"That is fewer than we've had in other years by this point," Trappen said. "Yesterday was really slow."

That was disheartening news considering the snow in the forecast for this weekend.

"Last year the economy was a little worse but we got a surprising amount of turkeys," said Debbie Dunlap, the radio DJ who has worked marathon sessions during the drive for four years. "But maybe snow will get people in the Christmas spirit."

A couple drove through the lot and dropped off a check instead of a turkey. Three cash donations came in during the morning. Trappen said the money is just as helpful; she can sometimes get a better deal using the money to buy turkeys because of her organization's tax-exempt status.

Protest could disrupt travel

Pilots to be exempt from some checks

CHICAGO (AP) - As if air travel over the Thanksgiving holiday isn't tough enough, it could be even worse this year: Airports might see even more disruptions because of a loosely organized Internet boycott of full-body

Even if only a small percentage of passengers participate, experts say it could mean longer lines, bigger delays and hotter tempers.

The protest called National Opt-Out Day is scheduled for Wednesday to coincide with the busiest travel day of the year.

Participants are being urged to decline the scans, which produce a virtually naked image. Instead of the scans, which take as little as 10 seconds. they would have to undergo a full pat-down, which takes much longer. That could cause a cascade of delays at dozens of major airports.

Not all airports have the machines. And not all travelers are selected for scans.

Passengers who refuse a body scan can be forced to undergo a fingertip examination over clothed genital areas and breasts by inspectors of the same sex as the traveler.

Meanwhile, the government has cut a break for one very influential group of travelers - airline pilots.

The Transportation Security Administration agreed Friday to let uniformed pilots skip the body scans and aggressive pat-downs at the heart of a national uproar. The pilots must pass through a metal detector at airport checkpoints and present photo IDs that prove their identity.

The victory for pilots followed a lengthy lobbying campaign by their union leaders that reached a fever pitch in the past two weeks. Their bid was boosted by hero pilot Chesley Sullenberger, who said pilots should be treated as "trusted partners" in the fight against terrorism.

But just days before the hectic Thanksgiving holiday travel period, TSA chief John Pistole offered little hope of a similar reprieve for regular passengers, who've also been vocal in opposing the new

About 350 body scanners have been installed in more than 60 airports this year, following last year's bombing attempt on a U.S.

"You know that show, 'Sweet 16?' Well, that is such a dumb show," Sorenson said, brushing her blonde hair over her shoulder. "There are people that wake up hungry and 3-year-olds that go without eating all day."

Of course, Sorenson is still going to have a party a winter ball, in fact. Around 65 invitations sent out and Sorenson's mother expects about 100 people to attend today. The only catch is that everyone must bring a donation for Toys for Tots, a jacket for Coats for Kids or $5 for the Idaho Foodbank.

"Did you know you can feed a person for a $1 a day?" Sorenson asked.

The Canyon Ridge High School sophomore has always been a "bleeding heart," according to her mother, Chastity Sklavos, who said the party and donations were Sorenson's ideas.

Planning this party has encouraged Sorenson to look into other volunteer work. She wants to run her own business one day and thinks volunteering at a soup kitchen would be something she'd enjoy. Sklavos and Sorenson also do some modeling on the side, but Sorenson said she doesn't take it very seriously.

"It's more for fun and to feel good about yourself. I wouldn't let it get in the way of college though," she said, adding that she plays softball and likes to golf.

Sorenson bought a dress for the ball that she plans to use for a future prom, and said most of the feedback from her friends concerning the ball has been posi-

Rothweiler ideal choice for Twin Falls city manager

CHEERS: To the Twin Falls City Council, for making the right decision about a successor for retiring City Manager Tom Courtney.

Travis Rothwelier, 39, assistant city manager since 2008, brings an impressive skill-set to the job: He's already been an Idaho city administrator — at Jerome from 2000-2008 and worked extensively on the issues that matter most to Twin Falls: water, infrastructure, fiscal planning, solid waste and government transparency.

He works well with the City Council and the transition from Courtney's 34-year administration should be seamless.

Under the council-manager system of government, Rothweiler will be the chief operating officer for what's essentially a $45 million business. Putting those responsibilities in the right hands is critical, and the city has accomplished that.

JEERS: To three-quarters of Idaho congressional delegation for waiting to swear off earmarks until Tea Party-influenced candidates forced the issue in the Senate and House Republican causes.

Earlier this week, the GOP conferences of both houses approved resolutions calling for a two-year moratorium on earmarks. Earmarks are federal funding targeted a specific projects, usually with the congressional sponsor's district.

In the past two years, Sen. Jim Risch has co-sponsored 77 earmarks totaling $103.8 million, according to Taxpayers for Common Sense. Sen. Mike Crapo has sponsored nine on his own, and co-sponsored another 235, bringing his earmark total up to $278.2 million.

Rep. Mike Simpson was the sole sponsor for 27 earmarks totaling $15.5 million. He also co-sponsored an additional 132 earmarks totaling $144.5 mil-

Idaho's other congressman, outgoing Democratic Rep. Walt Minnick, opposes earmarks.

"Earmarks, while accounting for a very small percentage of discretionary spending, have come to symbolize the waste and overspending that is happening in Congress," Crapo said in a statement.

Indeed they have. Too bad Crapo, Risch and Simpson didn't get that message sooner.

CHEERS: To retiring Twin Falls Police Chief Jim Munn, for five strong years as the city's top law enforcement officer.

The city's crime rate has declined 24 percent on Munn's watch, according to the Idaho State Police, and its arrest rate has increased by 18 percent. The department's clearance rate — the number of crimes solved – rose from 28 percent in 2005 to 48 percent last year. He's also made the police more responsive to the community and reduced the high turnover that once plagued the

There's still a lot of work to do: Twin Falls has the seventhhighest crime rate in the state and the second-highest among Idaho's major cities. But Munn has built a solid foundation for his successor.

LETTERS OF THANKS

Kiwanis salutes all who contributed to Oktoberfeast success

The Twin Falls Kiwanis Club is thankful to many for the success of the Oktoberfeast event -to the members who work very hard and the high school Key clubs, we recognize and salute numerous efforts. To our corporate and business sponsors, we are most grateful. Our event would not be well attended, nor make money, without presales of tickets and monetary support of the many businesses in Twin Falls and surrounding areas who make sure we are successful before we open our doors the afternoon of our event.

Major sponsors: First Federal Savings Bank, Magic Valley Bank, Independent Meat/Falls Brand, Lytle Signs, Blip Printers and Swensens Markets.

Corporate sponsors saw to it that their employees came and enjoyed dinner and the fine entertainment (The Alpenspeilers Band, a great group). They are: Amalgamated Sugar, AmeriPride Linen and Apparel, Ameriprise Financial, Ataraxis Accounting Services, Banner Bank, Dr. Harry and Jan Brumbach, Canyon Floral, Con-Agra/Lamb Weston, Cooper Norman CPAs, D.L. Evans Bank, Edward Jones (Dean Seibel), Hair and Nails Etc. (Julie Durbin), HCM Holmstead, KTFT, Lance LeBaron Homes, Land Title and Escrow, Magic Valley Foot and Ankle (Craig Holman), Magic Valley Growers, Mark A. Plant, Marvin D. Chamberlin, Microchips Etc., Premier Insurance, Reeder Flying Service, Reynolds Funeral Chapel, S&G Produce, Save-Mor Drug, Snake River Pool and Spa, Stephen, Kvanvig, Stone and Trainer, Stukenholtz Laboratory. Summit Restoration, Sweet Insurance, Terry's Heating and Air Conditioning, Times-News, Titlefact, United Dairymen of Idaho, Watkins Distributing, Westphal and Sons, White Mortuary, Wills Toyota.

Finally, to all of you who came out to have dinner and a good time, know that you are supporting a community "give-back" of all the profits throughout the year. Thanks to all.

East End Providers grateful for support, large and small

The East End Providers would like to thank the community for their outpouring of support. As a nonprofit run by volunteers, we appreciate every donation, from the can of food donated by a school child to the individual monetary contributions.

Thank you to the Times-News and KMVT for their recent coverage of East End Providers. In all of the publicity, one very important group was not given the credit they deserve. The congregation of the Kimberly Christian Church is indispensible. They have generously provided two houses for our use. The "Christmas House" and the "Little House" are where the majority of our donations are stored and are the heart of our operations during the holiday season. Thank you!

Bonnie Seamons of Filer was the winner of the 1929 Mercedes Benz Roadster replica we raffled earlier this month. The East End Providers raised $6,120 toward our building fund. In the process, we had numerous people contact us offering their help, including: architects, contractors, engineers, and everyday people who said they knew how to use a hammer or paint brush and wanted to help!

Finally, thank you to everybody associated with the Magic Valley Toy Run. They donated more than 100 new toys and raised $5631. This money will be used to buy children new clothing and toys for Christmas and provide families with food and needed toiletries. We particularly want to thank Lori and Matt Carter, Shawn Whiteside, Nancy Callen, Jeanne Shephard, Don Corle, Snake River Bros., the Shuffle Inn and Marv at the Pioneer Club.

It is impossible to thank each and every individual. So if you have contributed in any way to the East End Providers, please know that we are grateful and appreciate your help. Thank you and God bless!

Not too late to repeal 'don't ask, don't tell'

epeal of the military's ban on gays serving openly is not quite dead.

Sen. Harry Reid said in a Capitol Hill meeting Wednesday that the Senate would hold a vote next month on whether to end the "don't ask, don't tell" policy. It has been widely assumed that the White House and Democrats would punt on holding a vote on "don't ask, don't tell" during the lame-duck congressional session because there aren't 60 votes in the Senate to overcome a Republican filibuster. Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Carl Levin has talked about separating the "don't ask" repeal from the defense authorization bill for precisely this reason.

But plugged-in staffers actively involved in counting votes tell me it's premature to reach this conclusion — and that the defense spending legislation could still get 60 votes in the Senate. These staffers say they've received private indications from a handful of moderate GOP senators that they could vote for cloture on defense legislation that includes repeal if Democratic leaders agree to hold a sustained floor debate on the bill. This tosses the ball back into the court of Reid and the White House and puts the onus on Reid to agree to a two-week Senate debate on "don't ask," including allowing amendments. Reid had tried to limit amendments this year, which led GOP moderates to balk. Until Wednesday it was thought that Democratic leaders might not want to allow this debate because time is short and the debate could prolong the session. But this is the only real way to get repeal done.

The Republican senators in play, according to these staffers, are Richard Lugar, George Voinovich, Olympia Snowe and Susan Collins. A spokesman for Lugar, Mark Helmke, told me that Lugar would vote for cloture if Reid staged "ordered debate on a number of issues in the bill."

Helmke told me early Wednesday that he was skeptical, however, that Reid would do this. "I would be surprised if the majority leader could achieve that in the time we have left," he said.

Said Kevin Kelley, a spokesman for Collins, who supports repeal but who has clashed with Democrats over procedure in the past: "She would support cloture if the majority leader allows a full and open debate."

A spokesman for Snowe denied that any discussions are underway, and a spokesman for Voinovich didn't reply to an e-mail.

Reid's pledge to bring "don't ask" to the floor is good. But the question remains whether he'll see this through to a vote and a debate. Sens. Joe Lieberman, Mark Udall, Kirsten Gillibrand and others held a news conference this week urging the Democratic leadership to press on. It is no small thing that these senators are urging their party leadership to do this.

Sure, there is reason for enormous skepticism that "don't ask" will be repealed. The Democratic leadership may balk at holding a protracted floor showdown before Congress recesses, and GOP moderates may throw up yet more procedural objections and yank the football away yet again. But repeal could still stand a chance if - and only if — the Democratic leadership tries to make it happen.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Why the stimulus didn't accomplish more any of the psychologists, artists and moral philosophers I know are liberal, so it seems strange that American liberalism should adopt an economic philosophy that excludes psychology, emotion and morality.

Yet that is what has happened. The economic approach embraced by the most prominent liberals over the past few years is mostly mechanical. The economy is treated like a big machine; the people in it like rational, utility maximizing cogs. The performance of the economic machine can be predicted with quantitative macroeconomic models.

These models can be used to make highly specific projections. If the government borrows $1 and then spends it, it will produce $1.50 worth of economic activity. If the government spends $800 billion on a stimulus package, that will produce 3.5 million in new jobs.

Everything is science. Conservatives, who are usually stereotyped as narrow-eyed business-school types, have gone all Oprahesque in trying to argue against these liberals. If the government borrows trillions of dollars, this will increase public anxiety and uncertainty, the conservatives worry. The liberal technicians brush aside this soft-headed mush. These psychological concerns are mythological, they say. That's gaseous blathering from those who lack quantitative rigor.

Other people get moralistic. This country is already too profligate, they cry. It already shops too much and borrows too much. How can we solve our problems by borrowing and spending more? The liberal technicians brush this away, too. Economics is a rational activity detached from morality. Hardheaded policy makers have to have the courage to flout conventional morality — to borrow even when the country is sick of borrowing.

The liberal technicians have an impressive certainty about them. They have amputated those things that can't be contained in models, like emotional contagions, cultural particularities and webs of relationships. As a result, everything is explainable and predictable. They can stand on the platform of science and dismiss the poor souls down below.

Yet over the past 21 months, it has been harder to groove to their certainty. To start with, the economy has not responded as the modelers projected, either in the months after the stimulus was passed or this summer, when it was supposed to be producing hundreds of thousands of jobs. It has become harder to define how much good the stimulus package is doing. An $800 billion measure must leave a large footprint, but it is hard to find in a $70 trillion global economy.

Moreover, it has been harder to accept that psychological factors like uncertainty and anxiety really are a mirage. The first time a business leader tells you she is holding off on investing because she is scared about the future, you dismiss it as anecdote. But over the past few years, I've had hundreds of such conversations.

It's been harder to dismiss morality as a phantom concern, too. Maybe in a nation of robots the government can run a policy that offends the morality of the citizenry, but not in a nation of human beings, as the recent elections showed.

Nor has the world come to look simpler and easier to manipulate since the stimulus passed. It now looks more complicated. It's one thing to hatch an ideal policy in an academic lab, but in the real world, context is everything.

Ethan Ilzetzki of the London School of Economics and Enrique G. Mendoza and Carlos A. Vegh of the University of Maryland examined stimulus efforts in 44 countries. In a recent National Bureau of Economic Research paper, they argued that fiscal stimulus can be quite effective in low-debt countries with fixed exchange rates and closed economies.

Stimulus measures are generally not as effective, on the other hand, in countries like the U.S. with high debt and floating exchange rates. The authors of the paper pointed to a series of specific circumstances that complicate, to say the least, the effectiveness of increasing public spending: How much stimulus money ends up flowing abroad? What is the relationship between fiscal policy and monetary policy? How do investors respond to fear of future interest rate increases?

One could go on. It's become harder to have confidence that legislators can successfully enact the brilliant policies that liberal technicians come up with. Far from entering the age of macroeconomic mastery and social science triumph, we seem to be entering an age in which statecraft is, once again, an art, not a science. When you look around the world at the countries that have come through the recession best, it's not the countries with the brilliant and aggressive stimulus models. It's the ones like Germany that had the best economic fundamentals beforehand.

It all makes one doubt the wizardry of the economic surgeons and appreciate the old wisdom of common sense: simple regulations, low debt, high savings, hard work, few distortions. You don't have to be a genius to come up with an economic policy like that.

The mellowing of a GOP firebrand his is a story with a provisional happy ending about how someone can grow when granted real power. I'm referring to Rep. Darrell Issa, the 57-year-old California Republican poised to become chairman of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform.

You might not know his face, but it's ready for primetime: chiseled like John Hamm's, with hair colored and sprayed like Bob Dole's. If you've owned a Viper car alarm, you might recognize his voice. The deep bass intoning "Please step away from the car" is Issa's own, from his days heading up the company.

After being charged twice with auto theft in his misspent youth — he wasn't convicted, though he did plead guilty to a separate misdemeanor gun charge -Issa channeled his interest in autos into protecting them. The sale of his caralarm company. Directed Electronics, brought him an estimated $250 million.

Like a cheap alarm, Issa sounds off at the slightest provocation. At a hearing in 2008, he said New Yorkers should stop hogging federal health benefits for the Sept. 11 terror attacks, which he summarized as just "a fire that had no dirty bomb in Savoring the prospect of his elevation to chairman of the committee with broad authority to investigate all manner of government activity, Issa told Rush Limbaugh just before the midterm elections that "there will be a certain degree of gridlock" as Obama "adjusts to the fact that he has been one of the most corrupt presidents in modern times." After the elections assured Republicans a majority in the next Congress, Issa vowed to hold "seven hearings a week, times 40 weeks."

His model seems to be Dan Burton, the Indiana Republican who chaired the committee in the 1990s and buried Bill Clinton's White House in subpoenas, going so far as to shoot a watermelon in his own backyard in an effort to demonstrate that Vince Foster, a deputy White House counsel who died of a gunshot wound, didn't commit suicide.

Issa's bill of particulars include the possibility that the Obama White House improperly dangled enticements before Democratic Rep. Joe Sestak to try to keep him from challenging Arlen Specter in Pennsylvania's Senate primary. A White House report on the matter said Sestak had been approached about serving in unpaid executive-branch advisory roles, and no rules were broken. Whatever: In Issa's world, guilt was established long ago. In May, his campaign issued an e-mail with the subject line, "The Sestak Affair – Obama's Watergate?" It said a proper probe would yield three felony charges of bribery and corruption.

His discerning eye also saw the image of Obama's 2008 campaign logo in the signs at construction projects announcing federal stimulus dollars at work.

But a funny thing happened on his way to the gavel. While not admitting he's wrong, he's shedding the cloak of Torquemada.

He's cooled on investigating the global-warming controversy known as Climategate – alas, not because multiple probes concluded British scientists did not manipulate data, but because other committees with expertise could do it better. On the stimulus, he'll focus on wasted money, not the signage. And Issa seems to have lost his passion for Sestakgate after learning that inducing candidates to drop out is a political tool invented well before Obama. As Kurt Bardella, Issa's spokesman on the oversight committee, told Roll Call: "This goes back to everyone since Andrew Jackson. If you're going to go down that road, you have to go back to every administration."

Surely Issa will have to call some hearings to satisfy the base, and pity the people called to that hot seat. But his spokesman, Frederick Hill, says a schedule of hearings is yet to be drawn up, and what's been said until now is "taken out of context" and "in the past."

A lame-duck game of chicken

ashington began last week to come to grips with the new order of things, a regime in which Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell holds as much sway as the president of the United States.

With the additional leverage that six more Republican senators and a new Republican majority in the House has given him, McConnell is challenging President Obama's agenda for the lame-duck session of Congress and signaling that he is prepared to keep up the fight right into the 2012 election.

Whether it is tax rates, or nuclear arms, Republicans are being assertive about their views and challenging Democrats to step up to the fight. Not one sign has appeared so far of any willingness to compromise.

On the face of it, Democrats hold the high ground rhetorically. When it comes to taxes, Obama is calling for extending the Bush cuts for every family making below $250,000 a year, which he says will take care of 98 percent of the population. Only Republicans are holding out for the millionaires to be included. But if McConnell and his partners are embarrassed by their roles, they certainly don't show it. Instead, they are playing chicken with the White House, in effect daring Obama to let rates rise for everyone on Jan. 1, whatever the risk to the fragile economic recovery. The international counterpart of this fight is the debate over ratification of the New START treaty with Russia on control of nuclear weapons. A central goal of American foreign policy under both Republican and Democratic administrations has been securing our ability to monitor and limit Russian

David Broder

Intrusive examination of Russian facilities ended with the expiration last December of the START treaty negotiated by President George W. Bush. A follow-on agreement, missile development.

reducing the number of missiles on both sides and guaranteeing the inspections will continue, was negotiated and signed by Obama and the Russians earlier this year.

Obama has urged publicly and privately that it be ratified in the lame-duck session, rather than extend the unmonitored period into some point next year, when the new Senate may or may not get around to it.

At a White House event earlier this month, his call for action was endorsed by former secretaries of state Henry Kissinger and James A. Baker III, and by Brent Scowcroft, the former national security adviser.

But those three, representing the Republican foreign policy establishment of the past two administrations, are being countermanded by Jon Kyl, the senator from Arizona who is the No. 2 man to McConnell in the Senate. McConnell has made it clear that he backs his partner in delaying the treaty, forcing Obama to seek at least nine Republican votes despite the opposition of the GOP leadership.

All this signals that the Republicans are feeling their oats, and will be hard to deal with.

Idaho tax lawsuit dismissed, but case filed again

 ${\sf BOISE-A}$ state judge dismissed a lawsuit against the Idaho State Tax Commission, saying the Democratic state lawmaker who filed the complaint didn't have standing.

Idaho Rep. Shirley Ringo brought the case against state tax commissioners, claiming they gave politically connected taxpayers inappropriate settlements.

But 4th District Judge Cheri Copsey ruled Ringo, from Moscow, had no standing. Copsey did say the allegations, if true, "cry out for some remedy or Ringo's lawyer, Robert Huntley, says he filed a new case with new plaintiffs Tuesday in advance of Copsey's ruling.

Huntley argues they do have standing.

Bank, homeowners make good on Tamarack lease

BOISE — Tamarack Resort's delinquent state land lease has been paid, a positive sign for those hoping for a ski season at the failed Idaho vacation getaway.

The Idaho Department of Lands on Friday said Credit Suisse Group and a homeowner association that wants to have skiing starting Dec. 20 paid about $415,000, covering the lease for 2,100 acres through next June.

Tamarack majority owner Jean-Pierre Boespflug says this puts the resort north of Boise "yet another step closer to skiing."

Homeowners are trying to drum up enthusiasm for Tamarack among potential season-ticket buyers, as they seek to resurrect a ski season after lifts were shuttered in March 2009.

U.S. Bankruptcy Court Judge Terry Myers, who is overseeing Tamarack's $300 million bankruptcy, still has to sign off on the pact between Credit Suisse, the homeowners and the state.

Oil company says foes lack standing in U.S. 12 case

BOISE — Attorneys for oil giant ConocoPhillips

say those who oppose their plan to haul four oversized shipments of refinery equipment along scenic U.S. Highway 12 have no right to get involved and cause further costly delays to their travel plans.

But to opponents, the four ConocoPhillips shipments represent the first of hundreds that could transform a scenic byway into a busy transportation corridor for oversized trucks, creating a threat to their personal and economic livelihoods and a risk to public safety all along the 172-mile roadway.

Attorneys for both sides made their case in Boise on Friday before an administrative hearing officer appointed by the Idaho Transportation Department.

The agency scheduled the hearing last week after issuing ConocoPhillips permits to haul the loads from the port in Lewiston to its refinery in Billings, Mont. The agency also barred company trucks from rolling until an independent judge could determine if opponents have a right to intervene and make a case

Boise attorney Merlyn Clark, appointed by the agency to hear the case, said he would issue his decision before the Thanksgiving holiday.

Sandpoint police say robber betrayed by familiar voice

SANDPOINT — Police say the robber of a northern Idaho payday Ioan service gave himself away because he was a frequent customer of the business and a manager recognized his voice.

Steven Lee Keller was arrested just over the border in Washington state at an Indian reservation casino, following the robbery of Sandpoint Title &

Retailers prepare for Black Friday frenzy

McClatchy-Tribune News Service

NEW YORK — With just a week before the official kickoff of the year's biggest shopping season, consumers are hitting the dozens of websites that track holiday sales and finding TVs, eBook readers and other items at their deepest discounts of the year.

The after Thanksgiving, or Black Friday, electronics retailer Best Buy Co. will offer its Barnes & Noble Inc. for $99.99. Walmart Stores Inc. will sell the "Ice Age" Bluray movie, currently already on sale at its site for $20, for

East Idaho county restricts wind farms

IDAHO FALLS (AP) - Planning commissioners in eastern Idaho's Bonneville County have established a boundary restricting where wind farms can be built.

At a meeting that started Wednesday and ended early Thursday morning, the planning and zoning commission created a "turbine zone" in the southern part of the county where wind farms will be allowed.

"We decided on that so we could take some time to slow down and figure out how to allow these (turbines) without infringing on other people's rights," Commissioner Bryon Reed told the Post Register.

Chairman Dovle Beck said the turbine zone stretches south and east from the foothills near Idaho Falls, that the eastern $boundary\,is\,along\,an\,elk\,preserve, and\,that$ the border with Bingham County forms the southern edge.

Commissioners said they based their decision on testimony from landowners during public meetings held over several months.

Developers faced few zoning restrictions before the turbine zone was put in

Some areas where developers have already applied to build turbines were excluded from the restrictions. One area is Meadow Creek, where Seattle-based Ridgeline Energy wants to put in a wind farm.

The company has appealed a planning commission denial of the request, but that process won't be affected by the latest restrictions because it was started before the turbine zone was put in place.

The boundaries of the turbine zone could still be changed.

"This may be very temporary," Commissioner Tom Hunsaker said. "Whatever decision we make doesn't have to be permanent."

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 22.32, or 0.2 percent on Friday, to 11,203.55.

The broader Standard & Poor's 500 index rose 3.04, or 0.3 percent, to 1,199.73. The technology-focused Nasdaq composite index rose 3.72, or 0.2 percent, to 2,518.12. The Nasdaq, which lost less than 0.1 percent, was the only major index to finish the week with a loss. The Dow and S&P 500 eked out weekly gains of less than 0.1 percent.

Eight of the 10 industry groups that make up the S&P 500 index rose. Materials companies posted the largest gains with a 0.7 percent rise. Utilities and financial companies fell.

Hewlett-Packard Co. rose 1.9 percent to lead the 30 stocks that make up the Dow. Boeing Co. was the laggard in the Dow with a decline of 1.0 percent.

The euro rose 0.3 percent to $1.36 against the dollar amid signs that Ireland was closer to agreeing to a bailout. Ireland's finances have been decimated after it nationalized three of its six banks following the collapse of a real estate boom.

Geithner opposes effort to remove employment goal

Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner said Friday that the Obama administration will oppose any effort in Congress to strip the Federal Reserve of its legal mandate to pursue low unemployment.

Some conservative Republicans have said the central bank should just concentrate on keeping inflation low and abandon its current dual goals of pursuing low inflation and low unemployment.

Geithner, in an interview with Bloomberg Television, said that the Fed's dual mandate has served the country very well over time and the administration was opposed bank with a mandate to keep ment was proper. to changing it.

Can a parking permit obstruct your view?

My handicap parking permit should not be displayed while my vehicle is in motion. I'm very particular not to even start the car while this is hanging up on the mirror as I do not feel it is safe to drive with a "billboard" in front of my field of vision. However, every day I see many cars with this displayed from the rearview mirror as people are driving. Are they ever given tickets for doing this?

-Nancy Luckily I don't • have a need to have a handicap placard, at least until they say that my attempt at humor is a disability. What I mean to say is that I don't have one in front of me to be able to read what is on it for this answer. I will go with what you tell me on this called obstructed view, which could be considered a violation of Idaho Code 49-612 or possibly even 49-943. These both cover having objects that clearly (isn't this a oxymoron?) block the view of a driver from the front or side win-

The reason you might not see too many people pulled over for this violation is that usually it is hard to prove a view was obstructed without a crash involved. This does not mean that officers don't stop for these violations, it just means that it is not one of the top 10 reasons to stop drivers. This, of course, is my opinion and not to be confused with using that line. The truth is that if you are driving through heavy rain or any other weather that could provide a slick surface, then the cruise control should be turned off.

Cruise control will not shut off when the wheels spin on a slick surface, and that creates a greater chance of sliding off the road or hydroplaning. Usually most people don't find out if the road is too slick or wet for cruise control until it is too late. The best thing is to just not use cruise control when it's raining a little or a lot, and especially when it appears the road is icy (duh!

Abdominal aortic aneurysm strikes fear

DEAR DR. GOTT: It is my fervent prayer that this letter reaches your hand. One cannot imagine the plethora of mail you receive daily. Therefore, I have attempted to keep my letter as short as possible. Three words - abdominal aortic aneurysm – spoken to a patient conjures up one word: fear. Please address AAA in your daily column for the sake and benefit of the multitude of those aware and unaware of potential ramifications of this nefarious disease. I have read that 1,500 Americans lose their lives to this condition every year.

Our doctor has failed to satisfactorily address my questions about my husband's condition during the past four years. The only medication he takes is Lovostatin daily for slightly elevated cholesterol. What causes AAA? What causes fat in the liver?

DEAR READER: I'm not sure I can begin to measure up to your perceived inflated interpretation of my knowledge, but perhaps I can shed some light on your unanswered questions.

An AAA occurs when a portion of the aorta, the large blood vessel that supplies oxygen-rich blood to the abdomen, pelvis and legs becomes abnormally large or bulges outward. The through the chest and abdomen. An aneurysm can develop anywhere along the aorta. When they occur in the upper portion of the aorta, they are known as thoracic aortic aneurysms. Similarly, when they occur in the lower portion of the aorta, they are called abdominal aortic aneurysms. While an unusual occurrence, when one develops between the upper and lower portion, they are known as thoracoabdominal aneurysms. Most small and slow-growing aneurysms will not rupture, and there will be few, if any, symptoms. The larger the aneurysm, the more likely it will rupture. Anyone can develop an aneurysm, but they are males over the age of 60 who have at least one risk factor, such as high blood pressure, obesity, high cholesterol levels, a history of smoking, atherosclerosis, or specific genetic factors such as Marfan Syndrome, Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome, heart-valve problems, and injury. Symptoms of a rupturing AAA can include nausea, vomiting, low blood pressure, loss of consciousness, abdominal or back pain that presents rather suddenly but persistently, clammy skin and a rapid heart rate. Examination by a physician might reveal a rigid abdomen, a pulsating sensation near the navel or a mass.

While a physician might be able to palpate a mass, he or she may choose to do nothing for a nonrupturing one but monitor its size to determine whether it enlarges. If it is extremely slow growing, the aneurysm may not require any intervention other than monitoring; however, should blood from the aneurysm leak into the abdominal cavity or if it grows rapidly, surgical repair will likely be necessary unless the risks outweigh the benefits.

If a physician determines surgery can be avoided, at least temporarily, he or she may prescribe a beta blocker to slow the rate of growth of the aneurysm. In your husband's case, he was prescribed medication to lower his cholesterol level. High levels are associated with plaque, fat deposits (from dietary choices or genetics) and a buildup of atherosclerosis and pressure on arteries. If surgery is agreed upon, there are two possibilities for repair. The first and most common is grafting the abnormal vessel with manmade material, such as Dacron. This procedure requires that a large incision be made into the abdomen. The second, known as endovascular stent grafting, doesn't require the large incision of open repair. It has fewer risks than grafting. It is accomplished by inserting a needle in the area of the groin and advancing a catheter to the site of the aneurysm. Dye is then injected to help guide the placement of a stent graft device. Once in place, the device prevents blood flow through the aneurysm, greatly reducing the risk of rupture. Because long-term effects of this latter procedure haven't been fully investigated, stent grafts are generally performed in patients thought to be at too high a risk for conventional repair. The prognosis is quite good for either procedure as long as the aneurysm is repaired prior to rupture. Without complications, patients are generally discharged home in four to seven days following the procedure and can resume normal activity

Prevention of an aneurysm can be accomplished through exercise, eating a healthful, low-cholesterol diet, avoiding stress and treating hypertension.

Most people diagnosed with an AAA live symptomfree, healthy lives. Guidelines for surgery are dependent on medical history, the size of an aneurysm and the rate at which it enlarges. The decision is best left to your husband's physician.

Idaho aims to keep bowl hopes alive at Utah State

By Josh Wright Times-News correspondent

MOSCOW - In his four years as Idaho football coach, Robb Akey has made his stance clear many times – he doesn't want a playoff in major college football, largely because he thinks it would zap the tradition and joy out of the bowl season.

But Akey still sees the value in his team operating with a playofflike urgency. That's especially been the case since last week's loss to Boise State nudged the 4-6

Vandals into must-win territory. If they are going to repeat as bowl participants, they can't afford another slip-up.

"Like Coach Akey was saying, we've got to treat (the rest of the season) like the playoffs now," defensive tackle Michael Cosgrove you've got to win all three to get to go to a bowl game, so that would be like our championship."

First up for Idaho in its postseason quest is a WAC game at Utah State today. Kickoff is set for 1 p.m. at the Aggies' Romney Stadium.

The Vandals have dropped three straight games and four of their last five. But perhaps most disconcerting for their bowl hopes is that they've yet to string consecutive wins together.

After today, they finish up at Fresno State and home on Dec. 4 versus last-place San Jose State.

"We need to start a three-game

Utah State has had a similarly frustrating season as the Vandals. Both teams have talented senior quarterbacks who have been forced to carry more of the load from a year ago because of injuries.

Diondre Borel threw for 369 yards in last year's 52-49 upset of Idaho in the final week of the regular season. But he lost the best skill players around him to season-

"They do a lot of the same things Aggies. "They have had a lot of new guys, a lot of young guys trying to step in."

The Vandals, already missing middle linebacker JoJo Dickson and standout tight end Daniel Hardy, will be without fifth-year senior safety Shiloh Keo for the first half as he serves a suspension from the WAC for a flagrant hit last week. Running back Deonte Jackson (ankle) missed most of the ending injuries, most notably run-BSU game and was listed as dayning back Robert Turbin and to-day earlier in the week.

Kuna 39-37 Friday.

Twin Falls (4-0, 1-0 GBC) hit six of its seven thirdquarter field goals from beyond the 3-point line. That cracked the zone and forced the Spartans (1-2, 0-1) to switch to a man defense, and the Bruins held their guests to just two points in the final eight minutes.

"We were just being too our first shot when we needed to wait," said Soloaga, who scored 12 of her game-high 15 points in the coaches said it was just zero-zero again and we needed to come out fired up and, defend our home one side of the court and court."

nine of them coming before halftime.

In addition to having Nielsen go off from 3-point land in the third, the Bruins got two key shots in the game that switched the momentum.

Down four points with 1.5 seconds left in the first, Mallory Jund stole an inbounds pass in the Minico backcourt and laid it in just before time expired. At the end of the third, Soloaga hit the last of the Bruins' eight 3-pointers just before the horn to make it 42-33.

"Those are shots that After struggling to solve gave them a little bit of Minico's 1-2-2 zone momentum," said Minico defense in the first half, coach Joe D. Shepard. "But what really killed us was when Kelsey hit those two 3s right at the start of the second half. Then we had to go to man and they kept hitting them anyway. It's really tough to stop them when they've got that going."

In the end a greater patience and willingness to make the extra pass made impatient early on, taking the difference for the Bruins. In the first half they hardly passed the eyeball test, but in the final two quarters they showed the the first half. "At halftime kind of basketball that has them ranked No. 2 in the Class 4A media poll.

"We had everything on we weren't swinging the Minico got 14 points ball around. Once we did from Taylor O'Connell, that we got a lot more wide-open looks," said Kelsey, who finished with 13 points. "I think we were Allie Kelsey and Jazlyn able to make our mark (in the conference opener), but we've still got a lot of work to do."

That work resumes in 10 days when the Bruins host Filer on Nov. 30. Minico hosts Century on Tuesday.

Carey aims to reclaim state title in honor of fallen teammate

By David Bashore Times-News writer

As the new kid in town. Tim Hoopes wasn't familiar with Carev's recent football success when his family eastern Idaho in time for the new school year.

His new teammates didn't waste time getting him up to speed, and now he's part of a Panther senior class that's 48 minutes from getting its state championship back.

"Before I moved here I hadn't really heard of Carey and then the first couple of weeks of practice they told me how good they've been and showed me the trophy case," said Hoopes, who's starred for the Panthers on 1,300 yards from scrimmage both sides of the ball this season but will play in his very first state championship game today. "We've held opponents to not that many points and we feel we can do it against these guys too. We've got to wrap up and hit low, same thing we did last week."

If they can do that, the Panthers feel they'll be well on their way to reclaiming the state title.

In doing so Carey, which has already bettered last season's result of falling in the semifinals, would give head coach Lane Kirkland his third title. That would break the current tie with his father Heber, his predecessor as head coach.

"The kids are really excited to have the opportunity to play in the state championship, and they've certainly earned it," Lane Kirkland said. "We have had a lot of success in Carey, and obviously a big part of that is having great kids and building on tradition and previous years' success.

"It seems like at the beginning of every new season each group of seniors commits to doing better than the year before and this year is no different. They're on a mission to win the state championship and have been so focused every practice, every game, and now they have the opportunity."

BYU trying not to overlook Lobos

By Darnell Dickson (Provo, Utah) Daily Herald

Let's get this out of the way up front: New Mexico is a bad football team.

BYU has been there, was and turned things around. But the Lobos started with a bomb, losing 72-0 to Oregon in Week 1, and life hasn't gotten much better in Albuquerque.

You won't catch any of BYU's players or coaches saying New Mexico is bad, there's a code. You know, you have to show respect to vour opponent, not give them any bulletin board material, stuff like that.

But New Mexico is bad. The evidence is overwhelming.

The Lobos have won just two games (out of 22) since Rocky Long in 2009. New Mexico has been outscored by an average of more than three touchdowns in those 20 losses. This season, the Lobos are ranked 100th or worse (out of 120 teams) in 18 of 23 major statistical categories. New Mexico is last in the country in run defense and kickoff return help in that respect — and next-to-last in scoring

The Lobos have won just once, a 34-31 victory over Wyoming on Nov. 6.

BYU head coach Bronco Mendenhall indicated his team can't overlook the Lobos in today's 4 p.m. matchup — "We've still got too much work left to do," he said - and senior cornerback Brian Logan agreed.

"I didn't even know New way."

New Mexico does have some weapons on offense like wide receiver Ty Kirk, tight end Lucas Reed and quarterback freshman Stump Godfrey. The Lobos also have a typically huge offensive line (305 pound average) but are 110th in the country in rushing.

Defensively, New Mexico Mike Locksley took over for has given up more than 40 points in five of its nine

WHAT'S AT STAKE

Both teams have won four straight games and Nebraska (9-1, 5-1) can secure its second straight Big 12 North title with a win against Texas A&M (7-3, 4-2). The Aggies would need to win out and get some help from Oklahoma State to have a chance at the South title. Otherwise, they're playing for a better bowl game the rest of the Texas A&M RB Cyrus Gray against Nebraska's defense. The Cornhuskers have the sixthranked defense in the country but are much better against the pass than the run. Nebraska is second in the country in pass defense, allowing just more than 140 yards per game. The run defense is allowing more than 152 yards a game, which is 63rd in the nation.

Tech 31-7.

WHAT'S AT STAKE

A win gives Virginia Tech (8-2, 6-0 ACC) the ACC's Coastal Division title and a berth in the league championship game, as well as what would be the Hokies' 11th win over the Hurricanes in the last 16 meetings. Miami (7-3, 5-2) needs a win to get within a half-game of the Hokies in the division, then must hope that Virginia Tech loses to Virginia next week.

KEY MATCHUP

Virginia Tech QB Tyrod Taylor vs. Miami's pass defense. Miami coach Randy Shannon says Taylor is the best offensive player in the ACC, and with 18 passing touchdowns against four interceptions. The Hurricanes rank No. 2 nationally in pass efficiency defense, though, led by junior Brandon Harris, a Thorpe Award candidate.

Seeing the Lord's Prayer in a new light

By Mitchell Landsberg Los Angeles Times

SANTA ROSA, Calif. -"Our father ..."

Most Christians can fill in the words that follow: " ... who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done ..."

But wait - let's rewind. John Dominic Crossan, a renowned, if controversial, scholar of Christianity, says the essence of the Lord's Prayer can be found in those first two words, in fact, in the single word "father," which, he believes, encapsulates an entire first century worldview lost to modern churchgoers.

"After that," he says, "everything would follow."

Crossan, a former Catholic priest who teaches at DePaul University, is an old hand at challenging contemporary Christian assumptions. A slight man with a thick Irish accent, a deep spiritual well and an impish sense of humor, he is one of the founders of the Jesus Seminar, a liberal Christian organization that is devoted to the study of the history of Jesus and early Christianity.

The group, which recent-celebrated its 25th anniversary with a gathering in Santa Rosa, Calif., is respected in some circles for its scholarship, and in others, viewed as heretical eral books about the historfor its skepticism. Crossan calls the Lord's Prayer "a prayer from the heart of Judaism on the lips of Christianity for the conscience of the world."

To understand it, he said, it is necessary to comprehend the culture in which it was written, that of first century Judaism. The prayer appears in the New Testament twice, in slightly different forms: In Matthew 6:9-13, and in Luke, 11:2-4. In both cases, it is delivered by Jesus, which helps explain the revered status it holds.

To begin with, he said, the term "Father" – "Abba" in the original Greek or Aramaic connoted a "householder," one who oversaw the affairs of a family. A householder, he added, would have been judged by how well he provided for everyone.

"That sounds to me like a very agenda-driven interpretation," said Steven Porter, who teaches the Lord's Prayer to graduate students in his theology classes at Biola University, an evangelical Christian school in La Mirada, Calif. 10 years after destruction, Bamiyan remembers its Buddhas

By Warren P. Strobel McClatchy Newspapers

BAMIYAN, Afghanistan -They stand like missing hearts carved out of the mountain's chest, abandoned chambers where ancient wonders of the world once gazed placidly.

It's been nearly 10 years since the Taliban destroyed Bamiyan's towering Buddhas. With Afghanistan convulsed again by war, rebuilding isn't even on the agenda.

No one knows how much it would cost to restore the work of craftsmen who've been dead for more than 1,500 years, and "nobody's ready to pay," said Hamza Youssefi, of Afghanistan's Historical Monuments

They've discovered previously unknown oil paintings in the complex and a stupa, or Buddhist shrine, at the base of the cliff, said Habiba Surabi, the governor of Bamivan province.

Large fragments are tightly wrapped in yellow plastic at the mountain's base. Scaffolding fills the main chamber, like the skeleton of Buddha. But with Afghanistan's war and poverty, finishing the work isn't a job for today.

Unlit lights are strung across the scaffolding. In the Dari language, they spell out:

All about me?

y friend, Steve, used to write a newspaper column. That was before he started his own business and became independently wealthy.

You didn't know people who write newspaper columns could be so smart, did you?

I don't begrudge Steve for leaving journalism, or for making millions. In fact, I'm kind of proud of him. I'm especially proud of how he chooses to use his wealth. When he's not making money. Steve travels to Third World countries and works with the truly impoverished there, teaching business skills, mentoring aspiring business owners and helping to set up microenterprises - small businesses, usually with one owner/operator, that don't require a lot of seed money up front.

Steve has become pretty passionate about his work as long as your definition of "passionate" includes words like "obsessive," "compulsive" and "lovingly maniacal." So I wasn't too surprised with the tone or message of an e-mail I received from him the other day.

"If I was still writing a weekly column," he wrote, "I would talk about the complaining cruise ship passengers who were 'forced' to eat shrimp and canned Spam for a week in 'crowded' cruise ship cabins without air conditioning. Heaven forbid!

"I might compare that deprived life with the life in most Third World countries, from the Philippines to the Congo, where two or three families live in less space than that, where they don't even have a fan, and they eat less than one meal a day.

"But I am not writing a weekly column any more;" Steve added. "You are."

He has a point. I do write a weekly column (although there are probably a few editors who would contend that we're using the word "write" in its broadest possible sense here). And I have given some thought to those cruise ship passengers during the past week. But I have to confess, my thoughts on the matter have been different from Steve's. I've been thinking about it from the perspective of someone whose greatest fear during the time he was out on his

VALUE SPEAK Joseph Walker

one and only cruise was exactly what happened to those folks - well, that and the diseased rats, Sushi Night and fat old men in Speedos.

In other words, I've been thinking about it selfishly.

Not an unusual occurrence, I'm afraid.

We all tend to view the world through the prism of our own attitudes and experiences. For Steve, the cruise ship story was just another reminder of how few of us in non-developing nations truly appreciate how good we have it compared to the rest of the world. For me, it re-kindled all of the fears I felt floating around on the startlingly blue Caribbean and praying that I would never hear anyone shout the word "Fire!"

Or, for that matter, "Spam!"

I don't think this is a matter of right and wrong, nor do I think it has anything to do with money or status or anything like that. But it probably is a reflection of our personal priorities and values. Steve's first thought is always to consider those who are less fortunate than himself. My first thought is - well - whatever it is, I'm afraid that more often than not it's all about me. How does this affect me? How does this make me feel? How does this play on my fears and sensibilities? And by the way, I really like shrimp, so eating a lot of shrimp for a couple of days wouldn't be all that bad - as long as there was plenty of cocktail sauce.

See what I mean? I hope the day comes when I'm a little more like Steve. It's because of people like him, who think first and foremost of others, that there is hope for us - individually and collectively. And it's because of people like me that you get to hear about people like Steve when I write about them in my newspaper column.

When I'm not writing about - you know - me.

NATO agrees on missile defense shield for Europe

By Christi Parsons, Paul Richter and Sergei L. Loiko

Tribune Washington Bureau

LISBON, Portugal - The Western military alliance agreed Friday to build an international missile defense system and offered Russia a role, a step aimed at reshaping the relationship with a former foe after years of mistrust and friction.

Gathered at a summit in Lisbon, leaders of the 28 NATO states formally committed to a system aimed at protecting the United States and Europe from attack, and offered Russia a chance to collaborate in planning and operations. NATO leaders, who expect Russia to react positively, hope the agreement will lead to cooperation in areas where they could benefit from Moscow's help, including the war in Afghanistan, nuclear nonproliferation and the standoff with Iran. President Barack Obama told reporters the administration looked forward to working with the Russians "to build our cooperation with them in this area as well, recognizing that we share many of the same threats." Yet previous efforts to develop joint missile defense systems with Russia have fallen apart, and officials acknowledged that political and technical hurdles remain.

The announcement came near the end of a difficult week for the president. Obama is seeking to bring another key piece of his effort to rebuild relations with Russia – a treaty to reduce nuclear arms stockpiles — to a vote in the Senate before the end of the year. But Senate Republicans, whose numbers will increase in the new Congress that convenes in January, declared this week that there wasn't enough time, prompting pushback from the White House.

The NATO summit, which concludes Saturday, is also focusing on plan to turn security responsibility over to Afghan forces by 2014, a tacit proving far more difficult than

Fears of further explosions delay search for 29 New Zealand miners

By Ray Lilley Associated Press

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — Search efforts for 29 workers missing after a powerful blast tore through a coal mine in New Zealand were stalled Saturday over fears that a buildup of dangerous gas could trigger a second underground explo-

Repeated attempts to contact the 16 employees and 13 contract miners after Friday's explosion at the Pike River mine have failed, and it was not known if the men were still alive, Pike River Mine Ltd's chief executive Peter Whittall said. The blast was most likely caused by coal gas igniting, he said.

Two dazed and slightly injured miners stumbled to the surface hours after the blast shot up the mine's 354foot-long ventilation shaft. Video from the scene showed blackened trees and light smoke billowing from the top of the rugged mountain where the mine is located, near Atarau on New Zealand's South Island.

Search controller, police superintendent Gary Knowles, said they were still waiting for air test results from the mine before search teams can be sent in.

"As the search commander I'm not prepared to put people on the ground until we can be sure it's a safe environment," he said.

Whittall said the hazard for rescuers was the danger of something sparking a gas explosion. "Putting on a (protective) suit, putting on a mask, won't protect you if the mine blows up," or protect the said. missing miners, he said.

The coal seam at the mine is reached through a 1.4mile horizontal tunnel into the mountain. The seam lies about 650 feet beneath the surface. According to the company's website, the vertical ventilation shaft rises 354 feet from the tunnel to the surface.

Deputy Mayor Doug Truman said the blast was so powerful that one of the workers who came out of the mine described being only a mile inside the shaft when he was blown off his machine.

"The mine vents have ... scorch marks - so it must have been a reasonably big explosion," Truman told New Zealand's National Brownlee said the explosion occurred about 3:45 p.m. (7:45 p.m. MST Thursday), and the last contact with any of the miners was about a half-hour later. That contact was with one of the two men who came out.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

"It was the limit of my dream, The focus of my prayer, A perfect, paralyzing bliss Contented as despair." — Emily Dickinson

Saturday, Nov. 20, 2010

West leads the diamond king. How do you plan to bring home your delicate heart slam?

In seven hearts you would play for both black-suit finesses to work. But given that you can bring home 12 tricks by taking only one of the two finesses, which should it be?

The answer is that taking the club finesse allows you to pitch a spade but leaves you with a spade loser, while taking the spade finesse allows you to pitch your only club loser.

Accordingly, you should duck the opening lead to set up communication for ruffing a diamond in dummy. West should shift to a club at trick two. Since you need the spade finesse, you should rise with the club ace and play the trump queen, finding the bad break, then the diamond jack to your ace so you can ruff your remaining diamond high. After cashing dummy's trump 10, you will draw East's remaining trumps with your ace and king.

Finally, you have to manage the spade suit correctly. If you lead the jack first, West will play low. After a second spade finesse, you will be locked in dummy, unable to repeat the spade finesse, and East will score his club king eventually.

You can avoid this problem by first running the spade nine. When that is successful, you continue with the spade jack. Eventually, you score four spade tricks, five trumps, the diamond ace, a diamond ruff and the club ace, for a total of 12 tricks.

ANSWER: You plan to head toward three no-trump, but there is no harm in investigating other contracts such as a club or a heart game. Start by bidding two diamonds, a forcing change of suit, hoping to hear heart support from your partner. You plan to cuebid spades to look for a stopper if a heart contract seems impractical, while keeping the club game in reserve if all else fails.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to "Leon" for 3 1/2 years. We have a 2-year-old daughter and are, for the most part, happy. However, one issue comes up frequently and seems to be the basis of all of our disagreements.

Leon is hung up on things being "equal." This can range from whose "turn" it is to do the dishes, change the diapers, put our daughter to bed - to exactly how many days we spend with each set of parents. If we travel to see my parents, we must also travel to see his.

This "equal" obsession drives me nuts. I'm fully in support of "fair," but if I'm busy making dinner, it seems to me that he could change the baby's diaper even if it's my "turn." As for visiting the in-laws, he became upset with me when I wanted to plan a trip to see my parents without simultaneously planning one to visit his. He felt shortchanged - until we added it up, and it turned out we've spent five weeks more with his family than with mine.

A marriage is a partnership, and I believe in picking up the slack when Leon is overwhelmed, sick or tired. Why can't he do the same for me?

- UNFAIRLY EQUAL IN PHOENIX

DEAR $\mathbf{A}\mathtt{B}\mathtt{B}\mathtt{Y}$ Jeanne Phillips

DEAR UNFAIRLY EQUAL: Because, for whatever reason, your husband is obsessed with the idea that he's going to get the short end of the stick - if you'll forgive the vernacular. Either that, or he's obsessive-compulsive and also counts steps, turns and other meaningless minutiae. That he would expect you to stop preparing dinner to change a diaper is, to put it mildly – yech! However, he isn't going to change until he realizes he has a problem. The incident involving visiting your parents should have been his first clue.

DEAR ABBY: How do I get my dad to stop making uncalled-for comments? I'm 13, and I'm ready to stop inviting my friends over. My father always seems to say the worst possible thing.

For example, my friend "Amanda" was over one day. She has low selfesteem and body image problems. She was complaining to me about how curly her hair gets after she swims. I reassured her that it wasn't that bad, but then Dad came in and said, "Whoa! What's that? Your hair looks like something out of the 1980s!"

I replied, "Dad, could you please be quiet?" and he glared at me and continued. He often asks my friends if they're married yet, as a joke, and can't take a hint when he's the only one laughing. More than one of my friends have said they feel uncomfortable around him or just don't like him.

If I try to bring it up, Dad reminds me that back in my fifth-grade class everyone liked him. That was three years ago, and I have grown up and so have my friends. How do I teach Dad to take a hint?

- MORTIFIED IN FLORIDA

DEAR MORTIFIED: You

don't. Because he won't accept hearing it from you, it's better he get the message from another adult that his attempts at humor are in poor taste and not funny. Talk to your mother or another adult female relative and tell her what your father is doing. If he keeps it up, you won't have to worry about not inviting friends to your house because they won't want to come over and be embarrassed.

In 1929, the radio program "The Rise of the Goldbergs" debuted on the NBC Blue Network.

In 1947, Britain's future queen, Princess Elizabeth, married Mountbatten, Duke of Edinburgh, at Westminster Abbey.

In 1959, the United issued Nations its Declaration of the Rights of the Child.

In 1967, the U.S. Census Bureau's Population Clock Commerce the Department ticked past 200 million. In 1969, the Nixon administration announced a halt to residential use of the pesticide DDT as part of a total phaseout. A group of American Indian activists began a 19-month occupation of Alcatraz Island in San Francisco Bay.

In 1975, after nearly four decades of absolute rule, Spain's General Francisco Franco died, two weeks before his 83rd birthday.

In 1980, faced with disastrous reviews from New York critics, United Artists announced it was withdrawing its "Heaven's Gate," whose estimated cost topped $40 million, for re-editing.

In 1985, the first version of Microsoft's Windows operating system, Windows

1.0, was officially released. Ten years ago: Lawyers for Al Gore and George W. Bush battled before the Florida Supreme Court over whether the presidential election recount should be allowed to continue Peruvian President Alberto Fujimori resigned, ending a

10-year reign. Five years ago: Israel's dovish Labor Party voted to pull out of Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's government in the opening salvo of an election campaign. A gunman opened fire at a crowded shopping mall in Tacoma, Wash., wounding seven people and taking four hostages before surrendering. (Dominick Maldonado was later convicted of 15 charges, including attempted murder, assault and kidnapping; he was sentenced to just over 163 years in prison.)

One year ago: Scientists in Geneva restarted the Large Hadron Collider, the atom world's largest smasher, after a year of repairs. A Chinese national killed four people and wounded nine in a shooting rampage on the Pacific island of Saipan before taking his own life. Holding back tears, Oprah Winfrey told her studio audience that she would end her talk show in 2011 after a quartercentury on the air.

IF NOVEMBER 20 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: The upcoming year may give you a chance to reclaim old joys and achieve peace and tranquility. People in general will find you fascinating and appreciate all your best qualities between now and the end of February. Because vou are more popular and attractive than usual, these are good months to make important changes such as a new job, a new home or entering into a committed relationship. Your fondest wish can come true in January when you will get what you need, although not necessarily what you want.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your life should be rated R. Some things are meant for mature adults only. Remember that a me-first attitude is only effective when you are a preschooler. Don't forget to be considerate of others.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Love can come knocking on your door, but won't get past the deadbolts. If you want to sincerely have a relationship, you can't set so many conditions or refuse to let someone know the true you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Seek open spaces where you feel free. Consider a hike in the woods, a drive through a park or simply be content to shop at the mall. Window shopping might give you valuable ideas.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may be reminded that there is no free ride. Social matters may slightly try your patience or test your ingenuity. Don't expect problems where none is indicated, but don't forget to chip in your fair share.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Don't complain, don't explain. The person who really cares will be willing to forget and forgive, but this isn't the time to test how far you can go. Understanding and compassion can create a buffer zone.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The whisper you hear from a Doubting Thomas may save the day. Hold off on launching a very important deal or project. Perfect the minor details and polish your performance before diving in.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Those who hesitate may be the ones who end up the happiest. A bit of formality and respectful distance could be the appropriate ingredient when dealing with older people or those in authority. Honor obliga-

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): It may be difficult to nail down the details. People may be somewhat evasive about confidential matters or seem to play hard to get. This is not a good time for crucial phone calls or negotiations.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): No matter what you say, you really want to have your cake and eat it, too. Hard work is necessary - even though you do not want to face facts. Don't make important promises or sign agreements.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Play "statues" and freeze in place. You may overreact to the moods and opinions of others. Turn a deaf ear to disapproval. It is a good idea to just stop responding to whatever it is that pushes your buttons.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The picture isn't clear. Those in close connection may pretend to be better than they really are or blow minor problems out of proportion. Avoid confrontations. Don't dive into a new project too quickly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Sign your autograph. Be proud of your accomplishments and efforts. Hold off on extremely significant presentations or speaking engagements - and avoid signing important agreements until next week.
