Water dollars dry up

Cuts weaken state water agency; $2.4M proposed for CAMP

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

BOISE — State dollars are drying up, and the impact reaches into the lifeblood of Idaho farmers and residents — water.

Fewer state workers are eyeballing Idaho's dams, processing water rights paperwork and overseeing the state's stream channel program.

But lawmakers may still find funds to keep alive a plan to repair the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer.

The Idaho Department of Water Resources faces a combined 29.5 percent reduction in its share of the state general fund over three years, when including the 1.4 percent cut in Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter's budget proposal for fiscal 2012, which starts in July.

IDWR Interim Director Gary Spackman outlined the effects of cuts in the agency's $20 million budget proposal on Wednesday to the Legislature's Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee.

Staffing reductions have hit in numerous areas. The dam safety program has withered from 75 full-time equivalent positions to just three. The stream channel program has gone from 6.5 full-time equivalent workers to two.

The water right accounting and modeling department is down by half, from four employees to two.

The department eliminated its adjudication bureau, merging it in under another bureau, and shuttered offices in Salmon and Soda Springs.

Other steps include reductions to training, travel, cell phone bills and cutting out dues to professional organizations.

Urban renewal

Districts draw critics, supporters, wide-ranging ideas

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

BOISE — Some believe it's one of Idaho's best tools to aid economic development.

Others want the state's urban renewal law to be repealed.

In-between are those who see a need for more checks and balances, greater voter involvement and more transparency in the way urban renewal districts deal with taxpayer dollars. Wide-ranging ideas intended to reform the urban renewal system took center stage Wednesday at the House Local Government Committee, where seven legislative proposals were unveiled.

Similar bills were held up last year in a different House committee, Revenue and Taxation.

Urban renewal agencies get their money primarily by tax-increment financing, which allows the agencies to collect any increase in assessed property tax value within their boundaries after their formation.

Usually initiated by cities, but technically free-standing entities, the agencies are created to provide a source of revenue as incentives to developers.

That's where the money — and the debate — comes into play.

Critics, including those in the Legislature, contend that urban renewal agencies lack the same oversight as other government bodies that handle tax dollars. And they spend tax money that would otherwise flow to other taxing agencies like cash-strapped school districts, cities and counties.

It's a topic that can raise passions.

"Pardon me," said Rep. Robert Schaefer, R-Nampa, pausing for a moment in his proposal to repeal the law to prevent new projects. "I get a little bit exercised about urban renewal."

He got emotional when referring to an Idaho Freedom Foundation report in which the advocacy group showed that the state's urban renewal agencies took in $52.3 million in property taxes in 2009.

"I get a little bit tight in the throat when we talk about that kind of money," said Schaefer.

Urban renewal does have legislators who see value in it. Rep. Elfreda Higgins, D-Garden City, said she's pleased with how her community's urban renewal district has helped blighted areas.

"It has certainly made life better for the people who live in that area," she said.

States say preparation key to usefulness

By Ben Botkin

BOISE — In the 19th century, students used slate and chalk to work through lessons. Today's primary learning tools are a bit more advanced and increasingly come with power cords.

Under Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna's tech-heavy proposal to overhaul Idaho public education, ninth-grade students' toolkits would include state-funded laptop computers starting in fall 2012. But education officials in other states with similar programs already in place say just providing the new technology isn't enough to bolster student achievement.

Districts need to prepare teachers to infuse their daily lessons with technology to take advantage of the tools, they said. Idaho State Department of Education officials say that's why the $4.7 million yearly cost to provide laptops is just one facet of Luna's plan to expand Internet-based learning and reform how teachers are paid starting next year.

Studies of student achievement in states with laptop programs show mixed results. In Maine, for example, a 2007 study found writing was the only subject with a measurable gain attributed to the new technology, according to ASCD, a national educational leadership organization.

In Michigan, a comparison of eight pairs of similar schools — in each pair one school provided laptops and one didn't — found only half of the laptop schools showed better testing results. But other studies have attributed benefits, such as fewer discipline problems and better technology skills, to laptop programs.

Wyoming's Natrona County School District started providing laptops to Casper-area middle school and high school students five years ago.

"You have to have teachers and administrators ready to buy into the program," said Drew Walker,

Officials: Burley poultry plant nearing realization

Processing facility could add 1,000 jobs in Mini-Cassia

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Big poultry is poised to set up shop in north Burley.

Burley Economic Director Doug Manning said Wednesday that Poultry Products International plans to build a $2.75 million chicken processing facility west of the Fairfield Inn & Suites near Interstate 84 exit 208.

The project would also include a hatchery and other facilities at still undisclosed, remote locations. Manning said he can't pinpoint when construction will start since negotiations with PPI are ongoing, but officials hope it will start this year. That project could create 1,000 temporary construction jobs during a two-year building period and as many permanent jobs for Mini-Cassia residents.

Manning said he's forbidden to divulge the names of PPI owners until they're ready to make a public statement. But Kimberly developer Jim Primm spoke on behalf of the company in April, telling city zoning officials it purchased 112 acres south of the interstate for the project.

Primm could not be reached Wednesday for comment.

Manning said company officials from Europe plan to come to handle final aspects of the deal, which could set Burley up as an international provider of poultry products.

"It's a lot closer than most people realize," Manning told the Burley City Council Tuesday.

Poultry

He added that city and company officials are prepared to take final funding information to Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter and Idaho's commerce, labor and agriculture departments in the coming weeks.

With a major poultry confined animal feeding operation knocking on Idaho's door, state legislators continue to streamline regulation of such facilities. It currently falls under the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality — not the Idaho State Department of Agriculture, which oversees beef CAFOs.

Mountain Home Republican Sen. Tim Corder has tried to change that. His bill to give regulation of large-scale poultry and swine operations to ISDA died in the House last year. He said he's on the fence about re-introducing the proposal this year due to the lack of support it's seen.

"Right now large poultry operations are not regulated," Corder said Wednesday. "I suppose if an operation was large enough it would come under the scrutiny of the DEQ, which has the outline for rules but no substance for them."

Corder said the only current regulations a poultry operation would have to follow would come from county planning laws. He's heard talk in the House of bringing poultry and swine under the eye of the ISDA, though without protections outlined in his 2010 proposal. Corder opposes those efforts.

"They are very different operations," Corder said of swine and poultry CAFOs. "On the poultry side, they don't require lagoons and everything is enclosed so they don't have the environmental risks. They're really pretty clean."

Manning said zoning changes and permits made official in 2010 remain valid for the Burley project, which he said he's worked on for 13 years. While the names have changed, he said, progress rebooted in November 2009.

"The progress they've made since then has been pretty remarkable," Manning said.

Shoshone council suggests selling old bottles for more

By Emily Katseanes
Times-News correspondent

SHOSHONE — The Shoshone City Council, minus absent Councilman Mike Wallace, recommended Tuesday a price change for the antique Sage Brush Hair Tonic bottles in the basement of City Hall.

The council suggested the price of 4-inch-tall bottles rise from $2 to $12 and that of 7 1/2-inch-tall bottles jump from $3 to $15.

The City Council is working with the Shoshone library board, which sells the bottles as a fundraiser for the library. The price recommendation is a starting point for conversation and can be changed before or at a planned public hearing, officials said. The hearing is required by Idaho statute for any price increase of more than 5 percent.

The bottles' value recently came to the city's attention when a collector asked to purchase the valuable, pre-World War I glass. Council members said they hope to have a joint public hearing for both the bottle prices and raising the price of city equipment rentals.

Claudia Reese, who owns the Second Time Around antique store in Shoshone, said she sells Sage Brush Hair Tonic bottles in her shop for $7.50 for small bottles and $12.50 for the larger ones.

"If you get people into City Hall or the library and people see the Sage Brush Hair Tonic, they'll buy them just because there's a little story behind them," Reese said.

In other business:

- The committee planning the annual Arts in the Park appealed to the city for advice and support. Spokeswoman Chrys Davis asked the council for advice on handling parking, security and any other support the city would like to give.
- Police Chief Jon Daubner said his department would be willing to help with security, and city Maintenance Supervisor Aaron Aggeler said the city could pick up trash for free. The council also gave Davis some information about hanging banners across the highway and parking at the fairgrounds, then shuttling to the courthouse.
- "We do want to cooperate with the city and we don't want to make a nuisance of ourselves," Davis said.

- Aggeler said he is collecting bids for inspecting Shoshone's water tank. He has one bid so far and is looking for more. He is only entertaining bids to inspect the tank without draining it.

"You don't want to drain your tank unless you have to," he said. "To drain that tank, it's a nightmare. An up-all-night-until-they're-done nightmare."

- City Clerk Mary Kay Bennett is also looking into revamping the city's website to make it easier to update.

"I'm still having trouble getting into the web page for the city," Bennett said. "If anybody's been in there, the agenda for April is the only one on there."

AROUND THE VALLEY

4,100 lose power in malfunction

About 4,100 residents of Jerome and Twin Falls counties temporarily lost power Wednesday afternoon, apparently due to a malfunctioning substation.

Eden, Murtaugh, Jerome, Hazelton, Hansen, Kimberly and Artesian City were all without power, according to an outage message line operated by Idaho Power. Three crews were sent to investigate the problem at about 1:15 p.m., Idaho Power spokeswoman Stephanie McCurdy said. The power was restored at about 2:45 p.m.

"Our crews got out there as quickly as possible, as we usually do," McCurdy said, adding that the utility was especially concerned about getting heaters turned back on in the below-freezing temperatures.

Motorcyclist injured in head-on crash

A young man was sent to the hospital after his off-road motorcycle collided head-on with a small pickup truck at the intersection of Ninth Avenue East and Sunrise Boulevard in Twin Falls, according to Twin Falls police.

The motorcyclist was not wearing a helmet, Staff Sgt. Dennis Pullin said late Wednesday afternoon. The pickup driver was not injured. Names have not yet been released. Pullin said the 3:22 p.m. wreck is still under investigation to determine cause and fault.

"I wouldn't say one hit another," he said. "They both hit."

The motorcyclist was transported to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center after the crash, though Pullin couldn't say the extent of his injuries.

T.F. schools to hold supplemental levy meeting

Times-News

The Twin Falls School District wants you to learn more about its supplemental levy proposal.

The $7.5 million proposal will be up for a public vote on March 8. Before that, the district will hold a community meeting to discuss it at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 24 at the Canyon Ridge High School Auditorium.

"We aren't trying to force people to vote in favor of the levy, just to prepare them to make an informed decision," said Patti O'Dell, district associate superintendent.

If passed, the levy will cover the cost of maintaining and operating district schools for the next two years and restore days of student-teacher contact lost to state budget cuts. School board members said the levy is essential to maintaining public education in the next year due to dwindling state funding.

Rep. Leon Smith, R-Twin Falls, who wasn't at the hearing, is also working on a reform proposal.

Also on the board of Twin Falls' urban renewal agency, Smith wants to give the sponsoring agencies of urban renewal districts — usually cities — a say in whether unused, accumulated funds should be returned to taxing entities.

Under the proposal, after reviewing a district's finances, cities would make the final call on whether the level of money in reserves is too high and city officials would have the option to return some or all of it back to taxing bodies.

"This gives the cities a tool," Smith said.

other funding sources besides the shrinking general fund, which makes up half the agency's budget. For example, $2.4 million would go toward projects related to the ESPA Comprehensive Aquifer Management Plan, which was approved by the Legislature in 2009. The $2.4 million would come from loan repayments of groundwater users to the state for the purchase of Pristine Springs — the same way the state pulled together money for the plan one year ago.

MORE INFO

Urban renewal reform proposals abound, including these 8:

- Be heard: Voter approval needed in city-wide election to form an urban renewal district; allows removal of board members by a majority board vote for misconduct; changes a 30-day comment period to 60 days; prohibits district expansion by annexation; reduces the revenue time frame to 20 years, down from 24.
- No thanks: Allows affected taxing districts within an urban renewal district's boundary to opt out and keep their revenue before the district is approved.
- More details: This would require disclosure of the details of a proposed project, including its length, location, pending land purchases, and structures to be torn down. Any leftover money after a project's end would return to taxing districts.
- Vote them in: Election of urban renewal commissioners in a countywide election, ending appointment by mayors. The board can vote to remove a commissioner for misconduct.

- Vote on debt: Voters would have the final say on whether the agency could issue bonds to finance a project. Two-thirds approval needed.
- Advance notice: Requires public hearings and testimony before project decisions.
- Halt it now: Repeal of urban renewal law to prevent new projects. Existing projects could continue.
- Local legislator's ideas: Rep. Leon Smith's proposal, not yet introduced, would place a four-term limit for urban renewal commissioners and reduce term length from five years to two; prevent an urban renewal boundary from extending in time or growing in area; limit a plan to 20 years; and set up policy that gives sponsoring city councils a say in whether accumulated funds not immediately needed are returned to taxing districts or saved for potential development.

Toliver Latham sentenced to 4 years in federal prison

T.F. man alleged leader of drug distribution operation

Times-News

The son of a once-prominent Twin Falls auto dealer will spend four years in federal prison for conspiring to illegally distribute prescription painkillers.

U.S. District Court Judge Edward Lodge sentenced James Toliver Latham, 22, to the four-year prison term Tuesday in Boise. The former Twin Falls High School golf standout will be subject to a three-year supervised release period after his prison time is served.

Latham initially faced an additional seven counts of distributing oxycodone, later dropped in a plea agreement. Similar agreements were also accepted by co-defendants Ryan Simmons, Troy Sabrosky and Cooper Chapin, all of Twin Falls.

The son of former Twin Falls auto dealer Robert Latham Jr., Toliver Latham was charged with the crimes in April and had been under federal investigation since September 2009, according to the government's sentencing memorandum.

The four men allegedly shuttled OxyContin — a brand of oxycodone pills — from the Salt Lake City area to sell in Twin Falls. According to the sentencing memorandum, Idaho State Police electronically tracked the movement of a vehicle owned by Latham during a Sept. 22 trip in which the vehicle traveled to Salt Lake City from Twin Falls, stopped at a gas station for seven minutes, then returned directly to Twin Falls.

Statements from Latham's co-defendants and criminal informants outlined in the memorandum allege he sold up to 100 OxyContin pills in Twin Falls per month for around $80 each.

Simmons was scheduled for sentencing Wednesday in Boise, though the result of that hearing was not immediately available. Sabrosky faces a Feb. 14 sentencing; Chapin's will be March 28. Each man faces up to 20 years in prison, a $1 million fine and supervised release of up to three years.

According to his sentencing document, a term of Latham's release is that "(w)hile on supervision the defendant shall wear a key around his neck as a daily reminder that he holds the key to his future."

Idaho lawmakers eye Rights of Child pact

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Idaho's Republican-dominated Legislature is taking aim at a global children's rights treaty the United States has yet to ratify, backing an amendment to the Constitution to protect parental rights as a buffer against it.

The 20-year-old treaty has been ratified by every United Nations member except the U.S. and Somalia. But Idaho lawmakers are among American critics who are so worried they are supporting an amendment to the Constitution that says parents have a "fundamental right" to raise their children without government interference.

"I think it's necessary to send a message," said House Majority Leader Mike Moyle, R-Star. "We want them to know that we're concerned about it."

Moyle is co-sponsoring a resolution with House Education Committee Chairman Bob Nonini to support the parental rights amendment to the Constitution. The resolution says the children's right treaty "would drastically alter this fundamental right of parents to direct the upbringing of their children."

tunity for us to do something tangible to support the families of Idaho," Nonini said.

Opponents of the treaty contend it would enable the government and U.N. officials to interfere with parental authority. Supporters view the treaty as a valuable guidepost for children's basic rights, such as education, health care and protection from abuse, saying the goals are undermined by the refusal of the world's lone superpower to ratify it.

U.S. Rep. Pete Hoekstra, a Republican from Michigan, introduced the parental rights amendment last spring and it now has more than 140 co-sponsors in the House, including Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho. Sen. Jim DeMint, a South Carolina Republican, has introduced it in the Senate, where Sen. Jim Risch, R-Idaho, is among a handful of co-sponsors.

They are still far short of the needed two-thirds support in both chambers of Congress to forward the amendment to the states.

Republican sponsors of the Idaho resolution said it was a pre-emptive move to protect parent's rights should Congress ratify the treaty. But Minority Caucus Chair Brian Cronin countered that parental rights were already protected under the Constitution and ratification of the treaty in Congress was a long shot.

"We're reacting to something that might never happen," said Cronin, D-Boise.

Principal shot at California school

PLACERVILLE, Calif. (AP) — A school janitor was arrested Wednesday in the killing of a Northern California elementary school principal who was hailed as a role model for other educators.

No children were hurt in the late-morning shooting in the office at Louisiana Schnell Elementary School in Placerville, but one student may have witnessed the shooting, Police Chief George Nielson said.

Principal Sam LaCara, 50, died in the attack, Nielson said.

Authorities said they arrested janitor John Luebbers, 44, at his home about an hour after launching a manhunt. Investigators were trying to determine a motive for the shooting about 50 miles east of Sacramento.

LaCara, who died at Marshall Medical Center, was called a dedicated leader by Bob Wells, executive director of the Association of California School Administrators.

"Sam has been a role model to school leaders for his dedication to students and to public schools," Wells said.

LaCara had served as a treasurer of the group.

Parents are reunited with their children after a shooting Wednesday at the Louisiana Schnell School in Placerville, Calif.

Nielson was asked by reporters if Luebbers had been laid off. The chief said that possibility was part of the investigation, but he was uncertain about Luebbers' employment status.

"There may have been some kind of dispute between the principal and the custodian," Nielson said.

Police do not believe the janitor had a criminal history.

Nielson said LaCara's family was devastated. "They are requesting privacy at this time," he said.

Chaplain Jim Thompson met with the family at the hospital after being sent by law enforcement officers.

"They're very, very angry at the perpetrator, who they happen to know, (he) knew the principal very well," Thompson told KCRA-TV.

KCRA reported that LaCara, of Sacramento, was married and has three daughters.

California Highway Patrol Lt. Chuck King said LaCara's wife was driving on Highway 50 to the hospital after hearing about the shooting when she was pulled over by a CHP officer for speeding. Instead of being ticketed, she was escorted to the hospital.

The state's superintendent of public instruction, Tom Torlakson, thanked police and school officials for quickly securing the campus in the wake of the shooting. Classes were canceled at all district schools Thursday.

"Our schools should be safe havens from guns and violence, and I'm deeply saddened when harm comes to anyone working to educate California's children," Torlakson said.

Police also commended the school staff for quickly locking down the school and protecting the children. Students were taken to the county fair-ground, where they were released to their parents.

Laptops

the district's information technology manager. "If they're not, it's really just handing the kids something to put in their backpack."

Lessons were learned along the way. When the program began, the district initially underestimated the amount of Internet bandwidth it needed, which became evident through crippling service slowdowns once students started using the laptops.

Students commonly returned broken laptops to the school at first, Walker said, adding that a new policy to discourage abuse has helped. Now, when students return in the fall, they're given the same laptop they turned in before the summer break, whether it's in great shape or marked by the student's past abuse.

In Washington state, individual districts have started embracing student laptops and similar technology, said Dennis Small, state schools educational technology director.

There, some school districts have worked with Internet providers to set up a need-based home Internet access program for families enrolled in the free and reduced-price school lunch program, Small said.

"The other interesting dynamic is: Are teachers ready to provide some or all of their required texts digitally or do they still have to have textbooks in addition and that becomes a second backpack?" Small said.

Melissa McGrath, spokeswoman for the Idaho State Department of Education, said options exist for students without home Internet access to make good use of the laptops, such as educational discs that curriculum suppliers already produce.

Luna's proposal also includes $800,000 to train teachers to incorporate new technology into the classroom during its first year. How to spend that money will be up to each district to determine.

That's just one way the plan provides Idaho's schools local flexibility. They also can put individual policies in place that cover details like whether students can take their laptops home.

Maine's statewide student laptop program was put in place in 2003.

David Connerty-Marin, spokesman for the Maine Department of Education, said the program seeks to provide learning in all areas, not just technology. He said preparation is crucial when school districts make the switch.

"Invariably, when you look at districts where they have the biggest issues, it's the districts where they haven't really figured out how to incorporate laptops," he said.

Why Idaho won’t privatize liquor sales

Fifty years ago, the only economic forecasting tool then-Gox. Robert Smylie needed was the sales report from the Idaho State Liquor Dispensary. It told the governor not only how much spirits the state monopoly had sold the previous month, but how each brand was selling. If business was brisk in rot-gut, Smylie understood times were tough. But if lots of folks were buying Johnnie Walker, the governor knew the state would have money to spend. In the years since, liquor revenue has developed into the most recession-proof source of income Idaho state government has. So although the state could get out of the booze business, it’s simply not going to happen in our lifetimes. Nor should it.

State Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, commissioned a study by the Legislature’s Office of Performance Evaluations on the feasibility of privatization. OPE says it could be done — probably netting the state a short-term profit. The study found that Idaho could make just as much each year by having privatized liquor sales and imposing an excise tax on liquor as it makes now through state sales; last year, that figure was $47 million, and it’s been growing each year. Plus, in the first year of privatization, the state could garner tens of millions in one-time funds by selling off its liquor, stores, warehouse and other assets. That would hold true even if it just privatized retail sales, and kept the state warehouse, distribution and pricing system.

Idaho now has 66 state-operated liquor stores and 100 mostly smaller contract stores, where private operators sell liquor for the state in exchange for a percentage of the sales. The state could save about $700,000 a year by converting 13 of the state liquor stores to contract stores, the report found.

The money from liquor sales in Idaho goes mostly to the state’s general fund, cities and counties. A slice also goes to courts, substance abuse treatment, schools and community colleges.

The OPE report listed questions to consider, including whether selling liquor is “a core function of state government,” and whether direct state involvement in liquor sales curtails the “intemperate use of alcohol.”

“Usually we’re all about privatization,” said Bell, who chairs the House Appropriations Committee. “Every issue has an exception, and this is it.”

Gox. C.L. “Butch” Otter agreed, noting that the state constitution requires the state to further “temperance and morality,” and said that makes state liquor sales a “proper role of government for Idaho.” Plus, he noted that the state has lower consumption levels than states where liquor is more widely available, and said Idaho’s state liquor division is “a stable and reliable source of ongoing revenue for the benefit of all Idahoans.”

Otter is right that Idaho has a vested interest in controlling access to liquor. And regulatory philosophy aside, the indirect costs of privatization could be steep in the form of higher law enforcement and court expenditures, more drunk drivers, damaged families and underage drinking.

For taxpayers, Idaho’s liquor monopoly is an unalloyed blessing. The system isn’t broken, and it doesn’t need fixing.

A bipartisan agreement to stay corrosively partisan

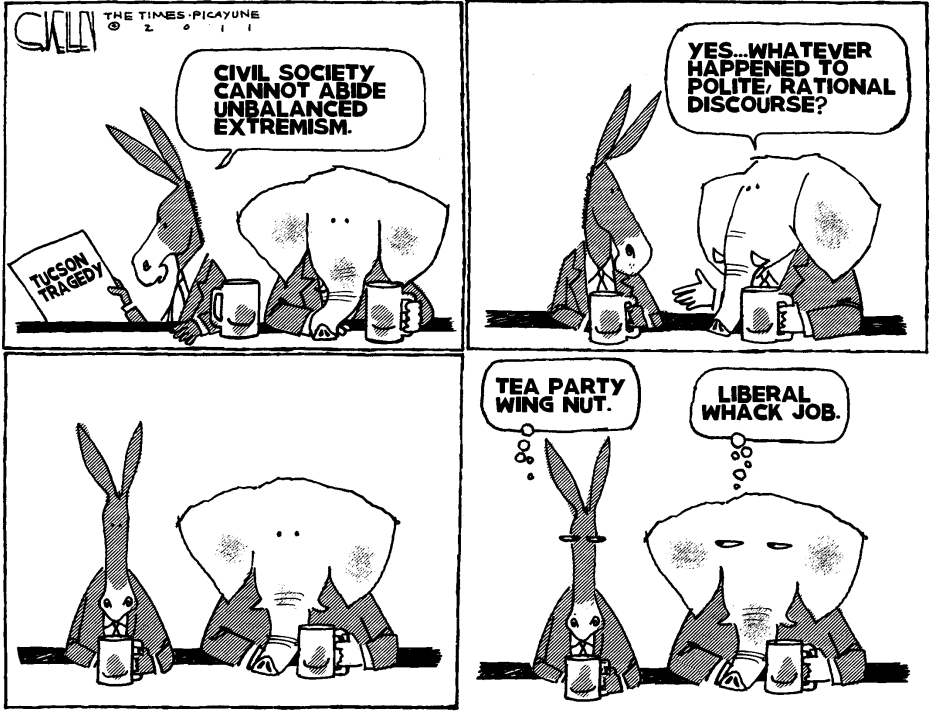

WASHINGTON — If historians ever have to pinpoint the day that America lost the future, they’re likely to look to Jan. 27. That was when Majority Leader Harry Reid and Minority Leader Mitch McConnell took to the floor of the Senate to announce an agreement on fixing the increasingly sclerotic, polarized, dysfunctional body they lead. Their agreement? Neither of them would fix it. Both promised not to change the rules of using a majority vote for at least four years. Nor did they set up an alternative process for taking a good, long look at why the Senate has begun to make a Beverly Hills divorce look courteous and functional. They just . . . moved on.

Ezra Klein

This came a few days after President Obama’s State of the Union address, in which he exhorted Americans to make the tough decisions necessary to “win the future.” That would take “sacrifice and struggle,” he said. It would mean overhauling, among other things, the public sector. “We can’t win the future with a government of the past,” he warned.

But when it came to offering specifics, the president whiffed. He settled for a laugh line about regulating salmon rather than a cold-eyed appraisal of the gridlock and misaligned incentives of the body that serves as the board of directors for the United States of America. How well they work matters much more than who regulates what we put on our bagels. As an explanation of what stands between America and “winning the future,” Obama’s speech wasn’t good enough. He dodged the real problem.

Two weeks before Obama’s address, however, Sen. John Kerry delivered the speech that Obama should have given. Like Obama, Kerry emphasized that “developed and developing countries are making far-reaching choices to reshape their economies and move forward in a new and very different global era.” Like Obama, Kerry intoned that “we as a people face another Sputnik moment today.” Like Obama, Kerry argued that “unprecedented levels of investment in science and technology, engineering and R&D” had provided the foundation for American leadership in the 20th century, and would be required to build on it in the 21st.

But Kerry’s explanation of the way our political system is impeding our efforts to adapt to a fast-changing future and meet the obstacles in our path was much more ambitious, and much more precise. “On issue after issue,” he said, “enduring consensus has been frayed or shredded by lust for power cloaked in partisan games.” He noted the individual mandate began as a Republican idea, that cap-and-trade was a favored policy of the first Bush administration, that treaties that were much more far-reaching than START once passed with 90 or 95 votes.

The grim reality, he said, is that “in the 21st century where choices and consequences come at us so much faster than ever before, the price of Senate inaction isn’t just that we will stand still; it isn’t just that America will fall behind; it’s that we will stay behind as we cede the best possibilities of this young century to others who are more disciplined.”

The problem facing our system is that the minority has both the electoral incentive to see the majority fail and, using the Senate’s rules, the power to make it fail. Far from encouraging bipartisanship, this encourages a particularly virulent strain of partisanship: In a world where the majority can govern with or without you, you have a strong incentive to participate constructively in the process. In a world where the majority can’t govern without you, and won’t be reelected if they can’t govern, you have a strong incentive to walk away from the process. Success for the majority means electoral failure for you.

That’s not how successful companies are run, as Pfeffer notes. And it’s not how other countries are run. Indeed, for a long time, it’s not even how we were run. For much of the 20th century, our political system showed very little polarization. The filibuster was rarely deployed, party-line voting was uncommon and consensus was much closer at hand.

But those days are over. Congressional leaders freely admit, as House Speaker John Boehner did, that this is “not a time for compromise.” We have a legislative system built for a political system from another time.

Palin and family deserve media apology

I have been trying to figure out why the news media has launched such vile and vicious attacks on Sarah Palin and her family.

Is it because having someone so honest and straightforward in politics scares them to death? They seem to embrace the devious.

I think the news media should apologize to her and her family.

Humans could learn a lot from smart pets

My dog, Hank, died recently of old age. Some people in Albion gave him to me in 1996. Two things helped Hank stay alive and healthy for all those years. First, he was kept on a long chain attached to his dog house. He had some room to roam around but not to follow his nose out onto a road and get run over. Second, he loved to ride in the back of my truck but had taught himself not to be impulsive and jump out when were stopped on a paved street. He somehow knew the difference between dangerous paved and safer dirt. He may have learned his lesson from a neighbor’s dog, Buddy, who rode with us a few times.

One day, Buddy decided not to wait for me to turn left from a right lane. He leaped out of the back of the pickup into the path on an oncoming car.

If I could visit with Hank today and ask him if he had any regrets during his long life, I believe that he would say he had none. He was loved, well fed, always had comfortable shelter and stayed out of trouble.

Sometimes, as I sit in malls and watch humanity stream by, I see several individuals who might benefit from the two things Hank had. Lots of people could use a safety chain of self-restraint. We are all too impetuous at times. For pets or people this is not always good for our health or well-being. Bad habits and poor lifestyle choices have made some people look like they have jumped out of the back of a truck into oncoming traffic. Hank was smarter than many dogs and people who live in our communities.

Rest in peace, Hank.

A lesson about elk and wolf numbers

I can’t believe how an article on Jan. 24 tied right into a previous article on Jan. 20. The article on Jan. 24 was “College students not learning much, study says.” The article on Jan. 20 was “Famous Yellowstone elk herd suffers unexpected decline.”

It seems that the wildlife biologist just can’t figure out what’s happening to the elk herd there. I’m sure that most of us uneducated folk have a pretty good idea. So let’s try and explain this to the enlightened ones one more time. Fifteen years ago you enlightened one wanted to reintroduce the wolves. At that time there was 20,000 head of elk in the Yellowstone herd.

Now there are 1,500 to 2,000 wolves in the Idaho, Montana and Wyoming area.

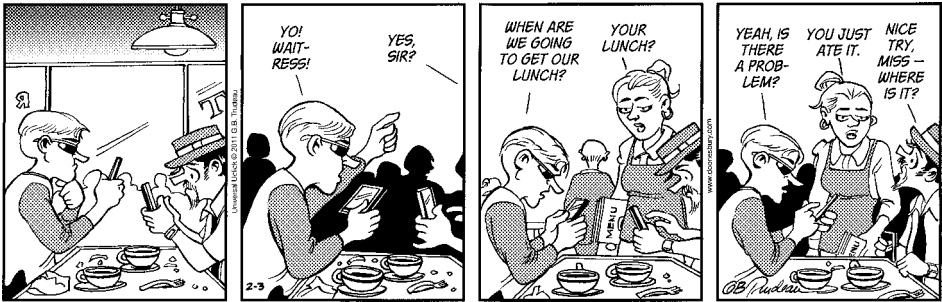

The number of elk in Yellowstone, according to the biologist numbers, are 4,635. The herd has suffered a 75 percent decline. The numbers of both species are on an exponential curve in opposite directions. Elk numbers are declining; wolf numbers are increasing.

I know all you biologists are just waiting for Jeff Foxworthy’s new show, “Are you dumber than a fence post,” but stay with me for a few more sentences. If the Yellowstone herd lost more than 15,000 in 15 years, then how long before the remaining 4,635 are gone? One more question, biologist Doug Smith states, “The smaller herd is healthier in some ways because it gives animals more room to thrive.” So let me get this right, Mr. Fence Post, uh, I mean Mr. Smith. When the herd gets down to 100 or 50 or 10, they will be even healthier yet. Cuz they got more room to thrive. Well folks if you send your kid off to college, please don’t push them to be biologists. Our big game herds can’t stand the pressure.

Here's what Idaho newspapers are saying about ...

... second career, big pension

Lewiston Tribune

Pssst. Want to cash in on the best deal in Idaho? Here's how. Get elected to the state Legislature. Sure, it's only a part-time job. You work about 90 days a year while the Legislature is in session and get paid a base salary of $16,116 a year, plus expenses. Then line up a cushy appointment making a five- or six-figure salary running a state agency. Do that for at least 42 months and you'll land a comfortable retirement. Lawmakers who do this get credit for years of legislative service multiplied by the higher salary. In other words, a 10-term politician who earns $85,000 during four years at an administrative post draws a pension as if he'd spent all 24 years at the top job. It's a special arrangement these small-government conservatives, who pinch pennies when it comes to public schools or health care for the poor, cut for themselves. The latest example is outgoing state Sen. Robert Geddes, R-Soda Springs. Blatantly in the hunt for a top-level appointment — he had purchased a home in Boise and relinquished his post as Senate president before any job opened — Geddes just landed a post at the state tax commission, succeeding the scandalized Royce Chigbrow of Boise. He will earn $85,447 a year. Had he stayed in the Senate, Geddes would have settled for a state pension of about $240 a month. Assuming he remains at the tax commission through the end of July 2014, Geddes will draw a monthly retirement check of at least $2,777. He's far from unique: • Department of Insurance Director Bill Deal. Now entering his fifth year, Deal earns $97,323. That tenure plus the 16 years he labored in the Legislature entitles him to a monthly pension check of $3,244. • Department of Agriculture Director Celia Gould. She's also beginning her fifth year at her $106,620 job. The eight terms Gould spent in the House combined with her current salary equal a monthly pension of $3,554. • Idaho Public Utilities Commission member Jim Kempton. If he stays three more months at his $92,167-a-year post, this former five-term House member will be able to draw a $2,073 monthly retirement check ....

And that's just a sample. The practice became ubiquitous when Phil Batt reclaimed the governor's office for the GOP in 1994 ... Batt filled his administration with Republican legislative talent. But he also tried to end the retirement perk. Nowhere else in government is someone allowed to credit years at a part-time job toward a full-time pension. For example, a small-town mayor who latches onto a top state job gets a pension based proportionately upon what he earned in both positions. So there you have it. If you want to cash in on public service, here's how. Of course, it means getting your hands a bit dirty. You'll have to put up with charges of hypocrisy and cronyism. But hey, that hasn't bothered anyone yet.

... the energy tax rebate

Idaho Mountain Express, Ketchum

Idaho's top-rung political echelon is "shocked" at this unexpected turn of events: One of the tax breaks created for business has actually paid off in totally unexpected ways.

A 6 percent sales tax rebate created in 2005 for alternative energy developers has created a boom in turbine wind power farms in the state. Instead of the modest forecast of $2.13 million in lost yearly sales taxes on energy, Idaho could pay $47 million in rebates over the next two years. A chagrined Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter and legislators of both parties face a dilemma. The state faces a $185 million budget deficit that could be eased if the energy sales tax rebate is canceled or modified. However, ending the rebates would send energy developers scurrying to nearby states that have no sales tax. The answer is easy: Keep the rebate for now. It's an invaluable economic development tool. That conclusion is supported by a Boise State University study to be released soon that concludes that long-term benefits will exceed the tax rebates ... To take away an incentive that is working would be lousy economics and a major step backward for Idaho in 21st-century industrial planning. This is one tax break that makes economic sense and wasn't just a reward for special interests.

... texting scofflaws

Moscow-Pullman Daily News

Idaho legislators are again considering a ban on texting and talking on handheld cell phones while driving ... How can anyone be against reducing the distractions facing drivers? ... One study found that talking on a cellphone or texting while driving is about as dangerous as being drunk behind the wheel. So, with some 30 states having passed these laws already, it should be pretty clear that they help improve traffic safety by reducing crashes. Except that they don't. In fact, a study out in September found that — if anything — passing these laws increases traffic accidents. The study is by an arm of the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, no apologist for unsafe driving. Adrian Lund, institute president, said, "Noncompliance is a likely reason texting bans aren't reducing crashes. Survey results indicate that many drivers, especially younger ones, shrug off these bans. Among 18-24 year-olds, the group most likely to text, 45 percent reported doing so anyway in states that bar all drivers from texting. This is just shy of the 48 percent of drivers who reported texting in states without bans." Why would crashes increase? "Clearly drivers did respond to the bans somehow, and what they might have been doing was moving their phones down and out of sight when they texted, in recognition that what they were doing was illegal," he said .... Perhaps the answer here lies in technology: Require automakers to render cell phones unusable in a moving vehicle.

Conscience protections also guard civility

One spring morning in 2009, Catherine Cenzon-DeCarlo arrived at the job she loves at New York's Mount Sinai Hospital. By the time the nurse's shift was over, though, her peace was shattered.

Charles A. Donovan

That day, Mount Sinai officials compelled Cenzon-DeCarlo to help doctors perform an abortion late in the mother's second trimester. This forced participation violated personal convictions she told the hospital about when she was hired five years earlier. Cenzon-DeCarlo's ordeal began one of the most striking and important "conscience" cases in modern times. Indeed, her case will help determine whether the Obama administration intends to enforce the nation's "conscience laws" in the places where Americans receive health care. It's a sleeper issue. And it deserves much wider attention.

Conscience laws occupy an interesting place in U.S. history. Legislators usually frame such measures in religious terms, with specific and limited application. Most of us know the law traditionally has recognized a narrow category of conscientious objection, under which an American may be exempted from compulsory military service. A conscientious objector is defined as someone against participating in all wars, not just some wars. Typically, a granted exemption will require alternative service in a noncombatant role. Congress recognized something similar just last year in passing the health care bill. Although it doesn't include a general religious exemption from the mandate that individuals purchase health insurance, the law provides two exemptions for members of specific faith communities. The federal conscience laws regarding particular practices in health care originated with legalization of abortion nationwide in 1973. Congress foresaw controversial ramifications of the Supreme Court's Roe v. Wade decision that year.

Could an organization that won a federal research grant require employees to engage in fetal tissue research? Could a physician in a federally funded program be forced to participate in abortions? Would an applicant to medical or nursing school face a similar mandate? A bipartisan group of senators, led by Republican John Heinz of Pennsylvania and Democrat Frank Church of Idaho, successfully offered amendments to protect the conscience rights of health care providers in such situations. In 2004, the late Rep. Henry Hyde and former Rep. Dave Weldon, a physician, added a third conscience protection to the annual spending bill for health and human services.

This patchwork of laws expressed a noble, and in fact civilizing, idea. If our nation is to live with its deepest differences over issues as contested as abortion, cloning and assisted suicide, we must provide room for individuals to avoid participating in practices that offend their moral or religious sense.

These situations aren't the same as compulsory service in wartime, where an arguable claim exists on the service of every citizen. Instead, each is an elective, controversial practice.

The defect in this patchwork is lack of clear guidance on enforcement. In 2008, the Bush administration attempted to fix the problem by making clear that alleged violations could be referred to the Office of Civil Rights at the Department of Health and Human Services and investigated like other federal civil rights complaints.

In March 2009, though, the new Obama administration suspended these regulations. Administration lawyers recently told a federal court that they soon will resolve the situation.

Almost no one expects full reinstatement of the rules. It's possible the administration will direct the Office of Civil Rights to cease all investigations, including Catherine Cenzon-DeCarlo's case, and accept no more complaints.

That would be a travesty. Health care is not warfare.

When Americans of good faith disagree profoundly on matters of basic morality, both justice and common sense counsel the widest possible respect for conscience.

If we truly want civility in public life, effective conscience laws should be among the first principles we embrace.

Charles Donovan is senior research fellow in the DeVos Center on Religion and Civil Society at The Heritage Foundation. He wrote this commentary for McClatchy-Tribune News Service.

Fulminating about freedom of speech

Why do I have to tone down my speech? Even if vitriol replaces racist as this year's code word for shut up, the sensitivity police will still be riding me like a drunken prom date every time a maniac skips his meds and goes postal. Hate speech is wrong on any level; it's easy to spot and easier to ignore, but to accuse anybody of vitriol just because their opinions don't gel with yours is really weak. Example: After I posted articles about illegals trashing Arizona deserts, a lady from Washington, admittedly married to an illegal, took offense and posted my name, phone and address (Google maps included) on numerous boards as Idaho's Klan Grand Dragon. Not easily offended, I invited her and the family over for dinner and a movie. Then she started posting my daughter's name and elementary school hoping to really get my goat. I didn't climb a tower with a deer rifle because I can handle opposing opinions as well as sarcastic personal attacks, yet she couldn't even handle one news article. If this kind of stuff makes you go Hannibal Lecter, try avoiding the conversations all together. I'm just saying if heated rhetoric, wild conspiracies or talk radio makes you dance the last fandango in a g-string with your favorite gun before going on a shooting spree, you should limit your intellectual intake to cartoons and Teletubbies. Let the adults talk while you go out and play. When phrases like "in my sights" and "target audience" become socially taboo out of safety concerns, we're surely losing our freedom of expression. I can't even voice my opinion at the airport when security's touching me more than my wife because I fear a deeper retribution — so to speak. (No offense to prom queens, medicated schizophrenics, postal workers, Washington residents, illegals, Teletubbies, the TSA proctologists, or gun owners with g-strings.) Is that civil enough? DAN LYON Buhl

Will not worth the paper it was written on

So you have a will or a loved one has a will, all heirs are protected right? Not even close actually. Let's say that your father passes away but before he does, he provides you with a copy of his will and discusses it with you. First off, it takes care of his spouse, your stepmother, whom has been in your life pretty much as long as you can remember. It states that if he passes first, everything goes to her and her will states if she passes first, that everything goes to your father. In our story, your father passes first, leaving your stepmother with her own children and you with your father's other children (in our story, we will say four sisters). At first you, of course, are grieving at your loss but at the same time you have turned your love and care to the stepmother. She is elderly and you are concerned about her living alone. So you are shocked when you receive a certified letter from an attorney you have never heard of, and you can be sure your father never heard of either. It states that a week before your father passed, while he was on his deathbed, your stepmother was able to have him sign a warranty deed that turned your father's will into a "fizzle." Evidently a legal term used by only the best Idaho attorneys. It states that you are no longer to "hound" your stepmother and to stay away from your father's home. And all you can do is watch as all of your father's belongings are taken, given away, thrown away, sold at yard sales and advertised in the newspaper. And let's say that your father was a decorated World War II veteran and that his last request was to have his body cremated and his ashes spread at a veteran's memorial, like the one in Boise for instance. And you call the memorial garden to see if arrangements have been made for a ceremony only to find out that it took place the day before with none of your father's biological family notified or present. Sounds like a nightmare doesn't it. It is. And in the great state of Idaho, it seems to be irreversible. So beware, a will by itself is simply not enough, not when dealing with a certain class of people, that is. JEFFERY DWIGHT SHAW Independence, Kan. # Judge sets quick trial in Blackfoot bullying case

BLACKFOOT (AP) — Seeking a quick end to a high-profile hazing case, a judge set March trial dates for two former Blackfoot High School athletes charged with misdemeanors involving alleged locker room bullying.

Seventh District Court Judge Charles Roos on Tuesday set a March 8 trial for Nathan Walker and a March 22 trial for Logan Chidester.

Roos told attorneys to be ready because he wants the case resolved for the sake of the small eastern Idaho town of Blackfoot that was rocked when the allegations became public in December.

“It’s my belief that the community needs this behind it,” Roos said. “There will be no heels dragging in the dust behind the wagon on this trip. I realize I’m being a task master, gentlemen, and I’m not apologizing.”

sentence with all but one day suspended.

Anthony Clarke, also 19, faces three misdemeanor charges of false imprisonment and two counts of principal to battery.

Three of the defendants moved on to play football in college.

Clarke, a freshman at Boise State, and Chidester, a redshirt freshman at Carroll College in Helena, Mont., were suspended by their coaches when the allegations surfaced. Walker was on the roster at Idaho State.

The allegations, described by prosecutors as bullying, involved behavior in a locker room and school bus.

During a preliminary hearing, a male witness described being held down in the locker room while assailants used fingers to try to penetrate his rectum through his clothing.

Bingham County prosecutor Randy Smith told Roos that prosecutors were close to a deal on the remaining charges with Clarke’s attorney Dean Brandstetter, who was not in court.

Roos showed little patience with attorneys discussing possible deals and said he will order Clarke to appear in court.

“I’m not putting it off until March,” Roos said. “If you’ve got to miss a little class, miss a little class. Have somebody take notes for you.”

Urban renewal critic says all that’s needed are more guns

BOISE (AP) — A Republican lawmaker suggested a potential cure for blighted Idaho communities that may otherwise turn to urban renewal districts: Get a gun.

Rep. Robert Schaefer of Nampa is pushing legislation to repeal Idaho’s 45-year-old urban renewal law, on grounds that a measure originally aimed at helping downtrodden communities restore themselves is now being abused by districts that spend indiscriminately on inappropriate projects.

This contention has long been a sore spot with district critics.

Schaefer told the House Local Government Committee Wednesday that small towns were less likely to need districts for crime problems, because most people there are “carrying.”

When Boise Democratic Rep. Cherie Buckner-Webb asked him to explain, Schaefer offered this: “People don’t try things in areas where they know they might run into someone that can defend themselves.”

Feds prepare for Yellowstone bison slaughter

BILLINGS, Mont. — Disease testing began Wednesday on hundreds of captured bison from Yellowstone National Park, with federal officials saying those that test positive for brucellosis could be shipped to slaughter this week.

Twenty-one more bison were captured Tuesday as the animals migrated out of the snow-packed park to find food at lower elevations in Montana. That brought to more than 300 the number of bison being held in corrals near Gardiner, and livestock agents were driving another 38 toward the site Wednesday.

Conservation groups appealed to Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer for the animals to be spared, but the governor told The Associated Press that his hands were tied by an agreement with the federal government that sharply limits where Yellowstone bison can roam.

“We can’t unilaterally change that” agreement, he said as he also defended the Montana Department of Livestock, which faces criticism for opposing increased leniency for bison.

“They are the agency that has to do something about them once they come to Montana,” he said. “We don’t want to put our livestock industry at risk.”

The impending slaughter stands in stark contrast to recent initiatives to expand bison habitat in some areas outside the park. Those efforts have been frustrated by the animals’ tendency to wander and political opposition from Montana’s livestock industry and its supporters.

Roughly half of the park’s bison, also known as buffalo, have been exposed to brucellosis, which causes cattle, bison and some other animals to prematurely abort their young.

With more bison expected to exit Yellowstone due to a harsh winter — and the corrals capable of holding only 400 animals — a park spokesman also indicated that even bison that test negative for the brucellosis might not be released as originally planned.

“There are a lot more bison in the park than we could conceivably hold,” Yellowstone spokesman Al Nash said. “The question that no one can answer is what will the rest of the winter see in terms of bison movement.”

Fears that bison leaving Yellowstone could infect Montana livestock have driven a government-sponsored capture and slaughter program that has killed about 3,800 bison since 2000.

However, no cattle-to-bison transmissions have been recorded, and the number of cattle on ranches surrounding Yellowstone has dropped sharply in recent years.

“It’s more and more clear that it’s the elk that transmit brucellosis, yet we’re stomping all over these buffalo,” said Julia Page, a retired rafting company owner from Gardiner and critic of the government slaughter program. “This is a heck of a way to treat these last remaining bison from the vast herds that used to roam the Great Plains.”

But livestock producers want the state and federal agencies that oversee bison to hold the line. Forty-seven-year-old rancher Nelson Story in Montana’s Paradise Valley said until brucellosis is eradicated from the animals they will remain a threat to his livelihood.

“It’s a tough one, but I don’t have any answers except to manage them. That’s what we have to do with our cattle. That’s what the park should do with (bison),” said Story, who lives about 30 miles downstream from the park, just west of the Yellowstone River.

Idaho tax revenues likely beat forecasts in January

BOISE (AP) — Idaho’s January tax revenues likely beat forecasts by about $15 million.

The news, which indicates the economy could be picking up steam, may help mitigate concerns that arose last week about a yawning $185 million budget hole.

Division of Financial Management director Wayne Hammon confirmed the preliminary figure to The Associated Press.

The robust January receipts come despite $9 million in unexpected sales tax rebates paid out to alternative energy companies.

Still, this news likely won’t ease lawmakers’ job of determining what revenue figure to budget to when they set the 2012 spending plan, due to start next July 1.

For instance, legislators still must decide whether to synchronize Idaho’s tax code with new federal tax rules, a move that could cost Idaho an estimated $70 million over two years.

Report: U.S. unlikely to reach goal of 1 million electrics on the road by 2015

By Peter Whoriskey
The Washington Post

President Obama's goal of putting 1 million plug-in electric cars on the road within four years is unlikely to be met because automakers are not planning to make enough cars due to uncertain consumer demand, auto industry leaders concluded in a report being released Wednesday.

The finding is based on production numbers announced by manufacturers and an analysis of consumer demand.

The first two plug-in cars from major manufacturers, the Nissan Leaf and the Chevrolet Volt, went on sale recently, garnering widespread attention for the energy-efficient vehicles.

But the panel of industry experts who authored the report concluded that expanding sales within four years to meet the million-car goal is improbable.

"There is a big challenge in going from marketing the Leaf or the Volt to early adopters to selling them to mainstream retail car-buyers," said John Graham, dean of the school of Public and Environmental Affairs at Indiana University, which conducted and funded the 80-page study. "Until then, the automakers' production plans will be quite cautious."

The study panel was made up of a Ford executive, a federal energy scientist and representatives from an environmental group, academia and an industry research group. Input was also received from Nissan and General Motors.

In his State of the Union address last month, Obama said he is aiming to get 1 million electric vehicles on the road by 2015.

"With more research and incentives, we can break our dependence on oil with bio-fuels and become the first country to have a million electric vehicles on the road by 2015," he said.

The federal government is already offering incentives as high as $7,500 for consumers to buy plug-in cars and putting up $2.4 billion for battery and electric-car manufacturing.

But even with that encouragement, the public's adoption of electric vehicles could be slow.

The $32,780 Leaf and the $41,000 Volt cost far more than a comparably sized car with a gas engine, which typically sells for $20,000. The battery range of the Leaf, which is all electric, is less than 100 miles, and places where batteries can be replenished are sparse at best. Also, it can take hours to recharge.

As a result, many automakers have balked at making the investments to mass produce plug-in vehicles.

"When you start to aggregate the automakers' announced intentions, it's difficult to get to 1 million by 2015," Graham said.

The two leaders, by far, are GM and Nissan.

Lawmaker: Reward companies for Idaho hires

BOISE— A state lawmaker wants to reward businesses that hire graduates from Idaho's public universities and colleges with a tax credit.

Rep. Roy Lacey, D-Pocatello, plans to introduce legislation this week that would also offer an income tax credit to Idaho graduates who decide to work in the state.

Lacey says his bill will provide an incentive for students at Idaho's colleges and universities to stay here after graduation, while also giving a boost to companies that hire them.

Idaho companies would be eligible for a $1,500 to $2,000 yearly tax credit for every employee who has graduated from an Idaho school within the previous three years, under the proposal. And employees would be eligible for up to a $3,000 tax credit in the three years after they graduate from an Idaho school.

Much of nation's recent growth may have been a mirage

WASHINGTON — Last weekend, I was invited to sit in on an unusual retreat attended by top political, business, labor and civic leaders in Massachusetts. Although that state is in better economic shape than most others, it is facing most of the the same problems — anemic job growth, looming budget crises for state and local governments and widening inequality of incomes and educational achievement. The purpose of the gathering was to create a sufficient sense of urgency about those problems to overcome the inertia, political squabbling and special interest lobbying that inevitably stand in the way of doing something.

After a few presentations, it didn't take participants long to conclude that one issue seemed to be at the root of all the others: a steep, relentless rise in health-care costs that has crowded out other public- and private-sector investments. Until medical costs are contained, they concluded, there would be no money for anything else.

You have to give them credit — while the rest of the country will spend the next year stuck in a Talmudic debate about the constitutionality of requiring all Americans to buy health insurance, Massachusetts has already achieved universal coverage and is moving on to controlling costs. And judging from the weekend discussion, I'd wager that by the time Massachusetts settles on a plan to reform its health-care delivery and payment systems, the rest of us will still be parsing the meaning of the "necessary and proper" clause and the Supreme Court's holding in Lochner

vs. New York.

The movers and shakers in Boston aren't the only ones who have focused on health-care costs as the central economic issue. Tyler Cowen, an engaging and peripatetic economist at George Mason University, has just published a short but important new e-book, "The Great Stagnation," that attempts to explain the slow growth and the rising inequality that have characterized the U.S. economy over the past 35 years. (Full disclosure: I'll be joining Cowen on the GMU faculty starting next fall, although not in his department.)

Cowen's thesis is that the period of 3 percent annual growth in incomes that stretched back to the 19th century ended in the middle of the 1970s as the pace of innovation slowed. Before the slowdown, he argues, industrial economies realized rapid income and productivity gains by picking

Senate rejects repeal of health care overhaul law

By David A. Fahrenthold and N.C. Aizenman
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — On Capitol Hill, the battle over the health-care overhaul law has become a kind of scripted political theater. On Wednesday, Republicans in the Senate tried to repeal the law, as expected.

Democrats had the votes to beat them, as expected.

But now, the legal fight over the law threatens to overshadow the drama that Washington has been rehearsing.

Two federal judges have struck at a key provision of the legislation, ruling that Congress can't force individuals to buy health insurance. These cases are almost certainly headed for the Supreme Court, which many predict will decide the law's fate by the spring of 2012.

Legal experts say, it seems possible that the high court might strike down all or part of the law.

"Certainly, it's becoming more and more clear that there's a real legal issue here, as compared to a year ago," said Ilya Somin, a law professor at George Mason University, "when people said this was just frivolous and had no chance of succeeding."

On Wednesday, the Senate voted overwhelmingly, 81-17, to strip an unpopular tax-reporting provision of the law that opponents say overburdens small business. But, in a long day of emotional speechifying, that was about the only thing Democrats and Republicans agreed on.

Republican senators called for a repeal of the health-care overhaul, saying it will burden state and federal budgets with massive new costs. Democrats responded by saying that the GOP had no plans to replace the law.

"Republican Party . . . if you want to repeal, then let's go replace," Sen.

Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., said in a floor speech. "I want to hear their ideas for replacement. I challenge them right here, right now, today, on this amendment."

In the end, the repeal was defeated, 51-47. All Democrats present voted to keep the law. All Republicans present voted to repeal it. Now, the two parties will settle in for a year of smaller battles, both believing that time is on their side.

"There's a narrative I've seen and read out there that this was somehow a futile act because Republicans didn't have the votes to repeal Obamacare. But I have to tell you, these are the first steps in a long road that will culminate in 2012 whereby we will expose the flaws and the weaknesses in this legislation," Sen. John Cornyn of Texas said at a news conference held by GOP leaders after Wednesday's vote.

Republicans in Congress will seek to deny the Obama administration the money it needs to implement parts of the law. They could try to strip out specific provisions, such as some of the cuts to Medicare.

They might win a few of these skirmishes. But even if they lose, Republicans could use the assault as a campaign issue in 2012.

Democrats, by contrast, think a protracted health-care battle could favor their side. They think Americans will become attached to the law's provisions — including an end to lifetime caps on health insurance benefits and a ban on denial of coverage for children with pre-existing conditions — and turn against the GOP.

But the unpredictable contest in the courts could overtake Congress's script.

The law is being challenged in 20 pending suits. In two cases, federal judges have upheld the law. But in two others, including one in Florida on Monday, judges have ruled against it.

Feds end prisoners' bogus tax refunds

By Michael Gormley
Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. — A new agreement aims to stop federal prisoners from filing for and collecting millions of dollars in bogus tax refunds from their cells.

Pressure from U.S. senators in New York, Ohio, Minnesota and Florida in January led to an agreement signed Wednesday between the Internal Revenue Service and the federal Bureau of Prisons to break down bureaucratic and regulatory barriers to end the practice. The memorandum of understanding struck between the two agencies overcomes legal obstacles that hindered their own efforts and paves the way for states to make similar agreements that apply to their prisons.

"The impasse needed to end, and today it's over," Sen. Charles Schumer of New York said Wednesday, adding that the agencies responded quickly. "This agreement means that prisoners will no longer be able to bilk taxpayers out of millions of dollars."

Sen. Amy Klobuchar of Minnesota said the agreement effectively cuts through unnecessary red tape to "stop felons from scamming the system."

"It's shocking that inmates are ripping off the taxpayers right under the government's nose," said Sen. Bill Nelson of Florida.

The case shows "government agencies need to work together to prevent tax fraud wherever it occurs, but especially when we're being bilked from behind bars," said Sen. Sherrod Brown of Ohio, where roughly half of the 1,500 fraudulent inmate tax returns in 2009 came from a single prison, the London Correctional Institution in central Ohio.

The senators pushed the agencies to cooperate after a federal audit showed the practice continued, despite a 2008 law aimed at stopping it.

The Bureau of Prisons and the IRS, however, had already been cracking down on the scheme and made several arrests and recoveries of refunds.

MIDWEST BUCKLES UNDER STORM

AP photo
Snow piles up in a pickup truck that was abandoned Wednesday on Lake Shore Drive in Chicago. A winter blizzard of historic proportions wobbled an otherwise snow-tough Chicago, stranding hundreds of drivers for up to 12 hours overnight on the city's showcase thoroughfare and giving many city schoolchildren their first ever snow day.

Blizzard spreads snowy shroud over nearly half U.S.

By Michael Tarm
Associated Press

CHICAGO — A colossal blizzard roaring across a third of the country paralyzed the nation's heartland with ice and snow, leaving motorists stranded for hours and shuttering airports and schools as it barreled toward the Northeast.

The monstrous storm billed as the worst in decades delivered knock-out after knock-out as it made its way from Texas to Maine, bringing a huge swath of the country to a halt.

In New York, Mike Schumaker was already into his fourth hour of what he predicted would be a 24-hour plowing marathon as he cleared snow from a suburban Albany gas station around 5 a.m. Wednesday.

"I figure I'll be going to about 1 or 2 in the morning. That's my guess," said the 42-year-old private contractor from Latham.

"It's not so much about plowing as it is about to where to put it," he said. "We still have snow from Christmas that hasn't melted."

In Chicago, the city shut down Lake Shore Drive for the first time in years, an untold number of motorists stranded overnight after multiple car accidents on the iconic roadway.

And it wasn't over yet. Chicago received up to 17 inches of snow with more still possible, Missouri as much as 1 1/2 feet, more than a foot dropped on northern Indiana and Oklahoma has much as a foot. In the Northeast, spots in northern New York had already gotten more than a foot of snow. New York City was expected to get up to three-quarters of an inch of ice by midday before the mix of sleet and freezing rain warms up to rain.

Forecasters warn that ice accumulations could knock down some tree limbs and power lines. Ice also could affect transit service, even as plow drivers struggled to keep up with the snow on many roads.

"Nights like tonight stink because you clear a street and you turn around and you can't even tell you did anything," Kevin Briney said as he drove his plow through downtown South Bend, Ind., on Tuesday night.

More than 200,000 homes and businesses in Ohio began Wednesday without power, while in excess of 50,000 customers had no electricity in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, which were hit with mostly freezing rain and ice.

Federal Emergency Management Agency director Craig Fugate said the agency is on standby with generators, food, water and other supplies to help state and local authorities.

"The real heroes are these local responders going out in the storms and still rescuing people," he told ABC's "Good Morning America."

In Chicago, public schools were closed for the first time in 12 years. Crews were still trying to rescue some motorists Wednesday morning who had been stuck on Lake Shore Drive for 12 hours. It wasn't clear exactly how many motorists had been trapped, and some had abandoned their vehicles.

It was like, insane," one of the motorists, Frank Ercole, told WLS-TV. "No one knows anything. Everything's frozen."

In Oklahoma, rescue crews and the National Guard searched overnight for any motorists who might be stranded along its major highways after whiteouts shut down Tulsa and Oklahoma City.

For those who insisted on braving the elements, the risks were many. "If you don't have enough fuel in your vehicle, you can run out, the heat goes out — and people can even freeze to death," said Greg Cohen, executive director of the Roadway Safety Foundation.

Cities across middle America shut down hours ahead of the snow. Scores of schools, colleges and government offices canceled activities or decided not to open at all. Thousands of flights were canceled across the nation.

Groundhog predicts spring just around corner

By Lee Powell
Associated Press

PUNXSUTAWNEY, Pa. — The country's most famous groundhog predicted an early spring Wednesday but wasn't willing to go out on a limb to forecast whether his state's Pittsburgh Steelers will win the Super Bowl.

Punxsutawney Phil emerged just after dawn on Groundhog Day to make his 125th annual weather forecast in front of a smaller-than-usual crowd in rural Pennsylvania who braved muddy, icy conditions to hear his handlers reveal that he had not seen his shadow.

Including Wednesday's forecast, Phil has seen his shadow 98 times and hasn't seen it 16 times since 1887, according to the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club's Inner Circle, which runs the event. There are no records for the remaining years, though the group has never failed to issue a forecast.

Two years ago, Phil's forecast also acknowledged the Steelers' Super Bowl XLIII win the night before. This year, Sunday's game was mentioned in the forecast but no winner was predicted between the Steelers and the Green Bay Packers, who meet in Super Bowl XLV.

"The Steelers are going to the Super Bowl," Mike Johnson, vice president of the Inner Circle, said just before the forecast was read, drawing cheers from the clearly partisan crowd gathered on Gobbler's Knob, a tiny hill in this borough of about 6,100 residents some 65 miles northeast of Pittsburgh.

The Groundhog Day celebration is rooted in a German superstition that says if a hibernating animal casts a shadow on Feb. 2, the Christian holiday of Candlemas, winter will last another six weeks. If no shadow was seen, legend said spring would come early.

Castleford offers more to see than iconic rock

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

CASTLEFORD — You can talk to yourself in Balanced Rock Canyon. A voice mimicking your own will answer back.

“Hello,” I shouted.

“Hello-hello-hello-hello,” was the response.

Josh Palmer tried it by clapping his hands.

“Clap-clap-clap-clap,” was what we heard in return.

We were having fun creating echoes in the canyon. We were on another hike, and like our previous adventures in the outdoors the sky was gray. But the wind wasn’t blowing this time, and even if it were we had the canyon walls to protect us.

Balanced Rock Canyon, nestled in a dip along 3700 North in Castleford, is an impressive creation with its steep walls, interesting rock formations and dark caves.

We accessed the trail at Balanced Rock Park, a cozy setting lined with grass, picnic tables and shade trees, making it a nice spot for family gatherings. Just make sure to watch children, as Salmon Falls Creek is nearby. During fishing season, anglers cast their lines for trout.

South of the park, next to the creek, is the trail and the hike is easy without many inclines. The only bummer is that our hike was cut short after about a half-mile or so, where we encountered a rock wall. But the journey there and back was worth it.

Eye-catching rock formations — some covered in moss, others dotted with holes — fill parts of the landscape.

“I think this is my favorite hike so far,” Josh said, referring to the few hikes we’d been on together over the past few weeks.

The canyon appeared to have been pieced together as steep seams vertically split portions of the walls. We saw bird nests in these crevices, and imagined other creatures lurking nearby, unseen.

“Why do I feel as if a million eyes are watching us?” I asked Josh.

“They probably are,” he replied.

At one point, Josh thought he saw an animal looking at us from a cliff. It turned out to be a tumble weed.

We obviously had animals on the brain, for we talked about encounters with cougars and rattlesnakes. We were thankful for the chilled weather that kept the snakes away. The only wildlife we saw were the birds.

The canyon is a good place for birding, especially raptor viewing. We saw them in the sky above, their coos and caws echoing loud and long in the canyon.

The sounds here — such as the semis that roar their way along 3700 North near the park’s entrance, the raptors’ shrieks and our own voices — seemed distorted, almost haunting, as their vibrations bounced back and forth along the rocky walls.

Balanced Rock Canyon is named, of course, for the iconic rock that sits on a hillside not a mile west of the park’s entrance.

The 48-foot tall, 40-foot wide monolith appears to be balanced on a base little more

Photos by ANDREW WEEKS/Times-News

A view of Balanced Rock as seen in early fall. The 48-foot tall monolith that sits atop a 3-foot base is Castleford’s most popular rock. But don’t neglect to notice others, as the area is filled with all kinds of interesting formations.

A view of Salmon Falls Creek as it winds through Balanced Rock Canyon in late January.

The 40-ton rock, formed by differential wind and weather patterns over hundreds of years, sparks interest in visitors traveling through south-central Idaho. In shape, does it look like a question mark, a snake’s head or a boot? Or maybe a miniature Africa? None of the answers are wrong, of course, because looking at the rock is like making out formations in the clouds. And if you attempt to hike up the small trail to the rock, chances are your impressions of the rock will change as you get closer. It doesn’t quite look like Africa the closer you get to it.

I’ve been here on blue sky days. If you plan to visit, do it then. The rock formations stand out darker and seem more intriguing when set against a blue backdrop.

According to the Bureau of Land Management, which manages the site, Balanced Rock was reinforced with cement after someone tried chiseling away at the base decades ago.

Idaho latest to eye sponsorships for state parks

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Idaho is the latest state seeking out corporate sponsorships to help cover funding losses for its cash-strapped parks system.

For those who might cringe at the prospect of “Hell’s Gate State Park brought to you by Coca-Cola,” state Parks and Recreation chief Nancy Merrill assures it won’t come to that.

But there may be a playground or two sponsored by Juicy Juice. And don’t be surprised if you come upon a state parks worker decked out in North Face, or if you see a dog park sponsored by Purina, or a tree-planting activity brought to you by Coca-Cola Co.’s premium juice brand Odwalla.

Merrill assured lawmakers Tuesday the sponsorships would be “tasteful.”

“There’s a lot of concern about a Coca-Cola park in northern Idaho,” Merrill said. “That’s not going to happen.”

While other states have considered similar ideas to add corporate sponsors for advertising in the face of budget woes, nothing major has come of the proposals, in part because of strong opposition from environmental advocates.

In Idaho, Merrill wants to use the additional money to plug holes in the state park system’s budget, which is down $4.5 million from the last fiscal year. This lost funding would not be restored in the coming fiscal year, under the governor’s budget recommendation.

The agency has so far reduced its work force by 15 percent and drained more than $1 million in reserves to help cover the loss. The department has also relied on more than $2 million in fees charged to RV campers in state parks — money that would normally go toward projects — to fill in the budget hole.

Corporate sponsorships could bring in another $10,000 to $300,000 over the next five years, Merrill said.

The parks department has already started talking with private companies that could become potential sponsors of park services.

“They are interested in Idaho, and we’re interested in talking to them,” Merrill said.

The board that governs Idaho Parks and Recreation is expected to consider proposed guidelines on how the state would pursue the sponsorships at a meeting Wednesday in Boise. The agency will move quickly to secure so-called underwriters for park services if the guidelines are approved, Merrill said.

Snowmobile allies, opponents brace for new Yellowstone Park use plan

By Martin Kidston
The Billings Gazette

CODY, Wyo. — Gary Fales Outfitting began running guided snowmobile trips through the East Entrance into Yellowstone National Park in 1995.

Over the last 15 years, however, the Wapiti Valley outfitter has struggled through Yellowstone's oft-changing regulations, watching the days of unlimited riders give way to current rules that limit guided snowmobile trips to 318 a day for the entire park.

Dede Fales, part-owner of Gary Fales Outfitting, said Yellowstone's changing rules make it difficult to run the family's business.

While they ran 13 machines last year, she said, they're down to four this year. And, as Yellowstone prepares to release its draft environmental impact study exploring new winter-use rules, she said, the future is as uncertain as ever.

"We would run more machines and do more

Matt Bornitz from Howard, S.D. stands his Ski-Doo on end as he tops out near Togwotee Pass, Jan. 7 in Jackson, Wyo.

advertising if we had a long-term permit with the park," Fales said. "But who can go spend $100,000 on 10 new machines when they don't know what the future holds?"

Fales may have an ally in Park County, where commissioners joined the state of Wyoming in an attempt to sue the federal government of Wyoming are now appealing that ruling.

Yellowstone spokesman Al Nash said he understands the concerns expressed by Park County officials and operators like Gary Fales Outfitting.

"It's challenging to have a viable business of any sort — at any time of year — in this area and especially in this economy," Nash said. "I understand when people share their concerns about any action that might impact their ability to run a viable business."

Yet, Nash also cited figures showing that, since 2008, the average number of snowmobile trips into Yellowstone hasn't approached the park's daily limit of 318.

On average, Yellowstone recorded 294 guided snowmobile trips a day during the winter of 2007, or 24 fewer than what's now permitted.

By 2008, the numbers had fallen to an average of 205 guided trips daily, and just 187 during the winter of 2009.

Nash said figures aren't yet available for the 2010 winter season. But, in December, park figures showed that the number of people entering Yellowstone on guided snowmobiles was down 3.6 percent from December 2009.

Mark Pearson, program director for the Greater Yellowstone Coalition, also has watched the numbers play out over the past few years. He thinks the decline in daily snowmobile riders represents consumer choice.

Pearson cited Yellowstone figures showing that snowcoach trips increased from 29 in 2008 to 32 in 2009. In December 2010, when snowmobile ridership decreased, the number of snowcoach passengers increased another 5.7 percent.

"As more people become aware of the snowcoach option, they're choosing to go in that way," Pearson said. "All they want is a form of reliable transportation to Old Faithful."

Pearson said he understands Park County's lawsuit and its subsequent appeal, though he called it a waste of taxpayer money.

The new Yellowstone EIS will be released by spring, long before the county's appeal concludes in court, he said.

The National Park Service plans to release its draft winter-use plan by late winter or early spring, with implementation intended for 2012-13 under all alternatives proposed except one. Under the no-action alternative, all over-the-snow vehicle travel would be banned.

Pearson said the Greater Yellowstone Coalition will participate in the public hearings once the draft is released for public review.

Fales said they, too, will participate in the process, advocating for the opposite plan.

"We would like to see people be able to go into the park on their own again," Fales said. "We would always advocate for more winter use than there is."

F&G seeks help in poaching case

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game is looking for information regarding a bull moose found shot near Mason Butte, northwest of Orofino.

Officers responding to a call from a concerned individual, found a bull moose near marker 10.5 on the Mason Butte Road. The large bull moose had already shed its antlers. It was probably shot on or around Jan. 23.

Fish and Game is looking for any additional information. Anyone with information on this crime may call the Lewiston Fish and Game office at 799-5010 or the Citizens Against Poaching hotline at 1-800-632-5999. The line is open 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Callers may remain any-mous and may be eligible for a reward.

Agency turns to YouTube to help with hunting rules

REXBURG — Idaho Fish and Game officials are turning to YouTube to help get sportsmen more involved in crafting the agency's next batch of big game hunting rules.

Officials from the agency's Upper Snake Region say they will use YouTube to broadcast meetings that traditionally have been held in communities to gather ideas.

Regional Wildlife Manager Daryl Meints told the Rexburg Standard Journal that fewer people have been showing up at those scoping meetings. By posting the meetings on YouTube, hunters can download at their own time then submit comments to the agency via e-mail.

The video presentations can be found by searching "Idaho Fish and Game" on YouTube. Meints says the idea is an offshoot of the agency's current use of Facebook and Twitter account to inform anglers and hunters.

Yellowstone seeks conservation recruits

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. — Yellowstone National Park is looking for youths between the ages of 15 and 18 for its summer residential work program.

The Youth Conservation Corps program is designed to develop an appreciation for the nation's natural resources and heritage through unique educational, recreational and work experiences.

Corps members work together under adult supervision to complete conservation projects such as rehabilitation of trails, campground restoration and a wide variety of resource management and maintenance projects.

No wilderness experience is required, but the work is physically demanding.

Participants will be required to live on location, and room and board will be provided at a minimal cost. Wages will be set at the federal minimum wage of $7.25 per hour.

Applications must be received no later than March 14.

A good way to bag cottontails

I'm an advocate of free agency, and if a person wants to stand out in the middle of a frozen reservoir jiggling for pan fish, more power to him. But if I'm going to suit up to brave the elements, I'd rather go bunny hunting.

Nowadays whenever I feel the need for a weekend outdoors adventure, I grab a rimfire rifle and head for the lava flows just outside of town.

My favorite hunting method is to slowly work the edges of the basalt flows hoping to catch a glimpse of a cottontail napping on a rimrock ledge just above its burrow. Not all that long ago when my vision was better, an old Remington Nylon 66 and a well-used Ruger single-six revolver were my favorite carry guns.

Nowadays with compromised vision and creeping senility, I depend on a scoped rifle to help me more consistently connect with head shots at the typical 30-50 yard ranges.

Until last year, I had generally been satisfied with the performance of my Winchester Super-X and Federal High Velocity .22 LR ammunition. The accuracy was there in spades, but even a carefully placed head shot would send the rabbit kicking and cartwheeling around. Dramatic for sure, but this drama sometimes presented a problem. More often than I'd like to recall, a fatally wounded cottontail would reflexively kick itself back into its burrow or down into a crevasse where it couldn't be retrieved. This really bothered me because I feel a strong obligation to harvest all the game that I kill.

The solution seemed obvious; hit 'em with more horsepower. But I don't really like to use a shotgun for this style of rabbit hunting and the small caliber centerfires are too powerful for the suburban areas that I hunt. The answer to my bunny hunting dilemma arrived in the form of the .17 HMR cartridge.

SHOOTING THE BULL Rich Simpson

Developed by the bullet-making giant, Hornady Manufacturing, working in conjunction with the Marlin and Ruger firearms companies, the diminutive .17 HMR set the rimfire world on its ear when it was introduced in 2002. The basic case was simply fashioned by necking the standard .22 WMR down to .17 caliber. Crimping either a 17-grain polymer-tipped or 20-grain hollow point jacketed bullet over a suitable charge of Hodgdon Lil' Gun powder resulted in the "fastest rimfire in history" — with velocity between 2,300-2,500 feet per second. That easily trumps the .22 LR's 40-grain bullet running at about 1,300 fps and the .22 WMR's hottest 30-grain loads smoking out at around 2,200 fps.

Now all of these numbers look great on paper, but what about its real world performance? In a word: impressive. Last year, I bought a beautiful CZ 452 bolt gun at an unbelievable price. It is incredibly accurate and when the 17- or 20-grain bullets connect with a rabbit ... it's all over. The impact and violent upset of the minuscule bullet stop the rabbit literally in its tracks. There is no post-mortem kicking and jumping and I have not lost a single rabbit.

So when cabin fever strikes this month, grab your .17 HMR and head for the lava flows. It'll be good for what ails you.

Good hunting!

Activities to cure you of the cabin fever blues

Q: “Is there a cure for the cabin fever blues?”

A: How about getting out your fishing rod and wetting your line in a nearby pond? Clear Springs Foods in mid-January donated numerous large rainbow trout for local ponds. These five-pound average fish were stocked into Crystal Lake, Empire pond, and the Filer ponds. Also, Idaho Trout Processors will be donating more of those big yellow trout in March.

These fish typically go to waters that don’t freeze, as stocking fish through the ice sometimes results in the fish dying from temperature shock. Therefore, keep in mind Crystal Lake, Filer Ponds and the Empire ponds, which typically don’t freeze during the winter and have warmer water temperatures because of the influence of spring water. Also, some ponds on the Hagerman Wildlife Management Area will open March 1, and should be a good bet to get a big tug on the line.

Perhaps this is the year you will try fishing through the ice. If you have a power ice auger, you can drill as many holes as you like, but you can only fish with up to five poles, even if you have a two-pole permit.

If the fish are biting, about two poles is all you’ll need. Some waters in eastern Idaho have different regulations, so check them out before you head out. Also, make sure the ice is thick enough to support you after all those holiday treats.

If you are ice fishing for perch, lower your line to the bottom and lift it up a couple inches. Perch tend to congregate near the bottom in the winter months. Also, although many fishermen like to use small ice-fishing poles for fishing, I actually prefer to use a small bobber and set it up on the snow mound created when you drill your hole.

The perch will tug the line, knocking the bobber into the water. Perch are very soft biters in the winter, and often can’t be felt with a fishing pole. I like to put the line in between my thumb and forefinger so I can feel the bite better. I set the hook with my hand as well. Just be ready for some real fun when you set the hook on a big trout and have to hand-line them in. I make my ice-fishing rigs using a 1-inch by 14-inch piece of wood, then cut a “V” notch on both ends for the line to wrap around. I have a bunch of these made with four-to-six pound test monofilament, with a weight and a couple hooks about three feet apart and a small bobber on the line. Then put them in a 5-gallon bucket on the kids sled and head out to a likely area. The bucket doubles as a seat.

ASK THE OFFICER

I usually tip a size 8 hook with a small piece of night-crawler and lower it to the bottom for perch. For trout, I use a combination of night-crawler/powerbait/marshmallow, depending on what is “hot” for the day. Trout usually feed about eight to 20 feet under the ice, depending upon how deep the water is, but I have caught many trout right off the bottom while fishing for perch.

If you don’t have a power auger, borrow one. Otherwise, take along your teenage kids or your football playing friends to drill the holes for you. If you’re lucky, you can take over somebody else’s holes that just left. I look for holes with some evidence that fish were caught there, such as blood or fish parts.

Don’t forget to dress warm and wear some waterproof boots and pants or raingear to stay dry. Also, that hunting blind you used this fall can double as an ice-shack to keep you out of the wind.

Ice fishing is really a great sport to abolish the cabin fever blues of mid-winter. It doesn’t cost a lot of money, and once you get some fish on the ice, you’ll forget how cold it is.

Now that the football season’s over, get off that couch and try your luck on the ice. If you’ve never done it before, talk to your fishing friends and they can get you started. Folks on the ice are generally a cheerful bunch willing to help a beginner. You just have to get out there. I’ll see you on the “hard” water. Good luck fishing!

Dorothy Swehla, a 79-year-old Prescott, Ariz., woman will celebrate her 80th birthday by hiking the Grand Canyon with family March 28-30.

Woman will mark 80th birthday with another Grand Canyon hike

By Doug Cook
The Daily Courier

PRESCOTT, Ariz. — Dorothy Swehla did not become an avid hiker until she reached her early 50s. But she has made up for lost time over the past three decades.

From March 28-30, the feisty 5-foot-4, 135-pound Prescott resident will hike into and out of the Grand Canyon with some 28 family members and friends in celebration of her 80th birthday Feb. 3.

Swehla estimates that she has hiked the canyon — her all-time favorite excursion — on more than 25 different occasions. She has trekked from its North Rim to the South Rim and in nearly every other direction imaginable.

For her 75th birthday five years ago, Swehla hiked the canyon. Shortly afterward, she told herself that she wouldn’t do it again. But the itch soon resurfaced.

“I just kept getting older, and I kept thinking, ‘Oh, I haven’t hiked the canyon for maybe two or three years,’” Swehla said last week. “And so then I said, ‘I think maybe I could do that.’”

“Not until you’ve been down there and look up have you truly experienced the canyon.”

— Dorothy Swehla

Dorothy and her husband, Ron, will celebrate their 60th wedding anniversary the weekend of March 26-27.

The next day, the Swehla family party will head down into the canyon on the South Rim’s Kaibab Trail, spend a night or two below and then head back up on the Bright Angel Trail. The steep Kaibab goes for about 7 miles, while the Bright Angel extends 10 miles at a more modest grade.

Swehla booked reservations for cabins and campsites a year ago in Phantom Ranch, which rests at the base of the canyon. While the group is there, some of its members will hike the Narrows, a trail that passes through the tight canyon walls through which a creek flows as well as travel to Rainbow Falls.

“You can go through the canyon and look over the rim and say, ‘Isn’t that awesome?’” said Swehla, who will not visit the Narrows or Rainbow Falls on this trip since she’s been there so many times before. “But not until you’ve been down there and look up have you truly experienced the canyon.”

Through the years of her exploring, Swehla has not limited herself to the Southwest. She successfully hiked the Alps in Europe. And just four years ago, she hiked the Appalachian Trail, one of the most daunting hikes in the U.S., alongside one of her daughters and one of her sons.

“It was a real thrill, because we had talked about going out there for years,” she said of the Appalachian Trail.

In preparation for her latest Grand Canyon hike, Swehla does some form of exercise every day. She tries to hike three days a week and goes to the gym, where she does leg presses and cross training.

As the weather gets warmer, Swehla will spread out for hikes on Bill Williams Mountain and south of Prescott. Nonetheless, she often likes to hike close by on two loops, a 3-miler and a 6-miler, in Prescott’s Pioneer Park — approaching them from the steeper backside and up because that provides a better workout.

Swehla said working out consistently for three months prior to a hike in the canyon is the best advice she can give.

“If you try and hike the canyon, and you’re not in shape, it’s no fun at all,” Swehla said. “If you are in shape, it’s still hard, but it’s much more enjoyable.”

Swehla doesn’t necessarily credit her hiking with being in excellent health. However, she is not on any blood pressure, heart or cholesterol medication. She consumes only a small dose of a thyroid med that some post-menopausal women require.

As for her diet, Swehla has plenty of fruit in it and consumes meat only in moderation. She enjoys golfing and gardening, and keeps 12 fruit trees in her yard, which she still trims herself.

“I’m lucky, but I work at it, and I watch what I eat,” she said of her health. “I will keep hiking as long as I can.”

Moose, sheep and goat seasons set

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission last Thursday approved moose, bighorn sheep and mountain goat seasons for 2011-12.

According to Fish and Game, the number of moose tags dropped following declining hunt success in central Idaho. The new quota includes 761 tags for antlered bull moose, down by 7 percent from 2009-10, and 163 tags for antlerless moose, down from 197 earlier.

Three tags for bighorn sheep were added in controlled hunt area 37, following a 2010 census of the herd.

In southwestern Idaho, the total number of tags declined by one. Two tags each are subtracted from early and late hunts in the Owyhee River area — controlled hunt areas 42-1 and 42-2. But the hunt in the Bruneau-Jarvis drainage was split into early and late hunts and three tags added.

Two new hunts for mountain goats, with one tag each, were established in the Panhandle Region — one in Unit 1 and the other in units 7 and 9. In the Clearwater area, hunt boundaries were adjusted to create a new hunt in units 10 and 12, and a tag was added in eastern Idaho’s Unit 67.

The fall 2010 hunting season was notable in that two new state record bighorn sheep were taken by Idaho hunters. The largest Rocky Mountain bighorn ram ever harvested by an Idaho hunter, scoring more than 197 Boone & Crockett points, was taken in Hells Canyon; the largest California bighorn harvested by a hunter, at more than 185 points, was taken in the Jarvis River drainage.

Moose, sheep and goat 2011-12 rule books are expected to be available by the end of February. The application period for trophy species hunts runs from April 1-30.

Forecasters predict good salmon season

It’s not expected to be as good as last year, but the 2011 chinook salmon return is on track to be the sixth best year since 1980.

The fish are still out in the Pacific Ocean, but the forecast for numbers of returning fish are similar to 2008 and 2009.

Northwest fish managers estimate that about 198,400 chinook bound for waters upstream of Bonneville Dam will enter the Columbia River this year — last year the number was 315,300.

Of those, 66,400 hatchery fish and 24,700 wild fish are predicted to head up the Snake River to Washington, Oregon and Idaho. Last year’s actual return was 134,300 hatchery fish and 35,600 wild fish.

Idaho fish managers estimate that 32,470 of the hatchery fish that cross Lower Granite Dam are bound for Idaho waters.

Last year, more than 38,000 returned to Salmon River hatcheries and more than 13,000 returned to Clearwater hatcheries.

It’s too soon to tell just how many fish will actually show up, and what any fishing seasons might look like. Idaho fisheries managers expect to present proposed chinook fishing seasons in the Clearwater, Snake, lower Salmon and Little Salmon rivers to the Fish and Game Commission in March.

In years past, chinook seasons have opened in late April.

I’m filing bankruptcy using a paid bankruptcy petition preparer, and I need to know if my dad’s death will need to be reported in the paperwork.”

Answer: Judy, please accept my condolences for your father’s death. When you file a bankruptcy, the bankruptcy trustee will liquidate your property that is not exempt under Idaho law. The money he receives will be distributed to your creditors. If you transferred away ownership of any property prior to the filing of your bankruptcy, and you did not receive equivalent value for the property, the trustee is authorized to retrieve the property, or its value, and distribute that money to your creditors. In Idaho, when a person dies without a will, his property is divided among his heirs according to law. Since your dad’s home was his separate property, you and your sister inherited a share of the home. When you signed the deed, you transferred away your share without receiving equivalent value. The trustee will collect your share from your stepmother. This is a good example of why debtors should always seek out an experienced bankruptcy attorney to represent them.

50 YEARS AGO, HE EXPLORED THE SEA Jerome man honored for sub service

Times-News correspondent

Art Van Holland was fresh out of high school and casting about for a challenge when he enlisted in the U.S. Navy.

Five decades later, it's a decision he recalls with pride.

"I grew up in Bellflower, California, and enlisting was just what a lot of guys did back then, a kind of rite of passage," he said. "It was the best thing I ever did and if I had to, I'd do it all over again."

Van Holland's now been recognized for his service. During a Jan. 22 ceremony at Pasta Roma Cafe & Grill in Twin Falls, he was inducted by his fellow submarine veterans into the Holland Club.

Named after John P. Holland, designer of the first submarine purchased by the U.S. Navy in 1900, the club is a division of the United States Submarine Veterans. Holland Club membership is restricted to those who qualified as submariners, learning every valve, switch or system aboard, and received their dolphin insignia at least 50 years ago.

The 72-year-old Jerome resident received his qualified status aboard the submarine USS Gudgeon and joined the silent service ranks in 1959. He remained part of the boat's crew and her clandestine missions into Soviet Russian waters, he said, until completing his time in 1961 at the rank of petty officer second class.

"I actually started out on top of the water aboard the USS Rehoboth in 1957 and met an officer who had served aboard a sub," Van Holland said. "What he talked about sounded like what I was looking for and turned out to be everything I expected. All the stuff we did is pretty much declassified and on record by now?"

A Holland Club candidate's local base chapter membership has to be in good standing as well. Van Holland belongs to the local Trout Base, which currently has a Magic Valley membership of 19 veterans whose military service extends from World War II through the Vietnam era.

"Our own Trout Base has four Holland Club members and in the next few years, we'll have six or seven more guys with 50 years," said Trout Base Commander Dave Chilcott. "Art was surprised when we told him there was something like this."

The U.S. Submarine Veterans has 13,800 members and 150 chapters across the nation. For more information about it and the Trout Base: www.ussvi.org.

Addressing non-traumatic bone fractures

DEAR DR. GOTT: I have been taking Boniva for almost five years. Could I or should I stop now? I've heard there is some discussion about this. I'm 74. Your opinion, please.

DEAR READER: Boniva is prescribed to slow bone loss, increase bone mass, and treat or prevent osteoporosis in women, a condition in which bones become thin, weaken, and are subject to easy fracture.

The Food and Drug Administration issued a warning to physicians and their patients on Oct. 14, 2010, regarding an increased risk of bone fractures of the thigh with bone-strengthening bisphosphonates such as Boniva, Fosamax and Actonel. The report went on to indicate it remains unclear whether drugs in the category trigger thigh fractures, but because of the potential connection, labeling now warns of the possibility. It is understood an individual who falls or is in an automobile accident might experience a fracture, but these findings suggest breaks without any degree of trauma involved. Rarely, osteonecrosis (destruction and death of bone tissue) of the jaw has been linked to bisphosphonate use.

ASK
DR. GOTT
Dr. Peter Gott

At this stage, there are no guidelines as to how long a patient should remain on the drugs, but the FDA stated the fractures "may be related to the use of bisphosphonates for longer than five years, but patients should continue treatment unless directed otherwise by their physician."

My guess is that you have undergone testing such as a DEXA (dual energy X-ray absorptiometry) that measures the density of bones in areas most commonly affected by osteoporosis. Other tests less commonly used include computerized tomography (CT) or ultrasound sonography, which utilize high-frequency sound waves to view internal structures. If it is time for another X-ray, your physician can determine whether the Boniva is working for you. If both of you feel it's time for a change, ask whether 1,500 milligrams of calcium combined with 600 IU of vitamin D might be an appropriate substitute. This is a tough call only you and your prescribing physician can agree upon.

To provide related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Osteoporosis." Other readers who would like a copy should send a self-addressed stamped No. 10 envelope and a $2 check or money order made payable to Newsletter and mailed to Newsletter, P.O. Box 167, Wickliffe, OH 44092-0167. Be sure to mention the title or print an order form off my website at www.AskDrGottMD.com.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I am 89 and in good health, but I no longer have a sense of smell. Can it be restored?

DEAR READER: The answer depends on the cause. Some causes result in temporary loss, while others, unfortunately, result in permanent loss. If you have had a recent cold, sinus infection or hay fever, the condition will likely clear on its own within a reasonable period of time. If you suffer from nasal polyps, a tumor or nasal deformity, surgical correction may be necessary to remove the lesions or correct the abnormality and may restore your sense of smell. Medical conditions such as diabetes, Huntington's disease or hormonal disturbances should be ruled out.

Speak with your primary-care physician for his or her opinion. If you don't meet with success, request a referral to an otolaryngologist (ear-nose-and-throat specialist), who can help you sort through this annoying problem. Good luck.

Qwest doles out $21,000 in education grants

Students at Valley High School in Hazelton will incorporate powerful graphing calculators into their math and science classes. A new professional-grade recording studio will be built at Xavier Charter School in Twin Falls. And Summit Elementary in Jerome will begin using Nintendo Wii motion-sensitive video games, including “Dance Dance Revolution,” to encourage students to be more physically active. All three projects will be funded with grants won by teachers at the schools.

The three grants are among 10 funded statewide by the Qwest Foundation and administered by the Idaho State Department of Education, according to a news release.

The Valley High winner is Sam

Franklin, who won $4,100 to purchase advanced calculators, sensors and other software. At Xavier, Kim Kokx won $8,500 to purchase the computer, software, keyboard and other equipment to build the recording studio. And Katie Cutler and Heidi Stutzman at Summit Elementary won $8,300 for Wii and DDR consoles and equipment and fitness-tracking software.

Qwest will provide a total of $90,000 to the 10 grant winners across Idaho this year. Over seven years, the grant program has passed out $490,000.

The program began after a statewide evaluation of technology in public schools in 2003 that found many Idaho teachers need support integrating technology into their curriculum.

OBITUARY

Harvey Reimann

BURLEY — Harvey Harry Reimann, age 74, of Burley, died Saturday, Jan. 29, 2011, at his home.

Harvey was born Oct. 1, 1936, in Garrison, N.D. His parents, Harry and Regina Reimann, were grain farmers. He had a sister, Shirley, who was one year younger. He attended one year of college and then joined the U.S. Army. He was stationed in Germany in the medical corps and had qualified as a sharpshooter. He enjoyed working in the medical field and, after receiving an honorable discharge from the Army, Harvey enrolled in and graduated from Radiology Technological School at Grand Forks, N.D.

Harvey married Norma Olsen from his hometown. They had a daughter, Darcie Lee Reimann, and lived for a time in Seattle, Wash., where Harvey worked at the Swedish Medical Center. They moved to Orofino, Idaho, where eventually they divorced. Harvey married Ann Pappenhagen on Nov. 10, 1965, in the home of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Albert Pappenhagen. Harvey became a stepfather to Ken Cottrell and Kay (Cottrell) Field.

Harvey was a highly respected X-ray technician and, in 1971, he took Ann and Kay to live in Gallup, N.M., where he and Ann (a registered nurse) worked at McKinley General Hospital. Harvey and Ann moved to Burley in 1977. Kay was nearby attending college at Caldwell. Darcie lived in Boise with her mother and then moved in with Harvey and Ann. They have been very happy in Burley.

Harvey had 38 very active sober years in AA. Also, in the community, he sat on the board of directors of the Syringa Plaza in Burley. This facility houses low-income seniors. Harvey was known for certain foods he brought to residents for some of the celebrations and for his sense of humor.

He has always been an outdoorsman — hunting and, most especially, fishing. He and Ann were avid campers and canoeists for many years. Harvey was always a good baker and cook. He developed an interest in Dutch oven cooking and even entered contests. He and Vicky Knight won first prize in the Rupert Dutch Oven Cooking Contest on July 3, 1990, for their chicken and bread dough dumpling recipe. When health problems limited Harvey's outdoor activities, he took up wood carving, taking classes locally. He won first prize for his carving of a buffalo at the Cassia County Fair in 2009.

Harvey's parents; his sister; and his daughter, Darcie, all predeceased him. He is survived by his wife, Ann Reimann; his stepchildren, Ken and Kay; four grandchildren; three great-grandchildren; and by his sister's children, Tony Hummel and Peri Houten and their children.

A memorial service will be held at 3 p.m. Monday, Feb. 7, at the Rasmussen Funeral Home, 1350 E. 16th St. in Burley, with Janet King officiating. Military rites will be accorded by the Mini-Cassia Veterans Organization. A potluck luncheon will follow at the St. Matthew's Episcopal Church Fellowship Hall, 902 Sixth St. in Rupert. A private urn placement will take place at the Rodgers-Durfee Cemetery in Elba.

Instead of flowers, Harvey and Ann ask that donations be made in his name to support the local chapters of AA or to the local Relay for Life.

Ina Marie Jones

BURLEY — Ina Marie Jones, 71, beloved wife, mother, sister, grandmother, great-grandmother, aunt and friend, passed away Monday, Jan. 31, 2011, at her home in Burley, Idaho, surrounded by her family.

Ina was born Feb. 10, 1939, in Orofino, Idaho, to Alvin and Deloris Wilson. She graduated from Nezperce High School in 1957. Following high school, Ina pursued her dream to become a flight attendant and, after graduating, she chose to turn in her wings to marry the love of her life, Garth Jones. Ina and Garth were married June 7, 1960, and had four wonderful children.

Ina enjoyed spending time with her family, camping and playing cards. She spent many hours with her grandchildren laughing and having fun playing her favorite video game, Dr. Mario, which usually ended with a victory. Bowling was another passion she shared with her family, earning a trip to national competition in Reno with daughters, Joni and Kristine. Her competitive spirit is one that will be missed dearly.

Ina also spent many quiet hours toll painting, crafting and painting her husband's wooden creations — garden frogs and bird houses to name a few. Together they made many wonderful gifts for friends and family to cherish. Those fortunate enough to know Ina knew she was devoted to her family and friends. Her laughter was one that started deep and erupted with joy. The familiar twinkle in her eye meant something mischievous or comical was afoot. Even while going through her recent battle with breast cancer, there was never a moment that she couldn't make others laugh with her wit and quiet humor. Sadly, while their memories of Ina are not lost, the cherished hugs that she gave them are no more.

Ina is survived by her husband, Garth; sister, Mary (Fred) Riggers of Boise; daughters, Debbie (Dallas) Doty of Boise, Joni (Brad) Norman of Idaho Falls and Kristine Jones of Heyburn; daughter-in-law, Christina Lott of Twin Falls; several nieces and nephews; 11 grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren, with one on the way. She was preceded in death by her parents, Alvin and Deloris Wilson; aunt, Louis Egan; and her son, Robert Jones.

As sad as we are to say goodbye, we have joy in knowing that Ina has gone to be with her Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, where she will dance with Him on the streets of gold and wait for us to follow her into eternity. "Amazing Grace," her favorite hymn says it best, "When this flesh and heart shall fail, and mortal life shall cease, I shall possess within the veil, a life of joy and peace."

A memorial service will be held at 3 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 5, at Morrison Funeral Home, 188 S. Highway 24 in Rupert, with urn placement to follow at Pleasant View Cemetery in Burley. A gathering for friends and family will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday, Feb. 4, at New Beginnings, 1044 E. Main in Burley. Services are under the direction of Morrison Funeral Home.

Lena Nancy Schmechel

If you can read this farewell memorial, you were rocketed toward expanding horizons by a teacher. If you are reading it in Twin Falls, you, a child or grandchild may have entered liftoff in the first-grade class of Mrs. Lena Schmechel at Lincoln Elementary School.

An educator for almost four decades, she died Feb. 1, 2011, at the home of her son, Vaughn on Kenyon Road. She reached her 86th birthday on Jan. 25, quietly enjoying family and old friends who gathered there. Until recent weeks, she had resided at Woodstone Retirement Center.

Lena attended the Normal School of Albion, a teacher's college now extinct, for 18 months after she was graduated from Kimberly High School in 1943 during World War II. To complete requirements for a degree, she afterward studied summers at Pocatello and other Idaho cities, by then often accompanied by her young children. She eventually received a master's degree from Idaho State University.

From 1953 to 1956, she was employed by the Twin Falls School District, then moved to a farm near Hazelton where her husband Art opened sagebrush lands which were a veterans homestead grant. She taught then at Rupert and Paul, then, commuting, rejoined the Twin Falls School system in 1958 as a first-grade teacher again at Lincoln school. From 1962 to 1971, she taught special education there before emerging again to teach first grade. She retired in 1990.

Born in Powhatan County, Va., on Jan. 25, 1925, during the brief residence of her North Carolina parents there, Nancy Lena Hamby was the youngest daughter among four daughters and three sons. Joseph Gamewell "Game" and Nellie Maude Powell Hamby moved to Idaho in December 1925 and lived in Pleasant Valley south of Kimberly. Lena attended Pleasant Valley School and then Kimberly High School when L.A. Thomas was superintendent. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas employed her in their home, and Mrs. Thomas, who had been an Army nurse, was a role model.

Lena and Arthur Walter Schmechel were married Jan. 26, 1946, at Vancouver, Wash. They became parents of three sons and a daughter. Art, a drywall contractor, died at Twin Falls on March 15, 1990.

Lena was a butterfly person who treasured freedom and independence. Whatever vehicle she owned at the moment was a true extension of herself, and she could be found many places. She stopped to savor sunsets and smell roses.

She was a fervent member of the Seventh-day Adventist Church on Grandview Drive and often arrived for Sabbath services in sister churches as well. Keenly interested in people, she readily fell into conversations with one and all and was known to take up collections in restaurants for strangers down on their luck. In particular, she had a gift for encouraging one toward a better day or full use of talents. In several instances she changed the course of a young person's life by actively intervening to open a new door. After retirement, Lena was involved in jail ministry to women.

An aura of whirlwind hovered around Lena. Her husband was wont to say that she left 10 minutes late and got there 10 minutes early. Yet she loved fragile and dainty things — birds, angels and fairy-tale endings. She had a lovely soprano voice and is in the fond wedding memories of many brides of former years.

She looked on the bright side, and found remedy for almost any difficulty in plenty of fresh air, brisk walking, positive thinking, phonics and biblical guidance.

Survivors, besides Lena's son, Vaughn (Cel), include sons, Douglas (Margaret) of Nashville, Tenn., and Steve (Cathy) of St. Anthony; and a daughter, Valorie (Don) Bothof of Twin Falls. There are also nine grandchildren and 20 great-grandchildren. A grandson, Reggie Boyer of Hagerman, preceded her in death in 1994. Ray P. Hamby (Dorthy) of Kimberly is Lena's surviving sibling. Her last sister, Lucy Hamby Savage, died at Kimberly a month ago.

A celebration of Lena's life will be at 1 p.m. Friday, Feb. 4, at the Seventh-day Adventist Church, 131 Grandview Drive in Twin Falls.

In lieu of flowers, the family suggests donations to the Hilltop Seventh-day Adventist School.

Lois Jacquelyn Stephenson Olmstead Larkin 'Jackie'

WHITEROCK, British Columbia — Jackie Olmstead Larkin, age 85, died Saturday, Jan. 29, 2011 in Whiterock, B.C., Canada.

Jackie was born in North Vancouver, B.C., Canada, March 18, 1925, to Jack and Irene Stephenson. Her father was a railroad man for the Canadian Pacific Railroad and Jackie grew up in the whistle stop town of North Bend, B.C. Upon the death of her father, Jackie's mother moved the family to Vancouver.

Jackie attended and graduated from the University of British Columbia with a degree in bacteriology. While she was working at a milk processing lab in Vancouver, Jackie met and soon married Ralph Olmstead, a dashing newly discharged U.S. Navy radioman who was going to college at UBC.

Jackie and Ralph spent the next two years in California, where Ralph received his degree in agriculture from the University of California at Davis. In 1950, the couple plus their first two daughters moved home to the family farm south of Twin Falls. Here Jackie and Ralph embarked on a remarkable life, expanding the farm and the family. The couple had an additional four children in rapid succession and the day the youngest child started first grade, Jackie, with her super abundance of energy, went back to work.

For the next 36 years, Jackie worked as a research chemist for the Amalgamated Sugar Company. Impossible as it sounds, Jackie always said there was never a day when she didn't love her job. Her positive attitude was not found just at work.

With six children and a husband active in farming, business, and local and state politics, Jackie managed to keep a smile on her face while cooking, sewing dance recital costumes, attending school sports events and eventually getting all her children through college.

Jackie always had a bright and sunny disposition. She dearly loved her husband, children and grandchildren and she had many close friends.

She loved living on the farm, tending her garden, picking asparagus on ditch banks and cooking for family events. She shared Ralph's love for Redfish Lake and the Sawtooth Mountains, where she spent innumerable joyous family vacations. In her later years, she bought an RV and traveled all around the western United States and Canada with her kids and grandkids.

Ralph died in 1995. Two years later, Jackie attended a college reunion in B.C., Canada, and ran into her old college boyfriend, Grant Larkin, whose wife, Patty, had recently passed away. On a sunny day in 1997, Grant and Jackie were married in an outdoor ceremony on the deck at the family cabin in Stanley. Then the couple began a happy, active life, living a month on the farm in Twin Falls then a month in Canada with many joint citizenship adventures.

Jackie is survived by her loving husband, Grant; brother, Ken Stephenson of Cold Lake, Alberta; daughters, Marilyn Olmstead of Twin Falls and Leanne (Joe) Borman of Boise; sons, Stephen (Lisa) Olmstead of Seattle, Wash., Brian (Stephanie) Olmstead of Twin Falls and Alan (Laurie) Olmstead of Twin Falls; along with 21 grandkids and three great-grandkids.

She was preceded in death by her mother and father; husband, Ralph Olmstead; and daughter, Maureen (Lon) Teeter of American Falls. Jackie's Canadian family includes Grant's daughter, Kathleen (Bill); his son, Bruce (Chris) Larkin; and two grandchildren.

Jackie was a truly wonderful person and will be greatly missed by all who knew her. Heaven will be a brighter, sunnier place with her in it. The family requests that donations be made in Jackie's name to a charity of your choice.

A memorial service will be announced at a later date.

Chojnacky, Ward sign with D-I programs

Jerome runner headed to Toledo; TFHS standout inks with Weber St.

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

Their names have been synonymous with high school girls cross country in the Magic Valley.

Mackenzie Chojnacky of Jerome and Amanda Ward from Twin Falls High School left other runners in their dust the last four seasons with Chojnacky winning the Class 4A state championship this fall and Ward never finishing lower than seventh at the state meet.

Now the two runners who have competed against one another since middle school are moving on to the NCAA Division I level in two very different regions of the country.

On Wednesday, Chojnacky signed a National Letter of Intent with Toledo (Ohio) and Ward inked with Weber State (Utah) to run women's cross country and track.

"I'm really excited for her. I loved running against her all these years, back to middle school. We gave each other great competition. I hope everything works out well for her," Ward said of Chojnacky.

Said Chojnacky: "(Amanda) told me she was going to Weber State and I'm just so excited for her. She is a great runner and it has been fun running against her all these years."

Chojnacky will join a Toledo program that competed in the NCAA nationals race in November, finishing 28th.

"I just felt like I was ready for more competition. The runners here are great, but I'm just ready to move on and push myself and see how much I can improve," Chojnacky said.

Jerome track coach Elmer Musgrave praised Chojnacky's decision.

"They're going to test her there. She won't go in and be the number one runner. She does want that challenge now and I think she'll succeed," Musgrave said. "I think that she has a lot of college potential as a runner. She was always a good runner, but as she developed emotionally and matured her junior year, she just showed more and more potential for the college level."

Ward's shown that promise for a long time as well, finishing third at the Class 5A state meet as a freshman. She has had her eyes set on running in college for a few years and could look to her sister for inspiration. Brittany Ward runs track for Weber State and finishes her final season this spring.

"I'll just miss running on the team with her, but since she has been there, I've been familiar with the program and coaches and always really liked it," Ward said. "I've always wanted to run D-I, so I'm really excited to move on and compete with some of the best runners out there. I know it will be a challenge for me and I'm ready for it."

ONE FOR THE RECORD BOOKS

Tigers thrash Bruins, score biggest win in rivalry series

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

JEROME — This might not be the most talented boys basketball team Jerome has produced, but on Wednesday night it delivered a performance for the ages.

The Tigers seized control from the opening tip, scoring at will and denying Twin Falls the same luxury as they cruised to a 62-33 win, sending eight seniors out with the largest margin of victory on record over their rivals from across the bridge.

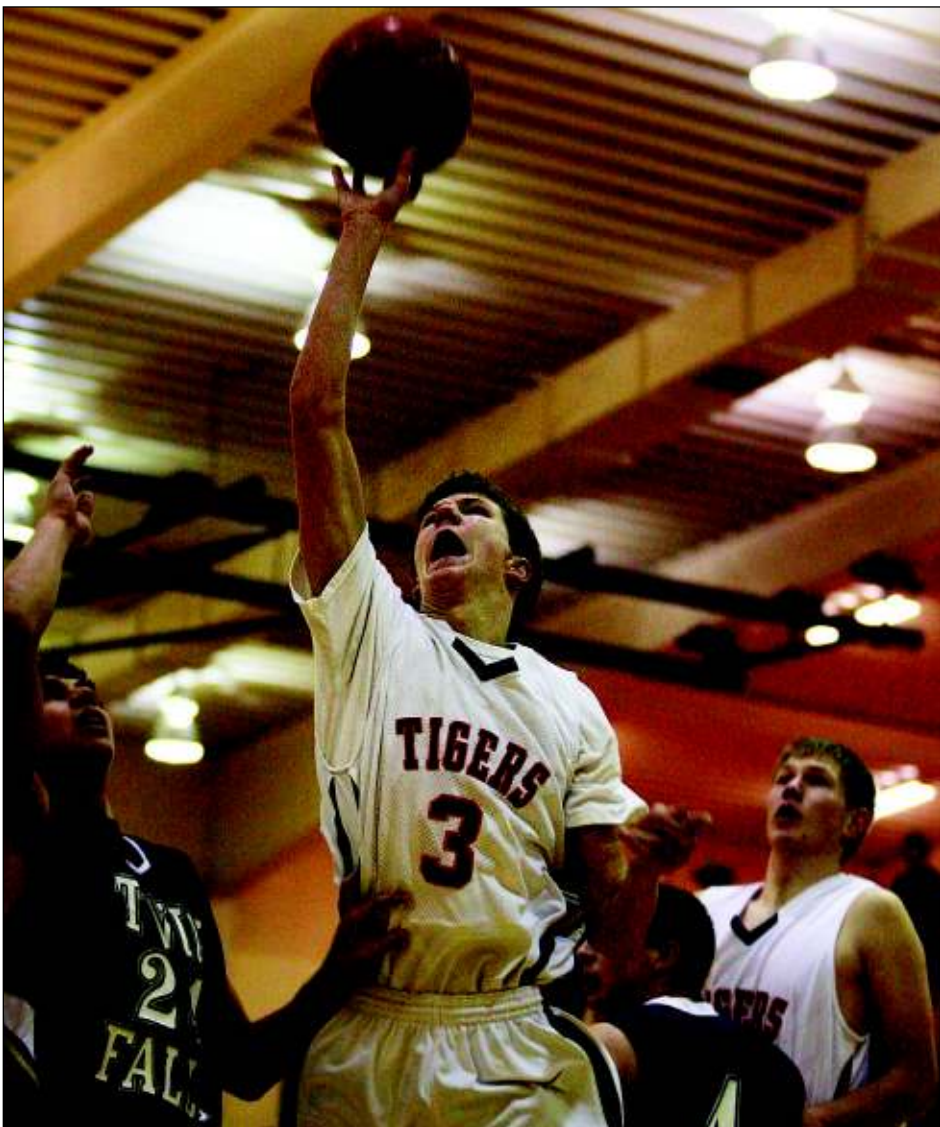

Only once in the past 59 years of the rivalry had Jerome beaten Twin Falls by more than 20 points — a 41-20 victory in 1964, according to unofficial Jerome records dating back to 1952.

After the game the Tigers soaked in the moment, realizing they had done something unlikely to be forgotten in the sports-mad town.

"This is a great feeling, one that I'll take with me forever," said senior point guard Spencer Parker, who scored 14 points and chipped in further with five assists, four rebounds and two shot blocks.

It wasn't quite the blitz his older brother Logan delivered two years ago, when he scored 27 points in the first half of a 73-62 win that snapped a 19-game losing streak to Twin Falls. But the well-rounded player might call big brother soon: Spencer now has two wins over the Bruins to Logan's one.

More impressive than the scoring outburst for Jerome (12-5, 6-2 Great Basin) was the defensive performance.

The Tigers held their guests to a lowly 18.6-percent effort from the floor, including just 2 of 15 from 3-point land.

Even better, they limited Twin Falls star guard Eric Harr to just 1 of 9 shooting, though he finished with 12 points courtesy of a 10-for-13 effort from the foul line.

"This was just disappointing in every aspect," said a dejected Matt Harr, head coach of the Bruins (13-4, 5-3). "We had no fight out there."

The win put Jerome temporarily ahead in the race for second place in the Great Basin Conference standings. Jerome holds a one-game lead over Twin Falls with two to play, though one of those is at conference leader Minico, which on Wednesday wrapped up a share of the title and the top seed for the upcoming district tournament. Twin Falls has already played Minico twice.

Jake Hollifield scored 13 points and pulled down a game-high seven rebounds, anchoring a defensive effort intent on establishing the height advantage that lacked on the defensive end in Twin Falls' win over Jerome earlier in the season at Baun Gymnasium.

The Tigers shot 51 percent from the floor and were 4 of 9 from beyond the arc. They also outrebounded Twin Falls 40-25, dished out 12

Kimberly overcomes offensive woes in win

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

It was not a game of pretty stats at the College of Southern Idaho Wednesday night.

Kimberly beat Filer 44-29 to advance to the Class 3A District IV Tournament championship game, but it didn't do so with beautiful basketball.

The Bulldogs didn't make a field goal in the first quarter, made only one 3-pointer all game, turned the ball over 19 times and their leading scorer, Nellie Makings, didn't record a field goal and didn't even score until she hit a pair of free throws with 1:30 remaining in the fourth quarter.

"We couldn't hit a shot to save our lives," said senior guard Averie Schroeder.

But a win is a win right? "We'll take it. At the end of the day, we'll look at it and see that we got the win," said Kimberly coach Rich Bishop. "When Nellie doesn't make a field goal and we still win the game, that's a real testament to our defense."

The Kimberly defense harassed Filer into 31 turnovers, held guard Jessica Tews to only five points and dashed any hope of a Wildcat comeback.

Down five at halftime, Filer battled back to within two points on three occasions in the second half, the final time at 29-27 with about four minutes remaining in the game.

The Wildcats wouldn't hit another field goal the rest of the way.

Kimberly went on a 12-0 run, mostly from the foul line, to put the game away.

"We didn't have that fight tonight. We didn't play well as a team," said Filer coach Kody Ketterling. "Our post players were

BSU gets its kind of guys on signing day

By Jason Chatraw
Times-News correspondent

BOISE — While many of the top-tier college football programs around the country counted up the number of stars assigned to their newly-signed recruits Wednesday, Boise State celebrated its new unheralded crop of "Boise State guys" on national signing day.

Despite Boise State's impressive record in head coach Chris Petersen's tenure, Petersen denied recruiting was getting easier for him — but he's still signing the types of players he can groom into stars.

"The number one question we keep getting asked is if it's getting easier for us with all the winning, but the answer is, 'No, it's not! It's getting tougher,'" Petersen said.

"But I think when we look down this list, we feel very strongly about these kids. For us, it's about getting good kids that are good football players who can fit into our culture."

One of the signees that garnered some considerable buzz when he first announced his commitment to Boise State was quarterback Jimmy Laughrea, a 6-foot-2, 197-pound quarterback out of Rocklin, Calif. He is expected to make a serious bid for the starting job in 2012 after Kellen Moore graduates.

Boise State coaches also spoke highly of Taylor Loffler, a 6-foot-4, 200-pound safety from Kelowna, British Columbia, and expect him to make an immediate impact. Loffler, who was courted by some other PAC-12 schools, has liked Boise State for a while after becoming a fan while living in Montana.

Boise State defensive coordinator Pete Kwiatkowski also added it didn't hurt that the big physical safety was insulated from the influence of his peers.

"When you live in Canada, your recruiting process is a lot different," Kwiatkowski said. "You don't have all your friends trying to get you to go their favorite team's school up there. Those kids usually select schools based on what they see when they get there, not based on the name on the jersey."

The lone surprise from the class was Los Angeles' Loyola High product Lee Hightower. Hightower, who could possibly play cornerback or safety, changed his mind at the last minute from attending Ivy League Penn for Boise State.

Boise State came late in the process, but it was a program that piqued Hightower's interest, even though he hadn't made an official visit until last weekend. But the Broncos' push was enough to sway him to sign.

"I think Boise State was always a place (Hightower) wanted to come play for," Boise State secondary coach Marcel Yates said.

Hamblin leaves T.F. Golf Club

Longtime golf pro takes same post at Blue Lakes Country Club

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

For the first time in 35 years, there won't be a Hamblin running Twin Falls Golf Club.

PGA professional Mike Hamblin is leaving the city-owned course, formerly known as the Twin Falls Municipal Golf Course, to take the same position across town at Blue Lakes Country Club.

Hamblin has been the golf pro at Twin Falls Golf Club since 1986 when he replaced his father Don Hamblin, who held the position for 10 years, beginning in 1976.

"It was just totally for personal, professional reasons," said Mike Hamblin, who officially started his job at BLCC on Tuesday. "Blue Lakes is a great opportunity."

Twin Falls City Council let Hamblin out of the remaining four years on his contract so he could make the move.

"We just made the decision that it was the best interest of the city and everyone involved," said council member Greg Lanting.

Lanting said the council will likely release a request for proposals at its Monday meeting to open the search to replace Hamblin. He said a new PGA professional or a management company could be brought in to run the course.

"We're looking at all the

on building a junior and ladies golf programs, something Hamblin has done well at the city course.

"The profile just fit me perfectly," said Hamblin, who replaces Matt Stottern at BLCC. "It's been great. I've been so well received. This is going to be fun."

With the temperature outside at 23 below, BYU (21-2, 7-1 Mountain West) was held to 40.7 percent shooting from the field and well below its team scoring average of 84.9 points a game entering the contest.

Fredette, who entered the game averaging 27.6 points, shot 7 for 21 from the field, including 2 of 11 from 3-point range.

His three-point play with 47 seconds left put BYU ahead 64-60. After the Cowboys closed to 64-62 on two free throws by Djibril Thiam with 29 seconds to go, Davies converted his own three-point play 12 seconds later for a 67-62 lead.

Declo survies Valley's upset bid

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

DECLO — Declo senior Sierra Zollinger summed it up best when she said, "The target on our back is huge."

Valley almost hit the bull's eye Wednesday night.

The Vikings had a sharp game plan and nearly executed it to perfection, but were unable to upset top-seeded Declo in the semifinals of the Class 2A District IV girls basketball tournament.

The Hornets (18-2) escaped with a 36-30 win, despite Valley dictating the play almost exclusively from start to finish.

"The girls stuck to the game plan, but it's hard to stay focused that long against Declo because they keep taking it to you. We broke down a couple times, and they definitely capitalized," said Valley coach Liz Thomas.

Declo's Daliss Pickup only scored two points, but her bucket came at the most critical time. With Declo leading by one with 1:36 remaining, Zollinger missed a pair of free throws. But Pickup was there for the offensive rebound and putback to make it a three-point game.

"We knew they were going to play hard, but I don't think we were expecting the aggressive defense that they played," said Zollinger, who had six rebounds and four assists. "Coach said in the locker room, 'It's better to win ugly than to lose pretty!'"

Brinlee Breshears scored 10 points and Sydney Webb had 10 points and 13 rebounds for Declo, which advances to Saturday's championship. The Hornets will face the winner of today's Valley-Gooding elimination game.

Valley (7-13) controlled the tempo with its defensive game plan, which took away Declo's inside game. The Vikings also rebounded well early, but eventually it evened out and Declo's size advantage gave the Hornets a 30-23 edge on the glass.

"Next time we come back at them, we're going to come back hard. But we're not overlooking Gooding tomorrow," said Valley's Cheyanna Nelson, who scored 12 points. "I have a lot of confidence in our team, we're really good when we play together, play smart and play hard. I'm excited to show the world just how good Valley is."

Valley scored the first nine points of the game, but Declo executed well in the second quarter to take a 19-15 half-time lead. Breshears opened the fourth quarter with back-to-back layups in transition as Declo began to pull away.

"We played just well enough to win. We survived, we'll learn from this," said Declo coach Dennie Smyer.

Gooding survived to play another day as the Senators eliminated Wendell 39-16 on Wednesday.

Tia Conrad scored 12 points and Angela Vitek had 10 to lead Gooding (12-8).

"We were more aggressive offensively and we looked to shoot the ball more," said Gooding coach Joey Zubizarreta.

Gooding will have a rematch with Valley, to whom the Senators lost in the tournament's first round. The teams will tangle at 7 p.m. today in Hazelton for the right to face Declo in the district championship on Saturday.

"We were pretty embarrassed by how we played Monday (in the first-round loss to Valley). We felt we are a lot better team than that," said Zubizarreta. "Not to take anything away from Valley, they're a tough team. We just got outthudded and outrebounded."

Despite seven points from Hannah Lancaster and five points from Heather Sturgeon, Wendell's season ended at 0-20.

Declo High School's Henrickson signs with Adams State

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

DECLO — Declo High School multi-sport star Erik Henrickson signed a National Letter of Intent on Wednesday to play soccer at Adams State, a NCAA Division II school in Alamosa, Colo.

"I'm really excited," Henrickson said. "They recently got a soccer program, so they're building up. I think we'll be good in a couple years when we get some foundation."

Henrickson, who plans to study business, said Adams State is a good fit, in part because its small-town setting is similar to the environment he grew up with in the Burley area. Henrickson's scholarship is part athletic, part academic.

Adams State competes in the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference

Competing in college athletics is nothing new for the Henricksens. Erik's mother Lori played basketball for Montana State-Billings, and his father Tim ran track and cross country for Northwest Missouri State.

"He's got a great opportunity, and Erik fits in everywhere he goes," said Tim Henrickson, who was also Erik's high school coach. "I was probably hard on Erik early on. You're harder on your own kid, and hopefully now part of that may be why he's able to play some more."

A team captain and three-time all-league selection in the High Desert Soccer Conference, Erik Henrickson finished his career at Declo with 30 goals and 14 assists.

Being a standout player on a team that struggled in the win column taught Henrickson lessons that will serve him at the next level.

"It kind of stinks losing all the time, but some of those things are out of your hands, so you just have to do your part," he said. "Just do what you can do, play through it, just have fun and play soccer and see what happens."

Adams State head soccer coach Tim Busen said Henrickson has a good chance to become a starter for the Grizzlies as a freshman.

"I think (Henrickson) will have a great chance of coming here and making an immediate impact," Busen said.

Idaho signs 22 in 2011 class

Staff and wire reports

MOSCOW — Idaho football coach Robb Akey did most of his recruiting in California this year, signing 12 of his 22 new players from that state on Wednesday.

The Vandals signed a trio of receivers in Camryn Harris, Marquan Major and Ian Silbernagel. They also signed four defensive backs, three linebackers, three defensive tackles and three offensive linemen.

"I'm very excited about this class," said Akey. "I like it a whole lot."

Akey also signed quarterback Dominique Blackman, who originally signed with Washington but attended Los Angeles Harbor College in 2009.

Akey signed four players from Washington and three from Texas. None of the recruits were from Idaho.

"We're filling depth that we've been working to do since we took over this program," Akey said. "We have some guys that have the opportunity to help us immediately whether it be in regards to raising the level of competition, coming in to win a starting job or provide depth — however it's going to work itself out.

"Nothing's better than competition to make everyone perform better."

Of the 22 inked to letters of intent Wednesday, three already are on campus, including defensive back A.J. Annelus, defensive tackle Ryan Edwards and Blackman, who will red-shirt in the fall because of transfer rules.

This fall, five more junior college players will join the Vandals. Included in that group are defensive tackles Aaron Lazaro and Dontae Scott, offensive linemen A.J. Jones and Brady Lisoski and linebacker Sua Tuala.

Bruins' Grubbs-Imhoff to play soccer at Northwest Nazarene University

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

Erin Grubbs-Imhoff has played big-time soccer before.

The past two years, she has helped anchor a Twin Falls team with two straight Class 4A state tournament appearances. Before that, Grubbs-Imhoff played at Oregon's South Eugene High School, a member of the tough Class 6A Southwest Conference.

Now the Twin Falls senior is moving on to NCAA Division II.

Grubbs-Imhoff signed a National Letter of Intent Wednesday to play women's soccer at Northwest Nazarene University in Nampa. A member of the Great Northwest Athletic Conference, NNU contends with some of the toughest programs in the country, including Seattle Pacific, which made it to the Sweet 16 in the D-II national tournament last fall.

"It's of course going to be more intense and fast-paced and tougher. They play in one of the best conferences in the area and I'm so excited to go up against better players and competition and improve my own game," said Grubbs-Imhoff.

In her two seasons at Twin Falls, Grubbs-Imhoff tallied 51 goals and 59 assists. Coupled with her two seasons in Oregon, her total high school numbers reached nearly 100 goals and more than 105 assists.

"We noticed that she had great vision. She's a great playmaker with a very good understanding of the game. She can control the game and will be a big asset for us offensively," said NNU coach Jaime Lindvall.

The Crusaders went 5-13 last season with a 3-11 mark in conference play and Lindvall said he expects Grubbs-Imhoff to step in right away and make an impact.

"We wouldn't have recruited Erin if we didn't think she could come in right away and contribute. We're very excited for her to come in and really make an impact for us," the coach said. "Typically the toughest thing is the physicality of play. It's an incredibly physical game and fast paced, but she is well aware of that and I'm confident she'll be ready."

No. 23 CSI women try to fix problems

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

The Golden Eagles are turning their focus inward this week.

Coming off a 76-49 loss at No. 11 North Idaho College last weekend, the College of Southern Idaho women's basketball team hopes to get back on track with road games at Eastern Utah on Friday and Colorado Northwestern on Saturday.

"We've got to fix us first and be more consistent throughout an entire game," said CSI head coach Randy Rogers, whose 17-6 team stayed at No. 23 in this week's NJCAA Division I poll, released Wednesday.

The Eagles had a 12-point lead in the first half at NIC before getting routed after intermission. The loss dropped CSI to fourth place in the Scenic West Athletic Conference standings with a 4-4 league mark.

Rogers said his team is struggling to stop dribble penetration and play effective transition defense.

"We have to, as a team, find a way to talk to each other out on the court and make the game simpler," he

ISU inks five in-state recruits in 2011 class

Van Vliet earns scholarship

POCATELLO — Idaho State announced Wednesday the signing of 18 players in its 2011 recruiting class. The newest Bengals include five from the Gem State.

The in-state signees are Colin Andrus, an offensive lineman from Idaho Falls; Levin Altringer, a quarterback from Rocky Mountain High School in Meridian; Tyler Graves, a defensive lineman from Fruitland; Kyle Jones, a lineman from Caldwell's Vallivue High and Jim Bagley, an offensive lineman from Rocky Mountain.

Andrus and linebacker Ben Heimuli of Utah's Cottonwood High School will serve LDS missions and enroll at ISU in 2014.

While first-year ISU coach Mike Kramer praised his recruits on-field abilities, he added, "This class

Kramer also announced that former Lighthouse

Christian star John van Vliet is one of three former walk-ons who will be given a full scholarship beginning this semester. Van Vliet started on the offensive line last season. Joining him in receiving a scholarship are defensive lineman Austin Schnizler and running back Daniel McSurdy. In the 2011 fall semester, defensive back Tanner Davis and linebacker Jack Francis will be rewarded full scholarships.

One solid signee for the Bengals is Washington transfer Anthony Boyles, a 6-2 receiver from Los Angeles who will graduate in May and attend ISU as a graduate student.

"Anthony has exceptional ability and talent," said Kramer. "He has languished in the depth at Washington and we relish the opportunity to get him on the field. We expect him to become an integral part of our receiving corps immediately."

BSU

"Ultimately, his parents left the decision up to him and I think he just felt at home here."

It was a nice surprise for Boise State after losing Dade City, Fla. safety Jamie Byrd, who reneged on his commitment to Boise State on Monday and instead signed with TCU.

However, Hightower was on the Broncos' radar before Byrd backed out.

"We wanted to have both of them," Yates said. "We had no idea (Byrd) was going to do that."

The last-minute change of heart by one of his commitments certainly irked Petersen, who made a not-so-veiled reference to it during his press conference.

"I'm in favor of an early signing day," said Petersen, who welcomed the end of this year's grueling recruiting process. "It's ridiculous how long you have to keep recruiting these guys. A lot of teams are getting aggressive late in the recruiting process and stealing guys."

That move by Gary Patterson and his staff at TCU is just another good reason to look forward to Boise State's home tilt this coming season with the Horned Frogs.

Despite the loss of Byrd, spirits weren't dampened.

"Our coaches did a good job of doing their homework, representing and presenting Boise State and getting our kind of guy," Petersen said.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"We that are true lovers run into strange capers."

— William Shakespeare

A deceptive declarer tries not only to persuade a defender to take a trick when he shouldn't, but also to duck at the wrong moment.

Sometimes the target is not specifically to gain a trick by this maneuver, but to gain a tempo or to keep an opponent off play. An example is today's deal, where against four hearts the defense starts with a spade to the ace, followed by the spade queen.

You should take the spade king and decide on a plan. You may think everyone knows how to take a trump finesse — but the right play is actually to lead a low heart from hand at trick three! Why? Well, if the heart finesse is onside, you are only looking at an over-trick. The key distribution is when West has the heart king, in which case the club ace is clearly wrong. You want to sneak a heart trick through, after which you will cash the heart ace and run diamonds. When West has 3-3-3-4 shape, he will only be able to ruff the fourth diamond, by which time one of your club losers will have vanished.

Is it easy for West to rise with the heart king on the first trump? I do not think so, and I have seen all 52 cards. And note that if East has the heart king, you may surrender an unnecessary heart trick but the contract is now safe. The defense can get only one club trick for sure.

ANSWER: Your partner has found an aggressive move toward game, perhaps with three hearts and five or six diamonds, presumably because finding diamond support has improved his hand. Since you barely had your raise to three diamonds and have only four hearts, retreat to four diamonds as quickly as decorum will permit.

Today is Thursday, Feb. 3, the 34th day of 2011. There are 331 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On Feb. 3, 1959, rock-and-roll stars Buddy Holly, Ritchie Valens and J.P. "The Big Bopper" Richardson died in a small plane crash near Clear Lake, Iowa.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1811, American newspaper editor Horace Greeley was born in Amherst, N.H.

In 1865, President Abraham Lincoln and Confederate Vice President Alexander H. Stephens held a shipboard peace conference off the Virginia coast; the talks deadlocked over the issue of Southern autonomy.

In 1913, the 16th Amendment to the Constitution, providing for a federal income tax, was ratified.

In 1924, the 28th president of the United States, Woodrow Wilson, died in Washington, D.C., at age 67.

In 1930, the chief justice of the United States, William Howard Taft, resigned for health reasons. (He died just over a month later.)

In 1943, during World War II, the U.S. transport ship Dorchester, which was carrying troops to Greenland, sank after being hit by a German torpedo; of the more than 900 men aboard, only some 230 survived.

In 1959, An American Airlines Lockheed Electra crashed into New York's East River, killing 65 of the 73 people on board.

In 1966, the Soviet probe Luna 9 became the first manmade object to make a soft landing on the moon.

In 1971, New York City police officer Frank Serpico, who had charged there was widespread corruption in the NYPD, was shot and seriously wounded during a drug bust in Brooklyn.

In 1991, the rate for a first-class postage stamp rose to 29 cents.

Ten years ago: Terry McAuliffe was elected chairman of the Democratic National Committee. The XFL, a football league founded by the World Wrestling Federation and jointly owned by NBC, held its first two games, in which the Las Vegas Outlaws beat the New York/New Jersey Hitmen 19-0, and the Orlando Rage beat the Chicago Enforcers 33-29. (However, the XFL folded after just one season.)

Five years ago: An Egyptian passenger ferry sank in the Red Sea during bad weather, killing more than 1,000 passengers. Twenty-three al-Qaida prisoners escaped from a Yemeni prison, including one convicted of the 2000 attack on the destroyer USS Cole. Actor Al Lewis ("The Munsters") died in New York (he was probably 82, although he'd claimed to have been born in 1910, which would have made him 95).

One year ago: A suicide bomber killed seven people in northwestern Pakistan, including three U.S. soldiers. Motivational speaker James Arthur Ray was arrested on manslaughter charges after three people died following a northern Arizona sweat lodge ceremony he'd led in Oct. 2009. Actress Frances Reid, 95, died in Los Angeles.

DEAR ABBY: What's your opinion of having a double wedding and a double shower for two girls within the same family? Would it be appropriate to split the monetary gift since it combines the events? Please do not identify me because I have already expressed my dismay to another family member and was told that I'm the only person who thinks it is inappropriate. I need to know if it is socially acceptable.

— ANONYMOUS IN THE MIDWEST

DEAR ANONYMOUS: My mother and her identical twin sister married in a double wedding. Because they did practically everything together, I wouldn't be surprised if they also had a double shower — although I never thought to ask her about it.

Please remember that wedding and shower gifts are just that — GIFTS. You are not compelled to spend more than you can afford, but there should be a separate one for each event that you attend.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I work with another woman who always comes to the office in professional attire. She is lovely. My only problem with her clothing is that it's so devoid of color that it makes her appear incredibly drab and depressed. She wears all beige, all black or all white, which does nothing to enhance her beauty.

She is a quiet person, so I understand her not wearing flashy reds or loud colors, but a little bit would bring out her inner vitality.

Would it be presumptuous of me to suggest she might add some color to her wardrobe, or should I just leave it alone? Should I buy her a scarf to brighten up all those muted ensembles?

— SUFFERING IN BEIGE-LAND

DEAR "SUFFERING": If I were you I would tread carefully in this area. Your lovely co-worker may wear monochromatic outfits because she does not wish to draw attention to her beauty and inner vitality. If you are close to her, you might buy her a scarf and say you picked it up because you thought it would look wonderful with her beige suit. However, if she doesn't wear it, don't take offense and don't push the issue. Not everyone has the same taste in fashion.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 46-year-old woman who has always believed in the adage "A smile is the only language that everyone can understand." Sometimes I will offer a quick, casual smile to people I encounter in a grocery store or other public place.

Last week, a woman frowned at me when I smiled at her. Another woman passed me with a puzzled look on her face. A young man's inflated ego allowed him to respond with a "No thanks!" after I offered him a smile. It's a shame that in today's world some people have become so ill-mannered that they cannot return a smile and accept it for what it is — a friendly gesture.

— HAVE A NICE DAY IN BARGERSVILLE, IND.

DEAR H.A.N.D.: My mother used to say that the most effective cosmetic a woman can wear is a smile. In stressful times we don't see enough of them. The individuals you encountered must have been having a bad day. Allow me to share a wonderful thought penned by a gentleman named Robert L. Bass: "Warmth is a communicable disease. If you haven't got it, no one will be able to catch it from you." Please don't stop smiling.

TO MY ASIAN FRIENDS: Today marks the first day of the Lunar New Year. It's the Year of the Rabbit — so let's hop to it! — Love, ABBY

IF FEBRUARY 3 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Industry pays off during the next six to eight weeks. If you keep your nose pressed to the grindstone, you will very likely be rewarded with an opportunity to move higher on the ladder of success or could receive praise and recognition for your efforts. Your judgment is better than usual during the first half of March, so that is a good time to make crucial decisions or commitments. Participation in groups, clubs or business organizations could brighten your life in May, but wait until early September to take a vacation or romantic getaway.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accuracy is like an angel who can protect you from future problems. Correct errors and mistakes before they cause difficulties or get noticed by others. Write down your thoughts and prioritize your goals.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): "I'd rather fight than switch" could be your motto. A new lunar month throws emphasis on constructive career moves. Set priorities where career and family are concerned to achieve harmonious balance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your mind is busier than a bumblebee. Postpone making major purchases or attending luncheons and other social outings. If you have given a false impression, now is the time to set the record straight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Remain oblivious to pleas for help if they are not well warranted. You can help the underdogs of the world by bolstering their confidence in their abilities and showing them how to stand on their own two feet.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Cut to the chase. Take action, but don't fritter away valuable time. The more organized you are faster you will get ahead when dealing with others. A generous gesture might not be appreciated.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cut costs without cutting corners. Being a super-efficient manager of your own resources will soon prove its merit. Clowning around might offend sedate individuals, so restrain extravagant impulses.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Like Hansel and Gretel, you should follow the bread-crumbs. The conclusions you develop could be used to your advantage later in the summer. Get to work early as energy levels may lag by midday.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Play Captain Courageous and dare to explore the possibilities. Take the first step toward patching up problems on the home front, even if it means swallowing your pride. Zero in on finances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Mistakes can come back to haunt you. This is a good time to be vigilant about paying your bills on time. Consider automating monthly payments or paying off a troublesome debt.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Shut out the noise and settle down to business. It is time to prove you are well organized and proficient when handling your own accounts. Balance the checkbook or clip some money saving coupons.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Reflect on the past to be wise for the future. The lessons you have learned in a classroom or boardroom can be put to good use. Personal hands-on experience can give you an edge over the competition.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Seeing a challenge when none exists is completely counterproductive. Make your daydreams count for something by prioritizing your key goals. Ignore sudden whims where your heart is concerned.
