10 in 2010

If no man is an island, no year is one either. While much will be made tonight of new beginnings as 2010 slips into 2011, what happened during the last 365 days will have a profound impact on the year to come. From Idaho's 1,500 soldiers serving in Iraq with the Idaho Army National Guard to the state's ongoing budget crunch, 2011 will be as much about the continuation of ongoing journeys as the start of new ventures. Here we list 10 of the top stories of 2010 that will continue to be felt in the Magic Valley as 2011 rolls forward.

10 STORIES FROM THIS YEAR THAT WILL LEAVE THEIR MARK ON 2011

116th rides out

One year after being warned a deployment might happen, more than 2,700 citizen soldiers with the Idaho Army National Guard's 116th Cavalry Brigade Combat Team — including 1,500 from Idaho — headed to Mississippi in September to train for a trip to Iraq. The guardsmen will spend the better part of 2011 stationed thousands of miles from the Magic Valley, serving in a variety of security roles in a country that's changed greatly since the 116th's last deployment in 2004. Meanwhile, their absence will be felt by families and friends back home.

Idaho's funding crisis

The state's Republican power players weathered a year of unprecedented budgetary turmoil and came out — if not smelling like roses — at least with their jobs intact. The first year-to-year reduction in state public education funding and across-board cuts to nearly every other state service during the 2010 legislative session was followed by a GOP romp through the elections.

Re-elected Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter and a more conservative Legislature will address a potentially tougher task in 2011: a projected $340 million shortfall as rainy day and federal stimulus funding dwindles. With public education funding taking up about half of the budget and Idaho ranked 47th in per-pupil spending in a 2007-08 National Center for Education Statistics study, 2011 is shaping up to be a year of thorough examination of state spending.

Missionaries complicate Haiti adoptions

Members of Eastside Baptist Church in Twin Falls were shocked in late January to learn that their pastor, his son and another church member were among Baptist missionaries detained while trying to take children out of earthquake-stricken Haiti. While most of the group was released and returned home three harrowing weeks later, it wasn't until May that trip organizer Laura Silsby of Meridian was released after a conviction for arranging illegal travel for the children — originally claimed to be orphans, but later found to have been given up by their panicked parents. Some worried the incident would have a chilling effect on overseas placement of children with willing parents. But while the process has slowed out of Haiti, adoptions have continued — the Associated Press recently reported that 1,150 Haitian children already in the adoption pipeline at the time of the quake were expedited to American homes, a new record for yearly adoptions from the country.

Twin Falls' changing of the guard

The jobs are the same but the names are different. After elections and appointments changed the face of Twin Falls leadership in 2010, a new batch of officials will make their mark on the area's brain trust in 2011.

Do-everything Twin Falls City Manager Tom Courtney will be replaced by new do-everything City Manager Travis Rothweiler in April, when Rothweiler, 39, takes over leadership of the city's day-to-day operations. Brian Pike will become the city's new chief of police in March, replacing retiring Jim Munn Jr.

The College of Southern Idaho's youth movement — relatively speaking — will be put through its paces as Trustees Bob Keegan and Karl Kleinkopf, respectively 60 and 64, continue their work after unseating longtime Trustees Charles Lehrman and LeRoy Craig.

Out are Twin Falls County Commissioner Tom Mikesell and Twin Falls City Councilman Lee Heider, off to pursue business and state legislative ventures, respectively. In is the father-daughter duo of County Commissioner Leon Mills and City Councilwoman Rebecca Mills Sojka, the newest power family in area government.

Arellano pleads guilty to estranged wife's murder

Burley man could face life in prison

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — A Burley man may spend the rest of his life in prison after admitting Thursday to fatally shooting his estranged wife on the dance floor of a Burley bar in May.

Juan Manuel Arellano entered a guilty plea in Cassia County 5th District Court to felony first-degree murder after killing Ramona "Monica" Arellano Nanez, 32, of Paul, at the El Paralito bar on May 29. He also pleaded guilty to a firearms enhancement for using a 9 mm handgun in the murder.

Arellano, 32, entered an Alford plea to the murder charge's element of malice of forethought and premeditation. Such a plea allows a defendant to gain the benefits of a plea agreement without an admission of guilt. Under the plea agreement, felony charges of attempted first-degree murder and aggravated battery were dismissed.

The dismissed charges were filed because the bullet that killed

Idaho lawmakers proposing bills to reform urban renewal

Critics say urban renewal operates with unchecked authority

Times-News

At least two senior lawmakers plan to submit bills that could clamp down on Idaho's growing number of urban renewal agencies.

Rep. Leon Smith, R-Twin Falls, vice-chairman of the House's Judiciary, Rules and Administration Committee and a member of the Twin Falls Urban Renewal Agency, is writing a draft bill that would among other things give city councils more control over an agency's board of directors.

"The idea is to exercise a little bit more control by city councils and mayors over these agencies," he said. "For example, I sit on the (urban renewal agency) board in Twin Falls, and there is really nothing they can do to get rid of me unless I do something egregious."

Smith said his bill also proposes to eliminate a loophole in Idaho law that allows urban renewal to create shoestring districts. In the Party like it's 1911

It was an early night for Twin Falls County's residents 100 years ago, on Dec. 31, 1910. Unless, of course, you happened to know a guy who knew a guy.

By vote of the people, the last saloon in 6-year-old Twin Falls had closed down in February 1910 — the culmination of an anti-alcohol campaign led by the town's ministers and a remarkably aggressive chapter of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

But local folks didn't stop tipping. They just got creative about it, according to retired College of Southern Idaho history professor Jim Gentry. "Almost immediately, bootlegging became a concern," wrote Gentry in his 2003 history, "In the Middle and on the Edge: the Twin Falls region of Idaho."

"An entire court exhibit of bootleg whiskey was stolen, apparently with the idea of gaining acquittal for the accused. By December 1911 it had cost $20,000 since the previous August to prosecute bootlegging cases."

Plus, teetotaling was bad for business. The Twin Falls Commercial Club — the era's equivalent to the Chamber of Commerce — managed to get local option on the ballot in May 1912; it lost by 65 percent of the vote.

But in June 1913, neighboring Lincoln County (Jerome County hadn't been established yet) reestablished liquor sales — and it was just a short ride away aboard the Shoshone Falls Ferry.

"When a victim was bashed to death and thrown over the cliffs at Blue Lakes, the crime was reportedly cause by 'Jerome booze and human passions,'" according to Gentry.

Then there was Nevada, 45 miles distant. Twin Springs — located near what's now Jackpot — did a thriving business.

Nor did it help when the Legislature declared the state dry in January 1916. Three years later, Idaho became the 19th state to ratify the 18th Amendment, banning the sale of alcohol nationwide.

But once again, the booze didn't disappear. Quite the opposite.

In 1922, Twin Falls almost elected a pro-Ku Klux Klan slate to the City Council because it pledged to crack down on bootlegging.

"This appealed to many in the community because of the failure of Prohibition," Gentry said. "In one two-week period five boarding houses in Twin Falls were closed because of violations of Prohibition. Frustrated (WCTU) members poured confiscated whiskey on the streets on Armistice Day 1922. More than 80 persons a year were arrested for intoxication in 1921, '22 and '23."

Idaho finally gave up on Prohibition on Oct. 17, 1933, ratifying the 21st Amendment of the Constitution. But Twin Falls, which ironically was a stronghold of the faction of the ruling Idaho Democratic Party that opposed Prohibition, continued to restrict alcohol sales in many ways for years.

Twin Falls County voters three times rejected Sunday liquor sales before the commissioners, following the lead of most cities within the county, lifted the ban by ordinance in 2007.

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

A preliminary hearing for a Twin Falls man charged with malicious harassment was postponed Thursday in order to allow the defendant time to find an attorney.

John Christopher Larsen, 42, appeared as his own defense in Twin Falls County 5th District Court to request time to find a lawyer, claiming he was denied a public defender.

Larsen was charged with felony harassment on Dec. 23

after he allegedly threatened a Muslim woman at the Twin Falls Walmart on Dec. 22. Witnesses told police that they heard Larsen yelling at the woman, saying Muslims didn't belong in the U.S., and threatening her with a gun he said he was carrying under his shirt.

Larsen said Thursday he admitted himself into a psychiatric ward for three days following the incident, which limited his time to find an attorney. Larsen said he had also requested his military records that would show he suffers from post-traumatic stress disorder after serving in Iraq.

Magistrate Judge Thomas Kershaw granted a continuance and reminded Larsen that he was under a "no contact" order, meaning he is not to contact the alleged victim, who was in attendance Thursday in court along with other witnesses. Kershaw instructed Larsen to keep Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loeb informed on his progress in finding a lawyer because Kershaw didn't want witnesses to show up again only to have the hearing postponed again.

Preliminary hearings are scheduled soon after a person is charged in order to determine whether sufficient evidence exists to warrant a felony conviction. Continuances are often requested by attorneys to allow them to gather more information prior to a hearing.

T.F. police seek info on incident related to bank robbery

Times-News

In their attempt to crack the case of the Dec. 16 bank robbery in Twin Falls, police seek information on a traffic incident that may be related to the heist.

Lt. Craig Stotts said police seek information about an incident at the intersection of Blue Lakes Boulevard North and Falls Avenue that occurred shortly after the 1:40 p.m. robbery of U.S. Bank's Blue Lakes branch.

Stotts said a witness claims the silver or gray four-door sedan that the suspect entered after the robbery ran a red light at the intersection, nearly causing an accident. Police seek any information from witnesses who may have been at the intersection at the time.

The suspect is believed by police to be a thin, possibly white male in his 20s or 30s. He wore a multi-colored, patterned jacket, black face covering, blue jeans and athletic shoes. He carried a handgun during the robbery and may have been assisted by a driver.

U.S. Bank is offering up to $10,000, and Crime Stoppers up to $1,000 for information that leads to the arrest and conviction of the suspects.

To report information: Crime Stoppers, 732-5387, or Twin Falls Police Department, 735-4357.

Plea

Nanez also struck the man she was dancing with and Arellano allegedly attempted to shoot the bar's bouncer during a post-shooting scuffle.

Arellano will be sentenced in Burley at 3 p.m. March 8 and could face up to life in prison.

Kent Jensen, Arellano's attorney, said his client wished to enter an Alford plea to the premeditation element because a text message that he sent to the victim's cousin that warned he was going to kill Nanez a couple hours before the murder was "just a conversation."

"As far as the factual basis, there are a number of things the state would present at the trial, if the case were to go to trial, that relate to the issues of malice or forethought and premeditation," said Cassia County Deputy Prosecutor Blaine Cannon.

Cannon said Arellano and Nanez were married but separated.

"Even while they were married their relationship was often turbulent and there was some domestic violence," Cannon said.

Nanez's cousin was concerned enough, Cannon said, that she called Nanez and told her Arellano had threatened to kill her, but that warning was disregarded.

Cannon said Arellano admitted during the initial interview with a deputy that he had planned to kill Nanez that night and he took his handgun with him to the bar.

"He was frustrated, he was embarrassed, he said, by the fact that Monica would come to the bar and dance with other men and that he couldn't take being ashamed anymore," Cannon said.

Cannon said Arellano later recanted his confession but took a loaded handgun to the bar, regardless.

"Almost as soon as Monica got there and she got out on the dance floor with another man, the defendant walked right toward her, pointing that gun at her and fired a single shot which killed her," Cannon said. That is the evidence that we would present as to malice and forethought and it's our belief that it would be more than sufficient to allow a jury to convict him of first-degree murder including those elements."

Cassia County 5th District Judge Michael Crabtree said if the evidence were presented to a jury as Cannon described he thinks there is strong indication that a jury could find Arellano guilty of premeditation and malice of forethought.

Crabtree questioned Arellano to make sure he understood that although a plea agreement is in place, the court isn't bound to sentence him to the state's recommended 22 years to life in prison.

The 22-year fixed portion of the prosecution's sentencing recommendation includes a 15-year penalty for the firearms enhancement.

Reform

past, urban renewal agencies have expanded their taxing districts by buying properties outside of urban zones and then connecting them with little more than a sidewalk — a practice that earned it the name, "shoestring district." The Twin Falls Urban Renewal Agency created a shoestring district in 2002 to buy a former Albertsons grocery store and convert it into a Dell call center.

Smith is circulating copies of his draft among Idaho cities with urban renewal agencies, saying he will put the final touches on the bill after he receives feedback.

But Smith isn't alone in his efforts to reform urban renewal laws in Idaho.

"We're going to try to put that conundrum to bed," Rep. Dennis Lake, R-Blackfoot and chairman of the House's Revenue and Taxation Committee, told the Idaho State Journal. He said some cities have abused the process.

"We're going to have to clamp down a little bit," he said.

Urban renewal districts were created to improve blighted areas. The districts operate on money generated through increases in property values and thus the property taxes collected after a district is formed.

Critics say urban renewal districts operate outside the purview of good representative government, and that citizens whose property taxes are affected should be allowed to vote on the creation of urban renewal districts.

"Voters should have a say in their creation," said Wayne Hoffman, executive director of the Idaho Freedom Foundation, a free-market advocacy group. "If the urban renewal district does such wonderful things, cities should have no problem taking it to a vote of the public."

Hoffman said most development would take place even without an urban renewal district, which he said means taxpayers are missing out on property tax relief.

Some agencies are working with massive budgets and properties. For example, the Twin Falls Urban Renewal Agency board approved a $6.3 million budget in December, an almost $1.2 million unallocated increase over the prior budget. The increase is in case the agency needs the money for a project in the future, officials said.

South-central Idaho saw a sudden increase in urban renewal agencies in 2010 when the Southern Idaho Economic Development Organization, or SIEDO, announced collaborative efforts with cities and counties to create urban renewal agencies in Heyburn, Filer and Kimberly. Twin Falls, Jerome and Burley already have existing agencies and the city of Rupert recently updated its urban renewal district.

"These are the best tools we have in economic development," Jan Rogers, executive director of SIEDO, told the Times-News. "What we told communities in our area is that they need a URA to stay competitive."

Sex scandals trouble Burley schools

One former Cassia County School District teacher is imprisoned and a current teacher is suspended after allegations of improper sexual contact with students surfaced against both men.

Chad Burnett will serve at least three years in state prison for crimes related to a sexual relationship the 28-year-old teacher entered into with an underage female student. Michael Brinkerhoff is slated to face a March jury trial on allegations that he used a fictitious online persona to engage in sexually charged Internet conversations with an underage female student.

Some good has, and may continue to, come of the district's troubling situation. Various school districts are developing guidelines for employees' electronic communication with students, and some are examining how to strengthen the way they check the backgrounds of potential new hires. Both actions may further improve student safety at Idaho's public schools.

The wild and the West collide

The debate over endangered species in Idaho seems likely to only become more shrill in the new year, with the various parties involved — states, environmental groups and the federal government — finding little common ground.

Talks among three states and the U.S. Interior Department don't seem to be making headway toward graduating wolves from the endangered species list. Meanwhile, attempts by members of Congress to circumvent the Endangered Species Act and remove them legislatively have enraged environmentalists, some of whom in turn now seek to return wolves to all of the lower 48 states.

Meanwhile, a judge should rule on whether a federal plan goes far enough to save salmon in the Snake and Columbia rivers. Local working groups striving to keep the greater sage grouse off of the endangered list — also a listing with great ramifications for the West — are at risk of losing their funding in an earmark-averse Congress. And in the shadow of the larger battles, smaller debates continue over species such as an obscure plant in the southwestern desert.

The shifting face of Twin Falls

In 2011, Twin Falls will be bigger, wider and decidedly more northern.

Bigger are the new St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center, the College of Southern Idaho's continued aggressive expansion of programs and facilities, and — hopefully — the area's economy, bolstered by new businesses like the C3 call center and the country's slow crawl out of the recession.

Wider are city streets including Falls Avenue West, Washington Street North and Pole Line Road as it stretches along the Twin Falls Alternate Route. With Washington work and construction associated with the city's arsenic reduction project slated to wrap in 2011, motorists will soon traverse the city without having to greet those familiar orange cones.

And more northern is continued city development. The new hospital, the Twin Falls Center for the Arts and new businesses are set to take prominence along Pole Line in 2011. It's more growth in an area that in 2010 gave Twin Falls one of its toughest restaurant tables to land — Buffalo Wild Wings on UFC fight night.

Cities flex their muscles

Magic Valley cities confidently pushed into the public realm in several ways this year, prompting debate over the role of government that's only just begun.

Burley officials grappled with whether to force residents to pay for sidewalk repair in certain parts of town, while overwhelmingly dumping a proposal to further restrict the number of dogs residents can own. Jerome passed an ordinance governing what buildings along its main roads can look like, rules rarely seen locally outside places like the Wood River Valley. And Twin Falls banned smoking near park playgrounds, invoked obscenity laws in a scrape with a purple smoke shop and ushered in new laws for bicyclists — though it balked at requiring children to wear bike helmets.

Of course, other towns have greater issues at hand. A budget deficit totaling hundreds of thousands of dollars forced Wendell to fire one-third of its city staff and cut back services, possibly just the start of its budget ramifications.

ACLU seeks to ban Idaho prison practices

13 assaults allegedly result from guards 'popping' open wrong cell doors

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press

BOISE — The American Civil Liberties Union said Thursday that practices at an Idaho prison that include guards opening the wrong cell doors and allowing inmate-on-inmate attacks have caused violence at the facility and should be immediately banned.

The ACLU also said in a motion filed Thursday in U.S. District Court that victims of the assaults at the Idaho Correctional Center are routinely written up for defending themselves during the attacks, a consequence that can jeopardize their eligibility for parole and access to treatment and education programs.

Attorneys for the ACLU are seeking a preliminary injunction on behalf of inmates to immediately ban both practices at the prison run by the Corrections Corporation of America.

The motion for a preliminary injunction is part of larger lawsuit over claims of violence at the prison.

"We want to try to eliminate as much suffering as quickly as we can, these two issues lent themselves to that," said Steven Pevar, an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union.

The ACLU is representing inmates who sued CCA in March, saying the Idaho lockup is so violent it's known as "gladiator school" and prison workers used inmate-on-inmate violence as a management tool, then refused to provide X-rays to injured prisoners as part of a cover-up scheme.

CCA has denied the claims. Company spokesman Steve Owen declined to comment on the latest legal filing, saying instead lawyers would respond to the claims in court documents rather than the media.

The motion seeks to block the prison from issuing disciplinary reports to inmates who are acting in self defense and calls for an investigation into claims that the guards are opening the wrong cell doors.

"The first thing you have to do is find out what the problem is," Pevar said. "Is it a mechanical problem, or are people just being careless?"

Since July 2009, 13 assaults have resulted from prison guards opening, or "popping," the wrong cell doors in areas where violent prisoners are kept, allowing inmates to attack other prisoners, attorneys for the ACLU say in a brief supporting their motion for a preliminary injunction.

Guards either mistakenly or deliberately opened the wrong doors and allowed the assaults, the ACLU says.

Four of the 13 of the assaults allowed because of "popping" cell doors occurred under warden Timothy Wengler, who has been with private prison company since 1996 and was appointed interim warden at the Idaho facility after the ACLU sued over claims of brutal inmate-on-inmate violence, ACLU attorneys say.

Former Idaho warden Phillip Valdez was reassigned after the lawsuit was filed.

Attorneys for the ACLU claim in court documents that Valdez created the two policies they are seeking to ban, and that Wengler continues to implement them as interim warden.

"One of two things must be true: Valdez and Wengler either failed in their duty to investigate the causes of these incidents, or they failed in their duty to fashion an appropriate solution," ACLU attorneys say.

The most violent of the "popped" cell door assaults occurred on Aug. 10, when a guard opened some 20 doors and released at least 20 prisoners who then assaulted four rival gang members, sending two to the hospital, according to the brief filed by ACLU attorneys.

AROUND THE WEST

ARIZONA Storms dump heavy rain, snow on West

BELLEFONT — A winter storm pummeled the western U.S. on Thursday with fierce wind gusts, heavy rain and more than 2 feet of snow, closing hundreds of miles of roads and dumping a snowy mix of precipitation on the edges of Phoenix.

Officials closed a road into Yosemite National Park in California after a rock the size of a dump truck tumbled onto the road, and strong winds created snow dunes on rooftops, front yards and streets across mountainous areas of Arizona.

Snow and ice forced an hours-long closure of the two major thoroughfares in northern Arizona, stranding motorists south of Flagstaff and the Grand Canyon. People in Phoenix were stunned at the sight of snow-type flurries that the National Weather Service said were a combination of hail and snow that melts before it hits the ground.

Drivers wanting to know how to get around the storms overwhelmed an Arizona hotline that provides automated updates on road conditions. State Department of Transportation spokesman Timothy Tait said the line took in 1.2 million calls in a 12-hour span Thursday.

Dorothy Brooks, of Dallas, was creeping along Interstate 40 at 20 mph on her way to Las Vegas, passing vehicles stuck on the side of the road, when she pulled into a Bellemont gas station to wait out the storm.

"It's devastating," she said, above the cry of a 9-month-old baby she was pushing through the aisles. "You can't call Mother Nature anyway. You never know when she's going to burst out."

The Silverton Mountain resort in Colorado reported 22 inches of snow, but only about 120 people were on the mountain because officials closed highways leading to the ski area for avalanche control and because of adverse conditions, resort co-founder Jen Brill said.

Daughter and wife of county official accused in sex case

PHOENIX — The daughter of a county supervisor has been arrested on suspicion of sexual misconduct with the same teenage boy that her mother is accused of sexually abusing over a three-year period, police said Thursday.

Rachel Katherine Brock, 21, was arrested Wednesday on three counts of sexual conduct with a minor and one count of transmitting obscene material as part of an ongoing investigation surrounding her mother, 48-year-old Susan Brock.

Both women were being held without bond at the Maricopa County jail.

In Rachel Brock's initial court appearance, acting attorney John Rock argued that the judge should free her on bond because there appeared to be no physical evidence to support any of the charges. Rock also said the teen would have been asked if he had been a victim of any other sexual abuse when Susan Brock was arrested in October.

"It appears that he's given contradictory information," Rock said. But the judge wasn't persuaded.

It was unclear whether Rachel Brock had a permanent attorney. Susan Brock's attorney, Pheron Hall III, did not immediately return a call seeking comment Thursday.

Rachel Brock is the daughter of Maricopa County Supervisor Fulton Brock, and Susan Brock is his wife of 28 years. The family lived together in the Phoenix suburb of Chandler but Fulton Brock filed for divorce after his wife's arrest.

IDAHO Wash. snowmobiler killed in avalanche

CALDER — Shoshone County officials say a 35-year-old Washington state snowmobiler has been found dead after an avalanche in north-central Idaho.

KHQ-TV reports Shane St. John of Farmington, Wash., went missing around 1:30 p.m. Wednesday about 20 miles northeast of Calder. A friend he was snowmobiling with noticed an avalanche with tracks leading into the slide, but none coming out.

The friend searched unsuccessfully for two hours before going into town for help. Rescue crews found St. John's body after 11:30 p.m.

The Shoshone County sheriff's office says avalanche conditions in the high country are very extreme with 4 to 5 feet of powder snow sitting on hard packed snow.

Scout troop rescued after snowstorm

POCATELLO — Power County emergency personnel rescued members of a Pocatello Boy Scout troop that became stranded when a snowstorm hit during a winter camping trip.

Sheriff Jim Jeffries says the seven boys and three adults spent the night at Lariat Cave west of Pocatello on Tuesday, but were unable to get out after an overnight snowstorm.

The leaders used a cell phone to call for help at about 11:30 a.m. Wednesday. Emergency responders uses GPS tracking to locate the group, but it took several hours to reach them.

Jeffries says the county road crew used road graders to cut a road within a mile of the troop's location, but had difficulty because the graders kept getting stuck. Rescuers reached the group at about 4:30 p.m. and they were brought out by snowmobile.

N. Idaho seniors, disabled bemoan bus service loss

COEUR D'ALENE — Public transportation officials say a bus service primarily used by seniors and people with disabilities in northern Idaho is being discontinued.

Clif Warren with the Community Transportation Association of Idaho says a loss in local money to provide the matching funds necessary for grants is what prompted the closure of the bus routes.

Employees say tax commissioner helped pal

E-mails, documents show Royce Chigbrow intervening on behalf of campaign backer

By John Miller
Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho Tax Commission Chairman Royce Chigbrow tried to use his position to help a friend embroiled in a dispute with a former business partner, agency employees allege in records obtained by The Associated Press.

The e-mails and documents are among records the Idaho attorney general's office collected in a separate lawsuit that alleges commissioners have given politically connected people secret tax deals. They describe how Chigbrow intervened on behalf of Benton "Skip" Hofferber, an Idaho businessman who supported Chigbrow's unsuccessful 2006 run for state controller.

Hofferber is fighting with his former employer, Boise Food Service, after being fired in October 2009.

Tax Commission employees say that one month later, Chigbrow started summoning them to his office to provide information to Hofferber about the company's tax problems. Chigbrow met with Hofferber about the case at a private Boise dining club, inappropriately handled the company's cashiers checks, and tried to block a refund after Boise Food Service had brought its taxes current, according to the documents obtained under Idaho Public Records Law.

In an e-mail response to the AP, Chigbrow, an accountant appointed to his post in 2007 by Republican Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter, said he has always sought to minimize conflicts of interest.

"On occasion, I receive questions from taxpayers or tax preparers I am acquainted with," Chigbrow wrote

Dec. 15. "While I have forwarded these inquiries to employees of the Tax Commission, I have, in forwarding such items, never attempted to influence the final outcome or result."

Employees whose names were redacted from the documents contend otherwise. "I expressed my concern that this was a conflict of interest," one employee wrote.

Tax Commission employees have declined requests to speak about the issue on the record.

The AP relied on the same records for a Dec. 17 story about employees' concerns that Chigbrow helped clients of his son's accounting firm.

In this case, Hofferber, who donated $100 to Chigbrow's 2006 campaign, didn't return a message left this week through his attorney.

Hofferber sued his former business partner last year, saying he'd been fired in "bad faith" from Boise Food Service, the owner of nine Sonic Drive-In franchises in southwestern Idaho. Hofferber contends majority owner Joseph McGivney fired him to convert Hofferber's 30 percent stake for "a fraction of its value," according to a lawsuit filed Dec. 18, 2009, in state court.

A month earlier, on Nov. 20, a Tax Commission employee described being called to Chigbrow's office. Hofferber was there, wanting to know what collection action was being taken on delinquent taxes; he was interested in buying the company, according to one employee's notes.

"I asked if he was a responsible party and he said he had been at one time, but was removed as an officer in October," the Tax Commission employee wrote. "I told him I couldn't talk to him about specifics of this company."

On Dec. 1, the same Tax Commission employee described a phone call from Chigbrow.

"He said Skip (Hofferber) had called him," the employee wrote. "I told him (Chigbrow) that he needed to tell Skip to back off, because I couldn't tell him anything."

A forced collection against Boise Food Service began in December — on Chigbrow's orders, Tax Commission e-mails indicate.

"The chairman said he didn't want to mess with this anymore, and to go ahead with the levy," according to an employee's Dec. 22 e-mail.

Four months later, another Tax Commission employee reported receiving two company cashier's checks from Chigbrow, one for $30,097 and another for $270. According to records and an interview with McGivney, the checks came from Hofferber during a lunch meeting at Boise's exclusive Arid Club.

"The chairman directed us to hold them to apply to the account only if we didn't have any levy source to get the funds," another employee wrote in notes about the case.

State law requires checks be deposited within 24 hours, but the employee said he followed Chigbrow's direction and placed them in his desk for safe keeping.

Meanwhile, McGivney reported the checks stolen. On April 21, 2010, Boise police Detective Brad Thorne called the Tax Commission to see if the agency had the checks.

No charges were filed. Thorne didn't return a phone call from the AP seeking comment.

McGivney, a Gig Harbor, Wash., businessman who sought bankruptcy protection this month, said Tuesday that he learned during Thorne's investigation that Hofferber and Chigbrow had been meeting to discuss the company.

Hofferber shouldn't have had access to the money because he'd been fired months earlier, McGivney said.

"They had cut a deal at the Arid Club, and this guy from the Tax Commission was holding the check in his desk," McGivney said he was told by the detective and Tax Commission employees. "Then, I knew that something was up."

After the police probe, Chigbrow directed that the checks be credited to Boise Food Service's account, according to Tax Commission employees. With the taxes now current, however, employees say the chairman sought to block a $29,442 refund.

In response, the Tax Commission's deputy attorney general advised against a credit lock.

"The Commission must refund the excess amount," according to an attorney general's May 3 e-mail.

Chigbrow disagreed, according to an employee's e-mail two days later. "Until we hear further, let's keep the credit lock in place pursuant to the chairman's instructions," the employee wrote.

Eventually, the money was applied to the company's April tax bill, records show.

Chigbrow, who declined to respond to further questions from the AP this week, wrote Dec. 15 that he never instructed employees to block the refund.

"I categorically deny ever directing staff to put a credit lock on any money," Chigbrow said. "I further deny disregarding legal advice to the contrary."

Mark Warbis, a spokesman for Gov. Otter, didn't immediately return a phone call seeking information about whether the administration was looking into Tax Commission employees' concerns about Chigbrow.

Murkowski declared winner of Senate race

JUNEAU, Alaska (AP) — Sen. Lisa Murkowski was officially named the winner of Alaska's U.S. Senate race Thursday, following a period of legal fights and limbo that lasted longer than the write-in campaign she waged to keep her job.

Gov. Sean Parnell and Lt. Gov. Mead Treadwell, who oversees elections, signed the paperwork certifying her win in the hotly contested race.

"It's done," Treadwell said after penning his last signature in front of cameras in Parnell's office.

The paperwork was expected to be hand-delivered to Washington, D.C., by state Division of Elections Director Gail Fenumiai to guard against delays that could keep Murkowski from being sworn in with her colleagues on Wednesday.

With certification, Murkowski becomes the first U.S. Senate candidate since Strom Thurmond in 1954 to win a write-in campaign.

The official vote tally certified Thursday showed her margin of victory over her nearest opponent, Republican rival Joe Miller, was 10,252 votes.

"The voters have spoken. The courts have confirmed their voice," Parnell said.

South-central Idaho is taking care of its own

It's a wonder that Magic and Wood River Valley nonprofit organizations — critical to the survival of thousands of your neighbors — are faring as well as they are in this tough economy.

Consider this: In 2008 and 2009, per capita personal income in Idaho declined 4.1 percent, although it has rebounded slightly since. That's $1,362 for every man, woman and child in Idaho.

Closer to home, there are still 8,100 people — a number equivalent to the population of Hailey — unemployed in the Magic and Wood River valleys.

Notwithstanding, take a look at how the Twin Falls Salvation Army — one of the Magic Valley's most critical nonprofits because of the number of people it assists — is doing.

The Salvation Army raised $9,000 more than last year in holiday season red kettle donations alone. Money from the kettles, which added up to more than $86,000 this year, will be used to keep the lights on, pay administration and utility costs, and provide services to those who ask for help.

Salvation Army Maj. Ed Patterson said many people end up giving in-kind donations after the holidays are over. He said Monday that canned food items were lining the hallways and are great gifts if people can't afford to give money.

It could have been much worse for the nonprofit, which helps between 175 and 200 people a day through its summer day camp and after-school programs, weekday noon meals and welfare assistance programs. In September, Magic Valley Bank sponsored a fundraising dinner and auction that erased $17,000 of $26,000 budget shortfall in the Christian outreach organization's budget.

In December, another fundraiser sponsored by Women of Worth collected $8,000 for Twin Falls' Mustard Tree Clinic, a faith-based nonprofit run by health care providers that serves folks without health insurance. Mustard Tree helped more than 3,500 people this year but recently had to close down its women's clinic on Wednesday nights and has ceased all lab work due to a funding shortfall caused by loss of grant money.

In hard times, south-central Idaho has been remarkably generous.

The private sector will be called upon to do more of the same in the year ahead, and Magic Valley Bank's efforts on behalf of the Salvation Army set a great example. The bank organized a dinner and auction, more than $20,000 in prizes were auctioned off and MVB matched up to $5,000 of the proceeds.

If other Magic and Wood River Valley businesses, like MVB, “adopted” a struggling nonprofit, it would go a long way toward meeting needs that are only going to grow in the year ahead.

Twenty-three thousand of your neighbors — 13 percent of south-central Idaho's population — live below the poverty line, meaning that a family of four earns $22,050 a year or less. And between Glenns Ferry and Malta and from Ketchum to Hollister, 18,311 kids qualify for free or reduced-price school lunches because their family incomes are low; that's 58 percent of the public school students in south-central Idaho.

All of which presents a daunting challenge in an era of limited resources, but our communities have more than risen to the occasion.

Our view:
 Even with fewer resources, the communities of the Magic and Wood River valleys have kept critical charities afloat.

What do you think?
 We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Yes, Ed, there are still heroes among us

When does football become more than a sporting event? It's not when the president comments on the redemption of a player who served prison time for a vicious felony. That's a slow news week. Nor is it when a former Super Bowl quarterback crudely hits on a young woman not his wife or girlfriend. That's an even slower news week.

Timothy Egan

But when a game that was supposed to be played in a face-lacerating blizzard by bare-armed behemoths is postponed because of the weather, then it's an affront to national character.

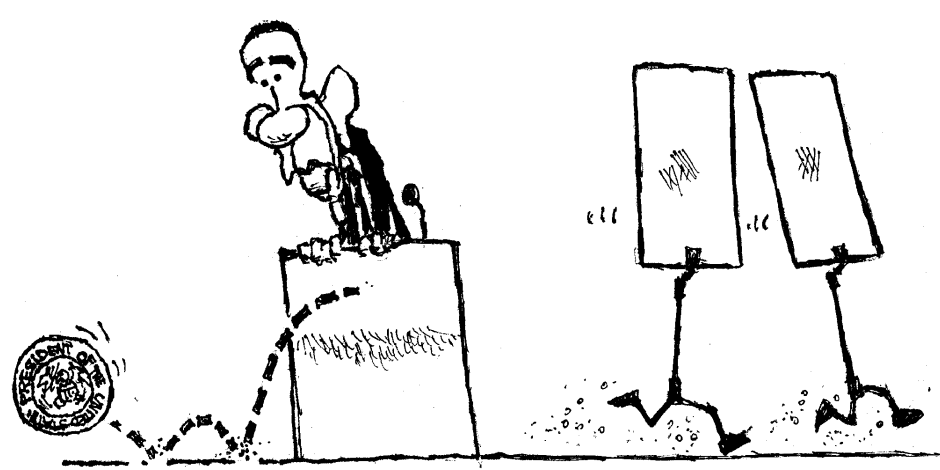

“My biggest beef is that this is part of what's happened in this country,” said Ed Rendell, the outgoing governor of Pennsylvania. “We've become a nation of wusses. The Chinese are kicking our butts in everything.”

A miserable trade balance. Loss of manly essence. Decline of the republic. All of this because the game between the Philadelphia Eagles at their adequate outdoor stadium and the visiting Minnesota Vikings was moved when the big snowstorm hammered the East Coast. Rendell was just getting warmed up.

“If this was China, do you think the Chinese would have called off the game? People would have been marching down to the stadium, they would have walked and they would have been doing calculus on the way down.”

Calculus! Don't those Chinese even pause for a bratwurst or a sip of beer at pregame revelries? And what kind of a tailgate party would that be?

Rendell's comments in a radio interview, coming at a time when sloth is the seasonal mode and decline talk is a subtext of ragged economic blues, set off a lot of people.

The most articulate of scolds can warn about how far behind the rest of the world our students are falling, about the frightening implications of a three-fold rise in child obesity, about the importance of a work ethic coupled with American creativity — and the country is barely stirred.

But let someone suggest that a football game can't be played in the snow, and you've got real trouble.

It's bad enough that a winter storm can ruin a politician. Witness the hit to his reputation that Gov. Chris Christie of New Jersey took for leaving his state to misery while he vacationed in Disney World. Or the painful sight of Mayor Michael Bloomberg getting sarcastic — “I regret everything in the world,” he snapped — in response to criticism.

Now, snow is weighing down a game that is already far too-burdened with larger implications. We don't walk 10 miles to school in a blizzard anymore, but we do put on face paint and display bare torsos while watching appliance-sized men who make more in a week than most Americans earn in a year bash each other. It's diverting, and — aside from a few atrocious losses by my hometown Seahawks, the Barney Fifes of football — mostly rewarding.

What's truly wimpy is telling everyone to go to the mall and shop while putting two wars on the credit card and committing countless lives to mortal danger. This advice by then-President George W. Bush gave the majority of the country no reason to sacrifice — just chant “USA!” and wave some flags.

What's wimpy is Sarah Palin equating Nanny State intolerance with Michelle Obama's campaign to get children to exercise more and improve their diets. Eat smores, Palin implored, as a patriotic act of defiance to Big Government. This assertion is an affront to every genuine act of political disobedience, let alone the epidemic of childhood obesity.

Rendell is a gregarious, likable politician, and I'd hate to see him muzzled. But he's wrong to equate one delayed football game with the collapse of American values. For that matter, can we just liberate football as a stand-in for anything other than football? Sure, the suits who run the league are killjoys for moving the Sunday night contest. Anyone who's played pickup football in the snow knows the lasting thrill of catching a pass between snowflakes. And some of the game's greatest contests — the Ice Bowl in Green Bay, the Snow Bowl in New England — would be nothing without the weather.

But a nation of wusses? Sorry, governor. Talk to the clerk in Queens who walked five miles in the snow to his job at Sears because his bus never came. Or the elderly people, shivering without power, forced to cut pills in half because they couldn't get out and refill their life-saving prescriptions. Or the hundred or so commuters who endured a night of chill and fear when their subway train was stranded in the blizzard. “No panic, no yelling, just understanding,” one fellow sufferer said of the ordeal.

What the epic winter storm at year's end showed was the overlooked and the routine: a nation of quiet heroes.

Dismantle health care law, piece by piece

The American people have consistently said they fear government control over their health-care choices. And the more they learn about the health-care reform law approved earlier this year, the more they realize their fears are justified.

A strong majority objects to the mandate that citizens must have health insurance or pay penalties. Business owners are angry about having to file 1099s with the IRS to report purchases from every vendor totaling more than $600 in a year. And seniors object to new regulations leaked over Christmas similar to those that sparked fears of “death panels” in town hall meetings last summer.

President Obama has talked about the early provisions of the law to help people with pre-existing conditions get insurance, to allow 26-year-olds to stay on their parents' policies, and to make preventive care free to patients. Many people now believe these and other early steps constitute the reform legislation.

But there is more to come — $500 billion in new taxes,

Grace-Marie Turner

$575 billion taken out of Medicare, job-killing mandates on businesses and a mountain of new regulations that are sure to drive up health costs.

While the House will likely pass a bill to repeal the legislation early next year and the Senate might even follow, there is virtually no chance the president would sign it. Therefore, the only way Congress can protect people from this unpopular law is to try to dismantle it, piece by piece.

Congress can keep what works, including some of the early popular provisions, without turning our health sector over to the federal government. Here are three first steps:

● Repeal the individual mandate: A CNN poll conducted Dec. 17-19 shows that 60 percent of those surveyed oppose the mandate requiring everyone to have health insurance. Only 38 percent approved. But 100 percent of Americans will be affected.

It also is the focus of court challenges, with 21 states arguing the mandate is unconstitutional.

U.S. District Judge Henry Hudson of the Eastern District of Virginia ruled in mid-December that the mandate represents an “unchecked expansion of congressional power” that “would invite unbridled exercise of federal police powers.” He said it is “neither within the letter nor the spirit of the Constitution.”

The American people seem to agree. That is why this provision should top the list in the new Congress. The Congressional Budget Office estimates the required health insurance will cost up to $20,000 for a working family. And if we don't buy it, we will be fined. There are better ways to solve the problem of the uninsured that don't involve defying the U.S. Constitution.

● Repeal the 1099 requirement: This provision has nothing to do with health care but was added at the last minute to raise $17 billion to pay for its massive new entitlement spending.

The National Federation of Independent Business says this will bury small businesses in an avalanche of paperwork. Repeal is the only option.

● Revoke regulations: Rep. Earl Blumenauer, D-Ore., sponsored a provision in the health law to pay doctors to counsel Medicare patients about options for end-of-life care. But it was tossed out of the bill after town hall meetings erupted with fears of “death panels.”

Over Christmas, we learned through an e-mail leaked from Blumenauer's office that the administration is planning an end-run around the law: It will simply allow the sessions through regulation.

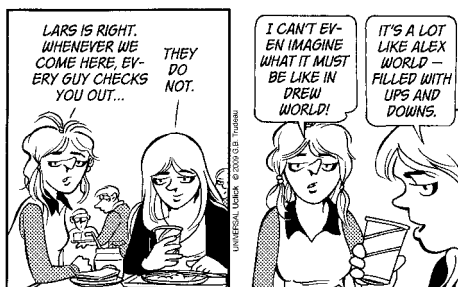

Seniors rightly fear there is a potential conflict of interest if the government is paying for end-of-life counseling and also for our end-of-life health care.

A cure for Senate dysfunction may be in sight

Set your watches to noon on Jan. 5. That's the first minute of the first hour of the first day of the new congressional session. And that is when the Senate can change its rules by simple majority, 51 votes, rather than the 67 needed otherwise.

A large group of Democratic senators, frustrated by the chamber's delay and obstruction, are preparing to use that brief window to challenge the filibuster. It should get interesting.

The Senate, long styled as the world's greatest deliberative body, much of the time could compete for most dysfunctional. When we see a burst of activity, as in this productive lame-duck session, it's easy to think the pace has picked up. Only next to a snail does a turtle look like Secretariat.

Consider: The 2009-2010 Congress saw 136 cloture motions — attempts to assemble 60 votes to break a filibuster — compared with 68 in 2005-2006 and just 54 in the half-century from 1921 to 1971.

Compounding the overuse of the filibuster is the practice of secret "holds." By tradition, any senator can quietly put his or her thumb on a pending measure, often a nomination offered by the president. These holds can pitch nominees into Kafkaesque limbo. As of last month, 150 nominees awaited votes. Washington insiders know this can cripple the executive branch and keep talented appointees from accepting government jobs.

Judicial nominations have reached a crisis point. The Alliance for Justice reports that there are 111 vacancies and that President Barack Obama has won confirmation of only 60 judges, compared with 100 for George W. Bush and 126 for Bill Clinton at the same point in their terms.

Filibusters and holds have had a profound effect on the work of Congress. The Senate hasn't passed any of the 12 appropriations bills for 2011. A proposal to require better disclosure of spending on political advertising was backed by 59 senators, yet failed to become law.

The filibuster once was rare, reserved for epochal battles, such as when senators talked all night, reading the phone book, to block civil-rights legislation. Major laws such as the one creating Medicare avoided a filibuster. Now, in a time of rigid party discipline conveyed by tweeted talking points, rules crafted for a gentler time are used to bring Congress to a halt.

This imposes a supermamajority requirement unprecedented in U.S. history. We routinely slip into saying, "The president needs 60 votes" in the Senate to win passage of this or that bill. If high-school students say on a test that the answer is 51, are they right or wrong?

Sixty isn't what America's founders had in mind. As Alexander Hamilton noted, requiring a supermajority substitutes "the pleasure, caprice, or artifices of an insignificant, turbulent, or corrupt junto, to the regular deliberations and decisions of a respectable majority."

The Constitution makes clear there are seven times when a supermajority is needed. Treaties, for example, need approval by two-thirds of the Senate. Normal legislation is supposed to be passed by a majority.

Defenders of the filibuster cite George Washington, who likened the Senate to a saucer that cools the hot coffee, presumably poured by the tempestuous House.

Be that as it may, the Senate under current practice throws the coffee in the trash. That can't be what our first president had in mind.

Some senators, especially younger ones, share the frustration.

Sen. Jeff Merkley, an Oregon Democrat who joined the Senate in January 2009, has proposed limits on the use of the filibuster. One of his ideas: filibustering senators should have to come out of their offices and actually hold forth on the Senate floor. Last week, all 53 Democratic senators returning in 2011 signed a letter to Majority Leader Harry Reid demanding action on these ideas.

This is the perfect time for reform. Democrats will have the majority in the next Senate. Republicans, confident after the last election, may hold the majority starting in 2013. We don't know who will be president then, either. Rules changes today could make it harder for liberals to obstruct conservative policies and nominees.

Usually, it takes 67 votes to change Senate rules. (Says who? Senate rules.) But when a new Congress starts, there's solid precedent to argue that the 67-vote requirement doesn't apply. As presiding officer of the Senate, two U.S. vice presidents — Democrat Hubert Humphrey and Republican Richard Nixon — have ruled that a majority is good enough.

Set your clocks — or at least program your DVRs to C-SPAN. Reality TV doesn't get any better.

A kind of Giving Pledge for the common citizen

The tax bill passed last month perpetuates the huge unfunded giveaways to the rich that have for a generation increasingly divided our nation. Rebuilding the American middle class requires tackling this growing divide head-on. If our politicians won't or can't, then ordinary Americans must and can.

Those who believe the tax deal gives too much to the top should devote at least some of their tax cuts to charitable causes that embody fairer policies and send a clear political message: We are in this together.

The need is pressing. Despite the recession's end, high unemployment and ongoing economic instability continue to inflict hardship on millions of workers and their families.

Meanwhile, Wall Street bonuses are rising again and the richest continue to prosper.

Our broken political institutions are blocking an adequate public response. The tax deal has some good elements. The payroll tax holiday will boost employment (but it could also create risks for Social Security's long-term standing). The extension of unemployment benefits, so vital for the jobless and for encouraging a fragile recovery, should never have been controversial. But the Republican Party has insisted, as the price for begrudgingly permitting a modest amount of spending on recovery, that the rich get more than their fair share.

This is bad policy. The outsized tax cuts for the richest Americans and their heirs subvert the principle that those who benefit the most from the American project should pay the most to carry it forward — "not for class warfare reasons," President Clinton reminds us, but "for reasons of fairness and rebuilding the middle class in America."

These "reasons of fairness" apply especially in hard times, when those with the biggest cushions should take on a commensurate share of the burdens. When political institutions use taxes paid by all to bail out institutions that are perceived to benefit only the wealthy few, our sense of shared fate is threatened. The economy looks less and less like a common project and more and more like an exclusive party to which only some Americans are invited but for which all have to pay.

To their credit, many of the most fortunate Americans believe they should contribute more. The Giving Pledge campaign, started by two of the nation's wealthiest citizens, Warren Buffett and Bill Gates, encourages the super-rich to donate half or more of their fortunes to charity.

But that does not mean the rest of us have to sit by. Ordinary Americans can, as in earlier periods of national crisis, join together to invest our private actions with public meaning. We cannot make law or fiscal policy, of course. But we can and should act to mimic sound and decent policy.

Americans who can afford it should contribute the windfall that they receive because of the Republicans' obstructionist demands to charities that promote the programs — job creation, housing, education and the like — that they believe a just government should pursue.

This would be a kind of Giving Pledge for the common citizen, a way of converting the private generosity that so many Americans demonstrate into public solidarity. It would be an expression of the indelible idea embodied in our Pledge of Allegiance of "one nation, under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Pursued under this banner, philanthropy would become "political" in the best sense of the word.

We have created a website to assist in this task, GiveItBackforJobs.com. Yet we mean our effort only as a signal of the need for a broad national movement to protest the ongoing forfeiture of the public good for private gain.

Fewer join unemployment rolls; good sign for '11

Applications hit lowest level since July 2008

A help wanted sign stands in front of a Tent & Trails store in New York. The number of people applying for unemployment benefits has dropped to lowest level since July 2008.

Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Far fewer people are applying for unemployment benefits as the year ends, raising hopes for a healthier job market in 2011.

Applications are at their lowest level since July 2008, the Labor Department says. They fell to 388,000 in the week ending Dec. 25, bringing the four-week average to 414,000. Until mid-

October, the four-week average had been stuck above 450,000 most of the year.

Economists say the number of people applying for unemployment benefits predicts where the job market will go over the next few months — so much so that they use this data to help forecast economic growth.

“We’re starting to see a pickup in job growth,” says Conference Board economist Kenneth Goldstein.

“We may even get to a point, conceivably by spring, where the consumer is going to say that it no longer feels like we’re still in a recession.” He expects the economy to generate 100,000 to 150,000 jobs a month by spring, up from an average 86,500 a month in 2010.

That’s an improvement, but still not enough to cause big drop in the unemployment rate. To Paul Kasriel, chief economist at Northern Trust, fewer people applying for unemployment benefits suggests the unemployment rate will slip from 9.8 percent in November to 9.7 percent early next year; that would mean about 150,000 fewer unemployed.

The Conference Board’s Goldstein says the unemployment rate might actually rise for a few months as an increase in job openings lures even more job seekers back into the labor market. He doesn’t expect the unemployment rate to start dropping until mid-2011 and says it will finish the year

LOOKING FOR A GOOD SIGN

Regulators lured into private sector

Top banks, law firms recruit workers with gov’t experience

By Zachary A. Goldfarb
The Washington Post

The president’s budget director is joining Citigroup.

The New York Federal Reserve Bank’s derivatives expert is joining Goldman Sachs.

And numerous investigators from the Justice Department and Securities and Exchange Commission are joining Wall Street’s top law firms.

The vast overhaul of financial regulation and the renewed intensity of investigations into white-collar crime has been a boon for regulators, prosecutors and financial policymakers looking to cash in on their government experience.

Prominent officials from the White House, Justice Department, SEC and other agencies have been walking through the proverbial revolving door in recent months and into the offices of top banks and law firms in Washington and New York.

Lawyers making the move can often expect their income to go from less than $200,000 to $500,000 or more, legal recruiters say.

Government agencies have conflict-of-interest rules. But the number of officials entering the private sector invariably raises the question of how the promise of a lucrative job affects someone’s thinking while in public service.

Former budget director Peter Orszag, who stepped down as a key member of President Barack Obama’s economic team this year, is joining Citigroup as vice chairman of global banking. The bank received tens of billions of dollars in federal aid to weather the financial crisis. Orszag will be a member of a special team of top bankers who nurture the firm’s relationships with major clients.

Goldman has picked up Theo Lubke, a former official of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York who helped oversee the agency’s work on the derivatives market. Goldman was paid billions of dollars by American International Group for contracts it had with the bank. The New York Fed and the Treasury bailed out AIG.

Lubke will be working in Goldman’s securities division as chief regulatory reform officer, working with top executives to manage the implementation of the signature regulatory reform law, Dodd-Frank.

Realtors and builders hopeful for gains in new year

By Blair Koch
Times-News writer

Although some of her colleagues felt lucky to close on two or three homes during all of 2010, Faye Emerson sold 13 homes.

“My sales totaled $2 million in property. It was a very, very good year for me,” said Emerson, a Realtor with Gem State Realty. She isn’t letting news about falling home prices across the country and much of south-central Idaho get her down.

“You can look at your glass half empty or half full,” said Emerson, president-elect of the local Women’s Council of Realtors. “If I’m all ‘doom and gloom,’ my clients are going to be that way too. There are still opportunities.”

As fewer people purchase homes and foreclosures continue, home prices are dropping in the nation’s largest cities. Prices are expected to continue declining through the new year.

The Standard & Poor’s/Case-Shiller 20-city home price index released

A view of a for sale sign in west Twin Falls on Thursday.

Tuesday fell 1.3 percent in October from September. The 20-city index has risen 4.4 percent from its April 2009 bottom. But it remains 29.6 percent below its July 2006 peak.

Continuing unemployment and tight credit are keeping buyers from entering the market, despite low mortgage rates.

“People are sitting tight,” said Jim Barker, owner of Barker Realty in Buhl.

Government tax credits gave the industry a boost early in the year. After they expired in May, prices have dipped.

According to the Intermountain Multiple Listing Service website, www.intermountainmls.com, home prices throughout Twin Falls County dipped over the past year, falling from an average $158,100 in the third quarter of 2009 to $133,300 at the same time this year. Sales volume has decreased from 242 sold in the third quarter of 2009 to just 160 properties during the same months this year.

In Mini-Cassia, the average selling price of homes during the third quarter dropped nearly 5.4 percent, to $128,600. In Jerome County, the average price during that period was at $128,400, compared with $145,500 a year earlier.

In the city of Buhl, properties are selling for more than a year ago but well below their 2007 peak; prices increased nearly 11 percent in this year’s third quarter over 2009, with an average selling price of almost $112,000.

Professors start website for rich to give back tax cuts

By John Christoffersen
Associated Press writer

NEW HAVEN, Conn. — Upset the federal government recently extended tax cuts for the rich, three professors at Yale and Cornell universities have created a website that encourages wealthy Americans to give their tax savings to charities and send a political message in the process.

The professors started giveitbackforjobs.org to allow Americans “who have the means” to calculate what their tax cut would be and donate that amount to a charity.

“Extending the tax cuts for the very wealthiest Americans is frankly unconscionable,” Yale Law School professor Daniel Markovits said Wednesday.

With the website’s help, “donors can pledge their money to support the kinds of programs that will help families, create jobs, and set the country moving toward a just prosperity,” the professors said in announcing the initiative.

Markovits, Yale political scientist Jacob Hacker, and Cornell law professor Robert Hockett started the campaign. Hacker is co-author of “Winner Take All Politics: How Washington Made the Rich Richer — and Turned Its Back on the Middle Class.”

The three recommend giving to groups such as Habitat for Humanity, Children’s Aid Society and Salvation Army that they say promote fairness, economic growth and a strong middle class. They say the contributions could replicate good government policy and, in effect, draft the government as a funding partner when the donation is tax deductible.

“The collective giving together becomes almost a kind of shadow fiscal policy,” Markovits said.

Congress approved the tax package and President Barack Obama signed it into law this month. It retains Bush-era tax rates for all taxpayers, including the wealthiest, a provision Obama and congressional liberals opposed. Proponents of the tax cuts argued that raising taxes in a fragile economy would hurt small businesses and job growth.

The professors say other features of the tax package, including a payroll tax cut and an extension of unemployment benefits, are acceptable but the overall package does not go far enough to help the middle class and doesn’t expect enough of those who can afford to give the most.

YESTERDAY ON WALL STREET

Stocks dipped Thursday as investors locked in their positions at the end of the year. While U.S. markets fell slightly, stocks are set to end 2010 on an upbeat note: The S&P 500 index and the Dow Jones industrial average are both up 14 percent for the year, after dividends, thanks to record corporate profits. The Dow is back to levels last seen in August 2008, prior to the heat of the financial crisis, while the S&P might just eke out the best December in 20 years. The Dow Jones industrial average was off 15.67 points, or 0.1 percent, to 11,569.7. The S&P 500 edged down 1.9, or 0.2 percent, to 1,257.88. The technology-focused Nasdaq composite index fell 3.95, or 0.2 percent, to 2,662.98. The week has been marked by thin trading. Thursday was considered by many to be the last trading day of note because even fewer traders are expected to show up on Friday, the last day of the year. Rising and falling shares were even on the New York Stock Exchange. Floor volume came to 507 million shares.

Woman who said she was 'Rosie' in WWII poster dies

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — When a photographer snapped Geraldine Doyle's picture in an Ann Arbor factory during World War II, the 17-year-old had no idea she would inspire others to contribute to the country's war effort.

Doyle said it took more than 40 years for her to learn that her image from that photo was placed on the illustrated "We Can Do It!" poster urging women to take on jobs traditionally held by the men fighting battles in Europe and the Pacific.

Doyle died Sunday in Lansing at age 86. A memorial service is scheduled for Jan. 8.

"She was definitely one of the Rosies," said Sandy Soifer, executive director of the Michigan Women's Historical Center and Hall of Fame, in referring to the fictional "Rosie the Riveter." That was the name given to women working in plants during WWII.

The image of the headscarf-wearing woman with the flexed bicep beneath a rolled-up shirt sleeve helped prompt scores of daughters, sisters and mothers to trade in the tools of housework for those of manufacturing and take jobs in plants across Michigan and the country.

"It's our belief that she is the model for the drawing that is most commonly used in the posters and on the products," added Soifer.

Doyle told the Lansing State Journal in 2002 that she didn't realize the illustrated face on the poster commissioned by the U.S. War Production Coordinating Committee was her own until 1984, when she saw a reproduction of it in Modern Maturity magazine.

"It was great for her when she finally learned about it," Doyle's daughter, Stephanie Gregg of Eaton Rapids, told The Associated Press. Gregg, 65, said her mother was "very glamorous" as a young woman.

The forgotten photo was taken in 1942 at a metal pressing plant about 33 miles southwest of Detroit.

"There were other Rosies. She said she was the model for that poster," said Gladys Beckwith, former director of the Michigan Women's Historical Center and Hall of Fame.

The poster was "symbolic of an active woman who was taking an active part in the war effort, and it was empowering for a woman to see that," Beckwith said.

AUSTRALIA Flooding affects 200,000 people

BRISBANE — More than 200,000 people have been affected by relentless flooding in northeast Australia, with the flood zone now stretching over an area bigger than France and Germany combined, officials said Friday.

Thousands of homes and businesses across Queensland state have been inundated with water after days of pounding rain caused swollen rivers to overflow. The entire population of two towns was forced to evacuate as water swamped their communities, cutting off roads and devastating crops.

Northeastern Australia often sees heavy rains and flooding during the Southern Hemisphere summer, but the scope of the damage from the recent downpours is extremely unusual, Queensland Premier Anna Bligh said.

"This is without a doubt a tragedy on an unprecedented scale," Bligh told Australian Broadcasting Corp. "We now have 22 towns or cities that are either substantially flooded or isolated because the roads have been cut off to them. That represents some 200,000 people spanning an area that's bigger than the size of France and Germany combined."

ISRAEL Former president Moshe Katsav convicted of rape

JERUSALEM — An Israeli court found former President Moshe Katsav guilty Thursday of rape, indecent assault and sexual harassment of female subordinates, the most serious conviction of a former top official in Israel's history.

The verdict handed down in a case that had riveted the Israeli public was hailed as an affirmation of the rule of law and the rights of women, as well as a sign of changing norms in a society that for decades tended to condone sexual advances by powerful men in government and the military.

The president, whose role is largely ceremonial in Israel, is the country's head of state and is supposed to serve as a unifying national symbol. Katsav, 66, served in the post from 2000 to 2007, and the crimes of which he was convicted included several committed during that period.

"This is a sad day for the State of Israel," Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said in a statement after the verdict.

But he added: "Today the court delivered two clear-cut messages: that everyone is equal before the law, and that every woman has exclusive rights to her body."

The three-judge panel at the Tel Aviv District Court rejected Katsav's alibis, saying his testimony, in which he denied the charges, was "riddled with lies."

Katsav was convicted of twice raping a senior aide in 1998, when he was tourism minister, once in his Tel Aviv office and two months later in a hotel room in Jerusalem. He was also convicted of sexually molesting the aide on another occasion.

MISSISSIPPI Kidney parole condition raises ethical questions

JACKSON — A debate is unfolding over an unusual offer from Mississippi's governor: He will free two sisters imprisoned for an armed robbery that netted $11, but one woman's release requires her to donate her kidney to the other.

The condition is alarming some experts, who have raised legal and ethical questions. Among them: If it turns out the sisters aren't a good tissue match, does that mean the healthy one goes back to jail?

Gov. Haley Barbour's decision to suspend the life sentences of Jamie and Gladys Scott was applauded by civil rights organizations and the women's attorney, who have long said the sentences were too harsh for the crime.

The sisters are black, and their case has been a cause celebre in the state's African-American community.

The Scotts were convicted in 1994 of leading two men into an ambush in central Mississippi the year before. Three teenagers hit each man in the head with a shotgun and took their wallets — making off with only $11, the sisters' attorney said.

TREND 2011

Finding fantasies and learning to sculpt

Get ready for an entertaining 2011. The coming year will bring new art classes for children to help supplement those affected by school budget cuts. Organizers of shows and festivals will hold off on raising ticket prices, and bands will shift from Myspace to Facebook. If you want to catch dinner and a show, you'll be able to see more dinner theater at venues both new and old.

And if it's all too much for you, you can escape into a fantasy role-playing game. They're huge in both the virtual world and traditional form.

So kick back and enjoy the next 12 months.

Haylie Lugo, 11, shows off her classmates' art to her brother Zack, 8, during a reception at the Springdale School of Art in Burley in May.

New art classes

Art funding for public schools may have been cut, but the classroom isn't the only place children can wield a paintbrush.

In January, you'll see many more art class choices for children, thanks to the new Twin Falls Center for the Arts. "Art of the Masters" classes for grades one through five will explore sculpture, fresco, cubism, cloudscares and portraits, and "Mommy and Me" art classes will teach children ages 3-5 about acrylic painting, watercolor, sculpture, pastels and charcoal.

The art center's offerings join other art classes for children, like the programs at Twin Falls Creative Arts Center — including Home School Art Club on Tuesdays and After School Art Club on Mondays — and painting classes at Burley's Springdale School of Art. Springdale also offers a summer day camp for children who want to learn how to paint and sculpt. And at a free Family Day in January, an origami artist will teach kids how to fold paper into real and mythical creatures at Sun Valley Center for the Arts in Ketchum.

Carolyn White, program director for Magic Valley Arts Council, said in a July interview that the council wanted to focus on children's art classes specifically because of budget cuts in public schools.

But they haven't forgotten about the adults. "We'll start out focusing on some of the younger groups," White said, then add other programs to the 2011 schedule.

Trading in the real world

The good news: You'll be seeing fewer Farmville posts crowding your Facebook wall. The bad news: They're going to be replaced by Cityville updates.

Simulation games like Farmville — in which users design a virtual farm and harvest digital produce — require users to log on frequently or lose their progress. Cityville, also made by Farmville creator Zynga, allows users to build a city and develop businesses.

And it's huge. In the month since its early-December release, Cityville has earned 16.8 million daily active users and 61.7 million monthly active users, according to AppData.com. Compare that with Farmville, which has dropped to 16.4 million daily users and 56.8 million monthly active users.

Digital role-playing games aren't the only hot pastimes. Jon Beckmon, owner of Beckmon's Gaming Paradise in Twin Falls, said traditional role-playing games — think Dungeons and Dragons — still bring faithful players to his shop, although fantasy card games, like Yu-Gi-Oh! and Magic: The Gathering have the edge in popularity. RPGs and fantasy card games draw players from 7 to 65 years old, he said.

So what's with the fantasy games? It's an escape from reality, Beckmon said. It also allows people to play together. "People cooperate as a group to accomplish things, generally speaking, in role-playing games," Beckmon said.

While virtual role-playing games are increasing in popularity, traditional book-based RPGs like 'Alternity' still have a solid fan base.

Ticket prices hold steady

For south-central Idaho entertainment lovers, it'll be easier to budget in 2011, as most major performances and festivals will hold ticket prices steady — including Sun Valley Center for the Arts, Magic Valley Arts Council and JuMP Co.

"We're at the lowest end we can afford to sell tickets at. It would be nice if we could lower it, but we've got to cover our expenses too," said Sandy Hacking, business manager for Dilettantes of Magic Valley and Magic Valley Little Theater. Both organizations may raise prices in 2012, in response to increasing costs, but directors and boards across the area know affordability is an issue for patrons.

"We felt like we didn't dare raise (prices)," said Oakley Valley Arts Council treasurer Jan Davis. "As long as it's running smoothly, we won't do that."

However, fewer sponsors are stepping up to support major events, including the now-cancelled Snake River Canyon Jam, previously Jazz in the Canyon.

"It ended up costing us money to put it on last year," said Shawn Barigar, president of Twin Falls Area Chamber of Commerce. He said sponsors weren't able to cover the event's $40,000 in expenses, and attendance was down — yet those who did come said ticket price wasn't a factor in their decision to attend. Arts on Tour has also lost some sponsors, said coordinator Camille Barigar, but not enough to endanger the annual series. Ticket prices are based on the cost of hiring each performer, and she said customer surveys have indicated there is a market for more expensive, very popular events like those in Boise or Salt Lake City (as much as $60 per ticket).

However, all the arts organizations said that while they attempt to keep prices low, they realize even the cheapest tickets are out of reach for some.

"The sad reality is the performing arts, while we try to do our best to make it affordable, we can't afford to see everything we want," Camille Barigar said.

Exhibits, lectures and films celebrate fantastical creatures

Times-News

The Sun Valley Center for the Arts' newest multidisciplinary project, "Creatures: From Bigfoot to the Yeti Crab," is a look at fantastical creatures — both imaginary and real — through the eyes of contemporary artists, filmmakers and scientists.

"Creatures" includes visual arts exhibitions in Ketchum and Hailey, lectures, films and classes for all ages.

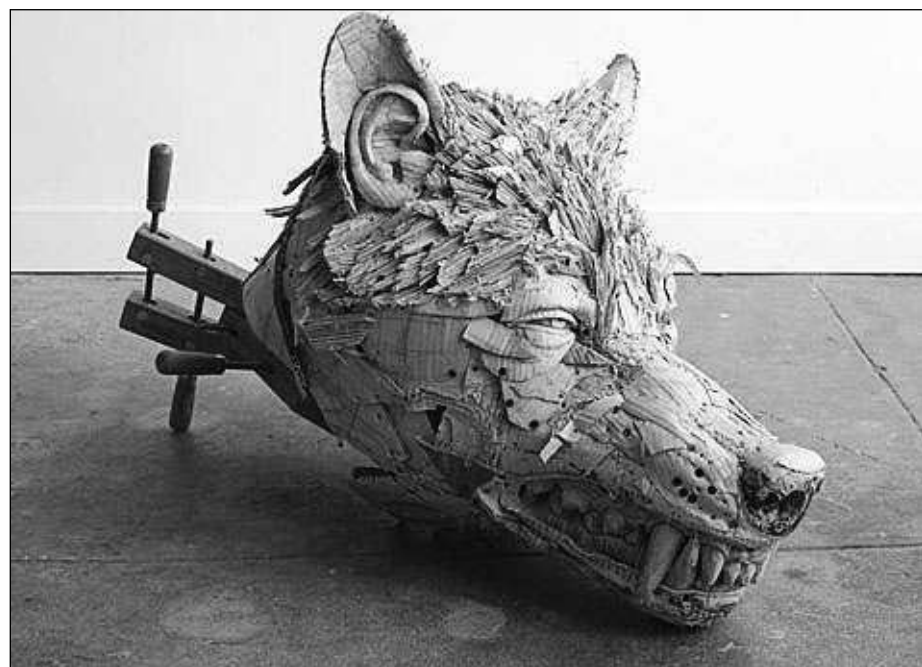

"This project explores the role of creatures both legendary and real that defy our common understanding of the natural world," the center's Courtney Gilbert said in a release. "We hope to get at both the universal questions about legendary creatures and how we project our fears, anxieties and fantasies onto them, as well as more local issues: habitat, biodiversity, the interdependence of species."

The public is invited to an opening reception for "Creatures" from 5:30 to 7 p.m. Jan. 14 at the center in Ketchum. Two of the artists featured in the exhibition, Karen Jacobsen and Richard A. Young, will speak about their work at 6 p.m. that day.

Jacobsen is a scientific illustrator who works alongside marine biologists to document the sea life they encounter on deep sea expeditions. For "Creatures," Jacobsen created an installation of her illustrations in the center's project room. From sea cucumbers to the Yeti crab, she depicts real creatures that seem the stuff of science fiction.

Young has created a body of work devoted to Godzilla, on display as part of the group exhibition in Ketchum and also in a solo show at the center's Hailey location, Jan. 21 through March 25.

The other artists in the Ketchum show are Scott Fife, who has created sculptures and drawings of both real and legendary creatures (for example, Tyrannosaurus Rex and a werewolf); Matthew Groves, who crafts fine ceramics of figures like Sasquatch and the Woolly Man (a creature of his own invention); Stephanie Metz, who makes needle-felted

Learn scientific illustration basics

Times-News

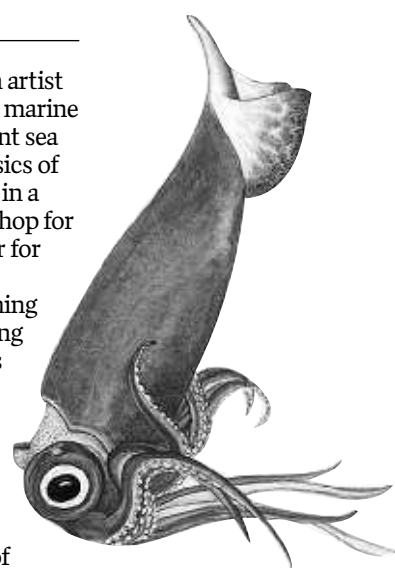

Karen Jacobsen, an artist who works alongside marine biologists to document sea life, will teach the basics of scientific illustration in a three-evening workshop for the Sun Valley Center for the Arts, Jan. 25-27.

Jacobsen says learning to draw means learning to see, when it comes to this precise art. Participants will work on observational skills and interpreting subjects. They'll experiment with a variety of media, working in black and white and color as they improve their biological drawing skills.

Though based in Hailey, Jacobsen travels the world on ships and in submersibles creating drawings and watercolor paintings of animals — some newly discovered — that live at the bottom of the ocean. She was the first person to record the Yeti crab and is among a few who have viewed deep ocean vents from a tiny submersible, a Sun Valley Center release said.

"Combining Art and Science: An Introduction to Scientific Illustration" meets 5:30-8:30 p.m. Jan. 25-27 at the center's Hailey location. Cost is $200 for Sun Valley Center members and $250 for others, plus a $25 supply fee.

Registration deadline is Jan. 11. Register: www.sunvalleycenter.org or 726-9491, ext. 10.

Ring in the new year with long tradition, short kilt

By Emily Katseanes
Times-News correspondent

Audrey Ettesvold wasn't too surprised three years ago when her father, Eric Ettesvold, started wearing a kilt and throwing heavy objects.

"He's actually done a lot of weird sports — he's done triathlons and the Escape from Alcatraz swim — so I wasn't really shocked," said Audrey, 17.

The surprise came when she got involved.

Now both Ettesvolds are committed competitors in Highland Games, a nine-event roster of traditional Scottish feats of strength. Audrey is currently ranked high nationally and second in Idaho for women. Both have traveled around the West for competitions.

But to ring in the new year, the Ettesvolds will bring the Scottish games back to Magic Valley with the Frozen Stones Challenge Highland Games in Shoshone Falls Park on New Year's Day. Registration begins at 10 a.m., with heavy events at 11 a.m. The fun is free for spectators.

"The whole point of this is to put on the first Highland Games in America in the new year," Eric said.

Most of the games involve throwing heavy objects as far as possible. Competitors hurl hammers and shot-put-like stones, lift and flip poles, and toss hay bales on pitchforks. The hammers and stones range in weight from 16 to 56 pounds, and the pole — called a caber — racks up at least 90 pounds.

Competitors participate in each event, and aggregate scores determine a winner. Judges also score on technique and sportsmanship.

"It's a lot of fun. It keeps you in great shape," Eric said. "I've never been stronger. Never."

This is the first year Twin Falls has hosted the New Year's event. In addition to the Ettesvolds and other members of the Scottish American Athletic Association, the event aims to draw an audience and new throwers. The event will have food, drink and fire pits, as well as judges on hand to teach safety and skills to the curious.

"It can be intimidating to see all the big guys and kilts and stuff, but everyone should try it once. It's amazing," Audrey said.

Though kilts are required for competitors, that shouldn't keep anyone from picking up a hammer: First-time hurlers are allowed to play without wearing plaid. Registration for anyone who will compete in a kilt is $30.

Register at saaaidaho.org in advance, or at the event.

The kilts won't keep the Ettesvolds away. Eric isn't even worried that it might be cold.

"On no. It's good Scottish weather," he said.

FUN TIMES, NOT DUSTY TOMES

Idaho libraries offer clubs, movies, Internet and more

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

Teens playing RockBand on Wii? Not a traditional scene in a library.

But today's public libraries around south-central Idaho are places to have fun, not just to research facts in fat reference tomes. There are movie nights, book clubs, DVDs as new as those in the video store, even an "Iron Chef"-type competition for teens.

And all of it is free.

"The library is a different place than it was 20 years ago; the atmosphere is lighter, it's more friendly," said Julie Woodford, director of the Burley library. Sure, you might still get hushed if you're too loud in the stacks, but those stacks are also a lot more crowded with readers.

In 2010, circulation at the Hailey library was up between 12 and 15 percent over the same months the previous year, and director LeAnn Gelskey said she expects the numbers to keep rising in 2011. Woodford described similar numbers in Burley — approximately 88,000 visitors in 2009, but about 105,000 in 2010 — and that library's annual budget for books climbed from $32,000 to $42,000 in the past few years.

That budget number — like similar ones across the region — is thanks to librarians and the organizations they apply to for grants anticipating the rising use.

"When you look back on history, how libraries are used across the country, it's very normal for people to turn to their library in an economic downturn," Woodford said. Her community passed two override levies supporting the library, in 2007 and 2009, and will vote on another in 2011. "We're in a very fortunate situation, because the Burley library board recognized a few years ago that more people were using the services of the library and that we were going to be in a pickle as far as the money it would take to run the library."

The Burley library has even offered $1 library cards to kids who aren't city residents to compensate for reduced book budgets at public schools.

Libraries have also been publicizing their programs more, touting the extent of the free resources available.

"We're just such a beautiful library for this town and have so much to offer, and people are just becoming aware of that," said Susan Ash, director of the Twin Falls library.

Her library is especially targeting teens and seniors as part of a five-year plan.

Younger Twin Falls patrons are enjoying movie nights, afternoons of video and board games, puppet shows and storytimes, and free filtered wireless is available in the building and outside in City Park. For older folks, the library has the largest collection of large-print books in the state, and classes introduce them to computers and the Internet.

Many libraries have MP3 players that can be checked out to listen to music or audiobooks. Similar players are preloaded with books. Music collections span a variety of genres and eras. That includes a new, huge collection of classical music donated to The Community Library in Ketchum in 2010, but also top-40 tunes — and library buyers are always glad to consider requests for specific titles in music, movies and books.

Librarians are also deliberating about how to serve those who use e-readers like Kindle or Nook, although the ability to check out an e-book on those devices may be a few years away at most libraries.

Gelskey said use of the Web and e-mail has been on the rise on library computers in Hailey, and other directors said they have seen the same.

"More people may have let their Internet service go at home as a way to conserve," Gelskey said.

In Burley, library classes on how to decorate on a budget and save electricity at home have also appeared to those trying to save a buck or two, and interns help younger kids with homework as part of a popular after-school program.

In Twin Falls, you can get Mango Languages' self-directed courses to teach you 25 world languages — or English if it isn't your first language. Wiring schemes, auto manuals, recent topographical maps of the area and genealogy resources are also available.

Even Magic Valley's smaller libraries have a lot of entertaining programming for patrons. In Buhl, for example, elementary-aged kids will get a taste of Hawaii in February, and talk mummies in April, while older kids play games and do crafts on Wednesdays and adults discuss novels and enjoy refreshments on Tuesday evenings.

Of course, popular fiction and nonfiction books continue to be libraries' most-used collections, and there are long waiting lists for bestsellers like the Stieg Larsson novels despite many copies being shared in the local library system. Books, it seems, will never go out of style as a way to spend leisure time, even if the way some people are enjoying them has changed.

"I would yell to our community, 'Don't think of us as an age-old facility with nothing but dusty books,'" Gelskey said. Ash echoed: "It's a great place to come, to the library, for entertainment."

Even if you do still hear a "shh" now and then.

The College of Southern Idaho's North Side Center is offering a "Ceramics 1" class for beginners, "Ceramics 2" for intermediate students and "Studio Ceramics" for those who have completed a year or more of study in ceramics.

In the first two courses, students explore the materials and processes used in making fired clay objects. You'll use various forming and firing techniques for functional pottery to expressive sculpture. "Studio Ceramics," in which instructor permission is required to enroll, allows more self-directed exploration.

The three courses, instructed by Brad Nebeker, will run concurrently 6-8:50 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays, Jan. 25 to March 17, at Wendell High School. The fee for any one course is $210 plus supplies; students 60 years or older pay only for supplies.

Buhl High School drama student Liz Peralta, left, rehearses alongside Raymond McLaughlin for the department's 2010 production of 'The Iliad, The Odyssey and all of Greek Mythology in 99 Minutes or Less.'

A little food with your theater

Feel like dinner and a show? In 2011, you won't have to go two different places to accomplish that.

Buhl High School and Phantom Pig Productions are putting together their 13th annual dinner theater production, "Murder's Bad But Monday Can Kill You," and Bliss High School is doing a dinner theater show of "The Boarding House." The second annual Magic Valley's Got Talent gala will once again feature dinner during competition, and at the Twin Falls Center for the Arts, its new theater is connected to Elevation 486, the fine dining restaurant that shares the building. Caterers can go straight from the kitchen to the theater.

David Blaszkiewicz, drama teacher at Buhl High and artistic director for West End Theater Co., said dinner theater is a great way to raise money for schools and theaters. Over the years, the Buhl thespians have served lasagna, trout and chicken, and sometimes get donated food to ease their costs.

"Especially if you make it a nice dinner, you can make a lot for your investment," Blaszkiewicz said. And it's a good deal for the audience, too. Instead of dropping $40 on dinner and another $20 on the show, a couple can get both for about $30 in Buhl.

For information on upcoming dinner theater shows — or any theater production — check out the calendar in each Friday's Times-News Entertainment section.

Connecting with fans online

No surprise here: Facebook and Twitter are making an impact on the local music scene.

Before, music makers took to Myspace to announce shows and hook up with fans. The band-friendly platform allows listeners to look for musicians by name, genre or location, and lets musicians post tracks.

Now, though, more bands are moving to Facebook — if not exclusively, then to connect more directly with listeners.

Local acts like Ethan Tucker, Under Wicked Sky, sOphia and Alpenflow use both Facebook and Myspace. Alpenflow, for example, uses Myspace to post photos, videos and tracks, and Facebook to keep users updated on upcoming events. And while they have more friends on Myspace, their Facebook friends are more active in posting and replying to band members' posts.

Venues are also using Facebook more often. Twin Falls bars Woody's and the Blue Room, for example, both have active pages that announce upcoming events.

Everest filmmaker takes listeners to the snowy top

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — George Mallory had an obsession to be the first man to step foot on top of Mount Everest.

And film producer Anthony Geffen has long had an obsession to find out whether his British hero made it or not.

Geffen has made a host of documentaries exploring the mysteries of such historical figures as King Tut and Cleopatra, many of which have aired on the Discovery Channel. And in 2007 he realized his dream to follow in Mallory's footsteps — an adventure that culminated in the film "The Wildest Dream: Conquest of Everest."

Geffen will talk about the making of the movie, which is on a short list of Oscar candidates, during a free presentation at 6 p.m. Wednesday at The Community Library, 415 Spruce Ave. in Ketchum.

"Whether George Mallory got to the top is not the most important thing for me. Mallory's story is what is remarkable," said Geffen, a Scotsman who is a regular visitor to Sun Valley.

Geffen began pursuing the story after Montana climber Conrad Anker found Mallory's body 800 feet below the top of Mount Everest in 1999, 75 years after Mallory's fateful attempt. Everything was there, except for a picture of Mallory's wife, Ruth, which Mallory had vowed to leave at the top.

Geffen assembled a crew of 60, including Ketchum's world-class kayaker and photographer Gerry Moffatt, also a Scottish native, to ascend the difficult, north, Tibetan side of the mountain.

At one point, it looked as if the film would never see the screen. Geffen had waited until the last of the climbing season so his crew could empty the mountain and remove the ropes and ladder bolting to the Second Step to allow Anker and British climber Leo Houlding to free-climb the 100-foot rock wall leading to the summit, recreating Mallory's climb to the summit.

Film producer Anthony Geffen, sunburnt and exhausted, films the impossible at 23,000 feet. He'll talk about the making of his movie 'The Wildest Dream: Conquest of Everest' on Wednesday in Ketchum.

Just as they reached that point, a monsoon loomed, threatening to end the climbing season.

What's more, nearly every crew member had succumbed to altitude sickness, forcing the crew to hire guides from other expeditions to do the rigging and use Sherpas to set up the camera shots 26,000 feet above sea level.

Moffatt was one of the high-altitude cameramen, given one chance to get each shot in an environment where taking too long to get the shot could have meant loss of limb or even life.

"We were there 73 days, an abnormally long period of time above 21,000 feet. And that's because we weren't there just to climb Everest but to produce an epic story," he said. "We started off with 12 to 15 cameramen and ended with three. But Anthony was an amazing, energetic director with a goal in sight. Nothing was going to stop the film."

Ketchum kayaker and photographer Gerry Moffatt was one of the high-altitude cameramen for 'The Wildest Dream.'

said. "What is important is that Mallory got higher than anybody else before him."

Moffatt — the first man to kayak all the river systems of Nepal's Himalayas, making first descents down a number of Bhutan's rivers in the process — agreed.

"Even just getting to where they found him made him a man amongst men; nobody summated for another 30 years," he said. "He was an incredible human being with a drive that has been lost in today's modern world. His approach to summit or die trying was very much a product of the Great Empire. You have to remember that these guys had just come through the Great War, so they were willing to risk more in pursuit of a great prize. It was a different day, a different mindset."

The film does not try to say definitely whether Mallory reached the top. "It will probably remain a mystery, and our intention was never to solve it," Geffen

"He is certain to charm and engage and inspire the audience with stories of his incredibly exciting filmmaking adventures this time, as well," she said.

This won't be the last tale he has to tell, either. Geffen is at work on a film concerning Antarctic explorer Ernest Shackleton and a 3D presentation designed to shed new light on dinosaurs.

And Moffatt is heading to India this week to film people who claim to have encountered the Yeti.

"I have a lot of respect for people who say they've seen the Yeti. And there is supposed to be a skull of a Yeti in a monastery in India," said Moffatt, who has worked as a backcountry ski guide in Sun Valley during the winter. "But this movie is about the mythology of a mythological creature. At the end of the day you either believe or you don't."

Change of plans: Magic Valley's Got Talent plans live auditions

Times-News

Problems uploading your audition videos to the Magic Valley's Got Talent website? You're not alone.

After hearing feedback from would-be performers about issues submitting auditions on magicvalleysgottalent.com, Lighthouse Christian Fellowship has scheduled live auditions at the church, 960 Eastland Drive, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Jan. 7-8. Show up ready to perform, and your act will be judged alongside the video entries.

Note that there won't be a crew on hand to help bands set up, so bands must still submit video auditions. Lighthouse will still accept video auditions on its website until Jan. 7. Information: 737-4667 or magicvalleysgottalent.com.

Astorian explorers' bicentennial inspires lecture series

Times-News

Two centuries ago, John Jacob Astor — then the world's richest man — read about the Lewis and Clark expedition and saw a way to make money.

What followed is the topic of Magic Valley Arts Council's free 2011 Brown Bag Lecture Series, presented in collaboration with the Twin Falls County Historical Preservation Commission on the last Friday of January, February, March and April.

All one-hour lectures begin at noon at the Twin Falls Center for the Arts, 195 River Vista Place. The theme: "Bicentennial Recognition of the Astorians in Idaho."

Astor knew that if he could get an expedition to the mouth of the Columbia River before the Canadians reached it, he would have control of the fur trade in the Far West, lecture series organizers wrote in a release.

Astor organized two expeditions in the race against the North West Co. of Canada — one by land and the other by sea. Astor's ship made the trip around Cape Horn and reached the mouth of the Columbia safely. But later the ship was destroyed by Indians, leaving the men stranded in Oregon country. Astor hired Wilson Price Hunt to lead the overland party in an ill-fated mission that was immortalized in Washington Irving's story "Astoria."

When members of the Hunt party reached the upper Snake River, they abandoned their horses and floated the placid water in dugout canoes. All went well until the group entered what is now Twin Falls County on Oct. 28, 1811. The Hunt party discovered that for some miles below where Milner Dam exists today, the Snake River drops dramatically into a narrow rock canyon. A canoe, steered by Antoine Clappine, struck a rock and split into several pieces. Five men were aboard the canoe; all but Clappine survived the wreck. The site of the disaster — upstream from Cauldron Linn east of Murtaugh — is now called "Clappine's Rocks." The raging waters forced the Hunt party to finish the trip on foot. The group, starving and desperate, finally arrived at the Pacific in February 1812.

That year, Astorian explorer Robert Stuart led a mission from the Pacific back to St. Louis. Along the way, Stuart made an important discovery: South Pass. This 20-mile wide gap in the Rocky Mountains of Wyoming allowed emigrant wagons to pass through the Great Divide. Stuart's discovery and his documentation of the Hunt party's route became the key to western migration on the Old Oregon Trail.

The four free, public lectures:

- Jan. 28: Steve Lubinski, "The Bonneville Flood"
- Feb. 25: Jim Woods, "The Indian Component"
- March 25: Ron James, "The Hunt Party and Robert Stuart"
- April 29: Jim Gentry, "The Geo-Political Significance of the Wilson Price Hunt Party Journey through the Magic Valley"

The top local sports stories for the past year

In the past 365 days, the Times-News covered a lot of important sports events and issues. As we look move into 2011, here's a look back at the top 10 local sports stories of 2010, as chosen by the sports staff, in no particular order:

Devil of a time

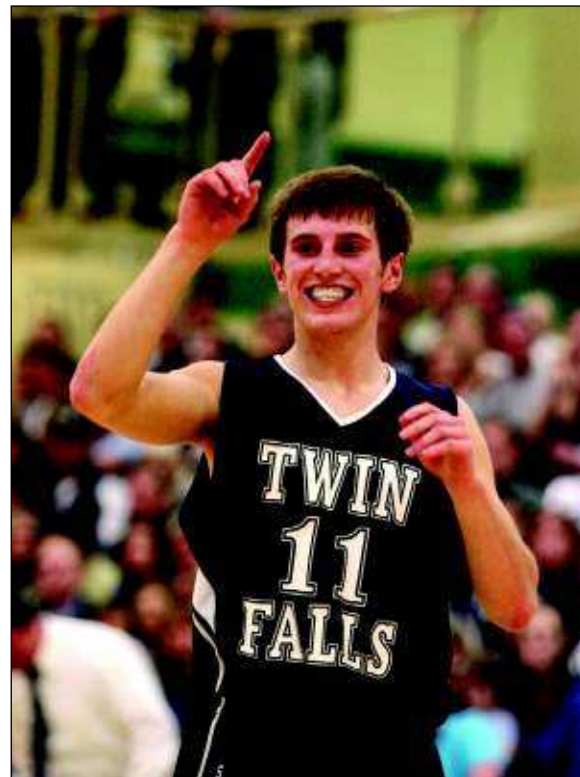

CSI swingman Carrick Felix created national headlines when on March 16 he accepted Duke men's basketball coach Mike Krzyzewski's first scholarship offer to a junior college player in his 30 years as the Blue Devils' head coach. The marriage was short-lived, however, as Felix asked to be released from his commitment two months later and headed home to play at Arizona State.

IHSAA

Schedule scale back

The Idaho High School Activities Association's response to a $128 million education funding cut from the Legislature wasn't swift but it was drastic. On June 9 the IHSAA voted to cut game limits in all but three sports. Only football, basketball and volleyball avoided the axe — football and basketball because the two are money-makers, and volleyball to satisfy Title IX.

Twin takes it all

Moving down to Class 4A and returning several key players from a third-place 5A squad proved to be the perfect recipe. Five seniors started and two more contributed significant minutes as Twin Falls posted a 22-2 record and won its first boys basketball championship since 2005-06 when the Bruins beat Moscow 52-37 March 6 at the Idaho Center in Nampa.

Broncos busted

Faced with its first true test since the season opener, Boise State found itself tied with Nevada with less than a minute to play Nov. 26. Kellen Moore's bomb to Titus Young positioned the Broncos for the win, but Kyle Brotzman missed a short field goal as time expired and another in overtime as Nevada ended BSU's Rose Bowl dreams.

All eyes on Harper

When the College of Southern Nevada visited Skip Walker Field March 5-6 for four games, fans flocked in record numbers to see one person: teenage sensation Bryce Harper. Harper, who at age 16 dropped out of high school and at 17 was the No. 1 pick in June's MLB draft, didn't disappoint, going 8-for-12 with a pair of home runs.

The Tribe speaks

On a cold, rainy Saturday in Ontario, Ore., the Buhl baseball team made good on two seasons of promise when it claimed its first state championship since 2001 with a 12-7 win over Payette on May 22. The Indians barely survived against Timberlake in the quarterfinals and dominated Fruitland in the semifinals on the arm of Washington State-bound J.D. Leckenby.

Capital Comeback

In the most hyped game in Boise State football history, the fifth-ranked Broncos faced a virtual road game against Virginia Tech Sept. 6 in Washington. Boise State led big early, fell behind late, and launched itself into the national championship discussion when Kellen Moore hit Austin Pettis in the back of the end zone with 1:09 left for the 33-30 win.

Winning for Austin

When Carey won his third football title in five years on Nov. 21, defeating Garden Valley 62-36, it was the culmination of an emotional ride. The Panthers dedicated their playoff run to the memory of sophomore teammate Austin Hennefer, who was killed in an early morning behind-the-wheel driver's training accident Oct. 26. Carey outscored its opposition 168-48 after the accident.

Knobbe's emotional run

The day after older sister Nicole died from injuries sustained in a car accident, a grieving Mark Knobbe shattered Declo's all-time single-game rushing record when he totaled 358 yards in a season-opening win over Aberdeen. It was the first of the season's many highlights for the two-way all-state star, who rushed for 2,241 yards and 23 touchdowns and recorded 152 tackles.

Fiesta Bowl fake out

For the first time, two non-automatic qualifiers were included in the Bowl Championship Series. In what was viewed by some as a cop-out by the BCS, the unbeaten mid-majors were paired against each other in the Jan. 4 Fiesta Bowl. Boise State used 60 minutes of physicality, and a late fake punt, to record its second BCS bowl victory, 17-10 over TCU.

CSI zones in for rout of Scottsdale

Times-News

For the first time in his 23 years as a basketball coach, Randy Rogers opened a game with his team playing a zone defense.

After Thursday's outcome, don't be surprised to see Rogers turn to the zone a bit more often.

The 12th-ranked College of Southern Idaho women's basketball team held host Scottsdale (Ariz.) Community College scoreless for nearly 16 minutes in the first half, building a 35-0 lead en route to a 76-25 win at the Bill Culver Memorial Classic.

CSI led 37-6 at halftime and pushed the lead to 50 at 62-12 before coasting home.

"Scottsdale came out kind of lackluster for a home game," Rogers told 1450 AM KEZJ. "... I thought our energy was better than theirs."

Rogers chose to primarily play just seven players Thursday, sitting five regular contributors after Wednesday's disappointing 54-53 loss at Mesa (Ariz.) Community College. The short bench was one reason he chose to employ a zone

Duncan, Spurs edge Mavericks

DALLAS — Tim Duncan bounced back from one of the least productive games of his career to score 17 points and reserve Gary Neal had 21, sending the San Antonio Spurs to a 99-93 victory over the Dallas Mavericks on Thursday night in a showdown between the top two teams in the Western Conference.

Dirk Nowitzki missed his second straight game because of a sprained knee ligament and the Mavericks have lost both. Dallas had won 17 of 18 with its leading scorer.

San Antonio won for the 12th time in 14 games and improved to 28-4, extending the best start in franchise history. Coming off a thorough victory over the Lakers, the Spurs got behind in the opening minutes then used a 21-2 run that started late in the first quarter to go ahead for good.

Dallas' Caron Butler had a season-high 30 points and Jason Kidd had a triple-double with 12 points, 13 assists and 10 rebounds.

MAGIC 112, KNICKS 103
ORLANDO, Fla. —

Dwight Howard had 24 points and 18 rebounds in a bruising battle with Amare Stoudemire, and Orlando beat New York for its fifth straight victory.

Stoudemire finished with 30 points, four rebounds and four assists but got into foul trouble early in a matchup of two of the NBA's best big men.

Both were called for technical fouls, never shielded away from contact and showed more offensive pro prowess than defensive pressure.

Howard just had more help.

J.J. Redick and Ryan Anderson had 14 points apiece, helping the Magic build a 20-point lead before halftime and hold on late. New York trimmed the deficit to two in the fourth quarter before the Magic pulled away.

Wilson Chandler had 29 points and Shawne Williams added 15 for the Knicks. They have lost five of seven.

Fredette's 34 lead BYU past Buffalo

AMHERST, N.Y. — Missing eight shots and making just one in the first half didn't discourage Jimmer Fredette. He just kept on shooting until he got hot.

Fredette shook off a sluggish start to score 28 of his season-high 34 points in the second half and Noah Hartsock added 19 to lead No. 16 BYU over Buffalo 90-82 Thursday night.

Fredette started his second-half turnaround with a pair of easy baskets that helped calm the senior. He first sank an uncontested jumper 30 seconds in, then made an easy layup 25 seconds later after Charles Abouo's steal.

"I've had games like that," he said. "You're not going to shoot the ball great every single night. The main thing is you have to have short-term memory loss. You have to go out there and know that you're a good player and you still have to shoot shots because you know your team needs that."

Brandon Davies added 18 for the Cougars (13-1), who have won three straight following an 86-79 loss to UCLA almost two weeks ago.

The win was coach Dave Rose's 140th at BYU, moving him into third place on the school's career list. He passed G. Ott Romney.

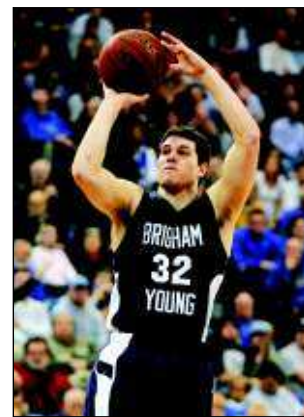

Fredette helped put the pesky Bulls away. He capped a 7-0 run with 14:11 left by draining a 3-pointer that gave BYU a 52-41 lead, then had 7 of the Cougars' 10 points in a 10-0 run that made it 64-53 with 9 minutes to go.

Overall, Fredette connected on 10 of 15 shots in the second half, including hitting 3 of 6 3-pointers.

"He's a bad dude," Bulls coach Reggie Witherspoon said. "He got going. If you do a bad job on him, he gets 50. I was trying to recall a better visiting college player to this area, and there's no debate now. He just pulls and fires."

heavyweight showdown with city-rival Temple.

Mouptaou Yarou had 14 points for the Wildcats (11-1) and helped them squash any chance of a second straight upset loss to the Owls. The unranked Owls stunned No. 3 Villanova last season and both teams were fired up this week for the rematch.

NO. 10 MISSOURI 81, OLD DOMINION 58

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Marcus Demmon matched his season best with five 3-pointers and scored 22 points, helping No. 10 Missouri to a surprisingly decisive victory over Old Dominion on Thursday night.

NO. 19 UCF 68, PRINCETON 62

ORLANDO, Fla. — Marcus Jordan scored 22 of his 26 points in the second half to help No. 19 Central Florida rally to a 68-62 win over Princeton in the final of the UCF Holiday Classic.

The son of NBA star Michael Jordan scored nine straight points early in the second half to wipe out a 37-29 halftime deficit for the Knights (13-0).

NO. 21 MEMPHIS 88, LIPSCOMB 70

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Wesley Witherspoon, three weeks removed from having surgery on his right knee, scored a season-high 28 points and had a career-best 14 rebounds, sending No. 21 Memphis over Lipscomb.

UNC shocks Tennessee in double OT

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Casey Barth kicked a 23-yard field goal in the second overtime to send North Carolina past Tennessee 30-27 in a Music City Bowl that will be remembered much more for the crazy finish of regulation than how it ended Thursday night.

Barth kicked a 39-yard field goal after officials reviewed what had been the final play of the game and decided to penalize the Tar Heels (8-5) for having "more than 11 men" on the field. The Big Ten officiating crew also announced T.J. Yates had spiked the ball with 1 second left.

That allowed Barth to run out and kick the field goal that tied it at 20.

Tennessee (6-7) was stunned at the sudden switch that cost the Vols an apparent bowl victory to cap Derek Dooley's first season. Tyler Bray threw a 25-yard TD in the first overtime, but Quan Sturdivant picked him off to end the Vols' last chance in the second OT.

This is the second time this season that Tennessee has lost a game because of too many men on the field. The Vols lost to LSU on Oct. 2 when they got caught having too many defenders, giving the Tigers another chance to pull out a 16-14 win.

"It was chaos again," Dooley said.

This will hurt much more. Tennessee had the home-field advantage with LP Field painted orange from top to bottom, and the Vols' fans had been celebrating ever since Bray's 8-yard TD pass to Justin Hunter put them up 20-17 with 5:16 left.

But Donte Paige-Moss blocked Daniel Lincoln's extra point, and that provided the edge North Carolina needed to force overtime with Barth's second field goal.

Tennessee had a chance to clinch the victory when the North Carolina holder Trase Jones (19) celebrates after kicker Casey Barth, right, made a 23-yard field goal in the second overtime of the Music City Bowl to defeat Tennessee 30-27 on Thursday in Nashville, Tenn. North Carolina's Ryan Taylor (49) also celebrates.

Thursday night's Holiday Bowl matchup between Washington and Nebraska was still in progress at press time. For a full story, visit Magicvalley.com/sports.

Vols got the ball back with 1:36 left but punted it back to North Carolina with 31 seconds remaining to set up the bizarre finish.

PINSTRIP BOWL

SYRACUSE 36, KANSAS STATE 34

NEW YORK — The first Pinstripe Bowl turned into a home run derby, with Syracuse and Kansas State trading big plays and touchdowns in one of the most exciting games of this post-season.

A little too much enthusiasm, though, cost the Wildcats.

Delone Carter ran for career-high 198 yards and two touchdowns, Marcus Sales caught three long TD passes and Syracuse got some help from a celebration penalty on Kansas State to beat the Wildcats 36-34 on Thursday at Yankee Stadium.

Adrian Hilburn slipped a tackle and raced to a 30-yard touchdown catch with 1:13 remaining to pull Kansas State within two. Hilburn saluted the crowd behind the visitor's dugout and was flagged 15 yards for unsportsmanlike conduct, which pushed the 2-point conversion attempt back to the 17-yard line.

"I didn't see it, I heard he just did a salute, which is kind of bogus," Kansas State quarterback Carson Coffman said. "It's something you can't do, we know that. Adrian is our guy, we're not mad at him for it, but I thought it was a little bit of a bogus call."

Coffman overthrew Aubrey Quarles in the end zone, and when Kansas State (7-6) couldn't come up with the inside kick, Syracuse (8-5) only had to take a knee to win a bowl game for the first time since 2001.

Daniel Thomas ran for three touchdowns for Kansas State, which was making its first bowl appearance since 2006.

ARMED FORCES BOWL

ARMY 16, SMU 14

DALLAS — Josh McNary scooped up a fumble and returned it 55 yards for a touchdown and Army held on to beat SMU 16-14 in the Armed Forces Bowl on Thursday, giving the Black Knights their first winning season since 1996.

Army (7-6) had a 16-0 halftime lead on SMU's home field, then ran out the final 4 minutes after Matt Szymanski was wide left on a 47-yard field goal attempt that would have put the Mustangs ahead.

SMU (7-7) still hasn't had consecutive winning seasons since resuming play in 1989 after being the only team ever given the NCAA's so-called death penalty.

Army got the ball back with 4:05 left and quarterback Trent Steelman converted a pair of third downs. He ran for 6 yards on third-and-5 after SMU called its final timeout, then later rolled right and threw a 22-yard pass on third-and-4 for only his second completion in the game before a final kneel-down.

TODAY'S BOWL GAMES

Meineke Bowl

South Florida (7-5) vs. Clemson (6-6)
10 a.m. (ESPN)

Line: Clemson by 4.

Series Record: First meeting.

WHAT'S AT STAKE

Clemson QB Kyle Parker tries to leave a winner after a disappointing season. Parker, who sacrificed $800,000 from baseball's Colorado Rockies to play one more season of football, has thrown 10 interceptions and was benched in the regular-season finale against South Carolina. Before he heads to the minor leagues in the spring, he'll start ahead of Tajh Boyd and face South Florida's stout defense.

KEY MATCHUP

South Florida QBs B.J. Daniels and Bobby Eveld vs. Clemson DE Da'Quan Bowers. South Florida coach Skip Holtz said he'll play both quarterbacks, who will attempt to stay away from Bowers. The Bronko Nagurski Trophy winner had nation-best 15½ sacks and ranked second with 24 tackles for a loss.

Sun Bowl

Notre Dame (7-5) vs. Miami (7-5)
Noon (CBS)

Line: Miami by 2.5.

Series Record: Notre Dame leads 15-7-1.

Last Meeting: Notre Dame 29-20 on Oct. 20, 1990, in South Bend, Ind.

WHAT'S AT STAKE

Bragging rights in one of college football's storied but dormant rivalries. The series was huge in the 1980s, with at least one team ranked in the Top 10 in the five most recent meetings. The teams play in 2012 in Chicago, followed by a home-and-home series that goes to South Bend in 2016 and to Miami in 2017.

KEY MATCHUP

Notre Dame LB Manti Te'o against Miami RB Graig Cooper, who led the Hurricanes with 695 yards rushing and 1,417 all-purpose yards this season. Te'o was Notre Dame's season leader with 127 tackles and started all 12 games. The Irish defenders had a three-game stretch where they didn't give up an offensive TD.

Liberty Bowl

Georgia (6-6) vs. Central Florida (10-3)
1:30 p.m. (ESPN)

Line: Georgia by 6.5.

Series Record: Georgia 1-0.

Last Meeting: Georgia won 24-23 in Athens, Ga. on Sept. 25, 1999.

WHAT'S AT STAKE

Georgia is trying to win a fourth straight bowl game and finish with a winning record. That would help salvage a promising season that turned into a 1-4 start with receiver A.J. Green suspended by the NCAA for selling a bowl jersey for $1,000. Central Florida is in its fourth bowl game ever, and the Knights want their first bowl victory to go with their Conference USA title for a program that didn't start playing football until 1979.

KEY MATCHUP

UCF's defense against Georgia quarterback Aaron Murray and Green. UCF led Conference USA in defense and ranked 18th in the nation allowing 318.08 yards.

Two-time C-USA defensive player of the year Bruce Miller has 34 career sacks and returned two interceptions for TDs this year. But Murray ranked ninth in passing efficiency and 33rd in total offense, averaging 251.7 yards per game. He and Green will have to make up for RB Caleb King, one of three Bulldogs missing the bowl for academic reasons.

Chick-fil-A Bowl

No. 19 South Carolina (9-4) vs. No. 23 Florida State (9-4)
5:30 p.m. (ESPN)

Line: South Carolina by 3.

Series Record: Florida State leads 15-3.

Last Meeting: Florida State won 38-10 in Tallahassee, Fla., on Nov. 9, 1991.

WHAT'S AT STAKE

South Carolina is looking for only the second 10-win season in the school history and the first since 1984. The Gamecocks, playing their second straight game in the Georgia Dome, will try to make up for a lopsided 56-17 loss to Auburn in the Southeastern Conference championship game. Florida State is playing for its first 10-win season since 2003 and is trying to give first-year coach Jimbo Fisher his first bowl victory.

KEY MATCHUP

Seminole RBs Chris Thompson, Ty Jones and Jermaine Thomas vs. Gamecocks run defense. Florida State topped 200 yards rushing in four straight wins this season, and the trio combined for 11 rushing touchdowns. South Carolina ranks first in the SEC and ninth in the nation in rushing defense, allowing only 104.3 yards on the ground per game.

Stanford

2008 NCAA semifinals.

Jeanette Pohlen hit five 3-pointers on the way to a career-high 31 points and the Cardinal (9-2) had the Huskies' number at last — a huge number at that. Stanford won its 52nd straight at Maples Pavilion in a rematch of last season's NCAA title game won 53-47 by two-time defending national champion UConn.

"I thought we let it get away from us," Auriemma said. "I think the atmosphere and what was going on and when Maya (Moore) couldn't get going early. I think it affected the rest of our guys. We just didn't play like ourselves. Give credit to Stanford. I think they played an unbelievably good game."

Last week, the Huskies (12-1) topped the 88-game winning streak set by John Wooden's UCLA men's team from 1971-74 by beating No. 22 Florida State 93-62, then won their 90th in a row this week at Pacific.

"I'm just happy for our team," Stanford coach Tara VanDerveer said. "The streak is something that they did. We're about Stanford and what we want to do."

against the Artichokes.

CSI started all three of its 6-foot posts — Laurel Kearsley, Fanny Cavallo and Taylor Altenburg — and the trio helped the Golden Eagles dominate on the glass with a 53-37 rebounding edge. Kearsley had a 15-point, 13-rebound double-double, while Altenburg had a game-high 16 points to go with six boards and Cavallo chipped in eight points and 11 boards.

"We just wanted to come out hard and redeem ourselves," Altenburg said of bouncing back from Wednesday's loss. The New Mexico State transfer has played primarily in the post this season, but saw most of her time on the wing Thursday and shot the ball well from outside.

Mechela Barnes chipped in 11 points, five assists and five steals for CSI (12-3).

Scottsdale didn't score until hitting a free throw with 4:05 left in the first half and shot 19 percent (10-for-54) for the game.

CSI caps its three-day stay in Arizona by facing Madison (Wis.) College at 2 p.m. today in Scottsdale. Madison won the NJCAA Division III title last season, but has struggled to a 3-6 start this season. While CSI should win easily today and Jan. 5 when it trips to Ontario, Ore. to face Treasure Valley Community College, Altenburg said the games are important preparation for the Jan. 8 home date with conference rival North Idaho College.

"We need to concentrate on what we need to execute and communicate on defense," she said.

NFL fines N.Y. Jets $100,000 in tripping incident

FLORHAM PARK, N.J. — The New York Jets are paying for their sideline shenanigans.

The team was fined $100,000 by the NFL on Thursday for violating league rules when assistant coach Sal Alosi ordered players to form a sideline wall, then tripped Miami's Nolan Carroll during a punt return earlier this month.

The discipline was in response to the actions of Alosi, the Jets' strength and conditioning coach, and comments made by special teams coach Mike Westhoff, who accused other teams of employing similar sideline wall tactics.

"We will comply with the league's decision," the Jets said in a statement.

Alosi "placed players in a prohibited area on the sideline to impede an opposing team's special teams players and gain a competitive advantage," according to a statement by the league. The NFL called it "a competitive violation as well as a dangerous tactic."

Five inactive players were ordered by Alosi to stand together nearly shoulder-to-shoulder on the sideline after the Jets' 10-6 loss to Miami on Dec. 12. Tight end Jeff Cumberland, one of the inactive players, said Alosi had told them to do that all season.

Alosi was first suspended without pay for the remainder of the season and fined $25,000 by the Jets for tripping Carroll, before being suspended indefinitely by the team after acknowledging he ordered the players to form the wall.

BRETT FAVRE STILL HAS NOT PASSED CONCUSSION TEST

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. — At the end of a long, difficult season, Brett Favre's status for the finale is again in doubt.

After overcoming so many injuries and other personal adversity to play every week of his storied 20-year career, Favre has been too beat up to play in two of the last three games. He got knocked out of the other one.

The Vikings want him to give it one more try and start Sunday at Detroit, but by NFL concussion rules he first must be cleared by the team's medical staff — and time is running out. Interim coach Leslie Frazier said Thursday that Favre hadn't passed the first stage of the standard post-concussion testing. There's also a conditioning component to receiving clearance to return, if Favre can prove he's symptom-free and functioning normally again.

RYAN SAYS SANCHEZ WILL START AT QB FOR JETS

FLORHAM PARK, N.J. — Mark Sanchez is ready to go for the New York Jets.

Coach Rex Ryan announced Thursday that the second-year quarterback will start in the team's regular-season finale against Buffalo, but is uncertain how long he'll stay in the game. It's possible Sanchez could play a few series or a few quarters before giving way to Mark Brunell and Kellen Clemens.

"We'll go ahead and start Mark this game," Ryan said. "How long he plays, we'll determine that as the game goes." Ryan said Sanchez, dealing with a sore right shoulder, showed some zip on his passes in practice and looked good enough to make him feel comfortable about starting him for the playoff-bound Jets (10-5). Ryan was unsure Wednesday whether Sanchez would play Sunday, saying he was leaning toward playing him "some," but wanted to see how the quarterback threw Thursday before making a decision.

NFL TRIMS $25,000 OFF JAMES HARRISON FINE

PITTSBURGH — The NFL has reduced the fine levied on Steelers linebacker James Harrison for his Oct. 17 hit on Browns wide receiver Mohamed Massaquoi from $75,000 to $50,000.

The league's appeals officer, Ted Cottrell, reduced the fine because he said Harrison understands the player safety rules and has made an effort to adjust his technique to play within those rules. NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell supported the reduction.

DEAR ABBY: I just lost my 15-year-old sister to bullying and the school here is not doing anything about it. There have been a number of suicides due to this behavior. I want schools to realize they need to take action before someone else gets hurt.

Bullying isn't a harmless prank and it should be taken seriously. I have heard of a bullying law in some schools, but it needs to be in ALL schools. I should not have to bury my sister at such a young age.

Abby, can you please get a message out to schools and their students about bullying? Thank you.

- GRIEF-STRICKEN SISTER IN MICHIGAN
DEAR GRIEF-STRICKEN SISTER: Please accept my deepest sympathy not only for the untimely loss of your sister, but also the tragic circumstances surrounding her death. Although bullying is something that has gone on for generations, in recent years school boards have only begun to realize what a serious and pervasive problem it truly is and have instituted zero tolerance policies.

In many schools where student suicides have occurred, the administration has provided grief counseling and programs to sensitize students and faculty in order to prevent it from happening. If that isn't being done in your community, the parents should be very worried.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: What do you say to a person who never stops talking? A friend does it, and I don't want to hurt her feelings. It has reached the point where I avoid her because her non-stop babbling irritates me. I have made clear to her I don't use my phone much and prefer e-mail, but it hasn't stopped her from calling anyway - sometimes late at night. I let the machine pick up, but my sleep is still interrupted and, once again, I am irritated.

Abby, this woman has a heart of gold. She is generous and sweet, but her incessant chatter diminishes any good feelings I have for her. Even when we're eating in a restaurant, she never stops to come up for air. How can I politely let her know her never-ending blather is getting on my nerves?

- CAN'T GET A WORD IN, IN NORTH CAROLINA

DEAR CAN'T GET A WORD IN: Your friend is a compulsive talker. She may do it out of insecurity, or because the sound of silence makes her uncomfortable. She may do it because she thinks she's entertaining. But hogging the conversation is rude. And calling someone in the late evening, after being told that the person does not want calls after a certain hour, is also rude. Much as you might like to, I doubt anything you say politely will change her. So accept her, warts and all, or move on.

DEAR ABBY: When a man meets a woman wearing a low-cut dress or blouse, is it rude to momentarily glance down (not stare) at her cleavage? Most men find this a natural, unavoidable impulse.

- DOIN' WHAT COMES NATURALLY

DEAR DOIN': It may be a "natural, unavoidable impulse," but gentlemen have learned to control their impulses. And that's what I recommend you do - unless you want to offend the woman you're with or the woman you're meeting. I'm surprised you haven't heard the phrase, "My eyes are up HERE."

DEAR READERS: From the bottom of my heart, I wish all of you a happy, healthy and prosperous 2011. And please, if you will be driving tonight, don't drink; and if you're drinking tonight, don't drive. Stay safe, everyone!

- Love, ABBY

IF DECEMBER 31 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Anything worth having is worth effort. You possess vision and may wish to better your circumstances. Be willing to face your inadequacies and do something about them. The obstacles you might encounter this month, and again in February, are probably of your own making — but you can succeed through persistence and dedication. If you keep your goals in sight and refuse to ignore responsibilities, then July and August promise to bring you a bounty of good luck, opportunity and helpful assistance from others who have your best interests in mind. Although July is especially beneficial for your financial or career goals, the first half of August is an excellent time to put anything of importance into motion.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Patience wears thin. You might not be able to wait until midnight to celebrate the New Year because you are anxious for relaxation. A sincere romantic overture might not bring the results you planned.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Make sure there is a designated driver in your crowd. If you are going to paint the town red, be sure you don't wield a brush at anything you shouldn't. Don't push your luck or break the rules and laws.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Buddies make strange bedfellows. Your special someone doesn't want to feel like he or she is merely a roommate. Bring a flower along or pay a compliment. Do something special that shows you care.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): End the year with a bang not a whimper. Be close to the one you love when the champagne cork pops or the grandfather clock strikes twelve. Curry favors from those whose good opinion counts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You don't need to be in a crowd to watch the ball drop on TV. Someone admires your ideas and is fascinated by your conversation. The euphoria felt in the presence of a certain someone can lead to intimacy.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Revisit the joys of childhood that have been neglected. Maybe you haven't had time to enjoy a game of touch football with the neighborhood kids. Shake the dust and cobwebs off your rock collection.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Old acquaintances might cross your path on this New Year's Eve. Amorous dreams can become a reality, but only if you are sharing time with a person who belongs in your life on a permanent basis.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Ring out the old and ring in the new. The ringing you hear is probably the phone as you hear from well-wishers. The future looks especially rosy if you are in contact with relatives, siblings or neighbors.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Make obnoxious noise with a party horn, not by boasting about your own accomplishments. Remember to set your sights on an appropriate partner, so that you can grab a kiss when the clock strikes midnight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Football fails to fulfill your favorite fantasy. Holiday parades and sports might not be your cup of tea. You should act on your secret desires and intuition where a certain person is concerned.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friends can't always be lovers and vice versa. This is a perfect evening to spend with family, relative, or at a community event where you fit into the pecking order and are one of the gang.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You might think there is time for romantic frolics. But celestial conditions are more suitable for serious pursuits. Those who concentrate on being politically correct could find few openings for sincerity and honesty.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"It is circumstance and proper timing that give an action its character and make it either good or bad."

— Agesilaus

After North's strong jump shift and a check on controls, you find yourself playing in six hearts. West leads the club king. What is the best plan to make 12 tricks?

The surest way is to set up dummy's spades. After winning the opening lead with the club ace, your first move should be to play a trump to your ace. If hearts prove to be 4-0, you would need a 3-3 spade break and so would play the spade ace and king and ruff a spade. If the spades broke, you could then cross to the trump queen and play good spades, throwing your remaining diamond losers. When the defender ruffed with his penultimate trump, you could win his return and return to dummy with the trump king to enjoy the rest of the spades.

When both opponents follow to the first round of trumps, the type of hostile layout where you need to find the right play to succeed occurs when West is short in spades and long in trumps.

The way to overcome any 4-2 spade break is to play the spade three from hand and the two from dummy! Then you will be able to win the return, cross to dummy with the trump queen, and ruff a spade low in your hand. You can then cross to the trump king, drawing West's last trump in the process, and discard your diamond losers on the four good spades.

ANSWER: If your partner had a takeout double of hearts, he would have acted initially, so he cannot have that hand, can he? Far more likely (especially looking at your hand) is that he has a heart stack and is doubling for penalties. You may not have all that much to bring to the festivities, but nobody really asked your opinion. Pass as requested, and trust your partner.
