Zealous budget cutters stymie cigarette tax hike

By John Miller
Associated Press

BOISE — In recent days, Rep. Cameron Wheeler has fielded numerous phone calls from voters in his eastern Idaho district that took him a little off-guard.

“They told me, ‘Vote for the cigarette tax increase,’ ” said Wheeler, R-Ririe, of the callers’ message. “I told them, ‘There isn’t anything to vote for.’ ”

The people lighting up Wheeler’s House floor phone’s display panel were responding to full-page newspaper ads — in Boise, Idaho Falls, Nampa and Twin Falls last week — from a coalition of anti-smoking groups that have been pushing the proposed $1.25 per pack cigarette tax hike since before the 2011 session began in January.

The 31-member coalition, led by Campaign for Tobacco-free Kids, the American Cancer Society Cancer Action Network, argues raising the tax would discourage kids from starting smoking, but it also included this sweetener: It would raise about $50 million in tax revenue that would come in handy to fill budget holes as state tax revenue slumped yet again.

“We don’t need it. The budget is balanced.”

— House Majority Caucus Chairman Ken Roberts, R-Donnelly, on the anti-smoking coalition’s effort to raise Idaho’s cigarette tax

Their only problem is, Idaho lawmakers found other ways to fill what budget hole than raising taxes, including by cutting public education by $62 million and another $35 million Medicaid.

The crisis just wasn’t big enough to force conservative Republicans into their worst nightmare — raising taxes, regardless of their stripe.

“We don’t need it,” said House Majority Caucus Chairman Ken Roberts, R-Donnelly, of what ultimately killed the coalition’s effort.

“The budget is balanced.”

Idaho’s tax is now 57 cents, the same as South Carolina, a big tobacco producer. Heidi Low, the American Cancer Society lobbyist, said she was “extremely disappointed” her group’s push to more than triple that never got off the ground — even though they’d won a marquee sponsor, Rep. Dennis Lake, chairman of the House Revenue and Taxation Committee.

A new chapter for Twin Falls

Travis Rothweiler set to take over as city manager

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

A new chapter will begin for the city of Twin Falls tonight, as it swears in its first new city manager since Jimmy Carter was president.

Assistant City Manager Travis Rothweiler will be dropping the first word in his title tonight when he takes the oath of office to become, essentially, the chief executive officer of the city. He will replace outgoing City Manager Tom Courtney, who started the job about the time Rothweiler started first grade.

Rothweiler, 39, was confirmed as the city council’s choice to succeed Courtney, 63, in November, with a unanimous vote and a slew of superlatives from the council. Even while searching for Courtney’s replacement before that, the selection committee only interviewed Rothweiler, citing the strength of his resume compared to the other applicants.

In the few years he has been in Twin Falls, Rothweiler has introduced new financial accounting tools, instituting a five-year budget projection and a financial

The mold infestation at the Martin Street apartment wasn’t a horror story of fuzzy, splotted walls, but it was bad enough for state Health and Welfare officials to move out the handicapped resident.

It was also bad enough that the cost would have kept any other mentally ill patient from making use of the transitional housing, which the local branch of the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare makes available through a partnership with the Valley House homeless shelter. That changed when REE-Construction stepped up to remove the mold, and in a move surprising to the Health and Welfare officials, even started seeking donations from other local businesses.

“A lot of people see the budget for the department and think it’s all Medicaid, but a big part of it is just making sure our clients have a place to go to finish their treatment,” said Bill Campbell, regional program specialist with Health and Welfare, explaining the apartment’s importance.

REE-Construction pulled out carpet and tile from the living room, bedroom and bathroom. It is also spearheading some retrofits in the bathroom to circulate moist air. The Martin Street apartment being worked on was plagued with poor air circulation, meaning moisture from bathing, cooking and just breathing was trapped and primed for molds to blossom.

“We build houses out of dead vegetables and its just mold food waiting to happen,” REE-Construction President Ron Reese said.

Nuclear waste disposal problem gains renewed scrutiny in U.S.

By Ralph Vartabedian
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Japan’s nuclear accident has focused attention on the U.S. practice of packing spent-fuel pools at power plants far beyond their capacity, which some scientists call a serious compromise in safety.

When the first U.S. nuclear power plants went online more than half a century ago, utilities built pools

“The accident could have been a lot worse if they were filled as densely as ours are.”

— Edwin Lyman, a physicist with the Union of Concerned Scientists, comparing Japan’s recent nuclear crisis with the risks posed by a similar occurrence in the U.S.

next to the reactors to store their radioactive waste, like the ones at Japan’s Fukushima plant that overheated and probably leaked radiation into the environment.

The utilities thought the pools would be for temporary storage only: The federal government had promised it would find a safe place to bury the used-up fuel rods, which remain radioactive for thousands of years.

It has yet to make good on that commitment.

Technical miscalculations, multibillion-dollar lawsuits and political stalemates over nuclear waste have kept the decaying radioactive material stationary, accumulating across the country ever since the Eisenhower administration.

Now the nuclear disaster in Japan, in which at least one spent fuel pool seems to be damaged and leaking and may have caught fire, has thrown U.S. decisions about its own waste into focus, exposing what many scientists call a serious safety issue.

The risks taken at the Fukushima Daiichi plant were less than those in the U.S., nuclear scientists say, because utilities here have had

Airline passenger traffic rises slightly at Friedman Memorial

KETCHUM (AP) — The number of travelers going through Friedman Memorial Airport in the Ketchum-Sun Valley resort area increased 2 percent this winter season compared to last year, officials say.

Officials tell the Idaho Mountain Express that the modest increase isn't bad considering a dry spell during January and February that may have caused some skiers and snowboarders to stay away.

"Travel to and from Sun Valley was consistent with years past," said Wes Horrocks, spokesman for SkyWest Airlines in St. George, Utah. "We at SkyWest are always pleased with the performance of the Salt Lake-Sun Valley route. The success of the route and the support we receive from the community are important to us."

He said that overall numbers were down in December with 308 fewer passengers boarding in Hailey compared to the previous December.

Courtesy of SkyWest Airlines

In January, however, passenger traffic was up 9 percent compared to the previous year.

SkyWest plans to keep its seven daily flights between Salt Lake City and Sun Valley through March, then drop to five flights. The summer schedule, Horrocks said, hasn't been finalized. He said flights will likely increase as demand reaches its peak in July.

Seattle-based Horizon Airlines had a 7 percent improvement this winter compared to last year. The company's nonstop service from Los Angeles and Seattle ended as scheduled on March 20. Flights are set to resume for the summer season on May 27 and continue through Sept. 5.

stepping up," he said.

When it came time for other companies to follow suit, he said no arm-twisting was required. He recruited them through service club and professional networks to create a "pretty good coalition of the willing."

As a result, a project he estimates would cost $25,000 won't cost cash-strapped Health and Welfare a dime. And through their work, another person working their way out of Health and Welfare services will have a home.

"I'm not prone to being a touchy, feely guy, but that was pretty heartwarming," Campbell said.

Cigarettes

But Lake, a Republican from Blackfoot, says he couldn't muster enough support from his own panel to even win a bill introduction.

Rather than let the bill explode in ignominy, Lake instead decided to just quietly keep the measure in his drawer.

"It's certainly different than the way I saw this at the beginning of the session," Lake conceded. "I thought there'd be a clamor for it."

The clamor just never materialized.

Before the session, the budget gap was estimated at as much as $350 million for fiscal year 2012 starting July 1.

It turned out to be about $92 million — big, but just not the disaster some had feared.

For Democrats who have been fighting the Medicaid and education cuts, that's still incentive enough to consider boosting the cigarette tax. For instance, smoking-related illness results in about $82 million in costs to Medicaid, so revenue from a cigarette-tax hike could have gone to fill that hole and ease the cuts elsewhere.

"When the ramifications of the cuts to Medicaid begin to affect people's daily lives, people are going to be very upset," said Rep. Wendy Jaquet, a member of the Joint Finance-Appropriations budget writing committee. "We've done some damage. Big damage."

From the beginning, those pushing the tax increase had an uphill battle.

The anti-tax group Americans for Tax Reform sent out a press release before the session — distributed by a Idaho tobacco-company lobbyist — urging lawmakers to just vote no.

And in one of the first votes of the 2011 session, the state House of Representatives killed a seemingly innocuous measure to raise fees by just $1.50 on those found guilty of violating Idaho laws — to send a loud-and-clear message that tax or fee increases wouldn't be tolerated.

If lawmakers won't raise fees on criminals, it's a fair bet that they'll be tough to convince to raise them on smokers, too.

With the Idaho Legislature likely to adjourn during the first week of April, the question still remains: Will a budget crisis resurface when they return to Boise next January. Early estimates indicate that even if tax revenue growth in fiscal year 2013 lives up to current state government estimates, Idaho will be as much as $100 million short of what it needs to balance its budget.

If that happens, lawmakers who this session spent hours of hearings on Medicaid listening to heart-wrenching stories of disabled residents and their families how the loss of services will hurt their quality of life may be unwilling to make such cuts again — and consequently, more likely to support the cigarette tax hike they deemed unnecessary this year.

Low, the head of the anti-smoking coalition, is hoping the economy rebounds.

If it doesn't, however, she'll be there to remind lawmakers they have a choice.

"The issue is definitely not dead," Low said. "We'll be back. It's good public health policy. We know that a bill like this would prevent 19 percent of youth from beginning to smoke."

Groups plan legal action to stop Mont. megaloads

MISSOULA, Mont. (AP) — The National Wildlife Federation and Missoula County commissioners plan to join other groups in seeking a court injunction to prevent an oil company from moving oversized loads of refinery equipment across Montana, officials say.

The court action tentatively planned for this week targets an environmental assessment by the Montana Department of Transportation, said Tony Iollonardo, senior communications manager for the environmentalist group in Washington, D.C.

The state department in February released the assessment that found no significant negative impacts on Montana's roads and environment in allowing Imperial Oil, an Exxon Mobil Corp. subsidiary, to ship dozens of massive loads of oil equipment across the state to Alberta, Canada, where the modules would be assembled into a factory at an $8 billion complex at the Kearl oil sands.

"The crux of (the filing) is, Montana DOT did not do adequate environmental review before making the decision," Iollonardo told the Missoulian. "This will seek to get further review and stave off the rush to have the heavy haul move through your state."

County Commissioner Michele Landquist said allowing the megaloads could set a precedent and make giant shipments a fixture on the planned route through scenic and recreation corridors.

"I think we'll be selling our community out pretty darn cheap," said Landquist, who lives on the proposed shipping route along U.S. Highway 12 near Lolo. "In the long run, this would turn into a permanent high-wide corridor."

Landquist said the decision by the commissioners to join the lawsuit won't be finalized until the county's legal counsel offers advice.

The company originally proposed moving 207 loads along U.S. Highway 12 starting from the Port of Lewiston in Idaho. The loads would enter Montana at Lolo Pass and eventually pass through Missoula.

Near Missoula, the loads would leave U.S. Highway 12 and use U.S. Highway 200 through Bonner, cross the Continental Divide at Rogers Pass, then travel along the Rocky Mountain Front through Augusta, Choteau, Valier and Cut Bank to the Port of Sweetgrass.

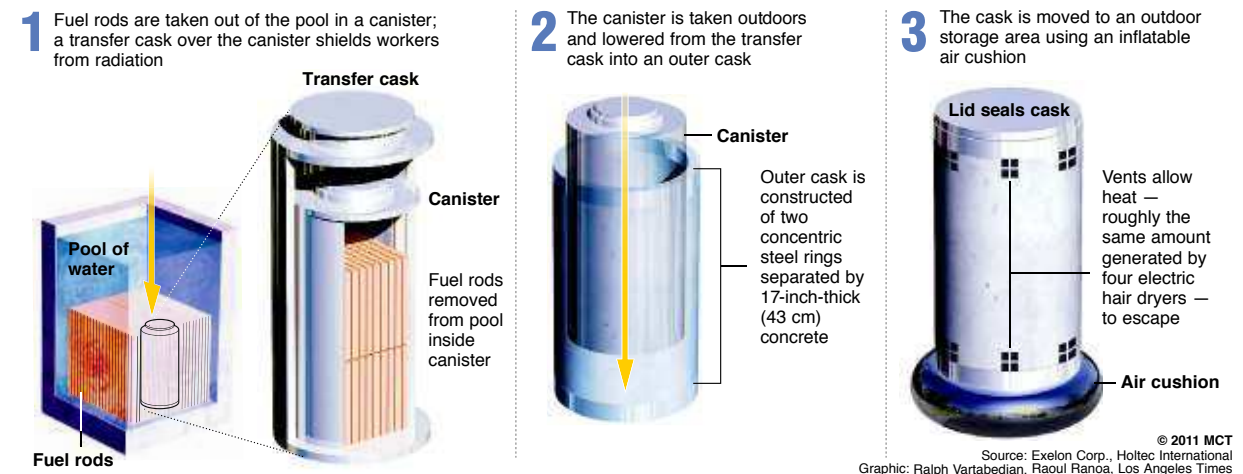

"You're going to see a collection of wide interests (filing suit), probably from local governments in Montana to conservation groups to landowner groups," Iollonardo said, declining to name other groups.

Due to legal wrangling in Idaho and Montana, Imperial Oil/Exxon Mobil has made changes and this month submitted plans to the Idaho Department of Transportation to make the loads smaller so they can be moved on interstate highways.

No room in the pool

U.S. nuclear power plants are moving their oldest spent fuel rods out of tightly packed pools that are running out of space and into dry storage casks.

Rod transfer process:

Nuclear

to pack more fuel rods into pools than they were designed to hold, increasing the chance that they could catch fire if they lost the water that cools them.

"The accident could have been a lot worse if they were filled as densely as ours are," said Edwin Lyman, a physicist with the Union of Concerned Scientists.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which oversees commercial reactors in the U.S., has launched a 90-day review of reactor safety and plans a deeper long-term examination of its regulations. The pools, considered by outside experts the most important nuclear energy safety issue, almost certainly will be part of that.

The U.S. now has about 65,000 tons of nuclear waste spread from the East Coast to the West Coast and from the northern woods to Mexican-border states. With growing anxiety, experts have debated the waste's short-term vulnerability to accident or terrorist attack and its long-term potential to leak into the environment through political neglect.

"U.S. operators are going to have to go back and re-think their decisions because of what happened in Japan," said Kevin Crowley, director of the board on radioactive waste management at the National Research Council, which advises the U.S. government.

Crowley led a 2005 study that reported that overloading the U.S. pools put them at risk if they were to lose cooling. The study considered a terrorist attack that could puncture a hole in the pools, as well as human errors or natural events.

Without cooling, spent fuel can get so hot that zirconium tubing that holds uranium pellets begins to oxidize and potentially melt radioactive isotopes, sending them into the atmosphere.

The report recommended that the Nuclear Regulatory Commission force utilities to partially unload their pools and move their oldest waste to dry casks, which are widely considered safer.

Plants all over the country have already loaded hundreds of dry casks with waste. But they could be loading much more and reducing the amount stored in pools, the study authors said. And though utilities did rearrange fuel rods to checkerboard newer and older fuel, nuclear experts said the commission did not require plant operators to reduce the density of the fuel.

The industry says there is nothing to worry about.

"We believe the pools are safe," said Rod McCullum, director of used-fuel programs at the Nuclear Energy Institute, the industry's primary trade group. "It is not necessary to move the fuel. You don't gain a considerable amount of safety by moving to dry casks."

McCullum said that the U.S. pools have multiple layers of safety, including redundant cooling systems and leakage monitoring, though he declined to say that U.S. pools are safer than those at Fukushima.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has essentially accepted the industry's rationale on the safety of dense-packing fuel rods. Over the last two decades, the agency has repeatedly approved license applications by utilities to pack more rods into the pools.

Nuclear safety experts say that plants have packed up to five times more spent fuel rods than the pools were designed to store, though Nuclear Energy Institute officials say the pools contain no more than twice their original capacity.

The only advantage to keeping the pools so packed is the cost of the dry casks, which would run about $5 billion to $10 billion nationwide, said Frank N. von Hippel, a Princeton University physicist who first disclosed the problem in a paper he co-wrote in 2003. He said that fixing the fuel pool problem is a key step toward safer U.S. nuclear plants.

Medicare rise could mean no Social Security COLA

By Stephen Ohlemacher
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Millions of retired and disabled people in the United States had better brace for another year with no increase in Social Security payments.

The government is projecting a slight cost-of-living adjustment for Social Security benefits next year, the first increase since 2009. But for most beneficiaries, rising Medicare premiums threaten to wipe out any increase in payments, leaving them without a raise for a third straight year.

About 45 million people — one in seven in the country — receive both Medicare and Social Security. By law, beneficiaries have their Medicare Part B premiums, which cover doctor visits, deducted from their Social Security payments each month.

HOW YOU MIGHT BE AFFECTED

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rising Medicare premiums threaten to wipe out increases in Social Security payments next year, leaving millions of retired and disabled Americans without a raise for the third straight year. How a typical Social Security recipient would be affected, using projections from the trustees who oversee both programs.

Monthly Medicare Part B premium: $96.40 **
Monthly payment: $980.60.

Monthly Social Security benefit: $1,090, based on a 1.2 percent increase.

Monthly Medicare Part B premium: $113.80.
Monthly payment without hold-harmless: $976.20.
Actual monthly payment: $980.60, based on a provision that prevents Part B premiums from reducing Social Security payments for most beneficiaries.
 Medicare Part B premiums have been frozen at the 2009 level of $96.40 for about 75 percent of beneficiaries because there has been no increase in Social Security payments.

Sources: 2010 trustee reports for Medicare and Social Security; Social Security Administration.

When Medicare premiums rise more than Social Security payments, millions of people living on fixed incomes don't get raises. On the other hand, most don't get pay cuts, either, because a hold-harmless provision prevents higher Part B premiums from reducing Social Security payments for most people.

David Certner of AARP estimates that as many as three-fourths of beneficiaries will have their entire Social Security increase swallowed by rising Medicare premiums next year.

It's a tough development for retirees who lost much of their savings when the stock market collapsed, who lost value in their homes when the housing market crashed and who can't find work because the job market is weak or they are in poor health.

"You just don't have the words to say how much this impacts a person," said Joyce Trebilcock, a retired legal secretary from Belle, Mo., a small town about 100 miles west of St. Louis.

Like most U.S. retirees, Trebilcock, 65, said Social Security is her primary source of income. She said a back injury about 15 years ago left her unable to work, so she applied for disability benefits. Now, she lives on a $1,262 Social Security payment each month, with more than $500 going to pay the mortgage.

"I've cut back on about everything I can, and I take the rest out of my savings," Trebilcock said. "Thank God I've got that. That's going to run out before long, at the rate I'm going. ... I have no idea what I'm going to do then."

Medicare premiums are absorbing a growing share of Social Security benefits, leaving retired and disabled people with less money for other expenses, according to a report by the Congressional Research Service.

Social Security recipients spend, on average, 9 percent of their benefits on Medicare Part B premiums, plus 3 percent on premiums for the Medicare prescription drug program. By 2078, people just retiring would spend nearly one-third of their benefits on premiums for both Medicare programs, the report said. Also, when premiums for the prescription drug program increase, as they do almost every year, they can result in a pay cut for Social Security recipients.

"We could very well be entering a period where we're all stuck with flat benefits because of the growth in health care costs," said Mary Johnson, a policy analyst at The Senior Citizens League.

High court to take up huge sex-bias claim against Wal-Mart

By Mark Sherman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Christine Kwapnoski hasn't done too badly in nearly 25 years in the Wal-Mart family, making more than $60,000 a year in a job she enjoys most days.

But Kwapnoski says she faced obstacles at Wal-Mart-owned Sam's Club stores in both Missouri and California: Men making more than women and getting promoted faster.

She never heard a supervisor tell a man, as she says one told her, to "doll up" or "blow the cobwebs off" her make-up.

Once she got over the fear that she might be fired, she joined what has turned into the largest job discrimination lawsuit ever.

The 46-year-old single mother of two is one of the named plaintiffs in a suit that will be argued at the Supreme Court on Tuesday. At stake is whether the suit can go forward as a class action that could involve 500,000 to 1.6 million women, according to varying estimates, and potentially could cost the world's largest retailer billions of dollars.

But the case's potential importance goes well beyond the Wal-Mart dispute, as evidenced by more than two dozen briefs filed by business interests on Wal-Mart's side, and civil rights, consumer and union groups on the other.

The question is crucial to the viability of discrimination claims, which become powerful vehicles to force change when they are presented together, instead of individually. Class actions increase pressure on businesses to settle suits because of the cost of defending them and the potential for very large judgments.

Columbia University law professor John Coffee said that the high court could bring a virtual end to employment discrimination class actions filed under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, depending on how it decides the Wal-Mart case.

"Litigation brought by individuals under Title VII is just too costly," Coffee said.

"It's either class action or nothing"

Illustrating the value of class actions, Brad Seligman, the California-based lawyer who conceived of and filed the suit 10 years ago, said the average salary for a woman at Wal-Mart was $13,000, about $1,100 less than the average for a man, when the case began. "That's hugely significant if you're making $13,000 a year, but not enough to hire a lawyer and bring a case."

The company has fought the suit every step of the way, Seligman said, because it is the "biggest litigation threat Wal-Mart has ever faced."

A trial judge and the federal appeals court in San Francisco, over a fierce dissent, said the suit could go forward.

But Wal-Mart wants the high court to stop the suit in its tracks. The company argues it includes too many women with too many different positions in its 3,400 stores across the country. Wal-Mart says its policies prohibit discrimination and that most management decisions are made at the store and regional levels, not at its Bentonville, Ark., headquarters.

Theodore J. Boutrous, Wal-Mart's California-based lawyer, said there is no evidence that women are poorly treated at Wal-Mart.

"The evidence is the contrary of that," Boutrous said.

New website lets employers put health care services out to bid

By Holly Ramer
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — Self-insured businesses looking to cut out the middleman when it comes to health care have a new way to solicit bids directly from doctors or hospitals.

Created by a doctor, a lawyer and a former benefits manager, Open Health Market is an online matchmaker of sorts: Employers submit requests for proposals for a category of medical services and procedures — knee surgeries, for example, or cardiac care. Health care providers then submit competing bids, which are then evaluated by the employer.

If an employer accepts a bid, the savings could then be passed along to employees as an incentive to go with the new provider, such as a waived deductible, said Don Crandlemire, the Concord lawyer who created the site along with Dr. Leonard Fromer of Los Angeles and Peter Hayes, former benefits manager at Scarborough, Maine-based Hannaford Bros. supermarkets.

Crandlemire and his partners won't get involved in structuring any deals; they just handle the introductions. The employer decides whether to pursue negotiations with any of the bidders.

"It brings buyers and sellers closer," he said. "The further apart a buyer and seller are in a market, the more inefficient that market is."

Sailboat capsizes off San Diego; 2 dead, 8 injured

By Elliot Spagat
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — A sailboat with 10 people aboard capsized and sank Sunday in San Diego Bay, leaving two men drowned and eight people injured, authorities said.

The boat flipped over for reasons that remained unclear near Shelter Island shortly after 5 p.m., sending all passengers into the water, San Diego Fire-Rescue spokesman Maurice Luque said.

Harbor police pulled all 10 from the water and took them to a boat dock where some 60 firefighters and paramedics were waiting. Two men in their 50s or 60s were declared dead at the scene and the other seven were taken to local hospitals. Two children were released from the hospital after being treated briefly.

Luque sad none of the injuries were life-threatening or critical.

One woman was being treated in intensive care at UCSD Medical Center for hypothermia, said Marguerite Elicone, a spokeswoman for the Port of San Diego, which includes the Harbor Police.

Most of those on board were members of an Asian family, and investigators had to bring in translators to speak to them, Luque said. He did not know what language they spoke. No victims' names were immediately released.

Harbor Police officers were at the 25-foot boat within five minutes after a Navy vessel reported the boat capsized, Elicone said.

"They were pulling people out of the water. There were also civilians assisting in pulling people out of the water," she said.

No other vessels were involved, Elicone said. There were several witnesses but the spokeswoman said she didn't know what they saw.

Harry Coover, creator of Super Glue, dies at 94

KINGSPORT, Tenn. (AP) — Harry Wesley Coover Jr., known as the inventor of Super Glue, has died. He was 94.

Coover was working for Tennessee Eastman Company, a division of Eastman Kodak, when an accident helped lead to the popular adhesive being discovered, according to his grandson, Adam Paul of South Carolina. An assistant was distressed that some brand new refractometer prisms were ruined when they were glued together by the substance.

In 1951, Coover and another researcher saw the potential for the strong adhesive, and it was first sold in 1958, according to the Super Glue Corp.'s website.

Cyanoacrylate, the chemical name for the glue, was first uncovered in 1942 in a search for materials to make clear plastic gun sights for World War II. But the compound stuck to everything, which is why it was rejected by researchers, the website said.

President Barack Obama honored Coover in 2010 with the National Medal of Technology and Innovation.

Coover died Saturday at his home in Kingsport, Tenn., his grandson said. He was born in Newark, Del., and received a degree in chemistry from Hobart College in New York before getting a master's degree and Ph.D., from Cornell.

He worked his way up to vice president of the chemical division for development for Eastman Kodak. Coover and the team of chemists he worked with became prolific patent holders, achieving more than 460. The work included polymers, organophosphate chemistry, the gasification of coal and of course, cyanoacrylate.

TV, radio personality DJ Megatron killed in NYC

NEW YORK (AP) — Urban radio and TV personality DJ Megatron, who built a career at hip-hop and R&B radio stations from Philadelphia to Boston and told viewers of a popular music TV show "What's Good," was shot to death early Sunday, his manager and police said.

The occasional BET television segment host was killed while heading to a store near his home on New York City's Staten Island around 2 a.m., said his manager Justin Kirkland, known as J. Smoove.

The 32-year-old deejay, born Corey McGriff, was found dead with a gunshot wound to his chest, police said. No arrests had been made.

His manager said friends and relatives had no idea why anyone might have attacked a deejay known for his upbeat, amiable attitude.

"He probably had one of the best personalities around . super-positive, happy all the time," Kirkland said.

Rising to the on-air ranks after starting as an intern, DJ Megatron began his career at New York's WKRS-FM, better known as Kiss FM, where deejays remembered him on the air and on-line Sunday.

He also worked at what was then Boston's Hot 97.7, or WBOT-FM, and at Philadelphia's The Beat, or WPHI-FM, according to a bio on his MySpace site.

In recent years, he worked on BET's "106 & Park" music countdown series, mainly in a role interacting with its live audience, the Viacom Inc. -owned network said.

Folk remedies for colic do not work, review says

The Associated Press

CHICAGO — That non-stop crying of a baby with colic has some parents turning to popular folk remedies. But there's no good evidence they work, according to a review of 15 studies.

The results don't surprise New York City mom Leni Calas, 32. She tried many treatments studied, including fennel extract, sugar drops and massage, and says nothing worked for baby Roxy, who cried almost non-stop for six months.

"Our daughter would wake up and cry literally morning to night without napping," Calas said. "She would just literally scream herself purple, and then throw up because she had been screaming so much."

Calas said she and her husband couldn't accept what doctors told them — that there was nothing wrong with their baby and that she'd outgrow the crying spells. But that's exactly what happened. And that's what most doctors believe about colic, which affects up to roughly 20 percent of U.S. babies, usually in the first few months of life.

If a physical problem can be found, the condition is usually not considered colic. Gastric reflux and protein allergies are among conditions that can cause digestive upsets and crying spells in babies, and are often mistakenly called colic.

That may explain why some remedies thought to ease digestive problems may not work in babies with true colic, including alternative treatments containing fennel, herbal teas and probiotics, which all were included in the medical review.

Alternative remedies are not tested and approved by the federal government, and the purity and amounts of their ingredients are not always verified. Parents should always check with their pediatricians if they plan to give their children an alternative treatment, said Dr. Jatinder Bhatia, head of the American Academy of Pediatrics nutrition committee.

The study by researchers at the University of Exeter in England was published online Monday in Pediatrics. The researchers analyzed results from 15 studies on various alternative remedies, massage and chiropractic methods advertised as effective against colic.

Facebook use can make depressed teens feel worse, doctors warn

By Lindsey Tanner
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Add "Facebook depression" to potential harms linked with social media, an influential doctors' group warns, referring to a condition it says may affect troubled teens who obsess over the online site.

Researchers disagree on whether it's simply an extension of depression some kids feel in other circumstances, or a distinct condition linked with using the online site.

But there are unique aspects of Facebook that can make it a particularly tough social landscape to navigate for kids already dealing with poor self-esteem, said Dr. Gwenn O'Keeffe, a Boston-area pediatrician and lead author of new American Academy of Pediatrics social media guidelines.

With in-your-face friends' tallies, status updates and photos of happy-looking people having great times, Facebook pages can make some kids feel even worse if they think they don't measure up.

It can be more painful than sitting alone in a crowded school cafeteria or other real-life encounters that can make kids feel down, O'Keeffe said, because Facebook provides a skewed view of what's really going on. Online, there's no way to see facial expressions or read body language that provide context.

The guidelines urge pediatricians to encourage parents to talk with their kids about online use and to be aware of Facebook depression, cyberbullying, sexting and other online risks. They were published online Monday in Pediatrics.

Abby Abolt, 16, a Chicago high school sophomore and frequent Facebook user, says the site has never made her feel depressed, but that she can understand how it might affect some kids.

"If you really didn't have that many friends and weren't really doing much with your life, and saw other peoples' status updates and pictures and what they were doing with friends, I could see how that would make them upset," she said.

"It's like a big popularity contest — who can get the most friend requests or get the most pictures tagged," she said.

Also, it's common among some teens to post snotty or judgmental messages on the Facebook walls of people they don't like, said Gaby Navarro, 18, a senior from Grayslake, Ill. It's happened to her friends, and she said she could imagine how that could make some teens feel depressed.

"Parents should definitely know" about these practices," Navarro said. "It's good to raise awareness about it."

The academy guidelines note that online harassment "can cause profound psychosocial outcomes," including suicide. The widely publicized suicide of a 15-year-old Massachusetts girl last year occurred after she'd been bullied and harassed, in person and on Facebook.

"Facebook is where all the teens are hanging out now. It's their corner store," O'Keeffe said.

THE FINAL FOUR IS SET: TWO POWERS, TWO DARLINGS

VCU's Jamie Skeen

By Eddie Pells
Associated Press writer

Even in the unpredictable, anything-goes world of March Madness, this is a Final Four nobody saw coming.

Kentucky, Connecticut, Butler and Virginia Commonwealth — the improbable, the implausible, the unthinkable and the downright unimaginable.

In one game in Houston next Saturday, No. 4 seed Kentucky will play No. 3 Connecticut — not a completely absurd thought as a Final Four matchup, though hardly a popular pick given their up-and-down regular seasons.

In the other game, it will be No. 11 Virginia Commonwealth against No. 8 Butler — the team that was almost universally panned when its name was called on Selection Sunday against the defending national runner-up from a 4,500-student campus whose amazing success story had supposedly run its course.

"It never gets old," Bulldogs senior Matt Howard said.

Nor does the NCAA tournament, the three-week office pool that places the so-called experts on even footing with those who fill out brackets because they like a team's colors or its mascot.

Anything goes. Anyone can win.

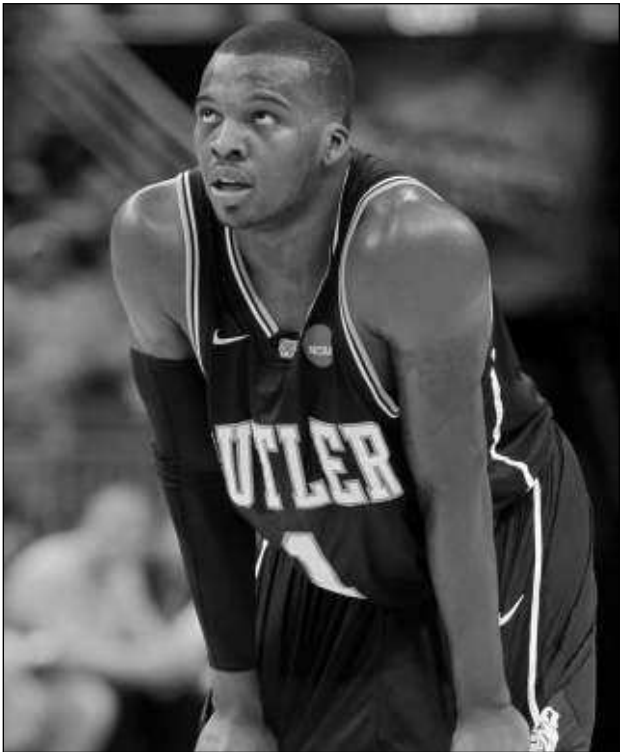

And never has that been more true than this year.

Four teams with a combined 37 losses.

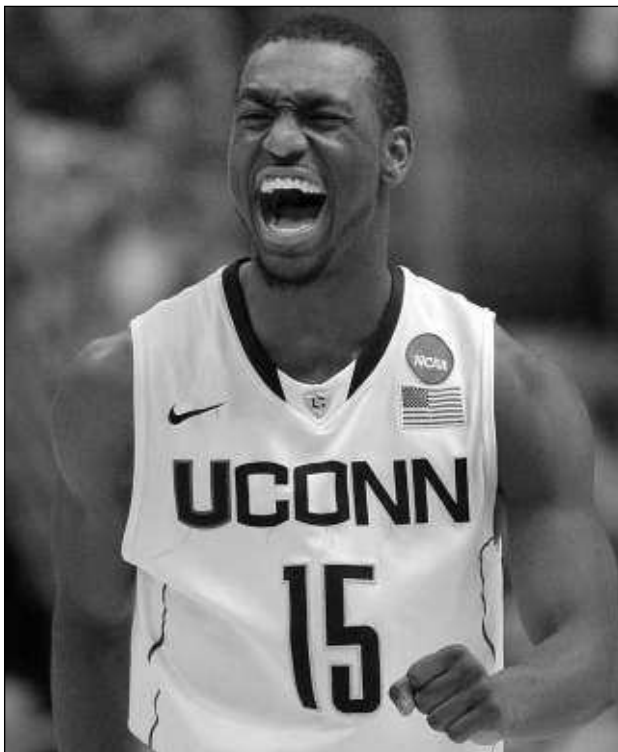

Four teams whose combined seeding equals 26, breaking the record of 22 in 2000.

This one goes to 11: VCU storms into Final Four

By Paul J. Weber
Associated Press writer

SAN ANTONIO — Move over, Butler. Virginia Commonwealth is crashing the Final Four.

Two weeks ago, the 11th-seeded Rams so doubted they would get a NCAA tournament invite that they watched Cartoon Network and went out for burgers instead of watching the selection show. Now, all of America will be watching them in the Final Four.

The 11th-seeded Rams are heading to Houston, and final No. 1 seed Kansas is heading home after the biggest March upset in years.

VCU stunned the Jayhawks 71-61 on Sunday, becoming just the third 11th seed to make the Final Four. The Jayhawks had been the last top seed standing, but what looked like an easy path to the final weekend ended in a stunning collapse.

Eighth-seeded Butler, you're promoted to a favorite next week. VCU is the trendy underdog pick this year.

"Once again we felt like nobody really thought we could win going into this game," said VCU coach Shaka Smart, the budding star of the tournament. "Our guys have done a phenomenal job of putting all the doubters aside, all the people that didn't believe in us, and going out to do their job."

VCU guard Joey Rodriguez counted one of Kansas' vaunted Morris twins — Marcus or Markieff — as one of those many doubters. During a pregame captains meeting with officials, Rodriguez said one of the brothers offered him some parting words: "The run ends here."

"We'll see," Rodriguez shot back.

The Jayhawks saw all right.

VCU players, hoisting their Southwest regional champion trophy, poured into the temporary bleachers where VCU's widely outnumbered fans sat in an Alamodome that was otherwise colored in Kansas blue and white.

VCU had sold out its allotment of 1,000 tickets in San Antonio after advancing farther than any Rams team in school history. The weekend before in Chicago, VCU had so many left-overs that Purdue fans scooped them up.

Jamie Skeen led VCU with 26 points, and as the final seconds ticked down, heaved the ball from the free throw line into the stands behind the opposite backboard. His teammates on the bench, who spent the final minutes with locked arms to hold each other back, finally spilled out onto the court, grinning ear to ear.

Kansas players walked slowly off the court. Several, including Markieff Morris, cried.

"Probably the best game they played ever," Markieff said. "Probably the best game ever as a school tonight. We let them. We let them beat us."

Smart was guided from one interview to another wearing the cut-down net around his neck. The cheers for VCU were only interrupted for guard Brandon Rozzell, who stood at midcourt as the crowd serenaded him with an impromptu "Happy Birthday."

The celebration even carried to other arenas. In Newark, N.J., where Kentucky was playing North Carolina, the crowd erupted when the public address announcer broadcast the final score from Texas.

"Anything is possible," he told the arena.

It's George Mason all over again, and VCU had an even tougher Final Four path than their tiny conference brethren in 2006.

The Rams needed five wins to go from First Four to Final Four. Along the way, they toppled the Pac-10's Southern California, the Big East's Georgetown, the Big 10's Purdue, the ACC's Florida State and now the Big 12's Kansas.

Kentucky tops Tar Heels for first Final Four trip since 1998

NEWARK, N.J. — Kentucky spent 13 straight springs watching other schools play in the Final Four, a destination college basketball's winningest program considers its birthright.

At most places, that's hardly a drought.

In the Bluegrass, it's a lifetime.

Now coach John Calipari and the Wildcats — finally — are two wins away from another national title.

Brandon Knight scored 22 points and fourth-seeded Kentucky advanced to the Final Four for the first time since their 1998 national title with a 76-69 win over second-seeded North Carolina on Sunday in the East Regional final.

The Wildcats (29-8) will play Connecticut in Houston on Saturday night after turning back a late surge by the Tar Heels (27-10), who erased an 11-point deficit before running out of gas in the final 2 minutes.

DeAndre Liggins added 12 points for Kentucky, including a 3-pointer from the corner with 37 seconds remaining to help lift the Wildcats.

"We got Kentucky back," senior center Josh Harrellson said. "A lot of people doubted us. A lot of people really didn't think we'd be the team we are. We really pulled it together as a team, and we're back now."

A season after falling a game short of the Final Four behind a roster filled with future NBA stars, the Wildcats are heading to the national semifinals for the 14th time behind the heady play of Knight and Harrellson's emotional leadership.

Harrellson again held his own against North Carolina's bigger, more heralded front line, scoring 12 points and grabbing eight rebounds.

Tyler Zeller led North Carolina with 21 points and nine rebounds and Harrison Barnes added 18 points, but the Tar Heels fell behind early and struggled to keep the hot-shooting Wildcats in check.

Harrellson gave teammate Eloy Vargas a bear hug shortly after the buzzer sounded then gleefully cut down the nets while the Tar Heels trudged slowly off the floor.

Harvick wins at Fontana on final turn

By John Marshall

FONTANA, Calif. — Kevin Harvick isn't one of those drivers who jumps out front and stays there all the way to the checkers.

He's more of a lingerer and closer, someone who's able to stay close to the front then make his move at just the right time.

Harvick was at his pass-at-the-end best on Sunday, overtaking California king Jimmie Johnson on the final turn at Auto Club Speedway to win after trailing the entire race.

"I wish we could just go out there and wear 'em out one day, just not have to worry about waiting until the last lap," Harvick said. "It does kind of seem we wait until the last moments to really get going. It's probably somewhat of a bad habit I have, but I guess it worked out."

Kyle Busch had the dominant car most of the day and led a race-high 151 laps, including off a restart with

UConn women rally to eliminate Georgetown

PHILADELPHIA — Maya Moore had 23 points and 14 rebounds to help Connecticut rally from a seven-point second-half deficit and beat Georgetown 68-63 on Sunday in the Philadelphia Regional semifinals.

The Huskies will face Duke in the regional final on Tuesday night with their fourth straight trip to the Final Four on the line. UConn routed the Blue Devils 87-51 on Jan. 31.

Bria Hartley added 17 points for UConn (35-1), which is three wins away from a third straight national championship that would match the school's own run from 2002-04 and Tennessee's from 1996-98.

Monica McNutt scored 17 points for Georgetown (24-11), which was trying to pull off one of the biggest upsets in NCAA tournament history.

Connecticut trailed 53-46 with 9:36 left, but responded with a 16-2 run.

It was coach Geno Auriemma's 80th victory in the NCAA tournament, moving him into second on the career wins list for men or women.

Tennessee coach Pat Summitt leads the way with 109, and Duke men's coach Mike Krzyzewski is third with 79.

DUKE 70, DEPAUL 63
PHILADELPHIA — Karima Christmas had 23 points and nine rebounds, and Jasmine Thomas scored 19 points to help the Blue Devils reach the regional final for a second straight year.

Duke (32-3) will play top-seeded Connecticut on Tuesday night.

Chelsea Gray scored 16 points for the Blue Devils, who raced to a 15-point lead and had to hold on after the big advantage nearly evaporated late in the second half.

DePaul's Deirdre Naughton hit two 3-pointers in less than a minute that cut the lead to three each time, but the Blue Devils wrapped it up at the free throw line.

Naughton scored 17 points for DePaul (29-7), which has never played in a regional final.

BAYLOR 86, WISCONSIN-GREEN BAY 76

DALLAS — Brittney Griner scored 40 points and combined with Odyssey Sims in the game-clinching run as top-seeded Baylor advance to the regional championship.

The Lady Bears (34-2) led only 52-49 before Griner made a short baseline shot over two defenders with just over 13 minutes left.

Sims then hit consecutive 3-pointers and ended the spurt with a steal and breakaway layup.

They combined for all the points in a 14-0 spurt.

Griner also had 10 rebounds and six blocked shots.

Kayla Tetschlag had 27 points for Green Bay (34-2), which had won 25 games in a row.

Next up for Baylor will be Texas A&M, which lost three times to the Lady Bears this year.

TEXAS A&M 79, GEORGIA 38

DALLAS — Danielle Adams had 23 points and 14 rebounds and Texas A&M built a 31-point halftime lead to earn a spot in the regional final.

The Aggies will face Baylor, which beat Wisconsin-Green Bay 86-76 in the other semifinal.

Texas A&M (30-5) led 13-0 and was up 27-2 with just under 10 minutes to play in the first half. The Aggies stifled the Lady Bulldogs into a 1-for-14 start from the field.

The win gives Texas A&M its first 30-win season and puts the Aggies in the regional final for the second time and first since 2008.

Jasmine James scored 10 points to lead Georgia (23-11).

Historic night paces Heat

MIAMI — LeBron James had 33 points and 10 rebounds, Chris Bosh added 31 points and 12 rebounds, and Dwyane Wade shook off a bruised tailbone to finish with 30 points and 11 boards as the Miami Heat beat the Houston Rockets 125-119 on Sunday for their eighth win in nine games.

It was the first time since February 1961, when Oscar Robertson, Jack Twyman and Wayne Embry — Hall of Famers all — did it for the Cincinnati Royals in a loss to the Philadelphia Warriors, that three teammates had 30 points and 10 rebounds in a non-overtime.

Kevin Martin scored 29 points, Luis Scola added 28 and Kyle Lowry — who tweaked an ankle late — had 25 points, nine assists and seven rebounds for the Rockets. Chase Budinger scored 16 for Houston, which had a five-game winning streak snapped.

GRIZZLIES 111, SPURS 104
MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Tony Allen and Zach Randolph had 23 points apiece, and Memphis sent San Antonio to its third straight loss.

Randolph also grabbed 11 rebounds for Memphis, which currently holds the eighth and final playoff spot in the Western Conference. If the Grizzlies earn the No. 8 seed, they will likely face the NBA-leading Spurs in the opening round of the playoffs.

CELTICS 85, TIMBERWOLVES 82
MINNEAPOLIS — Paul Pierce had 23 points and seven rebounds, and Boston nearly gave away another huge lead in a victory over Minnesota.

Kevin Garnett had 13 points, 13 rebounds and thousands of fans who turned out to cheer for the former face of the Timberwolves franchise. The Celtics led by 25 early in the second quarter, but trailed by two midway through the fourth before Pierce lifted them to the victory.

Michael Beasley had 28 points and 10 rebounds for the Timberwolves, who were missing All-Star Kevin Love for the third straight game.

HAWKS 99, CAVALIERS 83
CLEVELAND — Marvin Williams scored a season-high 31 points and Al Horford added 20, leading Atlanta over Cleveland.

Atlanta played without leading scorer Joe Johnson, but never trailed. Johnson, who averages 18.5 points, sprained his right thumb Saturday, but the Hawks didn't need him to defeat the Cavaliers, who have the worst record in the NBA.

KINGS 114, 76ERS 111, OT
PHILADELPHIA — Marcus Thornton scored 32 points and former Philadelphia center Samuel Dalembert made two free throws in the closing seconds of overtime for Sacramento.

Beno Udrih made a big 3-pointer in the closing minutes, too, and the Kings won their third straight.

Jason Thompson added 15 points and Dalembert finished with 13.

THUNDER 99, TRAIL BLAZERS 90
OKLAHOMA CITY — Russell Westbrook hit three

3-pointers down the stretch, including the clincher with 21 seconds left, and the Oklahoma City Thunder overcame a 40-point night by Gerald Wallace to clinch their second straight playoff berth.

Westbrook's 3 from the left wing gave the Thunder a 97-90 lead and, after Wallace missed a jumper with 16 seconds remaining, the Thunder could finally breathe easy. They are now 3-0 against Portland, with the previous two victories coming by a combined three points.

WARRIORS 114, WIZARDS 104
OAKLAND, Calif. — Monta Ellis had 37 points and 13 assists, leading the Golden State Warriors past the road-weary Washington Wizards.

Ellis played the entire game and added seven rebounds, and David Lee had a season-high 33 points to help the Warriors to their second straight victory. Ellis was three rebounds short of his first career triple-double entering the fourth quarter and never came closer.

LAKERS 102, HORNETS 84
LOS ANGELES — Kobe Bryant scored 30 points, Pau Gasol had 23 points and 16 rebounds, and the Los Angeles Lakers inched closer to the top of the overall NBA standings with their 15th win in 16 games since the All-Star break.

Andrew Bynum added 13 points in the Lakers' seventh straight win. The two-time defending NBA champions jumped to an 18-point lead in the first half.

Laird survives early collapse to win Arnold Palmer invite ORLANDO, Fla. — All that stood between Martin Laird and victory at Bay Hill were two putts from just inside 90 feet on the 18th hole, which didn't seem all that long considering what he already had been through Sunday.

First came a stunning collapse that took him from a three-shot lead to a three-shot deficit in a span of seven holes. He was three shots behind when he walked off the 14th green, two shots ahead as he headed to the 17th tee.

Laird knocked the first putt up to 3½ feet, then jabbed his fist when he rolled in the par putt to win the Arnold Palmer Invitational.

"That was a hell of a day," Laird said. "That was a tough fight out there. It was a battle out there, but you know, it makes it even sweeter at the end when I got this trophy."

In the toughest final round on the PGA Tour this year, Laird was strong at the end with two birdies and two clutch pars to close with a 3-over 75, the highest final round by a winner in the 33-year history at Bay Hill.

That two-putt par on the 18th was just enough for a one-shot victory over hard-luck Steve Marino, who lost three shots on two plugged lies in bunkers over the last four holes. Marino followed a double bogey on the par-3 17th with an all-or-nothing shot over the water at the flag to 8 feet on the last hole for birdie and a 72.

"You just cannot afford to (waste) shots in the final round — really, at any point in the tournament — if you want to win," Marino said after his third close call this year. "Unfortunately on 17, that's exactly what I did. It came back to bite me."

Laird, a 28-year-old from Scotland who came to America to play college golf and never left, became the first European to win at Bay Hill. He now heads off to the Masters for the first major of the year, having felt like he just won one.

Considering all the calamity, it felt as though the U.S. Open have moved from June to March. No one in the last three groups broke par, and those six players were a combined 19-over par.

It was a day of survival. For Laird, it turned out to be a remarkable revival.

When he pulled his approach from a fairway bunker into the water on No. 11 and made double bogey, he already was 5 over for the round. But while he lost the lead, he never lost hope.

"I never thought about not winning," Laird said. "When I saw I was three down, I didn't have a choice. I had to start playing some good golf. I had to make birdies. Steve was playing too good. That was really the focus. It was trying to get this trophy."

First came a handshake and congratulations from Palmer, the tournament host.

"It really doesn't get any better than to meet him coming off as the champion of his tournament," Laird said.

Laird needed some help from Marino, who played beautifully until the last four holes.

Marino went at the flag on the 15th, tucked right behind the bunker, and his ball plugged in the soft sand. He blasted out to 35 feet and made bogey. Then came the 17th, and a 6-iron that he thought was good all the way until the crowd groaned.

He blasted out over the green, putted up the slope to 5 feet and missed the bogey putt.

"I played so well all day, and you know, one hiccup on 17 cost me the tournament," he said.

Justin Rose closed with a 68 and tied for third with David Toms and Marc Leishman, who needed to win to get into the Masters.

SANDRA GAL WINS KIA CLASSIC
INDUSTRY, Calif. — Sandra Gal won the Kia Classic on Sunday to become the second German winner in LPGA Tour history, beating second-ranked Jiyai Shin with a 2-foot birdie putt on the final hole.

The 25-year-old Gal, a former University of Florida player, made the winning putt after Shin's 5-foot birdie attempt caught the right edge and spun out.

Gal closed with a 2-under 71 to finish at 16-under 276 on the Industry Hills Golf Club course at Pacific Palms. She set up the winning birdie with a wedge shot on the par-5 18th.

Final Four

Not a single No. 1 seed for only the third time since seeding began in 1979 and, according to STATS LLC., the first time that no 1 or 2 seed will be there.

ESPN, which sponsors one of the country's biggest bracket tournaments, said that out of 5.9 million entries, only two had this four-some making its way to Houston.

Kentucky is the new favorite in Vegas, at 8-5. VCU is listed at 7-1 — the longshot in the field, but still quite a bit better than 2500-1, which is where the Rams were listed at the start of the season.

"I think what it does as much as anything, it just puts a spin on the NCAA tournament," said Kansas coach Bill Self after his top-seeded team lost 71-61 to VCU. "It's wild. ... Because seeds are so overrated. It's about matchups. And their players could play for us any day."

VCU (28-11) got up early on Kansas on Sunday and never looked back, an upset winner in a tournament that's all about underdogs.

"Our guys have done a phenomenal job of putting all the doubters aside, putting all the people that didn't believe in us aside and going out and doing their job," VCU coach Shaka Smart said.

The Rams are the third No. 11 seed to make the Final Four and the first since George Mason in 2006, also of the Colonial Athletic Conference. But the Rams are the first ever that will need to win seven games — not the usual six — to win the title. They were one of the last at-large teams to make the newfangled 68-team field. They played in the new "First Four" — an extra round that was added as part of the NCAA's new $10.8 billion TV deal.

Now they're in the Final Four.

They'll play Butler (27-9), which slumped through big chunks of this season, a somewhat predictable result after what was supposed to be a once-in-a-lifetime trip to the Final Four last season, played a scant six miles from their Indianapolis campus.

This year, the destination is Reliant Stadium — 1,036 miles away. The Bulldogs are once again proving that all it takes is good players — not a conference, a big school or gobs of money — to compete on the biggest stage in college sports.

Last season, in one of the most epic finishes in Final Four history, Gordon Hayward's halfcourt shot banked off glass, nicked off the rim and barely bounded out to leave the Bulldogs two points short of Duke for the national title.

It was a heartbreaker, but maybe one that set the Bulldogs up for a repeat. They've won one game by one, another by two and another by three on this year's road to the Final Four. They beat Florida 74-71 in overtime Saturday to make their second straight trip.

"I think it (last year) helps you with knowing how you need to prepare and what you should do and what you should not do," Howard said. "I think that will help us."

Though UConn and Kentucky each struggled at times this season, they've had Final Four pedigrees for years (decades when it comes to the Wildcats) and they lived up to them this month.

Connecticut was 9-9 in the Big East this season but won an unprecedented five games in five days in the conference tournament to win its first big trophy of March. The big question was whether the Huskies, led by one of the nation's best players in Kemba Walker, would have enough energy to keep things going in the NCAA. Short answer: Yes.

Johnson, a five-time winner at Fontana, had the late burst, chasing down Busch for the lead with two laps left.

Harvick, as he always seems to, nailed the finish.

He had a rough start to the season, finishing 42nd at Daytona after a blown engine and hadn't been able to pull it together since despite having fast cars. His best finish was a fourth at Phoenix.

Harvick didn't have a particularly strong qualifying session at Fontana, either, to start 24th and wasn't exactly ripping through the field once the race started.

What he did do was gradually work his way to the front, pulling up behind Johnson after getting past Busch.

Taking advantage of a small gap to the outside, Harvick made his move on Johnson going into Turn 3, then completed it coming around Turn 4. Ahead going down the last straightway, he finished off his becoming-a-trademark finish to take the checkers for the 15th time in his career.

"I really felt good when they had that restart because I knew his car was really fast on the long run," said Richard Childress, owner of Harvick's No. 29 car. "I knew if they didn't get too far out in front of us, we'd have a shot. All we needed was to get him side-by-side and start racing. That gave Kevin a chance to catch them and he made the right move going into 3."

Unlike Saturday's Nationwide race, which featured lead changes seemingly every other lap, this one had drivers camped out front for long stretches before the final flourish.

Part of it was the lack of cautions, the opening 75 laps coming under green to set a track record. Overnight rain, which lingered as mist until a couple hours before the race, also played a role. Drivers who were able to get the setup right were able to get out front and stay there while everyone else tinkered.

Mostly, that meant Busch.

He swept the Nationwide and Sprint Cup races last week at Bristol, then opened with a Nationwide win at Auto Club, using a late two-tire pit stop to beat Carl Edwards and Harvick, who each took four tires.

Idaho’s bitter division over ed reform won’t go away anytime soon

In the spring of 1990, the debate over what was at the time the most restrictive abortion bill in the nation roiled Idaho and deeply polarized the state’s citizens.

But it was nothing like the spring of 2011. Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna’s third and final education reform bill passed a deeply divided state Senate on Thursday and appears headed for approval by the House of Representatives and Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter. It’s hard to find any Idahoan these days without a strong opinion about the initiative, which eliminates teacher tenure, restricts bargaining rights, institutes merit pay and anticipates a vast investment in technology.

Then-Gov. Cecil Andrus’ veto of the abortion bill diffused the issue, but this year’s controversy will linger. That’s because every school district in Idaho — and every student, teacher and parent — is going to be affected by its consequences.

State Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, in debating against Luna’s third bill on Thursday, articulated some of them:

- Consolidation of least-efficient school districts, and that means you, Magic Valley. The legislation will eventually cut $10.8 million in funding from schools in seven counties — Twin Falls, Gooding, Lincoln, Shoshone, Payette, Canyon and Bingham.

- Multi-year reduction in salary-based state funds, which Cameron called the “most appalling” part of the legislation. “It’s not just a one-year reduction because we need the money this year; it’s a multi-year commitment.”

- More power to the superintendent. Cameron said the bill “avoids transparency at the state level,” because, “in many cases ... this bill puts the public schools budget on auto pilot.” It gives “new authority and power to expend and distribute funds” to the state superintendent, not the Legislature.

- Dubious online courses. Cameron said the legislation requires taxpayers to fund any online courses parents want their students to take, with or without their school district’s approval. There are many courses that students or parents may want to take, he said, but that doesn’t mean taxpayers should pay for them.

- More entitlements. The three new entitlements Cameron said the bill creates in state law: online learning, dual credit for early graduates, and mobile computing devices for all high school teachers and students.

- Unfunded mandates. “... this bill does lock us in and does bind future legislators,” Cameron said. “The bill contains inflators and deflators. ... It ties the hands of (the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee) and future legislators.”

- Local control. “This bill lacks flexibility to school districts,” Cameron said. “All the time it’s giving flexibility, it takes money away.”

Then there’s the matter of committing the Legislature to come up with $38 million the state doesn’t have to fund merit pay next year. And the fact that local school districts will find themselves paying for technology with money that used to go to teachers.

Finally, there’s the issue of class sizes — the major sticking point when this legislation was first introduced in January. They will almost certainly go up in many districts.

It’s a fair bet that at the moment, at least as many Idahoans oppose the Luna reform initiative as support it. Wait ‘til next year.

We need to start paying for war

Let’s get one thing straight: Wars cost money. Even the small ones. Already, the United States has spent hundreds of millions of dollars firing tomahawk missiles into Libya. Analysts say that the total price tag for the operation, if everything goes well and there’s no escalation, could easily exceed a billion dollars. That’s peanuts compared with our $3.8 trillion budget. But it’s not nothing.

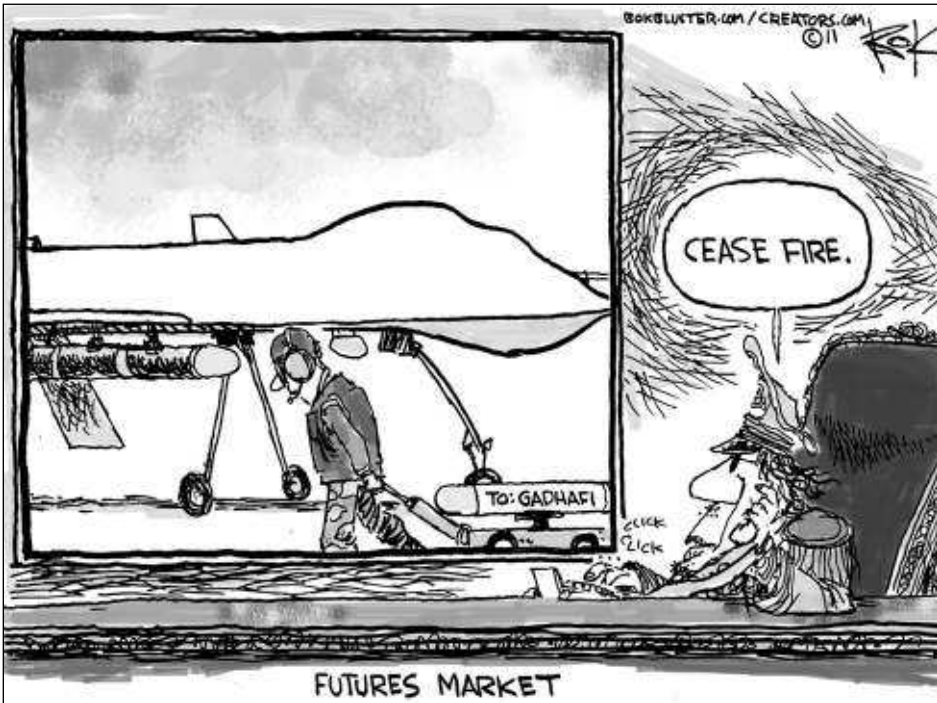

Ezra Klein

A billion dollars, for instance, is more than 40 times the total NPR subsidies that inspired House Republicans to convene an emergency session of the Rules Committee to speed cuts along to the floor of Congress. That’s not to say saving the lives of Libyans isn’t a better investment than supporting All Things Considered, but it’s real money, and because it’s going to tomahawk missiles in Libya, it can’t go to something else.

But for more than a decade now, we’ve waged war as if it were free, keeping our wars off the budget and, rather than paying for them as they were fought, slapping them on the national credit card. Paying as you go, after all, is hard. It forces you to make decisions about competing priorities. When you don’t pay up front, those decisions become easy. And war should never be easy.

But before we can start paying for war, we need to account for it properly. You might recall Lawrence Lindsay, director of President George W. Bush’s National Economics Council, being taken to the woodshed for estimating the costs of the Iraq War at $200 billion when the administration was trying to sell the invasion as a $50 billion venture. Both those numbers were tossed around like they were price tags for the entire war. They weren’t. They were estimates of its first six months. That’s one way we lowball the costs of war: estimating them only a few months at a time. The Congressional Budget Office now says the tally is likely to total a trillion dollars.

“... for more than a decade now, we’ve waged war as if it were free, keeping our wars off the budget and ... slapping them on the national credit card. Paying as you go, after all, is hard. It forces you to make decisions about competing priorities. When you don’t pay up front, those decisions become easy.”

Even that estimate, however, is far, far too low. It primarily counts “direct costs” — what will be spent on soldiers and supply chains and weaponry over the course of the war. But what about the long-term care for veterans who return with brain injuries or mangled limbs? Or the expense of replacing the equipment that is destroyed or worn down in combat? What about the costs to the broader economy when the price of oil soars?

A few years ago, Harvard budget expert Linda Bilmes and Nobel Prize-winning economist Joseph Stiglitz set out to construct a more holistic estimate of the costs of the Iraq War. They ended up nearer to $3 trillion, and they were trying to be conservative. For those playing along at home, that’s about equal to every dollar of debt Bush piled up in his eight years as president. Honest budgeting serves a purpose beyond making sure revenue matches spending. “My Nobel Prize was in the economics of information,” Stiglitz said in a 2008 speech presenting these findings. “Information affects decisions.” The debate leading up to these exchanges can be hot, emotional and polarizing. The numbers on the page — and the trade-offs they demand — are as close to rational as the political process can get. That’s the point of them. By forcing us to make the tough decisions, they help us make good decisions.

Gordon Adams, a senior White House budget official for national security, points out that historically the practice of paying for war through off-budget legislation called “emergency supplementals” was governed by a few clear standards: They had to be modest, unanticipated expenditures for conflicts that were not expected to run long. The Bush administration turned them into massive, predictable expenditures serving two of the longest-running wars in American history — and didn’t even allow them to distract us from tax cuts.

Two simple reforms to the process would go a long way toward giving the American people — not to mention Congress — the information necessary to make wise decisions about war. First, cost projections should be required for a range of scenarios — not just optimistic estimates of a quick war with no casualties, but pessimistic estimates of a long war requiring a grinding occupation.

Second, war has to cost money while it’s being fought. The way we decide whether something is worth it is to test whether we’re willing to pay for it. If a war is not worth a tax, or spending cuts, then perhaps it is not worth doing at all. It’s understandable that the administration might need to act before offsets can be found, but only for the early days of a conflict. After that, it should have the money in hand.

We want armed ‘good guys’ so they can take out the armed ‘bad guy’

Call and wait for cops, why don’t you?

Responding to Bruce Newcomb’s “Colleges are among the few places where firearms don’t belong”: I found that Bruce’s article highlighted the rash of gun violence on college campuses but fails to prove any of those gunmen were law-abiding. What happens when a madman brings a gun on campus and starts shooting? Do we expect someone to stand up and tell the shooter, “Hey! You are not allowed to bring that gun on campus, and by the way, murder is against the law too?”

Do we tell the police who arrive (after preoccupied with texting-while-driving citations) they are not permitted to have guns on campus? Of course not! As this is exactly what we want most when we hear gunfire. We want an armed “good guy” to take out the bad guy! How can this be if we legislate the law-abiding good guys out of their right to defend themselves?

Dr. Suzanna Gratia Hupp shares an amazing testimonial (online) of being defenseless in a cafe with a gunman. She was law-abiding and left her gun in her car; then the gunman came in shooting. She escaped, but lost her mother and father that day. Dr. Hupp does not blame the guns as “they did not walk in by themselves and start shooting.” Nor was Dr. Hupp mad at the gunman, as she said, “he was a lunatic; that would be like being mad at a rabid dog.” But rather she says, “I am mad at my legislators for legislating me out of the right to protect me and my family.”

Legislating perceived precursors (behaviors) to crime is ineffectual and pretends that people (like Leon Smith) have the right to tell you how to decide, act and live your life.

We need to stop the lies and fix our economy

Does anyone really believe the economy is improving? Hitler said, “Tell a lie, tell it often enough, and the people will believe it.” In the 1950s, Norman Dodds of the Congressional Rees Committee found that there was an elitist plan to lower the standard of living in the USA.

The environment of lying, distortion, manipulation and mass corruptions comes from Washington, Wall Street, the Federal Reserve, big banks and the media is destroying America. For example: the real unemployment rate is not 8.9 percent but nearly 20 percent. The inflation rate is not 1 percent, but closer to 10 percent; USA living standards are tanking with 43 million on food stamps; one-half find it difficult to afford heating, electricity and health care. From mid-2007 through 2009, the private (productive) sector economy plunged $1.3 trillion and hasn’t recovered while government economy soared $1 trillion. American workers’ wages are declining sharply while illegal aliens take many citizens’ jobs. State government revenue fell 31 percent in 2009 and continued to fall in 2010. Energy costs are skyrocketing due to unscientific Environmental Protection Agency regulations since 1970 that has crippled domestic energy development. Gas was 25 cents per gallon in 1971 and is now $3.50 and rising rapidly. The National Debt grew by $2.017 trillion in FY2010; The Wall Street giants made billions from bailouts from the financial monster they helped create, and homeowners lost more than $9 trillion in value since 2006 while housing sales plunged 27.9 percent in 2010.

Destruction of our economy is due to greed of power hungry elitists who want a world government and are using unconstitutional spending and regulations to accomplish their goal. Global socialists control the top of both parties.

We must restore pro-constitutional government, abolish unscientific regulations, start drilling, audit the Fed and get out of the United Nations!

More obstacles impede crews in Japan nuke crisis

By Yuri Kageyama and Mari Yamaguchi
Associated Press

TOKYO — Mounting problems, including badly miscalculated radiation figures and inadequate storage tanks for huge amounts of contaminated water, stymied emergency workers Sunday as they struggled to nudge Japan's stricken nuclear complex back from the edge of disaster.

Workers are attempting to remove the radioactive water from the tsunami-ravaged nuclear compound and restart the regular cooling systems for the dangerously hot fuel.

The day began with company officials reporting that radiation in leaking water in the Unit 2 reactor was 10 million times above normal, a spike that forced employees to flee the unit. The day ended with officials saying the huge figure had been miscalculated and offering apologies.

“The number is not credible,” said Tokyo Electric Power Co. spokesman Takashi Kurita. “We are very sorry.”

A few hours later, TEPCO Vice President Sakae Muto said a new test had found radiation levels 100,000 times above normal — far better than the first results, though still very high.

But he ruled out having an independent monitor oversee the various checks despite the errors.

Officials acknowledged there was radioactive water in all four of the Fukushima Dai-ichi complex's most troubled reactors, and that airborne radiation in Unit 2 measured 1,000 millisieverts per hour, four times the limit deemed safe by the government.

Those high airborne readings — if accurate — would make it very difficult for emergency workers to get inside to pump out the water.

Officials say they still don't know where the radioactive water is coming from, though government spokesman Yukio Edano earlier said some is “almost certainly” seeping from a damaged reactor core in one of the units.

The discovery late last week of pools of radioactive water has been a major setback in the mission to get the crucial cooling systems operating more than two weeks after a massive earthquake and tsunami.

The magnitude-9 quake off Japan's northeast coast on March 11 triggered a tsunami that barreled onshore and disabled the Fukushima plant, complicating a humanitarian disaster that is thought to have killed about 18,000 people.

A top TEPCO official admitted it could take a long time to clean up the complex.

“We cannot say at this time how many months or years it will take,” Muto said, insisting the main goal now is to keep the reactors cool.

Workers have been scrambling to remove the radioactive water from the four units and find a place to safely store it. Each unit may hold tens of thousands of gallons of radioactive water, said Minoru Ogoda of Japan's nuclear safety agency.

Safety agency officials had been hoping to pump the water into huge, partly empty tanks inside the reactor that are designed to hold condensed water.

Those tanks, though, turned out to be completely full, said Hidehiko Nishiyama of Japan's Nuclear and Industrial Safety Agency.

Meanwhile, plans to use regular power to restart the cooling system hit a roadblock when it turned out that cables had to be laid through turbine buildings flooded with the contaminated water.

Nuclear plant downplayed tsunami risk

By Yuri Kageyama and Justin Pritchard
Associated Press

TOKYO — In planning their defense against a killer tsunami, the people running Japan's now-hobbled nuclear power plant dismissed important scientific evidence and all but disregarded 3,000 years of geological history, an Associated Press investigation shows.

The misplaced confidence displayed by Tokyo Electric Power Co. was prompted by a series of overly optimistic assumptions that concluded the Earth couldn't possibly release the level of fury it did two weeks ago, pushing the six-reactor Fukushima Dai-ichi complex to the brink of multiple meltdowns.

Instead of the reactors staying dry, as contemplated under the power company's worst-case scenario, the plant was overrun by a torrent of water much higher and stronger than the utility argued could occur, according to an AP analysis of records, documents and statements from researchers, the utility and the Japan's national nuclear safety agency.

And while TEPCO and government officials have said no one could have anticipated such a massive tsunami, there is ample evidence that such waves have struck the northeast coast of Japan before — and that it could happen again along the culprit fault line, which runs roughly north to south, offshore, about 220 miles east of the plant.

TEPCO officials say they had a good system for projecting tsunamis. They declined to provide more detailed explanations, saying they were focused on the ongoing nuclear crisis.

What is clear: TEPCO officials discounted important readings from a network of GPS units that showed that the two tectonic plates that create the fault were strongly “coupled,” or stuck together, thus storing up extra stress along a line hundreds of miles long. The greater the distance and stickiness of such coupling, experts say, the higher the stress buildup — pressure that can be violently released in an earthquake.

That evidence, published in scientific journals starting a decade ago, represented the kind of telltale characteristics of a fault being able to produce the truly overwhelming quake — and therefore tsunami — that it did.

On top of that, TEPCO modeled the worst-case tsunami using its own computer program instead of an internationally accepted prediction method.

It matters how Japanese calculate risk. In short, they rely heavily on what has happened to figure out what might happen, even if the probability is extremely low. If the view of what has happened isn't accurate, the risk assessment can be faulty.

That approach led to TEPCO's disregard of much of Japan's tsunami history.

In postulating the maximum-sized earthquake and tsunami that the Fukushima Dai-ichi complex might face, TEPCO's engineers decided not to factor in quakes earlier than 1896. That meant the experts excluded a major quake that occurred more than 1,000 years ago — a tremor followed by a powerful tsunami that hit many of the same locations as the recent disaster.

A TEPCO reassessment presented only four months ago concluded that tsunami-driven water would push no higher than 18 feet once it hit the shore at the Fukushima Dai-ichi complex. The reactors sit up a small bluff, between 14 and 23 feet above TEPCO's projected high-water mark, according to a presentation at a November seismic safety conference in Japan by TEPCO civil engineer Makoto Takao.

“We assessed and confirmed the safety of the nuclear plants,” Takao asserted. However, the wall of water that thundered ashore two weeks ago reached about 27 feet above TEPCO's prediction. The flooding disabled backup power generators, located in basements or on first floors, imperiling the nuclear reactors and their nearby spent fuel pools.

The story leading up to the Tsunami of 2011 goes back many, many years — several millennia, in fact.

The Jogan tsunami of 869 displayed striking similarities to the events in and around the Fukushima Dai-ichi reactors. The importance of that disaster, experts told the AP, is that the most accurate planning for worst-case scenarios is to study the largest events over the longest period of time. In other words, use the most data possible.

The evidence shows that plant operators should have known of the dangers — or, if they did know, disregarded them.

As early as 2001, a group of scientists published a paper documenting the Jogan tsunami. They estimated waves of nearly 26 feet at Soma, about 25 miles north of the plant. North of there, they concluded that a surge from the sea swept sand more than 2 1/2 miles inland across the Sendai plain. The latest tsunami pushed water at least about 1 1/2 miles inland.

Air raids hit Gadhafi stronghold of Sirte in Libya

By Ryan Lucas and Hadeel al-Shalchi
Associated Press

RAS LANOUF, Libya — International air raids targeted Moammar Gadhafi's hometown of Sirte for the first time Sunday night as rebels quickly closed in on the regime stronghold, a formidable obstacle that must be overcome for government opponents to reach the capital Tripoli.

A heavy bombardment of Tripoli also began after nightfall, with at least nine loud explosions and anti-aircraft fire heard, an Associated Press reporter in the city said.

Earlier in the day, rebels regained two key oil complexes along the coastal highway that runs from the opposition-held eastern half of the country toward Sirte and beyond that, to the capital. Moving quickly westward, the advance retraced their steps in the first rebel march toward the capital. But this time, the world's most powerful air forces have eased the way by pounding Gadhafi's military assets for the past week.

Sirte is strategically located about halfway between the rebel-held east and the Gadhafi-controlled west along the Mediterranean coast. It is a bastion of support for Gadhafi that will be difficult for the rebels to overrun and the entrances to the city have reportedly been mined. If the rebels could somehow overcome Sirte, momentum for a march on the capital would skyrocket.

An AP reporter at the front said the latest rebel advance during the day reached as far west as the oil port of Ras Lanouf, about 130 miles east of Sirte.

After nightfall, Libyan state television confirmed air raids on Sirte and Tripoli. Foreign journalists who were taken by the regime to Sirte a few hours before the bombings began reported hearing at least six loud explosions and warplanes flying overhead. They were driven around the city and said it was swarming with soldiers on patrol and armed civilians, many of them wearing green bandanas that signaled their support for Gadhafi.

In the contested city of Misrata in western Libya, residents reported fighting between rebels and Gadhafi loyalists who fired from tanks on residential areas. Misrata is one of two cities in western Libya that have risen against the regime and suffered brutal crackdowns.

Israel deploys new rocket defense system in face of Gaza attacks

By Aron Heller
Associated Press

BEERSHEBA, Israel — Israel deployed a cutting-edge rocket defense system on Sunday, rolling out the latest tool in its arsenal to stop a recent spike in attacks from the neighboring Gaza Strip.

Israel hopes the home-grown Iron Dome system will provide increased security to its citizens, but officials warned that it can't do the job alone. The system went into operation shortly after an Israeli aircraft struck a group of militants in Gaza, killing two. Israeli said they were about to fire a rocket.

The Iron Dome system has raised hopes that Israel has finally found a solution to the years of rocket fire from Gaza. The primitive rockets have evaded Israel's high-tech weaponry, in part because their short flight path, just a few seconds, makes them hard to track.

The government approved Iron Dome in 2007. Its developers have compared the effort to a high-tech start-up, working around the clock in small teams to perfect its weapons, radar and software systems. The developer, local defense contractor Rafael, declared the system ready for use last year.

Iron Dome uses sophisticated cameras and radar to track incoming rockets, determine where they will land, and intercept and destroy them far from their targets. If the system determines the rocket is headed to an open area where casualties are unlikely, it can allow the weapon to explode on the ground.

Brig. Gen. Doron Gavish, commander of Israel's air defense corps, said Iron Dome has passed a series of tests and has now reached its "evaluation phase" in the field.

It is expected to be fully operational in a matter of months.

He added that it was only supposed to be deployed later in the year, but it was put into operation earlier because of the recent rocket attacks from Gaza.

"Obviously, after what we saw in the last few weeks, we accelerated the phases," he said, standing before the brown, box-like battery on the outskirts of Beersheba, southern Israel's largest city with a population of nearly 200,000.

After two years of relative calm, tensions along the Israel-Gaza border have heated up in recent weeks with Gaza militants firing deeper and more frequently into Israel, and the military striking back hard. Beersheba, more than 25 miles from Gaza, has been struck several times.

NATO to assume command of air operations over Libya

The Associated Press

BRUSSELS — NATO will assume command of all aerial operations in Libya from the U.S.-led force that has been conducting air strikes against Moammar Gadhafi's forces, officials said Sunday.

NATO jets on Sunday already began enforcing the no-fly zone, Secretary-General Anders Fogh Rasmussen announced. Diplomats said the full transfer of authority would take several days.

"NATO allies have decided to take on the whole military operation in Libya under the U.N. Security Council resolution," Fogh Rasmussen said in a statement. "NATO will implement all aspects of the U.N. resolution. Nothing more, nothing less."

The North Atlantic Council — the alliance's top body — took two hours to approve a plan to expand a previously agreed mission to enforce the U.N. arms embargo and no-fly zone. It agreed to protect civilians from attack — which effectively means bombing Gadhafi's forces if they are threatening to harm the civilian population.

The U.N. authorized the operation after Gadhafi launched attacks against anti-government protesters who demanded that he step down after 42 years in power

"In the past week, we have put together a complete package of operations in support of the U.N. resolution by sea and by air," Fogh Rasmussen said.

After eight days of strikes on Libyan targets, Washington is eager to quickly hand off responsibility for the air offensive to the alliance.

Welder for Eagle Gate Systems

“Three years ago, I didn’t know a thing about welding. I couldn’t weld at all. But in two short years with help from the best instructors at CSI, I graduated with many welding certifications and got a great job working for Eagle Gate Systems. I believe my journey through the welding field has just begun, and the opportunities are endless. And I have CSI to thank for that.”

SPEEDY TREATMENT

New radiation machine gives Magic Valley cancer patients new options

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

When Fay Parrott received radiation for breast cancer 11 years ago, her treatment lasted nearly two months. The once-a-week radiation targeted her breast area and lymph nodes in her throat.

Although the treatment successfully got rid of the cancer, there were long-term complications.

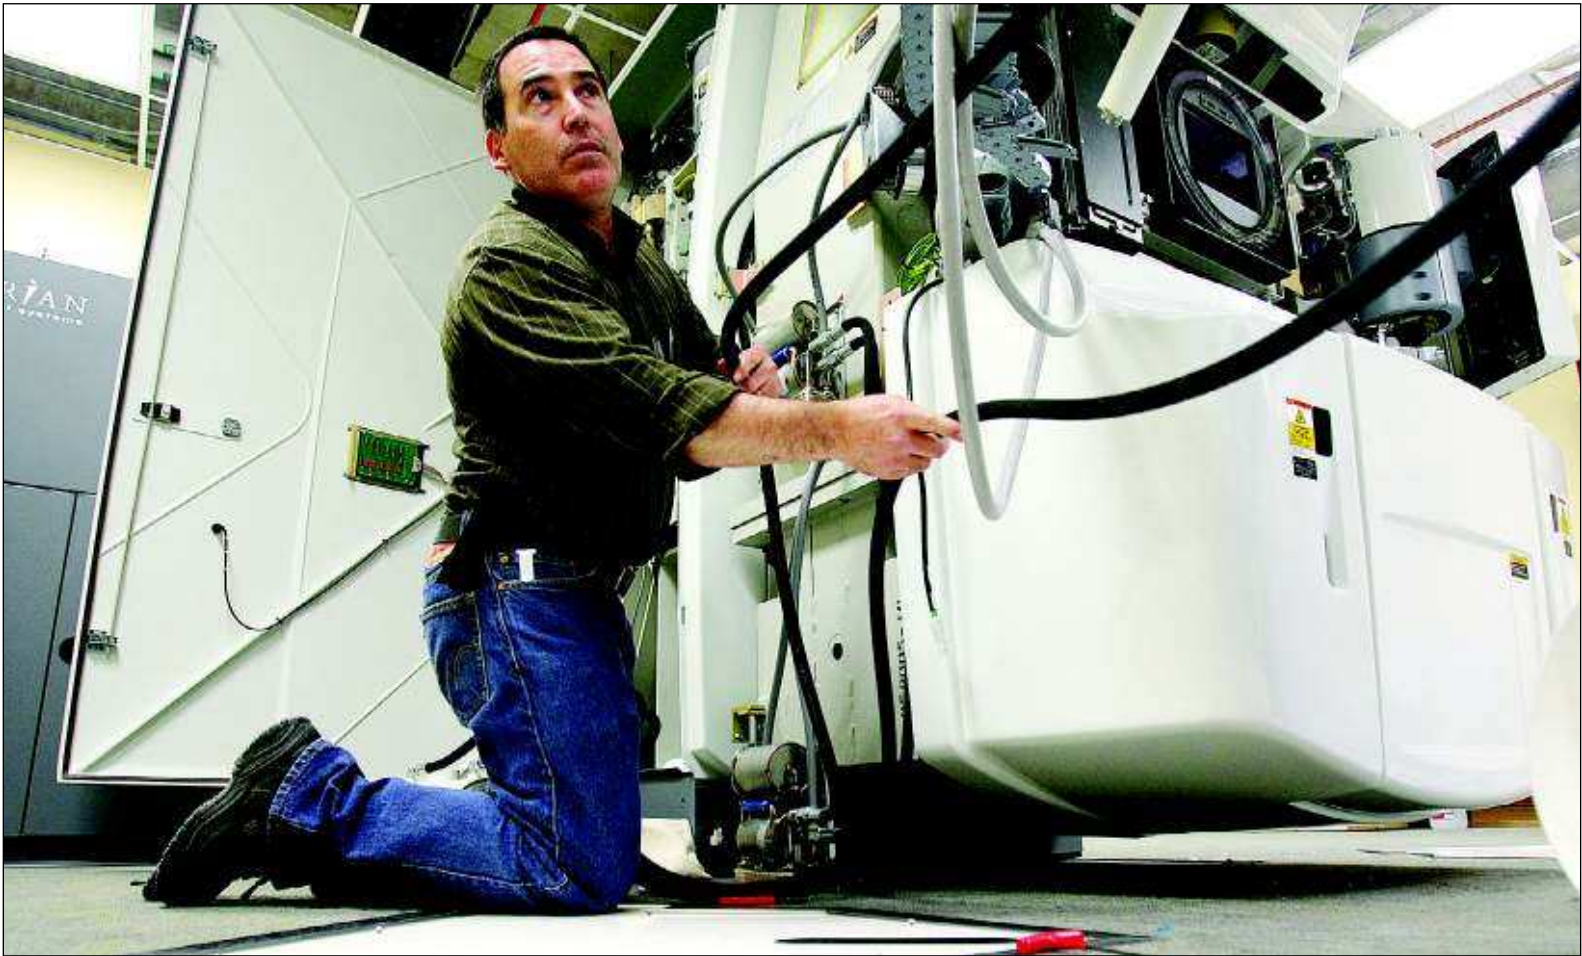

"They moved a few degrees away from my throat and caught the shoulder," the Buhl woman explained. Eventually, Parrott had to get a shoulder replacement.

But starting this spring for some Magic Valley cancer patients, the time and complications associated with radiation treatments could be reduced. Mountain States Tumor Institute at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center has acquired a new linear accelerator machine that uses Novalis technology to deliver concentrated doses of radiation to kill tumors in less time. The new linear accelerator, made by Varian Medical Systems, is scheduled to be available when St. Luke's new Twin Falls hospital opens in May.

During traditional radiation therapy, tumors are targeted with circular beams of radiation to kill the cells with low doses over the course of several weeks. With the Novalis technology, the radiation beams change shape to fit the sometimes abnormal tumors, and higher doses mean less time spent in the doctor's office, said oncologist Dr. Charles Smith of the tumor institute. The same machine can do both low-dose traditional radiation therapy and the high-dose targeted radiosurgery, depending on a patient's needs. The machine can also do both stereotactic radiosurgery, or precise, localized treatment within the brain, and stereotactic body radiation therapy, or treatment for tumors within the body.

Twin Falls' current linear accelerator, at MSTI's current location, can do only radiosurgery, while another machine takes care of the traditional radiation therapy.

The new linear accelerator — already installed at the hospital under construction — will join the one MSTI already uses. The tumor institute plans to use the current linear accelerator to treat patients for a few weeks after the new hospital opens this spring. Then it will be dismantled, brought to the new hospital and rebuilt, giving doctors even more options to treat cancer patients.

Photos by ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Merritt Martin, an installation engineer with Varian Medical Systems, installs a linear acceleration radiation machine at the new St. Luke's hospital in Twin Falls on March 11.

For patients with brain tumors, the new machine's technology allows them to avoid the invasive head frame, a lightweight aluminum frame that screws into the skull to prevent the head from moving during treatment. With the new machine, patients wear a mask that holds the head still.

Patients with tumors near the brain stem can benefit from the radiation's precision and ability to curve around the brain stem to hit the tumor exactly — a critically important feature when dealing with brain stems, Smith said, where there is no room for error.

In stereotactic body radiation therapy, the new linear accelerator detects movements and adjusts the radiation accordingly. Even if a patient holds completely still during treatment, breathing and heartbeats can still move the tumor around, Smith said. The technology adapts to those movements, predicting when the tumor will be in the right spot for treatment and zapping it with radiation at the appropriate time. And if a patient moves too much, the machine shuts down.

The precision allows oncologists to give patients much higher doses of radiation over a shorter time. Previously, a patient might receive 6,000 units of radiation over the course of six or eight weekly sessions.

With the new technology, those 6,000 units might be delivered in five sessions during one to two weeks, said Mark Lopshire, director of Mountain States Tumor Institute.

"It's fairly short and it's fairly high dose," he said.

Because the doses are higher, the complications are more serious when compared with traditional radiation treatment, Smith said. When it comes to treating tumors with radiation, "you don't want any cells to survive," Smith said. But when the radiation hits healthy tissue surrounding the tumor, that tissue is also destroyed. That can happen with traditional low-dose radiation treatment, too, but the problem is more critical when the radiation doses are so concentrated, Smith said.

Adding to the concern: Treatments are fast, and they're often over before problems can be detected. In a series of 2010 articles, The New York Times outlined serious complications from linear accelerator treatment errors, including fatal overdoses. Smith didn't have exact numbers on complications but said they're uncommon.

The Novalis technology isn't for every oncology patient. In some cases, traditional radiation's smaller doses over a longer time may be the better option. Lopshire declined to give examples, saying that it depends on the location and size of the tumor.

"It is a patient-by-patient, case-by-case decision," he said.

But for the Magic Valley cancer patients who can benefit from the technology, the new linear accelerator means they can get state-of-the-art treatment close to home.

Reporter Melissa Davlin may be reached at 735-3234 or mcdavlin@magicvalley.com.

There aren't many other linear accelerators that use the latest generation of Novalis Tx technology like the one in the new Twin Falls hospital — only about 60 in the U.S. and 40 others internationally.

Future docs may have to pass new breast exam test

By Carla K. Johnson
Associated Press writer

CHICAGO — Women often find it somewhat mysterious to do a breast exam. It also can be mysterious to medical students, says a Chicago researcher who has a $1.8 million federal grant to design the first physical test to measure how well future doctors examine breasts by touch and find possible cancers.

Using plastic models of breasts embedded with data-capturing sensors and simulated tumors, Dr. Carla Pugh of Northwestern University Feinberg School of Medicine is zeroing in on how to measure a medical student's ability to tell the difference between a cancerous lump and a benign cyst.

She hopes the simulators will someday test the clinical breast exam skills of graduating medical students.

Medical students' hands-on skills in breast palpation aren't tested in their licensing exam. Pugh hopes her research will change that.

She says doctors don't want to talk about it, but they all know a colleague who's missed a cancer during a breast exam, or they've missed one themselves. Pugh, 45, is a surgeon with a doctorate in education and a patent in sensor technology. Her team includes experts in mechanical engineering, computer science, statistics and medical education.

"What if there were a test and you had to meet a minimum level of proficiency before you could do breast exams and say you're competent?" she asks. That might lead to better exams and more accurate diagnoses, she says.

In 2009, the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force

recommended against teaching women how to do breast self-exams, finding little evidence they reduce breast cancer death rates. The task force didn't give doctors' breast exams a ringing endorsement either, saying the techniques used aren't standardized enough, but can detect a large proportion of cancers if done well. Many groups, including the American Cancer Society, still recommend women get regular breast exams from their doctors.

Testing med students' breast exam skills with a sophisticated simulator would be an important advance, says Dr. James Gordon, who directs the Gilbert Program in Medical Simulation at Harvard Medical School. He's not involved in Pugh's research.

Simulators used in medical education have been rapidly evolving over the past decade, Gordon says. The newest models are fitted with sensors that can give students feedback on whether they're doing an exam properly or not.

These tools may ultimately improve patient safety by giving medical students repeated learning experiences with a wider variety and number of cases than they might happen to encounter in real patients, although working with real human beings will continue to be at the core of medical education, Gordon says.

Familiar with another Pugh device, a pelvic exam simulator, Gordon says Pugh's work is at the forefront of the field.

"She's at the cutting edge and does some of best work in the world in creating and validating simulators that students and medical professionals could use," Gordon says.

No clowning is tolerated in Pugh's lab. The current prototype, a disembodied plastic breast hooked by wires to a computer, modestly wears a blue cloth covering when "she's" not being examined.

"Because it's a human being," Pugh explains when asked about the covering. "She's sitting there on the table with her breast exposed, so when we're not examining her we cover her.

It's a habit that we've formed."

Breast exam skills aren't tested in the current U.S. medical licensing exam, says Dr. Stephen Clyman of the National Board of Medical Examiners, a co-sponsor of the test that's the entryway to the medical profession.

Clyman directs the board's Center for Innovation, which investigates how new technology might be used in future licensing exams. He is a consultant on Pugh's breast exam simulator research.

Deciding how to score a breast exam using a simulator in the high-stakes licensing exam would be challenging, Clyman says. "Is it just a matter of finding a lump?" he asks. "Or are you concerned about whether somebody palpates by accepted protocol when you know that many doctors don't follow the accepted protocol?"

Pugh's project will attempt to answer those questions by recording the movements, pressure and patterns of experienced doctors as they palpate simulator breasts with various masses and cysts hidden inside.

The mock tumors must feel authentic to a physician's fingers. Pugh has built tumors from beans glued together, glass beads and hardened clay. Lentils embedded in rubber mimic the feel of fibrocystic breast changes, a noncancerous condition.

More than once she's been at a supermarket, restaurant or clothing store, spotted an object and thought, "Oh, I could use that!"

"Any material I encounter on a daily basis is fair game to help me build a patient," she says.

The next step is testing the mock-up on experienced doctors. A meeting of cancer doctors in Chicago in June is the next test run. Foam rubber alone wasn't convincing doctors during the last trial that it was a fibroadenoma, another non-cancerous condition, so Pugh directs research assistant Jon Salud to make a change.

"This is what I want next, Jon?" she tells him. "I want lentils in this!"

The test detects hidden blood in the stool, which can be an early warning sign of colorectal cancer and other conditions such as ulcers, polyps, colitis and diverticulitis.

The kits are a starting point to determine if someone is at risk for colon cancer. Accurately detecting colon cancer requires a screening colonoscopy, which is recommended every 10 years after age 50, according to a St. Luke's press release.

Those with a family history of colon cancer should consult with their doctor, who may recommend screening before age 50.

The kits are funded through proceeds from the Brian Olson Memorial Golf Tournament.

Electronic screens' light can make it hard to get to sleep

By Greg Linch
The Washington Post

I stare at screens almost every waking hour.

Computer monitor. Laptop. TV. Tablet. Smartphone.

So I've tested a few ways to ease the strain on my eyes — and, in the process, learned about something that might be helping me in non-waking hours, too.

It's about the light that these screens emit. It typically has a cool blue undertone, whether you notice it or not. (Think of your next-door neighbor's TV seen through a window at night.) That's fine during the day — screen light was designed to mimic the tones of daylight. But my screen time lasts long after dark. And that's the problem.

Humans respond to darkness by producing melatonin, the hormone that regulates the sleep cycle. But our light-sensitive pineal gland near the center of the brain responds to blue light by suppressing melatonin, causing us to wake up.

When we see too much blue light in the late evening, it delays or disrupts the melatonin rush. In other words, my iPad can keep me up even after I turn it off.

But just as technology can cause this problem, it offers a solution as well. Enter F.lux, a desktop application that adjusts a computer screen's color throughout the day. During daylight hours, the screen's undertone is the familiar blue. As sundown approaches, it begins transitioning to a warm shade of red-orange. In the morning, it's cool blue again.

If I'm browsing the Web or reading text, the warmer backlight color doesn't bother me — it reminds me of the sepia setting I use for eBooks on my iPad. I also hardly even notice the difference sometimes when looking at photos or watching videos. Thankfully, if something does look a little too strange, F.lux allows me to disable it for an hour at a time for color-sensitive activities.

The software application, which launched in February 2009, is available to download for free on Windows, Mac and Linux.

I've been running F.lux on my MacBook Pro since last summer, and I seem to be sleeping a little better. Or am I? Maybe I just think I'm sleeping better, getting some kind of electronic placebo effect. But does it matter?

Fit at 50 can mean fit at 60, 70, 80 with changes

By Leanne Italie
Associated Press writer

At 45, DeEtte Sauer was a dead woman walking.

She was morbidly obese, her heart disease so serious a doctor warned her to expect “an event at any time.” Eaten up by her marketing career, struggling to raise three kids, she smoked, drank and never, ever exercised.

Sauer remembers a vacation when — at 5-foot-5 and 230 pounds — she couldn’t make it onto a small boat for a day out with her family. “That’s when it hit me. I was an elected cripple. I had done it to myself.”

She got busy, slowly shedding the weight through sensible eating and exercise. She began to walk around her Houston neighborhood, then she discovered the pool. Now 69, the woman who once had a supermom complex is a competitive, medal-winning senior swimmer.

“It literally saved my life,” Sauer said, adding that her best event is the butterfly — a stroke she learned at age 62.

To trainers with lots of clients well beyond 50, Sauer is the holy grail, somebody who works hard and efficiently, taking care to avoid injury while maintaining motivation, strength and endurance through careful workouts. Getting fit later in life is one thing, they said, but staying that way at 60, 70 and 80 is another.

“Going from running to walking, going from the treadmill to the elliptical as we age. It can be really frustrating, mentally debilitating,” said Chris Freytag, a yoga and Pilates instructor and contributing fitness editor for Prevention magazine.

“Even for me. I’m 45 and say oh God, I can just see it coming. There’s going to be some wear and tear. That doesn’t mean I have to give up, but I have to make some changes.”

Back, hips, knees, balance, cardio — all can be trouble spots and big blows to a positive attitude for seniors, said Freytag and fitness expert Denise Austin, who was Jack LaLanne’s sidekick on television and went on to her own workout shows, DVDs and books. At 53, she has a new book out, “Get Energy!”

Flexibility

Pilates and yoga are great ways to stay strong and flexible beyond 50 because both can be easily modified, the experts said.

“I’m into the core as you age,” Austin said. “Your spine is your lifeline. Keep it healthy, keep it strong. As we age we lose flexibility and it’s really important to our tendons and ligaments to stay pliable and keep all the fluids in our joints going.”

She suggests increasing floor work to take pressure off the knees. Can’t touch your toes anymore? Use an elastic band for the same stretch, or to replace weight training that might grow dangerous.

Arthritis can make gripping difficult at a time when tissue is losing elasticity, which might mean giving up heavy free weights in each hand or on an overhead press. “The technique isn’t there anymore, it falls down and they hurt a shoulder. I’ve seen it a million times before,” Austin said.

Taking the time to stretch,

DeEtte Sauer, 69, does a butterfly stroke during a swimming workout in Houston.

Esther Robinson, 93, watches herself in a mirror while lifting weights during a workout in Houston. Active all her life, Robinson wouldn’t give up her life of fitness for anything.

to reopen joints and muscles after a workout, is increasingly important as we age — particularly crucial at 60, 70 or older, Freytag said. “The lower back and hip flexors get really tight. The two are correlated. What I tell people is you are no longer able to skip stretching after a workout.”

Freytag recommends at least five to 10 minutes of stretching after a workout, when the muscles are warm. “Back when we were younger we could skip it.”

Balance

Warming up before a workout is key to balance. For running seniors, Austin suggests five minutes of walking before getting into a gradual run, or intervals of walking and running.

“It’s very important as you age to change it up more, to surprise your muscles and work them differently,” she said.

Runners may need to balance workouts with more strength training and stretching to avoid hip and knee problems, adding muscle work for the abs so important for balance and flexibility. Add five minutes of strength training and five minutes of stretching, Austin suggests.

“Really concentrate on the center of your body. Your core. It is truly the powerhouse of your body. It affects how you walk, your flexors, it protects your back. That’s why Pilates is great.”

Balance issues don’t have to put an end to staying fit. Work out in a chair or use one to lean on if you’re feeling unsteady. “There’s a ton you can do in a chair,” Freytag said. “In a gym, there’s a huge trend toward functional training, meaning doing things that kind of mimic the functionality of your daily activities.”

Standing on a dome-shaped Bosu ball, for example. “You’re creating your own passive range of motion, whereas a machine in a gym is a fixed range of motion,” she said.

Freytag called balance a “use it or lose it” proposition. “There are so many classes at gyms for folks over 60,” she said. “The biggest thing for people who are athletes already is to keep positive and just think about the fact that you’re going to train smarter. You’re not going to stop. It’s just that you have to change.”

Cardio

With heart disease stalking both men and women, aging doesn’t have to mean the end to a decent cardio workout.

Riding a bicycle is easier on the hips than running, for instance. Trim back on running to a couple of days a week and supplement on the bike.

“You can get on a bike and spin like heck,” Freytag said. “You can still push yourself as hard as you would have but with less pain.”

For runners who can’t bring themselves to give it up, run slower, walk and run, or cross-train. She suggests cardio work four days a week but only at high energy twice in that period.

Dancing is also a good way to get the heart rate up, Austin said. “It changes movements and it changes your muscle twitchings.”

At 93, Esther Robinson wouldn’t give up her life of fitness for anything. Active all her life, she still hits her local gym (“I like to bench press”), but dancing is something she can enjoy with others.

“When I was 60 or something, I got into square dancing,” the great-grandmother said. “I like the music and the movement of it.”

Take a page from Sauer’s story and hit the pool. “Swimming is easy on the joints. You’ll keep your love of sports,” Robinson also loves to swim.

Sauer didn’t start training hard until 11 years ago. She knew how to splash around, keep from drowning, but “I never had a swim lesson in my life, nothing.”

She showed up for her first session at a health club with a 23-year-old instructor “and I couldn’t make it across the pool. I wanted to quit. I felt stupid,” but he wouldn’t let her give up.

“I’m stronger than I ever was at 45. I’m faster,” said Sauer, who competes in the National Senior Games and U.S. Masters Swimming events.

Sauer said her 78-year-old husband is also extremely fit. At a water park with their grandson they spotted no seniors at the top of a water slide five flights up.

“They’re missing out,” she said. “I’ve never had so much fun in my life.”

Five ways to eat better

By Leslie Barker Garcia
The Dallas Morning News

Eating well is a major part of getting in shape, so we asked registered dietitian Bernadette Latson for her tips. She’s director of the coordinated program in dietetics at University of Texas-Southwestern Medical Center.

1. Write it down.

You can find sites online or apps on your smart phone to help you keep track of every bite you eat.

2. Make specific goals.

Instead of saying, “No more margaritas,” you might say, “I’ll only have them one night a week,” she says. Or decide to stop eating after 8 p.m.

3. Be aware of portion sizes.

Fill a 9-inch plate with half vegetables, one-quarter starch and one-quarter protein. Also, unless you’re an athlete or have extremely good willpower, eat three meals a day. The “five-small-meals” theory can be hazardous, she says.

4. Eat breakfast.

Studies have shown doing so helps keep calorie consumption down the rest of the day. Make it a good mix of protein, carbs and fat, she says. Try peanut butter on a bagel, or cereal with milk, nuts and fruit.

5. Aim for a 10 percent loss of your body weight if you’re significantly overweight.

“It makes a huge difference,” Latson says. It can, for example, significantly reduce your risk for cardiovascular diseases and diabetes.

“We live in an environment that’s difficult to navigate being lean in. Every occasion is an eating occasion ... losing weight is about breaking habits, and that’s really tough.”

More than one million people poured into streets across France and strikers disrupted air, rail and bus travel in the largest nationwide protest over a youth labor law. THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

“Men, you are all marksmen — don’t one of you fire until you the see the whites of their eyes.”
— Israel Putnam

Tor Helness of Norway and Geir Helgemo have been ranked as one of the best pairs in the world for 15 years. But Tor’s other regular partner is not nearly as well-known, his wife, Gunn.

At the 2nd European Open Championships in 2005, Gunn and Tor swept the field in the mixed events. In the most recent Open Championships, held in Antalya, Turkey, Gunn unerringly found the only defense to defeat South’s three-no-trump contract, arrived at after South had shown length in clubs and control in spades.

Gunn, on lead, chose a low spade, which went to the three, queen and king. Had declarer won the trick with the ace, West might have been left in doubt as to the location of the spade king. However, if it was East who possessed the diamond ace, winning with the spade king was maybe the right choice.

The point is that declarer has eight tricks on top, and if a ninth could be sneaked through before the defenders could signal the location of their assets, the game would come home.

At trick two, declarer did indeed lead a diamond. Gunn Helness was quick to rise with the ace, and just as quick to return the correct technical card to break the contract — the heart jack. This is the “surround” play, made on the assumption that South held the heart 10, as he did (whether doubleton or tripleton). Whatever declarer did, the defenders could run the heart suit on defense.

ANSWER: Your diamonds suggest you try to take tricks in that suit, rather than risk setting up a heart discard for declarer. If you do lead a diamond, there is a lot to be said for leading the queen. For sure, if it holds, you ought to know from the sight of dummy what to do next. If instead you lead a heart, the seven is the right card here, since partner knows you rate to have more than two cards in that suit.

DEAR ABBY: I'm the mother of four boys in their 20s. None of my sons is married yet, but because they are reaching the age where they might be soon, I have been paying attention to how weddings were planned and carried out by our friends' children — all of whom are married.

What's bothering me is, it seems to be all about the girl. The guys and their parents seem to be left out of almost everything. I assumed that in this day and age, where many wedding expenses are shared by both sets of parents, that the groom and his parents would be more involved.

The purpose of this letter is to remind parents of daughters that this is a big day for the groom and his parents, too. Please be considerate and include them in the planning decisions and pre-wedding activities.

— IT'S OUR BIG DAY TOO!

DEAR I.O.B.D.T.!: If you are sharing the expenses, you should make it clear — with a smile — that because you are helping to pay for the event, you expect to be included in the planning and pre-wedding activities. Got it?

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: Every year on my birthday I would send my mother flowers. I did it for more than 25 years because of something I read as a young man in the Dear Abby column.

Mom passed away last year. So, in addition to the flowers I will place on her grave this year, I thought I'd share with all your readers this wonderful gift I received from your column. Every year it brought joy to my mother to receive my bouquet with a note of thanks for all that she had done for me.

Mom was kind, gentle, beautiful, loving and an inspiration to many. I miss her very much. I hope my letter will inspire other readers to remember their mothers the same way, and realize how precious and priceless our time with them is. Thank you for MY birthday, Mom! Rest in peace.

— JOSEPH IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR JOSEPH: I'm sorry for your loss. Your mother obviously raised a son with all her sterling qualities. I'm pleased the idea you took to heart when my mother wrote this column brought joy to your mother and was meaningful to you. Thank you for writing.

DEAR ABBY: At the end of last year you printed a letter from a reader asking whether it would be rude to ask that a letter of recommendation that contained typographical errors be retyped. You advised that it wouldn't be rude to ask, and the mistake should be corrected.

When my son was to receive his Eagle Scout honor, I sent a letter to his hero, Donald Trump, asking if he might write a short letter of recognition for his accomplishment. Mr. Trump's reply came within a week, along with an autographed picture. Unfortunately, there was an error in the letter. We called and spoke to his secretary, who was extremely gracious, corrected the letter and walked it right in to Mr. Trump. It was sent the same day.

They appreciated our contacting them rather than presenting a less than perfect letter. With computers, correspondence is saved and easily corrected. When letters of this kind are done correctly, in a professional manner, they reflect equally well on a job applicant as well as the person who wrote it.

— PROUD MOM IN NEW YORK

DEAR PROUD MOM: Anyone can make a typographical error, and the fact that Donald Trump and his staff corrected the mistake quickly and efficiently is a lesson for everyone who wants to succeed in business — and in life.
