Burley man killed in Pocatello accident

Times-News

A Burley man was killed Saturday while attempting to cross Interstate 86 near Pocatello.

Idaho State Police say Ismael Ochoa, 22, was struck by a 2006 Dodge pickup driven by 45-year-old Heyburn resident Chad Surrage as he attempted to run across I-86 near the Banock Peak Truck Stop at milepost 52.

According to ISP, a 2003 Chevrolet S10 pickup that Ochoa was in with Luiz Jimenez, 27, of Oakley; Edgar Simental, 22, of Burley; and Fabian Reyes, 22, of Burley, was pulled over on the right shoulder of the interstate. ISP said that a disagreement broke out between the passengers, who exited the vehicle before Ochoa attempted to cross the interstate.

Ochoa was pronounced dead at the scene. No one else was injured.

ISP continues to investigate the crash, with assistance by the Power County sheriff, Fort Hall Police Department, Idaho Transportation Department and emergency personnel.

JAIL TIMELINE

Jerome County has sought for several years to replace its existing jail, which officials say is overcrowded and falling apart.

- 2007: Officials from Jerome and three other counties examine creating a regional jail.
- 2008: Jerome County decides to pursue its own lockup after the regional effort stalls.
- November 2009: Jerome County voters fall short of approving a $13 million lease-purchase agreement for a new jail.
- May 2010: A second lease-purchase vote again fails to pass.
- November 2010: Voters firmly reject a third try at jail funding, this time as a $13 million bond issue.

Sheriff Doug McFall said the site, wherever it's located, would need at least seven to 10 acres so there's space for any future growth needs. Preliminary figures show that the cost of a 120-bed facility would be between $8 million and $11 million, he said.

In their discussion, county officials stressed a desire to keep the public well-informed of jail developments.

"I think the public would like to know exactly what it's going to cost them," said Commissioner Roger Morley.

County officials said it's important for the public to know the county's number of inmates and type of offenses for which they are jailed, adding that perception issues have persisted through the process of working toward a new jail.

"It's like we're storing them up for our delight, and that's just not true," said Commissioner Cathy Roemer.

enter in information and sync to their office's data system.

"The funding is really limited, so we are focused on getting the system going for inspections, and we are looking into getting it online," said Melody Bowyer, food program manager. "It will be up within the year. We are kind of doing it by piecemeal."

The cost of the computers and of updating the online system was not available Monday.

During a typical inspection Monday, Jensen took notes with pen and paper that he would later transfer to his computer. From there, the information will automatically go to a database for all health district employees to access.

Though different types of establishments are rated on different things, some requirements affect them all. The most common violation committed is the most dangerous one, Jensen said: refrigeration units must stay at or below 41 degrees. If they go any higher, bacteria can multiply in the food. On the other hand, heated food must be at or above 135 degrees.

Any violation Jensen comes across can usually be corrected on the spot, but critical items must be dealt with and documented within 10 days.

"We use this as an opportunity to educate them on proper food safety," Jensen said. "We don't want to shut places down — just help them understand."

He said accurate notes and documentation are vital to his job and the business's final report, so the added technology will be a bonus in the long run.

For the safety soldiers, the curious or the germaphobic, the online reviews may be missed. But Bowyer said anyone can come to the health district's office and ask for information regarding a certain food establishment.

"People are going to go where they like to eat and most places around here are doing a pretty good job," Jensen said. "It is mostly tiny things that we can correct on-site."

Brinkerhoff pleads guilty

Former Burley teacher faces up to 25 years in prison for sex crime

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Former Burley teacher Michael Scott Brinkerhoff pleaded guilty Monday to felony sex abuse of a minor under 16 for allegedly asking a junior high student to engage in sexual conduct online.

Brinkerhoff, 42, entered a plea agreement with the Cassia County Prosecutor's Office that will dismiss a related felony charge of enticing a child over the Internet.

He will be sentenced at 3 p.m. June 7 in Cassia County 5th District Court.

Brinkerhoff's attorney, Keith Roark, said a written plea agreement hasn't been completed, but prosecutors have agreed to place Brinkerhoff in the state's retained jurisdiction program where he could undergo further evaluation. If he earns a positive recommendation during the program, he could avoid jail time.

Brinkerhoff faces a maximum penalty of 25 years in prison and a $50,000 fine. He could also face restitution and a civil penalty. Roark didn't indicate the length of the state's recommended sentence.

"The sexual abuse charge doesn't allege any physical contact between Mr. Brinkerhoff and the alleged victim in this case," Roark said. "It does, however, allege — and Mr. Brinkerhoff is prepared to admit — that in an Internet conversation with the victim in this case he did request or instruct her to touch herself. And that, in fact to his knowledge, occurred."

Judge Michael Crabtree questioned Brinkerhoff on his understanding of the plea agreement and his understanding that the court is not bound by the terms offered.

Crabtree said if the case were to proceed to trial the state would have to prove that Brinkerhoff engaged in the acts to gratify his own lust, passion or sexual desire, or that of a third party.

"That mental intent portion is important," he said. "Are you aware that element that must be proved in this case?"

Brinkerhoff said he wasn't, but didn't want to take any further time to confer with Roark.

Crabtree also asked Brinkerhoff if anything had recently happened in his personal life to cause him to be deeply upset and affect his thinking regarding his plea.

"Besides this, no," Brinkerhoff said.

Crabtree asked if anyone had threatened or coerced him into pleading guilty.

"No, Your Honor, just, it's the right thing to do," Brinkerhoff said.

Crabtree said that by pleading guilty, Brinkerhoff was also relinquishing his rights to appeal based on any issues in the case, except the right to appeal the length of his sentence.

Brinkerhoff will also lose his right to vote and own firearms, and will have to register as a sex offender.

The council also asked city staff to solicit proposals for a new city pool management company. The YMCA has run the city pool since 2002, which Clow said helped stymie ballooning costs without quite reducing them.

City staff and council members said they have heard interest from Gold's Gym about taking over the pool management, though they expect more proposals when solicitations go out. A representative from the gym sat through the meeting, but did not speak publicly.

The 7-0 vote to seek management proposals was prefaced by council members saying they couldn't see how such a search could hurt. There was some reference to the cheaper proposals brought back by PSI Environmental Systems Inc. in a similar situation last year,

Councilman Will Kezele said he agreed with the need for competition and that it is the basis of capitalism. But he added that he hoped the city government wouldn't compete with private enterprise.

"I would hope city government is working to get out of the golf and pool business," he said, adding that it would be a shame if a city-subsidized pool competed with the owner of the losing proposal.

Romney kicks off second try for president

By Paul West
Tribune Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Republican frontrunner Mitt Romney signaled his intention to make jobs and the economy the focus of his campaign as he kicked off his second try for president with an attack on President Barack Obama's "failed" policies.

With an empty New Hampshire football field as a backdrop, the former Massachusetts governor recorded a two-minute video announcement Monday that included nods toward the more conservative, tea party elements of his party. His campaign sent it to supporters, then posted it online.

Romney finished behind John McCain in the 2008 nomination contest, but recent polls show him the early leader for 2012. In a move driven mainly by the fundraising calendar, he filed candidacy papers with the Federal Election Commission; a ceremonial declaration will come by this summer.

Romney is the second major Republican candidate to file papers, behind former Minnesota Gov. Tim Pawlenty.

The 64-year-old Romney, dressed casually in a dark jacket and checked sports shirt, said Obama's lack of experience in "the real economy" is the reason his policies haven't worked. The president and most of his advisers "just don't know how jobs are created in the private sector," he said.

Romney contrasted that with his own experience as a venture capitalist, which helped provide him with the personal wealth that has fueled his political career.

"Sometimes I was successful and helped create jobs," he said, "other times I was not."

That acknowledgement, at the start of his run, appeared designed to inoculate Romney against renewed criticism about large-scale layoffs at companies taken over by his firm, Bain Capital. It also pointed to the very different set of issues than he faced four years ago, when the war in Iraq topped the agenda.

In his brief remarks, Romney drew attention to New Hampshire, which stages the first primary, and Nevada, the first western caucus. He is counting on victories in both to survive expected losses in the early voting states of Iowa and South Carolina, both dominated by social conservatives and evangelical voters who have not warmed to Romney.

His announcement came after an unannounced visit to the University of New Hampshire.

Romney reached out rhetorically to the Republican right in the video, employing a familiar tea party reference to "the principles of our Constitution" as the source of American "greatness," a theme he repeated for emphasis three times.

Romney is considered to have the deepest fundraising network of the potential GOP contenders.

Among the next decisions Romney will face is whether to participate in the first GOP debate next month.

T.F. police arrest smoke shop burglary suspect

Times-News

Twin Falls police early Sunday arrested a man suspected of breaking into a Twin Falls smoke shop twice since Friday.

Caleb Faulkner, 18, of Twin Falls, was arraigned Monday on two charges of burglary and one of malicious injury to property.

He was arrested after a caller reported shortly after 2:45 a.m. that the truck suspected of ramming the Washington Street Smoke-N-Head shop on Friday was parked at the chain's Blue Lakes Boulevard shop. Police at that time were already responding to another call that someone had rammed in the Washington Street store's front door for the second time since Friday's break-in.

Faulkner was stopped near the Twin Falls YMCA City Pool, allegedly in possession of several packages from Smoke-N-Head. Twin Falls police say Faulkner took the store's Hayze spice — herbal incense some people smoke for a marijuana-like high.

Faulkner was later identified by witnesses as having quickly entered and left the Blue Lakes shop on Sunday night. He was arrested and transported to Twin Falls County Jail, where he left Monday on $2,500 bond.

A pretrial conference has been set for April 22.

Twin Falls URA OKs cash to fix up downtown kiosks

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

More than $6,500 will go into the downtown Twin Falls' kiosks to bring them out of 2009 — the current year of calendars plastered on them, and a sticking point for downtown consultant Mark Rivers.

"I think it's absolutely paramount for our downtown community to show a certain liveliness and show that we are contemporary and up to speed and standards as I'm out there trying to attract new development and investment," Rivers told the city Urban Renewal Agency board at its Monday meeting. "I can't bring people into town and say, 'Hey, come on, open up a new business, buy a new building, do something great here in downtown,' when we're not doing little things. I mean, we still have 2009 calendars on the kiosks."

The board voted unanimously for the following: $3,331 for nine posters, frames, graffiti protectors and community tack boards, and up to $3,250 for new paint on the kiosks and downtown benches.

Rivers, a $5,000-a-month consultant on revitalizing downtown, said work on the kiosks reflects a holistic view of downtown revitalization and beautification. He said other downtown merchants are starting to gear up spring landscaping, and he's also working with a landscaper for additional work.

Many of the board members praised the effort, with Larry Hall saying the recent downtown activity will bring "an attitude shift" about downtown.

The board and Rivers said efforts to spruce up the kiosks also play into the

U.S. Senate to hear 'downwinders act'

By Blair Koch
Times-News writer

A bipartisan group of U.S. senators wants to expand federal compensation for people who became ill from working in uranium mines, living near debris left from mining or living near atomic test sites from the 1940s into the '60s.

The Radiation Exposure Compensation Act Amendment Act of 2011 will be introduced today in the Senate.

Similar bills have been introduced yearly since 2007. Sponsors include Idaho Republican Sens. Mike Crapo and Jim Risch.

Companion legislation is being introduced in the House by Rep. Ben Ray Lujan, D-N.M.

Current RECA law pays cancer victims in 21 counties in Nevada, Utah and Arizona. The amendments would expand the downwind exposure area to seven states.

It would also widen compensation for qualifying, post-1971 uranium workers and equalize compensation for all claimants to $150,000. The current maximum payment is $50,000.

The bill also provides funding for a study of the health impacts on families of uranium workers and residents of uranium development communities.

The act authorizes $3 million for five years for research allocated to the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences, which would award grants to universities and nonprofits to carry out the research.

"I recognize the burden placed upon cancer patients and their families to pay for the expensive regimen of treatments this disease requires. Passage of this legislation is the first step in helping Idahoans get the care they need," said Crapo, who has long supported the bill's passage.

Commemoration, not celebration for Civil War's 150th

FORT SUMTER NATIONAL MONUMENT, S.C. (AP) — Somber period music, flickering candlelight and booming cannons will usher in the nation's observance of the 150th anniversary of the Civil War.

The opening salvo of that war that began in Charleston Harbor will be recreated Tuesday. The war began before dawn on April 12, 1861, with the start of a Confederate bombardment of Union-held Fort Sumter in Charleston Harbor. The conflict ended four years later with the surrender of Confederate forces in Virginia on April 9, 1865.

"We're very clear we don't see this as a celebration but rather as a somber time," Tim Stone, the superintendent of the Fort Sumter National Monument said Monday. "We know that over the course of the four years of the Civil War 600,000 lives were lost. It's a very tragic event."

Tuesday's commemoration of the first shots was set to begin with a brief, pre-dawn concert of period music on Charleston's Battery entitled "When Jesus Wept?" Then a star shell will explode over the fort, signaling the start for several hundred re-enactors — manning cannon around the harbor — to re-enact the bombardment. Union troops in the fort surrendered after more than 30 punishing hours of Confederate fire.

Re-enactors portraying Confederate units are camping at Fort Moultrie on Sullivan's Island, while Union re-enactors are in Sumter this week. They plan to recreate the Union surrender to Confederate troops on Thursday.

Historian Rick Hatcher said the bombardment didn't cause any deaths, but two Union soldiers died of wounds suffered when a salute was fired during the surrender ceremony.

Stone said the National Park Service sees the anniversary as an opportunity for new generations to learn the story of the bloody conflict.

"We hope that in the National Park Service that manages many of the great Civil War sites — Gettysburg, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Antietam and, of course Fort Sumter — we provide the visiting public the opportunity to experience the history of those events. We try to focus on the history and let the visitors take away the message they want."

The events this week include living history demonstrations focusing on the role of blacks and women during the war. There will be sessions on period music, medicine and cooking of the era.

Students launch suicide awareness project at Lewis-Clark State College

LEWISTON (AP) — A group of students at Lewis-Clark State College are hoping to stir awareness and public conversation about suicide by posting dozens of life-sized, human silhouettes all around the Lewiston campus Tuesday.

Organizers say the 99 silhouettes cut from stark, white cardboard are intended to represent those who have taken their lives and ideally generate a deeper discussion on campus about a subject considered taboo and uncomfortable to many.

The project is the idea of the campus chapter of the Active Minds club, a nationwide organization focused on mental health issues for college students.

“It’s hard for people to talk about,” Sabrina Wakefield, 28, a social work student and member of the national group, told the Lewiston Tribune. “It’s that pull-yourself-up-by-your-bootstraps mentality. So a lot of people don’t say anything until (thoughts of suicide) have really progressed.”

Suicide has long been a challenge among mental and public health experts in Idaho. According to the Suicide Prevention Action Network of Idaho, suicide is the second leading cause of death for Idahoans between the age of 15 and 34 and for males age 10-14.

In 2009, 307 people completed suicide in Idaho, a 22 percent increase over 2008, and a 40 percent increase over 2007.

With those kinds of figures, Wakefield and fellow club members Douglas Cruthirds and Kat Mewes say it makes sense to take part in the Active Minds’ Send Silence Packing program. The campaign sends hundreds of backpacks that belonged to students who killed themselves to campuses, where they are displayed as a visual reminder of the effect of student suicide.

But there is a long waiting list for the backpacks, and

Effort to recall Luna faces tough hurdle

By John Miller
Associated Press

BOISE — Education activists seeking to recall the superintendent of public instruction over his education reform package filed their first 20 signatures Monday from registered voters.

The Committee to Recall Tom Luna also aims to oust Sen. Mitch Toryanski and Rep. Julie Ellsworth, both Republicans from Boise, for their support of Luna’s education package.

To succeed in the push for an Aug. 30 special election, the group must submit 158,107 valid signatures in the next 2½ months to the secretary of state’s office.

Even if they succeed in getting the measure on a ballot, they would have to secure at least 268,852 votes in favor of ousting Luna, according to Idaho law.

That is the number of votes that Luna received in the Nov. 2, 2010, election when he beat Stan Olson with 60.5 percent of the vote to secure a second term.

The 20 votes submitted

Monday marked the threshold to get the petition drive certified.

Campaign organizer Nancy Berto of Mountain Home said Luna ran last November claiming Idaho schools were doing well then introduced his education reforms that finally cleared the 2011 Legislature last week. “It’s a bait and switch,” said Berto, who started her campaign in February. “He did not mention this last November, before the election.”

After Berto’s group rallied in the Capitol, Luna’s office responded that he was confident of fending off the recall.

A separate move is under way to place a voter referendum on the 2012 ballot to repeal the education reforms that take effect this month.

“The people of Idaho spoke in November and made it clear who they wanted to serve as state superintendent and the direction they wanted the public education system to go,” said Luna spokeswoman Melissa McGrath.

Wolf proposal sparks maneuvering in Congress

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — The fate of legislation to lift federal protections for endangered gray wolves remained unclear late Monday. Environmentalists were seeking to derail the proposal even as some lawmakers pushed to broaden its reach.

Members of Wyoming’s Congressional delegation said they were seeking to include their state in a budget bill rider that would allow wolf hunting in Idaho and Montana. Representatives of the advocacy group Defenders of Wildlife pledged to fight any wolf legislation “until it’s a done deal.”

Western lawmakers on Saturday announced the provision to revoke the wolf’s endangered status across most of the Northern Rockies. That came the same day a judge struck down a proposed wolf settlement between the Obama administration and some wildlife advocates.

Details on the budget bill were to be released late Monday night.

AROUND THE NATION

WASHINGTON, D.C. Cuts from budget deal target nearly every agency

The largest domestic spending cut in U.S. history will upend almost every federal agency and slash programs dealing with health care, housing aid and education, but give the Pentagon an extra $5 billion.

The measure, which was still being drafted Monday night, would achieve $38 billion in reductions over the remaining six months of the 2011 fiscal year, as the White House and congressional leaders agreed late Friday. It would end, at least for now, the threat of a government shutdown.

House Speaker John A. Boehner, R-Ohio, may be forced to rely on Democrats to pass the bill, however. Dozens of Republicans argue that the compromise does not adequately cut programs and services.

“Make no mistake: I oppose this negotiated deal,” Rep. Michele Bachmann, R-Minn., founder of the House Tea Party Caucus, wrote on her Twitter account. She wanted deeper cuts and conservative policy priorities, including elimination of funds for the health care overhaul.

IOWA Warning prevented injuries in twister

MAPLETON — It seemed like a Mapleton Miracle. A tornado with winds exceeding 130 mph barreled through this small Iowa town, flattening whole blocks and destroying 100 homes.

When the storm passed, more than half the town had been leveled. But the most serious injury was a broken leg.

Storm spotters who tracked the approaching twister were being credited Monday with giving residents a crucial 15-minute warning, allowing most people to take shelter and preventing the kind of tornado disaster that killed four teens at a Boy Scout camp near here in 2008.

ARIZONA Court won’t lift stay on immigration law

PHOENIX — A federal appeals court on Monday refused to lift a stay blocking major parts of Arizona’s immigration law from taking effect and said the federal government is likely to be able to prove the controversial law is unconstitutional.

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals turned down an appeal filed by Gov. Jan Brewer. She had asked the appeals court to lift an injunction imposed by a federal judge in Phoenix the day before the law was to take effect on July 29, 2010.

The U.S. Justice Department sued to block the law, saying it violates the U.S. Constitution because enforcing immigration law is a federal issue.

U.S. District Court Judge Susan Bolton issued an injunction preventing four major parts of the law from going into effect pending a trial. Monday’s ruling by the three-judge appeals court panel upheld that injunction.

NEW YORK Drivers cutting back on gas as prices rise

Soaring gas prices are starting to take a toll on American drivers. Across the country, people are pumping less into the tank, reversing what had been a steady increase in demand for fuel. For five weeks in a row, they have bought less gas than they did a year ago.

Drivers bought about 2.4 million fewer gallons for the week of April 1, a 3.6 percent drop from last year, according to MasterCard SpendingPulse, which tracks the volume of gas sold at 140,000 service stations nationwide.

The last time Americans cut back so much was in December, when snowstorms forced people to stay home.

Before the decline, demand was increasing for two months. Some analysts had expected the trend to continue because the economic recovery was picking up, adding 216,000 jobs in March.

More bones found on New York beach

WANTAGH — Suspected human remains were found in two locations along a remote New York beach highway Monday, bringing to 10 the number of potential victims of a possible serial killer.

The discovery came as police expanded a search from Long Island’s Suffolk County westward into the Jones Beach area of Nassau County, just over the border from New York City. The expanded search was prompted by Suffolk’s discovery in the past two weeks of four sets of unidentified human remains; the bodies of four women who worked as Craigslist escorts were found in the same area in December, leading authorities to suspect that they may be contending with a serial killer.

The highway runs along a barrier beach island south of Long Island and is home to several county and state-run parks featuring miles of white sandy beaches about 45 minutes from Manhattan.

Detective Lt. Kevin Smith, a Nassau County police spokesman, said the two sets of remains found Monday, separated by several miles along the north side of Ocean Parkway, were sent to the medical examiner’s office to confirm whether they are human.

Simpson’s wolf delisting move could’ve been handled better

A bipartisan group of congressmen from Idaho and Montana, led by Republican Rep. Mike Simpson, did what they had to do last week: They got language removing wolves from the endangered species list included in the budget deal that averted a shutdown of the federal government.

If Congress approves the final language of the bill and President Obama signs it, gray wolves in Idaho and Montana will be stripped of Endangered Species Act protection and put under state management.

Our view:

Wolf management belongs with the states of Idaho and Montana, who’ve proven they can handle it.

What do you think?

We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

As they should be.

Yet it’s too bad it had to come to this. Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar painstakingly brokered a deal between the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and 10 conservation groups that would have handed wolf management back to Idaho and Montana. U.S. District Judge Donald Molloy rejected it on Saturday.

One of the reasons the environmental groups agreed to Salazar’s compromise was hope that a favorable court decision would provide greater protection for wolves. Those safeguards are not expected to be in the budget bill.

Salazar’s proposed settlement effectively asked Molloy to reverse his previous rulings on the matter.

Last August, the Montana judge faulted the Fish and Wildlife Service for a 2009 decision that removed wolves from the endangered list in Montana and Idaho but not in neighboring Wyoming. He said decisions about the ESA should be based on science and not on political boundaries, such as state lines.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game managed wolves in Idaho from 2006 until last October, when Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter handed the job back to the USFWS. Idaho’s first -and- only wolf hunting season lasted from September 2009 until April 2010.

Fish and Game, under intense political pressure, handled wolf management adroitly, in our opinion. Contrary to fears of environmentalists, populations of the predators didn’t collapse as a consequence of the wolf hunt.

We see no reason why the agency wouldn’t do admirably if it gets a second chance to manage wolves.

Although we think Simpson and the wolf delisting measure’s Senate sponsor, Jon Tester, D-Mont., did the right thing, the best way to resolve this explosive, deeply emotional issue would have been at the bargaining table.

Florida pastor tests limits of free speech

In this digital age, speech has been globalized just as surely as commerce.

That’s one of the lessons to be taken from the troubling sequence of events in which a tiny Florida church’s distasteful publicity stunt of burning a Quran triggered five days of protest and mob violence across Afghanistan. As of last week, more than 20 people had been killed, and the hand of our Taliban antagonists has been strengthened.

Tim Rutten

Terry Jones, you may recall, is the anti-Islam pastor of a Gainesville fundamentalist church with a congregation of about 30, who gained international notoriety and hours of press attention last fall by threatening to burn a Quran on the Sept. 11 anniversary. After appeals from, among others, President Obama and Gen. David H. Petraeus, the U.S. commander in Afghanistan, Jones relented. Last month, however, he decided to hold a mock “trial” of Islam’s holy book that ended with its burning.

This time, the American news media simply ignored Jones’ crude cabaret of bigotry, but a video made its way onto the Internet. Then, for reasons that remain unclear, Afghan President Hamid Karzai refused to let the provocation pass. On March 24, he issued a news release demanding that the United States “bring to justice the perpetrators of this crime.”

On Thursday, he gave a speech condemning the burning and demanding Jones’ arrest. The next day, deadly rioting erupted after Friday prayers in Afghan mosques. Sunday, in a meeting with Petraeus and U.S. Ambassador Karl Eikenberry, Karzai demanded that Congress pass a resolution condemning Jones.

For their part, both Obama and Petraeus unequivocally condemned Jones’ desecration of the Quran, though the president also called the killings that followed “an affront to human decency and dignity.”

Others have raised the question of whether our conception of constitutionally protected speech needs to adjust itself to an age in which words spoken in Gainesville can have deadly impact in Mazar-i-Sharif. Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., for example, wants Congress to explore ways to limit now-protected expressions, such as Jones’

“Free speech is a great idea, but we’re in a war,” he said. “During World War II, we had limits on what you could do if it inspired the enemy.”

Graham, who wields considerable influence as a former military lawyer, said he wants to do “anything we can to push back here in America against acts like this that put our troops at risk.”

Obviously, there have been necessary wartime restraints on speech, but they’ve always involved restrictions on transmitting information, such as troop movements. What Jones did is luridly offensive, but it amounts to an expression of opinion. Blasphemy is protected by the 1st Amendment, and any attempt to make it otherwise — however well-intended — is a prescription for disaster.

Still others have wondered whether it might be possible to apply the “fighting words” exception to the First Amendment to cases such as Jones’ stunt, which seemed almost certain to provoke a deadly response half a world away. In its 1942 ruling in Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, the U.S. Supreme Court defined that exception in a way that could be construed to cover Jones’ desecration of the Quran:

“There are certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any constitutional problem. These include ... ‘fighting words’ — those which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. It has been well observed that such utterances are no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality.”

The problem is that, ever since Chaplinsky, the court has narrowed the scope of the fighting words exception, holding that it can’t be used, for example, to restrain flag burners. Moreover, any attempt to extend the audience whose sensibilities must be weighed beyond our borders attenuates the exception beyond reason. What, in this instance, of the hundreds of millions of Muslims who were not incited to violence by Jones’ provocation?

The issues raised by these events are not a challenge to our conception of free speech, but to our collective conscience. The question that ought to be asked isn’t whether the wretched Jones’ repellant theater is protected speech, but why the United States continues to produce as many people who speak and act as he does about Muslims?

Timothy Rutten is a columnist for the Los Angeles Times.

Final Four: The rich white guy wins again

I don’t know about you, but I had a hard time stomaching the sight of Jim Calhoun holding the championship trophy after the final game of the NCAA men’s basketball tournament. Not because it was a lousy game (though it was), but because Calhoun, the pugnacious coach of the University of Connecticut “program” — as the big-money Division I teams are called — shouldn’t have been allowed anywhere near the gym. Just weeks earlier, the NCAA had sanctioned him for “failing to create an atmosphere of compliance” with its recruiting rules. To put it more bluntly: UConn cheated. Among the punishments meted out was a three-game suspension for Calhoun.

But this is the NCAA we’re talking about, an organization that bends over backward to accommodate big-time basketball schools like Connecticut that drive TV ratings, and marquee coaches like Calhoun, who, with his $2.3 million salary, is the highest-paid state employee in Connecticut. March Madness was right around the corner, so Calhoun’s suspension was (of course!) deferred until next season, allowing him to coach the team during the tournament. One of his own players described the school’s penalties as “a slap on the wrist.”

Shortly after Calhoun was handed his punishment, another member of an NCAA Division I program was also suspended — in his case, for six games. But he wasn’t a multimillionaire coach. Rather, he was 19-year-old Perry Jones III, a talented, 6-foot-11, African American freshman at Baylor University.

Was Jones allowed to delay his suspension? Surely you jest. The NCAA suspended him literally hours before the team’s conference tournament. Without Jones, Baylor lost big.

That Baylor’s season ended on such a sour note is hardly the tragedy here, of course. What is infuriating are the different ways Jones and Calhoun were treated, especially when you look at what they did. In trying to land a prized recruit, Calhoun and UConn broke the rules egregiously and repeatedly. Jones’s main crime was that he is poor.

Jones was in 10th grade when he supposedly broke the NCAA’s rules. (That’s right. You can break NCAA rules years before you become part of the NCAA.) His mother, a cafeteria worker, has a heart condition so serious that she will likely need a transplant. Sometimes she’s confined to a wheelchair, causing her to miss work. During one such period, she got behind on her rent.

Three times, she asked Jones’ AAU coach, whom she’d known for years, to lend her $1,200 to pay the rent. Each time, she repaid the loan as soon as she got her paycheck. That, believe it or not, is Jones’ transgression.

Jones says he had no idea his mother was borrowing money to pay the rent, which is completely believable. If you needed a short-term loan to keep from getting evicted, would you tell your teenage son? Yet the NCAA says that because she got the money from the coach, Jones was getting a benefit not available to nonathletes.

sion was going to a preseason Dallas Cowboys game with that same coach. The NCAA declared this a $500 benefit and has demanded that he donate $500 to charity to make amends. It does not say where he is supposed to find the money.)

I asked Stacey Osburn, an NCAA spokeswoman, how a player could be held responsible for something done without his knowledge. I asked her why Jones had to sit while Cam Newton, the star quarterback at highly ranked Auburn, was allowed to continue playing after it was discovered that his father had tried to auction off his son’s talents to the highest bidder. I asked her why five players from Ohio State were allowed to play in the lucrative Sugar Bowl this year after they had been caught selling OSU paraphernalia and pocketing the money — and why their coach got only a two-game suspension, even though he knew what they had done and said nothing.

She wouldn’t give me a straight answer. “Every situation is different” is the best she could do.

Race still haunts us 150 years after Civil War's start

One hundred and fifty years ago today, on April 12, 1861, the first shots of the Civil War were fired. A century and a half later, the issue of race still haunts us.

Back then, most everyone understood that America's bloodiest war — more than 623,000 dead — had its roots in race. But race is not a subject Americans like to think about anymore. At every turn, prominent voices try to pretend that since we've achieved a colorblind society, we can forget all that old unpleasantness.

Indeed, some — including Virginia Gov. Robert F. Mc-

Orson Aguilar

Donnell, when he proclaimed Confederate History Month last April — have tried to pretend that the Civil War wasn't really about slavery, just "states' rights." Such willful ignorance tosses aside the fact that the right the Confederate states fought to preserve was the right to own other human beings — human beings whose skin was black.

Electing a black president was seen by some as proof that we've put all that behind us, but the race-baiting started even before President Obama's inauguration. It's ranged from the relatively subtle (books from right-wing scholars tracing the "rage" of this almost preternaturally calm president to a "Kenyan anti-colonial" worldview) to the downright crude (depictions of Obama in African tribal dress, with a bone through his nose).

And when someone points this out, what happens? The "race is not an issue" crowd howls about "playing the race card." So last year, when the NAACP condemned "racist elements" within the Tea Party movement, U.S. News and World Report columnist Peter Roff compared the group to infamous segregationists Lester Maddox and "Bull" Connor. Pundit George Will called the resolution "left-wing McCarthyism." So apparently the folks depicting Obama with a bone through his nose aren't racist, but those calling them out are. Somewhere, George Orwell is smiling.

The unfortunate truth is that race does still matter in American society. While civil rights laws got rid of the most overt segregation, the effects of our nation's long history of discrimination — against not only blacks but also Latinos, Asians, Indians and others — are still vividly apparent in communities of color. Compared to whites, people of color remain far more likely to be unemployed, to have little or no accumulated wealth and savings, and far less likely to own their own home, to pick a few obvious indicators.

Current and proposed policies will only exacerbate these differences. Congress recently gave the very rich an $11.5 billion-a-year break on estate taxes, while pending budget cuts threaten assistance that helps the poor feed their families and keep the heat on during cold winter months.

In his second inaugural address, President Lincoln urged America to "bind up the nation's wounds," and do so "with malice toward none; with charity for all." A century and a half later, we would do well to heed his words. So far, we haven't quite managed it.

What is good for you, anyway?

Sometimes you really do want to tell the medical profession to just make up its mind.

We got word last week that estrogen therapy, which was bad, is good again. Possibly. In some cases.

This was not quite as confusing as the news last year that calcium supplements, which used to be very good, are now possibly bad. Although maybe not. And the jury's still out.

Or the recent federal study that suggested women be told to stop checking their breasts for lumps. Or the recommendations on when to get a mammogram, which seem to fluctuate between every five years and every five minutes.

We certainly want everyone to keep doing studies. But it's very difficult to be a civilian in the world of science.

"It's very difficult to be a woman," said Dr. Leslie Ford of the National Cancer Institute wryly.

Back in the day, estrogen was prescribed only for women who were experiencing serious problems with menopause. Then a 1966 book called Feminine Forever argued that estrogen therapy was good for almost every middle-aged female on the planet who wanted to avoid morphing into a crone. The idea grew in popularity even after evidence mounted that the author had been paid by an estrogen manufacturer.

"The mantra among gynecologists was: As soon as you got to be 49, almost automatically put women on estrogen. It was supposed to be a fountain of youth," said Ford.

To reduce the danger of uterine cancer, estrogen was mixed with progestin and the result was, among many other wonderful things, supposed to lower the risk of heart disease. Then a report from the Women's Health Initiative, a long-running study by the National Institutes of Health, found that it did no such thing. Also, it raised the risk of breast cancer.

"It's been a real culture shift for gynecologists," said Ford.

Now comes a new study — from the very same Women's Health Initiative — that appears to show that for some women, estrogen alone may actually reduce the risk of breast cancer and heart attack. As long as you take it when you're in your 50s.

"It's 'Back to the Future,'" said Dr. Emily Jungheim of Washington University School of Medicine, who co-authored an editorial raising a red flag about the report.

The new findings, which come with many qualifications, apply only to women who've had a hysterectomy. But that's quite a population; about one-third of all American women have their uterus removed at some point in their lives.

Gail Collins

You cannot contemplate this information for too long without asking whether the medical profession has a tendency to get carried away.

"There's a pill for every ill," said Dr. Sidney Wolfe, director of the Public Citizen Health Research Group and the co-author of Worst Pills, Best Pills: A Consumer's Guide to Avoiding Drug-Induced Death or Illness.

He worries a lot about overmedication. "There's just a massive overprescribing in this country," he said. "Also elsewhere. France comes to mind."

Finally, we have found some part of medicine in which our system is as efficient as France's.

Americans should know by now that you can't put a pill in your mouth without risk. Television is full of commercials for wonder drugs that will perk up your spirits, soothe your allergies or lower your cholesterol, improving life altogether except in the cases where they lead to vivid dreams, suicidal thoughts, hair loss, stabbing pains or sudden death.

But it still feels as if we need to be on guard against medical overoptimism.

"Doctors are far more knowledgeable about the benefits of drugs than the risks," said Wolfe. There isn't always much talk about the possible downside of drugs on which all the evidence is yet to come in, like many fertility treatments.

Wolfe believes that most doctors prefer writing prescriptions to having lengthy discussions with their patients about things like long-term behavior modification therapy. My own theory is that they just tend to want to satisfy their patients.

I once had a gynecologist who put me on estrogen therapy at age 49, when I had no medical complaints, and I still remember how pleased he was to be giving me this wonderful drug that would stave off so many undesirable effects of aging.

I did get breast cancer, although it was not a major-league case. Obviously, I should have asked more questions. But I don't blame the doctor, who seemed to have the best of intentions. Actually, I don't blame anyone. Except maybe the guy who wrote that Feminine Forever book.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Lawmakers: Focus on nuclear health threat

In the headline story (Times-News, Sunday, April 3) "Idaho's top 10 unhealthy counties," we find Butte County, with 2,764 inhabitants, is "the sickliest in Idaho, ranking dead last in the state in morbidity." Could such alarming news be due to the fact that these citizens live in "The county that contains the sprawling Idaho National Laboratory," home of the Advanced Test Reactor, built in 1967 and deemed, at the time, isolated enough from real people that it didn't need the safety of a "containment" in the event of a release of "its 1 billion curie radioactive inventory?" (Idaho Falls Post Register, March 27, 2011). The ATR is almost 45 years old, and we can't rely on the seismic upgrades.

Butte County will also be the future home of a reprocessing plant owned by the French government's nuclear power company, Are-

va. The plant will reprocess spent commercial nuclear fuel rods — tons of them. The even more highly radioactive waste from this process will remain in Idaho, slowly leaking into the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer. These rods are the same as the ones close to a meltdown at the Fukushima Dai'ichi plant in Japan, the ones releasing 1,500 millisieverts of radiation every hour, the ones being cooled and stored around the world in unsafe, overcrowded pools of water. We have solid evidence there is no safe way to store nuclear waste. It is irresponsible to produce more of it.

When the Rancho Seco Nuclear Power Plant in Sacramento, Calif., was finally decommissioned many years ago, the incidence of birth defects in Sacramento County decreased significantly, after a steady increase during the years it operated. Instead of further limiting abortions, our legislators should limit the menace to our health in Butte County, Idaho.

Don't forget officials who turned a deaf ear

While I may not agree with the Democrats' ploy to drag out the legislative session since it costs $30,000 per day, I do totally understand and relate to the frustration they feel toward most of their fellow legislators for not listening to their constituents and for making no attempt to find more money to reduce cuts to the state budget.

It's amazing how Rep. Erik Simpson can say Idahoans showed their intent by voting for Republicans in November, but then the Republicans choose to ignore these same voters when they write thousands of letters to each legislator clearly expressing their views about education and Medicaid and their willingness to raise taxes on cigarettes and prison fines.

These legislators and the governor took the stand from the beginning that there was no way to retain the current budget and thus refused to consider any proposals that would have raised extra revenue. They decided the general populace did not understand the bills that were presented and so refused to listen to the thousands of people who sent emails, made phone calls and traveled to Boise to express their views.

It is a long time until the next elections, but Idahoans, I hope you will remember that the governor, state superintendent of schools and most of our legislators refused to listen to their constituents and that you not vote these people back into office. Republican Party, I hope you start looking now for trustworthy people who will actually represent the people and start encouraging them to run for office.

Federal judge, 103, still hearing cases in Kansas

By Roxana Hegeman
Associated Press

WICHITA, Kan. — In a courtroom in Wichita, the day begins much as it has for the past 49 years: Court is in session, U.S. District Judge Wesley Brown presiding. But what happens next is no longer routine; it's a testament to one man's sheer determination.

As lawyers and litigants wait in respectful silence, Brown, who is 103, carefully steers his power wheelchair behind the bench, his stooped frame almost disappearing behind its wooden bulk. He adjusts under his nose the plastic tubes from the oxygen tank lying next to the day's case documents. Then his voice rings out loud and firm to his law clerk, "Call your case!"

Brown is the oldest working federal judge in the nation, one of four appointees by President Kennedy still on the bench. Federal judgeships are lifetime appointments, and no one has taken that term more seriously than Brown.

"As a federal judge, I was appointed for life or good behavior, whichever I lose first," Brown quipped in an interview. How does he plan to leave the post? "Feet first," he says.

In a profession where advanced age isn't unusual — and, indeed, is valued as a source of judicial wisdom — Brown has left legal colleagues awestruck by his stamina and devotion to work. His service also epitomizes how the federal court system keeps working even as litigation steadily increases, new judgeships remain rare, and judicial openings go unfilled for months or years.

"Senior judges keep the federal court system afloat given the rising case loads," said David Sellers, spokesman for the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts. Of the 1,294 sitting federal judges, Brown is one of 516 on "senior status," a form of semi-retirement that allows a judge to collect his salary but work at a reduced case level if he chooses. They handle almost a quarter of federal district trials.

And no one alive has logged more service than Brown, who took senior status in 1979 but still worked fulltime until recently. In March, he stopped taking new criminal cases and lightened his case load a bit. He still takes his full share of the new civil cases.

"I do it to be a public service," Brown said. "You got to have a reason to live. As long as you perform a public service, you have a reason to live."

Brown gets a ride to the federal courthouse at 8:30 a.m. every workday from the assisted living center where he lives. Until he was in his 90s, he climbed the stairs to his fourth-floor chambers. He works until about 3 p.m. presiding over hearings, reading court filings and discussing cases with his law clerks who handle the legal research.

In one concession to age, he keeps court hearings relatively short. But he listens intently to testimony and tells defendants to speak up or slow down if he has trouble following their statements. And, if necessary, he can be stern with lawyers, prodding them in a strong voice not to waste time.

Brown is known for his compassion for defendants, even those he sends to prison. When he sentenced Kassie Liebsch last month to 37 months for her role in a ticket scalping scandal, he told the tearful 28-year-old woman how much he and other court officials wanted her to succeed in the future.

"As an old man, it is hard for me to say I am sorry it happened," Brown told her. "I know you will do the right thing. Good luck and be well."

Brown also serves as senior statesman in the courthouse, giving colleagues the benefit of his long experience.

"He never pressures us or tells us what to do," said District Judge Eric Melgren, 54. "He shares his thoughts and we can benefit as we see fit."

Subway blasts kill 11 in capital

MINSK — An explosion tore through a key subway station in the Belarusian capital of Minsk during evening rush hour Monday killing 11 people and wounding 126. An official said the blast was a terrorist act.

President Alexander Lukashenko did not say what caused the explosion at the Oktyabrskaya subway station, but suggested outside forces could be behind it.

"I do not rule out that this gift could have been brought from outside," Lukashenko said. The authoritarian leader, under strong pressure from the West over his suppression of the opposition, has frequently alleged outside forces seek to destabilize his regime.

Deputy prosecutor-general Andrei Shved said the blast was a terrorist act, but did not give further details.

JAPAN
Nuclear crisis matches Chernobyl

TOKYO — Japan's nuclear regulators raised the severity level of the crisis at a stricken nuclear plant Tuesday to rank it on par with the 1986 Chernobyl disaster.

An official with the Nuclear Safety Commission of Japan, speaking on national television, said the rating was being raised from 5 to 7 — the highest level on the international scale.

The official, who was not named, said the amount of radiation leaking from the Fukushima Dai-ichi nuclear plant was around 10 percent of the Chernobyl accident.

The level 7 signifies a "major accident" with "wider consequences" than the previous level, according to the standards scale.

"We have upgraded the severity level to 7 as the impact of radiation leaks has been widespread from the air, vegetables, tap water and the ocean," said Minoru Oogoda of Japan's Nuclear and Industrial Safety Agency.

Gbagbo captured; standoff ends

ABIDJAN — The elected president of this West African nation heralded "the dawn of a new era of hope" Monday when a bloody, four-month standoff ended with the capture of his rival, the longtime strongman who lost the vote but refused to give up power.

Video of former President Laurent Gbagbo being led into a room in a white undershirt was broadcast on television as proof of his detention. He would not sign a statement formally ceding power after losing a Nov. 28 election to economist Alassane Ouattara.

More than 1 million civilians fled their homes and untold numbers were killed in the power struggle between the two rivals that threatened to re-ignite a civil war in the world's largest cocoa producer. Gbagbo's security forces have been accused of using cannons, 60 mm mortars and 50-caliber machine guns to mow down opponents during the standoff.

"After more than four months of post-electoral crisis, marked by so many human lives lost, we are finally at the dawn of a new era of hope," Ouattara said in an address to the nation on radio and television.

Two arrested as burqa ban begins

PARIS — Two women wearing Islamic face veils or niqabs were detained by police in Paris Monday as a controversial ban on garments that cover the face — dubbed the burqa ban — came into force.

The two were part of a group of a dozen people protesting the ban in front of Notre Dame Cathedral.

A police spokesman told the German news agency dpa that three people had been detained over the protest "because they were taking part in an undeclared demonstration" and not because two of the women were wearing the niqab.

They had been brought to a police station for an identity check, the spokesman said. He could not confirm whether they had been fined.

The demonstration was organized by an organization called Don't Touch My Constitution, which opposes the law that was passed last October but only came into effect Monday.

Under the law, which forbids people from concealing their face in public, a woman wearing a burqa (a garment that covers the body from head to toe) or a niqab (a veil that covers the face with a slit for the eyes) can be fined 150 euros ($217) or forced to take classes on citizenship.

Gooding plants seeds of community garden, and collaboration sprouts

By Emily Katseanes
Times-News correspondent

GOODING — Eric Moore had a terrible view out his office at the U.S. Food and Drug Administration building in Gooding. The window let in plenty of light, but it overlooked an unused field rocks and weeds. Thanks to an idea Moore had two years ago, the weeds and rocks are gone now, and the seeds of a new view are planted in the muddy field.

Moore, with the permission of the field's owners, is working to turn the acre and a half into a community garden. Moore envisioned community members taking over plots to grow vegetables, herbs and fruit for their own tables or for community food banks. He hoped high school kids would end up working alongside senior citizens. He saw opportunities for grammar school children to learn about where their food comes from and about the natural world around them.

So far, it looks like that's exactly what's going to happen.

Moore was joined early on in his mission by the Mayor's Youth Advisory Council, whose members stepped up to help Moore spread the word about the project to the community.

"To me, they're the verb. Community garden is the noun," Moore said.

One of the presentations Moore and the YAC made was to the Gooding City Council, which agreed to put up the costs to pump water to the garden, including a drinking fountain.

"I think this is a great

Eric Moore rests from taking a soil sample of the plot he's been working to turn into a community garden in Gooding. Behind him is the office with the terrible view that gave Moore the idea.

With money, supplies and time donated by local businesses, by the city of Gooding and by individuals, what the project most needs now is for people to come out and share their plant know-how or to get dirty working in their own plots, said the man behind the garden, Eric Moore. Seedling starters are also welcome.

In Gooding's new community garden, use of a 15-by-15-foot or 25-by-25-foot plot is free.

T.F. is hungry for community gardening

By Virginia Hutchins
Times-News writer

Community gardening is a concept that has greened urban neighborhoods around the United States; taught city dwellers about food production, composting and water conservation; and transformed neglected vacant lots into centerpieces of community cooperation.

In these gardens, anyone can rent a plot for the growing season and keep — or donate — the harvest it produces. So the idea became popular first in land-starved urban areas where many residents had no dirt of their own.

But the concept started to make sense even in Twin Falls back in 2003, when the College of Southern Idaho first offered plots in its community garden just north of the campus. Development was rapidly replacing farm ground on the city's edges, and new apartment complexes were rising.

And Twin Falls, it turned out, loved community gardening. The college's plots-for-rent cater to apartment dwellers yearning for a little soil under their fingernails. To homeowners unwilling to sacrifice lawn for garden rows. To first-time growers needing pointers and encouragement. To vegetable vendors too cramped in their backyards for profitable production.

And the plots are in demand.

In CSI's community garden, all 40 plots are already claimed for this season by returning gardeners or by new ones from the top of the waiting list. Six or seven people wanted plots who didn't get them this year, said Dawn Wendland, office specialist in CSI's agriculture department. The college's 25-by-50-foot plots rent for $40 per season, with water provided.

Now efforts are afoot to create more community gardening space in Twin Falls. The City Council this month formed a committee to look at potential community gardens on public property, following a request for a garden on a portion of the city's Harrison Park.

NOXIOUS AND INVASIVE?

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

The yellow flag iris doesn't look like a threat. To the untrained eye, its pretty golden blooms look little different from the other lovely irises that Idahoans cultivate in yards and gardens.

But this showoff flower is actually a danger: It displaces native plants, can restrict water flow in irrigation canals and ditches, and can even reduce the number of ducks and other waterfowl in a wetland. It's an invasive weed, and plant professionals in Idaho are trying to get rid of it.

To help educate gardeners and even nurseries about which plants are on the list of noxious and invasive species, the Idaho Nursery and Landscape Association has published a 20-page color brochure describing many of these species and offering similar alternatives that are not dangerous to our native plants. Called "Plant this, not that," the brochure proved so popular at a recent home and garden show in Boise that there are only a few paper copies left.

"We worked with the Idaho State Department of Agriculture on this project, and they started it, but ran out of money to produce it," said Julie Jacobson, marketing and education director for the INLA. Her organization got a grant to print the brochures, which became available in late February, and she hopes to get a second grant to print more next year. "You have to be careful, that's why we're trying to educate everybody."

Jacobson said the list of noxious and invasive species changes frequently; for example, water hyacinth was taken off the list of noxious species last year, but was placed on the list of invasive species this year.

Noxious species are those that should be removed immediately and thoroughly — ask your local extension office about the proper way to dispose of any plant material you remove, as that can change with location and species.

Invasive species are usually a bit less dangerous but should not be encouraged. The nursery association is asking that gardeners voluntarily remove these species, and nurseries stop selling them.

Nursery buyers sometimes have a hard time keeping up with the changing list, so in some cases home gardeners can find some of these species inadvertently for sale at their local nurseries.

"I pretty much know what's on the national list, but there's always something new it seems like. A lot of times your suppliers will tell you," said Dave Freeman, production manager at Southern Idaho Landscape Center in Filer. He also noted that some plants that are OK in other areas of Idaho are forbidden in our area. "Usually, (suppliers) say they can ship to Idaho, until you tell them you're in southern Idaho."

Freeman keeps a running list of the dangerous plants on his desk, and consults it when he is asked about a plant he's not familiar with.

"I just had a gentleman in here last week for a plant that he had in Nevada, and I looked it up and it was on the invasive species list," he said. "Usually it's something out of the common that (a customer) had in their family farm back East, or used in a real drought-stricken area."

Noxious and invasive species are often very difficult to get rid of, because

Voltage surge can harm many things in your house

DEAR JIM: We have many electronic gadgets in our house, and I am concerned about a voltage surge ruining them. Are there whole-house surge suppressors which will protect everything electric in our house?
— Sandi S.

DEAR SANDI: People often think of only electronic gadgets such as computers, game consoles and audio/visual items as being at risk from electrical surges. Actually, nearly every electric item in a house today has some sort of sensitive electronics which can be damaged by a surge. These include ranges, dishwashers, air conditioners, fans, etc.

A very common source of an electrical surge is a thunderstorm. The voltage and current spikes from a lightning strike are enormous. If your house and wiring experience a direct or very nearby hit by lightning, even a good surge suppressor likely will not be able to protect all electronic items.

When a storm is forecast and you begin to hear the thunder off in the distance, unplug as many of your electronic devices as possible. Just switching them off may not be adequate protection. A huge voltage surge can arc across an open switch and still fry the electronic components.

It often is repeated smaller electrical surges which damage electronic equipment over time. These can be generated from the switching on and off of inductive equipment (usually electric motors) in nearby businesses. Some of these smaller surges can even be generated by your own vacuum cleaner, refrigerator compressor or clothes washer motors in your house wiring.

These smaller surges can slowly break down wire insulation or some electronic components over time. Eventually a wire may short out or the electronic component begins to malfunction and the appliance fails.

There are several types of whole-house surge suppressors available. Some mount on the circuit breaker panel indoors or are built into a circuit breaker. Others are designed to mount underneath an electric meter. Many electric utility companies sell and install the electric-meter-style units for you. The circuit breaker panel models are not difficult to install, but hire an electrician to do it.

There are differences in the protection provided by various surge suppressors. A common design uses metal oxide varistors (MOV) to absorb the electricity surge and dissipate it before it flows through the house wiring.

A physically larger MOV can absorb a larger surge. The basic specifications to compare surge suppressors are the maximum surge current (amperes) and the total energy dissipation (joules) it can handle. A higher number for both is better.

Even though the surge suppressor protected your electronics, a large surge many burn out the MOV. Many models have a light on them to indicate if it is still functioning or not. Check it regularly and especially after a thunderstorm.

DEAR JIM: I like to use my brick fireplace, but I don't often because the room get smoky. The fireplace opening is pretty big. What can I do to reduce the smoking?

— Frank K.

DEAR FRANK: Have the chimney cleaned and inspected first to make sure nothing is blocking the smoke path. Tiles can break loose and fall together, partially blocking it. A chimney fire may have caused creosote to puff up.

If the height of the opening is too high above the burning logs, the draft can be insufficient. Try using a grate to raise the logs from the floor or put a steel plate across the top to reduce the height/width ratio of the opening.

Organic vs. synthetic fertilizers

Which is best for you?

By Dean Fosdick
For The Associated Press

Another growing season is fast approaching, and before you can seed you must feed.

Now is the time to decide whether to use organic or synthetic fertilizers to enrich the soil. They produce similar results but come at it from different directions.

Most organic fertilizers are derived from plants and animals. This group includes manure, bone and blood meal, seaweed, compost and minerals. All are rich in nutrients, but must be "cured" or broken down by bacteria before they can nurture plants and condition soils.

Synthetic fertilizers are commercially produced from petroleum or natural gas, and are packaged in easy-to-apply granular or liquid forms. They give plants a vigorous although short-term jolt.

"Plants don't know the difference if you're using a synthetic or an organic. It's all chemical to them," said Valerie Locher, a horticulturist and landscape manager from Housatonic, Mass. "But the beauty of organics is that they're naturally slow-release. They're there for the entire season."

Locher uses synthetic fertilizers when planting flowers in containers. "I plant a lot of annuals so I want their growth to be really quick," she said. "Synthetics leach into the soil with the first watering. Instant nourishment."

Organic fertilizers may not be the answer if:

- You don't like odors. "Fermented seaweed and fish make beautiful fertilizers but they're often difficult to use because they smell," Locher said. "If you're spreading something like minerals on the ground, there's no odor problem."

- You want to reduce your workload. "If it's a compacted soil and you have a hard time breaking ground, then it will be hard for any roots to grow," Locher said. "That means you'll have to do a lot of soil work in the spring — I call it 'fluffing' — to mix your nutrition deep into the ground."

Synthetics are easier in this case because they can be broadcast over the surface of the ground. The granules or liquids seep into the soil as soon as water is applied.

- You're looking for consistency. Synthetic fertilizers are sold with a three-digit chemical code displayed on each bag. If the label reads "10-10-10," it's a blend of 10 percent nitrogen, 10 percent phosphorus and 10 percent idea," Gooding Mayor Duke Morton said at the Jan. 19 council meeting. Morton said he particularly looks forward to a pumpkin-growing contest.

The local support snowballed from there.

Farmer Louis Davenport plowed the field. Sabala Farms volunteered compost and the laying of it. Elisha Woodford volunteered her seeds and to start seedlings.

"It's something I would have liked to try myself, but it's just the organization," she said. "(Moore's) pretty amazing — all the connections he has made and gotten people involved."

After Woodford, area greenhouse owners volunteered their warm interiors for starter plants.

"The response to this from this little farming community has been humbling and uplifting," Moore said. "The community here has responded in an unbelievably positive way."

It didn't end there. More people began volunteering not just to help build up the garden, but to create the kind of community Moore had envisioned. Volunteer-fueled projects are in the works to build wheelchair-accessible plant beds, to plant a tactile garden for blind gardeners and to work with green thumbs for whom English is a second language.

"We're not just growing a garden," Moore said. "We're growing a community."

And for some of the garden's earliest supporters, the work hasn't ended. April 2 saw the YAC out on a blustery day, picking rocks out of the field. Though their numbers were diminished due to a clash with prom night, half a dozen kids that day pulled enough rocks to create five child-size piles and even unearthed stones from an old school that once stood on the plot.

But the rock pickers really have their sights set on another project in the dirt: finally growing something.

Eight-year-old Colby Thompson said he's looking forward to rows of peas, carrots, corn and even broccoli. The last one drew a loud "ew" from fellow YAC potassium by weight. (What's left is filler, usually sand or limestone.)

But organic fertilizers, especially the kitchen composts or farmyard manures, are variable mixtures. An all-purpose, 4-6-2 load when supplied one year may test out as an acidic 4-3-6 application when delivered the next.

Organics, however, do provide benefits you won't get from the synthetics. Organic fertilizers:

- Build up the soil structure, boosting its water-holding capacity, and adding to its biodiversity and long-term productivity.

- Improve drainage, minimizing soil erosion and soluble nitrogen- and phosphorus-rich runoff.

You don't have to be an organic gardener to use organic fertilizers. It may just be practical. Many can be obtained in bulk for little or no cost from nearby livestock operations, municipal green-waste collection centers and dump sites, said Richard Koenig, a soil scientist at Washington State University.

"Recycling makes use of materials that otherwise would go to a landfill," Koenig said. "You can get hung up too much about what makes a fertilizer. Basically, anything organic can be used directly or indirectly in the soil."

member Dominique Huggett, 12.

YAC adviser Chris Thompson said the project was as perfect for the YAC as the field now is for a garden.

"We wanted something big," Thompson said. "This seemed like something really good we could grab onto."

Big is exactly what Moore's once-modest project has become. With $500 donated from King's and up to $13,500 from Glanbia, Moore can add a storage shed, small pavilion and paid summer workers to his vision.

"Every day has brought something new," Moore said. "People call up and say, 'What can I do?' I wish my life was this easy."

But it keeps coming back to the original, down-to-earth goal.

"In my mind, I see different colors and shades and greens and yellows," Moore said.

Hardware chic, fitting fixtures

By Jennifer Barger
The Washington Post

Hardware stores play a major part in house projects such as painting walls and repairing toilets. But Stephen Antonson and Kathleen Hackett see the potential in Ace, Home Depot and the like to turn pipes and pegboard into modern decorations and furnishings, with a little bit of DIY ingenuity.

The New York husband and wife provide instructions for several such projects in their new book, "Home From the Hardware Store" (Rodale, $23). Antonson, an artist, designer and father of two, talked about the couple's inspiration for the book and how not to hurt yourself when assembling their designs. Excerpts:

Q When did it occur to you that hardware could be transformed into decorative, functional things?

A When I made my now-wife a chandelier from baling wire and chains. I'm an artist, and inevitably on the weekends I'd find myself at the hardware store, sometimes two or three times. And it started to look like a land of discovery to me.

Q How do you determine whether, say, a packing crate will make a good table or a drain grate can be turned into a lamp?

A I think anything at the hardware store is up for grabs. And if you don't know what something is, all the better. Just walk the aisles at the hardware store, and try to imagine what something could be, not what it is.

Q What's your favorite project in the book?

A We did a screen using bi-fold doors, craft paper and thumbtacks, which is pretty cool.

Galvanized metal elbows used in ductwork can make a mod table base. From 'Home From the Hardware Store,' by Stephen Antonson and Kathleen Hackett.

Pegboard and colorful rubber bands can be made into a no-thumbtack bulletin board.

Q Isn't there a danger that newbies will hurt themselves turning piping into table bases?

A The only injury I can envision is if you're using a saw. But these aren't really building projects; they are more about assembling. We have a candlestick project that is just putting plumbing parts together, and you can do it in five minutes.

Q How do you suggest mixing these hardware store pieces into a home?

A I think you mix these with things that are not industrial at all, like an 18th-

The new book 'Home From the Hardware Store' illustrates how pipe, galvanized metal and other objects can be transformed into items for your home. Instead of pricey wallpaper, HVAC foil tape can create sleek stripes on interior walls.

With a little twist of the wrist, pipes and fittings morph into a candelabrum.

century Swedish sofa. That'll keep things interesting.

Q Why do you think industrial furnishings are in style now?

A There's been this whole shift to mid-century modern furniture and lighting, and I feel like it's almost that profile that has spurred this. The way people live now, they don't want a Victorian tea-set holder in the corner; they'd rather do a wall shelf unit made of cardboard tubing.

Q You have a lot of kids' projects in the book, like a robot lamp made of metal tubing.

A The hardware store has so much raw material that's made to last, it's ideal for things like building forts or crazy costumes.

Q Do you think there are other unmined sources of good home projects?

A Kitchen-supply stores could be great for office organization projects. Just think about all those little steel containers and forms: You could put them in drawers or on the desk to hold things. My point with all of this is that you should zig, not zag, when you think about your home.

How to divide and conquer: A place for every document

By Jura Koncius
The Washington Post

Tips for handling the piles of paper in your home:

- Create a "To Be Filed" inbox, tray, basket or folder to hold things you want to save but don't have time to deal with immediately.
- Set up two kinds of files: a tabletop holder or basket for frequently used active files and a filing cabinet or box for permanent files.
- If you are a piler, not a filer, buy stackable trays or flat document boxes, label them and use them as you would file folders.
- Set up a designated area for opening mail, with a shredder, recycling bin and trash can nearby. Also have a bin for bills to be paid; put in bills and payment envelopes only.

they crowd out native plants and have propagation methods like tubers or wide-spreading seeds that are hard to control. Removal methods vary from species to species.

"It's pretty much plant-specific," Freeman said, noting that it often takes very harsh chemicals to kill some of these plants entirely. He also said it's important to tell the nursery where you buy your chemicals what the situation is with each plant; he has had people spray their entire yards with RoundUp trying to kill dandelions or thistles, not realizing the spray will kill every plant it touches.

"There's something made for just about everything, even the tough perennials," he said. "There's ways of getting rid of them; it's just the proper application at the proper time."

Seven plants are listed as noxious and invasive in the INLA's brochure — Mediterranean sage, knotweeds, purple loosestrife, oxeye daisy, parrotfeather milfoil, Brazilian elodea and saltcedar — and 10 listed for voluntary gardener removal.

With each of these dangerous plants, there is a description, photo and explanation of why it should be removed. Three safe alternatives are listed, with details about what they look like and how they grow.

Lawn & Garden Time

Fertilizing your Garden

VEGETABLE AND FLOWER GARDENS - Spread the recommended amount of “ fertilizer uniformly over your garden. Mix or till it, 4 to 6 inches into the soil, before seeding or transplanting. This method of application reduces the potential of salt injury to germinating seeds or young transplants. Certain vegetable crops require additional “ nitrogen during the growing season. Some of these vegetables are tomatoes, potatoes, sweet corn, cabbage, squash, okra, beans, and peppers. Always water after applying fertilizer to help the movement of nutrients into the root zone.

ROSES - Roses have a high need for calcium. Lime recommendations are designed to maintain soil pH within a range of 6.0 to 6.5. A rate of 50 lbs per 1000 square feet is equivalent to spreading 1/2 cup around a plant to a distance of 18 inches. For best results, mix lime into the top 3 to 4 inches of soil. Apply fertilizer in April or when the first flower buds appear. Apply additional nitrogen at monthly intervals through August. Water thoroughly following fertilizer application.

ORNAMENTAL SHRUBS - The best time to apply fertilizer is in the early spring, usually one month prior to the most rapid growth period. Spread fertilizers evenly around the plant 10 to 12 inches from the base and water thoroughly. In cases where many plants are being planted in beds, mix or till lime and fertilizer before setting plants. Always apply any recommended lime several weeks before planting to allow enough time to adjust soil acidity.

SHADE TREES - Apply fertilizer prior to budding. Mature trees growing within a lawn seldom need any fertilizer beyond that applied to the lawn. Spread the fertilizer evenly around the tree starting 12 inches from the trunk and out just beyond the farthest point where water drips off the tree (drip line).

Nampa beef plant closed Facility's age, shortage of cattle blamed

By Cindy Snyder
Times News correspondent

TWIN FALLS — Closure of a beef packing plant will affect cattle producers across southern Idaho, but the impacts are hard to gauge.

XL Four Star Beef, Inc. announced Friday that it will close its Nampa beef processing plant in early June, eliminating about 500 jobs in the process.

"We regret that we have had to take such extreme action, but the economics of operating the facility combined with the capital requirements of a plant of this age make it unfeasible to operate," said Brian Nilsson, co-CEO of XL.

Swift & Co. operated the plant until closing it in August 2005. XL Foods bought the plant and an Omaha, Neb., plant from Swift in April 2006 and reopened the Nampa plant in February 2007.

XL Foods is part of the Nilsson Brothers Group, a Canadian cattle feeding and marketing company with operations in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The plant was built by Kings Packing Co. in the mid 1920s. Over the years it has been owned by a series of companies including Armour Food Co., ConAgra and Swift & Co. At peak capacity, the plant could process 1,000 to 1,100 head per day of primarily mature, culled cows.

While company officials pointed to the plant's age as a primary reason for the closure, a shrinking beef herd contributed to the decision.

"They just couldn't get enough cattle to come through the plant," said Wyatt Prescott, executive vice president for the Idaho Cattle Association. "Our herds have been cut to the point that there's just not enough cows out there."

Idaho's beef herd is beginning to show a slight increase, but the latest cow inventory released by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in January showed just 92.6 million head of cows and calves in the U.S. That's the lowest January 1 inventory since 1958.

Beef cows represented 30.9 million head, down 2 percent from 2010. The 2010 calf crop was estimated at 35.7 million head, the smallest calf crop since 1950.

Idaho had 446,000 beef cows and 95,000 head of replacement heifers on January 1, up 1 percent and 5 percent, respectively, from 2010.

Higher cull rates

The weak U.S. dollar and strong prices for ground beef have given producers an incentive to trim their herds. When fat cows were bringing 34 cents per pound, ranchers may let a few cows that lost their calves stay in the herd to be rebred the following year.

But when fat cow prices climbed to 60 cents per pound last fall and hay prices were forecast higher, ranchers culled their herds heavily. As ground beef demand remained strong even with high cull rates from both beef and dairy herds, buyers increased the price they were willing to pay for fat cows. For the last few months, fat cows have

Plant disease raises questions on genetically modified crops

By P.J. Huffstutter
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES— Bouncing down a dirt road a couple of summers ago, past a gentle patchwork of barnyards and soybean fields in central Iowa, farmer Kent Friedrichsen strained over the steering wheel of his van and stared through the windshield in dismay.

His soybean fields, where he'd used seeds developed by Monsanto Co. and sprayed with its popular glyphosate weed killer Roundup Ready, were littered with yellowed leaves and dead plants. Four days earlier, the plants had been waist high and emerald green.

Nearby, in fields where he had planted seeds that weren't genetically engineered and didn't use glyphosates, the soybean plants were still healthy and lush.

Farmers call this "sudden death syndrome," a plant disease that has plagued the country's heartland and the nation's estimated $36.8 billion soybean industry. Scientists who first spotted the disease in Arkansas in 1971 — more than 20 years before Monsanto introduced its Roundup Ready soybeans in the U.S. — blame damp weather and a fungus that rots the plant roots.

But, Friedrichsen said, "for years, I've wondered whether there wasn't something else."

Now, despite mountains of research to the contrary, one soil scientist is roiling the agricultural world with claims that there might be some truth to the farmer's unease.

Don M. Huber, an emeritus professor at Purdue University who has done research for Monsanto on chemical herbicides, alleges that he has found a link between genetically modified crops and crop diseases: an "unknown organism" he and other researchers claim to have discovered last summer in Midwestern fields like Friedrichsen's.

"This organism appears NEW to science!" Huber wrote in a letter in January to Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack about the matter. He claimed the unknown organism may also be linked to infertility in livestock.

He added, "I believe the threat we are facing from this pathogen is unique and of a high-risk status. In layman's terms, it should be treated as an emergency."

Huber, 76, asked in the letter for the U.S. Department of Agriculture to investigate.

A USDA spokesman said Huber's letter was forwarded to its correspondence office Friday.

Though the science behind Huber's claims is far from settled (and Huber has refused to make public any evidence of his claims) his letter has intensified the battle between those who believe technology is the only way to feed a ballooning global population and those who are increasingly fearful of it.

Huber's letter was leaked important for us to look into allegations involving our products. Our statement and subsequent conversations focus on requests to see the data used in drafting the letter, as decades of farmer use and data from numerous sources show a very different reality."

An official from the Iowa Department of Agriculture and Land Stewardship and researchers at Iowa State University have tried since last fall to get access to plant samples, but to no avail. Instead, Huber and his team have opted to talk to the media — rather than fellow scientists, said Robin Pruissner, entomologist for the Iowa agriculture department.

The American Phytopathological Society, of which Huber is a member, issued a statement distancing the group from him. Other leading agricultural research centers have dismissed Huber's claims as being far-fetched or irresponsible.

Corn stocks remain tight

By Cindy Snyder
Times News correspondent

U.S. Department of Agriculture forecasters didn't make a lot of changes in the monthly grain balance sheet, but what changes were made just confirm one thing live-stock producers already know: grain stocks are tight and feed prices are headed higher.

Helen Pound, an analyst with Penson Futures, called Friday's report "mystifying."

Analysts had expected USDA to lower U.S. corn ending stocks by 80 million bushels following release of the March quarterly stocks report that pegged March 1 corn inventories at 6.52 million bushels, 15 percent lower than a year ago and nearly 170 million bushels lower than the pre-report estimate.

That led many market watchers to believe USDA would revise the U.S. supply outlook downward — drastically downward — in the April 8th report.

"I can't find hide nor hair of those numbers in this report," Pound said.

Instead, USDA left total usage constant at 13.5 billion bushels and year-end supplies at 675 million bushels, which represents about 18 days of supply.

In comparison, the U.S. had 48 days of supply on hand August 30, 2010 — the end of the corn marketing year. USDA increased ethanol usage by 50 million bushels, citing favorable markets which became even more favorable after May crude oil futures closed at $112.70 Friday, the highest level since September 2008.

Lee 2nd quarter revenue drops

Times-News

Lee Enterprises Inc., which publishes the Times-News, St. Louis Post-Dispatch and other newspapers, announced Monday it expects to report a decline in revenue for its second quarter ending March 27.

Compared to the same period last year, Lee's revenue is expected to decrease by $6.5 to $7.5 million.

Operating expenses, however, are expected to decline by more than one percent. This is an improvement from previous forecasts which indicated operating expenses would likely increase by more than one percent.

Mary Junck, Lee chairman and chief executive officer, said in a press release that the late timing of the Easter holiday adversely affected revenue for the quarter.

Historically, Lee experiences an increase in revenue leading up to the holiday.

"Our experience in Twin Falls pretty much mirrors that of Lee overall," said Times-News Publisher John Pfeifer. "We're looking forward to Easter and some good spring weather to help propel sales forward."

Lee will issue its final report on May 6.

Lee proposes senior secured note offering

Lee Enterprises Inc., which publishes the Times-News and other newspapers, announced Monday plans to offer $1.05 billion, in two parts, of senior secured notes.

Proceeds will go to refinance existing debt, to mature in April 2012.

The Davenport, Iowa, publisher will offer $675 million of first-lien senior secured notes due 2017 and $375 million of second-lien senior secured notes due in 2018 and warrants to purchase a limited number of common stock.

Lee said it intends to use net proceeds to refinance substantially all of its existing debt, which includes $147 million in notes and $878.8 million outstanding under its credit agreement and is due to mature in April 2012.

Corn

The increase in ethanol was offset by a 50 million bushel decrease in estimated feed usage — another contradictory signal. Current estimates put hog and poultry numbers slightly ahead of last year, with feedlot numbers up significantly. However, USDA forecasters said relatively high milk prices were being offset by higher feed costs resulting in little projected growth in the dairy industry this year.

Although cheap wheat prices may entice producers to feed more wheat and less corn, USDA forecaster did not include higher wheat feed usage in the April report either.

Wheat feed use was held steady at 170 million bushels.

Increased use of distillers grains, a byproduct from ethanol production, may also be offsetting the decreased feed use but because the USDA report deals only with whole grains, that feedstuff can't be accounted for.

Analysts are now very skeptical that prices are high enough to ration supplies, pointing out that bumper crops are needed to just to keep up with growing demand.

"We need the rationing process to take place in order to survive at these low (carry-out) levels," Pound said.

Corn futures for May and June closed at the highest levels ever on Friday and the May contract added another 8 cents per bu. Monday to close at $7.76 per bushel despite a sell off in soybeans, wheat, gold and crude oil. Corn futures prices have more than doubled from a year ago.

USDA forecasters also pegged soybean ending stocks at 140 million bushels, a record low 4.2 percent of annual usage or 15 days of supply. But slowing demand weighed on the market and he May soybeans futures contract closed down 23-1/4 cents per bushel on Monday at $13.68-1/2. Soybean futures are up over 40 percent from a year ago.

Steve Meyer and Len Steiner, who write the Daily Livestock Report, said markets shrugged off the April report believing demand is still strong and stocks will get tighter. "The bottom line for the meat and poultry sectors is higher costs pending the result of this year's crops."

plentiful."

XL Four Star Beef buyers will continue to purchase mature cows for its Omaha, Neb., plant.

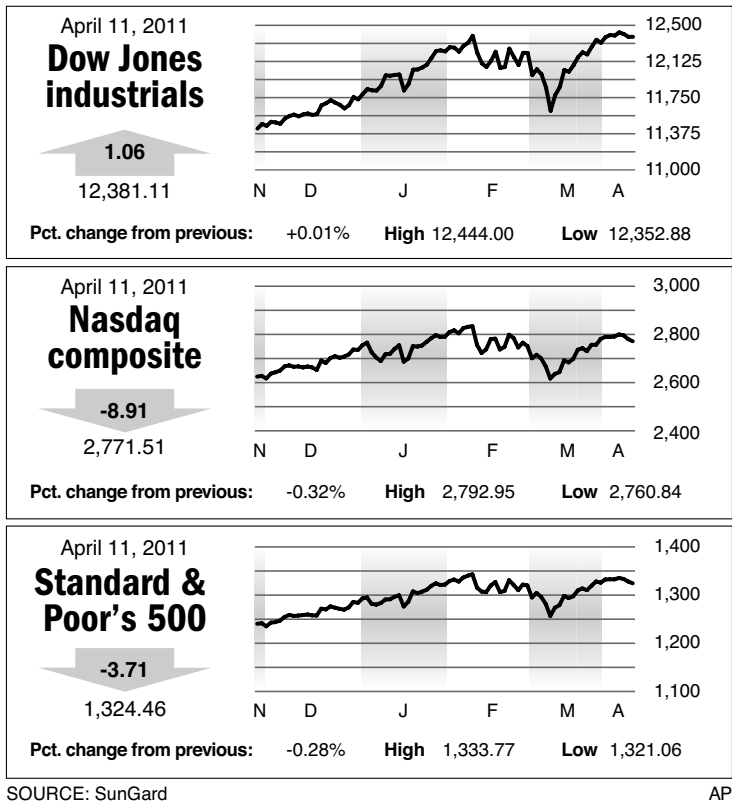

Although cattle prices are strong, producers are already feeling the pinch of $4.50 to $5 per gallon diesel prices.

Many of the mature beef cows sold in the Magic Valley were already being shipped to a processing plant near Phoenix, Ariz., before the Nampa closure was announced. The next closest facility is in Fresno, Calif. All of the 4-H steers from Twin Falls County were shipped to the Nampa plant for processing.

For years, fed cattle producers in the western states have shipped cattle to feedlots in the High Plains near corn fields. But it is becoming more economical to ship corn out West on the rail. Feeder cattle prices are being discounted by $8 per hundredweight compared to prices in the Plains.

The USDA's latest cattle on feed report showed a 13 percent increase over the previous year. Idaho's feedlots with a capacity of 1,000 head or more held 220,000 head on March 1. Nationwide, cattle on feed numbers were up 5 percent to 11.4 million head.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to respond to “Agnostic Dad in South Carolina” (Feb. 16), who wondered about how to answer the inevitable “Is there a God?” question his children will ask. My parents had strong but differing Christian faiths. They compromised when bringing us up, and we went to the church nearest our home (another denomination). Further, when we were teens, they allowed us to “sample” other religious traditions to determine what would suit us best.

I became agnostic, and like “Dad in S.C.,” was unsure what to tell my son. My husband and I do not belong to any organized religion and didn’t take him to church as a youngster. Instead, we introduced stories from the Bible at bedtime, and allowed him to attend his friends’ churches when he asked to. More important, we showed him that all people are to be valued and that differences are to be respected.

Our son is now in his late 20s. He’s a gentle, caring person with an interest in people from other cultures, religions and circumstances. Whether he is agnostic, religious or an atheist is a personal matter to him. He’s comfortable with his beliefs and doesn’t impose them on anyone else. As a parent, I couldn’t ask for more.

— FREE-THINKING MOM IN WASHINGTON

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR MOM: Thank you for writing. Many readers were eager to offer guidance on this subject to a fellow parent. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Despite eight years of Catholic education, I’m an atheist. My wife is a Lutheran. We’ve never argued about it because we feel everyone has a right to religious freedom. We have three sons, whom she took to church and Sunday school regularly with my complete support. We discussed in advance what our answer should be when the God question came up. Our response was: “Some people believe there is a God and others do not. You will get a sound religious education, and when the time comes, you will decide for yourself”

Our sons are now adults with families. Two are religious; one is not. At family meals we join hands and say grace. Some recite it — some just listen — and everybody’s happy.

— HARMONIOUS IN ILLINOIS

DEAR ABBY: There is no problem for “Agnostic” and his wife to “handle.” If his children ask if there’s a God, he should model honesty for them and say what he thinks. So should his wife. If the kids get two different answers, they will learn that not everyone shares the same opinion. Suggesting that “Dad” not express his view plainly, without input from his wife, amounts to recommending that they collude in providing a dishonest answer.

— EMERITUS PROFESSOR OF PHILOSOPHY IN IOWA

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are agnostic parents of two adult children, both of whom are tolerant, open-minded and decent people. My advice to “Dad” is to read some of the excellent books that are available about discussing God and religion with children. He should also look into the Unitarian Universalist church, which does not push any one creed but encourages people to find their own beliefs in a supportive environment.

IF APRIL 12 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: In the next four to six weeks, you may stumble upon a fabulous opportunity or be given a chance to show off your leadership abilities. Supportive, truly helpful people will be by your side who could offer you permanent assistance and your wise decisions may lead you to a brighter future. Late August and early September is a good period for a romantic vacation or fling. The rock and the hard place might cause you some stress in October and November. Strive to fulfill present responsibilities but don't add more to your burden.

Horoscope

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Open your heart. A lucky horseshoe is considered luckiest when the open end is up so good luck can fill it. Don't get off on the wrong foot with someone by being secretive or argumentative.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): There is no such thing as a saint without a past or a sinner without a future. The person you admire the most might not be exactly who or what you envision. Don't let fantasies interfere with reality.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Contain your enthusiasm. If you think too far outside of the box, you won't be able to ship your ideas anywhere. It is time to put finishing touches on a project without alienating your coworkers.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get more information. You may be a wee bit jealous when you see that other people have made a bundle with a certain investment but the timing might not be right for you to jump in headfirst.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Overnight success may take years to achieve. Don't be too anxious to get ahead as your business acumen must accumulate gradually. A few more days won't make a bit of difference to long range plans.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): When you work on your weaknesses you may discover strengths. You might imagine that you can be better than you are through sheer force of will or imagine you are worse than you are through guilt.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Where there's a will, there's a way. However, you may wish you'd spent your time and energy on something that will yield permanent results. Avoid being distracted by fantasies when money needs attention.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can never win unless you are willing to accept the consequences of failure. That lottery ticket might not win the pot, but you won't ever win the pot unless you buy the ticket in the first place.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The starting bell hasn't rung. What you are hearing is aggravation with the status quo. It starts an itch that makes you want to scratch. Wrap up current projects before beginning new ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Reconsider. Choices made in haste or based on anger are usually bad choices. Brooding over imagined slights and injustices could put you in the frame of mind to lash out at the wrong people.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You want most what you can't have. Stick to your goals like glue, even if something else looks especially enticing or intriguing. Distracting cravings are easily set into motion by frustrated desires.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take your time about making irrevocable decisions. You might be spurred on by others to make a hasty judgment call, but you are best served by using strength of character to resist a challenge or dare.

CSI's Jackson sees bright future at Baylor

Standout verbally commits to school

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

Baylor's void was Pierre Jackson's opportunity. An opportunity the 5-foot-10 College of Southern Idaho sophomore guard can't wait to seize.

"I see a good future in my next two years there at Baylor," said Jackson, who verbally committed to play for the Bears late Sunday night. "(We can) get it done, keep the winning going. We've got the pieces, hopefully I'll just be the last piece they needed."

The other pieces on Baylor's roster are a big reason Jackson chose the Bears over Creighton. He visited Creighton's campus in Omaha, Neb., last Thursday before heading to Waco, Texas, where he quickly meshed with Baylor's players.

"What Baylor has coming back next year — the front line is crazy," said Jackson. "... They got a couple NBA-caliber front-line players and they've got a couple freshmen coming in that are NBA caliber already on a couple mock drafts."

One of the big guys Jackson is eager to complement is 6-foot-11 Perry Jones, who announced Monday he'll return to Baylor for his sophomore season after averaging 13.9 points and 7.2 rebounds as a freshman. Quincy Acy, a 6-7 power forward, averaged 12.4 points and 7.6 boards for an 18-13 Baylor squad that finished eighth in the Big 12.

"They're a cool bunch. And the coaching staff, I got along with them," said Jackson, who called Baylor head coach Scott Drew "a cool dude."

While Drew's team has a bevy of talent up front, it was seeking a guard like Jackson to round things out.

"Baylor needed a point guard pretty bad last year," said Jackson, who averaged a team-high 18.6 points to go with 4.4 assists, 3.8 rebounds and 1.9 steals in leading CSI (33-4) to the NJCAA national title. "I guess I was the perfect guard for that situation."

Drew can't comment on Jackson until he signs an NCAA Letter of Intent with the school, something the CSI standout said he'll do as early as Wednesday when the late signing period begins.

Jackson said he didn't seriously consider schools other than Creighton and Baylor. While he liked Creighton, he said "Baylor's in a bigger and better conference, more competition, more exposure."

It's a great fit, according to CSI head coach Steve Gosar.

"I'm very happy for him and Baylor," Gosar told the Times-News in a text message. "He has worked extremely hard for this opportunity. I hope his two years at Baylor are as good as his two years at CSI."

Recruiting notes

- CSI sophomore center Kenny Buckner plans to officially sign with Boise State on Wednesday, joining Jackson in a signing ceremony.

- CSI guards Darius Smith and Issiah Grayson are still in the process of taking recruiting trips, with Smith recently returning from a visit to Eastern Illinois.

- While CSI freshman forward Mitch Bruneel could return next season, he is looking at several four-year programs, taking trips to Boise State and Utah State.

CSI catcher Morin lifts his game to new heights

Parker Morin paused, choosing the right words to describe the day he had to pack up his entire life and take it from sports-mad Texas to Park City, Utah, a city known for its ski slopes and its part in hosting the 2002 Winter Olympics.

"I remember pulling out of the driveway at my house, just heartbroken," Morin said.

Over time, a seventh-grader's disappointment gave way to a grown man's perspective for the College of Southern Idaho sophomore.

"If we hadn't moved to Utah, I probably wouldn't have started catching again. I wouldn't be where I am," he added. "If I wasn't catching I don't know if I'd be playing anymore. There are so many players at other positions, and I'm not all that fast and I didn't have the stuff to be a pitcher."

While the move kept him in the game, it's not what molded him into the envy of other hitters in the Scenic West Athletic Conference, where his .408 batting average is the only one above .400. It also didn't make his arm the artillery that's stopped more would-be base

Bonds waits as jury deliberates second day

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press writer

SAN FRANCISCO — Barry Bonds is going to have a longer wait for his verdict.

The jury considering four felony counts against the home run king deliberated without a conclusion for the second day Monday. The eight women and four men, who started their discussions on Friday before a weekend break, will resume work Tuesday morning.

The gap between closing arguments and verdict has grown longer than the gap between Bonds' record-tying and record-breaking home runs in 2007. The former MVP broke Hank Aaron's home run record on Aug. 7 when he hit No. 756, three days after matching Aaron.

Bonds, who also holds the single-season home run mark of 73, is charged with three counts of making false statements to a grand jury in 2003 and one count of obstruction of justice. He's accused of lying when he denied receiving steroids and human growth hormone from personal trainer Greg Anderson, and for saying he allowed only doctors to give him an injection.

For those trying to get a peek into the jury's thoughts, the panel has made requests to rehear two pieces of evidence that both center on the injection count.

On Friday, the jurors asked to hear a replay of the 2003 secret recording made by former Bonds business partner Steve Hoskins in which Anderson talks about injecting the slugger. Before the resumption of deliberations Monday, the panel spent 71 minutes hearing a clerk read back the March 31 testimony of Bonds' former personal shopper Kathy Hoskins — Steve's sister. She testified that she saw Anderson inject Bonds near the navel in 2002, becoming the only one of 25 witnesses at the trial to claim firsthand knowledge of Bonds being injected.

"This was very damaging testimony that contrasted starkly with his denials of steroid use that are the heart of this perjury case," said legal observer Joshua Berman, a former prosecutor who is now a criminal defense attorney in Washington D.C.

However, it's impossible to discern how many of the 12 jurors are focusing on that testimony and whether they feel the injection answer was material, or in layman's terms, important, to the grand jury's investigation. To convict Bonds of making a false statement, the jury must find both that what Bonds said was a lie and one that had an effect on the grand jury.

RECRUITING SERENDIPITY

A seventh-grade move from Texas to Utah wasn't the only big step in Parker Morin's journey to the College of Southern Idaho.

The two-time first-team all-state player at Park City High School fell in love with the Twin Falls campus on a visit that he nearly didn't get to make.

"I was playing on an academy team in Utah, and we were going to play at CSI. We didn't have enough money or a car, but somehow my dad figured out how to get a rental car so we could go," Morin said. "As soon as we got here I noticed that the field was really nice and we drove around the campus and I really liked it. Right then I knew that this was going on the list of places I wanted to play at."

During that visit, the academy coach and CSI coach

Schwartzel win shuts out Americans in majors

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press writer

AUGUSTA, Ga. — Good news travels much faster than when Gary Player first won the Masters.

It was only fitting that on the 50th anniversary of Player becoming the first non-American player in a green jacket, he watched another South African, Charl Schwartzel, become the first champion at Augusta National to finish with four straight birdies.

Player wasted no time sending his congratulations — on Twitter, of course, in a sign of the times. In the hours after Schwartzel won against a leaderboard that featured players from every continent on which golf is played, the 26-year-old champion sent Player a reply.

"Proud to follow your tradition!"

Player was an anomaly at the time he won, the first global player in a game that is more international than ever before.

Schwartzel's victory Sunday at the Masters was only the latest example of worldwide parity in golf.

For the first time since 1994 — and only the second since the Masters began in 1934 — non-American players hold the four major championships. Graeme McDowell of Northern Ireland won the U.S. Open last summer at Pebble Beach, followed by Louis Oosthuizen of South Africa at the British Open and Martin Kaymer of Germany at the PGA Championship.

"The world is big," Schwartzel said after the third round. "America is big, but the world is bigger. There's more people. It might change again. There's just a bunch of good players out there from the European Tour and even Asia."

Schwartzel is not a late bloomer in the game.

His father has a chicken farm in Vereeniging, near Pretoria, and he played golf three times a week.

Texas Rangers blank Tigers

DETROIT — Alexi Ogando outpitched Justin Verlander before leaving with a finger problem and the Texas Rangers won with a bold strategy, beating the Detroit Tigers 2-0 Monday.

The AL champions improved to 9-1, the top record in the majors and matching the best 10-game start in team history.

RAVS 16, RED SOX 5

BOSTON — Sam Fuld went 4 for 6 with a two-run homer, drove in three runs and fell a single shy of the cycle to lead Tampa Bay.

Johnny Damon had three hits, including a solo homer, and three RBIs, and John Jaso and Reid Brignac also drove in three runs apiece for the Rays.

ATHLETICS 2, WHITE SOX 1, 10 INNINGS

CHICAGO — Kurt Suzuki hit a go-ahead home run in the 10th inning, and Oakland capitalized on Juan Pierre's dropped fly ball in the ninth to tie it.

NATIONAL LEAGUE CUBS 5, ASTROS 4

HOUSTON — Starlin Castro, Darwin Barney and Marlon Byrd combined for seven hits, five runs and three RBIs and the Chicago Cubs held on for a 5-4 win over the Houston Astros on Monday night.

Castro had three hits and scored three runs, Byrd drove in a pair of runs and Barney hit an RBI triple as the Cubs jumped on the Astros early, building a 5-0 lead by the fourth inning. Alfonso Soriano drove in two runs with a double in the first.

ROCKIES 7, METS 6

NEW YORK — Troy Tulowitzki homered and drove in three runs, Carlos Gonzalez also had three RBIs and Colorado took advantage of a struggling New York Mets bullpen in a 7-6 victory Monday night.

Heat lock up East's No. 2 seed

ATLANTA — LeBron James scored 34 points and Miami locked up the No. 2 seed in the Eastern Conference with a 98-90 win over the Atlanta Hawks, who nearly rallied from a 20-point deficit while going with their backups in the fourth quarter Monday night.

Miami played its starters all the way, looking to clinch the second spot behind Chicago in the East. Shortly after beating the Hawks, the Heat got the news they wanted: third-place Boston lost at Washington in overtime.

The Hawks went with a makeshift lineup with the fifth see already locked up.

Atlanta tied the game at 88 in the closing minutes, but Miami outscored the Hawks 10-2 the rest of the way, with James Jones making two huge 3-pointers — including one that turned into a four-play when he was fouled by a leaping Josh Powell.

JAZZ 90, HORNETS 78

NEW ORLEANS — C.J. Miles and Devin Harris each scored 18 points, Paul Millsap added 16 and the Jazz won for only the second time in 12 games.

Chris Paul, who went scoreless for the first time in his career in a loss at Memphis a night earlier, had 15 points. Marco Belinelli, who had 13 points, was the only other starter in double figures for New Orleans, which shot 37.8 percent (28 of 74) while dropping its second straight. The Hornets (46-35), who are already playoff-bound, now hold the eighth seed in the Western Conference, a half game behind Memphis (46-34) and 1½ games behind Portland (46-33).

NUGGETS 134, WARRIORS 111

DENVER — J.R. Smith's 22 points led nine Nuggets in double figures and Kosta Koufos tied his career high with 18 points in Denver's win over Golden State.

MAVERICKS 98, ROCKETS 91, OT

HOUSTON — Dirk Nowitzki had 23 points and 12 rebounds, and Dallas beat Houston in overtime to move a half game ahead of the Los Angeles Lakers for the No. 2 seed in the Western Conference.

CAVALIERS 110, PISTONS 101

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Daniel Gibson scored 17 points, including a five-point play late in the third quarter, and the Cavaliers won a testy game in which Ryan Hollins and the Pistons' Charlie Villanueva were ejected after a skirmish.

Boomer Walker had a chat. The academy coach told Walker that there were two catchers, Morin and another that was already committed to a four-year school. Walker really liked both as far as recruitment went.

"I heard him say the one that's going to be in the red catching gear was already committed. So as we go through the day, I really like that kid in the red gear. And the other kid

I thought, 'He's just OK.' So we moved on, too bad we didn't have a chance at that other kid, there's no reason to even talk to him," Walker said. "A week before we went to Arizona (for a showcase event) I was talking to their coach again and he said, 'I never heard back from you on the Morin kid.'

"I said the kid we really liked was the kid in the red catching gear and he's committed, and he said,

'No, that's the Morin kid!'"

At that Arizona event Walker met Morin for the first time. Morin recalled the moment as if it had just happened.

"I remember (Walker) introducing himself to me and I was overjoyed," Morin said. "I think I overplayed that game, to be honest. I tried so hard to impress him and play catcher like he'd never seen it played before, because I knew how badly I wanted to come here."

Morin's only real suitors were CSI and Central Arizona, and CSI was the overwhelming favorite in Morin's eyes. But Central Arizona was pressing hard for an answer, and he didn't enjoy the visit as much as he did coming to CSI.

Eventually, the match was made, and the Golden Eagles have benefited greatly from the sequence of random strangeness.

stealers than any other catcher in the conference. And his teenage move certainly isn't what made Major League Baseball scouts start to take notice or bring around an opportunity to play in the Pacific-12 Conference next year.

Morin credits those stats and accolades to three things: A renewed commitment to hard work, a not-so-subtle push from the CSI coaching staff and a one-time challenger who left us too soon.

After a tough start to his freshman season, Morin was summoned into CSI coach Boomer Walker's office for a heart to heart. There was no denying Morin had talent, but there was much more he had to learn to be successful.

"Maybe a few weeks sooner than this time last year, I mentioned to (Morin) that, 'For you to get great opportunities, you're going to have to get yourself in better shape, get stronger, and spend a lot more time developing your game,'" Walker said. "He came from an unexposed area and he just needed to make up for some of that lack of experience with hard work. Fifty percent of people — and maybe not even that many — really trust in that fact and take it to heart and get after it. With Parker, from that day forward I've seen a new player."

Morin went from being the type of player who shows up and gets his work in to a guy you can't chase out of the facility no matter how hard you try. That made his batting average, and his overall level of play, skyrocket.

"By the time regionals rolled around (last season), I thought he was our best player," Walker said.

Much of that is owed to Morin's focus and determination to be a leader by example to a young Golden Eagle team — CSI is heavy on sophomores in the pitching staff but all but four position players are freshmen. The rest comes out of a respect for Devon Austin that lingers even though Austin's not here to see it.

The Eagles recruited Austin, a catcher from Coeur d'Alene who was Idaho's prep player of the year in 2010 and a late-round draftee of the Chicago Cubs, as another talented player to boost the club as a whole — not necessarily as a direct threat to supplant Morin. Nonetheless, the incumbent starting catcher took it as a challenge and set about doing everything he could to keep played together on Friday. "And that's how it started," Schwartzel said.

As a teenager, he took part in Els' junior program that traveled around the country to compete. Another kid from the other side of the country, Oosthuizen, also was part of that program. Oosthuizen hoisting a claret jug last summer at St. Andrews did not go unnoticed.

"That was a huge inspiration," Schwartzel said. "We grew up together from a young age. We played every single team event, and we represented South Africa for so long. We basically are the best of mates. So we know where our level of golf is, and just to see him do it made me realize that it's possible."
