Jerome police officer recovering from shotgun injuries

JEROME — A 29-year-old Jerome man suspected of exchanging gunfire with police is no stranger to the criminal justice system.

Christopher Mark Taylor is accused of shooting Jerome Police Officer Dennis Clark, 35, Monday afternoon during a automobile pursuit that began in Jerome and went southeast into the countryside.

Clark, an 11-year veteran of the force, is recovering from a non-life-threatening shotgun blast to the face at Saint Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

Taylor was booked into custody at the Twin Falls County Jail at 10:46 a.m. Tuesday after he was released from St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center. He was shot during the pursuit and injured further when he crashed his car, ending the chase. Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office spokeswoman Lori Stewart said the agency cannot release further details on Taylor's condition due to patient privacy laws.

Taylor is currently on probation for a pair of Twin Falls County criminal convictions. In July, he was convicted for possession of a controlled substance and theft by receiving stolen property, both felonies. Fifth District Judge G. Richard Bevan levied a seven-year prison stint for the controlled substance conviction and 10 years for the theft conviction. Both were suspended for a four-year probationary term.

P&Z narrowly shoots down zip line

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Jody Tatum has worked for the past two years to get a green light to construct a zip line in the Snake River Canyon near Twin Falls. On Tuesday evening, her efforts again stalled as the Twin Falls City Planning and Zoning Commission denied a permit for a zip line by a 3-3 vote.

Magic Valley Flight Simulation vows to appeal

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Questions of business plan, engineering and wetlands sank the most recent proposal for a canyon zip line at a city of Twin Falls Planning and Zoning meeting Tuesday night, though it came down to the wire: a 3-3 vote.

Two Planning and Zoning Commission members recused themselves and one changed his mind between deliberation and his nay vote. Even the recusals reflected the division over the use of land east of the Canyon Springs Golf Course in the Snake River Canyon. Commissioner Bonnie Lezamiz's husband, John, led the charge against the zip line; Commissioner Lane Jacobson said his business partner had dealings with the zip line proponents, leading him to step down.

Jody Tatum, spokeswoman for zip line proponent Magic Valley Flight Simulation LLC, promised to appeal the commission's ruling, and to bring her business plan and engineering documents with her — their absence raised major qualms for the commissioners. She estimated that she wouldn't be able to get her appeal before the Twin Falls City Council before its March 21 meeting.

"We've said before that we don't allow anyone in here without a blueprint," Commissioner Erick Mikesell said while arguing against the zip line with Commissioner Jason Derricott.

Mikesell said not having a wetlands impact assessment alone could sink the proposed zip line if anyone told the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. The zip line trail would go over the wetlands, though not be built on them, according to presentations at the meeting.

Mikesell said the entire project appeared to him to be being done

Public turns out to testify on education

Overwhelming majority of those testifying say they're against Luna's plan

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

BOISE — When it comes to reshaping public education in Idaho, this much is clear: If you propose it, they will come.

Teachers, parents, students and others came to testify Tuesday before the Senate Education Committee about State Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna's sweeping proposal to retool public schools amid the down economy.

Of the 115 who signed up to testify, only 17 — or almost 15 percent — favored the plan, which affects areas like the number of students per teacher, classroom technology and student laptops, teacher tenure and bargaining rights, and online course requirements for high school students.

Luna's plan would reduce teacher positions through attrition, and use that savings to help pay for technology, dual-credit courses, laptops and a teacher pay-for-performance system.

He says that the existing cash-strapped schools system is unsustainable and that without the plan, the only option would be more cuts that result in fewer classroom days and diminished resources for schools.

Judge rules Forest Service motorized-vehicle plan unlawful

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

The rejection of a plan for managing motorized-vehicle use in a central Idaho national forest could have ramifications in the Magic Valley.

On Friday, U.S. Magistrate Judge Ronald Bush ruled that the Salmon-Challis National Forest violated some of its own rules in its 2009 Travel Management Plan. The decision could affect a challenge of a similar plan for the Sawtooth National Forest's

"I hate to see the Forest Service have to go through the whole thing again."
— Stan Mai, Idaho State ATV Association board member

Minidoka Ranger District.

In his ruling, Bush said the travel plan violated the law by not considering the cumulative impact on recommended wilderness areas of roads shorter than a half-mile long, and by not showing how roads authorized in the plan minimized impacts overall.

Finally, Bush said the plan failed to address public comments about specific off-road damage submitted by the Idaho Conservation League and the Wilderness Society, the two plaintiffs in the case.

Both groups took their challenge to court in January 2010 after appealing unsuccessfully to the Forest Service after the plan was published, said Brad Brooks, Wilderness Society deputy regional director.

"This is the culmination of three or four years of input, starting with the original development of the plan," Brooks said. "We look forward to continuing to work with the Forest Service to come up with a plan that better balances motorized use and protection of wildlife resources."

Federal agencies have a mandate to manage land for multiple uses. The conflict arises in how best to manage when some uses have greater impacts than others.

Recognizing that motorized vehicles can damage habitat and resources, the Forest Service established the 2005 Travel Management Rule, requiring each national forest to develop a plan designating which types of vehicles could travel which routes and when.

The rule lists selection criteria that Bush found had been neglected in the Salmon-Challis plan.

Got a minute? If you’re over 50, probably not

I was waiting in line at a convenience store the other day when my glance fell upon a sign on the counter.

“No alcohol sales to anyone born on or after this date in 1990.”

Nineteen-ninety? You kidding me? I’ve got neckties older than that.

I asked the clerk if 1990 seemed very long ago to her.

“Don’t know,” she said. “I was born in 1991.”

So I looked it up on the Internet. Not only does time seem to speed up as you get older, you can earn a Ph.D. on the subject.

“Time compression,” it’s called, and it’s an academic subject touching everything from physics to gerontology.

“Because time compression alters the rate at which individuals discount the future, many problems of collective choices are likely to be affected by time compression,” writes University of Wyoming economist David Aadland. “Policies addressing intertemporal problems such as climate change, depletable resources, pollution and investment in infrastructure necessarily embody implicit discount rates.”

In little words, that means your advancing age explains your reluctance to climb that ladder and clean out the storm gutters one more time because sooner rather than later, it won’t be your problem anymore.

Shoot, Rosemary Clooney told us all about that six decades ago.

George Clooney’s aunt had a No. 1 hit record in 1954 with a song called “This Old House.” It’s about an elderly widower who excels at time discounting:

*“Ain’t got time to fix the shingles
Ain’t got time to fix the floor
Ain’t got time to oil the hinges*

DON’T ASK ME

Steve Crump

Not only does time seem to speed up as you get older, you can earn a Ph.D. on the subject.

*Nor to mend the windowpane
Ain’t a -gonna need this house no longer
I’m a -gettin’ ready to meet the saints.”*

My great-aunt was like that. She was a fan of jigsaw puzzles, but the older she got the smaller the puzzles she bought.

“If I died tomorrow, nobody would ever find that puzzle piece that fell into the heating duct,” she explained.

The thing was, Aunt Gillian lived until she was 98. Long story short, she ran out of stuff to do because there were no long-term projects in her life.

Gillian never lost track of time. Time lost track of her.

My aunt was a nurse by profession who had emigrated from Britain to Idaho after service in a military hospital during World War I. She was telling me one day how she had rigged a wire coat hanger to help an old soldier in a cast scratch his itching leg.

“That seems like yesterday,” she said, gazing wistfully out the window.

“It was yesterday, Gillian,” I replied.

“Remember? You volunteered at the VA hospital!”

In T.F., some see pros and cons of Luna plan

By Kimberly Williams-Brckett
Times-News correspondent

Parents and teachers gathered at the Twin Falls High School Roper Auditorium on Monday evening to discuss their concerns about State Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna’s proposed education overhaul.

Luna has proposed increasing the amount of technology in the classroom and paying teachers in part on merit, paid for by reducing teaching positions through attrition and other changes.

The plan, he has said, is in response to a public school funding system that is no longer sustainable. Neither he nor a representative was present Monday.

Those in attendance Monday debated various aspects of the plan, including a requirement for students to take six credits of online course work in ninth through 12th grade.

“Idaho tax dollars would be sent to for-profit online vendors out of state,” argued Sawtooth Elementary School teacher Nanette Allen.

Online courses are already offered, and sometimes required, at most colleges and universities. And computer-based learning is only expected to expand.

But parents and teachers at Monday’s meeting suggested the changes were coming too fast, and perhaps now is not the time to implement Luna’s plan.

A ninth-grader’s focus is to have fun and a laptop puts that power in their hands, for example, said Twin Falls High School drama teacher James Haycock.

“We should give laptops to 12th-graders, perhaps. As a community, we need to come up with a plan,” he said.

Some at the meeting did note positive effects the technology would have.

“Autistic kids would thrive online because they don’t have to read anyone’s emotions,” said Marty Pike, a Buhl Elementary School teacher. She also cited experience teaching other students in an online chatroom. “If you put a face with a computer, it’s a powerful combination.”

Allen also objected to the removal of a safety net for schools that lose students. Rather than maintaining most of a district’s funds for one year after the loss, schools would instead lay off teachers, offering severance packages equal to 10 percent of their contracts.

“This takes funding from the students who are left,” said Allen.

Luna’s plan would phase out tenure for new teachers, instead offering a two-year rolling contract after a three-year probationary period.

Tenure is criticized as making it extremely difficult, if not nearly impossible, to fire a poor-performing teacher. But Mike Wilkinson, a student assistant specialist at Robert Stuart Middle School, said teachers would not have the security necessary under the plan to settle into the community.

“The plan discourages good teachers from entering or staying in the profession,” he said.

Not everyone objected to revamping the system. Parent Gretchen Montgomery said that in an era of a globaleconomy, “I don’t really agree with staying the same. We need to compete. We need to change.”

The meeting in Twin Falls was one of a number of gatherings statewide by teachers and parents to share thoughts on the plan. In the Magic Valley, others on Monday were held in Hansen and Richfield.

Human remains found after fire

DESMET (AP) — Authorities in northern Idaho say they found human remains in the rubble of a historic tribal building that burned to the ground.

Coeur d’Alene tribal police discovered the remains in the 102-year-old Sister’s Building in DeSmet while investigating the cause of the blaze.

Tribal Police Chief Keith

Hutcheson said Tuesday he’s now working with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the state fire marshal to determine the victim’s identity.

The Sister’s Building was built in 1908 and used as a boarding school until 1974.

It’s listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

on the cheap, with Magic Valley Flight Simulation using other people’s roads and Canyon Springs co-owner Dave McCollum’s land and office space for amenities such as parking. Tatum had said in her presentation that she didn’t know what would happen with the zip line aerial trails because they hadn’t been constructed in such a way before.

Her proposal was for a two-hour aerial trail that began with guests at the golf course. They would then be taken up to above Centennial Waterfront Park while hearing a lecture on canyon history, and then would ride three zip lines over a section of the canyon basin. She said her trails would have no more impact than the zip line poles and landing areas.

“It’s a trial venture; no one has tried to do this before,” Tatum said. “If it is a negative impact, it can be very easily taken down. If it is a positive thing, then everyone benefits.”

It was a view many of the project’s detractors did not share. Barbara Beck, wife of College of Southern Idaho President Jerry Beck and like many of the detractors a resident of the Twin Falls neighborhood that overlooks the canyon, said she wasn’t against a zip line in the Magic Valley, just against it in the canyon.

“We can’t build a new canyon if we screw up this one,” she said.

McCollum appealed to private property rights in his speech and drew applause with his response to the detractors who complained about obscuring canyon views.

“I’ve seen development of a once-pristine canyon rim and I didn’t complain,” McCollum said. “I think they should be respectful of our rights just as we were respectful of their rights.”

Education

Many testifying raised concerns about larger class sizes and fewer rights for educators. Others, though, said the time is ripe for reforming education to meet the global and technology-driven demands of the 21st century.

Pamela Chiarella, a teacher from Mountain Home, said that in her district, classrooms are already packed and don’t have room for additional students.

“We have schools that just are simply inadequate to support any of these proposals,” she said.

Deby Infanger, chairwoman of North Valley Academy, the charter school in Gooding, favored the plan. She said she understands what it’s like to propose a change in education, adding that she experienced opposition when the charter school opened its doors.

“There was lots of anger and there was lots of angst in my community because a charter school was opening,” she said, adding that since then, the school’s now accepted as another educational choice.

“We’re not the scary monster on Main Street anymore,” Infanger said.

The NVA board supports the plan because the current funding system is unsustainable and more flexibility will be needed in the future, she said.

“We’re willing to embrace that because we know something has to change,” she said.

Audree Reyes, a student at Vallivue High School in Caldwell who testified as part of a class assignment, asked lawmakers to visualize crammed classrooms with students checking their Facebook accounts on laptops instead of paying attention.

When asked by the committee if she used a computer to prepare her presentation, the audience roared with laughter when she said: “Yes, but in a computer lab, not on my own laptop.”

Testimony continues today and Thursday.

Shooting

On Monday, an Idaho Department of Corrections probation officer issued an agent’s warrant, claiming that Monday’s events violate terms of Taylor’s probation.

Taylor was also the subject of an order of commitment issued on Feb. 3 by another probation officer. The order alleged that Taylor tested positive for methamphetamine twice in January, and called for him to serve 30 days in jail.

In addition to these convictions, Taylor has three dozen traffic and other misdemeanor convictions from both Twin Falls and Jerome counties. Two of those include convictions for eluding officers.

Taylor was also charged with grand theft, aiding and abetting a robbery and aiding and abetting an aggravated battery in Twin Falls County in 2009. Those charges were dropped by the prosecutor’s office, which cited a lack of physical evidence and that some witnesses were accused of or pleaded guilty to perjury charges. Taylor and other suspects were accused of robbing a Buhl man and stabbing him with a screwdriver at the Grand-Vu Drive-In Theater in Twin Falls.

Details emerge on pursuit

According to Jerome Police Chief Dan Hall, Clark attempted a traffic stop on Taylor shortly after 5 p.m. Monday near the eastern border of the Jerome city limit. The situation quickly turned into a chase as Taylor, driving a compact car, headed southeast into the county. Two more city units and a Jerome County sheriff’s deputy joined in, chasing Taylor for approximately five miles.

“During the pursuit, (Clark) was fired upon,” said Hall, “and there was gunfire exchanged.”

A joint press release issued by the city and county noted that gunfire was exchanged between Taylor and two of the four units in pursuit.

The chase ended on 200 East Road, just south of the intersection with 300 South Road, where Taylor lost control of his vehicle and rolled through a wire fence and into farmland. According to Idaho State Police Region 4 Capt. Rob Storm, his office has impounded Taylor’s vehicle for the investigation.

Both Taylor and Clark suffered gunshot wounds, all non-life-threatening.

Investigators with the Magic Valley Critical Incident Task Force worked into the night Monday, gathering evidence such as empty shotgun shells and pistol casings along the county roads and at the scene of the crash. The Cassia County Sheriff’s Office is heading up the investigation. Chief Deputy George Warrell said investigators were back at the scene Tuesday afternoon and had no additional information to release.

Pending charges against Taylor will be filed by Jerome County Prosecutor John Horgan, while Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs will lead a review of the officer-involved shooting.

Twin Falls chosen to be site of 2012 Idaho GOP convention

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Twin Falls has been tabbed to host the 2012 Idaho Republican Party state convention.

The party's state central committee unanimously picked the city as the location in a meeting this weekend, said Jonathan Parker, executive director of the Idaho Republican Party. The convention, which happens once every two years and typically in June, easily attracts more than 1,000 people when factoring in delegates, their family members, and others.

Twin Falls' selection was made after a presentation in support of the location by Twin Falls resident Rusty Satterwhite.

Parker said Satterwhite sold the central committee with an "outstanding PowerPoint presentation" about the community's facilities and hotel capabilities, as well as the effectiveness of Twin Falls County Republicans.

"It's awesome," said Gretchen Clelland, Twin Falls County Republican chairwoman. "We're excited to have it in Twin Falls."

Convention space has been reserved at the College of Southern Idaho, she said, adding that the convention will be a big economic booster.

"It's a great boon for Twin Falls," Clelland said.

Satterwhite couldn't be reached Tuesday.

The 2010 convention was held in Idaho Falls.

Smith proposes urban renewal updates

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

BOISE — Rep. Leon Smith introduced legislation Tuesday focused on curing criticisms urban renewal districts attract for sitting on ample reserve dollars that would otherwise go to other taxing bodies.

The Twin Falls Republican's bill, introduced in the House Revenue and Taxation Committee, would add oversight to the districts, which use taxes gathered from increased property assessments as development incentives. Though lauded as a valuable economic development tool, urban renewal districts also draw concerns about their lack of checks and balances when dealing with taxpayer dollars.

agency — usually a city — to annually review a district's accumulated funds not designated for a specific purpose. The city council would have final say in whether the money remains tabbed for urban renewal or returns to other taxing districts within urban renewal boundaries.

"We're talking millions of dollars in some cases," Smith said.

Smith's bill would require a public hearing before such a decision is made, giving citizens an opportunity to offer input to urban renewal decision-makers.

"These are elected officials that are answerable to the public," he said.

House Assistant Majority Leader Scott Bedke, R-Oakley, said Smith's bill deals with all the complaints he's heard about urban renewal.

Bedke said Burley's urban renewal efforts are a good example of how it should work, adding that economic development leaders there do a good job of weighing what's acceptable for the community.

There are other checks in the bill, too. Smith's legislation would limit an urban renewal plan to 20 years, down from 24.

Its passage would also prevent urban renewal areas from expanding their set physical boundaries or lifespans.

It would also limit board members to serving four two-year terms, down from the unlimited five-year terms they can serve now.

Agricultural land couldn't be included in an urban renewal area without the consent of the property's owner.

Smith's bill is one of eight introduced this session to reform urban renewal.

Three-year-old dies in Twin Falls farm accident

Times-News

A toddler was killed Sunday evening in a farming accident less than one mile east of the Twin Falls airport.

According to Twin Falls

County Sheriff's Office spokeswoman Lori Stewart, Thomas Coleman, 3, was riding on a tractor with his father at about 6:30 p.m. when the tractor lurched forward, causing the child to fall under the wheels.

Coleman was transported to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center and pronounced dead.

and effort that go into developing a federal management plan, but said it was his responsibility to insist that the Forest Service correct its errors.

Because those corrections will take time, the parties in the lawsuit must now hash out interim travel rules because there is no lawful plan to fall back on. If they can't reach an agreement, the judge will decide what to do. A follow-up conference is scheduled for March 17.

Paul Turcke, an attorney with the BlueRibbon Coalition, an off-road advocacy group, said the interim negotiations can sometimes be as long and difficult as the trial.

"The (Forest Service) doesn't tend to give up the farm, so to speak," Turcke said. "They put in a lot of work to come up with the plan, and even with additional research, they may reach the same decision."

The ruling could have implications for a similar challenge of the Minidoka Ranger District travel plan in 2008. That case has been held up while one aspect — whether private parties can intervene on behalf of federal agencies in environmental cases — was challenged in the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Idaho State ATV Association was one of four off-road groups that filed a brief in support of the Salmon-Challis plan. Twin Falls board member Stan Mai hadn't heard the ruling

Monday and couldn't comment on specifics. But he said a number of trails had already been lost as part of the plan, so his group would not see any further closures as positive.

"I hate to see the Forest Service have to go through the whole thing again," Mai said.

House slipup lets three provisions of Patriot Act expire

By Jim Abrams
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House on Tuesday failed to extend the life of three surveillance tools that are key to the nation’s post-Sept. 11 anti-terror law, a slipup for the new Republican leadership that miscalculated the level of opposition.

The House voted 277-148 to keep the three provisions of the USA Patriot Act on the books until Dec. 8. But Republicans brought up the bill under a special expedited procedure requiring a two-thirds majority, and the vote was seven short of reaching that level.

The Republicans, who took over the House last month, lost 26 of their own members, adding to the 122 Democrats who voted against it. Supporters say the three measures are vital to preventing another terrorist attack, but critics say they infringe on civil liberties.

They appealed to the antipathy that newer and more conservative Republicans hold for big government invasions of individual privacy.

Earlier on Tuesday, Republicans also pulled a bill from the floor because of dissatisfaction about extending trade benefits for three South American countries while continuing a program that helps retrain Americans who lose their jobs to foreign competition.

The Patriot Act bill would have renewed the authority for court-approved roving wiretaps that permit surveillance on multiple phones. Also addressed was Section 215, the so-called library records provision that gives the FBI court-approved access to “any tangible thing” relevant to a terrorism investigation.

The third deals with the “lone wolf” provision of a 2004 anti-terror law that permits secret intelligence surveillance of non-U.S. people not known to be affiliated with a specific terrorist organization.

Rep. James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., the former Judiciary Committee chairman who authored the 2001 Patriot Act, urged his colleagues to support the extensions, saying they were needed as a stopgap until permanent statutes could be agreed upon.

“The terrorist threat has not subsided and will not expire, and neither should our national security laws,” he said.

Rumsfeld reveals plan for prewar attack on suspected weapons site

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former Pentagon chief Donald H. Rumsfeld reveals in his new book that he urged a U.S. military strike on a suspected chemical weapons site in northern Iraq in 2003, and that he wanted the attack timed to coincide with Colin Powell’s address to the U.N. Security Council making the case for war.

In his memoir, “Known and Unknown,” Rumsfeld wrote that the Joint Chiefs supported a strike, based on what Rumsfeld called extensive but not conclusive CIA evidence that the site housed an underground facility for testing chemical weapons. He called it a “fairly sizeable terrorist operation.”

The prewar attack never happened, although the site was struck in the opening days of the war that President George W. Bush launched in March 2003, about six weeks after Powell’s U.N. speech. The U.S. never found substantial evidence of an active Iraqi program to produce weapons of mass destruction, but Rumsfeld believed that the site near the Iranian border presented the best chance to prove they existed before the war began.

Former Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld is interviewed at his office in Washington on Jan. 20. Rumsfeld and a team of six aides worked four years on his memoirs; a 700-page narrative.

“For whatever reason, the administration never made public these facts about an active WMD production facility run by terrorists in Iraq,” Rumsfeld wrote.

He said he made his recommendation to Bush at a Feb. 3, 2003, National Security Council meeting in which Powell sketched out the presentation he was to make at the U.N. two days later.

Rumsfeld quotes himself as telling the meeting, “We should hit Khurm al during the speech, given that Colin will talk about it.” Khurm al is the name of a village near the site. Powell objected.

In his U.N. presentation, Powell described it as “Terrorist Poison and Rumsfeld wrote that he wanted to attack the site before Powell finished his presentation in New York, because otherwise the site would be abandoned.

Had Powell not stood in the way, in Rumsfeld’s view, the Bush administration might have gained conclusive evidence that Iraq had an active WMD site. “As expected, shortly after Powell’s speech was delivered, many of the terrorists fled Khurm al,” he wrote.

An AP reporter who visited the site a few days after Powell’s speech found a half-built cinderblock compound filled with heavily armed Kurdish men, video equipment and children — but no obvious sign of chemical weapons manufacturing.

Much of the site was destroyed by American cruise missile strikes at the outset of the invasion.

Obama to call for $53B for high-speed rail

By Steven Thomma
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON — In a preview of the epic budget fight that will kick off in earnest next week, the Obama administration on Monday proposed a $53 billion plan for high-speed rail, and Republicans who control the purse strings said not so fast.

The quick clash over a relatively small item in a budget expected to total about $3.8 trillion that President Barack Obama will propose next Monday underscored how tough it could be for Obama and the Congress to agree on federal spending.

Obama wants to increase spending on such things as education, energy, research and the nation’s infrastructure. He calls them “investments” to help U.S. businesses speed goods and information, create jobs and compete against foreign rivals.

But Republicans who control the House of Representatives say cutting such spending — not increasing it — is key to improving the economy. And Republicans who won governor’s offices Wisconsin and Ohio in November have rejected federal money already allocated for rail projects in their states.

The first clash came over the White House proposal to spend $8 billion in the coming fiscal year on high-speed trains, with $45 billion more coming over the following five years.

“If we do not, you tell me how America is going to be able to lead the world in the 21st century,” said Vice President Joe Biden.

Biden, a regular train rider when he was a senator commuting to and from his home in Delaware to Washington, traveled by train Tuesday to Philadelphia’s 30th Street Station to pitch the benefits of the proposal to build high-speed rail lines or improve speed on existing lines.

He said the plan would focus on three types of rail projects: a national high-speed rail network with speeds between 125 mph and 250 mph; regional lines where speed would be increased to 90-125 mph; and lines with speeds as much as 90 mph that would link to higher-speed national or regional lines.

SOUTH CAROLINA Young mother accused of leaving newborn in toilet

GREENVILLE — A young, married mother faces charges Tuesday of giving birth in a toilet at a South Carolina sports and concert arena and leaving the choking newborn boy to die.

Jessica Blackham was arrested after she came to the Greenville police station accompanied by family members. Police Chief Terri Wilfong said the 25-year-old from Easley has a 4-year-old child and no criminal record.

“The family is very cooperative with us,” Wilfong said. “Their concern is the safety of the child.”

Blackham is charged with two counts of felony child abuse and one count of unlawful neglect toward a child. If convicted on all charges, she could face up to 50 years in prison.

Authorities said she was being held without bond after being arraigned at the local jail and would be appointed an attorney. Her first court appearance was not immediately set.

PENNSYLVANIA Woman dies after getting buttocks injection at hotel

PHILADELPHIA — Police say they’re investigating the death of a 20-year-old woman who had a silicone injection into her buttocks at a hotel near the Philadelphia airport.

Detectives say the woman and three companions had traveled from London and were staying at the Hampton Inn in southwest

Philadelphia. They say two had traveled in November to have buttocks enlargements and on Monday one received a further injection while the other had a hip augmentation.

Detective Joseph Murray says the woman who had the buttocks injection later was taken to a hospital and died early Tuesday.

The results of an autopsy by the Delaware County medical examiner’s office haven’t been released.

Police are seeking two people involved in the cosmetic procedures. They say they believe the procedures were arranged over the Internet.

WASHINGTON Breast-cancer study: Lymph node removal unnecessary

Many women with early breast cancer do not appear to need removal of their lymph nodes, as is often recommended, according to a new federally funded study released Tuesday.

The study, involving nearly 900 women who were treated at 115 sites across the country, found that those who did have their lymph nodes removed were no more likely to survive five years after the surgery than those who did not, the researchers reported in a paper published in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

About 200,000 women are diagnosed with breast cancer each year in the United States, with the cancer reaching the lymph nodes in about one-third of cases.

When women are diagnosed with breast cancer that has spread to any lymph nodes, doctors usually recommend that nodes in the armpit be removed surgically, along with the tumor in the breast, to reduce the risk of a recurrence. But such removal is painful, makes recovery more difficult and leaves women susceptible to complications, including infections and a chronic, sometimes disabling swelling in their arms known as lymphedema.

CALIFORNIA Lindsay Lohan to be charged with grand theft

LOS ANGELES — Prosecutors said Tuesday they plan to charge Lindsay Lohan with felony grand theft of a $2,500 necklace reported stolen from a jewelry store last month — the most serious count the actress has faced in more than three years of trouble with the law.

Lohan

District Attorney’s spokeswoman Jane Robison said the charge will be filed today. Lohan, 24, is due in court for an arraignment this afternoon.

Los Angeles police said Feb. 2 that Lohan was under investigation for taking a necklace from a Venice store later identified as Kamofie and Co. Detectives obtained a search warrant to try to retrieve the item from Lohan’s home, but it was turned in to a police station before any search was made.

Police said they had no update on the case Tuesday and did not say whether the actress had made arrangements to turn herself in at court or at a police station.

Legislator's plan would slash kindergarten budget

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press

BOISE — More kids would stay at home instead of going to kindergarten before they start the first grade, under a bill introduced Tuesday in the Idaho Legislature. The plan would largely gut the roughly $50 million annual budget for public kindergarten and leave about $17 million for school districts to focus on at-risk students who have not been prepared for the first grade by their parents. Students who already have the skills to succeed in first grade could spend as little as three weeks in kindergarten, while districts could offer the full 36 weeks to students who do not yet have those skills. A Republican state lawmaker introduced the plan, saying the state needs to decide what it's trying to do with programs geared to Idaho's youngest students "Are we providing daycare or are we providing an academic environment?" said Rep. Steve Thayne. "If we're paying for daycare, I think we could find some less expensive teachers." While Thayne contends his plan would require parents to become more involved with their children's education, critics say it would force some parents to pay for private kindergarten or, in the case of families where both parents work, force on them to quit their job. "I interpret this as nothing more than a tax on parents," said Rep. Brian Cronin, a Boise Democrat who noted that his own children would not be in kindergarten if the plan is adopted. "We're really just passing costs onto families at a time when families are really struggling." Funding for kindergarten programs is under threat in several states as lawmakers try to make up for losses in revenue and plug budget holes. New Jersey, Illinois, Virginia and Pennsylvania are among states that have considered cuts. In Idaho, the plan to ax funding for kindergarten is among cost-cutting measures lawmakers are floating amid Idaho's worsening budget outlook. The governor projected a $35 million shortfall for next year in early January, but that swelled to an estimated $185 million revenue shortfall. The budget deficit has been trimmed to an estimated $137 million.

Thayne argues the state should cut two-thirds of the public kindergarten budget, saving more than $30 million that could be funneled back into the state general fund and spent filling in public education budget gaps in grades one through 12. School districts now receiving money for 36 weeks of kindergarten would only get enough for about 12 weeks, under the plan. They would be given more flexibility in how they spend the remaining and focus most on at-risk students, not those who have already been prepared for the first grade by their parents.

Lawmakers order audit of Medicaid payment processor

BOISE (AP) — Idaho lawmakers have called for an audit of the private company contracted by the state to process Medicaid claims and reimburse care providers. The Joint Legislative Oversight Committee voted unanimously Monday to conduct a performance evaluation of Molina Medicaid Solutions, a private health care company that began processing Idaho's Medicaid claims and payments last year. The audit will be conducted by the state Office of Performance Evaluations and stems from complaints from care providers over unpaid claims or partial payments to health care providers statewide, said Rep. Janice McGeachin, R-Idaho Falls. "The (payment) problems started sometime in June, and unfortunately, this is still going on," McGeachin told the Post Register. McGeachin, chair of the House Health and Welfare committee, highlighted cases in which providers received partial or incorrect payments, or sometimes no payment at all. Molina Senior Vice President Ann Koontz said the company is making progress, and recently reduced pending claims from 155,000 in July to 33,000 last week. Molina also increased the number of employees handling Idaho claims last month from 140 to 260 to combat payment issues, she said. "I do believe we've made significant progress since that point," Koontz said. "There are still some issues we continue to work on but that list is getting smaller." But some providers are still running into problems with the California-based company. Pearl Health Clinic Business Manager Sue Filutze said Molina has yet to reimburse the Idaho Falls clinic an estimated $100,000 in Medicaid-eligible services provided by two doctors. "I think an audit would be very good," Filutze said. McGeachin hopes the audit can be completed before the Legislature adjourns in April.

Hundreds of animals rescued from Montana sanctuary

NIARADA, Mont. (AP) — All the animals have been removed from a defunct sanctuary in northwestern Montana, but that doesn't mean they all have new homes. Karyn Moltzen, founder of AniMeals in Missoula, told the Missoulian that the last of the more than 800 animals living at the Montana Large Animal Sanctuary in Niarada were trucked off the 400-acre ranch on Jan. 31, ending a 42-day rescue effort. The sanctuary housed 590 llamas along with camels, horses, burrows, cattle, pot-bellied pigs and even parrots and emus. "A lot of the animals, and especially the llamas, went to rescue groups because they have to get healthy before they can be adopted out," Moltzen said. Animals were trucked as far away as New York, Texas and California. The healthiest were moved earlier and went farther away, while the sickest were transported last and the shortest distances, Moltzen said. Sanctuary managers Brian Warrington and Kathryn Warrington sought help from the Global Federation of Animal Sanctuaries in December, saying they were out of money and nearly out of food for the animals. Patty Finch, executive director of the sanctuary federation in Washington said the Niarada rescue is believed to be the largest ever undertaken at a sanctuary. Rescue groups were upset with the condition of the animals, saying llamas were starving while the burrows' hooves hadn't been trimmed in so long they resembled miniature skis. Moltzen said rescuers lost four to five animals a day during the first two weeks, with some dying and some being put down for humane reasons. "We had animals dying every day, and babies being born every other day for two weeks," she said. The Global Federation of Animal Sanctuaries helped coordinate the rescue effort, even though the Niarada sanctuary had never gone through its accreditation process. "If they had, we would have seen things that would have jumped out at us, even from a distance," Finch said. She cited such red flags as the small number of people working at the sanctuary compared with the number of animals in its care, the lack of barns, and that it was a small private foundation relying on one donor.

IDAHO ISP trooper shoots woman in standoff with fugitive

COEUR D'ALENE — The woman shot and killed by an Idaho State Police trooper after an altercation near Hayden was identified Tuesday as Christie A. Little, 40, of Butte, Mont. The Kootenai County Sheriff's Office said she was killed and a fugitive from Montana was slightly injured when the trooper opened fire on a vehicle that collided with the patrol car Monday evening near Hayden. The man who was driving the vehicle was identified as 24-year-old Mark M. Maykopet of Butte. He was treated and released from the hospital and booked into the Kootenai County Jail on charges of eluding a peace officer, aggravated assault on a peace officer and being a fugitive. The trooper has been placed on paid administrative leave. Maykopet, alias Mark Marion Macy, walked away from a pre-release center in Helena, Mont., in October, according to a press release from the center. He was there finishing a three-year sentence for a 2007 felony theft conviction in Flathead County and 10-year suspended sentences for felony convictions in 2008 for drugs and issuing bad checks, according to the Montana Department of Corrections.

Federal agents arrest man wanted in Mass.

BOISE — Federal agents in Idaho say they have arrested a man who fled Massachusetts in 1994 and wanted for his role in plots to kill organized crime rivals. FBI agents say they apprehended Enrico M. Ponzo in the small, southwestern Idaho town of Marsing Monday night. Ponzo, who once lived in Boston, was charged in 1997 with 14 others in a 40-count federal indictment with racketeering, attempted murder and conspiracy to murder. Federal prosecutors accuse Ponzo specifically with the attempted murder in 1989 of Frank Salemme. Known as "Cadillac Frank," Salemme is the former head of the New England mob. Ponzo is also charged with a series of other crimes in efforts to kill those loyal to Salemme. At the time of his arrest, Ponzo was living under the name of Jeffrey John Shaw.

COLORADO Pregnant woman mistakenly gets abortion drug

FORT LUPTON — A Colorado woman who is six weeks pregnant says a pharmacist at a grocery store mistakenly gave her an abortion drug instead of an antibiotic and now she fears the error will cause her to miscarry. Mareena Silva told Denver's KMGH-TV that the pharmacist at the Safeway in Fort Lupton gave her methotrexate last week. The drug, intended for another woman, is used in chemotherapy and to terminate early-stage pregnancies. Silva says she took a pill and checked the bottle after becoming sick. She was rushed to the hospital. Doctors say Silva could miscarry or have a baby with birth defects. Safeway issued a statement that said policies and procedures meant to prevent medication errors weren't followed, and that the company is redoubling efforts to ensure they are followed.

WASHINGTON States seek feds' help with execution drug

The Justice Department says it's reviewing a request by 13 states looking for the government's help obtaining supplies of a scarce execution drug. States are scrambling to find enough sodium thiopental after its sole U.S. manufacturer ceased production and some overseas supplies dried up. The states asked U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder Jan. 25 for help identifying sources for the drug or making federal supplies available to states. The states that signed the letter are: Alabama, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, Oregon, Tennessee, Utah, Washington and Wyoming. — The Associated Press

District superintendents must also be highly qualified

One piece of Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna’s sweeping education reform package would allow school districts to hire superintendents without traditional academic backgrounds or experience.

Bad idea, especially in Idaho’s smaller districts. Luna unveiled the education reforms at the beginning of the 2011 Idaho Legislature in January, calling for the state to remove the requirement that school district superintendents have certification in addition to a bachelor’s degree. As it stands, superintendents must be certified by the state.

Our view:

Most Idaho school districts are the equivalent of million-dollar companies. The folks who run them, like the teachers they employ, should be highly qualified.

Applicants would still be required to have a bachelor’s degree and be at least 25 years old.

“This will give local school boards the flexibility to hire the individual they deem the right person for the job, whether it’s a former teacher, a CEO of a company, an individual with an MBA or another qualified candidate,” Luna said.

Trouble is, we’re not talking about an organization making widgets here: A district superintendent — quite often the highest-paid person who lives in his or her community — must master a complex skill set before running a school district. We think it would be great if superintendents had an MBA; in this day of reduced state funding, emergency and supplemental levees, a broad understanding of finance is critical. Such a degree should be in addition to a background in education, however, not in lieu of it.

Our fear is that, either to save money or for some other expeditious reason, some districts would hire folks who aren’t up to the job. That could be an expensive mistake, with disastrous results on the classroom level.

There’s a reason why district superintendents are well paid. They have to be specialists in education, finance, labor-management relations and public administration.

Frankly, a 25-year-old with only a bachelor’s degree in an interesting or innovative subject area may sound progressive but would increase the likelihood of hiring someone that isn’t well-enough equipped to handle the job.

Droughts, floods and the world’s food crisis

We’re in the midst of a global food crisis — the second in three years. World food prices hit a record in January, driven by huge increases in the prices of wheat, corn, sugar and oils. These soaring prices have had only a modest effect on U.S. inflation, which is still low by historical standards, but they’re having a brutal impact on the world’s poor, who spend much if not most of their income on basic foodstuffs.

The consequences of this food crisis go far beyond economics. After all, the big question about uprisings against corrupt and oppressive regimes in the Middle East isn’t so much why they’re happening as why they’re happening now. And there’s little question that sky-high food prices have been an important trigger for popular rage.

So what’s behind the price spike? American right-wingers (and the Chinese) blame easy-money policies at the Federal Reserve, with at least one commentator declaring that there is “blood on Bernanke’s hands.” Meanwhile, President Nicolas Sarkozy of France blames speculators, accusing them of “extortion and pillaging.”

But the evidence tells a different, much more ominous story. While several factors have contributed to soaring food prices, what really stands out is the extent to which severe weather events have disrupted agricultural production. And these severe weather events are exactly the kind of thing we’d expect to see as rising concentrations of greenhouse gases change our climate — which means that the current food price surge may be just the beginning.

Now, to some extent soaring food prices are part of a general commodity boom: the prices of many raw materials, running the gamut from aluminum to zinc, have been rising rapidly since early 2009, mainly thanks to rapid industrial growth in emerging markets.

But the link between industrial growth and demand is a lot clearer for, say, copper than it is for food. Except in very poor countries, rising incomes don’t have much effect on how much people eat.

It’s true that growth in emerging nations like China leads to rising meat consumption, and hence rising demand for animal feed. It’s also true that agricultural raw materials, especially cotton, compete for land and other resources with food crops — as does the subsidized production of ethanol, which consumes a lot of corn. So both economic growth and bad energy policy have played some role in the food price surge.

Still, food prices lagged behind the prices of other commodities until last summer. Then the weather struck.

Consider the case of wheat, whose price has almost doubled since the summer. The immediate cause of the wheat price spike is obvious: world production is down

While several factors have contributed to soaring food prices, what really stands out is the extent to which severe weather events have disrupted agricultural production.

sharply. The bulk of that production decline, according to U.S. Department of Agriculture data, reflects a sharp plunge in the former Soviet Union. And we know what that’s about: a record heat wave and drought, which pushed Moscow temperatures above 100 degrees for the first time ever.

The Russian heat wave was only one of many recent extreme weather events, from dry weather in Brazil to biblical-proportion flooding in Australia, that have damaged world food production.

The question then becomes, what’s behind all this extreme weather?

To some extent we’re seeing the results of a natural phenomenon, La Nina — a periodic event in which water in the equatorial Pacific becomes cooler than normal. And La Nina events have historically been associated with global food crises, including the crisis of 2007-8.

But that’s not the whole story. Don’t let the snow fool you: globally, 2010 was tied with 2005 for warmest year on record, even though we were at a solar minimum and La Nina was a cooling factor in the second half of the year. Temperature records were set not just in Russia but in no fewer than 19 countries, covering a fifth of the world’s land area. And both droughts and floods are natural consequences of a warming world: droughts because it’s hotter, floods because warm oceans release more water vapor.

As always, you can’t attribute any one weather event to greenhouse gases. But the pattern we’re seeing, with extreme highs and extreme weather in general becoming much more common, is just what you’d expect from climate change.

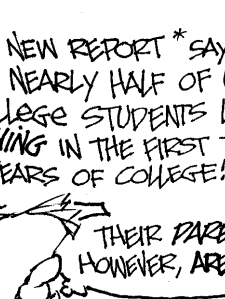

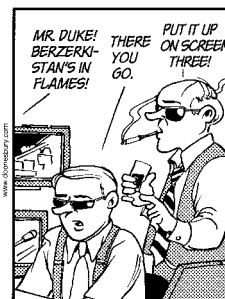

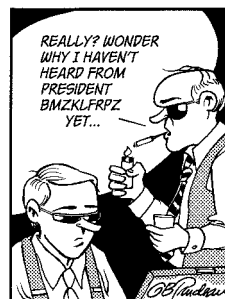

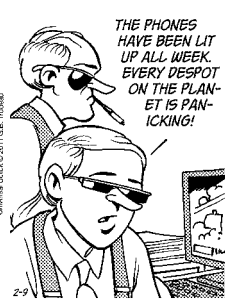

The usual suspects will, of course, go wild over suggestions that global warming has something to do with the food crisis; those who insist that Ben Bernanke has blood on his hands tend to be more or less the same people who insist that the scientific consensus on climate reflects a vast leftist conspiracy.

But the evidence does, in fact, suggest that what we’re getting now is a first taste of the disruption, economic and political, that we’ll face in a warming world. And given our failure to act on greenhouse gases, there will be much more, and much worse, to come.

Chicken Little and the debt ceiling

Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke seemed to be channeling Chicken Little when he warned congressional Republicans that any delay in raising the debt ceiling beyond the current $14.3 trillion cap could have “catastrophic” consequences. Continuing America’s borrowing and spending addiction will have even greater catastrophic consequences, but people in government don’t think this way. For them, all government spending is good spending and any attempt to begin the arduous process of restoring fiscal responsibility is viewed by those with vested interests as greedy, selfish and unsympathetic toward the needs of others. Perhaps advocates of unlimited spending might tell us how much is enough if they can’t live on $14.3 trillion?

If Congress doesn’t start

the process of cutting spending now when the polls favor Republican economic policies, when will it? Rarely has “if not us, who? If not now, when?” had greater resonance.

The Wall Street Journal reports, “Governors around the U.S. are proposing to balance their states’ budgets with a long list of cuts and almost no new taxes, reflecting a goal by politicians from both parties to erase deficits chiefly by shrinking government.” So, if states can do it, why can’t the federal government?

Congressional Democrats, for whom a much smaller debt was a big deal when Republican presidents Ronald Reagan and George W. Bush were in the White House, seem unconcerned about debt now that a Democrat is president. Some Democrats, hoping to make Republicans blink, are making noises about another possible government shutdown. Republicans should keep their eyes wide open.

On the same day Bernanke made his “catastrophic” comment, House Republicans unveiled their plan to cut $32 billion out of the budget for the remainder of this fiscal year. That’s short of the $100 billion in cuts promised by Speaker John Boehner before the November election. The Republican Study Committee, a conservative bloc of House members, wants to hold Boehner to his original promise.

Republicans should argue that raising the debt ceiling would pay for the continued implementation of Obamacare, which the latest Rasmussen Reports survey shows 55 percent of Likely Voters want repealed. Public opinion and a dubious legal future offer an opportunity for such a strategy. The Study Committee estimates a savings of $2.5 trillion over 10 years if all of its recommendations are implemented.

Rich Galen, former press secretary for Dan Quayle and former executive director of GOPAC, “a national organization dedicated exclusively to electing Republicans to state and local offices” lists on his blog, Mullings, some of the committee’s recommendations and adds a few of his own, including a 15 percent reduction in the number of civilian federal employees, “accomplished by attrition rather than outright firings.” Galen proposes, “Only one new employee could be hired for every two who left until the reduction number was met.” (This should apply to all branches of government.) Cuts in programs are also warranted, including “cutting out the Hope VI Program, charged with proposing a National Action Plan to eradicate severely distressed public housing, which “will save $250 million per year” Anyone notice such a plan, or the relief of “stress” on public housing?

AMTRAK costs $1.565 billion per year in federal subsidies. Couldn’t private enterprise do better?

Galen thinks congressional travel should be cut. Each member, he says, ought to get six trips home per year at public expense. “More than that, they have to use campaign funds.” The Republican Study Committee estimates cutting other federal travel would save $7.5 billion.

Ethanol cuts aren’t in the GOP plan, but they should be. So should responsible cuts in defense spending. Entire cabinet agencies, like Housing and Urban Development, Education and Energy should be eliminated and any essential work folded into other government agencies. That isn’t likely to happen in the short term, but if Republicans stick with the principles that got them elected and demonstrate their plan works, the public might go along with cutting major expenditures, including modernizing and reforming Social Security and Medicare.

There may well be a “catastrophe,” as Bernanke predicts, but it is more likely to occur if we don’t reduce our spending than if we raise the debt ceiling and keep on spending with borrowed money.

Fix or repeal? Obama’s health-care mousetrap

President Obama has laid a trap for Republicans on health care. Will the GOP walk right into it? Obama made what appeared to be a stunning admission in his State of the Union address, when he acknowledged that his sainted health-care law needs a little work. “Let me be the first to say that anything can be improved. If you have ideas about how to improve this law by making care better or more affordable, I am eager to work with you,” he told lawmakers. Obama then offered up a provision he said Congress should immediately repeal, declaring “We can start right now by correcting a flaw in the legislation that has placed an unnecessary bookkeeping burden on small businesses.” And he concluded with an appeal for bipartisan cooperation: “Instead of re-fighting the battles of the last two years, let’s fix what needs fixing and let’s move forward.”

It was a brilliant political maneuver. The president knows that his health-care law remains unpopular and that it was a driving force behind the historic losses Democrats suffered in the 2010 elections. So to protect vulnerable Democrats in 2012 (including himself) and blunt the GOP’s push toward full repeal, the president is seeking to enlist the Republicans in helping him “fix” the flaws in Obamacare.

Senate Republicans have seized on his offer. Last week, they helped Democrats pass legislation repealing the provision Obama mentioned — a mandate that businesses file “1099” reports to IRS for all transactions of more than $600 in a given year. This provision had small businesses across the country up in arms. But instead of harnessing that anger to push for full repeal, Republicans instead helped Democrats lift this source of pressure from the business community.

Expect Democrats to replicate this approach in the months ahead, supporting other fixes that tinker around the edges of Obamacare. Each individual proposal will seem entirely reasonable and an opportunity for bipartisan cooperation. But if Republicans go along, before they know it they will find that they have been drawn into a strategy of “fix and save” instead of “repeal and replace.”

Republicans need to understand that there is no path to repealing Obamacare “plank by plank.” Here is why: First, while Democrats will agree to peripheral changes, they will never allow the GOP to repeal the core provisions that make Obamacare such a monstrosity — such as the individual mandate, insurance mandates and employer mandates. All Republicans will end up doing is helping Democrats sweeten the hemlock, thus undermining their case for full repeal.

Second, Republicans will hand the Democrats a huge public relations victory. As more “fixes” like the 1099 repeal are adopted, the president and Democratic leaders will portray themselves as the reasonable ones who have acknowledged flaws in their law and are working to address them in bipartisan manner. Meanwhile Republicans who continue to push for full repeal will be portrayed as strident hard-liners who care more about delivering a political blow to the president than helping Americans get better health care.

Third, Republicans will inadvertently help vulnerable Democrats get reelected. Sixteen Senate Democrats up for reelection this year voted for the 1099 repeal — and endangered Democratic incumbents are almost certain to support other similar measures in the period ahead. This will allow them to claim on the campaign trail that they are working to “repeal” the worst parts of Obamacare while keeping the parts of the law that Americans support.

Herein lies the true genius of Obama’s strategy. There is almost no individual provision of Obamacare that most Republicans would vote against repealing. So all the president and Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid have to do is pick the least objectionable Republican repeal bills, tweak them slightly and have endangered Democrats introduce them as their own — and watch each one pass with overwhelming GOP support. That is precisely what Democrats did with the 1099 repeal. Sen. Debbie Stabenow, D-Mich., a vulnerable incumbent, stole legislation sponsored by Republican Mike Johanns and changed a few words, which helped the measure pass it with 81 votes on the Senate floor. Stabenow can now claim that she led a bipartisan effort that protected small businesses in her state from an odious provision of Obamacare.

Democrats will do this again and again in the months ahead. With each vote, they will strengthen their chances of holding onto the Senate in 2012 and set back the GOP’s hopes for full repeal in 2013. The president’s strategy is clear: Save the Democrat-controlled Senate. Save his reelection prospects. Save Obamacare. The only question is: Will Republicans help him do it?

In praise of snail mail

I’ve always loved mail. By that I mean the mail that arrives in a physical mailbox six days a week, not e-mail. Well, I love that too, but it’s a cheap thrill. My heart belongs to snail mail.

This love affair began decades ago, back when the “snail” qualifier wasn’t necessary. As a child, I’d sort through the mail that came every afternoon, seeing in it clues to the inner lives of my parents. Among the bills and bank statements there would sometimes be a letter from a faraway friend or relative, handwritten on stationery or typed on an IBM Selectric and stuffed with photos showing how fast some kid was growing up or how great the kitchen remodel was. Even more fascinating were the holiday cards and newsletters from classmates and roommates and neighbors my parents had known before I came along, a barely comprehensible concept that made those correspondents seem to me like characters in a book.

So when I read the news last week that the U.S. Postal Service plans to close or consolidate as many as 2,000 branches in the next two years, my heart sank a little. There’s something wistfully beautiful about the idea of the doors staying open at some remote post office whose main customer is a bearded old codger with an EBay habit.

And if the offices go, will the rest eventually follow? Probably not for a long time. It’s not as if young mail enthusiasts will suddenly be deprived of the thrill of opening the mailbox. But even as postal delivery trudges on, you have to admit that the soul of the whole enterprise — the sweet ache of anticipation — was lost long ago.

Sure, the sound of a mail carrier’s footsteps is still more pleasant than an automated “You’ve got mail,” but the end result is almost always disappointing. More often than not, I find myself taking the mail from the box and depositing it directly into the trash — “mail” apparently also being a euphemism for fliers from carpet cleaning companies. This kills me just a little bit each day because, like many people who work from home, I revel in any distraction, and retrieving the mail still seems like a legitimate reason to rise from my desk. When I lived in an apartment in New York City, it was not unusual for me to sprint down many flights of stairs three times a day to check if the postman had filled the boxes in the lobby.

That may sound excessive, but in some eras and places, it would have been positively restrained. In late 19th century London, the mail came 12 times a day! No wonder we so often imagine Victorians lollygagging about their houses awaiting replies to their latest witty ripostes; with that much mail delivery, how could they possibly have focused on anything else? If my mail came 12 times a day, even in its current direct-to-recycling-bin state, I would get nothing done.

For me, it’s the trip to the mailbox, the opening of the lid, the retrieving. E-mail offers no such pleasures, nor can it do that magical thing that real mail can do: reminding you intimately and tactically of who you are. You linger over a letter from a friend; you don’t hit delete. A child cannot sort through a stack of printed e-mails, or the online log, and sense the very outline of her family: This is my aunt’s handwriting; these are the magazines my parents have subscribed to for years; this envelope touched my brother’s desktop at college; this is who we are.

Yes, there are other options. Objectively speaking, a child now could spend five minutes on her parents’ Facebook pages and glean 10 years’ worth of annual-newsletter clues; she could chat in real time with her brother; and Twitter has “witty riposte” texted all over it.

But as the Postal Service continues its slow fade into history, something will be missing. Not written communication — indeed, it’s only multiplying — but the small comforts that come from waiting for it, handling it and smiling whenever you pass the table you’ve placed it on. For that, nothing beats the U.S. mail.

Idaho tightens limits on wind, solar projects

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — State regulators tightened rules governing the price big utilities must pay for electricity generated by small wind and solar energy projects, a victory for Idaho Power Co. and PacifiCorp that contend the current system was being abused and hiking costs for customers.

Qualifying wind and solar projects can now be no larger than 100 kilowatts, down from 10 megawatts, according to the Idaho Public Utilities Commission decision.

In the late 1970s, Congress required utilities to buy electricity from small power producers at special rates that were based on the cost the utilities could avoid if they had to generate the power themselves. That amount is determined in Idaho by the Public Utilities Commission and is potentially more attractive than prices that wind or solar companies could independently negotiate with the utilities.

Now, Idaho Power Co., Spokane, Wash.-based Avista Corp. and PacifiCorp's Utah-based Rocky Mountain Power contend sophisticated, well-financed developers such as General Electric Co. and Shell Wind Energy are breaking up their otherwise large wind farms into small, 10 megawatt projects to qualify for the good rates — essentially gaming a system originally designed to help small, independent power producers.

“The commission’s order takes the first steps toward addressing large developers who are taking large wind farms and chopping them into bite-sized pieces,” said Idaho Power spokeswoman Stephanie McCurdy on Tuesday. “It also is the first step in making sure that our customers don’t pay too much for the energy on our system.”

The Boise-based utility said it’s been overwhelmed by these fragmented projects that are contributing to higher costs for its customers. It estimates it could have 1,100 megawatts of wind power on its system within just a few years — more than it needs during low-usage days.

For instance, GE has built 122 wind turbines producing a maximum of 183 mega-watts of power in southern Idaho. They can be operated as a system. But because the project has been broken up into 11 different sites, Idaho Power must buy the power at the mandated rates.

Going forward, the Idaho Public Utilities Commission ruling will affect at least 18 different projects proposed by four different companies, including the wind energy business of Dutch energy giant Shell.

Shell Wind Energy spokesman Tim O’Leary didn’t immediately return a phone call seeking comment.

Though solar energy companies have been less active in Idaho, state regulators included their projects under the reduced cap, too. Like wind power, solar energy is also an intermittent electricity producer, regulators wrote, meaning it must be backed-up by other sources of power generation, such as the $427 million natural gas fired power plant that Idaho Power is building in southwestern Idaho.

The new rules will be in effect until the issues raised by the three electric utilities can be resolved, regulators said.

“The commission is supportive of all small-power producers . including wind and solar, and it is not the commission’s intent to push small wind and solar QF projects out of the market,” according to an IPUC press release.

Utilities, power producers and environmental groups that intervened in the case were told to prepare for a new round of hearings starting in early May at which regulators aim to devise a new rate structure that satisfies utilities’ concerns, while once again allowing small wind and solar projects up to 10 megawatts to again qualify.

Randy Hansen sits in a Ford Taurus at his used car dealership Tuesday in Twin Falls.

Randy Hansen Automotive set for March 1 opening

By Blair Koch
Times-News writer

Eight years after selling his Autoplex and Import Center, Randy Hansen is ready to get back into the game.

On March 1, Hansen will open Randy Hansen Automotive, 636 Pole Line Road, Twin Falls.

The dealership will focus on a niche market of customers looking for nearly new vehicles with low miles.

“We’ve been watching the market for about a year-and-a-half, trying to get something going again,” Hansen told the Times-News during an interview at the dealership Tuesday.

Hansen is leasing the property, formerly a Hertz car lot. The 55-year-old is searching to fill his wanted inventory of some 130 units. So far, he’s hand-picked 45.

“There is a demand for a little bit of everything,” said Hansen.

“If someone is interested in a sport utility vehicle, we’ll have the Kia, Hyundai, Ford, Buick, Jeep ... models available so they can compare and pick the one that really fits what they want,” he said.

Technology will aid the dealership’s search for wanted vehicles not in stock.

“The Internet has really changed the landscape. Every salesperson has their own computer and can search nationwide for the specific vehicle people want,” Hansen said. “That’s different from even four years ago and we look at it as another way to enhance the customer’s experience.”

Hansen touts “the experience” his dealership will provide to customers as important as the inventory offered.

“We really believe that there is a demand for the type of sales experience we offer. It’ll be a breath of fresh air ... we still believe in ‘No pressure. No hype,’” Hansen said, referring to a marketing slogan used for his former Twin Falls dealerships.

Providing customer service is part of the dealership’s employee culture.

“It’s not just about selling someone one car,” said Sales Manager Roger Farr. “We really get to know our customers, they become part of our family. I know a lot of people say that, but here it’s true.”

Farr has worked for Hansen in the past and said he didn’t think twice to come work for him now.

The dealership will have seven full-time salesmen and a number of office and grounds employees.

“Randy’s reputation is solid. He’s a man of integrity. Many employers will tell you they’re all about family, but when you get on board you aren’t given the time to take off. ... Here if you have something with you’re family you are expected to be there,” said

Randy Hansen is getting back into the car business after selling his dealerships to Lithia Motors before the recession.

Farr. “People want to do business with him.”

Farr said people still remember the service they received before Hansen sold his Twin Falls dealerships to Lithia Motors in early 2003.

In the spring of that year Hansen and a business partner purchased the Park Price Motor Co. in Pocatello. Hansen helped run the business but continued to live in Twin Falls. The partner bought Hansen out about 18 months ago. It was then that Hansen began seriously considering opening a dealership in Twin Falls.

Hansen wouldn’t say how much he plans to invest, except that it is “many millions,” but said if he had to finance the capital necessary he wouldn’t be able to open the dealership. He said having the right staff and family support also led to his decision.

“We’re in a unique position,” Hansen said. “This is a very cash-intensive business and we are very lucky to be in the position we are in.”

Although Hansen won’t offer in-house financing, he said the dealership has relationships with a variety of lenders.

A section of the lot will feature trade-in vehicles.

With the economy slowly turning around, Hansen said he sees this as a good time to open a dealership.

Hansen grew up in the auto business and purchased his father’s dealership in 1985, although he’d already managed the business for a number of years.

“Believe me, we’ve had cycles,” Hansen said, recalling the “hard times,” of the mid-1980s, when area farms were regularly auctioned off the county courthouse steps and car financing was at 20 percent.

Things aren’t that bad today, he said, and the future looks even brighter.

By one measure, federal taxes lowest since 1950

By Stephen Ohlemacher
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON— Taxes too high?

Actually, as a share of the nation’s economy, Uncle Sam’s take this year will be the lowest since 1950, when the Korean War was just getting under way.

And for the third straight year, American families and businesses will pay less in federal taxes than they did under former President George W. Bush, thanks to a weak economy and a growing number of tax breaks for the wealthy and poor alike.

Income tax payments this year will be nearly 13 percent lower than they were in 2008, the last full year of the Bush presidency. Corporate taxes will be lower by a third, according to projections by the Congressional Budget Office.

The poor economy is largely to blame, with corporate profits down and unemployment up. But so is a tax code that grows each year with new deductions, credits and exemptions. The result is that families making as much as $50,000 can avoid paying federal income taxes, if they have at least two dependent children. Low-income families can actually make a profit from the income tax, and the wealthy can significantly cut their payments.

“The current state of the tax code is simply indefensible,” says Sen. Kent Conrad, D-N.D., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee. “It is hemorrhaging revenue.”

In the next few years, many can expect to pay more

See TAXES, Business 2

SOME SCENARIOS

- A married couple with two young children and a combined income of $25,000 will pay no federal income taxes for 2010. Instead, they’ll get a payment of $7,085 — up from $6,700 in 2008. The larger payment comes mainly from a more generous Earned Income Tax Credit, which provides subsidies to the working poor. They will also get a $1,000-per-child tax credit. The example illustrates how complicated tax returns can be, even for low-income families, said Kathy Pickering, executive director of The Tax Institute at H&R Block.
- A married couple with two children, including one in college, and a combined income of $50,000 would pay no federal income taxes, instead getting a payment of $734 from the government this year. However, they did better in 2008 when they netted a $1,234 payment from the government. That’s because Obama’s Making Work Pay credit was worth less to them than the Bush-era economic stimulus payment they received in 2008.
- A single person making $50,000 while paying interest on a student loan would have a 2010 tax bill of $5,325 — a $63 decrease from 2008. The difference is due to an inflation-based increase in the standard deduction and personal exemption.
- A married couple with two children, including one in college, with some modest investments and a combined income of $200,000 will see their federal income tax bill drop by $780, to $28,496. Their tax bill is lower than in 2008 largely because itemized deductions are no longer limited for high-income families.
- A rich couple with two kids in college, larger investments and a combined income of $1 million will see their taxes drop by $6,740, to $277,699 in 2010. Their tax bill is lower than in 2008 because they were able to defer a larger portion of their income to retirement accounts, and because itemized deductions are no longer limited for high-income families

Pedestrians walk past a pile of garbage and snow mixed together, Tuesday in the Brooklyn borough of New York.

As Eastern snow melts, it's leaving an ugly mess

By Colleen Long
Associated Press

NEW YORK — The mountains of snow that have covered the Northeastern landscape for the past month and a half are finally melting, revealing oozing lumps of garbage, gaping potholes, bicycles, rat-infested sofas, discarded Christmas trees — even bodies.

More than 57 inches of snow has fallen on New York City this winter, its snowiest January ever, and the story is similar elsewhere around the Northeast. Residents welcomed warmer weather this week before an expected plunge back into the freezer, but they weren't so thrilled about the side effects.

"This is disgusting. I can't tell if it's snow or garbage or some sick other thing," said Karen James, 34, finding discarded bills, paper cups and sludge in the shrinking mound of snow and ice covering her car. "This stinks."

Since a post-Christmas blizzard dumped more than 2 feet of snow on parts of the city, the snow piles have become as familiar as taxis to New Yorkers, forcing pedestrians to weave single-file through snow-packed sidewalks.

Two bodies were found in vehicles last week. In both cases, a passer-by spotted someone slumped over the wheel after snow melted away from the windows. One man was found dead Feb. 1 of an apparent gunshot wound; he had been reported missing a week earlier. On Friday, a day after he was reported missing, Argent Dyrzyg was found in the driver's seat of a BMW. Authorities believe he may have died of carbon monoxide poisoning.

The city sanitation department is responsible for plowing streets and crosswalks, while residents and businesses are expected to clear sidewalks. After grouching for weeks about the city's failure to plow enough snow, many New Yorkers are now griping about the garbage piles and big pieces of furniture, some crawling with rats.

During the many snowstorms to hit the city, the Sanitation Department suspended garbage collection for days at a time in order to use trucks for snow removal, which meant about 11,000 tons of trash per day didn't get collected.

Freed leader energizes Egyptian protests

By Sarah El Deeb

Associated Press

CAIRO — A young Google executive who helped ignite Egypt's uprising energized a cheering crowd of hundreds of thousands Tuesday with his first appearance in their midst after being released from 12 days in secret detention. "We won't give up," he promised at one of the biggest protests yet in Cairo's Tahrir Square.

Once a behind-the-scenes Internet activist, 30-year-old Wael Ghonim has emerged as an inspiring voice for a movement that has taken pride in being a leaderless "people's revolution." Now, the various activists behind it — including Ghonim — are working to coalesce into representatives to push their demands for President Hosni Mubarak's ouster.

With protests invigorated, Vice President Omar Suleiman issued a sharply worded warning, saying of the protests in Tahrir, "We can't bear this for a long time, and there must be an end to this crisis as soon as possible," in a sign of growing impatience with 16 days of mass demonstrations.

For the first time, protesters made a foray to Parliament, several blocks away from their camp in the square. Several hundred marched to the legislature and chanted for it to be dissolved.

In Tahrir, the massive, shoulder-to-shoulder crowd's ranks swelled with new blood, including thousands of university professors and lawyers who marched in together as organizers worked to draw in professional unions. The crowd rivaled the biggest demonstration so far, a week ago, that drew a quarter-million people.

Some said they were inspired to turn out by an emotional television interview Ghonim gave Monday night just after his release from detention. He sobbed over those who have been killed in two weeks of clashes and insisted, "We love Egypt ... and we have rights."

"I cried," a 33-year-old upper-class housewife, Fifi Shawqi, said of the interview with Ghonim, who she'd never heard of before the TV appearance. She came to the Tahrir protest for the first time, bringing her three daughters and her sister. "I felt like he is my son and all the youth here are my sons."

Tuesday's huge turnout

gave a resounding answer to the question of whether the protesters still have momentum even though two weeks of steadfast pressure have not achieved their goal of ousting 82-year-old Mubarak, Egypt's authoritarian leader for nearly three decades.

Suleiman rejected any departure for Mubarak or lend to the regime. He told a gathering of newspaper editors that the regime prefers to deal with the crisis using dialogue, adding, "We don't want to deal with Egyptian society with police tools."

Wilted winter greens with pine nuts rest alongside a rib-eye topped with Gorgonzola butter and Zinfandel syrup. Red meat is one of the most popular orders at chef Derek Gallagos' Three Ten Main restaurant in Hailey on Valentine's Day, and he says this dish can also be made at home.

Staying in on Valentine's Day or date night

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

For many couples, the Valentine's Day dinner is a tradition celebrated at a restaurant. But making the meal at home can be just as romantic — perhaps more so, if you and your significant other pair up in the kitchen.

"Cooking together is an important thing for a relationship; it shows how well you work together as a couple," said Kate Metzger, executive chef at Il Naso in Ketchum. "It's a matter of improvising and having that second set of senses to tell you what's good and what's not. Even in the restaurant, we double-check with someone else."

Although you might think of foods like oysters, red wine, chocolate and caviar as aphrodisiacs — and there are good reasons those are on the list — there are many ingredients that have historical symbolism or physical attributes making them good for a date-night meal.

For example, consider five elements of Metzger's pear-arugula salad: Almonds are a symbol of fertility, and their aroma is thought to induce passion in women, she said, while arugula has been documented as an aphrodisiac since the first century. The heat in garlic is said to stir sexual desires (as long as both parties are eating it, Metzger joked), and historically, herbal medicines for sterility and impotence contained honey.

"The term honeymoon actually came from honey-sweetened mead, which was thought to sweeten the marriage," she said.

ture prominently in a recipe recommended by Derek Gallagos, executive chef of Three Ten Main in Hailey, were thought by both Greeks and Romans to stimulate the sense of touch and sensitivity in the skin.

Metzger said a variant on that pear-arugula salad, with all its aphrodisiac ingredients, was one of the first things she ever made for her boyfriend. "That was one of the things that stood out in his head as something he really enjoyed that I made for him," she said. And though he wasn't a big fan of lamb, the pine nut-crusted lamb chops (see the recipe printed with this story) changed his mind.

Nuts and seeds, symbolic of fertility, are featured in the dishes suggested here by Gallagos and Metzger. Pine nuts in particular have a lot of zinc, which is a key mineral for male potency, Metzger said, while mustard (used by Gallagos in seed form; partially processed in the Metzger's Dijon dressing) is said to stimulate the sexual glands.

Of course, no aphrodisiac ingredient will be effective or sensual if your significant other doesn't like it.

PINE NUT-CRUSTED LAMB CHOPS WITH POMEGRANATE REDUCTION

From Kate Metzger, executive chef at Il Naso in Ketchum.

For the reduction:
2 cups pomegranate juice
Zest and juice of 1 orange
For the lamb:
1/2 cup Dijon mustard
2 tablespoons rosemary, chopped
1 cup pine nuts, crushed with a rolling pin
4 lamb chops
Salt and pepper

Combine reduction ingredients in a small saucepan. Cook over medium heat until liquid is reduced to a syrup consistency, about 30 minutes.

For the lamb, combine mustard and rosemary in a bowl. Place crushed pine nuts on a small plate. Season each chop with salt and pepper. Coat each chop first with a thin layer of mustard, then pine nuts. Sear each chop on both sides in a pan over medium heat, being careful not to burn the pine nuts. Transfer chops to the oven and cook to desired doneness. Serve with pomegranate reduction.

PEAR ARUGULA SALAD WITH TRUFFLED HONEY VINAIGRETTE

From Kate Metzger, executive chef at Il Naso in Ketchum.

For the dressing:
1 teaspoon garlic, minced
1 tablespoon fresh thyme, minced
2 tablespoons honey
1 tablespoon packed brown sugar
1/3 cup champagne vinegar
2 tablespoons truffle oil
3/4 cup good-quality olive oil
For the salad:
1/2 pound arugula, washed
1/4 cup slivered almonds
1 pear, sliced thinly
1/4 cup crumbled chevre

Whisk first five dressing ingredients together until well combined. Slowly add oils while whisking. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Combine all salad ingredients in a salad bowl, toss with dressing and serve.

A trio of truffles with which to woo your love

By Alison Ladman
For The Associated Press

Anyone can buy chocolates for Valentine’s Day. But how about really putting your love on the line and making them?

Turns out anyone can do that, too. Because making chocolates — or at least this trio of fancy chocolate truffles — is so simple you won’t need to labor for your love. Or if you really want to turn on the magic, consider making these truffles with your loved one.

The finished truffles can be dipped in melted chocolate for a crisp shell or rolled in other coatings, such as cocoa powder, chopped nuts, coconut, shaved chocolate or crushed cookie crumbs. Be sure to use good quality chocolate for the best results.

The truffles can be made several days in advance. If made ahead, truffles coated in cocoa powder may need to be rerolled in additional powder just before serving.

WHITE CHOCOLATE-SOUR CREAM COOKIE TRUFFLES

Start to finish: 1 hour (plus chilling). Makes 24 truffles.

- 12 ounces white chocolate bits
 - 1/2 cup sour cream
 - 2 teaspoons vanilla extract
 - 1 cup crushed chocolate wafer cookies, for rolling
- In a medium microwave-safe bowl, melt the chocolate bits by microwaving on high for 20 seconds, stirring and repeating until smooth and melted.

- In a small microwave-safe bowl, stir together the sour cream and vanilla. Microwave on high for 30 seconds, or until just warm. Stir the sour cream mixture into the melted chocolate until smooth. Microwave for an additional 30 seconds, if needed. Refrigerate until chilled and firm, at least 2 hours or overnight.
- Once the mixture is firm, place the crushed cookies in a wide, shallow bowl. Use a teaspoon, melon baller or small cookie scoop to scoop it into balls. Roll each ball briefly between your hands to smooth, then roll each in the crushed cookies until coated. To store, refrigerate the truffles in an airtight container.
- HONEY-PISTACHIO TRUFFLES
- Start to finish: 1 hour (plus chilling). Makes 24 truffles.*
- 3/4 cup heavy cream
 - 3 tablespoons honey
 - 8 ounces bittersweet chocolate bits
 - 1/2 teaspoon pistachio or almond extract
 - 1 cup crushed pistachios, for rolling
- In a medium microwave-safe dish, whisk together the cream and honey. Microwave on high until bubbling, about 1 1/2 minutes.
- Add the chocolate bits and wait 2 minutes. Stir gently until thoroughly combined and the chocolate has melted. If needed, microwave an additional 20 seconds to finish melting the chocolate. Stir in the extract, then refrigerate until chilled and firm, at least 2 hours or overnight.
- Once the mixture is firm, place the
- pistachios in a wide, shallow bowl. Use a teaspoon, melon baller or small cookie scoop to scoop it into balls. Roll each ball briefly between your hands to smooth, then roll each in the pistachios until coated. To store, refrigerate the truffles in an airtight container.
- STRAWBERRY-MINT TRUFFLES
- Start to finish: 1 hour (plus chilling). Makes 30 truffles.*
- 16-ounce container fresh strawberries, roughly chopped
 - 2 tablespoons sugar
 - 3 tablespoons minced fresh mint leaves
 - 2 tablespoons unsalted butter
 - 14 ounces semi-sweet chocolate bits
 - Cocoa powder, for rolling
- In a medium saucepan over medium heat, combine the strawberries and sugar. Heat until the strawberries are broken down and juicy, about 6 to 8 minutes. Pour into a blender, then add the mint leaves and butter. Blend until smooth.
- Place the chocolate in a medium heat-safe bowl. Strain the hot strawberry mixture over the chocolate through a fine mesh strainer; discard the solids. Stir gently to combine until all the chocolate is melted and the mixture is smooth. Refrigerate until chilled and firm, at least 2 hours or overnight.
- Once the mixture is firm, place the cocoa powder in a wide, shallow bowl. Use a teaspoon, melon baller or small cookie scoop to scoop it into balls. Roll each ball briefly between your hands to smooth, then roll each in the cocoa powder until coated. To store, refrigerate the truffles in an airtight container.

“What’s most important is to make their favorite food, what they really like,” Gallagos said. He said many restaurant chefs are willing to share recipes with regular customers, so don’t be afraid to call and ask later, if your date really gushed over her entree or dessert. “If you pull it off, that’s going to score huge points.”

Gallagos said about half the entrees sold on Valentine’s Day at his restaurant feature red meat, though many of the ladies order seafood.

However, consider what you may do after dinner — a heavy steak can weigh you down, with much of your energy devoted to digestion instead of more amorous activities. A lighter meal, perhaps featuring pasta or salad, would be an energetic alternative, said Twin Falls macrobiotic health counselor Jill Skeem.

“Think about Italians, they’re very romantic,” she said, noting how much pasta is featured in the Italian diet.

For their anniversary last year, Skeem and her husband went to an Italian restaurant in Las Vegas, Mimmo Ferraro’s, where the couple appreciated the atmosphere and the nice wine they had with dinner. But it was the food that they still talk about to this day. “It was a simple homemade pasta with tomatoes and basil, and it was so delicious,” she said. “It was really one of the best meals we ever had.”

If you want a feisty evening, garlic and coffee can agitate you, Skeem said, while a little red wine or chocolate will be more relaxing. But whatever you choose, opt for moderation. “Quantity can change quality with anything. A little wine is great; too much, you can’t function,” she said.

Regardless of the recipe you choose, approach making your Valentine’s Day or date night dinner a sensual experience for both the cook and the diner.

“The texture and aroma and flavor of everything is all conducive to creating the kind of mood that you want for a romantic evening,” Metzger said. “Anything can be made to be sensual in my opinion; it’s a matter of the care and consideration and thought that you put into your food that makes it a romantic dinner.”

WILTED WINTER GREENS WITH PINE NUTS AND WHITE TRUFFLE OIL VINAIGRETTE

From Derek Gallagos, executive chef at Three Ten Main in Hailey.

- 1 bunch dinosaur or lacinato kale
- 1 bunch escarole (use tender heart leaves only)
- 1 bunch spinach or dandelion greens
- 2 tablespoons high-quality extra virgin olive oil
- 2 tablespoons toasted pine nuts
- 1 tablespoon sherry vinegar
- 1 tablespoon lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon white truffle oil
- Fresh cracked pepper and pinch of salt

Soak greens in cold water and spin dry in salad spinner. Take stems off kale; tear escarole hearts in small pieces. Add to large bowl with spinach and/or dandelion. Toss well. Heat olive oil in large saute pan, add pine nuts and greens, and cook, tossing frequently, until warm and barely wilted. Add remaining ingredients and toss well before plating.

PAN ROASTED MUSTARD SEED-CRUSTED RIB-EYE STEAK FOR TWO, WITH GORGONZOLA BUTTER & ZINFANDEL SYRUP

From Derek Gallagos, executive chef at Three Ten Main in Hailey, who said make-ahead flavored butters are underrated as an ingredient. “You can throw in anything you like,” he said. “It’s a real simple way to make things fancy.”

For the butter:

- 1/2 medium yellow onion
- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1/4 pound plus 1 table-spoon unsalted butter
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 pound Gorgonzola or favorite creamy blue cheese
- 1 tablespoon sweet dessert wine or 2 teaspoons honey
- 1 teaspoon red wine vinegar
- 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce

Finely dice onion and cook with 1 tablespoon butter, olive oil and 1/4 teaspoon salt over low heat, stirring every 2 minutes, until caramelized and a light brown color (about 20 minutes).

Let onions cool to room temperature and put in food processor with 1/4 pound butter and cheese. Puree until mixed, then add remaining ingredients, puree until thoroughly incorporated and scrape out onto a piece of plastic wrap or wax paper. Shape into a log, wrapped, and chill in fridge until firm. Can be frozen.

For the syrup:

- 1/2 bottle fruity, drinkable but not too expensive zinfandel
- 1/4 cup balsamic vinegar

Put wine and vinegar in medium shallow saute pan over medium heat and reduce it to 20 percent of its original volume. To test for doneness, drizzle on a cold plate; it should be about the same stickiness as corn syrup.

For the steak:

- 1 1/2 pound slice beef rib roast well trimmed of outside fat (about 2 inches thick)
- Kosher salt
- Fresh cracked pepper
- Olive oil
- 2 tablespoons brown mustard seeds

Liberal salt and pepper the steak all over, rub with a little olive oil and sprinkle both sides with mustard seeds, pressing them into the meat. Sear the steak in a thick-bottomed frying pan (cast iron works great) on high heat for about 2-3 minutes a side to form a nice crust.

Transfer to a 400-degree oven and cook until it is 125 degrees in the center of the steak for rare-medium rare, 135-140 degrees for medium to medium well (you will need an instant-read probe thermometer for this). Rare-medium rare should take 15-20 minutes.

When steak is cooked to your liking, top with several 1/4-inch slices of Gorgonzola butter. Drizzle with a couple of tablespoons zinfandel syrup. Serve wilted-greens salad on same plate.

COCOA-FENNEL SEMIFREDDO WITH ESPRESSO BEANS & SAMBUCA LIQUEUR

From Derek Gallagos, executive chef at Three Ten Main in Hailey.

- 5 eggs
- 1/3 cup Marsala, late-harvest Riesling or tawny port
- 1/4 teaspoon fennel pollen or 1/2 teaspoon ground fennel seed
- 2 teaspoons cocoa powder (Gallagos uses Scharffen Berger)
- 1/2 cup sugar
- 1/2 cup powdered sugar
- 2/3 cup very cold heavy cream
- 1 heaping tablespoon whole espresso beans, plus a few for garnish
- Sambuca (Italian anise liqueur)

Separate eggs, setting aside whites. Add sweet wine, fennel, cocoa powder and sugar to yolks and whisk thoroughly. Put this mixture in a double boiler and whisk until tripled in volume and thick. Cool this yolk mixture.

Whisk egg whites with powdered sugar to stiff peaks; whip cream to stiff peaks. Fold whipped egg whites, whipped cream and espresso beans into yolk mixture. Line a bread loaf pan with plastic wrap and fill with mixture. Freeze overnight. To serve: Unmold and slice 1-inch thick slices. Place on frozen plates, drizzle with a little of the Sambuca and garnish with a few espresso beans.

This upside-down cake has a tropical flare with its mango layer and macadamia nut decoration.

Make your love flip for you with upside-down cake

By Jim Romanoff
For The Associated Press

Sometimes on Valentine's Day the most romantic thing to do is something unexpected. Upside-down cakes are the baking world's version of this kind of whimsy. Build everything from the bottom up and give it flip before serving.

This cocoa-mango upside-down cake combines the winning flavors of ginger-tinged chocolate with a tropical layer of brightly colored mango. Decorating the edges with some chopped macadamia nuts adds a beautiful and simple garnish.

COCOA-MANGO UPSIDE-DOWN CAKE

Start to finish: 1 hour 5 minutes (25 minutes active).
Servings: 8.

- 1 medium mango
- 1/4 cup light brown sugar
- 1 tablespoon honey or corn syrup
- 2 tablespoons butter
- 3/4 cup all-purpose flour
- 3/4 cup granulated sugar
- 1/3 cup unsweetened cocoa powder
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/2 teaspoon ground ginger
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 3/4 cup buttermilk
- 1/4 cup canola oil
- 1 large egg
- 1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract
- 1/4 cup apricot preserves, strained
- 2 tablespoons chopped macadamia nuts or almonds

Place a rack in lower third of oven. Heat the oven to 350 degrees. Set a baking sheet on the bottom of the oven to catch any drips.

With a paring knife or sharp vegetable peeler, remove the skin from the mango. Slice along the flat central pit to remove the flesh from each side in one large piece. Slice each piece lengthwise into long, thin slices. Set aside.

In a small saucepan over medium, combine the brown sugar, honey or corn syrup, and the butter. Stir until the mixture is bubbling. Immediately pour it into an 8-inch round cake pan, spreading the mixture evenly over the bottom. Arrange the slices of mango in a spiral pattern over the sugar-butter mixture.

Set a mesh strainer over a large bowl. Add the flour, sugar, cocoa, baking soda, ginger and salt, then sift them into the bowl. Add the buttermilk, oil, egg and vanilla. Using an electric mixer, beat the mixture on low just until combined.

Increase the mixer speed to medium and beat for 2 minutes longer.

Pour the batter over the mango. Bake for 45 to 55 minutes, or until a skewer inserted at the center of the cake comes out clean. Run a knife around the edge of the cake to release it. Invert a serving plate over the cake. Turn both cake and plate over again, letting the cake fall out of the pan onto the plate. Replace any fruit that sticks to the pan.

In a small saucepan, heat the preserves until bubbling. Brush over the top of the cake. Sprinkle the chopped nuts around the edge of the cake to garnish.

Cracker crumbs lighten a crisp topping

By Stephanie Witt Sedgwick
Special to The Washington Post

Cobblers, crisps and crumbles are great ways to use frozen berries. Unfortunately, the toppings often come with a generous helping of fat and extra calories. To keep this crisp light, I make a quick and easy topping of graham cracker crumbs. The topping stays crisp and contains just enough butter to hold it together.

Serve the crisp on its own, over angel food cake or with a scoop of vanilla frozen yogurt.

GRAHAM CRACKER BERRY CRISP

4 to 5 servings

For the filling:

- 8 ounces frozen blueberries, defrosted
- 8 ounces frozen strawberries, defrosted
- 1/3 cup sugar
- 1 1/2 tablespoons cornstarch

Freshly grated zest and juice of 1 lemon (1 or 2 teaspoons zest and 2 or 3 tablespoons juice)

For the topping:

- 2 1/2 ounces graham crackers (4 1/2 sheets), crushed into coarse crumbs (3/4 cup)
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/4 teaspoon ground ginger
- 2 tablespoons unsalted butter, melted

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees. Have an 8-inch square shallow baking dish at hand (or one with a similar volume).

For the filling: Combine the blueberries, strawberries, sugar, cornstarch and lemon juice and zest in a medium bowl. Toss to coat evenly and dissolve the cornstarch. Let rest for 15 minutes.

Transfer the mixture to the baking dish; bake for 20 minutes.

Meanwhile, make the topping: Combine the graham cracker crumbs, sugar, cinnamon, ginger and melted butter in a small bowl. Mix with your fingers or a fork until all of the crumbs are moistened.

After the filling has baked, remove the pan from the oven and evenly distribute the crumb topping over the fruit. Return it to the oven and bake for 15 to 20 minutes, until the fruit mixture is bubbling at the sides.

Let cool for 15 minutes before serving.

Split decision on hard split peas

By Kathleen Purvis
McClatchy Newspapers

Q: I've tried twice to make split pea soup. Both times, the peas would not get soft. Any ideas? Also, I would love information on how to find a ham bone for soup. I have used the bone from a spiral-sliced ham, but what if you don't have one?

A: Unlike meatier beans, such as dried pinto or white beans, there is no reason to soak split peas or lentils. Both are small, flat beans that will generally cook just fine without soaking first. The belief that beans can't be salted early in cooking also has been disproved in several test kitchens, so salt probably isn't the problem either.

If your split peas don't get soft, it's more likely they are old or were stored in a container that wasn't airtight. Even though they keep for quite a while, dried beans don't keep forever. If you buy them in a store that doesn't have high turnover in that kind of ingredient, they could have been old when you bought them. Health-food stores or health-focused supermarkets are usually the best places to buy dried beans and lentils, because they are so popular in vegetarian cooking.

On to the meat question: Since it is hard to go into a meat department and buy a bone these days, I often use smoked ham hocks, which are found in most supermarkets. The skin is tough, so make a few slits in each hock with a sharp knife. Cover the hocks with water, bring to a simmer, then cover the pot and let them simmer for an hour or so. Remove the hock and pick away any meat. Then you can use the cooking liquid to make a dandy split pea soup.

NO EXCUSES

This is the year for more fruits and veggies

By Stephanie Witt Sedgwick
Special to The Washington Post

Eat your fruits and vegetables, not because your mother told you to or because the food pyramid prescribes it, but because it's the simplest and most delicious way to keep all those other pledges to lose weight, eat better and feel better.

They also taste great. I have seen the wrinkled noses when I extol the virtues of Brussels sprouts and cauliflower. I have watched children eat doughnuts while they lob apples and oranges in an impromptu game of catch.

I also know that when the same fruit is turned into kebabs, the kids will eat it.

Setting out a fruit bowl or a vegetable platter is not going to change eating habits in your house. The way to lure takers is to make those foods appetizing. Preparation is key, so here's my list of suggestions to get you started.

- Always have fruit ready to eat. Cut oranges, apples, pears, bananas and pineapple into bite-size chunks or slices before you offer them. Wash and quarter big strawberries. Separate a bunch of grapes into small clusters and offer them like gifts.

- Do your vegetable prep in the morning. What takes 15 minutes when you get home at night takes less time in the morning; I'm not sure why, but I know it works for me. So trim the green beans, wash and dry the salad greens, shred the cabbage and dice the onions. You'll be about a thousand times more likely to cook the vegetables when you get home.

- Buy prepped items. Find vegetables cut, sliced and diced — in packages in the produce section and in the supermarket salad bar. Fresh fruit comes in snack packs. Frozen vegetables come in steaming bags ready for the microwave.

- Give vegetables some love. Simple steps can make a huge difference with relatively little effort. Roasting vegetables enhances their flavor. Fast dressings made with a little oil and some citrus juice can enliven humdrum salads. Chopped garlic, cooked slowly in olive oil that's then drizzled over almost any steamed green vegetable, can make that vegetable happy.

- Liberate fruit from the dessert course. Mix diced fruit into salsas; serve with grilled fish. Sauté and season apple slices as a side dish or sandwich topping. Puree leftover fruit for a first-course soup. Add orange wedges and strawberry slices to salads. Roast pears, then toss them with bitter greens and a slightly sweetened vinaigrette.

- Be crafty. On cold days, make simple vegetable soups with whatever you have on hand; who can tell what's in a pureed version? Packaged low-sodium chicken broth tastes better when it is simmered with added onions and diced vegetables. Use vegetable juice as a cooking liquid; it counts as a vegetable serving. When diners are hungry they tend to be less picky, so serve the salad before the main course instead of after.

- Try new things. Broccoli might be more appealing when it is incorporated into a pasta dish. Quick sautés of cabbage have lighter flavors than long-cooked versions.

Black bean and tropical fruit salsa.

Quick-braised cod in vegetable broth.

Winter vegetable and barley soup.

ARUGULA AND ROASTED SQUASH SALAD WITH PEARS

6 servings. Roasted pears and butternut squash bring their sweet, deep flavors to the bitter arugula. The dressing uses some of the roasted pear as well, helping to keep this salad light.

Serve as a side dish or as an appetizer; dress it up with chopped, toasted pecans or walnuts. To make it a more substantial main course, add roasted chicken, turkey or duck.

1 pound butternut squash, cut into 3/4-inch cubes

3 tablespoons olive oil
2 medium (about 9 ounces each) ripe Bartlett pears, peeled, cut in half and cored
Salt
2 tablespoons apple cider vinegar
2 or 3 teaspoons honey
Freshly ground black pepper
5 ounces baby arugula

Preheat the oven to 375 degrees. Line a rimmed baking sheet with aluminum foil and spray with nonstick cooking oil spray.

Toss the butternut squash cubes with 1 tablespoon of the oil; transfer to one side of the lined baking sheet. Place the pear halves, cut sides down, on the other side. Sprinkle the pears and squash lightly with salt.

Roast for 35 to 40 minutes or until tender, stirring the squash pieces every 10 to 15 minutes. Turn the pears over after 25 minutes. When the pears and squash are tender, remove them from the oven; they might not be ready at the same time.

Transfer one of the roasted pear halves to a blender along with the remaining 2 tablespoons of oil, the vinegar, 2 teaspoons of the honey and salt and pepper to taste; puree until smooth. Taste, and add the remaining teaspoon of honey as needed, along with any seasoning adjustment.

Divide the arugula among individual salad plates. Top each portion with equal amounts of the roasted squash and pears. Drizzle about 1 1/2 tablespoons of the dressing over each salad.

Top each salad with a grind or two of black pepper, if desired, and serve.

Perfectly cooked shrimp in 30 minutes

By Bonnie S. Benwick

brown sugar
2 tablespoons olive oil

Overcooking shrimp is a shame, which is why the folks at America's Test Kitchen came up with this technique. Residual heat brings the shrimp to the right degree of doneness in minutes.

The original recipe called for 1 1/2 pounds of shrimp, which makes 4 decent portions. However, the frozen/thawed wild gulf shrimp we used come in 2-pound bags, and there's no amount of shrimp we can't eat, and the extra shrimp would make a happy leftover lunch the next day ... so we cooked the full 2 pounds in this time frame.

Serve with a salad of mango, avocado, scallions, jalapeno and cilantro.

Adapted from "The Complete America's Test Kitchen TV Show Cookbook 2010-2011," by the editors of America's Test Kitchen (ATK, 2010).

PAN-SEARED SHRIMP WITH CHIPOTLE-LIME GLAZE

4 servings

1 1/2 to 2 pounds extra-large (21 to 25 per pound) raw shell-on shrimp (if using frozen shrimp, make sure it is thoroughly defrosted)
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1/8 teaspoon granulated sugar
2 scallions
1 or 2 limes
Leaves from 4 to 6 cilantro stems
1 chipotle pepper en adobo, plus 2 teaspoons of adobo
4 teaspoons light

Peel and devein the shrimp; leave the tail shells on if the shrimp are to be eaten out of hand. Place in a bowl and toss with the salt, pepper and granulated sugar.

Trim off the scallion roots, then cut the white and light-green parts crosswise in very thin slices to yield 3 or 4 tablespoons; place in a medium bowl. Cut the lime(s) in half; squeeze them into the bowl to yield 2 tablespoons. Chop the cilantro to yield 3 tablespoons, then add to the bowl. Mince the chipotle and add to the bowl, along with 2 teaspoons of the adobo and the brown sugar. Mix well.

Heat a tablespoon of the oil in a large skillet (preferably nonstick) over high heat until the oil just begins to smoke.

Add half of the shrimp, spreading them in a single layer. Cook for about 2 minutes, until the edges turn pink. Remove the skillet from the heat. Use tongs to flip each shrimp over; let stand for about 30 seconds so that all but the very center of each shrimp has become opaque. Transfer the shrimp to a large plate.

Add the remaining tablespoon of oil to the skillet; once it just begins to smoke, add the remaining shrimp and repeat the cooking process. After the second batch has stood off the heat, return the first batch to the skillet (combining all the shrimp) and add the chipotle mixture; toss to incorporate. Cover and let stand for about 2 minutes; the shrimp will be cooked through.

Divide among individual plates. Serve immediately.

Roasting greatly intensifies the mushroom flavor for your soup

By Stephanie Witt Sedgwick
Special to The Washington Post

Roasting vegetables is a great way to develop rich flavor without adding a lot of fat, which gives you some calories to play with when you finish this soup. It's also an easy, fairly quick and low-maintenance cooking method.

Here, for example, the mushrooms and onions are tossed with just enough oil to lightly coat them plus a little salt and pepper. Then they go right into the oven, needing only to be turned and stirred every 15 minutes or so for about 45 minutes. The vegetables brown beautifully, and the flavors become concentrated.

While the mushrooms cook, I heat chicken broth with fresh thyme, infusing the flavor of the herb into the soup. A little sherry adds a traditional flavor element. The mushrooms and onions are added to the broth, and the whole mixture is pureed but left with a little texture. Because very little fat was used to prepare the soup, each portion can be enriched with a spoonful of sour cream or creme fraiche.

The soup can be prepared, cooled and refrigerated up to three days in advance.

ROASTED MUSHROOM SOUP

Makes about 6 cups (8 servings)

- 2 pounds assorted mushrooms, such as button, cremini and oyster, cleaned, stemmed and cut into 3/4-inch chunks
- 1 medium sweet onion, such as Vidalia, cut into 3/4-inch chunks
- 3 tablespoons olive oil
- Salt
- Freshly ground black pepper
- 4 cups low-sodium or homemade

- chicken broth
- 17 fresh thyme sprigs
- 1/2 cup dry sherry
- Water, as needed
- 5 to 6 tablespoons sour cream or creme fraiche, for serving

Preheat the oven to 375 degrees.

Combine the mushrooms, onion, oil and salt and pepper to taste in a large roasting pan; toss to evenly distribute the oil and seasonings. Roast for 40 to 50 minutes, stirring every 15 minutes, until the vegetables are tender and nicely browned.

While the vegetables roast, combine the broth and 15 of the thyme sprigs in a large saucepan over medium-high heat. Once the liquid comes to a boil, reduce the heat to low and cook for 20 minutes. Remove from the heat; discard the thyme sprigs.

Stir in the sherry and the roasted mushroom-onion mixture; increase the heat to medium and cook for 8 to 10 minutes. Use an immersion (stick) blender to puree the mixture into a soup that retains a little texture, or, working in batches, transfer it to a blender; before you puree, remove the center knob in the lid and place a clean dish towel over the top. Puree until almost smooth. Return to the saucepan.

If the soup is too thick, stir in a few tablespoons of water to achieve the desired consistency.

Serve the soup with a small spoonful of sour cream or creme fraiche, about 2 teaspoons per serving. Garnish with the leaves from the remaining sprigs of thyme, if desired.

Pair steakhouse side with turkey, instead

By Stephanie Witt Sedgwick
Special to The Washington Post

Roasted mushrooms and onions are a steakhouse staple, but a good piece of meat doesn't need all that help. A more deserving mate for the delicious side dish is quick-cooking slices of turkey.

Choose your favorite combination of mushrooms; I like white, cremini and oyster. The most important thing is to cut the mushrooms into equal-size pieces so they will cook evenly.

TURKEY SCALOPPINE WITH STEAKHOUSE-STYLE MUSHROOMS AND ONIONS

4 servings

- 1 1/4 pounds mushrooms, such as cremini, white and oyster, cleaned and stemmed as needed, then cut into 3/4-inch chunks
 - 1 large onion, cut into 3/4-inch chunks
 - 2 tablespoons olive oil
 - Salt
 - Freshly ground black pepper
 - 1 pound thinly sliced turkey cutlets, no more than 1/4-inch thick
 - 2 medium cloves garlic, finely chopped (2 tablespoons)
 - 1/2 cup dry white wine
 - 2 tablespoons chopped parsley leaves
- Preheat the oven to 400 degrees. Spray a large roasting pan with nonstick cooking oil spray.

Combine the mushrooms, onion, 1 tablespoon of the oil, and salt and pepper to taste in the roasting pan. Roast for 30 to 35 minutes, turning the vegetables every 10 minutes, until they are tender and lightly browned. Remove from the oven.

Heat 1 teaspoon of the remaining oil in a large nonstick skillet over medium-high heat. Season the turkey cutlets lightly with salt. Working in batches, add the turkey so that the skillet is full but not overcrowded. Cook the cutlets for 2 to 3 minutes, until lightly browned. Turn the cutlets over; cook for 2 to 3 minutes, until they are cooked through and lightly browned on the second side. Transfer the cutlets to a serving platter or individual plates. Repeat until all cutlets are cooked and have been transferred to the platter or plates.

Add the remaining 2 teaspoons of oil to the skillet and heat over medium-high heat. Add the garlic and cook for about 2 minutes, stirring, until the garlic is soft and aromatic. Add the roasted mushroom-onion mixture and the white wine. Bring to a boil, then cook for 2 to 3 minutes, until the liquid has reduced by half. Remove from the heat and stir in the parsley.

Top the portions of turkey with equal amounts of the mushroom-onion mixture; serve immediately.

6 servings. This salad makes an elegant appetizer. The avocado is thinly sliced and fanned out on the plate, with the lightly dressed citrus on top.

The citrus salad needs to sit for 30 minutes before serving. It can be made and refrigerated a day in advance, but the avocado should be sliced just before serving.

- 2 large ruby red grapefruit, segmented, with juices (see note)
- 3 large navel oranges, segmented, with juices (see note)
- 1/2 medium sweet onion, cut into small dice (1/2 cup)
- 1 tablespoon apple cider vinegar
- 1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
- 2 teaspoons sugar, or to taste
- Salt
- Freshly ground black pepper
- Flesh of 2 1/2 to 3 avocados (each about 8 ounces)
- 2 tablespoons chopped fresh chives, for garnish

Combine the grapefruit and orange segments plus their reserved juices, onion, vinegar, oil, sugar, and salt and pepper to taste in a medium bowl. Let sit for 30 minutes. Taste, and adjust the seasoning as needed.

Cut the avocados into thin slices, then divide them equally among individual salad plates, fanning the slices out. Spoon the citrus salad over them.

Top with the chives and an additional sprinkling of pepper. Serve immediately.

Note: To segment the citrus, slice off the bottom and the top. Stand the fruit on a cutting board with one of the cut sides down. Use a serrated knife to cut the peel and the pith away from the fruit, top to bottom. Then, holding the fruit in your hand, cut the orange segments away from the membrane. (The idea is to leave behind all of the membrane and white pith.)

BLACK BEAN AND TROPICAL FRUIT SALSA

Makes 3 1/2 cups. Salsa can be served as a sauce over grilled, broiled or roasted poultry, meats and fish. You can use them as a dip for chips, and they can be a side salad. Best of all, they're a great way to sneak in a serving or two of fruits and/or vegetables.

Salsas can be made from many ingredients. The main idea is to chop the ingredients into small pieces and have a balance of flavors and textures. This salsa leans a little to the sweet side with mango and pineapple. It gets some heat from the jalapeno, stays savory with cilantro and black beans, and gets a bite from a hint of lime. If you favor any flavor over the other, adjust the ingredient amounts as you see fit.

This is best eaten within 24 hours, but it will keep for 48 hours.

- 4 ounces fresh pineapple, cut into 1/4-inch dice (scant 1 cup)
- 4 ounces peeled mango, cut into 1/4-inch dice (scant 1 cup)
- 1 1/2 cups cooked black beans (if using canned beans, use a no-salt-added product such as Eden brand)
- 1 jalapeno pepper, stemmed, seeded and finely chopped (1 1/2 ounces pepper, 3 tablespoons chopped)
- Freshly squeezed juice from 1 or 2 limes (2 tablespoons)
- 2 tablespoons chopped

- cilantro leaves
- 1 teaspoon sugar
- Salt

Combine the pineapple, mango, black beans, jalapeno, lime juice, cilantro, sugar and salt to taste in a nonreactive mixing bowl. Let sit for 10 minutes. Taste, and adjust the seasoning as needed. Refrigerate until ready to serve.

WINTER VEGETABLE AND BARLEY SOUP

12 servings. There's some chopping here, but once it's done, this soup's a snap. Choose your favorite vegetables, but try to include parsnips and carrots, as the latter add color as well as flavor.

- 1 tablespoon olive oil
- 1 medium onion, cut into small dice (1 cup)
- 1 large rib celery, cut into 1/4-inch dice (3/4 cup)
- 1 pound assorted root vegetables, such as parsnips, carrots, rutabaga and/or turnips, peeled and cut into 1/4-inch dice
- Salt
- Freshly ground black pepper
- 6 cups low-sodium or homemade chicken broth
- 1/3 cup pearly barley
- 1 cup frozen sweet peas
- 4 ounces cooked ham, cut into 1/4-inch dice

Arugula and roasted squash salad with pears.

- 3 tablespoons chopped chives

Heat the oil in a 4- to 6-quart pot over medium heat. Add the onion and celery; cook for 3 minutes, stirring, then add the diced root vegetables. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Cook, stirring, for 8 to 10 minutes, until the vegetables start to soften.

Stir in the broth and barley. Once the liquid begins bubbling at the edges, cover the pot and adjust the heat so the liquid maintains a little movement. Cook for 45 to 55 minutes or until the barley is done and the vegetables are tender.

Uncover; add the peas and ham. Cook for 5 minutes, stirring a few times, until the peas are tender. Stir in 2 tablespoons of the chives.

Divide among individual bowls; top each portion with a sprinkling of the remaining chives.

QUICK-BRAISED COD IN VEGETABLE BROTH

4 servings. This is one of my go-to weeknight meals: It's fast, flavorful and gets fish and vegetables into the same dish with ease. The fish cooks quickly in the hot liquid, which doubles as a sauce. This dish looks good, smells great and tastes fresh.

Any firm-fleshed white fish can be substituted for the cod.

parsley, for garnish

Heat the oil in a 10- to 12-inch saute pan, preferably one with straight sides, over medium-high heat. Add the onion, bell pepper, salt and pepper to taste; stir to combine. Reduce the heat to medium; cook for about 10 minutes, until the vegetables have softened but not browned.

Add the wine; increase the heat to medium-high and cook for 2 minutes, then add the vegetable juice, lemon zest and sugar. Once the mixture comes to a full boil, immediately reduce the heat to medium or medium-low and cook for 5 minutes, adjusting the heat as needed to maintain a low boil.

Add the fish; cover and cook for about 10 minutes, adjusting the heat as needed to maintain a low boil. The fish should be cooked through.

Add the lemon juice and parsley; taste, and adjust the seasoning as needed.

Serve immediately.

Let dinner take you to another continent in just 40 minutes

By Bonnie S. Benwick
The Washington Post

Creamy, tangy and slightly spicy, this dish might strike you as more Eastern European than Indian. But the seasoning will bring you back to the right continent. The original recipe called for cooking down the liquid more than we’ve done here; we like having lots of sauce for dunking bread, and we found this method keeps the chicken tender. Serve with warm naan or chewy flatbread. Adapted from “Anjum’s New Indian,” by Anjum Anand (Wiley, 2010).

CHICKEN WITH SOUR CREAM AND RED BELL PEPPER

4 or 5 servings

- 1 1/2-inch piece ginger root
- 6 large cloves garlic
- Splash plus 1 1/4 cups just-boiled water, or more as needed
- 1 medium onion
- 1 large red bell pepper
- 3 medium vine-ripened tomatoes
- 1 1/2 pounds boneless, skinless chicken breast halves
- 3 tablespoons vegetable oil
- 2 teaspoons ground coriander
- Salt
- 1/2 to 3/4 teaspoon red chili powder
- 1/4 cup regular or low-fat sour cream (do not use non-fat)
- 1 1/2 teaspoons garam masala (Indian spice blend)

Peel the ginger and cut it crosswise into coins, then drop them into a blender along with the garlic and a splash of the hot water. Puree into a paste, adding water as needed. Finely chop the onion. Stem and seed the bell pepper, then cut the flesh into 1-inch pieces. Finely chop the tomatoes, reserving their juices. Cut the chicken into 2-inch chunks, trimming off any fat. Heat the oil in a large non-stick saucepan or saute pan over medium-high heat until the oil shimmers. Add the onion and cook for about 8 minutes, stirring often, until it has picked up color. Stir in the ginger-garlic paste from the blender; once its water has evaporated (about 30 seconds), stir in the ground coriander, salt, chili powder and tomatoes; cover and cook for about 6 minutes to reduce the juices a bit. Add the chicken and cook for 2 minutes, stirring, then add the remaining 1 1/4 cups of hot water. Once the liquid has come to a boil, reduce the heat to medium-low, add the pieces of bell pepper, then cover and cook for 10 minutes. The chicken should be almost cooked through. Increase the heat to high; cook for 3 minutes, then remove from the heat. Add the sour cream and garam masala; mix well. Taste, and adjust the seasoning as needed. The mixture should be creamy but not too thick; if you want it thinner, stir in a little of the hot water. Divide among individual plates; serve hot. Per serving (based on 5, using low-fat sour cream): 270 calories, 33 g protein, 8 g carbohydrates, 12 g fat, 3 g saturated fat, 85 mg cholesterol, 160 mg sodium, 2 g dietary fiber, 4 g sugar.

This pulled pork recipe is a very simple yet filling meal.

A dinner that screams cold weather comfort food

By J.M. Hirsch
Associated Press writer

This dish started as a three-ingredient slow cooker recipe. And I completely messed it up. I’d read another recipe that called for combining pork butt, a bottle of cola and a bottle of barbecue sauce in the slow cooker, then walking away. Seemed interesting, though the cola idea made me want to gag (and yes, I know lots of people cook with cola). I tried it, substituting a bottle of hard cider for the cola. It was great, except that after six hours in the slow cooker the sauce was still way too liquidy. I ended up dumping the whole thing into a saucepan and boiling it until the sauce was reduced and thick. That made me wonder why I bothered with the slow cooker at all. Why not just do the whole thing on the stove-top? It would be much faster, there would be less cleanup and it would solve my liquid issues. To make this new approach work, I needed to change the cut of pork, but boneless (country-style) ribs worked just fine. And to make a meal of it, I tried the resulting quick-cook cider-barbecue pulled pork over mashed potatoes. It was amazing. Best yet, it was incredibly simple. Though this recipe calls for hard cider (sold alongside beer), sweet cider could be substituted. And while it isn’t as quick as most weeknight recipes, it is almost entirely hands off.

CIDER-BARBECUE PULLED PORK OVER MASHED POTATOES

Start to finish: 1 hour 15 minutes (20 minutes active). Servings: 6.

- 2 pounds boneless (country-style) pork ribs
- 1 pint hard cider
- 18 1/2-ounce bottle barbecue sauce
- 2 1/2 pounds russet potatoes, peeled and quartered
- 6 tablespoons butter
- 1/2 cup whole milk
- 2 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley
- Salt and ground black pepper, to taste

In a large saucepan over medium-high, combine the ribs, cider and barbecue sauce. Stir well, then bring to a boil. Reduce heat to maintain a steady simmer. Cook for 1 hour to 1 1/4 hours, or until the pork is very tender and the liquid is reduced and thick. After 45 minutes, place the potatoes in a medium saucepan. Add enough cold water to cover, then bring to a boil over medium-high heat. Cook until the potatoes are tender. Drain the potatoes and return to the pot. Add the butter and milk, then mash. Mix in the parsley, then season with salt and pepper. Cover and set aside. Use 2 forks to shred and pull apart the pork, mixing it with the sauce. Serve the pork over the mashed potatoes. Per serving: 536 calories; 185 calories from fat (35 percent of total calories); 21 g fat (11 g saturated; 0 g trans fats); 144 mg cholesterol; 46 g carbohydrate; 37 g protein; 2 g fiber; 1,051 mg sodium.

‘Takeout’ dinner for nights when you won’t go out

By Alison Ladman
For The Associated Press

This simple and versatile soba noodle stir-fry is for those nights when your cravings for Asian food aren’t strong enough to get you out the door. Soba noodles are made from buckwheat. In addition to having a mild flavor that works well with many ingredients, they also cook in just 3 to 4 minutes, making them a weeknight dinner dream ingredient. They can be served hot, often in broth, or cold with a dressing. Combined with a quick saute of pork, spinach and mushrooms, these noodles make a satisfying dinner. You also could substitute chicken or beef for the pork, or use tofu for a vegetarian version. Soba noodles are often found in the Asian foods section of the grocery store.

SOBA NOODLE STIR-FRY

Start to finish: 30 minutes. Servings: 4.

- 9 1/2 ounce-package dried soba noodles
- 2 tablespoons vegetable oil
- 1 pound boneless pork chops or cutlets, fat trimmed, cut into strips
- 7 ounces shiitake mushrooms, stemmed and sliced
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 5 ounces baby spinach
- 1 bunch scallions, thinly sliced
- 2 tablespoons soy sauce
- 2 teaspoons chili paste
- 1 tablespoon toasted sesame oil
- 1 tablespoon rice wine
- 1 tablespoon toasted sesame seeds

tions. Drain and set aside. In a large, deep skillet or wok over medium-high, heat the oil until shimmering. Add the pork and saute until cooked through and lightly browned, about 4 to 5 minutes. Add the mushrooms and garlic and saute until the mushrooms are tender, about another 4 to 5 minutes. Add the spinach and scallions and cook until the spinach is wilted, 1 to 2 minutes. Stir in the soy sauce, chili paste, sesame oil, rice wine and the cooked soba noodles. Cook for another minute, or until the noodles are hot. Serve sprinkled with sesame seeds.

Thomas James Coleman

Thomas James Coleman, born Oct. 9, 2007, passed away from a farm accident Sunday, Feb. 6, 2011.

Thomas was the fifth of six children, our beloved second son and the sunshine of our lives. His constant impish smile, turned up nose and jaunty walk drew people to him, and he loved them all. He also loved to tease, loved to feed the cows and loved to be with his family. He was never satisfied, in fact, until he had told us that he loved us three or four times a day. He was Batman, Spiderman and Superman all in one, a stairway speed-racer, ABC singer and best friend to his sisters and brother.

His absence in our lives cannot be filled, but we look forward in faith to being with him again. Until that great reunion, we trust in our loving Heavenly Father to keep him for us.

He is survived by his parents, David and Michele Coleman; his sisters, Cecily, Kindey, Sarah and Rebecca; his brother Michael; grandparents, John and Marge Coleman, and Rulon and Kreen Gilbert; and many dear aunts, uncles and cousins.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Thursday, Feb. 10, at the LDS South Stake Center, 851 Harrison St. S. (off of Orchard Road) in Twin Falls. Friends and family are also invited to meet with the family from 6 to 8 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 9, at White Mortuary. Condolences may be left at www.whitemortuary.com.

Francis H. Hicks

MOUNTAIN HOME — Francis H. Hicks, 86, of Mountain Home, passed on peacefully in the company of his family and loved ones Saturday, Feb. 5, 2011, at a Meridian hospital.

A rosary will be held at 7 p.m. Wednesday, Feb. 9, at Our Lady of Good Counsel in Mountain Home. The funeral mass will be held at 10 a.m. Thursday, Feb. 10, at Our Lady of Good Counsel, and burial will follow with military honors at Mountain View Cemetery in Mountain Home. Arrangements are under the direction of Rost Funeral Home McMurtrey Chapel.

Frank was born Christmas Day 1924 in a farm house in Twin Falls County. He devoted his life with passion to God, his family, his profession and his community. He compassionately and quietly performed acts of kindness to those in need.

He grew up on a farm and attended St. Edwards Catholic Grade School and graduated from Twin Falls High School in 1942. He spent one year at the University of Idaho, where he decided to join the United States Marine Corps to serve his country during World War II. The Marine Corps ordered him to the University of Notre Dame, where he graduated with honors receiving a Bachelor of Law degree. He also attended the University of Edinburgh in Edinburgh, Scotland.

He practiced law in Boise from 1949 to 1957, during which time he met the love of his life, Barbara J. Nicholson. They were married in Boise on June 20, 1953, at the Sacred Heart Catholic Church. Frank and Barbara started their family in Boise and soon realized they wanted to live in a small community. In 1957, they moved to Mountain Home, where he opened a law practice with Barbara as his legal secretary.

Frank always found time while building his law practice and raising his family to take an active role in civic and political activities. He served at various levels of government beginning shortly after moving to Mountain Home. He was Elmore County prosecuting attorney twice and was city attorney in Mountain Home, Glens Ferry and Atlanta. He also served two years as an Elmore County commissioner and was a member of the board of directors for the county's Community Action Program.

In the early 1960s, he was a charter member and chairman of the board of directors for Idaho Legal Aid. In 1979, he was appointed by Gov. Evans to the Idaho State Board of Pharmacy, the board's first public member. He served until 1988.

In 1972, he was president of the Mountain Home Chamber of Commerce, then became a member of the Military Affairs Committee. He was a member of the Elmore County Historical Foundation, Friends of the Library, American Legion, Knights of Columbus and the Idaho State Bar. He was a charter member and director of High Reachers, Inc., an organization dedicated to helping handicapped adults.

He served on the Idaho State Bar Ethics Committee and received an award for outstanding service. He was also honored in 1989 for his work with the Pro-Bono Program.

In 2009, he was recognized for 60 years in the practice of law by the Idaho State Bar for rendering conscientious and meritorious service to the bench, bar and the citizenry of the state of Idaho.

Frank's family will fondly remember him as a true Christian who showed love and kindness to all he knew. There were many things that brought him joy, including time he spent in Featherville with family and friends. He loved tending his roses and reciting Shakespeare, Kipling, Longfellow and Frost, among others. He loved the sound of children's laughter, baking apple pies, Notre Dame football, watching his children and grandchildren succeed, chatting with his sister, Catherine on the phone and relatives "across the pond," limericks, reading, hunting with buddies and his faithful dog, Flush, lemon drops for his great-grandchildren, "roughing it in the wilds of Idaho," one-on-one conversations over a beer or a cup of tea, and spending time with his loving companion, Betty, during the past eight years. He said many times, "I want to live life at the side of the road and be a friend to all mankind," and that he did.

Special thanks to Dr. Byrns, Dr. Lyon and the entire staff of Complex Care of Idaho for the loving compassionate and professional care they gave to our father the past several weeks. Thanks as well to Brian Gilliam for his constant support.

Extinguishing a kitchen fire

By William Hageman
Chicago Tribune

Degree of difficulty: Medium: Actions are not difficult but required in a time of panic.

Tools required: Pan lid, fire extinguisher, common sense.

According to the National Fire Protection Association, four out of five fire-related deaths among civilians occur in the home. It makes sense to be prepared. Smoke alarms can alert you to a fire, and sprinklers can extinguish a blaze. Beyond that, fire extinguishers are a must, but even that might not be sufficient. If it's small enough and you think you can put it out, "always make sure everyone is out of the house and at a safe distance," says Heather Paul of State Farm Insurance.

Kitchen fires: Most home fires occur in the kitchen; unattended cooking is the leading cause. For any kitchen fire, the first thing to do is turn off the heat. For a grease fire or any pan fire on the stove, place a metal lid or plate over the fire to cut off the oxygen supply. (And keep the lid on; lifting it resupplies oxygen and contents will burst back into flame).

A fire extinguisher can handle a grease fire (don't use water; that only makes the fire spread). If the fire is contained to the pot, bank the spray from the extinguisher off the back of the stove or the bottom of the microwave if it's above the stove. If the oil or grease has already spilled and the top of the oven is on fire, sweep the spray of the extinguisher at the base of the fire. For a toaster fire, unplug the toaster and use an extinguisher. If a fire is in the oven or microwave, leave the door closed until the fire burns out.

Fire extinguishers are not created equal. Some are rated for fires involving paper, trash and cloth; some for fires involving flammable liquids; still others for electric fires. Some are multipurpose, the best choice for homes.

Not sure what to buy? Go to your local fire department or the NFPA website (nfpa.org).

Have an extinguisher on each floor of the home, but at least have one in the kitchen.

Familiarize yourself and your family with how the extinguisher works. (In general: Pull the pin, aim at the base of the fire, squeeze the trigger evenly, spray in a back-and-forth motion.) Check it annually to be sure it's filled and working properly. (The best place to have it looked over is at a fire station, Paul says.)

Firefighting strategies: If the room begins to fill with smoke, get out and call 911.

When fighting a fire, keep yourself between it and an exit, in case it gets out of control.

If a fire spreads or builds, get everyone out of the house and call the fire department. Kitchen fires can double in size every 60 seconds; speed is essential.

Never turn your back on a fire, even after it's out. Fires can rekindle almost instantly. Even if you extinguish it, call the fire department to make sure it is indeed out.

Kimberly rallies to take down Filer

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

KIMBERLY — By the time Filer's boys basketball team figures out what happened in the last five minutes of Tuesday's game, it might be time to board the bus for Monday's trip back to Kimberly.

Kimberly blitzed Filer over that stretch to rally from a double-digit deficit and shock the Wildcats 48-43, setting up a Monday matchup between the two teams on the same floor to open the Class 3A District IV Tournament.

The Wildcats (12-7, 1-3 Sawtooth Central Idaho Conference) led by as much as 15 in the second half and had a 40-27 lead with 4:47 left in the game. But Kimberly (14-3, 2-2) threw the switch after Brian Crane was fouled on a 3-point attempt.

Crane hit all three foul shots to kick-start a 21-3 run that closed out the game and sent the raucous Bulldog fans home happy.

"You heard the crowd. It was awesome, the loudest it's been here in a while," said Crane, who scored all six of his points in the fourth quarter. "We had to put pressure on them, take chances so we could get the ball back. The crowd got loud. Amazing. Incredible."

Kimberly forced a string of Filer turnovers to get back into the game. Derek Maloney canned a pair of 3-pointers, Tevan Brady added another and the Bulldogs were tied when Maloney hit a turnaround jumper in the lane with 1:05 to go.

Seconds later a steal from Crane again sent Kimberly the other way, where Brock Hulsey hit a foul shot and Maloney got two more after Filer lost the rebound from Hulsey's missed second shot out of bounds.

"We just huddled together and started playing like a team, playing how we can," said Maloney, who scored 14 of his game-high 20 in the final period. "For the first three quarters we didn't look like we knew what we were doing offensively, but in the fourth quarter we just lit it up."

The Wildcats trailed 10-9 after a quarter but raced out in the second quarter on the strength of eight points from Austin Beard, who led the team with 10. Austin Tews keyed a 9-0 run to start the third quarter and stake Filer to a 31-16 lead.

But Kimberly lurked between 12 and 14 points behind for nearly eight minutes before switching to a 1-3-1 halfcourt trap, which frustrated Filer and caused the Wildcats' young guards to crumble under the pressure.

"I thought we got real tentative there with about four and a half to go, and credit them, they hit all the big shots," said Filer coach Allen Kelsey. "We were trying to stretch them and get more movement from our guys to get high-percentage shots, and certainly not quick shots, but we got too tentative.

"It doesn't change anything for next week, except where we play. We'll come out and be better next week."

Both teams end the regular season Friday, when Kimberly hosts Jerome and Filer entertains Gooding.

Weary winners: Declo grapplers win at Burley

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Although it wasn't originally on the schedule, Declo traveled down the road to Burley for a wrestling dual Tuesday night so that the Bobcats could have a proper senior night.

"They've had quite a few matches. I'm just grateful that they would come over and do this," said Burley coach Ted Tateoka.

Despite wrestling its 13th dual in six days, Declo won 52-30. Each team surrendered four forfeits, and of the six wrestled matches, Declo won five of them.

"We've had close duals with Burley for years," said Declo coach Lawrence Gillette. "We're right here close to each other and we want to see each other every year. It's good competition that helps both of our programs."

The Bobcats celebrated their five seniors: Adrian

Quiroz, Jake Lake, Christian Parke, Johnny Martin and John Chesley. But only Parke at 130 pounds got to wrestle, as he made quick work of Declo's David Tapia, pinning him in 13 seconds.

That's as far as the highlights went for Burley, however.

The Hornets' Josh Phillips pinned Francisco Parke at 119 pounds, Matt Newman pinned Kyle Willes at 12 and Justin Cameron pinned Federico Llanos at 135.

Despite a sore back, Declo's Jacob Miles earned a 10-2 major decision over Juan Deleon at 145.

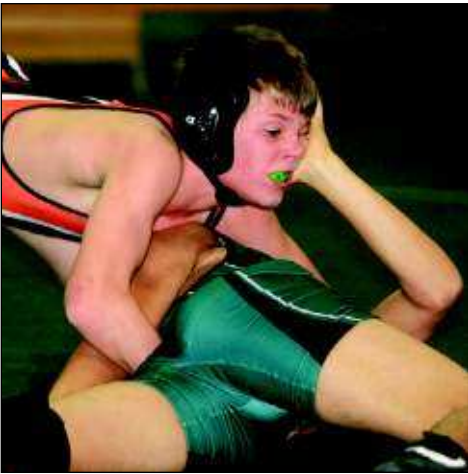

"It felt like when I would shoot, he didn't sprawl very good," Miles said. "He started giving up as the match went on, like he was tired. He felt tough, though."

Declo's usual 160-pounder Jason Gillette didn't make weight and wrestled up at 171, where he

Twin Falls beats Minico to earn rematch with Wood River

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

Hailey is starting to feel like the Bruins' second home.

After rolling past Minico 46-30 Tuesday night, Twin Falls will head north to the mountains to face No. 1 seed Wood River for the Class 4A District IV Tournament championship game Thursday — its third trip to Hailey this season.

"It's become a tough place to play, but we've been there before, we know what to expect and we'll be ready to play," said senior post Alex Simmons.

The Bruins were determined to take another trip to the Wolverines' gym.

They never trailed Tuesday night, jumping all over the Spartans for an early 11-4 lead and pushing the margin to 18 late in the fourth.

"We put together four solid quarters," said Twin Falls coach Nancy Jones.

Allie Kelsey set the tone, hitting both of her 3-pointers in the first quarter and scoring eight of her team-leading 18 points. Jazlyn Nielsen handled the third quarter, dominating inside the paint to score seven of

CSI's Gosar sets aside Wyoming speculation

Eagles No. 7 in latest poll

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

Monday's firing of Wyoming men's basketball coach Heath Schroyer created some speculation that College of Southern Idaho head coach Steve Gosar could be the man to fill the Cowboys' opening.

Asked Tuesday if he planned to pursue the Wyoming position Gosar said, "No," adding, "That's a tough job."

Gosar played at Wyoming and spent two seasons as a graduate assistant with the Cowboys. The third-year CSI head coach said he is still close to Wyoming's program, but believes the Cowboys will seek someone with NCAA Division I head coaching experience.

Gosar was an assistant under Schroyer at Portland State from 2002 to 2005 and was disappointed to hear the news of Schroyer's firing.

"I feel bad for him," Gosar said. "That's a hard job. And if you have a few injuries, it only gets worse."

Speculation aside, Gosar is focused on helping his Golden Eagles wrap up the

Scenic West Athletic Conference regular-season title. CSI (22-3, 8-2 SWAC) lost at Eastern Utah last weekend, but fell just one spot to No. 7 in the NJCAA Division I rankings, released Tuesday. CEU (20-5, 7-3) entered the poll at No. 25, while league members Salt Lake Community College (20-5, 6-4) and North Idaho College (20-5, 5-5) checked

CSI's Skip Walker to be inducted to ABCA Hall of Fame

Times-News

Former College of Southern Idaho head baseball coach Jim 'Skip' Walker has been selected to be inducted into the American Baseball Coaches Association Hall of Fame, the school's athletic department announced Tuesday.

Walker, currently an assistant coach at CSI under his son Boomer, led the Golden Eagle program for 31 seasons. During that time he coached CSI to 12 Region 18 Tournament championships, nine appearances in the JUCO World Series and the program's only national championship in 1984.

"I'm very happy about it," Walker said of his selection. "I think it's a lot of endurance and hard work and some luck."

Walker, who was inducted into the CSI Athletic Hall of Fame in 2003, posted more than 1,000 wins during his tenure as head coach. The CSI baseball complex, which he helped transform into one of the premier facilities in the region, bears his name.

CSI baseball hangs on for win in Arizona

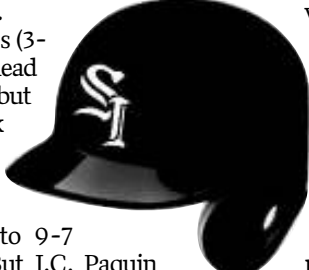

Times-News

The College of Southern Idaho baseball team made it more interesting than it needed to be, but at least the Golden Eagles got above the .500 mark on their trip to Arizona.

CSI rolled out to a big lead, then nearly gave it all away and had to hold on for a 10-9 win at Scottsdale (Ariz.) Community College on Tuesday.

The Golden Eagles (3-2) built up a 9-0 lead after 3 1/2 innings but gave four right back in the bottom of the fourth inning, ultimately seeing the lead dwindle to 9-7 after six innings. But J.C. Paquin connected on an inside-the-park home run to give CSI the eventual winning run.

“Better than blowing it all and losing the game,” CSI coach Boomer Walker said.

Paquin hit a ball to the right-field wall and the Artichokes’ right fielder ran into the wall and stayed down, allowing the Canadian slugger to rumble around the bases.

Trey Mohammed picked up the win, going 3 1-3 innings in relief of Paul Schaak, who Walker said pitched well but ran into trouble in the fourth inning.

Travis Huber picked up his second save of the season, striking out the final two batters after getting into a jam in the bottom of the ninth.

“They just battled. They came right back and kept scrapping their way back in and we held on for dear life,” Walker said.

Tyler McCarty continued his torrid start to the season, picking up three hits and a walk. Even his outs were hit hard, Walker said.

Ben Douglas doubled twice and Parker Webster had an RBI triple in the win.

Purdue beats Indiana

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. — E’Twaun Moore scored 25 points and JaJuan Johnson added 15 to help No. 14 Purdue pull away from Indiana for a 67-53 victory Tuesday night.

This was the first time since 1996-97 that Purdue (19-5, 8-3 Big Ten) has won four straight from the Hoosiers.

Indiana played again without injured sophomore starters Maurice Creek and Christian Watford. Freshman Will Sheehy scored a season-high 14 points and Jordan Hulls finished with 13 to lead the Hoosiers (12-13, 3-9), who fell under the .500 mark for the first time this season. They have also lost four straight at Mackey Arena, where they last won March 1, 2006.

It was the Bruins’ suffocating defense though that really willed the team to victory, especially in the first half. The Bruins clogged the paint and frustrated the Spartans into tough, contested shots, holding Minico to only three first-half field goals. Simmons came off the bench in the second quarter with her energy and length to block four shots and record one steal.

“Their defense was great. We couldn’t do very much on the offensive end, especially inside the paint,” said Minico coach Joe D. Shepard. “They really stepped up and you could tell they were a focused team tonight.”

The loss ends the season for Minico (11-13), which for three-quarters of the season sat near the bottom of the Great Basin standings.

“You look back and we were sitting there at 3-10 and we came together and played so well down the stretch and in this tournament,” Shepard said. “I’m really proud of these girls. Things look good for us next season.”

With the win, Twin Falls (17-6) secures a bid to the Class 4A state tournament for the second year in a row.

“This feels great. We’re really excited. We’ve been looking to this all season,” Kelsey said. “It’s so awesome for all of our seniors to get this state experience.”

Before state, they’ll have one last crack at Wood River (18-2), which has beaten the Bruins in all three matchups this season.

“We have nothing to lose. We know we’re going to state, but we need to come out and play hard, play focused and play good defense and we can beat them,” Kelsey said.

PACKER PARTY

Fans celebrate with team at Lambeau

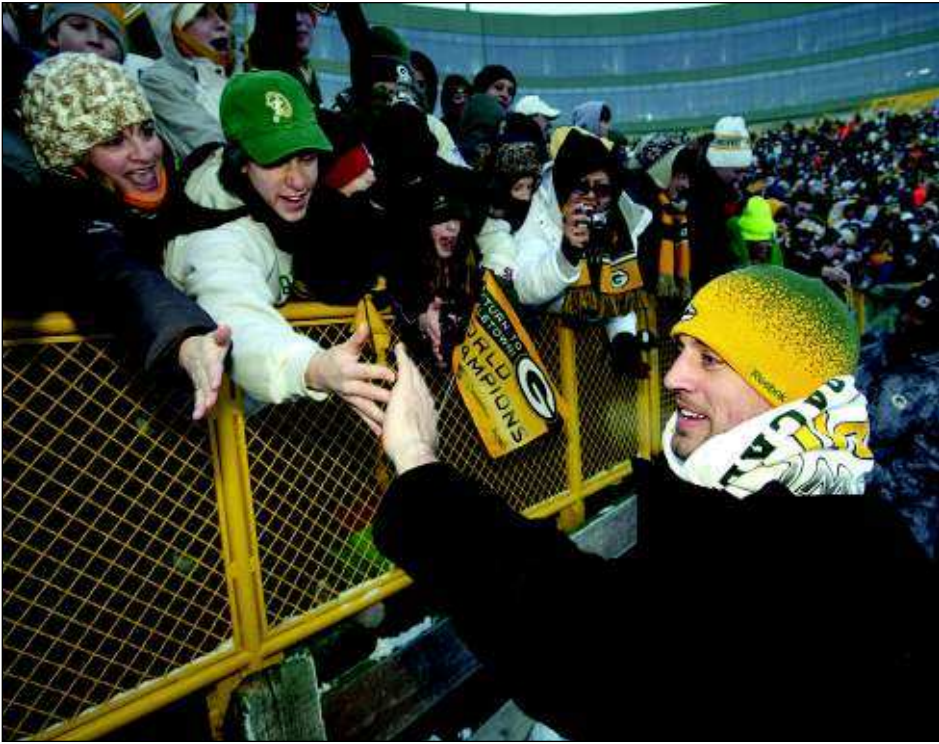

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Green Bay Packers fans rejoiced one more time with their cherished Super Bowl champions during a frigid ceremony Tuesday to welcome the Lombardi Trophy back to Lambeau Field after a 14-year absence.

Temperatures were in the single digits as the celebration began, but the Packer diehards were undaunted. Fans in the front row of the stadium traded high-fives with the players and reached out to touch the championship trophy as coach Mike McCarthy marched past with the hardware hoisted high over his head.

The Lombardi Trophy carries special meaning in Green Bay because it's named for the Hall of Fame coach Vince Lombardi, who led the Packers to victories in the first two Super Bowls.

"I will never forget this," said Amanda Lee, 33, of Milwaukee, who wore the No. 12 jersey of quarterback Aaron Rodgers, the Super Bowl MVP. "I got to touch the trophy, but I couldn't actually feel it (because her hands were so cold). I touched Aaron Rodgers' pinky! I'll never wash my hand again."

The celebration capped a party that has been going nonstop in Green Bay since Sunday, when the Packers defeated the Pittsburgh Steelers 31-25 in Arlington, Texas, to win their fourth Super Bowl title and first since 1996. The ceremony shone a spotlight on the decades-old love affair between the team and the NFL's smallest-market city.

On Sunday night, thousands took to the streets to celebrate amid an explosion of green-and-gold fireworks. On Monday, tens of thousands of hoarse but giddy fans lined the roads from Austin Straubel International Airport to Lambeau to cheer on the team's motorcade as it returned to the stadium.

The 56,000 tickets for the official "Return to Titletown" ceremony Tuesday sold out within hours on Monday. Fans from far and wide were in the stadium's parking lot early Monday morning, grilling brats, throwing down beers and tossing footballs in a final tailgate party — never mind a wind chill of 14 below.

"The weather's fine. I can barely feel it," Ken Hampp, 23, of Appleton, said in the Lambeau parking lot as he sipped a Budweiser, before it froze. "That's my favorite thing about winter. You can just stick your beer in the snow."

The stadium opened two hours before the ceremony. The atmosphere inside was electric as fans watched highlights from the past season on the stadium's giant television screens set to a rousing orchestral soundtrack. The crowd waved world champion flags, erupted into chants of "Go Pack Go!" and danced to House of Pain's "Jump Around" and the Village People's "YMCA."

Green Bay Mayor Jim Schmitt addressed the crowd from a stage on the 50-yard line, announcing the city would name a street "McCarthy's Way" in keeping with a tradition that calls for the city to name a street after every Super Bowl-winning coach.

This Ty Cobb prefers hoops over baseball

LOS ANGELES (AP) — This Ty Cobb prefers a big orange ball to a small white one.

The great-grandson of the Hall of Fame player chose basketball over baseball at Occidental College, a Division III school whose nickname would surely have the approval of The Georgia Peach — the Tigers.

The 19-year-old reserve freshman forward is averaging 3.4 points and 3.5 rebounds. His coach, Brian Newhall, found his name through an East Coast scouting service, and was intrigued.

Cobb was 6-foot-5, a good student from Menlo Park, Calif., and his father graduated from Occidental. The kid's name didn't register with the 50-year-old coach, who is clearly cornering the market on descendants of sports legends — John Wooden's great-grandson was on his team four years ago.

"I had no idea who Ty Cobb was," Newhall said. "My baseball career ended when I was 7 years old. Everyone else in the world other than me was aware who Ty Cobb was."

Tyrus Raymond Cobb was simply one of the toughest and greatest players in baseball history, his spikes high and his will to win unrivaled. The outfielder spent 22 seasons with the Detroit Tigers, including the last six as their player-manager, and played for the Philadelphia Athletics.

The great-grandson — Tyrus Charles Brogan Cobb — said the name has opened a window on baseball that he wouldn't have looked into otherwise, including a visit to the Hall of Fame.

"I did a lot of reading about old baseball players that were contemporaries of Ty Cobb," he said. "Just being connected to a part of history got me interested in research."

At times, the name has been a burden, usually with older adults who recognize it more than a lot of kids do.

"Every once in a while I'll get people who think they know more about Ty Cobb than I do and say, 'Oh, he was a terrible guy, he was a jerk,'" the younger Cobb said. "Ty Cobb does have kind of a tough reputation, but people who say that just aren't informed or just want to start an argument."

The elder Cobb was born in Narrows, Ga., in 1886 when the South was strictly segregated. Along with a reputation for a surly temperament and an aggressive playing style, he was widely regarded as a racist, with history noting his run-ins and scrapes with blacks on and off the field.

"I've got no qualms with how Ty Cobb led his life," his great-grandson said. "From what I've heard from my dad who knew him really well as a grandpa, he was a very generous, loving man. He was always fair to everyone and was just a pleasure to be around."

The younger Cobb plays on an Occidental team that includes three black and three Latino players.

"He was born in Jim Crow (era) Georgia," Cobb said. "It was a completely different world than living in California these days, which is such a diverse area and people are just comfortable being around people that aren't the same skin color or from the same background."

His namesake retired a wealthy man, having invested heavily in Coca-Cola and General Electric stock. He died in 1961 at 74.

"They don't know he made his money from investing. He retired to Atherton, California, which is a very nice area," Cobb said. "He had a big house in Tahoe right on the lake and that was all from being an astute businessman, even though he never went to college and never got much of a formal education."

Cobb is considering majoring in economics and possibly attending business school.

He played three sports at Sacred Heart Prep in the Bay Area. He was a double-figure scorer and rebounder on the basketball team and a first baseman and left-handed pitcher on the baseball team.

Wake baseball coach donates kidney to player

By Joedy McCreary
Associated Press writer

Wake Forest baseball coach Tom Walter has donated a kidney to a freshman player who suffers from a disease that can lead to kidney failure.

Both Walter and outfielder Kevin Jordan were recovering Tuesday in an Atlanta hospital one day after the transplant was performed.

"For us, it's almost like it's been divine intervention," Jordan's father Keith told The Associated Press in a telephone interview Tuesday from Atlanta.

Dr. Kenneth Newell, the lead surgeon on the team that removed Walter's kidney, said in a statement issued Tuesday by Wake Forest that he expects Walter and Jordan to recover fully.

The school says the recovery time for both the 42-year-old Walter and 20 Jordan is expected to be several months. Walter said it will be two months before he is back to normal. Keith Jordan says his son could swing a bat again in 6-8 weeks, and he expects Kevin to enroll in summer school in June and prepare for the fall semester.

For now, though, he said the priority for his son is the early stage of recovery, which includes taking short walks in the hospital Tuesday and making sure his incision doesn't become infected.

"I think he's feeling great, outside of he's still got a couple of tubes hanging out of him," Keith Jordan said.

Keith Jordan said he isn't worrying about when his son, a 19th-round draft pick of the New York Yankees last June, may return to the field.

"One of the things we do know for Kevin is, he's going to want to go do stuff right away," Keith Jordan said. "He's going to have to take care of himself. ... His intention is to get back on the field, so I'm sure he's going to do whatever it takes to do that."

Walter said the "best-case scenario is that Kevin and I just lead a normal life"

Wake Forest baseball coach Tom Walter, right, visits with player Kevin Jordan one day after donating a kidney to Jordan at Emory University Hospital in Atlanta on Tuesday.

but added that the great story will come when Jordan "makes it back to the playing field."

Jordan had trouble shaking the flu last winter as a high school senior in Columbus, Ga., and lost 20 pounds. Doctors at Emory University Hospital in Atlanta discovered his kidney was functioning at only 15 to 20 percent.

He was diagnosed last April with ANCA vasculitis, a type of autoimmune swelling disorder caused by abnormal antibodies. When those abnormalities show up in the kidneys, they can cause blood and protein to leak into the urine and could result in kidney failure.

He wound up on dialysis — three days a week at first, and then daily. Family members were tested to see if any were a possible match for a transplant, and Walter was tested in December after it was determined that his relatives weren't compatible.

Walter found out Jan. 28, during the team's first practice of the spring semester, that he was a match. He told the team three days later, and said the players greeted the news with "stunned silence followed by a round of applause."

"A lot of things had to come together for it to happen," Keith Jordan said. "Everybody wants a feel-good story wherever they can get it."

Contador submits final defense to overturn ban

MADRID (AP) — Alberto Contador submitted his final defense to overturn a proposed one-year ban for a positive doping test during the Tour de France.

Contador submitted more documentation to Spanish cycling authorities to demonstrate his positive test for clenbuterol from contaminated meat was due to "no fault or negligence."

Contador could be stripped of his third Tour title and miss out on this year's edition if the one-year suspension is upheld. The standard doping penalty is a two-year ban, but the Spanish cycling federation opted to go with one year.

"With the documents presented and the two new points we've introduced there's hope this (decision) changes," Contador told Spanish national radio on Monday. "The rule says the athlete must show responsibility and negligence for a sanction to be applied."

The clenbuterol was found in a sample from a Tour rest day on July 21. Traces of the drug were found in tests performed over the next three days, but the Spanish disciplinary committee dismissed those failed tests as clenbuterol takes several days to disappear from a person's system completely.

Contador submitted another 35 pages to the 90 he previously presented with an emphasis on supporting both the International Cycling Union's and the World Anti-Doping Agency's regulations that suggest a ban can be eliminated if the athlete shows no intention to cheat and unintentional consumption of a performance-enhancing drug.

Part of Contador's defense is the case of French tennis player Richard Gasquet, who avoided a ban after proving he inadvertently ingested cocaine after kissing a woman at a nightclub.

A final ruling is expected later this week, but that decision can be appealed to the Court of Arbitration for Sport by Contador, the UCI or WADA.

"An athlete tested positive in Mexico, where clenbuterol is used in cattle, but in the European Union meat goes through more controls and it's illegal to fatten cattle using this substance. I could never expect that meat to be contaminated," Contador said.

Clenbuterol has been outlawed since 1996 and it showed up only once in 83,203 animal samples tested by EU countries in 2008 and 2009, with zero positive cases in Spain from 19,431 samples analyzed.

Contador's team has also called on Spanish cycling's disciplinary committee to take into account "the principle of equality" when it comes to analyzing athlete's samples.

Today is Wednesday, Feb. 9, the 40th day of 2011. There are 325 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On Feb. 9, 1861, Jefferson Davis was elected provisional president of the Confederate States of America at a congress held in Montgomery, Ala. (He was inaugurated on Feb. 18.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1773, the ninth president of the United States, William Henry Harrison, was born in Charles City County, Va.

In 1825, the House of Representatives elected John Quincy Adams president after no candidate received a majority of electoral votes.

In 1870, the U.S. Weather Bureau was established.

In 1943, the World War II battle of Guadalcanal in the southwest Pacific ended with an Allied victory over Japanese forces.

In 1950, in a speech in Wheeling, W.Va., Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R-Wis.) charged the State Department was riddled with Communists.

In 1961, The Beatles (with Stu Sutcliffe and Pete Best) first performed at the Cavern Club in Liverpool, England.

In 1964, The Beatles made their first live American television appearance on "The Ed Sullivan Show," broadcast from New York on CBS.

In 1971, a magnitude 6.6 earthquake in California's San Fernando Valley claimed 65 lives. The crew of Apollo 14 returned to Earth after man's third landing on the moon.

In 1984, Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov died at age 69, less than 15 months after succeeding Leonid Brezhnev; he was succeeded by Konstantin U. Chernenko.

In 2002, Britain's Princess Margaret, sister of Queen Elizabeth II, died in London at age 71.

Ten years ago: A U.S. Navy submarine, the USS Greeneville, collided with a Japanese fishing boat, the Ehime Maru, while surfacing off the Hawaiian coast, killing nine men and boys aboard the boat.

Five years ago: President George W. Bush defended U.S. surveillance efforts, saying spy work helped thwart terrorists plotting to use shoe bombs to hijack an airliner and crash it into the tallest skyscraper on the West Coast. Kidnapped American journalist Jill Carroll appeared in a video aired on a private Kuwaiti TV station, appealing for her supporters to do whatever it took to win her release "as quickly as possible." (She was freed on March 30, 2006.) British entrepreneur Sir Freddie Laker died in Hollywood, Fla., at age 83.

One year ago: Appealing for bipartisanship, President Barack Obama sat down with Democrats and Republicans to spur cooperation on job creation, deficit reduction and health care overhaul. First lady Michelle Obama launched her "Let's Move" campaign against childhood obesity. Iran began enriching uranium to a higher level over the vociferous objections of the U.S. and its allies. Walter Fredrick Morrison, credited with inventing the Frisbee, died in Monroe, Utah, at age 90.

DEAR ABBY: My 70-year-old father has asked his 40-year-old girlfriend to marry him. This will be his fourth marriage. They have been dating for a year, and she says she wants to have two or three children with him.

My sisters and I are not happy at all. Our father was a horrible father when we were growing up. To say he doesn't like children is putting it mildly. Also, we feel he would be incredibly selfish and irresponsible to consider bringing a baby into this world at his age when he may not be around long enough to take care of the child.

Do my sisters and I have a right to be upset about this? How would you suggest we handle this?

— DISGUSTED

DAUGHTERS IN TEXAS
DEAR DAUGHTERS: Do you have a right to be upset? You absolutely have a right to your feelings and opinions. However, as an adult, your father is entitled to do as he wishes, regardless of how you feel about his choices. "Handle" this as gracefully as possible without shooting your mouths off unless you want to create a permanent rift.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to my wife almost 40 years. I love her dearly and she says she loves me, but when I want to hold her, she tenses up like I'm a rapist. When I kiss her longer than a nano-second, she makes noises that sound as though I have a pillow over her face. We haven't slept in the same bed in so long I can't remember what it's like. When I try to talk to her about it, she ignores me. How can I get her to realize how much I hurt?

— LONELY AND HURT
IN MIDDLE GRANVILLE, N.Y.

DEAR LONELY AND HURT: Your wife's hormones may have changed and sex may be painful for her or no longer appealing. She may be afraid that if she lets you hold her, or kiss her longer than a nano-second, it would imply she is receptive. You need to explain to her how deeply her lack of communication on this subject has hurt you. She should have discussed this with her doctor when the problem started. But if she refuses, then you should both talk to a marriage counselor. If she won't go, go alone.

DEAR ABBY: A couple of years ago we loaned our nephew "Seth" $400 because he was in a tight spot. The amount was something we could afford to lose, but knowing the pitfalls of lending to a relative, we formalized the loan with a written agreement for repayment. We never saw the money again.

We have just received a wedding invitation from Seth. We're not particularly close to him, and because we live across the country we don't plan to attend the wedding.

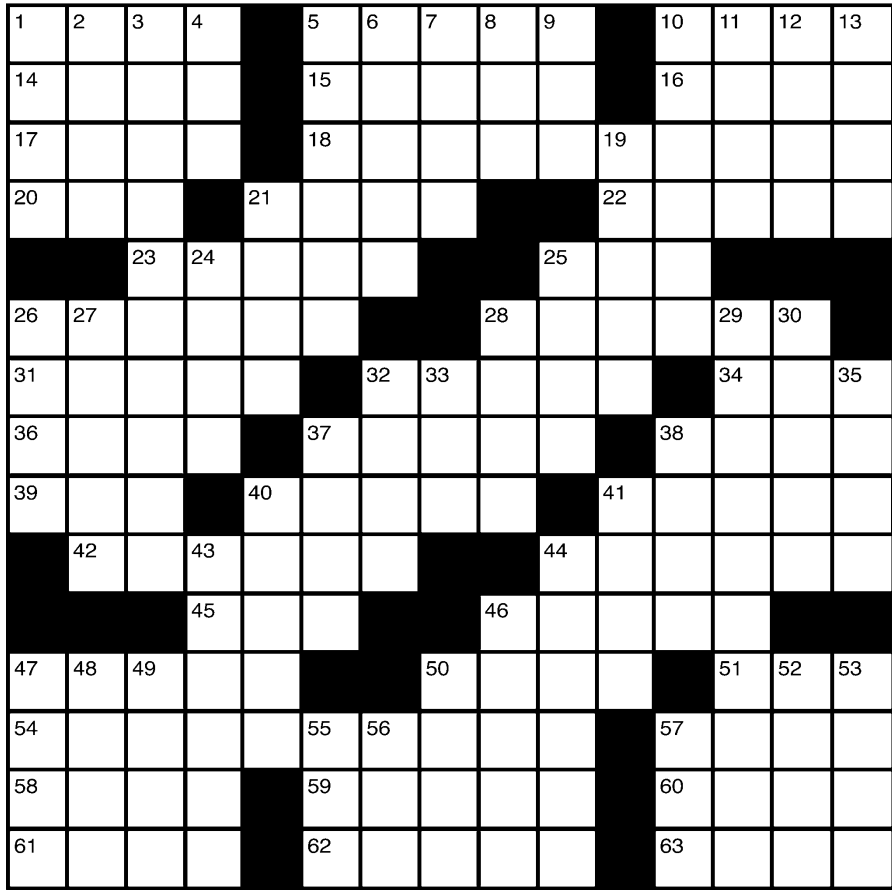

In lieu of a wedding gift, would it be inappropriate to send a note forgiving some or all of the debt he owes us? Or should we consider the debt and his wedding separately and send him something more traditional?

— UNCLE MIKE IN UTAH

DEAR UNCLE MIKE: Because you are not particularly close to this nephew, are not planning to attend the wedding and it's unlikely that Seth will repay the loan, send him a congratulatory card.

IF FEBRUARY 9 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You might feel like the godfather during the upcoming six weeks. People take you at your word and appreciate your astute business sense, so you can make progress with career, finances, or business in general. You may be able to rest on your laurels or enjoy the fruits of your labors in May when your cup runneth over with optimism and the good things of life are easy to find. This is a good month to launch important projects or to make crucial decisions because you not only have good judgment, but can rely upon the advice of others who wish you the best. During October, self-discipline and acting like a responsible citizen will bring you the best results. Maintain a low profile, get to work on time and give no on reason to criticize your performance.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The simplest solutions may solve the hardest problem. You could be fretting over hardships when you could easily resolve the situation by using simple, sound principles. Sidestep unnecessary expenses.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Opinions are original, but not necessarily outrageous. New groups or friendships might give you a fresh perspective about your relationships. Remain poised for playtime when passions bubble to the surface.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Political correctness corrals your curiosity. Everyone could be so worried about offending sensibilities that there is little left to say. If you search high and low, you will find someone on the same wavelength.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Bask in the light of reflected admiration. The more you express your affections, approval, and ardor, the more those feelings of fondness bounce back and brighten your life.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Pay attention to those in the know. Use someone else as a sounding board. There is much to be learned from anyone who is passionate about a subject. Know when to speak and when to maintain silence.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): It can't be recess all day long. You may find yourself locked into boring routines and schedules. Remain focused on the necessary tasks at hand and persevere. Rewards and freedom will arrive in time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Hot stuff warms the heart. Seductions simmer like soup in the saucepan. You'll remember why a certain someone captured your heart in the first place. Be wise; show how much you really care.

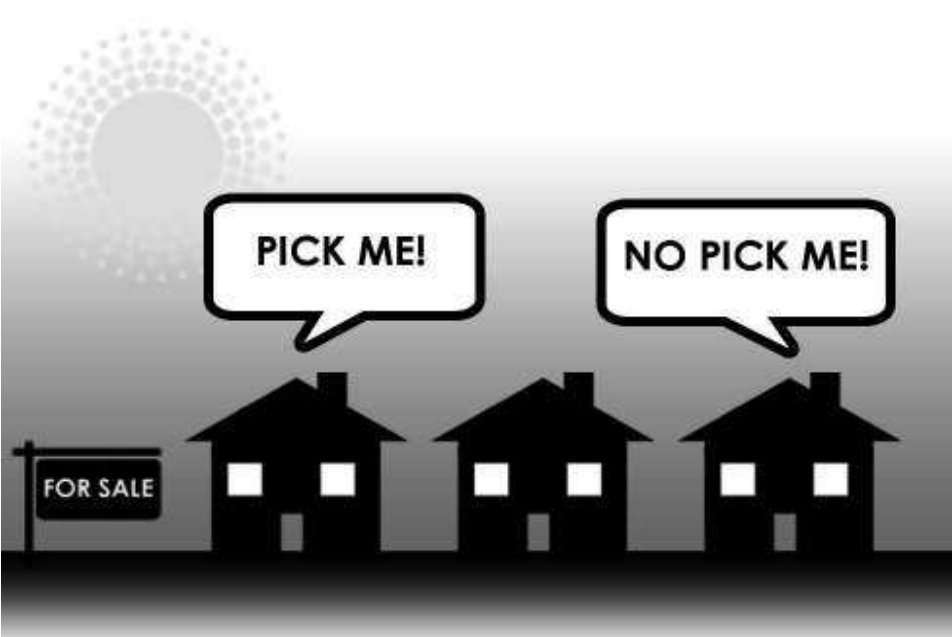

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Work could play second fiddle to personal enjoyment. An amorous interlude could highlight the day, whether with a current love interest or perhaps even somebody new. Be alert for signs of interest.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If you wait too long you'll miss the boat. Good things come to those who wait, but you may have noticed that procrastinators seldom get invited to a party. Do not agonize over a decision.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): With pleasure-loving Venus in your sign you may attract your fair share of ardent admirers. Real success comes from what you do, and how hard you work — but whom you know is important, too.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Use tact when you aren't certain of the facts. Examine the fine print before you sign anything of importance. Work may pile up, but you can unwind with a loved one tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Make sure you are not spending beyond your means due to bad advice. Do not lose money because someone else is handling your funds. Use money wisely.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"When people will not weed their own minds, they are apt to be overrun with nettles."

— Horace Walpole

Some readers have claimed that column deals must be the product of a fevered imagination, rather than the humdrum affairs that come up at the club or the rubber bridge table.

Possibly true, but the deals in this column, whether from real life or not, try to convey a message. Sometimes that message is brought home by the striking nature of the route to success, as in today's deal. As South, you opened four spades in third seat. Plan the play on the lead of the diamond ace.

At the table most players would probably ruff and draw trumps, then take the losing club finesse. Now comes the second critical moment in the deal. If East thoughtlessly shifts to a low heart, declarer can duck, and the danger in hearts has passed. If East switches to either the heart jack or nine, the defenders take their three heart tricks and set the contract.

Alert readers will note that I said the second critical moment had been reached. Can you see what the first was? At trick one declarer can almost insure the contract by discarding a club from hand! He wins the continuation, draws trumps, and cashes the club ace and king. If the queen has not dropped, he plays the club jack from dummy, discarding a heart unless East plays the queen. This gives him seven spade tricks and three club tricks.

ANSWER: Your side has decent prospects of game after your partner's two-level overcall, but you do not have enough to drive to game. When there are two danger suits, as here, you bid where you live, so a call of three clubs shows clubs stopped and asks your partner to bid no-trump with hearts guarded. You should plan to pass a reversion to three diamonds.
