Idaho's deficit balloons

Lower projected revenue challenges state lawmakers

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Idaho's budget deficit may be five times wider than Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter announced earlier this month, leaving lawmakers with gut-wrenching decisions over whether to cut programs like public education or consider raising taxes.

House Assistant Majority Leader Scott Bedke on Thursday told The Associated Press the gap may reach $185 million, due to reduced tax revenue projections for this year and next. Less than a month ago, Otter based his proposed fiscal year 2012 spending plan on a deficit of just $35 million.

A dramatically larger deficit could have deep consequences for schools and Medicaid, especially if lawmakers don't otherwise boost tax revenue. House Majority Leader Mike Moyle, R-Star, said the session just grew more difficult.

"I think you can (balance the budget without raising taxes), if you've got the willpower to do it," Moyle told the AP. "People are going to have to get their arms around this, before they see just how serious this is."

Otter's budget chief, Wayne Hammon, declined to comment Thursday on how new developments will affect state finances.

In meeting Luna's proposal — Rural schools may face tech disadvantage

By Amy Huddleston and Laurie Welch
Times-News writers

A technology-heavy plan to reform Idaho's public education system has administrators at some rural schools worried their students will be left in the wake of a digital revolution.

Among the hallmarks of Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna's proposal are an emphasis on online courses and providing ninth-grade students laptops to use until they graduate. But in rural Idaho, where high-speed Internet access isn't available to all families and comes with its own quirks in the schools, officials wonder if students will be put at a disadvantage to those learning in the Gem State's urban centers.

This year, 19 of the 83 students at Castleford High School in western Twin Falls County are taking courses through the Idaho Digital Learning Academy while they're in school. But Assistant Principal Karen Garrison said a recent survey revealed that 25 percent of student respondents didn't have Internet access at home.

Latest T.F. bank robbery mirrors December heist

$10K reward offered for suspect's arrest

Twin Falls police believe the city's third bank robbery in less than six months may be related to a December heist.

At about 12:37 p.m. Thursday, police responded to the armed robbery of the First Federal Savings Bank branch at 110 Falls Ave. W., near the College of Southern Idaho campus.

According to Capt. Matt Hicks, a masked individual walked into the bank wielding a handgun of unknown make and caliber, requested money and left with an undisclosed amount of cash.

No one was injured in the robbery. But the incident involved numerous parallels to the Dec. 16 robbery of the U.S. Bank branch on Blue Lakes Boulevard.

"Early indications are that there are similarities," said Hicks.

Surveillance video from First Federal shows a thin, white male wearing the same or similar clothing to what the U.S. Bank robber wore. The most distinguishable similarity is a multi-colored, patterned jacket worn in both robberies. The suspect or suspects also wore other similar gear — a mask covering his face, blue jeans and white athletic shoes.

Police previously estimated the suspect to be in his 20s or 30s. The U.S. Bank robbery also occurred at mid-day on Thursday.

State returns to debate over indigent tab

M.V. counties concerned about shifting costs

By Ben Botkin and Nick Coltrain
Times-News writers

BOISE — More Idahoans than ever have nowhere to turn for medical help.

They lack insurance and money to pay their medical bills. For one reason or another, they're ineligible for Medicaid.

In the last fiscal year, which ended in July, taxpayers paid $31 million to cover 1,298 such cases through the state's catastrophic health care program, commonly called the CAT fund. This year, the state expects 1,500 cases at a cost of $34.4 million.

For the Legislature's budget-setting committee, the task at hand was clear Thursday: figure out how to balance the growing program's budget while minimizing costs in an era when catastrophic cases have increased from 969 at a cost of $24.6 million only four years ago.

"We're primarily focused on making sure the state is paying the lowest rate for the services we're required to pay for," said Roger Christensen, the program's board chairman, at a budget presentation.

In the past year, program officials have taken steps to reduce costs by ensuring applicants aren't already eligible for federally funded Medicaid programs. But avenues remain for additional case management savings, Christensen said.

For example, he said, some people who can't pay for their care could recover in long-term care facilities instead of more expensive hospitals.

Counties pay the first $11,000 for each indigent case that originates in their boundaries, while the state picks up the rest. A resident is eligible if he or she lacks enough discretionary income to pay their bill within five years.

"It's always an interesting compromise because of course the county and the state want to make sure that we don't pay anything more than we absolutely have to," said Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert and co-chairman of the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee. "The hospitals have to take everybody and so whoever we're not paying for, then that gets shifted on to everything else,

Schools

Garrison said providing students the opportunity to take courses through IDLA that aren't offered in Castleford "probably equalizes the playing field with the bigger schools," but noted that students tend to score lower in online courses than they do with face-to-face instruction.

The consolidated Cassia County School District serves students in a geographic area larger than Delaware. In the county's rural reaches served by the Oakley and Raft River schools, online education isn't without its hiccups.

"We got a mobile lab with 30 computers last year and it's a chore just to make sure they are always powered up," Oakley High School Principal Brandi Bedke said.

The schools are connected with the district's server, with sometimes unpredictable results.

"It can depend on whether the server decides to take a dive that day," Bedke said.

In 176-resident Malta, Raft River Junior-Senior High School Principal Ryan Bowman said his students experience similar results. Both Bedke and Bowman voiced concerns about how laptops would be treated by students if they were sent home with them, or if they'd be used at all. Bowman said several administrators asked Luna in a recent meeting whether the laptops would follow students home.

"He said that decision would be left up to the local districts," Bowman said.

In the 417-resident town of Fairfield, Camas County School District Superintendent Jim Cobble is concerned that the costs to each school district for Luna's proposal haven't been presented clearly. Cobble joked that his schools have high-speed Internet — depending on your definition of "high-speed." He added that while he didn't know how many students were without such access at home, a portion of them certainly go without or still rely on dial-up Internet access.

"Many small communities across the state are affected by poverty and oftentimes if you are living in poverty, you are worrying about where lunch will come from rather than Internet," Cobble said. "This may be a way to get more of that into the home, but another downside is that if students aren't used to technology and are not successful in it at school, that could conceivably cause kids to tune out or drop out."

Across the Magic Valley, many high-speed Internet connections are limited to within city limits or near where existing lines run. Joe Gull, Twin Falls Qwest sales representative, said his company's high-speed services reach many area towns, though its reach is limited by current infrastructure.

Calls to other area Internet service providers were not returned Thursday.

Luna's plan would save an estimated $68.2 million in its first year by reducing paid teaching positions and eliminating a funding safety net for districts that lose enrollment. While $24 million of that would be slated for school technology expenses, some school officials remain uncertain of where that money will end up, exactly. But educators, Bowman said, have to prepare themselves for whatever may come.

"Sometimes we don't always agree with all parts of a plan, but we do what we can to help kids and take what we're dealt and do the best we can," Bowman said.

Jerome school board adds member

Times-News

The Jerome School District Board of Trustees approved a new member on Tuesday night. Alice Thibault will fill the vacancy left by former board Chairwoman Linda Hadam, who resigned in November.

Thibault will serve on the board until May 2013, when she and three other trustees will be up for re-election. Don Mitchell was elected to serve as the new board chairman.

In other business, Steve Nance, Jerome High School assistant principal and alternative school administrator, retired after working in education for 38 years, according to Superintendent Dale Layne.

"He was instrumental with our night school and made sure it was up and working correctly," Layne said. "Those are hard positions to fill. It takes a dedicated person to do that."

Layne said the board is awaiting decisions from the Legislature before acting to fill currently open teacher and administrator positions. "We're not making any decisions on funding until we know what is going on at the state level," he said.

Robbery

First Federal President Alan Horner said the bank is offering a $10,000 reward for information that leads to the arrest and conviction of the suspect in Thursday's robbery.

"We want this individual captured," Horner said.

In December, U.S. Bank offered up to $10,000, and Crime Stoppers up to $1,000, for information leading to the arrest and conviction of suspects involved in the prior robbery.

Witnesses told police that a blue van pulled out of the First Federal parking lot when the robber left the scene. While police stopped many vehicles matching the basic description, no one has been detained as a suspect.

In late August, the Bank of America branch on Shoshone Street was robbed. While the suspect in that robbery hasn't been caught, he made no effort to disguise himself.

Police have notified all Magic Valley banks and law-enforcement agencies of the robbery and continue to interview witnesses.

"We're thankful everybody is safe here," Horner said.

so it's an interesting balance that has to be maintained."

In the Magic Valley, county governments are watching the discussion closely. Cassia County Commission Chairman Dennis Crane said he worries that the looming budget cuts might shift more of that compromise in the state's favor. His county saw eight more indigent cases in the last fiscal year than it did in fiscal 2009, meaning it paid up to $88,000 more, even though the overall state-and-county cost for those cases dropped by about $280,000.

"Indigent is a critical part of the budget and one that we always look at," Crane said. "If (the state) starts losing funds, that's going to impact us because we'll be paying more and more."

That could force county cuts in other parts of its budget, he said, especially if the trend of rising cases continues as the economy continues to sputter, because Cassia County will need to keep picking up the tab.

"An indigent is an indigent," Crane said. "If they need help, they need help."

Twin Falls County Commission Chairman

George Urie said the budgeting and process of handling indigent claims and the CAT fund are still being worked out, so there wasn't much to comment on. Twin Falls County, like Jerome and Minidoka counties, actually saw a drop in its number of indigent claims.

Why the difference between the new figure and the one Otter announced during his State of the State speech Jan. 10?

First, it may cost state coffers as much as $70 million over two years to conform Idaho's state tax code to new federal rules. Lawmakers usually follow the federal rules to make it easier for residents and businesses to do their taxes, but they could opt out, potentially reducing the amount Idaho stands to give up.

And sales tax rebates for alternative energy projects, including big wind farms now going up across Idaho's blustery southern plain, also could drain Idaho of nearly $50 million, split between 2011 and 2012.

What's more, lawmakers aren't convinced the state will collect $33 million in tax revenue above the current fiscal year forecast, something Otter built into his original 2012 budget. That's after December, when tax revenue missed targets by $10 million.

Bedke, R-Oakley, said Otter's original budget proposal responsibly reflected the economic reality in late 2010, when the Republican governor finalized his recommendations.

If the new $185 million deficit figure holds, lawmakers who were already struggling with how to cut $25 million from state Medicaid spending could be faced with the added prospect of targeting public education — or else opting to raise more tax revenue, hardly an easy solution in conservative, tax-leery Idaho.

"Everyone hits the wall at a different point when they're running a marathon," Bedke said.

A health coalition that's pushing a bill to boost Idaho's cigarette tax to $1.25 per pack, from 57 cents now, said it likely won't introduce the measure until late February — for strategic reasons.

By then, lawmakers struggling with a dire budget situation might be more willing to go along with an increase to help fill what otherwise would be gaping holes in Medicaid. The insurance program faces an estimated $83 million in annual costs from tobacco-related illnesses, so an extra $50 million from cigarette taxes could help ease the pain.

Tax incentive offered for conserving private land

Local land trusts work hard to make most of chance

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Federal tax breaks could help preserve a little more of Idaho's beauty — but maybe not for long.

In December, Congress renewed a tax incentive for people who agree to preserve some of their land in what's called a conservation easement, and then donate the easements to land trusts. The incentive to keep land wild was approved by Congress in 2006, and easements accumulated at a pace of around 250,000 acres a year through 2009.

The incentive expired at the end of 2009. Land trusts and others worked throughout 2010 to reinstate it. The new incentive is retroactive to January 2010 but will expire again at the end of this year.

Local land trusts, such as the Southern Idaho Land Trust and the Wood River

Land Trust, are working hard to make the most of this year in case the incentive isn't renewed.

"It's given us the chance and incentive to look for other funding," said stewardship coordinator Keri York of the Wood River Land Trust.

With the easements, landowners can maintain management and ownership of their land and can sell or pass it on, but the land cannot be developed. Those who choose to protect important natural or historical resources through donated easements receive enhanced benefits.

Donors can deduct half of their adjusted gross income on their federal tax return for 16 years, as long as their income doesn't exceed the fair-market value of the donated land. Donors who are full-time farmers or ranchers can deduct all their yearly income for that same amount of time.

"We're a small organization so we can't buy land like the Nature Conservancy," said Ben Collins of the Southern Idaho Land Trust.

"When we lost the incentive last year, it slowed everything down."

The Southern Idaho Land Trust, which works an area between Pocatello and Mountain Home and from the Nevada border to Shoshone, was able to acquire 727 acres of easements between 2006 and 2009 but no land last year, Collins said. York said the Wood River Land Trust, which covers much of central Idaho, received 1,620 acres in the last few years.

York said some wealthy donors don't need incentives. But with some farmers and ranchers, an incentive is a welcome talking point when she's trying to lobby for a particular area.

"It takes a special person to forgo selling to a developer to save the land as a special place, but they're out there," Collins said. "We're hoping people learn that this is a good deal if they're so inclined."

To learn more about establishing a conservation easement, call the Southern Idaho Land Trust at 543-8169 or the Wood River Land Trust at 788-3947.

Filibuster lives: Senate rejects changes in rules

By Jim Abrams
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The filibuster lives on. The Senate voted overwhelmingly late Thursday to reject efforts to change its rules to restrict the blockades that have sown gridlock and discord in recent years on Capitol Hill.

Instead, senators settled on a more modest measure to prevent single lawmakers from anonymously holding up legislation and nominations, and the parties' Senate leaders announced a handshake deal to conduct business in a more efficient and civilized way.

The two leaders, Democrat Harry Reid of Nevada and Republican Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, also endorsed legislation, to be drawn up later, to break the logjam of confirmations of presidential appointments by reducing by as much as a third the number of appointees subject to Senate approval.

Senators were emphatic in their votes against limiting the filibuster, a treasured right of minorities trying to prevent majorities from running roughshod over them. Many Democrats, while now in the majority, envisioned a day, perhaps as early as after the 2012 election, when they would return to the minority.

None of Thursday's series of votes would have eliminated all filibusters, which are used to stall action on bills or nominations and require 60 votes to override in the 100-member body.

Instead, Democrats pushing for change sought to get rid of filibusters that specifically stop bills from being brought to the Senate floor, and to require senators imposing a filibuster to stay on the floor debating the issue. One proposal would have gradually reduced the 60-vote threshold to a simple majority of 51 as debate proceeded.

Reid

The votes were 84-12 against the proposal by Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa to gradually reduce the threshold and 51-44 to reject a proposal by Sens. Tom Udall, D-N.M., Jeff Merkley, D-Ore., and Harkin to end filibusters on motions to advance a bill to the floor, require those initiating filibusters to stay on the floor and to shorten debate time on nominations. A third resolution by Merkley that focused on requiring those filibustering to keep talking on the floor went down, 49-46. All the proposals to change Senate rules would have required two-thirds majorities for approval.

But recognizing the frustration of many senators over the delaying tactics and partisan battles that have paralyzed the Senate in recent years, Majority Leader Reid and Republican leader McConnell said they had agreed on non-binding steps to restore comity and cooperation in the Senate. Under the agreement, McConnell said minority Republicans would block fewer bills and nominations in exchange for a guarantee of more chances to amend legislation.

year's "snowpocalypse" and created chaos when it hit the nation's capital at the height of the evening rush hour Wednesday, forcing commuters into treacherous, eight-hour drives home. Even the president got caught in traffic.

New Yorkers, keeping close watch on the cleanup after a post-Christmas blizzard paralyzed the city for days, had it a little easier this time. The heaviest snow arrived overnight, when there weren't many cars and buses around to get stuck.

The forecast had called for up to a foot of snow, but the storm brought far more than that. New York got 19 inches, Philadelphia 17. Boston got about a foot, as expected. Many schools closed for a second day Thursday. Airports ground to a halt, and nearly a half-million people lost power at some point.

Virginia Sforza, 61, was indignant as she shoveled her sidewalk in Pelham, outside New York City.

"My biggest fear is if it continues like this all winter, we won't have a place to put it and we'll never get our cars out and we won't even be able to go to the stores," she said. "We had a year like this back in the '90s, but I was a lot younger. The prospect of this continuing is disgusting."

Washington-area residents, who had largely been spared heavy snow this winter after getting buried by a series of storms last year, lamented this year's encore. Around 300,000 people lost power, and motorists abandoned cars by the hundreds when pressing on proved fruitless.

Report: Arizona fugitive planned suicide by bear

FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. (AP) — A convicted killer who escaped from an Arizona prison had planned to overdose on heroin at Yellowstone National Park and let bears eat him, according to a sheriff's report.

Tracy Province told a sheriff's detective after his capture that he had wanted to go up on a mountain, shoot up a gram of heroin and "be bear food." As he was preparing the drug, a voice told him not to go through with the plan, and he changed course in favor of trying to hitchhike to Indiana to see family.

"He called it divine intervention," Mohave County sheriff's Detective Larry Matthews wrote in the August report.

The Las Vegas Review-Journal first reported Province's interview Thursday.

Authorities say Province asked fellow convict John McCluskey and their alleged accomplice, Casslyn Mae Welch, to take him to Yellowstone, so they drove him to the Wyoming park from New Mexico. Province doesn't name anyone else in the interview with Matthews, but it's clear whom he's with.

The trio faces capital murder and carjacking charges in New Mexico.

Obama: Even programs that work face budget cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama said Thursday that even government programs that work will face cuts as he looks for ways to bring down the nation's mounting deficits. During an hour-long live interview on YouTube, Obama did not detail reductions in the spending plan he will roll out next month for the budget year that begins Oct. 1. But he did cite community action grants that support economic and development initiatives in cities as examples of good programs that probably will lose money. Sticking to a theme in his State of the Union address Tuesday, Obama pledged to make responsible cuts and avoid moves that would hurt the economic recovery. "These are not going to be across the board," Obama said. "We want to cut with a scalpel as opposed to a chain saw." Paired with deficit-cutting action is his call for a new era of

Obama

American competitiveness — and higher spending on education and innovation. "There are going to be some areas where we're going to increase," Obama said online. "We need to make sure we're staying on the cutting edge of technology." The YouTube interview was part of the administration's effort to expand its social media outreach as the White House tries to rally

Obama's base around his revamped economic message. The president used an online video to supporters last week to preview the primetime speech. His communications director, Dan Pfeiffer, joined Twitter this week and took questions. Administration officials, including Education Secretary Arne Duncan and White House economist Austan Goolsbee, answered questions from the public on the Internet. Obama's team relied on social media during the 2008 presidential campaign to connect directly with the public. With the White House increasingly focused on Obama's re-election bid in 2012, aides say their use of social media will increase. "The president and the entire team will continue to look for avenues and opportunities to expand the use of those entities, again whether that be Twitter, whether that be YouTube or other aspects of social media," White House spokesman Robert Gibbs said.

Remodeling won't solve jail problem in Jerome County

There's no question that Jerome County is between a rock and a hard place with its creaky 35-year-old jail. Voters in November for the third time turned down a ballot measure to build a new lockup, and now the county commissioners are talking about remodeling the existing facility.

Refurbishing the basement, they say, could create enough room for 15 more beds and ease overcrowding.

But it would be a mistake.

Remodeling won't change the fact that the jail is a liability suit waiting to happen. The building is in bad shape, and the county's insurer could shut the facility down with the stroke of a pen, forcing the county to outsource prisoners to other jails and pay the tab for keeping them there.

Because the 30-bed jail is full, 24 inmates are now housed out-of-county at a per-inmate cost of $45 to $60 per day.

The county is still considering options for a new jail, including pursuing a facility lease or reducing a proposed facility's beds from 165 to 100.

The latter is the best alternative, in our view. Building a just-the-basics jail on an 80-acre parcel across from the Jerome County Airport would reduce the cost from $13 million to a more manageable sum likely to attract support from more taxpayers if there's a fourth bond issue election. It would leave enough room for the jail to be expanded at some point, and the site could also be used by the county for other purposes.

Time is running out.

If there's not a new jail in the pipeline, the county's taxpayers may soon be stuck with a limited number of expensive options.

Our view: A smaller-scale jail than the proposal rejected by voters last fall is Jerome County's best option.

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Putting the brakes on China's Juggernaut

By all appearances, last week's visit by Chinese president Hu Jintao to Washington changed little in the lopsided American-Chinese relationship. What we have is a system that methodically transfers American jobs, technology and financial power to China in return for only modest Chinese support for important U.S. geopolitical goals: the suppression of Iran's and North Korea's nuclear weapons programs. American officials act as if there's not much they can do to change this.

Robert Samuelson

It's true that the United States and China have huge common interests in peace and prosperity. Two-way trade (now about $500 billion annually) can provide low-cost consumer goods to Americans and foodstuffs and advanced manufactures to the Chinese. But China's and America's goals differ radically. The United States wants to broaden the post-World War II international order based on mutually advantageous trade. By contrast, China pursues a new global order in which its needs come first — one in which it subsidizes exports, controls essential imports (oil, food, minerals) and compels the transfer of advanced technology.

Naturally, the United States opposes this sort of system, but that's where we're headed. Clashing goals have trumped shared interests.

Start with distorted trade. The New York Times recently reported that Evergreen, a maker of solar panels, is shutting its Massachusetts factory, moving production to a joint-venture in China and laying off 800 U.S. workers. Despite $43 million in Massachusetts state aid, Evergreen's CEO said that China's subsidies — mainly low-interest loans from state-controlled banks — were too great to pass up.

Thus subsidized, Chinese solar panel production rose fiftyfold from 2005 to 2010, reports GTM, a market analysis company. Cheap bank loans to solar companies total about $30 billion, but it's unclear whether they'll be repaid in full, notes GTM analyst Shyam Mehta. “It could be free money,” he says. China's share of global production jumped from 9 percent to 48 percent. In 2010, about 95 percent of China's solar panels were exported.

With details changed, similar stories apply to many industries. The undervaluation of China's currency, the renminbi, by 15 percent or more magnifies the advantage. Jobs shift to China from factories in the United States, Europe and elsewhere.

Next, consider technology transfer. Big multinational firms want to be in China, but the cost of doing so is often the loss of important technology through required licensing agreements, mandatory joint ventures, reverse engineering or outright theft. American software companies estimate that 85 percent to 90 percent of their products in China are pirated.

Writing in the Harvard Business Review, Thomas Hout and Pankaj Ghemawat cite China's high-speed rail projects. Initially, foreign firms such as Germany's Siemens got most contracts; in 2009, the government began requiring foreign firms to enter into minority joint ventures with Chinese companies. Having mastered the “core technologies,” Chinese companies have captured 80 percent or more of the local market and compete with foreign firms for exports. The same thing is occurring in commercial aircraft. China is building a competitor to the Boeing 737 and the Airbus 320; General Electric has entered into a joint venture that will supply the avionics, the electronics that guide the aircraft.

Finally, there's finance. China's foreign exchange reserves — earned mainly through massive export surpluses — approached $2.9 trillion at year-end 2010. These vast holdings (which increase by hundreds of billions annually) enable China to expand its influence by sprinkling low-cost loans around the world or making strategic investments in raw materials and companies. The Financial Times recently reported that China — through the China Export-Import Bank and the China Development Bank — has “lent more money to other developing countries over the past two years than the World Bank.”

It's important to make several qualifications. First, Americans shouldn't blame China for all our economic problems, which are mostly homegrown. Indeed, the ferocity of the financial crisis discredited U.S. economic leadership and emboldened China to pursue its narrow interests more aggressively than ever. Second, the point should not be (as Chinese allege) to “contain” China's growth; the point should be to modify its economic strategy, which is predatory. It comes at others' expense.

The U.S. response has been mostly carrots — to pretend that sweet reason will convince China to alter its policies. Last week, Presidents Obama and Hu exchanged largely meaningless pledges of “cooperation.” Alan Tonelson of the U.S. Business and Industry Council, a group of manufacturers, says U.S. policy verges on “appeasement.” We need sticks. The practical difficulty is being tougher without triggering a trade war that weakens the global recovery. Still, it's possible to do something. The Treasury could brand China a currency manipulator, which it clearly is. The administration could move more forcefully against Chinese subsidies. America's present passivity encourages China's new world order, with fateful consequences for the United States and everyone else.

INL not opening door to more toxic waste

As director of Idaho National Laboratory, I respectfully and strongly disagree with former Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus in his public assessment of the agreement that Gov. Otter signed with the Department of Energy on Jan. 6. This agreement allows INL to bring limited research quantities of used commercial fuel to the lab for examination and testing. I feel that Gov. Andrus exaggerated and distorted the facts, and I would like to correct the record.

The agreement does not authorize any additional quantity of used nuclear fuel or radioactive waste to be brought into Idaho beyond that which is already authorized by the 1995 Settlement Agreement. It simply designates that very limited amounts of used nuclear fuel from commercial power reactors can come to Idaho so that we can safely examine this highly valuable resource. The goal of this research is to improve the efficiency of our nation's 104 nuclear reactors. Contrary to what Gov. Andrus said, the Settlement Agreement has not been abandoned.

READER COMMENT

Gov. Andrus argued that the new agreement provides a path for “waste” to be “dumped” in Idaho. That argument is neither reasonable nor credible. The agreement clearly states that there is a restriction on how much used fuel can come to Idaho, and it's a very small quantity. It will be carefully selected based on its high research value. We will not be receiving any nuclear waste at INL.

Saying that waste has been “piling up” for 50 years at the INL site ignores the substantial progress being made by DOE and its cleanup contractors. Since the signing of the Settlement Agreement, no new waste or used fuel beyond that agreed upon by the state has been brought to Idaho. A good example of the progress being made is that a majority of the stored transuranic waste has been shipped to New Mexico. Additionally, a large amount of the targeted buried waste has been exhumed, sorted, characterized, packaged and shipped to New Mexico for disposal, and DOE is on track to remove all this targeted buried waste from the INL site well ahead of the agreed upon 2025 date.

In the past, my colleagues and I have heard potential customers and competitors say that “you can't do nuclear work in Idaho because of the Settlement Agreement.” However, the agreement Gov. Otter signed on Jan. 6 reduces significant barriers to performing very valuable and important research and creates no additional burden or risk for the state. It enhances INL's capability and competitiveness. It demonstrates state support for the mission of INL, and it underwrites the lab's leadership role in nuclear energy research and development. The agreement improves the opportunity for continued growth in world-leading facilities and people at INL.

By allowing research quantities of used commercial fuel into Idaho, Govs. Otter and Batt and the attorney general have chosen to lead, and I applaud them. I have great respect for Gov. Andrus and his accomplishments. However, when a leader of his stature enters the public discourse, as he has in this case — and incorrectly implies that a decision has been made that should alarm Idaho's citizens because it will expose them to increased risk from activities at INL — the public record must be corrected.

An unaligned zodiac arouses deep-seated suspicions

Do you know your sign? Gemini, Aquarius or whatever? Of course you do. Whether you're a Nancy Reagan and use horoscopes to plan your spouse's schedule, or hold a doctorate in astrophysics and view astrology as wide-scale fraud, our zodiacal signs are part of our identity.

So it was no surprise that the media went into hyper-drive two weeks ago over reports that people's signs had changed. A Minnesota astronomer was quoted as saying that the constellations have slipped around the sky over the centuries because the Earth wobbles slightly on its axis. We've been reading the wrong horoscope all our lives!

Then, after a 48-hour frenzy, the story died. In numerous interviews with remarkably unskeptical reporters, astrologers successfully peddled the notion that it was all a big misunderstanding. Of course they knew about the Earth's wobble. It was old news. Everybody could keep their signs. What a relief.

I wasn't satisfied, so I looked into it. I don't believe in astrology but I look at my horoscope sometimes. I've always thought I was a Scorpio. If astronomers say I'm "really" a Virgo, then I want to know.

Here's what I found out:
 • Minnesota astronomer Parke Kunkle was correct in saying that the constellations for which our zodiacal signs are named have been out of whack with the dates traditionally assigned to them for nearly 2,000 years. Even astrologers concede that. "They're not going to line up. What this astronomer said was absolutely true," astrologer Lynn Koiner of Silver Spring, Md., said.

• Koiner and other astrologers said that doesn't matter, because the signs have nothing to do with the constellations of the same names. Instead, the signs measure the change in the seasons, starting with the first day of spring. They say it's just a regrettable, confusing anomaly that our signs are still named for constellations that no longer are astronomically connected to our birth dates.

• When questioned, however, the astrologers were unable to explain satisfactorily why something as seemingly vital as the location of the constellations in the sky has nothing to do with fortunetelling based on the heavens. I interviewed three and got fuzzy, varying accounts.

One theme was that the constellations are irrelevant because it's the planets that really matter. So, are the stars superfluous? Not quite. It seems that some stars matter — just not the 12 constellations that the vast majority of people identify with astrology. How convenient.

Astrologer Susan Miller, who owns the Web site Astrology Zone, said: "The point is, the constellations do not give you your personality. The planets always gave you your personality!"

• Finally, this dilemma occurs only in the Western astrological tradition. There's another kind of astrology that, among many differences, assigns signs mostly in line with the constellations' current locations. It's called sidereal or Vedic astrology, and it's popular in India.

In other words, everybody has two signs — one linked to the seasons (Western tradition) and the other to the constellations (sidereal).

Holiday Mathis, who writes a horoscope published daily in 300 newspapers, is one of the huge majority of American astrologers who follow the Western tradition. I asked her whether sidereal astrology has more validity, given that its signs are astronomically in line with the constellations.

"I just don't think of it that way. It's just a completely different thing. It's like saying, is Tarot more valid than astrology," Mathis said.

Why take this seriously? I could pretend I care because polls say at least a quarter of Americans believe in astrology and because the nation is estimated to spend hundreds of millions of dollars on it each year.

In fact, I was just curious. Mightn't the gravitational pull of heavenly bodies affect us somehow?

Astronomer Kunkle and other scientists said the physics and biology just don't work. "The obstetrician standing next to you when you were born had a much greater gravitational impact on you than Mars did," Kunkle said. "If it's a real phenomenon, it's measurable. And it's never been measured" when experiments were conducted in search of an effect.

A 2006 study by scientists in Denmark and Germany looked at more than 15,000 individuals and reported that "no support could be found" for associations between personality and astrological signs.

So if I want to honor science, I'll stop reading my horoscope altogether. Of course, I might just start reading Virgo as well as Scorpio. I figure that'll double the chances of accuracy.

Considering abortion? Please think again

This is the anniversary of Roe vs. Wade, and it breaks my heart when I think of the millions of babies killed through abortion in our country.

There is a wonderful alternative to abortion. I'm the grandmother of six very precious adopted children, all of whom were adopted at birth by two of our daughters. The children now range in age from 21 to 30. The oldest boy is married and has four precious children of his own; one is a teacher and one is in his third year of college. The others all have jobs, and they are all loved the same as our six biological grandchildren.

Our oldest adopted granddaughter miscarried a baby about four months into her pregnancy. He was not a blob of tissue. She had him put in a tiny casket used for cremation and buried in the Twin Falls Cemetery with a nice headstone, not put in a garbage disposal. We all got to hold this tiny baby that fit in one hand and tell him we loved him.

If you are considering abortion, please reconsider.

Shooting deaths in Tucson a sin problem

I appreciate Joe and Judy Aitken's very timely and well-written letter. I, too, have never been more concerned for our country than I am now.

A college professor recently told us that he had an opportunity to visit with a man in West Germany who told him that he was visiting his mother in East Germany when the Berlin Wall was suddenly closed without warning or thought that it could happen to them. He was able to find a way back to his wife and family in West Germany, but he never saw or heard from his mother again — so tight was the government control.

With every mass murder and terrorist attack, the government wants to tighten security and have more gun control.

Is it working to stop this carnage? No!

Guns are not the problem. Guns don't buy bullets. Guns don't load themselves. Sinful, angry, hopeless people do that.

Why are they sinful, angry and hopeless?

We have tried to remove God, the Ten Commandments, Jesus Christ, the Cross and God's Holy Bible from all government, school, public and even private property.

We have legalized murdering babies, abused and disrespected the elderly and, in some states, legalized euthanasia.

We say bad is good and good is bad and if it feels good do it, no matter who it hurts. There are parents abandoning their children, leaving their hearts torn and gaping holes in their emotions. Then, we have removed all hope and healing by removing all directions to God and Jesus Christ.

In light of the recent shooting, people are again asking what our president and politicians can do for us.

Nothing! It is a sin problem, and they are not God.

Guns don't kill people. Sin kills people. More government control won't help. It's like putting a Band-Aid on a cancer.

God has given us the answer in 2 Chronicles 7:14, "If my people, which are called in my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."

National ID is aimed at taking over our lives

Barack Obama and his liberal cohorts are about to ram amnesty for aliens down the throats of the American people. But there is something so sinister, so destructive to your liberties hidden inside the "immigration reform." But as bad as amnesty will be for the United States, Big Brother's eyes are set on a bigger prize that could cost you your freedom.

Buried deep in the reform proposals is a requirement for a mandatory national identification card that you'll be forced to carry with you at all times. They are saying it's merely a benign card that'll stop illegal aliens from stealing the jobs of American workers. But that's a lie.

This card will contain biological information about you. It will have your fingerprint, retinal scan, DNA and/or a scan of the veins in your hands.

Big wigs in Washington would like to use it to track your location, allow government access to your bank accounts and your life.

This sounds farfetched, but the evidence is all there. Ronald Reagan compared an earlier ID card proposal to the biblical "mark of the beast."

If a national ID card — tied to your bank account and medical history — becomes law, the United States will be closer to Nazi Germany (your papers, please...) than to the republic our founding fathers left us.

The biometric ID card is all about the government having absolute control over your life.

White House: Egypt protests are opportunity for reforms

WASHINGTON (AP) — Treading carefully, President Barack Obama called Egypt an ally Thursday and said President Hosni Mubarak has been helpful on a range of issues, but said he's told Mubarak it's critical to enact reforms.

Obama said anti-government protests filling the streets show the frustrations of the populace.

"It is very important that people have mechanisms in order to express legitimate grievances," Obama said in an interview being broadcast live on YouTube, after being shown video of the protests and getting a question about repression of expression in the country.

"Egypt's been an ally of ours on a lot of critical issues," Obama said. "President Mubarak has been very helpful on a range of tough issues in the Middle East. But I've always said to him that making sure that they're moving forward on reform, political reform and economic reform, is absolutely critical to the long-term well-being of Egypt. And you can see these pent-up frustrations that are being displayed on the streets."

Tens of thousands of demonstrators have filled the streets of Cairo and other parts of Egypt in the largest anti-government protests in years. Demonstrators are calling for Mubarak's ouster after 30 years in power and demanding solutions to rampant poverty and unemployment. Nobel Peace laureate Mohamed ElBaradei, a leading Mubarak opponent, returned to his homeland Thursday and said he was prepared to lead a transition to a new government. White House press secretary Robert Gibbs was asked repeatedly during his briefing ahead of Obama's comments Thursday to address a perception that the White House was siding with the protesters and not Mubarak as the crisis rages. "This is not about taking sides," Gibbs said several times. He sidestepped a question about whether ElBaradei would be a viable alternative to Mubarak.

Bomb kills 48 at Iraq funeral

BAGHDAD (AP) — A car bomb exploded outside a funeral tent Thursday in a mainly Shiite area of Baghdad, killing at least 48 people — the latest in a wave of attacks that has triggered fury over the government's inability to stop the violence.

As ambulances raced to the scene and Iraqi helicopters buzzed overhead, young men enraged over the security lapse pelted Iraqi forces with sticks and stones, prompting skirmishes.

The violence over the past week and a half has mainly targeted the majority Shiite community and Iraqi security forces, posing a major challenge for Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki and his fragile coalition government that was seated last month.

Some lawmakers and city officials said insurgents were likely trying to undermine the government ahead of an Arab League summit to be held in March in Baghdad. The Iraqi leadership had campaigned to host the two-day meeting to tout security improvements and mend frayed ties with its Arab neighbors.

"The terrorists are carrying out these bombings now because they are angry over the successful formation of a new government and they want to try to foil the Arab Summit," said Kamil Nassir al-Zaidi, the head of the Baghdad provincial council.

Pot-firing catapult found at border

HERMOSILLO, Mexico (AP) — Drug smugglers trying to get marijuana across the Arizona-Mexico border apparently are trying a new approach — a catapult.

National Guard troops operating a remote video surveillance system at the Naco Border Patrol Station say they observed several people preparing a catapult and launching packages over the International Border fence last Friday evening.

Tucson TV station KVOA says Border Patrol agents working with the National Guard contacted Mexican authorities, who went to the location and disrupted the catapult operation.

The 9-foot-tall catapult was found about 20 yards from the U.S. border on a flatbed towed by a sports utility vehicle, according to a Mexican army officer with the 45th military zone in the border state of Sonora.

The catapult was capable of launching 4.4 pounds of marijuana at a time, the officer said Wednesday, speaking on condition of anonymity for security reasons.

A year into comeback, Burley's Pacific Ethanol touts safety record, reflects on time shuttered

By Blair Koch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — With steaks sizzling on multiple grills just beyond Pacific Ethanol's main doors, employees, enjoying soft drinks and the chance to socialize with coworkers, were in high spirits Thursday.

CEO Neil Koehler joined the company's 36 employees for a celebration.

Although the reason for the steak and baked potato lunch was in recognition of the company's 1,000-plus injury-free days, there was more behind the festive mood.

The company ceased ethanol production in February 2009 but reopened its doors the following January. It has been producing ethanol since the reopening about a year ago.

Many of the staff laid off at the time returned to the company and continue to work there.

With the area struggling with near 10 percent unemployment, the jobs inject a much-needed annual $2 million payroll into the economy.

"It was pretty rough for a while," said Dennis Halford, who returned to his job as a plant operator when Pacific Ethanol put word out that it was ready to ramp up production. "I was out of work for about five months. I was able to get a job in construction, but I'm glad to be back here."

He's relieved to be back on payroll and said the company's celebration for injury-free days went a long way in making employees feel appreciated.

"They really do care about our safety; we all look out for each other," Halford said.

Three years of injury-free days might not seem like a big accomplishment, given the fact that the plant was closed for a chunk of that time, but Koehler said the record is repeated at its Boardman, Ore., ethanol plant.

Of the company's four ethanol plants (the other two are in California), only the Boardman facility made it through the economic downturn without closing its doors.

"Safety is our top priority," Koehler said. "The fact that this record goes back to when (the Burley plant was) originally running to now; and that our facility in Boardman, which didn't close, has a similar record, is testament to the value of our employees."

Obama's clean-tech vision meets with skepticism

By Tiffany Hsu
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — President Barack Obama has grand plans for a green nation — 1 million electric vehicles on the road within four years and clean power sources providing 80 percent of the nation's energy by 2035.

But after getting a surprisingly extensive shout-out in Obama's State of the Union address — he sees clean tech as the country's best chance to seize its "Sputnik moment" — industry officials this week were less than enthusiastic and questioned whether the ambitious targets were attainable.

"It's a lofty goal, but it's like the race to the moon in that it's generally achievable," said John Cheney, chief executive of solar project developer Silverado Power. "The issue is whether we have the political will and ability to pull together and actually do it."

The guarded reaction to Obama's speech comes as many clean-tech companies are struggling to recover from the recession and at the same time are facing aggressive competition from China.

Many fear Obama's long-range objectives will be distracting and take the focus off crucial, short-term projects.

The American Wind Energy Association, a trade group for wind power companies, said the industry wants to ramp up developments right away after laboring through a major slump in 2010.

"We don't need to wait nearly three decades," said Denise Bode, the group's chief executive.

And other clean-tech industry executives are grumbling that Obama has grouped "clean coal" and nuclear power along with solar panels, wind turbines and biofuels as green power sources.

Nuclear energy — a pet cause of Obama-appointed

Energy Secretary Steven Chu — creates radioactive waste that lasts for thousands of years and also carries grave security concerns, said Arjun Makhijani, president of the Institute for Energy and Environmental Research.

Coal plants, even those that would capture and store carbon dioxide emissions, would still use enormous reserves of water and

Davos leaders: Save the euro, and the planet

By Angela Charlton and Frank Jordans
Associated Press writers

DAVOS, Switzerland — France's president tried Thursday to save the reputation of Europe and its currency, battered by debt crises and worries about whether the continent is being steamrolled by speedier eastern economies.

The presidents of South Africa and Mexico, meanwhile, worked to save the planet, sharing notes on hosting climate talks and how to get the U.S. and China — and the business community — to invest in cleaner energy.

The overall mood at the

World Economic Forum this year is more upbeat than the past two, but by no means celebratory. Thursday was no exception, as leaders, bankers and investors struggled for ideas to get Europe growing again.

As they spoke, a small explosion in a Davos hotel briefly disrupted the Alpine winter calm, unusual for this Swiss resort, blanketed in security during the annual forum. Windows were broken but there were no injuries, Swiss police said.

French President Nicolas Sarkozy sought to shake the euro worriers awake, vowing that he and European partners will "never turn our backs on the euro" and calling it a linchpin of peace and prosperity. That gave an extra boost to the rebounding currency on world markets.

Pensioners to get 1 percent benefit hike

BOISE — About 33,000 Idaho state and local government retirees are due to get a 1 percent cost-of-living increase in their benefit payments.

State pension fund director Don Drum told the Senate Commerce Committee on Thursday the hike is required by law, since the inflation index Idaho uses rose by more than 1 last year.

Drum says the fund's asset value has risen to $11.7 billion, more pre-2008 financial crisis levels. That's 88 percent of its total liabilities, and Drum says financial managers predict they'll be able to invest their way out of a $1.4 billion unfunded liability.

That's good news for current government workers and the state, because they're less likely to face increases in contributions.

Idaho's average pension benefit is $1,340 monthly — or 11th lowest in the nation.

Energy agency fines INL in radiation case

IDAHO FALLS — The U.S. Department of Energy has levied an $85,000 fine against the contractor for the Idaho National Laboratory after a worker was accidentally exposed to a radiation generating device.

Lab contractor Battelle Energy Alliance says its investigators identified several safety flaws that led to the exposure.

The Post-Register reports that the federal agency praised Battelle for reacting quickly last March and recognizing the severity of the case after an employee's hand was exposed to radiation.

Energy Department officials say Battelle is re-examining operations and safety measures in high radiation areas to ensure proper controls are in place.

In a letter to the DOE, Battelle officials blamed a failure to follow existing procedures and failure to post and control entry to high-radiation rooms.

Idaho Power promotes Greg Said to VP

BOISE — Idaho Power President and CEO LaMont Keen have announced the promotion of General Manager of Regulatory Affairs Greg Said to vice president of regulatory affairs.

Said continues his responsibilities for the management of economic regulatory activities in both the Idaho and Oregon retail jurisdictions and with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

Said, a longtime Idaho Power leadership team member, was previously promoted to leader of the Regulatory Affairs team in April 2010.

"2010 was a particularly robust year for complex regulatory initiatives, and through Greg's leadership Idaho Power was able to ensure sound strategy to drive outcomes that benefitted our owners and customers," said Keen in a statement. "Greg has been a longtime contributor to our company's regulatory successes and is well prepared for the challenges of the future. His business expertise and 30-year history with Idaho Power make him the ideal executive to lead this key department now and in the future."

Said, a graduate of Boise State University, began his career at Idaho Power in 1980 as an analyst in the company's Resource Planning department.

In 1989, he accepted an analyst position in the company's rate department, where in 1992 he was selected to design a pivotal Power Cost Adjustment that was instrumental in reducing earnings volatility related in large part to the impacts of snowpack on hydroelectric generation.

Said was promoted to director of revenue requirement in 1996. In that position, Said led a number of company efforts including the preparation of Integrated Resource Plans, requests for proposals to construct new generation facilities and the creation of a PCA mechanism in Oregon.

In August 2008, he became director of state regulation and took on responsibility for the preparation oversight of all regulatory filings in state jurisdictions.

His role was critical with the collaborative settlement negotiations leading to significant and innovative changes in Idaho PCA methodology and both Idaho and Oregon general rate structure.

A surprise jump in applications for unemployment benefits and mixed earnings from large U.S. companies kept stocks on a short leash Thursday. Indexes ended slightly higher, with the Standard & Poor's 500 closing a half point below 1,300. The S&P 500 rose 2.91 points, or 0.2 percent, to close at 1,299.54. The last time the index closed above 1,300 was Aug. 28, 2008. The Dow inched up 4.39 points, or 0.1 percent, to close at 11,989.83. The index broke through 12,000 Wednesday for the first time since June 2008 but slipped in the late afternoon. It has gained 18.5 percent in the past year. The Nasdaq composite index gained 15.78, or 0.6 percent, to 2,755.28. Rising stocks narrowly outpaced falling ones on the New York Stock Exchange. Consolidated volume was 4.3 billion shares.

Kempthorne mixed business with politics, report says

BOISE (AP) — A federal report accuses former Idaho Gov. Dirk Kempthorne and other top Bush administration officials of using U.S. tax dollars to campaign for GOP candidates in the run-up to the 2006 midterm election.

The report issued Monday by the independent U.S. Office of Special Counsel concluded Kempthorne and others engaged in political activity on trips classified as official business.

At the time, Kempthorne, also a former U.S. Senator, was serving as U.S. Interior Secretary.

The report identifies two trips made by Kempthorne and efforts to coordinate travel with the White House.

Kempthorne, now CEO of the American Council of Life Insurers in Washington, D.C., was too busy Wednesday to comment, council spokesman Jack Dolan told the Idaho Statesman.

Michael Bogert, Kempthorne's legal counsel at the Interior Department, denied any wrongdoing. He told the Statesman the department's travel procedures at the time made it virtually impossible for Kempthorne to use tax dollars to stump for Republican hopefuls.

The Office of Special Counsel is responsible for enforcing Hatch Act restrictions on partisan political activity inside the federal government.

In the months leading to the 2006 elections, Republicans faced the possibility of losing control of Congress. The report claims the administration officials, in hopes of stemming losses in the House and Senate, repeatedly broke the law by using federal funds to send Cabinet secretaries and other high-level political appointees to congressional districts of GOP candidates in tight races.

"Because those trips were classified as official, funds from the U.S.

Treasury were used to finance the trips and reimbursement from the relevant campaigns was never sought," the report states.

"In other cases, even when trips were correctly designated as political, agencies used U.S.

Treasury funds to cover the costs associated with the trips and did not recoup those funds as required by the Hatch Act and its regulations," it added.

The report found that 10 agencies used federal funds to pay for political appointees to travel to events supporting Republican candidates in 2006 in an operation monitored closely by the White House Office of Political Affairs.

The report concludes Kempthorne used federal money on two trips:

- A Nov. 6 trip that involved a press conference with Rep. Charles Taylor, R-N.C., at the site of a proposed new visitor center in the Blue Ridge Parkway headquarters. The report concluded the trip on the eve of the election was political, not official business.

- A trip on Nov. 3-4 to Phoenix and Payson, Ariz., appearing with Rep. Rick Renzi at an event for Native Americans and to discuss fire danger in Payson. The report found the Arizona trip was also political.

"In reality, these events constituted political activity because they were directed toward Rep. Renzi's electoral success," the report stated.

Bogert said he wasn't familiar with the trips cited in the report but insisted all travel requests were approved for the right reasons.

"I am confident that our system would have judged the travel requests on the merits for its public purpose," Bogert said. "There was never any gray margin. We did nothing other than take the advice and counsel of our career people that were advising us on Hatch Act matters."

AROUND IDAHO

Pensioners due to get 1 percent benefit hike

BOISE — About 33,000 Idaho state and local government retirees are due to get a 1 percent cost-of-living increase in their benefit payments.

State pension fund director Don Drum told the Senate Commerce Committee on Thursday the hike is required by law, since the inflation index Idaho uses rose by more than 1 last year.

Drum says the fund's asset value has risen to $11.7 billion, more pre-2008 financial crisis levels. That's 88 percent of its total liabilities, and Drum says financial managers predict they'll be able to invest their way out of a $1.4 billion unfunded liability.

That's good news for current government workers and the state, because they're less likely to face increases in contributions.

Idaho's average pension benefit is $1,340 monthly — or 11th lowest in the nation.

Officials wait to hear fate of wolf petition

BOISE — State wildlife managers expect to hear back in the next six weeks on Idaho's petition to kill wolves in the upper Clearwater River Basin.

Idaho Fish and Game Commissioner Fred Trevey told lawmakers Thursday the state is prepared to move "instantly" into the Lolo Zone in northern Idaho.

The state has petitioned the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to kill up to 50 wolves in the Lolo Zone, with the goal of boosting elk populations.

States are allowed to remove wolves if they are harming deer or elk herds.

Fewer than 2,000 elk live in the Lolo Zone, biologist say, and that population fell after a steep drop in the mid- to late-1990s attributed to harsh winters, habitat changes, and predation by bears and mountain lions.

State officials contend the elk population would have rebounded if not for wolves.

Budget cuts affect psychiatric hospitals

BOISE — A state Department of Health and Welfare official says budget cuts at Idaho's two state psychiatric hospitals have resulted in disturbing trends, including more assaults on staffers.

Mental health services division administrator Kathleen Allyn told lawmakers Thursday that part of the problem is the two hospitals are treating more seriously ill patients with fewer employees.

The agency wants an additional $254,000 from an Idaho's endowment land fund to hire personnel and keep State Hospital South in Blackfoot operating at full capacity.

The endowment lands were granted to Idaho at statehood and are managed to benefit public schools, higher education and the state hospital in southern Idaho.

Former St. Anthony mayor sentenced for rape

REXBURG (AP) — A former southeastern Idaho mayor and city councilman has been sentenced to at least three years in prison for the statutory rape of a 16-year-old girl.

The Standard Journal reports 63-year-old Roy W. Parker of St. Anthony was sentenced Tuesday to three to 12 years in prison. District Judge Greg Moeller also levied a $5,000 fine against Parker, who was convicted in October after a three-day jury trial.

Parker's attorney, John Cutler, sought a suspended sentence or house arrest along with counseling.

Deputy Fremont County Prosecutor Gilman Gardner argued Parker took advantage of a young woman entrusted to his care and that the girl endured pressure to change her testimony.

Challenger: 25 years later, a still painful wound

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — For many, no single word evokes as much pain. Challenger.

A quarter-century later, images of the exploding space shuttle still signify all that can go wrong with technology and the sharpest minds. The accident on Jan. 28, 1986 — a scant 73 seconds into flight, nine miles above the Atlantic for all to see — remains NASA's most visible failure.

It was the world's first high-tech catastrophe to unfold on live TV. Adding to the anguish was the young audience: School children everywhere tuned in that morning to watch the launch of the first schoolteacher and ordinary citizen bound for space, Christa McAuliffe.

She never made it. McAuliffe and six others on board perished as the cameras rolled, victims of stiff O-ring seals and feeble bureaucratic decisions.

It was, as one grief and trauma expert recalls, "the beginning of the age when the whole world knew what happened as it happened."

"That was kind of our pilot study for all the rest to come, I think. It was so ghastly," said Sally Karioth, a professor in Florida State University's school of nursing.

The crew compartment shot out of the fireball, intact, and continued upward another three miles before plummeting. The free fall lasted more than two minutes. There was no parachute to slow the descent, no escape system whatsoever; NASA had skipped all that in shuttle development. Space travel was considered so ordinary, in fact, that the Challenger seven wore little more than blue coveralls and skimpy motorcycle-type helmets for takeoff.

In a horrific flash, the most diverse space crew ever — including one black, one Japanese-American and two women, one of them a Jew — was gone. The name of NASA's second oldest shuttle was forever locked in a where-ever-you moment.

"You say 'Challenger' and then we see that figure of smoke in the sky," said Karioth, who teaches death and dying classes.

There has been a growing list of calamities since then.

Waco. Oklahoma City. Columbine. 9/11. Shuttle Columbia. Katrina. Virginia Tech. And now, Tucson.

With so much carnage, another space catastrophe wouldn't have the same impact as Challenger, Karioth noted. "We're used to everybody dying now," she said.

The death of a young, vivacious schoolteacher, combined with NASA's stubborn refusal to share information about the accident and the realization that America's space program was fallible, added to the nation's collective pain.

President Ronald Reagan's poetic tribute soothed the day's raw emotions.

"The crew of the space shuttle Challenger honored us by the manner in which they lived their lives," Reagan told a grieving nation after canceling that night's State of the Union address. "We will never forget them, nor the last time we saw them, this morning, as they prepared for their journey and waved goodbye and 'slipped the surly bonds of Earth' to 'touch the face of God!'"

NASA safely had launched shuttles 24 times before, and a sense of routine and hurry-it-up had crept in. The space agency wanted to pull off 15 missions in 1986. Repeated delays with Columbia on that year's first flight and then with Challenger were spoiling the effort.

The first federal Martin Luther King holiday had just been observed. NASA's Voyager 2 probe, flying farther than any previous spacecraft, had swung past Uranus, discovering 10 new moons. "That's What Friends Are For," the AIDS charity anthem, topped the music charts. And a 37-year-old schoolteacher from Concord, N.H., was about to rocket into orbit.

"Imagine a history teacher making history," McAuliffe observed before the flight. She got an apple from a technician atop the ice-encrusted launch pad, before boarding Challenger one final time.

In the 20s at daybreak, the temperature had risen only into the mid-30s by the time Challenger blasted off at 11:38 a.m. "Go at throttle up," radioed commander Francis "Dick" Scobee.

What happened next was unthinkable, his widow says.

"It was really a shock wave that went across our country and around the world," June Scobee Rodgers said in an interview this week with The Associated Press. "People witnessed the loss of Challenger over and over on their televisions."

Dick Scobee. Michael Smith. Ellison Onizuka.

Judith Resnik. Ronald McNair. Christa McAuliffe. Gregory Jarvis. The first of the shuttle astronauts to die on the job.

Seventeen years later, almost to the day, seven more astronauts were killed, this time at the end of their mission. Instead of booster rockets and freezing launch weather, fuel-tank foam insulation was to blame. The similarities between Challenger and Columbia, though, were haunting. Another multiethnic crew lost, more poor decision-making, an intolerant work culture, drum-beating pressure to launch.

NASA paused Thursday to remember all 17 astronauts lost in the line of duty over the years, including three from the Apollo launch pad fire in 1967. A wreath was laid at Arlington National Cemetery. And the shuttle fleet is grounded once more. Fuel tank cracking is the latest culprit.

NASA hopes to get Discovery flying by the end of February. Endeavour — Challenger's replacement — will follow in April. It will fly with or without commander Mark Kelly, who's tending to his wounded wife, Arizona Congresswoman Gabrielle Giffords, who was shot Jan. 8 in Tucson. Atlantis will close out the 30-year shuttle program with a summertime flight, No. 135.

For their part, the families of the lost Challenger crew dwell on the good that came out of the accident: a network of education centers. The 48th Challenger Learning Center opens today in Louisville, Ky.

Steven J. McAuliffe, widower of Christa McAuliffe, said in a statement Thursday that remembrances by people across the country are "both comforting and inspirational to our family."

He said she would be especially pleased by the Challenger Center for Space Science Education. Dick Scobee's widow, June Rodgers, is an educator and founding board chairman of the center.

As she has on every Challenger anniversary, Rodgers will visit a learning center to watch the children in action. First, she will take part in NASA's public memorial service this morning at Kennedy Space Center, some 10 miles from Challenger's grave. The remains of the spacecraft — what was retrieved from the ocean — are buried in a pair of abandoned missile silos on Air Force property.

"I wonder if it's because the image is so ingrained in our brains, that it seems like yesterday," Rodgers said.

Almost as many years have passed since the accident, as the span of her 26-year marriage to Dick Scobee.

"Isn't it interesting about the number 25?" she asked softly. "Challenger was the 25th mission. This is 25 years."

A full generation has come and gone.

Filer High art students create portraits of Peruvian orphans

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

For the art students at Filer High School, there were two challenges:

They had to draw a portrait of someone they didn't know, from a small photograph sent halfway across the world.

They also had to put themselves in the shoes of that person, a child living in a Peruvian orphanage. Spending so many hours with the child's face, the students learned not only how to illustrate light on a cheek, but also compassion for those less fortunate.

At first, the students wanted to choose which orphan to draw, art teacher Karen Fothergill said.

"I said, 'I'm just going to give you one, because each of these children deserves your love. You're going to get who you get and I want you to find the beauty in that child, and they so did,'" she said. "Every face is so beautiful when you look at it, and they're all different."

The personal connection gave meaning to the Memory Project artwork, said several students.

"Usually in art class you get the assignment and you do it and it's nothing real big. But when you're doing it for a person to have and keep, it makes you want to work harder for it, and then it turns out really good," said Jessica Beisel, 17, of Hollister. "I tried to make it as special as I could."

David Murray, 16, of Filer, hoped the smile on the face of the girl he drew would be repeated when she received his portrait, despite her apparently difficult life.

"She looks so happy, but she did have some scars on her face, so I thought about how she got those," he said. "Mostly I was thinking about how happy she'd be when she saw it."

Cassie Mills, 15, of Twin Falls, said even the students who aren't as interested in art as she is took the project seriously.

"The people that usually slack, they took their projects home, they spent hours on them; it was amazing how many people really cared," she said.

Mills said she was inspired to do more to help the disadvantaged, perhaps through fundraising.

"The challenge is always fun, that's one of the things I love about art, but usually when I do projects I do them for me and I don't care what the standards are," she said. "It's one of the best projects, artwork, I've ever done in my life. I really worked on my colors and it's the hardest I've ever tried to make it perfect, so a kid could be happy when they got it."

Fothergill said her students' efforts, and the connections they made to the kids in the photos, underline the importance of art in schools.

"It's not a frill. It's a way we can really connect to children and make them realize how special they are," she said. "Kids really want to care, they want to make a difference, and it's a great opportunity for them to be able to affect others with their art."

The Memory Project also presented an artistic challenge. Many students cited difficulties replicating skin tones and textures, lighting and shadow, proportion and dimensionality.

"Making it look less cartoony, and blending," said Kristy Lowell, 18, of Filer. "Getting a realistic look to the picture with just pastels, that was kind of a challenge."

Realism as an artistic goal is an appropriate stage of development during high school, Fothergill said. But because the students are still acquiring the skills to achieve realism, it can be frustrating for them when they don't quite.

"They want it to look photographic; that is what they are motivated to do. I try to get them there and then take them beyond that to what artists do, which is communicate feelings and emotions," she said. "What you have to do when you draw is remove that critical voice, that negative stuff; see it in a critical but not emotionally critical way."

Fothergill said that while outsider art — that created by artists without formal training — is delightful, she hopes to teach her students the skills and techniques of a more traditional art education. Portraiture teaches proportion, blending and achieving realism.

"A face is hard for that reason ... If it's not exactly right, it's hard to tell who that face is," she said. "I think kids are harder on themselves with portraits, because of wanting it to look like the portrait they're drawing."

Jessica Adamson, 16, of Filer, said she is eager to use the techniques she learned through the Memory Project, perhaps in portraits of family or friends.

"I'm more comfortable drawing people's faces," she said. And more aware of her good fortune, compared with the subjects of the class's portraits. "Their faces were so cute and nice and sweet; they looked like they were happy for what they had, that they didn't take things for granted."

Although the students were discouraged from sending anything with their portraits to the Peruvian orphans — lest the children become too attached to someone who couldn't adopt them — some of the students wanted to include a personal comment.

"Some put notes on the back, 'Love your face, hope you're having a good day,'" Fothergill said. Adamson added, "Hey, good luck in the future."

Like the portraits, the notes are a small thing. But, like a perfectly placed pencil line, small things can make a difference.

Where can I see the portraits?

For now, the finished 9-by-12-inch portraits created by Filer High School art students are on display at the school library, where anyone can come to see them during school hours. They are displayed next to photographs of the children they portray. In May, the exhibit will move to Lion's Gate Gallery in Filer as part of the school's end-of-the-year art show. For dates of that gallery show, watch the Times-News' Entertainment calendar.

What is the Memory Project?

Created by a University of Wisconsin graduate student in 2004, the Memory Project tasks students in the U.S., UK and Canada to create portraits of disadvantaged or orphaned children and teens in Third World countries. About 25,000 portraits have been created for about half that number of children, who are photographed with the portraits and then get them as personal keepsakes. According to thememoryproject.org, "the goal of the project is to inspire caring, global friendship, and a positive sense of self... We want to help the kids see themselves as works of art." Donations to support Filer High School's Memory Project can be made to the school, attention "art class." It costs $15 per student to participate, which includes receipt of the photograph and sending of the finished portrait to the child it portrays.

Banff festival brings adventure flicks to Ketchum

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — What some people will do for fun! James Castrission and Justin Jones kayak the Tasman Sea between their native Australia and New Zealand — never mind the 10-meter-tall waves, massive storms, shark-filled seas and strong currents.

Ueli Steck finds fun in setting speed records ascending the largest, tallest walls in the Alps, Argentina and the U.S. And a group of cavers find it pushing through impossibly small passages in wilderness caves to access some of Earth's final frontiers.

These adventures and more are the stuff that this year's Banff Mountain Film Festival is made of.

Their stories are chronicled in three of 14 films to be shown over the course of two nights at the nexStage Theatre in Ketchum. The films begin at 7 p.m. Feb. 4 and 5.

"The Banff Mountain Film Festival is an inspiring international film competition featuring the world's best footage on mountain subjects," said Michael Boge, who has organized the festival's Ketchum stop for 11 years. "The original festival began in 1976 in Banff, Alberta. In 1986 the festival began an outreach program to bring the festival to other communities, providing an incredible quality film experience for those who cannot make the annual trek to the Canadian Rockies to attend the film festival in November."

"I love the cultural films especially," said Mike Brown, a regular film-goer. "And the short funny films."

As in years past, proceeds from the festival will go to the Friends of the Sawtooth National Forest Avalanche Center and the Satipo Kids project, which enables 38 Peruvian children to attend school.

The Friends will hold a raffle during the event, giving away skis, snowshoes,

"The Longest Way" — It's about a year-long walk from Beijing to Urumqi in China — the time and distance demonstrated by the growth of a beard.

"Life cycles" — This mountain biking film is said to provide some of the most visually stunning images the mountain sports world has seen.

"AZADI: Freedom" — It looks at the role that skiing is playing in rebuilding tourism in Kashmir following the violent militant resurgence of the 1990s. The world's highest skiable gondola sits amid a highly militarized region, yet the freedom of adventure is drawing foreigners back to this former Shangri-La.

"Khumbu Climbing School" — This film examines how the climbing school has contributed to the safety of Nepali climbers. "I always felt like a yak even though I had been to the summit of Mount Everest," says one Sherpa. "Now I'm a climber."

"Crossing the Ditch" — It depicts Australians' success in being the first to cross the Tasman by kayak.

"The Swiss Machine" — Stunning aerial footage follows a Swiss climber as he races up 2,500-meter alpine faces.

"Parking Garage: Beyond the Limit" — This is a spoof of the Discovery Channel

HAILEY — A look at a "Whitebark Warrior" and a ski adventure along a "Desert River" will be among three films shown at the Winter Wildlands Alliance Backcountry Film Festival at The Liberty Theatre on Tuesday night.

The alliance is partnering with Idaho Conservation League's Ketchum office to showcase the films during the Second Annual Sun Valley Nordic Festival, a nine-day event that begins Saturday.

"We thought it would be fun to have something in Hailey during the festival," said the league's Brett Stevenson.

The first film will be the Best of Festival, Teton Gravity Research's "Deeper," which follows snowboarder Jeremy Jones and other riders as they venture deep into untouched terrain without the aid of helicopters, snowmobiles or lifts.

The second is "Desert River," featuring a ski adventure in Alaska filmed by Sweetgrass Productions. The last is "Whitebark Warrior," which chronicles the decline of thousand-year-old whitebark pines due to climate change, and the efforts under way to save the iconic high alpine trees.

Doors open at 6 p.m., and the films begin at 7 p.m. Tickets are $8. There will be a raffle and Big Sky beer, with proceeds going to Winter Wildlands Alliance's efforts to preserve winter landscapes for quiet uses.

The festival, which premiered in Boise, is traveling to more than 30 communities in the U.S. from Alaska to New Hampshire.

This weekend offers a nice bit of variety around Magic Valley, from backcountry film adventure to the music of the British royals.

Enjoy sweet snowboard and ski action at Tuesday's Winter Wildlands Alliance Backcountry Film Festival. Or go classical instead, as Caritas Chorale presents Handel's coronation anthems on Saturday and Sunday — music that you're likely to hear during the Prince William and Kate nuptials.

For stage-happy kids and everyone who loves them: At Twin Falls High's Jive! Winter Showcase on Saturday, expect plenty of song-and-dance numbers from "Seussical the Musical."

For anyone who looks at the big picture or packs a sack lunch: Geologist Steve Lubinski will open Twin Falls' Brown Bag Lecture Series today with an account of the Bonneville Flood and its enormous effects on the Snake River area.

For anyone who adores locally made pottery as much as I do: Sheryl and Bill West's ceramics exhibit will open with a Tuesday reception at the Herrett Center.

For anyone nostalgic for the '50s: Mini-Cassia's own The Taffetas will be among the first performers at the new Twin Falls Center for the Arts on Saturday.

And anyone who gave money to help build that new center might be pleased to see its first round of youth art classes kicking off this weekend. Not a bad time to be an arts lover in Twin Falls.

In last year's pick-the-Oscars contest, first-time contestant Joshua Spooner of Twin Falls beat out almost 100 other entrants by correctly guessing 12 out of our 13 categories.

But you just might be the movie lover who knocks Spooner out of the running this time. This year's winner will receive a $25 gift certificate to Ticketmaster and be featured in an Entertainment story.

Our prediction contest covers 13 of the Academy Award categories. In the case of a tie, whoever correctly predicts the Best Foreign Language Film will be the winner. (Luck plays a part in this category. How many southern Idahoans had access to all five nominees?)

Send this form to Times-News, Attention: Virginia Hutchins, P.O. Box 548, Twin Falls, ID 83303, or drop it off at our office at 132 Fairfield St. W. in Twin Falls. Entries must be received by midnight on Feb. 26, and the winner will be notified by March 2.

Ceramic artists swap roles, express family theme in new exhibit

By Emily Katseanes
Times-News correspondent

They may have built the kiln at their Jerome home in 1980, but for Sheryl and Bill West, creating pottery in it still requires a mix of experience and experimentation. The duo's newest exhibit of lodgepole pine-fired ceramics, opening Tuesday, reflects that blending.

Through late March, the Jean B. King Gallery at the College of Southern Idaho's Herrett Center will display platters, vases, jars and mugs from the Wests — though not, perhaps, in the same dynamic as fans might expect.

Bill West said that, without consciously planning it, he and his wife switched the types of pieces they usually do.

"It's kind of a role reversal. Sheryl's making big things. I'm making the small cups and bowls," Bill said.

Sheryl's experiments created jars that are 21 to 26 inches tall, with contours and other details like sculpted or extended handles and sunken lids. Sheryl said the idea for making bigger jars came from her "bits and little drawings" that she decided to try larger.

"I've never thrown this large before," she said.

One of Bill's experiments was a little less successful. Last summer, he made sets of pottery for his daughter's wedding and she requested a platter. Not many of the 16-inch pieces worked out, but some of the survivors are in the exhibit.

"It was my half of the investigation," Bill West said.

Other ideas that played into the pieces' creation include cooperation, and creating a whole out of many pieces. Using the wood-fired kiln requires two people, to ensure the blend of hot and cold air remains balanced enough to fire the pots properly.

But the mechanics of the Wests' process is not the only

TWO-POTTER SHOW

• What: Sheryl and Bill West showcase their newest wood-fired ceramics, including jars, cups, platters, vases and bowls, in an exhibit dubbed "work, together."

• Opening reception: 7-9 p.m. Tuesday. Free.

• Exhibit continues: Through March 26. Hours are 9:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Tuesdays and Fridays, 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Wednesdays and Thursdays, and 1-9 p.m. Saturdays. The Herrett Center is closed Sundays and Mondays. Admission is always free.

different sizes and glazes in a way that each separate piece contributes to a new design. Some small 4-inch plates will be arranged on the wall to look like a wave, while some slightly larger ones will be side by side in a rectangle pattern.

"They have stripes in them that, visually, will connect," Sheryl said.

Their ceramics also aim to reflect their family life. Bill sees family as one of the dominant themes in his work.

"Typically, the people I want to impress are the ones close to me. Not really careerism," he said.

Sheryl sees her work reflecting many pieces creating a whole as their family of three daughters and five grandchildren does the same.

"Your life is shifting. Our life is coming to the end, but it's growing at the other end with the kids. That's where we are," Sheryl said.

Musician Laura Taylor gains fans, live gigs

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

The Anchor Bistro and Bar was crowded on Jan. 19, with diners talking loudly as they ate and watched sports.

But Laura Taylor's clear, strong voice cut through the noise, and even those engaged in conversation or the NBA games sometimes paused to listen.

The venue was much louder than she's used to, the Twin Falls acoustic guitarist said later, but she enjoyed it.

"It wasn't bad, but it was different," she said, adding she got a great reception at the Twin Falls restaurant.

The Times-News sat down with Taylor, 25, to get insight on her soulful, genuine music. Here's what we learned.

Where she finds her inspiration: Listening to her friends' problems. Taylor hasn't dated, she said, but has written plenty of love songs. She's empathetic when hearing what her friends are going through, she said.

Sometimes, those songs help Taylor get through similar issues when she experiences them later.

"So it bites me in the butt sometimes," she said.

What's the deal with "The Beard Song"?: Everyone loves to guess who "The Beard Song" is about — a crush? Jesus? — but Taylor didn't have a special someone in mind when she wrote the song.

The lyrics — "You're the hottest bearded man I've ever seen" — were inspired by a con-

Twin Falls musician Laura Taylor, 25, hasn't released a CD, but the prolific performer has appeared at venues across Magic Valley like Anchor Bistro, Hands On and Full Moon Gallery.

LISTEN TO THE MUSIC

Hear Laura Taylor live from 7 to 10 p.m. Feb. 9 at Anchor Bistro and Bar in Twin Falls. You can also hear her music online at myspace.com/laurataylorings and facebook.com/laurataylorings.

Taylor is also in the top 30 contestants for Magic Valley's Got Talent. See her and the other finalists perform at 6:30 p.m. Feb. 11 at Lighthouse Christian School. Admission is $5 and a can of food.

versation with teen girls from her church. They thought beards were gross, and Taylor wanted to show them otherwise.

The song is her most popular and one of her favorites to play, and has gotten her three "beard rubs," where friends come up and rub their beards on her face.

"Beards are hot," she said. "Spread the word."

How she picks what songs to cover: Taylor likes taking upbeat pop or R&B songs — "songs that it's probably inappropriate for me to cover," she said — and giving them a new acoustic life. On Jan. 19, she played "Party in the USA" by Miley Cyrus and "No Scrubs" by TLC.

"That's probably my favorite," she said of the TLC song.

What's on her iPod: Norah Jones, Missy Higgins and Christian hip-hop. "I have a lot of everything," she said.

What's not on her iPod: Country music. Taylor doesn't like the genre, save for a few songs her grandpa made her sing. She doesn't remember all of the song titles, but whenever she sings them, she remembers him fondly.

"I will sing country music in the memory of my grandpa, but that's it," she said.

Favorite local acts: Ethan

Tucker, Dillon Mayes, Otto Pilate.

Where you might have heard her: Taylor has become a mainstay at Twin Falls venues like Hands On, Full Moon Gallery and, before it closed, Pandora's. In addition to opening for Twin Falls singer and songwriter Ethan Tucker in November, Taylor has opened for non-musical acts like author Dave Pelzer and comedian Curt Harlow, both in October. Taylor hasn't released a CD, but she puts music online at myspace.com.

Where you'll find her when she's not writing music: At church. Taylor attends Amazing Grace Fellowship, where she leads a Thursday-night worship band called The Pursuit.

"It's so fun to play with a full band," she said.

What others say: Tucker is a huge fan.

"I swear, man, she's so good," he said. "She's better than me, man, I'll tell you that right now."

At her Jan. 19 show, Taylor gained some fans.

"I think she's terrific. Beautiful voice," said Beth Bruns of Eden.

"I think she's awesome, said Cherry Willie of Twin Falls.

Her goals: Taylor would love to make a career out of music but isn't concerned with being famous.

"To me, music is such an amazing way to express things," Taylor said.

Curious about the British royals? Hear some of their music in Ketchum

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — A 70-voice Caritas Chorale will present the pomp and circumstance of Handel's "Four Coronation Anthems" Saturday and Sunday at the Presbyterian Church of the Big Wood in Ketchum.

The choir and a 35-piece orchestra will perform George Frideric Handel's festival pieces at 3:30 p.m. both days at the church at 100 Saddle Road. The concerts are free, but donations will be accepted to help pay orchestra players, most of whom come from outside the Wood River Valley.

Handel wrote the anthems for the coronation of King George II at Westminster Abbey, and they've been used for every coronation since. In addition to coronations, the music has been performed at royal weddings and in a variety of films, including "The Young Victoria."

There's a good chance the music will be present at the upcoming nuptials for Prince William and Kate, as well.

"We ended up lucky in that the royal wedding is coming up right after we sing this," said director Dick Brown. "But I had planned this before the wedding was announced."

This weekend's concerts will offer a rare opportunity to hear Company of Fools music director R.L. Rowsey sing a solo. Other soloists are Dawson Howard, Amy Staiger and Jennette Tomlinson. The latter two sing with Brown's elite Anam Cara choir.

Choir members say the music is some of the most difficult they have sung, layering up to seven voice parts at a time. Handel's "Messiah" involved four-part harmony, in contrast.

The "Coronation Anthems" are "Baroque music at its most resplendent," said Brown. "Festive occasions always brought out the best in Handel. And these pieces are particularly festive. Handel always matched his works to the occasion, and it's difficult to think of any occasion grander than a coronation."

CSI rodeo gears up for annual boxing smoker

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

Three minutes isn't very long. But for bodies trained to survive eight seconds, it's an eternity.

A number of College of Southern Idaho rodeo team members, as well as rodeo cowboys and cowgirls from other regional universities and some members of the general public, will duke it out on Saturday in CSI's 34th annual boxing smoker event held at the Eldon Evans Expo Center.

Between 12 and 16 bouts are expected for Saturday's festivities, with each bout consisting of three one-minute rounds. The final bout list will be set after weigh-ins the morning of the event.

"They've got to be pretty close to the same height and weight, and then ability levels. We want to put on a good show and if it's a mismatch it's not going to be a very good show," said CSI rodeo coach Steve Birnie. "That's what the people like, they want to see three rounds of good action and that's what we try to give them."

In a typical year, Birnie said, most of the participants don't have any boxing experience. They're just there to have fun.

But they're also there to raise money. Nearly half of the CSI rodeo program's funds on a year-to-year popularity in the community.

"We couldn't do it without the support," Birnie said.

Rodeo members from CSI, Utah State, Utah Valley and Weber State are expected to compete, as well as some walk-ins from the CSI student body and the general public. You name a walk of life, Birnie said, and someone competing will probably represent it.

"Just kind of whoever's interested in it — older guys, some real young guys, all shapes and sizes. But our overall goal is to try and put on good fights," he said. "You get to see and meet a lot of different kids and people."

The doors open at 6 p.m., and the pre-fight festivities begin at 7:30. Boxing action is expected to begin around 8:05 p.m.

A former two-time state champion wrestler, Minico wrestling coach Justin Gardner has traded in his singlet for a shirt and tie as he and the Spartans host the 2011 Red Halverson Memorial Wrestling Invitational today and Saturday.

Red Halverson invite begins today

RUPERT — In the past, Justin Gardner has been merely a guest at the annual Red Halverson Memorial Wrestling Invitational.

But now, as Minico's new head wrestling coach, this will be Gardner's first time hosting the decades-old tournament. And he knows just how tough the competion can be — even as a two-time state champion wrestler at Bonneville High, Gardner could never win the Red Halverson.

"It's a tournament where the true top rises," he said. "People know it as a tough tournament, and that's what makes it so good and what makes people look forward to it."

Gooding girls rebound way past Valley, 47-36

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

HAZELTON — Going into Thursday's Canyon Conference season finale, Gooding and Valley knew they would be seeing each other again on Monday in the first round of the Class 2A District IV Tournament.

The only question: Where would that game take place?

By beating Valley 47-36, Gooding wrapped up the league's No. 2 seed and earned the right to host.

Angela Vitek scored 16 points and Tia Conrad added 10 to lead the Senators, who have won eight of their last nine.

"We didn't play as well as we could have, but I know we'll come out tough against them on Monday," said Vitek. "We're always happy with a win. We're going to work on some things and win again."

In a scrappy defensive game, the teams combined to turn the ball over 42 times.

THE FRENCH EVOLUTION

College of Southern Idaho freshman Fanny Cavallo is making a big impact for the Golden Eagles as she grasps English and America's style of play.

Cavallo coming on strong for CSI women

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

Fanny Cavallo was born on another continent, raised on another and came to a third to play college basketball.

With all that globe-trotting, it's fitting that she's pretty talented on a basketball court. And with a few hurdles out of the way, she's finally getting a chance to really show it.

Born in the Republic of Mali in western Africa, Cavallo was adopted at age 3 by French parents. While she wasn't born in France, there's no doubting it's her home.

"I'm French," said Cavallo. "Very French."

Now she's getting the hang

"She made a couple moves and you saw the athleticism and possibilities."

— CSI coach Randy Rogers, referring to Internet footage of Cavallo playing 3-on-3 ball of English and life in America as a 6-foot freshman post for the College of Southern Idaho women's basketball team.

After graduating from Lycee Hector Berlioz High School in Lorques, France, and playing for the French junior national team and the lower level squad of Club Mondeville, the dominoes began tipping in a sequence of events that brought her to Twin Falls.

The first domino fell when 6-foot siblings Brigette and Rachael Spinks of St. George, Utah, decided to leave CSI this summer to play closer to home at Dixie State College. Needing a post presence, CSI coach Randy Rogers spoke with a coach at Santa Clara, who pointed him in Cavallo's direction, calling her a future NCAA Division I prospect.

All Rogers had to go on in scouting Cavallo was some raw Internet footage of her playing 3-on-3 ball. It was enough.

"She made a couple moves and you saw the athleticism and possibilities," said Rogers.

But CSI fans didn't get to see those possibilities early in the season.

Going the better-safely-than-sorry route, CSI chose to sit Cavallo while waiting for letters from both the French Basketball Federation and Mondeville stating that she was an amateur. Her parents also had to send a statement saying that Cavallo had never signed a contract or played professionally.

The paperwork wait dragged on for several weeks and Cavallo missed the first six games of the season.

"It was a very hard time for me," she said. "At that time I didn't know if I would play one day."

Chandler keys Minico win streak

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Heading into the girls basketball postseason, Minico is perhaps the Great Basin Conference's hottest team, having won six in a row before Thursday's game with Preston, including a victory over league-leading Wood River.

Marlee Chandler's steady play is a big reason why.

"She's our catalyst," Minico coach Joe D. Shepard said. "She's done it all year, in just about every game. She's definitely our team leader and one we count on for a lot of things."

The junior guard leads the team in several statistical categories, including scoring 11.5 points per game. A talented multi-sport athlete, Chandler holds school track records in the 400 meters and the medley relay.

Chandler

Times-News Athlete of the Week

Although she's a track star, basketball is her first love.

"In basketball, what you put into it is what you get out of it," she said. "Whether you're making the shot, or a good hustle play, everything that you put into it you get a reward back. It just feels great when you do well. In track, you run to win, but it's not the same feeling."

Apart from her athletic abilities, Chandler's leadership has been key.

"She's a good leader out on the floor. She's fiery, but she's not going to chew anybody out," Shepard said.

It wasn't easy for Minico to capture the No. 3 seed for the Class 4A District IV tournament, which begins Tuesday. The Spartans started the season 3-10 overall, including losses in four out of their first five conference games.

However, once Minico's players worked out their differences and came together, it's been a whole new team.

"It's been amazing to me that we've come from what we were, to where we are now," said Chandler, who credited all her teammates. "It's such a big growth. We've just got to keep playing like we're playing, get excited and know what we've got to do."

Halverson

More than 250 wrestlers from 20 schools will compete at this year's tournament, including local teams Buhl, Burley, Canyon Ridge, Declo, Jerome, Kimberly, Minico and Twin Falls.

Today's session begins at 3:15 p.m. at Minico High School. Saturday's session begins at 9 a.m. and concludes with championship matches in the early afternoon.

Some of the top teams in attendance include 2010 Halverson champ Highland. Pocatello and Jerome — last year's second- and third-place teams, respectively — will also be among the favorites.

In all, seven teams that are currently ranked in the top five of their respective state classifications will compete.

"Everybody knows that you can't take a match off," Gardner said. "Whether it's the first match or the finals, every match is tough. You've got to be ready."

Five individual champs return, including Minico's David Borden, who won the 152-pound title last year. Borden is now ranked No. 2 in Class 4A at 160 pounds, which promises to be one of the most competitive weights at this year's tournament. Taylor West of Borah (ranked first in 5A), Joey Dondero of Kuna (first in 4A), and Stetson Jorgensen of Blackfoot (fourth in 4A) will all be vying for the title.

The other four returning Halverson champs are Highland's Justin Lineberry (112), Brennan Bell (130), Anthony Esplin (135) and Gaylen Edmo (285).

No matter the wrestler's weight or classification, he will know exactly how he measures up as the state tournament looms less than a month away.

"It's our last tournament test before districts and state," Gardner said. "It tells us right where we sit as we hit the home stretch."

Cavallo

"It was tough," said Rogers. "Poor kid, she was just like 'Coach, what do I do?'"

Cavallo finally got her chance Nov. 26 against Mount Hood Community College (Ore.), but getting cleared to play was just one hurdle as she struggled with the language barrier and a new style of play.

"She was rushing things when she caught the ball," said Rogers. "Her first thought was to put the ball on the floor and then read the defense instead of trying to read the defense and see what she can do out of that situation."

The on-court transition was just part of what Cavallo calls a "very hard" first three months in Twin Falls. But with five months under her belt, she said, "I feel better each day."

Her English is getting better each day as well, but is still a work in progress.

"Sometimes she'll just look at you because she didn't understand what you said," said Rogers. "She's trying to focus visually on what's going on. You can just tell in her eyes, she has a look in her eye like 'Coach, I hear you and I kind of understand, but I don't really understand.' But she's getting so much better at asking questions."

And at playing American basketball.

Cavallo is averaging 79 points, 6.5 rebounds and 1.4 blocks, while shooting a team-best 49.1 percent from the field. She has had three blocks or more on four occasions since the team's December break.

CSI's Fanny Cavallo guards a College of Eastern Utah player Saturday, January 15, at CSI in Twin Falls.

"We're getting a better percentage shooter around the basket, we're getting five to eight rebounds a game and we're getting some intimidation factor because of the way she can block a shot or defend because of her athleticism," said Rogers. "She's pretty good with her feet."

With her progress on the court and in the classroom, Idaho is growing on Cavallo.

"It's cool," she said. "Basketball is cool, I like my coach, my team and school is pretty good, too."

While Cavallo eagerly awaits the chance to spend some time in France after the school year, there's another place she'd like to visit before that: Salina, Kan., home of the women's NJCAA Tournament.

"I want to go to nationals," said Cavallo.

With her steady progress on the court, there's a good chance she'll help the Golden Eagles get there.

James, Wade to start in NBA All-Star game

NEW YORK (AP) — LeBron James and Dwyane Wade of the Miami Heat are headed to the All-Star game together, and Derrick Rose gave the Chicago Bulls their first starter since Michael Jordan.

They will be joined in the Eastern Conference starting lineup by Amare Stoudemire, who will become the first New York Knicks player to start in nearly two decades, and Orlando center Dwight Howard, the leading vote-getter in the conference with nearly 2.1 million.

The Lakers' Kobe Bryant earned his 13th straight All-Star selection for the Feb. 20 game at his home arena. He is one shy of the record held by Jerry West, Shaquille O'Neal and Karl Malone.

The other starters announced Thursday were Hornets guard Chris Paul, forwards Kevin Durant and Carmelo Anthony of Denver, and Houston center Yao Ming, who is injured and will be replaced on the roster by a player of commissioner David Stern's choosing.

James and Wade, who both received more than 2 million votes from fans, will become the first set of teammates to start for the East since Wade and O'Neal represented the Heat in the 2007 game in Las Vegas.

"We try to represent our team, try to represent our franchise the right way every time we go out on the basketball court, and the fact that we've had so many votes by these fans, like I said it's very humbling and we appreciate it," James said before the Heat faced the New York Knicks.

Rose beat out the Celtics' Rajon Rondo to earn his first All-Star start and the first by a Chicago player since Jordan started the 1998 game.

"I think it's recognition for the job he's done this year," Bulls coach Tom Thibodeau said. "All-Star games, those are great. He certainly earned it, but ... I'm more concerned with what he's done for our team. And he's done a lot for the team."

Fans voted for the starters, but the reserves will be chosen by the head coaches in their respective conferences. Their votes must be submitted to the league office by next Tuesday, and the announcement will come next Thursday night.

Stoudemire has revitalized the Knicks since coming from Phoenix in the summer. He beat out perennial starter Kevin Garnett for the second forward spot and is just the fifth Knick to be selected a starter since fans began voting in 1974-75. Patrick Ewing was the last one to start in 1992, though he was elected again in 1997 but couldn't play because of a strained left groin.

In a rarity in fan voting, the East vote seems entirely right. Stoudemire, James and Wade are all in the league's top five in scoring, and Rose and Howard are right there with them as MVP candidates.

"It's an honor," Wade said of his election. "It's not as big a deal as it was when I first came in. It was like my heart was racing the day of the final vote hoping I get in. It continues to be an honor to get the same respect from the fans."

The West vote was flawed with the election of Yao, who despite missing nearly the entire season continues to earn a huge vote total from his native China. West coach Gregg Popovich of the San Antonio Spurs will pick one of his reserves to start.

Treys lift Knicks past Heat, 93-88

NEW YORK — Danilo Gallinari and Landry Fields made consecutive 3-pointers in the final 1:18, and the New York Knicks took advantage of LeBron James's miserable shooting night to beat the Miami Heat 93-88 on Thursday night.

Amare Stoudemire scored 24 points for the Knicks, when he was often the only one in a white jersey to make a shot for three quarters. But Gallinari was huge in the fourth quarter, when New York finally contained Dwyane Wade after he was nearly perfect through 36 minutes. Gallinari finished with 20 points and Fields added 19 points and 13 rebounds to help the Knicks win their second straight after a six-game skid.

Wade, fighting migraines that forced him to wear goggles, had 34 points and 16 rebounds, but missed all seven shots in the fourth quarter after he was 14 of 15 through three. James was 7 of 24 for his 24 points.

The Heat, playing without Chris Bosh because of a sprained left ankle, lost for the fifth time in six games. They managed only 15 points in the fourth quarter as their seven-game winning streak against the Knicks was snapped.

MAVERICKS 111, ROCKETS 106

DALLAS — Tyson Chandler matched his season high with 21 points and had 15 rebounds, reserve J.J. Barea added 19 points and Dallas hung on after wasting most of a 25-point first-half lead.

Dirk Nowitzki had 18 points and Jason Terry contributed 15 points for Dallas. The Mavericks have won four of five following a six-game losing streak.

Luis Scola led Houston with 30 points, and Kevin Martin had 27.

"We handled the pressure really well. It's great going into districts to play a team like that," Jones said.

Murtaugh's Humberto Pacheco hit a 3-pointer with 10 seconds remaining to tie the game at 70, before Spearing was fouled and hit the two free throws.

Spearing finished with 24 points, Pete Veenstra added 16 and Seth Williams pitched in with 13 for the Huskies. Pacheco scored 29 to lead all scorers, while Austin Stanger pitched in with 15. Jose Gonzalez and Troy Baynes each scored 13 for Murtaugh.

Tyler Hansen had 19 points and six rebounds in the loss for the Wolves (10-1).

Dietrich scored 13 of its 15 fourth-quarter points from the foul line, as the Blue Devils (10-5) held their nerve late on senior night to win their sixth in a row. They visit Carey on Tuesday.

DURHAM, N.C. — Seth Curry scored a season-high 20 points, leading No. 3 Duke past Boston College 84-68 on Thursday night.

Nolan Smith finished with 28 points while Kyle Singler had 14 for the Blue Devils (19-1, 6-1 Atlantic Coast Conference). They shot 50 percent from the field, hit 10 3-pointers and used a big run early in the second half to claim their fourth straight win.

NO. 19 VANDERBILT 81, MISSISSIPPI ST. 74

STARKVILLE, Miss. — Jeffery Taylor scored 25 points and John Jenkins added 21 for Vanderbilt.

The Commodores (15-4, 3-2 Southeastern Conference) won at Humphrey Coliseum for the first time since 1993, breaking a streak of eight straight losses in Starkville. Vanderbilt trailed by as many as nine points, but used a 12-0 run late in the second half to recover for its third straight victory.

Woods starts year with 69 at Farmers

SAN DIEGO — Tiger Woods began his new season with no bogeys, no birdies on the par 5s and no drama.

Looking for a new start after a disastrous year on and off the golf course, Woods felt little stress Thursday in the Farmers Insurance Open with a 3-under 69 on the North Course that left him five shots behind South Korean rookie Sunghoon Kang.

If the setting was familiar for Woods, so was his middle-of-the-pack position. In four of his six wins at this tournament, he has been at least five shots behind after the opening round.

"I'm happy with the way I played, absolutely," Woods said. "I could have been a lot better if I took care of the par 5s a little bit more, but obviously, I didn't do that."

Kang, a 24-year-old rookie, finished with back-to-back birdies on the North Course for an 8-under 64, giving him a one-shot lead over fellow rookie Chris Kirk, Alex Prugh and Rickie Fowler.

Phil Mickelson shot 32 on the back nine for a 5-under 67 to match the best score on the tougher South Course, which hosted the 2008 U.S. Open that Woods won in a playoff. Also at 67 on the South was John Daly, whose last win came in 2004 at this tournament. He is the last player to win at Torrey Pines when Woods was in the field.

"This place means a lot to me," Daly said. "The top golfers play here every year. That says something."

Woods no longer is No. 1 — he has slipped to No. 3 in the world ranking and can't improve on that this week — but he has not played the public course he has practically owned since that U.S. Open in 2008. He missed the next year because of knee surgery, and last year while in a Mississippi addiction clinic after being caught in extramarital affairs.

"Welcome back to Torrey," was a popular phrase from the gallery throughout his round, in which Woods played solidly except on the greens. He made only two putts longer than 3 feet — a 10-foot par save on No. 8, and a 25-foot birdie putt on the par-3 sixth that bounced along until catching the right corner of the cup.

"I didn't leave myself any putts," Woods said. "I kept leaving myself above the hole. And I didn't take advantage of the par 5s."

The North Course is not the pushover it has been in past years because of some new length, and not just in distance. Along with being some 90 yards longer, the rough was allowed to grow and is thicker than the grass found on the South Course.

Woods was in shorter grass on half of his 14 tee shots, although four of those misses came on the par 5s. He couldn't get to the green in two, and didn't make the birdie putts.

Even so, he looked more like the Woods who ended last year with a playoff loss at the Chevron World Challenge, not the guy who played so poorly for so much of the year that he didn't win on the PGA Tour for the first time in his career.

SWEDEN'S JOHAN EDFORS SHOOTS 64 IN BAHRAIN

RIFFA, Bahrain — Johan Edfors of Sweden shot an 8-under 64 Thursday in the first round of the Volvo Golf Champions, giving him a two-stroke lead in the European Tour's debut in Bahrain.

Four players were at 66 — Peter Hanson, Pablo Larrazabal, Francesco Molinari and Graeme Storm. Sergio Garcia was tied with seven others at 67.

Padraig Harrington, who was disqualified last week when his ball moved after picking up his mark, and European Ryder Cup captain Jose Maria Olazabal both shot 70. Colin Montgomerie, who designed the course, was two strokes further back along with Ian Poulter.

Titans, Jeff Fisher parting ways after 16 full seasons

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — In a surprising move, the Tennessee Titans have parted ways with Jeff Fisher, who just completed his 16th full season as the NFL's longest-tenured coach.

The team said in a release Thursday night that "Fisher will no longer be the head coach of the team." The Titans announced the move within an hour of a report by SI.com that they were negotiating Fisher's departure.

Though Fisher had been derided locally as "Coach .500" or "Coacho Ocho," he seemingly had just survived a battle with quarterback Vince Young. Adams decided to either release Young or trade him on Jan. 5. The owner announced two days later that he would be keeping Fisher.

Fisher and Young never really jelled in five seasons together after the Titans drafted the former Texas standout with the third overall pick in 2006 under orders from Adams. The relationship frayed even as Fisher publicly defended Young until Nov. 21 when the situation exploded.

Young tossed his shoulder pads and other equipment into the stands after an overtime loss in which the quarterback suffered a season-ending injury.

Running back Chris Johnson said Wednesday while practicing in Hawaii for the Pro Bowl he didn't think Fisher or Young could work together after "it hit the fan."

In the end, neither Fisher nor Young survived with the Titans.

SEAHAWKS' TATUPU UNDERGOES SURGERY

RENTON, Wash. — Seattle Seahawks middle linebacker Lofa Tatupu underwent successful arthroscopic surgery on both knees.

The team says the operation was performed by team physicians Ed Khalfayan and Mike McAdam at the Seattle Surgery Center on Thursday.

Tatupu missed several practices throughout the season due to his ailing knees, but they never forced him to miss a game. Tatupu started all 16 regular season games and both playoff games for the NFC West champions.

NFL: OWNERS, PLAYERS HAVE 'LOT AT RISK' IF NO DEAL

NEW YORK — The NFL already is feeling financial effects from the uncertainty of its labor negotiations.

The league estimates its cumulative gross revenue losses could reach $1.7 billion by 2015 if there is no agreement with the players' union before the next regular season is scheduled to start.

In a 1½-hour session with reporters at league headquarters Thursday, a half-dozen NFL executives set out to explain why they believe both sides could forfeit hundreds of millions of dollars if a new labor collective bargaining agreement isn't reached by the March 3 deadline.

"Players have a lot of risk; clubs have a lot of risk," said Jeff Pash, the NFL's lead labor negotiator. "We know that the financial consequences of no agreement — of a significant delay in reaching an agreement — will be significant and will be shared. It does not fall on one party."

Sponsorship deal renewals already are problematic, with some companies telling the NFL they will not commit money if there is a work stoppage, according to Eric Grubman, NFL executive vice president of business operations.

Djokovic reaches Australian final

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Roger Federer saved a parting shot for anyone who thinks his time is up and a changing of the guard in tennis awaits.

"Yeah, I mean, they say that very quickly. ... Let's talk in six months again," he said.

The heavily hyped duel between Federer and Rafael Nadal will not happen in Melbourne, opening a rare window for someone else.

Federer, the defending champion, lost to Novak Djokovic 7-6 (3), 7-5, 6-4 in the Australian Open semifinals Thursday night. It marks the first time since 2008 neither of tennis' most dominant men will play in a Grand Slam final. Less than 24 hours earlier, an ailing Nadal's pursuit of a Rafa Slam evaporated in a quarterfinal loss to fellow Spaniard David Ferrer.

Djokovic will play Ferrer or Andy Murray in the final. On the women's side, the title match is set with Kim Clijsters facing Li Na. Clijsters beat Vera Zvonareva 6-3, 6-3, and Li eliminated top-ranked Caroline Wozniacki 3-6, 7-5, 6-3.

Federer and Nadal have combined to win 21 of the last 23 majors. This is also the first time since 2003 that Federer, a 16-time Grand Slam winner, will not hold at least one of the four major trophies.

The Swiss great was outplayed by Djokovic, who reveled in the cooler night weather. It was the second straight time Federer has lost to the Serb — he had match points before losing in the U.S. Open semifinals.

Novak Djokovic raises his arms as he celebrates his win over Roger Federer in their semifinal Thursday at the Australian Open tennis championships in Melbourne, Australia.

"It's disappointing and it hurts in the moment itself," Federer said. "I wish I could have won here again for the fifth time. But wasn't possible tonight. It's not the end in any way. It's a start for many other tournaments after this."

Federer said he didn't play the key points well. He fell behind quickly in the first-set tiebreaker on backhand errors, giving Djokovic four set points.

In the second set, he got up a break. Djokovic was scrambling, twice tumbling to the court and losing his racket as he tried to stay in rallies. But Federer, so used to moving in for the kill, let a 5-2 lead slip and dropped the set. From there it was just about over.

"Every time I had slight opportunity, either I didn't play my best or he played his best," Federer said. "It was a tough night from this standpoint. Those are sometimes the way matches go."

Nadal limped away from his match, saying he had a small muscle tear in his upper left leg and casting doubt on his readiness for at least a few weeks. Federer has no ailments to speak of.

"I feel very good. I'm very optimistic about the next 15 tournaments, however many I'm playing," he said. "I've barely lost matches lately really, so I'm happy with where my game is at, with where my condition is at."

"I'm really excited for what's to come. This is obviously a bit of a blow. At the same time, I played a good tournament. I have no regrets."

Djokovic planned to relax and eat popcorn while watching Friday night's semifinal between Murray, the 2010 finalist, and No. 7-ranked Ferrer.

Murray was leading Nadal in the quarterfinals last year when the Spaniard retired in the third set because of a knee problem that put him off the tour until March. Nadal returned to the tour in March and went on to win the French, Wimbledon and U.S. Open titles.

When he arrived in Melbourne, he was aiming to be the first player since Rod Laver in 1969 to hold all four men's majors at once. Now, Murray is hoping to be the first British man since 1936 to win a major.

Clijsters has three Grand Slam titles but is seeking her first outside the United States. Li already has broken new ground by becoming the first Chinese to reach a Grand Slam singles final. Li saved a match points against Wozniacki and rallied from from a set and a break down.

A victory would put her in the top five in the rankings, and possibly have great repercussions at home. The official Xinhua News Agency says a Grand Slam win by Li would "inspire a rush of new tennis players in China."

"This is good experience for my whole life because many players, they play a long time, but they never play the final for a Grand Slam," she said.

Clijsters beat Zvonareva in a repeat of the outcome from the last U.S. Open final. Li defeated Clijsters in the final of the tuneup tournament at Sydney, but the stakes are clearly higher this time.

Senior Bowl linebackers overcame serious scares

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Mark Herzlich and Nate Irving got a whole season to answer questions about their health on the field.

Now, the two former Atlantic Coast Conference linebackers are addressing them verbally, too, in interviews with NFL team officials doing their due diligence on potential draft picks ahead of Saturday's Senior Bowl.

That's because Herzlich battled cancer and Irving survived a serious car crash.

Both missed the 2009 season during ordeals that left them concerned about far more than football, but playing careers are their focus during this weeklong audition for NFL teams.

Before you ask, both say they're just fine now.

"Everybody asks me. Even the reporters ask me about my health," said Irving, a former North Carolina State player. "I mean, that's the top thing on everybody's list."

"I'm healthy. I played a complete college season and I'm down here participating even more so I feel pretty good."

Ditto for Herzlich, the 2008 ACC defensive player of the year and cancer survivor.

The former Boston College linebacker was diagnosed in 2008 with Ewing's Sarcoma, a rare form of cancer, missed a season and then managed to come back and start every game.

Irving crashed his SUV in June 2009, sustaining injuries that included a collapsed lung and a compound fracture in his left leg. It's no wonder he thinks his performance last season answered any lingering questions NFL teams might have about his health.

Irving earned first-team All-ACC and third-team AP All-America honors after ranking sixth nationally in tackles for loss with 20.5. An NCAA-record eight of them came in the Wake Forest game.

Irving has a cross and the date of the one-car accident tattooed on the inside of his left forearm, and keeps a photo of his mangled SUV on his cell phone.

"I look it and think about it every single day," he said. "It just lets me know what I came through and that I'm here for a purpose."

Authorities said he apparently fell asleep at the wheel. The sobering real-life experiences of Irving and Herzlich would seem to have answered at least two questions about both players: Are they tough and can they deal with adversity?

"Going through that and coming out, my mental toughness and stability — not too many people have been through that and been able to come back and play football, I don't think anybody has — that shows them that I can make it through a lot of things," Herzlich said.

KAPOLEI, Hawaii (AP) — Arian Foster usually gets where he's going in a hurry — at least on the football field.

This week, the first-time Pro Bowl selection is in no hurry.

Houston's All-Pro running back was one of the last players to leave the practice field Thursday as he posed for photos, signed autographs and chatted at length with reporters.

Foster is one of 35 first-timers selected for Sunday's NFL all-star game, including 23 from the AFC. The most is when 44 first-timers were selected to the game in 2000, including 26 on the NFC.

And it's usually not difficult to spot a first-timer. Besides being the last off the field, they're also the ones that look like they've had too much sun — but still grinning ear to ear.

"You have no choice but to enjoy Hawaii. You've got a problem if you don't," Foster said. "This is like heaven. I'll die and go to Hawaii. That's all right with me."

The 24-year-old Foster earned a spot by going from undrafted member of the Texans' practice squad to the league's leading rusher with 1,616 yards and 16 touchdowns this season.

Foster said it first sunk in that he was among the NFL's all-stars when he saw AFC teammates such as Indianapolis Colts quarterback Peyton Manning and Baltimore Ravens linebackers Ray Lewis and Terrell Suggs at the first meeting.

"When you just see them, it's just surreal," he said. "(Then) you kind of realize they have the same amount of respect for you as you do for them. That makes it all worth it."

The new Pro Bowlers generally take guidance from the veterans as far as how to act, where to go and what to eat. But they really don't know what to expect on game day.

'Jimmermania' reaches new high after BYU's big win

PROVO, Utah (AP) - "Jimmermania" is reaching a new level of crazy.

Just hours after frenzied fans stormed the court and tried lifting Jimmer Fredette into the air after he scored 43 points to help BYU knock No. 4 San Diego State from the unbeaten ranks...

of having there'd be a lot of national media on him. I don't know that we expected him to have a year like he's having right now," Rose said.

Fredette is leading the nation in scoring with a 27.4-point average, which would be the highest since Steph Curry averaged 28.6 in 2008-09. He is shooting 48 percent from the field, 42 percent on 3-pointers and has averaged 38.2 points over the last four games.

one even wearing a blue-painted Cheesehead, they created a deafening environment, with signs as creative as Fredette himself.

"Jimmer's in range when he gets off the bus," read one. "The Real King James," proclaimed another in reference to NBA star LeBron James.

The only fans disappointed seemed to be a trio of girls who were crushed to learn Fredette had a girlfriend.

Though the Aztecs made him work for every point Wednesday, he still scored inside and out. He crossed-over to get by Aztec counterpart D.J. Gay then used a head fake to score down low on 6-9 forward Malcolm Thomas.

"(Fredette) is as good as any player I have ever coached," San Diego State coach Steve Fisher said.

He'll get another look at him Feb. 26 in San Diego for the sold-out rematch.

For now, Fredette's mind, tweets aside, must be focused on Saturday's game at New Mexico. The Cougars have lost two in a row there.

"Last night was great, but to make that game worth something we've got to win this one," Fredette said. "We can't let down."

BYU's Jimmer Fredette yells toward the crowd after making a 3-pointer against San Diego State Wednesday in Provo, Utah.

Durant's comments in stride.

"It was kind of cool to hear (about) them," said Fredette, who has only a Facebook page but no Twitter account.

BYU coach Dave Rose, only a texter himself, called Fredette special but said he seemed almost embarrassed by some of the attention.

"We knew if Jimmer had the type of year he's capable

"These players play out here in the West sometimes in obscurity. It's good for them when they get a chance for people to see their games. But you have to win games. Jimmer could be doing all this for a 9-15 team and it wouldn't be a story," Rose said.

In Provo the BYU faithful worship every 3.

They braved wintry conditions Monday to get the best seats in the Marriott Center, then filled the student sections two hours early on Wednesday.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"The craftiest trickery is too short and ragged a cloak to cover a bad heart."
— Johann Kaspar Lavater

David Price is a British International who won the Senior Teams at Sao Paulo in 2009. He was sitting South, playing rubber bridge, when he found himself in a delicate slam.

In six no-trump he needed to attack both red suits from his own hand. His shortage of entries presented a problem unless the diamond ace is doubleton with West. Even the desperate move of leading a club to the 10 might be frustrated by an alert East rising with the jack.

Price saw that if the heart king and diamond ace were in different hands, he might succeed by winning the opening spade lead in hand and leading the heart queen. If this lost to East and the heart suit split 3-3, that player might find the wrong minor-suit switch. Of course, if West had the heart king and covered the queen, the best play would be to duck; but now East might be able to give a suit-preference signal.

After considering all of this, Price took dummy's spade ace at once and at trick two led a low heart from dummy! He hoped East might duck the heart king, or that West would have no suit-preference message to help him if he won the trick.

In practice East quite reasonably ducked the heart king, and that was fatal. Since this marked West with the diamond ace, Price established the two diamond tricks he needed for his contract and finished up with two tricks in each red suit, three spades and five club tricks.

ANSWER: Doubling three diamonds would suggest spade length and might prompt an embarrassing action from your partner, so it looks better to raise hearts. Because the auction suggests that your partner does not have too much wasted in diamonds, it looks reasonable to take a slight gamble and jump to four hearts. You would bid three hearts without one of your spade honors.

DEAR ABBY: How do I cope with the ending of a very long friendship? I saw warning signs for a couple of years, and tried many times to talk to my best friend about what seemed to be happening. Her values and priorities are moving in other directions now. I no longer feel appreciated as her friend.

My heart is breaking. We have been friends for half our lives. This is more devastating than any divorce, death or hurricane I have ever experienced. She is how I have gotten through my life this far.

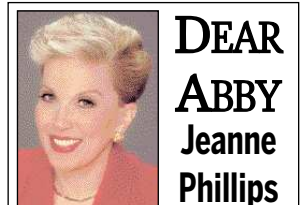

There are support groups out there for everything under the sun, except for losing a best friend due to indifference and lack of caring. Please advise me.

— THROWN AWAY

IN PASADENA, TEXAS

DEAR THROWN AWAY:

I know you are hurting, and I am sorry. But friendships are not just made up of helping each other through the hard times; there is also a component of celebrating the good ones. While she may have been your leaning post, you need to examine what you were to her. If the load became too much to carry, it's understandable that she would need to back off.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

While there are no support groups for people in your situation, there are counselors who can help you sort through your feelings — and because this experience has been devastating, you should talk with one.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 16-year-old girl from a religious home. When I was 7, my father got very drunk and molested me. It had a terrible impact on me.

He has apologized for what happened and knows I hate him for it and can't forgive him. It hasn't happened since, and I know he's telling the truth. I feel the next step in my healing is to confide in my friends and ask them to pray for me. But if I do, I know they won't look at me the same. I'm afraid they'll get their parents to intervene and something will happen to Dad. That's the last thing I want. Should I tell?

— NEEDS SUPPORT IN PHILLY

DEAR NEEDS SUPPORT: You appear to be an idealistic, intelligent young woman. But it's important you understand that apologizing for committing a crime against someone is not enough. The person must also be willing to accept the consequences of his actions. Drop by an elementary school and look at the 7-year-olds on the playground. That's how small and vulnerable you were when your father molested you.

Ask yourself: Did he quit drinking and get help for his alcohol problem? Did he talk to his minister and confess what he did? Did he seek professional help of any kind? Are there little girls in your extended family?

You are exhibiting two classic signs of an abuse victim. One is thinking that people will regard you differently if you disclose that you were victimized. Another is the impulse to "protect" your abuser.

I'm all for the power of prayer, but rather than tell your girlfriends, is your mother aware of what happened? If she is unavailable to you, then you should talk to your minister or a trusted counselor at school. If you're afraid this will "betray" your father, call the Rape, Abuse and Incest National Network (RAINN) toll-free at (800) 656-4673. You can speak to one of the counselors there in complete confidence. They are experienced and can guide you about what — or what not — to do next.

A BRAND NEW WAY TO SEARCH FOR YOUR NEW HOME

IF JANUARY 28 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: In April, you might have to check in the mirror more than once to be sure you haven't sprouted pointy ears like "Star Trek's" Mr. Spock. You could find that you have become more analytical and logical than usual, and that group problems and solutions are important to you in a personal way. In July, your ability to be accurate is accentuated, but you have a tendency to take more unnecessary risks than usual, too. August looks to be a great month for family vacations or for a quick fling. Wait until late November to make key career or business moves.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A building won't stand without a sound foundation. Make sure that new projects have true merit before starting them or you may just be wasting your time. You may leave a favorable impression on someone without even realizing it.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The more, the merrier. The most satisfying pursuits for you today are those involving groups and social situations. You'll be surprised at the myriad benefits that interacting with others will yield.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Nobody knows everything. You can only go so far on what you've learned, so if a seemingly impassable obstacle stands in your way, seek advice from someone with more experience.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The heart may say yes, but the brain says no. Don't compromise your needs out of convenience; wait for something better to come along. Confide in a close friend if you want to receive the best advice.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You're at your happiest in a group. Dial up the old gang and plan for a night out on the town. The old cliché of a love at first sight may hold some merit tonight. Keep your wits sharp and set the bar high.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Strangers in the night, exchanging glances. Follow your group of friends for an evening of enjoyment. Sticking around until closing may provide you with a chance of meeting a mysterious and exciting new person.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Friendships prove invaluable. A skilled chum may have all the answers you need to balance unbalanced books. New allies may not know you that well, but they respect you enough to watch your back.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The future isn't what it used to be. It may be time to re-evaluate long-term goals and set more realistic ones. Don't make promises or take on responsibilities that you aren't capable of keeping.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Subtle changes and improvements could make a world of difference, even if it's just in the way you comb your hair. Don't be a couch potato. Get out and look for exciting connections and unique experiences.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Happy hour may live up to its name tonight. Being in the right place at the right time could yield a valuable friendship or a lasting relationship or both. Keep your eyes and your mind open.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): People will have no doubt that you are what you claim to be if you carry yourself with confidence. Spread a little good cheer and it will spread like wildfire to all those around you. Don't mince words when speaking of your intentions.
