Top area high school talent showcased at Twin Falls High School

By Amy Huddleston

Eighty quivering bows coaxed sweet strains of music from stringed instruments on Thursday in Twin Falls High School's music wing.

Next door in the Roper Auditorium, 89 of south-central Idaho's best band students were sitting in rows — tubas and flutes poised to play — while a short walk down the street, a couple hundred choir students warmed up their vocal chords in preparation for their second day of practice.

The District IV Music Honor Clinic, held Wednesday and Thursday, welcomed students from 12 area schools in an effort to help them combine talents and challenge each other to become better musicians.

TFHS orchestra teacher Kevin Howard said many of the students hadn't performed in a big group before, and the level that they played at during the clinic was often higher than they played at their respective schools.

"There is a certain sophistication that the music students attempt. For most teenagers to sit for a couple days and

Simpson readies for new role

GOP wins may propel him to chairmanship

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

With the elections done, U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson has his work cut out for him.

The Idaho Republican is poised to likely become the chairman of the interior and environment subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, another result of the nation's sweep of GOP victories that put Republicans in leadership of the U.S. House. In Idaho's 2nd Congressional District, which includes the Magic Valley, that's an assignment that would give Simpson a stronger voice in a slew of issues encompassing the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, federal lands and national parks.

Simpson's been a critic of some EPA regulations, such as those regarding arsenic levels in drinking water, that have shouldered rural communities with financial hardships.

"I'm not one who is out to get the EPA, if you want to call it that," Simpson said in an interview with the Times-News. "I'm out to make sure they do their job as Congress intended them to do."

While it's widely expected for Simpson to get the chairmanship, he cautioned that it's still up to a congressional steering committee to make the final call.

The subcommittee oversees funding for the EPA, the various agencies of the Interior Department, and the U.S. Forest Service, among others.

Simpson noted that spending reductions will be necessary, adding: "EPA's one of the primary targets because of the huge increases they've received in the last couple years."

He cautioned that the hard work is just beginning.

Hostages allegedly terrorized by man who wanted to 'drink blood'

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

If this man was pulling a Halloween prank, it went horribly wrong.

Trevor Matthew Bullock, 19, of Twin Falls, was arrested Saturday night after allegedly holding numerous people hostage with a rifle and a sword at a residence on Sixth Avenue East in Twin Falls. He was arraigned in Twin Falls County 5th District Court Wednesday on the charge of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon.

According to the police report, LaShawna D. Holland, a mother of one of the alleged victims, called to report that her son, William Clark Payne, called around 9:30 that night to say that his half-brother, Bullock, was acting strangely. When Payne failed to come home later, Holland went to check on him. She claims that she found her son and a room full of terrified people with Bullock.

When she tried to leave, Bullock allegedly put his hands around her neck and choked her, and asked how the people would feel if he "twisted her neck and watched her die."

Holland escaped and called police.

Twin Falls Police Officer Asmir Kararic arrived on the scene and made contact with Bullock and the alleged hostages. Bullock claimed he was a paranoid schizophrenic with homicidal tendencies, the report states.

Payne described to Kararic how Bullock was allegedly drinking and becoming increasingly violent. He claimed that Bullock fetched a .22 caliber rifle, which was loaded, pointed it at him and pulled the trigger.

But the gun did not fire.

Payne added that when a female in the room started to have a panic attack, Bullock allegedly kicked her in the head and ribs. When Payne tried to help the girl, Bullock allegedly grabbed him by the

Scouts spread across Magic Valley Saturday for large-scale food drive

By Eric Larsen
Times-News writer

So where's your bag today?

Last Saturday, Cub Scouts from the Boy Scouts of America Snake River Council wrapped gray plastic bags around the doorknobs of more than 80,000 south-central Idaho homes. The Hillex Poly-donated bags have since taken up residence on counters, shelves and car seats across the region.

This Saturday, Snake River Council Executive Director Paul Tikalsky hopes to find those bags filled with canned goods and on Magic Valley doorsteps for his 5,000 scouts to collect and disperse to area food banks.

"Since this year is the 100th anniversary of scouting, our goal is to collect 100,000 food items," Tikalsky said. "That's almost double our regular numbers, but the need is greater this year."

Scouts will cover the Magic and Wood River valleys, picking up items from

Twin Falls Mayor Don Hall and state Sen.-elect Lee Heider, R-Twin Falls, will serve as honorary chairmen as the event marches toward its 100,000-can goal.

"If every one of those homes does just two cans, we'll easily pass that mark," Tikalsky said. "This is something we all can do and participate in."

Bullock was arrested and transported to St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center for a mental evaluation, where he allegedly told medical personnel about wanting to kill people, dismantle their bodies and eat the flesh, as well as drink his blood and other people’s blood. Bullock was later transported to Canyon View Behavioral Health Services in Twin Falls.

Details on how police removed Bullock from the residence or how many officers responded were not included in the report, and Twin Falls police declined to provide additional information.
Bullock is currently booked in the Twin Falls County Jail, with bond set at $25,000.

Still no love for S.C. Idaho in governor’s elections

Another one bit the dust on Election Day — eight in a row, if you’re counting

Twin Falls-bred Democrat Keith Allred became the eighth consecutive gubernatorial candidate from south-central Idaho to lose in a general election. Neither the Magic nor the Wood River valleys have sent one of their own to the governor’s office since Republican Frank Gooding retired in 1908.

That’s nothing out of the ordinary around here, of course. South-central Idaho hasn’t elected a U.S. senator since 1960, a congressman since 1948, a lieutenant governor or a superintendent of public instruction since 1970, a secretary of state since 1998 or an attorney general since 1986. And we’ve never had a state controller or a state treasurer.

In the 102 years since Gooding left office, there have been 10 governors chosen from the Treasure Valley, eight from eastern Idaho and four from the Idaho Panhandle. The closest we’ve come is a 3 percent age-point loss by Republican W.H. Detweiler of Hazelton to Democrat Charles Gossett of Nampa in 1944.

But it’s not for lack of trying. Allred was the fourth south-central Idaho Democrat to earn his party’s nomination for governor — Burley’s Calvin Wright (1950), Twin Falls’ Asher Wilson (1926) and Hailey’s Charles Stocklager, the man who lost to Gooding in 1906, were the others. Besides Detweiler, unsuccessful GOP nominees from the Magic Valley included Shoshone’s Jack Murphy (1974), Twin Falls’ Frank Stephan (1934 and 1936) and Oakley’s John McMurray (1930).

What’s the rest of Idaho got against us? Mostly, it’s that we’re few and far between.

When Gooding left office, 11.2 percent of Idahoans dwelt in the Magic and Wood River valleys. Today, the percentage is almost exactly the same.

Back in 1930, more than one-fifth of Idahoans lived in our neighborhood, but that percentage has been shrinking ever since — to 19.6 percent in 1940, to 15.4 percent in 1960, to 14.1 percent in 1980 — because the rest of the state has grown so much faster than our region.

Eighty years ago, one of Idaho’s U.S. senators, the 2nd District congressman and the state’s attorney general were from the Magic Valley. On a statewide and federal level, we’ve never had that much clout since.

South-central Idaho has been able to hold its own politically because it elects the same legislators over and over again, and those lawmakers become powerful — five of the last 10 speakers of the Idaho House and nearly one-third of the chairmen of the Senate Finance Committee and the House Appropriations Committee over the past half century.

There’s not a lot of glamour, ribbon-cutting and baby-kissing involved in that process, but it’s probably the best that an area with barely one-tenth of Idaho’s population can expect for a long while.

Filer awards $600K trenching contract

By John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

FILER — The city of Filer is almost ready to begin work on the second phase of a $15 million sewer treatment project.

Council members Tuesday tentatively awarded a $600,000 open trench contract to Brown Construction in Nampa. The approximately seven miles of trench work, extending from U.S. Highway 30 to North Street and Fair Avenue to Stevens Street, will allow replacement of deteriorated sewer collection pipe.

“This was the lowest of six bids you received and all bid documents have been submitted for final financing approval to the (Idaho) Department of Environmental Quality,” said Rob Hegstrom with J-U-B Engineers. “Our Boise office has worked with this company in the past and has no problem recommending them.”

City residents approved the initial $12.5 million bond levy in November 2006 to replace the current settling ponds with a modern system that can keep pace with future city growth.

Additional funding for a membrane bioreactor treatment plant, currently under construction north of town, was provided through grants and low-interest loans from the Army Corps of Engineers, Idaho Department of Commerce and other government agencies.

Components for the plant were purchased in 2009 from General Electric Corp’s Zenon Environmental. And last March, the $10 million construction contract was awarded to Record Steel Construction Inc. in Meridian.

In other action, the council began precautions to improve safety for Filer Intermediate and Filer Elementary school students. During school hours, the speed limit on Stevens Street and Sixth Street will be reduced from 25 to 20 miles per hour. A city ordinance enforcing this decision is expected to be adopted later this month.

“The last incident we had on the road was two years ago when a kid was hit on a bicycle,” said Filer Police Chief Tim Reeves. “But this will slow things down and improve safety.”

Elko Co. opposes Pickens’ horse sanctuary plan

By Julie Wootton
Elko Daily Free Press

ELKO, Nev. — The Elko County Commission on Wednesday voted to oppose Madeleine Pickens’ proposal to bring a wild horse sanctuary to the northern Nevada county.

Pickens, the wife of Texas billionaire T. Boone Pickens, purchased two Elko County cattle ranches in October, hoping to convert them into the Mustang Monument, a horse sanctuary that would initially house 1,000 mustangs and serve as a tourist attraction.

But concerns surrounding converting cattle ranches to mustang ranches and the proposed sanctuary’s impact on public lands led commissioners to vote 3-1 in opposition of the project after 2.5 hours of public comment and a presentation by Pickens.

The commission’s opposition is a purely political move, as the U.S. Bureau of Land Management will have final say on whether the project is approved.

“Give me a chance to open a sanctuary here,” Pickens pleaded during the meeting attended by about 70 people.

ROSS ANDRESON/Elko Daily Free Press

Madeleine Pickens speaks about her proposed wild horse sanctuary during an Elko County Commission meeting on Wednesday in Elko, Nev. Sitting in the background is Pickens’ husband, Texas billionaire T. Boone Pickens.

BLM rejected Pickens’ initial proposal, saying it was in conflict with a federal law restricting the use of public land where horses didn’t exist when the Wild Free-Roaming Horses and Burros Act was enacted in 1971.

Ken Miller, BLM Elko District manager, said consideration of Pickens’ proposal “isn’t a private process” and there would be more opportunities for public input during the permitting process.

Pickens, founder of the nonprofit Saving America’s year, which Pickens said is a “big difference.” She said her proposed sanctuary would receive $500 from the BLM per horse housed.

Commissioner Warren Russell said that he couldn’t see mathematically “how one or two sanctuaries would make a big difference” to issues of mustang overpopulation.

Commission Chairman Charlie Myers said he’d rather see the facility restricted to private land. Russell said commissioners may reconsider their stance if Pickens can provide detailed plans that satisfy their concerns.

Russell said he has some economic concerns about the proposal, especially about Pickens purchasing additional water rights for the ranch.

“We’re very, very touchy with our water in Elko County,” he said.

“I would not come to Nevada looking for water,” T. Boone Pickens responded. “That’s of no interest to me.”

Commissioner Sheri Eklund-Brown was the only commissioner to vote against the motion.

T.F. airport officials: No plans for projects after amendment

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

The Twin Falls airport may have a new tool for paying for major projects, but officials said to expect this one to stay in the shed, at least for the time being.

Idaho voters approved an amendment to the Idaho Constitution on Tuesday that allows public airports to take on long-term debt — to pay for projects such as new terminals and cargo facilities — provided airport-generated money pays for it; no tax dollars may be used, according to the amendment.

“It’s a good tool, but I don’t see anything in the immediate future to use it on here,” said Twin Falls County Commission Chairman George Urie, who serves as the county liaison on the airport advisory board. “It’s just another tool in case there is something they are looking at.”

Bill Carberry, the manager at Joslin Field, Magic Valley Regional Airport, said it would take a large amount of planning to ensure any debt his airport took on could be paid off. However, with the airport being in the middle of long-term planning, he couldn’t say the tool would never be used.

“Larger airports typically have larger needs, but Magic Valley airport, as we look at 10, 15, 20 years ahead, opportunities may arise,” he said. “It’s hard to generalize (if large or regional airports will use it more) at this point. It’s something for elected officials in the community to look at.”

Carberry said the Boise airport alluded to more missed opportunities because of the previous voter supermajority requirement for municipalities to incur debt. It was a 2006 challenge of a proposed parking garage at the Boise airport that led the Idaho Supreme Court to affirm such votes were needed.

Urie said the Twin Falls airport already largely operates on its own earnings, making it that much more difficult for the airport to pay off any debt bonds and still operate.

“Our size, the revenue generated, I’m not sure would be enough to pay off the bond, so I don’t anticipate a big project,” Urie said.

But used or not, it does changes the landscape of paying for Idaho airports, Carberry said.

Oxycodone suspects to change plea

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

The final two suspects to stand trial for allegedly distributing the painkiller oxycodone have changed their minds.

James Toliver Latham, 23, son of former auto dealership owner Robert Latham Jr., and Cooper T. Chapin, 23, filed to change their pleas to guilty last month, vacating a federal trial that was slated to start three days ago in Boise. Latham filed his notice on Oct. 7, while Chapin was the final to file — Oct. 29.

The pair were charged with seven counts of distributing oxycodone, a Schedule II controlled substance, and one count of conspiracy to distribute. Two co-defendants, Ryan J. Simmons, 21, and Troy D. Sabrosky, 20, entered guilty pleas to the count of conspiracy with all other charges dropped. They await sentencing in U.S. District Court.

Latham and Chapin will do the same — Latham on Nov. 19 and Chapin on Jan. 3.

Woman allegedly kicks officer

A 56-year-old Twin Falls

woman allegedly kicked a police officer twice while trying to evade him by running through oncoming traffic.

Viola J. Kay was arrested for two counts of battery on an officer Friday afternoon after Twin Falls Police Officer Terry Thueson located her in the 800 block of Blue Lakes Boulevard North.

Kay was wanted for questioning regarding a complaint made by the staff members at the Twin Falls County Prosecutor’s Office. Staffers claim that on Oct. 27, Kay wanted to report a crime but allegedly became agitated when told that she must first make a police report. Staffers claim that Kay threatened to bring a gun and start shooting. Officers searched for two days as none of Kay’s addresses were valid, according to the police report.

When Thueson found and confronted Kay on Friday, she allegedly started screaming “Rape! Rape!” and ran into the north-bound lanes of Blue Lakes Boulevard North. The officer pursued Kay, who allegedly kicked him twice. Kay was then detained by force, and taken to St. Luke’s Magic Valley

Medical Center to determine if she was injured during the skirmish in traffic.

She was arrested and spent the weekend in the Twin Falls County Jail. Bond was set at $35,000 at her Monday appearance in Twin Falls County 5th District Court. A preliminary hearing is set for Nov. 12.

Trevino trial delayed

Accused murderer Thomas Trevino Jr. had some court dates moved around recently, the biggest being his upcoming trial for the alleged murder of Jill Gelever.

A motion was granted to continue the trial on March 22, nearly two months later than its original start date. Defense counsel Keith Roark filed the motion in Twin Falls County 5th District Court, citing his need for more time to prepare his defense as he is also working a murder trial in Cassia County in January. Judge Randy Stoker granted the request.

Also, Trevino has entered a guilty plea to a charge of resisting officers, originating from a traffic stop in June. This was the same stop that allowed a Twin Falls police officer on the scene of the Gelever shooting to identify Trevino from surveillance footage of the Comfort Inn & Suites, where the shooting took place in July.

Finally, a preliminary hearing on two counts of assault on jail personnel was rescheduled for Dec. 10. It was set to take place last Friday. Trevino is alleged to have attacked Twin Falls County sheriff’s deputies in October as they attempted to move him to a new cell. Trevino was subdued using a Taser and relocated during the incident.

“People sometimes think that it will be easy just to cut back the federal government, but these are hard decisions,” he said. “... It’s what we were elected to do.”

Though the subcommittee’s work involves funding, there’s also a policy element because of amendments that can be attached restricting how the money can be spent.

For example, an amendment limiting the EPA’s regulation of greenhouse gases died in the subcommittee on a tied vote. Simpson also cited past successes in preventing the EPA from regulating methane releases from confined-animal feedlot operations.

Of course, there’s much more ahead than the EPA.

Simpson said he’ll be focused on issues like ensuring adequate funding for fighting wildfires. He also wants to make sure that the Bureau of Land Management addresses a backlog of grazing permits that’s built up, a crucial issue in Idaho and across the West.

National parks have a backlog of maintenance needs, Simpson noted, while visitor numbers continually go up — even in the economic slump.

The House’s Republican majority won’t remove all obstacles to Simpson’s efforts to make the Boulder Mountains and White Cloud Peaks in central Idaho a wilderness area.

U.S. Rep.-elect Raul Labrador, who will represent Idaho’s 1st Congressional District, said during this year’s campaign that he opposes the proposed Central Idaho Economic Development and Recreation Act. But Simpson still expects an easier go of his bill in the House, where the chairman of the House Resources Committee is expected to be U.S. Rep. Doc Hastings of Washington state.

On the Senate side, Simpson still predicts issues in getting Sen. Jim Risch’s support. Risch has expressed reservations about the bill, which ultimately involves 332,775 acres and forging a compromise among different user groups.

Simpson said he plans to reintroduce the legislation.

As for the election of Labrador, Simpson said he’s worked with both Republican and Democratic members in the delegation.

“I think all of us view it as once you’re elected, you’re elected to work with whoever the member of the other district is,” he said.

GOP asserts new strength, targets Obama programs

By David Espo
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Victorious at the polls, congressional Republicans asserted their newfound political strength on Thursday, vowing to seek a quick $100 billion in federal spending cuts and force repeated votes on the repeal of President Barack Obama's prized health care overhaul.

At the White House, Obama said his administration was ready to work across party lines in a fresh attempt to "focus on the economy and jobs" as well as attack waste in government. In a show of bipartisanship, he invited top lawmakers to the White House at mid-month, and the nation's newly elected governors two weeks later.

Rep. John Boehner, R-Ohio, in line to become the new speaker of the House, brushed aside talk that the No. 1 GOP goal was to make sure Obama is defeated at the polls in 2012. "That's Senator McConnell's statement and his opinion," he told ABC, referring to the party's leader in the Senate and adding that his own goals included cutting spending and creating jobs.

But tentative talk of compromise competed with rhetoric reminiscent of the just-completed campaign.

In a speech at the conservative Heritage Foundation, Kentucky Sen. Mitch McConnell said the only way to achieve key party legislative goals such as ending government bailouts, cutting spending and repealing the health care law "is to put someone in the White House who won't veto" them.

McConnell

"There's just no getting around it," he added.

Obama has ruled out accepting repeal of the health care measure, and Senate Democrats responded quickly to McConnell.

"What Sen. McConnell is really saying is, 'Republicans want to let insurance companies go back to denying coverage to people with pre-existing conditions, let them go back to charging women twice as much for the same coverage as men, and let them push millions of seniors back into the Medicare doughnut hole,'" said Jim Manley, spokesman for Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev.

The maneuvering unfolded two days after elections that swept Democrats out of power in the House and cut deeply into their Senate majority, scripting an uncertain new era of divided government for the final two years of Obama's term.

In the House, Boehner

asked members of the Republican rank and file to support him for speaker when the new Congress convenes in early January. His victory is a formality, given the huge 60-member gain he engineered as party leader.

Nor did there appear to be any competition to Rep. Eric Cantor of Virginia as majority leader, the second-most powerful position in the House.

Among Democrats, Speaker Nancy Pelosi has yet to disclose her plans. The most recent speaker whose party lost its majority, Rep. Dennis Hastert of Illinois, resigned from Congress a few months later.

Even before the new Congress comes into office, the old one is scheduled to meet the week after next for a post-election session.

In remarks to reporters after meeting with his Cabinet at the White House, Obama urged lawmakers to avert an income tax increase that could take effect Jan. 1, ratify a new arms-reduction treaty with Russia, provide unemployment aid to victims of the recession and extend expiring tax breaks for business.

Congress also must enact a spending bill that permits government to remain in operation, and the issue already has emerged as a likely flash point in the post-election meeting of Congress.

Man gets life for NJ schoolyard slayings

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A man who admitted pulling the trigger in the execution-style killings of three college students in a schoolyard was sentenced Thursday to three consecutive life terms in a case that jolted New Jersey's largest city into dealing with its crime problem.

Melvin Jovel, 21, pleaded guilty to murder, attempted murder and weapons charges days before his trial was to begin in September.

Prosecutors said Jovel and five other young men lined up Iofemi Hightower and Dashon Harvey, both 20, and 18-year-old Terrance Aerial, against a schoolyard wall in Newark and shot each of them in the back of the head on a summer night in 2007.

A fourth victim survived and testified at the first trial in the case that she was sexually assaulted, slashed with a machete and shot in the head.

She also spoke in court Thursday, thanking Jovel for "allowing me to get closer to Christ" before chastising him for refusing to look at her as she spoke.

"You and your homies had a plan for me, you wanted me dead — but I'm still here," said the woman, who is not being identified by The Associated Press because of the sexual assault charges. "Have fun living your fancy life in jail," she added.

Jovel, wearing dark green prison scrubs and translation headphones, stared straight ahead throughout the proceedings, making only a brief statement in Spanish before his sentencing.

"The only thing I have to say is the person who was sentenced had nothing to do with it," Jovel said, an apparent reference to co-defendant Rodolfo Godínez, who was sentenced in July to three consecutive life sentences for the killings.

Four other defendants are in jail awaiting trial.

Prosecutors said Godínez, a legal immigrant from Nicaragua, Jovel, an illegal Honduran immigrant, and several of the defendants were engaging in an initiation ritual for members of the MS-13 street gang.

Sen. Murray beats GOP's Rossi in Washington state

By Curt Woodward
Associated Press

OLYMPIA, Wash. — Washington U.S. Sen. Patty Murray seized a fourth term Thursday, surviving voters' backlash against Democrats nationally and weeks of relentless GOP campaign attacks on her voting and federal spending record.

Murray's victory over Republican Dino Rossi, after three days of tallying, preserves breathing room for the Senate's shrunken Democratic majority. Republicans made inroads there Tuesday and took control of the House for the rest of President Barack Obama's first term.

Her win was secured Thursday as tallies pushed her lead to about 46,000 votes out of more than 1.8 million counted, or about 51 percent to 49 percent. About three-quarters of the expected ballots had been counted in unofficial returns.

Hundreds of thousands of ballots still await processing, but an Associated Press analysis determined Murray's lead would be insurmountable.

At a Thursday night news conference, Murray thanked Rossi and his family, saying he had been gracious in defeat. Murray said her priorities in a fourth term will include securing tax cuts for the middle class and helping the Boeing Co. win a lucrative Air Force refueling tanker contract.

"Now we have to get to work," Murray said. "I want to make sure Washington state has what it needs to get its economy back on its feet."

Rossi conceded defeat in a statement issued Thursday evening. He also called on the new-look Congress to focus on the economy and strive for cooperation.

"The lesson I leave you with is one we learned as kids: We're all in this together. If Washington, D.C., doesn't act to help the economy grow and solve this massive spending and debt, it's going to hurt us all," Rossi said.

AROUND THE STATE

IDAHO Bingham County touts new, faster drug testing lab

BLACKFOOT — A new lab in southeastern Idaho runs drug tests for courts more quickly and at a lower cost for residents in Bingham County being monitored as part of their probation. And the county is considering opening up use of the new facility to surrounding counties.

The new equipment makes results available as soon as the same day, rather than waiting for up to two weeks for an outside lab to run the tests, Bingham County probation director Claudon Liliya.

That immediacy is important when it comes to helping those who struggle with drug use, he said.

The new lab also provides more accurate results and quicker confirmation, which cuts back on how often the county has to send samples to another lab to be processed, Liliya said. "It's a much higher standard of test," Liliya told the Idaho State Journal.

Fort Hall man sentenced for double traffic fatality

BOISE — A 28-year-old Fort Hall man has been sentenced to prison for speeding with a blood-alcohol level nearly six times the legal limit, causing a crash that killed two people in 2006.

The U.S. attorney's office says Tyson Coby was sentenced to two years and nine months in prison Wednesday during a hearing before U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge. Coby pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter in June.

According to the plea agreement, Coby was speeding on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation on March 24, 2006, but refused to stop for police. Officers broke off pursuit and Coby sped off in his pickup, traveling 76 mph in a 35 mph zone. He struck a car as he tried to pass it, killing driver Theora Galloway and her passenger, Ueland Redwoman.

Prosecutors say Coby's blood-alcohol level was 0.46.

Micron installs LED lights in Idaho supermarket

BOISE — Micron Technology Inc.'s new low-energy lights are finally getting a tryout in the general public.

The company said Thursday it's installed fixtures in a local grocery store in Boise, the latest step in its efforts to broaden its palette of products that now include semiconductors and memory products.

Micron's LED lights have gone into freezer units at an Albertson's store.

The company says they allow for even distribution of light across display shelves, virtually eliminating shadowing.

Railway sues Kootenai County over refueling depot

COEUR D'ALENE — Burlington Northern Santa Fe Railroad has filed a lawsuit against Kootenai County in northern Idaho concerning new rules at a diesel refueling depot atop an aquifer that supplies drinking water to 500,000 people in the region.

The railway filed the lawsuit last week in U.S. District Court in Coeur d'Alene and disputes the county's authority to require additional aquifer protections, The Spokesman-Review reported.

"Kootenai County does not have the authority to regulate freight railroad facilities or operations that are part of the interstate rail transportation system," the lawsuit states. The railway also contends additional safeguards aren't needed at the depot that sits atop the Spokane Valley-Rathdrum Prairie Aquifer. About 30 trains a day are refueled there.

Opponents of oversized loads ask for formal hearing

SPOKANE — Residents along U.S. 12 are asking the Idaho Transportation Department to conduct formal hearings before issuing any special permits allowing oil companies to transport huge loads of refinery equipment over the roadway.

Earlier this week, the Idaho Supreme Court overturned a lower court ruling that had blocked the shipments. But the Supreme Court ruling opened the door for the first formal hearing on the shipping proposals.

Environmentalists complain the huge loads will force temporary closure of the remote highway, disrupting public safety and convenience.

Duped investors jockey for restitution in E. Idaho

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — The victims of a Ponzi scheme that took in about $68 million from mostly eastern Idaho investors are jockeying for their share of restitution in the case.

A federal judge ordered Rexburg attorney Breck Barton on Wednesday to work on a plan with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission that fairly distributes the nearly $2 million recovered so far from Daren Palmer.

Barton represents only some of the investors Palmer was accused of swindling in federal lawsuits brought by the Securities and Exchange Commission and the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission.

Last month, Palmer was ordered to pay $41 million in restitution and fines to settle a federal lawsuit filed by the U.S. Commodity Futures Trading Commission. This summer, the SEC won a nearly $90 million judgment against Palmer and his company, Trigon Group, for the eight-year scheme.

But some investors — Barton's clients — are unhappy with a proposal the SEC submitted in June to distribute the money recovered from Palmer, the Post Register reports.

The SEC proposal would have distributed the money among 21 investors who were duped, including 17 who received none of their original deposits back from Palmer. The plan would, however, include no money for eight other investors who were able to retrieve between 26 percent to 92 percent of their original investments.

Barton argues the only fair way to allocate the money is to pay each investor an equal proportion of their losses.

U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge said this week he wants Barton to work with SEC on a deal that both parties can support. If that effort fails, Lodge said a hearing may be necessary to discuss the merits of each plan.

Time for Idaho Democrats to ditch the name

You have to wonder how much better off the Idaho Democratic Party would have been had Barack Obama and Bill Clinton never come along.

In the four elections held while those two presidents were in the White House, Idaho Democrats lost a total of 25 seats in the Legislature and two seats in Congress, culminating in Tuesday’s mother-of-all meltdowns.

Here’s the body count:

- Incumbent Democratic Congressman Walt Minnick lost to Republican newcomer Raul Labrador by 24,000 votes out of 247,000 cast.
- Idaho Dems surrendered five seats in the House of Representatives, including two incumbents.
- Democrats lost a net total of 15 county elected offices Tuesday, nine of them held by incumbents.
- Previously rock-solid Democratic strongholds Bannock and Nez Perce counties now have all-Republican county commissions. In fact, only five of Idaho’s 44 county commissions are still controlled by Democrats.

Our view:

Whether it’s fair or not, the letter ‘D’ has become toxic in Idaho politics.

three-term incumbent Elmore County Commissioner Connie Cruser were dumped by voters just because they had a “D” behind their names. Same with non-political county officials like Kootenai County Clerk Dan English, who simply ran as Democrats because you have to run as something in Idaho’s county election system.

This can’t continue. If Idaho’s Democrats are to survive, they must disassociate themselves from the national Democratic Party. Maybe a name change is in order — The Progressives? The Populists? The Other Guys?

For the genius of Phil Batt, who rescued the state Republican Party from oblivion after the 1990 election, was to nationalize Idaho politics. In every election since 1992, whenever Minnick or Larry EchoHawk or Jerry Brady or Richard Stallings or Keith Allred talked independent solutions to local problems, Idahoans heard Clinton or Obama or Al Gore or John Kerry or Harry Reid or Nancy Pelosi talking about bigger government.

It’s time for state Democratic Chairman Keith Roark and the 79 remaining Idaho Democrats in the Legislature and in county government to get together and talk about a declaration of independence from Team Obama.

The Growing Spill

A record flood of regulation under Obama

fiscal 2010 rules are likely higher than $26 billion, since regulators tend to minimize the costs of their rules.

The regulations unleashed during the past year affect every segment of American life. Fifteen involve financial regulation. Another five stem from the Obama health care makeover. Ten others are from the Environmental Protection Agency, including the first mandatory reporting of “greenhouse gas” emissions and new more stringent fuel economy standards (adopted jointly with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration).

The new fuel standards, in fact, are the most expensive of the fiscal 2010 regulations — with an eye-popping price tag of more than $10 billion each year. The agency acknowledges that consumers will bear the cost in the form of higher sticker prices of up to $985 for each vehicle.

Other costly new rules include:

- Mandated quotas for renewable fuels, costing almost $8 billion a year for the next 15 years. By diverting crop production to fuels and away from food, EPA predicts the rule could increase food costs.
- Efficiency standards for residential water heaters,

“Even during the supposedly ‘deregulatory’ Bush administration, some $70 billion in new federal rules were adopted. But, under the Obama administration, the red tape has worsened to unprecedented levels, data provided by the Government Accountability Office shows. The fiscal 2010 total ... is nearly twice that of any other year since 1981, the earliest year for which records are available.”

heating equipment, and pool heaters, costing some $1.3 billion. The rules will raise the price of a typical gas storage water heater by $120.

- Limits on “effluent” discharges from construction sites, costing more than $800 million. Regulators estimate the new rules will force the closure of 147 construction firms and the loss of 7,257 jobs. Homebuyers also will bear some of the costs, with an increase in mortgage costs of about $1,953.

There’s every reason to believe the regulatory deluge will worsen next year, as yet more financial and health care regulations are released.

The EPA already is writing an array of budget-busting rules, including even more stringent fuel economy standards. And the Federal Communications Commission is mulling new Internet regulations that would undermine investment in broadband infrastructure.

It won’t be easy to stem this red tide, although a number of remedies have been proposed. Among them is the automatic “sun-setting” of rules (an expiration date, essentially), as well as requiring congressional approval of all new major regulations. Lawmakers should seriously consider such worthwhile steps.

But such procedural reforms — while necessary — won’t be enough.

Regulatory costs will continue to rise until policymakers appreciate the burdens being imposed on Americans and the economy, and start exercising the political will to reduce those burdens.

Unfortunately, political leaders of both parties have lacked such an appreciation for far too long. The question now is, will that change given voters’ concern about the problem? Or will that concern continue to be ignored?

Education is key to hunter safety, ethics

The other day, I read our Fish and Game director got into trouble over trespassing. I, as a hunter safety instructor, teach all our students in the field exercise to have written permission on them when hunting or not hunting on private property. Private property can be identified as being posted with red or orange on fence posts or trees, posted with signs, fenced or under crop cultivation. Some government land is fenced, and this is not private property but one should be aware of where they are.

Remington is under investigation for faulty safeties on their Model 700 rifles. In hunter safety education teach muzzle control at all times and never to rely on the safety because it is a mechanical device that could fail anytime. Remington may have faulty firearms, but I blame the person for the fatal shooting. If the rifle was pointed in a safe direction regardless of the safety, there would have been no loss of human life.

In closing, I feel both these individuals should be chastised and required to take a hunter safety course over again.

Columnist wrong about stem cell research

Regrading Cal Thomas’ Oct. 20 stem cell opinion:

Cal Thomas missed the detail that embryonic cells made by the new method also possess the potential to grow into adults (see: www.sciencedaily.com/releases/2009/06/090602192557.htm), and a mouse study shows that the safer method only escapes Thomas’ ethical concerns if he thinks it’s OK to kill humans who needed to develop in an artificial womb (see: www.pdonlineresearch.org/news/2009-07/23/induced-pluripotent-stem-cells-can-generate-viable-mice).

At what non-arbitrary point in embryo development should those doctors attempting to cure paralysis or quadriplegia get the same penalty as murderers? If that point is the point of consciousness, then what’s the right prison time for them using cells — not even as close to that as a cabbage? Cal should figure these out before worrying that these doctors might cause a slippery slope to a holocaust or one scintilla less respect for the higher value of a human life. If he knew many atheists, then he’d know at least as many of them believe in ethical truths, including intellectual honesty in the face of overwhelming evidence (he could test himself in reading The Greatest Show on Earth by Richard Dawkins) and not demonizing innocent easy target minorities.

They believe in the value of human life but also that the wrongness of killing a child is sufficiently accounted for by what children are and thus would still be wrong even if there were a God who disagreed; Thomas and all readers decide the truth of a book’s ethics claims by whether these agree with what they independently believe or know to be ethical — not the other way around.

Cal Thomas should avoid revisionist history; religion doesn’t need to be trivialized for slavery to happen. In the South, it was abused to justify it, while in the North and in the Underground Railroad, it and the theory of evolution were used to justify abolishing it. Yes, Darwin was one of the biggest fighters against slavery and provided the empirical proof that there are no inferior “races.”

To prevent a holocaust or loss of your liberty, you must protect the innocents outside your group before you’re the one being called an “inner power of destruction” and none of the previous victims are left to save you.

The West didn't get the memo about the tidal wave

As usual, most voters were asleep when the West defied the conventional wisdom and the pollsters with results and lessons galore:

Empty tea cups. Though the Democrat is only ahead by a few thousand votes, The Denver Post has now called the Colorado senate race for incumbent Michael Bennet, a huge break for the party in an otherwise devastating election. The paper said votes that remain to be counted are more favorable to Bennet, who was the underdog in most polls.

The Republican in the race, Ken Buck, was a Tea Party favorite, a global-warming denier and he opposed abortion even in the cases of rape or incest. Another Tea Party insurgent, Tom Tancredo, was crushed by Democrat John Hickenlooper in the race for governor. Both Buck and Tancredo were backed by Sarah Palin, and many conservatives believed that the Republican tide could lift them both. Instead Colorado proved to be “a Democratic island in a GOP storm.

And given that the Tea Party

candidate in Nevada, Sharron Angle, lost by a much greater margin than the late polls had predicted, a case can be made that the Tea Party, for all the energy it brought moribund Republicans, cost the GOP the Senate. Their wackiest, most fringe candidates cost Republicans what should have been easy pickups, and enough to gain the majority of the Senate.

Of course, Angle was a flawed candidate who ran from the press — literally. The biggest of her mistakes was to confuse Hispanics with Asians, and she ran ads showing dangerous-looking Latinos creeping across the border. That may have made the difference, in a state where about 15 percent of the vote is Hispanic.

Palin poison. The half-term governor may be a good brand in the South and the Midwest, but in the West, her track record is dismal. This is particularly true in her home state, where the “generic” write-in candidate (mostly Lisa Murkowski) has a comfortable lead and is expected to win. Palin and Murkowski, though both nominally members of the same party, can't stand each other. Given that Palin's approval rating has plunged at home, what does it say that nearly 65 percent of voters in Alaska backed somebody other than the other Republican nominee and Palin acolyte, Joe Miller? Like Palin, he was clearly not ready for scrutiny; in the midst of many mistakes, he had to admit just last week that he was a liar. Once again, this questions Palin's judgment.

Let the votes age. In Washington, expect Democrat Patty Murray's narrow lead to gradually build over the week, according to the best political minds in the state. That's because nearly 30 percent of all votes cast come from liberal King County (Seattle), and the big county has enough votes yet to count to carry the day for Murray over Dino Rossi.

Mess with Texas. The big oil companies from the Lone Star state spent millions trying to get Californians to repeal their landmark pollution emissions law. After the repeal effort failed, Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger was exuberant.

“California beats Texas again!” the governor declared. He was referring, of course, to the World Series rout of Texas by the San Francisco Giants.

Also in California, Jerry Brown will become the oldest governor of the Golden State — after having served as its youngest governor. And marijuana legalization lost, meaning that the thousands of dispensaries selling medical marijuana will have to serve as the de facto neighborhood pot pubs. In other words, no change.

Mess with taxes. One of the most tax-happy states, Washington, roundly rejected a bid by Bill Gates Sr. to give the state an income tax on the wealthy. Voters also put shackles on future tax increases in the Legislature, and rolled back taxes on sugary drinks and candies. The message here, at a time when real income has not risen for a decade for most families is: Live within your means.

Final tidbits. The bluest of blue dog Democrats, Walt Minnick of Idaho, was upset by a Republican who was underfunded and not well-liked by the business community. For all Minnick's conservatism — he voted against Obama on both health care and the stimulus — he still had a D in front of his name in what may be the most Republican state in the union. And not to be forgotten, Barack Obama's home state of Hawaii proved to be a true island in the Republican sea. Democrats swept all major offices, picking up a House seat, the governor's chair, and returning Sen. Daniel Inouye to a ninth term. At 86, this World War II veteran will be the most senior member of the Senate, and won with about 74 percent of the vote.

The wave never made it out of the middle of the Pacific.

How many Happy Meals will make it too much?

I was among those that helped to disappoint Superintendent Smyer in 2008. He is an honorable man with the best of intentions. Yet, he didn't make the case that the bond would in any way increase the academic achievement. He didn't make the case that we were getting the best benefit for our money.

The new bond before us is still wrong for the same reasons. A school bond is property owners giving the school district permission to take out a loan which they will repay with increased taxes. Have the previous loans been paid yet? What are the terms of this loan? How long will it take to pay off? Answers to those questions will show that it will be your children and grandchildren paying for this bond.

After Gaylen Smyer and I are long dead, the loan will remain. In 2008, we were told that it was now or never. Costs would never be better and the government incentives wouldn't be there the next time. Here we go again. We are again told that costs are lower and the incentives from the government are favorable. Those conditions do not make the bond right or wrong. Mr. Lynch sells the cost by comparing it to a fast food value meal a month. Many of us are already giving up our Happy Meal just to keep our mortgage and car payment current.

How many Happy Meals would make it too much? Two? Ten? One hundred? Unless the kids at the school district are able to convince me that this bond will improve education or make kids safer, I will disappoint them again. Until they convince me that we should go further into debt and require our kids to pay it, I'll keep my Happy Meal.

Thank you.

Institutional investors eye Idaho farmland

The Associated Press

BOISE — Officials at investor groups and lending institutions say farmland in south-central and eastern Idaho is being targeted by institutional investors who want to buy it and then lease it back to farmers.

Pension funds, foundations and endowments want a hedge against inflation and a safe place for their money.

“They’re looking for things that have the tendency to move counter to the rest of the market,” said James McCandless, managing director of Hartford, Conn.-based UBS AgriVest LLC.

“When you have an industry that has high productivity, and that productivity continues to increase, not only per acre but in every area, that’s attractive.”

AgriVest has operated in Idaho for almost a quarter century, buying property and managing farm portfolios for institutional investors. The company was acquired by the Swiss investment bank UBS in 1999.

Bob Morrison, a senior appraiser for Northwest Farm Credit Services, said he’s never seen more interest in farmland in his 35 years in the business.

“It’s a concern when you have these institutional investors, because they’re not local,” he said. “These are big institutions. You’re just losing your local control.”

Ryan Cranney, whose family farms on 20,000 acres near Burley, said a group of Texas investors recently bought land in Cassia and Bingham counties. He also said a local group is creating a real estate investment trust to buy land.

“You’re starting to see a little bit of it,” he said. “I think it’s something you’ll see more and more of.”

John Knipe, president and managing broker of Boise-based Knipe Land Co., said he doesn’t see outside investment being a huge risk because most farmers who are willing to sell are also free of debt.

“If they don’t sell it, that’s fine,” he said. “They’ll just leave it to their grandkids. Maybe that helps avoid some risk.”

Sid Freeman, a farmer near Middleton, said investors likely aren’t aware of the risks involved with agriculture.

“One bad year truly does have the potential to completely erase your existence as a business,” he said. “It’s the misunderstood risk or the appearance of no risk that are bringing people into it. These folks that are looking toward buying farms as a good investment, they’re just not looking at running that farm for profitability. I don’t see it.”

Stocks reach highs on Fed plan

By David K. Randall
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Stocks indexes reached new highs, a day after the Federal Reserve announced a $600 billion plan to boost the economy.

All three stocks indexes closed at their highest level of the year. The Dow Jones industrial average rose 219 points, or 2 percent, to close at 11,434. That’s a new high for the year, toppling yesterday’s close of 11,215. The broader S&P 500 index rose 23 points, or 1.9 percent, to 1,221, and the technology-heavy Nasdaq composite gained 37 points, or 1.4 percent to 2,577.

The dollar fell against other currencies as traders anticipated lower U.S. interest rates because of the Fed’s massive bond-buying program announced Wednesday. Commodities prices including crude oil rose.

Retailers reported solid sales in October, sending shares of major retailing companies sharply higher. Gap Inc. rose 6 percent while Macy’s Inc. jumped 6.6 percent.

“Those retail numbers are telling us that the holiday season is going to get off to a good start,” said Stephen Jones, the chairman of Jones Villalta Funds.

On Wednesday, the Federal Reserve announced it plans to buy $600 billion in bonds in an effort to spur spending and ultimately lower the unemployment rate. The central bank was unusually detailed in its announcement, saying it planned to spend $75 billion a month on bonds until at least the middle of next year. That’s on top of the roughly $35 billion a month its already buying.

“Much of today’s gains comes as a result of the government pumping money into the market,” said Joe Kinahan, the chief derivatives strategist at TD Ameritrade. The Standard and Poor’s index breaking past the psychologically important 1,200 mark may have also brought on another round of buying, he said.

In corporate news, shares of BHP Billiton, the world’s largest mining company, rose 5.9 percent after the Canadian government rejected BHP’s $38.6 billion bid to buy Potash Corp. of Saskatchewan. After the market closes, Kraft Foods Inc., Starbucks Corp. and CBS Corp. will announce earnings.

Retailers log weakest month since April

By Anne D’Innocenzio
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Americans took a pause in shopping in October, leaving retailers with their weakest performance since April as unusually warm weather depressed their appetite for cold weather items.

Stores were forced to discount more on coats and hats to get shoppers to spend. And even as the weather cools, discounts will be necessary to keep pulling shoppers in amid high unemployment, analysts said.

The International Council of Shopping Centers index measuring revenue at stores open at least a year showed a 1.6 percent increase, the weakest performance since April’s 0.8 percent increase. October’s figure represented a slowdown from September, when it rose 2.6 percent.

Bright spots among retailers reporting revenue figures Thursday were Costco Wholesale Corp. and Limited Brands Inc., both of which reported bigger increases than Wall Street analysts expected. Macy’s Inc., helped by tailoring merchandise to local markets, also had a decent performance, outshining rivals such as J.C. Penney Co. and Kohl’s Corp., both of which suffered sales declines. Target Corp. posted a small gain that’s slightly above Wall Street estimates. And Gap Inc. posted a surprise gain.

Luxury chains like Saks Inc. continued to do well as wealthy shoppers are back to spending, albeit cautiously.

“It was a promotionally driven month,” said Jharonne Martis, director of consumer research at Thomson Reuters. “Warm weather hurt sales of fall merchandise. We expect discounting is going to be necessary to drive holiday sales.”

The figures are based on revenue at stores open at least a year. That’s considered a key indicator of a retailer’s health because it measures growth at existing locations and excludes new or closed stores.

The big factor depressing October sales was the unusually warm weather, said Mike Niemira, chief economist at International Council of Shopping Centers. He estimated that depressed October sales by one percentage point.

For retailers, the good news is that heavy discounting may not hurt third-quarter profits because October is the least important month for the period, according to Ken Perkins, president of RetailMetrics, a research firm. Macy’s and Limited raised their earnings outlook. Gap offered a surprising strong profit outlook that topped analysts’ estimates.

October is typically slow because it’s between back-to-school season and the Christmas season, but shoppers took more of a breather this year. That made stores push discounts even more to entice consumers, who are buying even closer to when they need the items in the wake of the Great Recession.

Shoppers are expected to remain tight-fisted with unemployment stuck near 10 percent. That’s why many more stores than last year are pushing discounts on holiday gifts earlier, even before Halloween.

Winter’s coming — time to let workers telecommute?

Dangerous winds blew across the Midwest this week and North Dakota got its first significant snow.

With these early signs of winter, small business owners may want to think about letting workers telecommute rather than contend with snow, sleet and ice. And maybe think about allowing them to telecommute long-term.

Telecommuting employees fall into two categories. Many do it periodically, during an

Joyce M.
Rosenberg

emergency such as bad weather or because they have to care for sick children. But workers at many companies have been telecommuting full-time or almost full-time for years.

Business owners’ attitudes toward telecommuting tend to be, love it or hate it. Some have embraced it so much that they’ve been able to move their companies to smaller offices because they don’t need desk space for their full-time telecommuters. Yet other owners are still uneasy about not having their workers on-site, even when there’s a short-term emergency.

Management issues

The great fear among some business owners is that telecommuting employees may be spending more time on distractions like TV or the laundry than they will on their work. They worry that they won’t be able to control their staffers if they don’t have face-to-face contact each day.

“If I can’t see the person doing the job, are they going to do the job?” is the question these owners ask, said Rob Wilson, president of Employco, a Chicago-based resources outsourcing company.

Wilson said owners should be able to tell pretty quickly, from employees’ output and the quality of their work, whether they’re at their PCs or watching TV. If it’s clear they’re slacking, then there’s a performance issue to be dealt with.

Wilson also noted that in many companies, employees like regional marketing directors are telecommuting out of geographic necessity. And they do get their work done.

Molson Coors net income rises on higher prices

By Emily Fredrix
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — Molson Coors Brewing Co. said its net income increased by 9 percent in its third quarter on higher prices and cost cutting, even though it sold less beer.

The Denver company, which counts southern Idaho as one of three main producers of malt barley, has been raising prices in the downturn to protect its brands from being seen as too cheap and protect profit margins, even if the amount of beer sold suffers as a result.

The brewer said its net income was $256.1 million, or $1.37 per share, for the three months ended Sept. 25. That's up from $235.3 million, or $1.26 per share, a year ago.

Revenue excluding excise taxes rose 2.5 percent to $875 million. But beer sales volume fell 4 percent.

Excluding several one-times items, earnings were $1.28 per share. Analysts expected earnings of $1.13 per share on revenue excluding taxes of $877.7 million, according to Thomson Reuters.

The quarter's results beat estimates because of the company's cost-cutting efforts, UBS analyst Dara Mohsenian told clients in a note.

Those moves saved $24 million in the quarter and $55 million so far this year. Molson Coors aims to save $150 million by the end of 2012. In addition, MillerCoors, its U.S. joint venture with SABMiller's U.S. unit, cut out $56 million in overlapping costs and found an additional $27 million in other savings in the quarter, which also benefits Molson Coors.

The company raised prices in the quarter, and the total amount of beer sold around the world fell 4 percent.

People have been curbing beer consumption in the downturn, particularly in bars and restaurants. That has hurt Molson Coors' business. It's counteracting that by coming out with new products, which can sell at higher prices, and making other changes, such as new packaging for Miller Lite.

CEO Peter Swinburn said next year in the U.S. the company's strategy will be simple.

"We're going to focus on fewer, bigger, better ideas that will really drive the business," he told investors on a conference call Wednesday.

In the U.S., where the company's joint venture with SABMiller sells its beer, sales to retailers dropped 4 percent, continuing a slump.

To offset weakness in more established markets, Molson Coors is increasingly trying to expand in emerging markets such as China. The aim is to woo new drinkers to its Coors Light brand. The unit that includes sales outside the U.S., Canada and Britain saw volume rise 11 percent, though it is a still a tiny portion of Molson Coors' business.

Technical issues

Some owners may shy away from permitting employees to telecommute because they think it will mean a big investment in technology. But Wilson noted that there are many secure Web-based services to help small businesses who want employees to telecommute. Companies can download software that essentially will create a network between an employee's PC at home and the company's system. To research these services, use a search engine to look for "remote PC access."

Pitching its IPO, GM sees large profits on horizon

By Tom Krisher
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT — General Motors has the potential to make huge pretax profits once global auto sales fully recover, the company's chief financial officer said Thursday in a video presentation that was posted online.

The video with CFO Chris Liddell's comments is the foundation for GM's "road show" — presentations that start today and aim to court investors for an initial public stock offering. The stock sale will take place on Nov. 18.

Liddell said GM's cost structure, significantly improved in last year's bankruptcy restructuring, has enabled it to break even at the low point in a cyclical auto sales slump. In the middle of a cycle, the company can make $11 billion to $13 billion a year before taxes. When sales fully recover, it could make $17 billion to $19 billion pretax, with about a 10 percent profit margin, Liddell said.

In the first half of this year, GM made $2.8 billion before taxes, but 2010 is toward the bottom of the sales slump with annual sales expected to total

Cortisone-injection frequency up for debate

DEAR DR. GOTT: Could you tell me how often someone can have cortisone injections? My mother had some in her shoulders. They worked great, but now the pain and stiffness are back with a vengeance.

DEAR READER: Cortisone can be injected into joints such as the ankle, knee, shoulder and other areas to relieve pain and inflammation. They have been known to help osteoarthritis, gout, carpal-tunnel syndrome, bursitis, plantar fasciitis and a host of other conditions. About 30 years ago, corticosteroids were given with great regularity. Today, however, a different approach is taken. Some physicians restrict a person to three injections a year,

ASK DR. GOTT

others to three in a lifetime. This has resulted from research indicating that repeated injections can cause damage to tissues over time when given in excess quantities to one area of the body. One consideration is whether or not the injections work. If one or two are unsuccessful for reducing pain, it’s rather unlikely that additional ones will respond any differently.

Side effects include a cortisone flare, in which the injected material crystallizes, causing pain for up to two days that could be greater than what was experienced prior to the injection. Tendons can be weakened, there can be pain at the injection site, and the color of the skin at the site can change. The most common systemic reaction is observed in diabetic patients, who should monitor their readings, because cortisone can cause a rise in blood-sugar levels. Long-term risks of high doses with frequent administration can include weight gain, facial puffiness, cataracts, osteoporosis, hypertension and rare but serious damage to the large joint bones, known as avascular necrosis.

So, in answer to your question, your mother should return to her orthopedic surgeon or the physician who gave her the injections. If that specialist (who is familiar with her medical history) feels strongly that no more should be administered, then I suggest you heed the warning. If, however, your mother is aging, her quality of life is affected, and she cannot find relief from pain through other means, perhaps she will receive a favorable response. The pros and cons can be answered only by the person behind the needle.

To provide related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report “Osteoporosis.” Other readers who would like a copy should send a self-addressed stamped No. 10 envelope and a $2 check or money order payable to Newsletter and mailed to Newsletter, P.O. Box 167, Wickliffe, OH 44092-0167. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I am on your no-flour, no-sugar diet and using your cookbook. One recipe calls for dates. The dates I purchased have dextrose in them. Is this ingredient a sugar that is taboo on your diet?

DEAR READER: Dextrose, sucrose and glucose are all simple sugars. The primary difference between all three is in the way the body metabolizes them. Some manufacturers and packers for food-industry products prefer to use the word dextrose instead of sugar because the public is becoming more savvy and might not purchase a product if weight is an issue for them.

Dates that are dried are usually packed in sugar as a flavor enhancer. Organic or natural-food stores may have alternatives without sugar added, but as it stands, the dates you purchased aren’t allowed. Check the packaging label to verify the packaging content.

Mount Merapi spews volcanic material Thursday, as seen from Klaten, Indonesia.

Volcano death toll climbs to 92 in Indonesia

By Slamet Riyadi
Associated Press

MOUNT MERAPI, Indonesia — A deadly surge of blistering gases cascaded down the slopes of Indonesia's most volatile volcano Friday, incinerating houses in one mountainside village and more than doubling the number of people killed in just over a week to 92.

Forty-eight bodies were brought to a morgue at a nearby hospital, which was struggling to cope with victims. At least 66 people were injured, many of them critically with bursts.

Mount Merapi's booming explosion just after midnight triggered a panicked evacuation. Men with ash-covered faces streamed down Mount Merapi on motorcycles followed by truckloads of women and children, many crying.

Officials barked out orders on bullhorns as rocks and debris rained from the sky.

Soldiers joined rescue operations in Bronggang, the torched village nine miles from the crater, and — up until Friday — just on the perimeter of the "safe-zone."

They loaded charred corpses into vehicles and carried away the injured on stretchers.

"We're totally overwhelmed here!" said Heru

Nogroho, a spokesman at the Sardjito hospital, as the badly burned victims arrived.

Mount Merapi, which means "Fire Mountain," has erupted many times in the last century, often with deadly results.

The greatest danger is always pyroclastic flows.

Such clouds can reach temperatures of up to 1,400 degree Fahrenheit, while racing down the slopes at speeds of up to 60 miles per hour.

Activity at the mountain forced an airport in nearby Yogyakarta to close Friday.

Subandrio, a state volcanologist, meanwhile, said Mount Merapi's "danger zone" was extended by three miles to 12 miles from the crater's mouth after the new eruption.

Even scientists from Merapi's monitoring station were told they had to pack up and move down the mountain.

Despite earlier predictions by scientists that dozens of big explosions that followed Merapi's initial Oct. 26 blast would ease pressure building up behind a magma dome, eruptions have been intensifying.

"I've never seen it act like this," said Surono, a state expert on volcanos, who has observed Merapi for more than 15 years. "We don't know what to expect."

Cuban airliner crashes with 68 people aboard

By Paul Haven
Associated Press

HAVANA — A Cuban airliner flying from the eastern city of Santiago de Cuba to the capital crashed after declaring an emergency Thursday evening with 68 people aboard, including 28 foreigners, state media reported. There was no immediate word on whether any survived.

AeroCaribbean Flight 883 went down near the village of Guasimal in Santi Spiritus province, carrying 61 passengers and a crew of seven, state television said. It said 28 passengers were foreigners, but did not give a breakdown of nationalities.

State media said the names of those on board would be released later.

The twice-a-week flight goes from Port-au-Prince, Haiti, to Santiago de Cuba to Havana. It had been due to land in the Cuban capital at 7:50 p.m, but reported an emergency at 5:42 p.m. and subsequently lost contact with air traffic controllers.

State media said that the plane was an ATR-72 twin turboprop and that the crash site was not far from the Zaza reservoir, the largest in Cuba. It said doctors and emergency workers in the area were mobilized.

At Havana's national terminal, relatives of those on board the plane were kept isolated from other passengers and journalists.

"This is very sad," said Caridad de las Mercedes Gonzalez, who was manning an airport information desk. "We are very worried. This has taken us by surprise."

State media gave no details on what happened to the airliner, saying only that the cause of the crash was being investigated.

The flight would have been one of the last leaving Santiago de Cuba for Havana ahead of Tropical Storm Tomas, which was on a track to pass between Cuba's eastern end and the western coast of Haiti on Friday. Cuban media said earlier that flights and train service to Santiago were being suspended until the storm passed.

Passengers hear bangs, see smoke on Qantas flight

By Julia Zappei
Associated Press

SINGAPORE — First came two quick bangs. Then, on the left side of the Qantas superjumbo jet, passengers saw flames, a stream of smoke and debris from a stricken engine.

A gouge scarred the top of the Airbus 380's left wing, scorch marks were on the outside of the blown-out engine and part of its cover depicting the airline's familiar red kangaroo logo had fallen off during the flight over Indonesia.

After a tense 95 minutes while the pilots dumped fuel, the massive, double-decker plane — the world's largest — returned safely Thursday to Singapore, where it made an emergency landing with 459 people aboard.

Qantas and Singapore Airlines grounded their Airbus A380 jetliners after Rolls-Royce, which manufactured the engines, recommended a series of checks.

Lufthansa grounded its A380 scheduled to depart Frankfurt for Johannesburg while it checked the engines, and instead used an A340-600 on the route, spokesman Boris Ogursky said. Lufthansa plans to fly the A380 from Frankfurt to Tokyo as scheduled on Friday, he added.

The failure of the No. 2 engine — one of four on the jet — was the most serious in-flight incident involving the A380 since it debuted in 2007 with Singapore Airlines flying it to Sydney.

That's the same route that Thursday's Qantas Flight QF34 was making.

Passengers praised the Qantas crew for their reassuring announcements.

"Panic would have broken out, but the crew kept people updated and were behaving as if it (the situation) was so trivial," said Matthew Hewitt, a 25-year-old engineer from Manchester in Britain. "The crew was so calm."

Experts said the problem appeared to be an "uncontained engine failure," which occurs when turbine debris punctures the engine casing and the light cowlings that covers the unit.

Qantas CEO Alan Joyce appeared to blame the engines, made by Rolls-Royce.

NASA spacecraft takes close look at small comet

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — A NASA spacecraft sped past a small comet Thursday, beaming pictures back to Earth that gave scientists a rare close-up view of its center.

Mission controllers burst into applause upon seeing images from the flyby that revealed a peanut-shaped comet belching jets of poisonous gases.

"It's hyperactive, small and feisty," said mission scientist Don Yeomans of the NASA Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

The close encounter occurred 13 million miles from Earth when the Deep Impact craft, hurtling through space, flew within 435 miles of comet Hartley 2. It's only the fifth time that a comet's core has been viewed up close.

Scientists are interested in comets because they're icy leftovers from the formation of the solar system about 4.5 billion years ago. Studying them could provide clues to how Earth and the planets formed and evolved.

"The scientific work is just beginning now," principal investigator Michael A'Hearn, of the University of Maryland, said at a post-mission news conference. "The engineers did a fantastic job of getting us data. Now we have to make sense of it."

Thursday's flyby is actually an encore mission for Deep Impact. It set off cosmic fireworks on July 4, 2005, when it fired a copper probe that crashed into comet Tempel 1. The high-speed collision spewed a cloud of debris into space, giving scientists their first peek of the interior.

After the $333 million comet-buster, NASA recycled Deep Impact for a new mission to visit another comet. It was supposed to target comet Boethin in 2008, but it was nowhere to be found.

This black-and-white image of the comet Hartley 2 was sent from the NASA Deep Impact spacecraft on Thursday to the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif. The comet is estimated to be 1.4 miles long and weigh about 280 million metric tons.

Twin Falls Center for the Arts almost finished ...

Photos by MELISSA DAVLIN/Times-News

Pinnacle West, home of the new Twin Falls Center for the Arts, is nearing completion on the south rim of the Snake River Canyon.

... but not quite paid for

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

We're almost there. The paint is dry. The tile is in place, waiting for grout. The stage has been built, lights installed, carpet put down. This week, builders and contractors labored on the finishing touches on the Twin Falls Center for the Arts, the Magic Valley Arts Council's new home on the Snake River Canyon's south rim. Although the arts council still has fundraising to do, it plans to move in within the month. The timeline for the move has been revised several times. In January 2009, former Magic Valley Arts Council director Stacy Madsen predicted the center would open in January 2010. Later that year, arts council leaders pushed that date to spring 2010 after the economy forced developers to redesign the building. The council then planned to be in the center by the end of October. Now, the actual move-in is within sight, although the arts council doesn't have a specific date, said director Robin Baumgartner. Although developer Fran Florence plans to finish by the end of next week, the arts council still needs to install its phone lines and make sure everything is in place and working before unpacking its boxes. The arts council has raised most of the $1.4 million needed for construction and initial operation of the Twin Falls Center for the Arts. The remaining $60,000 yet to be raised is

IDAHO IN VERSE

The Gem State's history of poets and poetry

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

Most Idahoans can name the state's most famous poet — but Hailey native Ezra Pound lived here only about 18 months before his family moved to Philadelphia in 1887. Before or after Pound, the state has produced few masters of rhyme and verse who became household names. "There's an attitude that Idaho doesn't have any poets at all, and it's probably true that Idaho doesn't have what you'd call world-class poets," said Ron McFarland, co-editor of "Idaho's Poetry: A Centennial Anthology" and professor of English at the University of Idaho. He acknowledged, though, that even the best-known poets pale in fame compared with most celebrities. "Poets don't tend to develop very big reputations anyhow."

However, Idaho appears to be in the midst of an explosion of poetry, thanks in part to the growth in creative writing programs at the state's universities and the increasing popularity of performance styles like slam and cowboy poetry. "There are a lot of opportunities for non-published poets to speak. I was not aware of those a year or two ago," said Dede Ryan, interim executive director for The Cabin in Boise. "There's always been a small, loyal, very involved group, but I get the sense there's a widening appreciation."

Thanks to the Internet, writers can connect — to each other and to publishers — in a way that was more difficult previously. This allows poets in rural places to live where they love, craft verse and get it read nationally.

"It's a solitary art that can be practiced anywhere. A place like Idaho may be particularly blessed with the kind of solitude that comes with the place," said Bob Wrigley, winner of six Pushcart Prizes for poetry and professor of English at U of I.

"The poets and artists, writers of any sort, who live in these parts are a little harder to find but no less valuable, and even New York knows that," Wrigley said, noting that he may be better known on the Eastern Seaboard, due to his appearances in publications like The New Yorker, than he is in Idaho. "We're on the radar, but it is fly-over country."

When compiling "Idaho's Poetry," McFarland noted that many of the state's poets wrote about either the environment around them or the greater Western experience.

"When they write about the bar they happen to hang out in in Pocatello, that's when they strike gold, more often than not," he said by way of example. "When the poets were

No More Fires to Fight

We dug fireline all night, full moon shining down on us
like a spotlight from Heaven.
Threw our sleeping bags next to the fire
& woke in the morning with frost on our heads.
I made bad coffee
& lit a cigarette with a burning twig.
Now there are no more fires to fight.
Indians and young white kids
swing Pulaskis & breathe smoke.
My steel-toed boots sit in the closet, unused for 14 years.
They dream of excitement,
while I sit & want to weep,
dreaming of that summer
when I walked around shirtless & thought fire would never end.

Instead, it plans to hold open houses throughout the beginning of next year, and it plans a New Year's Eve bash in conjunction with Tom Nickell — whose new restaurant will be in the same building and connected to the arts center's auditorium. Party details are still being worked out, Baumgartner said, but they have booked Boise-based rock jazz band Hotel India and are planning ticket packages that include dinner and entertainment.

On Monday afternoon, Missoula Children's Theatre will hold auditions for its annual traveling play, "Treasure Island," in the center's auditorium. So hordes of youngsters and their parents will be the first

Fireflies

Now there are no fireflies. Once there were and we caught them. Children, our white sweaters glinting in the dusk, chasing after other children. They seemed that way, children or the very old, dottering in slow flight. We'd charge any flash and wait at arms' length for one another. And always, there was. Once we kept them in an unwashed honey jar, three dozen snagged and flickering on the oozy sides. Carefully we plucked each away and wrote with the smear of the phosphorescence our names on a stone wall, and afterward licked our fingers, and they were sweet and golden.

Town Marshall

Small towns like this, mills belly-up about like me, don't need but one cop. Main thing is to know everyone's business like your own. I grew up in this town, busted my back at the mill, took over marshall when no one else wanted it. I got divorced so fast I almost didn't get married first. Don't need no damn diploma for this sorta work, just common sense and knowing when to grin, when to cut the bull. Get along with the high school kids you got it made. I wink at six-packs on the floor of the back seat, but no drugs or hard stuff. Dip a little snuff with the old boys down at C.J.'s, find out what's going on, it's not a hard job. Now this new council wants a cap and gown, Police Academy instead of a badge and gun. Thirty years, and now some college kid in a coat and tie tells me I can't run two miles I ain't a good cop. Hell, it's like I told the council, this town don't need a good cop.

doing that, intersecting with Idaho as opposed to a personal love life or something like that, ... they somehow had a better sense of vivid, specific language."

McFarland

Wrigley said he has often been labeled a "Western" or "nature" poet, although he said he wrote about whatever imagery surrounded him, whether a big-city street or the Moscow Mountain wildlife where he lives.

"If you are a poet writing in Idaho you tend to write about that interface between nature and human more than a lot of other places do," he said. " (But) my concerns, my principal themes of love, death, the fragility of life, the magnificence of nature, would still be in my poems if I lived in New York or Boston or Philadelphia."

Although Wrigley and McFarland drew distinctions between literary poetry and performance styles like slam and cowboy (which boasts that it is "anti-literary," McFarland said), the professors said performed poetry is currently quite popular.

"Cowboy poetry does pretty well here, and a cowboy poetry event would outdraw an academic poetry event any day," said Jim Irons, Twin Falls poet and professor of English, creative writing and humanities at College of Southern Idaho. "Young college kids tend to like performance poetry, but if you evaluate it, it's not usually as well written as poetry for the page."

Wrigley agreed. "Poetry slams are great fun, though I don't think much literature comes out of them," he said. "But that's OK, they're not doing anything that's not constructive and building on the written word."

The popularity of performance poetry may be leading to a renaissance in the written form. Wrigley said more poetry is being sold now in America than at any time in the nation's history, and more students are studying creative writing, including in Idaho.

But poetry is likely to remain a second-class art.

"As usual, a few people love poetry and always will, and the rest of the people ignore it. It's been that way with poetry forever," Irons said.

But Idaho isn't second-class when it comes to poets, and the professors have hope that a Gem State writer will rise to that household-name status. "It's still a possibility that we'll have (another) great poet come out of Idaho, someone on the stature of Pound," he said.

Heyburn Collection comes out of storage

Lecture and exhibit feature paintings by regional, national artists

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

The weather might be chilly, but you don't need to go outside to enjoy some great landscapes.

On Nov. 17, LaVar Steel will lecture about the Heyburn Collection, a group of paintings collected by Heyburn School that was donated to the Herrett Center for Arts and Science.

The collection consists of 51 paintings, but Steel said only 48 are at the Herrett Center. Steel and museum collections manager Phyllis Oppenheim aren't sure how many will be on display, or for how long — that depends on how much room they have and whether anyone else needs to use the center's Rick Allen Room — but Herrett Center staff will put the paintings up on Nov. 15 for the Nov. 17 lecture.

Herrett Center admission is free.

Most of the paintings are landscapes, and all but one are oil. Artists from Idaho, Utah, Nevada, New York, Massachusetts and other states are represented in the collection. Artists include Heyburn native Olaf Moller and former Brigham Young University professor B.F. Larsen.

Heyburn School's tradition started in 1933 after the principal approached Moller with an idea for an exhibit. Moller, who had studied at the Pennsylvania Institute of Art, used his contacts in the art world to help the school put together the show. Those paintings and others that followed, now known as the Heyburn Collection, were on display for about two weeks every spring from 1933 to 1952.

In following years, the event grew to include the whole community. Grades six through 12 would each pick a class queen, Oppenheim said. Then students sold tickets to the spring show, and people would buy according to which girl they wanted to be

Delve into photography as an art form

Times-News

A new class at the College of Southern Idaho next semester will teach students about one of the most accessible of the arts — photography.

"Photography Appreciation" will be a three-credit class that meets from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Fridays, Jan. 21 to May 6. There are no prerequisites.

Photography instructor Ben Lustig says the new class will allow more hands-on experience and experimentation than many other appreciation courses. Students will learn the history of photography, its genres, its strong connections to other arts, its technology and how photographers have helped shape our vision of the world. Students will learn to "read" photographs, a vocabulary for discussing them, how to critique them from several perspectives and how to make and analyze photographic images.

Registration runs through Jan 31. Information: Lustig at 732-6756 or at blustig@csi.edu.

Landscapes lecture

- What: Free lecture on the Heyburn Collection, by LaVar Steel
- When: 7:30 p.m. Nov. 17
- Where: Herrett Center for Arts and Science, Rick Allen Room, 315 Falls Ave., Twin Falls
- Information: 732-6655

At the lecture, Steel will talk about individual paintings and artists as well as his personal relationship with some of the painters — like Larsen, who taught Steel at BYU. He will also talk about his memories of the events. Steel grew up in Burley and went to the shows from 1948 to '52.

"When I went through there, I was quite impressed as a high school kid," said Steel, former chairman of the College of Southern Idaho art department.

Those who want to see the collection should come to the lecture; after the lecture, Oppenheim doesn't know when it will be on display again.

"I doubt there's a collection like it anywhere," Oppenheim said.

Although women across the U.S. were granted the right to vote in 1920 (Idaho women got the vote, by way of a state constitutional amendment, in 1896) the messages presented in "A Doll's House" still apply today, said Lexi Bybee, cast as lead character Nora Helmer.

"I believe the show still resonates with women today because it shows that women should learn who they are and not simply go from being in the care of their father and then passing right along to being cared for and controlled by a husband," she

Nora lives essentially as the doll of her home, her husband's plaything who isn't taken seriously, Bybee said.

In the opening scene, the

“At first, Nora plays her role as wife well and is blindly happy,” Bybee said. “She never has an opportunity to develop as her own person, who is grounded in the real world, because she goes from being cared for, and living in, her father’s home to being cared for and living in her husband’s home. Nora plays and tends for her children like they are dolls, just like her father played with her, like she was nothing more than a doll to dress up and play house.”

A surprise visit from Nora's childhood friend Christine Linde, played by Taylor Quesnell, opens her eyes. Ibsen sets Christine's life in stark contrast to Nora's. As a widow, Christine must carve a living for herself.

"Christine teaches Nora that there is much more to life than being spoiled," Ouesnell said.

In a series of plot twists, Nora comes to realize she must strike out on her own.

"This is one of those plays reminding people how arts reflect life and that the arts can be an influence for changing the future," Blaszkiewicz said.

Cherished pianist’s music will live again

By Coreen Hart
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — If the name Floyd Cramer brings up happy memories for you, you can hear him again — in spirit if not in the flesh. His grandson Jason Coleman will re-create some of Cramer’s greatest hits at 7:30 p.m. Nov. 13 at the King Fine Arts Center.

“Granddad died when I was 12, but I was blessed to be able to spend a lot of time with him in my growing-up years,” Coleman said.

Cramer was the inspiration for a boy who started piano lessons at age 5 because his parents couldn’t keep him away from it. Coleman even sang at the Grand Ole Opry at one of Granddad’s concerts. When he was 4, he sang while Cramer played on “Nashville Now,” and at age 9 he played a piano duet with Cramer on “Music City Tonight.”

“Piano was just the thing I loved to do,” the 23-year-old recalled. “From very young, I always hoped I would have a career like my granddad.”

At age 17, he made his debut playing piano at the Grand Old Opry, behind Hank Locklin doing “Please Help Me, I’m Falling.”

Coleman has released three CDs. “Merry Little Christmas” came out in 2005, followed by “Legacy,” a tribute to Cramer, in 2006. Most recently he released a gospel album, “Faith.” He’s a worship leader at Parkway Baptist Church in Goodlettsville, Tenn., when he’s not touring. This season he will give concerts at 70 cities including Burley.

“Partnering with Live On Stage has helped me a great deal,” Coleman said. “It’s good to get Granddad’s music out there and has boosted my career. He had his slip-note style that was so distinctive. It started out like an intentional mistake that was quickly corrected.”

He likes many kinds of music and will perform some pieces from other genres as well as showing slides of Cramer and himself.

In addition to his Nov. 13 performance, Jason Coleman will give a free workshop for pianists, from beginning to skilled, at 12:30 p.m. Nov. 12 at Burley High School. Check in at the front desk a few minutes early.

Cramer’s career began in 1953 with “Dancin’ Diane” and moved into country music in 1955. He was a studio accompanist in demand, backing Elvis Presley, Brenda Lee, Patsy Cline, Jim Reeves, Eddy Arnold, Roy Orbison, Don Gibson and the Everly Brothers. He backed Presley on “Heartbreak Hotel,” among others.

By the mid-1960s Cramer was a performer in his own right, recording albums and touring with Chet Atkins and Boots Randolph. After his death to lung cancer in 1997, he was inducted in 2003 into both the Country Music Hall of Fame and the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, and in 2008 into the Louisiana Music Hall of Fame.

Karen Taylor, Mini-Cassia Community Concert board member, said she was ecstatic when she learned Coleman would be coming.

“All my sisters and my family were just crazy about Floyd Cramer,” she said. “I’m really looking forward to going back in wonderful memories. We loved his ‘Last Date’ and ‘Chattanooga Choo Choo.’”

Another board member, Gary McCall, relished

SEASON DETAILS

Mini-Cassia Community Concerts are available by season ticket, but also by $20 tickets bought at the door. The season has four concerts this year; Jason Coleman’s Nov. 13 performance is the second. Still to come:

- March 12: Buddy Jewell, winner of the television reality competition “Nashville Star” in 2003, earned Academy of Country Music honors as Best New Artist, took the Country Music Awards Horizon award and was nominated for a Grammy.
- April 29: Sharon Owens and Sebastian Anzaldo will impersonate Barbra Streisand and Frank Sinatra in “The Concert That Never Was.” Streisand and Sinatra never performed together, but who can say what might have happened?

All concerts begin at 7:30 p.m. at the King Fine Arts Center, 2100 Park Ave. on the Burley High School grounds. Seats are first-come, first-served. Season tickets are $40 for adults, $20 for students and $110 for families (including all children older than 5 still living at home). Season tickets are good at community concert series in Idaho Falls and Boise, too.

Information: Susan Tuft at 678-1798 or Gwen Erickson at 436-0933.

Cramer’s crossover style. “You recognized him anytime you heard him,” he said. “Coleman will be going in other directions, too. He’s young and skilled.”

Board member Lynn Ann Arnell said that as MCCC audiences get younger, the group is trying to reach out to them.

“We have such a much broader audience than we did 54 years ago when this series began,” Arnell said.

One-week wonder: Local kids have chance for intense arts education

Times-News

Get your little actors and singers ready to be animated and follow instructions: It’s audition time.

Magic Valley Arts Council will hold auditions Monday for the Twin Falls production of Missoula Children’s Theatre’s “Treasure Island.”

When a Missoula Children’s Theatre team comes to town, it auditions local children on a Monday, leads focused and fast rehearsals all week, and puts the cast on stage that Saturday. It’s an intense experience.

Auditions begin at 4 p.m. sharp Monday at the new Twin Falls Center for the Arts, at 195 River Vista Place. To audition, arrive by 3:50 p.m. and plan to stay for two hours. Part of the cast will rehearse immediately following the auditions.

All students ages 5-17 may audition. No stage experience and no previous training in music or theater are required. Missoula Children’s Theatre is free to participants. And no preparation is necessary before the auditions.

Those who audition must be able to commit to next week’s full week of rehearsals and to two performances on Nov. 13. Assistant directors will be cast to assist with technical aspects of the production.

The cast of about 50 local children will be on stage for two performances of “Treasure Island” — an original adaptation with a twist — at 3 and 7 p.m. Nov. 13 at O’Leary Middle School.

Tickets are $7 for adults and $4 for kids under 18, available at the Magic Valley Arts Council, Farmers National Bank’s Shoshone Street branch in Twin Falls, Farmers National Bank in Buhl and at the door.

Information: the arts council at 734-2787.

Relax on the range at cowboy poetry, western music gathering

Times-News

RUPERT — Cowboy performers Wayne Nelson and Sam Mattise are working to make the 14th annual Diamondfield Jack Cowboy Poetry and Western Music Gathering one of the state's best by bring in more than 30 performers.

It's set for Nov. 12-14 in Rupert's Historic Wilson Theatre.

What's it all about? Nelson likes to quote a friend about the difference between Nashville county western and plain western music: "Country western music is about a cowgirl doing somebody wrong; western music is about a cow doing somebody wrong."

Nelson is a board member for Cowboy Poets of Idaho Inc.'s Magic Valley area. He was raised on ranches in Lava Hot Springs and Blackfoot, worked for ranches, farms, mines and spud houses across the Snake River Plain and retired from J.R. Simplot Co.

"My songs and poems and stories are about people I rode with when I was growing up and the interesting history of our area. They've taught me so much I feel it's my duty to immortalize them in works and music. It's like a sculptor or artist in bronze or on canvas," Nelson said.

Nelson is the only member in Cowboy Poets of Idaho history to receive both its Golden Note award for music and the Silver Quill award for poetry. Nelson's poem "Snowville" was published in several books and magazines and produced on a CD. He plays a handmade instrument he calls a sageharp, also known as a mouth bow.

Singer, songwriter, poet and musician Mattise has performed for more than 35 years throughout the Western states and Canada. He is retired from the Bureau of Land Management, where he managed Idaho wild horse herds.

"There's not much left of the old West, but managing wild horses was a small window in time of what it used to be," Mattise said.

He was voted 2006 Singer of the Year for Cowboy Poets of Idaho and was inducted into the organization's Hall of Fame in 2009. Mattise and photographer Mike Luque published "Dancing Shadows, Mustangs and Dreams," a book of photos and poems.

Many of the Rupert gathering's performers will work in free sessions, which are open to the public 1-5 p.m. Nov. 12 and 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Nov. 13. These sessions give newcomers and other poets not ready to perform in front of a large audience a change to share their poems and music with a smaller audience and the professionals.

Admission to evening performances on those two days is $10 per person, and each night will showcase different performers.

"We will have folding chairs in the theater, but those attending are more than welcome to bring their comfortable lawn chairs if they'd like to," said Chris Jackson, executive director of the board renovating the historical theater. "The theater is still in renovation and we have taken the ceiling down, so had to take the seating out. During our July 4 melodrama, several brought their own lawn chairs and seemed to be able to kick back, have a place for their drink and enjoy the evening. It may be more comfortable than a folding chair — and a new experience. Maybe it will help give the effect of relaxing on the range."

SIX FOR THE QUARTERS

Twenty-eight area high schools football teams kicked off August two-a-days harboring state championship hopes. Only six are still standing. Those schools — Carey, Castleford, Declo, Dietrich, Hagerman and Kimberly — will put their seasons on the line today and Saturday in state quarterfinal games. For each, the situation is the same: lose and the dream is over. But with three mores wins, they'll find themselves hoisting a state championship trophy.

Kimberly rides momentum in South Fremont game

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

After a gut-wrenching, one-point win over Parma last week in the first round of the playoffs, Kimberly isn't taking tonight's Class 3A quarterfinal matchup with South Fremont lightly.

"We can't blow this opportunity," said senior running back Cody Casperson. "We're excited to be in the second round of the playoffs, but we have to play better and be more consistent."

The Bulldogs (7-2) host a 6-3 Cougars team that feature a prolific offense led by quarterback Spencer Goulding, the team's leading rusher and passer.

DECLO — As the saying goes, luck is what happens when preparation meets opportunity.

These days, they're feeling pretty lucky in Declo.

As the Hornets (6-3) prepare to host Nampa Christian (6-3) in the Class 2A state football quarterfinals tonight, several key players have made the most of their opportunities the past few weeks.

Consequently, Declo isn't the same team it was at the start of the season.

pare this year's team to last year a lot — which I probably shouldn't do," said Declo senior running back and linebacker Mark Knobbe. "Last year we started out just great and as the year went on, we didn't get a lot better. This year we definitely didn't start out the best, but we are getting much, much better every single game. I'm really excited because some of the early mistakes that we had aren't there anymore. We're peaking at the perfect time."

Throw out the scores? The BCS does

Practice hinders Boise State, TCU and Utah

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press writer

According to the BCS computer ratings, 21-20 is no different from 45-0. A game decided by a last-second field goal is exactly the same as a blowout that's over at halftime.

Putting the perception of sportsmanship ahead of the harsh reality of statistics, the conference commissioners behind the Bowl Championship Series demand that programmers whose computer rankings are used to determine which teams play in the BCS title game remove margin of victory from the equation.

The problem, as this season is showing, is that margin of victory has become another part of a postseason system stacked against Boise State, TCU or Utah playing for the championship.

"You're throwing away information," said Jeff Sagarin, the mathematician and MIT graduate whose computer rankings for college football have been used by the BCS since its inception in 1998.

BCS officials don't dispute

Sagarin's claim.

But they don't want to encourage coaches to pile up points just to boost their team's ratings. Said BCS executive director Bill Hancock in a recent interview: "The commissioners decided that the price was too high in terms of sportsmanship."

The formula for the BCS standings has changed several times over the years, mostly to put more emphasis on the human element. Currently, the Harris poll and the coaches' poll account for two-third of a

CSI volleyball inks three for 2011 class

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

The 2010 JUCO volleyball season isn't over for the College of Southern Idaho, but the Golden Eagles already have a jump on next season.

CSI coach Heidi Cartisser confirmed Thursday the signings of three high school players to NJCAA National Letters of Intent for the 2011 season.

Brooke Jensen of Castle Dale, Utah, and Keani Passi and Marie Fujii of Pearl City, Hawaii, make for the earliest three signees in Cartisser's five-year tenure. Prospective athletes could not sign with NJCAA schools until Nov. 1, and all three signatures were secured by Wednesday evening.

"It's a relief, because we've got a great base for the recruiting class and we can be more selective now," Cartisser said.

Cartisser described Jensen, a 6-foot-2 middle blocker from Emery High School, as a player with a solid level of play but still with tremendous upside. Passi, an outside hitter, and Fujii, a setter/right side, are teammates and best friends at Pearl City High School on the island of Oahu.

Cartisser said all three should hit the ground running next season, indicating that they have a talent level that would have made them competitive on this season's roster in terms of pushing for places.

All three players made CSI their first choice for college volleyball, rather than flirting with four-year schools and using the JUCO route as a fall-back plan.

"That's a big deal that they want to be here," Cartisser said. "They did their homework and decided that this was the best place for them to be. We're really excited to have them."

CSI has five scholarship sophomores departing the program in Barbara Alcantara, Jesse Dill, Elisa Brochado, Alyssa Everett and Dama Cox. Ashleigh Pollard, a redshirt freshman, could return for another season or depart for a four-year school and open up another scholarship slot.

That leaves just two scholarship slots definitely open for next season, both likely to be allocated toward international players with Alcantara and Brochado, both from Brazil, leaving for four-year schools. More could come available if freshmen from this season's roster do not return, which can happen as NJCAA scholarships only bind a player to the school for one year rather than two.

Top-ranked Lee Westwood, Tiger near lead in Shanghai

SHANGHAI — Lee Westwood spent his career trying to be No. 1. The way he played Thursday in the HSBC Champions, it doesn't look as though he wants to give up his prized ranking after just one week.

Even as Francesco Molinari of Italy made a charge to a 7-under 65 for a one-shot lead, the focus in the final World Golf Championship of the year quickly shifted to what could be a prolonged and fascinating battle for No. 1.

In his debut as golf's top-ranked player, Westwood birdied some of the toughest holes at Sheshan International and showed hardly any signs of rust from playing in his second stroke-play tournament in three months. He finished with back-to-back birdies for a 66.

Two shots behind Westwood was Tiger Woods, without his No. 1 ranking for the first time in more than five years. Woods made a most improbable par from behind the bushes with a 4-iron he had to aim away from loose tree roots, which proved more satisfying than the three straight birdies that sent him to a 68.

COOK IN FRONT AT SCHWAB CUP CHAMPIONSHIP

SAN FRANCISCO — Defending champion John Cook shot a 7-under 64 at Harding Park to take the first-round lead in the Champions Tour's season-ending Charles Schwab Cup Championship.

Cook, the winner last year at Sonoma Golf Club, had a one-stroke lead over Fred Funk and Tom Pernice Jr.

Tom Lehman opened with a 66, Schwab Cup points leader Bernhard Langer topped a group at 67, and Fred Couples had a 69. Couples needs to win to catch Langer in the two-man race for the $1 million annuity. Even if Couples wins, Langer would take the top prize with a two-way tie for fourth or better.

outside, each rushing for more than 350 yards this season with Spaeth catching 35 passes.

While Parma wanted to pound the ball right at the Bulldog defense last week, South Fremont will spread the ball out of the shotgun and use its speed on the outside.

"They are great in open space. Our defense will have to make plays and tackle much better than we did against Parma," Bright said.

But Kimberly can lean on its own playmakers in Casperson and quarterback Seth Champlin.

Casperson rushed for 236 yards and three touchdowns and returned a kickoff for a touchdown last week. He has been the Bulldogs' work-horse all season, while Champlin is an elusive, shifty runner and has broken several long runs this season.

Despite being nonconferrence opponents, the two teams do have some common foes this season as South Fremont shut out Buhl 21-0 earlier this season and defeated American Falls last week in the first round of the playoffs. Kimberly beat Buhl 17-14 and lost 46-41 to American Falls in the first week of the season.

But this is a much better Kimberly team, Bright said.

"It's one of those things where this time of year every team is playing better as the weeks go on," Bright said. "We're feeling really good about our team and have a lot of confidence and momentum from last week's win."

And if tonight comes down to a late rally in the final minutes like Parma?

"As long as we get the win. Even if we win by one, we'll take it," Bright said.

Declo

Among the improvements, Declo can now do two things that it couldn't do at the start of the season: throw the ball and kick the ball.

Sophomore quarterback Kai Garner has given the previously one-dimensional Declo offense a passing threat. By doing so, he has helped open up the Hornets' running game because opponents can no longer pack defenders near the line of scrimmage to simply key on the run.

"The biggest thing for Kai is the change of speed from JV to varsity," said Declo coach Kelly Kidd. "He's getting better every game. His football poise is good. There are so many things being processed in his brain. I look out there and see a person whose mind is going a million miles an hour, and yet he's still able to lead a group of juniors and seniors."

Rather than thinking too much, Garner is starting to rely more on his instincts and athletic ability as he gains confidence. It's a skill he honed at several camps last summer. But his chance to shine at the varsity level came sooner than expected as two quarterbacks ahead of him went down with injuries.

"I never expected to go through two quarterbacks and for me to get the opportunity to play," Garner said. "But I've always been taught that prior preparation is what is going to help you in the end, and because you never know when your opportunity is going to come."

Another Hornet taking advantage of his opportunity is the team's most recent addition — kicker and wide receiver Erik Henrickson.

A star player and captain of Declo's soccer team, Henrickson never played football until a few weeks ago when Kidd recruited him to kick. He finally joined the team after soccer season was over.

"Fitting him for pads the first time, he didn't have any idea how things go or how they work. It was a bit comical," Kidd said.

special teams player. Prior to his arrival, Declo had to go for a 2-point conversion after every touchdown.

"He was accepted universally by (the team)," Kidd said. "That's because of his attitude, his willingness to learn, his (humility). He stepped in and contributed to our team and pretty soon he was a 100-percent football player. He's very athletic and has all the natural abilities."

Henrickson, a senior, was a headache for defenses on the soccer pitch due to his size and athleticism. Now that he's gone from futbol to football, he's excelling on the gridiron. He hasn't missed a PAT the past two weeks and he nailed a 41-yard field goal against Gooding last week.

He makes plays with his hands, too. Henrickson had two touchdown-saving tackles against Glens Ferry, plus he has caught two passes, each for more than 40 yards. It's too late to teach him the playbook, but Henrickson has learned the difference between a post and a go route, and fellow receiver Jaxon Wrigley tells him in the huddle what to do.

"It's pretty fun," Henrickson said. "It's different than soccer. You run a lot more in soccer. They both have their ups and downs. It feels cool to run a route and catch a ball, but it feels cool to beat people one-on-one in soccer, too. ... I'd like to see how good I'd be now in football if I had played all three years."

Besides Garner and Henrickson, Kidd has been impressed as several other players have stepped in, accepted their roles and seized opportunities. One example is senior Justin Cameron, who was one of Declo's injured quarterbacks. Now that he's back from a sprained ankle, he's moved to receiver, allowing Garner to remain the Hornets' signal-caller.

"What's made this team even better, when these situations happened (injuries and eligibility issues), everybody accepted it," Kidd said. "We didn't have the internal mess of people resenting. We had opportunities this season to have a bad attitude, but the attitude of the team has always been really positive."

Sloppy Hokies hang on against Jackets

BLACKSBURG, Va. (AP) — David Wilson returned a kickoff 90 yards for a touchdown with 2:23 to play and No. 20 Virginia Tech held on to beat Georgia Tech 28-21 on Thursday night.

Wilson's return came on the kickoff right after the Yellow Jackets tied it, allowing the Hokies (7-2, 5-0 ACC) to overcome a sloppy effort and remain in control of their fate in the ACC's Coastal Division. It was Virginia Tech's seventh consecutive victory.

The Yellow Jackets (5-4, 3-3), played the second half without quarterback Joshua Nesbitt, who was injured late in the first half trying to make a tackle after throwing an interception at Virginia Tech's 1. The injury was to his right forearm, the school said, and came after he led one scoring drive, then ran 71 yards for another touchdown.

Still, they gave the Hokies all they could handle.

The Yellow Jackets fell behind 21-14 with 6:34 to play on Tyrod Taylor's 2-yard pass to Andre Smith, but they immediately answered behind backup quarterback Tevin Washington.

He hit Tyler Melton for 42 yards on the first play after Taylor's scoring pass — Georgia Tech's first pass completion of the game — and they did the rest on the ground. Roddy Jones ran for 5 yards on fourth-and-4 from the Hokies 32, and Orwin Smith ran it in from the 9.

career-high 40 in a win over Portland on Monday.

The Bulls were trailing by 17 points before making a run late in the third, cutting it to 10 on a 3-pointer by Deng with 28 seconds left. They were within 95-87 after a 3 by Korver early in the fourth. The Knicks responded by scoring 10 straight points with Ronny Turiaf's three-point play on a dunk with 9:31 left capping that spurt.

That's when Rose headed to the sideline, and the Bulls again chipped away at the lead but couldn't pull this one out.

Knicks hit 16 treys in win over Bulls

CHICAGO (AP) — Toney Douglas scored a career-high 30 points, and the New York Knicks made 16 of 24 3-point attempts in a 120-112 victory over the Chicago Bulls on Thursday night.

It was an astounding display from the outside for the Knicks after they hit just 29.1 percent over the first three games. Leading the charge was Douglas, who made 5 of 9 but he had plenty of help.

Danilo Gallinari hit four 3s without a miss and finished with 24 points — all but three in the first half as the Knicks took a 21-point lead in going up 70-52 at halftime.

Raymond Felton was 4 of 6 from long range and finished with 20 points and 10 assists, while Amare Stoudemire added 14 points and eight rebounds for the Knicks who got a reprieve after a dramatic first week.

Besides close losses to Boston and Portland after taking the opener from Toronto, they had to postpone Tuesday's home game against Orlando because of an asbestos scare at Madison Square Garden.

They overcame another big effort from Chicago's Derrick Rose, who scored 24 points and had 14 assists, but he sat out the final 9:31. That didn't sit well with fans who chanted "We want Rose!" in the closing minutes as the Bulls made one final push.

Kyle Korver finished with 18 points and Luol Deng scored 17 after pouring in a

BCS

The true Sagarin ratings include margin of victory. That final rating is reached by combining two elements, he said. One rating does not include scores — that's the one the BCS uses — and another does. Strength of schedule is a component in both.

Sagarin said the two ratings work together and balance out, so a team stacking up blowouts (presumably against weaker competition) isn't overrated and a team that is constantly squeaking by (presumably against tougher competition) isn't underrated.

For a good example of how the balancing act works, look at this week's Sagarin ratings for Auburn and Boise State.

When scores are taken into account, the Tigers, with several close victories, are the 15th-best team in the country. When the scores are removed, Auburn is No. 1. When the two elements are merged Auburn, comes in sixth.

Boise State is No. 13 without scores and No. 5 when scores are part of the equation. The Broncos true Sagarin rating is seventh.

Boise State plays a weaker schedule in the Western Athletic Conference than Auburn does in the Southeastern Conference. The way the Broncos can distinguish themselves in the computer ratings is by winning big against those softer opponents, which they usually do.

"When you're locked into playing a lower schedule like Boise State is, and you're in a win-loss system (with no scores), you can't escape the balance of your schedule," Sagarin said. "You're automatically pulled down but you can't escape past a certain point, even if you're undefeated."

"They might as well acknowledge before the season starts, 'Hey, it doesn't matter if the following teams go undefeated, they're not going to get in the (championship) game.'"

By the way, Oregon and TCU are the top two teams in the true Sagarin ratings this week.

"We had such a good rhythm early," said Gosar. "They came out in man and we got some really easy baskets out of our man offense. Then they went into that zone and it was like somebody hit the pause button."

Jackson put the Eagles back on play. He scored a bucket to break the tie and assisted on several more as part of a 23-2 run that included two 3-pointers by freshman Jerrold Brooks, a

"He controlled the game," Gosar said of Jackson. "We put the ball in his hands and he just settled us. ... He was big."

Former Cincinnati Reds manager Sparky Anderson, pictured baseball spring training in 1974, died Thursday in Thousand Oaks, Calif. He was 76.

Hall of Fame manager Sparky Anderson dead at 76

By Joe Kay
Associated Press writer

Reds fans were taken aback when Sparky Anderson showed up in Cincinnati for his first day as a big league manager, an unknown taking over baseball's first professional team.

Sparky who?
Really?

By the time he was done, this man with the shock of white hair and schoolboy nickname would produce a mighty list of achievements that featured three World Series titles — including crowns in each league — and a Hall of Fame entry on his resume.

Anderson, who directed the Big Red Machine to back-to-back championships and won another in Detroit, died Thursday from complications of dementia in Thousand Oaks, Calif. He was 76. A day earlier, his family said he'd been placed in hospice care.

Anderson was the first manager to win World Series titles in both leagues and the only manager to lead two franchises in career wins.

"Sparky was, by far, the best manager I ever played for," said former Reds star Pete Rose, the game's career hits leader. "He understood people better than anyone I ever met. His players loved him, he loved his players, and he loved the game of baseball. There isn't another person in baseball like Sparky Anderson. He gave his whole life to the game."

Anderson's teams in Cincinnati — featuring Johnny Bench, Joe Morgan and Rose — won crowns in 1975 and 1976 and rank among the most powerful of all time. Led by Kirk Gibson and Alan Trammell, Anderson won with the Tigers in 1984.

"He was a good guy," former

Tigers pitcher Jack Morris said, choking up over the news. "Baseball will have very few people like Sparky. He was a unique individual. He was a character with a great passion and love for the game."

Anderson never tried to overshadow his teams, giving his stars great leeway while trying to stay in the background. At Anderson's request, there will be no funeral or memorial service.

Always affable, ever talkative and known for a self-deprecating demeanor, Anderson was equally popular among players, fans and media.

"Revered and treasured by his players for his humility, humanity, eternal optimism and knowledge of the game," his Hall of Fame plaque reads.

Baseball Commissioner Bud Selig called Anderson a gentleman and dear friend.

End of MWC rivalry for BCS busters TCU and Utah

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The biggest game of all between BCS-busting rivals TCU and Utah will be their last in the same conference.

Fittingly for the series finale, more than Mountain West supremacy is again on the line. The winner remains in contention for another Bowl Championship Series game and maybe even the national title game.

"This is what we've been working toward, is for people to think this is a big game," TCU coach Gary Patterson said.

A short, intense conference rivalry ends Saturday in the Mountain West's first-ever matchup of Top 10 teams. The third-ranked Horned Frogs (9-0, 5-0 MWC) play at fifth-ranked Utah (8-0, 5-0).

"Obviously, it has national implications," Utah coach Kyle Whittingham said. "We've been in big games before so we are ready to take this on."

Before TCU finally played in a BCS game last season, Utah had already done it twice. The Utes were the original BCS buster six years ago and the first team to do it twice.

Utah is leaving the Mountain West after this season for the new Pac-12, a league with automatic BCS access. For now, the Utes still have to earn their way into one of the five major games.

This is the third consecutive TCU-Utah game that will have a direct impact on the BCS standings.

The AP rankings for TCU and Utah match their spots in the BCS, where Boise State is between them. There remains a chance that any of those three BCS busters could climb into one of the top two spots and play for the championship.

TCU and Utah have no more games scheduled against each other after this weekend's showdown, so it looks like the end of a rivalry that has been so much fun to watch:

- TCU's first-ever Mountain West game was in 2005 against Utah, which the season before was the first team from a non-automatic qualifying conference to play in a BCS game. The Utes arrived in Fort Worth with an 18-game winning streak. TCU, coming off an upset loss to SMU after a season-opening victory at Oklahoma, beat the Utes 23-20 in overtime to start its own 13-game winning streak.

- After that streak was snapped a week earlier by BYU, the Frogs lost again — 20-7 to Utah in 2006.

- Before any games had even been played in 2007, the Utah-TCU game stood out as one to watch but both suffered two early MWC losses. The Utes held on for a 27-20 win.

- Two years ago, the November matchup essentially became a BCS Buster playoff game. Utah entered undefeated and TCU's only loss then was to Oklahoma. Brian Johnson threw a touchdown pass with 48 seconds left for a 13-10 victory, and the Utes went on to a 13-0 season capped by a Sugar Bowl victory over Alabama.

- The Frogs went into last season's game, their biggest at home in 25 years, with memories of tears in the locker room and a silent flight home from their '08 trip to Salt Lake City. TCU scored three touchdowns in a 2½-minute span early in the second quarter and went on to a 55-28 rout as part of its first undefeated regular season since 1938. The Frogs got their first BCS chance in the Fiesta Bowl against Boise State.

"I think people learned two years ago that just because whoever the loser of this ball-game is isn't necessarily a bad football team," Patterson said. "Maybe five, six, seven, eight years ago, it was different than that."

BREEDER'S CUP

Trainer hopes to take Blame if Zenyatta loses

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — After crossing the finish line, Zenyatta knows only one place to go — straight to the winner's circle. She's visited it 19 times in her career. Al Stall Jr. isn't sure she'll get there a 20th time after the Breeders' Cup Classic.

"She is beatable," the trainer of Blame said.

Zenyatta puts her perfect record on the line against the boys as the defending champion in the $5 million race Saturday at Churchill Downs.

Along with the superstar mare and Blame, the 1¼-mile race includes other top Horse of the Year contenders Haynesfield, Lookin At Lucky and Quality Road in the field of 12. Only Zenyatta and Haynesfield have won at the distance.

"There's tremendous talent with a lot of experience," Stall said about the field. "With her in there, it takes it to the moon."

Zenyatta is clearly the sentimental favorite as well as the 8-5 favorite on the morning line, with Blame as the 9-2 second choice.

Blame came on strong in August, chasing down Quality Road to win the Whitney at Saratoga. Since then, Blame was second to Haynesfield in the Jockey Club Gold Cup. Blame will be retired after the race Saturday.

Stall believes the Classic is the strongest field Zenyatta has faced in her career. He points out that Blame is 3 for 4 on the dirt at Churchill, where Zenyatta has never raced.

The Classic goes off under the lights and Blame has won at night on the track.

"We've ticked every box as far as being comfortable in our surroundings," Stall said. "I think we can get first run on her and hopefully hold her off."

One question facing Zenyatta is how she will handle the so-called kickback created by the dirt and sand flying from the hooves of the horses in front of her. She typically drops well behind the field before gearing up for a big closing run under jockey Mike Smith.

Zenyatta gets a bath after her morning practice session for the Breeders' Cup horse race at Churchill Downs Thursday in Louisville, Ky.

"From where she runs, there's not a lot of kickback. By the time she gets into the race, it won't be an issue," her trainer John Shirreffs said. "Actually Zenyatta enjoys the dirt surface. The surface will have no affect on how she runs the race."

Her two victories on dirt came at Oaklawn Park in Arkansas, while her other 17 were on synthetic surfaces in California, where kickback isn't as big a factor.

Smith has no plans to change Zenyatta's late running style, though falling too far behind early could add pressure against such a strong field.

"I certainly don't want her up close," he said. "It's worked 19 times one way. We don't want to change it. You just need to follow who's running well."

Shirreffs doesn't believe Zenyatta needs to win Saturday to secure her place in racing's pantheon of greats.

"She's already made history," he said. "She's already beaten the boys, she's already become the first female to win the Breeders' Cup Classic and that's history in itself."

Bob Baffert sees it differently. The trainer of Preakness winner Lookin At Lucky believes Zenyatta has to repeat in the Classic to win Horse of the Year honors. She lost out to Rachel Alexandra last year.

"She has to win only because he (Shirreffs) sort of stayed in California with her and didn't venture around," Baffert said.

Like Baffert and Todd Pletcher, who oversees Quality Road, Stall is a fan of Zenyatta.

"I'd be happy for racing and I'd be happy for her (if she wins)," he said.

Zenyatta galloped 1½ miles Thursday, her second day on the track since arriving Tuesday.

"You might think she'd be a little flat, but she was full of energy," Shirreffs said. "As the trainer, that's what you look for — the enthusiasm and good energy."

Who's got your back?

My dad told me when I was growing up that over the course of my life I would have many friends. Some friends you meet and lose track of, there are friends you just hang out with, and a few friends you trust with your life - a friend that always has your back. I never thought one of those friends would be the head of a car company. Oh don't get me wrong, Alan Mulally and I don't hang out together, we don't even talk that much, but I know he's got my back because he's got the back of America.

Alan Mulally helped develop Ford's, "One Team, One Plan, One Goal" philosophy. He's serious about honoring the Ford tradition, I mean think about it, Henry Ford wasn't just the first to build a car that most Americans could afford, he literally created the middle class, almost overnight, by instituting the $5 work day. Henry had a lot of backs to cover. One of my favorite quotes of Henry's was, "Make the best quality of goods possible, at the lowest cost possible, paying the highest wages possible." Those are words Mr. Mulally lives by every day and that's why during one of the toughest times in automotive history, Ford stood strong, not taking government money when others did.

I don't think I've ever been quite so proud.

Ford is an American legend, taking care of business, the American way. Ford got back to basics, producing the most reliable cars in the world, cars that can't even be beat by Toyota or Honda. They're a leader in Hybrid technology and environmental friendly vehicles, with innovation, safety and values that the competition just can't touch.

Another one of my dad's favorite quotes by Henry Ford was "When everything seems to be going against you, remember that the airplane takes off against the wind, not with it, the only way you get better is to challenge the norm." Well Henry, there are those of us who still like to fly. When the norm nowadays is to take the easy way out, Alan Mulally and Ford chose to take the high road, with cars that have taken America through more than one tough time. I think my dad would have liked Alan Mulally because it's hard to find a friend that has your back, it's even harder to find one whose willing to do it for an entire nation.

LUXURY IS BACK

2011 TOYOTA AVALON SEDAN

RoadWorthy!
By Ken Chester, Jr.
Motor News Media Corp.

Introduced at the 2010 Chicago Auto Show, Toyota took the wraps off of the boldly redesigned 2011 Avalon sedan. Evoking a time when travel was sophisticated, elegant and comfortable, the new Avalon possesses a distinctive new exterior style while offering a restyled interior rich with premium touch points and practical new technologies. Restyled at Calt Design Research in Newport Beach, Calif. with development support from the Toyota Technical Center (TTC) in Ann Arbor, Mich., the new Avalon has dynamic and expressive lines, and an infusion of comfort, safety and technology advancements that enrich the driving experience. Upgraded equipment and technology features, such as a touch-screen navigation system with real-time traffic, and Bluetooth® hands-free phone capability with music streaming to the audio system are among the improvements that enhance the Toyota flagship's excellent blend of spaciousness, comfort and technology. Available in base and Limited trim levels, power for the front-wheel drive Avalon is generated by a 3.5L V6 engine. The engine is equipped with the latest dual VVT-i electronic valve-control mechanism that provides a broader powerband, while requiring less fuel and generating fewer emissions. It is mated to a multi-mode six-speed automatic transmission. A roadworthy mix of fine ride quality and accurate driving control is delivered by the Avalon's MacPherson strut suspension, which uses coil springs at all four corners. Rack-and-pinion steering combines with front-wheel-drive and optimized steering gear for a natural handling feel. For 2011, a new interior has been designed with a contemporary style. The new interior remains generously spacious and elegant, fitted with comfortable seating and thoughtfully integrated amenities. Coordinated colors and rich wood-grain materials were carefully chosen to convey an optimistic attitude and modern essence. A new instrument panel incorporates visually attractive and highly readable Optitron gauges that use graduated white illumination with white pointers. They are set inside smoked lenses and deep chrome rings that add depth and a sense of luxury. The steering wheel includes controls for Bluetooth hands-free phones, the audio system, climate system, and the information center. Standard leather-trimmed front seats and seatbacks on the Limited are fitted with ventilation systems and an enlarged perforative area to help keep them cool. Interior seats feature thicker stitching, which provides an elegant accent to the interior design. Active front headrests are also standard. The rear seating area is configured to seat three passengers comfortably, with ample legroom and reclining rear seats, unique in the segment. The rear headrests have also been reshaped and enlarged for better support, and a convenient flip-down center armrest provides storage when the middle seat is not in use.

Motor News Media Corporation Photos

DEAR ABBY:
Approximately every three hours, a home fire death occurs somewhere in the U.S. These fatalities occur because there wasn't a functioning smoke detector in the house.

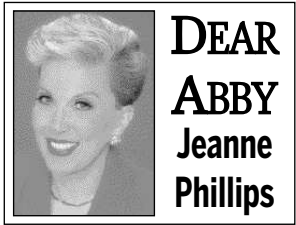

According to the National Fire Protection Association, 96 percent of American homes have at least one smoke alarm. However, an estimated 19 percent of them do not work, primarily because of missing or dead batteries.

Please join me this year in urging your readers when they set their clocks back to standard time this Sunday to use the extra hour they gain to change and test the batteries in their smoke alarms and carbon monoxide detectors. It only takes a moment, and they offer the best defense a family has against the devastating effects of a home fire.

No one should be hurt or potentially lose a life for want of a working smoke alarm, yet death strikes nearly 3,000 people every year in home fires. A working smoke alarm will provide individuals and families precious extra seconds to get out safely.

Thank you for printing this, Abby. Together, we can make a difference and, hopefully, save a life.

— JACK PAROW
PRESIDENT
INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF
FIRE CHIEFS

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR MR. PAROW: I hope my readers will take to heart your suggestion. This is a ritual I perform when I set my clocks back every year. And readers, please be aware that smoke alarms should be replaced every 10 years and there should be a mix of both ionization and photoelectric smoke alarms in your home so that you and your loved ones will be alerted to all types of home fires. This was news to me, and I hope you will mention it to your friends and loved ones!

DEAR ABBY: I have been unhappy for more than a year. People tell me my teens should be a happy time in my life, but they aren't. I have a pretty good life with no major problems. But because it's not perfect, I tend to take little things and agonize over them. My emotions are affecting my relationships with other people, my self-esteem and, most of all, my mind.

After doing some research and a lot of thinking, I know I need to see a therapist, but my problem is my parents. At first, I was terrified to tell them. But I finally told my mom. I'm still afraid to tell my dad.

My mother refuses to deal with it. When I ask her to find a therapist, she either won't talk about it, hoping I will forget about it, or she makes an excuse or makes it sound like I don't need one.

Abby, I'm only 15; I have no power. How can I get my parents to understand that I need a therapist and they should help me get some help?

— ALWAYS SAD IN ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

DEAR ALWAYS SAD: You appear to be a bright young lady who is very much in touch with your emotions. When someone is consistently depressed for more than a few weeks, it's a sign that professional help may be needed. There may be many reasons for your mother's reluctance to accept this — from concern about the cost to fear that seeing a therapist might cause you to be labeled as having emotional problems.

However, because your sadness is persistent, the person who should decide if you need therapy (or medication) should be a licensed mental health professional. Because you can't get your mother to take you seriously, discuss what has been going on with a counselor at school.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Economy is going without something you do want in case you should, some day, want something you probably won't want."
— Anthony Hope

Put yourself in the East seat when West leads a low spade against three no-trump.

The natural inclination is to play your spade king (hoping it wins), drive out North's third-round spade winner, then try to keep declarer from enjoying the hearts in dummy.

This is a good idea as far as it goes, but what if South has the spade ace and partner has led from five to the jack or 10? (In both cases, not only would playing the spade king give South a third natural spade trick, but it would also give him a possible late entry to dummy with the spade queen.)

On the sight of dummy, East should focus his attention on trying to kill the heart suit by holding up his heart king as long as he can and by saving his spade king over the queen to prevent the latter from being an entry.

Best defense is to duck the first spade. South will win in hand and lead a heart to dummy as West gives count in hearts by following low. East ducks offhandedly, and South returns to hand with a club to play a second heart to the queen and king.

Now East exits with the club jack, and when West pitches the spade two, it clarifies the layout and the count in that suit. East can duck his partner's next spade play, and the defenders will be in complete control.

ANSWER: Your partner has suggested 22-24, and you have shown five hearts. What next? The simple answer is that your playing strength in hearts is almost good enough to offer partner a choice of slams, which you could do by bidding five no-trump (meaning "pick a slam"). If you feel slightly more cautious, you might settle for a jump to four no-trump, suggesting a little extra but not quite enough to drive to slam.

IF NOVEMBER 5 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Group activities might take up extra time between now and the new year. This is an excellent time to join social organizations, as you can be friendly without being overly personal. Join a book club or debating team. February is a poor time for financial or business decisions. March may bring you a choice between being honest and doing something underhanded. It is a time to keep your head down and not take on any extra obligations, while being sure to attend scrupulously to existing ones. April is a much better time for financial affairs and could be an auspicious time to begin a new business plan or project.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine
Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Live the purpose-driven life. The money you have earned from your labors should be put to good use and not frittered away. Let sound inner principles guide you to make wise decisions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): This weekend's new moon brings relationships into sharp focus. Recent financial surprises, mix-ups or misunderstandings could provide much food for thought. Develop a different opinion of a situation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Money can't buy happiness, but it is helpful to have on hand when you want the best table at the restaurant. The fastest way to someone's head might be through pleasing the stomach this weekend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Reassess important situations. Today's new moon might illuminate ways in which you can revolutionize finances. Value the opinion of a devoted person who has your best interests at heart.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Love play is a possibility. You might meet a business contact who can become a lifelong ally or may be thrown in contact with a potential new hookup that has more than casual meetings in mind.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Talk your way to the top. You have not only the gift of gab, but also the ability to think things through without missing all of the possibilities. Make new contacts by e-mail, phone or carrier pigeon.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Sweets to the sweet. Even though you can't have your cake and eat it, too, you can dip your finger into the bowl and lick the icing. Prepare for a highly romantic evening with a very special someone.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): This new moon accentuates your ability to handle relationships wisely. The key areas of dispute of the past month may come full circle. You realize that important improvements have occurred.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friendship is not lasting love. Fleeting relationships might be fun while they last, but a constant stream of conversation is not the same as emotional attachment. Uncertain results are possible.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Every tunnel eventually comes to the light. Amorous associations might color your consciousness throughout the weekend. You might be observed to have a head for business and a body made for love.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Hear the call of the wild and whimsical. You can be inspired to be entertaining and unique ideas can be stirred up. Significant relationships might need some tender loving care; let intuition guide you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Play hard to get when you play hard. Get a new perspective by talking to unusual people in the immediate environment but don't put your heart on the line. Your genuine interest in others fosters popularity.

NOTICE OF REGULAR MEETING AND PUBLIC HEARING BY THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF JEROME TO CONSIDER THE AMENDED AND RESTATED JEROME COUNTY CROSSROADS URBAN RENEWAL PROJECT URBAN RENEWAL PLAN OF THE JEROME COUNTY URBAN RENEWAL AGENCY OF THE COUNTY OF JEROME

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the County Commissioners of the County of Jerome will hold during its regular meeting, a public hearing in County Commissioner Chambers, 300 N. Lincoln, Room 300, Jerome, Idaho, 83338 on December 6, 2010, at 9:30 a.m., to consider the Amended and Restated Jerome County Crossroads Urban Renewal Project Urban Renewal Plan ("Plan"), of the Jerome County Urban Renewal Agency. The boundaries of the Plan Area are hereinafter described. The boundaries include both urban renewal and revenue allocation areas. The Plan proposes that the Jerome County Urban Renewal Agency (the "Agency") undertake urban renewal projects pursuant to the Idaho Urban Renewal Law of 1965, as amended. The Plan proposes to create an urban renewal area commonly referred to as the Amended and Restated Jerome County Crossroads Urban Renewal Project Area. The Plan being considered for adoption contains a revenue allocation financing provision pursuant to the Local Economic Development Act, Chapter 29, Title 50, Idaho Code, that will cause property taxes resulting from any increase in equalized assessed valuation in excess of the equalized assessed valuation as shown on the original base assessment roll, as of January 2008, and the additional area base assessment roll, as of January 2010, to be allocated to the Agency for urban renewal purposes, subject to certain exceptions as allowed by Idaho Code, Section 50-2908. The boundaries of the revenue allocation area are co-terminus with the urban renewal area. The Agency has adopted and recommended approval of the Plan. The County Commissioners will also be considering a final reading of an Ordinance to adopt the Plan.

The general scope and objectives of the Plan are:

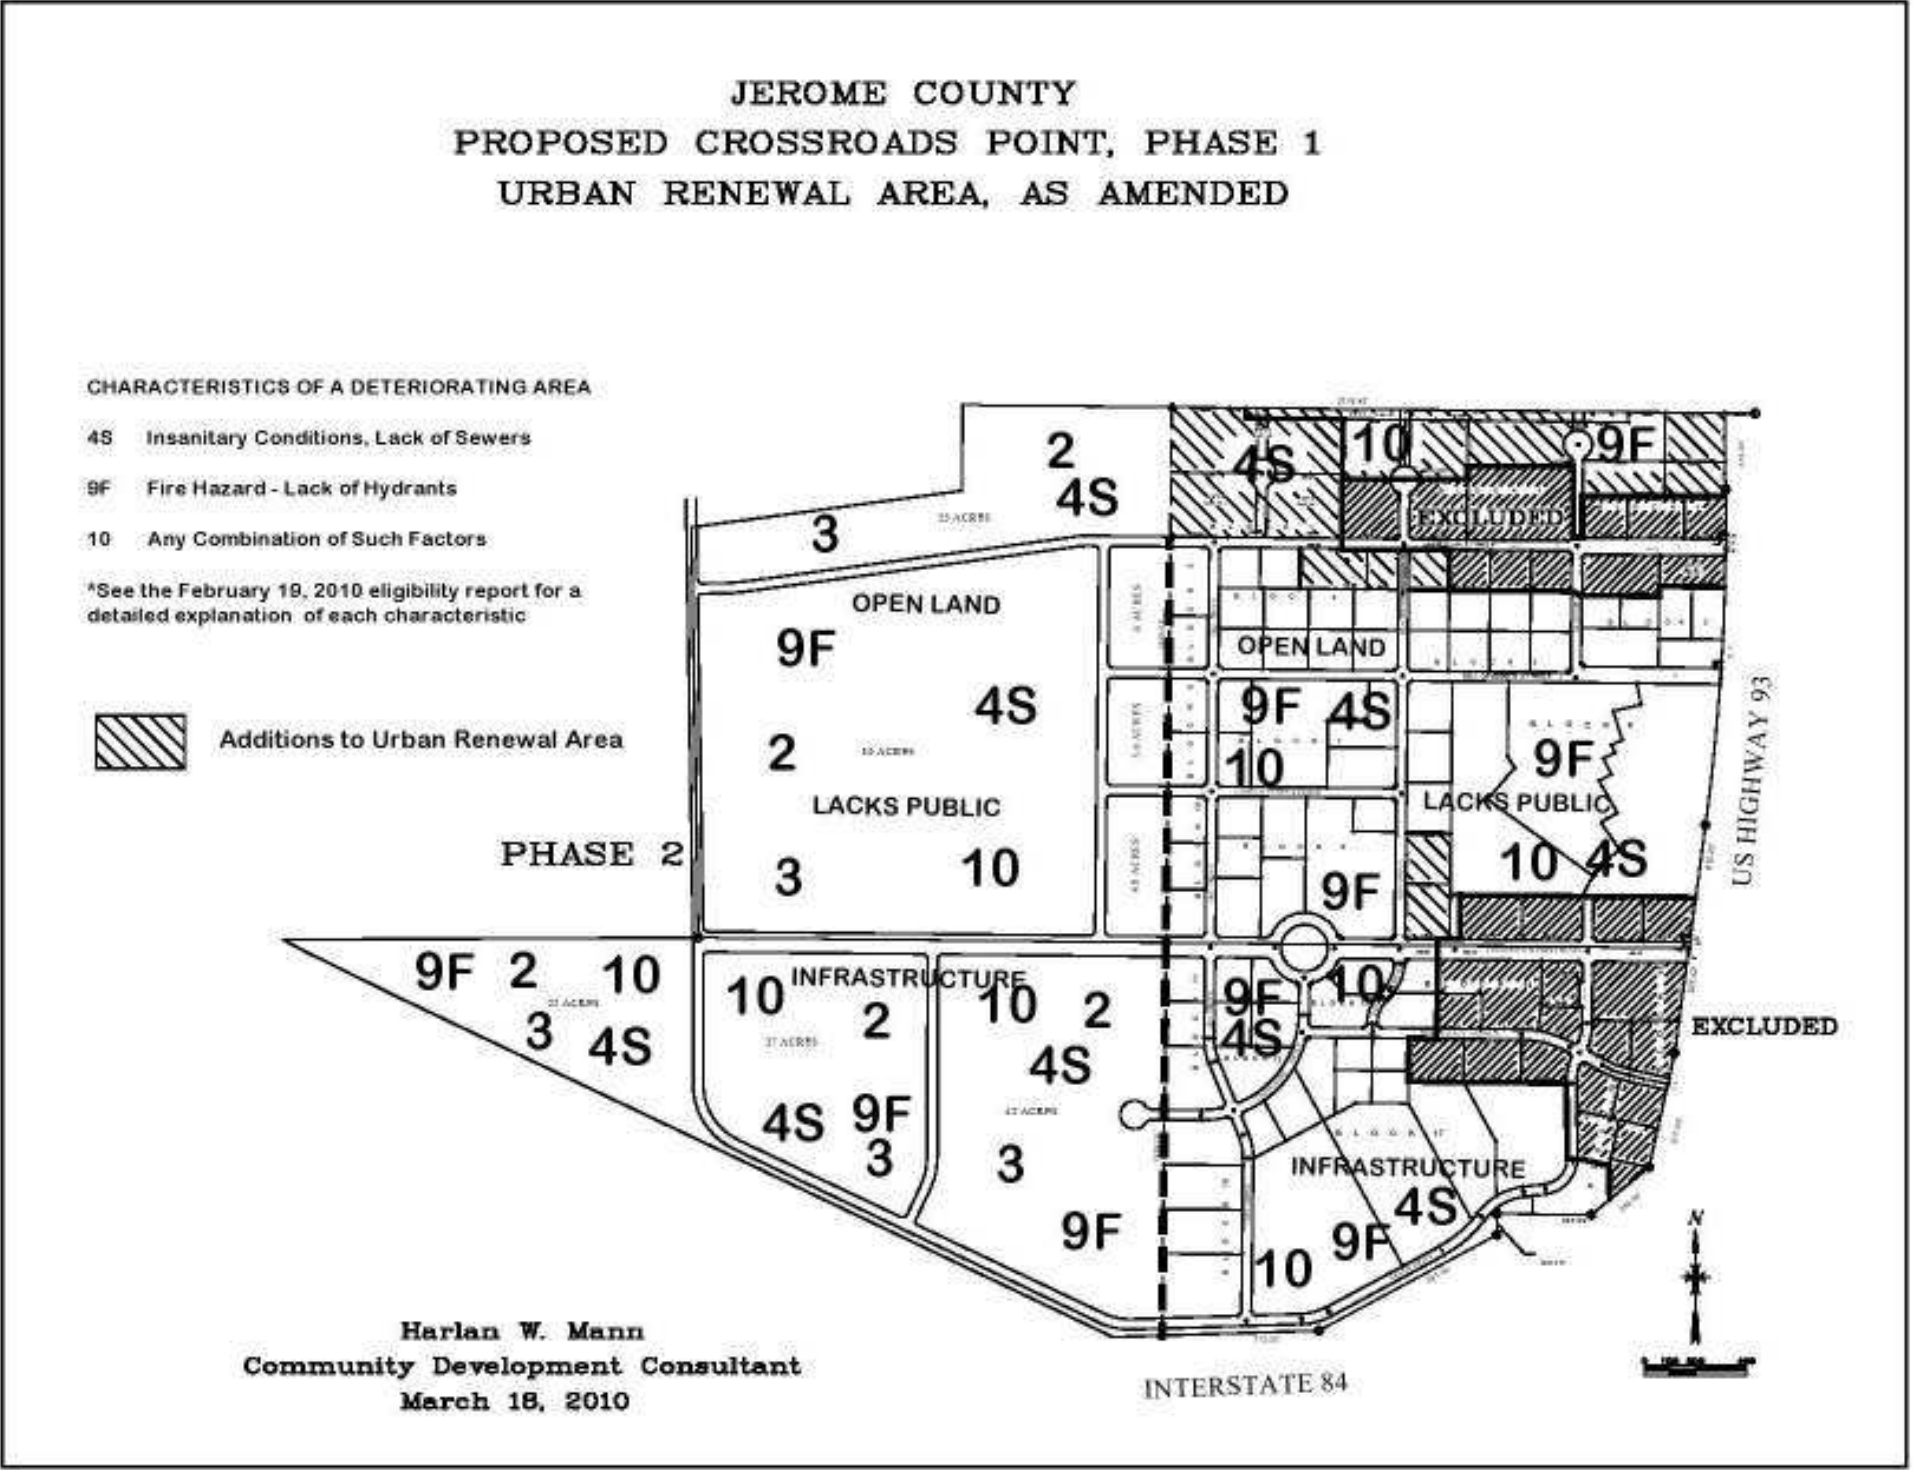

1. The elimination of environmental deficiencies in the Project Area, including, among others, substandard or lack of streets and deteriorated and inadequate public improvements including certain streets, improvements, and extensions to connect major traffic corridors; improvements to public utilities including water and sewer improvements, fire protection systems, railroad crossings; other public improvements; removal, burying, or relocation of overhead utilities; and improvement of irrigation and drainage ditches and laterals;
2. The assembly of land into parcels suitable for modern, integrated development with improved pedestrian and vehicular circulation in the Project Area;
3. The replanning, redesign, and development of undeveloped or underdeveloped areas which are stagnant or improperly utilized because of excessive rock, limited traffic access, underserved utilities, and other site conditions;
4. The strengthening of the economic base of the Project Area and the community by the installation of needed site improvements to stimulate new private development providing, employment, and economic growth;
5. The provision of adequate land for street rights-of-way;
6. The construction and improvement of a major street corridor to allow traffic flows to move through the development along with the accompanying utility connections, through the Project Area;
7. The provision of public service utilities such as water system improvements, main sewer system improvements (which may be located outside the Project Area), and certain pretreatment improvements within the Project Area;
8. The establishment and implementation of performance criteria to assure high site design standards and environmental quality and other design elements which provide unity and integrity to the entire Project, including commitment of funds for planning studies, achieving high standards of development, and leveraging such development to achieve public objectives and efficient use of scarce resources;
9. The strengthening of the tax base by encouraging private development, thus increasing the assessed valuation of properties within the Revenue Allocation Area and the Project Area as a whole and benefiting the various taxing districts in which the urban renewal area is located; and
10. The funding of necessary public infrastructure to accommodate both public and private development.

Any such land uses as described in the Plan will be in conformance with zoning for the County of Jerome and the Comprehensive Land Use Plan as adopted by the County Commissioners. Land made available will be developed by private enterprises or public agencies as authorized by law. The Plan identifies various public and private improvements which may be made within the Urban Renewal Area.

The Urban Renewal Project Area and Revenue Allocation Area herein referred to is located generally as follows:

An area consisting of approximately 429.68 acres at the northwest quadrant of Interstate Highway 84 and United States Highway 93.

The project area is also depicted in the map below.

Copies of the proposed Plan are on file for public inspection and copying. Copies of the proposed Plan are on file for public inspection and copying for the cost of duplication at the office of the County Clerk, Jerome County, 300 N. Lincoln, Room 301, Jerome, Idaho, 83338, between the hours of 8:30 o'clock a.m. and 4:30 o'clock p.m., Monday through Friday, exclusive of holidays. The hearing will be held in a handicapped accessible facility. All information presented in the hearing shall also be available upon advance request in a form usable by persons with hearing or visual impairments, individuals with other disabilities may receive assistance by contacting the County 24 hours prior to the hearing.
