T.F. council drops bicycle helmet law

Rest of safety ordinance
sent back for cleanup

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Breathe easy and chin-strap free, Twin Falls city bicyclists: the City Council deleted the portion of a proposed bicycle safety ordinance requiring helmets for people riding within city limits.

Freedom of choice, cost to cyclists and enforceability did the helmet proposal in, though some councilmen suggested that issue be brought back later, separate from the entire ordinance.

The rest of the ordinance, which lays out new rules of the road for cyclists and drivers around cyclists, was sent back for legal review so it doesn't overlap or conflict with state code. It was drafted by a Parks and Recreation Commission subcommittee.

About a dozen people spoke at Monday's public council hearing, none happy with the ordinance in its entirety. Some argued against being forced to use bicycle lanes if they are unkempt or being forced to ride as close to the right of the right-hand lane as possible. Others just argued against the helmets, with one person going as far as riding his motorcycle helmetless to illustrate his problem with the helmet requirement — a common theme.

"It's an oxymoron to me that I can get on my Harley Davidson and ride from Twin Falls, Idaho, to Bonners Ferry, Idaho, without any restrictions on me to wear a helmet," said Lary Hartley, though he added he does wear a helmet when on his motorcycle.

The council ultimately voted 6-1, with Councilman Greg Lanting dissenting, to remove the helmet

ELECTION DAY ARRIVES

MEAGAN THOMPSON/Times-News

Chief Deputy Clerk Sharon Lancaster asks a question while she counts 115 previously marked test ballots Monday afternoon at the Twin Falls County Courthouse in preparation for Election Day. 'We had about 3,400 people vote early, so that is usually a good indication that we'll have a good turnout,' County Clerk Kristina Glascock said as she watched over the public test and demonstration of the ballot-counting machine.

WASHINGTON — How early will America know if it's a Republican romp or if Democrats somehow minimized their damage? There should be plenty of clues Tuesday evening — and long before bedtime.

Final results in some states might not be known for days. But trends could be evident from the Midwest and South — especially from Indiana, Kentucky and West Virginia — even before most of the nation has finished dinner.

Six states have polls that close at 5 p.m. MDT, and 16 more close by 6 p.m., featuring plenty of telling races in the East and Midwest. First up: Indiana, Kentucky, South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia and Vermont, offering the first hard evidence of just how big a night it's going to be for Republicans.

Not even their mothers expect the Democrats to gain ground. It's just a question of whether they fall back or over a cliff.

THREE STEPPING ASIDE?

Xavier principal,
board may bring in independent panel

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

Three members of Xavier Charter School's board of trustees retained their positions last week, but they may step aside on one matter.

Trustees Jeff Bulkley, Shawn Willsey and Teresa Berry, who are the main targets of a lawsuit brought by Principal Cindy Fulcher, may recuse themselves from deciding Fulcher's future, according to the latest documents filed in Twin Falls County 5th District Court.

On Thursday, the board members were in the hot seat as a petition to remove them circulated among parents of the Twin Falls school's 625 students. However, school bylaws state that only board members may vote to remove other board members, even if stakeholders — parents — vote them in.

When Fulcher filed her lawsuit in early October, approximately one month after the board unanimously voted to place her on paid leave, she asked that the three members remove themselves from presiding over hearings regarding her employment.

She may get her request.

When both sides asked a judge to reschedule a preliminary injunction hearing to Nov. 8, the motion was accompanied by a laundry list of notes. The most pertinent of which states that attorneys for both Fulcher and the school board agree that "each of the above named individual defendants shall recuse him/herself from being a decision maker at the due process hearing" regarding Fulcher's future as the school's principal — in other words, Bulkley, Willsey and Berry.

Other items state that lawyers for both sides agree that a three-person panel will replace Bulkley, Willsey and Berry, and that each side's lawyers will collaborate on a written agreement to detail how the panel shall operate. If this is not possible, the matter will stay with the court.

A SWEET DEAL

T.F. dentist, children gather candy for overseas troops

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

Dr. Bryce Barfuss considered the day after Halloween a win-win for children who visited Summit Dental Care on Monday.

His sweet solution to help area children shed the extra Tootsie Rolls, Charms and Chick-O-Sticks they collected on Halloween was to open the doors of his Twin Falls practice and invite trick-or-treaters to bring in their sweets to do something good.

The candy collected during Monday's buy-back event will be sent to California-based Operation Gratitude, which sends care packages to U.S. armed forces members serving overseas.

Barfuss and his staff dressed in Halloween costumes on Monday afternoon and welcomed the kids and their parents to the candy buy-back. Each child had their picture taken with their bags of candy, and then collected a gift certificate from Sizzler and a dollar in exchange for each pound of sweets.

The pictures will be included with giant cards signed by the children, accompanying the candy sent to troops overseas.

“It’s a fun opportunity for the kids to come in and it’s wonderful for the troops,” said Barfuss, who was dressed like the Frankenstein monster. “They don’t get a lot of care packages and we want to spread some cheer.”

He got the idea from an article in a dental magazine and tried it out last year. His office received 100 pounds of candy and he hoped for 300 pounds this year.

Duncan Frazier, 5, picked out a red light-up toothbrush for himself — another gift exchanged for the sweets — and a yellow one for his 3-year-old sister, Lainey.

Duncan brought in eight pounds of candy and his mother, Brooke, said they still had a bag left at home.

“I gave them the candy I don’t like,” Duncan said.

When asked who was going to get the candy, Duncan said, “The troops — ‘cause they don’t go trick-or-treating”

Barfuss said donating candy to soldiers is not only good for spreading cheer, but also good for promoting dental hygiene to children.

“If you have sugar and bacteria you get plaque,” Barfuss said. “The less people eat of candy the better.”

Success Martial Arts in Twin Falls is providing a similar event for children. All candy collected will be sent to armed forces members, and children who trade in candy and a card receive three private lessons. Candy can be brought to 1300 Kimberly Road from 5 to 8 p.m. each day this week through Thursday.

The best moments of the race for governor

Idaho’s 2010 gubernatorial race has been a ride with twists and turns that treated voters to a colorful, memorable political season.

If anything, the best moments from the campaign trail are a reminder to voters that the candidates are, after it’s all said and done, still human.

Here’s a look back:

- Fist-bumps: If laughs counted the same as votes, we’d be calling him “Gov. Pro-Life” after Election Day. Pro-Life, an independent candidate, got chuckles aplenty in last week’s gubernatorial debate, with Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter fist-bumping the organic strawberry farmer on two occasions.

The first fist-bump: Pro-Life contended it’s not the governor’s job to encourage business growth.

Otter responded by saying that the governor’s goal is to create an environment in which businesses can thrive, also stressing that his office links prospective businesses with Idaho’s interested cities and counties.

“It’s not our job to choose winners and losers, so in that aspect you’re absolutely right,” Otter said.

“Yeah, I knew that,” Pro-Life responded without hesitation.

As the audience laughed, Otter grinned and extended his fist. Pro-Life tapped it after a brief pause.

The second fist-bump: In a discussion about wolves, Otter told Pro-Life that the governor’s duties include issuing executive orders that encompass state fish and game officers.

“Well, if the wolves were eating children, I would do something,” Pro-Life explained. “But otherwise, I wouldn’t.”

“Well, OK,” Otter said, as the audience roared. “I’ll go with that.”

- Low blow? The other independent candidate,

Jana Kemp, didn’t get any laughs when, in her closing comments of the debate, she described Keith Allred as someone who “communicates that he’s a fifth-generation Idahoan and he’s not one.”

Allred, who was adopted as a child, took exception to the remark during his closing comments.

“I’m also proud of my Allred family who adopted me into them and made me a fifth-generation Idahoan,” Allred said. “And Jana, I just really think that is not appropriate to say an adopted child doesn’t really have that heritage.”

- No red tuxedo needed: News of this campaign stop went national, even getting a mention on National Public Radio and at least one cable television talk show. When the GOP Bus Tour made a stop at the Jerome Public Library, candidates and constituents filled a room that was already reserved.

The candidates quickly left without sticking around for cake or punch after a wedding party showed up to use the same room for a reception. And Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, helped rearrange chairs for the wedding guests.

- Hometown roots emerge: Twin Falls got a tip of the hat from the Democratic candidate for governor: Allred chose Twin Falls High School as the spot to make his announcement about running for office.

For Allred, a 1983 TFHS graduate, it made strategic sense to return to his hometown to start appealing to voters because gubernatorial candidates typically need to carry the Magic Valley to win an election.

And later today, we’ll find out who wins over the valley.

Court filings leave unclear whether the other two trustees, Emily Huber and Joan Hurlock, would be included on the panel as well.

According to Bulkley, the board drew up a proposal but has yet to hear from Fulcher or her lawyer.

Fulcher’s Burley-based attorney, John A. Bradley, could not be reached for comment on Monday.

Fulcher also claims in her lawsuit that Bulkley and Willsey aren’t even legal board members. She filed three exhibits in an effort to back that allegation.

The claim against Bulkley is that he resigned his seat weeks ago only to “un-resign,” something she says neither Idaho statues nor the school’s bylaws allow.

According to the minutes from the September 2010 board meeting, Bulkley informed the board that he intended to move to Boise and vacate his seat.

Bulkley said he was informed by other board members that his resignation must come in writing. Section 4.4 of Xavier’s bylaws states, “Subject to the provisions of Section 30-3-69 of the Idaho Nonprofit Public Corporation Act, any Director may resign effective upon giving written notice to the Chairman of the Board, or the Secretary of the Board, unless the notice specifies a later effective time.”

Bulkley claims that he never submitted a written letter of resignation. Also, he reiterated that Xavier Charter School is organized as a nonprofit corporation and is not always subject to the same laws as traditional public schools.

The claim against Willsey argues that his election did not occur in the time frame mandated by Idaho Code 33-503, which states that trustee elections shall be on the third Tuesday in May. Willsey was elected in October 2010.

Again, Bulkley noted that the school does not fall under laws that govern traditional public schools. Also, Xavier’s bylaws do not detail a specific time frame for elections.

clause from the ordinance. Lanting supported requiring people under the age of 16 to wear a helmet.

“We require an awful lot of people under 16 because they aren’t old enough to make that decision for themselves,” Lanting said. “We’re helping the parents, if the parents want the helmet on ... If the kid takes it off later, then the police help them to enforce

(their rule).”

Aside from the helmet portion, the city councilmen said they agree with most of the bicycle ordinance, but only if its presentation is cleaned up. The council voted 7-0 to send the ordinance to the city attorney to have any portions that overlap with state code removed and portions that are stricter than state law highlighted. Attorney Fritz Wonderlich said it would be ready for next week’s meeting.

Other portions of the ordinance include requiring drivers on a highway to, whenever possible, leave at least three feet between themselves and any cyclists they are passing; banning the intimidation and harassment of bicyclists; and making it illegal for bicyclists to ride while intoxicated or to ride in a way to endanger the safety of themselves or others.

Elections

If the GOP can unseat Democratic Rep. Baron Hill in Indiana’s always-hard-fought 9th congressional district, for example, that’s a good sign for the expected Republican takeover of the House. And if they can capture all three seats they’ve got an eye on in Indiana, that could well signal a GOP hurricane.

On the other hand, if Democrats hold their ground in Indiana, and if their Kentucky Senate candidate, Jack Conway, can beat back Republican Rand Paul, it could be an early indication that GOP gains won’t challenge the record books and that the tea party is serving weak brew.

A few tips on what to watch as the returns roll in Tuesday night (all times are EDT):

HOUSE
Expectations are high that Republicans will pick up at least the 40 seats they need to retake control of the House after four years of Democratic rule. That should start in the Midwest.

In Ohio, where polls close at 5:30 p.m., six Democratic-held seats are in jeopardy. In Pennsylvania and Illinois, where polls close at 6 p.m., 10 more are at risk.

If Midwestern incumbents such as Joe Donnelly in Indiana and John Boccieri in Ohio fall, Republicans are probably headed for huge gains nationwide. Measure Democratic resilience if the party manages to hold on to a pair of imperiled Georgia seats, and if Rep. John Spratt can win a new term in South Carolina.

Worth watching in Florida (an 6 p.m. poll close): a rematch between Democratic Rep. Ron Klein and Republican Allen West. A loser two years ago, West rides anti-incumbent sentiment and is easily outspending his opponent.

Even if Republicans demonstrate early strength Tuesday night, it will take time for them to lock in enough districts to ensure a GOP majority. That’s because the West Coast states of California, Washington and Oregon are home to 67 House districts. In 2006, it was 11 p.m. before it became clear that control of the House had passed from Republicans to Democrats.

SENATE
It would take a true blowout for Republicans to pick up the 10 Senate seats they need for control. The first should be an easy one, in Indiana. But if Paul can’t keep Kentucky in the GOP column, it would be a sign of strength for Democrats and a symbolic setback for the tea party activists.

Republicans should have an easy time holding onto one of their own vacant seats in Ohio, where former Republican Rep. Rob Portman is favored. But keep an eye on West Virginia, another 5:30 poll close state, where Democratic Gov. Joe Manchin and Republican millionaire industrialist John Raese are tussling over the seat long held by the late Democrat Robert Byrd. A Republican victory there could keep alive GOP hopes of a majority.

Three-term Sen. Blanche Lincoln could be the first Senate Democratic incumbent to fall, when polls close in Arkansas at 6:30 p.m.

Polls close at 8 p.m. in the most closely watched race of the night: Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid’s battle in Nevada against tea party favorite Sharron Angle.

Even if Republicans show huge strength, the nation still could go to sleep Tuesday night with unanswered questions about the makeup of the Senate: Polls don’t close until 11 p.m. in Alaska, where it could take days or weeks to determine the winner of a three-way race for Republican Sen. Lisa Murkowski’s seat.

How long could the suspense drag on?

In 2006, it took until 6:30 p.m. the day after the election to determine that Democrats had taken control of the Senate from Republicans. And in 2008, it was nearly eight months after Election Day before it was determined that Democrat Al Franken had won Minnesota’s Senate race, giving Democrats control of their 60th seat in the Senate, exactly the number needed to overcome a Republican filibuster.

GOVERNORS

For all the focus on Congress, there will be plenty of suspense over how big a real estate-grab the Republicans can manage in governors’ mansions around the country.

South Carolina will offer an early measure Tuesday night of tea party strength: Republican Nikki Haley trailed for months before Sarah Palin’s endorsement and a tea party surge helped her nail the GOP nomination. Now she’s favored over Democratic state Sen. Vincent Sheehen.

Over the next few hours, results will roll in for the blue-state Northeast, where Democrats are facing tough GOP challenges in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine and Connecticut. If Democratic Gov. Deval Patrick goes down in the liberal bastion of Massachusetts, it’s a sign that the tea party fury over taxes and big government is spreading far and wide.

Idaho's immigration hard-liner

Nearly 100 years before illegal immigration was transformed from a hot-button issue to an incendiary one, Idaho elected an immigrant as governor in 1918.

That wasn't anything new. Three of David William Davis' predecessors as governor were born outside the U.S. and one of them — Frank Gooding — wasn't even a citizen when he served.

But Davis was Idaho's most strident critic of immigration.

He had been born in Cardiff, Wales, and emigrated to Iowa with his family as a youngster. He grew up poor, and became a miner himself at age 12 after his father died. Eventually Davis got a job in the farmers' co-op in Rippey, a tiny town (population 300) northwest of Des Moines. He eventually became manager of the operation and landed a cashier's job at the local bank. After a brief stint in the Navy, Davis fetched up in American Falls and established a bank just as the American Falls Dam was being planned.

YOU DON'T SAY

He made a lot of money and got himself elected governor as a Republican.

Davis' German-born predecessor, Democrat Moses Alexander, hadn't shied away from fanning anti-German sentiment during World War I, and when Davis took office two months after the November 1918 armistice, he was every bit as xenophobic.

"... Davis, along with many other Idahoans, was still caught up with the hatreds and cautions that accompanied the war," wrote Leonard Arrington in his 1992 history of Idaho. "Firmly 'old school,' he called for the compulsory education of foreign immigrants, insisting that they be trained to read, write and speak English. He ... persuaded the Legislature to authorize an Idaho Constabulary (essentially a publicly funded militia controlled by the governor) as a state police force, and insisted that children be required to attend public schools. The last proposal would have eliminated parochial schools, and a bill to require it failed to pass."

Davis was a Methodist; most of the religious schools in Idaho at the time were run by Catholics of German extraction.

For Davis, Nativism soon faded into anti-Bolshevism as fear of the Russian Revolution swept America. Like Idaho governors as far back as Frank Steunenberg (who was assassinated by radical labor activists), Davis went to war with the Industrial Workers of the World, a labor union with a strong presence in the Idaho Panhandle mines.

Idaho's World War II governors — especially Democrat Chase Clark — stirred up anti-Japanese and to an extent anti-German feeling.

But no Idaho governor since Davis has advocated such a strident view of dealing with immigrants.

Body ID'ed as man missing since 2001

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — A body found in remote Blaine County in mid-October is that of a man who had gone missing for nearly a decade.

Albert Jay Pitkethly, 42, went missing in 2001. His body was found by a hunter on Oct. 15 in the East Fork area between Hailey and Ketchum and has been positively identified through dental records, according to Blaine County Sheriff's Office spokesman Lt. Jay Davis.

Pitkethly, who was reported missing from the Gimlet area after he told a friend he was taking a quick shopping trip, had reportedly suffered a head injury when he fell from the second story of his Ketchum condo a month before his disappearance.

"There was a vehicle that was supposedly borrowed that was abandoned in the Gimlet area, and that was where the search started," Davis said, describing how the 2001 search for Pitkethly covered nearby canyons, including East Fork.

Bones and scraps of clothing were found last month, Davis said, and the sheriff's office is continuing to investigate.

"We treat things like this as a homicide until we can prove otherwise," he said. Additional details, including the specific site where the body was found, have not been released.

In 2001, the sheriff's office announced that two people whose names were not then disclosed were given polygraph tests after they said they'd seen Pitkethly shortly before he vanished, and Sheriff Walt Femling then told the Times-News that some of the details given to investigators by informants were "not true," but declined to say why the informants might provide inconsistent reports.

Davis said Pitkethly has a brother and sister, but did not know if they live in the area.

Citizen Finance Commission takes off

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

The maiden voyage of the Twin Falls Citizen Finance and Planning Commission started Monday, with four of the five appointees meeting for the first time for a two-hour introduction to city finance.

The commission was formally created in July and is designed to advise the city on financial matters, advocate for the city and its citizens, and recommend best-practice alternatives for the city. The five members were picked for their financial backgrounds and commitment to the city. Commission member Brent R. White was inexplicably absent.

Councilman David E. Johnson, a driving force behind the commission, said he was "excited to be here watching this thing take off."

"Just sitting through a City Council meeting and focusing on financials is pretty difficult," he said, illustrating why he pushed for the commission. "I'm hoping to see this committee really develop over time and become an asset to the City Council."

The meeting reviewed the financial tools the city uses to keep track of its cash flow and project the future. Debbie Lattin, a commission and the city's surprised her, though "the numbers are a lot bigger."

After the crash course, another commission member, Darrell J. Buffaloe, said he was impressed with how the city operates and its transparency.

"I know more about Twin Falls than I ever knew about Pocatello," he said, though he served on Pocatello city commissions and lived there for more than 30 years. He's been in Twin Falls for two years.

Cops: Man bought ammo at Walmart before shooting

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A gunman bought ammunition at a Walmart in Nevada shortly before opening fire on three co-workers in the same store, authorities said Monday.

Suspect John Dennis Gillane purchased the handgun ammunition in the sporting goods department about an hour before three managers were shot on Friday, police said.

The attacker was armed with two handguns during the videotaped attack but only a semi-automatic pistol was fired, police Lt. Mohammad Rafaqat said. The .44-magnum revolver for which the ammunition was bought was not fired, Rafaqat added.

Dorothy was born May 17, 1918, in Twin Falls, Idaho, where she spent the majority of her 92 years. Her parents were John Sanders and Mary Elizabeth (Standlee) Boren; she was one of ten children born into this marriage. Her strength will be admired and her love of family cherished forever.

Dorothy worked at Keegan Potatoes for 25 years. She loved reading, fishing and spending time with her family. We had the gift of having her with us a bit longer than expected and what a joy it has been for all of her loved ones to share some of the most treasured memories that we will forever hold dearly in our hearts. She was called "Mom, Grandma and Papa" to so many because of her warm, accepting heart. When asked what her greatest life accomplishment had been she replied, "being a mother and grandmother." It was her love for family that brought her the most joy.

She is survived by her five children, Dick (Edna) Bullock, Jeannette (Tom) Huft, MaryAnn (Jim) Correll, John (Debbie) Bullock and Cindy (Emory) Warren; a brother, Ernie Boren; a sister, Ruthie Reynolds; 15 grandchildren; and numerous loved great- and great-great-grandchildren. ## Jan (Rumsey) Eaton

Jan (Rumsey) Eaton, 57, was reunited with her Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, Saturday morning, Oct. 30, 2010.

Jan was born March 3, 1953, in St. Anthony, Idaho, to Donald and Leona (Doney) Rumsey. She was adored greatly by a large and loving family of eight surviving sisters and one surviving brother and grew up as an adventurous young girl and tomboy in the small town of Arco, Idaho. Jan attended Butte County High School and, in her sophomore year, her family moved to Wendell, Idaho, where she attended Wendell High School.

In Wendell, Jan met the love of her life, Brandon Eaton, and they were married May 13, 1972. Shortly after, they moved to Boise, Idaho, where Jan was a beloved wife and became a devoted mother of two older daughters and three younger sons. Jan began working for the Department of Labor and several years later became a long-time and valued employee of Hewlett-Packard in the human resources department. Jan will miss her dear friends from work. Jan was always so supportive in whatever her kids wanted to pursue. Jan became the ultimate soccer mom. The family would go on many adventurous camping trips, always the scenic route, tenting it in the great outdoors of Idaho.

As an adored wife, mother and friend, there was nothing Jan would not do for those around her. Jan was a very loving person who always cared for others and was always willing to help in any way possible. She always had a high spirit about everything she was a part of. As a mother, she was always someone to look up to and always encouraged her children that anything is possible if you set your mind to it. As a grandmother she absolutely adored each of her 10 grandchildren and her grandchildren adored her. Leaving them was so sad to her. In Jan's eyes, there was never a problem or struggle too big to handle by anyone and she was able to prove how strong she was as she fought so courageously after her ocular melanoma diagnosis six years ago.

Jan is survived by her husband of 38 years, Brandon Eaton of Horseshoe Bend, Idaho; her children, Stephanie Perry and her husband, Kelly of Kuna, Kristen Bruce and her husband, Dan of Boise, Cole Eaton of Boise, Chad Eaton and his wife, Trista of Meridian and Cody Eaton and his wife, Breanna of Buffalo, N.Y. She leaves behind 10 wonderful and beloved grandchildren, Kaitlyn, Brandon, Madelyn, Ashlynn, Bryson and Shaylyn Perry, Allie and Luke Bruce, and Lauren and Jayce Eaton. Jan is survived by eight sisters and one brother, Sharon Kylo, Linda Collins, Jeanne Coon, Jerri James, Margo Chancellor, Dawn Robertson, Karen Christensen, Sandra King and Brad Rumsey; several brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law, along with her admiring father-in-law and mother-in-law, Richard and Veloy Eaton; and dozens of nieces and nephews. Jan was preceded in death by her father, Donald Garth Rumsey; and her mother, Leona Dorothy (Doney) Rumsey; as well as her brother, Kent Smith; sister, Brenda Rumsey; a baby brother Rumsey; and her nephew, Derrick Collins.

Jan and Brandon would like to express their sincere thanks to Dr. Carol Shields at Wills Eye Hospital in Philadelphia, who she admired so much. Jan would also like to thank Dr. Takami Sato at Jefferson University Hospital in Philly, Dr. Dan Zuckerman at St Luke's MSTI in Boise, Dr. Mark Miller, Dr. Francois Trotta, and many others who lovingly participated in her care. They and Jan all tried their best against an incurable disease. Jan would also like to thank the most supportive family a mom could ever wish for.

The funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Wednesday, Nov. 3, at The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 7200 Duncan Lane in Boise, with a viewing prior at 1 p.m. A graveside service will follow at Dry Creek Cemetery.

Memorial gifts may be made in Jan's honor to Will's Eye Hospital in Philadelphia, attention: Carol Shields, at the following address, Wills Eye, Development Office, 840 Walnut St., Philadelphia, PA 19001, or visit www.willseye.org for additional charitable donation ideas.

GOP confident of election gains

WASHINGTON (AP) — A takeover of the House in sight, Republicans brimmed with confidence while Democrats braced for losses on the eve of recession-era elections for control of Congress and dozens of statehouses. “The American people are in charge,” declared GOP leader John Boehner, vowing to shrink the size and cost of government if his party wins power today.

Favorites and underdogs alike went through their final campaign paces on Monday, beckoning voters to turn out in the small towns of swing House districts and the large urban centers where statewide races are won and lost.

“It does us no good that people are supporting us if they don’t turn into voters,” said Marco Rubio, a Republican rated a strong favorite for a Senate seat in a tangled multi-candidate race in Florida.

President Barack Obama was home from the campaign trail at the White House after a weekend rush through four states. In an interview with radio host Michael Baisden, he backtracked from previous comments, criticized by Republicans, in which he said Latino voters should punish their “enemies” at the polls. He said he should have used the word “opponents” instead.

A quiet shift in GOP stance on gay marriage

As the Tea Party's outsider challenge to Republican Party orthodoxy grabs headlines, another, quieter revolution is unfolding inside the GOP. This rebellion has at its heart a truly surprising issue, one that could have long-term consequences for the party: gay and lesbian couples' freedom to marry.

The latest evidence of this quiet revolution came with the release of the Republicans' midterm-campaign "Pledge to America." Though the pledge gives a perfunctory nod to "traditional marriage" explicit opposition to marriage for same-sex couples is conspicuous in its absence. The document never uses the word "gay" — a stark contrast to past party platforms, which have made opposition to gay equality a centerpiece of their social agenda.

Is this an isolated development? After all, the 1994 Contract With America was also focused solely on fiscal issues and government reform. But in 2010, there is compelling evidence that the shift is deep, and possibly lasting.

Jon Cowan

The GOP, in large part, isn't displaying its usual anti-gay election-year demagoguery, and not just in the "pledge." As recently as 1995, a Republican-controlled Congress was holding hearings investigating "homosexual recruitment" and the "promotion" of homosexuality. During the George W. Bush administration, the party used its fervent opposition to marriage for gay and lesbian couples as a get-out-the-vote strategy, encouraging more than a dozen anti-gay state ballot initiatives geared at driving turnout in the 2004 election and engineering repeated efforts to pass an amendment to the Constitution.

This year is the first election year in recent history in which anti-gay rhetoric has been significantly muted: No state is facing an anti-gay initiative on the ballot, and marriage has not been a focus of the national conservative agenda.

Beyond that, the Republican establishment is stepping up — and coming out. In just the last few months, leading Republican heavyweights have begun to announce their support for the freedom to marry. Ted Olson, Bush's solicitor general and a longtime Republican power broker, took the lead, writing articles and, with co-counsel David Boies, filing, arguing and winning the first federal court case to uphold gay and lesbian couples' constitutional right to marry. Cindy McCain and former first lady Laura Bush have both spoken out in support of marriage.

In August, Ken Mehlman, former Republican National Committee chairman and campaign manager for Bush in the 2004 election, revealed that he is gay and supports the freedom to marry. Mehlman hosted a fundraiser in support of Olson's lawsuit, with a guest list that would have been unheard of five years ago. It included numerous well-known Republicans such as former New Jersey Gov. Christine Todd Whitman, former McCain strategist Steve Schmidt, former Bush White House communications director Nicolle Wallace and former RNC counsel Benjamin Ginsberg. Bush's daughter Barbara made an appearance.

Perhaps even more telling, the proudly right-wing GOP Sen. John Cornyn of Texas appeared for the first time at a reception for the Log Cabin Republicans, a leading gay GOP organization. Cornyn had turned down invitations and even contributions from the Log Cabin group in the past. In September, he weathered significant criticism from the anti-gay Family Research Council. Because Cornyn is chairman of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, and thus tasked with getting Republicans elected to the Senate this fall, every move he makes is watched for ballot-box implications.

What's driving this insiders' insurrection? Perhaps a sense that a libertarian-leaning belief in fully extending the freedom to marry to all Americans does not, in fact, clash with a conservative commitment to holding together the social fabric, as marriage entails personal responsibility and social stability. Or perhaps these GOP leaders are beginning to see an alignment of their rhetoric about individual liberty with public opinion; in the last month, two national polls, by CNN and the Associated Press, showed that a majority of Americans nationwide now support marriage for gay and lesbian couples.

The implications of such a historic shift in the GOP establishment's stance on marriage should not be underestimated. For Republicans, it means they could become less moored to their socially conservative base and may get back in touch with the cautious but forward-looking American political center that is vital to GOP hopes of cobbling together a governing majority. For the country, it is evidence that we are inching ever closer to a national consensus that gay and lesbian couples should have the freedom to marry under the law.

Six reasons for U.S. to scrap free-trade myth

The price of living in the fantasy world of free-trade economics continues to rise for America.

Failure to recognize the pitfalls will probably mean a continuing struggle to emerge from recession, as much U.S. domestic demand leaks abroad due to the trade deficit, rather than being recycled at home. And America will continue to lose key industries: not just the primitive ones a developed nation should shed, but the high-tech jobs of the future.

Any serious discussion of free trade must confront David Ricardo's celebrated 1817 theory of comparative advantage, whose tale of English cloth and Portuguese wine is familiar to generations of economics students. According to a myth accepted by both laypeople and far too many professional economists, this theory proves that free trade is best, always and everywhere, regardless of whether a nation's trading partners reciprocate.

Unfortunately for free traders, it is riddled with holes, some of which even Ricardo acknowledged. If they held true, the hypothesis would hold water. But because they often don't, it is largely inapplicable in the real world. Here are six dubious assumptions made by free-trade advocates:

1. Trade is sustainable. But when a nation imports so much that it runs a trade deficit, this means it is either selling assets to foreign nations or going into debt to them. These processes, while elastic, aren't infinitely so. This is precisely the situation the United States is in today: Not only does it risk an eventual crash, but in the meantime, every dollar of assets it sells and every dollar of debt it assumes reduces the nation's net worth.

2. Productive assets used to generate goods and services can easily be shifted from declining to rising industries. But laid-off auto workers and abandoned automobile plants don't generally transition easily to making helicopters. Assistance payments can blunt the pain, but these costs must be counted against the purported benefits of free trade, and they make free trade an enlarger of big government.

3. Free trade doesn't worsen income inequality. In reality, it squeezes the wages of ordinary Americans because it expands the world's effective supply of labor, which can move from rice paddy to factory overnight, faster than its supply of capital, which takes decades to accumulate at prevailing savings rates. As a result, free trade strengthens the bargaining position of capital relative to labor. And there is no guarantee that ordinary people's gains from cheaper imports will outweigh their losses from lowered wages.

4. Capital isn't internationally mobile. If it can't move between nations, then free trade will (if the other assumptions hold true) steer it to the most-productive use in our own economy. But if capital can move between nations, then free trade may reveal that it can be used better somewhere else. This will benefit the nation that the money migrates to, and the world economy as a whole, but it won't always benefit us.

5. Free trade won't turn benign trading partners into dangerous trading rivals. But free trade often does do this, as we see today in China, whose growth is massively dependent upon exports. This is especially likely when trading partners practice mercantilism, the 400-year-old strategy of deliberately gaming the world trading system by methods like currency manipulation and hidden tariffs.

6. Short-term efficiency leads to long-term growth. But such growth has more to do with creative destruction, innovation and capital accumulation than it does with short-term efficiency. All developed nations, including the U.S. (which was protectionist from the Founding Fathers until after World War II), industrialized by means of protectionist policies that were inefficient in the short run.

What is the implication of all these loopholes in Ricardo's theory? That trade is good for America, but free trade, which is not the same thing at all, is a very dicey proposition.

There is an appropriate policy response. For starters, the U.S. should apply compensatory tariffs against imports subsidized by currency manipulation, an idea that originated with the U.S. Business and Industry Council and was recently passed by the House. Also essential is a border tax to counter foreign export rebates implemented by means of foreign value-added taxes.

The U.S. also needs tariffs on foreign goods and services that compete with existing and startup domestic producers, if only as bargaining chips to force other nations to play fair.

The longer we do nothing, on the assumption that the world trading system will rebalance itself, the more likely that it will break down in unpredictable and counterproductive ways.

A grass-roots push for immigration reform?

Fundamental change usually proceeds from the bottom up, which is why it often blindsides most politicians and much of the media.

For example, the "tea party"-style rage that is this election cycle's defining characteristic grows out of a broad, if inchoate, sense that the American economy no longer apportions prosperity or opportunity in anything close to an equitable fashion. Last year the 74 highest-paid Americans each earned an average of $519 million annually — or about $10 million a week. That was up from $92 million the year before. At the same time, every measure of ordinary Americans' pay — total, average and median — fell from the previous year. Adjusted for inflation, median pay was actually less than it was 10 years ago.

Marriage equality is another question on which change is pushing up from the grass roots, with polls showing that increasing numbers of Americans now regard it as a civil rights issue. That's overwhelmingly true among the young, no matter their region or background.

Something similar may be occurring when it comes to immigration reform. As a

Tim Rutten

Los Angeles Times/USC poll reported, nearly half of California's likely voters have a favorable view of immigrants, including those without papers. Fully 59 percent said that undocumented immigrants who have lived and worked here for at least two years should be allowed to remain. That's particularly significant because California is home to more immigrants than any other state.

You could catch a glimpse of this new consensus on a recent Sunday at Dolores Mission Church in Boyle Heights, one of those places where the better angels of Los Angeles' nature tend to speak most clearly. Dolores, set among public housing projects, is among Los Angeles' poorest Roman Catholic parishes and long has been run by the Jesuits, the largest and most influential of the church's religious orders.

Hundreds of people of all ages and ethnicities — parishioners, students at the order's schools and lay associates of its social justice initiatives — gathered to assist at a Mass on behalf of comprehensive immigration reform. As one of the celebrities, Homeboy Industries' Father Gregory Boyle, put it, they were there to "to imagine a circle of compassion and then to imagine no one standing outside that circle."

Afterward, Father John McGarry, the Mass' principal celebrant and the Jesuits' California superior, read a letter calling for comprehensive immigration reform signed by those present and sent to President Obama and members of Congress. Among the essential steps the Dolores declaration urges are "a path to legalization that ensures that undocumented immigrants have access to full rights; a legal employment structure for future workers that protects both migrants and U.S. workers; and expedited reunification and emphasis on family unity for all immigrants."

The latter point carried a particular resonance on this particular Sunday because the most moving of the Dolores speakers was a middle-aged woman named Natividad, a Salvadoran immigrant who spoke of what her life and that of her six young children had been like since their father was deported. Afterward, Father Scott Santarosa, Dolores' pastor, drew my attention to a wrenching aspect of the remarks she delivered in matter-of-fact Spanish: She spoke as though she no longer had a husband and of how her youngest sons believed their father dead.

In an interview with the popular Spanish-language radio personality Eddie "Piolin" Sotelo, Obama blamed Republicans for blocking comprehensive immigration reform. That's partly true. When congressional Republicans recently frustrated passage of the so-called DREAM Act, which would have provided a path to citizenship for some undocumented young people who attend college or serve in the armed forces, pollsters measured a steep increase in the enthusiasm of likely Latino voters.

It's also true, though, that this administration's enforcement of our broken immigration laws has been nothing short of draconian. This month, Obama's Homeland Security secretary, Janet Napolitano, proudly announced that we deported a record number of people in the last fiscal year — some 1,080 men and women a day, or nearly 393,000 in all. Less than half of those people will have committed any crime other than being here without papers.

How many families, like

Natividad's, will be caught up in tragedy as a consequence? The Times/USC poll suggests that political expediency and common sense, at long last, may have begun to converge on this issue.

58 die during seige at Iraq church

BAGHDAD (AP) — After the gunmen killed the priest and nearly everyone in the first row, an eerie quiet descended over the pews. The only occasional sounds were sporadic gunfire, the muffled cries of the hostages and the shouts of Islamic militants — sometimes over their cell phones.

Suddenly the lights went out. Iraqi forces began entering the building, telling parishioners: "We will save you!"

Then a shattering blast shook the church as a suicide bomber set off his explosives.

By the time the siege of Our Lady of Salvation church was over Sunday night, 58 people were dead and 78 wounded — nearly everyone inside the building.

The attack, claimed by an al-Qaida-linked organization, was the deadliest recorded against Iraq's Christians since the 2003 U.S.-led invasion unleashed a wave of violence against them.

The scope of the slaughter only became clear on Monday after a long night of confusion and conflicting reports. Iraqi officials had initially provided a much lower death toll.

Appeals court extends life of gay military policy

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A federal appeals court on Monday indefinitely extended its freeze on a judge's order halting enforcement of the military's "don't ask, don't tell" policy, heightening pressure on the Obama administration to persuade the U.S. Senate to repeal the law before a new Congress is sworn in.

A divided three-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals granted the U.S. government's request for a stay while it challenges the trial court's ruling that the ban on openly gay service members is unconstitutional.

denounced the militants' assault as "ferocious," the White House condemned it as "senseless" and Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki said it harkened back to the days of sectarian warfare between Muslim sects.

Christians who cowered for hours inside the stone building that used to be their peaceful sanctuary wondered why they were yet again the target of violence.

"They are criminals and more than criminals. What type of man kills people at prayer? What have we done to receive this?" said Aida Jameel, a 65-year-old Christian woman who suffered a gunshot wound in a leg.

The violence began around 5:30 Sunday evening in what a senior Iraqi security official said appeared to be a suicide mission.

The official described the attack as it unfolded based on a preliminary internal investigation by Iraqi authorities that depended, in part, on statements from survivors. His chilling account was verified by other Iraqi security officials at the scene, the U.S. military in Baghdad, and interviews of survivors who spoke to The Associated Press.

Shortly before sunset, the gunmen drove a black Jeep Cherokee to the church. They blew it up, destroying their getaway car, and set off four small bombs in the neighborhood. In a brief shootout at the nearby Iraq stock exchange, the militants wounded two policemen.

Seven or eight militants then charged through the front doors of the church, interrupting the evening Mass service. They rushed down the aisle, brandishing their machine guns and spraying the room with bullets.

They ordered the priest to call the Vatican to demand the release of Muslim women who they claimed were being held captive by the Coptic church in Egypt. When the priest said he could not do that, the gunmen shot him and turned their guns on the congregation, killing most of those in the front pew.

Costumed child has role in Halloween holdup

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Police in Wichita say a little girl in a pink costume played a part in a Halloween holdup.

A 19-year-old woman was driving through a neighborhood Sunday night when she saw a girl dressed as a princess or fairy run into the street.

KAKE-TV reports the woman stopped her car, and the girl told her she couldn't find her parents.

But when the woman opened her car door, a man in a mask showed up demanding money. The woman gave him cash from her purse.

Police say the little girl and the man ran together from the scene. The woman was not injured.

TUCK IN YOUR GARDEN

How to prepare for an easier spring

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

HAILEY — The recent dustings of frost have told the tale: Gardening season is over, and it's about time to pack up the shovel until spring.

But not quite yet.

First, take some tips from local expert gardeners, and try these things to help your garden come alive stronger and faster than ever when the snow melts.

"There are a lot of things we can do in the fall that will save us effort and time in the spring," said Dick Springs, Picabo farmer and coordinator of Wood River Sustainability Center in Hailey. "We want it to go gangbusters from the get-go because we have such a short time for (each plant) to put out its fruit or root or leaves."

Yard waste? More like yard useful

Instead of piling your grass clippings, dead garden greenery and pruning leftovers into a giant plastic bags to be hauled away from the curb, put them to use.

"You can totally top-dress your garden plot with shredded leaves. It's a mulch and fertilizer all in one," Springs said.

Just be sure the plant material is in tiny pieces, to maximize the edges where decomposition happens. For leaves and grass clippings, run over them a few times with your rotary lawnmower; for thicker items like branches from pruned bushes, rent a chipper-shredder.

"If you add a bunch of woody stuff to your soil that's not composted already, and then you plant something into it, you'll definitely have a nitrogen deficiency, because the organisms in the soil use the nitrogen to break down the organic matter, instead of giving it to the plant," said JoAnn Robbins, master gardener and educator at the Jerome Extension Office of the University of Idaho.

Adding the shredded organic material in the fall gives the soil all winter to break it down and increase the nutrients available to your garden next spring.

Give your soil a test

Bring a sample of your garden dirt to labs in Twin Falls or Jerome (call your local extension office for information) to find out what it may be missing to help your garden grow.

Or, Springs said, you can determine its constituent parts at home. Although the home test won't tell you whether the soil is deficient in nutrients, it can tell you what proportions of clay, silt and sand you have.

"We're supposed to have 40 percent sand, 40 percent silt and 20 percent clay," said Sherry Thorson of Hailey, who learned from Springs at a recent

Photos by ARIEL HANSEN/Times-News

Uprooted broccoli plants await shredding and reincorporation into the soil at Wood River Sustainability Center in Hailey.

It's almost too late to plant garlic cloves, like this hardneck Spanish Roja, and flower bulbs. But get them in quickly if you haven't already, and hope a hard freeze doesn't hit too soon.

Black plastic helps keep the last of the garden greenery from dying on not-quite-freezing nights. Clear plastic can help in the spring, by warming the soil as soon as the snow melts to prepare it for planting.

Dick Springs prepares a chipper-shredder to make quick work of leftover plant material from the garden at Wood River Sustainability Center, while a giant pile of manure waits nearby to supplement the garden beds.

Constitutional amendments

Once you know what your soil is missing, add what is needed. For most gardens, nitrogen and organic material will make the mix richer and better for your plants.

Alfalfa pellets, available at feed stores, release nitrogen slowly into the soil, Springs said, so he recommends scattering them in the top layer of soil before the snow falls.

If your soil test determines you don't have enough of a nutrient or a constituent, autumn is a good time to make the necessary additions — you can even add "hot" (still breaking down) compost from your compost pile, because the overwintering will cool it down. If you were to add that same hot compost in spring, it could "burn" your young plants and kill them.

"You can use fresh manure as a top dressing in the fall, and by the time it goes through the winter, it'll be old enough to put into the dirt," Thorson said.

Plan ahead for a quick start

Determine now which beds you'll use for your early produce, such as cabbage or spinach grown from seed. Prepare those beds now, and in the first months of spring you won't have as much trouble getting them ready for planting.

You might even consider repeating an experiment that Robbins found successful: Before the first snow, she laid a layer of thick, clear plastic atop her tilled beds. Then, when the snow began to melt and the sun hit the plastic, it warmed the soil, making it ready for planting sooner. The method was so effective at her former Hailey home that she was able to grow sweet corn during the Wood River Valley's short growing season.

Although the region did have a good soaking rain not long ago, check under your evergreens, especially the small ones, to make sure the ground is moist. Because these trees continue to pull water from the soil beneath the frozen layer during winter, if there isn't enough moisture they will desiccate and end up severely damaged or dead next spring.

Get in your bulbs (and garlic) now

It's getting a bit late to put in garlic and flower bulbs, but there's still time if you hurry and a hard freeze doesn't hit too quickly, Robbins said. The bulbs do need a little time to get a root or two into the soil before they freeze over.

Grocery store garlic doesn't grow well in Idaho gardens, and the state has restrictions on what can be imported, so Springs suggested asking friends and neighbors who already grow the fragrant bulb for a few hardneck heads you can start at home.

"Here is the spring of the year for garlic," he said, noting that the cloves can be planted in a bed where you will grow later-harvest items like tomatoes, because the garlic is harvested in mid-July before those plants get big.

Seeing the garlic scapes appear in the spring is rewarding. "Here come these garlic shoots out of the snow, and you say 'Yeah!' It gets the endorphins going," Springs said.

Mom Caves: updated rooms of one's own

By Kim Cook
For The Associated Press

Roxanne Jacoby has a guest room in her Pennsylvania home that no guest has ever slept in. It's really her Mom Cave.

Outfitted with mementos and comfort items, it's the only room in the house she really calls her own.

"I've put in an alpaca throw, down pillows, a fan, my favorite scented candle, and a whole bunch of stuff that I want to read," says Jacoby.

It's not like she couldn't set all that up in a corner of the family room. But that "guest room" has an important feature: "I can close the door."

Many women — and not just moms — are taking over some of the fallow ground at home and turning it into a haven for personal pursuits. They stake out an unused closet, basement nook or extra bedroom. Some use the space to work without interruption — they've got it all teched up with Wi-Fi, perhaps a TV. Others say none of that's allowed, just books and maybe a music player.

Lori Remien, a teacher in Evanston, Ill., took over an unused nook off her daughter's room when she needed a place to work on her National Boards exams a few years ago. "I went to Ikea and bought a comfy wicker chair, a plush red rug, some pretty black and white curtains. It's still a great retreat where I can watch the shows the rest of my family doesn't watch," she says.

New York designer Elaine Griffin embraces the Mom Cave concept and recently partnered with Homegoods in Manhattan to show some decor and space suggestions. She says, "A Mom Cave is where the woman who nurtures everyone goes to nurture herself."

It's different from the quintessential "man cave," where men do manly, messy and sporty things, often involving a recliner. Griffin notes, "Mom Caves are fun, frankly feminine spaces, and they're personalized."

Here's what you need for your Mom Cave: a place to sit, storage space, an area to do what you want to do, and room for occasional visitors.

"Organizing your stuff makes your space feel bigger. I love bookcases — you can hide in plain sight," says Griffin. Colorful boxes and file folders work well; group an array of favorite photos in fun frames on the shelves.

Griffin has a penchant for color — the mini-rooms she created for Homegoods were lively and welcoming. A reading corner with chaise and bookcases was painted vibrant fuchsia. A closet had been transformed into a tiny yet functional office, swathed in a warm caramel hue and accented with dramatic touches such as rattan lamps and black furnishings, including a chair with a nice wide seat.

No extra rooms available? Griffin suggests turning a stair landing into a mini-sanctuary using narrow console tables, a luxurious rug, and a couple of armchairs.

These spaces aren't exclusive to women with families underfoot; all ages appreciate what Virginia Woolf termed "a room of one's own." In her social circle of women age 60-plus, Barbara McDonald of Nova Scotia, Canada, says the "getaway room" is no longer needed but such a space still serves many purposes. "It's invaluable as a project room. Close the door and leave the mess for next time," she says.

Since you don't share it, you've got more freedom with the Cave to play with unusual wallpaper and accessories, create a Zen-like refuge or, like Atlanta-based Robyn Freedman, revisit your childhood room. Freedman, who runs a creative think tank, has even got a name for her space: the Hobbit Hole.

"My room's purple with green polka dots. It's got all kinds of silly things from my childhood — my light bulb collection, Dr. Seuss books and college letterman blanket. Lots of goofy stuff and everything makes me smile," she laughs.

And that, of course, is the best reason of all for a Mom Cave.

A reader pops the cork question

By Jura Koncius
The Washington Post

Post staff writer Jura Koncius took questions in an online chat. Below is an edited excerpt.

Q: I'd like to replace my kitchen's vinyl-tile-on-cement-subfloor with cork, but I get such conflicting information online. I have a very sunny kitchen, so I am mainly wondering if cork is fade-resistant.

A: I have several friends who just love them. And I have written about several homes recently where cork was the floor of choice for serious cooks who stand on their feet all day long. Fading has not been a problem.

Q: I was hoping that you could recommend a pretty and warm light gray that would look nice in a front room that receives a lot of sunlight. I want to do whites and creams, with oak furniture and lots of bright green plants. The floor is carpeted but near hardwoods that are a warm honey, slightly orange color. Any ideas?

A: I like Farrow & Ball's Pavilion Gray, Duron's Grayish and Pratt & Lambert's Bristol Fog.

Q: We'd like to paint our toddler's room blue and yellow (reminiscent of the sky and sun). Any color recommendations? The room has two windows and gets good morning light. I don't really have a decorating scheme for the room. We have a collection of fun folk art pieces to go on the walls (mostly train-related), plus my dad's childhood cowboy boots and my grandfather's lariat. It's going to be rather an eclectic mix.

A: Your accessories sound fantastic. In my son's room, we tried to put something from each of his grandparents. It's more meaningful than running out to a decorating store and buying stuff to line the shelves. Here are some paint suggestions: Morning Sky Blue by Benjamin Moore or Duron's Blue Horizon and Moonlight by Benjamin Moore or Duron's Lemon Chiffon.

Q: Our family has a penchant for shades of blue that don't blend well. How do we use more than one blue without having clashing views from room to room?

A: One trick is to use colors found on the same paint fan deck card, which should have a similar color base. With Duron, Page 73 has great blues ranging from a pale Sky High to a dark Loyal Blue.

Reader: We buy the small paint samples and we have some card stock (11 by 17 inches). We paint the card stock the colors that we are looking at and then hang them on the walls with masking tape and wait a while to see what we think. When we went to replace the furniture in those rooms later, we were able to take the cards with us to the store to match with fabrics and wood tones.

What's new: Adhesive mat aids tiling jobs

By Mary Beth Breckenridge
Akron Beacon Journal

Bondera TileMatSet is designed to make tiling easier.

Bondera is a peel-and-stick adhesive mat that takes the place of tile mastic for some interior applications. You just adhere the mat to the surface, apply the tiles and then grout the joints.

You can even use it over existing tile in some cases, as long as the old tile is clean and well-bonded and the substrate is structurally sound, level and straight. It's not recommended for use over existing tile on bathroom walls or tub and shower surrounds.

The product comes in one type for walls and other vertical surfaces and another type for horizontal surfaces such as countertops. There's also a narrower size for smaller details.

Bondera is available at Lowe's. Regular prices for the countertop and wall products are $31.98 and $38.98, respectively.

The long and the short of curtains

By Jura Koncius and Terri Sapienza
The Washington Post

Staff writers Jura Koncius and Terri Sapienza took questions in an online chat. Below is an edited excerpt.

Q: I finally found curtains I like for the dining and living room but am concerned about their length. I bought 84-inch curtains, and they look like they will hang about 3 to 4 inches from the ground. The 96-inch curtains would bunch up on the ground. What would you suggest?

Sapienza: You don't want to have a gap between the curtains and the floor; it will look like you bought the wrong size. Buy the 96-inch panels and have them hemmed to skim the floor.

Q: The bay window in our kitchen nook faces our back yard. In the summer, we have trees between ourselves and our neighbor, but after the leaves fall that kitchen nook is lit up like a stage set in the evenings. What would give us sunshine during the day, privacy at night and be more decorative than roller shades?

Sapienza: I have the exact kind of bay window you describe in my house. We hung Roman grass shades in all three windows, which provide privacy and allow light to pass through even when they are down. We also had a valance made and installed, which adds a nice decorative element.

Q: All of the door hardware in my Colonial-style ranch needs updating. I am ready to banish the worn brass that I inherited. Any ideas about which finish would be most prudent?

Koncius: I must say that brass is probably the most appropriate for a Colonial, but nickel is also a great choice. And nickel is as timeless as brass.

Berry plants can be winners in form and function

By Dean Fosdick
For The Associated Press

Berry plants are flavorful favorites in many kitchen gardens, but their ornamental value is all but ignored. These versatile perennials bloom in spring, fruit in summer and dazzle again in autumn, combining fashionable form with edible function. Strawberries make an attractive ground cover, especially when flowering. Leaves on blueberry plants turn crimson in fall, and their bare red stems stand out dramatically against the wintertime snow. Grapevines draped over arbors are eye-catching any time of year.

ONLINE

For more about berry plants in the home landscape, see this University of Minnesota Extension fact sheet: www.extension.umn.edu/distribution/horticulture/dg3463.html

tery in growing them,” said Barbara Bowling, author of “The Berry Grower’s Companion” (Timber Press, 2000). “If you select a good site and pay attention, you can grow wonderful fruit and have an interesting plant to boot.” Maintenance is minimal, but that doesn’t mean the plants can be ignored. “Water a day late and you’ve done avoidable damage,” Bowling said from her home in Boise. “Weed a week late and it’s the same deal. Harvest the fruit late and you have a mess.” Time for a little definition. Fruits commonly called “berries” include strawberries, brambles (raspberries, blackberries and various hybrids), blueberries, cranberries, currants, grapes, gooseberries and elderberries, Bowling said. Berries deliver a remarkable range of flavors and come in a wide range of colors. They frequently are eaten fresh, but just as often are processed into juices, jams, pastries and dairy products such as smoothies. “Berries are high in nutrients and fiber and low in fat. ... Many species have high levels of numerous antioxidants and anti-tumor compounds,” Bowling said. They require little space in which to grow, and many begin fruiting just two to three years after planting. “The fact that the fruit is borne on plants with such a variety of shapes, form and color only adds to their allure,” Bowling said. Fruiting plants come in many shapes, from low growing (strawberries), to rounded shrubs (gooseberries, currants), medium-size to tall clustered canes (blueberries, elderberries), or vines (grapes, kiwi). That makes them useful for edging, as screens, backdrops for fences or dangling from pergolas. Which berry plants should you grow? Veteran gardeners suggest starting with something you like, then narrowing it to cultivars hardy enough for your region. Choose sites with good drainage and plenty of sun. Elderberries were almost forgotten plants that have become popular recently, said

Edie Johnston, whose Eldertide Pharm in Dresden, Maine, was awarded a grant to develop them as a specialty crop. “Elderberries have always been recognized for their health benefits,” Johnston said. “Some growers call them their ‘medicine chests,’ and drink elderberry juice for the antioxidants. But they’re also great specimen plants with beautiful white flower clusters and gorgeous leaves.” Blueberries are another fine multipurpose plant, and that includes an uncommon new variety called “Pink Lemonade.” It’s a USDA hybrid. “I know it sounds a little bizarre, but we think the potential of this pink berry for landscape and culinary use is huge,” said Karen Kemp-Dockstader, sales and marketing manager for Briggs Plant Propagators in Elma, Wash. That isn’t to say the traditional blueberry plant won’t continue to be popular. “People in the commercial landscape industry around here are planting them alongside condominiums,” she said. “They use them as foundation plants where they do double duty. Families who live in the condominiums can enjoy their looks as well as their taste.”

Light up the night with updated porch fixtures

By Diana Reese
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The glow of a porch light does more than light up the night, providing safety and security. It’s a decorative element that adds to your home’s total look, and porch lights are evolving to reflect energy efficiency and light pollution concerns. Here’s what experts have to say about the latest in porch lights. Consider alternatives to clear glass. Textured glass, such as seeded, etched or rippled, along with opaque and colored glass, are becoming more popular, says Bob Wilson of Wilson Lighting. “Texture adds to the look and feel of the fixture,” he says, and helps camouflage energy-efficient CFL bulbs and reduces glare, while amber light gives a warm glow. Older eyes become more sensitive, and instead of providing safety, glare from a porch light can be detrimental when trying to navigate steps, says Jeff Dross, senior product manager at Kichler Lighting. Go for energy efficiency. Easiest to do? Replace your incandescent bulbs with compact fluorescent lamps. “CFLs are generally very good until extreme cold hits with temperatures consistently at zero,” Dross says. He finds exterior lighting a great place to use fluorescents, which offer the most light for your buck. Keep the skies dark. The dark sky

SIZE IT UP

The scale of the fixture is so important, says Shirley Allen, owner of the Light Shop in Kansas City, Mo. “Don’t under size. You need a grown-up fixture.” Here are the rules of thumb.

- For a single lantern, choose one that’s one-third the door height.
- For two lanterns, choose fixtures that are around one-fourth the height of the door.
- Mount the lanterns 66 inches above the door’s threshold.
- Your lanterns will look about half of their size when viewed from 50 feet away, so what may seem enormous in the showroom will appear just right from the street.

Remember, too, that although house size peaked in 2007, interior ceiling heights have increased, adding to the height of the home. Coupled with an oversized front door, that additional height calls for proportionately larger porch lights, says Jeff Dross, senior product manager at Kichler Lighting.

THE LED LOWDOWN

LEDs, or light-emitting diodes, are probably the bulb of the future. While some LED fixtures are available, the price is still prohibitive for many, says Jeff Dross at Kichler Lighting. Because LEDs require special fixtures, the bulb and fixture are thrown away once the bulb burns out (which can take years).

movement started a decade ago in western states to fight light pollution. “There’s a whole shift in how we light the out of doors,” says Tom Patterson, director of product development at Hinkley Lighting. Instead of light leaking up and horizontally, the light from porch lights shines down, illuminating where you’re walking. The International Dark Sky Association even gives its seal of approval to lights that pass muster. “You can do with one-third of wattage used,” Patterson says. “Tie it in with fluorescent, and the fixture is even more efficient while still safe and effective.” Look for different metals. Porch lights were once polished brass, but that finish fails to weather well in some climates. Aluminum has become a popular choice, and it can be painted different colors. Dross says he’s seeing more neutral-tone grays. Other popular metals are nickel and brushed nickel, stainless steel and dark bronze.

Lori Chandler

During the holidays, I will be hosting family members in my home for several days. It will be great, except I’m worried about a particular relative who is extremely sensitive and cautious about chemicals contained in household cleaning products. She is always assessing harmful gasses and contaminations in the air. I want to avoid conflicts... any help?!

Answer:

Gassy Aunt Bertie has reason to be cautious! Opening a bottle of cleaner seems like an innocent task, but recent studies indicate that household chemicals are second only to car emissions in contributing to dangerous gasses. What can you do? Choose our environmentally friendly GREENER ALTERNATIVE cleaning products. You can also clean chemically-free by using Don Aslett’s Everywhere Steamer. Cleaning with steam is an excellent chemical-free alternative.

Spring bulbs for shady spots

By Adrian Higgins
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — It's spring bulb-planting season. My advice: Get yourself a kneeling pad and stout trowel, and set aside a day or two over the next month to plant as many little bulbs as you can stand. In March and April, the garden will spring to life in a way that will lift your spirits.

My other advice: If your beds are at all shady, choose your bulbs carefully. The more shade you have, the harder it is to get bulbs to perform as you would like. Tall bulbs like hybrid tulips wander side-ways in search of light. The catalogs depict ballerinas; you end up with limbo dancers.

Bulbs that are supposed to return reliably — I am thinking of daffodils and grape hyacinths — don't because they are starved of sunlight. They grow weak and dull.

A dark corner overshadowed by pines, hollies or other evergreens is the most challenging, but even a woodland of oaks and maples can upset a bulb's internal equilibrium. A daffodil may bloom in April when the tree leaves are barely showing, but its own leaves won't receive the light they need in May and June to keep the bulb blooming year to year. If you are digging against an impenetrable mat of roots, you might want to pass on bulbs and pretty much everything else. But most sylvan beds are more accommodating.

You can bring rejuvenating light into a shade garden without altering its character by the thoughtful removal of low-growing branches and, if you are brave, by taking out a few of the trees and big shrubs. The parallel tactic is to select shade-tolerant bulbs, typically ground-hugging minor bulbs that flower early in the season. Their leaves wither naturally in May, the bulb-building work done before the canopy fully extends its dark umbrella.

Shade-tolerant bulbs such as snowdrops and scillas are daintier than brassy tulips, daffodils or alliums. You need more of them to make a show, but they're cheaper and easier to plant. Think big and don't plant fewer than 100.

Some early-season daffodil varieties will handle the shade garden. Try February Gold, Rijnveld's Early Sensation, Ice Follies, Itzim and Toby the First.

A woodland tulip species named Tulipa sylvestris will also work. "A wonderful little tulip," says Brent Heath of Brent and Becky's Bulbs in Gloucester, Va. It is small, starry, yellow and spreads by runners.

A garden can present the following succession of bulbs between February and April: snowdrops, winter aconite, crocus, glory-of-the-snow, squill, anemone and bluebells. Each has a capacity to cover the woodland floor in a way that is enchanting. Together and successively, they simply intensify the thrill of early spring. I have grown the following for years and love to see them spread year after year in shadier parts of my garden.

Snowdrop. Fancy, pricey varieties are all the rage among snowdrop fanatics, but two basic types will add cheap and cheerful ornament in late winter when you most need it: Galanthus elwesii and the smaller-flowered G. nivalis.

Winter aconite. Slow to

establish, the buttercup-like blossoms spread prolifically by seed after a few years. The blooms open as early as February and elongate as they grow over several weeks. Sometimes sold by its botanic name, Eranthis hyemalis.

Crocus. There are lots of lovely crocus varieties, but the workhorse crocus for the shade garden is the early-flowering species named Crocus tommasinianus. Bulb fans call them "tommies." It's a crocus that is most likely to spread year to year, forming carpets of lavender blue. Named varieties of tommies are available in different shades, but they don't spread as vigorously as the parent.

Glory-of-the-snow. This is a petite bulb with starry blue flowers facing upward. Valued for its massed effect, it is often called by its botanic name, chionodoxa.

Squill. Varieties of squill or scilla form the heart of a blue phase in early April. They display clusters of dainty blue flowers that tend to hang in little bells. Scilla bifolia starts to bloom before the glory-of-the-snow, and Scilla siberica extends beyond it. Heath is a big fan of the shade-loving S. mischtschenkoana, a squill with sky blue blooms on generous flower spikes.

Anemone. The anemone, or windflower, is the Italian species Anemone appennina. It's a little finicky and difficult to find. Most fans of this lovely spring flower go with the Grecian windflower, A. blanda. This is variable in color, blooming blue, white or pink. Named varieties give predictable color.

Bluebells. The traditional English bluebell struggles to establish and spread in the heat of some climates, but the more upright Spanish bluebell does well and naturalizes in a woodland setting. It is known botanically as Hyacinthoides hispanica.

Snowflake. The snowflake, or leucojum, looks like an oversize snowdrop but blooms in April when the garden has filled in. The common sort is called Leucojum aestivum, and a popular, larger variety is named Gravetye Giant.

Bulbs can be planted until the end of the year, or until the ground freezes, but they may bloom later than normal their first season. The earlier you can plant them, the better, especially for winter bloomers such as snowdrops and winter aconites. I like to plant them base-down, but I have seen Dutch experts just throw them in a hole without worrying about their orientation or spacing. If you can't tell up from down, often the case with anemone bulbs, plant them on their sides.

Count on planting these specialty bulbs at between eight and 12 per square foot, depending on size.

Scilla mischtschenkoana features sky blue blooms on generous flower spikes.

The snowflake looks like an oversize snowdrop but blooms in April when the garden has filled in.

Shade-tolerant bulbs such as these snowdrops are daintier than brassy tulips, daffodils or alliums. Think big and don't plant fewer than 100.

More opportunities, more risks

Speaker says ability to manage volatility will be key in coming years

By Cindy Snyder
Times-News correspondent

When David Kohl looks into his crystal ball, he sees more business opportunities for agriculture in the next 10 years than the industry has seen in the last 30.

But those opportunities will come at a cost — an increased risk of failure.

Much of that increased risk of failure is going to come from sources outside an agricultural producer's control. Livestock producers are watching that kind of volatility this fall as corn prices skyrocket and pull feed prices higher. Crop producers are watching fertilizer prices increase sharply on the expectation that corn acres will be up next spring.

"Your ability to manage volatility will be key," Kohl told agricultural producers during a workshop sponsored by the Twin Falls

Northwest Farm Credit branch last Friday, "volatility at the extremes. You will go from the best six months you've ever had to the worst, and vice versa."

That makes risk management — a perennial topic at farm management workshops — even more important. Kohl, professor emeritus of agricultural and applied economics at Virginia Tech and a

Firestorm over antibiotics

Meat industry unhappy with federal proposal to limit use of antibiotics in animals

By Karen Dillon
McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — For decades, factory farms have used antibiotics even in healthy animals to promote faster growth and prevent disease that could sicken livestock held in confined quarters.

The benefit: cheaper, more plentiful meat for consumers.

But a firestorm has erupted over a federal proposal recommending antibiotics only when animals are actually sick.

Medical and public health experts in recent years say overuse and misuse of antibiotics pose a serious public health threat by creating new strains of bacteria that are difficult to treat

The guidelines, which say there is a clear risk to human health, are only recommendations but are a first step toward possible regulations to limit the use of antibiotics in the United States.

— both in animals and humans.

"Over time, we have created some monster bugs," said Russ Kremer, a Bonnots Mill, Mo., farmer who speaks nationally about the threat to the food supply.

"It is truly harmful to everyone to feed antibiotics to animals just for growth promotion and economic gain."

But the meat industry argues that the draft guidelines from the Food and Drug Administration are premature. There is not enough evidence to show a clear link between the use of antibiotics in livestock and health problems in humans.

This summer the FDA issued draft guidelines, which recommend using antibiotics only in acute medical situations and under the supervision of a veterinarian.

The guidelines, which say there is a clear risk to human health, are only recommendations but are a first step toward possible regulations to limit the use of antibiotics in the United States.

Despite meat industry protests, the medical community is unhappy that the FDA recommendations don't go far enough.

They are weak and voluntary, and after decades of study the FDA should just issue regulations, the medical industry says.

"These are guidelines, not regulations, which means no enforcement," said Gail R. Hansen, a veterinarian and senior officer of the Pew Charitable Trusts, which has campaigned for new limits on farm antibiotics.

"We don't see that it is going to move things along very efficiently."

USDA: Food inflation to accelerate into 2011

By Matt Andrejczak
MarketWatch

SAN FRANCISCO — Food inflation will "accelerate" during the final months of 2010 and into the first six months of 2011, especially for meat, cereal and dairy products, the U.S. Agriculture Department said Monday.

U.S. food companies have already started to raise prices to blunt price spikes for a number of commodities, including corn, wheat and coffee.

"Although inflation has been relatively weak for most of 2009 and 2010, higher food commodity and energy prices are now exerting pressure on wholesale and retail food prices," USDA food economist Ephraim Leibtag said.

Pork prices in 2010 are now forecast to rise as much as 5.5 percent over 2009, compared with the Aug. 25 estimate for an increase of up to 4 percent, the USDA said in its monthly update. Beef prices are expected to increase up to 3.5 percent against the previous 3 percent gain.

Meat prices have been going up, following a painful restructuring for U.S. meat companies that slashed output and bankrupted smaller hog producers. This has driven up lean hog and live cattle prices in the futures market over the past year. Lean hog prices have begun to ease lately.

Overall, the USDA left its 2010 forecast unchanged for food prices to increase 0.5 percent to 1.5 percent — the lowest rate of annual inflation in 18 years.

It further maintained its 2011 forecast for food prices to rise 2 percent to 3 percent over 2010. Dairy prices are expected to be up as much as 5.5 percent over 2010. Butter prices have been surging, up 19 percent over September 2009.

When commodity prices rise for a prolonged period, it normally takes several months before those price gains find their way into the supermarket.

Inflation comes at a tricky time for brand-name U.S. food makers, most of whom have been reluctant to pass along higher commodity costs.

They are still coping with tight-fisted shoppers and rising food stamp usage. How consumers will respond to higher prices is uncertain after brand-name food companies cut prices this year to woo shoppers.

Farmers in turkey industry look toward future

Jonathon Knutson
Agweek writer

RUGBY, N.D. — John Lovcik laughs when asked how he got into the turkey business.

"I saw an ad in the newspaper. It read something like, 'Be an entrepreneur. Be your own business.' It was for a turkey farm, and I followed up," he says.

Now in his fourth year in the turkey industry, Lovcik is a partner in Pine Ridge Turkey Farm in Rugby, and president of the North Dakota Turkey Federation.

The industry is seeing steady growth.

U.S. turkey consumption per capita has more than doubled in the past four decades, rising from 8 pounds per capita in 1970 to 17.6 pounds per capita in 2008, according to the National Turkey Federation.

Chicken is America's leading meat of choice (annual per-capita consumption of 83.5 pounds), followed by beef (62.8 pounds) and pork (49.5 pounds), with turkey fourth.

About half of the turkey consumed in 1970 was during Thanksgiving and Christmas. But only 29 percent of the turkey consumed in 2008 was during the holidays.

Minnesota — the turkey production capital of the United States — raised about 45 million birds last year, according to the Minnesota Association of Turkey Growers.

In the Midwest, ground corn and soybean meal are the major components of turkey feed. Minnesota is a top producer of both corn and soybeans, which helps to explain the turkey industry's prominence in the state.

Corn and soybean production have been rising steadily in North Dakota, which would seem to bode well for the state's turkey industry.

YESTERDAY ON WALL STREET

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks closed mixed Monday as traders waited for this week's election results and more details about the Federal Reserve's plan to stimulate the economy.

Stocks rose early in the day following reports of unexpected growth in the manufacturing industry in both the U.S. and China last month. Manufacturing expanded at its fastest pace in five months, according to the Institute for Supply Management. The group said that its industry index rose to 56.9 in October from 54.4 in September. Any number above 50 indicates growth.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 125 points, led by manufacturers Caterpillar Inc., United Technologies Corp. and General Electric Co.

But stocks were unable to hold on to their gains ahead of the election and the two-day Fed meeting that starts Tuesday. The Dow fell steadily throughout the day, briefly turning lower before a late rally gave it a modest advance.

The Dow rose 6.13, or 0.1 percent, to finish at 11,124.62.

Risks

popular speaker of agricultural and bank groups, recommends taking a three-pronged approach to risk management.

Producers are familiar with the first two prongs: revenue and input cost. Using forward contracts to lock in a price for a commodity or hedging feed costs are common risk management tools.

The third prong is interest and Kohl has been getting a lot more questions from producers wondering if they should fix interest rates now. As with the other two prongs in the risk management plan, the answer ultimately comes down to the sleep test.

"Can you sleep at night? If not, you'd better fix them," Kohl said. And if your spouse can't sleep at night, it's also probably time to convert variable rates to a fixed rate.

Along with a risk management plan, Kohl also recommends having a business plan, but not one that's going to be left on a shelf.

South-central Idaho is considered one of 25 regions that produces 70 percent of the nation's agricultural products. Kohl, who has visited the Magic Valley on several occasions, remains impressed with the sophistication of agriculture in the region, but argues that a business plan is going to be key to surviving the next several decades.

"A business plan keeps you on a disciplined growth plan," he said.

He credits a business plan with turning the creamery he is a partner in from an enterprise that was losing $500,000 to one that is in the black, even after the prolonged downturn in the dairy market.

A business plan can help producers track the costs of doing business, the first step in developing a risk management strategy. "It's not doing one thing a million times better, it's doing a million things a little bit better" that's the difference between an operation that's profitable and one that's not.

Pecan-hungry exporters gobble up U.S. crops

By Barry Shlachter
McClatchy Newspapers

FORT WORTH, Texas — Pecan prices are expected to approach record levels this fall, thanks to a slightly off year in production — down an estimated 20 million pounds or 7 percent from 2009 — and gargantuan demand from China.

The Chinese appetite for pecans exploded in 2007 when rising walnut prices made them a relative bargain, said Joe Pena, an agricultural economist with the Texas Agri-Life Extension Service. U.S. shipments to the world's most populous nation more than doubled to 25 million pounds, up from 9.2 million the year before.

"SILENT VOICES RESCUE"

THE FAMILY CIRCUS By Bil Keane

“Uncle Sam’s mommy should’ve told him it’s not polite to point.”

Today is Tuesday, Nov. 2, the 306th day of 2010. There are 59 days left in the year.

Today’s Highlight:
On Nov. 2, 1783, Gen. George Washington issued his Farewell Orders to the Armies of the United States near Princeton, N.J.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1795, the 11th president of the United States, James Knox Polk, was born in Mecklenburg County, N.C.

In 1865, the 29th president of the United States, Warren Gamaliel Harding, was born near Marion, Ohio.

In 1889, North Dakota and South Dakota became the 39th and 40th states.

In 1917, British Foreign Secretary Arthur Balfour issued a declaration expressing support for a “national home” for the Jews in Palestine.

In 1920, radio station KDKA in Pittsburgh broadcast returns from the Harding-Cox presidential election.

In 1930, Haile Selassie was crowned emperor of Ethiopia (his reign lasted nearly 44 years).

In 1947, Howard Hughes piloted his huge wooden flying boat, the Hughes H-4 Hercules (derisively dubbed the “Spruce Goose” by detractors), on its only flight, which lasted about a minute over Long Beach Harbor in California.

In 1948, President Harry S. Truman surprised the experts by winning a narrow upset over Republican challenger Thomas E. Dewey.

In 1959, former game show contestant Charles Van Doren admitted to a House subcommittee that he’d been given questions and answers in advance when he appeared on the NBC’s “Twenty-One.”

In 1979, black militant JoAnne Chesimard escaped from a New Jersey prison, where she’d been serving a life sentence for the 1973 slaying of a New Jersey state trooper, Werner Foerster. (Chesimard, who took the name Assata Shakur, is believed to be living in Cuba.)

Ten years ago: An American astronaut and two Russian cosmonauts became the first residents of the international space station, christening it Alpha; their arrival marked the beginning of a decade of continuous habitation of the orbital outpost.

Five years ago: The Bush administration released details of its potential flu pandemic strategy, saying a pandemic that hit the United States would force cities to ration scarce drugs and vaccine and house the sick in hotels or schools if hospitals were to overflow. A Detroit church packed with 4,000 mourners celebrated the life of Rosa Parks in an impassioned, song-filled funeral.

One year ago: A suicide bomber killed 35 people outside a bank near Pakistan’s military headquarters in Rawalpindi. Afghanistan’s election commission proclaimed President Hamid Karzai the victor of the country’s tumultuous ballot, canceling a planned runoff. The Philadelphia Phillies staved off elimination from the World Series with an 8-6 victory over the New York Yankees in Game 5. World Boxing Hall of Famer Lou Filippino, 83, died in Downey, Calif.

DEAR ABBY: My partner and I are vegetarians. Occasionally we eat fish, but neither of us has had pork, beef or fowl for more than 10 years.

We were at a barbecue at a good friend's house a short time ago and our gracious hosts kindly prepared veggie burgers especially for us. Another guest at the party asked me if I'd be as good-natured as our hosts if I were to have a get-together at my house. (In other words, would I serve meat to our carnivorous guests.) I told him no, to which he (jokingly?) replied that I was "selfish."

Abby, the idea of eating meat is gross to me now. The reason I stopped eating it in the first place is my ethical opposition to how it's produced, and I would not want to compromise my ideals simply in the name of being a good hostess.

Am I "selfish"? Should I offer my friends meat if that is what they prefer? I'd appreciate your input.

— WHERE'S THE BEEF? IN HOUSTON

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR W.T.B.: A gracious guest does not criticize what his or her hosts serve. Your friends are aware that you are a vegetarian and why. As long as you make sure they don't go hungry, you are not obligated to serve guests flesh of anything that doesn't come from the ground, a bush or a tree. And you can say I said so.

DEAR ABBY: I am a sophomore in high school who has the responsibility of helping my mother raise four boys and a baby girl until their mothers (my sisters) are able to take care of them. Instead of being able to attend a football game or go to the mall with friends, I spend half my time at school and the other half baby sitting. The only "joy" I feel is knowing the kids are safe in my capable hands.

I have been around babies all my life and I'm reaching the breaking point. I'm worried about my future after high school. I feel like a middle-aged woman instead of a teenager from the stress I have had to accept. Can you tell me how I can feel like I can accomplish something more?

— TEENAGE FOSTER MOM/AUNT

DEAR TEENAGE FOSTER MOM/AUNT: By completing your education. For you, freedom lies in getting a college education or learning a trade that will get you out and on your own. You should not have been saddled with the responsibility of raising the children your irresponsible sisters brought into this world. Learn from their example and be sure that the only pregnancies you have are those that have been planned and prepared for, and you will have the freedom and the future for which you are longing.

DEAR ABBY: I'm seeing this guy, "Jerry," who is an amazing person. Both of us are divorced single parents. I'm attracted to him — but I'm not sure if there is passion. My question is, do I choose security and a life that I want, or the passion that fuels romantic fire?

— SEARCHING IN COLUMBIA, S.C.

DEAR SEARCHING: The problem with the "passion that fuels romantic fire" is that it's so intense at the beginning that it usually can't sustain itself. Was your first marriage fueled by it? If so, this time around seriously consider marriage to an "amazing person" to whom you say you are attracted and who can provide a stable and secure future for you and your children. These qualities can form the basis of lasting and rewarding partnership.

IF NOVEMBER 2 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: During the next several weeks, you must be conscientious and avoid criticism from your superiors. Extra responsibilities that you are unable to avoid may be placed on your shoulders, but if at all possible circumvent additional debt loads or commitments in December. Take care to get annual vacations out of the way in January, while your capacity for enjoyment is at a high level. March and April are your months to shine and when you count on the universe to alleviate certain restrictions. You may receive a golden job opportunity or bask in the lime-light for a job well done.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Let your imagination do the walking through the Yellow Pages. When you have been stuck in place like a record needle on a scratch by all that has gone before, it is good to think about the ever after.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are exclusively reclusive. Your attempts to be sociable or extend a hand in friendship might result in a feeling akin to the dull headache that occurs when you've cut coffee out of your diet.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You might need to take a moment to reshuffle relationships. There is a tendency to be unduly fair when possessiveness is expected and to be overly sociable when others expect you to remain reticent.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Devote time to diplomacy and formality. A significant relationship might turn sour for a few brief hours if you let familiarity breed contempt. You must do what is necessary to keep things amiable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Tomorrow is another day. Upsets at work or sudden changes in routines can result in a lack of interest in love. Don't obsess over the details or try to manipulate the situation. Sit back and enjoy a change.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Do a Scarlett O'Hara and think about it tomorrow. Your hand might be itching to pull out the credit card and make a purchase, but you will be happier if you don't. Your spending won't impress anyone.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): When you are hot, you're hot — but when you're not, you're not. Your attempts to woo someone might make you feel like one of those days when you can't get the temperature of the shower quite right.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your latest hookup might have the shelf life of a Popsicle in the sun. Put loveplay on the back burner for now. Romantic urges may be blocked by a tendency to be overly detached about feelings.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are a whirlwind of energy. Wait until the dust settles to start a new project or put business plans into motion. Shake off the feeling of being pressured like a dog shaking off the bath water.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The worst that can happen has probably already occurred. Don't let your imagination lead you astray today. Be prepared to roll with the punches if a few minor upsets change your plans.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep sharp words to yourself. When knives clash against each other in the drawer they both end up dulled by the effort. Use extra effort to remain cool and collected with temperamental people.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Final decisions can be put on hold. You have the ability to suspend a decision until the timing is better. If you decide that it is best to wait others will agree under these stars.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

“Common sense is the best-distributed commodity in the world, for every man is convinced that he is well supplied with it.”
— Rene Descartes

Against your contract of four spades West leads the heart king, on which East plays the queen, promising the jack. West continues with the heart two, to East’s 10. How do you plan to bring home your game?

You can always make 10 tricks provided the diamonds are 3-2 and neither defender can get a club ruff, but you must focus on the essentials. The first move, of course, is to ruff the heart 10. Next, you play a club to dummy’s king. Suppose East takes that with the ace and, hoping to shorten your trumps inconveniently, plays a third heart (nothing else is better). After ruffing this with the trump eight, you cash your three minor-suit winners, then play a third round of diamonds.

As you will have already made six tricks, then when West wins his diamond queen, he has no winning defense. Leading a heart will just help you in your crossruff, so his best shot is to lead a trump. You play dummy’s five and win the trick with the queen. You can make the next three tricks on a crossruff.

If East had returned a trump after winning the club ace, you would have won it in hand and played ace, king and another diamond. Either you will be able to follow the approach suggested above if the defenders revert to the forcing game, or, on a non-heart return, you can draw trumps and claim.

ANSWER: Your partner has suggested six diamonds and four spades, and may have quite a reasonable hand, unaware of what suitable holdings you have in both his suits. Raise to three diamonds to let him know you have not given up hope of game; he can decide what to do next — if anything.

Boise State hopeful Brotzman can return soon

Gallarda out for season

By Todd Dvorak
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Chris Petersen sure would like to see Kyle Brotzman booting footballs all over the field again real soon.

Brotzman, the nation's active career leader for total points (389) and a Lou Groza semifinalist, is nursing a sore kicking leg and has been on rest and rehabilitation duty for nearly three weeks.

Petersen is coy when pressed for specifics of Brotzman's injury, saying only that the team's all-time leader in field goals is day-to-day heading into No. 4 Boise State's Western Athletic Conference showdown Saturday with Hawaii (1:30 p.m., ESPN). "We're hoping and we're counting on him" being ready, Petersen said Monday. "We'll just have to see how he is here in the next couple of days."

Hawaii at No. 4 BSU

But there's no hiding the fact the undefeated Broncos miss Brotzman's strong, accurate and reliable leg — in all aspects of the kicking game.

Brotzman has been a fixture in the Bronco kicking game for four years. In 46 games, the one-time walk-on from Meridian, Idaho, has made 60 of 79 field goal attempts, at one point nailing 118 straight extra points. He also averages 44.3 yards per punt. But 3 1/2 seasons of being Mr. Everything in the kicking game may have taken a toll.

Brotzman missed an extra point and didn't punt against San Jose State on Oct. 16. Petersen held him out last week in a 49-20 victory over Louisiana Tech.

His absence was noticeable on the first Bronco drive, which ended when backup Jimmy Pavel missed a 30-yard field goal attempt. The punting game also struggled, with one punt fluttering just 14 yards before going out of bounds. After another mediocre punt, the Broncos lined up on a fourth down with quarterback Kellen Moore in the shotgun. But Moore punted instead, rolling the ball 54-yards for a touchback that was one of the few bright spots for special teams during the game.

Petersen even acknowledged that not having Brotzman or much confidence right now in his backups could alter the way the Broncos handle fourth downs against the streaking, high-scoring Warriors (7-2, 5-0).

The San Francisco Giants celebrate after Game 5 of the World Series against the Texas Rangers Monday in Arlington, Texas. The Giants won 3-1 to capture the World Series.

San Francisco wins 2010 World Series

By Ben Walker
Associated Press writer

ARLINGTON, Texas — The prize that eluded Willie and Barry at long last belongs to the San Francisco Giants, thanks to a band of self-described castoffs and misfits and their shaggy-haired ace.

Tim Lincecum, Edgar Renteria and the Giants won the World Series on Monday night, beating the Texas Rangers 3-1 in a tense Game 5 and taking the trophy home to the city by the Bay for the first time.

It was an overdue victory — the Giants last wore the crown in 1954, four years before they moved West. So much for a franchise that never quite got it done in October despite the likes of

"This buried a lot of bones — '62, '89, 2002. This group deserved it, faithful from the beginning. We're proud and humbled by the achievement."

baseball giants Willie Mays, Barry Bonds and Juan Marichal. It's November, and now new stars stand tall in San Francisco.

"This buried a lot of bones — '62, '89, 2002," Giants general manager Brian Sabean said, ticking off losing Series appearances. "This group deserved it, faithful from the beginning. We're proud and humbled by the achievement."

Lincecum outdueled

Cliff Lee in an every-pitch-matters matchup that was scoreless until Renteria earned the Series MVP award by hitting a stunning three-run homer with two outs in the seventh inning. Nelson Cruz homered in the bottom half, but Lincecum returned to his wicked self and preserved the lead.

Lincecum won this game of Texas Hold 'em, beating Lee for the second time in a week. The two-time NL Cy Young winner gave up three hits over eight innings and struck out 10.

Brian Wilson closed for a save, completing a surprising romp through the post-season for a pitching-rich team that waited until the final day to clinch a playoff spot.

Manager Bruce Bochy enjoys calling his Giants a ragtag bunch. Maybe Cody Ross, Aubrey Huff and Freddy Sanchez fit that description. But the foundation of this club — for now, for the foreseeable future — is totally home grown, built on a deep, talented and young rotation, a rookie catcher with huge star potential and their bearded closer.

Colts beat Texans, take AFC South lead

The Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Peyton Manning got Indianapolis' makeshift offense chugging like its old self Monday night.

The four-time league MVP threw for two touchdowns, then watched Mike Hart run for a career-high 84 yards and Jacob Tamme score his first career TD to help Indy get past Houston 30-17.

The victory allowed the Colts (5-2) to get even in the head-to-head series with Houston (4-3) and gave the defending AFC champions sole possession of the South Division lead for the first time this season.

And even though the Colts were missing All-Pro tight end Dallas Clark, receiver Austin Collie and running back Joseph Addai with injuries, Manning and his teammates didn't miss a beat.

Manning went 26 of 45 for 268 yards. Hart ran with the same determination he used to become Michigan's career rushing leader and provided the Colts with a rare ground game, and Tamme, Clark's replacement, caught six passes for 64 yards.

But it wasn't just the new guys making plays — or only the offense.

Murtaugh falls to Mackay in 1A Div. II play-in game

Times-News

Murtaugh scored first and last, but Mackay dominated in-between. The Red Devils had their 2010 football season come to an end with a 38-14 loss to Mackay in a Class 1A Division II state play-in game Monday night in Carey.

The two-quarter affair pitted the third-place teams from the Sawtooth Conference North and South divisions. With the win, Mackay earns a trip to Salmon River for a state quarterfinal game at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Murtaugh opened Monday's play-in game with a nice drive, capped by an 18-yard scoring run from Lizandro Sosa. But Mackay scored the next five touchdowns to build a 38-6 lead. Sosa added a 4-yard run for Murtaugh.

"Our kids came out ready to play and the first drive we were going off enthusiasm and effort," said first-year Murtaugh head coach Adam Johnson. "Then I think Mackay's size on the line of scrimmage was the difference as the game went on."

Despite the loss, Murtaugh can appreciate a six-win season, its best showing in several seasons.

"I thought we made a good leap forward," said Johnson. "... We're a young team. We only have three seniors, so we're going to try on build on this for next year."

Singler, Pullen top AP preseason All-America team

BYU's Fredette makes squad

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press writer

Fierce rivals, Duke and North Carolina are all tied up to start the preseason.

Duke's Kyle Singler was the leading vote-getter and only repeat selection for The Associated Press preseason men's basketball All-America team, while North Carolina's Harrison Barnes became the first freshman to make the list since voting began before the 1986-87 season.

The team, chosen by the 65-member national media panel that selects the AP Top 25 men's basketball poll, was announced Monday.

Singler, the leader of the Blue Devils' run to a fourth national championship last season, was listed on 62 of 65 ballots. Barnes received the lowest vote total of the starters with 17.

Joining Singler and Barnes on the team were Jacob Pullen of Kansas State with 53 votes, Jimmer Fredette of BYU, who received 49 votes, and Jajuan Johnson of Purdue, who got 46.

"This is indicative of the great respect that Harrison has nationally, and it's an unbelievable accomplishment for a freshman," said Tar Heels coach Roy Williams, who is coming off his first non-NCAA tournament season at North Carolina. "I know Harrison would agree, however, that it would be even more exciting to make the All-America team that's picked after the season.

"So far in practice, he has shown the ability to grasp things that we are teaching very quickly, he has tremendous concentration and I fully expect that is he going to be a very important player for us from day one."

Singler, a 6-8 senior forward, averaged 16.5 points and 7.7 rebounds last season, which he started on the preseason All-America team and finished with an honorable mention post-season selection.

Vikings release Moss after rant

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. — Just four weeks ago, Randy Moss gushed about returning to Minnesota. He felt fortunate to return to his first team and was looking forward to seeing those purple No. 84 jerseys again.

One day after Moss' rant following a loss at New England, the happy reunion was over.

Vikings players confirmed Monday that coach Brad Childress informed them during a team meeting that the wide receiver had been released.

"This decision was made based on what we thought was in the best interests of the Minnesota Vikings, both in the short and long term," Childress said Monday night in a team-issued statement. "We wish Randy the best as he moves forward in his career."

The NFL Network first reported the struggling Vikings (2-5) had waived the six-time Pro Bowler less than a month after acquiring him from the Patriots for a third-round draft pick. Moss returned to New England on Sunday and was wistful about his days with the AFC East leaders following Minnesota's 28-18 loss and critical of the Vikings for not taking his game-planning advice.

Moss, who was fined $25,000 last week for failing to cooperate with the media and make himself regularly available for interviews, stepped to the podium after Sunday's game but announced he wouldn't take any questions. He repeatedly expressed admiration for coach Bill Belichick and his former team and criticized the Vikings for not paying enough attention to his advice in the run-up to the game.

"I'm definitely down that we lost this game. I didn't expect we'd lose this game," Moss said. "I don't know how many more times I'll be in New England again. But I leave coach Belichick and those guys with a salute: 'I love you guys. I miss you. I'm out.'"

Moss had only one catch for 8 yards against the Patriots. In four games for the Vikings, he had 13 receptions for 174 yards and two touchdowns.

SHANAHAN: MCNABB NOT IN SHAPE TO RUN 2-MIN OFFENSE
ASHBURN, Va. — Mike Shanahan changed his story in a hurry. The new explanation: Donovan McNabb was benched more because of his body, not his brain.

Less than 24 hours after declaring he yanked McNabb because of a "gut feel" relating to the quarterback's less-than-full competence in the offense, the Washington Redskins coach instead insisted Monday it was a pre-planned move that had more to do with "cardiovascular endurance" issues. McNabb, because of nagging hamstring and groin injuries, wasn't in good enough shape to run a two-minute offense with no timeouts — according to Shanahan.

"The cardiovascular endurance that it takes to run a two-minute, going all the way down with no timeouts, calling plays, it's just not easy," Shanahan said. "If I thought it was the best situation to do, then Donovan would have run the two-minute offense."

Somewhere in between the range of explanations is the cold fact: McNabb, who turns 34 this month, is not having a very good season.

The change of message by a coach with two Super Bowl titles made for a baffling day at Redskins Park, nearly eclipsing the stunning decision to sit McNabb in the first place.

With the Redskins trailing the Detroit Lions by six with 1:50 to play, Shanahan pulled McNabb in favor of Rex Grossman. It didn't work. The backup's first snap of the season turned into a touchdown for the other team, with Grossman fumbling the ball on a blindside sack and Ndamukong Suh returning it for the score.

Detroit won 37-25, leaving the Redskins (4-4) at .500 and still competitive in the NFC East as they enter their bye week — assuming they can figure out what's happening between coach and quarterback.

VICK BACK TO FULL PRACTICE
PHILADELPHIA — Sliding and running out of bounds isn't Michael Vick's style — until now maybe.

After missing three games with a rib cartilage injury, Vick said he needs to "play smarter" when he scrambles out of the pocket.

Vick completed his first full practice Monday since getting hurt on Oct. 3, and expects to start for the Philadelphia Eagles when they host the Indianapolis Colts next Sunday.

"I definitely have to be smarter when running with the football, trying to get down," Vick said. "If not, who knows? There's no telling what I'm going to do. I can't predetermine what I'm going to do. I just have to play smarter and be conscious of what's going on out there and try and protect myself."

Vick was injured on one of his typical daring dashes at the end of the first quarter against the Redskins. He dodged and darted through the defense, eluding several tackles along the way to a 23-yard run to the 1 that was negated by a penalty. He took two hard hits, getting sandwiched between Kareem Moore and DeAngelo Hall.

BSU rounds out 2011 nonconference slate with Nevada, Fresno St.

For the Times-News

BOISE — Boise State will face two familiar foes to complete its 2011 nonconference schedule. The Broncos announced Monday they will face Nevada and Fresno State to round out there nonleague slate as they join the Mountain West Conference.

The Broncos will host the Wolf Pack on Oct. 1 and travel to play the Bulldogs on Oct. 8.

Nevada and Fresno State will play league games in the Western Athletic Conference next season before moving to the Mountain West Conference in 2012.

"We are excited to continue the rivalry Boise State has with both Nevada and Fresno State next season, and look forward to both schools joining us in the Mountain West Conference beginning in 2012," Boise State Director of Athletics Gene Bleymaier said.

Boise State's nonconference schedule for next season includes games at Ole Miss (Sept. 3), at Toledo (Sept. 17) and home against Tulsa (Sept. 24) as well as those announced Monday.

The Broncos' MWC schedule in 2011 will include games against Air Force, Colorado State, New Mexico, San Diego State, TCU, UNLV and Wyoming. Dates and locations for the 2011 Mountain West Conference games will be announced by the league office early next year.

Brotzman

Does a chip-shot field goal attempt for Brotzman become a fourth-down gamble to get a first down without him? Can freshman punter Trevor Harman help the Broncos win the field possession battle against a Warrior team averaging 39 points per game?

"Not having him could change strategy, sure," Petersen said. "We'd like to think we could hit some chip shot field goals without him. But it certainly does get you thinking."

The Broncos (7-0, 3-0) will also be without tight end Tommy Gallarda for the rest of the season. Petersen said Gallarda had surgery recently to repair a broken foot suffered against Louisiana Tech and could be healthy enough to play in the postseason.

Gallarda has seven catches for 63 yards and three touchdowns this season, but his real value is his run blocking. Junior Kyle Efaw, who has 12 catches for 168 yards and three TDS, will step into the starting role.

All-America

"Someone asked me if we don't win a national championship, will it ruin the year? You just never know what to expect in the year and toward the end of the year. We're not worried about that right now," Singler said of the 2010-11 Blue Devils, who were the No. 1 choice in the preseason Top 25. "There's so much we can accomplish, especially at the beginning of the year and the middle of the year. There's so much to learn and experience."

The 6-0 Pullen, whose beard took on a profile of its own last season, averaged 19.3 points, 3.4 rebounds and 1.8 steals for Kansas State, which was knocked out of the NCAA tournament by Butler one game before the Final Four. The Wildcats reached as high as No. 5 in the polls last season and start this season ranked third in the Top 25.

Pullen, a defensive stalwart, might have given his virtuoso performance covering Fredette in the NCAA tournament's second round. Pullen had a career-high 34 points that game while Fredette finished with 21 points on 4-of-13 shooting, two days after getting 37 points against Florida.

Fredette, a 6-2 guard known for his ability to score from anywhere on the court, averaged 22.1 points last season while shooting 45.8 percent from 3-point range, one of the best marks in the country.

The 6-10 Johnson averaged 15.5 points, 7.1 rebounds and 2.1 blocks last season as the Boilermakers spent all but one week in the top ten. Despite losing forward Robbie Hummel to an injury late in the season, Purdue reached the third round of the NCAA tournament. Hummel, who many expected to be a preseason All-America, injured the same knee just after practice began last month and will miss the season.

No member of last season's All-America team returned. Freshmen John Wall and DeMarcus Cousins of Kentucky, and juniors Evan Turner of Ohio State and Wes Johnson of Syracuse all went to the NBA, while Scottie Reynolds of Villanova was a senior.

None of those players were on the preseason team that featured Singler, Kansas' Cole Aldrich and Sherron Collins, Kentucky's Patrick Patterson and Luke Harangody of Notre Dame. Collins was a second-team pick after the season, while Aldrich and Harangody were on the third team. Patterson, like Singler, was among the honorable mentions.

Pullen and Fredette were also among the postseason honorable mentions.

Colts

Reggie Wayne caught a touchdown pass, Manning ran for a first down for the first time in nearly two years, and even became the lead blocker on a first-down catch-and-run by Pierre Garcon in the third quarter.

Indy's defense put consistent pressure on Houston quarterback Matt Schaub, too.

That's how important Monday's game was to the Colts.

Schaub struggled horribly in the first half and couldn't rally the Texans in the second as defensive ends Dwight Freeney and Robert Mathis applied pressure. Indy had three sacks.

Giants

"They did all right," Bochy said. "I couldn't be prouder of a group. They played with heart and determination. They weren't going to be denied. My staff, they accepted their roles and had only one mission."

Renteria reprised his role of postseason star. His 11th-inning single ended Game 7 of the 1997 World Series and lifted Florida over Cleveland. Forget that he made the last out in the 2004 Series that finished Boston's sweep of St. Louis — this journeyman's path led to another title, helped by his go-ahead home run in Game 2.

"It was a tough year for me," the oft-injured shortstop said. "I told myself to keep working hard and keep in shape because something is going to be good this year."

A team seemingly free of egos did everything right to take the lead. Ross, the surprising MVP of the NL championship series, stayed square and hit a leadoff single and Juan Uribe followed with another hit up the middle.

That put a runner at second base for the first time in the game and brought up Huff, who led the Giants in home runs this year. So what did he do? He expertly put down the first sacrifice bunt of his career.

Lee struck out Pat Burrell to keep the runners put, but Ross began hoping home as soon as Renteria connected, sending a drive that kept sailing and landed over the left-center field wall.

And just like that, all the Giants' past troubles seemed like ancient history.

The Giants won their previous title when they played in New York at the Polo Grounds. That's where Mays raced back for perhaps the most famous catch of all time.

They moved West in 1958 and had tried ever since to escape a sort of big league Alcatraz — the place where teams get stuck for decades as also-rans. The Red Sox and White Sox got free, not so the Cubs and Indians.

So clang the cable car bells. Loudly, too. Baseball's best play in the Bay.
