand lowers their yields, which mortgage rates tend to track. The 30-year rate was 5.08 percent at the beginning of April.

The 15-year rate was 4.39 percent.

Low rates haven’t helped the struggling housing market, which recorded its worst summer in more than a decade.

To calculate average mortgage rates, Freddie Mac collects rates from lenders around the country on Monday through Wednesday of each week. Rates often fluctuate significantly, even within a given day.

Rates on five-year adjustable-rate mortgages averaged 3.47 percent, the same as the previous week. Rates on one-year adjustable-rate mortgages rose to an average of 3.43 percent from 3.4 percent.

The rates do not include add-on fees known as points. One point is equal to 1 percent of the total loan amount. The nationwide fee for loans in Freddie Mac’s survey averaged 0.8 a point for 30-year and 1-year mortgages. It averaged 0.7 of a point for 15-year and 0.6 of a point for 5-year mortgages.

Military halts enforcement of gay ban after legal challenge

By Nancy A. Youssef
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon on Thursday halted enforcement of its “don’t ask, don’t tell” policy pending an appeal of a federal court order prohibiting the government from expelling gays and lesbian soldiers who disclose their sexual orientation.

The Obama administration also on Thursday asked U.S. District Judge Virginia Phillips to stay her order, issued Tuesday. It’s unclear, however, whether Phillips will do so.

The government last month asked her not to issue an injunction against “don’t ask, don’t tell” after she found that the 17-year-old policy, which bars gays and lesbians from disclosing their sexual orientation, violated service members’ First Amendment rights. Phillips, however, issued the injunction on Tuesday.

If Phillips rejects the stay request, the government still could appeal to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals and ultimately to the U.S. Supreme Court, but there is no certainty on how either court would rule.

The government asked Phillips to rule on the stay by 3 p.m. Monday.

Thursday’s government action raised the stakes in the “don’t ask, don’t tell” debate, which has languished since President Barack Obama called last year for Congress to repeal the 1993 law that codified the policy and has become a thorny political issue just days before the November elections. While the House has passed repeal legislation, the Senate refused in September to consider a defense budget bill that included the repeal.

In seeking the stay, the Obama administration said a precipitous change in the government’s long-time ban on gays in the military could disrupt combat operations and endanger gays and lesbians whose sexual orientation becomes known. It noted that the Pentagon is studying the effects of allowing gays and lesbians to serve openly and that Congress is considering repealing the law that established “don’t ask, don’t tell.”

“A court-ordered injunction, operating precipitously and directly on all military and civilian Defense Department personnel throughout the world, would undermine the credibility and validity of the entire process that the political branches have undertaken for an orderly repeal of DADT, and may make the transition to repeal not only far more difficult, but also potentially disruptive to military readiness,” the Justice Department wrote.

Obama repeated his call for Congress repeal the law Thursday, but defended his administration’s decision to appeal Phillips’ ruling.

“Congress explicitly passed a law that took away the power of the executive branch to end this policy unilaterally, so this is not a situation in which with a stroke of a pen I can simply end the policy,” Obama said at a question-and-answer session with young people on MTV. “It has to be done in a way that is orderly, because we are involved in a war right now.”

“This policy will end, and it will end on my watch,” he said. “But I do have an obligation to make sure that I’m following some of the rules. I can’t simply ignore laws that are out there.”

Judge: Suit over health overhaul can go to trial

By Melissa Nelson
Associated Press writer

PENSACOLA, Fla. — Crucial pieces of a lawsuit challenging the Obama administration’s health care overhaul can go to trial, with a judge ruling Thursday he wants to hear more arguments over whether it’s constitutional to force citizens to buy health insurance.

In a written ruling, U.S. District Judge Roger Vinson said it also needs to be decided whether it’s constitutional to penalize people who do not buy insurance with taxes and to require states to expand their Medicaid programs. Another federal judge in Michigan threw out a similar lawsuit last week.

Vinson set a hearing for Dec. 16. The lawsuits will likely wind up before the U.S. Supreme Court.

In his 65-page ruling, Vinson largely agreed with the 20 states, including Idaho, and the National Federation of Independent Business, saying Congress was intentionally unclear when it created penalties in the legislation. The states have argued that Congress is overstepping its constitutional authority by penalizing people for not doing something — not buying health insurance.

The penalties for those who do not buy insurance are never referred to as taxes in the 2,700-page act, Vinson wrote. Attorneys for the Obama administration argued at a September hearing that the penalties should be considered a tax levied by Congress — as allowed by its constitutional power to regulate interstate commerce.

“One could reasonably infer that Congress proceeded as it did specifically because it did not want the penalty to be ‘scrutinized’ as a $4 billion annual tax increase,” Vinson wrote.

“It seems likely that the members of congress merely called it a penalty and did not describe it as revenue-generating to try and insulate themselves from the potential electoral ramifications of their votes.”

The administration’s attorneys had told Vinson last month that without the regulatory power to ensure young and healthy people buy health insurance, the health care plan will not survive.

Vinson also took issue with the administration’s argument that the states and individual taxpayers must wait until 2014, when some of the changes take effect, to file any lawsuits. Vinson said businesses and states are feeling the ramifications of the law now.

The health care act leaves states with the difficult choice of expanding their Medicaid programs and taking on major expenses or entirely withdrawing from the insurance program for the poor, Vinson wrote. In states like Florida — where 26 percent of the state budget is devoted to Medicaid, according to the lawsuit — the law amounts to coercion, Vinson wrote.

Florida Attorney General Bill McCollum praised the ruling.

“It is the first step to having the individual mandate declared unconstitutional and upholding state sovereignty in our federal system,” McCollum said in a statement.

He filed the lawsuit just minutes after President Obama signed the 10-year, $938 billion health care bill into law in March.

Stephanie Cutter, a political operative tapped by Obama to guide efforts to explain the law’s benefits, wrote in a White House blog late Thursday that the government expected to prevail.

Cutter highlighted a favorable ruling by a Michigan federal judge and described Vinson’s ruling as procedural.

“Having failed in the legislative arena, opponents of reform are now turning to the courts in an attempt to overturn the work of the democratically elected branches of government. This is nothing new. We saw this with the Social Security Act, the Civil Rights Act, and the Voting Right Act — constitutional challenges were brought to all three of these monumental pieces of legislation, and all those challenges failed,” Cutter wrote.

CAMPAIGNING BLITZ

Governor races could affect 2012 elections

By Charles Babington
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Republicans are poised to topple at least a dozen Democratic governors next month, and that could cause President Obama and his party major headaches far beyond this year’s elections.

A cadre of new GOP governors, including some in battleground states that Obama won two years ago, could complicate his efforts to deliver benefits to voters and campaign effectively in 2012. They could also help create Republican-friendly House seats in next year’s once-a-decade redistricting process.

In the final weeks of this year’s contest, Obama is campaigning hard for Democrats coast to coast, well aware of the worrisome signs for the future. So far, his results seem mixed, and some candidates seem wary of him.

Democrats are at risk of surrendering governorships in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Oregon, New Mexico and Maine, among others. Obama carried all those states under Democratic governors in 2008. And all will be competitive in a 2012 re-election contest except, presumably, his home state of Illinois.

Republican governors already have replaced Democrats in New Jersey and Virginia, states that Obama also carried two years ago.

Elsewhere, Democrats are struggling to win a once-promising gubernatorial race in Florida, another swing state that has proven crucial in presidential races. Democrats might replace GOP governors in California, Hawaii and a few others states this fall. But Minnesota is the only state in that category that seems likely to be seriously contested in the 2012 presidential race.

As Obama tries to help Democratic congressional and gubernatorial candidates, he often visits states that will be vital to his re-election hopes. This year he has traveled four times each to Florida, Michigan and Wisconsin, five times to Pennsylvania, and six times to Ohio, where he plans to campaign again this weekend in Cleveland and Columbus.

The president’s schedule “is driven entirely by how to best help Democrats in 2010,” said White House communications director Dan Pfeiffer. He said it’s not surprising that competitive states this year will also be competitive in 2012.

Next month’s governors’ races also have big implications for U.S. House elections from 2012 through 2020. The House’s 435 seats are reapportioned every decade, after each census. States will redraw their districts next year in a process that often is intensely political, with borders crafted to help or hurt a party, or even a particular politician.

Most governors have extensive power to influence the process, including the right to veto plans they dislike. That means Obama could face a more Republican-leaning House in 2013 if he wins re-election.

The redistricting process will be especially brutal in states whose sluggish population growth will cost them House seats. Newly drawn maps can determine which party’s incumbent is tossed out. These states include Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Iowa and Michigan, where Democrats risk handing the governors’ seats to Republicans next month. New Jersey also will lose a House seat.

In all, states that Obama carried in 2008 are projected to lose a net of seven House seats. That means those states will award seven fewer Electoral College votes than they did two years ago.

Perversely, perhaps, there could be some good news for Obama in the Republican landslide that many foresee next month. If Republicans take over the House, voters may hold them partly responsible for government impasses and shortfalls. Obama might be able to use a Republican-run House as a political foil, just as Bill Clinton did in his 1996 re-election, two years after his party suffered devastating congressional losses.

T.F. Co. renames fairgrounds building to honor Smith

Marie Webb, kitchen and pantry superintendent, along with John Pitz, general fair manager, announced on Sept. 6 that the Home Arts/Kitchen and Pantry at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds in Filer was renamed the Leah Smith Home Arts/Kitchen and Pantry building.

Webb said that Smith's commitment of more than 40 years of service as a clerk for the department made her an ideal candidate for the honor. The dedication was a surprise for Smith, who was thrilled to be honored, according to a press release.

Pitz assured Smith that she would always have a job waiting for her at the fair. Pitz organized the dedication ceremony, during which the sign with the building's new name was displayed.

If you are interested in naming rights to a building at the Twin Falls County Fairgrounds, contact the fair office, 326-4396 or a member of the Fair Foundation.

China Mountain meeting nears in T.F.

A public informational meeting on the proposed China Mountain Wind Farm will be held from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. Wednesday at the College of Southern Idaho's Herrett Center for Arts and Science in Twin Falls.

The meeting will cover an update on the China Mountain Wind Project, addressing its time line and permitting, potential economic benefits, contractor information, Jarbidge Resource Management Plan, the environmental impact study and how to get involved.

A buffet lunch will be provided. To RSVP: Laurie Lickley, 420-7975, laurie.lickley@res-americas.com or chinamountainwind.com.

Daughters of Utah Pioneers jubilee nears

The Minidoka Company, Daughters of Utah Pioneers, will hold their annual jubilee at 10 a.m. Oct. 22, at the Rupert Stake Center, 324 E. 18th St.

All daughters of the Minidoka Company Camps and guests are invited. President Lova Taylor will preside over the meeting and announce the program. A luncheon will be served following the program.

Camps of the Minidoka Company include: Syringa, with Melba Nielsen serving as captain; Sage Brush Beauties, Linda Anderson, captain; Snake River, Marjorie Albertson, captain; Indian Paint Brush, LuJuana Winder, captain; and Star Bright, Edna Lou Eames, captain.

The Daughters of Utah Pioneers Camps meet monthly from September through May. They share histories of their ancestors, museum items and stories of their pioneer heritage and a lesson about various aspects of their pioneer ancestors' lives.

Any woman over the age of 18 who has ancestors who came to the Utah Territory before the completion of the railroad, May 10, 1869, are eligible to join DUP.

Information: Lova Taylor, 436-4025.

5th District Drug Court graduation approaches

The 5th Judicial District Drug Court team is proud to recognize the accomplishments of participants who have demonstrated a commitment to sobriety and recovery, and who have completed the Drug Court program.

Graduating participants have taken part in a rigorous, year-long program that includes residential or out-patient substance-abuse treatment, random drug testing and mandatory court appearances, as well as attendance at support meetings.

The public is invited to celebrate the participants' accomplishments during a graduation ceremony at 6:30 p.m. Oct. 27 at the College of Southern Idaho.

Information: 736-4122 or 735-4361.

Ruiz graduates with top honors at ISU

Jamie (Kern) Ruiz recently completed the physician assistant program at Idaho State University, graduating at the top of her class and earning a master's degree.

She was a 2004 graduate of Twin Falls High School, and graduated from Boise State University with a bachelor's degree in health science studies in 2008.

She is the daughter of Jim and Nikki Kern, of Twin Falls.

She is married to Jesse Ruiz, and they reside in Meridian, where she has started her professional career with the Boise Family Medicine Center.

Dollar-store glasses fill the bill for man with glaucoma

DEAR DR. GOTT: I am a 78-year-old white male, 6 feet 2 inches and weigh 195 pounds. I use glasses that cost $1 to read sometimes.

I have been seen by two doctors. Both say I have glaucoma. I would like to know what the devil this is because both doctors said to use Xalatan at bedtime for the rest of my life.

DEAR READER:

ASK

DR. GOTT

Dr. Peter Gott

Glaucoma is a group of diseases that damage the optic nerve in the eye(s) that results in diminished vision, leading to blindness.

The light-sensitive optic nerve connects the retina to the brain, transmitting visual information.

There are different forms of the disorder, but the most common is known as open-angle glaucoma. The front of the eye has a space known as the anterior chamber, through which a clear fluid flows, nourishing surrounding tissues. The fluid leaves the anterior chamber and flows through a drain area and leaves the eye. There are times, however, when it passes too slowly through this drain, resulting in a buildup of fluid. The buildup of pressure that results can damage the optic nerve, resulting in open-angle glaucoma and may lead to a loss of vision. It should be noted that an increase in eye pressure is not an indication a person has glaucoma. Rather, it indicates a person is at risk for glaucoma. Then there is the diagnosis of glaucoma without an increase in pressure. This is slightly less common but is known as low or normal-tension glaucoma. Some people are able to withstand higher eye pressure than others. It all depends on how much pressure your optic nerve can handle.

The key is early detection. Eye exams should be performed by an ophthalmologist or optometrist every three to four years for Caucasians and two to four years for African-Americans aged 20 to 39,

FDA warns 8 companies marketing miracle cures

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration warned eight companies on Thursday to stop marketing miracle cures that claim to treat everything from autism to Parkinson's disease by flushing toxic metals from the body.

Regulators said the products, sold over the Internet, can cause dehydration, kidney failure and death. Known as chelation therapies, the products have been used for decades, although medical societies and government experts say there is no evidence they cure diseases.

The only FDA-approved chelation therapies are used to treat lead and mercury poisoning.

"These products are dangerously misleading because they are targeted to patients with serious conditions and limited treatment options," said FDA's Deborah Autor, director of compliance. "The FDA must take a firm stand against companies who prey on the vulnerability of patients seeking hope and relief."

The FDA said it has seen an uptick in the number of chelation products sold over the Internet. The companies cited by the agency include World Health Products of Draper, Utah, Cardio Renew of Apple Valley, Minn., and Hormonal Health of San Bernardino, Calif.

The warning letters call on each company to immediately stop marketing and selling their products or face legal action.

Their products come in a variety of forms, including sprays, capsules and drops.

FDA officials said at least one death — involving a child with autism — has been reported with the products, although side effects of such unproven remedies often are not reported.

Aguilera files for divorce from music exec husband

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Christina Aguilera filed for divorce from her husband of five years on Thursday, two days after announcing the couple had separated.

Court documents show the couple has a prenuptial agreement, although Aguilera is seeking a judge's ruling awarding her rights to all her earnings.

Aguilera, 29, is seeking joint custody of the couple's 2-year-old son. She announced on Tuesday that she and Bratman had separated and that the couple's commitment to their son "remains as strong as ever."

She did not issue a statement regarding the divorce every two to four years for both races aged 40 to 64, and every one to two years for both races aged 65 and older. Under ordinary circumstances, if a person follows these timelines, visual abnormalities can be corrected and treated early. If glaucoma is discovered, medication in the form of eyedrops or pills can be prescribed to either reduce the pressure or cause the eye to make less fluid. It may be necessary to take the prescribed medication several times a day. If you experience burning, stinging or redness, advise your prescribing specialist, who can make a modification.

It is important to understand that glaucoma often has no symptoms, and you may be inclined to discontinue your medication. Continued use is extremely important. The purpose of the medication is to either reduce the production of fluid or to reduce the pressure of the fluid.

The Xalatan drops you have been prescribed will reduce the pressure in your eye(s). You should wash your hands before and after use. The medication should be taken in the evening unless your doctor provides other instructions. You may experience blurred vision, and your eyes may become sensitive to light. Refrain from driving or doing detailed work until you determine whether you experience any unwanted side effects. Never use more than the recommended dose.

It appears both physicians you consulted are in agreement. My guess is the Xalatan is a completely appropriate recommendation that you should follow. Many people your age are on more medications every day than I have fingers and toes. You're one of the fortunate ones that have reached the age of 78 without a plethora of problems.

As the season changes, please adjust for the care given to your pets. Make sure they have warm bedding with shelter and ample fresh water. If you are away from home, make sure you have a responsible pet sitter that checks on your pets daily and calls you and the local animal shelter if they go missing. Proper identification is important for the safe return of your pets. Hunters especially need to have identification on their dogs. Many hunting dogs are needlessly lost because they have no identification.

Frances Anderson

FILER — Cordelia Frances Anderson was born and raised in her parents home to Frank C. Anderson and Etta M. Anderson. She was born into a pioneer Filer family and was a woman of strength and integrity. She spent her early years attending the Filer School system and graduated in the Filer High School Class of 1937. She then attended Albion State Normal School receiving her elementary school teaching certificate. She received her degree from Colorado State College.

Frances started her teaching career in Eden, then Jerome and then continued in the Twin Falls School system. She taught first grade at the old Washington School in Twin Falls. At the closure of Washington, she moved over to Bickel Elementary. After a few years, she became the principal at Bickel Elementary. She then moved to be the principal at Harrison Elementary until her retirement. She had a long and enjoyable career in teaching and her love of children touched many lives. She was a very talented and gifted lady. She loved to sew and patiently taught her nieces how to sew. Frances was a longtime member of the Filer Methodist Church. While teaching, she was an active member of the Soroptimist Club. She was a member of Filer Chapter AHP&O sisterhood.

She leaves behind a loving and devoted family. She is survived by her sister, Mary (Duane) Ramseyer of Filer. Her seven nieces and nephews have been very blessed to have Frances as an important and influential part of their lives. They are Cindy Blair of Tallahassee, Fla., Lynn Popplewell of Buhl, Patrick Anderson of Salt Lake City, Utah, David (Susan) Ramseyer of Filer, Phyllis (Mike) Nichols of Parma and John (Linda) Ramseyer of Filer. Dr. Paul Embree of Modesto, Calif., a cousin, was raised by her parents and always considered a brother. Many great-nieces and nephews will also remember Great-Aunt Francie fondly. Time spent with Frances was always an adventure. She was preceded in death by her parents; and her brother, Loren Anderson of Filer.

A celebration of Frances' life will be held at 2 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 16, at White Mortuary, 136 Fourth Ave. E. in Twin Falls, with Pastor Carol Thompson of the Filer Methodist Church officiating. Burial will follow at Sunset Memorial Park. A viewing for family and friends will take place from 11 a.m. until 1:30 p.m. Saturday at White Mortuary.

Services are under the direction of White Mortuary "Chapel by the Park" Twin Falls. Condolences may be left for the family by visiting www.whitemortuary.com.

Lucy Jean Johnson

KUNA — Lucy Jean Johnson was born Oct. 16, 1951, in Carey, Idaho. She passed away Tuesday, Oct. 13, 2010, at her home in Kuna, Idaho, of Leukemia.

Joseph F. 'Joe' Schmidt

RICHFIELD — Joseph F. "Joe" Schmidt, 56, of Richfield, passed away Wednesday, Oct. 13, 2010, in Twin Falls.

He was born Nov. 4, 1953, in Evergreen Park, Ill. He was raised in Chicago and graduated from high school in 1971. At an early age, he developed a love for music and took on a paper route so he could purchase a guitar. He spent his youth playing the guitar and making music, including five years as a professional musician. In 1975, he became a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and served a mission to Spain. On Dec. 19, 1980, he married the love of his life, Laurel Call, in the Washington D.C. LDS Temple. They moved to Utah, where both of them attended college and they started a family. In 1987, an employment opportunity brought the young family to Idaho, where they eventually settled in Richfield. Joe worked in a variety of fields including machinist, insurance sales, advertising and, for 17 years, he worked at Glanbia Foods. He was active in his church and served in a variety of callings including High Priest group leader, several Elder's Quorum presidencies and as a high council member. He especially loved being a missionary and served as ward mission leader and stake mission leader. He loved teaching the gospel.

Joe's greatest desire and ambition in life was to be a dad and a grandpa. He always wanted to be around his kids, playing baseball with them, teaching them how to work on the car or just visiting with them. He will be remembered as a wonderful husband, father, grandfather and friend who will be dearly missed.

Joe is survived by his wife, Laurel Schmidt of Richfield; their children, John (Camille) Schmidt of Anaheim, Calif., Mark Schmidt of Venezuela, Michelle Schmidt of Rexburg, Danielle Schmidt (and fiancé, Adam Doman) of Denver, Colo., and Robert Schmidt of Richfield. He is also survived by two grandsons, Spencer and Logan; and many extended family members and friends. He was preceded in death by his parents, two sisters and his beloved Grandpa and Grandma Schmidt.

The funeral will be conducted at 1 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 16, at the Richfield LDS Church, 1575 E. Highway 26 in Richfield, with Bishop Matthew Kent officiating. A visitation will begin at noon. Interment will follow in the Richfield Cemetery. Arrangements are under the care of Farnsworth Mortuary of Jerome.

House to vote on bonus Social Security payment

By Stephen Ohlemacher
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The House will vote in November on a bill to provide $250 payments to Social Security recipients to make up for the lack of a cost-of-living increase for next year, House Speaker Nancy Pelosi said Thursday.

The Social Security Administration is expected to announce Friday that more than 58 million retirees and disabled Americans will go a second consecutive year without an increase in benefits.

Pelosi said she will schedule a vote on a bill to provide the $250 payments when Congress returns for a lame duck session after the Nov. 2 congressional elections. The payments would be similar to those provided by the government's massive economic recovery package last year. But even if Pelosi can get the House to approve a second payment, the proposal faces opposition in the Senate.

"All members of Congress should join us in supporting this legislation which will be fiscally responsible and upholds our bedrock promise of economic security for our nation's seniors," Pelosi said in a statement.

Cost-of-living adjustments, or COLAs, are set automatically each year by an inflation measure that was adopted by Congress in the 1970s. Because consumer prices are still lower than they were two years ago, the last time a COLA was awarded, the trustees who oversee Social Security project there will be no benefit increase for 2011.

The projection will be made official Friday, when the Bureau of Labor Statistics releases inflation estimates for September. The timing couldn't be worse for Democrats as they approach an election in which they are in danger of losing their House majority, and possibly their Senate majority as well.

Pelosi's statement comes as Democrats try to make Social Security an election-year issue, accusing Republicans of planning to privatize the national retirement program.

President Obama pushed for a second $250 payment a year ago, but the proposal failed in the Senate when a dozen Democrats joined Republicans to block it.

2 convicted in hate-crime beating death

By Michael Rubinkam
Associated Press writer

SCRANTON, Pa. — A jury convicted two Pennsylvania men Thursday of a federal hate crime in the fatal beating of an illegal Mexican immigrant, finding they attacked the man primarily out of hatred for Hispanics.

An all-white jury in Scranton convicted Derrick Donchak and Brandon Piekarsky of violating the civil rights of 25-year-old Luis Ramirez, who died in July 2008 following a confrontation with a group of white high school football players in the former mining town of Shenandoah. The jury also convicted Donchak of two other counts related to a plot to cover up the beating.

Donchak, 20, sobbed as the verdict was read. Piekarsky, 18, put his head in his hands. Both were led away in handcuffs and ordered held behind bars pending their Jan. 24 sentencing. They could be sentenced to life in prison.

Crystal Dillman, who had two children with Ramirez, told The Associated Press she "couldn't be happier."

"My family finally gets justice, well, some justice and Luis can finally rest a little bit easier in peace knowing that some justice was served," Dillman said. "It's like a burden's lifted off my chest to know that something was done for Luis."

Prosecutors alleged that Donchak and Piekarsky beat and kicked Ramirez because they didn't like Hispanics and wanted them out of their town.

"They showed no remorse that night ... no sense of responsibility for having beaten a man to the point of death," Justice Department prosecutor Myesha Braden told jurors Wednesday in her closing argument.

The defense said the melee stemmed from youthful aggression, not ethnic hatred, and cast Ramirez as a hothead more than willing to fight.

Defense attorneys William Fetterhoff and James Swetz called the verdict disappointing and pledged an appeal.

Thomas E. Perez, chief of the Justice Department's civil rights division, said the jury demonstrated that "violence committed because of a victim's race, national origin, or ethnicity will not be tolerated."

The Mexican government welcomed the guilty verdict. It sends a powerful message "in the context of a growing climate of intolerance in which hate crimes against migrants and Latinos in the United States have multiplied," Mexico's Foreign Relations Department said in a statement.

Witnesses gave conflicting, and at times confusing, accounts of the late-night brawl that pitted Ramirez — a short, stout man nicknamed "Caballo," Spanish for horse — against four drunken teenagers during a random encounter on the street.

Prosecutors and defense attorneys agreed that youth, testosterone and alcohol played a role. But they argued over the mindset of a quartet of belligerent teens who called Ramirez a "spic," told him to go back to Mexico and assaulted the immigrant with their fists and feet.

Leona Gage, Miss USA who was stripped of title, dies

Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Leona Gage, who in 1957 was named Miss USA but had the title taken from her when pageant officials learned she was married and a mother of two, has died. She was 71.

Gage died of heart failure Oct. 5 at Sherman Oaks Hospital in Los Angeles, said her son Rob Kaminer.

She was married at 14 and had her second child by the time she was 16, all forbidden for a pageant contestant.

She also told pageant officials she was 21, but she was 18.

"It's both an accomplishment and a tragedy. She had mixed feelings about the whole thing," Kaminer told the Los Angeles Times.

She was born Mary Leona Gage on April 8, 1939, in Longview, Texas. Gage represented Maryland at the Miss USA pageant held in Long Beach, Calif., in July 1957. In a Times article after losing the title, Gage said she entered the Maryland contest hoping it would lead to work as a model.

"We needed money desperately," she said in 1957. "I didn't expect to win, and when I did I was told I would be sent to Long Beach for the Miss Universe contest," then at the time held immediately after the Miss USA competition, "I went to the sponsor of the Maryland contest and told him I couldn't go because I was married.

Gage

"He told me to forget that I told him I was married and to come out here and keep my mouth shut."

Pageant officials in Baltimore denied they had known she was married.

AN UNFAMILIAR STAGE

To produce 'Curtains,' Magic Valley Little Theater has to learn to work the pulls

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

Project your voice. Fill the space. Don't crowd the right of the stage. Blocking isn't easy, especially when the cast has never worked on this stage before.

On Thursday, Magic Valley Little Theater debuts "Curtains," which runs through Oct. 24. The show also marks the theater company's first time to perform in Canyon Ridge High School's auditorium.

"Curtains," which debuted on Broadway in 2007, tells the story of a detective investigating an untalented star's death on the opening night of her play. Director Lori Henson saw the show in New York with David Hyde Pierce as Lt. Frank Cioffi.

"I loved the show and thought it would be perfect for our community," Henson said.

Bringing it to life was another issue. Like many of the cast members, Henson had never seen Canyon Ridge's auditorium before Monday night's rehearsal, and she had to adapt the actors' blocking for the new stage. The stage is a composite material instead of hardwood, which actor Jane Lewis said took a little getting used to.

Danny Loughmiller, who plays Aaron Fox, was also anxious about the auditorium.

"I'm nervous just being in here," he said.

One of the features Henson had to get used to: the curtain pulls. At the venues where she usually performs, like O'Leary Middle School and the College of Southern Idaho, the curtain pulls are on the opposite side of the stage from where they are at Canyon Ridge.

"I was backwards all night," she said.

The size of the room presented another issue.

"It's a much bigger stage than I anticipated," she said. "A lot deeper."

It's a good thing the cast has a lot of choreography with which to fill that space. The production is packed with song and dance numbers that punch up the sometimes raunchy dialogue.

Unlike most plays, the screenplay for "Curtains" allows theater companies to change out some of the more adult lines (and language) with more family-friendly jokes. Henson and company kept a lot of the adult humor but traded out other lines that might be too much for Twin Falls. One sexual innuendo got axed after making some cast members uncomfortable, Henson said.

"We want everybody to feel like they can bring their children and their grandmother," she said.

Still, don't be surprised at the hip thrusts and naughty words.

The business of creativity

Behind the gallery-artist connection

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

It has never been easy to make a living as an artist, and it's even harder when potential art buyers are holding tight their wallets.

But there are things that even the most right-brained creative types can do to increase their chances of making a sale, or at least getting their work into a gallery or juried show.

"The artist that doesn't bring the business piece into their business will never reach their full potential," said Bruce Baker, an art business consultant from Vermont who will conduct a workshop for artists in Sun Valley next month. "You want to paint what people want to buy, and then a gallery won't be able to get enough of it."

And although art buying is as much about purchasers liking the work and the price as anything else, buyers who learn about the creative process are going to be happier with their purchases, said Teddy Khteian-Keeton, owner of Lion's Gate Gallery in Filer.

"The more people learn about the artist and the process, the safer their money and investment is," she said. Many of the pieces she sells come with descriptions of the artist and the work, as well as letters of provenance proving they are what she has sold them as. "If somebody's going to pay a tremendous amount of money for a piece of art they're going to keep and give to their children, they need as much info as I can give them."

This isn't all about high-end work though — Baker said crafters and semi-professional artists have an even greater need to do market research, figure out what their audiences want and learn how to sell it, than professionals being courted by museums.

"Most people buy art to impress other people, as sad as that sounds. If it's not going to be large, it has to be incredibly impressive in some other way," Baker said. "Make art that is impressive and compelling, that's step one, that's product development. Step two is displaying it so the public will come up, feel it, experience it, talk to you. The third is learning how to sell it, what do you say to an individual who is looking at your art?"

For example, he said, when a potential buyer asks about a piece, avoid going into technical details like media and method. Instead,

Sun Valley puts new focus on filmmaking

Next weekend's film festival pays homage to crazy ski jump

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

As the ski season concluded last spring, Sun Valley built a humongous jump — 30 feet tall with a 110-foot gap — on Lower Warm Springs. The jump melted away as temperatures warmed. But the soaring feats of athleticism that took place there were immortalized in the just-released movie “Eye Trip.”

Idahoans will get a chance to see the drama played out on the big screen on Oct. 23, when the film is shown as part of a new film festival designed to celebrate the beauty of the Wood River Valley and the mountains surrounding Sun Valley.

Viewers will practically be able to feel the snow swirling under the rotary blades of the copter in Josh Berman's “Eye Trip” film. They'll find themselves on a dizzying ride spinning down a circular staircase and lost in the rooster tail spray of a powder hound. And then there's the jump...

“The film was shot all over the world. But the section on Sun Valley is phenomenal. The big jump lived up to its billing. The crowd went crazy,” said Mike Fitzpatrick, a marketing representative for Sun Valley Resort.

The film festival, dubbed Sun Valley Harvest: A Gathering of Film, will feature some of the top new ski action films of the year. And it will feature some home-grown efforts submitted expressly for the film festival.

The film showings, which mark the 30-day countdown to the ski season, will be wrapped in a party atmosphere.

The idea arose last spring when Fitzpatrick and Brian Callahan, Sun Valley's terrain park manager, noted that a lot of skiers and boarders between the ages of 12 and 20 were taking some “phenomenal video” of their friends in the terrain park on Dollar Mountain.

“We thought it would be neat to showcase this kind of thing going into Sun Valley's 75th season,” said Fitzpatrick. “Sun Valley has such a tradition of film, starting with Dick Barrymore and running through Warren Miller, who got his start at Sun Valley, living in a little trailer at the bottom of the mountain.

“The festival will allow us to see what the kids who ski here, play here, live here and visit here think of Sun Valley. At the same time, it will gain exposure for Sun Valley as some of these young filmmakers show their films elsewhere.”

The festival will kick off at 4:30 p.m. Oct. 22 at Apple's Bar and Grill, on Picabo Street next to Sturtevant's at the base of the Warm Springs side of Baldy. There'll be an autograph session, open house and submission film viewing. The Forum snowboard film “FIt” will be shown at 7 p.m., followed by the local premiere of Teton Gravity Research's (also known as TGR's) “Light the Wick.”

A post-preview welcome Red Bull party at Whiskey Jacques, 251 N. Main St., starts at 9:30 p.m.

Admission to the Oct. 22 events is $10.

More film submissions will be on view beginning at 2 p.m. Oct. 23 in the Sun Valley Opera House. They will be accompanied by an expo showcasing some of the two dozen new rails Sun Valley has built for its terrain park, and another autograph session from 5 to 6 p.m. with such stars as extreme skier Grete Eliassen and filmmaker Stan Evans.

Evans' “Say My Name,” an all-girls ski movie featuring X-Games gold medalist Eliassen, will show at 6 p.m. The awards ceremony for submitted films will be held at 7:30 p.m. And Level 1's “Eye Trip” featuring the big air sessions in Sun Valley will start at 8 p.m.

A farewell party will start at 9:30 p.m. at The Roosevelt Grille, at Ketchum's Main Street and Sun Valley Road.

Admission to the Oct. 23 events is $15.

Nine fifth-graders from Hemingway Elementary School are among the young filmmakers who cobbled something together to submit for the festival. The youngsters wrote a script about four girls who elect to hike up Baldy to a birthday party at Sun Valley's historic Roundhouse, rather than take the gondola with their friends. They become lost and arrive four hours late.

Hemingway technology teacher Scott Slonin's students have won several national video awards in the past, enabling them to make treks to Washington, D.C., and New York City to pick up their trophies. But, given the short notice, he had to pull together a few students to make this film in only the second week.

“It was difficult, but how could I pass it up?” he said. “It's a local festival — somewhere where the kids can showcase their work here instead of New York. If we can just get our film shown in the Opera House on the big screen, that will be more than enough.”

“I can't wait to see us on the big screen,” said student filmmaker Cora Schneider. She paused. “But it's going to be embarrassing to see myself on the big screen because I do a lot of embarrassing things in the movie.”

Sun Valley hopes to make this an annual event, which will give young filmmakers the opportunity to shoot for next year's festival this winter.

such events as Sun Valley's Jeep King of the Mountain Tour, said he welcomes Sun Valley's new focus on filmmaking.

“I love the idea. It'll put Sun Valley on the map, bring great energy in and show off how much fun it is around here. There's been a lot of great ski films come out of Sun Valley between Dick Barrymore and Warren Miller. And I think this will attract more people to come here and shoot. And that's exciting.”

League of Women Voters to show movie on suffrage movement

Times-News

The movie “Iron Jawed Angels” will show at 7 p.m. today at the Lamphouse Theater, 233 Fifth Ave. S. in Twin Falls.

In celebration of the 90th anniversary of the passing of the 19th Amendment giving women the right to vote, the Twin Falls League of Women Voters is offering the free event to the public, age 21 and older.

The 2004 movie is about the American suffrage movement. Alice Paul (Hilary Swank) and Lucy Burns (Frances O'Connor) are more radical than the established activists, particularly Carrie Chapman (Anjelica Huston), so they establish their own organization to fight for women's rights. They are arrested and undergo a hunger strike.

The film was nominated for five Emmy Awards, including outstanding writing, casting, cinematography and costumes, and won one with Anjelica Huston for outstanding supporting actress.

The League of Women Voters, a nonpartisan organization, says it works to promote political responsibility through informed and active participation of citizens in government.

Refreshments will be furnished; wine and beer available for purchase.

International clean water advocate speaks in Ketchum

Times-News

Maude Barlow, a leader in the global water justice movement, will speak in Ketchum on Nov. 4 as part of the Sun Valley Center for the Arts' multidisciplinary project "Water."

Barlow is founder of Blue Planet Project, an international movement to protect the world's fresh water from trade and privatization. The head of the Council of Canadians, Canada's largest public advocacy organization, she has been called by both fans and detractors "the Ralph Nader of Canada" and "the Al Gore of water."

A Sun Valley Center press release calls Barlow the best kind of advocate — deeply informed, articulate and persuasive. She contends that water is a basic right and not a commodity.

"Should the market decide allocation of water?" Barlow said, according to the release. "Should corporations and people be able to make money from water when other people are dying from can't sell it, trade it or refuse it to someone because they cannot afford it."

of 16 books, including "Blue Gold: The Fight to Stop Corporate Theft of the World's Water" (with Tony Clarke) and "Blue Covenant: The Global Water Crisis and the Coming Battle for the Right to Water," Barlow has received honorary doctorates from four Canadian universities for her social justice work and is the recipient of a Lannan Cultural Freedom Fellowship and the 2005 Right Livelihood Award. In 2008-09, she was senior adviser on water to the president of the United Nations General Assembly.

Barlow's talk will begin at 6:30 p.m. Nov. 4 at the Church of the Big Wood in Ketchum. Hers is the second lecture in the Sun Valley Center's 2010-11 lecture series. Next up: Neil deGrasse Tyson, director of New York's Hayden Planetarium, speaking on Nov. 17.

Barlow lecture tickets are $25 for Sun Valley Center members and $35 for others, at sunvalleycenter.org or 726-9491, ext. 10.

key in on what the customer is finding beautiful about it and connect to that in a more emotional way.

"A good art seller is a good storyteller, there's no doubt about that," he said.

Lori Rieth, president of the cooperative Full Moon Gallery of Fine Art and Contemporary Craft, said she encourages artists to attend openings and open houses at the Twin Falls gallery for just that reason.

"A lot of people who are buying really like that because they can ask specific questions," she said. "If you can connect with the person who's buying your piece of art, that makes all the difference in the world. They're looking for the emotional connection, they want to know, 'Why did you paint this, where is it from?'"

Buyers are most likely to buy at galleries that have lots of the style of work they are looking for, whether that is contemporary, mixed-media or traditional. Kneeland Gallery in Ketchum, for example, represents many landscape painters who work in a traditional style, so customers don't often come in looking for modern abstracts.

"It's important the artist does their research first," said Kneeland director Carey Molter. "It may be wonderful work but just won't fit with that gallery."

When an artist walks through the door asking for the gallerist's time, with canvases in the car, that can be a turn-off, she said. "It puts us on the spot. They just show up, and it's important to make an appointment."

Most galleries and shows prefer to get a letter or e-mail with photos included, or a link to a website, before they visit with the artist in person. That helps ensure the artist and the gallery or show are a good fit before anyone's time is wasted.

Molter and Khteian-Keeton said they like to see a substantial collection of similar pieces before they'll take on an artist.

"Is there enough work for me even to be able to handle the advertising of it? Is it consistent, so it's identifiable as being that artist only?" Khteian-Keeton said. "You have to be brutally frank; if you can't handle their work and they don't have enough items for you to make it worth mounting your investment into, it all costs money."

Even subject matter and size can make a difference in whether a work will sell, though that can often be frustrating to creative types.

"If you are an artist who thinks you can paint anything you want and you can be successful and sustainable, you're probably wrong," Baker said.

This glass, made by Sharon McKenna, is displayed at Lion's Gate Gallery in Filer. The gallery sells paintings, photographs, glass and beadwork, to name a few, and the work spans many genres. "If somebody's going to pay a tremendous amount of money for a piece of art they're going to keep and give to their children, they need as much info as I can give them," gallery owner Teddy Khteian-Keeton says.

He noted that today, big canvases tend to sell better than small ones, verticals better than horizontals, and images of food and pets better than other subject matter. Of course, it always comes down to what an individual buyer is looking for — and that may be a small, horizontal abstract — but playing the trends is playing the odds.

Unless your style is wrapped canvases, inquire about framing. Molter said simple black or gold frames are preferable in her gallery, and an inappropriately framed painting won't sell even if customers like the work inside.

And then there's money.

Baker said it is good to work out a suggested retail price before approaching a gallery, but Molter said pricing flexibility is important. Galleries know what their customers are willing to pay, but they are also asked for discounts that they sometimes have to give to make a sale.

Buyers want to see consistency in the pricing of an artist's work — so don't charge different prices in Twin Falls than in Sun Valley, and wait until the work has been in a gallery for a year before raising prices (and then only by 10 or 15 percent), Molter said.

"I know dozens of wildly successful artists, but each and every one has a business machine that's running in the background," Baker said. Although he has heard successful artists called sell-outs, he said that often stems from either an unrealistic vision of art as a pure endeavor or simple jealousy. "If you can't sell it, something's wrong."

Take a trip down Harmony Lane

Magichords concert mixes theater with barbershop

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

Soon after moving to Buhl nearly four decades ago, Sam and Bob Owen were drawn to their first Magichords performance. They’ve been hooked ever since.

“We love the music. Even after all this time, the sound is still amazing,” Sam Owen said.

The sound she’s referring to is the uniquely American genre of barbershop quartet, marked by robust texture, ringing timbre and overtones. Everyone goes wild when the four-part harmony produces ringing chords.

“It’s such a unique format, the quartet,” said barbershop fan Neil Christensen. “Once you hear it, feel it, you’re hooked.”

The Twin Falls resident sang with Magichords for a few years before bowing out to focus on his family but is now a regular concert attendee. His favorite pieces are those sung the way he liked singing: in the intimate four-part quartet, a cappella.

“In the larger group format there are many more voices, so the sound is a bit bigger, but in the quartet there is much more opportunity to have fun, let your personality act

Fans like Christensen are sure to enjoy the headliner group for Magichords’ Saturday concert in Twin Falls: Social Insecurity from Eugene, Ore.

In Whistler, British Columbia, the group recently took first place in the senior division of the Evergreen District of Barbershop Harmony Society, which has more than 30,000 members and chapters through the U.S. and Canada. The quartet represented the district at the International Senior Quartet contest Tampa, Fla., in January, earning fourth-place honors.

Sweet Adeline, a women’s quartet from Boise, will also be on stage Saturday, as will members of Magic Valley’s OutCast Theater group.

“One of the things we’re trying to do is reach out to the art community and not be so biased as to only support barbershop,” said Lance Cox, Magichords director. “So we’ll be inviting choirs, actors and others within the arts community to share our stage.”

Cox took over directing duties for Magichords last year and is helping the group progress. Nationally, the genre is having success by showing it can adapt to all kinds of music styles; such progress is moving slower locally.

“Understandably, a lot of the guys in Magichords have been singing these songs for some 50 years,” Cox said. “They don’t want to lose these songs that they’ve grown with.”

However, change is inevitable or the group may cease to exist; much of the ensemble is well into its golden years.

“In the last year we’ve made fantastic progress ... and we’ve gotten a few new members,” Cox said. “We’re attending conventions, competitions and are trying to get out into the community more so we have more exposure. At the conventions the group can really see what others are doing ... and what the potential really is.”

Next year, Magichords hopes to be ranked as the most improved group at the district level and said audiences will already notice the group’s tighter sound.

However, fans like Owen say the Magichords have always been fantastic.

“We go to almost all of their con-

Put on your dancing shoes

Times-News

You’ll learn the basic steps of a dance popular with all ages in the College of Southern Idaho North Side Center’s “Country Swing” class.

Instructors Reid and Danielle Lofgran have been successful in teaching even the most rhythmically challenged students to dance, organizers say, and they promise plenty of time to review and ask questions.

Wear smooth-soled shoes; no athletic shoes.

“Country Swing” will be 6-8 p.m. Fridays, Nov. 5-19, at the Gooding Elementary School cafeteria.

The fee is $25 per person, and you must sign up with a partner. Register: 934-8678.

Calendar deadlines

Don't miss your chance to tell southern Idaho about your arts event. The deadline for entries for the Entertainment calendar is 5 p.m. the Friday prior to publication. That means today, if you want your entry to appear next Friday. Send submissions to Ramona Jones at ramona@magicvalley.com.

Haunting a house?

Tell the Times-News today

This month, the Times-News' Entertainment section is south-central Idaho's best guide to haunted houses, spook allies, corn mazes, costume parties and other Halloween-themed attractions — from the kid-friendly to the truly spooky.

So if you're organizing Halloween fun, make sure it's included. And act quickly; time is running out. Here's how: E-mail the information to news clerk Ramona Jones at ramona.jones@lee.net; include times, dates, locations, prices, rules, special attractions and contact information. Feel free to send photos for possible publication; attach them in jpg format to your e-mail.

Don't delay: The submission deadline is 5 p.m. each Friday for publication in the following Friday's Entertainment section.

We'll also add your Halloween events to our other calendars in print and on Magicvalley.com.

How many banned books have you read?

While purging my basement this summer, I came across a box of T-shirts from my bookstore days. What great memories came flooding back — book promotions, special events and numerous shirts from fellow book-sellers' stores. One of my favorites is from Bookshop Santa Cruz and features the famous Groucho Marx quote: "Outside a dog, a book is a man's best friend; inside a dog, it's too dark to read!" Another is from Fact & Fiction in Missoula: "Citizens for a Poodle-Free Montana." But the one that triggered the most memories was "Censorship Has Been Known to Cause Blindness in Children."

That started me thinking about September's Banned Books Week, which for almost 30 years has been sponsored by the American Library Association and the American Booksellers Association. It originated in 1982 in response to the surge in challenges of books in libraries, schools and bookstores. (A challenge is an attempt to remove materials, while banning succeeds in removal.)

More often than not, these challenges come from well-meaning parents who do have the right to choose books for their children that are not offensive because of language or inappropriate material. But when a person or group decides that a book is unsuited to any age group and should not be accessible to anyone, the fireworks begin.

The Twin Falls Public Library rarely has books challenged, according to library director Susan Ash.

"We get perhaps one title a year," she said. "But when we do, the patron is asked to fill out a Materials Reconsider Form that asks if they've read the entire book, read any reviews about the book, what they found offensive, and what they'd like the library to do. We research the title in question and then talk with the patron. If they still want to pursue it, the matter is taken to the library board. I don't remember a time when a request has actually gone all the way to the board."

I very clearly recall our bookstore window displays during Banned Books Week and the responses that they generated. More often than not it was amazed disbelief: "To Kill a Mockingbird" is banned? You've got to be kidding!

I recall other titles from the 1990s that were banned and challenged somewhere in the country: many titles by Judy Blume, "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings" by Maya Angelou, "Lord of the Flies" by William Golding, several titles by Stephen King, "In the Night Kitchen" by Maurice Sendak, "Pillars of the Earth" by Ken Follett, "A Light in the Attic" by Shel Silverstein, "The Outsiders" by S.E. Hinton and, of course, Salman Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses," which triggered threats and even bombings across the country.

I was curious to see which books have made the list for the first nine years of this decade. Some I could pretty well guess; others had me shaking my head and saying, "You've got to be kidding!"

Here are just a few:

- The Harry Potter series by J.K. Rowling
- The Twilight series by Stephenie Meyer
- "To Kill a Mockingbird" by Lee Harper (50 years, and still being challenged!)
- "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings" by Maya Angelou (still!)
- "The Giver" by Lois Lowry (one of my all-time favorites)
- "Snow Falling on Cedars" by Dave Guterson
- "Bridge to Terabithia" by Katherine Paterson (another favorite)
- "The Things They Carried" by Tim O'Brien
- "Draw Me a Star" by Eric Carle (author-illustrator of the children's classic "The Very Hungry Caterpillar")
- "Fahrenheit 451" by Ray Bradbury (the classic about ... banning books)
- The Junie B. Jones series by Barbara Park (several teachers are shaking their heads in disbelief)
- "A Wrinkle in Time" by Madeleine L'Engle
- "The Kite Runner" by Khaled Hosseini
- "A Prayer for Owen Meany" by John Irving
- "The House of the Spirits" by Isabel Allende

- Various titles by Judy Blume
- The Captain Underpants series by Dav Pilkey (kids laugh their way through these books)
- "Of Mice and Men" by John Steinbeck
- Several titles from Idaho's own Chris Crutcher
- "Harris and Me" by Gary Paulsen (one of the funniest books for readers ages 10 and up I have ever read!)
- "Anne Frank: The Diary of a Young Girl"

Find a complete listing of banned and challenged books at www.ala.org; the website details where and why the books were challenged or banned during the past year.

Rivals collide as Bruins visit Tigers

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

The date's been circled on the calendar all season. Oct. 22: Minico at Twin Falls. But before the Spartans and Bruins can battle for an outright Great Basin Conference title, Twin Falls must survive another battle — The Battle of the Bridge against long-time rival Jerome.

The last time the Bruins made the short trip to Jerome they came home with a 48-6 loss in 2008.

"In my 25 years of coaching, we've never had an easy game over there," said Twin Falls coach Allyn Reynolds. "Jerome is a difficult place to play."

While the Tigers (2-4) started 0-3 this season, the Bruins have they're 2-1 in Great Basin Conference play and can earn a playoff berth with a win tonight. A victory would give Twin Falls hosting rights to open the Class 4A postseason

"There's a lot at stake in this game," said Reynolds. His counterpart agrees.

"We've told our kids, 'We win, we're in' (the play-offs)," said Jerome coach Gary Krumm. "It's also senior night for our 33 seniors and our last game at home. Motivation shouldn't be an issue."

What could be an issue for Jerome? "Execution," said Krumm. "We can't give up big plays defensively and we can't turn it over offensively."

Twin Falls, which beat Jerome 26-22 last season, has managed those two areas effectively this year en route to a 5-1 record (3-0 GBC). But the Bruins have sputtered at times on offense.

Twin Falls roars past Riverhawks

By Michael Cole
Times-News writer

The Bruins' plans were clear — jam up the middle.

And that is exactly what they did as they swept host Canyon Ridge 25-17, 25-13, 25-20 Thursday night to cap a perfect 10-0 run through Great Basin Conference play.

The Bruins' lights out defense aggravated Canyon Ridge on nearly every play as the Riverhawks could not get the ball past the fingertips of Bruins (35-5, 10-0 GBC).

"That is something we practice," said Josie Jordan. "We do a lot of blocking and covering tips."

The Bruins learned there lesson last year at state that if they don't cover the middle, teams can make life miserable.

"If you don't block, teams will really light you up," said Twin Falls coach B.J. Price. "Tonight we passed well and our blocking has really improved. It is nice to have all of our coaches on the bench to get that point across."

"It is nice to see that we are implementing things from practice into our game. The whole team did a great job. We had great kills and Allie moved the ball around really well."

When the Riverhawks finally got through the front line and looked to rally, the Bruins immediately squashed all hopes of a comeback with tight defense.

Leading the Bruins were Jordan with 15 kills, Allie Johnson with 37 assist and eight digs, Cheltzie Williams with 14 kills and Jade Byce with 13 digs.

Wood River senior Charlie Evans (8) celebrates his goal Thursday during the second half of their game with Jerome in the Great Basin Championship in Jerome.

Wolverines claim GBC district title

Evans leads Wood River to upset of Jerome

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

Wood River players kept asking the head referee for the time in the final minutes of their soccer matchup with Jerome.

Clinging to a 2-1 lead from the 45th-minute goal off the foot of Charlie Evans, those final minutes couldn't have ticked away faster for the Wolverines.

Wood River packed in the defense and held on for dear life to deny attack after attack from the Tigers to claim the 2-1 victory and the Class 4A Great Basin Conference district championship.

"We knew it was getting close to the end of the game. We just kept asking the ref how much time was left and couldn't wait for him to blow the whistle," said defender Zack Freeman.

When the whistle did blow, the players threw their hands up in the air in jubilation and celebrated their district title at midfield on Jerome's home field, leaving the Tigers to slump back to their bench wondering what happened.

"This is huge. Jerome has been our rival and we have never beaten them in districts before," Evans said. "This feels great."

Wolverines topple Bruins for GBC tournament title

It didn't matter that Wood River was down a player, nor that Twin Falls was applying the pressure. Tanner Dredge and her teammates weren't about to let their vicegrip on the District IV girls soccer championship slip.

Dredge scored two goals to up her career total to 114 and Wood River survived with 10 players for almost the entire second half to beat Twin Falls 4-3 and claim its seventh straight district championship.

results earlier in the season, with each winning its home match. The Wolverines made sure they took the one that mattered most — even if everyone but Dredge didn't realize they were a player short.

"We didn't have some of our best players when we lost down here, and we know they were down some when we beat them up there," said Kaitana Martinez, who headed home the eventual match-winner in the 56th minute. "We didn't get to see our best versus their best during the regular season but we got that today."

The match's turning point came five minutes after halftime when Bruin attacker Claire Goss surged through the middle of the box and juked around Wood River goalkeeper Madison Gove, who dove out of position and wrapped up around Goss' ankles and tackled her rather than concede the goal that would have brought Twin Falls back to within 3-2.

Spartan spikers sweep Wood River

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Every team aims to peak at the right time, and perhaps nobody has accomplished that better than the Minico volleyball team.

Two days after pushing the Great Basin Conference's top team to five sets, the Spartans defeated the league's second-best team Thursday night in the regular-season finale for both teams.

Chelsea Hepworth had 10 kills and nine blocks as Minico swept Wood River 25-13, 25-22, 25-17.

"We're where we want to be right now," said Minico coach Kris Christensen. "The last couple weeks we've played with intensity and consistency. Hopefully it carries through."

Lauren Nesbitt, Tiffany Joyce, Ashley Parker, Ashqua Bliss and Dayna Phillips were honored on senior night, and Minico moved to 4-9 overall and 3-7 in conference play. The Spartans will enter next week's district tournament as the fifth seed.

"Because of the way the girls have been playing, they were confident when they went out on the floor tonight," Christensen said. "It was the last home game of the season and they played with a lot of heart and wanted it."

Freshman Hannah Bailey led Minico with 10 digs and nine kills, while Tylo Colflesh added five kills and eight digs. Spartan setter Kaylee Kostka had 29 assists.

Minico, which earned the GBC's second berth to the state tournament last year, avenged a three-set loss to the Wolverines earlier this season in Hailey.

With the second seed already wrapped up, Wood River (15-13, 6-4) changed up its lineup on Thursday to get different looks.

"You always play to win, but we're trying different things," said Wood River coach Tim Richards. "... The conference tournament is where you want to play well."

Jade Glenn led Wood River with nine kills, Kori Paradis had five blocks and Ali Levi had eight digs.

High School High Five

Canyon Ridge at Minico

Radio: 970 AM
The skinny: Minico's only losses are to two undefeated teams in Bishop Kelly and Elizabeth (Colo.). In its three Great Basin Conference games, Minico (4-2 overall, 3-0 GBC) has outscored opponents 45-12 on average. Canyon Ridge (2-4, 1-2) upset Minico last year in overtime for the Riverhawks' first win in school history.
Canyon Ridge coach Bill Hicks: "We're going to have to show up and play four quarters about as well as we can play to stay with them. We're going to have to stop (running back) Brady May. But I don't know if stopping May is such a good thing for us because they have so many other weapons."
Minico senior Moi Rice: "We're looking for some payback from last year. Our offense is starting to click and our defense is just stopping everybody. We can pass or run the ball. We share the ball with all our good players like Edgar (Espinoza), Brady (May), Kade (Miller), all those guys."

Gooding at Wendell

7 p.m.

The skinny: After starting 0-3, Gooding (3-3, 2-0 Canyon Conference) has been on a tear and heads into Wendell with plenty of momentum. The Trojans (2-4, 1-2) have the talent to win tonight, led by versatile quarterback Nolan Stouder, but have made mistakes in critical situations, including last week's loss at rival Glenns Ferry. Remove all the turnovers and Wendell could be in the thick of the conference title chase. As it is, Gooding hosts Declo next week in a game that could be the outright league title. But the Senators must first take care of business today and they'll have to do that with several players slowed by injury, including Braydon Urrutia, who is battling through shoulder, ankle and hip injuries.
Gooding coach Cameron Andersen: "There's a lot riding on this one. ... We haven't spent a ton of time thinking about Declo this week. We've got our hands with Stouder and the crew. He'll live in anyone's nightmares."

Raft River at Shoshone

7 p.m.

The skinny: Shoshone (5-1, 2-1) sits in second place in the Snake River Conference standings, and if the Indians can take care of business in their remaining three games, they could earn their first state playoff berth since 2000. Raft River (1-5, 0-3) shares a similar offensive philosophy, as both teams will try to establish the run and then take advantage with passes over the top against defenses that load the box.
Raft River coach Randy Spaeth: "I like the way we match up. It's the same old song and dance for us — if we can get out of the gates and not put ourselves behind the eight ball right off the bat, I like our chances. Our kids have a lot of confidence in (our scheme). They've bought in and have had some success with it, so that helps."
Shoshone coach Mark Sant: "We know they're better than what their record shows. They do some stuff that has given us some problems before, so we can't overlook them, we have to be ready to play."

Kimberly at Buhl

7 p.m.

The skinny: Run-heavy Kimberly (4-2) opens Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference play with rival Buhl (4-2, 1-0 SCIC), which can claim the league title with a win. Kimberly will have senior running back Cody Casperson back on the field after getting rest against Burley last week. Buhl has effectively mixed in the pass more often this season, with receiver Jessie Flinn as the primary target. While quarterback Camden Gillins (neck) will set out this week, Markus Lively was solid against Canyon Ridge last week and gets the start tonight.
Kimberly coach Kirby Bright: "This is the game you circle on the calendar before the season. We need to be able to run the ball well and Buhl has been very balanced on offense, so our defense has to be ready for both the run and the pass."
Buhl coach Stacy Wilson: "We've got to shut down their running back and do a good job defensively of reading and taking care of responsibilities."

Wood River at Burley

Radio: 1230 AM
The skinny: Burley (0-6, 0-3) celebrates homecoming as the Bobcats welcome Wood River (2-4, 0-3) to town. Both teams are seeking their first league win and both need a victory to keep alive their slim playoff hopes. Burley is on a 10-game losing streak dating back to last year. The Bobcats' last victory was a 35-14 win over Wood River, Oct. 2, 2009. In three Great Basin Conference losses the Wolverines have averaged 10 points while the Bobcats have averaged 11.6 per game. While turnovers and effort issues have hindered Burley all season, injuries have wreaked havoc with Wood River's lineup. Connor Bratz will start at quarterback in place of the injured Kevin Jensen.
Wood River Kevin Stilling: "Being able to run the ball outside and being able to stop the run (is key to a WRHS win.) ... Burley has moved the ball successfully all year but turned it over at inopportune times. We're not taking anything for granted against them."

Swanson keys offense for Cutthroats

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

To Ellie Swanson, kicking a soccer ball off her foot and soaring it past the outstretched arms of an opponent's goalie and into the back of the net is a feeling that doesn't compare to any other. "It feels amazing," Swanson said. "You just know when you kicked it perfectly." The sophomore forward has experienced that feeling 27 times this season as the leading goal scorer for the Community School. Swanson scored three goals on Monday to lead the Cutthroats to a 7-0 win over Bliss and added

Times-News Athlete of the Week

another goal Wednesday in the team's 7-0 victory over Buhl to give Community School the High Desert Soccer Conference district championship. "She's been really good for us all season," said teammate Katie Feldman. "She is a great teammate and without her, we wouldn't have scored as many goals this season, that's for sure." It's her assists, however, that have gained the praise of coach Kelly Feldman. Swanson dished out two against Buhl and added another one against Bliss. "She has gotten better all season. Ellie is becoming more of an assist-type player, getting the ball across and creating opportunities for her teammates," Kelly Feldman said after Wednesday's championship win. "She only had one goal today and played a great game. She passed the ball well and battled for the ball in the corner. She's had a great season." Swanson leads a group of underclassmen — including eight freshmen — that will carry the team in the Class 3A state playoffs where they won the consolation game last season. "We're really excited for state," Swanson said. "We played really well last year and want to improve on that."

Swanson

No. 25 West Virginia beats South Florida 20-6

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — Geno Smith threw two touchdown passes and No. 25 West Virginia held South Florida to a season-low for yards in a 20-6 victory over the Bulls on Thursday night.

The Mountaineers (5-1, 1-0 Big East) made the most out of their limited scoring opportunities in a game where neither offense thrived.

The nation's seventh-best defense held South Florida (3-3, 0-2) without an offensive touchdown for the second straight game. Quarterback B.J. Daniels found no room to roam and the Bulls were outgained 298-202.

South Florida's previous low for offense was 219 yards in a 13-9 loss to Syracuse last week

West Virginia jumped ahead 17-3 at halftime and ate up clock time after that in posting its 12th straight home win.

KANSAS STATE 59, KANSAS 7
LAWRENCE, Kan. — Carson Coffman ran for three touchdowns and threw for two more, completing 15 of 16 passes and leading Kansas State past Kansas 59-7 on Thursday night in one of the most lopsided routs in an emotional rivalry that dates to 1902.

Coffman, criticized last week in the wake of a 48-13 thrashing at the hands of then-No. 7 Nebraska, hit eight different receivers with passes. He also rushed for 91 yards and three TDs on 18 carries

After a dull first quarter ended 3-0, Kansas State (5-1, 2-1 Big 12) scored on seven straight possessions — six of its own and one by the Jayhawks, on Stephen Harrison's 85-yard fumble return.

Kansas (2-4, 0-2 Big 12) did not stop the Wildcats until coach Bill Snyder started putting in his reserves with a 52-0 lead early in the fourth quarter. By then, Kansas' worst loss since a 66-14 shellacking by No. 2 Texas in 2005 was assured.

BAYLOR DROPS PLAYER CHARGED WITH POSSSESSION

WACO, Texas — Baylor receiver Willie Jefferson has been dismissed from the team after his second arrest on a drug charge in as many weeks.

Coach Art Briles says in a school statement that he is cutting the sophomore for violating unspecified team rules.

Jefferson was arrested Thursday in nearby Bell County. Jail officials say he was free on $1,500 bond after his arrest on a misdemeanor marijuana possession complaint.

Last week, Waco police arrested Jefferson and fellow sophomore receiver Josh Gordon after officers reported finding a small plastic bag of marijuana in a car Jefferson was driving. Gordon was a passenger.

CSI volleyball adjusts lineup to take down Blue Mountain

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

Dig Pink night is supposed to be relaxed and honor breast cancer awareness, research and survivors. Doesn't mean there's not some major game-planning going on for the rest of the volleyball season.

On the strength of a well-timed tactical switch, the College of Southern Idaho thwarted a comeback attempt from Blue Mountain (Ore.) to win in four sets Thursday, taking the non-conference match 25-19, 25-10, 21-25, 25-14.

middle blocker Alyssa Everett to the right in the front row. She also put backup setter Sierra Hansen on the back row. Freshman middle blocker Taylor Wilkinson slipped into Everett's usual spot in the lineup and provided eight kills and four blocks, three of them coming within minutes of being subbed into the match in the second set.

"I was just trying to get out there and pick up the intensity, do my best," Wilkinson said. "We ended up winning that set pretty easily so I think our blocking picked up our emotion and caused them to question themselves a little."

In front of some 400 fans clad mostly in pink, CSI got a 13-kill effort from Beth Carey, while Elisa Brochado had 12 and Rosie Becerra added 11. Kianna Niu had 19 digs.

Cartisser was pleased with the tactical switch and hinted that it might become a regular fixture if the right-side struggles continue.

"If we can't get production out of the right side, that may be something we go back to," she said. "Taylor did a great job, and I love Sierra's emotional leadership. It's refreshing."

CSI players signed autographs on the pink shirts after the match, despite having to be on the bus for today's trip to North Idaho — the two teams square off Saturday afternoon — about nine hours after the match ended.

There'll be plenty of time to sleep on the bus and get rested for payback, they said. CSI played its worst match of the season in a tame loss to NIC three weeks ago at home.

"We're really excited about the trip up there," Wilkinson said. "We're fired up and ready to show them that we can play, and that we're the number one team in the region."

Notes: CSI wore pink camouflage jerseys and Blue Mountain sported pink tops with a breast cancer ribbon screened on. ... CSI's Dig Pink coordinator Scott Rogers said the school had raised $1,644 for breast cancer research as of Thursday night, adding that he expects more money to come during the next few days.

Bruins

"We wanted this conference win," said Jordan. "We started off weak but we were able to get back in it. This is a hometown rivalry and we want to pull out the win in any sport."

The Riverhawks challenged the Bruins in the third set as they took an early lead but the Bruins pounded eight straight points to step out in front.

"I am proud of this team," said Canyon Ridge Stacy Boer. "I have known who my team is going to be for just a couple of months and most teams have known for years. I am really proud of the progress we have made and we may throw up a few surprises at (districts). ... You know we played an undefeated conference team that wanted to prove a point. They were close to losing to Minico and they came out to prove that they are still number one."

The Riverhawks celebrated senior night and for the first time all season had a massive crowd to support their team.

"I want to thank the crowd," said Boer. "I had said early that we may have needed more team spirit and I want to thank the student body and the cheerleaders for their support."

Rivals

"Our defense is doing really great this year," said Twin Falls lineman Ben Hanchey. "They have only let a few points be scored on them. But our offense needs to pick up the intensity so we can put the ball into the end zone."

That cause will be aided by the return of several key players including Ricky Akridge, Josh Settlemyer, Mark Christensen and Tyler Wolters. Both teams are coming off a bye week and the extra time to heal should show tonight. But Krumm said the Tigers are "still very banged up in key spots."

That doesn't bode well against a talented Twin Falls lineup.

"Obviously, they're a team with a lot of confidence, a very well-rounded team," said Krumm. "You can't really focus on two or three players."

But in this game, like most genuine rivalries, you can throw out records, injuries, statistics and history.

Said Hanchey: "It's the Battle of the Bridge. We both want to win."

Times-News writer Stephen Meyers contributed to this report.

Filer outlasts Kimberly in key SCIC match

Times-News

In a marathon of a match, Filer outlasted Kimberly in five sets winning 25-20, 23-25, 25-21, 12-25, 15-13 to claim the Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference title and will host the district tournament, beginning Monday.

"It was a monster game," said Filer coach Ed Richards. "We played really well and came together as a team. I was really pleased."

Kimberly's Kali Wright recorded 14 kills and Nellie Makings had 45 assists.

Kimberly plays Buhl on Monday night, while Filer (12-14, 3-1 SCIC) awaits the winner.

Kassie Ottley led the team with 14 digs and Winter Holtman added eight kills. Taylor Richer dished out 13 assists.

"It was a good way to close out the season. We played strong and are working towards districts," said Raft River coach Cami Schumann.

Raft River (16-3, 6-0 Snake River South) plays Oakley in the first round of district play at Burley.

HAGERMAN 3, OAKLEY 1

Hagerman defeated Oakley Thursday, winning 26-28, 25-17, 25-11, 25-12.

Cheyenne Crist dished out 30 assists and Jessica Regnier led the team with 11 kills and Katie Hines added 10.

JEROME TOPS PRESTON, POCATELLO

Jerome won two matches in Pocatello on Thursday, outlasting Preston 25-20, 25-27, 15-13 and sweeping the host Indians 25-19, 25-20.

Melissa Leavitt, Mackenzie Martens and Haylee Burnham had five kills each against Preston, while Frankie Carey added 12 assists.

Burnham led with eight kills against Pocatello, while Martens and Jasmie Branch added four apiece. Savannah Lott chipped in three blocks.

Jerome (10-10) will be the No. 3 seed for the Great Basin Conference Tournament, which begins Monday at Twin Falls High School.

"Tonight we played really, really well and that's really going to give us a boost for this coming week," said Jerome coach Hannah Clark.

BUHL 3, GLENN'S FERRY 0

Buhl handled Glenns Ferry on Thursday night, winning 25-17, 25-15, 25-16.

Sydney Sterling had 20 assists for the Pilots (7-11), who will take the No. 5 seed into the Canyon Conference Tournament and open against No. 1 Gooding on Saturday.

HARRIS, CHOJNACKY WIN AT MOUNTAIN HOME

Same old, same old. As they've done most of the season, Erik Harris of Twin Falls and Mackenzie Chojnacky of Jerome won their respective races on Thursday, this time at the Mountain Home Invitational at Dessert Canyon Golf Course.

Harris had a time of 16 minutes, 49.8 seconds, while Chojnacky won in 18:51. The Twin Falls boys won the team title, while the Jerome girls did likewise.

Wood River's Andrew Pfeiffer was second in the boys race, while teammate Ben Stout placed third and Twin Falls' Karl Lundgren fourth. Mikesell Clegg of Jerome placed second among the girls with teammate Jasmine Nesbitt third and Twin Falls' Amanda Ward fourth.

Despite Gove's ejection for denying a clear goalscoring opportunity, the strategy worked as Goss didn't get the ensuing penalty shot on target.

Twin Falls struggled to bounce back from the momentum letdown and, though Goss went on to score two goals in the final 10 minutes, the Bruins simply ran out of time before they could get the equalizer.

"We were just a little off tonight. I'm not sure what it was," said Twin Falls coach Katie Kauffman. "The first 10 minutes we looked great, but after that we lost our intensity. The girls weren't communicating like they normally do, and that led to mistakes. When you don't play first to the ball, that's what happens."

The Bruins (14-3-0) went ahead five minutes in after McKenzie Johnson surged down the left wing and flicked a cross just beyond Gove's reach and straight to the onrushing Allie Webb, who applied a tidy, sliding finish.

But after the initial burst Twin Falls went dormant and Wood River (13-2-1) began to exert more pressure. That pressure took its toll when Dredge twice dispossessed a Bruin defender in the attacking third, dribbled to the middle of the field and lashed a shot from 20 yards out.

"I was surprised that the defenders didn't come at me, so I just hit it and hoped," Dredge said.

Sloan Storey added a third goal on a similar defensive error, and delivered the corner kick on Martinez's goal.

As their reward, the Wolverines draw undefeated Hillcrest (16-0-0) in the opening round of the state tournament next Thursday in Post Falls.

"It's going to be a battle no matter who you play," said Martinez. "We've got to win three games."

Twin Falls, meanwhile, will look to bounce back when it hosts Burley Saturday for the district's final berth to the state tournament.

"We still have an opportunity and that's all we've been working toward," Kauffman said. "We're going to find out exactly how badly these girls want to go to state."

BURLEY 3, JEROME 0

Aubrey Vale, Caitlyn Bennett and Megan Graham each scored goals to lead Burley to a 3-0 win over Jerome to advance in the Class 4A Great Basin Conference district tournament.

"We played really well together as a team and passed the ball a lot better," said Burley coach Sara Edwards. "The girls came out and played hard."

Jerome (5-15-1) ends its season with the loss.

"There was a lot of growth as a team from beginning to end and a lot of team unity," said Jerome coach Carlos Hernandez.

Third-seeded Burley (7-12-0) faces No. 1 seed Twin Falls on Saturday at Sunway Soccer Complex with the conference's final berth to the state tournament on the line.

"We're excited and we'll be ready to play," Edwards said.

Jerome struck first on an Eric Mendoza goal early in the first half, but Evans tied the game up in the 14th minute off a huge throw-in to the box from defender Harlan Collins.

Bryan Donoso added another goal for Wood River before halftime, but it was wiped away on a penalty for tripping Jerome defender Alberto Vidaca.

Evans scored early in the second half and the Wood River defense — led by Spyder Turco and Zack Freeman — did its finest work of the season, shutting down playmakers Salvador Mercado and Sergio Madrigal.

"Defensively we were so solid. We shut down any opportunity for them," said Wood River coach Luis Monjaras. "I'm really proud of our defense."

Said Jerome coach Robert Garcia: "They just wanted it more."

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Wood River junior Jeffrey Espejo (7) battles for control of the ball with Jerome captain Madrigal Sergio (12) during the second half of their game Thursday in the Great Basin Championship in Jerome.

Jerome, which won the previous three GBC titles could only sit in silence after the loss.

"It feels like crap," Mercado said.

The Tigers play Burley on Saturday in a grudge match for the district's No. 2 seed to the state tournament, while Wood River will play Bonneville in the opening round next Thursday.

"It's been a long-time coming for us to beat Jerome. We got that state experience last year which really helped and the team was so motivated today," Monjaras said.

BURLEY 2, TWIN FALLS 1

Alex Greener's header off a corner kick proved to be the match-winner as Burley eliminated Twin Falls 2-1 at Sunway Soccer Complex on Thursday to set up a rematch with Jerome for the conference's final berth to the state tournament.

Angel Anguiano gave the Bobcats the lead from the penalty spot in the second half. Then Burley went to work looking for the knock-out blow, which Greener provided five minutes from time.

"The kids played hard, and it was a great game," said Burley coach Wes Nyblade. "We thought it was going to be another draw and go down to penalty kicks but our kids did just enough."

Chris DeLaCruz pulled a late goal back for Twin Falls, which lost despite not conceding from the run of play.

"It doesn't make it easier to have it happen like that," said Bruins coach Ben Harman. "But we had a good season. We set some higher goals than we had in the past (like going to state), and even though we didn't accomplish that goal we exceeded a lot of people's expectations."

Wobbly fielding making for postseason bobbleheads

By Ben Walker
Associated Press writer

So much for Chase Utley, Josh Hamilton and their playoff pals handling every grounder, popup and throw with ease. So far, this October is all about those Es.

Placido Polanco, Scott Rolen and Evan Longoria were among a half-dozen Gold Glovers who turned into postseason bobbleheads during a first round that set a record for errors.

In all, 31 errors in only 15 games — a mistake rate up an alarming 66 percent over the regular season.

“I think defense is huge right now,” said CC Sabathia, who will start for the New York Yankees against Texas in Game 1 of the AL championship series Friday night. “I mean, you can’t give away outs. You have to play solid defense. You see what happened in a couple of those games in the NL series.”

No bad weather or twilight zones to blame, either. Instead, postseason newcomer Cody Ross offered a simpler explanation.

“Maybe just playoff nerves. I think that’s all I can kind of chalk it up to,” the San Francisco right fielder said. “Maybe coincidental. First round, you want to be perfect and try not to make any mistakes and sometimes when you try too hard that’s when you make all your mistakes.”

Whatever, there sure are a lot of them. The 31 errors were the most in any round of a baseball postseason. In fact, that matches the total from the entire 2009 postseason.

Last year, a missed fly ball by St. Louis left fielder Matt Holliday was the signature miscue of the playoffs. This year, the liner that Cincinnati right fielder Jay Bruce lost in the lights was the biggest misplay. So far.

The Reds made just 72 errors during the regular season, tied with San Diego for the fewest in the NL. Then Cincinnati made seven errors while getting swept in three games by the Phillies.

“I think that’s something that just happens,” Philadelphia manager Charlie Manuel said. “All of a sudden we hit streaks where our defense kind of collapses or we start playing bad. I think that’s all part of baseball and all part of, I would say, being excited about being there, at the same time, a little tight.”

Atlanta second baseman Brooks Conrad had the roughest time, committing four errors in the Braves’ four-game loss to the Giants. His three errors in Game 3 cost Atlanta a chance to advance.

Then again, it happened to another Brooks, too. In the 1970 World Series, Baltimore third baseman Brooks Robinson tossed away his first throw in Game 1 for an error. He recovered quickly, and put on one of the greatest defensive performances in Series history.

“You know, it’s part of the game. This is pressure,” Giants third baseman Pablo Sandoval said. “It’s way different from the regular season to the postseason. This is the time you try to do everything perfect and you start to make errors.”

whose only error came from Gold Glove catcher Joe Mauer.

There were 10 errors in each of the other three series — Texas-Tampa Bay, Phillies-Reds, Giants-Braves. Last year, there were a total of 13 errors in 13 opening-round games.

“We’ve got to be heads up. I think one thing we’re very proud of with the Yankees is that we play good baseball,” New York first baseman Mark Teixeira said.

“I’m not sure if you notice, but every time I catch a ball, every time I’m coming off first base, I run towards third because if a guy is rounding third, you never know what he’s going to do, especially if the guy has speed,” he said.

Texas basically stole its first three runs against the Rays in the deciding Game 5. Elvis Andrus and Vladimir Guerrero scampered home from second base on grounders and Nelson Cruz scored on a throwing error by catcher Kelly Shoppach.

“In this situation, it seems like a mistake really gives those guys a couple runs there,” Yankees catcher Jorge Posada said.

The defending World Series champion Yankees made only 69 errors this year, fewest in the majors.

“We preach it all year long,” manager Joe Girardi said. “It plays an important role in games because you start making errors and giving extra baserunners, a lot of times it leads to runs. It leads to a longer pitch count for your pitcher and you go to your bullpen maybe sooner than you want.

“There’s a lot of ways that it can affect the game,” he said. “And, usually, when you see teams that have pitching and defense, usually they play a long time.”

Both original NL franchises, but share little history between them. Have never met in the postseason. (The biggest sports link connecting the cities might be in the NBA — Wilt Chamberlain and the old Philadelphia Warriors moved West in 1962 and became the San Francisco Warriors. Oh, and the Eagles beat the 49ers last weekend). ... Giants and Phillies went 3-3 against each other this year. Starting in 2000, they’re 36-36 in head-to-head games. ... Fun facts about the aces: The only player to hit at least three career home runs off Lincecum is Howard, the Phillies’ slugger. And, Halladay is 0-2 lifetime vs. the Giants with a 7.23 ERA, his highest for any opponent he’s started against at least three times. ... Giants handed Halladay his first NL loss, beating Phillies in late April. San Francisco won two of three in that set at AT&T Park. ... Oswalt beat Giants in start of three-game series at Citizens Bank Park in mid-August. Phillies won two of three at home, nudging them ahead of Giants for the wild-card lead. ... Lincecum and Hamels got no-decisions in the Phillies’ 7-6 win in 11 innings early in the season. Lincecum struck out 11, Hamels fanned 10. ... Burrell drew a standing ovation when he returned to Philly for the first time since helping the Phillies win the 2008 World Series. The cheers turned to boos when he homered in his first at-bat Aug. 17. Burrell homered the next game against the Phillies, too. ... Blanton beat SF in his one game against them. He did not pitch in the NLDS. ... Sanchez went 2-0 vs. the Phillies this season. ... Phillies manager Charlie Manuel picked Giants manager Bruce Bochy to be on his NL staff at the All-Star game in July. ... Games 4 and 5 are scheduled for twilight starts in San Francisco, never a good thing for hitters.

Mediate leads Frys.com Open

SAN MARTIN, Calif. — Rocco Mediate once flirted with a major victory over Tiger Woods. Now he’s happy being in contention no matter what day of the week.

“It was fun playing with a lead,” Mediate said after he made a hole-in-one on the par-3 third hole and shot a bogey-free 7-under 64 on Thursday to take the first-round lead in the Frys.com Open. “You can wait your whole life for this feeling!”

Paul Goydos, Bo Van Felt and Ryuji Imada opened with 65s, and John Mallinger, Michael Letzig, Shaun Micheel and Will MacKenzie had 66s. U.S. Ryder Cup player Rickie Fowler shot a 69.

The 46-year-old Mediate used a 6-iron on the 190-yard third hole for the hole-in-one, his second of the year. He also had an ace in the third round of the John Deere Classic in July.

Mediate lost a 19-hole playoff to Woods at the 2008 U.S. Open Championship and has not finished higher than ninth since.

“It’s all about putting,” Mediate said. “It has just been destroying me. I reach the fairway and hit the green but I three-putt three to five times a day and you’re not going to beat anybody doing that.”

He knew what he needed to do to correct the situation but it seemed to fail him until the past few weeks.

“No matter what I did, I could not make any putts,” Mediate said. “My attitude was horrible. I kept thinking I would hit the green but miss the putt. That’s not the way to think.”

LINCICOME SHOOTS 61 AT CVS/PHARMACY CHALLENGE
DANVILLE, Calif. — Brittany Lincicome shot an 11-under 61 on Thursday, recording the tour’s best round of the season on the first day of the CVS/pharmacy LPGA Challenge.

Lincicome had 11 birdies at the 6,185-yard Blackhawk Country Club, posting the second-lowest score in relation to par in tour history. The 61 also was a career best for Lincicome, who entered the week 62nd on the money list.

Wendy Ward was four shots back after a bogey-free 65. Moira Dunn had a 66 and Jin Young Pak, Michele Redman, Amy Hung and Katherine Hull were at 5 under following the first round.

Lincicome used her power off the tees and a soft touch around the greens to avoid trouble all afternoon, finishing with just 24 putts. Her lone mistake came on the par-5 No. 5, when she pushed her tee shot right into the rough and had to scramble to save par.

Lincicome set the course record and came within two shots of matching Annika Sorenstam’s LPGA Tour-record 13-under 59 at the Standard Register PING in 2001.

“The only time I looked at the scorecard was when we made the turn,” said Lincicome, who started her round on the back nine. “I was making everything. It was pretty crazy, even more myself. I was making 30-footers, 5-footers. Just one of those days where everything was going my way and I couldn’t do anything wrong.”

Waltrip snub felt personal, but voters say otherwise

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip, winner of 84 races and three championships on the track, lost a popularity contest among his peers that stung more than any other defeat in his illustrious career.

Snubbed by the NASCAR Hall of Fame voting committee in his campaign to be included in the second class, Waltrip was clearly hurt by his exclusion. The color drained from his face as he watched the five names called — David Pearson, Bobby Allison, Lee Petty, Ned Jarrett and Bud Moore — and although he gamely spun his chair away from the podium and toward the cameras to work an hour-long, live television program, he was wounded.

Waltrip took to Twitter immediately after leaving Wednesday’s announcement — “just having a small pity party right now,” he posted — and was still smarting a day later. Instead of celebrating his selection Thursday, he played golf with younger brother Michael.

“Thought I’d (be) busy today, oh well,” he wrote.

Nobody denies that Waltrip’s statistics are Hall of Fame worthy: Three championships, three runner-up finishes in the standings, five Coca-Cola 600s wins, one Southern 500 and one Daytona 500. And he’s tied with Allison for third on NASCAR’s career wins list.

But his name was checked on less than half of the 53 ballots even though many, Waltrip included, believed he was a shoo-in for the second class.

His exclusion sent a clear message that not everybody loves ol’ DW.

A polarizing driver because of his flamboyant personality and many feuds, he’s found the audience is equally divided in his second career as an analyst for Fox. He openly cheered for his younger brother to win the Daytona 500 in the network’s 2001 debut.

His “Boogity, Boogity, Boogity, let’s go racing boys!” scream at the start of every race has grown stale, and his outspokenness has angered many in the industry.

There’s also a prevailing sense that Waltrip turns the most mundane activities into a chance to promote himself, and no moment is not a good moment for the showman to ham it up for the cameras.

But is a style that rubs some people wrong enough to overshadow the substance of his glorious NASCAR career?

“Despite Boogity, Boogity, Boogity, the same reasons you would vote Ned Jarrett into the Hall should apply to Darrell Waltrip,” said voter Doug Rice, president of PRN.

Allegations may sack Favre's marketability

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. (AP) — Over 20 seasons as an NFL quarterback, Brett Favre has taken plenty of hits on the field.

Now his reputation is taking a hit, too.

The NFL is investigating the Deadspin website report that he allegedly sent below-the-waist naked photos of himself to a woman who worked for the New York Jets when he played for the team two years ago.

Favre has become one of America's most popular athletes by winning a Super Bowl, setting all kinds of passing and durability records and building an image as an everyday down-to-earth guy.

Just watch one of those Wrangler commercials, where he plays backyard pickup ball with a bunch of smiling and laughing guys while wearing a T-shirt, blue jeans and stubble.

Wrangler, arguably his highest-profile promotion, issued a statement Thursday saying "we are following the story like everyone else."

"We are not making any major decisions on our marketing program until more information is available," Wrangler spokesman Rick French said.

Even if Favre ultimately avoids punishment from the league, it's clear that this damage — fair or not — will be difficult to repair.

"It has certainly shifted to 'good family guy and one of us' to 'just like every other professional athlete' we can't trust," said sports marketing specialist Matt Delzell.

So will we still see Favre starring in television ads after he retires?

"I see it highly unlikely for the simple fact that the companies he endorses have hung their hat on his being a good-old-boy family guy in middle America," Delzell said in an interview from his Dallas-area office, where he's a director for the entertainment marketing agency Davie Brown Talent.

Favre has dodged all questions about the story, even when given opportunities to directly deny it's true. According to marketing and public relations analysts, the Minnesota Vikings quarterback has made the matter worse by not addressing it.

Asked after Minnesota's loss to the New York Jets on Monday night if the allegation has been an embarrassment, Favre said, "I am embarrassed about this football game."

When Tiger Woods tumbled from grace following revelations of his infidelity, he took months to acknowledge his behavior and apologize for it. Michael Gordon, the chief executive officer of Group Gordon, a corporate and crisis public relations outfit in New York, compared Favre's evasiveness on this issue to what happened with Woods.

"It looks like he's trying to dance around it, which is only creating more questions around him rather than fewer," said Gordon, whose firm works with public figures, sports organizations and a variety of others. "If he were more forthcoming it would seem less ominous, but it looks like he's trying to hide something. The people who have handled these situations well are the ones who come out honestly with the facts and tell a complete story so there are no more questions down the road."

Favre doesn't have near the global stature that Woods does, and they also differ in their background.

Part of Favre's attraction to fans was the way he faced up to his past problems and overcame persistent personal tragedies to succeed on the field. His otherworldly performance the day after his dad died of a heart attack was one of the NFL's most memorable games of the past decade.

"Tiger had a very carefully crafted pristine image that at least to the outside made him look like perfect," Gordon said. "With Favre, people are fans of his play but he's never had a perfect reputation."

Favre spent the summer before the 1996 season in a rehab clinic to treat his painkiller addiction, and he has revealed his frequent drinking and carousing early in his career. Both he and his wife, Deanna, have published tell-all books about their ups and downs.

They've been married 14 years.

Favre has had his detractors, whether people fed up with his waffling about playing and a perceived egotism behind it or simply Packers backers angry about his signing-with-the-Vikings betrayal. His popularity was widespread, however, transcending his days as a three-time NFL MVP in Green Bay. According to the league, his jersey was the third-best online seller on NFLShop.com over the period from April 1 through Sept. 30.

And according to the business analysts at Forbes.com, Favre made about $7 million last year alone from endorsements. He's done all kinds of advertisements over his career, from credit cards to those famed blue jeans.

Favre also was recently featured by Sears in a spot poking fun at his indecisive tendencies as he pretends to hem and haw over which TV he wants to buy. Spokesman Tom Aiello said the series was intended solely for the 2009 season and that the company is not working with him currently.

QB CAROUSEL

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press writer

Max Who? Caleb What?

Jimmy Clausen and Colt McCoy. Todd Collins and Charlie Batch. Ryan Fitzpatrick and Bruce Gradkowski.

NFL teams have learned that going deep now refers to more than Andre Johnson running fly patterns. The days of carrying two quarterbacks on a roster are just about gone.

Sure, there are still the Peyton Mannings and Drew Brees and Philip Rivers who are in for just about every play — when the games mean something, at least. But given the rate of injury, carrying only two quarterbacks is a luxury that has lost its luster. And sensibility.

Hey, even Brett Favre is talking about possibly missing a start because of elbow tendinitis, and the last time that happened was, like, never.

Although the number of starters for the 32 teams a month into the season has barely risen — from 40 in 2009 to 41 — that will change when Ben Roethlisberger comes off his four-game suspension and takes snaps for Pittsburgh on Sunday against Cleveland. Plus, the Browns likely will start McCoy, the rookie from Texas who is third on the depth chart behind Jake Delhomme and Seneca Wallace, but first on the health chart.

If Jay Cutler has a recurrence of concussion symptoms, his replacement might not be journeyman Collins, who threw four interceptions in a win at Carolina as Cutler recovered, but Caleb Hanie. Yep, Hanie, now in his third season from Colorado State who has thrown all of 14 passes in his NFL career.

Through five weeks, 11 teams have put backup quarterbacks on the field for significant action. Two of those, Jacksonville and Tennessee, were temporary, with David Garrard and Vince Young reclaiming their starting roles and apparently prospering from a brief stint on the sideline.

Four teams — Arizona, Oakland, Carolina and Buffalo — went to second-stringers after the No. 1 QB flopped. Indeed, the Bills not only benched Trent Edwards for Fitzpatrick, they then cut Edwards and he wound up as Garrard's caddy in Jacksonville.

Oakland made such a big deal about acquiring Jason Campbell on draft day from Washington, yet he got yanked after two starts for Gradkowski.

Then Gradkowski damaged his right shoulder and Campbell was back behind center.

"It's been a long year already for me," Campbell said. "It started back from the time I was traded. Starting the season off, I was putting too much pressure on myself to make all the plays because of the high hopes for me this season instead of just relaxing and playing the game and let the game come to you. I tried to force the game. That's one of the things I learned over the weeks when I was sitting out and doing the self-evaluation on myself and getting to learn the offense a little better."

Big Ben can do more with less Sunday

As long as he doesn't overthink it, this should be easy.

Ben Roethlisberger returns to the starting lineup Sunday in Pittsburgh somehow still leading a charmed existence. He's back after from a four-game suspension that Commissioner Roger Goodell dished out for a booze-fueled birthday party during which Roethlisberger embarrassed himself, his family, team, town and the NFL.

And remember: Had charges been filed, things could have turned out much worse. But Roethlisberger has been nothing lately if not lucky.

Back in March, when police were investigating the second allegation of sexual misconduct against him in less than two years, Tiger Woods' escapades were still dominating the news cycle. This week, Brett Favre's alleged shenanigans pushed Roethlisberger's return so far down the page readers would have to scan the small type in "Transactions" to know he was even eligible.

Better still, the Steelers roared out of the starting gate at 3-1, having rediscovered their running game and relying on a defense that never went anywhere. On top of that, a well-rested Roethlisberger makes his 2010 debut against a Cleveland team that's overmatched, beat up and starting Colt McCoy at quarterback. He's never thrown a pass in a real NFL game, let alone against the Steelers' heat-seeking blitz packages.

So the last thing Roethlisberger needs to do is call much attention to himself. But just in case, Pittsburgh coach Mike Tomlin should close his pregame speech by looking straight into his quarterback's eyes and saying, "Just don't screw this up."

That shouldn't be a problem. While only Roethlisberger knows whether he's a changed man, at least he's had the good sense to lay low.

The Steelers coach, old-school ownership and fan base were plenty aggravated in March, but by the time summer rolled around, Roethlisberger's transgressions were largely forgotten. He got a warm reception during training camp and the exhibition season, and he's done nothing to cool it off since.

He's piled up extra-credit hours of community service and gone out of his way in the locker room to cultivate teammates who fell outside his previously tight circle of friends. Roethlisberger has even been saying all the right things — about chewing his fingernails to the nubs while watching games, and how once he gets back at the controls, "We don't want to force anything."

Jim Litke

"That," he added, "is going to be key for me."

Besides, it's not as though Steelers fans are expecting much, at least not right away. After a month of watching Charlie "He's Still Around?" Batch and Dennis "Who?" Dixon impersonate a quarterback, most of what Roethlisberger has to do is hand the ball to Rashard Mendenhall and get out of the way.

The day Goodell announced the suspension, the question was whether the Steelers would be competitive without him. Now the question is whether adding Roethlisberger makes them good enough to outdistance the Ravens and the rest of the tough AFC and go deep into the postseason.

The impulse might be to try to prove that Sunday, given the Browns' struggling secondary and the fact that the Steelers' passing game has nowhere to go but up. They're languishing near the bottom of the ratings and Roethlisberger is not only healthy and rested, he's coming off the best throwing season of his career.

Yet the 4,328 yards he compiled last season weren't enough to get the Steelers into the playoffs. So far, their success emphasizing running and defense suggests that even with Roethlisberger back, striking the right balance will be more important than ever.

"We're going to take what they give us," Roethlisberger said this week, referring to the Browns, suggesting he knows the party line. "If they're loading up the box, we will try to throw it. If they're sitting back, we will run the ball."

Then again, Tomlin must know that impulse control was never Roethlisberger's strong suit. How much that has changed might have a lot to say about how much slack the coach allows him. Either way, Tomlin sounded prepared to handle that for him.

"We've got one standard here and it's not graded on a curve: The standard is winning," he said in a midweek radio interview.

"Guys like Ben — competitors — playing football is like breathing to them. I really think he's going to get back in and get about his business. That's what he does, what he loves. He'd do it for nothing."

"So," Tomlin concluded, "I'm a little less concerned about that than one might think."

Female reporter wants out of NFL locker rooms

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. — A Mexican television reporter who said she felt uncomfortable in the New York Jets locker room last month is returning to work and plans to conduct her interviews anywhere but there.

Ines Sainz, of TV Azteca, will be back on the job next week and said she suggested to the NFL that, from now on, she talk to players on the field or on the sideline.

"I'm not going into the locker rooms anymore," she said Thursday at a news conference near Universal Studios. "It's not a good place right now for me. I don't want to be in there."

Sainz said she is scheduled to do interviews with the Pittsburgh Steelers next week, followed by visits to the Jets and New England Patriots.

She said she took a break after the Jets assignment.

"I need to wait one month to work again because I don't want to be the focus," she said. "I'm not looking for that kind of publicity. It affects my career and development in the States."

A few Jets players made catcalls as Sainz waited with two male co-workers to interview quarterback Mark Sanchez, who is of Mexican descent. An assistant coach also seemed to deliberately throw footballs to players near where Sainz was standing on the sideline during practice.

Sainz was wearing tight jeans and a form-fitting white blouse, which triggered public criticism. On Thursday, she wore a black-and-lime green sequined mini skirt and white blouse.

"I like to look good, but that in no way makes me any less dedicated to the sports journalism world," she wrote to Goodell. "I'm proud of being a woman and I'm not shy about hiding it. However, this in no way makes me any less of a professional."

RODGERS CLEARED AFTER CONCUSSION, HOPES TO PLAY

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Quarterback Aaron Rodgers was cleared by doctors and returned to practice for the Green Bay Packers on Thursday. Assuming he doesn't have a setback in his recovery from a concussion, he is optimistic he will start Sunday's game against Miami.

Rodgers practiced on a limited basis Thursday, taking the majority of snaps during the portion of practice that was open to the media.

Packers coach Mike McCarthy said Rodgers completed all the steps in the NFL's protocol to return to the field after a head injury, but the team will monitor his progress before naming him the starter against the Dolphins.

BROWNS' QB MCCOY WORKING TOWARD DEBUT

BEREA, Ohio — Browns coach Eric Mangini was pleased with Colt McCoy's first practice as a potential starter and said his lean is "more pronounced" to the rookie quarterback making his NFL debut Sunday in Pittsburgh.

McCoy has risen up the depth chart following injuries to Jake Delhomme and Seneca

BRANCH TAKES PAY CUT WITH PATRIOTS

FOXBOROUGH, Mass. — Wide receiver Deion Branch has restructured his contract to take less money from the New England Patriots.

Branch, reacquired Monday in a trade with the Seattle Seahawks, had been scheduled to make $5.47 million this season and $5.95 in 2011. He said Thursday his contract had been restructured but did not give details. His agent, Jason Chayut, did not return a call seeking comment.

Branch has two years left on a six-year, $39 million contract he signed with Seattle after being traded in 2006 by New England, where he spent four seasons. ESPN reported that his salary for 2010 remains unchanged, but his 2011 salary is now closer to the $2.15 million that wide receiver Wes Welker is scheduled to be paid. Branch also can earn $2 million in incentives, ESPN reported.

The restructuring makes more money available for the Patriots to pursue a contract extension for Welker.

O'Donnell dodges evangelical issues in Senate race

By Ben Evans
Associated Press writer

NEWARK, Del. (AP) — Suddenly, Christine O'Donnell doesn't want to talk about values and religion.

The Republican Senate nominee from Delaware, who said four years ago that she heard the "audible voice of God" encouraging her to run for office, is shying away from publicly stating the evangelical views that built her career as a television pundit and conservative activist.

Trailing badly in the polls, O'Donnell has bobbed and weaved recently on previously bold and provocative positions that risk alienating the all-important centrist voting bloc in politically moderate Delaware.

"What I believe is irrelevant," she said under the bright lights of a nationally televised debate Wednesday when asked if she still believes evolution is a myth and schools should be teaching creationism as science.

The tea party favorite is walking a delicate line, trying to avoid a third straight losing Senate campaign by maintaining the enthusiasm of her evangelical base while not scaring off the centrists who could see such views as extreme.

On gays in the military, she said Wednesday that the decision should be left to the Pentagon — declining to state her personal view but making clear that "I don't think that Congress should be forcing a social agenda onto our military."

Similarly, she characterized her opposition to embryonic stem cell research as more of a scientific objection than a religious one, arguing that adult stem cells are more valuable for research, a view not held by the many scientists who say embryonic stem cells are the most versatile and promising. She also gave an indirect answer about her opposition to abortion even in the case of rape or incest, and evangelical activist, she has characterized homosexuality as a psychological disorder and called evolution a myth. She once said her opposition to using human embryos in stem cell research was the reason she ran for Senate the first time in 2006.

She told The News Journal of Wilmington during that campaign that she was initially reluctant to get into politics because she knew it would require diluting her views.

"But as someone who prays about every decision I make," she said, "I felt like God was leading me in the other direction."

She added: "During the primary, I heard the audible voice of God."

As recently as February, she emphasized the importance of values issues as she rallied conservatives to back her upstart primary campaign against moderate Republican Rep. Mike Castle, a former governor who was heavily favored to win the GOP nomination.

"He's got a horrible voting record when it comes to social issues," she said at the Conservative Political Action Conference in an interview with the conservative blog Liberty Pundits. "And many of those social issues — whether it's marriage, whether it's life — (President) Obama has been very aggressive with his very liberal agenda. We need people who are not going to be wishy-washy about that."

O'Donnell's stunning upset over Castle has drawn strong national interest because it is seen as a key test of tea party strength in a general election. Like other tea party-backed candidates, O'Donnell has softened her rhetoric, and not just on social issues.

AFGHANISTAN Head of Afghan Peace Council says Taliban is ready to talk

KABUL — The head of Afghanistan's new peace council said Thursday that he believes that some members of the Taliban are ready to negotiate, while still describing contacts as in their early stages.

"We are taking our first steps," Burhanuddin Rabbani, a former Afghan president, said in a news conference in Kabul.

"I believe there are people among the Taliban that have a message that they want to talk," he said. "They are ready."

Rabbani's comments echoed those of other Afghan and U.S. officials in Kabul who have said that members of the Taliban, including senior leaders or those purporting to represent them, have met with the Afghan government to discuss potential negotiations, despite the insurgent group's public denials of such meetings.

Some officials in Kabul have described the contacts, which stretch back years but appear to have intensified recently, as remaining scattered and sporadic. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton told journalists in Brussels, Belgium, on Thursday that it was too early to tell whether the Afghan reconciliation process would work.

"We're not yet ready to make any judgments about whether or not any of this will bear fruit on the reconciliation front," said Clinton, who was attending a NATO meeting of foreign and defense ministers.

ARKANSAS Democrats latch onto GOP tax ideas in final blitz

LITTLE ROCK — Democrats desperate for a political game-changer in the final days of the campaign are raising alarms about Republican ideas for reforming the nation's tax code, arguing that their plans will roil middle-class families.

Most Republicans, wary of delving into treacherous complexities of the issue — especially so close to Election Day, are trying to change the subject.

Trailing in dozens of races, Democrats have launched an advertising campaign over GOP proposals for tax reform in several competitive House and Senate races. The ads accuse GOP candidates of supporting a steep national sales tax, but ignore the fact that proponents would eliminate many of the taxes that Americans pay now, such as levies on income and payroll.

In Arkansas, struggling Democratic Sen. Blanche Lincoln is attacking her opponent's support for a national sales tax that even its backers acknowledge has little chance of becoming law.

"John Boozman's excited about putting a 23 percent national sales tax on everything you buy," the ad says, showing images of items ranging from a teddy bear to a lawnmower. "Calling it a 'fair tax' is like putting a dress on a pig."

Boozman, a five-term congressman from northwest Arkansas, has co-sponsored legislation that would replace the federal income tax with a national sales tax. During a debate with Lincoln in August, Boozman said he was excited about the idea of eliminating the Internal Revenue Service but stopped short of wholeheartedly endorsing the sales tax idea.

NEBRASKA Senator seeks talks in Congress on fetal pain

OMAHA — Bolstered by the passage of unique abortion restrictions in his home state of Nebraska, U.S. Sen. Mike Johanns is pushing for a new federal discussion of the notion of fetal pain.

Although doctors are at odds about when during development a fetus can feel pain, it's an issue that could change the way abortions are regulated in the United States.

The Nebraska law that takes effect Friday bans abortions after 20 weeks of pregnancy based on the idea of fetal pain, a departure from the standard of viability — when the fetus could survive outside the womb, generally considered to be between 22 and 24 weeks — established by the 1973 landmark ruling in Roe v. Wade.

Legislation recently reintroduced by Johanns doesn't go that far. It would require women seeking abortions after 20 weeks to be told the fetus could feel pain and allow them to request anesthesia for the fetus. The measure was first proposed by Kansas Sen. Sam Brownback in 2004 and has been reintroduced every year since.

"How does anybody — pro-life or pro-choice — oppose this?" asked Johanns, a Republican. "If the baby feels pain ... then it is an issue of human compassion."

Critics say the proposal is based on false science.

Vicki Saporta, president of the National Abortion Federation, a group representing North American abortion providers, said such legislation "keeps resurfacing but it has not moved forward — and should not move forward — since there is no credible scientific evidence to support the bill."

MEXICO Alleged chat between lawmaker, capo leaked

MEXICO CITY — A radio station broadcast what it described as a telephone conversation in which a federal lawmaker and one of Mexico's biggest drug lords express support for each other.

W Radio said the alleged conversation took place last year between lawmaker Cesar Godoy Toscano and La Familia cartel leader Servando Gomez, known as "La Tuta." In it, Godoy and Gomez express support for each other and discuss bringing a reporter.

Godoy represents the western state of Michoacan, La Familia's stronghold. He already faces federal charges for allegedly protecting the cartel but has immunity from arrest because he is a congressman.

He was one of 36 people in Michoacan — including politicians, mayors, prosecutors, police and judges — accused last year of ties to La Familia, known for beheading rivals and bold attacks on soldiers and police.

Chile miners start new lives, adjust to freedom

By Michael Warren
Associated Press writer

COPIAPO, Chile — The Chilean miners began their unfamiliar new lives as national heroes Thursday and got a taste of what awaits them outside the hospital doors — a deluge of TV producers, writers and even soccer teams all desperate for a piece of their story.

A day after their epic rescue, still wearing the oddly fashionable sunglasses that protected them from the bright light when they were hoisted from 2,000 feet underground, the men posed in hospital bathrobes for a group photo with President Sebastian Pinera.

Unity helped the men, known as "los 33," survive for 69 days underground, including more than two weeks when no one knew whether they were alive.

But the moment they walk out the hospital doors, they'll go beyond the reach of a government operation that has cared for, fed and protected them in a carefully coordinated campaign to ensure each of them would be in top condition.

"Now they're going to have to find their equilibrium and take care of themselves," the hospital chaplain, the Rev. Luis Lopez, told The Associated Press.

They got quite the preview Thursday of what lies ahead. On their first full day of fresh air, the miners were probably the 33 most in-demand people on the planet.

A Greek mining company wants to bring them to the sunny Aegean islands, competing with rainy Chiloe in Chile's southern archipelago, whose tourism bureau wants them to stay for a week.

Hearing that miner Edison Pena jogged regularly in the tunnels below the collapsed rock, the New York City marathon invited him to participate in next month's race.

What about a reality show? Some other kind of TV work? Why not, said television writer-producer and Oscar nominee Lionel Chetwynd, who said he expected projects were being pitched around Hollywood within hours of the rescue.

"Television is a quick-response medium," he said, joking. "In fact, I think I'll call my agent when we get off the phone."

Doctors said three of the men could be discharged from the hospital as early as Thursday evening, with others following Friday and over the weekend.

Meanwhile, the families and friends of the men of the San Jose mine were organizing welcome-home parties, street celebrations, big dinners and even a few weddings, while trying at the same time to hold off the onslaught of demands from the media to learn more about how they survived.

The government promised six months of psychological treatment and help with medical needs. It made sure each has a bank account only he can operate, and coached them on dealing with the media.

The rescue team even asked Guinness World Records to honor all 33 with the record for longest time trapped underground, rather than the last miner out, Luis Urzua. Guinness spokeswoman Jamie Panas said the organization was studying the question.

The men certainly have an extraordinary story to tell. No one before them had been trapped so long and survived. Their rescue, one by one throughout the day Wednesday in a narrow capsule, set car horns and vuvuzelas blasting around Chile.

At least one of the men kept a diary of life down below. Victor Segovia, a 48-year-old electrician and father of five, scribbled down so many details during their time underground that he had to ask the crews to send down more pencils and paper. He was the 15th miner pulled out.

In Lebanon, Ahmadinejad's fiery rhetoric targets Israel

By Alia Ibrahim and Joel Greenberg
The Washington Post

BINT JBEIL, Lebanon — In a fiery speech two miles from Lebanon's border with Israel on Thursday, Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad promised a cheering crowd that the "Zionists will disappear" and that "occupied Palestine will be liberated."

On the second day of a visit to Lebanon, Ahmadinejad traveled to this border town in the southern Shiite heartland, which was hard hit by fighting during Israel's 2006 war against Iranian-backed Hezbollah guerrillas. Iran contributed generously to the cost of rebuilding the town and other Lebanese communities devastated by the war, and the Iranian president used his trip to the border area to voice support for the fight against Israel.

A crowd of thousands waving flags of Iran and Hezbollah greeted Ahmadinejad in the stadium in Bint Jbeil, where he said that the local people had given Israel "the taste of bitter defeat."

"You proved that your

resistance, your patience, your steadfastness, were stronger than all the tanks and warplanes of the enemy," Ahmadinejad told the throng.

"The entire world should know that Zionists will disappear," Ahmadinejad said as a pair of Israeli helicopters flew along the border within sight of the stadium. "Today the Zionist occupiers have no choice but to surrender to reality and return to their homes and countries of origin."

"Rest assured that occupied Palestine will be liberated from the filth of the occupation by the power of the resistance and through the faith of the resistance," the Iranian leader said, bringing a roar from the crowd.

Ahmadinejad went on to lay a memorial wreath in the village of Qana, where an Israeli airstrike in the 2006 war killed 28 civilians and an artillery shelling in 1996 killed more than 100 people sheltering in a U.N. compound.

The Iranian president's visit raised the prospect that the position of pro-Western factions in Lebanon would be further eroded, and U.S. and Israeli officials have called it a provocation.

Boasting sophisticated style, precision German engineering and Carefree Maintenance, Volkswagen has taken the wraps off the all-new 2011 Jetta sedan. Unveiled recently in Times Square, New York, the 2011 Jetta offers best-in-class rear legroom and features clean lines, refined side architecture and premium style combined with Volkswagen's trademark precision German engineering. The all-new 2011 Jetta has been completely overhauled, inside and out. Its new wheelbase and exterior length are significantly bigger than its predecessor resulting in superior performance, more space and greater comfort. On the front end of the car, the design is defined by prominent horizontal lines. The high-gloss black radiator grille and the cars trapezoidal headlights help create a distinct look. Under this is the fully painted, cleanly designed bumper. Below that, another cooling air intake and tray-shaped front spoiler help give the car a sporty finish. The upper front end section shows a powerful transition from the v-shaped engine hood to the fenders on the sides; the shoulder section provides dynamic and muscular styling. Harmonized surfaces and sporty shoulders dominate the rear section. Powerful in illumination and visually distinctive, the taillights are split into two sections, extending on either side from the fender into the tailgate. The all-new Jetta also features integrated turn signal indicators. Offered in S, SE, SEL, TDI and GLI trim levels, power for the all-new Jetta is provided by one of three available engines including: a 2.0L turbo-diesel direct injection (TDI) Clean Diesel featuring common rail injection, 2.0L four-cylinder, and a 2.5L five-cylinder. A 200 hp 2.0L TSI prime-mover will be introduced in early 2011.

Torque is communicated to the asphalt via the standard five-speed manual gearbox. The turbo-diesel motor is bolted to a six-speed manual gearbox. A six-speed automatic transmission will also be available with each engine version as an option. On the new 2.0-liter TDI Volkswagen will offer the six-speed DSG (Direct Shift Gearbox) one of the most advanced and efficient automatic transmission systems in the world. Inside the passenger cabin, a common conceptual thread throughout the car is the intuitive controls and well-arranged instruments. Along with a newly designed steering wheel, drivers will also enjoy a more comfortably and ergonomically designed gear shift grip. Further up on the center console are the newly designed and intuitive controls for climate, radio and radio-navigation systems. This console section is also slightly inclined toward the driver for ideal alignment of the cockpit. Additionally, the round instruments are now in a more optimal viewing range with the multifunction display (trip computer) located between them. A key benefit of the extended wheelbase is a more comfortable layout of the five-seat rear seating area. Legroom is now a class-leading 38.1 inches, a 2.7-inch gain from the previous model. The rear bench seatback is split 60/40 and folds, increasing the cars versatility. The trunk can also be opened from inside the car by a remote unlock switch. Up to six airbags (driver and front passenger airbags, side airbags in front and side curtain airbags in front and rear) are also part of the equipment package.

IF OCTOBER 15 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Hold your horses for a few weeks. The stars aren't favorable for making important changes to your career, business or finances, and you may be frustrated if you try to initiate something important. June is a better time to make major decisions, as you might offend the very people you hope to impress right now. Everything starts clicking in March and your ambitions can be realized in through hard work and endless energy. Major projects can be safely started in June when you have the greatest assistance from the world at large and added wisdom. That is a fabulous month to lay down long-term plans or to make improvements.

HOROSCOPE

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The red, red robin goes bob, bob bobbing along. Actually, it might be the wrong time of year for robins but you can get the right idea for today if you hum that song. Live, love, laugh and be happy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You don't need to impress your true friends. The problem is that you might be hobnobbing with strangers who are not bosom buddies. It might be a good idea to polish your shoes and comb your hair.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Pay attention to the local pecking order. You may be forced to associate with the kind of people who don't appreciate all of your finest traits or those who won't let you spread your wings.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): In an effort to treat everyone fairly, you may be left holding the bag. Just as you wouldn't take advantage of casual friendships, don't let friends take advantage of you. Insist on reasonable rewards and limits.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Get your career in gear. Joining a professional group or signing up for a seminar might add sparkle to your resume or simply spur fresh ideas and enthusiasm. Detached friendships might widen your horizons.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Soar with high spirits. You can juggle several balls at once without tiring and even ask for more. The love of your life will be thrilled by your stamina so plan on late night romantic meetings.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): They say you shouldn't cry over spilled milk, but reserve the right to do so if you want to. Without tears the eyes would dry out. It isn't always pleasant to cry, but without the ability to cry you could be blind.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It is necessary to be compassionate. You have an inner compass that often guides you safely through the most difficult financial and business exchanges. Be fair even it might hurt a little bit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Link up with like-minded individuals. Maintain a respectful distance when dealing with new connections and contacts, as they are likely to remain casual acquaintances rather than become bosom buddies.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The guy who said it isn't whether you win or lose, but how you play the game did not have his entire life savings at stake. You can be entirely ruthless when it comes down to essential survival.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Remember to pay back and to pay forward all favors and assistance. A tit-for-tat approach creates harmony. You can enjoy mutually beneficial associations if everyone pulls their own weight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Necessity might be the mother of invention, but it is also the father of convention. If you quit fighting city hall over every painstaking technicality, you may earn the respect and credibility you crave.

Breaking news
magicvalley.com

Today is Friday, Oct. 15, the 288th day of 2010. There are 77 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On Oct. 15, 1860, 11-year-old Grace Bedell of Westfield, N.Y., wrote a letter to presidential candidate Abraham Lincoln, suggesting he could improve his appearance by growing a beard. (The rest, as they say, is history.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1858, the seventh and final debate between senatorial candidates Abraham Lincoln and Stephen Douglas took place in Alton, Ill.

In 1917, Dutch dancer Mata Hari, convicted of spying for the Germans, was executed by a French firing squad outside Paris.

In 1928, the German dirigible Graf Zeppelin landed in Lakehurst, N.J., completing its first commercial flight across the Atlantic.

In 1940, Charles Chaplin's first all-talking comedy, "The Great Dictator," a lampoon of Adolf Hitler, opened in New York.

In 1945, the former premier of Vichy France, Pierre Laval, was executed for treason.

In 1946, Nazi war criminal Hermann Goering fatally poisoned himself hours before he was to have been executed.

In 1964, it was announced that Soviet leader Nikita S. Khrushchev had been removed from office.

In 1969, peace demonstrators staged activities across the country as part of a "moratorium" against the Vietnam War.

In 1976, in the first debate of its kind between vice-presidential nominees, Democrat Walter F. Mondale and Republican Bob Dole faced off in Houston.

In 1990, Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev was named the recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize.

Ten years ago: President Bill Clinton left Washington for emergency talks in Egypt with Israeli and Arab leaders. New York Times movie and drama critic Vincent Canby died at age 76.

Five years ago: Iraqis voted to approve a constitution. A crowd that had gathered to protest a neo-Nazi march in Toledo, Ohio, turned violent, prompting the mayor to declare a state of emergency.

One year ago: A report of a 6-year-old Colorado boy trapped inside a runaway helium balloon captivated the nation before the boy, Falcon Heene, was found safe at home in what turned out to be a hoax. (Falcon's parents served up to a month in jail.)

Avail. for Adoption:

Donations are always greatly appreciated with so many mouths to feed.

Cricket is a black and white Labrador Shepherd mix puppy. She is about 8-weeks-old and is black with a little white. Cricket came into the shelter with 2 of her sisters she was abandoned with. She is very cute!

Molly is a tan and black Labrador shepherd mix. She is about 8-weeks-old. Molly was rescued and brought into the shelter with two of her litter mates. She is a rolly-pollie butter ball. Very cute!

Sierra is a tan and black shepherd mix. She is 8-weeks-old. She came to the shelter with her sisters cricket and molly. She is very cute and snuggly.

Maddie is an adorable 7 week old lab border collie mix puppy. She had been abandoned and was brought to the shelter by a citizen who found her. Maddie is black with a little white on her chest and paws. She is very cute and would make a wonderful addition to a family with kids.

Misty is a darling boxer/pit bull mix. She is mostly black with a little white. Misty does have a docked tail and is very affectionate. She came into the shelter dragging a leash with the name Misty on it, so we kept that name. Come meet her today.

Mick is an 8-month-old male red heeler. Mick is a great dog with lots of personality! He loves to romp and play with Misty and does well with kids. Mick is so handsome! He is very observant and will cock his head to one side if there is something curious. Come meet him today!

Adoption fee is $75, inclds spaying/neutering and the first set of vaccinations.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Truth, like a torch, the more it's shook it shines."

— Sir William Hamilton

In four spades (reached after South's strong jump overcall of the pre-empt), West led the heart ace and a second heart to East's king. It looks as if you need a 3-3 diamond break, or else must guess which opponent has ace doubleton. But the auction suggests that West may well hold four diamonds headed by the ace. Can you see what you can do if that is the case?

Provided that East's diamond doubleton includes the jack, 10 or nine, and that East holds one of the outstanding club honors, your spade game can succeed.

Ruff the heart, draw trumps, and play the diamond queen. West will win and can do little else but return a low diamond. (Everything else, except perhaps a deceptive club queen, looks worse.) You now duck the diamond to East. If he returns a diamond, the suit is 3-3 and you can discard a club from your hand. A heart lead gives you a ruff and sluff, so the best he can do is broach the club suit, thus enabling you to play that suit for no losers when the honors are divided.

Note that if either defender is forced to open up the club suit, he should do so by leading his honor, thus giving declarer the losing option of playing him for both honors.

And one final point: West should have switched to a trump at trick two. Now declarer cannot ruff dummy's last heart except by using the diamond king prematurely.

ANSWER: In this sequence I like to use takeout doubles from both sides of the table, and your hand qualifies for that action. You have not guaranteed four spades. Indeed, with an unsuitable hand for a takeout double, you might bid two spades yourself since partner knows from your failure to transfer that you do not have five spades. But your partner will bid on the assumption that you do have four spades.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 23-year-old woman who has been helping to raise my three adorable godchildren over the last few years. Their mother is also 23. She became pregnant with her oldest when she was 15. She's a young single mother, unprepared for the full responsibility, so I have stepped in.

When they were babies, we would take turns rocking them all night. I take them to the doctor's when they are sick - with or without their mom. I helped select which schools they attend. Through the years I have been there every day, waking them in the morning, taking them to school, putting them to bed, etc.

I am now being married and have slightly reduced my day-to-day role, although I am still in many ways the "other parent." I get criticized for this all the time. I am constantly being told, "They are not your children. You shouldn't be doing this." Even my future in-laws have said it.

I don't know how to respond. I love the children very much, as if they were my own. I can't let them suffer for their mother's numerous mistakes. I'd appreciate any advice you can give me.

- GODMOTHER OF THREE IN NEW ENGLAND

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR GODMOTHER: May I begin by asking, "Where is their MOTHER?" Where are the grandparents? Three children, no father(s) - who is supporting them? You are a caring angel to have stepped in to the extent that you have, but why isn't their mother around to put them to bed at night, wake them in the morning, and see that they get to the doctor when they are so sick they need one? Something is seriously out of kilter.

In the not-too-distant future you will have children of your own to care for. Husbands need a certain amount of care and nurturing, too. It will be impossible for you to continue to be as involved as you have been in your godchildren's lives. You are doing the right thing by transitioning away, and you must continue to do so. Much as you love them, your godchildren are their mother's responsibility, and you have already done more than you should have been expected (or asked) to do.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I had a troubled marriage. He was a good father and provider, and I respected him for that. But he did not respect me. He constantly blamed and criticized me for his many emotional problems. After I told him I was leaving him, he committed suicide.

My problem is, our adult children blame me for his death. I don't want to bad-mouth their father or tell them the unpleasant details of our marriage, but they don't know the whole story.

I have had lots of professional counseling and my kids have had some, but they refuse to attend any more sessions. Should I just continue to do the best I can and hope they can be more forgiving as they mature, or should I tell them my side of the story?

- DOING THE BEST I CAN

DEAR DOING: Your children should have been told the whole story while you were together in counseling. If you allow them to continue in their belief that you caused their father's death, their anger will only continue to grow. If possible, that important conversation should be held with the help of a mediator. Because they refuse to see a therapist, I'm recommending your religious adviser.
