A HIDDEN GIANT

Idaho's geothermal potential faces barriers to large-scale production

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Idaho's push for renewable energy is gaining strength. Since 2008, federal stimulus dollars have combined with tax incentives to bring more renewable energy projects online as rising fuel prices made the ventures more lucrative.

Enough companies rushed to build wind projects in Idaho that in December, Idaho Power petitioned the Idaho Public Utilities Commission to severely cap the amount of intermittent renewable power it's required to buy. This week, the petition was granted.

The rapid random proliferation of wind power projects across Idaho's high desert prompted calls to regulate where the projects could be placed.

This week, U.S. Interior Secretary Ken Salazar held a two-day conference to address the administration's efforts encouraging renewable energy projects on federal land while emphasizing responsible project siting. Not surprisingly, much of the focus was on wind energy.

Barely scoring a mention was geothermal energy.

With more obstacles to development, geothermal plants have spread more slowly and their siting hasn't triggered as much public concern.

But figuring out where to drill is a big concern to the developers themselves.

Drilling blind

On the surface, geothermal energy appears to be one of the best green energy alternatives.

Geothermal plants release no greenhouse gases and, unlike solar and wind projects, produce energy continuously. They don't dominate the landscape like wind turbines. Geothermal development isn't hampered by the radioactive waste issues associated with nuclear energy.

But similar to nuclear energy, it has high up-front costs. Drilling deep into the earth to find a suitable heat source is labor-intensive, expensive and without guarantee of success.

"An engineer told me it was like having a coal-powered plant but having to buy all the coal upfront," said Chris Harriman, president of Boise-based U.S. Geothermal Services. "Put drilling in front of anything and you're talking bucks."

To bore a mile into the earth, crews may drill for weeks using dozens of $2,000 diamond bits to chew through everything from sediment to granite. But a project's potential for success most relies on finding a good site.

Two traits are desirable for geothermal development: an area with subterranean heat that's close to the surface and a relatively unindered flow of underground water.

The hottest sites allow for the simplest, and thus the cheapest, technology: geothermal steam-driven turbines. So initially, developers focused on areas with obvious indicators of high underground heat and water: geysers.

Developers descended upon California's geyser area in the 1960s and 18 plants built in that era remain in operation. The famous geysers of Yellowstone National Park were preserved from development by their park status.

"That's how it goes; you always go for the lowest-hanging fruit because it's the cheapest," said Harriman. "But now it's more challenging."

Last year, 77 geothermal plants were online in the U.S. with 188 projects in development, according to a Geothermal Energy Association report.

With many known hot sites developed, developers are researching secondary sites. But even in areas of hot spring activity, no one is quite sure where is best to drill.

Although organizations such as the Idaho National Laboratory's Geothermal Program have developed maps showing regions of likely activity, geothermal drilling still resembles wildcat drilling: There's a great deal of risk. If one well doesn't yield, developers have to start over.

Methods exist to compensate for less optimal sites, but they cost more money.

"Every site is different and we never know what we're going to run into," said Chris Delahunty, operations director of the Snake River Geothermal Drilling Project.

For that reason, geothermal energy supporters have lobbied for help from the federal government.

"We need a geothermal endowment," said Dan Kunz, U.S. Geothermal CEO. "We have the geology here in Idaho but need to have people willing to take the risk to drill."

U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, co-sponsored the Geothermal Energy Investment Act in September, which would have increased the investment tax credit for geothermal producers. A similar bill was introduced in the House in July.

Neither made it out of committee.

Crapo spokeswoman Susan Wheeler said the bills suffered from being introduced late in the 2010 session with little active support. She said Crapo plans to reintroduce the bill early this session to give it a better chance of passing, but it will battle for support in a Congress that already has its hands full with weightier issues.

Study: Welfare drug tests costly

By John Miller
Associated Press writer

BOISE — A state study concluded the cost of mandatory drug testing of public assistance recipients would exceed any savings from booting offenders from programs.

Republican lawmakers demanded the study last March, saying their constituents considered it unfair that some Idahoans are drug-tested by their employers while those on public assistance are not.

The study by the Department of Health and Welfare found testing is forbidden for big welfare programs like Medicaid and food stamps.

For child care assistance and temporary cash assistance for families — programs that are mostly federally funded and for which testing isn't illegal — the study indicated the costs of testing and related treatment would wipe out prospective savings achieved by removing offenders. The two programs cover about 10,500 people.

Also, legal bills that have plagued other states undertaking such testing could further sap resources.

"The costs of legal action alone during the first year could exceed the costs of the drug testing and treatment program," according to the study. "To fund the costs of the program, (Idaho) would need to either appropriate additional funding for a drug-testing program, or divert funds from current programs for the screening, testing and treatment activities."

In 1999, Michigan's random drug-testing of members of needy families who received temporary federal assistance lasted just five weeks before being ruled unconstitutional.

Despite legal challenges, however, drug testing is alluring for lawmakers suspicious that recipients of public assistants are doing illicit things while receiving taxpayer money.

Minnesota and Wisconsin now test convicted felons getting some forms of public assistance. Arizona requires about 12,500 people in one federal program to complete a drug-screening questionnaire, with some then undergoing drug screens.

New Mexico lawmakers are considering testing as a

Crapo, Morris keynote speakers at GOP fundraisers

By Gina Milligan
Times-News correspondent

BURLEY — Morey's Steakhouse was a popular place Saturday, when Mini-Cassia area Republicans gathered for their third annual Lincoln Day Luncheon. More than 100 people attended the event, which is the area's primary celebration and fundraising event for the Republican Party.

But it wasn't the good food or auction that everyone gathered for; it was to listen to what area GOP leaders had to say about the upcoming year and the economy.

"When times get tougher, the level of involvement is greater at every level; participation is so important to the system," said Lt. Gov. Brad Little.

"We're not done fixing this country, and there is still a lot to be done in the next two years before re-election," said keynote speaker U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, referring to the state and national budgets.

Crapo is one of 21 members that sit on the U.S. Senate Budget and Finance Committees, and has been opposed to Obama's health care legislation that passed last year.

"At this point, over the past couple of years, 24 percent of the budget has been cut in the state, but the budget will balance; nationally, however, it will not," he said.

According to Crapo, the national debt is a "huge weight that is dragging the economy down; the U.S. Government has borrowed trillions and trillions from the Social Security Fund over the years.

"We need a plan that is strong and bold to lead us away from the (budgetary) path that we're on. We can do it, but we don't have time to delay."

It was a busy day for Crapo, who later attended a GOP fundraising banquet at Canyon Crest Dining and Event Center in Twin Falls.

Gov. Otter, who spoke at the event, First Lady Lori Otter, Sen. Jim Risch, R-Idaho, and Attorney General Lawrence Wasden were

Times-News welcomes Awtry as editor

Times-News

The Times-News is happy to announce the addition of Josh Awtry as editor.

Awtry, 35, joins the Times-News from The Salt Lake Tribune in Salt Lake City, where he most recently served as assistant managing editor of the 150,000-circulation daily newspaper and its associated online and print products. Prior to joining the Tribune, Awtry worked at two community newspapers, The Independent in Grand Island, Neb., and The Sun News in Myrtle Beach, S.C.

“Although I received applications from more than 20 qualified candidates, Josh stood out from the beginning in terms of his experience with community journalism, the depth of his answers to local coverage issues and the specificity of his vision for innovation in our newsroom,” Times-News Publisher John Pfeifer said.

As editor, Awtry will oversee all newsroom operations and serve on the Times-News editorial board.

“I’m absolutely thrilled to be joining the Times-News,” he said. “The paper has been on guard for more than 100 years, and I’m both humbled and excited to join such a great tradition.”

A veteran journalist of 13 years, Awtry brings with him a flair for striking journalism across print and online platforms and a focus on direct interaction between journalists and the public.

“My highest priority is to weave the newspaper so tightly into the fabric of the community that the two become reflections of themselves,” Awtry said. “In this age of Facebook, Twitter and mobile phones smarter than last year’s computers, there’s no excuse for any newspaper to be distant from the conversation and questions in a community.”

Awtry

From August 1999 to May 2000, Awtry served as adjunct professor at Hastings College, a four-year liberal-arts college in Hastings, Neb. He received two bachelor’s degrees — one in print communications and the other in music performance — from Hastings College.

Awtry said he, his wife, Karenna, and their two children, Ally, 8, and Drew, 4, look forward to calling the Magic Valley home.

“The first time I drove into the Magic Valley, I fell in love,” he said. “Seeing the wide, cultivated fields and pivot sprinklers made my Midwest roots feel right at home, but those mountains on the horizon were the icing on the cake. It’s a beautiful area, and I can’t wait to explore it with my family.”

The Times-News is south-central Idaho’s best and largest provider of daily news, reaching more than 20,000 daily subscribers

Down to the wire on Valentine’s Day

Fellas, for years you and I have done our holiday shopping as late as possible on Dec. 24, usually at a convenience store. It’s a tradition, just like the lottery tickets, motor oil and batteries that you annually stuff into your wife’s stocking at 12:01 a.m. on Christmas Day.

But tomorrow, a greater challenge awaits.

It’s Valentine’s Day, and, well — let’s cut to the chase, shall we? If you forget, you’ll be divorced.

Last-minute Valentine’s Day shopping is trickier than 11th-hour Christmas shopping because in Idaho on Feb. 14 there is not an inexhaustible supply of flowers.

DON’T ASK ME

Steve Crump

Matter of fact, if you call your florist Monday morning and ask about a Valentine’s Day delivery, chances are pretty good that he or she will laugh in your ear.

You could go to Albertsons or Fred Meyer for flowers, but by now you run the risk of having to choose between wilted pink carnations and something that used to be mums.

Avoid the temptation of doing what a friend of mine once tried on Valentine’s Day. It was a Sunday, the florists were closed and the grocery stores were out of flowers. So he went to a craft store and bought two dozen fake roses.

As he walked into his house Valentine’s evening carrying those posies, his wife exclaimed, “Oh, you shouldn’t have!” Then he handed her the silk flowers.

“No, really,” she said. “You shouldn’t have.”

He’s single again. If flowers aren’t available, there’s always the candy option. But men as a rule do a lousy job of picking chocolates.

We, as a gender, tend to cheap out when giving gifts. And believe me, your significant other knows the difference between Martine’s Chocolates Assortments du Jour ($75 a box) and chocolate-covered cherries.

However much you’re panicked at about 8:30 Monday night, don’t commit the ultimate guy mistake.

You can forget your sweetheart’s birthday and lose track on your anniversary, but never, ever give her a gift card on Valentine’s Day.

That’s not just dumb and insensitive, it’s grounds for homicide.

And no jury in the world would convict her.

among the more than 300 people who attended the event. Dick Morris, a political analyst for Fox News, was the keynote speaker.

Morris, meeting briefly with the Times-News, said one of the reasons he wanted to come to Twin Falls was to meet with Crapo about the senator’s support of a controversial deficit-slashing proposal by Erskine Bowles and Alan Simpson, co-chairmen of the National Commission on Fiscal Responsibility and Reform, of which Crapo is a member.

Among other things, the proposal would raise the Social Security retirement age and roll back popular tax breaks.

“I don’t agree with it,” Morris said.

Morris, referring to his keynote address, said he planned to talk about “Rolling back Obama’s agenda, spending cuts, and condition of state unemployment benefits. Missouri, Virginia, Kentucky and Nebraska lawmakers are also considering requiring drug-testing if the state suspects welfare applicants are using illegal drugs.

In Arizona, 12.5 percent of those screened tested positive. And before Michigan’s random-testing program foundered in the courts, about 8 percent of its public assistance applicants tested positive.

Idaho state Rep. Rich Wills, R-Glenms Ferry, the sponsor of last year’s measure to commission the study, said he has yet to see its final conclusions.

But he said the results shouldn’t be looked at solely in terms of cash savings. For instance, some people could choose to voluntarily forego illicit drugs for fear they could be tested, he said. And for those who do test positive, the state could direct them to treatment programs that could help change their lives, as well as those of their children.

He isn’t planning testing legislation but said he’s heard other lawmakers are interested in the idea.

Monica Hopkins, director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Idaho, didn’t return a phone call seeking comment.

Idaho already requires adults applying for temporary cash assistance for families complete a drug screening evaluation, though not a drug test. Those who score high on the screening are referred to a drug treatment program as a condition of receiving benefits.

And as a condition of receiving child care assistance, adults must work in an education or training program. As a result, the study’s authors wrote state testing could be duplicative, if their jobs already require drug tests.

Idaho’s study estimates that if all 10,500 people in Idaho’s child care assistance and temporary cash assistance programs were tested, the costs of the tests and subsequent treatment of those with positive results would range from $1.2 to $1.3 million, depending on whether state staff or contracted workers conduct the drug tests. Savings, however, would total just $1.13 million.

LAURA LUNDQUIST/Times-News

The remnants of an old well spout hot water on the grounds of U.S. Geothermal's Raft River project. The well was used by a former landowner to heat a commercial greenhouse.

Giant

Four bills were recently introduced in the Idaho Legislature to reduce leasing restrictions for geothermal projects on state land and give the land board more flexibility to negotiate royalties collected from projects on state land.

State royalties are currently set at 10 percent of the value of the project's product — electricity in this case — which is far greater than the 2 percent charged by the federal government.

While supportive of geothermal power, little in these bills helps defray a geothermal company's upfront cost. They'd only help projects once they're under way.

Cassia County pioneer

In a mostly uninhabited region of sagebrush just east of the Jim Sage Mountains in Cassia County, steam rises in the cold air from a small tributary of the Raft River. Hot springs may indicate hot water below, but it may not be hot enough to produce steam.

Such is the case at U.S. Geothermal's Raft River plant, Idaho's only such plant and the first in the Northwest.

In the mid-1970s, the U.S. Department of Energy chose this site for its geothermal demonstration project, which operated until 1982.

The Raft River valley sits atop a fault that serves as a chimney for the earth's heat below. The DOE dug four wells along the fault more than a mile deep as part of its $40 million project.

That's partly why U.S. Geothermal bought the Raft River site: The company saved money because most of the wells it needed were already drilled.

"And we got to learn from their mistakes," Harriman said.

The catch was that, even more than a mile down, the water isn't hot enough to produce steam. Water comes up from the Raft River wells about 20 degrees shy of the 300 required to turn a turbine.

In this case, and in most future plants, energy producers have to use two-step technology that wasn't available when the DOE owned the plant. The well water surrenders half its heat to another chemical fluid — isopentane — that turns to gas at a lower temperature than water. The force of the gas turns the turbines. It is then chilled back to a fluid and reused.

In 2006, Raft River was one of the first U.S. plants to use the process, opening the doors for others. In 2009, every U.S. plant that went online used the process.

While it increases geothermal possibilities, the process has a drawback. Along with high upfront cost, the efficiency of this two-step process is only around 10 percent. For every 10 units of heat energy brought from below, the plant produces one unit of electricity.

That's less efficient than solar energy, which has slowly crept its way into the 20- to 30-percent efficiency range.

"You could extract more if the technology improves but we're in our infancy," Harriman said.

The Raft River plant has a 20-year agreement with Idaho Power, in which Idaho Power pays for 10 megawatts a month at a rate equivalent to what it would pay for natural gas. Even with its efficiency issues, the rate is enough that the plant comes out ahead on its day-to-day operations.

As Western water users are learning, groundwater flows at a far slower rate than people can extract it. So, geothermal plants are now designed to return the water from whence it came to keep the resource going.

For every production well, an injection well must be drilled nearby, although they aren't usually as deep. They can't be too close to the injection wells because the cool return water could reduce the underground heat the system depends on.

Harriman said even with optimal well placement, most geothermal sites eventually cool off to the point where plants can no longer produce power using available technology. He hopes the Raft River site is good for 30 years. Other sites have lasted longer.

"It's built into our business model to replace wells with time but we'd need to do more drilling," Harriman said. "We need more modeling."

Below the surface

One research group is trying to help Idaho developers reduce the guesswork and risks associated with drilling.

The DOE awarded around $4 million of stimulus funding to Utah State University for its Snake River Geothermal Drilling Project. In addition, the project participants, which include Boise State University and the U.S. Geological Survey, will ante up around $2 million to fund the drilling of three mile-deep exploration wells in southern Idaho.

The project will generate and measure seismic waves sent throughout the region and use the information to design detailed underground maps of rock composition. Different rock types affect the speed of shockwaves.

They'll be able to match the rock type because the cores bored at the three sites are being carefully collected and taken to Utah to map the geology of each site, inch by inch. Little information of such detail at such depth has been collected, said principal investigator John Shervais of Utah State.

"The traditional method of finding geothermal resources was find a hot springs and dig," Shervais said. "We want to get beyond that so we can better develop the resource."

The three sites are in a region of predicted geothermal potential but they represent different situations: the porous Snake River plain around Kimama north of Paul, the northwestern faults running under Kimberly, and Mountain Home's fault-bounded system.

The first well is complete near Kimama and crews are just setting up to drill near Kimberly.

"Once you get below the aquifer, there's high heat flow," Shervais said of the Kimama well. "Our preliminary temperature readings got up to 176 (degrees) Fahrenheit but our tools stopped working because it got too hot."

It will be a couple years before Shervais' data can be used to fill in a picture of south-central Idaho's underground world. In the meantime, without other financial incentives, geothermal companies may not develop much, despite the good will.

U.S. Geothermal had originally planned a second phase involving construction of a second plant, but Harriman said that would require drilling more wells at $3 million each.

"If we had a 350 Fahrenheit resource, it would be worth it," Harriman said. "Knowing where to find those resources would be worth it because there will never be cheap drilling."

Veterans groups help cemeteries with no-cost service medallions

By John E. Swayze
Times-News correspondent

BUHL — Every Memorial Day hundreds of American flags stand in honor alongside headstones marking the memory of those who answered their nation's call. Yet some veterans have been laid to rest without receiving some visual form of acknowledgment for their service.

Since some veterans or their families have selected private markers instead of traditional military designs, the process of identification can be difficult. Buhl West End Cemetery Office Administrator Michelle Proto is asking the public to help them update the list.

“Our groundskeeper has walked row-by-row, giving me what he thought were military marker names that may not be on the list and we’ve verified those,” Proto said. “We’ve got up to 562 right now and know that there’s probably more but not everyone has their military service marked.”

Some veterans groups are trying to assist area cemeteries by promoting a new service medallion available to honorably discharged veterans whose death occurred on or after Nov. 1, 1990. The medallions are available at no cost through the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, or they can be purchased direct from the manufacturer at www.vareplicamedallions.com.

“Families can request these if there isn’t already a military stone provided by the VA,” said Buhl Veterans of Foreign Wars Commander Gary Davis. “Other than a picture, I haven’t actually seen one yet, but they’re supposed to come with instructions on how and where to place them.”

Mike Parke, owner of Parke’s Magic Valley Funeral Home and the Twin Falls Cemetery, sees the medallion as a great help for Boy Scouts and Girl Scout Troops who volunteer to place flags each year.

“We get around 20 to 30 people who come to us every year wanting to know why a family member doesn’t have a flag,” Parke said. “I think something like this, placed right on the stone, is a wonderful idea.”

The medallion, available in a 1.5-inch, 3-inch or 5-inch size with a triangular flag star field and the branch of service, was created through a joint effort by the Amy Institute of Heraldry, Advisory Committee on Cemeteries and Memorials and Veterans Service Organizations.

Chris Erbe, spokesman for the National Cemetery Administration in Washington, D.C., said families were a driving force behind the medallion.

“When some private cemeteries would not permit the type of headstone or marker furnished from the VA’s product line, families sought an alternative way to mark the grave of a veteran,” Erbe said. “So far there have been requests for more than 3,000 medallions.”

Sparks fly in state education tune-up efforts

BOISE — When the engine of public education is about to seize up from a lack of dollars, the wrenches of those involved in the system quickly come out.

When that happens, every educator and policy-maker teaches the shop class. Even so, figuring out which tool to use — a socket wrench for an oil change or an entire toolbox to replace the transmission — is always tricky.

In a month's time, the state's educators, students and parents have gone from anticipating another round of state budget cuts to fretting over — or hoping for — the passage of two bills. They filled the Capitol auditorium and gave four days worth of testimony last week, much of it against Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna's plan to tune-up Idaho's education system.

LEGISLATIVE NOTEBOOK

One of those bills is 25 pages. The other is a 61-pager crammed with items that would cut teacher tenure, hike the student-teacher ratio and shift associated savings toward technology upgrades, student laptops, merit-based pay for teachers and increased online courses.

There's still plenty of work left. Sen. John Goedde, R-Coeur d'Alene and chairman of the Senate Education Committee, decided the bills aren't ready for a committee vote yet.

Instead, Luna will need to present two new drafts of the legislation, likely in the upcoming week. Goedde described the needed changes as "enough small corrections" to warrant new drafts.

Of course, there are also different interpretations of what this latest twist of the wrench means.

"Based on the overwhelming public opposition against the Luna plan, we're not surprised at this turn of events," said Sherri Wood, president of the Idaho Education Association, which represents teachers. "But it sounds like lawmakers have sent the bills back for an oil change when they really need a new transmission."

Luna's office downplayed the need for fixes in the legislation, saying in a statement that this is the process all legislation goes through.

Like many pushes for education reform, this one's particularly divided.

The common pros listed among supporters include: online courses add diverse options, particularly rural schools; classrooms would have more technology, better equipping students for the digital world.

The common concerns among opponents include: class sizes would be larger; youngsters might look up porn on laptops.

And students taking online courses would lose one-on-one face time with their teachers — except in shop class, of course.

Contractor cleared in wild horse incident

RENO, Nev. (AP) — A contractor has been cleared of allegations of wrongdoing in connection with a videotaped Jan. 27 incident involving a wild horse that fell during a government roundup of mustangs from the range in eastern Nevada.

U.S. Bureau of Land Management Director Bob Abbey said an internal review found that Sun J Livestock did not violate existing agency policy during the ongoing gather of mustangs about 60 miles south of Wells.

The review team found the mare was not over-driven by the contractor's helicopter and did not collapse from exhaustion as horse advocates claimed, Abbey said. The team concluded the mare stumbled or tripped, then fell when it lost its footing in a small snow drift.

The horse ran free following attempts by the helicopter to herd it into a trap.

While the team found no evidence of wrongdoing, the agency must continue to look for ways to minimize risk to the animals, Abbey said.

"Since 1976, when Congress first authorized the use of helicopters in the gathering of wild horses, capture techniques have steadily improved," he said in a statement. "But we must advance as far as possible in ensuring the humane treatment of wild horses and burros, both on and off the range. We need to create a 'new normal' for doing business."

Activists say their video shows the older mare collapsed after stampeding for miles followed by a helicopter; was forced to its feet by wranglers; and chased again by the helicopter. The video shows the horse visibly exhausted, breathing hard with its sides heaving, they added.

The video has been widely disseminated on the Internet, including on YouTube.

"It's no surprise the BLM Antelope roundup report is a whitewash," said Ginger Kathrens, director of the horse advocacy group Cloud Foundation based in Colorado. "This is nothing more than taxpayer-funded animal abuse. Congress must de-fund these costly and cruel roundups immediately."

Abbey's acknowledgment that current procedures are not sufficient followed public outrage over the video of the mustang, said Suzanne Roy, director of the American Wild Horse Preservation Campaign.

"(He) has acknowledged what we've known for some time, that an improved standard is needed for the handling and treatment of mustangs in government roundup operations," she said.

The BLM has said it planned to remove about 2,000 mustangs in the Antelope Complex to protect the range, wildlife and mustang herds. The agency has gathered about 670 horses to date.

Hunters, outdoor industry voice support for BLM wild lands

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Environmentalists aren't the only Americans who support preserving wild areas on federal land.

Representatives of hunting, tourism and religious interests from four conservative Western states came to Boise Thursday to voice their support for a new U.S. Bureau of Land Management policy allowing for the establishment of wild lands. They spoke to the media via a teleconference hosted by the Wilderness Society.

"We feel (Interior Secretary Ken) Salazar's recent policy change is a step in the right direction," said David Lien, co-chairman of Colorado Backcountry Hunters and Anglers. "The BLM lands addressed in his order are prized by fishermen and anglers because they provide clean water and healthy habitat."

Lien said hunting and fishing creates more jobs than the oil and gas industry, one of the primary groups lobbying against the policy. Sportsman-related jobs last longer because oil and gas jobs exist only as long as wells produce, Lien said.

In another plug for the economic benefit of wild lands, Jennifer Hobson, former New Mexico deputy secretary for tourism, said ecotourism has exploded in New Mexico in the past three years. Tourism now has a $6 billion impact on the state, she said.

Frank Hugelmeyer, Outdoor Industry Association president, also emphasized the economic benefit of wild lands for those who sell outdoor gear and activities, an industry that contributes $730 billion to the U.S. economy. The industry is outpacing the economy so it's not a jobs-versus-the-environment discussion, Hugelmeyer said — it's a jobs-versus-even-more-jobs debate.

Breaking from the financial message, Rev. Warren Murphy of the Wyoming Association of Churches said the faith community is moving toward protecting the environment as a spiritual value. While the Judeo-Christian tradition has encouraged taming the wilderness, Murphy said more are realizing they need to care for what God made.

"Wild lands are places of wilderness retreat and once they're gone, they're gone," Murphy said. "There are so many more BLM lands that don't have wilderness characteristics, and they will be abused."

All the speakers pointed out that the wild lands designation is not a wilderness designation and existing activities such as grazing could continue.

Within a month of Salazar's announcement, some Western governors voiced their opposition. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter wrote a letter to Salazar protesting wild lands as "de facto wilderness," claiming their designation would happen without public input. Yet all designations would receive public comment. U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho, said Friday he is seeking to deny the BLM the funds to enact the new policy, hoping to force Interior and Salazar to let the public and Congress weigh in.

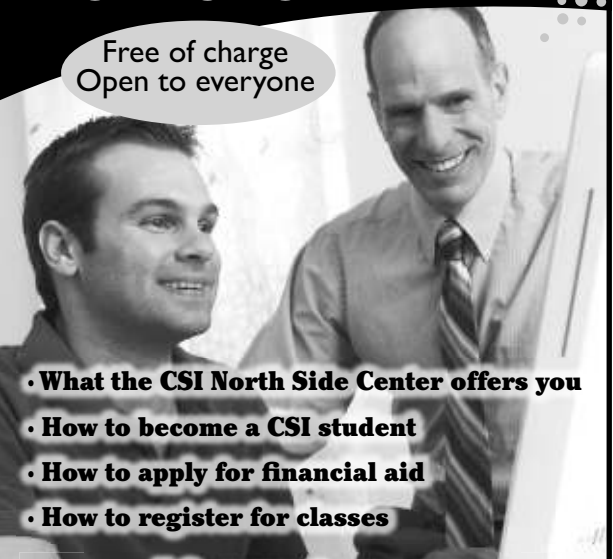

Wilderness Society

Deputy Regional Director Brad Brooks said that with threat of Congressional budget cuts, Thursday's speakers wanted to show there is public support for the policy.

"Right after Salazar's announcement, a number of public figures reacted with a lot of hyperbole," Brooks said. "These people wanted to tell the public what it's really about."

Dinosaur species named for BSU student, sister

By Katy Moeller
The Idaho Statesman

BOISE — Boisean Celina Suarez and her twin sister, Marina, had always hoped they'd find dinosaur bones in the backyard of their childhood home in San Antonio, Texas.

The pair never found any dinosaur bones behind their home. But they have found dinosaur bones — more than once. It was their find in Utah in 2004 that led to the naming of a new species of dinosaur after the sisters, both now 29-year-old geochemists doing post-doctoral research.

“We’re very honored,” said Celina Suarez, who is doing research at Boise State University. Her sister, Marina, is a researcher at Johns Hopkins University. The sisters are identical, mirror-image twins (“She’s a leftie, and I’m a rightie,” Celina said.)

At the time of their big find, they were both Temple University master’s students working on a summer excavation project near Green River, Utah, with the Utah Geological Survey. While investigating the sediment near the site, they came across a gulley with rocks that had bones sticking out.

“There were toe bones and limb bones. We collected a few that were in danger of getting washed away. The next morning, we scoured the hillside for more limb bones,” Celina Suarez said.

Later, after more excavation and study of the bones from the site, researchers determined that the bones came from at least three different dinosaur species, including skull bones from a raptor-like species considered to be the oldest known member of the family Troodontidae and the only one from the Early Cretaceous period ever found in North America (98 to 145 million years ago).

“When we first found the Utah site we knew it was significant, but we had no idea we would become part of history,” Celina Suarez said.

That newly discovered dinosaur needed a name, so the team of researchers who published the first paper describing it named it after the Suarez sisters: Geminiraptor suarezorum (Gemini is Latin for twins). It is one of about 700 named species of dinosaur.

Celina Suarez said she found out the dinosaur species would be named for her and her sister in November, after reading a draft paper by Jim Kirkland, John Bird, Phil Senter and Jeff Bartlett (later published in Public Library Science Journal).

Suarez said Geminiraptor suarezorum was close to the size of an ostrich. She estimates it at about 125 million years old.

“It wasn’t super-big,” she said. “Unfortunately, not a whole lot of the animal had been found — just the skull.”

Celina Suarez now specializes in geochemical paleontology.

She analyzes the chemical makeup of ancient bones as it relates to the original biology of an animal and the geology of the environment that became its tomb.

Her work is being funded by a two-year, $170,000 National Science Foundation fellowship. Using bone specimens from Hagerman and the Idaho Museum of Natural History, she will examine the chemical and physical processes of fossilization.

Suarez is preparing for a summer trip to China, where she will examine dig sites with scientists from the Chinese Geological Academy of Sciences and the University of Pennsylvania.

Report: Wolf shot chasing livestock

MALAD (AP) — An official with the U.S. Department of Fish and Wildlife says a wolf reported to be chasing livestock has been shot and killed in southeastern Idaho near Malad.

Todd Grimm told the Idaho State Journal that the black-colored wolf was shot Wednesday.

Grimm says the killing of the wolf is legal under a rule in the Endangered Species Act involving wolves attacking livestock.

The name of the person who shot the wolf has not been released. Grimm says the person reported the shooting to the Oneida County Sheriff’s Office the day it happened. Grimm didn’t know whether it was a male or female wolf.

The last reported wolf kill in southeast Idaho was July 6 when officials say a sheepherder shot a 94-pound male after it killed a lamb.

Areva hires URS Corp. to build plant

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Executives with Areva Inc. say they have hired the URS Corp. to be the lead builder on a $4 billion uranium enrichment facility planned near Idaho Falls.

Officials from both companies declined to share specifics of their deal, but agree it’s a key step in moving the project forward.

The Post Register reports construction is expected to create about 1,000 jobs in eastern Idaho and inject millions of dollars in the state and local economy.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is still in the process of licensing the facility. Areva spokesman Jarret Adams says the company is confident construction could begin this summer.

URS, which has offices in Boise, became one of the world’s biggest engineering and construction companies when it acquired Washington Group International for $3.2 billion in 2007.

Yellowstone visitation down in January

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — After two straight years of setting records for the number of visitors to the world’s first national park, Yellowstone National Park is getting off to a slow start with visits down 4.2 percent in January when compared with last year.

Park officials say visits last month totaled 24,517, down from 25,595 last year.

Last year there were 3.6 million visitors to the park, the second straight year and the third time in the last four years that Yellowstone has set a new annual visitation record.

Sisters open bead shop in Paul

By Judy Albertson
Times-News writer

PAUL—Most people have a hobby, but few are lucky enough to turn it into a business.

Sisters Laurie Mounce and Rose Hansen did just that. Their hobby became Starr Country Sisters, a beading business in Paul. The sisters grew up in the Starrah Ferry area and that's where the name came from.

"The business started in November of 2009. It started out as a hobby. We always did a lot of bead stuff and it went from there. We went to a bead party and they were making lots of different things there," Mounce said.

"The woman who was doing it wasn't from here and she thought there was a need in this area for something like that. We took just a few minutes to decide that we were going to do it," Hansen added.

Mounce had an empty shop and they finished and filled a room with inventory and decorations already on hand.

Both sisters are involved in the business, although Hansen continues to work full-time at Amalgamated Sugar Co.

"My girls told my husband once that I was tired and working too hard and my husband told them 'You know your mom wouldn't do anything if she didn't want to.' I do it for fun," Hansen said.

Although the business looks at people making their own pieces of beadwork as their primary market, the sisters have a wide variety of ready-to-wear necklaces, rings, bracelets, watchbands, earrings and more.

"Clubs come here, and they have birthday parties here. They come here and make whatever they want to, and we help them. They can come and relax and make their stuff," Mounce said.

They try and keep an eye on style trends, which are constantly changing.

"You have to go with whatever people want. The watches are a fad, but they have slowed down some now," Hansen said.

The sisters don't charge a table fee. Customers pay for their beads and the hardware used to put them together. There are usually two or more working at a time and usually both sisters are there to assist them.

"They can spend pretty much what they want to. It just depends on what beads they buy. The clamps that hold them together are usually more expensive than the beads," Hansen said.

The sisters try to keep their inventory changing and are always looking for new ideas. They get ideas out of books, from other people or just come up with it by themselves. They purchase all of their supplies over the Internet. And they have a sister in Boise, so when they go to see her they always visit a craft store there. They have been asked to be at the Red Hat Society convention in Burley in 2012.

The shop has drawn people from Pocatello, Arco, Boise, Utah and beyond. Hansen said they usually have a large group come from Utah.

Starr Country Store is at 551 W. 100 S., Paul. Their hours are 5-9 p.m. Wednesday and Friday; noon to 9 p.m., Thursday; and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday. They are closed Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. Groups are always welcome.

FROM PIZZA TO PANACHE

Saved church now housing bedding showroom and design gallery in Ketchum

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM—Many will always remember Louie's as the place they could scarf down family-style meals of lasagna, pizza, spaghetti, fettuccini and veal picatta for little more than what it costs for a value meal at McDonald's today.

But the century-old church is reveling in its newest incarnation — that of a bedding showroom and design gallery.

A San Francisco couple has given the church new life ten years after it was nearly demolished and left to wander the streets of Ketchum.

The building reopened this winter as part of the Picket Fence at Sixth Street and East Avenue in Ketchum.

"It's very exciting to see that a building like that can be saved," said Ketchum Realtor Anne Zauner who was among those who tried to save the church after it was uprooted from its old place on Leadville Avenue and Sun Valley Road.

"I went to church there with my mother. And then I remember when it was a coffeehouse. I'm so grateful to the owners who went through so much trouble and expense to keep it true to form."

The historic white and green church was built as a Congregational Church in either 1881 or 1884, depending on what account you read. It became an espresso coffee house that attracted Sun Valley's celebrities in the 1950s—long before Starbucks was conceived.

Burley bids farewell to John's Market

Just as in life, businesses go through cycles. During Wednesday's auction inside the old John's Market in Burley many people may have thought, and easily so, that the event was the last stage in the business's life.

John's Market had been an Overland Avenue staple for many years, the grocery store a part of many residents' memories.

"It's kind of a sad day," said Kevin Croft as an auctioneer led a large crowd through the freezer section, selling cabinets, microwaves, shelves and refrigerators along the way. "John was my dad and this was his store, and my wife and I ran it for nearly 30 years after he got out of it. We had a really good run."

Croft sold the business about 2 1/2 years ago but said he had to foreclose. The store ceased operations in mid-November.

Wednesday's event drew the community to what was once their neighborhood market and witnessed the ending stage for the business that had grown from a small mom-and-pop into a modern supermarket.

However, the auction was part of a new business's beginning: a bakery in Pocatello owned and operated by former Burley and Rupert resident Richard Purin, 26.

"I remember coming into John's Market as a kid. We'd be in here all the time, getting ice creams and stuff," Purin said. "Today I came to see about purchasing some equipment for my bakery."

By mid-afternoon Purin had out-bid other buyers on a few display cases and flour bins.

"It's sad to see this place closed but I'm excited for my future," Purin said.

As one door closes, another opens.

Realtors know all about cycles and they are looking optimistically for the real estate market to begin its inevitable upward climb.

In the meantime, the South Central District Women's Council of Realtors is gearing up for the return of Don Aslett, founder of Don Aslett's Cleaning Center.

Aslett is the special guest speaker for the WCR's lunch meeting, at noon Tuesday at the Greater Twin Falls Board of Realtors building, 1162 Eastland Dr. N., Twin Falls.

Last year Aslett drew more than 90 people.

MS. BIZ
Blair Koch

"He was one of our most popular speakers," said WCR President Faye Emerson. "And drew our largest lunch crowd; it was just great."

On Tuesday, Aslett will speak about clutter — and not in reference to your home or vehicle's back seat, but all the extra, distracting stuff on your desk top.

Oldest worker wanted

With many people choosing (or having) to work late in life, chances are you may know someone worthy of being named America's Outstanding Oldest Worker for 2011.

Nominations for the contest, sponsored by Experience Works, are now being accepted for the award.

"Experience Works is proud to sponsor the search for America's Outstanding Oldest worker," Billy Wooten, executive director of program operations for Experience Works, said in a press release. Experience Works formerly was known as Green Thumb.

The organization operates the Senior Community Service Employment Program in Idaho. The search isn't to merely crown the oldest worker in America, but aims to raise awareness about the contributions older individuals make in today's workplace and to break down barriers often associated with their employment.

Nominees must be at least 100 years old, currently employed and working at least 20 hours a week (for pay), and involved in their community.

A few honorees of last year's search include 104-year-old Emilio Navarro of Puerto Rico. He is the last surviving member of the Negro American League and considered the world's oldest former baseball and softball player and coach.

If there's someone in your life — maybe someone you even work with — who you'd like to nominate, visit www.experienceworks.org or call 1-866-397-9597.

A story of a house Kimberly councilman one of many fighting foreclosure

By Emily Katseanes
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY — Brandon Hoobler first got involved in city politics in 2009, when he fought for Kimberly City Council recognition of a sewer problem in the Stonegate subdivision he calls home.

Now a councilman himself, Hoobler spent last year in a different kind of fight — trying to keep the house that, in a way, sparked his political career. But he wasn't alone. He was just one of 11,100 Idahoans in the process of being foreclosed on.

The downward slide

The trouble began early last year, when Hoobler and his wife, Anna Hoobler, lost their jobs with her family's construction company.

"A little over a year ago, they went from a company of over 30 employees to four or five," Hoobler said.

Not finding any jobs that matched what the couple had been making, each decided to become self-employed.

"The only hope we had was to go out and try to make our jobs," Hoobler said. "We were very familiar with running a company. We just weren't that familiar with the insecurity of not knowing where our next paycheck would come from."

Even with experience, the stress of being self-employed took its toll. In June, the Hooblers separated and began divorce proceedings. Neither of them lived in the Stonegate house.

The couple in the end reunited, but the separation left an expensive legacy. The thousands of dollars they'd saved up while working had been bled by attorney fees.

"We have literally spent over $10,000 for lawyers," Brandon Hoobler said. "When we got back together, the buffer's already gone, so we didn't have it to make mortgage payments."

In October, they returned to Stonegate and filed for loan modification through a federal program. Then they waited.

And waited.

Idaho Power contributes to the community

South Central Community Action Partnership would like to thank Idaho Power for the $6,991 incentive for the Easy Upgrades Lighting Savings program, which allowed them to implement changes to the office, warehouse and parking lot lighting; making them more energy efficient. SCCAP is committed to reducing its facilities overall energy usage through efficiency and this program has allowed SCCAP to accomplish that goal. SCCAP would encourage other businesses to look at the opportunity to reduce their energy bills through this program. They also want to thank Global Lighting Solutions for installing the new lighting.

Gas pump prices highest ever for this time of year

By Chris Kahn
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — U.S. gasoline prices have jumped to the highest levels ever for the middle of February. The national average hit $3.127 per gallon on Friday, about 50 cents above a year ago.

The price is about 6 percent higher than on this date in 2008. The next day, pump prices began a string of 32 gains over 34 days. They rose 39 percent over five months, eventually hitting an all-time high of $4.11 per gallon in July.

Although gas prices are expected to rise, most experts aren't expecting a reprise of 2008, when the price spike forced many drivers to join car pools and trade in gas-guzzling SUVs for fuel-efficient cars.

"It would be a mistake to think we're going to have that all over again," said

OPIS chief oil analyst Tom Kloza.

He says oil demand will slide in the U.S. by May, as refineries slow fuel production while they switch to summer blends of gas. World oil consumption also may not rise as much as expected.

And Kloza contends that oil traders are more cautious now, after getting burned when oil plunged to $33 per barrel in early 2009, just six months after hitting $147 per barrel. Even the most bullish traders no longer think they can chase commodity prices higher without risk, he says.

Still, Kloza expects gas to reach $3.50 to $3.75 per gallon this spring because of the usual run-up in prices ahead of the summer driving season. That would mean an increase of 12 to 20 percent from the current level.

Gasoline climbed almost 10 percent since November as oil prices rose because of factors including stronger demand from China, a frigid winter in the U.S. and tension in Egypt, Kloza said.

The price of Brent crude, a key oil contract that also influences U.S. gasoline prices, hit $100 per barrel in January for the first time since 2008.

"It was a perfect storm," said Kloza.

Oil prices retreated Friday after Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak handed over power to the military and left Cairo.

Benchmark West Texas Intermediate crude for March delivery fell $1.15 to settle at $85.58 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. That's lower than the price on Jan. 25, when the demonstrations in Egypt began.

Investors have been concerned that the anti-government protests over the past 18 days could spread to other parts of the Middle East and disrupt oil supplies. Now that Mubarak has stepped down, the military says it will oversee a democratic transition to a new government.

"The market is getting whipsawed," oil analyst Stephen Schork said. "Everyone is playing the card that stability in Egypt is good for oil" shipments.

In other Nymex trading for March contracts, heating oil fell 1.49 cents to settle at $2.6958 per gallon and gasoline lost less than a penny to settle at $2.4652 per gallon. Natural gas lost 7.6 cents to settle at $3.910 per 1,000 cubic feet.

In London, Brent crude fell 50 cents to settle at $100.94 a barrel on the ICE Futures Exchange.

Foreclosures

"We, of course, kept in touch with them constantly, but they're Fannie Mae," Hoobler said, referring to the government-owned mortgage giant.

"They didn't have anything to say ... It was just really frustrating because it was like any day now, they're going to foreclosure on us so you need to come up with a freaking decision."

Fannie Mae couldn't comment as it is in a "quiet period," required by the Securities Exchange Commission, until the end of the month, when it releases its latest financial report.

In Idaho, widespread

Hoobler and his wife weren't the only Idahoans wrestling with foreclosure at the time.

At the end of 2010, RealtyTrac — a website that collects foreclosure data — ranked Idaho eighth in the nation for home foreclosures, with one in every 34 housing units facing foreclosure.

In Twin Falls County alone, there were 385 foreclosures.

Nationally, 2010 saw 2.9 million foreclosure filings. In January there were 261,333 new notices.

Realtor Tami Gooding with Canyonside Irwin Realty said mortgage problems are spread across the Magic Valley.

"It's pretty much across the board. It's not just in Twin Falls or Jerome or whatever," she said. "One town's not a real hot spot."

Gooding said the number of foreclosures she's seen tends to mirror the population levels across the valley, though unemployment rates in Twin Falls could contribute to foreclosures in outlying towns.

Changed fortune

For the Hooblers, the foreclosure that mattered was theirs. In January, the notice of default for their home was printed.

And they were finally contacted by Fannie Mae.

"It wasn't really until our house was in foreclosure that we heard from them," Brandon Hoobler said.

Their case was now a priority.

Less than two weeks later, they were contacted again. Instead of looking at losing their home, the Hooblers were looking at a loan adjustment. The foreclosure was halted and their payments were lowered for a three-month trial period. If the payments are made on time, the new situation becomes permanent.

A Federal Housing Finance Agency report states that in November, the number of loans modified through the same program the Hooblers used was over 300,000; 275,000 of those were permanently on a new plan and 77,000 were in a trial period.

"It really does alleviate a lot of stress. It has been weighing on us like you wouldn't believe," Hoobler said.

Ongoing effects

Foreclosures affect more of the housing market than just homeowners with mortgages.

Gooding said house hunters are hesitating to buy houses sold by their owners because they think a foreclosure sold by a bank will be cheaper. She called this a misconception.

"We're not seeing our traditional houses moving because people want a deal," she said. "There's still some good buys to be made, but they tend to stick to the current list price."

Mortgage loan originator Ben Weston at Magic Valley Bank has also seen house hunters shaken by the foreclosure market. But that may bring a silver lining to the foreclosure cloud, he said.

"A lot of people I meet with now are more educated," he said. "Rather than getting (asked) 'what am I pre-approved for?' it's 'what can I afford?'"

Weston sees the new breed of cautious homebuyer lasting past the recession.

"There used to be all kinds of programs, a program just about for anybody looking to buy a house and we didn't have to approve anything. Those aren't there anymore," he said.

Gooding expects foreclosures to continue to rock the Magic Valley, but she's not optimistic just yet.

"We're probably going to see a lot more before the economic situation gets better," she said.

Obama promotes plan for near universal wireless

By Erica Werner
Associated Press writer

MARQUETTE, Mich. — President Barack Obama promoted plans Thursday to bring high-speed wireless to nearly all American households, pushing his domestic agenda in a small, snowy city in Michigan's Upper Peninsula on a day of dramatic developments in Egypt.

Obama kept in touch with his security team throughout the trip and opened his remarks at Northern Michigan University with brief comments on the events overseas, where President Hosni Mubarak appeared close to resigning. "We are witnessing history unfold," Obama said.

He then turned to the importance of investing in wireless technology, part of a new White House focus on innovation, competitiveness and infrastructure as a pathway to jobs and "winning the future." The president compared the goal of extending wireless access to important successes that connected previous generations of Americans: the building of railroads and the federal highway system.

"For millions of Americans, the railway hasn't shown up yet," Obama said. "For our families and our businesses, high-speed wireless service: that's the next train station; it's the next off-ramp. It's how we'll spark new innovation, new investments and new jobs."

Obama wants to make high-speed wireless available to 98 percent of the population within five years, a goal he set out in his State of the Union address.

It's a lofty aim considering such technology is only now being built in major cities by AT&T, Verizon and others. And it will cost billions of dollars that Republicans now running the House signaled they may be unwilling to spend. But the president cast it as crucial for America's future prosperity and competitiveness with other nations.

"This isn't just about faster Internet," the president said. "It's about connecting every corner of America to the digital age."

Obama has taken a domestic trip each week since the Jan. 25 speech to promote different aspects of his competitiveness agenda; previous trips focused on high-speed rail and energy efficiency.

Obama's wireless plan involves increasing the space available on the airwaves for high-speed wireless by auctioning off space on the radio spectrum to commercial wireless carriers. The White House says this would raise nearly $30 billion over 10 years, and the money could be spent on initiatives that include $10 billion to develop a national broadband network for public safety agencies and $5 billion for infrastructure to help rural areas access high-speed wireless.

Portions of the plan will be in the 2012 budget Obama sends to Capitol Hill on Monday. Republicans sounded skeptical Thursday about the proposal, which needs congressional approval.

Rep. Fred Upton, R-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, said billions had already been allocated for broadband services in the 2009 economic stimulus bill.

Church

He threatened to demolish it in 1999 when he closed the restaurant. But Ketchum townspeople rallied to save it.

The building was moved around town a couple different times as the Save the Church committee sought to place it at the south end of East Avenue, then in the Ketchum Cemetery, then on the site of the old Visitor Information Center or a pocket park across from Ketchum City Hall and, finally, on the Park and Ride lot where the Wood River YMCA now sits.

It could be used for small weddings and funerals, as a meditative chapel or even a place to hang historic photos for tourists to peruse, they said.

In the meantime, the building fell into disrepair ravaged by time and weather. Even its steeple, which had been removed from the top, disappeared.

Then John and Lynn Simpson came forth, buying it in 2007 and placing it on the same block as the Ketchum Grill and the Ketchum Ore Wagon. They had to scrap nearly everything to renovate the building but they kept the exterior true to form. They rebuilt the lost steeple and matched the door to the original using historic photos.

They tacked an addition for their online website business on back.

And they added skylights, which cast natural lighting on the expansive showroom which houses canopy beds, chairs, upholstery and linens and large-scale Western paintings.

"I think it's a very attractive facility that seems to show off its contents very nicely," said shopper Lynn Johnson.

"Everybody enjoys the fact that it was maintained, though most of the material is brand new," agreed Ashley Howe, the store's marketing director.

Egyptian protesters press for voice

Military rulers say they will abide by Israeli peace treaty

By Lee Keath and Hadeel Al-Shalchi
Associated Press writers

CAIRO — On Egypt's first day in nearly 30 years without Hosni Mubarak as president, its new military rulers promised Saturday to abide by the peace treaty with Israel and eventually hand power to an elected government. Protesters, still partying over their victory in pushing Mubarak out, now pressed for a voice in guiding their country's move to democracy.

The protesters' first act was deeply symbolic of their ambition to build a new Egypt and their determination to do it themselves: Thousands began cleaning up Cairo's central Tahrir Square, the epicenter of their movement. The sprawling plaza was battered and trashed by 18 days of street battles and rallies by hundreds of thousands.

Even as thousands flowed in to celebrate, broom brigades fanned out, with smiling young men and women — some in stylish clothes and earrings — sweeping up rubble and garbage. Others repaired sidewalks torn apart for concrete chunks to use as ammunition in fighting with pro-regime gangs. Young veiled girls painted the metal railings of fences along the sidewalk. "Sorry for the inconvenience, but we're building Egypt," read placards many wore.

"We are cleaning the square now because it is ours," said Omar Mohammed, a 20-year-old student. "After living here for three weeks, it has become our home ... We're going to leave it better than before."

A coalition of youth groups that organized the protests issued their first cohesive list of demands for handling the transition to democracy. Their focus was on ensuring they — not just the military or members of Mubarak's regime — have a seat at the table in deliberations shaping the future.

Among their demands: lifting of emergency law; creation of a presidential council, made up of a military representative and two "trusted personalities"; the dissolving of the ruling party-dominated parliament; and the forming of a broad-based unity government and a committee to either amend or rewrite completely the constitution. "The revolution is not over. This is just a beginning. We are working on how to move into a second republic," said Shady el-Ghazali Harb, the representative on the coalition from one of the youth organizing groups, the Democratic Front.

Protesters were debating whether to lift their 24-hour-a-day demonstration camp in Tahrir. The coalition called for it to end and be replaced by weekly mass demonstrations every Friday to keep pressure on. But many in the square argued to remain. One man on a megaphone encouraged everyone to stay until all their demands were met, while others chanted "the people want the square to be cleared," referring to public grumbling that the protest camp is disrupting life downtown.

Many in the square were pouring love on the military: Families put babies on the laps of soldiers on tanks for photos, crowds cheered when a line of soldiers jogging by. But there was also realism that the military's ultimate intention is unclear.

"We don't know what they'll do, they might keep hanging on to power," said Muhammed Ali, a 22-year-old archaeology student who argued for the protests to continue.

With Mubarak gone, Egypt's future will likely be shaped by three powers: the military, the protesters, and the sprawling autocratic infrastructure of Mubarak's regime that remains in place, dominating the bureaucracy, the police, state media and parts of the economy. Right now, the protesters' intentions are the clearest of the bunch.

The Armed Forces Supreme Council is now the official ruler after Mubarak handed it power on Friday. It consists of the commanders of each military branch, the chief of staff and Defense Minister Hussein Tantawy. It has not explicitly canceled the constitution drawn up by Mubarak's regime, but the constitution seems to have effectively been put in a cupboard for the time being until it is decided what to do with it.

The military seized power after pleas from protesters, and it has repeatedly promised to ensure democratic change, making it highly popular with the movement.

But on the face of it, the elderly generals are no reformers, and their move to push out Mubarak may have been more to ensure the survival of a ruling system the military has been intertwined with since a 1952 army coup. The deeply secretive military has substantial economic interests, running industries and businesses that it will likely seek to preserve.

The council of generals has said nothing so far about how the transition will be carried out or addressed the protesters' demands.

While it decides that, it sought on Saturday to reassure Egyptians and Egypt's allies abroad.

A spokesman, Gen. Mohsen el-Fangari, appeared on state TV in front of a row of Egyptian military and national flags and read the council statement, proclaiming that the military is "looking forward to a peaceful transition ... to permit an elected civil authority to be in charge of the country to build a democratic free nation."

The military statement also said Egypt will "abide by all regional and international treaties and agreements, and commitments" — reassurance to its top ally the United States that Egypt's 1979 peace accord with Israel is not in danger.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu welcomed the statement, saying the treaty "has greatly contributed to both countries and is the cornerstone for peace and stability in the entire Middle East."

Israel has been deeply concerned that Egypt's turmoil could threaten the peace accord, the first between an Arab nation and Israel. But Egypt's military strongly supports the peace deal, not in small part because it guarantees U.S. aid for the armed forces, currently running at $1.3 billion a year. While anti-Israeli feeling is strong in Egypt, few so far seriously call for the treaty's abrogation.

Mubarak's final hours: Desperate bids to stay

CAIRO (AP) — Hosni Mubarak was supposed to announce his resignation on Thursday. The Egyptian military expected it. The new head of his ruling party pleaded to him face-to-face to do it. But despite more than two weeks of massive demonstrations by protesters unmoved by lesser concessions, the president still didn't get it.

Mubarak's top aides and family — including his son Gamal, widely viewed as his intended successor — told him he could still ride out the turmoil. So the televised resignation speech the rest of Egypt had expected became a stubborn — and ultimately humiliating — effort to cling to power. It only enraged protesters. On Friday, the military moved decisively.

On Saturday, insiders in Egypt gave The Associated Press an initial picture of what happened in the hours before Egypt's "unoustable" leader of nearly 30 years fell. Some of them spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the information.

Their account portrayed Mubarak as unable, or unwilling, to grasp that nothing less than his immediate departure would save the country from the chaos generated by the protests that began Jan. 25. A senior government official said Mubarak lacked the political machinery that could give him sound advice about what was happening in the country.

"He did not look beyond what Gamal was telling him, so he was isolated politically," said the official. "Every incremental move (by Mubarak) was too little too late."

The military, meanwhile, was becoming increasingly impatient with the failure of Mubarak and Omar Suleiman, his newly appointed vice president, to end the protests. The unrest spiraled out of control Thursday and Friday, with demonstrations, strikes, sit-ins and even gunbattles engulfing almost the entire nation.

Insiders spoke of fighting among Cabinet ministers over how great a threat the demonstrators posed, and of deliberate attempts by close aides, including Gamal Mubarak, to conceal from the president the full extent of what was happening on the streets.

The insiders who spoke to the AP include a senior Egyptian official, editors and journalists from state newspapers close to the regime who have spent years covering Mubarak's presidency, retired army generals in contact with top active duty officers, senior members of Mubarak's National Democratic Party and analysts familiar with the machinations of Mubarak's inner circle.

Their account of the events of the past three weeks shows that the military became concerned soon after the protests began. They said it was the military that persuaded Mubarak to appoint Suleiman as vice president — the first since Mubarak took office in 1981 — and place him in charge of negotiations with opposition groups on a way out of the standoff.

Suleiman failed on that score — on Tuesday he was reduced to threatening that a coup would replace the negotiations if no progress was made. Leaders of the protests vowed not to negotiate until Mubarak was gone, even after he said he would not seek another term in September and promised reforms to reduce poverty, end repressive emergency laws and make Egypt more democratic.

By Thursday, nearly everyone had expected Mubarak to resign, including the military.

Hossam Badrawi, a stalwart of Mubarak's National Democratic Party, met with Mubarak on Thursday and later told reporters that he expected the Egyptian leader to "meet people's demands" — read that stepping down — later the same day. After Mubarak did not, Badrawi, who had been named the party's secretary general a few days earlier, resigned in protest, according to two party insiders.

Meanwhile, the military's highest executive body — The Supreme Council of the Armed Forces — met without its chairman, commander-in-chief Mubarak, and issued a statement recognizing the "legitimate" rights of the protesters. They called the statement "Communique No. 1," language that in the Arab world suggests a coup was taking place.

Insiders said Mubarak's address Thursday night was meant to be his resignation announcement. Instead, he made one last desperate attempt to stay in office after being encouraged to do so by close aides and especially by his family, long the subject of rumors of corruption, abuse of power and extensive wealth.

Mubarak had hoped that putting Suleiman in charge would end the protests and allow him to remain in office as a symbolic figure, a scenario that would have seen him make a dignified exit.

The address betrayed what many Egyptians suspected for years — Mubarak was out of touch with the people.

Mubarak, said a senior Egyptian official, "tried to manage the crisis within the existing structures and norms. That was clearly too late. The incremental offers of reform also were clearly insufficient."

The insiders differ on whether Mubarak's address that night was made with the consent of the military, whether it represented his last chance to take back control of the streets. Even if the military's patience wasn't exhausted by the speech, it ran out as the protests grew more intense.

On Friday, the military allowed protesters to gather outside Mubarak's presidential palace in a Cairo suburb — but by that time Mubarak and his immediate family had already flown to another palace in the Red Sea resort of Sharm el-Sheikh, 250 miles away. The soldiers also allowed protesters to besiege the TV and radio building in downtown Cairo. Two days earlier, the military stood by and watched as protesters laid siege to the prime minister's office and parliament. Shafiq, the prime minister, could not work in his office and had to work out of the Civil Aviation Ministry close to Cairo's airport.

By early afternoon, millions were out on the streets in Cairo, the Mediterranean port city of Alexandria and a string of other major cities. The crowd outside his palace was rapidly growing. Only a few meters and four army tanks separated the protesters from the gate.

Suleiman, Mubarak's longtime confidant and a former intelligence chief, announced that Mubarak was stepping down. In a two-sentence statement to state television that took 49 seconds, Egypt's history changed forever.

Clara Magdalene Slatter Herre

NAMPA — Clara Magdalene Slatter Herre, 93, passed into the arms of her loving Lord on Saturday, Feb. 5, 2011.

Clare was born May 17, 1917, at Filer, Idaho, to Daniel B and Emma Kaufman Slatter. She was the last survivor of nine children. She grew up in Filer surrounded by a large extended family where many of her childhood playmates were her cousins. Clare graduated from Filer High School in 1935, attended Northwest Nazarene College in 1941 and later attended Idaho State University. After high school, she began working as a “candy counter girl” at the M.H. King Co. in Twin Falls. She said she kept her nails painted red so the chocolate didn’t show.

Before her marriage, she worked as a dental assistant and, in the early 1960s, she became the first office manager and bookkeeper for the Idaho Youth Ranch in its initial years. She worked there until her retirement in 1979. In 1945, Clare married Chief Warrant Officer Dale C. Herre. Following his discharge in 1946, they moved to Lava Hot Springs and then to Jerome, Idaho. Clare and Dale welcomed four children into their lives: Jane Clare, Daylene Rae, Ramona Ann and Joe D.

In 1954, Dale and Clare felt fortunate to draw a Veteran’s Lottery homestead on the Minidoka Project at Paul, Idaho. They built a house that became home and developed a productive farm, where they lived for the next 25 years. Life on the farm was never dull with beets to hoe, cows to milk, pigs to feed, raspberries to pick and rhubarb pies to make. Clare maintained “her own” strip of canal bank asparagus for many years. Their home was a gathering place for extended family and church friends. Clare was generous and compassionate in including nieces, nephews and foster children in her family. She always had an extra bed and another place at her table.

In 1979, Dale and Clare moved to Eltopia, Wash., and in 1983 returned to Idaho to retire in Parma. For the next 20 years, they split their time between Parma and their winter residence in Yuma, Ariz. Clare lived independently until 2009, at which time she joined her daughter and son-in-law at their home in Nampa. Clare loved to fish, whether on a lake, a stream or on the ocean; she was always the first out and the last in when it came time to fish. Clare enjoyed gardening and was known for sharing raspberries, vegetables and fruit with neighbors and friends. To the end, she had her hands in the dirt and anticipated the seasonal changes.

Clare loved playing games and encouraged the spirit of healthy competition in all of her grandchildren. Puzzles and word games entertained her until the last days of her life. Clare was a lifetime member of the Church of the Nazarene. She was a faithful Sunday school teacher, involved in missions work and committed to youth and children’s ministries. She was our true example of how a Christian life is lived.

Clare was preceded in death by her husband, Dale; and eight siblings. She is survived by her children, Jane (Alan) Erdahl of Salt Lake City, Utah, Daylene (Dan) Petersen of Nampa, Ramona (Walter) Bryant of Boise and Joe (Karla) Herre of San Antonio, Texas. She is also survived by 11 grandchildren, Melissa (Ryan) Wadington, Emily Clare (Craig) Robson, Andrea (Kenny) Clark, Jessica Johnson, Jason Herre, Benjamin (Teresa) Petersen, Ginger Rose Phillips, Christopher Petersen, Jef (Alicia) Petersen, Andrew Petersen and Jeremy Phillips. A special cousin, Ethel Oatney; eight great-grandchildren; and many nieces and nephews also survive her.

The family thanks Accent Hospice Care and especially Christie and Dale for the gentle care they provided in the last months.

Memorial gifts in lieu of flowers may be sent to Accent Hospice Care, 1857 S. Millennium Way, Suite 100, Meridian, ID 83642.

A celebration of Clare’s life will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday, Feb. 19, at the Parma Church of the Nazarene, 804 N. B St. A luncheon will follow at 1 p.m. at Canyon Hill Church of the Nazarene, 903 N. Michigan Ave. in Caldwell, Idaho. In the spirit of Clare’s hospitality, all are welcome.

Randy Scott Small

Randy Scott Small, 52, of Twin Falls, passed away Wednesday evening, Feb. 9, 2011 (Randy’s birthday), at his home in Twin Falls with his family by his side.

Randy was born Feb. 9, 1959, in Twin Falls, Idaho, the son of Leland and Ella Seaton Small. He grew up in Redwood City, Calif., where he attended school. He graduated from Redwood High School in 1977.

Randy moved from California to Twin Falls, Idaho, in 1981. On May 7, 1983, he married the love of his life, LisaGINGHER, in Twin Falls. Together they raised three boys, Randy Jr., Nicholas and Jordan.

Randy worked as a plumber and mechanic all of his life. He worked for J.R. Miller for 12 years and then worked for Reis Plumbing and Heating for 15 years until he was forced to retire.

Randy’s love was fishing and being in the outdoors. He also enjoyed his home improvement projects. His family was everything to Randy and spending time with them was very important and meaningful.

Randy is survived by his wife of 28 years, Lisa, of Twin Falls; his three sons, Randy Jr. (Letty) Small, Nick Small and Jordan Small, all of Twin Falls; his mother, Ella Seaton, also of Twin Falls; and his sister, Pam Chapman (Larry Cowles) of Boise. He is also survived by his two grandchildren, Randy III and Estrella. He was preceded in death by his father, Leland Small, and his brother, Greg Small.

A celebration of Randy’s life will be held at 2 p.m. Monday, Feb. 14, at Reynolds Funeral Chapel, 2466 Addison Ave. E. in Twin Falls. At Randy’s request, there will be no public viewing and services are under the direction of Reynolds Funeral Chapel in Twin Falls.

Opal Earleen Ricks Scott

Opal Earleen Ricks Scott, 74, of Twin Falls, passed away Friday, Feb. 11, 2011, with her family by her side following a short battle with cancer.

Earleen was born April 1, 1936, to Joseph Earl and Opal Ward Ricks in Rexburg, Idaho. She grew up in Rexburg, Ririe, and Idaho Falls. She graduated from Madison High School in Rexburg and later attended Excelsis Beauty College in Idaho Falls.

She married her childhood friend, Don Harmon Scott, on March 17, 1956, in Rexburg. Together they had six children. They lived and worked in Rexburg, Ririe, Idaho. They also worked in Utah and Nevada, while Don worked in construction. They later moved to Ucon, Idaho, and spent many fulfilled years there. Then they moved to Big Piney, Wyo., and then many years later they retired and made their final home in Twin Falls, Idaho.

Earleen was always ready and willing to help anyone in need. She always made you feel happy and better having known her. Her happy smile always made everyone around her smile. She was a devoted wife, mother, sister, grandmother, friend and teacher. She loved her family and spending time with them brought her great joy. Earleen loved to read books, and crochet blankets and special things for her children and grandchildren. Her faith has been her strength throughout her life. She was a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and she held many positions in the Relief Society, Primary, and she worked in the Genealogy Extraction program. She is survived by her loving husband, Don; her six children, Donalene (Ron) Myers of Clearfield, Utah, Rodney (Carol) Scott of Rexburg, Idaho, Kerry (Peggy) Scott of Rigby, Idaho, Flynn Scott of Ogden, Utah, ReNae (Keith) Pilgrim of Benton City, Wash., and Carter (Robin) Scott of Hooper, Utah; brothers: Dale (Jeanette) Ricks of Gooding, Idaho, Dee Ricks of Kimberly, Idaho, and Tim (Jeanette) Ricks of Rexburg, Idaho; and sisters, Cleora Ward, Delaine (Raynold) Stewart and Ruby Ricks, all of Murtaugh, Idaho, Karen Lott of Idaho Falls, Idaho, Nina (Don) Butler of Filer, Idaho, and Joann (Keith) Biggs of Portland, Ore. She has 20 grandchildren and 14 great-grandchildren.

The funeral will be at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday, Feb. 15, at the Twin Falls 9th Ward Chapel, 2680 N. Elizabeth Blvd. in Twin Falls, Idaho. Family will visit with friends from 9 to 10:15 a.m. at the church. ## James ‘Bill’ W. Holm BURLEY — James “Bill” W. Holm, an 81-year-old Burley resident, passed away Thursday, Feb. 10, 2011, at Cassia Regional Medical Center.

Bill was born May 22, 1929, in Burley, Idaho, the son of James A. and Thelma M. Holm. He was a lifelong resident of the Mini-Cassia area. Bill served his country in the United States Army from 1950 to 1952 during the Korean conflict, where Bill received two Purple Hearts.

He married Carma Lloyd on Dec. 26, 1952, and they had four children before they divorced. Bill married the love of his life, Georgia Choate, on Sept. 16, 1972, in Elko, Nev., which was later solemnized in the Salt Lake City LDS Temple in 1989. With this marriage, four more children were added to his family. In 1976, they were blessed with another daughter.

Bill worked for Handy Truck Lines and drove truck for most of his life. He was a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and enjoyed doing temple work. He loved spending time with his family, camping, fishing, hunting and going on family vacation.

He is survived by his wife, Georgia; his children, Teresa Rieley of Overton, Nev., Eileen Jensen of Declo, Idaho, James L. (Deena) Holm of Oklahoma, Roger Holm of Winnemucca, Nev., Roxanna Ross of Kansas, Cheryl Hopkins of Oklahoma, Ronda (Eugene) Barrus of Burley, Idaho, and Kayla (Chay) Courtright of Burley, Idaho; his brothers, Larry Holm of Burley, Don (Kay) Holm of Pocatello, Idaho, and Steven Holm of Kaysville, Utah; and one sister, Janet (Marvin) Taylor of Chatsworth, Calif. He was preceded in death by his parents and two sons, Raymond Miller and Richard Choate.

The funeral will be held at 11 a.m. Wednesday, Feb. 16, at the Burley LDS Stake Center at 2050 Normal Ave., with Bishop Guy Redder officiating. Friends may call from 6 to 8 p.m. Tuesday at Hansen Payne Mortuary and one hour prior to the service Wednesday at the church. Burial will follow at the Pleasant View Cemetery with military graveside rites by the Mini-Cassia Veterans. In lieu of flowers, donations can be made to the family to help with expenses.

Prosecutor in high-profile Louisiana cases dies at 74

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Former U.S. Attorney John Volz, who spearheaded high-profile corruption cases involving Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards and New Orleans crime boss Carlos Marcello, has died at the age of 74.

Volz died Saturday in a Tulsa, Okla., hospital after a long illness, said his widow, Daisy Volz. He had been a federal administrative law judge there for the past six years until he retired Dec. 31, she said. Volz was the chief federal prosecutor for the Eastern Judicial District of Louisiana from 1978 until 1990. He tried Edwards twice on racketeering charges in the 1980s stemming from an alleged health care scheme, but one trial ended in a hung jury and the second resulting in acquittal.

Edwards, who served an unprecedented four terms as Louisiana governor, was recently released from federal prison on a 10-year sentence for extorting casino license applicants during the 1990s. Volz convicted Marcello in a bribery case with national implications known as Brilab, although that verdict was overturned in 1989.

U.S. District Judge Lance Africk of New Orleans, who worked as Volz's chief of criminal prosecutions from 1982 to 1990, called his former boss “a honorable person” with nothing but the public's interest in mind.

Poll: Most Utahns oppose designation of state firearm

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Most Utahns oppose a bill that declares the Browning semiautomatic pistol the official state gun, according to a statewide poll.

The Deseret News/KSL poll found 57 percent of Utahns surveyed oppose designation of a state gun and 36 percent favor it. Seven percent are undecided.

House Bill 219 now awaits Gov. Gary Herbert's signature after the House on Friday concurred with a Senate amendment to it. If the bill is signed, Utah would be the first state in the nation to have a state firearm, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures.

Herbert spokeswoman Ally Isom said it will be reviewed by the governor.

“The governor feels this effort is as much about honoring John Moses Browning, the Utah innovator and entrepreneur, as it is about a gun,” she said.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. Carl Wimmer, R-Herriman, and other supporters say the bill is a way to show support for guns and gun ownership, and to honor Utah native John Browning for the invention of the Opponents say guns represent violence to many people and Utah should honor Browning some other way.

According to the poll, the designation of a state gun was opposed by 57 percent of Republicans surveyed, 58 percent of independents and 72 percent of Democrats.

Before the House vote, Minority Assistant Whip Brian King, D-Salt Lake, read a letter from Browning's brother's great-grandson opposing the bill. Robert Pack Browning's letter decried gun violence and the bill's “glorification of firearms.”

The poll of 496 Utahns was conducted Tuesday through Thursday by Dan Jones & Associates.

POINTS TO CONSIDER BEFORE PURCHASING YOUR MEMORIAL

- Jim Lee received his training through and worked for, Jellison-Madland Memorials the last 27 years of their 100 years in business.
- As a qualified memorial dealer with over 30 years experience he is here to help you select the memorial that will be a lasting tribute to your loved one.
- Appointments are made to provide you the privacy and time to pick the right memorial and the perfect personalized design. Since we are an independent LOCAL memorial dealer, we can meet or beat any reasonable price in Southern Idaho. We own our own shop and do our own work. Unless a funeral home owns and operates its own monument shop your memorial will be ordered from and completed by someone over 100 miles away and delivered by someone from out of the area as well. We do not sell to, through, or for funeral homes. You do not have to buy a memorial through a funeral home. You have the right to buy from whomever you choose at whatever time you choose. The time to pick and design a memorial is NOT when suffering loss or making funeral arrangements. Take time to regroup and start the healing process before planning the memorial that will honor the one you've lost. Our prices include ALL lettering on your memorial, front and back, and delivery in most local cemeteries. We DO NOT charge for concrete on our memorials. Question outlandish concrete fees.

We commend Sunset Memorial Park and most other area cemeteries for their professionalism and cemetery maintenance.

Hundred additional Reno employees get layoff notices

RENO, Nev. (AP) — One hundred more Reno city employees have received layoff notices, prompting the immediate closure of a downtown police substation to the public.

Workers were advised by the personnel office of their options Friday, including unemployment benefits and self-paid, extended health coverage.

City spokeswoman Michele Anderson says the employees were put on administrative leave until the layoffs take effect March 1 so they have more time to find work while under the city's health insurance coverage.

Last year, the city laid off 126 full-time positions and left another 56 positions empty.

FBI probes firefighters' sick-leave abuse case

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The FBI has joined a Las Vegas police review of e-mails and other materials that Clark County officials compiled to show possible sick-leave abuse by some firefighters.

Police told the Las Vegas Review-Journal that while no formal investigation is under way, they will review the materials to determine whether to pursue the case.

Sheriff Doug Gillespie says such investigations are complex, and an FBI representative declined to comment.

Officials estimate that firefighters' sick leave cost the county $7 million in 2009. County firefighters average $180,000 annually in wages and benefits.

Some help in private-sector needed for Lazy J tenants

To no one’s surprise, the Twin Falls City Council last week signaled the beginning of the end for the Lazy J Ranch mobile home park on the city’s north end.

The council rezoned the property from residential to commercial with the proviso that it can’t be developed for at least five years, removing a clause that would have allowed the landowners to shut down the park if it reached 28 percent vacancy.

Realistically, that’s the best the city can do for the mostly elderly residents of the 40-acre facility, which is located on prime real estate.

“Idaho cities have limited tools to arrest the national trend that closes the mobile home parks and displaces affordable housing,” said a 2007 report by Boise State University College of Social Sciences and Public Affairs.

Our view: The mostly elderly residents of Twin Falls’ Lazy J Ranch mobile home park face the very real prospect of losing their homes. Time for the community to come to their aid.

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Under a voluntary program in Boise, developers contribute cash — typically $1,500 to $2,000 per household — to help mobile home owners displaced by new construction.

And local government could work with homeowners’ associations to sponsor limited equity housing cooperatives, which keep housing prices low by limiting the resale price of the land. The co-op works with a lender to buy a mobile home park and the homeowners pool their own money to purchase shares in a public corporation that owns the property.

At minimum, one or more local Realtors, developers, service clubs or churches could organize a housing exchange to help Lazy J residents find someplace else to live. Members of the City Council should take the initiative in making that happen.

The 2007 BSU report found that half of the 5,400 Boiseans who lived in mobile homes were senior citizens with a median income of $20,000. Most were women and nearly half suffered from chronic medical conditions.

Our state emphasizes the rights of property owners, who by law have broad discretion over what they do with their land. That’s the way a majority of Idahoans like it.

But that doesn’t absolve us of the moral responsibility of lending a hand to neighbors who can’t fend for themselves.

Idaho nullification may cut wide swath through Medicare

By Jim Wordelman

Some at the Statehouse are again playing politics with health care, in a manner even the Idaho state attorney general’s office calls “unconstitutional” and the results could be disastrous. As if Idaho’s budget woes weren’t bad enough, legislative efforts to “nullify” the federal Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act could cost the state billions of dollars and the loss of thousands of health care jobs, all the while forcing seniors to go without needed prescription drugs.

With the health care “nullification” bill moving through a key legislative committee Thursday, the approach could do little more than wreak havoc on health care in the state.

AARP understands that not everyone supports the new law, but the bottom line is that it helps hundreds of thousands of Idahoans have access to

Why Teton Dam won’t rise again

By Rocky Barker
Idaho Statesman (Boise)

The support for the Teton Dam in eastern Idaho dropped dramatically in June of 1976 when it failed after the Bureau of Reclamation filled it for the first time, sending a wall of water through the towns of Teton, Newdale, Sugar City and Rexburg.

At least 11 people died and the dam, built ironically for flood control, ended up causing more than a billion dollars in flood damages. But Idaho’s irrigation lobby, the water buffaloes, have pushed for rebuilding it ever since.

Now a new poll paid for by American Rivers, a national conservation group, shows that with the deaths and the flooding out of the memories of most eastern Idahoans, the simple question should the Teton Dam be rebuilt gets a split response with a slight advantage for rebuilding.

But at a time when the federal deficit has hit alarming levels and the state is talking about laying off hundreds of teachers and eliminating dozens of traditional services the views change quick when the talk turns to paying for it.

The poll shows residents of southeast Idaho prefer making improvements in water efficiency to rebuilding Teton Dam by a margin of 63 percent to 26 percent.

The poll comes as the Bureau of Reclamation and state are in the midst of a two-year study to evaluate options for replacing the storage water that was lost when the dam failed. This poll was not done by some

It was done by Bob Moore, of Portland, Ore, who does most of the Republican Party’s polling in Idaho.

“In this economic climate, people are going to make choices based on cost first and foremost, and building new dams is extraordinarily expensive,” Moore said.

The poll, conducted in December by Moore Information, interviewed

Crapo, debt and the merit of spending cuts

Over the past few weeks, I've had a chance to interview some amazing people. I sat down with Bill Gates, who was in Washington to try to keep the looming budget cuts from decimating the foreign aid programs.

I sat down with scientists and university presidents who are nervous that budget cuts might retard American research and innovation.

I've received a number of e-mails from people in the early childhood education movement who are already seeing states cutting their vital work.

I've also been in touch with people at Teach for America. The line in the federal budget that helps pay for their work qualifies as an earmark, so they face an $18 million cut and the loss of 400 teachers.

It seems that as long as there is a budget crisis, I'll never be lonely. But I have to say, many of these great people are suffering under a misimpression. They assume that if they can only persuade enough people that their programs are producing tremendous results then they will be spared from the budget ax.

They are wrong about that. The coming budget cuts have nothing to do with merit. They have to do with the inexorable logic of mathematics. Over the past decades, spending in nearly every section of the federal budget has exploded to unsustainable levels. Each year, your family's share of the national debt increases by about $12,000. By 2015, according to Douglas Holtz-Eakin, the former director of the Congressional Budget Office, Moody's will downgrade U.S. debt.

The greatest pressure comes from entitlements. Spending on Medicare, Medicaid, Social Security and interest on the debt has now risen to 47 percent of the budget. In nine years, entitlements are estimated to consume 64 percent of the budget, according to the invaluable folks at the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget. By 2030, they are projected consume 70 percent of the budget.

When you throw in other politically untouchable programs, like Veterans Affairs, you arrive at a situation in which a vast majority of the budget is off limits to politicians who are trying to control debt. All cuts must, therefore, be made in the tiny sliver of the budget where the most valuable programs reside and where the most important investments in our future are made.

Over the next few weeks, Republicans will try to cut discretionary spending to 2008 levels and tell their constituents they are boldly reducing the size of government. That is a mirage. Anybody who doesn't take on entitlement spending is an enabler of big government. The supposedly rabid Republican freshmen are actually big government conservatives. They will cut programs that do measurable good while doing little to solve our long-range fiscal crisis.

Meanwhile, the Obama administration theoretically opposes runaway debt while it operationally expands it. The president is unwilling to ask for shared sacrifice if the Republicans won't ask with him. Fine. But he hasn't even used his pulpit to prepare the ground. He announces unserious cuts with lavish fanfare.

Since most of the budget is untouchable, the budget ax will fall on every section of the discretionary budget. It will fall on the just and unjust alike, regardless of merit.

The implication is this: If people who care about this or that domestic program fight alone, hoping that their own program will be spared, then they will all perish alone. If they have any chance of continuing their work, they will have to band together and fight their common enemy, the inexorable growth of entitlement spending.

The foreign aid people, the scientific research people, the education people, the antipoverty people and many others have to form a humane alliance. They have to go on offense. They have to embrace plans to slow the growth of Medicare, to reform Social Security and to reform the tax code to foster growth and produce more revenue.

Specifically, they have to get behind an effort now being hatched by a group of courageous senators: Saxby Chambliss, Mark Warner, Tom Coburn, Dick Durbin, Mike Crapo and Kent Conrad. These public heroes have been leading an effort to write up the Simpson-Bowles deficit commission report as legislation to serve as the beginning for a serious effort to get our house in order. They've been meeting with 20 to 40 of their colleagues to push this along. It's not always the most famous senators that are involved in this effort. It's the midranking and junior ones who are willing to risk political ire to save the republic.

They need a popular movement mobilized behind them. They need an activist alliance so that party leaders and the White House can see a politically viable way forward.

It's not only about debt; it's about freedom. It's about whether we get to make budget choices or whether we have our lives dictated by the inexorable growth of programs beyond our control.

A chance for freedom

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — THE JUBILANT, flag-waving crowds pouring through the center of Cairo on Friday recalled scenes from other parts of the world during the past 30 years — Manila in 1986; Prague in 1989; Jakarta in 1998. As people did in those countries, Egyptians turned out en masse, and mostly peacefully, to demand not just a change of government but a democratic revolution. In doing so, they raised the momentous prospect that political freedom would spread, at last, to the region of the world that lacks it, and needs it, the most.

Egypt's revolution could forever transform the Arab world's most populous country, end decades of stagnation and reshape a region where autocracy has nourished extremism and terrorism. But it is not yet complete; in some ways, it has barely begun. Friday brought not just the triumph of people power, but also a military coup. Egypt's supreme military council, which assumed power from President Hosni Mubarak, has yet to spell out its plans, though one of its terse statements said that it supported a "democratic society."

In a statement celebrating the Egyptian people's triumph, President Obama rightly warned that "this is not the end of Egypt's transition. It is a beginning. . . . many questions remain unanswered." Whether Egypt moves toward genuine democracy, or lapses back toward authoritarianism or even Islamic fundamentalism, will depend mostly on the same Egyptians who filled the streets Friday.

But the United States and other Western countries also have a vital role to play. They can begin by pressing the military command not to attempt to dominate the transition — as Mubarak and Vice President Omar Suleiman sought to do — but to invite representatives of all political movements to join negotiations to create a coalition government. That administration could decide on a road map to democracy and elections. The process should be certain but not rushed, which means the current constitution probably must be set aside. U.S. aims should include helping the centrist secular movements suppressed by Mubarak to fully organize themselves, assisting in the establishment of independent authorities to stage and monitor the elections, and encouraging the opening of the state media to all sides.

Egypt will need help restarting and then reforming its economy to move from Mubarak's crony capitalism to a true free market. It might also need cover with neighboring governments, some of which will be frightened by the power of the people's movement they have just witnessed. The U.S. message to Jordan, Yemen, Saudi Arabia and other Arab allies, as well as to Israel, should be that it is better to begin preparing for a new and more democratic Middle East — and not only in Egypt.

WHAT'S THE 'DOUGHNUT HOLE'?

A unique feature of the Medicare Part D drug benefit is the so-called "doughnut hole" — the gap in coverage in which Part D enrollees are required to pay the full cost of their drugs until they qualify for catastrophic coverage.

The coverage gap was included because the cost of providing continuous coverage with no gap would have exceeded the budgetary limit imposed on the 2003 legislation when the Medicare drug benefit was established.

Nearly all Part D plans have a gap in coverage in which the enrollee pays 100 percent of total drug costs before catastrophic coverage begins. By 2016, the coverage gap is projected to exceed $6,000. Part D plans may have an alternative benefit design that helps cover at least some drug costs in the gap. Part D enrollees who qualify for the low-income subsidy, including beneficiaries dually eligible for Medicare and Medicaid, are generally not responsible for costs in the coverage gap.

Medicare Part D payments (2009)	Out-of-pocket cost	Portion covered by Medicare
Total drug spending
$0–$295	Deductible is out-of-pocket	No Medicare coverage of costs
$295–$2,700	25% out-of-pocket	75% covered by Medicare
$2,700–$6,154	All costs are out-of-pocket	No Medicare coverage of costs
Over $6,154	5% out-of-pocket	95% covered by Medicare

Under the health care reform law, people who fall within the doughnut hole receive a $250 rebate within three months of reaching the coverage gap to help with payments. By the year 2020, the doughnut hole will be completely phased out.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services estimates that more than one-fourth of Part D participants stop following their prescribed regimen of drugs when they hit the doughnut hole.

According to a study done in 2007, premiums for plans offering gap coverage are roughly double those of defined standard plans.

affordable health care and critical services. We need to be guarded against short-sighted approaches against the law that could be very hurtful to Idaho citizens and extremely costly to the state.

After two opinions by the Idaho state attorney general's office, pointing out both the unconstitutionality of efforts to nullify the federal health care law and the glaring risk to the state, Idaho lawmakers moved the bill ahead, sending it to the full House for a vote.

If nullification efforts were successful and constitutional, Idaho could end up losing much more than it's expected to gain."

The fallout from the move could be dire for Idaho and its residents:

- Eighteen thousand seniors, who've hit the prescription drug coverage gap in Medicare, known as the "doughnut hole," could lose relief provided under the federal law, forcing many to go without needed Rx.

- Two hundred twelve thousand older Idahoans would lose free preventative health screenings through Medicare, meaning many would be subject to higher costs for largely preventable illnesses. Leaving a higher health care bill for the state.

- Six thousand five hundred twenty younger uninsured state residents, whom the law currently helps to have health care coverage by staying on their parent's insurance plans, will likely lose their coverage.

- Eight hundred fifty-seven thousand Idahoans could face being kicked off their health care plans once they hit the lifetime limits the law currently eliminates, pushing many into emergency rooms for basic health care. Resulting in billions of dollars in uncompensated care and shifting higher insurance premiums onto everyone else.

- One and a half billion-dollar loss in federal matching funds for Medicaid, which could result in the loss of thousands of health care jobs in Idaho.

- Two hundred fifteen thousand Medicaid enrollees forced from the program, leaving the state to provide the services at a great financial burden. Hospitals would also no doubt see emergency room admissions soar, and state residents would bear the cost of uncompensated care in the form of increased insurance premiums.

Every child deserves a fair chance in sports

I am writing this on behalf of my heart-broken son. He is too young to write this himself and too innocent to understand what he is up against.

My boy, like many other boys and girls, enjoys playing sports. Unfortunately, there is a dark spot to these delightfully entertaining games that is either overlooked or ignored.

At the start of each sport comes the picking of the teams. I began to notice in every sport my son was a part of the coaches changed, but some of the teams did not. I began questioning this and came to understand, through talking to parents and most importantly coaches, that when it comes time to pick teams several of them have already been formed. These teams are being put together by certain parents and then coached by friends or relatives. The other coaches get whatever children are left.

I believe in fair play and sportsmanship. I also believe these things are being pushed aside so certain Gooding parents can brag at the expense of some unfortunate little underdogs. I don't wish to badmouth anyone. I just want what every parent wants for their child — a fair chance. We have all been winners and we have all felt the sting of defeat. It is important to learn how to do both.

I am requesting that from now on children be divided fairly in all sports. I am asking for something as simple as coaches taking turns drawing each child's name from a hat. Let's give all these children the chance to cheer when the final buzzer sounds. Let's teach all of them about fair play, teamwork and sportsmanship. Most importantly, let's build their self-esteem and self-confidence. Let's be fair to all these children — and to ourselves.

SHAWN RILEY

Workers deserve right to negotiate fair wages

To our state legislators: Why would you vote to limit wages a worker can make? The bill that doesn't require contractors to pay the scale wage in order to bid on state projects is a bill aimed directly at the employee! I can't wait to see how much money this is going to save the Idaho tax payer who more times than not is the employee that is hurt by this legislation.

Why would you vote to take good paying jobs away in this economy? That's crazy! Stop attacking the teachers who we entrust with the education of our children. When you can be an assistant manager at a fast food restaurant and make more than a starting teacher, there is a problem and it isn't the unions! Unions have been the only voice of the American worker — backing labor issues, FMLA, worker's comp, 40-hour work week, unemployment, sick leave, vacation and overtime pay, health care reform with the wellness benefits that benefit every man, woman and child and any issue that affects the American worker. Unions are funded by their members, not the employer. Business has a union; one of the biggest is the Chamber of Commerce, which lobbies state and federal government to pass legislation on behalf of its members. Why shouldn't employees have the same right.

Right to Work (for less) has not produced the higher paying jobs and more jobs like it was supposed to 25 years ago. What has worked is the ability to negotiate with employer for a fair wage. Just look at the 10 percent of workers who work under a union contract; proof is in the pudding. Idaho workers need to stand up and ask why do I sit back and let people I elect dictate the wages I can make and tell me that me and my fellow workers don't have a right to negotiate a fair wage and to require those who want what we the unions have spent years of negotiations to keep. Help pay the costs. Why?

Computers simply can't replace great teachers

"Students Come First" couldn't be farther from the truth. The reality is that with Superintendent Luna's plan, the dollar comes first, at the greatest expense which is the future of our children.

Every parent, every citizen of Idaho needs to read and understand what these pieces of legislation will do to the education of our children. It will increase class size, as well as many other negative things that are counterproductive to learning.

I suspect that the Luna plan, designed at a deficit of $35 million, will expand to the new deficit level. This will in turn translate into more teaching positions not being filled or a reduction in staff to meet the additional shortfall. What would that look like? The results would force districts and schools to drastically increase class size perhaps even close some schools. What's the new limit? Remember those large college classes in the auditorium with 500 other students; is this what we want for our kids?

When I attended school in Malta, I truly believed that I had the very best teachers. I remember the powerful experiences I had while taking speech from Mary Alice Telford, learning about math and science from Alvin Carpenter, English from Jane Hall, science from Paul Ward and Tom Samsel. Bill Jones was the best sixth-grade teacher a kid could have. I owe my love for teaching agriculture science and technology to Mr. Anderson and Mr. Jensen and many others. These are experiences that one can't get from a computer.

In a few years, my daughter will start school. I want for her the same great education that I had. Students have always come first. Now is the time to let our legislators know to vote against the Luna plan.

BLAINE CAMPBELL
Eden

Luna's education plan is too radical an approach

It seems that the Republican platform of no higher taxes is putting Idaho out of work. How long do we have to watch businesses, schools and careers destroyed by layoffs and budget cuts? Maybe it is time to swallow hard and start looking for alternatives to balancing the budget. Maybe it is time we all share the burden and pay a higher sales tax until this crisis levels out.

The Legislature is no longer cutting the fat from education. It is carving away at programs that have started turning around low tests scores. How long will it take to undo the damage done by budget cuts imposed because of the Republican insistence on the politically safe mantra of no tax increases? Where do we get the idea that government in the 21st century can succeed with no expansion of revenue?

Putting education on the Republican no taxes chopping block, they are systematically dismantling established programs that are working by laying off people who have built experience and team work to implement. Mr. Luna seems to be conspicuously unaware or deliberately ignoring this reality. Idaho is paying a very high price for a state educational leader whose approach ignores or denies real evidence in favor of ideologically prompted models that have no strong track record of success.

Mr. Luna is gulling the Legislature, and it seems to unable or unwilling to see his proposals for what they really are. Should the Legislature enact Luna's proposals, Republicans will be gutting Idaho public education. They will be turning on its head the strong and working tradition of locally controlled schools and opening us to corporate-based school and educational "management." This is not the stuff of conscientious conservatism. It is a radical approach imposed from the top. I vote no confidence in Mr. Luna's proposals.

The City of Jerome will sorely miss Tom Mahan

Small towns in America are noted for having small-town people. By this I mean, those citizens, who not because of lack of ambition, but due to circumstances beyond their control, prevent them from being well educated in the world and not having a world view of events. These typical small-town people work hard, struggle each day making a living, read the local paper and circulate the latest town gossip, but contribute nothing to the benefit of mankind in general. It is not their fault they are not significant contributors, as there are many in the world like that.

However, having lived in a number of small towns in my 73 years, I find that Jerome, Idaho, is truly an exception. This town has truly been blessed with what I would call an exceptional number of small-town people. Most have now passed on and are only memories of those of us that could be called "old-timers." The newer members of our community have missed some great Jerome town citizens.

There is one that has now passed on Feb. 9, at the age of 93, that truly needs to have attention brought before the body politic as to what impact he had on our community. He was truly an exceptional individual. He served his community with rare abilities in an accounting profession that touched many lives. He served his country in the military, retiring as a LTC, and did not quit when he was discharged from regular service, but continued as a part-time soldier, knowing that freedom was not free. His stellar support to his community earned him one year, the honor of being selected as Jerome County Outstanding Citizen and later as Citizen of the Decade. His wise words of wisdom to every one he met directed the path of many who spoke with him. His personal conduct was above reproach and moral standing was the highest.

Yes, he will be missed in our community, but Tom Mahan will be remembered as a small-town person with a world class personality and view. Thanks for the mentoring you gave to us, Tom, and thanks for the memories. We who are left behind have been fortunate to have known you. Our world and community is a better place because you passed this way.

Protect your children's education.

IDAHO, it's time to raise your hand for our kids!

When Tom Luna campaigned for re-election last year, he boasted that Idaho schools are among the nation's best.

Now, Luna says our system is broken and we have no choice but to overhaul education in Idaho.

So what's the real story?

Idaho schools are great because of the work of thousands of highly effective educators, dedicated administrators, school boards, and parents.

Let's face it: Idaho teens don't need even more high-tech gadgets and screen time. Idaho children don't need more crowded classrooms.

They need skills that will help them succeed in college and get 21st-century jobs: problem solving, teamwork, and critical thinking.

They need strong, stable neighborhood schools with caring, competent teachers. Idaho has cut its K-12 budget $200 million over the past two years, and another $80 million or more may be cut this year.

Enough is enough. Call your state lawmakers now.

Ask them to support strong schools for our children and oppose any legislation that:

- increases class sizes
- trades teachers for technology
- takes away basic fairness for school employees
- rewards out-of-state, for-profit education companies
- eliminates up to one thousand Idaho jobs

Westword

300 residents of southeast Idaho. It has a margin of error of plus or minus 6 percent.

To rebuild the Teton Dam would cost from half a billion to a billion dollars. The bureau has always said they are confident they could do it this time without a failure.

But the Teton River has recovered remarkably into a world class trout fishery again. Tourism is a much larger part of the economy of eastern Idaho today than it was in 1971 when the dam was authorized.

Few people are talking about building more big dams in the West despite the water shortages. Still, the Teton Dam is authorized by Congress.

All a future congressional delegation has to do is get the $1 billion added to an appropriations bill. Imagine a future stimulus bill where a future bureau presents a "shovel-ready" project.

I know this is unlikely. There will clearly have to be a new environmental impact statement and unlike before, the bureau will have to show a new project's benefits really do outweigh its cost.

Any new dam project, including the dams the bureau and the state are looking at in the Boise Basin, will have to find someone to pay for them. The poll suggests that even in southeastern Idaho residents want their governments to look at all of the alternatives before spending money on costly new dams.

Obama takes scalpel to budget; is more needed?

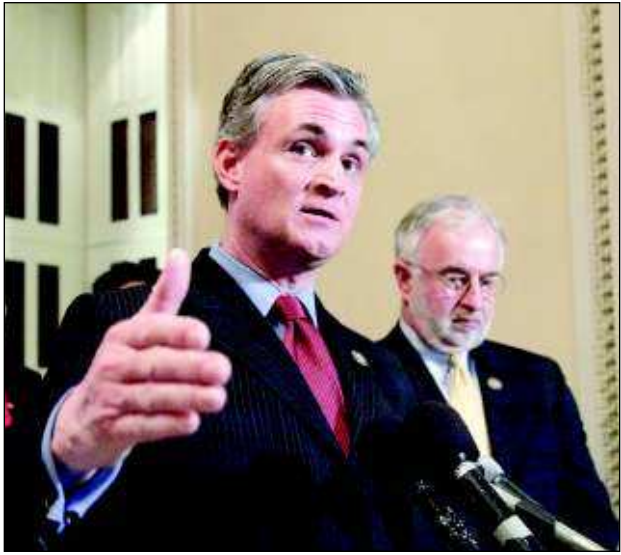

By Andrew Taylor
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama's budget submission on Monday will take a surgical approach to a deficit problem that his Republican rivals say warrants a meat ax.

As Obama seeks $53 billion for high-speed rail over the next few years, House Republicans are trying to pull back $2.5 billion that's already been promised. He's seeking increases for his "Race to the Top" initiative that provides grants to better-performing schools; Republicans on Friday unveiled a five percent cut to schools serving the disadvantaged.

Monday's release of next year's budget plan will be likely ignored by resurgent Republicans intent on cutting $100 billion from the president's old budget.

The GOP drive to slash 2011 spending and much of the savings sought by Obama involve just a small piece of the budget pie — the annual domestic agency budgets that make up just one-tenth of federal spending. Tea party-backed House Republicans are trying to slash tens of billions of dollars in such programs to return them to levels when Obama first took office.

Obama's promise to freeze budgets of domestic agencies at 2010 levels for five years — an austere plan by itself — looks generous by comparison.

On Saturday, he promised the government will have to tighten its belt.

"This budget asks Washington to live within its means, while at the same time investing in our future," the president said Saturday in his weekly radio and Internet address. "It cuts what we can't afford to pay for what we cannot do without. That's what families do in hard times. And that's what our country has to do too."

But Obama is likely to ignore the most painful recommendation of his bipartisan budget commission when releasing his $3.5 trillion-plus budget on Monday.

While Obama invited Republicans in last month's State of the Union address to sit down and seek a "bipartisan solution to strengthen Social Security for future generations," he won't offer any specific policy prescriptions on how to fix the program. The deficit commission offered politically dangerous ideas like raising the Social Security retirement age, trimming future benefit increases and reaping more payroll taxes from better-off workers.

"I'm really disappointed," said House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan, R-Wis., on reports Obama won't offer proposals to extend the solvency of Social Security. "Health care, I get it. We have a difference of opinion on health care. On this issue (Social Security) ... we're like 95 percent of the way there. We were so close. We weren't there yet, but we were close."

In fact, the upcoming budget is unlikely to even meet the president's own goal set last year of getting the deficit down to 3 percent of the size of the economy by 2015. That was the job Obama gave the fiscal commission, which exceeded it with a host of painful recommendations, such as to eliminate or sharply scale back popular tax breaks, nearly freeze the Pentagon's budget and almost double the federal tax on gasoline with a 15 cents-per-gallon increase.

None of those steps are likely to be in the Obama blueprint.

"The White House has put out its own fiscal target and there's no reason not to hold them accountable for meeting it," said Maya MacGuineas of the Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget, a bipartisan group that advocates fiscal responsibility. "It's troubling that signs are they will miss their own target. There's no excuse for that other than political unwillingness."

Instead, Obama promises to seek eliminating tens of billions of dollars in tax breaks for oil companies — even though such ideas went nowhere under Democratic control of Congress and have even less of a chance now.

Obama wants to use such proposals and cuts of other programs to pay for increased spending on education, infrastructure, science and research that he says is needed to boost U.S. competitiveness.

White House wants less government in mortgage system

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Obama administration wants to shrink the government's role in the mortgage system — a proposal that would remake decades of federal policy aimed at getting Americans to buy homes and would probably make home loans more expensive across the board.

The Treasury Department rolled out a plan Friday to slowly dissolve Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, the government-sponsored programs that bought up mortgages to encourage more lending and required bailouts during the 2008 financial crisis.

Exactly how far the government's role in mortgages would be reduced was left to Congress to decide, but all three options the administration presented would create a housing finance system that relies far more on private money.

"It's clear the administration wants the private sector to take a more prominent role in the mortgage rates, and in order for that to happen, mortgage rates have to go up," said Thomas Lawler, a housing economist in Virginia.

Abolishing Fannie and Freddie would rewrite 70 years of federal housing policy, from Fannie's creation as part of the New Deal to President George W. Bush's drive for an "ownership society" in the 2000s. It would transform how homes are bought and redefine who can afford them.

Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner said the plan would probably not happen for at least five years and would proceed "very carefully." In the meantime, he said the companies would have the cash they need to meet their existing obligations.

"We think there's very broad consensus on the Hill and in the broader private market that there needs to be a transition to a much smaller role for the government," he said.

Ever since the housing market went bust and the country fell into a financial crisis, pressure has been building for the government to do away with Fannie and Freddie and reduce taxpayer exposure to risk.

Suspected kidnapper's body found in canal

McClatchy Newspapers

PATTERSON, Calif. — The body of a Latino man believed to have kidnapped Juliani Cardenas was recovered Saturday morning from the Delta-Mendota Canal near Patterson, Calif., authorities say.

"I'm happy this is over," said Tabitha Cardenas, whose 4-year-old son was wrestled from the arms of his grandmother Jan. 18 by Jose Esteban Rodriguez. Authorities found his car in the canal two weeks later, and Juliani's body four days after that.

"We don't have to worry about Jose anymore," Tabitha said. "Everyone's going to be safe."

A canal worker discovered the man's body about 8:30 a.m. at Gate No. 9, 11 miles south of where authorities believe Rodriguez drove his car into the water.

The boy's body had drifted 31 miles, nearly to Santa Nella.

Confirmation of Rodriguez's identity should come at an autopsy scheduled for Tuesday, said Stanislaus County Sheriff Adam Christianson.

The body matches the man's physical and clothing description, he said.

"Now that we've recovered Jose's body, the community can start to heal," Christianson said.

Can 2012 GOP hopefuls deliver on big promises?

By Liz Sidoti
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Republicans who want to be the one to make Barack Obama a one-term president are promising big changes should the GOP win the White House in 2012.

“Economic growth, job creation, smaller government, less spending, lower taxes, rational regulation and a stronger presence in the world,” as Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour put it Saturday — echoing a slew of others also considering running.

These grandiose pledges sell well to the die-hard conservatives who play an outsized early role in determining the GOP nominee.

But would — could — Republicans do all they say? Probably not.

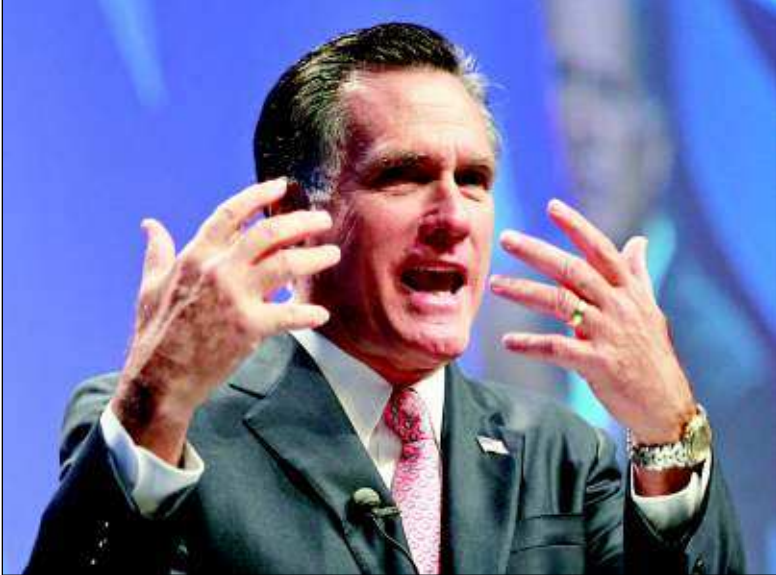

The realities of governing often conflict with the rhetoric of campaigning.

Just ask Obama, who often says: “Change is hard.”

He had some major achievements in his first two years, including the new health care law. But he failed to make good on other campaign promises — closing the Guantanamo Bay prison for suspected terrorists, for example.

Now in charge of the House, Republican leaders are discovering for themselves that it’s not easy to keep pledges made in the heat of a campaign.

They said last fall they would cut $100 billion from the federal budget. Once put into power, they soon scaled back their goal, a concession to the difficulty of slicing into pet projects.

Under pressure now from freshman lawmakers backed by the tea party, they’re trying to stick to their original goal.

Countless factors play into the success or failure of making campaign agendas reality after an election.

The political environment often determines which policies are proposed, which become law. Divided government always causes hiccups. Even if one party controls all levers of government, that’s no guarantee common goals will prevail.

Tea party-backed lawmakers are causing headaches for GOP leaders today, much as liberals have done for the White House over the past two years.

Unforeseen circumstances — wars, a recession — also can derail the best laid plans.

But all that was lost on the Republican presidential wannabes who auditioned before more than 10,000 people at this weekend’s Conservative Political Action Conference, the largest such gathering of the year so far and the unofficial kickoff of the 2012 GOP nomination fight.

One by one, GOP hopefuls sketched out a broad vision of America under Republican rule, hoping to woo conservatives whose support is critical. There was little daylight on the major policy issues. Most emphasized longtime conservative tenets — lower taxes, smaller government, a strong defense — and called for

He didn’t spell it out, saying only: “The right answer is to believe in America — to believe in free enterprise, capitalism, limited government, federalism — and to believe in the constitution, as it was written and intended by the founders.”

South Dakota Sen. John Thune suggested overhauling Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid, and changing how business is done in the partisan capital by ending “backroom deals and big government ways.” He ignored the fact that others before him have tried — and failed.

Many were short on specifics on how they’d do it all.

Details, to be sure, will come over the next year. No Republican has announced a candidacy though several are gearing up. Once they do, the pressure for specifics will increase.

Some started to try to distinguish themselves from the pack with proposals that at first blush seem extraordinarily difficult — if not unlikely — to accomplish.

Former House Speaker Newt Gingrich called for replacing the Environmental Protection Agency — “made up of self-selected bureaucrats, who are anti-American jobs, anti-American business, anti-state government, anti-local control” — with an agency focused on environmental and energy solutions.

One-upping Gingrich was former New Mexico Gov. Gary Johnson. He pledged to legalize marijuana.

AROUND THE NATION

PENNSYLVANIA Cardinal: Abuse charges ‘distress’ everyone

PHILADELPHIA — The archbishop of Philadelphia is releasing a video message to parishioners, telling them that charges announced last week in the priest sexual abuse scandal bring “great sadness and distress to every Catholic, every person.”

Cardinal Justin Rigali released the video message Saturday, two days after Philadelphia’s district attorney announced charges against three priests, a parochial school teacher and Monsignor William Lynn. Lynn was secretary of the clergy and a top official in the Philadelphia Archdiocese from 1992 to 2004.

Rigali is calling for “a moment of renewed faith.”

The three priests and teacher were charged with raping boys. Lynn was accused of endangering children, not molesting them. Lynn’s attorney has said he doesn’t concede for a moment that he knew he was putting children at risk.

Teen admits trying to hire hit man

WEST CHESTER — A Chester County teenager faces 11 to 22 years in prison after agreeing to a plea agreement on charges he used Facebook to try to hire a hit man to kill a woman who had accused him of rape.

Nineteen-year-old West Chester, Pa., resident Corey Christian Adams accepted the plea agreement Friday on charges of rape, criminal solicitation of murder and other counts.

FLORIDA Authorities: ‘Twilight’ fan lied about bite marks

MARATHON — Authorities say a Florida teen has told police that bite marks on her body came from “Twilight”-inspired vampire role playing — not from someone who attacked her while she was out jogging.

The South Florida Sun Sentinel reported that the Monroe County Sheriff’s Office charged the 15-year-old girl with making a false report.

Authorities say the girl is a fan of the vampire-based “Twilight” movies and books. The sheriff’s office says the girl had engaged in “fantasy biting” with a 19-year-old man in August and worried her mother would see the marks. She told her mother she had been attacked while jogging.

Wrecked whaling ship discovered

HONOLULU (AP) — A fierce sperm whale sank the first whaling ship under George Pollard’s command and inspired the classic American novel “Moby-Dick”. A mere two years later, a second whaler captained by Pollard struck a coral reef during a night storm and sank in shallow water.

Marine archaeologists scouring remote atolls 600 miles northwest of Honolulu have found the wreck site of Pollard’s second vessel — the Two Brothers — which went down in 1823.

Most of the wooden Nantucket whaling ship disintegrated in Hawaii’s warm waters in the nearly two centuries since. But researchers found several harpoons, a hook used to strip whales of their blubber, and try pots or large cauldrons whalers used to turn whale blubber into oil. Corals have grown around and on top of many of the objects, swallowing them into the reef.

“To find the physical remains of something that seems to have been lost to time is pretty amazing,” said Nathaniel Philbrick, an author and historian who spent more than three years researching the Essex — and its fatal encounter with the whale — the Two Brothers and their captain. “It just makes you realize these stories are more than stories. They’re about real lives.”

Archaeologist Kelly Gleason looks at a spear tip from the 19th century whaling ship the Two Brothers at French Frigate Shoals, Hawaii, in August.

The anchor could have belonged to any one of three 19th century whaling ships that sank at this atoll. But additional artifacts found by Gleason’s team over the next two years — like the cast iron cooking pots scattered around the wreck site — were unmistakably from the 1820s, while the other two vessels sank in 1859 and 1867.

The sinking of the Two Brothers was relatively uneventful compared to the Essex’s epic run-in with the whale.

After the Essex capsized, Pollard and fellow crew members drifted at sea without food and water for three months before they were rescued. To survive, Pollard and others resorted to cannibalism, including eating one of the captain’s cousins.

Still, Thomas Nickerson, a crew member who served under Pollard both on the Essex and the Two Brothers, later described his boss as being in a daze as they had to abandon ship for the second time.

were due to announce their findings at a news conference Friday, exactly 188 years after the Two Brothers sank.

Kelly Gleason, the maritime archaeologist who led the discovery, first saw the ship’s anchor in 2008 while surveying French Frigate Shoals.

'Granddad Bandit' duped others with heroic image

By Dena Potter
Associated Press writer

RICHMOND, Va. — Michael Francis Mara is so mild mannered, authorities say, that even as he was robbing a bank, the teller recalled he “looked like he was somebody’s granddaddy” — and yet he has admitted to being a “monster.”

This week, the so-called “Granddad Bandit” — who often claimed to be a heroic paramedic — met a day of reckoning.

The 53-year-old Mara pleaded guilty Thursday in a Virginia courtroom to two Richmond-area bank robberies and admitted to two dozen more heists in 14 states. And some officials suspect there may be more to his past than they will ever know.

“I always had a real bad feeling about Mr. Mara because I felt like he could use his mild-mannered appearance as a tool to be able to commit crimes and he wouldn’t be a likely suspect,” said Robert Lunsford, a former detective who once arrested Mara for a 1995 theft in Chesapeake, Va.

Mara has not spoken publicly since his arrest last August in Louisiana. But in court documents obtained by The Associated Press going back nearly four decades and in interviews with those who know him, a picture emerges of a career criminal who duped those closest to him into believing he was one of the good guys: a veteran, a volunteer, even a paramedic who had helped on the Sept. 11 cleanup in New York City.

None of it was true. “If he was an actor, he would have gotten an Academy Award for his performance,” his second wife, Patsy Mara, told the AP after her husband’s arrest.

Even Michael Mara has admitted his lies have made it difficult to keep track of who he really is.

“He said through the years he had created so many different identities and different lives that he had taken on that he didn’t even know who he was,” said Lunsford.

In court records and housing applications reviewed by the AP, Mara has listed his hometown as either Syracuse, N.Y., or Green Bay, Wis.

His criminal record goes back until at least age 19, when he went to prison in Oklahoma for theft and bad checks. In the 1980s, he spent five years in a Virginia prison for stealing checks and taking a pistol and radio while pretending to be a cardiac emergency medical technician. His employer found out his credentials were fake and fired him before he was charged.

Mara moved to California, got married and had two children. He returned to Virginia, and in 1995 was arrested for breaking into an apartment where he worked as a maintenance man and stealing several items, including three guns.

Mara returned to prison until 2004.

Mara told police in 1995 about his prior convictions and said he also had been nabbed for three bank robberies and fraud. Court records could not be found to substantiate those claims, and investigators won’t elaborate on Mara’s criminal history.

Lunsford, the investigator in that case, said Mara was polite, cooperative and disarming, and quickly confessed. Mara directed police to his van, where they found police badges, a firefighter helmet and emergency gear, knives and duct tape. Lunsford said a notebook in Mara’s van contained a half-dozen backstories. In each, Mara was an emergency worker.

The van’s windows were tinted dark and the back seat had been removed. There were pictures of random families.

imagine. I’m worse than any horror movie.”

Lunsford said he was never sure if Mara had done something worse or was “just a wannabe.”

After his 2004 release from prison, Mara lived in a Virginia Beach halfway house. He claimed to be a volunteer with the local marine rescue service, wore a uniform and carried a scanner, which irritated his roommates, said the Rev. William Twine, who runs the house.

Twine described Mara as a surly man — “a grumbler, a complainer” — who didn’t get along well with others.

“Never at any time while he was with us did I have any fear or any suspicion he would do anything criminal,” Twine said. “My main concern was him getting along with the people he lived with.”

The “Granddad Bandit” bank robberies began a week before Christmas in 2008.

Bank teller Annette Kizzie at the Richmond SunTrust told investigators a stocky, balding man with wire-rim eyeglasses and trembling hands handed her a note scribbled on the carbon copy of a check. He wanted $2,000 in large bills and demanded his note back.

“He looked like he was somebody’s granddaddy,” Kizzie told police.

Over the next 20 months, the man who became known as the “Granddad Bandit” stole more than $83,000, crisscrossing the eastern and southern U.S.

He never used a disguise. He waited patiently in line and handed the teller a note demanding a specific amount — usually a few thousand dollars. Once he suggested he had a weapon, but authorities said there was no indication he ever used one.

Police connected the dots last summer. By August the suspect’s photo was plastered on electronic billboards nationwide. Within a week, a tipster led them to Mara who, it turns out, is indeed a grandfather.

He was arrested after a six-hour standoff at the house in Baton Rouge where he lived with his school-teacher wife.

Mara had met his second wife, Patsy, months before the bank robberies began in 2008, at a shelter for evacuees of Hurricane Gustav in Louisiana. He said he was a paramedic who had helped with the Sept. 11 cleanup in New York City. It wasn’t true; he was in prison for the Virginia gun thefts at the time.

By the time they were married in June 2009 — he wore his EMS uniform during the ceremony — the Granddad Bandit already had robbed five banks in Virginia, Alabama, Texas and Georgia.

Gift might bug your sweetheart

NEW YORK (AP) — If lingerie is too intimate and dinner out is too expensive, the Bronx Zoo suggests another Valentine’s Day gift: a Madagascar hissing cockroach.

The Wildlife Conservation Society runs the New York City zoo and is raising funds by offering the public the chance to name the huge roaches. In return for each name, it’s asking for a $10 donation.

Calvelli says about 1,000 names were bought the first day of the promotion. Recipients get a certificate.

The zoo says naming a roach will honor a sweetheart’s resourcefulness and resiliency.

Claudia Luis-Garcia sits at a table in Portland, Ore., Thursday. The death of Birgilio Marin-Fuentes, an Oregon man who died just feet from an emergency room, has left his family in grief, upset law officers and drawn a request for an investigation from a congressman, all asking why an officer was told to call 911 for a heart attack victim just outside the hospital door.

‘THEY LEFT HIM TO DIE’

Man dies after hospital tells police to call 911

By William McCall
Associated Press writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — Coughing and unable to sleep, Birgilio Marin-Fuentes drove himself to the hospital after midnight earlier this week, but he crashed his car just shy of his goal.

By the time somebody noticed the accident in the Portland Adventist Medical Center parking garage and told police, about 20 minutes had gone by.

The 61-year-old Cuban immigrant eventually died, leaving his family in grief, police upset, and a congressman requesting an investigation. All are asking why a police officer was told to call 911 for a heart attack victim just outside the hospital door.

Marin-Fuentes had struck a pillar and wall early Thursday morning inside the first level of the garage under an “emergency parking only” sign about 125 feet from the emergency room entrance.

Police say officers Angela Luty and Robert Quick found him unconscious and unresponsive and began cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

A third officer, Andrew Hearst, went to the ER intake desk and told them what was happening.

Police say that’s when he was told to call the emergency line.

“The officers recognized this man needed medical attention immediately, and two officers began CPR immediately, and a third officer went to ask for assistance, and they were told they had to wait until an ambulance arrived,” said Sgt. Pete Simpson, a Portland Police Bureau spokesman.

— Sgt. Pete Simpson, a Portland Police Bureau spokesman

Judy Leach, a hospital spokeswoman, said emergency room staff was told it was a car crash and they were following the proper protocol by instructing police to summon an ambulance crew.

“With an automobile accident you don’t know if the patient needs to be extricated or transported,” Leach said Friday. “There are protocols in place to ensure the right thing is done for the right patient at the right time.”

She said hospital security officers equipped with a mobile defibrillator were dispatched, and a paramedic went outside to check on the situation.

But Simpson said officers did not receive any medical assistance and were left to fend for themselves until the ambulance arrived and the crew wheeled Marin-Fuentes the short distance to the emergency room aboard a gurney.

“It’s a traumatic experience to give CPR and have a person not survive, especially to be that close to a hospital with trained medical personnel right there who could have assisted,” Simpson said.

U.S. Rep. Earl Blumenauer said Friday he has asked the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services to conduct an independent investigation to make sure the Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act approved in 1986 was followed.

The act requires all Medicare participating hospitals with emergency departments to treat any critically ill patients on their premises, including parking lots, Blumenauer said.

Blumenauer said he was “deeply concerned” about the way the incident was handled and has been in contact with both national and state hospital associations “to make sure everybody gets their signals straight.”

Mark McDougal, a Portland attorney representing the family of Marin-Fuentes, said the family was pleased that Blumenauer has asked for a federal investigation.

“It is particularly disturbing that the hospital has given an account which is directly contradicted by the officers at the scene,” McDougal said.

Efforts by The Associated Press to reach the victim’s wife, Claudia Luis Garcia, on Friday were unsuccessful.

But she told The Oregonian she believes if she had insisted on driving with her husband to the hospital, he might still be alive.

“They left him to die,” Luis Garcia said.

MBA grads start social site ‘shizzlr.com’

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Nick Jaensch and Keith Bessette know that 500 million online friends and $1.5 billion raised from investors are for that other online social network.

The two University of Connecticut MBAs have instead received $350,000 in private and state money to develop shizzlr.com, a corner of the Internet dedicated to college students and 20-somethings.

“Facebook is for every person you’ve met or have come across,” Jaensch said. “Shizzlr is for your actual 20 friends and the people you hang out with.”

Jaensch, who is 24, and Bessette, 31, raised $200,000 from friends and family and $150,000 from Connecticut Innovations, the state’s venture investment agency.

Shizzlr is intended to informally bring together friends who text message social plans. Users opt in those they want to include and see what they are doing.

“Everybody is involved in a group message, everyone is up-to-date and everyone can give their input,” Jaensch said. “We’re changing the norm about how people make plans.”

Boise State tops Idaho in men’s basketball rivalry game

By Jason Chatraw
Times-News correspondent

BOISE — Robert Arnold scored 16 points to lead Boise State to a 69-63 victory over Idaho before a near-capacity crowd of 12,193 at Taco Bell Arena on Saturday night.

Boise State (14-11, 7-6 WAC) broke a four-game winning streak for the road team in the heated in-state rivalry. The Broncos edged the Vandals in Moscow earlier this season, 70-67, to complete the season sweep.

Idaho (14-11, 7-6 WAC), which failed to build any momentum after stunning 17th-ranked Utah State at home on Thursday, lost out on its bid to beat Boise State three straight years at home for the first time since the Vandals did it from 1981-83.

The game was tightly contested throughout but it wasn’t until Boise State senior guard La’Shard Anderson sparked a 13-0 Bronco run over a three-minute span that any breathing room between the teams emerged.

After Idaho took its largest lead of the second half at 53-48 with 8:46 left in the game, Anderson drained a 3-pointer to start the run. He scored eight points during that span as Boise State built a 61-53 lead with 4:03 remaining.

However, the Vandals answered with a 9-0 run to retake the lead at 62-61 with 1:44 remaining powered by six-of-six free throw shooting by three different players and a clutch 3-pointer by Jeff Ledbetter, who led Idaho with 19 points.

But Boise State held off Idaho’s final charge with sharp free-throw shooting and two huge offensive rebounds.

The first half was a battle of attrition as the lead changed hands seven times and was tied eight.

Boise State, which leads the WAC in turnover margin and is fourth best in the nation, converted eight Idaho turnovers into 10 points in the first half.

Idaho, which is tops the WAC in 3-point shooting percentage, hit 5-of-10 shots from beyond the arc to keep the first half tight.

Neither team led by more than five points in

CSI men beat SLCC, head home with lead in the SWAC

SALT LAKE CITY — The Golden Eagles fulfilled the refrain. If you split on the road and sweep at home, you’ll win a conference championship.

With a hard-fought 79-75 road win Saturday over No. 20 Salt Lake Community College, the seventh-ranked College of Southern Idaho men’s basketball team finished 4-3 in conference road games. That leaves CSI (23-4, 9-3 SWAC) just three home wins away from claiming the Scenic West Athletic Conference championship.

“We needed this one,” said guard Jerrold Brooks, who went 6-for-10 from 3-point range in scoring 22 points. “If we would have lost this one, it would have been tough to keep first place.”

The game didn’t start well for the Eagles as they trailed 11-0 and 14-2. They clawed their way back and seized the momentum when

By Mike Christensen

SALT LAKE CITY — With the game in the final minute and his team headed for defeat, College of Southern Idaho women’s basketball coach turned to the nearby media table and said, “The experiment failed.”

The Golden Eagles’ trapping full-court defense forced No. 15 Salt Lake Community College into 33 turnovers, but CSI shot only 37 percent from the field committed 27 turnovers of its own in a 72-63 loss.

“It failed because we didn’t win the game tonight,” said Rogers of the scrambling defensive style his team implemented in practice this past week just for the league-leading Bruins (20-4, 10-2 SWAC).

CSI sophomore guard Felicity Jones, who had 10 points and four steals, said CSI’s defensive rotations were often lacking, leading to wide-open baskets for SLCC.

NHL reacts to fight-filled game

Game produced 346 penalty minutes in total

By Ira Podell
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — The Pittsburgh Penguins’ rough weekend in New York got a little bumpier when the team bus hit a car while heading to an outdoor practice.

In the morning hours Saturday following a fight-filled, 9-3 loss to the New York Islanders on Friday night, the Penguins dressed in their full gear — minus skates — at Madison Square Garden, where they will play the Rangers on Sunday.

They hopped a bus for the short trip to Central Park, but were derailed by the minor accident. The players left the bus and hailed cabs to take them to the makeshift practice.

“It was quite a sight,” Penguins coach Dan Bylsma said. “I think the gentleman involved with the accident backed off a little bit when he saw a whole hockey team get out with sticks and gloves in their hands. If he had known anything about last night, maybe that’s why he backed off.”

The NHL suspended Islanders forwards Trevor Gillies for nine games and Matt Martin for four and handed the club a $100,000 fine late Saturday night for their actions in the fight-filled win over the Pittsburgh Penguins.

Only enforcer Eric Godard was punished on the Penguins side by the league as he received an automatic 10-game suspension for leaving the bench to join the third-period brawl.

The game produced 346 penalty minutes, 10 ejections, 15 fighting majors and 20 misconducts.

The Islanders came into the game angry because of the previous meeting between the teams nine days earlier that featured a fight between New York goalie Rick DiPietro and Pittsburgh counterpart Brent Johnson. DiPietro broke bones in his face when Johnson hit him with one punch.

Also, a questionable but unpenalized hit by Pittsburgh’s Max Talbot against Blake Comeau, that has left the Islanders forward out of action since, made Talbot a target in the rematch. He was jumped and punched by Matt Martin in the second period, sparking the first of two major brawls in Saturday’s game.

“Obviously, you never expect to get grabbed by the guy and get punched like that,” Talbot said. “I don’t think I’m a guy that would stand down if someone comes to my face and asks me.”

Talbot also took on Micheal Haley in the third period in the second part of fight night.

The teams will conclude the six-game season series on Long Island on April 8. The Penguins could be the angry bunch then.

“We don’t like them and they don’t like us,” Pittsburgh forward Pascal Dupuis said. “It shows on the ice. But we have plenty of hockey between here and that game. We’ll see what’s going to happen.”

Johnson was rushed by Haley, who skated down the ice to challenge the goalie to a fight. Godard joined the fray and will now face the consequences.

Bylsma said he told players not to hop onto the ice. Rule 70.10 stipulates that

CSI baseball splits to end Arizona trip

Times-News

There was a good pitching performance, and then there was a downright ugly one.

The College of Southern Idaho baseball team got the best and worst of it on Saturday in a doubleheader at Phoenix College, winning 4-0 and losing 10-7 to split the twinbill and head home from its nine-game Arizona trip with a 5-4 record.

"I feel OK," said CSI coach Boomer Walker. "We didn't play very good in either game, which is concerning because we play doubleheaders all the time in conference."

Caleb Olson and Trey Mohammed teamed up on a shutout in the opening game, after Olson was staked to a 2-0 lead after the first inning.

Olson lasted through the first four and Mohammed did the rest.

"Those two guys are both vying to be starters by the time we get to conference, and both of them threw well on the whole trip," Walker said.

The pitching staff in Game 2 didn't do nearly as well, giving far too many free passes to Phoenix in the loss.

CSI scored three times in the first inning, headlined by Chase Harris' leadoff home run, but the Golden Eagles couldn't score again until the eighth inning. By that time the pitching had long since imploded.

"We either walked or hit the leadoff batter in seven of the nine innings, so we were getting their innings started without them having to get the ball in play," Walker said. "They're not the greatest offensive team in the world, but when you're up 2-0 in the count all the time, you become a good hitter."

"It's a long trip and you're stretched a little thin when you get to the ninth game. But the guys had some rest and those are guys we're going to need to throw good for us to be a good team."

Walker praised the effort of his freshman hitters over the course of the trip, singling out Harris, Ben Douglas, Tyler McCarty and Andre Ashton.

CSI (5-4) opens its home schedule against Prairie Baseball Academy, out of Lethbridge, Alberta, next Thursday.

CSI softball rips CNCC; Eckstein throws no hitter

Times-News

The pitching was great. The hitting was even better.

The College of Southern Idaho softball team got a four-hitter from Jessi Duncan, a no-hitter from Jyl Eckstein, and 42 runs and 41 hits from its offense in a comprehensive doubleheader sweep of Colorado Northwestern Saturday in St. George, Utah.

CSI polished off the four-game sweep with 23-2 and 19-0 victories, both coming in five innings, to move to 13-8 on the season (7-1 Scenic West Athletic Conference). "Their starting pitcher moves the ball pretty well, and I'm not sure we were super-focused yesterday," said CSI coach Nick Baumert. "Top to bottom everybody swung the bats better and seemed more comfortable."

The Golden Eagles hit four home runs in the first game of the twinbill, including three-run shots for Nikki Brailsford and Lyndi Miller. Alyana Watson and Mikkel Griffin also homered in the game.

In the second game, Andrea Jorgensen blasted one out of the park, while T.J. Surrage was 2-for-3 with four RBIs.

Duncan struck out five in her five innings of work, conceding two runs in Game 1, while Eckstein fanned eight in her five hitless innings.

"It's important to have that success and get out and let some pitches work, get some balls on the corner and she did a nice job of that all weekend," Baumert said of Eckstein.

CSI's four wins kept pace with Salt Lake, which swept Western Nevada for the second straight day. The 16-4 Bruins (8-0 SWAC) come to Twin Falls on Friday to start a four-game set.

Camas County girls fall in state play-in game

Times-News

Katelyn Peterson scored 35 points, but it still wasn't enough as the Camas County girls basketball team fell to Mackay 52-49 in Saturday's Class 1A Division II state play-in game in American Falls.

The Mushers (8-15) raced out to an early lead but gave it away in the second quarter to go into the locker room trailing 23-21. The teams traded the lead back and forth down the stretch but Mackay held on late to advance to the state tournament in Nampa.

Camas County had no seniors on this season's team, prompting hope for the future despite the disappointment of falling at the final hurdle before the state tournament.

"I think this really taught them a lot about patience and how to deal with stress. They were really nervous coming out and it kind of showed, but the second half they calmed down and could play their game," said Camas County coach Jennifer Hulme. "It taught them a little more mental toughness, a little experience. Hopefully we'll be better prepared and able to compete a little more

Redskins kick returner Banks stabbed outside club

WASHINGTON — The agent for Washington Redskins kick returner Brandon Banks says the player was stabbed while coming to the aid of a longtime friend, who was critically injured.

Agent James Gould said in a statement released Saturday afternoon that Banks suffered a surface knife wound to his side that required stitches. He says Banks is expected to be released today from a local hospital.

Gould says Banks' unidentified friend underwent surgery for a stab wound.

The altercation occurred shortly after 3 a.m. local time Saturday outside a nightclub in downtown Washington.

Gould says Banks' friend was attacked and that Banks tried to help him. He says Banks was not implicated in any wrongdoing.

HAYNESWORTH FORMALLY CHARGED WITH ASSAULT

RESTON, Va. — Washington Redskins defensive tackle Albert Haynesworth has been formally charged with misdemeanor assault stemming from a road rage incident earlier this month.

Fairfax County police say the 29-year-old Haynesworth and his attorney appeared at a police station Saturday morning. Haynesworth signed a summons warrant charging him with assault and left.

He's scheduled to appear in court on March 31.

The encounter that led to the charge occurred on Feb. 2. Police said a 38-year-old man told investigators he was assaulted by the driver of a pickup truck who was tailgating him. The driver was later identified as Haynesworth.

Haynesworth's agent, Chad Speck, has said the player is innocent and that his accuser is seeking fame and money.

Brooks hit three consecutive treys, the second of which gave CSI its first lead at 26-25.

"Especially starting the way we did, I think it showed a lot of character to just hang in there," said CSI head coach Steve Gosar.

Kenny Buckner had a big night for CSI with 13 points and 12 rebounds, while Darius Smith had 12 points and five steals. Salt Lake's Patrick McCollum scored a game-high 31 points, while Alfonso Hubbard had 14 and 10 boards.

Brooks, who went 7-for-12 from long range in his first visit to SLCC in December, hit a deep 3-pointer to beat the shot-clock buzzer with 7:14 remaining for a 65-56 CSI lead.

"I like this gym more than any gym. This is my favorite gym so I had to keep shooting and it was going in," said Brooks. "They give me a lot of room, so I shoot."

CSI led by as much as 11 before McCollum led a late rally. He was fouled on consecutive 3-point attempts and went 5-for-6 at the stripe to pull Salt Lake (21-6, 7-5 SWAC) within 72-68 with 2:01 remaining. Given Kalipinde's dunk capped his 11-point night and cut CSI's lead to two with 1:42 to go.

Enter Pierre Jackson.

CSI's sophomore guard struggled offensively all night, but earned consecutive trips to the foul line and went 4-for-4 to give the Eagles some breathing room.

"I found a way to contribute," said Jackson, who finished with 10 points. " ... I knew that I'm a good free-throw shooter so I went there and knocked them down."

CSI (20-7, 7-5) actually got off 24 more shots than Salt Lake, but went just 28-for-75 from the field, including 3 of 21 from 3-point range.

"We didn't take advantage of a lot of their turnovers," said Jones.

The Bruins weren't able to get into their regular half-court sets but did a good job finding the open player when they didn't cough up possession.

"It was either a layup or a turnover for them," said Rogers, who added that game was "kind of what I expected it to look like."

Haley Holmstead led the Bruins with 24 points and eight rebounds, while Jami Mokofisi had a 16-point, 11-board double-double. Sofia Hepworth scored 14 before fouling out.

Laurel Kearsley led CSI 12 points and added six rebounds, while Tina Fakahafua had seven rebounds and four assists and Chakala Carthen scored nine, all in the second half.

With the Eagles trailing 51-37 with 11:48 remaining, Carthen scored six points and Mechela Barnes swished a triple in a 14-2 CSI run that closed the gap to 53-51 with 7:40 left.

But Holmstead checked back in and scored six points in a 7-1 run that put Salt Lake back in control. The Eagles never got closer than six the rest of the way.

"I hate to lose," said Holmstead. "I don't want it to happen and it's my job to make sure it doesn't."

Holmstead got free against CSI's trapping defense to score eight early points as the Bruins built a 10-2 lead. CSI got within 18-15 on a trey by Barnes, but trailed 30-21 at intermission.

"I'm so proud of the kids," said Rogers. "They hustled, they didn't quit on it."

CSI returns home this week to host North Idaho College (20-4, 9-3) on Saturday. The Cardinals beat Snow College 74-39 on Saturday.

Jackson's jumper beats Bobcats

ATLANTA — Stephen Jackson hit a last-second jumper over two Atlanta defenders and the Charlotte Bobcats rallied after trailing by 22 points to beat the Hawks 88-86 on Saturday night.

Jackson, a former Atlanta player, scored 32 points, including the winning shot over Maurice Evans and Al Horford. Jackson hopped onto the scorer's table before running off the court yelling, "That's what I do!"

Shaun Livingston scored a season-high 22 points as Charlotte earned its first win in Atlanta since 2007. Gerald Wallace had 16 points and 13 rebounds for the Bobcats.

Josh Smith had 28 points for Atlanta, which led by 22 in the second quarter and 18 in the third period.

KNICKS 105, NETS 95

NEWARK, N.J. — Wilson Chandler replaced the injured Amare Stoudemire in the lineup and scored 21 points, and the New York Knicks beat the New Jersey Nets to avoid falling below .500.

Reserve Toney Douglas added 19 points and Landry Fields had 14, making three big 3-pointers in the fourth quarter as the Knicks won for just the second time in six games and improved to 27-26.

MAVERICKS 106, ROCKETS 102

HOUSTON — Peja Stojakovic scored 22 points and broke a tie with Dale Ellis for fourth place in career 3-pointers as the Dallas Mavericks beat the Houston Rockets.

Stojakovic, who was 1 for 11 from 3-point range in his previous three games, went 4 for 6 from beyond the arc. He has 1,723 career 3s and trails only teammate Jason Kidd (1,756), Reggie Miller (2,560) and Ray Allen (2,562) in NBA history. Allen passed Miller for the lead Thursday.

BULLS 97, HORNETS 88

NEW ORLEANS — Derrick Rose scored 23 points and the Chicago Bulls methodically turned a 12-point third-quarter deficit into a comfortable victory over the New Orleans Hornets.

Carlos Boozer had 17 points and Luol Deng 14 for the Bulls, who outscored the Hornets 25-14 in the fourth quarter to close out a five game road trip at 3-2.

SPURS 118, WIZARDS 94

WASHINGTON — Tony Parker scored 10 of his 18 points in less than 2 minutes during the first quarter to jump-start the San Antonio Spurs to a rout of the Washington Wizards.

76ERS 107, TIMBERWOLVES 87

MINNEAPOLIS — Thaddeus Young led seven 76ers in double figures with 18 points and Philadelphia cruised past the Minnesota Timberwolves.

Andre Iguodala had 15 points, seven assists and five rebounds, and Louis Williams had 13 points and five assists for the 76ers (26-28), who have won nine of their last 12 games to creep into the Eastern Conference playoff picture.

PACERS 103, BUCKS 97

MILWAUKEE — Danny Granger scored 14 of his 30 points in the fourth quarter to help the Indiana Pacers snap a six-game losing streak to the Milwaukee Bucks.

Darren Collison added 22 points as the Pacers improved to 7-1 since Frank Vogel took over as the interim coach on Jan. 30, replacing the fired Jim O'Brien.

Indiana's last victory over the Bucks was 115-108 on April 15, 2009, and its last win in Milwaukee was 105-101 on April 4, 2008.

Fredette, Abouo lead No. 7 BYU past Utah

PROVO, Utah — Jimmer Fredette scored 23 points, fill-in starter Charles Abouo added 22 and No. 7 BYU pulled away late from rival Utah 72-59 on Saturday in their final regular-season meeting as Mountain West Conference foes.

Fredette, who leads the nation in scoring, had 17 points in the final 9 minutes and 12 in a row to help the Cougars (24-2, 10-1 MWC) take control after the game was tied at 48. He finished 6 of 19 from the field.

Abouo, a junior from Cote d'Ivoire who entered with a season high of 13 points, scored 17 and grabbed six rebounds in the first half alone. He also finished with 10 rebounds.

Senior guard Jackson Emery also helped spark BYU's second-half charge, after the Cougars led 31-30 at halftime, by scoring 13 of his 17 points after the break. The school's career steals leader added six to his total.

NO. 13 WISCONSIN 71, NO. 1 OHIO STATE 57

MADISON, Wis. — Jordan Taylor scored 21 of his 27 points in the second half to rally No. 13 Wisconsin from a 15-point deficit to beat previously unbeaten No. 1 Ohio State 71-67 on Saturday.

Wisconsin (19-5, 9-3 Big Ten) beat a No. 1 opponent for the first time since 1962, when it was also Ohio State. The Badgers joined Florida as the only programs to knock off the same No. 1 school in both football and men's basketball in the same academic year. The Gators also beat Ohio State in both sports in 2006-07.

NO. 2 KANSAS 89, IOWA ST. 66

LAWRENCE, Kan. — Twin brothers Marcus and Markieff Morris each had a double-double and keyed a 23-4 first-half run for Kansas.

The lone loss for the Jayhawks (24-1, 9-1 Big 12) was a 74-63 setback to then-No. 10 Texas on Jan. 22 that ended their school-record home court winning streak at 69.

NO. 3 TEXAS 69, BAYLOR 60

AUSTIN, Texas — Freshman Tristan Thompson had 17 points and 13 rebounds and Texas held off a furious rally by LaceDarius Dunn and Baylor to remain undefeated in the Big 12.

Dunn scored 22 points in the second half as Baylor cut an 18-point deficit to three in the final 2 minutes. Texas led 65-60 when Dunn's 3-pointer rattled in and out of the rim with about 25 seconds left and Texas' Gary Johnson made two free throws to put the game away.

NO. 4 PITTSBURGH 57, NO. 9 VILLANOVA 54

VILLANOVA, Pa. — Brad Wanamaker scored 21 points, Nasir Robinson had 15 and No. 4 Pittsburgh escaped when Maalik Wayns' 3-pointer swished through just after the buzzer sounded.

It was a festive homecoming for Wanamaker and Robinson, two local players who shunned the Philadelphia schools and headed to Western Pennsylvania.

The Panthers (23-2, 11-1 Big East) show no sign of relinquishing their conference lead with six games left. They stormed into town and did what no team had done since Jan. 17, 2007 — beat the Wildcats in their on-campus home.

NO. 6 SAN DIEGO STATE 63, UNLV 57

LAS VEGAS — D.J. Gay scored 20 points and Kawhi Leonard had 14 points and 10 rebounds to lead San Diego State over UNLV.

SDSU (25-1, 10-1 Mountain West Conference) trailed for only the second time in the game when Tre'Von Willis drove in for a layup with 3:07 left to give the Rebels (18-7, 6-5) a 55-54 lead. But the Aztecs made nine of 10 free throw attempts in the final 2:12 to seal their fifth consecutive win.

NO. 8 NOTRE DAME 78, SOUTH FLORIDA 55

TAMPA, Fla. — Jack Cooley came off the bench during an early 22-0 run and finished with a career-high 18 points to lead Notre Dame.

The victory is the seventh straight for the Fighting Irish (21-4, 10-3), who have won three straight Big East road games for the first time in 10 years.

NO. 16 LOUISVILLE 73, NO. 12 SYRACUSE

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Kyle Kuric scored 23 points, Preston Knowles added 22 and Peyton Siva dropped in the clinching free throws in the final moments to lead Louisville.

The Cardinals (19-6, 8-4 Big East) continued their mastery of the Orange (20-6, 7-6) behind some hot 3-point shooting and just enough defense to beat Syracuse for the seventh straight time.

NO. 17 FLORIDA 61, TENNESSEE 60

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Erving Walker hit a driving, go-ahead layup with 14 seconds left and Florida overcame a six-point halftime deficit to beat Tennessee.

Walker led the Gators with 16 points and Kenny Boynton and Vernon Macklin each added 12 for Florida (20-5, 9-2 Southeastern Conference), which has won four straight and seven of eight.

Melvin Goins missed a 3-pointer from the top of the key at the buzzer for Tennessee.

NO. 21 UTAH STATE 71, FRESNO STATE 55

LOGAN, Utah — Nate Bendall scored 13 points on 5-of-6 shooting and grabbed eight rebounds to lead four Utah State players in double figures.

Brian Green also scored 13 points off the bench for Utah State (23-3, 12-1 Western Athletic Conference), while Pooh Williams and Tai Wesley had 10 apiece.

NO. 23 VANDERBILT 81, NO. 18 KENTUCKY 77

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Vanderbilt's John Jenkins scored a career-high 32 points, including six 3-pointers.

With the win, the Commodores (18-6, 6-4) swept a three-game homestand that will keep them tied for second in the Southeastern Conference's Eastern Division. Kentucky (17-7, 5-5) dropped to 1-5 on the road in the SEC this season and to the bottom of the East.

NO. 19 MISSOURI 84, OKLAHOMA 61

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Missouri overwhelmed Oklahoma with its bench, getting 16 points from Michael Dixon and 11 from Justin Safford.

Marcus Denmon, Missouri's leading scorer with a 16.5 point average, was struck in the face under the Oklahoma basket with just under 18 minutes remaining and did not return, finishing with nine points. He was treated on the bench for several minutes before leaving the court.

NO. 20 NORTH CAROLINA 64, CLEMSON 62

CLEMSON, S.C. — Freshman Harrison Barnes scored 20 points and John Henson had 14 points and 12 rebounds as North Carolina bounced back from its collapse at Duke.

Barnes dunked with 3:01 left to put the Tar Heels (18-6, 8-2 Atlantic Coast Conference) ahead to stay at 53-51. Freshman Kendall Marshall followed with a steal of and made an easy layup to extend the lead.

NO. 22 TEXAS A&M 70, TEXAS TECH 67

LUBBOCK, Texas — Khris Middleton scored 16 points and Texas A&M handed Texas Tech its third straight loss.

The Aggies overcame a 10-point deficit in the first half.

NO. 24 TEMPLE 75, DAYTON 63

DAYTON, Ohio — Ramone Moore scored 26 points and Temple won its sixth straight despite missing top rebounder Lavoy Allen.

Allen sprained his left ankle in Temple's last game and didn't play. The short-handed Owls (19-5, 9-2 Atlantic 10) held their own on the boards and let their defense do the rest. Scootie Randall added 17 points in a balanced offense.

NO. 25 WEST VIRGINIA 82, DEPAUL 71

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — John Flowers led West Virginia's balanced offense with 15 points.

Deniz Kilicli and Joe Mazzulla added 12 points apiece and Casey Mitchell and Truck Bryant both scored 11 for West Virginia (16-8, 7-5 Big East).

Idaho State edges Northern Arizona in OT

POCATELLO (AP) — Broderick Gilchrest's 3-pointer with 1 second remaining in overtime lifted Idaho State past Northern Arizona 90-88 on Saturday night.

Phyllip Taylor led the Bengals (8-16, 4-8 Big Sky) with 22 points and had six rebounds. Deividas Busma had 19 points and seven rebounds, and Kenny McGowen scored 15 points. Abner Moreira contributed 12 points and 11 rebounds, and Gilchrest finished with 12 points.

Cameron Jones led all scorers with 27 points for the Lumberjacks (14-10, 6-6 Big Sky). Gabe Rogers had 18 and Shane Johannsen 16.

McGowen's 3-pointer with 1:32 left in overtime cut Northern Arizona's lead to 88-87 to set up Gilchrest's decisive shot.

Rogers' 3-pointer with 49 seconds remaining in regulation allowed Northern Arizona to tie it at 79, but neither team would score again until overtime.

Tiger Woods closes to 1 off lead in Dubai Desert Classic

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Tiger Woods is bidding to end his drought in the desert.

The former world No. 1 is one shot off the lead going into Sunday's final round of the Dubai Desert Classic, rallying from a disastrous start with an eagle and three birdies on the back nine for a par 72 in windy conditions Saturday.

Woods finished the third round at 7-under 209, in a seven-way tie for fourth behind co-leaders Rory McIlroy (75), Anders Hansen (71) and Thomas Aiken (74).

Woods showed some of the resilience that recently has been lacking from his game on a dusty day in the desert during which the wind reached 28 mph.

Tiger Woods reacts after sinking a putt on No. 18 during the third round of the Dubai Desert Classic in Dubai, United Arab Emirates, Saturday.

No. 11. He closed with birdies on Nos. 15 and 18 sandwiched around a bogey on 16.

Woods' last victory came at the Australian Masters in November 2009. He is now

No. 3 in the rankings behind Lee Westwood and Martin Kaymer.

The top-ranked Westwood was tied for 13th at 5 under, while Kaymer was eight shots off the lead after a 76.

MARINO CONTINUES TO LEAD AT PEBBLE BEACH

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. — Thousands of fans came to Pebble Beach for sunshine, scenery and celebrity entertainment. The leaders were somewhere else Saturday in the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

Far away from the commotion, Steve Marino struggled with the speed of the greens on the Shore Course at Monterey Peninsula and ended his round with a three-putt bogey from 4 feet for a 1-over 71.

That still was enough for him to take a one-shot lead going into the final round

Next up is the final round at Pebble Beach, where some measure of normalcy returns to his PGA Tour.

But not entirely.

D.A. Points was among the few players atop the leaderboard who was at Pebble Beach in the third round, and he was getting plenty of attention — or maybe that was for his amateur partner, Bill Murray, decked out in an Elmer Fudd hat.

Points took a double bogey by going over the cliffs on the ninth hole, birdied the 16th and 17th and was poised to take a share of the lead until he couldn't get out of a fairway bunker on the 18th and wound up with a bogey.

That gave him a 71, putting him two shots out of the lead.

His pro-am team is only one shot behind, meaning Murray gets another crack at Pebble on Sunday.

SENIOR HOLDS 1-SHOT EDGE AT ALLIANZ

BOCA RATON, Fla. — Peter Senior shot a 67 to take a one-stroke lead after two rounds of the Allianz Championship.

Senior was at 11-under 133 after a blustery day in South Florida.

He trailed Rod Spittle for most of the round, but birdied the par-5 18th to grab the lead. Spittle bogeyed the 18th to finish with a 67 and a score of 10 under. Tom Lehman was tied for second after shooting a 69.

Hale Irwin (68) was tied with Russ Cochran (67) for fourth place at 8 under through two rounds.

TSENG LEADS LADIES' AUSSIE MASTERS

GOLD COAST, Australia — Taiwan's Yani Tseng, who would move to No. 1 in the women's rankings with a victory at the Australian Masters, had a 9-under 63 and leads by three heading into the final round.

Tseng is at 20-under 196 at the joint Australian and Ladies European Tour event at Royal Pines.

Second-round co-leader Stacey Lewis was in second place after a 67, while fellow American Ryann O'Toole also shot 67 and was five back. Ashleigh Simon of South Africa shot 68 and was six strokes behind in fourth place.

GREGG MIDDLEKAUFF'S QUOTE OF THE DAY

Every time you hear yourself making some blanket statement like, "I'm very insecure... I need a lot of attention and reassurance," I'd suggest that you add these three words, "up until now." Every time you do that, you're making a break with the past. You're giving yourself permission to change.

TODAY'S NATIONAL MAP

Spring forecast: Bats, balls, sun and eternal hope

By Ben Walker
Associated Press writer

The Super Bowl hit a deep freeze, NBA teams got stranded in blizzards, an NHL game was iced by a snowstorm.

Most everywhere, the winter weather is wicked. Good thing the weekend forecast in Arizona and Florida calls for sunny skies and temperatures in the 70s: King Felix, Joe Mauer and friends are coming.

Spring training is starting up. Let's trade ski masks for catcher's masks. And pitchers, take off your mittens and put on those mitts.

Just in time, right?
"I would say there might be some of them from the Midwest or Northeast who might go to their respective spring training places and accelerate the real estate market," Colorado Rockies manager Jim Tracy said. "Unless they really like being behind a snow blower."

Even before the sunscreen mixes with pine tar, Bruce Bochy is eager.

World Series champions always want to get going. The San Francisco Giants manager and his players are among the many teams opening camp in the next few days.

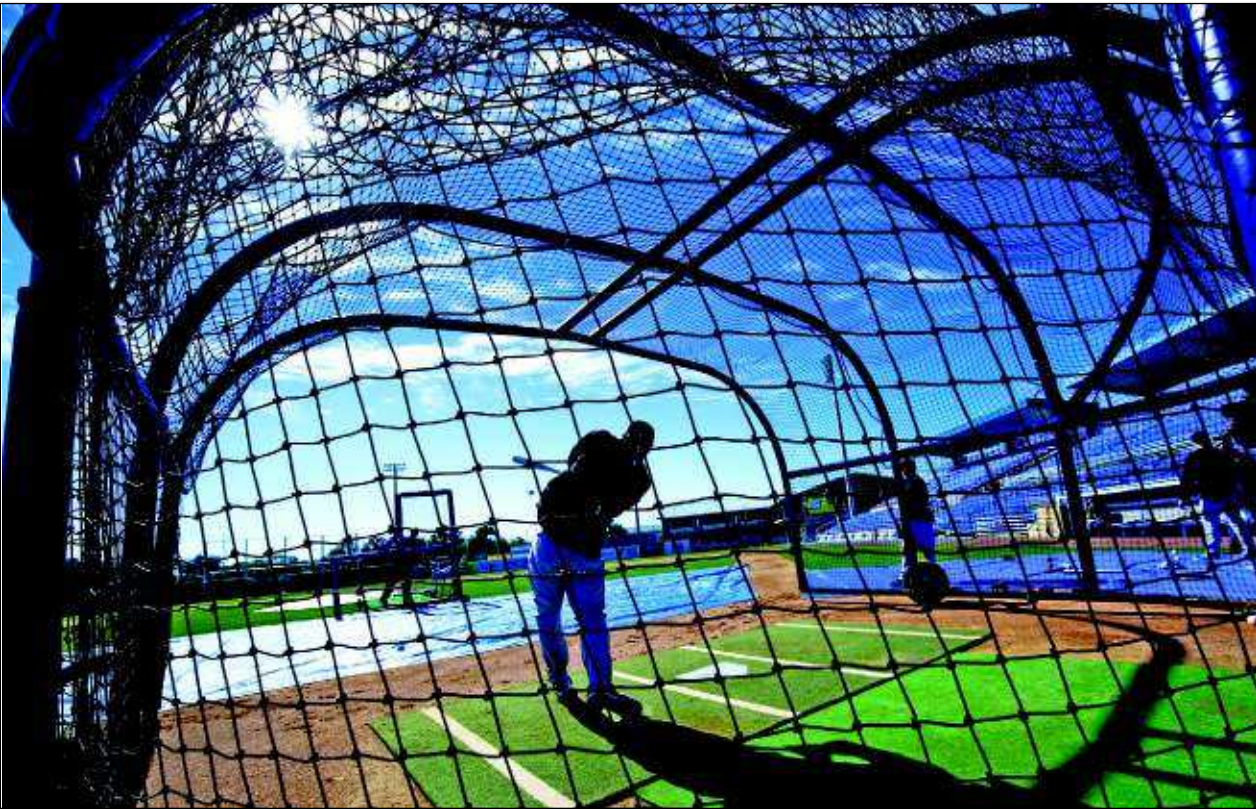

"Especially some of them who have been in this harsh weather we've had this winter, they're looking forward to getting to spring training," Bochy said.

"I also think when you get two or three weeks off, you start getting a little bit itchy. Then when it gets to late January, you're ready. You're ready to get back and see your teammates, getting back on the field and getting ready for the season," he said.

Cliff Lee, back in Philadelphia after a one-year absence. Manny Ramirez and Johnny Damon, taking their hair-raising antics to Tampa Bay. Carl Crawford and Adrian Gonzalez, now swinging for Boston. Vladimir Guerrero, Jayson Werth, Vernon Wells, Dan Uggla and World Series MVP Edgar Renteria, all switching uniforms.

"It makes you feel good to come here and know they wanted me to play there. It's awesome," said strikeout-prone slugger Mark Reynolds, traded from Arizona to Baltimore. "This is kind of a fresh start."

Shaun Marcum already is looking way ahead. Traded from Toronto to Milwaukee, he was part of the Brewers' busy winter — they also acquired former Cy Young winner Zack Greinke from Kansas City.

"Nothing against Toronto as an organization, but this is the first time I've gone through the offseason working out and thinking that I'm going to be pitching in October and not ending my season Oct. 2. I'm working hard knowing that I'm going to be pitching Oct. 23, Oct. 24 — just throwing those dates out there," Marcum said.

But there's plenty of time until then. A lot to do, in fact, before the pitching-rich Phillies host Florida State on Feb. 24 in the first exhibition game of the year.

A host of new managers need to meet and greet their guys.

Don Mattingly with the Dodgers, Ron Roenicke of the Brewers and John Farrell of the Blue Jays will be managing for the very first time. In all, 12 teams go into opening day on March 31 with a different skipper than they started with last season. Gone are four long-timers, each leaving with glittery rings — Joe Torre, Bobby Cox, Lou Piniella and Cito Gaston.

Also missing this spring, baseball's newest retirees: Postseason wins champ Andy Pettitte, career saves leader Trevor Hoffman and former World Series MVP Mike Lowell.

Still to be decided: Albert Pujols and his contract status. The three-time NL MVP set a deadline for the start of his spring training — either he gets a new deal with the St. Louis Cardinals or he'll cut off talks until he becomes a free agent after the season.

In the meantime, Cardinals newcomer Lance Berkman is looking forward to joining a lineup with the star slugger.

"I feel like this is a legitimate World Series contender, I really in my heart believe that. I'm not trying to do like Rex Ryan and put something out there and make everybody mad, I feel like we've got a great team."

Easy, Lance.

For now, we'll find out whether top rookies such as Tampa Bay outfielder Desmond Jennings, Atlanta first baseman Freddie Freeman, Toronto pitcher Kyle Drabek and Yankees catcher Jesus Montero are ready for the majors.

Or whether Jim Edmonds, Eric Chavez and Bartolo Colon, big names past their prime, can give it one more go.

We'll see, too, how well stars Chipper Jones, Johan Santana, Jake Peavy and Grady Sizemore are progressing from season-ending surgeries.

Mauer, Minnesota's outstanding catcher, had minor surgery this winter to clean up his knee.

"You really don't even know what your team is going to look like until you get to July, or June," he said.

Fans certainly are geared up now. Trips to spring training have become extremely popular in recent years, with tickets harder and harder to find, be it for games at HoHoKam Park in Mesa, Ariz., Joker Marchant Stadium in Lakeland, Fla., or George M. Steinbrenner Field in Tampa.

Easier to enjoy are the sights that make spring training so special. Sandy Koufax, Yogi Berra and Mike Schmidt are among the many Hall of Famers who often swing by campus to help out. And it always makes for a good laugh when a long drive to the gap scatters a bunch of pitchers doing their running on the warning track.

The Arizona Diamondbacks and Rockies move to a new site this year, sharing a complex built on an Indian reservation near Scottsdale. They had been in Tucson, and their shift means no more games in a city that had hosted spring ball since the 1940s. Chances are, the 15 teams training in the Phoenix area won't miss that 2½-hour drive through the desert.

Hardly anyone is likely to miss the bruising cold.

At a Cardinals event last month, appropriately called the Winter Warmup, second baseman Skip Schumaker barbed teammate Matt Holliday about the weather. Schumaker could boast — he lives in California, Holliday in St. Louis.

"Inside my house it's 70 degrees," Holliday answered.

Just as it should be this weekend, when teams break out the bats, balls and eternal hope.

Associated Press writers Janie McCauley, Jon Krawczynski, R.B. Fallstrom, Colin Fly and David Ginsburg contributed to this report.

IF FEBRUARY 13 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Your best success in the year to come will be achieved by being conscientious, trustworthy, and reliable. Any problems you ignore now may reappear next fall so fix whatever needs mending before it gets out of hand. In March, your sense of what is appropriate in the professional world, or what is feasible in the financial world, will be in tip-top condition. That is a great time to make decisions regarding your career or investments. Do your best to attract good will and it is very likely that doors will open in July leading to material rewards or general improvements.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): In the merry game of love, you chase until someone catches you. Don't forget to plan for a special evening with a loved one. In the week ahead, temper an urge to go to extremes with careful planning.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are the apple of someone's eye. Social affairs and entertainments run smoothly. Indulge your passions and impulses without fear of criticism; others view you through rose-colored glasses.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Circle your wagons. You might be a serious thinker who plans ahead to protect yourself from attack. At the same time, be sure to be poised to invite the ones you love and trust inside your safety zone.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Romance takes the cake. You might celebrate Valentine's Day early. Find a safe place and surround yourself with friends in the week ahead, so you will be high and dry if the fins show above the water.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Pull a rabbit out of your hat. Your romantic notions might require that you perform an act of prestidigitation in order to please your special someone. Go ahead and let your heart lead the way in the week to come.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Shopping expeditions could bring a great deal of satisfaction. Fight the urge to be a moody loner and hook up with a helpful companion. Others will offer inspired enthusiasm to offset your critical eye.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Everybody loves somebody sometime. Cupid's arrows might hit your heart a day early, so be prepared for some tender moments with the one you love. You may finalize a commitment that has been dangling free.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your heartstrings may tug on your purse strings. In an effort to make your Valentine's Day extra special, you might spend more than you can really afford or go overboard showering someone with gifts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may participate in an experiment in error. Although love and affection are at the top of your "to do" list for the next several days, you might need to take stock of mistakes in the week to come.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Everything has a moral if only you can find it. You might find that you can become more philosophical during the week to come. Feel free to spend money on items of quality that light up your heart.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Feel secure in one-on-one relationships. Romance can move ahead without impediments when both parties are willing to trust each other without reticence. The object of your desires proves worthy this week.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Dance as fast as you can. You are at the top of your game early in the week and can use this time to your advantage. An adoring mate may show the strength of his or her regard by showering you with affection.

LEGAL NOTICE
Public Meeting Announcement
Glanbia Foods, Inc. of Richfield, Idaho

An informational meeting will be held at the Lincoln County Community Center located at 201 South Beverly Street, Shoshone, Idaho, 83352 from 6 to 7 PM on Friday, February 25, 2011 in accordance with the Rules for the Control of Air Pollution in Idaho, Idaho Administrative Code, IDAPA 58.01.01.213.02 Permit to Construct Procedures for Pre-Permit Construction.

The purpose of the meeting is to inform the general public of Glanbia Foods, Inc. proposed air permit modification to switch fuel combustion sources from operating on propane to liquefied natural gas (LNG) at Glanbia's Richfield facility. In addition, this meeting will serve to fulfill the air quality pre-permit construction requirement per IDAPA 58.01.01.213.02.

LNG will be used exclusively for operating combustion equipment. The stationary combustion equipment impacted by this fuel change includes: two boilers, one dryer burner, and 13 heaters. No changes are requested for the whey process (i.e. dryers and baghouses) and the facility will maintain its classification as a minor source.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

Dear Mr. Wolff: I can't find an answer in any of my books to the following scoring problem. Say you play in two spades doubled and make it. Do you get the 300 bonus for making game or just the 50 for the insult? My reputation rests upon your answer!

Stumped, Walnut Creek, Calif.

ANSWER: The simple answer is yes, you do get the bonus. To clarify the source: Law 77 refers to the score for all possible contracts (bid and made), undoubled, doubled and redoubled, and says that a trick score of 100 or more constitutes game. Overtricks are dealt with separately. So in two spades doubled the trick score of 60 per trick times two is 120. That constitutes game, since it exceeds 100.

Dear Mr. Wolff: Recently you discussed how to bid this hand: ♠ 10-6, ♥ K-J-9-4, ♦ 7-4-2, ♣ 10-9-4-3. Your partner opened an artificial two clubs and re-bid three clubs over your response of two diamonds. You recommended a club raise — a decision you marginally preferred over showing the heart values. Two questions: Does three clubs guarantee an unbalanced hand, and would three hearts from you promise a five-carder?

Power Point, Sioux Falls, S.D.

ANSWER: The three-club bid shows an unbalanced hand; it might be only five, but would then be in an unbalanced hand with a four-card major. Even a 2-4-2-5 hand might elect to re-bid two no-trump, for example. Your three-heart bid might be a good four-card suit, but partner tends to expect five and might even raise with just three trumps.

Dear Mr. Wolff: Your articles occasionally refer to an endplay. In simple terms, what constitutes an endplay?

Stuck on Lead, New York, N.Y.

ANSWER: The short and sweet answer to this is that you put an opponent on lead to force him to open up a suit to your advantage or do something equally unpalatable such as give you a ruff-sluff. Generally, he has to lead away from an honor, or locate a card for you that you would otherwise have to find for yourself.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

In a pairs game at unfavorable vulnerability, partner held ♠ Q-9-3, ♥ A-Q-2, ♦ K-9-4, ♣ K-J-4-2. My RHO bid three diamonds and I doubled. Partner bid three no-trump now on the grounds that one has to try to ensure the plus score when possible. But what should I have done when my LHO bid four diamonds, which was passed back to me?

Middle Ground, Bristol, Va.

ANSWER: It seems clear to bid four no-trump now. Declarer rates to have an eight-carder and thus seven tricks in diamonds, so doubling four diamonds won't score enough for our side. Even if my RHO gets the lead early on, I might still survive if my partner has a singleton diamond, or if the diamond spot-cards work out to my advantage.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

When the opponents double my partner's opening bid, do you play a redouble as the only way to show hands of 10-plus HCP or are there exceptions? And how strong is a response of one no-trump?

High Heels, Saint John, New Brunswick

ANSWER: Redouble only if you can cope with the opponents' intervening at the two-level. With a one-suiter you can bid at the one-level, so do so at once no matter how strong it is. The range for one no-trump is approximately 7-10 HCP.

DEAR ABBY: A friend told me something recently that was so disturbing I'm having trouble sleeping.

"Marie" was at a mini-mall when a man parked his car next to hers and walked into one of the stores, leaving a boy about 8 years old in the back seat with a cat. Marie saw the boy abuse and torture the animal. She said she could hear the cat howling through the closed vehicle. When the man returned to the car, my friend approached him and told him what she'd seen.

Abby, the man did not say one word. He climbed into his car and drove off. I haven't been able to get the image out of my head. That child learned his behavior somewhere, and his father condones it! If Marie hadn't been so shocked, she would have scribbled down the man's license number and reported the incident to the police or the SPCA.

— HORRIFIED IN WISCONSIN

DEAR HORRIFIED: What your friend witnessed was a child in dire need of emotional help, and a parent with his head in the sand. Emotionally healthy children do not abuse animals. For the father to have ignored what your friend told him is very sad. Of most concern to me is the fact that children who abuse animals become increasingly aggressive, and sometimes go on to abuse other children. I hope the father reads my column and recognizes the fact that this son desperately needs counseling now!

DEAR ABBY Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I just turned 28. I have a full-time job and am also pursuing a career as an actress, which takes up a lot of my spare time. I have good friends and I'm a people person. I'm attractive, have a good personality and consider myself to be intelligent.

I'm pretty good at putting myself out there. I talk to guys I see in the grocery store, in my office building, anywhere I can. I try to smile at everyone when I'm out and about. I ask friends to set me up, but haven't met any nice single men who are interested in dating. Almost all my close friends are married or in long-term relationships. At parties it's usually a bunch of couples and me. I feel like the token single friend.

I have a busy life, and the theater hasn't exactly been a great place to meet straight guys, but where IS a good place? I have tried speed dating, online dating, bar-hopping and singles events to no avail. Why can't I find a nice guy who's ready for a real relationship? I'm starting to lose hope.

— LOOKING FOR LOVE IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR LOOKING: Please don't lose hope. But let's review the venues in which you have been searching. I'm struck by the fact that all of those you mentioned require you to make a "quick sale."

With speed dating you establish that you're both available and there's a superficial attraction, but not much else. Bars are the worst places I can think of to look for a serious relationship. No one's at their best after downing a couple of shots, and the noise level isn't conducive to meaningful conversation. The Internet has been known to bring results, but many people — of both sexes — are wary because so many users fudge the facts on dating sites.

Singles events are better, but you might have more luck meeting men if you go places that nice people go, where there's less pressure. How about volunteering some time in your community — the library, a hospital, the police department, a shelter? I recommend places like these because they offer the chance to form relationships with more depth. Even if you don't find Mr. Right, you may meet someone who can introduce you to someone eligible.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

Dog driver devoted to

CANINE CARE

By Laura Lundquist
Times-News writer

Anita Zehm pulled her Chevy minivan into the Phillips 66 near Paul and turned off the engine. She sat a moment, trying to relax in the relative quiet after three hours of engine drone on the drive from her home in Emmett.

The noise of her foster pit bull, Poncho, shifting in his animal carrier brought her back to the task at hand.

She looked back at the 14 empty carriers that filled the van. Within a few hours, all of them would be full of what Zehm considers precious cargo: southern Idaho's unwanted dogs.

Zehm reached for a bag containing cheese, broke some off and fed it to Poncho, his pink tongue flicking through his crate's cutouts. Then she took a deep breath and drove the final few miles to the Minidoka County animal shelter.

At least once a week, Zehm drives the almost 400-mile round trip to rescue dogs from several animal shelters in south-central Idaho and deliver them to the Idaho Humane Society shelter in Boise and to other animal rescue groups.

"She is racking up miles on her car and driving through all kinds of weather to help the pooches in need," said Jenn Graham, Boise Bully Breed Rescue co-founder. "Without Anita, many of these dogs would perish in their local shelters."

Shelter conditions

surrendering Jaeger, a young blue heeler cross. Because she didn't want to subject Jaeger to the shelter, Wilfert kept the dog until Zehm arrived.

Wiefert said Jaeger was too high energy and had taken a liking to the neighbor's chickens because Wilfert didn't have a fenced yard.

Bite statistics back up breed stereotypes, but owners emphasize training, socialization

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

If you ask Christian Holliday about his 2-year-old German shepherd, Xander, make sure you have time for a lesson.

The seventh-grader adores his friendly dog and loves teaching others about the breed. He has a German shepherd calendar and magazine which he proudly displays for guests, and he even did a project on the breed for his school. While his parents, RoseAnna and Dr. Scott Holliday, talked about the pair Feb. 1 at their Twin Falls home, Christian wrestled with Xander in the backyard.

When RoseAnna takes Xander for walks on the canyon rim, passers-by often steer clear of the dog. The dog is a gentle giant, the family says, but they know not every member of the breed is. Christian's younger brother, Kevin, encountered an unfriendly German shepherd outside a shop one day.

"All German shepherds are very protective of their territory and owners," Christian wrote in his school project. "If a German shepherd sees a strange person walking down the driveway, its usual reaction is to bark, growl and unfortunately bite."

When it comes to dog breeds with dangerous reputations — like Rottweilers, German shepherds and American pit bulls — the public disagrees on who's to blame. Are some breeds inherently more aggressive, or do irresponsible owners encourage antisocial behavior in their animals?

What the numbers say

Times-News archives show stories of large dogs attacking children: a 2010 pit bull attack on three people in a Blackfoot schoolyard, a 2008 pit bull mauling of a 3-year-old Nampa boy, a 2007 Akita bite on a 4-year-old Burley boy, a 2006 incident in which a pit bull and a Labrador mix attacked horses in Blaine County, killing one horse.

But as not all bites require medical attention, those and similar reports may not accurately portray which dogs bite most frequently. A study published in 2008 in the journal of Applied Animal Behavior Science found that dachshunds were the most aggressive breed. One in five dachshunds in the study had bitten or tried to bite strangers, and one in 12 had tried to bite owners. (The second and third most aggressive dogs? Chihuahuas and Jack Russell terriers.)

But there is a difference between dogs that bite the most and dogs that are considered dangerous. A small dog like a dachshund may bite more frequently than a Rottweiler, but a 20-pound dog can't do as much damage as its 120-pound counterpart. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, pit bulls and Rottweilers accounted for about 67 percent of dog bite-related fatalities in the U.S. in 1997 and 1998.

The same report points out that breeds responsible for dog bite-related deaths have varied over time. Between 1979 and 1980, Great Danes caused the most reported deaths. Since 1975, more than 30 breeds have been involved in fatal attacks, including dachshunds, a cocker spaniel and a Yorkshire terrier.

The numbers are complex, however. Those statistics don't include deaths resulting from bite infection, deaths from attacks by police dogs or guard dogs, or deaths from dogs whose breed wasn't known. Crossbreeds are counted multiple times — once for each suspected breed in their lineage — and numbers don't take into account the size of any breed's U.S. population.

Despite the statistics' limitations, "there appears to be a breed-specific problem with fatalities," the CDC said in its 2000 report, pointing to Rottweilers and pit bull-type dogs.

Anita Zehm’s current foster dog, Poncho, looks around while at a truck stop near Paul on Jan. 28. Zehm, part of Waggin’ Tails Rescue, drives hundreds of miles a week transporting dogs on her own dime.

Care

“She’s a herding dog and she needs a job,” Zehm said. “People should know what kind of dog they’re getting before they get it, but this happens all the time.”

Jaeger’s lucky; Zehm was taking her to a foster owner who loves heelers. But some shelter dogs aren’t as fortunate.

Many of Idaho’s shelters have poor conditions because Idaho lags the nation in animal protection and welfare enforcement.

In its animal protection law rankings released in December, the Animal Legal Defense Fund relegated Idaho to the group of five worst states. Among the reasons for Idaho’s poor showing are inadequate cost mitigation and recovery provisions for impounded animals, and inadequate definitions and standards for basic care.

Only North Dakota and Kentucky had lower marks.

For anyone entering the Minidoka shelter, the stench is the first clue of substandard conditions.

The smell is the result of up to 15 dogs kept in a small room in chain-link cages with floors of concrete or stainless steel. Their urine trickles into a constant stream of water that runs through a center channel in the floor. Where one set of cages is stacked upon another, the waste drips on the dogs below, their fur matted and wet.

While some dogs bark and jump at the chain link when anyone enters, others cringe and shake in the corners, their tails tucked between their legs.

Cody McArthur was hired from a placement agency as the sole shelter worker in July. Minidoka County has cut the shelter’s budget, so he works only 20 hours a week. But new dogs come in almost every day.

“Four puppies just came in today,” McArthur said. “It’s kind of hard because I want to take the puppies home.”

The shelter dogs are left unattended most of the time, but at least they’re indoors.

The Wendell shelter, until a few months ago, included just a couple of chain-link cages on a concrete slab open to the weather. Wendell has no shelter worker. The dogs would receive almost no care if it weren’t for the off-the-clock efforts of deputy clerk Shelly Harral.

Both McArthur and Harral are animal lovers, trying to do what they can for unwanted dogs. But Zehm is continually agonized when she sees the dogs in such conditions.

“They get food and water, but that’s about it,” Zehm said. “My clothes stink and my car stinks at the end of each day because these dogs aren’t taken care of.”

Waggin’ Tails

Zehm has been logging around 30,000 miles a year since April 2009 when she teamed up with Waggin’ Tails Rescue in Rupert. The organization arose in 2008 after a group of Minidoka shelter volunteers wanted to reduce the number of dogs being euthanized, which was around 70 percent at the time.

Since then, the all-volunteer group has built a multi-state network to find homes for dogs, and it’s made a difference. Last year, the Minidoka pound’s euthanasia rate was 5 percent.

Waggin’ Tails Rescue has no facility, so its success rests on the ability to find homes quickly and transport the dogs. Zehm’s role is critical.

“We wish we had the money to pay her, but we don’t have any money,” said Waggin’ Tails treasurer Ann Solosabal. Zehm pays around $60 a trip out of her own pocket.

Each day, transportation director Christie Van Tassell checks with animal shelters in Burley, Jerome, Gooding, Wendell and Idaho Falls to find out what dogs they have. The shelters send photos of the dogs, which she posts to pet websites. She also sends the photos to the Humane Society and rescue groups that specialize in various breeds. If there’s any interest in a dog, Van Tassell has Zehm collect it.

“The photos are the lifeline to finding these dogs a home,” Zehm said. “If the breed rescue groups see what they want in the photo, they’ll ask to have it held.”

Not every dog is lucky enough to ride with Zehm. The Idaho Humane Society will take only dogs that appear adoptable: puppies and purebreds. The 15 breed rescue groups in Idaho take only their chosen breeds.

Older mutts can only watch while Zehm takes others out the door.

Population control

This time, in addition to Jaeger, Zehm took from Paul four husky puppies for the Humane Society and a border collie for a border collie rescue group.

Thirteen dogs and five puppies remained behind, which didn’t please Zehm. She was especially worried about one, a medium-sized black dog, because she said black dogs tend not to be adopted.

“Minidoka gets in way too many dogs for the area, and it’s because people don’t neuter their pets,” Zehm said. “We always feel like we’re barely keeping our head above water.”

The shelters don’t have the budgets to neuter the hundreds of dogs that pass through their kennels. So talk to anyone who works with stray animals, and the No. 1 subject that will rile them up is the carelessness of owners who don’t neuter or spay their pets.

Owners who accidentally find themselves caring for a litter have to find people to take their pups. That’s not always easy, as shelter workers can attest to.

Then there are those who want to breed certain dogs with the idea of selling the puppies. Zehm said she thinks 2-year-old Poncho is a victim of that mentality.

When Zehm got Poncho from the Idaho Falls shelter, his previous owners had tagged him with a microchip but hadn’t neutered him. The shelter notified the owners that Poncho was in captivity, but they never came to pick him up.

“He was important enough to microchip, so they probably bred him and kept a pup out of the litter,” Zehm said. “He wasn’t needed anymore.”

Dedication

Zehm drove back to Interstate 84 and headed west to Jerome. She fumbled to find some music.

“I hate leaving them there,” she said, her knuckles turning white as she held the wheel. “At the end of each day, I’m wiped out.”

Despite the emotional exhaustion, Zehm is not likely to quit driving soon.

She has a long history of helping dogs, going back at least 20 years to when she worked to save greyhounds in Pennsylvania. When she moved to Idaho with her new husband five years ago, she helped with a greyhound group, her local shelter and eventually Waggin’ Tails Rescue.

Now she’s involved with the Boise Bully Breed Rescue and spends even more time on the road. Every few months, she drives to Snoqualmie, Wash., to donate dogs to the Echo Glen Children’s Facility, a juvenile detention center, where the children train the dogs to make them more adoptable.

“I keep going because I love dogs and want to help them find the right homes,” Zehm said. “What is better than getting letters from new owners who say, ‘This is a match made in heaven’?”

As Zehm turned into the driveway of the Jerome animal shelter, she made a surprising admission.

“I really hate to drive,” Zehm said.

Paul rescue gives dogs a second chance

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

Preparing to adopt a dog? Waggin’ Tails Rescue hopes you’ll consider giving a homeless pup a home.

Waggin’ Tails Rescue started in 2008 with three volunteers posting pictures of dogs at the Minidoka Animal Control Facility onto Petfinder.com. Since then, they have expanded their efforts, transporting dogs from shelters across Magic Valley and northern Utah to rescue groups and foster homes.

Waggin’ Tails works with shelters in Paul, Burley, Jerome, Idaho Falls, Wendell, Gooding and Salt Lake City. From those shelters, Salt Lake City-based director Christie Van Tassell finds out which dogs are in danger of being euthanized and which dogs have been at the shelter for a few months. She sends the list to other shelters and rescues, which tell her if they can take any of the dogs. Many go to breed-specific rescues like Pug Pals and Moonson Malamute Rescue, both in Boise.

Foster families live throughout southern Idaho and northern Utah in cities like Salt Lake City, Burley, Boise, Eagle and Buhl. At its low point, Waggin’ Tails had just two foster families, but now it has regained its peak of 10 families. Foster homes provide training and exercise for the dogs while they’re meeting potential adoptive families. Waggin’ Tails provides food, spaying and neutering and other veterinary care, said Boise-based volunteer Amy Mitchell.

The model is working. In 2010, Waggin’ Tails relocated 1,190 dogs, including the 151 dogs it found homes for through its foster care program. The Minidoka Animal Control Facility’s euthanasia rate has dropped from 70 percent in 2008 to 5 percent in 2010. Dogs have been placed throughout the Northwest and in California.

So far, Waggin’ Tails doesn’t have nonprofit status, but it does take donations through its website. Driver Anita Zehm pays for her own gas, and the rescue relies on adoption fees to pay for vet bills and on donated dog food from the Humane Society for foster families. It also has a once-a-summer garage sale in Paul to raise money, Mitchell said.

The 14 volunteers include board members, drivers and foster people.

But the small network is growing. With help from their small army of volunteers, Mitchell and her team hope to save more pups who, before the rescue, might have been doomed.

Breeds

Breeds deemed dangerous can be expensive for dog owners. Many insurance companies require liability coverage for people who own pit bulls or other so-called dangerous breeds, as Jerome pit bull owner Sheila Van Zant found.

And some companies won't insure homes with those dogs at all. American Family Insurance doesn't insure homes with chow chows, Akitas, Rottweilers, wolf crosses or pit bull breeds. That includes cross-breeds, said Twin Falls agent Lori Irish.

Dr. Fred Surbaugh, an orthopedic surgeon at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center, said he and his colleagues have seen a number of injuries from dog bites, including broken bones and infections. The biggest offenders, he said, are pit bulls.

Dr. Scott Holliday, the German shepherd owner, is an emergency room doctor at St. Luke's Magic Valley, where he has treated bites from dogs large and small. With large dogs like pit bulls, there is a bigger risk of deformity and broken bones, Holliday said. But smaller dogs can cause damage in their own way.

"The smaller the hole, the worse the chance of infection," he said. With a big wound, it's easy to irrigate and flush the bacteria out. Smaller puncture holes from tiny teeth are difficult to clean.

Still, Surbaugh advocates breed-specific legislation to ban certain breeds like pit bulls. The CDC does not.

Surbaugh knows not all dogs within a certain breed are dangerous, "but you never know when those same dogs are going to be sold to somebody who wants to use them for fighting or protection," he said. And opponents "don't see the kind of severe injuries that I've seen, either."

Payette County enacted a pit bull ban in 2007. People who owned pit bulls before March 28, 2007, can keep their dogs, although they must register the animal, pay an annual $500 fee (or $475 if the dog has been spayed or neutered), microchip the dog, provide vaccine records to the county and meet other requirements. Fruitland and Homedale also have breed-specific laws. Burley shelved a similar proposal in 2008.

Surbaugh is pushing Idaho legislators for a statewide measure that would require pit bull owners to pay an annual fee. "I think that's a great law," he said.

No such measure has been introduced this legislative session in Idaho.

Wyoma Clouss of the Idaho Dog Coalition contends breed-specific legislation targets the wrong people. After laws are enacted, "I've had some really sad phone calls from people who are going, 'I have to get rid of my pit bull, what do I do now?'" Clouss said. Another problem with breed-specific legislation: Without lineage records, there is no clear-cut way to determine a dog's breed. Many Labradors are short and stocky, she said, and resemble the bully breeds (American pit bull terrier, Staffordshire bull terrier,

BITE PREVENTION

When dealing with any dog — whether a dachshund or a Doberman — common-sense precautions reduce your chances of being bitten.

If the dog is yours ...

- Spay or neuter your dog. Intact males are involved in 70 to 76 percent of reported dog bite incidents.
- Never leave a dog alone with your children. Teach your children how to interact with the dog. Children are the most common victims of serious dog bites; 70 percent of fatal dog attacks and more than half of bite wounds requiring medical attention involve children.
- Don't wrestle or play aggressive games with your dog. Also, don't run from a dog, even if you're just playing.
- Do not disturb a dog that is sleeping, eating or caring for puppies. Also, avoid eye contact with dogs.
- Socialize and train your dog. If the dog shows aggression, seek help from a trainer or a veterinarian.

If the dog isn't yours ...

- Don't approach an unfamiliar dog. If the owner is there, ask whether it's OK to pet the dog.
  - Don't pet a dog without allowing it to see and sniff you first.
  - Remain motionless if an unfamiliar dog approaches you. If knocked over by a dog, roll into a ball and lie still.
- Sources: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, American Veterinary Medical Association Task Force on Canine Aggression and Human-Canine Interactions.

American Staffordshire terrier and the like). The issue gets murkier for cross-breeds.

The better solution, Clouss said, is targeting individuals.

"Make each person responsible individually, no matter if it's a big dog or a 2-pound dog," she said.

The aggressive ones

On Feb. 1, the Twin Falls Animal Shelter housed two male pit bulls, each in its own pen. One, a brindle, was friendly if a bit timid. The other, a blue nose found near Hagerman, snapped at people who walked by. To prevent someone from wandering into that cage, the staff padlocked the door.

It's a common scene at the shelter, which has seen a huge increase in bully breeds, said director Debbie Blackwood.

The shelter works with a dog if it has manageable behavioral problems, but if a dog shows major aggression, the shelter euthanizes it. "We try to protect the public, if you will," Blackwood said.

Blackwood estimates about 5 percent of dogs that come through the Twin Falls shelter are not adoptable because of aggression issues.

"The good (pit bulls) are usually really good," Blackwood said, adding that the brindle pit bull played with Blackwood's own puppy. "I think they're exceptional. They're lovers."

Pit bulls are also appearing more frequently in the calls dispatched to Twin Falls County Sheriff's Deputy Gary Trostel in the past couple of years. People might be just as likely to call about Labs on the loose, he said, but the pit bull calls are more urgent.

When responding to a report of a loose pit bull, Trostel is a little more cautious. And if two pit bulls are roaming together, he won't get out of the truck until evaluating the situation.

"It's just the same as looking at a person," said Trostel, who has been bitten only once in his five years on the job, by a chow chow. "You look at the body language. Are they agitated? Are they injured?"

What our readers say

In early February, the Times-News invited comments from people who have strong opinions about dog breeds that have a reputation for being dangerous.

We received almost 50 responses. Here are a few:

Ginny Gunn, who lives outside Filer, has owned four Doberman pinschers. "I can honestly say in my life I have never been bitten by a large dog of any breed," she wrote in an e-mail. "I have however been bitten numerous times by smaller breeds, usually when I am walking away from them."

Christine Baker of Twin Falls has owned both a Doberman pinscher and a German shepherd. "Like any decision in life, choosing a dog requires common sense. Too often people select a K-9 as a status quo. Any dog can become a danger under the guidance of a negligent owner. I mean, after all, some of the meanest dogs out there are toy breeds and you don't hear anyone questioning the ownership of a toy poodle or a chihuahua," she wrote.

Clayton Sanders of Twin Falls has owned three Rottweilers. "In my opinion they are the perfect family dog," he wrote. "I have been a dog owner and lover for a long time and I truly believe the saying that there are no bad dogs, just bad owners."

Brittany Triner of Twin Falls is a member of Pets Helping People Therapy Team and Magic Valley Canine Social Club. "I am a firm believer that any dog can be rehabilitated with time, training and dedication," she wrote, citing one pit bull who had found a home after being abused by his previous owners. "... once you met him it was apparent that he was the sweetest soul."

Karlee Lambert of Kimberly owns a blue nose pit bull and a pit bull-black Labrador mix. "Honestly, I don't think they're a vicious dog like people say," Lambert said by telephone. They bark at strangers, but don't bite. "I really haven't had any bad complaints about them."

Some readers were sharply critical of particular dog breeds, but they didn't respond to our requests to use their comments in print.

tures might end up in Blackwood's hands. It's not necessarily harder to find families for pit bulls, Blackwood said, but they do require experienced dog owners, especially if the dogs have shown behavior issues like growling at people or acting fearful.

"Pit bulls can do a lot of damage really quick if their bell gets rung," she said.

The owner's responsibility

Twin Falls dog owner Nicholas Stepner said a dog's treatment shapes its behavior.

Stepner works with rescue pit bulls and said most are sweet and loving. When they're aggressive, he said, there is usually a reason; one particularly aggressive pit bull had come from an abusive home.

"She was beaten so badly, she had internal bruising and bleeding," Stepner said. He rehabilitated her, and the dog was eventually adopted out.

Van Zant, the Jerome pit bull owner, said it's important to teach children not to tease dogs. The only time she has seen a pit bull attack was when a child poked it with sticks and taunted it.

"If you do that to a cat, it's going to get aggressive," Van Zant said.

And socializing the dog when it's young is crucial.

"It's really the puppy stage that shapes all this," Christian Holliday said.

Renee Kimball, whose daughter-in-law has a Rottweiler and whose niece owns a pit bull, said the most important thing an owner can do is train the dog. The Rottweiler and pit bull have never shown aggression toward her family, the Buhl woman said.

"You couldn't ask for a nicer dog," she said. "I think it's all the way you handle them."

The health benefits of falling and staying in love

By Rachel Saslow
The Washington Post

Love may make the world go ‘round, but is it powerful enough to lower one’s blood pressure, reduce depression and speed the healing of an injury? With Valentine’s Day just around the corner, we set out to find the answer and discovered that science says yes.

“Our relationships help us cope with stress, so if we have someone we can turn to for emotional support or advice, that can buffer the negative effects of stress,” says Julianne Holt-Lunstad, an associate professor of psychology at Brigham Young University, who has been publishing studies for the past 10 years on social relationships and their influence on health and disease.

Most studies on the health benefits of love have focused on married couples. In 2007, after reviewing research on the health effects of matrimony, the Department of Health and Human Services issued a 68-page report that found that, in general, married people are happier, live longer, drink less and even have fewer doctor’s appointments than unmarried folks.

Of course, “we all know that not all marriages are happy,” Holt-Lunstad says. Very few of the thousands of marriage studies take the quality of the union into account; “I can think of maybe seven.”

So, Holt-Lunstad set out to see what kind of links there might be between love and health, and in 2008, she identified one, in a study published that year about marriage and blood pressure. She found that happily married people have lower blood pressure than unmarried people. But unhappily married people have higher blood pressure than both groups. So, when it comes to blood pressure, at least, you’re probably better off alone than in a troubled marriage.

Loving spouses tend to encourage preventive care, reinforce healthy behaviors such as exercise and flossing, and dissuade unhealthy ones, such as heavy drinking, according to many studies. Romantic relationships also can provide a sense of meaning and purpose in life that can translate to better self-care and less risk taking, Holt-Lunstad says. (There are also practical benefits to marriage that can improve one’s health but have nothing to do with love. For instance, married people are more likely to have health insurance and be financially stable, according to the HHS study.)

Arthur Aron, a social psychologist at Stony Brook University in New York, has dedicated his professional life to understanding the science of love. Specifically, Aron does brain scans with fMRI machines of people at various stages of the romantic journey: newly in love, in long-term relationships and recently rejected.

Though most of his studies are small, involving only 15 to 20 people, Aron has consistently found that feelings of love trigger the brain’s dopamine-reward system. Dopamine is a powerful neurotransmitter that affects pleasure and motivation. It is activated in many people, for instance, by winning a lot of money or taking cocaine.

In a study released in the January 2011 issue of Social Cognitive and Affective Neuroscience, Aron compared the brain scans of 17 people who had been married for an average of 21 years with data from his 2005 study of 17 people (10 women and 7 men, median age of 21) who were newly in love. Both groups had neural activation in the dopamine system but, interestingly, the brains of the newer lovebirds also lit up in areas associated with anxiety, obsession and tension.

“When you’ve just fallen in love and the person goes out of your sight for five minutes, you think, ‘Are they dead? Did they find someone else?’” Aron says.

Hugging and hand-holding, meanwhile, have been found to release the hormone oxytocin, which lowers the levels of stress hormones in the body, reducing blood pressure, improving mood and increasing tolerance for pain, according to research from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

If being in love makes you happy, it may also have another welcome health benefit: fewer colds. Researchers at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh assessed 334 healthy volunteers, ages 18 to 54, for their emotional styles. Those who tended to experience positive emotions such as happy, pleased and relaxed were more resistant to the common cold than those who felt anxious, hostile or depressed. Since the study covered anyone with positive emotions, the results could apply to those in happy relationships — or anyone with a sunny outlook.

A happy marriage may also speed the rate that wounds heal, according to a 2005 study at Ohio State University. It found that a married couple’s 30-minute positive, supportive discussion sped up their bodies’ ability to recover from an injury by at least one day.

Researchers Jan Kiecolt-Glaser and Ronald Glaser fit 42 married couples with small suction devices that created eight tiny blisters on their arms. On one visit after being subjected to the blistering device, the researchers prompted the couple to talk about “an area of disagreement, something that inherently had an emotional element,” Kiecolt-Glaser says. On another visit, the couple had a loving discussion after the blistering. Those blisters healed a day sooner.

For those who aren’t in love right now, all is not lost. Holt-Lunstad and colleagues found that strong connections to friends, family, neighbors or colleagues improve odds of survival by 50 percent. She examined data from 148 studies that followed 308,849 people an average of 7 1/2 years. Social connectedness proved as beneficial to survival as quitting smoking and exceeded the benefits of exercise.

Meanwhile, it’s worth noting that love gone wrong can have health consequences as well.

“Lots of the data on suicide and depression show that one of the major causes, especially among younger people, is rejection in love or unrequited love,” Aron says.

Divorce can damage one’s physical health so dramatically that the person never recovers. A 2009 study in the Journal of Health and Social Behavior found that divorced or widowed people have 20 percent more chronic health conditions, such as heart disease, diabetes and cancer, than married people. They also have 23 percent more mobility limitations, such as trouble walking up stairs. Remarriage offset this trend a bit, but not completely.

OK, so is there a better way to ask kids to follow through?

Chicago Tribune

Parent advice

It irks me to hear parents say “OK?” or “Okaaa-aaaay?” after talking with a child — as if we needed their permission! I know that most of us are just trying to make sure our kids got the message, so I usually follow up with direct eye contact and, “Do you understand?” From the time my kids could talk, I would tell them to say, “Yes, Mom, I understand.”

— Jennifer Polizzi

I make my sons look me right in the eye and repeat back what I said. For example, I say, “Do not run at the pool.” Then I make them acknowledge that they understand the punishment that will ensue for disobedience. For example: “And if I run at the pool, I understand that I will have to sit out for a while, and if I do it again, I understand that we will go home.”

— Sharon Brinkman

I hung a Family Responsibilities chart in our mudroom. Suddenly everyone knows what we expect around here, and when chores are not completed, I can just point to the chart. No nagging needed.

— Dawn Lantero

Expert advice

To break the habit of ending a directive with “OK?” understand the two questions you’re really asking: “Did you hear what I said?”

and “Are you going to follow through?” says Betsy Brown Braun, author of “You’re Not the Boss of Me” (Harper, $15.99).

To answer those questions without tacking on “OK,” go to the child, get down on his level so he can see you at least peripherally, and put one hand on his body, maybe his shoulder. Then give a simple directive.

“You don’t necessarily grab his jaw so he’s facing you, as your father did to you,” Brown Braun said. The idea is to give three sensory inputs — he can hear, see and feel you — so you know he’s taking in what you say: “It’s time for bed now.”

You also can institute a code word to confirm receipt of your message, she said. Tell the child, “For me to know if you’ve heard, I’m going to say, ‘Marco’ to you. If you’ve heard me, you can say ‘Polo.’ Or “10-4,” followed by “10-4, Roger.” Explain this process by saying, “then I won’t bug you so much, because I know you hate it when I ask you to do something 20 times.”

But realize that, unless the directive is, “OK, honey, we’re going to Disneyland right now,” most kids are not going to hop-to, Brown Braun said. “So, really, the best thing to do always is to give kids some warning: ‘In five minutes it’s going to be time to do blankety-blank.’”

When the time comes, allow your kids a minute to execute. “They might just need to add one more Lego or draw one more thing. It’s not necessarily that they’re being defiant, it’s that it takes a little time to move from one place to another.”

‘Hey, buddy’ parents are digging a hole for themselves

I must, in the interest of full disclosure, begin this column with a confession: I am a voyeur; more specifically, a parenting voyeur. In the words of Chauncey Gardner, I like to watch; more specifically, I like to watch people interact with their kids. I do my voyeur thing in restaurants, stores, shopping centers, parking lots, and so on. I try to do it without staring, of course. The trick is to be casual about it, to go unnoticed.

So, I am walking up and down the aisles of my local grocery store the other day (I also like to shop), on a mission for my wife and myself, and I turn from one aisle into the next and begin walking up on a Mom and Dad who are hovering over a shopping cart, talking to some third person whom I cannot see at first. Using my amazing powers of deductive reasoning, I correctly (it turns out) figure they are talking to a child.

“What do you think about this, buddy? Eh? Look good? Eh?” Dad is saying. He’s holding up a bag of what looks like frozen chunks of breaded chicken. After several seconds of silence, Mom chimes in with “If we buy that for you, will you eat it?”

LIVING WITH CHILDREN
John Rosemond

“Yeah, buddy,” Dad says. “We won’t buy it unless you promise to eat it. How about it. Huh?”

During this exchange, as I stroll ever closer to this little family drama, I have been pretending to peruse the shelves for my favorite brand of baking soda. As I pass their cart, I am able to see the child in question. He is sitting in the basket. I suppose he refuses to sit in the child seat. He’s eating something that looks, at a glance, like candy. He looks to be 2 1/2.

One parenting picture is worth a thousand words. These two people don’t have a clue, but they are digging an ever-deepening hole for themselves. At this stage of the game, they can, with minimal effort, climb out of it, but the longer they allow this “hey buddy” and “will you eat this?” silliness go on, the more difficult climbing out is going to be. This child is not yet 3, and he is ringmaster of the family circus.

At some point, these parents are going to complain (if they have not already) to others about how “strong-willed” he is, how he won’t accept “no” for an answer, and the like. But he is not the problem. His behavior is nothing more than an expression of the problem. Trying to correct him is not and will not be the answer. To correct this problem, the horse will have to be put out in front of the cart.

The problem will not only be his ever-worsening behavior. The best research has clearly shown that the happiest children are also the most obedient.

So the paradox will be that although this child will be getting his own way, he will not really be a happy camper. Eventually, he may even be miserable.

The further problem is that this tragic-comedy is close to being the norm in America. At dinner tables all over the country, children are being served special meals that keep them happy today and increase their chances of being malcontents later on.

A week after my grocery store voyeurism, I read a mother’s online story of her 3-year-old daughter who is “food phobic.” The mother spends an inordinate amount of time and energy fixing this child foods that do not kick her “phobia” into action. So now we even have the beginnings of a new diagnosis and a new mental health industry. Maybe even a new food industry: Every item — steak, chicken, broccoli, mashed potatoes, you name it — is processed and packaged to look and even taste like candy.

That’s not a joke; it’s a prediction. And it’s not funny anyway.

CLEANING

Question:

A friend at work was telling me about a Don Aslett Cleaning Seminar she attended where she learned there is a wrong and a right way to clean a toilet. Come on Lori, really?! Cleaning the "John" seems basic and simple. How could I possibly do it wrong?

Meet Don Aslett this Tuesday!
FREE SEMINAR Feb. 15 at 2pm.
Call to reserve your seat!

Answer:

Cleaning your porcelain throne requires some serious potty know how, (some call my advice potty mouth). First... you must lower the water level in your toilet with your Johnny Mop so that your cleansers have direct contact on dirt, scum & germs. Second... only use Don Aslett's professional bowl cleaner, SAFETY FOAM. Third... come to Don Aslett's live seminar this Tuesday, February 15 at 2pm and learn many more tricks of the trade. It's FUN, INFORMATIVE and FREE!

Anniversaries

Shirley and Robert Haslam

Robert and Shirley (Brehm) Haslam celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary on February 10, 2011. They were married Feb. 10, 1951 in Jerome. It was later solemnized in the Idaho Falls L.D.S. temple.

Bob and Shirley lived at their farm north of Jerome for 43 years before moving into town. While on the farm they raised horses, sheep, and even 4-H pigs for their grandsons. Bob farmed and Shirley had wonderful gardens. They also raised 2 daughters Sheree' and Michelle.

Bob worked for Murray O'Rourke and over 20 years at Ida Gem before starting his own heating and air conditioning business, Job Rite Heating. He worked also for the Jerome School District in the maintenance before retiring in 1996.

Shirley worked at home before going to work at Producer's Livestock and then the Jerome Senior Center as a bookkeeper.

She also keeps the books for Bob's business and other businesses in the valley.

Bob and Shirley were very active in the Buttons and Bows square dance club. They also spent lots of time visiting places they wanted to see from Mount Rushmore to Canada, but their favorite haunt was "No Tell 'Em Creek" where they spent countless hours by themselves and their grandchildren.

Great iPad apps for kids

The Washington Post

Want to conquer evil green pigs with irate winged animals? How about making a fruit salad that just might explode? Or creating a masterpiece without spilling a drop of paint?

There's an app for that — and for just about anything else you can imagine.

Recently, Apple Computer announced it has sold nearly 15 million iPads, all in less than a year. The popularity of the iPad means that it is quickly becoming a favorite with kids. Now you might have to “borrow” it from a parent, but soon you might be using one in school. Many school systems are starting to buy the tablet computers to help with “mobile learning.”

The iPad is the size of a school notebook, but you can use it to play games, create music, listen to poetry, write and illustrate a story, make digital paintings and much more.

With thousands of applications available, what's worth your time — and money? We've picked 10 favorites that will make you laugh, help you learn — and in many cases do both at the same time! All but two apps (Drawing Pad and Story Patch) also are available for the iPhone or iPod Touch.

Many apps come in a free “lite” version, which might have fewer levels or ads on the screen. These are a great way to test a game to see if you like it before buying it (or asking your parent to buy it). And sometimes apps go on sale, so, for example, you can get the supercool Scrabble app for just $4 instead of $10.

Fun to play alone or with friends

Angry Birds HD, $4.99. (Lite version available.) This addictive game is already a popular download. Angry Birds is a great combination of simple and comic: You launch cute, wingless birds with a slingshot at a bunch of evil pigs who are hiding in various kinds of shelters, having stolen the birds' eggs. It makes sense when you play it!

Fruit Ninja HD, $2.99. (Lite version available.) In this fast-paced, attention-grabbing game, you use your finger to slice flying fruit before it falls off the screen. Just don't get so swept up by the fabulous squishing and splatting sounds that you accidentally karate chop a flying bomb. Not good.

Game of Life HD, $6.99. When your life is on hold — waiting for your ride or sitting on a long flight — it's hard to beat the digital version of this classic board game. Have a career, get married, have babies and make a pile of money, all before you have to put your seat backs and tray tables in the upright and locked position. Best detail: The spinner sounds just like the real thing!

Great games that make you think

Cut the Rope HD, $1.99. (Lite version available.) An enchancing game that requires thought and strategy and is packaged with adorable graphics and sounds. A piece of candy dangles from one or more ropes, and you have to cut the right ropes in the right order so the candy swings into the mouth of Omnom the frog. Watch out for bubbles and other obstacles, and think before you cut!

Toy Balls! HD, $3.99. (Lite version available.) Match-three games are fairly common, but this is one of the best. You have to draw a line connecting three balls to make them disappear, but those pesky balls won't stop moving! If you aren't fast enough, the balls overflow and hit the electro-zapper,

Labyrinth HD, $2.99. (Lite version available.) You've probably played the wooden version of this game, and this app is a great stand-in for the real thing. You guide a ball through a wooden maze by carefully tilting and rocking the iPad, being careful to avoid the ball-swallowing holes. Plunk.

Bookworm, $2.99. In this fun word-building game, you connect letters on sliding tiles to form words. But your search gets frantic when the tiles catch on fire. Points are assigned to words based on length and difficulty. We especially love that definitions pop up when you

Get creative

Cake Doodle, 99 cents. This clever app gives you a recipe to follow, and you have to use the iPad to get the ingredients into the bowl by tapping, tilting and shaking it. Then comes the fun part: decorating! Cake baking shows on TV have gotten many kids interested in the art of extreme baking, so here's your chance to try it out — without breaking any eggs!

Drawing Pad, $1.99. This easy-to-use app makes paper seem so yesterday! You can choose from paint, markers, crayons, colored pencils and stamps, in a huge variety of colors, to make pictures and cards on lots of different backgrounds. Even use photos from your own library. When you're done, you can print or e-mail your creations. Watch the iTunes video for inspiration before you start.

Story Patch, $4.99. Kids have been stapling pieces of paper together for generations to make their own books. Now you can write your stories on the iPad, using photos from your library or a wide range of clip art. The app will even help you write a story, often with hilarious results depending on how you answer the questions. You'll have no writer's block here!
