MURTAUGH - Chandler Jones, 5, looked like a pilot with his headset on as he sat on the edge of his seat on Monday afternoon, repeating words in Spanish back to his computer.

"I know the whole Spanish words now," he said proudly after the Rosetta Stone program gave him 100 percent on his lesson.

His favorite Spanish word? "Mujer," which means woman.

The rest of his kindergarten classmates at Murtaugh Elementary School clicked through the software quickly, matching words with pictures or repeating sentences back for pronunciation practice in both English and Spanish.

In a report from the University of Idaho, Hispanics are the fastest growing demographic group in Idaho's education system. Their enrollment in public education increased by 65 percent in the last 10 years in grades K-12.

2010 census data shows most south-central Idaho school districts have a higher percentage of non-white residents than the state average. Twin Falls School District is a mirror image of the state's average at 11 percent; Camas County School District is the least diverse at 6 percent of non-white residents, while Wendell School District tops the chart at 28 percent.

Both Minidoka and Cassia counties are on the upper end, at 20 and 18 percent non-white respectively.

By Ben Botkin Times-News writer

BOISE - Public schools face a cut of $47 million in the coming fiscal vear a reduction amid a overhaul of education's traditional way of business in Idaho.

Lawmakers on the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee on Monday set the $1.56 billion public schools budget. Overall, that's a 1.3 percent cut from the current fiscal year to the next.

After factoring out money provided to schools for additional students, the 1.3 percent cut grows to a 2.5 percent cut. The cut also reflects a desire where possible to avoiding tapping into one-time sources of money, such as $22 million from the state land board that lawmakers used last year. "About a 2.5 percent cut that's considerably less than what we were talking about a couple months ago," said Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna.

Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome and co-chairwoman of JFAC, said lawmakers were able to put an extra $15 million toward the school budget because of the state hiring additional tax audi-

But lingering concerns about flexibility for schools funding salaries will likely arise when the budget bill is debated in the House and

Because of Luna's "Students Come First" reform plan, the schools budget has $14.7 million less for teacher, administrator and staff salaries. That's because Luna's plan calls for giving school districts the option to spend those dollars on technology instead.

Justin Lyle Izatt, 34, received life without the possibility of parole after a jury convicted him in December of possession with intent to distribute methamphetamine. U.S. District Judge Edward J. Jurors were told during Izatt's three-day trial that a search of his home revealed 125 grams of meth hidden in a secret compartment in his garage ceiling. Prosecutors also pointed to Izatt's purchases of "tens of thousands of dollars" in electronic equipment and motorcycles and other vehicles, despite his lack of legitimate income.

The case was investigated by the Twin Falls Police Department.

Catholics break ground on new Lewiston church

LEWISTON Catholic leaders turned over the first shovels of dirt at the site of a new church designed to consolidate a parish comprised of three Lewiston-area churches now up for sale.

A ground-breaking ceremony Sunday including Bishop Michael Driscoll of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Boise drew about 150 members of All Saints Catholic Parish, made up of St. Stanislaus, Our Lady of Lourdes and St. James in the Lewiston area and Sacred Heart in Lapwai.

"You have come together in this place to worship together," Driscoll told those who gathered on the 37-acre parcel on the city's southeast side, the Lewiston Tribune reported. "I can't think of a prettier place than on this

So far, church officials have raised more than $5 million for the first phase of construction, including ground preparation, building roads and installing infrastructure for power, water and sewer, said Bill Neumayer, a member of the pastoral council.

He said another $9 million must be raised for construction of the church and social hall. Church officials say proceeds from the sale of the three Lewiston-area churches will go for the new facility.

Planning for consolidation of the parish began in 2002 as a way to ensure a vibrant future for a parish that dates back 140 years in the region.

Future of Idaho tax rebate for wind power in limbo

By John Miller Associated Press

BOISE – The future of Idaho's sales tax rebate for wind power developers remains in limbo, with a skeptical Republican lawmaker aiming to scuttle a deal that industry and utilities worked out Friday.

On one side of this debate, utilities Idaho Power Co., Rocky Mountain Power and Avista Corp. complain the proliferation of wind power in Idaho is boosting their customers' rates, and they argue intermittent energy to be on our federal tax incentives are already so generous that wind developers will build their projects in Idaho even if BOISE - Generous pensions for former legislators who win more-lucrative state appointments may become tougher to come by, if a southeastern Idaho Republican gets his way.

Rep. Dennis Lake of Blackfoot is pushing to end special perks that allow a legislator who earns $16,116 for the part-time job in the state House or Senate to have his or her retirement pay based on their last 42 months of state service in a higher-paying job.

For instance, former Senate President Pro Tempore Bob Geddes, appointed this year to the $85,000-a-year Idaho State Tax Commission chairmanship, stands to boost his monthly pension to roughly $2,500 from about $430.

A previous Legislature created this benefit, but Lake told the House State Affairs Committee on Monday when he introduced his bill that the practice should end.

Limited Montana wolf kill clears first hurdle

By Matthew Brown Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. -Federal officials on Monday gave their preliminary support to a plan to kill gray wolves in western Montana that have preyed on big game herds along the Idaho border.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service published a draft environmental review of the state's proposal to kill 18 of an estimated 30 wolves along the West Fork of the Bitterroot River. The proposal calls for the elimination of between one and three packs in the area.

A similar petition from Idaho for wolves in the Lolo area remains pend-

Wildlife advocates have challenged the states' plans in court, saying they would misuse the Endangered Species Act to kill animals the law is meant to protect. A decision in that case is pending, but a recently proposed settlement in a related case could lift federal protections for wolves and render the challenge moot.

A final decision will follow a 14-day public comment period, said U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service biologist Shawn Sartorius. He did not have any further timeline for action.

'On the face of it, it appears to meet the requirements we made," Sartorius said of Montana's plan. However, he added that officials could alter their initial inclination to approve the plan based on the public comments received. Montana wildlife officials say elk populations along the West Fork have suffered due to increasing wolf numbers. Other measures to boost elk numbers have not worked, including more hunting of other predators such as black bears and mountain lions, habitat improve-

An estimated 764 elk live in the area where wolves objective of 1,600 to 2,400 of the game animals, according to Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks.

EDITORIAL

Talk all you like; many lawmakers just won't listen

n daily newspapers across southern Idaho last week, you may have seen full-page advertisements by a statewide coalition of anti-smoking groups asking legislators to approve a ■ $1.25-per-pack increase in the state's cigarette tax and use the proceeds to plug $50 million worth of holes in the state budget - especially cuts to health services.

In response, hundreds of Idahoans phoned or emailed lawmakers asking them to support a ciga-

Turns out they not only couldn't get any traction in the Idaho House of Representatives; they couldn't even get a hearing.

Our view:

Medicaid

covers many of the costs

of tobacco

use in Idaho,

but it's being cut by the Legislature.

So why aren't cigarette taxes

being raised?

A bill sponsored by House Revenue and Taxation Committee Chairman Dennis Lake, R-Blackfoot, to raise the state's rock-bottom 57 cent-per-pack tax never even garnered enough support to be introduced in his own committee.

Meanwhile, the state Senate on Monday approved legislation that will cut $35 million in state Medicaid funds and the budget-writing Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee passed a public school budget with a net reduction of $47 million in state funding.

Keep in mind that the annual health care cost to Idaho from smoking is $319 million, according to the Campaign for Tobacco Free Kids, a Washington, D.C.-based anti-smoking group. About $83 million of that is covered by Medicaid.

Each of the 469,645 households in Idaho pays $538 a year in state and federal taxes for the consequences of tobacco use.

Why is the Legislature so tone-deaf on this issue? One reason is that the tobacco retailers are politically well connected in Idaho. Another is that tobacco companies spend an estimated $57.9 million a year marketing their products in our state.

But then again, this Legislature doesn't raise taxes, period - regardless of the consequences. Not even a $1.50 fee hike for convicted criminals, as was proposed earlier this year.

So to those of you who asked your legislators to consider raising the cigarette tax, it's not that your lawmakers couldn't hear you.

They didn't want to.

Beyond mom's party chatter, push to get kids into prestigious school isn't worth it

I'VE BEEN TOO BUSY GETTING FRIENDED

nxious families awaiting April college admission news are living their own March

Shlaes

Their insanity is captured in Andrew Ferguson's new book, Crazy U: One Dad's Crash Course in Getting His Kid Into College (Simon & Schuster). He describes the vanity of a desperate mother at a cocktail party who is dying to announce her daughter's perfect SAT scores:

"'We were really surprised at how well she did; the mother would say, running a finger around the rim of her glass of pink Zinfandel.

Her eyes plead: Ask me what they were, just please, please ask."

And you know Mom won't relent there. She wants an admissions letter from a fancy school as well. Such parents justify their ambitions on three old assumptions that recent research rates a "B" or a "C" not an "A."

The first of these presumed truths is that the SATs are just this month's hurdle, followed by getting a college transcript with a perfect 4.0 to get the perfect job.

Grades can matter, especially for those students and parents who live for the next round of applications to graduate or professional schools. But there's a problem with the grade emphasis. Math or science graduates earn more than students majoring in the humanities.

A National Bureau of Economic Research paper this month shows that a significant portion of kids are open to the idea of entering those more lucrative fields when they arrive at college. Then, when they don't earn A's in math or the sciences, they retreat to humanities majors - not out of laziness but concern they cannot do the work.

The second fallacy is that debt accumulated for college is always a good investment.

answer ... is the pathology of college narcissism. Parents want the rear-window decal on the car for themselves. They want it so bad they ignore inputs from scholars at the very universities they hold in such high esteem.

In coming weeks many parents will wrestle with the choice between sending their kids to an elite school or enrolling at a less prestigious one offering lower tuition or a larger grant package. Many parents go for the name, on the theory that the returns will offset the higher costs.

But debt can ruin a child's good name, and problems tied to college loans are far wider than default rates convey. "Delinquency," a new study of 1.8 million student borrowers by the nonprofit Institute for Higher Education Policy, found that for every defaulter on college debt, there are two borrowers who are behind in payments. These delinquents see their credit ratings drop or suffer other negative consequences.

The third misconception is that a top university affiliation is always and forever more valuable.

In 2006, E. Han Kim and Adair Morse of the University of Michigan, along with Luigi Zingales, then of Harvard, looked at research productivity in economics and finance faculty who had connections to the top 25 universities in their fields.

They found that those who were affiliated with a name school in the 1970s produced more, and more original, work, but that that effect declined in the 1980s and weakened further in the 1990s. Some of the cleverest, most useful papers come from the non-Harvards, non-Yales and non-Chicagos.

Another recent paper squelches the notion that a name university leads to higher earnings over the long run. This study, published by the National Bureau of Economic Research in January, compared Israeli pre-professional students who had similar scores on college entrance exams. Some of the students attended the more prestigious Hebrew University while others enrolled at the less prestigious, and more expensive, College of Management Academic Studies.

Initially, Hebrew University graduates earn more for lower grades than do College of Management grads. Then, within several years, the differential disappears.

Those old entrance-exam scores matter more than the school's name in the longer run, conclude authors Kevin Lang of Boston University and Erez Siniver of the College of Management Academic Studies.

A twist on this theme comes from a study by Stacy Dale of Mathematica Policy Research and Alan Krueger of Princeton (not that that matters!). They found that the prestige of a university is less important than the student's test scores and the fact that he or she aimed high when applying to colleges.

So why do parents go mad in March? One answer is love for their children. Another is the pathology of college narcissism. Parents want the rear-window decal on the car for themselves. They want it so bad they ignore inputs from scholars at the very universities they hold in such high esteem.

Peer through the narcissistic fog, and you can see the desperate cocktail mom is correct to be proud of those scores. It's even a good thing that her little genius applies to, say, Dartmouth, which saw record applications this year. And if Dartmouth sends back the email equivalent of the dreaded thin envelope, the little genius still has a fine future. For Mom, it may be too late.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Shoppers' dress code lacks standards, taste

Why are people wearing their pajamas to the mall. post office, restaurants and other public areas? Also, why are they donning their bunny slippers like it's the newest shoe fashion? I don't mind people "dressing down," but let's be clear — sweats and yoga attire are not pajamas.

Yes, we may sleep in our sweats, but rolling out of bed and wearing what you slept in out in public is not an approved etiquette-friendly decision. Look, it's in public areas where you are walking around in something others changed out of because they slept in them. Someone should have made an announcement when we abolished the rule that life requires getting dressed.

It feels like there are no standards anymore, of any kind, for any occasion. It's all about what feels good to me now. The coarsening of culture continues unabated. If those folks who insist on wearing their jammies in public knew just how pitiful - not stylish or cool — they look, maybe they'd stop. Right now, all they're doing is telling society that they have no interest in participating.

Also, it's spreading! Last week at Walmart, I stood in the checkout line behind a big guy about 35 years old who wore pajamas! Note to all you dudes considering this look - for the sake of God, don't. The only exception I can think of is an old guy who wears silk pajamas, smokes a pipe and marries really beautiful young women — and is named "Hef." Other than him, you just end up adorning the online videos of "People of Walmart."

Anyway, carry on. Just make sure the fuzzy slippers being lazily dragged along are properly worn and dirty to complete the ghetto ensemble. It's not just about selfrespect. It's about respecting those around you.

Pity the poor owner of the mega-dairy

I almost broke down in tears when I saw the article with poor Luis Bettencourt explaining how the dairymen needed more government money.

In 2008 when the prices were sky high, what did they do? They spent millions on more dairies overproducing and driving the prices back down. Just look in the Murtaugh area at poor Luis' dairies. Think about it, supply and demand. Does that make any sense?

When I send in my income tax check (which will be as percentages go) more than what Luis will pay, I will just send it to Luis, who I feel so sorry for.

Teachers should have to tighten belts, too

I respect good teachers. I was blessed by more than a few during my years in public schools. It can be a challenging job. I'm glad there are those who love doing it and doing it well. But Monday's story about the Kimberly teachers was just too much. If teachers don't enter education for the money, then why is that all they talk about now? Since the conversation is indeed about money, let's also mention (for perspective) a salary the story didn't: the average salary in Idaho, reported later to be a little more than $32,000. Even after salary cuts of 0 to 17 percent. the featured teachers still bring in 30 to 49 percent more than the state average! In educators' parlance, if the average is a C, then these teachers' salaries are at least a solid B. If one can't live in southern Idaho on such wages, that isn't the taxpayers' fault or problem.

Over the course of these teachers' public school careers, I would imagine that, up until a year ago, every paycheck they received was equal to or greater than the previous, regardless of the state of the economy. While those in the private sector were having their wages, hours and benefits reduced, the worst these teachers probably suffered was no change from the previous year. Until now.

Pinching pennies is no fun, and it looks as if the rest of us will continue to do just that for quite awhile. There's no reason teachers should be exempt from the pain. If I was one of those teachers in this economy, I'd be embarrassed to complain. Instead, I'd be grateful to still have a career I love with a decent salary and generous benefits. And I'd be thankful I was so late to the penny-pinching party.

Time for new school leadership in Hagerman

Regarding the Hagerman School Pirate Rock: I was pleased to see that someone honored a dedicated teacher who was loved and respected by the students, parents and community. Seems it's time for a new administration and school board.

We protect pet animals — why not those we raise for food?

't's time to take a look at the line between "pet" and "animal." When the ASPCA sends an agent to the home of a New York City family to arrest one of its members for allegedly killing a hamster, something is wrong.

That "something" is this: we protect "companion animals" like hamsters while largely ignoring what amounts to the torture of chickens and cows and pigs. In short, if I keep a pig as a pet, I can't kick it. If I keep a pig I intend to sell for food, I can pretty much torture it. State laws known as "Common Farming Exemptions" allow industry - rather than lawmakers — to make any practice legal as long as it's common. "In other words," as Jonathan Safran Foer, the author of Eating Animals, wrote me via email, "the industry has the power to define cruelty. It's every bit as crazy as giving burglars the power to define trespassing."

Meanwhile, there are pet police. So when 19-year-old Monique Smith slammed her sibling's hamster on the floor and killed it, as she may have done in a fit of rage last week, an ASPCA agent there are 18 of them in New York City, busily responding to animal cruelty calls arrested her. (The charges were later dropped, though Smith spent a night in jail at Rikers Island.)

In light of the way most animals are treated in this country, I'm pretty sure that ASPCA agents don't need to spend their time in Brooklyn defending rodents.

In fact, there's no rationality to be found here. Just a few blocks from Smith's home, along the M subway line, the city routinely is poisoning rodents as quickly and futilely as it possibly can, though rats can be pets also. But that's hardly the point. This is: we "process" (that means kill) nearly 10 billion animals annually in this country, approximately onesixth of the world's total.

Many if not most of these animals are raised (or not, since probably a couple of hundred million are killed at birth) industrially, in conditions that the philosopher Peter Singer and others have compared to concentration camps. Might we more usefully police those who keep egg-laying hens in cages so small the birds can't open their wings, for example, than anger-managementchallenged young people accused of hamstercide?

Yet Ms. Smith was charged as a felon, because in New York (and there are similar laws in other states) if you kick a dog or cat or hamster or, I suppose, a guppy, enough to "cause extreme physical pain" or do so "in an especially depraved or sadistic manner" you may be guilty of aggravated cruelty to animals, as long as you do this "with no justifiable purpose."

But thanks to Common Farming Exemptions, as long as I "raise" animals for food and it's done by my fellow "farmers" (in this case, manufacturers might be a better word), I can put around 200 million male chicks a year through grinders (graphic video here), castrate – mostly without anesthetic - 65 million calves and piglets a year, breed sick animals (don't forget: more than half a billion eggs were recalled last summer, from just two Iowa farms) who in turn breed antibiotic-resistant bacteria, allow those sick animals to die without individual veterinary care, imprison animals in cages so small they cannot turn around, skin live animals, or kill animals en masse to stem disease outbreaks.

All of this is legal, because we will eat them.

We have "justifiable purposes": pleasure (or, at this point, habit, because eating is hardly a pleasure if you do it in your car, or in 10 minutes), convenience — there are few things more filling per dollar than a cheeseburger - and of course corporate profits. We should be treating animals better and raising fewer of them; this would naturally reduce our consumption. All in all, a better situation for us, the animals, the world.

Arguing for the freedom to eat as much meat as you want is equivalent to arguing for treating farm animals as if they could not feel pain. Yet no one would defend Smith's cruel action because it was a pet and therefore not born to be put through living

Is it really that bad? After all, a new video from Smithfield, the world's largest pork producer, makes industrial pig-raising seem like a little bit of heaven. But undercover videos from the Humane Society of the United States tell quite a different story, and a repulsive one. It also explains why we saw laws proposed by friends of agribusiness in both Iowa and Florida in recent weeks that would ban making such videos: The truth hurts, especially if you support the status quo.

Our fantasy is that until the industrial era, domesticated animals were treated decently. Maybe that's true, and maybe it isn't; but certainly they weren't turned out by the tens of thousands as if they were widgets.

We're finally seeing some laws that take the first steps toward generally ameliorating cruelty to farm animals, and it's safe to say that most of today's small farmers and even some larger ones raise animals humanely. These few, at least, are treated with as much respect as the law believes we should treat a hamster.

For the majority of nonpets, though, it's tough luck.

One billionaire who drew the line

orman Braman is not your typical billionaire car dealer. Nor is he your typical establishment Republican, who too often puts party above principle. Norman Braman is the type of person who strikes fear into the hearts of every professional politician who thinks he can say one thing to get elected and then do the opposite once in office.

In case you haven't been paying attention, Braman led a successful drive to recall Republican mayor Carlos Alvarez of Miami-Dade, Fla., and Commissioner Natacha Seijas. Their offenses? In a telephone conversation, Braman tells me there were many, including, he says, "sloppy bookkeeping, fraud and the mayor's decision to use tax dollars to build a sports stadium for the local baseball team" when fiscal challenges for the city and high unemployment were harming the local economy.

Braman filed a lawsuit in hopes of stopping construction of the stadium. He lost. The final straw, he tells me. was when Alvarez and Seijas hackad an increase in calaries for public employee union members and a property tax increase to help pay for it. Braman says he was enraged because seniors were not getting a cost of living increase and jobless numbers were growing.

Braman launched a website and the campaign was on. That a prominent Miami businessman who had voted for Alvarez (Seijas represented another county) would be able to attract Hispanics and African-Americans, angry whites as well as Democrats, Republicans and independents is the ultimate in coalition politics. According to a recent story in the Miami Herald entitled "Will Voter Revolt Bring Real Change at Miami-Dade County Hall?" "Eighty-eight percent voted to oust Alvarez and Seijas in the biggest recall of a local politician in U.S. history." Braman says people should take one message from his efforts: "this is not a Republican or Democratic issue. It is a referendum for change."

The tough part comes next. While the symbolism of tax revolt over high property ousting two incumbent politicians with a recall vote may encourage people who think the system can't work for them, institutional change will require scaling a much higher wall.

As the Herald reported, the county charter must be changed if political business is not to remain as usual. "Commissioners," it found, "have often refused to bring proposals to change the charter before the public for a vote."

The momentum may be shifting. The commissioners are set to meet this week to plan a special election to replace Alvarez and Seijas. There is also a good chance, given the recall results, that they might consider reforming the charter and allow the public to vote on proposed

Some pundits and Democratic politicians have predicted that the tea party movement to reform government is a flash in the pan and won't last through the 2012 election. Norman Braman begs to differ. He tells me a tea party group in Ft. Lauderdale "gave me a medal." The flip side of an energized electorate demanding that government not spend more than it takes in and that it take in only what it absolutely needs, respecting the people who earn it, is that increasing numbers of us must be torn away from the public trough. "You can do it," rather than "government will do it for you," is the type of thinking that built America and sustained us through wars and economic down-

Four years ago, the Christian Science Monitor reported that, according to an analysis by Gary Shilling, an economist in Springfield, N.J., "Slightly over half of all Americans – 52.6 percent – now receive significant income from government programs." That figure is probably higher today. No wonder many have become addicted to the politicians who keep sending them checks instead of encouraging the ablebodied to care for themselves. The United States is seriously and dangerously speeding toward socialism, in function, if not in name. Howard Jarvis led an antitaxes in California. In 2011, Norman Braman of Miami could be his successor.

Warm-season grasses are green in the summer and become brown and dormant in the winter. This group includes common and hybrid Bermuda, Centipede, Zoysia and St. Augustine. Warmseason grasses are adapted to the sandy soils of the North Carolina coastal plain and most of the piedmont. Warm-season grasses tolerate the high temperatures and summer droughts in North Carolina better than http://www.ncagr.gov/cyber/kidswrld/plant/lawn.htm"\\1"Cool#Cool"coolseason grasses.

Warm-season grasses can be established with sprigs, sod or by planting seed. Space planting is the planting of separate sprigs at regular intervals. The closer the planting, the more sprigs needed and the faster the coverage. Sprigs should be set 2 inches deep with a portion of the sprig extending above the soil surface.

Broadcasting involves spreading a larger quantity of sprigs over the soil surface and then pressing the sprigs into the upper 1 inch of soil by hand or mechanically.

The best time to plant sprigs or lay sod is March through July. To plant seed the best times is March through September. Roots of warm-season grasses must have enough time to become established before the weather turns cool. Seeding rates vary from 0.25 to 2.0 pounds per 1000 square feet.

Warm-season grasses can develop a thatch layer. When the thatch layer is half an inch thick, the lawn should be dethatched or raked. If the lawn becomes compacted, the soil can be aerated in the spring with a device that cuts and removes soil cores.

Begin mowing the grass as soon as it is tall enough to be cut. A reel mower is preferred for cutting Zoysia, hybrid Bermuda and Centipede. The suggested cutting height is 1 inch. It is not necessary to collect the clippings unless the amount is excessive and may smother the grass.

Tsunami rocks Japan, ripples reach Idaho

Times News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Ripples from the catastrophic events that unfolded in Japan on March 11 may eventually reach Idaho's farm fields.

That's because Japan was the fourth largest destination for U.S. agricultural exports in 2010. Japan is the top destination for U.S. exports of corn and pork. It is also the second largest buyer Idaho. of U.S. wheat, and the third Japan was the third highest destination for Idaho of Agriculture.

Three-and-a-half years ago, Times-News correspondent Cindy Snyder toured dairy and rice farms near Sendai, Japan, the area hit hardest by the recent disaster.

one-quarter of all wheat exports from Idaho or about 12 percent of Idaho's overall wheat production, according to the U.S. Wheat Associates.

While commodity markets dipped sharply lower in the immediate aftermath of the earthquake and tsunami, some analysts believe the long-term outlook for of agricultural exports from American farmers may be positive. # Asia prospers, food prices rise and the U.S. benefits

By Scott Canon McClatchy Newspapers

KANSAS CITY, Mo. -Asia's ever-larger middle class is taking a meatier bite out of the world's food economy.

Diets in India and China are moving up the food chain, with newly prosperous Asians relying less on staple grains and more on protein.

At the same time, America is shifting more of its harvest into ethanol. Government mandates to gas up the country with more renewable fuel has ethanol means less corn is going toward someone's meal

Combined, the changing commodity prices. Asian meals and America's appetite for ethanol are glimpse of India's growing driving up the competition prosperity in the $300,000 for virtually all things agriculture and chasing prices skyward.

Overall. agricultural commodity prices are up 25 percent over a year ago. Corn is up 50 percent. China saw food inflation top 10 percent in January. Experts predict that will stay up. That marks the coming end of an age of agricultural food surpluses - and of cheap food.

"More of the world is living like us," said Bruce Babcock, an agriculture economist at Iowa State University. "That changes things dramatically."

Other factors are also changing the food equation. China is undergoing its worst drought in six decades. Wildfires in Russia last summer prompted that country to cut off exports.

Across the Middle East and North Africa, unrest has contributed to the rise in oil prices, which are also being driven up by emerging Asian markets. Japan's post-earthquake crisis has pushed prices alternatively down and up. Oil now tops $100 a barrel and figures to is a big factor in farm production.

Yet the higher food prices are not just the result of another boom-bust cycle driven by drought here or uprising there. Rather, they're the new normal.

While consumers around the world and in America reach deeper into their pocketbooks to pay for food, the rise in prices is a boon for American farmers. production shooting up like They've been grumbling for a cornstalk in July. Higher food prices have already shown up at groprices for farm products cery stores. Yet much of the cost of American food lies in the processing and marketing that transforms a crop into a bag of Doritos, so the rise is not as dramatic as $4 gasoline.

In fact, food prices have stayed nearly flat through this recession, climbing 1.8 percent in 2009 and nudging up less than 1 percent in 2010. That's changing. The Bureau of Labor Statistics expects American food prices to tick up 4 percent this year.

In poorer countries, where diets still consist of basic commodities, the change is more dramatic.

While higher grain prices stay up. And the price of oil stir fears in the United States about the cost of feeding livestock, in the poorest parts of the world it signals doubts about the ability to feed people.

Japan

A report from the U.S. Grains Council (USGC) released late last week indicated relatively few livestock losses have been reported in the region. The majority of livestock and poultry farms are located on the west side of Japan, beyond the reach of the earthquake and tsunami.

However, four major importing facilities and their associated feed mills were heavily damaged. Those four facilities account for approximately 15 percent of Japan's total annual compound feed production of 25 million metric tons. A fifth mill, which accounts for an additional 15 percent, suffered some damage but is already partially back online.

While livestock losses have been minimal, the logistics of getting fuel, feed and other products to those farms is a problem, said Hiroko Sakashita, US-GC associate director in Japan. And now radiation is becoming a concern.

Some livestock facilities have been evacuated because of elevated radiation levels. Japan's Ministry of Agriculture Forestry and Fisheries released a notice alerting livestock farmers to be cautious and not to radioactive-material-contaminated hay, roughage, silage and water to livestock. It recommends that farmers keep their animals indoors if pos-

It's still too early to tell what the long-term impact will be. If radiation concerns persist, food imports may increase. But if those concerns are dealt with quickly and feed production comes back soon, U.S. farmers may not see much impact on commodity prices here.

Food

"We are worried," said Rene McGuffin, a spokeswoman for the World Food Program.

The agency's global budget for food disaster aid is $3.7 billion — roughly what it had last year. But the agency is buying grain now to hedge against more food price increases.

The recent rise in food costs reverses a long-term trend where prices fluctuated but generally failed to keep pace with inflation. That meant farmers survived mostly by squeezing out more bushels per acre. "Prices of the most important commodity of all are skyrocketing," economists at global bank Credit Suisse wrote in a report on food price inflation. "We have yet to reach the high-water mark." Chocolate prices have ballooned partly because of unof fungus seemingly triggered high. Cotton, hit by squirrelly weather in the United States and rising competition for acreage with grain crops, is selling at historic highs.

Beef is at once bruised and buoyed by the trends.

Demand for grains, especially corn, has pushed up the cost of raising cattle. The meat industry estimates that feed costs make up 70 percent of the cost of raising an animal, chiefly corn that the pork, beef and poultry industries now must compete for with ethanol makers.

This year as much as two of every five bushels of American corn will head to an ethanol plant. Critics say that has begun to set a cycle where higher oil costs beget more ethanol, and more ethanol begets higher grain prices, which are climbing partly because of rising energy costs. The flip side for those who rest in Ivory Coast. A spread raise and slaughter cattle, pigs and poultry is that deby weather shifts in Colombia mand for their products has has launched Arabica coffee never been higher. U.S. meat bean prices to a 140-year consumption has been no better than flat over the past decade. But every year tens of millions more people in places like India, China, Brazil and South Korea move up in the world, making wages that give them the luxury of ordering meat, buying cars and stocking up on leather goods.

That's one reason why John Reddington is cheery these days. As president of the U.S. Hide, Skin and Leather Association, he's seen demand for imals, especially pigs and catcowhide and even pigskin tle.

Obama on Libya: 'America has a responsibility to act'

By Scott Wilson The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - President Barack Obama delivered a broad defense Monday of his decision to intervene in Libya and of his leadership style, arguing that the United States has a strategic interest in preventing the killing of civilians around the world and that it must do so in partnership with other nations.

Speaking at the National Defense University, Obama used his first televised address since military operations began in Libya nine days ago to outline an expansive rationale for intervention in civil conflicts such as the push underway to topple Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi.

Facing accusations that he has not explained the United States' interest in Libya's war, Obama said the nation had a responsibility to prevent a mass killing after Gadhafi pledged to carry out a brutal reprisal campaign against civilians in rebelheld territory. He emphasized that the mission was undertaken with the United States' closest allies, and that command of the military operation will be transferred to NATO on Wednes-

Among those thrown into the water were two young adults with undisclosed special needs, and a 10year-old girl and an 11-yearold boy who were wearing life jackets, authorities said.

Authorities also were determining how much weight the boat was carrying to de-

Oxnard, said a boat that size should hold six people maximum, but with 10 aboard, there would be scant room for everyone to sit down.

"With that many people, if four people were told to sit over there and the other people got up, that would be enough instability right there," he said. "I'm amazed they didn't sink right where they all got on. That's just overloading the boat."

Army: Photos of soldiers with corpses 'disturbing'

By Robin Hindery Associated Press

OLYMPIA, Wash. - The U.S. Army on Monday apologized for any distress caused by recently published photos of American soldiers posing with dead

Afghans, calling their content "disturbing" and "in striking contrast" to the Army's standards and values.

The Army issued a statement in response to graphic images that Rolling Stone magazine posted on its website on Monday about a week after the German news magazine Der Spiegel published three of the photos.

Rolling S photos are linked to an ongoing war crimes probe involving members of the 5th Stryker Brigade, based south of Seattle. Five soldiers from the platoon have been charged with murder and conspiracy in the deaths of three unarmed Afghan men last year.

Rolling Stone obtained about 150 photos in all, said Eric Bates, the magazine's executive editor. It posted 17 of them on its website, along with two videos it says show U.S. attacks on Afghans.

Bates would not say how the magazine obtained the pictures.

Two of the photos show soldiers charged in the case Spc. Jeremy Morlock of Wasilla, Alaska, and Pvt. 1st Class Andrew Holmes, of Boise - crouching alongside an Afghan youth and lifting the victim's head by its hair. Two other photos show the body of the same Afghan youth, identified by Rolling Stone as Gul Mudin, one of the victims in the Morlock, the first of the five to be court-martialed, was sentenced last week to 24 years in prison after pleading guilty to three counts of murder, as well as > conspiracy and other charges. He said the killings were part of a deliberate plan to Afghan murder civilians.

Morlock's attorney did not respond to requests for com-Morlock ment Monday from

The Associated Press. Daniel Conway, Holmes' attorney, said he doesn't think the latest publication will affect his client's court martial. He said Holmes was ordered by his superiors to pose with the body. "That photo wasn't his idea," Conway said Monday. "He was a 19-year-old private, and they told him to come over, get in the picture and he got in the picture." Rolling Stone says the photos are from a cache of images the Army has kept secret, even from defense attorneys in the case, because it fears another scandal like the one that erupted over photos showing prisoner abuse at the Abu Ghraib prison in Iraq.

Among the photos are pictures of the accused soldiers holding captured weapons as well as gruesome pictures of dismembered bodies that the magazine said are unrelated to the war crimes probe.

Photographs held by the military in the case are under a protective order that remained in place Monday, said Army spokeswoman Maj. Kathy Turner.

Contaminated water found in tunnels at Japan nuclear plant

By Michael Alison Chandler The Washington Post

TOKYO - Attempts to contain and eliminate highly irradiated water at the embattled Fukushima Dai-Ichi power plant stumbled Monday when contaminated water was reported in three underground tunnels outside the nuclear reactors.

Officials said Monday afternoon that dangerously radioactive water had been found a day earlier just four inches below ground level in one tunnel, and government officials were concerned it would overflow and spread into the soil or out to sea, less than 200 feet away.

Tokyo Electric Po which owns the plant, also found small amounts of plutonium in the soil around the plant, company officials said late Monday night. The levels of the radioactive element, found in two out of five samples taken March 21 and 22, were low enough that they should not pose a significant health risk, officials said, according to Japanese national broadcaster NHK. The finding will not require stopping work at the plant, NHK reported.

linger thousands of years. Radiation levels found in the water in the underground tunnels were similar to those found in contaminated water that has pooled in turbine rooms adjacent to three of the six nuclear reactors in the Dai-Ichi plant. The highest levels, measuring at over 1,000 millisieverts per hour (or more than four times the legal exposure limit for nuclear workers), were found outside the second reactor. The levels in the Plutonium is produced as other two tunnels were much lower. Water that has leaked into the turbine room in the second reactor probably came into contact with partially melted nuclear fuel rods, Japan's nuclear safety agency reported Monday.

The last time you received a vase full of roses, or bought a beautiful bouquet to brighten your table, did you wonder what it took to get

Most of the flowers that can be purchased at florists in south-central Idaho come from overseas, including Columbia, Ecuador, other South American countries, the Netherlands, Africa and Australia.

Despite the global flower market, there are still flowers that are only available - or less expensive, while at their most beautiful and fragrant - during their natural growing season.

"There are certain flowers that are available at certain times of the year; daffodil is available only in early spring," Jackson said. "Because we're in a world market, most of the flowers you can get most of the time. (But) when effect they're in season, they're a much more beautiful bloom than when they're forced."

How much labor goes into a enough volume to support the flower is a big factor in its retail cost; when growers can rely on Mother Nature instead of greenhouses, the labor decreases.

And then there's gas. Because so seas or distant states, they rely on planes and trucks to get to you. So when you're cringing at the pump, so are the florists, because they know they'll have to pass on a fuel surcharge to their customers.

Flowers are like other retail products, too; inflation has an effect. "Flowers have gone up just like everything else, but people have a hard time getting used to that," said Clint Earl, who represents Fox Floral.

Roses are red, violets are blue but it's those red roses that every man wants on Valentine's Day for his sweetheart. And as those guys know, the cost of a dozen red blooms is a lot more on Feb. 14 than it is on, say, Aug. 14.

Tools, techniques and tips for spring cleaning

By Melissa Kossler Dutton For The Associated Press

Spring is the time of year when homes often get a thorough cleaning. Using the right tools, techniques and products for different surfaces and types of dirt, from windows to counters to floors, is key to doing the job easily and effectively, said Debra Johnson, training manager for the Merry Maids housecleaning company in Memphis, Tenn.

"It makes the job easier if you have the right products," she said.

Begin with the rooms or areas that seem the dirtiest, suggested Carolyn Forte, director of the Home Appliances and Cleaning Lab at the Good Housekeeping Research Institute.

"Start with the thing that bothers you most," she said. "Do the bigger jobs first." Johnson and Forte offered the following advice for effective spring cleaning. Windows: Use an ammonia-based cleaner and microfiber cloth, Forte said. Make sure to use plenty of cleaner to remove the dirt. Change the water and cloth as necessary. Avoid washing windows on sunny days because the cleaner will dry too quickly and leave streaks.

"Atmospheric" decor is characterized by soft textures, transparency, iridesa mood of quietude and re-

"Everybody wants spring (flowers) when it's spring, everyone wants sunflowers in the fall, everyone wants roses on Valentine's Day," Jackson said. But there are only so many roses plant ed and harvested by growers at any given time. "Supply and demand makes a difference in the prices, and the growers realize this, so it's the growers passing on the raise in prices."

And though pink and red roses fly out the door in mid-February, florists can't just order extra in those hues. The growers and distributors also make them take orange, yellow and other nontraditional colors of roses - so that's why you see a lot of mixed-color bouquets promoted along with those of the rosy shades.

Do be extra-cautious at that time of year, though, Earl said. The flowers you see advertised on TV or on Internet banners may be coming from less reputable companies than your local florist. "People see these ads for inexpensive roses in the Yellow Pages; they five or six of them and expect us to have or 788-3475.

What Idahoans ask for

Although environmental concerns, worker rights and other sustainability issues are on people's minds when they buy other things, local florists say they are rarely asked about those issues by south-central Idahoans.

Instead, your neighbors tend to be fairly traditional – irises, lilies, roses, carnations and Gerber daisies remain popular - and more concerned about the impact on their pocketbook than on how sustainable the flowers are.

There are always those who want exotic blooms, but Idaho florists suggest you give them a few days' extra notice for those, as they may not have them in stock. And plan to pay more the more unusual the flower.

"Some call up and they want a specific group of flowers, they'll name off hansen@magicvalley.com

"Stumped from California" (Feb. 4), who wondered what could be done about an older coworker, "Anita," who she said was showing "signs of dementia." I would caution her about making judgments based on stereotypes of older workers and their health problems. Like Anita, I am in my late 60s. I am also underwater in my mortgage, which means I have no nest egg. Because my husband is unemployed, my savings have been depleted. My short-term memory is poor, and the meds I am on to help me function do not improve my memory. Anita may not have dementia. She may be suffering from unbearable worry and stress. I suggest putting out a hand in friendship to Anita instead of trying to diagnose her. - FEELING IT TOO

IN RICHMOND, VA. DEAR FEELING IT: Many

of my readers felt this one, and wrote to offer compassion to Anita as well as possible explanations for her slip in job performance. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Anyone experiencing marked and/or prolonged changes in mood, function and behavior should undergo thorough medical and/or psychological/psychiatric evaluation. Many treatable conditions can affect memory and concentration. The constant tearfulness observed by "Stumped" is a common symptom of depression.

If Anita's office has an Employee Assistance Plan, a supervisor or HR will know the procedure for referring her to an EAP clinician who can evaluate her and make recommendations for treatment, work-related consid#### erations and follow-up. LICENSED CLINICAL PSYCHOLOGIST UPSTATE NEW YORK

DEAR ABBY: I am a statelicensed hearing instrument specialist. The commonalities between the symptoms of hearing loss and dementia are many. A person with hearing loss has a tendency to withdraw - she's more APART FROM than a PART OF. Also, if she's having trouble remembering things she's done before, she may not have heard the request. (How can you remember something if you have never heard it?) I encourage "Stumped" to talk to Anita about having her hearing tested. A hearing aid may be what she needs to help her perform better on the job.

- KNOWS FROM EXPERIENCE DEAR ABBY: Anita may have a thyroid problem. I had similar symptoms in my 40s, and it took two years for the right diagnosis. A blood test is all she would need to #### find out. - HELPING HAND IN ORLAND HILLS, ILL.

DEAR ABBY: I am 67 and work because I can't live on Social Security. Perhaps Anita is facing the same problem and must work. My co-workers are supportive, and we have access to a wellness program to help us. She should check with Human Resources. Anita needs support, not criticism. Do not assume all seniors suffer from dementia.

- SEASONED WORKER INTUCSON DEAR ABBY: Technology

is moving so quickly that people of all ages need to update their skill level constantly. The economy is hitting our seniors hard. Anita may be working to pay for medications. To "Stumped" I say: Get off your high horse and stop watching Anita "deteriorate." Help her! It might be you someday. - P.J. IN MIAMISBURG, OHIO

When today's six-spade deal came up, South took no time at all to plan his play and so took no time at all to go down. He decided,

wisely, to reject the club finesse, so went up with the ace and played the trump ace. When the spades broke 3-0 offside, he had no hope of avoiding the losers in the black suits and was doomed to one down.

While the idea of preserving the finesse against East in trumps is a good one, there are some things that cannot wait at the bridge table, while drawing trumps must sometimes take second place. Here, South should have cashed the heart ace at trick two before playing a trump to the ace. If spades are 2-1, declarer draws trumps and claims 12 tricks. If East turns up with trump length, declarer finesses in trumps and takes his 12 winners. But when the unfavorable trump break comes to light, declarer has a second string to his bow. He advances the heart queen, intending to run this card and discard his club loser if East does not cover. If East does cover, declarer ruffs away the heart king, cashes the spade king, crosses to the diamond ace, and pitches his club loser on the heart jack. The defenders are helpless, and declarer loses just the one trump trick.

ANSWER: Did you think about bidding on because of your spade void? You described your hand fairly accurately at your first turn, and you have no extra shape. It is up to your partner to decide which direction to go. For all you know, he may have been trying to goad the opponents into bidding game.

SAN FRANCISCO -Kimberly Bell, her voice cracking, looked out at the court room and talked about the final stretch of her nine-year relationship with Barry Bonds.

The greatest hitter of his era threatened "to cut my head off and leave me in a ditch," she said. "More than once."

She said Bonds told her "he would cut out my breast implants because he paid for them."

As for the Arizona house he had helped pay for, "he told me he would burn it down."

Bonds' federal trial resumed Monday with nearly daylong testimony from his former mistress, who said the slugger attributed a 1999 elbow injury to steroids use. She also discussed how Bonds became verbally abusive and said that his physique changed, offering a lurid description of his shrinking testicles, back acne, scalp hair that fell out and chest hair that turned gray. Such mental and physical symptoms are associated with steroid use.

Prosecutors allege Bonds lied when he told a federal grand jury in 2003 that he never knowingly used performance-enhancing

Wall, Wizards beat Jazz in OT

SALT LAKE CITY Rookie John Wall scored 28 points and Jordan Crawford hit a key shot at the end of regulation then made two steals in overtime to lead the Washington Wizards to only their second road win, a 100-95 victory Monday night over the Utah Jazz.

Crawford finished with 25 points, including eight in the fourth quarter and the game-tying shot with 4.4 seconds left in regulation. Maurice Evans scored seven of his 12 points in overtime for the Wizards, who were without five players because of injury.

C.J. Miles led the Jazz, which has lost six straight, with 17 points but he made only 3 of 12 from 3-point range and was 1 of 4 in overtime.

Utah's trio of rookies -Derrick Favors, Gordon Hayward and Jeremy Evans combined for 17 fourthquarter points to get the Jazz back in the game after they trailed by 10 in the fourth quarter.

But Hayward and Evans both made key turnovers in overtime for the Jazz.

The win gave Washington a series sweep. The Wizards won, 108-101 on Jan. 17. At the time, few realized it was the beginning of the end for the Jazz.

They were 27-13 going into that game but have gone 9-26 since to fall out of the playoff hunt.

Al Jefferson had 16 rebounds for the Jazz to go along with his 15 points, but he was on the bench late as the Jazz started looking to the future.

The size and strength of Stanford was simply too much for the Bulldogs, and their more than 11,000 hometown fans, to overcome on this night.
