THE YEAR OF THE FENDER BENDER

DREW NASH/Times-News

A two-vehicle accident snarls the intersection of Falls Avenue and Quincy Street on Aug. 18 in Twin Falls.

One byproduct of Twin Falls road construction: fewer severe wrecks

By Bradley Guire ♦ Times-News writer

Delays, dirt, gridlock, asphalt and orange cones: there must be road work going on in Twin Falls.

While the city has seen its major thoroughfares go through their share of widening, re-paving or whatever else needed to be done, Twin Falls police are having a difficult time finding a trend in where most auto collisions occur in the city.

"There's not one I can see," said Staff Sgt. Dennis Pullin after looking over five years of data. "Until construction is over and we have a few years under our belt, it's hard to see."

In recent years, Blue Lakes Boulevard was refinished on the north side of town, Pole Line Road was widened considerably west of Blue Lakes and Washington Street has received a new drainage system plus widening. All of these projects have diverted commuters from their regular routes.

The number of crashes on Blue Lakes during the peak construction period — March 1 to Aug. 31 — increased from 152 in 2009 to 186 this year, while crashes on Washington fell from 95 in 2009 to 36 through the same time frame this year. That was to be expected as northbound and southbound traffic was re-routed away from Washington during this year's construction projects. The opposite was true in 2009, when more drivers traveled northbound or southbound on Washington to avoid Blue Lakes construction.

Two statistics that police like in particular are that there were zero fatal crashes in construction zones over the past five years and fewer construction-zone wrecks resulted in injury this year.

"The wrecks have increased, but they're less severe," said Officer J.P. O'Donnell. "There are more

TRAFFIC IN TWIN FALLS

The City of Twin Falls' major thoroughfares have seen a lot of construction and upgrades during the past three years. This year, work began on Washington Street and Pole Line Road. In 2009, Blue Lakes Boulevard underwent upgrades. Here's a look at how automobile crash statistics were affected by the constant re-routing of the Magic Valley's largest city. The following crash information was reported between March 1 and Aug. 31 of each year, when construction was at its highest.

No-sort recycling heads to T.F. Council for possible vote

City estimates overall $2 increase in monthly bills

Times-News

Round two of the debate over whether to expand and incentivize Twin Falls' city recycling plan — at the cost of $.61 a month — is set for tonight's Twin Falls City Council Meeting.

Since last week's public hearing on the proposal, where the entire handful of speaking citizens denounced a $1.48 per month hike, the estimated cost has declined. The program, handled through RecycleBank, would create a no-sort recycling system where participating residents would be able to earn an estimated $7 to $10 in coupons each month. It would also expand Twin Falls' recycling program to include plastics. The

This year's electorate: Older, whiter, more conservative

By Craig Gilbert
Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

MILWAUKEE — If the polls are any guide, the 2 million or more Wisconsinites who turn out to vote Nov. 2 could be one of the most conservative electorates this state has seen in decades.

Things could change of course, and a late surge of interest in the election by Democrats could close the so-called "enthusiasm gap" between the parties.

But one of the most striking trends in surveys in Wisconsin and nationally is that conservatives are outnumbering moderates among likely voters — a reversal of the voting mix in past elections.

Whether that pattern holds on Election Day, many pollsters and political strategists agree that the 2010 electorate will feature a different blend of voters — older, whiter, more conservative — than turned out in the 2008 presidential race or even in the last mid-term election in 2006.

"At this point, it looks like it will be much more conservative, certainly than four years ago and probably going back a longer way," says Michael Dimock, associate director of the nonpartisan Pew Research Center.

"It's the Republicans that have gone through the roof. Conservatives are so fired up. They think this election really matters. That's a huge deal in a midterm, because most people don't."

— Michael Dimock, associate director of the nonpartisan Pew Research Center

Some of the reasons are entirely predictable: Turn-out normally drops 15 or 20 points from presidential to mid-term elections, and that dropoff is typically steeper among younger, minority and first-time voters, all of whom boosted the Democrats in 2008.

"Part of the surge Democrats enjoyed in the last couple of elections came from younger voters and from poorer voters, and they're going to be dropping out of the (mid-term) electorate in more substantial portions," says political scientist Gary Jacobson of the University of California-San Diego.

But as Jacobson notes, Democrats are fighting not just history but an unfriendly political climate. Independent voters have swung against the party. Republicans have expressed more interest in voting this fall than Democrats. And the public overall has moved rightward, polls suggest.

Gallup shows 43 percent of Wisconsinites calling themselves conservative, up from 38 percent last year. Nationally, Gallup shows 42 percent of Americans calling themselves conservative — the highest figure it has recorded since it first asked the question in 1992. Pew also shows conservatives moving past moderates as a group.

What does it all mean for the two parties?

program is only available to those in single-family homes.

The City Council will begin its regular meeting at 5:30 p.m. in the City Council Chambers, 305 Third Ave. East, Twin Falls. The public hearing on an increase to utility rates for water, sewer and sanitation — which includes the recycling proposal — is scheduled for 6 p.m. The city council will have the option of voting on the proposal after the public hearing.

Other aspects of the resolution include a 3.5-percent increase to monthly sewer rates and increases to water service fees. City staff projects an overall $2.01 a month increase to residential utility bills.

The city is proposing increasing the water service fee from $30 to $200 to discourage disconnected customers from tampering with locks on their water meters. The city manager would have authority to waive the fee in case of emergency flooding.

Betty Gardner said her garden isn't what it used to be due to a shoulder injury that has kept her from weeding the flower beds most of the summer. But from the curb of her Twin Falls home, the weeds weren't what caught the eye on Friday. Gardner said she chose to plant chrysanthemums because she wanted lasting color, adding that she'll have that color through the first hard frost.

Idaho House Democrat stays right in second bid

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press writer

BOISE — As a crowd demanded Democratic Rep. Walt Minnick's firing — "Where's Walt?" — one man shouted — the target of their fervor had quietly settled into a meeting with a group of Idaho sportsmen, a short drive away.

Leaning back in his chair, Minnick was at ease in a room decorated with a mounted moose head and bear-hide rugs. Questions posed to him centered on a proposal to allow Idaho and Montana to manage endangered gray wolves in their states.

While assuring the sportsmen that lawmakers were working on a plan, Minnick prompted chuckles when he added a caveat, "I'm rather distracted now by a range of other issues, and will be for the next 22 days."

Minnick himself is part of an endangered breed, a Democratic congressman in a Republican district. While John McCain received 62 percent of the vote in 2008, Minnick won his first term in the House by less than 5,000 votes. If he wins a second term in spite of voter anger with Washington and President Barack Obama, it will be because he's unlike most Democrats.

Minnick, 68, a Harvard graduate and former Nixon administration staffer who made millions as a Boise forest products executive, distances himself from Obama and House Speaker Nancy Pelosi at almost every turn. He reached out to the tea party. He voted against the health care overhaul bill and the bailouts, and he supports gun ownership.

Although some liberals may think his voting record aligns too closely with the GOP, he supports abortion rights and backed a bill aimed at allowing gays to serve openly in the military.

"By all national indicators, he should be in serious trouble," said political science professor David Redlawsk, who directs the Eagleton Center for Public Interest Polling at Rutgers University.

Instead, Minnick has a lead and a fundraising advantage over his Republican opponent, state lawmaker Raul Labrador.

When the Republican National Committee's "Fire Pelosi" bus tour rallied about 200 Labrador supporters in nearby Caldwell, Labrador hammered his message to voters: By re-electing Minnick, they would enable Pelosi to keep her job.

Russ Smerz, who watched from the back row, voted for Minnick in 2008 because he promised he could do more for Idaho as a member of the majority party.

"That's my biggest beef with him," said Smerz, now an organizer with Tea Party Boise, the state's biggest tea party group. "He just did not live up to his campaign promises."

The Minnick-Labrador race has exposed an unusual split within the tea party movement. Labrador's platform — fiscally conservative, anti-Washington, small-government — understandably draws tea partiers.

Yet Minnick is the only Democrat to be endorsed by the Tea Party Express, though he disavowed the nod over a controversial blog posting satirizing the NAACP. He attended a town hall meeting with Tea Party Boise last year and has since kept the lines of communication open, even after the group endorsed Labrador.

Minnick has waged an aggressive campaign, with ads targeting Labrador's work as an immigration attorney. One TV ad claims that more than half his work is "helping illegal immigrants stay in the United States."

Labrador, 42, called Minnick a hypocrite, pointing out that in the 1990s Minnick had worked at the law firm that helped him finalize the adoption of "his foreign-born child."

Minnick and his wife have four children, one a daughter from China.

"He's scared," Labrador told the raucous crowd at the rally. "That's why he's running those nasty ads on TV."

In Idaho's 1st Congressional District, a stretch of western Idaho that spans from the state border with Nevada north to the border with Canada, Labrador has an inherent advantage in appearing on the same ticket as Sen. Mike Crapo and Gov. Butch Otter, said Phil Hardy, Labrador's spokesman.

"Imagine the ballot," Hardy said. "At the top of it Mike Crapo. Under Mike Crapo, Raul Labrador, under Raul Labrador, Butch Otter. That's power. Circle. Circle. Circle."

At Minnick's campaign headquarters, maps line the office of his field director, Tom Schwarz, who can rattle off how many potential Minnick voters live in any given precinct. A life-size cardboard cutout of the congressman guards the break-room at his campaign headquarters, a not-so-subtle reminder to the team about the need to never let down their guard.

"We could do everything right and still lose," said Minnick's campaign manager, John Foster. "We never forget that."

The lieutenant governor presides over the Senate when it's in session and fills in for the governor when he is out of the state or otherwise unable to perform his duties. The lieutenant governor also visits constituents and events for the governor. The position will pay $29,184 in 2011.

Prior to his appointment, Little was a state senator from 2001 until 2008. An Emmett resident, Little is a longtime rancher who has been active in cattle and woolgrower organizations.

Little stressed his economic development efforts, adding that diverse economic bases are crucial for the state's long-term well-being. Little is chairman of Otter's Project 60, which is aimed at growing the state's economy.

Little also said that while state budget cuts have been painful, Idaho's still better off than many other states.

"These states where they haven't cut the size of government, they're in a deeper hole than we'll ever be," he said, adding that he gets positive feedback from residents. "... So many times afterwards they came up and said, 'We fully understand why you had to reduce the size of government.'"

Little also noted that budget uncertainties remain.

"Revenue's starting to perk up," he said. "Will it be enough to help us fill all the holes? The jury's still out."

Little has a bachelor's degree in animal science from the University of Idaho.

Wallace, 66, brings experience in state budgeting and higher education, areas he worked in while in Missouri. He moved to Boise in 2004 after retiring.

Wallace was assistant state budget director in Missouri and associate director for finance for that state's department of higher education. He was also deputy director of the state's department of social services, which encompassed health, corrections and youth services.

Wallace is concerned about the state's 2006 decision to eliminate property taxes for schools, saying it creates inequity with some school districts now able to pass levies and other that cannot.

"If this continues, you'll continue to see a greater disparity among districts," Wallace said.

Wallace also said that the state needs a comprehensive plan to help boost the economy that includes high-skill training and incorporates the state's community colleges.

"We're somewhat limited by the number of community colleges we have and we're also limited by the amount of funding the state's been able to put into community colleges," he said, adding that more coordination with labor unions that provide apprenticeship training is also key. "This doesn't get talked about. We have very little appreciation for what these unions are doing."

He earned a bachelor's degree in political science from Drury University in Springfield, Mo., and did graduate work at the University of Missouri at Columbia.

Venable, 56, of Parma, is an information technology consultant.

Venable said the government needs a shift in its priorities so that impediments that hold up production are removed, empowering people to grow businesses. If he were to advance an idea, it would be "made in Idaho," Venable said.

"If people get that picture in their mind, we're going to start thinking in the right direction," he said.

Venable said problems in government need to be solved at their source, which is key for a diverse economy of thriving timber, mining, energy, manufacturing and agriculture.

"The cost of government, it's not going down even in a declining economy," he said. "I will say the governor and the legislators have done well to keep costs down but what they've done is they've done well to reduce state spending, but at the root of the problem is why the cost of government continues to go up."

Venable took technical courses at the University of Cincinnati and Ohio State University. He admits he faces an uphill battle as a third-party candidate.

"It may take some time but what I'm doing is I'm starting at the local level and I'm starting at the grassroots," he said.

Electorate

Take the key U.S. Senate race in Wisconsin.

In two recent surveys by established independent pollsters (Marist College and CNN/Time/Opinion Research), Democrat Russ Feingold led his GOP opponent Ron Johnson by 20 to 30 points among moderate voters.

In a normal election year, that would be a very good sign for any candidate because moderates are typically the biggest voting group.

But in this case, he still trailed Johnson overall by 6 to 7 points.

The reason? Conservatives — who favored Johnson 5-to-1 — were the dominant ideological group among likely voters.

In presidential and midterm elections in Wisconsin and nationally, moderate voters have outnumbered conservative voters — typically by a lot. But the opposite is true of the people identified as likely voters by many pollsters this year.

If these proportions are so different from past elections, could they simply be wrong?

“What you’re pointing toward is a critical element in understanding where this election is going,” says David

Winston, a well-known GOP pollster in Washington, D.C. “Has the electorate moved that much in terms of its ideology? Given what we’ve seen in previous years, based on election-year exit poll surveys, the numbers we’re seeing now are dramatically different. The question is, are they correct?”

Winston’s colleague Kristen Soltis raised that question recently on the website HuffPost Pollster, asking, “Are pollsters these days surveying too many conservatives?”

It’s also possible that the polls are reflecting accurately the current preferences of the most interested and energized citizens, but that could change by Election Day. In a midterm election, many voters tune in late.

But the other possibility is that the polls are accurate and predictive — that this electorate will be one of the most conservative in decades.

Age is one major part of that equation. Democrats do far better with younger voters than older voters, but the turnout gap between older and younger voters is bigger in non-presidential election years. In Wisconsin, the under-30 vote and the 60-and-over vote have been roughly the same size in the past two presidential elections, exit polls show. But in the 2006 midterm, the older group was 60 percent bigger.

Even matching the youth turnout of 2006 will be a challenge for Democrats. Wisconsin had one of the nation’s highest under-30 turnouts that year, boosted perhaps by the statewide referendum on same-sex marriage. President Obama’s huge campus rally at the University of Wisconsin-Madison last month and Feingold’s own efforts to mobilize campuses are aimed at replicating that feat.

But Pew’s polling suggests the interest gap nationally between young and old voters is double now what it was four years ago.

According to Pew, the overall “enthusiasm gap” has less to do with Democratic apathy (interest among Democrats is not abnormally low by historical standards) than it does with unusually high interest and enthusiasm among Republicans.

Marist pollster Lee Miringoff says, “This is a very angry electorate right now, and the turnout is very skewed.”

Crashes

fender benders and minor damage. A lot of that equates to speed.”

The speed limit is reduced to 25 mph in city construction zones, slowing commuters down. Also, congestion has slowed commuters’ speeds on other streets as motorists avoid construction zones.

The biggest complaint police get about re-routed traffic originates from residents on the President streets, which run north-south.

“We’ve had more requests from those neighborhoods to have us monitor traffic due to the increased flow,” O’Donnell said.

Commuters have found ways to navigate the west side of town while avoiding Washington and Blue Lakes by taking Harrison or Fillmore streets, which can take them as far north as the College of Southern Idaho campus or as far south as Addison Avenue.

The end result everyone wants to see is the completion of construction in Twin Falls.

“Once it’s done, the roads will be better and safer,”

O’Donnell said. “It’s just a matter of getting through it all.”

Pioneers in the Peace Corps

By John Keilman
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — It was well after midnight at the University of Michigan when presidential candidate John F. Kennedy gave a short speech that would, in thousands of small ways, reshape the world.

“How many of you who are going to be doctors are willing to spend your days in Ghana?” he asked a crowd of students 50 years ago this week. “Technicians or engineers, how many of you are willing to work in the Foreign Service and spend your lives traveling around the world?”

“On your willingness to do that, not merely to serve one year or two years in the service, but on your willingness to contribute part of your life to this country, I think will depend the answer whether a free society can compete.”

Thus was born the idea of the Peace Corps, and when Kennedy took office the next year, he swiftly made it a reality. He called for volunteers to spend two years improving the health, education and economic prospects of some of the poorest people on earth — and, not coincidentally in those Cold War years, to burnish America’s global reputation.

Thousands of Americans stepped forward. One was Nomenee Robinson, then a young architect and city planner working in Chicago’s Water Department.

He had an itch for adventure and a desire to help others. And by the autumn of 1961, he was in India’s Punjab state, assisting with building projects in a country struggling to gain its footing after centuries of colonial rule.

Life there was hard. Robinson had to use bricks made of sand and straw and just a dab of cement. He was on constant guard not to offend his hosts with an easy-going joke. And once, while he was building trekking huts in the Himalayas, his pack horses were killed by wild animals.

Yet his enthusiasm never flagged.

“There was a challenge in understanding how to work with another culture,” he said. “That excited me.”

Robinson, who is Michelle Obama’s uncle, is one of five Chicago-area residents who shared their memories of the early days of the Peace Corps with the Tribune. Volunteering in the glow of Camelot, their optimism was tested by rough conditions and occasional doubts about whether they were really making a difference.

There was no doubt, though, about the enormous difference the Peace Corps made in their own lives. It forged a global consciousness and a service-minded attitude that stayed with them for decades.

Robinson, now 73, a retired businessman turned Peace Corps recruiter, was reminded of that just the other day. Walking through downtown, he spotted a turbaned Sikh and greeted the man in Punjabi.

“The guy flipped,” he recalled. “He said, ‘Wow, you talk just like a villager!’ I don’t have enough of the language left, but when I see a Sikh, I can say enough to warm his heart. I can take that to the grave with me.”

Virginia DeLancey, 70

Nigeria, 1962-64

Growing up in Cleveland, Virginia DeLancey was as sheltered as could be. When her friends scattered during college vacation breaks, her parents ordered her home, not wanting her to be out in the world unsupervised.

Soon after graduation, though, she and her new husband broke away by joining the Peace Corps. They were assigned to Nigeria, a country they knew little about.

They wound up in Buguma, a town in the Niger Delta that was a 2½-hour motorized canoe ride from the nearest sizable city. She was assigned a teaching job in a private business school and ended up instructing students in everything from English to sewing to netball, an English version of basketball.

The school was, to be polite, minimalist. Its walls and roof were made of corrugated metal, and when rain poured from the sky, the noise was deafening.

“We ended up doing a whole lot of shouting while we were teaching,” she said.

The school also had a library that consisted of a single bookcase holding a volume of Shakespeare and a few books supplied by the Russian Embassy. She managed to wheedle donations from American bibliophiles, and by the time her service ended, the books took up an entire room. The students named it the DeLancey Library.

DeLancey went on to get a doctorate in economics, and spent years teaching and doing research in Cameroon, Egypt and Somalia. She now lives in suburban Chicago and still does occasional consulting on international development.

“I never would have dreamed it,” she said of her decades of globe hopping. The Peace Corps “causes a lot of changes in your life. Changes you never expected.”

Jim Wolter, 71

Malaysia, 1961-66

The telegram informing Jim Wolter that he had been accepted into the Peace Corps was fortuitous.

“I was actually supposed to get married, but my fiancée and I weren’t really sure about that,” he said. Joining the corps was “a socially acceptable way of standing up to my mother and prospective mother-in-law.”

He was 22, a Chicago kid had not traveled far from home before a plane took him to Malaysia. He emerged into a blast of heat and humidity and a vista so green that it looked artificial.

He was given a science-teaching assignment in a small coastal town, and each morning he would cycle to the market to buy goat organs that his students could dissect — or, in some cases, take home for dinner.

He later moved to a school that supposedly needed a math teacher. But when he got there, he found students who were so advanced, they didn’t need his help. They earned some of the nation’s highest scores on a standardized test, but when he was praised for his teaching genius, he protested that he hadn’t really done anything. “I got a reputation as a great math teacher — and very modest,” he said.

He stayed a teacher when he came home — joined by his wife, whom he met in Malaysia — and pursued a career in special education. Even stateside, the lessons he learned in the heat of the tropics proved invaluable.

“Problem solving, getting resources, working with people and having absolute confidence you can handle anything thrown your way — that’s what the Peace Corps did for me,” he said.

Barbara Janes, 71

Pakistan, 1961-63

Before Barbara Janes was sent to Pakistan, she spent a few weeks in Puerto Rico in sort of a tropical boot camp. She learned to stay afloat in the water for hours, rappelled down the side of a dam and spent a night alone in the jungle, sleeping in the glow of bioluminescent plants.

It might seem like strange preparation for a teaching job, but it was in keeping with the spirit that infused many of the early Peace Corps volunteers.

“When I graduated from college, we thought that the adults had ruined this world,” she said. “Get out of the way, give us six months and we’ll solve all your problems! What I realized several years later is that it’s not going to happen. You just pick your niche and try to influence it, and you do the best you can in that small area. If enough people do that, more change will happen.”

She taught biology and science at women’s colleges and designed a program that trained students to become teachers, instructing rural villagers in health and sanitation.

She never knew how effective that program had been, and she left the country wishing she could have done more. A few years ago, after a long teaching career on the Chicago’s North Shore, she decided to try again.

She has since made several trips to Pakistan to conduct teacher training workshops. She has helped start a scholarship fund for girls and raised money for earthquake relief. She’s now trying to collect $10,000 to repair schools damaged by last summer’s flood.

Even though Pakistan is viewed with suspicion and alarm by many Americans, she said, she is confident that her Peace Corps experience and recent travels showed the true heart of the country.

“They’re really good people,” she said. “Most Pakistanis want to live their lives just the way we do. I try to help people understand that.”

Joe Jaycox, 73

Venezuela, 1962-64

Growing up in a poor South Side neighborhood, Joe Jaycox treasured the days when the nuns of St. Ambrose School would treat him and other youngsters to a day at the Shedd Aquarium or the Field Museum.

He didn’t forget the importance of fun when he was assigned to a poor neighborhood in Caracas, Venezuela. He spent 10 hours a day on a basketball court, teaching the game to children who streamed there from across the city. He talked bus owners into taking the kids to the beach; many of them, he said, had never before left the barrio.

It was a wonderfully happy time, which made it all the more difficult to leave.

“I almost cried, because my time was up, and I was going on to Europe and other places,” he said. “These kids, these young men, weren’t going anywhere. They were waving at me as I left. I was a Marine and a big tough guy, but I almost cried and said, ‘I’ve got to do something to help these kids.’”

Decades later, after a career as a furniture salesman, he got his chance. He struck up a friendship with Alfonso “Chico” Carrasquel, the White Sox shortstop and native Venezuelan, and together they planned a charitable organization to aid children in the South American nation.

Carrasquel died in 2005 before the group hit its stride, but since then, Jaycox said, the Chico Carrasquel Foundation has raised enough money to stage four trips a year, taking busloads of Caracas children to museums, swimming pools and even a McDonald’s. Humble as those destinations may be, many of the kids have never had the opportunity to go.

“I’ve always had good memories, good thoughts of the people,” Jaycox said. “That’s lasted for 50 years. . . . This happens to a lot of Peace Corps volunteers. They just fall in love with the people. So did I.”

Hasselbeck leads Seahawks over Bears 23-20

By Andrew Seligman
Associated Press writer

CHICAGO — The way Jay Cutler got knocked around, Lawyer Milloy and the Seattle Seahawks couldn't wait for this game.

When it came, they delivered another beating.

Matt Hasselbeck threw for a season-best 242 yards and a touchdown and Seattle's defense sacked Cutler six times in a 23-20 victory over the Bears on Sunday.

Cutler was in trouble much of the game, and completed just 17 of 39 passes for 290 yards. He missed last week's win at Carolina with a concussion after being sacked nine times by the Giants in the previous game. "We were licking our chops, the way the Giants had success," said Milloy, who had one of those sacks.

Cutler insisted he felt fine no matter how sickening this performance was. At least the Seahawks were blitzing, something the Giants rarely did two weeks ago.

Either way, it was another ugly afternoon for the Bears.

"I felt fine physically," he said. "There was never any concern with that. I felt fine out there playing. We didn't get it done today. It's very simple."

For all the blows he absorbed, Cutler did not take the game's biggest hit.

That came in the closing minutes when Devin Hester ran a punt back 89 yards, equaling an NFL record with his 13th kick return for a touchdown. During the play, Earl Bennett lowered his shoulder and leveled punter Jon Ryan. Ryan stayed down for several minutes before walking off with a rib injury.

The Seahawks (3-2), coming off a bye week, got a needed lift by beating a team that was tied for the league's best record. Chicago fell to 4-2.

Seattle had made several big moves since a loss to St. Louis two weeks ago, trading receiver Deion Branch back to New England and acquiring Marshawn Lynch from Buffalo hoping he could ignite a stagnant running game.

"(It's) kind of like a training camp, and hopefully, three or four weeks from now, we'll be hitting the ground running," Hasselbeck said. "Marshawn can just relax and play, (Brandon) Stokley can just relax and play."

Lynch ran for 44 yards, including a 1-yard touchdown run early in the fourth that made it 23-13 and capped a 92-yard drive, but Hasselbeck was the one who provided the big lift.

The veteran completed 25 of 40 passes, with Mike Williams setting career-highs with 10 catches and 123 yards. Justin Forsett also ran for 67 yards and a touchdown.

It was a rough day all around for the Bears, who fell to 4-2 with their second loss in three games.

Oklahoma takes the field for an NCAA college football game against Iowa State on Saturday in Norman, Okla.

Oklahoma atop BCS standings; Boise State no. 3

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press writer

The first BCS standings are out and Boise State is already chasing a couple of teams from the power conferences.

Oklahoma was first and Oregon was second Sunday, with Boise State in third place and in need of plenty of help to become the first team from a conference without an automatic Bowl Championship Series bid to play for the BCS title.

Jerry Palm, who analyzes the BCS standings at collegebcs.com, said despite a better early season showing in the polls than ever before,

Boise State is a long shot to play for the national championship.

"They just need too much to happen to get excited about their chances," Palm said.

With 10 undefeated teams in major college football, there's serious potential for BCS controversy this season, even beyond whether Boise State from the Western Athletic Conference or maybe a Mountain West Conference team such as TCU or Utah gets a chance to play in the biggest BCS game.

The Sooners from the Big 12 and Ducks from the Pac-10 begin this race from the front row, but they can't quite say they're in control of it. Only once in 12 seasons of the BCS have the teams that were at the top of the first standings played in the championship game. That was 2005 with Southern California and Texas.

With the possibility of undefeated champions coming out of the Southeastern Conference and Big Ten, just winning might not be enough for Oklahoma and Oregon to hold on to their spots.

Auburn is fourth in the BCS standings, followed by TCU and LSU. Michigan State from the Big Ten is seventh. None of those teams have lost yet. Alabama is eighth and unbeaten Utah is ninth.

LSU and Auburn play Saturday.

"I would be shocked if the winner didn't jump Boise next week in the polls," Palm said. And if the winner jumps the Broncos in the polls, it's a lock to jump them in the BCS standings.

In fact, if one of the SEC's Tigers goes 13-0, it wouldn't be the least bit surprising to see that team in the BCS title game no matter what Oklahoma and Oregon do.

The Sooners took first place by grading out No. 1 in

Oregon soars to No. 1 in AP poll

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press writer

Known for its ever-changing, often outrageous uniforms and a point-a-minute offense, Oregon now has a new distinction: No. 1 team in the country.

The Ducks climbed to the top spot for the first time Sunday, moving up one position during an off week after previously top-ranked Ohio State lost 31-18 at Wisconsin on Saturday night.

"We don't have to talk about rankings with these guys," Ducks coach Chip Kelly said in a telephone interview. "Whether we're No. 1 in the country or 101 it won't affect how we prepare."

"But the only important thing is to be No. 1 in a month and a half on Dec. 5."

That's when the final BCS standings come out. The first were due out later Sunday.

In the AP poll, which is not part of the BCS standings, Boise State also moved up one place to No. 2. Oklahoma jumped three spots to No. 3, passing No. 4 TCU. Auburn moved up two spots to fifth, while the Buckeyes dropped to 11th.

Oregon becomes the 43rd team to hold the No. 1 ranking in the AP media poll, which dates to 1936. The last time a team was No. 1 for the first time was almost 20 years ago to the day, when Virginia rose to No. 1 on Oct. 14, 1990.

Ohio State's loss came a week after then-No. 1 Alabama was beaten by South Carolina. Heisman Trophy contender LaMichael James and the Ducks will try to avoid three straight weeks of No. 1 losing when they play at home against UCLA on Thursday night.

The Ducks received 39 first-place votes and 1,471 points. Boise State had 15 first-place votes and TCU (three) and Oklahoma (three) also got votes as the top team in the country.

The rest of the AP top 10 was LSU at No. 6, followed by Alabama, Michigan State, Utah and Wisconsin, which jumped eight spots after its big win at Camp Randall Stadium.

The coaches' poll had the same top nine as the AP poll.

Florida was one of four teams that dropped out of the poll. The Gators lost their third straight game Saturday — 10-7 to Mississippi State — and are unranked for the first time since the final poll of the 2004 season.

Also dropping out were Air Force, Nevada and Oregon State. Nebraska fell nine spots to No. 14 after losing 20-13 to Texas. The Longhorns moved back in at No. 22, along with No. 23 Virginia Tech and No. 25 Miami. Mississippi State is No. 24, its first ranking since 2001.

That was also a breakout season for Oregon. Under coach Mike Bellotti, quarterback Joey Harrington and the Ducks finished No. 2 and probably should have received a chance to play for the national championship. But they were squeezed out by a BCS formula that was later changed.

Bellotti took over the program from Rich Brooks after the Ducks went to the 1995 Rose Bowl and Brooks bolted for the NFL. It was Oregon's first Rose Bowl appearance in almost 40 years, a major happening for a program that had spent decades as an afterthought.

The 1995 Rose Bowl trip was only the 10th bowl appearance in school history.

Oswalt, Rollins help Phillies even NLCS at 1-1

By Rob Maaddi
Associated Press writer

PHILADELPHIA — This Roy was an ace, and he sparked a big inning with a daring dash around the bases.

Roy Oswalt pitched eight dominant innings, Jimmy Rollins drove in four runs and the Philadelphia Phillies beat the San Francisco Giants 6-1 Sunday night to even the NL championship series at one game apiece.

A day after Tim Lincecum outdueled Roy Halladay in a marquee matchup of aces, Oswalt beat Jonathan Sanchez.

The series shifts to San Francisco for Game 3 on Tuesday afternoon. Matt Cain faces Philadelphia's Cole Hamels, the 2008 World Series MVP.

Even though he didn't finish the outing, it was a complete game for Oswalt. He allowed one run and three hits, striking out nine. He also singled and scored a run after racing through a coach's stop sign in the seventh.

Cody Ross hit his third solo homer in two games for the Giants.

Rollins busted out of a 1 for 15 postseason slump, going 2 for 3 with a bases-loaded walk and a bases-clearing double.

Halladay followed up his no-hitter against the Reds in the division series with a subpar performance. He gave up four runs in seven innings.

The tough lefty had dominated the Phillies in his five previous starts against them, not allowing more than four hits in any outing.

Oswalt didn't allow a hit until Ross connected with one out in the fifth to tie it at 1. He ripped a 1-0 pitch into the left-center field seats — nearly the same spot both of his homers off Halladay landed.

SAN MARTIN, Calif. — Rocco Mediate holed out for eagle for the fourth straight day, hitting a pitching wedge approach from 116 yards that spun back into the cup on the par-4 17th Sunday en route to a one-stroke victory over Bo Van Pelt and Alex Prugh in the Frys.com Open.

The 47-year-old Mediate won his sixth PGA Tour title and first since 2002, finishing with a 2-over 73 for a 15-under 269 total on the CordeValle course. He had a hole-in-one on the par-3 third hole Thursday, holed out from 160 yards Friday on the par-4 fourth, and holed out from 111 yards Saturday on the par-5 15th hole.

Prugh shot a 69, and Van Pelt closed with a 71.

DANVILLE, Calif. — Spain's Beatriz Recari won the CVS/pharmacy LPGA Challenge for her first LPGA Tour title, overcoming soggy conditions and a late bogey for a one-stroke victory over France's Gwladys Nocera.

The 23-year-old Recari, a tour rookie who made cuts in only three of her first 13 stroke-play events this season, rebounded from a bogey on the No. 17 with a par on the 18th for a 2-under 70 and a 14-under 274 total on the Blackhawk Country Club course. Nocera birdied the final hole for a 70.

Michele Redman (76) and Karine Icher (70) tied for third at 12 under.

Cristie Kerr missed a chance to overtake Ai Miyazato for the No. 1 ranking, closing with a 70 to tie for fifth with Wendy Ward (72) at 11 under. Kerr needed to at least tie for third to take the top spot.

GORE WINS MICCOSUKEE CHAMPIONSHIP
MIAMI — Jason Gore won the Miccosukee Championship for his record seventh Nationwide Tour title, closing with an even-par 71 for a four-stroke victory over Kevin Kisner and Scott Gutschewski.

Gore, also the 2005 84 Lumber Classic winner on the PGA Tour, broke a tie with Sean Murphy, Matt Gogel and Kevin Johnson for the developmental tour's victory record. Gore finished at 16 under and earned $108,000 to jump from 124th to 39th on the money list with $141,451. The top 60 after the Jacksonville Open next week will qualify for the season-ending Tour Championship and the final top 25 will earn 2011 PGA Tour cards.

Kisner finished with a 67, and Gutschewski had a 69.

GREEN SHINES AT PORTUGAL MASTERS
VILAMOURA, Portugal

— Australia's Richard Green won the Portugal Masters, closing with a 7-under 65 for a two-stroke victory over four players at Oceanico Victoria.

The left-hander finished at 18-under. Italy's Francesco Molinari (62), Sweden's Robert Karlsson (67), Spain's Gonzalo Fernandez Castano (68) and Dutchman Joost Luiten (69) tied for second. Third-round leader Pablo Martin shot a 75 to tie for fifth at 15 under.

OPINION

“They used to have this show called the ‘Twilight Zone.’ That’s how I felt. We were all kind of pacing in the dugout. It was surreal.”
— Texas pitcher C.J. Wilson after the New York Yankees rallied with five runs in the eighth inning to defeat the Rangers 6-5 in Game 1 of the AL championship series

EDITORIAL

Uncommon common sense: That’s Idaho’s Mike Simpson

If he wins on Nov. 2, Republican Mike Simpson will become the fifth Idaho congressman to be elected to seven terms. Nobody has been elected to more. That’s remarkable in such a fractious political era. Three of the other four seven-term congressmen — Republicans Burton French and Addison Smith and Democrat Compton White — served before World War II when Idaho had primitive mass communications. Most Idahoans heard very little about them between elections, congressmen visited their districts infrequently (it was 2 1/2-day train ride from Washington, D.C), and seismic political events — the Great Depression and the Cold War — were required to drive them from office.

ABOUT THIS RACE
Six-term incumbent Republican U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson, 60, of Idaho Falls, is seeking reelection to his 2nd Congressional District seat against Democrat Mike Crawford, 52, a Mountain Home lawyer, and Brian Schad, 45, an Idaho Falls commodity futures broker who's running as an independent.

Crawford

Schad

Simpson

No more. If you’re a member of the House of Representatives nowadays, everything about you — from your campaign checkbook to your personal net worth — is instantly available to anyone online, and your constituents can keep track of you in real time on C-Span. What’s more, wherever there’s a Lincoln Day banquet or the opening of a new elementary school or senior citizens center, Idahoans expect to see their congressman. Simpson thrives in that environment, and has managed to become an influential member of Congress. That’s why we’re endorsing him for reelection. If, as expected, the GOP takes control of the House on Nov. 2, Simpson will become chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Interior, Environment and Related Agencies — an important position for the Gem State. Because spending bills must originate the House, its Appropriations Committee may be the most important in Congress. The subcommittee on which Simpson serves oversees appropriations for the Bureau of Land Management, the Fish and Wildlife Service, the National Park Service, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Smithsonian Institution, and National Endowments for Arts and the Humanities, and all Forest Service activities except fire suppression. All of which touches Idaho issues ranging from sage grouse protection on public lands to arsenic-in-drinking-water standards for small communities. Simpson, a pragmatic conservative widely respected on both sides of the aisle, is also the fifth-ranking Republican on the House Budget Committee, and in 2008 was named by Esquire magazine as one of the 10 best members of Congress. His most ambitious enterprise, the Central Idaho Economic Development and Recreation Act, remains unresolved after a decade of work, in part because Sen. Jim Risch, R-Idaho, withdrew his support last summer. But after Nov. 2, changes on the House Natural Resources Committee — whose Democratic chairman Nick Rahall of West Virginia has blocked CIEDRA — could help revive the legislation. On the wall of his Capitol Hill office, Simpson keeps a framed quotation from 19th century American statesman Henry Clay: “Politics is not about ideological purity or moral self-righteousness. It is about governing, and if a politician cannot compromise he cannot govern effectively.” If there were 534 other members of Congress like Simpson, America would be a better place.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Idaho already has enforcers of the law

The Bureau of Land Management and Forest Service are proposing rules to enforce drinking and open container laws on federal lands, according to the Times-News on Sept. 24. Sounds like no big deal, what could be wrong with that? Well, to begin with, it isn’t necessary. State and county law enforcement already have this in their jurisdiction and capably do this job. As noted by Capt. Tim Miller of the Twin Falls County Sheriff’s Department, the BLM contracts with his department for the service so it’s not really a burden to the county. Are the BLM people trained in law enforcement and have the necessary tools? Or do the taxpayers have to pay for additional training/weapons, etc? Also to note, the federal personnel have current duties to perform for their existing jobs. Do they have time for additional duties?

The next thing is essentially local versus federal. We have local law enforcement personnel who are performing the required job. They are people we know and live in our communities. If we feel our county sheriff is not doing a good job, we can vote him out at the next election. Have you ever voted a federal bureaucrat out of his position? Another point; these are state of Idaho laws they are talking about enforcing. They are proposing regulations that allow them to enforce state laws? How can they do this? What is the legal authority?

Finally, have you ever experienced the federal government relinquishing or reducing control over anything? This is likely just the camel nose in the tent. I mean, if this is logical, then additional law enforcement and control by the federal officials is also logical. Comment to the BLM and oppose these rules — maybe if they get enough opposition, they will abandon this effort — for now.
BILL LEWIS Gooding

We need independent thinkers in political office

I first noticed Gary Eller when he was writing the “In the Middle” blog for the Times-News. His views seemed well reasoned and practical. I was delighted when he decided to run for county commissioner. In a recent appearance, he stated that the commission should be non-partisan. I agree. In this election year, I am supporting candidates who are not ideological or especially partisan. I want to support candidates who will look at facts and think independently about solutions to problems. Everything I’ve learned about Gary Eller says he is that kind of candidate. I appreciate his history of public service in the military and the effort he is making to understand the issues the county faces. I’ve already voted for Gary Eller. I hope you will join me in supporting this good man.

It is time for District 25 to wake up and take a good look at how Donna Pence is voting in the Legislature. Did you know she voted no on:

ELECTION LETTERS DEADLINE

The deadline for letters to the editor regarding candidates and issues in the Nov. 2 election is Tuesday, Oct. 26, at 5 p.m. No election letters will be accepted after that time.

Mills is the best choice for county commissioner

1. Legislation which provides property tax relief for Idaho property owners (Bill 2006 H0876)
2. Against the Idaho Health Freedom Act, which allows Idahoans to determine their own choice of health insurance options and declares this liberty is guaranteed by the Constitution (Bill 2010 H0391)
3. The restriction of the renewal of a driver’s license past the expiration of alien documentation (Bill 2008 H0366)
4. Twice against expanding the funding of Idaho Distance Learning Academy virtual education course work for Idaho rural schools, choosing union wishes over students’ needs (Bills 2009 H303 and 2009 H0374)
5. Exempting Idaho firearms from Federal Regulation (Alex Sutter has been endorsed by the NRA). Go online (sutterforhouse.com) and take a look at Donna Pence’s record. Alex Sutter would have voted yes on these bills and yes for Idaho and its citizens!

Olson will bring positive change to Idaho’s schools

I’m writing to you today about an important choice you’ll be asked to make on Election Day. You will be able to vote for the next state superintendent of public instruction. I’m proud to say that I’m starting my 20th year in education. I’ve been teaching in the Twin Falls School district for all 20 of those years. During this time, Twin Falls has always been one of the most respected and progressive districts in the state of Idaho. That perception has changed this year due to the direction of the current state superintendent of public instruction. For the first time in Idaho’s history, education funding was drastically cut. Every district across the state dealt with the cuts in their own way. Twin Falls unfortunately furloughed 17 days from their calendar. Of those 17 days, eight were student contact days. Others were inservice and teacher preparation days. Cutting these days has given teachers less time to prepare for their classes and, even worse, given students less time to learn. Added to that, because of the loss in salary, many teachers have taken on a second job, which means less time to plan positive lessons. Teachers are being asked to teach the same curriculum with eight fewer days; classroom sizes are very large because of jobs being combined. Teaching 32 students in a math class means I have less individual contact with each student. Our kids deserve better. Please join me for a positive change in education leadership. Stan Olson, a former superintendent, understands the needs of students across Idaho. He will work with stakeholders across the state to study the budget and make appropriate changes that will help us give your kids the best education possible and provide them with the tools they need to go on to bright futures.

Keegan knows the importance of CSI

I am writing this letter in support of Bob Keegan in his run for a seat on the College of Southern Idaho Board of Trustees. Bob is a lifelong resident of Twin Falls and graduated from CSI before completing his education elsewhere. He, along with his brothers, owned and operated a successful fresh pack potato business in Twin Falls for many years. Bob recognizes the importance of CSI to the community and the opportunity it affords to local students who may not otherwise be able to advance their education. Bob has been a good friend of mine for more than 45 years. I know him to be a man of principle and high integrity. He will be an active member of the board and will work diligently to continue the positive direction of the College as established by past boards, and to bring change as necessary for an even brighter future. Please join me in electing Bob Keegan to the CSI Board of Trustees.

Republicans should downplay party affiliation

I have been a Republican-leaning independent voter in Idaho for more than 30 years. In all that time, I have felt fairly comfortable with Republican ideas and values. After watching a political commercial produced and endorsed by the Idaho Republican State Central Committee and reading in the Times-News this morning (Oct. 14) that the Idaho Republican Party is suing to close primary elections to independent voters, I feel it is time to speak up. The Republican Party in Idaho is acting a lot like the Democrats in Washington, D.C. They are doing whatever they feel is necessary to further their own cause and have lost touch with the people they are supposed to represent. What’s wrong with doing what is right for the people of Idaho? I have discussed this issue with many of my friends and acquaintances and most of them are aware of this problem and are concerned by it. If I were a Republican running for office this year, I would try and downplay the party affiliation and let people know what I could do for them.

Fire the Party of No to help recover our economy

Let us get this Obama thing straight. The president, vice president and our senators and congressmen all get full salaries and health care from the time they are elected until they die. Obama gains nothing materially from our health care program. He is, however, deeply concerned that the richest nation the world has even known allows its needy people to suffer. It is questionable that a health care system is more expensive than our current very expensive emergency room policy and sick people are unable to work. The Republican Party inherited a country that had a balanced budget and money in the bank. They squandered it by cutting taxes on the wealthy with a hypothetical theory of a drip-down system that would bring prosperity. It is apparent that the wealthy used the wrong appendage to drip down. The fat cat Republicans have had their incomes rise by 200 percent while the working class people have either had their wages stagnate or cut. In spite of these problems, our president was able to avoid a financial disaster for our nation and even averted a worldwide meltdown by his leadership. He has turned things around and has prevented millions of jobs from disappearing. Of course, Rome was not built in a day, and it took FDR six years to bring our country out of the Great Depression. We have a ways to go to get the big pot of money controlled by such a small percentage of our population back in circulation. Let us give our president the power he needs by firing the Party of No that has not come up with one program to solve our problem but insist that going back to the Bush failed policies our country will prosper.

LEARN A LESSON, TAKE A TEST?

MAKE A CHANGE at Magic Valley Health Fair

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

There aren't many opportunities to get free or discounted health care these days, and fewer still to sit with a doctor and go in-depth about an important health issue for an hour.

But you can do just that at Magic Valley Health Fair on Saturday.

It will be held at the new College of Southern Idaho Health and Human Services building, offering attendees additional privacy for skin cancer screenings in small cubicle spaces, versus previous years' curtained-off examination areas.

As in past years, many free screenings and several inoculations and lab tests will be provided, without the cost of a doctor's visit.

Also on the docket this year are eight seminars conducted by physicians and other health care professionals on a variety of topics, including how lifestyle changes can prevent cancer, what the warning signs of depression are, and how paying attention now can prevent bone breaks in later years.

David McClusky, a general surgeon with St. Luke's Magic Valley, will conduct the cancer seminar.

"My focus is the fact that cancer is the second leading cause of death and disease that we deal with, and 75 percent of it could be prevented or cured if we follow the proper lifestyles and do the proper prevention and wellness checks," he said. "Cancer will touch probably every family, but it doesn't have to kill people in every family."

McClusky emphasized the importance of choices about tobacco, alcohol, diet, exercise and preventative exams.

"The cheapest thing you can do is get a routine checkup and follow the guidelines in terms of how you treat and what you treat," he said. "You could put me out of business if people would just listen and do the right things."

St. Benedict's Family Medical Center family physician Jonathan Housley will address the warning signs of depression, misconceptions about treatment and the stigma associated with the mental disorder.

"A person that's depressed, they're not the ones who usually recognize it, it's usually a close friend or family member," he said, noting that people don't want to acknowledge that they are suffering symptoms. "Things like lack of interest in activities you used to be interested in, hobbies you used to have;

feeling sad all the time; thoughts of suicide or worthlessness, hopelessness are signs of depression."

This time of year can signal the onset of certain kinds of depression, called seasonal affective disorders.

"If you go to work and it's dark and you come home and it's dark, you feel like it's dark all the time," he said. "That can be depressing."

Patients have misconceptions about medication, including that it is addictive and that it takes effect immediately, Housley said. He also said that in many cases, regular exercise has been shown to be just as effective as medication, so it is often a good treatment option.

Tyler McKee, an orthopedic surgeon at St. Luke's Magic Valley, said he would rather patients make lifestyle changes now than have to see him in the future.

"I deal with the results of poor decisions every day. People are overweight, they get osteoporosis because (of) perhaps their diet choices or inactivity," he said. "I'm fixing all the problems that develop because of poor choices."

There are two big misconceptions about bone fragility, McKee said — that men don't get osteoporosis, and that lifting weights is only for bodybuilders.

"That is not the truth at all. There are many studies that show weight-lifting has huge benefits, that they can see gains in strength and mobility and activity level," he said. "It's not too late to start weight-bearing exercise and weight-lifting in the retirement years, (but) it's best to start early."

Running, walking, aerobics and other weight-bearing exercises are the best for increasing bone health, and women especially should take calcium supplements, even before menopause.

"I encourage people to exercise or they end up being one of my patients, with hip fractures, fragility fractures. A simple fall, instead of being a bruise, is a broken bone," McKee said. "There are ways to prevent that, even in young people."

Attending the health fair is a great way to start thinking about prevention, whether you simply see what health care options are available in the region, or whether you take advantage of the inexpensive or free testing and screenings at the fair.

Exercisers debate stretching before or after workouts

By Leslie Barker Garcia
The Dallas Morning News

The one theory of stretching everyone seems to agree on can be summed up in two words:

Don't bounce. After that, pull the ring tab and step back. Broaching the topic, triathlon coach Tommy Johnson says, is like "opening up a can of worms."

What, you may ask, could possibly be contentious about something that is supposed to keep you injury-free and immune from soreness?

Plenty, it turns out. "There is a bit of a controversy about whether you should stretch at all," says Dallas trainer Ron Incerta.

When USA Track & Field conducted a clinical trial of almost 3,000 runners, the results were essentially a wash: Those who stretched had the same injury risk as those who didn't.

A Nebraska Wesleyan University study deflated another theory, the idea that flexibility achieved through stretching makes for a better runner. The results showed that runners with tighter muscles are more economical runners — that is, they use oxygen more efficiently — than those who are more flexible.

"If you want to stretch because you're tight and think you'll become more flexible, I don't see that as the case," says Plano, Texas, physical therapist Jake Spivey. "Stretching isn't to improve the length of the tissue, but to prepare the tissue for exercise and not create injury during the course of it. If you just take off, you can create overuse issues such as tendonitis or bursitis."

What does work best? It's a matter, Incerta says, of "dynamic vs. static stretching."

A quick lesson here. Dynamic stretching is basically a foreshadowing of the workout to come: arms in circles if you're a swimmer, for instance; walking or skipping if you're a runner; maybe doing knee lifts for other movements.

Static, on the other hand, involves held poses: leaning over an outstretched leg or bending toward the ground for 30 seconds or so.

Until February, triathlete Brett Skillingstad began his workouts with traditional static stretches. Then he did some research and learned that muscles aren't ready for such movement before a workout. Now for 10 minutes before he begins, he focuses on knee lifts, side steps and Cindy Trowbridge demonstrates a 'static' stretch, to be done after a workout, at the University of Texas.

A stretching how-to

Cindy Trowbridge offers this advice about stretching:

BEFORE THE WORKOUT

"We're controlled by neural networks that run to and from the brain," she says. "You want to warm them up and do the activity at a slower pace. The brain can set the muscles to prepare for that." She adds, "Too-aggressive stretching on a muscle that's not willing to give is likely to cause tearing or micro-damage. Think of a small hole in your pants becoming a big hole in your pants."

To keep that from happening, she suggests the following:

Micro move. "You want to be doing a lower level of motion" than the exercise to come, she says.

Walk the talk. "Take exaggerated steps, or at least walk briskly," she says. "Engage your lower and upper body muscles."

Move it. "Kick your butt, bring your knees higher. It's an important neurological warm-up," she says.

AFTER THE WORKOUT

When the workout is over, make sure you stretch these muscles, she says. "Take advantage. Anything heated up is more pliable."

Quadriceps. "Lay on your side and pull your heel to your butt," she says. "Or stand up and do that."

Hamstrings. "There are a lot of ways, but one of the better ones is to sit on the floor and try to reach your toes."

Calf muscles. "Hang your heels off a step."

Chest muscles. "Stand in a door frame and put your hands on either side of it. Lean forward." As with all exercises, she says, "hold it till you feel it release — that ahhhhh feeling. It could be 10, 20, 30, 45 seconds. It's different for me than it is for you. That's important to remember."

Trowbridge demonstrates a 'dynamic' stretch, to be done before a workout.

Stretch

leg swings. His post-workout stretches are what his beforehand stretches once were, holding positions for 30 seconds or so.

"I've noticed a huge difference," says Skillingstad, 26, project manager for a construction company and triathlon coach for Texas Triple Threat. "I don't start out feeling flat or have that normal 10 minutes of feeling crummy or awkward. It gets your blood moving and flowing, and your heart rate more elevated."

That gradually increased blood flow is necessary for a successful workout, says Cindy Trowbridge, associate professor of kinesiology at the University of Texas at Arlington.

"It's cardiovascular, getting your heart rate up and your heart warmed up so it's now going to pump blood to your muscles instead of your organs," says Trowbridge, clinical education coordinator of UTA's athletic training education program. "In a resting state, blood is primarily distributed to the organs: the heart, the brain. It's secluded from the muscles unless you're using them."

Warming up with dynamic stretches starts the blood moving from organs to muscles, says physical therapist Spivey, whose practice is SportsCare and Rehabilitation.

"You're getting the blood flowing, which improves the pliability of the tendon and muscle," says Spivey, who does dyanamic stretching for 10 minutes before a workout and static for 10 after. "You're getting your heart rate elevated enough so blood is getting to the tissue, whether you're skipping, doing a lateral shuffle or high knees."

Many amateurs, whether running, biking or swimming, just take off and start going, he continues. "They think, 'I'm healthy now!' But if you just take off, you can create overuse issues such as tendonitis or bursitis. It takes longer to strengthen muscles and joints than it does to strengthen your cardiovascular system."

Incerta likens the warming-up process to starting a car in the middle of winter.

"It won't run as efficiently if it's been sitting in 30-degree weather," he says. "The gears aren't going to shift right. But if you turn it on and warm it up for 10 to 15 minutes, it will be fine. Fluids are going through the pipes. No problems. It's similar to the central nervous system of the body. If you're not primed, you're not ready to actually do physical work. Warming up gets all that fluid going."

Could I rekindle my love affair with bread?

By Jennifer LaRue Huget
Special to The Washington Post

I'm scared of bread.

Bread used to be my favorite food. I loved to bake it from scratch, enchanted by the miracle of mixing yeast, sugar, salt, flour and water and coaxing it into a heavenly edible mass. For years, on cold-weather Sundays, I baked twin loaves of Italian bread or four smaller baguettes for my family's traditional soup day. I'd later devour leftovers dipped in olive oil and balsamic vinegar. I could eat half, two-thirds of a loaf a day, easy.

When I decided earlier this year to lose weight, my advisers gently suggested I reconsider my bread consumption and recommended shifting toward more lean protein, fruit, vegetables and legumes to build muscle mass and fuel my exercise regimen.

Reluctantly, I stopped eating and baking bread.

Immediately, I began to lose weight.

Many shed pounds later, I'm happier with my body. But in soup-and-bread season, I'm apprehensive. Can I afford to reintroduce bread to my diet? Or should I remain bread-free to protect my weight loss?

Ellen Kunes and Frances Largeman-Roth, authors of the best-selling "The Carb Lovers Diet" (Oxmoor House, 2010), encourage me to give bread a second chance. Their book aims to reestablish carbohydrates' role in a healthful diet at a time when the pendulum continues to swing between low-carb, high-protein diets a la Atkins and the low-fat, carb-rich approach. The authors posit that carbs, including the Italian loaves I love, not only are part of a healthful diet but also can help burn calories.

In particular, the Carb Lovers Diet calls for eating carbohydrate-rich foods containing "resistant starch," including pasta and white bread. Because resistant starches are indigestible, Kunes and Largeman-Roth explain (in their book and over the phone), they can keep you feeling full and satisfied, thus helping you reduce your overall food intake. Studies of resistant starches' effect on rodents' weight and health have shown that this works, but there's less research with humans.

Atlanta-based registered dietitian Marisa Moore, a spokeswoman for the American Dietetic Association, calls the research in resistant starch promising. "It does suggest that (resistant starch) might be helpful in weight management," she says.

In any case, the Carb Lovers book doesn't recommend going whole-hog on carbs: Portion control is key, as are calories, which in the initial phase of this diet total just 1,200 per day and go up to 1,600. That alone pretty much guarantees you'll lose weight.

And that, of course, is where I used to get into trouble. I shudder to imagine how many calories' worth of bread I once ate (let alone the olive oil). "Bread in and of itself is not bad for you. It's the quantity," Mitzi Dulan, a registered dietitian in the Kansas City area, told me. "I'm sure if you had just one slice, nothing would happen. The challenge is, when you have bread, it's hard for us to enjoy only one slice." Rather than dip it in olive oil and balsamic vinegar, Dulan suggests trying just the vinegar, something she says her family loves.

It's important to know what temptations you can and can't resist, however. "Having a whole loaf of freshly baked bread in your home could be a trigger," so alluring that it might cause me to revert to my former overeating ways, Dulan says. "For some it's easier just to eliminate bread." For others, that plan could backfire. "Restricted dieting (can lead) to overindulging," she says. Meaning that if I continue to deny myself bread, I might someday gorge till I pop.

Moore points out that the Dietary Guidelines for Americans call for five or six servings of grains, at least half of them whole, daily. But those servings are only an ounce apiece, or a single slice of typical store-bought bread. If, as I suspect, I can't manage to limit myself to such small amounts of bread, I might do better to continue exploring other sources: whole grains include oatmeal, corn, brown rice, quinoa and even popcorn, she says. I've been getting plenty of these (though popcorn's another trigger food I'm avoiding for now).

If, on the other hand, I feel strong-willed enough to resume baking bread, Moore suggests I incorporate whole-wheat flour. I've done that before, but baguettes and Italian loaves are best when plain white. Okay, then: When I do bake, Moore says, I could immediately freeze half, thus limiting my gorging options.

Moore clearly hasn't seen the things I'll gnaw on straight out of the freezer.

I still have more thinking to do about whether to trust myself around bread. Here's another factor: Almost as much as I miss eating bread, I miss the process of baking it. Wistful, I asked Moore to suggest another cooking project that might be equally rewarding.

After a moment's thought, she came up with an idea: sushi.

Well, that sounds fun, and plenty nutritious. I'm sure my family and I would enjoy Sunday sushi nights.

But I know I'd still miss that darned bread.

Paper beats hot air for hand drying

By Jennifer Huget
Special to The Washington Post

As cold and flu season approaches, we'll be hearing this: To stay healthy, be sure to wash your hands a lot. But to best prevent the spread of germs, you also need to dry your hands.

That point's driven home by a pair of studies published in the Journal of Applied Microbiology. The studies, quite transparently funded by Dyson Limited (maker of my vacuum cleaner), set out to determine how the company's new Airblade hand dryer stacked up against the conventional hot-air dryers found in many restrooms.

Under some circumstances, the Dyson dryer (which uses ambient-temperature air to kind of shear water off hands) did a better job of keeping bacterial loads low than the hot-air dryers did.

But when all the air dryers were pitted against plain paper towels, the conclusion was clear: Drying hands with paper towels did a better job than the machines of getting rid of lingering bacteria.

Of course, the study notes that paper towels can make a big mess themselves because they're hard to dispose of in a sanitary, non-germ-spreading way.

Have a healthy frozen meal

Daily Press (Newport News, Va.)

Frozen dinners are convenient, but many also are high in fat, calories and salt. Here's advice from dietitians on making the meals as nutritious as possible.

Read labels. Aim for entrees with fewer than 400 calories and no more than 30 percent of those calories from fat. Keep saturated fat at less than 6 grams — less than 4 if possible — and sodium under 600 milligrams. Other good numbers: at least 3 to 5 grams of fiber, 7 or more grams of protein and less than 15 grams of total sugars.

Check the ingredients. You want meals with lots of vegetables, lean grilled meats and whole grains such as brown rice. Avoid heavy cream sauces and lots of cheese.

Watch portion sizes. A package marketed as a single meal actually might contain several servings.

Supplement with healthy sides. Add vitamins, protein and calcium to your meal by pairing a frozen dinner with a small salad, fruit cup, low-fat yogurt with berries or a glass of low-fat milk. The extra food also will satisfy your appetite, especially if your entree is less than 300 calories.

Go light on added sauces. If a meal comes with a separate packet of seasoning, use less of it to slice sodium content (and often fat and calories, too).

Don't be fooled by advertising. A package marked with words such as "healthy," "natural" or "organic" isn't necessarily good for you.

Know the best and worst. Generally, potpies with crust and pizzas with extra cheese or stuffed crust tend to be diet busters. On the flip side, entrees from Lean Cuisine, Smart Ones or Healthy Choice often are your smartest options — although you still need to check labels.

THE FAMILY CIRCUS

By Bil Keane

10-18

© 2010 Bil Keane, Inc.

www.familycircus.com

“How do you know? It just started.”

DEAR ABBY: My hard-working husband of four years, “Brian,” loves to eat out three or four nights a week. It’s nice not to have to cook, and I have become spoiled. He loves treating. We take along friends, family members or business associates.

The problem is, Brian wants to sit for two or three hours, have drinks and talk before he eats. He insists that I wait until he is ready to eat. Sometimes it becomes as late as 10 p.m.

I have a sensitive stomach and I need to eat early. I have eaten dinner early my entire life. If I eat late, my stomach goes into knots, and by the time we get home it’s time for bed because I’m sleepy. Brian can sleep on a full stomach with no problem. I get acid reflux.

Brian expects our guests to adhere to his routine. Even when we have cookouts, everyone must wait for the entree. He says, “Well, they’ll just have to wait. I don’t want anyone to eat and run.”

I put out appetizers, but it’s not enough to hold them. If we don’t wait, he gets angry and threatens not to have another cookout. I have explained that not everyone can eat so late.

Abby, what’s your perspective on this? Who’s right here?

— HUNGRY IN ARIZONA

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR HUNGRY: You are. It appears you married a hardworking, self-centered drinker with a need to control everyone around him. A generous host takes the needs and wishes of his guests into consideration. A selfish one behaves like your husband does. Frankly, I’m surprised that anyone who didn’t have to would accept more than two dinner or cookout invitations.

You should eat something before going to dinner with him and do the same at home whenever you need to. If you don’t, it could have a serious, negative impact on your health.

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago I made a horrible mistake. I broke the law and was convicted of three misdemeanors. I live in a small town, so the news became very public. I lost my job, many friends and my reputation.

I am still working to rebuild my life and find some sense of normalcy for myself and my family. I have been in therapy since the event and have learned a lot from this experience.

My problem is, my brother will not forgive me. He holds it over my head and refuses to support me in my efforts. He said I deserve whatever I get. I love my brother and am close to my other siblings. I don’t want our relationship to be estranged, but I can’t take his judgmental attitude anymore. What can I do?

— SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA SIB

DEAR SIB: Because you are in therapy, discuss this with your therapist. I assume that having been convicted, you have paid — or are repaying — your debt to society. You are working to rebuild your life; you are doing all you can right now to get back on track. You are close with your other siblings, so work with that. Do not measure your worth through your brother’s eyes. He may not be capable of forgiveness. And if that’s the case, it’s a reflection of who he is — not who you are.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"Heaven be their resource who have no other but the charity of the world, the stock of which, I fear, is no way sufficient for the many great claims which are hourly made upon it."
— Laurence Sterne

The traditional opening event of every national tournament in the United States is the Charity Pairs. On this deal from a recent charity game, most of the field reached three no-trump and, in a display of charity to their opponents, generally failed to apply the correct technique.

The auction put West on lead with an easy attack of the heart
10. With the heart suit lying as it does, you (South) must consider your first move carefully.

If the heart suit splits 4-3, it is irrelevant whether you win the first round of the suit or the second. But see what happens if you take the first heart and drive out the spade ace. (If you lead the club king, West will duck, and normal play thereafter will lead to your defeat.) When East takes the spade ace and returns the heart jack, West overtakes and can clear the suit while retaining the club ace as an entry. The bad spade split leaves you a trick short.

The key play is to duck the first heart (often the right play when you have no other danger suit, and must knock out two key cards). Then win the second heart in hand. Now you have started to sever the defenders' communications. The point is that East will have no hearts left when you drive out his spade ace. He has to shift, letting you dislodge the club ace at your leisure. Ducking at trick one makes the difference between an undertrick and an overtrick.

ANSWER: Rather than looking for a miracle in partner's hand, try leading a heart, hoping that partner holds any of the missing three top honors. If you think about it, declarer's failure to look for a heart game and dummy's failure to raise hearts make partner something of a favorite to hold heart length or strength.
