Working against the wind

Wind energy jobs may be around the corner, but competition is still fierce

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

Eight new graduates from the College of Southern Idaho's wind energy program are facing what they didn't expect to be a difficult task — getting a job.

Although two of the grads found jobs in the industry, the rest are still on the hunt. For recent graduate Justin Miller, it hasn't been successful.

Miller, 35, sent out around 60 applications and received one interview, but he said there aren't jobs to be had and his expectations of potential employers knocking down his door after graduation haven't materialized.

The push for wind farms and wind energy education was labeled nationally as a hot job trend, but now graduates are experiencing the reality of the economy.

CSI doesn't provide direct job placement for their graduates, but Todd Schwarz, instructional dean, said the college helps with networking opportunities and works closely with industries to develop strong ties.

CSI Wind Energy Instructor Mark Goodman said he recently talked to developers about job prospects and said CSI may just be ahead of the curve.

"We need more infrastructure up in the state of Idaho to bring more jobs," he said,

Police: Filer man chased victims of car rollover

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

Tough accusations have been made about the Filer man who admittedly chased three Coeur d'Alene teenagers from a Filer house party on the night two of the teens died in a rollover car crash.

Kade Laughlin, 20 — labeled as a killer by people sympathetic to the victims' families — was arraigned last month in Twin Falls 5th District Magistrate Court for driving recklessly in pursuit of the teens. He was arrested hours after the fatal crash for driving under the influence, a charge for which he's currently on probation.

100-YEAR PIONEER

Western Days Pioneer of the Year Dorothy Custer plays her harmonica as she celebrates her 100th birthday Wednesday at her home in Twin Falls. The longtime Magic Valley resident will be among those featured in Saturday's 10 a.m. Western Days Parade.

Centenarian Custer named Western Days' top pioneer for second time

By Eva Stutzman
Times-News writer

For the second time in her long life, 100-year-old Dorothy Custer will be the Western Days Pioneer of the Year during this weekend's celebration of rural culture in Twin Falls.

The selection should come as no surprise to those familiar with the tack-sharp, harmonica-playing former teacher who has watched the Magic Valley evolve through a century of living.

"My father was a cowboy in this area before there was a town," Custer said earlier this week.

Custer, who has lived in the Magic Valley all her life, has pictures and memories of a very different Twin Falls than what exists today. Long before Interstate 84 stretched across the Magic Valley and Twin Falls grew to the southern precipice of the Snake River Canyon, Custer can recall riding horses to school in Hansen with her brother.

"We try to choose a longtime resident of Twin Falls who has been active in the community," said Western Days organizer Lisa Cuellar of Custer's second Pioneer of the Year selection.

Custer, who learned to teach at the College of Idaho, was an educator in the Magic Valley, teaching for three years in

U.S. Senate eyes closing local offices

Closures could be difficult in large Western states like Idaho

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

Sprinkled across six of Idaho's population hubs are offices that provide a link between residents and the Gem State's two U.S. senators.

The offices provide people access to those in public office without the lengthy trip to Washington, D.C. But the state offices of U.S. senators, like other parts of the federal budget, will be under scrutiny in the months before the nation's budget is set for the upcoming fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1.

Whether cuts will lead to office closures remains to be seen, but there's a willingness to at least consider it as the Senate works on the budget.

U.S. Sen. Ben Nelson, D-Neb. and chairman of the legislative branch panel of the Appropriations Committee, has indicated

Twin Falls police seek recycling center burglar

Times-News

Twin Falls police are seeking one man who's attempting to make treasures out of other men's trash.

Police are seeking a 6-foot-tall man with a shaved head and heavy stature who is responsible for what they call a rash of burglaries from local recycling centers.

A recording from a Pacific Steel & Recycling facility in Twin Falls shows the man enter the center's yard through a hole in the fence before spending up to an hour in the yard removing metal items. According to police, he's taken multiple aluminum truck wheels valued at about $1,000.

The suspect was caught on surveillance cameras wearing a flannel jacket.

Anyone with information related to the thefts is encouraged to call the Twin Falls Police Department at 735-4357. Tips that lead to a conviction may be eligible for a reward.

Laughlin

The misdemeanor reckless driving charge places no criminal responsibility on Laughlin for the Sept. 12, 2010, deaths of 19-year-old College of Southern Idaho baseball player Devon Austin, and his 18-year-old friend Ryan Reinhardt.

"This is the most serious charge we believe the evidence supports," Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs said Thursday. Loebs filed a criminal complaint against Laughlin on May 5.

Reinhardt, the driver, Austin and 19-year-old Jessica Duran, also of Coeur d'Alene, crashed when Reinhardt lost control of his 1998 Toyota Camry as he failed to make a curve on Clover Road near U.S. Highway 30 east of Filer.

An initial statement from the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Office reported that the car rolled several times and ejected its occupants, who were not wearing seat belts. Austin and Reinhardt died at the scene. Only Duran survived.

The Sept. 13 report also noted that alcohol was believed to be a factor in the crash, but Loebs has not released whether Reinhardt was driving while intoxicated.

Calls and letters to the local prosecutor's and sheriff's offices and the Times-News have questioned the lengthy investigation into the deaths and the lack of prosecution up until this point. Loebs said the case remains ongoing, adding that he will analyze any additional evidence that comes his way.

"I sympathize with the friends and family, but I believe the sheriff's office and my office have looked into this extensively," Loebs said. "We have filed our charges as justified by the facts."

According to a report filed by Twin Falls County Sheriff's Deputy Matthew Becker, Duran said Laughlin and a group of friends chased her, Austin and Reinhardt in a white pickup truck at a high rate of speed from a house party they left after a fight broke out. Duran said Laughlin had accused one of the group of stealing personal property from him.

According to Becker's report, Laughlin confirmed Duran's story and said he unsuccessfully tried to get ahead of the Camry and block the road. He denied making contact with the other vehicle or trying to "run them off the road."

The report does not label Laughlin as responsible for the fatal crash.

Laughlin was arrested hours later for driving under the influence, as a separate report noted that his blood-alcohol concentration was .153 when he was picked up. He pleaded guilty to the charge in March and was placed on a 12-month probation.

He was issued a summons on the reckless driving count in May and is scheduled for a June 21 pretrial conference in front of Magistrate Judge Nicole Cannon. The maximum penalty for reckless driving is six months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Laughlin is also scheduled for a June 7 pretrial conference on an unrelated charge of minor consumption of alcohol, which could be a violation of his DUI probation.

Downtown Twin Falls parking survey drawing mixed opinions

Downtown customers bulk of 200-plus respondents

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

More than 200 people have answered an ongoing online survey about downtown Twin Falls parking so far, the vast majority identifying themselves as customers.

After that, the results get a little more split: 53 percent of customers say the parking meters, at a rate of 25 cents an hour, don't affect their decision to come downtown; 58 percent say they don't think downtown parking should be regulated.

"(Paying to park) doesn't necessarily keep me from coming downtown, because A) it's not that expensive, and B) there's usually plenty of free parking available if you're willing to walk a little bit," one anonymous respondent, who said they were a

There were many other responses to the meters, including a suggestion that a parking garage be built or that a toll system be put in place so folks either pay for the time they actually park or get it validated by merchants. Several respondents also suggested getting rid of the meters altogether.

The issues business and property owners largely agreed on are that property taxes should pay for parking maintenance and management (82 percent), that meters are a detriment to attracting customers (67 percent agree or somewhat agree) and that there should be a parking maintenance/management program (68 percent).

Tom Ashenbrener, owner of Rudy's – A Cook's Paradise, said he used the preliminary results encouraging, especially because of the large number of customers that responded.

"They have an interest in the parking situation, which means they still have an interest in downtown," Ashenbrener said.

City Manager Travis Rothweiler said the responses so far have surpassed his expectations and thinks the survey will be a useful tool when the City Council makes a decision on downtown parking.

Wind

adding the proposed 425-megawatt China Mountain wind project would come in two phases, each providing around 25 to 30 jobs across 30,700 acres in northern Nevada and southern Idaho.

"I'm hoping we are positioning ourselves so when it comes time to bring that to fruition they will look to us," Goodman said. "We're as perplexed as our students why those jobs aren't immediately available. Developers need to get more products up and more jobs out."

The China Mountain project is still years away, and the influx of wind farms has led to an overabundance in energy for the current power structures.

In May, the Associated Press reported the Bonneville Power Administration, manager about a third of the electricity in the Pacific Northwest, curtailed power generation from alternate sources due to the surplus of water flowing through hydroelectric dams. With its capacity to transmit electricity met by hydropower, BPA ordered a five-hour shutdown of all other power generation coming into its system.

Plentiful hydropower could leave the West's burgeoning alternative energy industry vulnerable if established generation sources can meet current needs in an area that lacks the capacity to transmit excess energy elsewhere.

Idaho Power Co. spokeswoman Stephanie McCurdy said the company is not against wind energy, but the fickle nature of wind needs to be balanced with other power sources.

Schwarz said CSI's wind energy program gives students relevant skills that can transfer to other jobs, and the ebbs and flows in the wind industry are based on the government's decision to subdize projects.

"We tell students before they sign up that this appears to be a physically rigorous occupation and the nature of the labor force is in the sticks – don't count on living in urban areas. Many manufacturers move crews from state to state," Schwarz said.

"It's not like there are no opportunities, but sometimes students think that when they finish this program they will just have to wait by the phone."

Offices

that trimming money for state offices deserves a look. Nelson's committee sets the budget for the U.S. Senate's operations.

"This could be one potential area," said Jake Thompson, his spokesman.

At this point, it's just an idea that will be under consideration. In Idaho, a state with a wide geographic area and odd shape, shuttering any offices would hamper residents' ability to directly communicate with the staff of U.S. Sens. Jim Risch and Mike Crapo.

Both senators have offices in Twin Falls, Boise, Pocatello, Idaho Falls, Lewiston and Coeur d'Alene. No offices have been identified for possible shutdowns, and it may not become necessary as budget planning progresses.

"It would be difficult in a state like Idaho to eliminate an office," said Brad Hoaglund, a spokesman for Risch. "That means a population center would have to lose an office."

The staff salary costs for Idaho's senators at all locations combined, including Washington, D.C., amounted to $2.8 million for Crapo in fiscal year 2010, and $1.9 million for Risch, according to data compiled by LegiStorm, a nonpartisan organization that promotes government transparency.

Idaho's U.S. senators are already prudent with their budgets in areas like travel and office operations, staffers say.

Crapo has already shuttered two of his Idaho offices, said spokesman Lindsay Nothern. An office in Caldwell closed last year, and one in Moscow closed in 2001.

"Both of those were money-saving decisions," he said. "They were not easy decisions because there are constituents all over the state of Idaho."

As technology has advanced, more people are turning to email for communication, he said, but old-fashioned face time is still valued.

"Idaho is the kind of place where people still like to see you face-to-face and I don't think we want to change that anytime soon," he said.

Who really wrote Hokey Pokey? Now we'll never know

If you've lived in south-central Idaho for any length of time and don't know that Wendell's Larry LaPrise wrote the ubiquitous children's song Hokey Pokey, I'm revoking your citizenship.

LaPrise held a copyright on the song — and received royalty checks until he died on his 84th birthday in 1996. But his claims have always been controversial, and now the other songwriter who penned a version of Hokey Pokey is also gone.

Robert Degen, a musician from Scranton, Pa., who copyrighted a song called The Hokey Pokey Dance in 1944, died recently at age 104.

In 1956, Degen filed suit against LaPrise, the other members of the Ram Trio and several record companies and music publishers for copyright infringement, asking for $200,000 in damages and $1 for each record of the LaPrise version of Hokey Pokey. By then, LaPrise had sold the rights to the song to Acuff-Rose Music, a Nashville publishing company, that was later sold to Sony/ATV Music Publishing.

YOU DON'T SAY
Steve Crump

The suit was settled out of court, evidently in such a way that the two sets of authors would share ownership. Degen's son told The New York Times that the elder Degen also received royalty payments until his death.

The song and dance became a popular phenomenon in the United States after the LaPrise version, arranged for a big band, was recorded by Ray Anthony and his orchestra and released in 1953 as the B side of another novelty song, Bunny Hop.

But there's also a British incarnation of the music — The Hokey-Cokey — that's apparently much older. Its lyrics were devised as anti-Catholic taunts in Scotland in the 17th century, some critics say.

Several Scottish politicians — and the Catholic Church — want the song banned in public because of its purported pedigree.

LaPrise claimed the idea for Hokey Pokey came from a similar song his father used to sing in French when LaPrise was growing up in Detroit during World War I.

"It goes back a long ways," he told the Times-News in 1992. "It's been handed down over the years. We just put English words to it and changed the tune to suit the group."

At the urging of friends, LaPrise and the other two members of his trio, Charley Mason and Taft Baker, went to Salt Lake City and recorded Hokey Pokey in 1949 and copyrighted it a year later.

At about the same time, stories began to circulate in the United Kingdom that during World War II, a Canadian military officer suggested to British band-leader Al Tabor that he write a party song. The Hokey Pokey came from an ice cream vendor whom Tabor had heard as a boy, calling out "Hokey pokey penny a lump. Have a lick make you jump." Music publisher Jimmy Kennedy reneged on a financial agreement to promote and publish it, and finally Tabor settled out of court, giving up all rights to the song.

LaPrise, Mason and Baker earned a living playing at the Sun Valley Resort until 1965, when the new owners of Sun Valley canceled their contract and LaPrise went to work at the Ketchum post office.

With his wife, Donna, LaPrise moved to Wendell to care for their disabled daughter in 1973.

New historical trails? Park service wants input

By Kimberlee Kruesi
Times-News writer

The National Park Service is examining a large addition to its historical trail system, and it's asking people to cast their opinion on the new trails.

NPS hopes to add 64 new routes to the Oregon, California, Pony Express and Mormon Pioneer National Historic Trails in 12 states. This would add 11,000 miles to the national trail system.

This is the first time this kind of addition has been considered since the inception of the national trail system in 1968. While there are several stages left before the project is completed, asking for public opinion is a critical part of the process.

"There have been routes that have been marked as potential trails that could be added, but nothing to this degree," said Gretchen Ward, NPS chief planner of the trail addition initiative. "But we need to know if this is something the public actually wants, and, so far, the input has been positive."

Adding the routes to the historical trails system requires approval from Congress. In 2009, Congress passed legislation outlining that it would consider adding the historical trails only after the completion of a feasibility study. A little more than $900,000 has been allotted to the study, Ward said.

The public will also be able to comment and review a draft of the study before the final study and assessment are submitted to Congress in 2013.

The study will evaluate each route to determine the historical, national and recreational significance for the public.

"It is not enough for a trail to be important to a community," Ward said. "It needs to have national importance to be added."

The study also includes an environmental assessment that will determine potential environmental impacts the trail additions would have in various states.

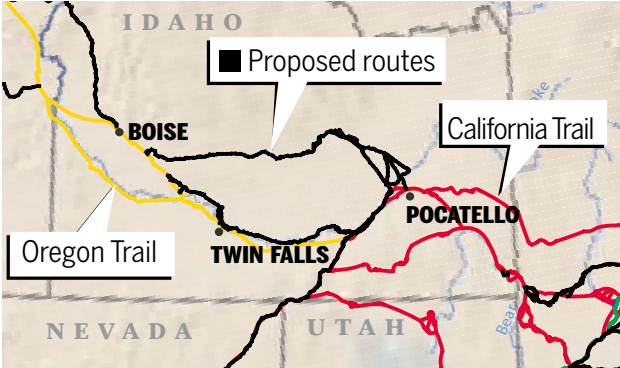

In Idaho, several routes are under review to be added to the Oregon Trail. The Oregon Trail runs through several counties in southern Idaho.

"We should support — and celebrate — the efforts to preserve our historic trails," said Mychel Mathews, Twin Falls County Historical Museum administrator and board member of the Twin Falls County Historic Preservation Commission.

"We have to preserve rem-

Q&A on proposed routes

The addition of the trails will be a multi-year process until Congress decides if it will approve the addition of the routes. However, here are some of the important points people should be aware of.

If approved, what will the new routes look like?

No plan has been released on how the trails will look, but along each route there must be several public access points.

How will this affect private property?

The historical trail system does not negate private property. If a route runs through private property or a city, the trail will probably not be added.

How do I submit comments?

Use the National Park Service's website at <http://parkplanning.nps.gov/4trails> nants of our past for future generations, even if the present generation doesn't recognize the significance of our past — or appreciate the efforts. Once lost, the collective memories of who we are and how we got here, are irretrievable."

Deadly horse virus found in horse in Bonneville County

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — The Idaho Department of Agriculture says another horse has been infected with the highly contagious Equine Herpes Virus-1, bringing the number of confirmed cases in the state to seven horses.

The department reported Sunday that the Bonneville County horse tested positive for the disease, and that it was only showing mild symptoms and was expected to recover.

The Post Register reports that the animal was a stablemate of horses that traveled to Ogden, Utah, for the Western National Cutting Championships several weeks ago. The event in Ogden, Utah is believed to be where the outbreak began.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture said last week that 75 confirmed cases of the disease have been reported in nine states. So far, 11 horses have died or been euthanized because of the disease.

Ruth Isabelle Thornborrow

May 30, 1924-May 31, 2011

Ruth Isabelle Thornborrow died Tuesday, May 31, 2011, a day after celebrating her 87th birthday following a short illness.

Ruth was born May 30, 1924, in Island Grove, Neb. At age 7 during the Great Depression, she moved with her family to Orange County, Calif. The family brought three prized possessions with them: a clock, a cake plate and the family Bible. They operated a boarding house for teachers and businessmen in Santa Ana, Calif.

During the war, Ruth met a young airman from Irvine, Robert (Pinky) Thornborrow. He convinced her to meet him while he was on leave in Laredo, Texas, and get married. Ruth had not seen him for several months when she boarded the train to Texas, and she worried the whole way about whether she would even recognize him. They returned to California and farmed on Irvine Ranch for 19 years, raising flowers and vegetables. In 1965, Ruth and Pinky bought Fairview Ranch near Buhl. They farmed various properties on the West End until Pinky's death in 2001. They were married 56 years.

Ruth led an active and interesting life. She was the organist at Immaculate Conception Parish in Buhl for 17 years. She was a league bowler and enjoyed golfing at Clear Lake Country Club. She was superintendent of the Home Arts building at the county fair for many years. Ruth enjoyed socializing, knitting and playing cards with her many friends. She took pride in the accomplishments of her children and grandchildren. She had a knack for telling stories and putting you in the moment.

Ruth is survived by her children, Sheila (Chris) Ridgway and Bob (Carlene) Thornborrow; seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her husband, Pinky; her son, Jack (Darcy) Thornborrow; her sister, Gladys; and brother, Bill.

She will be greatly missed by all who knew her.

A vigil service will be at 7 p.m. Friday, June 3, at Farmer Funeral Chapel in Buhl. A funeral Mass will be at 1 p.m. Saturday, June 4, at the Immaculate Conception Catholic Church in Buhl. Interment will follow at the West End Cemetery.

Irene Dorothy Ford

May 21, 1926-May 31, 2011

Irene Dorothy Ford, 89, of Twin Falls, died Tuesday, May 31, 2011, at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center.

Irene joins husband James "Jim" Ford after 26 years apart. Inseparable before his death, Irene said no one could ever live up to Jim's memory. Children, Jerry (Ogie), Bill (Louise) and Judy (Bill Morrison), fondly recall her life.

Irene was born in Buhl on May 21, 1926, and spent much of her early life on the family farm in Castleford. She attended Buhl High School and played tennis and basketball until the Girls Basketball League was canceled because it was not "ladylike." Irene did not agree with history class and remembered performing with her harmonica in class for a passing grade.

Irene married Jim in 1941 and moved to Twin Falls, where they raised Jerry, Bill and Judy and lived for 27 years. Irene worked for many years at the Idaho Department Store and Van Engelen's clothing store. During this time, Irene joined multiple bowling leagues. Her awards include more than 200 pins and the Idaho State Championship. In 1968 after Judy's graduation, Jim and Irene moved to Wells, Nev., where they both worked at the 4-Way Service Truck Stop. In 1984, Jim passed away and Irene continued to live in Wells until 1998, when she returned to Twin Falls to be closer to her family.

Irene enjoyed spending time with her Pinochle group and taking frequent trips to Jackpot, Nev., with her sister-in-law, Thelma. One family friend recalls being passed on 93 by "someone going 90 mph plus." Irene never lost her love of sports and supported Boise State Football, Jazz Basketball and the Seattle Mariners. Most of all, Irene loved to entertain and prepare meals for family and friends at home.

Irene is survived by her children; by five grandchildren, Katie, Jim, Sherry, Brenda and Lori; nine great-grandchildren; and four great-great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her husband, Jim; her parents, Michael and Katherine "Katie" Glodowski; sisters, Virginia, Helen and Jene; and granddaughter, Stacy.

Nevada Lucille Keller

March 13, 1921-June 1, 2011

BOISE — Nevada Lucille Keller departed this life Wednesday, June 1, 2011, surrounded by loved ones in her home after an eight-month battle with pancreatic cancer.

She was born March 13, 1921, to Robert and Ethel Sophia Gulley on the Gibbs Ranch near Hot Creek in Elko County, Nev.

Nevada attended public schools in Twin Falls, Idaho. During Nevada's youth, she divided her time between living with her mother in Wells, Nev., and Twin Falls, and with her father on the Gulley Ranch in north Elko County. Nevada was the consummate horsewoman. When not cooking for the ranch hands, she was riding her favorite horses, Hot Blood and Star, throughout the surrounding areas. At age 17, after walking 16 miles with her sister, Ruth, to a dance hall in Contact, Nev., she caught the eye of Joe Keller, who was part of the CCC program building roads in Elko County. Joe always mentioned the beautiful blonde in the red dress that he was compelled to ask for a dance. They were married shortly thereafter in Elko, Nev.

On Nevada's 90th birthday this year, a celebration of her life was held at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Boise, Idaho, providing her family and friends an opportunity to share favorite memories with her. Her ability to focus on living, not dying, along with her strong and courageous spirit, kept her going long after her expected prognosis. Her love of family was her most defining characteristic.

Nevada is survived by her two sons, Joseph Keller (Carrol) of Boise and Dan Keller (Ellen) of Sammamish, Wash.; grandchildren: Michael Keller, Shelby Cook, Michele Kneram, Kasey Keller Smith and Justin Keller; and 12 great-grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her parents, husband, three sisters and two brothers.

Nevada's family offers their heartfelt gratitude to XL-Hospice for their outstanding support throughout her illness.

The funeral will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday, June 4, at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 2206 N. Cole Road in Boise. A reception at the church will follow the service. Cremation arrangements are under the direction of Accent Funeral Home in Meridian. Condolences may be left for the family online at www.AccentFuneral.com. The family requests no flowers but donations may be made to the St. Stephen's Memorial Fund.

James F. Kimball

Aug. 12, 1919-May 21, 2011

James F. Kimball, age 91, passed away Saturday, May 21, 2011, at Chaparrelle House in Twin Falls.

Jim was born in 1919. He was one of Nancy and Thomas's 13 children. Jim was raised in Kimberly and always had an adventuresome spirit. Serving in World War II as a communications operator sent him to Europe. Working in the lumber mills of Scotia, Calif., in the '50s and building missile silos in Mountain Home earned Jim money to return to the Magic Valley to farm.

Farming and serving the Lord were the guiding forces in his life. He married Annabelle Vaughn in 1947 to share his life's journey. They have two sons, Ryan and Jim, and numerous grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Jim and Ann were very involved in raising their grandchildren. His grandson, Josh, was in heaven to greet him. Nieces and nephews all remained close to Jim throughout the years.

Good humor, hard work and family filled Jim's years. When he retired from farming in 1972, he worked at the UI Research Center in Kimberly, where he was legendary in his skill of setting siphon tubes. Large gardens, a very green thumb and a twinkle in his eye were his trademarks. The last of his family's generation will be forever missed.

A celebration of Jim's life will be held at 2 p.m. Sunday, June 5, at the Hansen Assembly of God Church, 319 Second St. E. in Hansen.

Finals under way at National Spelling Bee

OXON HILL, Md. (AP) — The finals of the 84th Scripps National Spelling Bee began Thursday night by remembering its first two champions.

With Jeopardy uber-champion Ken Jennings and eight former winners in the house, the bee paid tribute to Frank Neuhauser and Pauline Bell, who both died in their 90s recently. Neuhauser won in 1925 with the word "gladiolus" and Bell won in 1926 with the "cerise," so bee officials placed an arrangement of cerise-colored gladioli at the base of the trophy pedestal onstage.

Then the 13 finalists entered the stage, touching the trophy along the way, took a bow and resumed competing for the spelling crown that comes with more than $40,000 in cash and prizes.

The finalists were all who remained from the 275 spellers from across the country and world who arrived at the start of the week in the suburbs of Washington, D.C.

The spelling bee kids just keep getting better and better. Even words like "chlorthalidone," "dreikanter," "renminbi" and "helichrysum" couldn't sufficiently narrow down the field in the semifinals, which needed 95 minutes of overtime earlier Thursday to whittle the competitors from 41 to 13.

Floods feared across West as snow melts, dams fill

GRAND COULEE DAM, Wash. (AP) — The giant concrete dams of the Pacific Northwest are overflowing with water. Wyoming has deployed National Guard troops to pile up sandbags. A federal official compares the impending situation to a bucking bull ready to storm out of his chute.

States across the West are bracing for major flooding in the coming weeks once a record mountain snowpack starts melting and sending water gushing into rivers, streams and low-lying communities. The catalyst will be warmer temperatures forecast for the next week that could set off a rapid thaw.

Randy Julander, a supervisor with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Natural Resources Conservation Service, says flooding this year could be worse than anyone has ever seen. Julander said in a typical year the weather warms gradually, allowing snow in the mountains to melt slowly and ease into rivers and streams over time. That's not the case this year after a cool, rainy spring.

"It's all just sitting there, sitting there, sitting there. Everyone knows it's going to come down, it's just when and how quick that we're all waiting for," he said. "The bull is basically sitting in the chute and the gates are already open. He's just not coming out to play yet, but when he does I anticipate he's really going to be ticked off and bucking hard."

At Grand Coulee Dam, gigantic cascades of water are being released to make room for spring snowmelt. A constant roar emanates from the structure as surging water churns the Columbia River below the dam into a white froth.

The dam is 500 feet tall, a mile across, the centerpiece of a network of dams built across the Pacific Northwest during the New Deal era that essentially act as a giant plumbing system for the region — and these days the pipes are overflowing.

The dam is releasing so much water that millions of fish have been put in jeopardy. The heavy flows through dam spillways capture dangerous levels of nitrogen from the air, and the gas bubbles give fish the equivalent of the bends. A fish farm near the Grand Coulee Dam says an estimated 100,000 fish are dying every day, and has gone to court to slow down the flows.

Early signs of flooding have been seen in other states. Utah has had dozens of mudslides ahead of what the governor calls a "perfect storm" for disastrous flooding in the northern part of the state. Small towns in Montana have been swamped with floodwaters in the past week. The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has been carrying out big increases in the flow from the state's Fort Peck Dam, causing flooding in South Dakota and North Dakota.

Sacramento, with a population of about 470,000, is the major city at greatest risk of flooding in California. The major concern is flooding caused by deep snowpacks in the Sierra Nevada melting suddenly after a warm rain. Such an event can overload Northern California's extensive system of dams and flood bypasses, straining century-old levees to the breaking point.

Wisely, Salazar makes ‘wild lands’ a local decision

Few things rangle Western sensibilities more than the federal government deciding what happens to public land thousands of miles from Washington, D.C. It’s been that way since 1943, when President Franklin Roosevelt invoked the Antiquities Act of 1906 to create Jackson Hole National Monument, the forerunner of Grand Teton National Park. In 1978, President Jimmy Carter used the same law to set aside 56 million acres of national monuments in Alaska.

On both occasions the outcry from the West was loud, and memories out here are long. So

Our view: A Western secretary of the Interior prudently concluded that “wild lands” should be Westerners’ decisions.

What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Secretary of Interior Ken Salazar — a former U.S. senator from Colorado — did the right thing this week when he backed away from a plan to make millions of acres of undeveloped land eligible for federal wilderness protection.

Salazar said Wednesday his agency will not unilaterally designate any of those public lands as “wild lands,” and instead will work with members of Congress to develop management proposals for the land. Western congressmen — Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho, prominent among them — had been pressuring the administration not to move forward with the “wild lands” proposal.

“The protection of America’s wilderness for hunting, fishing and back-country recreation should be a unifying issue that mobilizes us to a common purpose,” Salazar said. “We will focus our effort on building consensus around locally supported initiatives.”

Realistically, that policy decision was probably not Salazar’s first choice — and his ruling angered environmentalists. But it was the right thing to do.

GOP lawmakers complained that the plan would circumvent Congress’ authority and could be used to declare a vast swath of public land off-limits to oil-and-gas drilling.

Republican governors in Utah, Alaska and Wyoming, filed suit to block the plan, saying it would hurt their state’s economies by making federal lands unavailable for mineral production and other uses.

Idaho Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter said he was grateful that Salazar was “stepping back to reconsider the implications of his wild lands policy.”

As chairman of the Western Governors’ Association, Otter said he also was grateful that Salazar was seeking input from governors and local land users to find a path forward. “I’m going to keep working to make sure everyone understands the economic consequences to our communities and our state of advancing a top-down wilderness agenda,” he said.

Bob Abbey, director of the Interior Department’s Bureau of Land Management, said the proposal should not have required protection for any particular areas. Designation as wild land could only be made after public comments and review and would not necessarily prohibit motor vehicle use or the staking of new mining claims.

Still, there’s no question that just as Roosevelt’s designation of Jackson Hole National Monument 68 years ago, the “wild lands” policy would have created a mechanism for Washington — not Westerners — to make the call about setting aside Western land.

Salazar was wise to put a stop to it.

Not everybody has to go to college

Education reformers are right to promote college as a logical extension of high school, but they — we — should beware of getting boxed in a corner.

Lynne K. Varner

Simplistic reading of policy rhetoric about college readiness has inspired a backlash. Some point out that not everyone wants to go to college. True. Others hint darkly that not every student is college material. Not so true. Unless there are serious cognitive and developmental challenges, why not?

But the point that college isn’t for everyone is well taken. A thoughtful bridge between the college yes and college no crowd comes from the Pathways to Prosperity Project at Harvard University’s Graduate School of Education.

The college emphasis in high school led to a decline in career-related learning. A stubborn dropout rate only exacerbates the problem because it means students are leaving school without career plans, or worse, marketable job skills.

With all the media fascination on young people returning from college to sleep on Mom and Dad’s couch, a sizable population are unable to leave their parent’s house in the first place.

We ignore them at our economic peril. Non-college-degree holders outnumber those with associate and bachelor’s degrees. That’s despite the widely used statistic that nearly two-thirds of jobs in the future will require some college. Moreover, Harvard researchers found that despite the emphasis on college, this country is not producing enough college graduates. Yes, we should redouble efforts. Simultaneously, we need a contingency plan outside of college.

“Broaden ‘college for all’ to include meaningful post-high-school credentials. This is not an alternative route for kids who couldn’t pass science or math. Needed are high-quality career and vocational education programs.”

Here it is: Broaden “college for all” to include meaningful post-high-school credentials. This is not an alternative route for kids who couldn’t pass science or math. Needed are high-quality career and vocational education programs.

Employment among young people hovers at post-World War II lows — if you think we’re in a recession, young people see a depression. Postsecondary education is the new passport in a globally competitive economy. It can be in the form of college, apprenticeships or career certification.

At the same time, the number of degree holders will rise. Cutting-edge efforts and technology have brought us worthy options such as Western Governors University, a fully accredited online four-year institution.

There must also be efforts to ensure many of the new degrees and certifications are in the science, technology, engineering and mathematics educational tent known as STEM. We need to train the next Boeing machinist and the next technology innovator.

There is a proper nexus between college-prep and quality vocational education. Learning can’t be divorced from the real world. The Puget Sound region has a powerful technological ecosystem. If there’s a will, this region will find the way.

Educational efforts at the Northwest Association for Biomedical Research offer guidance.

The nonprofit educational organization is pairing a program from the National Science Foundation — Innovative Technology Experiences for Students and Teachers — and money from the H1B Visa program to fuel high-school science programs. Many scientists working in the United States are on H1 Visas, so it makes sense to use the proceeds of that program to develop American scientists.

The biomedical research team is piloting a program this summer exposing high-school students to an emerging field centered on biology and information technology. The educational technology maker DigiPen is offering gaming expertise to help students design biotechnology tools — from computer interfaces to ways to store and understand millions of DNA bases.

At the mention of computer gaming, they’ll have many students. A career technology education credit offers another strong incentive. I’m heartened that the effort is about more than presenting the sciences as career choices, but also as basic knowledge for a generation that may in a decade be able to download genomes on their iPhones.

What’s killing us besides cellphones

According to the International Agency for Research on Cancer, a panel of the World Health Organization, cellphones are as “possibly carcinogenic” as DDT.

They belong to some ominously titled Category 2B, along with 240 other substances.

Do you know what else is a possible cancer-causing agent?

Everything. It turns out that the only thing that unifies everything I enjoy in life is that it tends to cause cancer. Coffee? Yup. Caffeine? Chlorinated drinking water? Hair-coloring products? The list goes on.

Fields of static electricity. Organic lead compound. Polyurethane foams. Printing inks. Sudan, which I thought was dangerous only for political reasons. Involuntary smoking. Sunlamps. Wood smoke. Boot and shoe manufacture and repair.

“Zeolites other than erionite (clinoptilolite, phillipsite, mordenite, non-fibrous Japanese zeolite, synthetic zeolites).” Are they kidding?

Surgical implants and other foreign bodies. Most of my best friends are foreign bodies! Cobalt sulfate and other soluble cobalt salts? Those are my favorite salts!

The list is enough to make you curl up in the fetal position, except that you have no idea what synthetic zeolites might be lying in wait.

Life tends to cause cancer, or other forms of death. Go outdoors? You will eventually die. Stay in bed? You fool, don’t you know that most accidents occur within the home? I would say that death is inevitable, but the Singularity is due in 2045, at which point we will merge all our feeble bodies into the hive mind, and after that, who knows?

Besides, cellphones are already destroying our lives in far more insidious ways. We no longer talk; we text. We can’t find our way out of a paper bag without GoogleMaps Mobile. We are so busy tweeting that we have run out of things to say in person.

Maybe the phones have just found a way to put us out of our misery.

Think about it — there are so many other ways cellphones can kill you. Someone can bludgeon you with an old one. You can become so dependent upon iPhone apps that you lose the ability to entertain, feed or clothe yourself. There’s probably an Android app that emits a high-pitched noise to slowly drive you insane.

I would be worried that cellphones cause cancer were I not confident that before cancer gets to me, the phone will distract me while I’m driving and I will careen off a cliff.

Perhaps the most interesting thing that the study noted was that soon, it will be impossible to tell whether these things cause cancer. Compare people without cellphones to people with cellphones? The S-curve has already taken its toll. Where will you find a control group?

A religious ‘test’ for Mitt Romney

Things being what they are these days, and with Mitt Romney currently the frontrunner in the race for the Republican presidential nomination, it’s not too surprising that objections to the former Massachusetts governor’s Mormon religion would resurface, particularly in Iowa, where evangelicals wield so much influence in the Republican caucuses.

Romney was the target of both left- and right-wing Mormon-bashing in the last presidential campaign, proving once again that vulgar religious prejudice is one of the few areas of our national life where true bipartisanship still prevails. Even so, last week’s attack on Romney by the influential evangelical publisher and writer Warren Cole Smith was notable — not only because Smith is closely aligned with religious factions that recently fueled the campaign to oust three Iowa Supreme Court justices who had overturned a ban on same-sex marriage but also because he argued that it doesn’t matter what Romney believes on social or economic issues.

In an online essay aimed at fellow evangelicals, Smith argued that “you can’t have it ‘both ways’ when it comes to Romney’s faith. You can’t say that his religious beliefs don’t matter, but his ‘values’ do. The Christian worldview teaches that there is a short tether binding beliefs to the values and behaviors that flow from them. If the beliefs are false, then the behavior will eventually — but inevitably — be warped. ... There’s a lot about Romney I like. He seems to be a competent manager; he’s a fiscal conservative and his positions on some social issues — while problematic in the past — seemed to have genuinely changed. But certain qualifications make a candidate unfit to serve. I believe a candidate who either by intent or effect promotes a false and dangerous religion is unfit to serve.”

In other words, Romney’s positions on the issues or governance itself are of no avail; his personal history, his demonstrated character count for nothing because his conscience is objectionable. Smith has done us all a service by taking us quickly and clearly to where our politics’ creeping religiosity inevitably has been leading: a de facto religious test for office.

There’s also been something of a sea change in rhetoric since the last election, with the theocratically inclined — from Sarah Palin to the Catholic archbishop of Denver, Charles Chaput — arguing that John Kennedy was wrong in his famous 1960 speech that set the paradigm for looking at candidates and their religion. Kennedy, this line of thinking goes, was guilty of marginalizing religious belief, which is an indispensable quality in a political officeholder. It’s a short step, though, from insisting on some display of faith to demanding that it be the “right” one.

Functionally, this sort of thinking threatens to make a dead letter of the Constitution’s ban on religious tests for office, and we ought to consider the implications. Article VI of the Constitution couldn’t be more clear: “No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.”

This clause is the most crystalline expression we possess of the framers’ views on the relationship between church and state. It predates even the establishment clause in the First Amendment. It’s also, as the ethicist and political historian William Lee Miller pointed out, evidence that “the new nation was electing to be nonreligious in its civil life.” Miller also reminds us that the Constitution contains no references to God, a creator or even the “providence” to which the many deists among the framers often alluded.

Like his friend Thomas Jefferson, James Madison drew the architecture of his thinking on this question from John Locke’s great 1689 essay, A Letter Concerning Toleration, in which this summary appears:

“I esteem it above all things necessary to distinguish exactly the business of civil government from that of religion and to settle the just bounds that lie between the one and the other. If this be not done, there can be no end put to the controversies that will be always arising between those that have, or at least pretend to have, on the one side, a concernment for the interest of men’s souls, and, on the other side, a care of the common-wealth.”

Place the politics and society that Locke and Madison envisioned against those Smith, Palin and Chaput urge, and ask: Which is the saner?

The unhappy white majority

“White Americans See Anti-White Bias on the Rise.” That was a headline in the Wall Street Journal in May, and more than any other domestic index or statistic, it’s that sentiment that should worry you about America’s future.

While many commentators saw Barack Obama’s election as signaling the emergence of a post-racial America, it might one day be seen instead as the symbolic moment all Americans became minorities.

I don’t mean this in a demographic sense. There are only four states in which “non-Hispanic whites” — the term the census uses — aren’t in the majority. For all the demographic changes the United States is undergoing, most states will continue to have a white majority as far as anyone is willing to predict.

But symbolic minority status is another matter. It refers to the point of view of what the dictionary describes as “a population differing from others in some characteristics and often subjected to differential treatment.”

The Wall Street Journal headline was referring to a survey by Michael I. Norton, of Harvard Business School, and Samuel R. Sommers, a professor of psychology at Tufts University. The researchers contacted a national random sample of 209 whites and 208 blacks and asked them, on a scale from 1 to 10, the extent to which they felt blacks and whites were the target of discrimination from the 1950s to the 2000s.

Black respondents saw anti-black bias decline steadily, from 9.7 on the scale in the 1950s to 6.1 in the 2000s. During that same period, they thought anti-white bias increased marginally, from 1.4 to 1.8.

White respondents also saw anti-black bias decline through the decades, but even more dramatically than blacks did, from 9.1 in the 1950s to 3.6 in the 2000s. More significantly, whites also saw anti-white bias shoot up from 1.8 to

Gregory Rodriguez

4.7 in the same period. As the researchers concluded, over the decades there was a “complete reversal” in whites’ perception of racism. By the 2000s, whites considered anti-white bias to be a greater social problem than anti-black bias.

Norton and Sommers don’t waste time pondering the veracity of that conclusion. By any metric, they write, “from employment to police treatment, loan rates to education — statistics continue to indicate drastically poorer outcomes for black than white Americans.” Instead, they figure this historic flip-flop is not about objective conditions but about how whites conceptualize bias. Norton and Sommers conclude that whites, unlike blacks, view racism as a zero-sum game, a situation in which one side’s gain automatically results only from the other’s loss.

These findings aren’t unexpected. Over the past decade, we’ve seen a rising tide of aggrieved white folks. Accusations of reverse discrimination have increased, along with high-profile court cases like the one filed by firefighters in New Haven, Conn., in which white men claimed they were denied potential promotions because of their race. (The Supreme Court agreed.)

A November 2010 poll by the Public Religion Research Institute found that 56 percent of Republicans, 57 percent of white evangelicals and 61 percent of “tea party” sympathizers think discrimination against whites has become as big a problem as discrimination against minorities.

Norton and Sommers don’t know exactly why whites view racism as a zero-sum game, but they suggest that affirmative-action policies, designed to increase minority representation in education and hiring, may focus whites’ attention on the “impact of quota-like procedures on their own access” to jobs and colleges.

This doesn’t bode well. When even the majority group sees itself in a struggle for status and respect, it erodes any notion of the collective good. Forget the melting pot or the salad bowl; the metaphor for how we balance diversity and unity is becoming the fighting cage.

Whites have always been susceptible to criticism for assuming they can define “we,” while minorities represent only their discrete parts of the whole. The new research bolsters evidence that whites are abdicating the role as arbiters and upholders of a national consensus.

It’s good news that whites no longer feel that they alone own the nation’s core values. But the failure of even the majority group to look out for the greater good, as opposed to its parochial interests, leaves a vacuum at the center of U.S. life.

The new design called MyPlate is part of a federal campaign to communicate essential dietary guidelines to consumers.

Food pyramid out, ‘My Plate’ in for healthy eating

WASHINGTON (AP) — There’s a new U.S. symbol for healthful eating: The Agriculture Department unveiled “My Plate” on Thursday, abandoning the food pyramid that had guided many Americans but merely confused others.

The new guide is divided into four slightly different-sized quadrants, with fruits and vegetables taking up half the space and grains and protein making up the other half. The vegetables and grains portions are the largest of the four.

Gone are the old pyramid’s references to sugars, fats or oils. What was once a category called “meat and beans” is now simply “proteins,” making way for seafood and vegetarian options like tofu. Next to the plate is a blue circle for dairy, which could be a glass of milk or a food such as cheese or yogurt.

Some critics, including congressional Republicans, have accused the Obama administration of overreaching on regulation, especially when it comes to new rules that tell schools what children can eat on campus.

But the plate is supposed to be a suggestion, not a direction, said Agriculture

Secretary Tom Vilsack.

“We are not telling people what to eat, we are giving them a guide,” he said. “We’re not suggesting they should not have a cookie or dessert, that’s not what it’s about.”

Vilsack said the new round chart shows that nutrition doesn’t have to be complicated. After almost 20 years of leaders preaching good eating through a food pyramid the department now says was overly complex, obesity rates have skyrocketed. He showed off the new plate with first lady Michelle Obama, who has made healthful diets for children a priority.

“Parents don’t have the time to measure out exactly three ounces of protein,” Mrs. Obama said as she introduced the new graphic. “We do have time to look at our kids’ plates.”

The department is planning to use social media — posting advice every day on Twitter, for example. The address of the accompanying website, choosemyplate.gov, is written on the chart. That website will eventually feature interactive tools that help people manage their weight and track their exercise.

Romney opens presidential bid

GOP contender draws criticism for state health plan

STRATHAM, N.H. (AP) — Just as Mitt Romney declared he’s in, it’s suddenly looking like he might have more big-name competition for the Republican presidential nomination.

While Romney made his candidacy official in New Hampshire on Thursday, political stars Sarah Palin and Rudy Giuliani caused a stir of their own with visits to the first-in-the-nation primary state. Both made sure to assail the health care law approved while Romney was governor of neighboring Massachusetts.

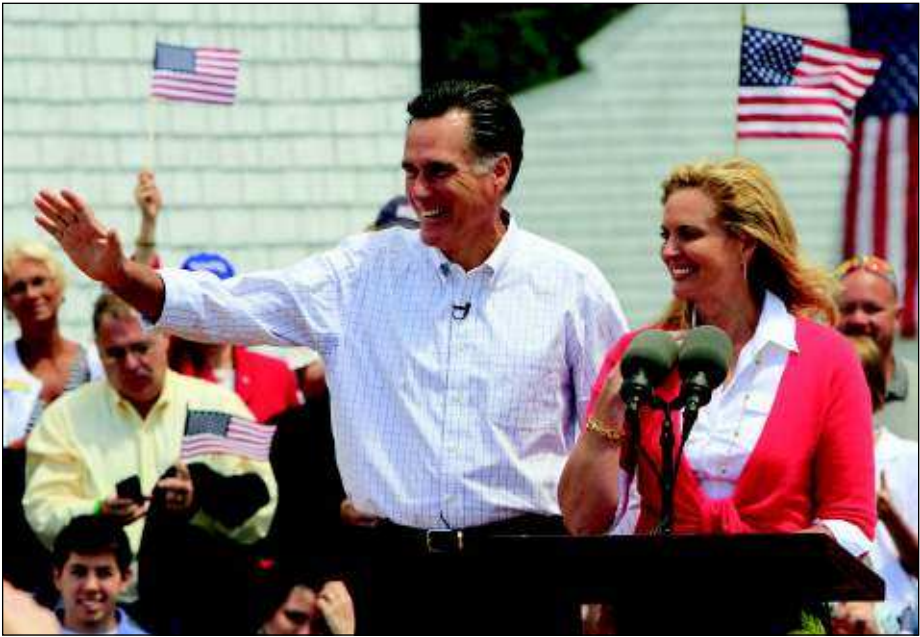

And rumblings about Texas Gov. Rick Perry, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and Rep. Michele Bachmann of Minnesota further challenged Romney’s standing as the closest thing the GOP has to a front-runner to take on President Barack Obama in November 2012.

“I’m Mitt Romney and I believe in America. And I’m running for president of the United States,” Romney declared to cheers on a sunny farm in southern New Hampshire.

Unswayed by possible competition, the former governor and business executive aggressively challenged Democratic President Obama while trying to pitch himself to the coalition that makes up the modern GOP: fiscal conservatives, social conservatives, evangelicals and libertarians. Romney included nods to all as he sought to make himself the candidate with the broadest appeal and best shot at sending Obama home to Chicago as a one-term president.

“It breaks my heart to see what is happening to this great country,” Romney said. “No, Mr. President, you had your chance.”

Romney, who lost the GOP nomination to John McCain in 2008, hopes it’s now his turn. He comes to a Republican presidential contest that lacks a true front-runner and could be unsettled with new names. Repeated polls show party members unimpressed with or indifferent to the declared candidates.

“The reality is that Obamacare and Romneycare are almost exactly the same.”
— Rudy Giuliani

Romney’s strengths are substantial: He’s well known, and he’s an experienced campaigner. He has a personal fortune and an existing network of donors. He has a successful businessman’s record and knows the logistics of a national campaign.

But he must confront his own record of changing positions on social issues including abortion and gay rights, shifts that have left conservatives questioning his sincerity. He also has struggled to allay some skepticism of his Mormon faith.

On top of that, Romney championed a health care law enacted in Massachusetts that’s similar to Obama’s national health overhaul, which conservatives despise.

His rivals, giving him unwelcome company in New Hampshire, weren’t about to let that go.

“The reality is that Obamacare and Romneycare are almost exactly the same,” Giuliani said in North Conway. “It’s not very helpful trying to distinguish them. I would think the best way to handle it is to say, it was a terrible mistake and if I could do it over again, I wouldn’t do it.”

Palin, too, criticized Romney for the health care law.

“In my opinion any mandate coming from government is not a good thing, so obviously ... there will be more explanation coming from former Gov. Romney on his support for government mandates,” Palin said in Boston, where Romney is basing his campaign.

Romney nodded to the challenges.

“If I ran through all my mistakes, Ann would love it, and you’d be here all night,” Romney said with a smiling reference to his wife, who was at his side. He called for repeal of the Democrats’ national plan but did not explicitly acknowledge his own hurdle.

In recent weeks, the still-forming GOP field has become less certain. Indiana Gov. Mitch Daniels, Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour and former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee took themselves out of the race before getting in. Others, such as former Sen. Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania, are set to start their campaigns in earnest.

Giuliani said he hasn’t decided yet if he will run again — like Romney he fell short in 2008 — and expects to make up his mind by the end of the summer.

But he certainly sounded like a candidate, telling reporters that the nation is being led in the wrong direction by Obama.

“He’s been in office a very long time now, and his results on the economy have been abysmal,” Giuliani said. “His only answer to it has been, ‘Oh, I inherited this.’ Well, my goodness, he’s been in office long enough now, so that whatever he inherited, he should’ve straightened out by now.”

New Jersey governor pays state for flights

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — After taking a beating for more than a day, Gov. Chris Christie agreed Thursday to reimburse the state for personal use of a police helicopter to fly to two of his son’s high school baseball games and a political dinner with GOP donors.

But the governor, revered among Republicans for his hard-charging, budget-cutting ways and reviled by many Democrats for the same traits, made no apologies for what he called an effort to be a good father.

Christie said he paid $2,100 and asked the state Republican Party to pay $1,200 — not because he believed he was in the wrong but because the furor had become a distraction.

“I want to make sure the public understands that I’m doing this because of the duty I feel to them to have my attention and everyone else’s attention focused 100 percent on the real problems of this state,” he said, “not the political theater and media theater that people enjoy at times.”

He said he had been assured by the state police that he did not have to reimburse the state for the personal flights because the pilots needed to log the flying hours anyway to keep their skills sharp. And he said he chose to fly to his son’s ball games as a way of balancing his role as governor because there was no other way to get there in time.

Guide to home construction

Local custom builder publishes 'Building a Quality Custom Home'

By Blair Koch
Times-News writer

Housing starts remain low and property values are still nowhere near their peak, but Jim Boyd is betting that the market is near bottomed out and ready to turn a corner.

Boyd, of Twin Falls, has a lot of skin in the game. He's founder and president of Weather Vane Homes and just released the self-published book, "Building a Quality Custom Home; What You Need to Know," co-authored by Dave Konkol, a Florida builder.

He said the timing is ripe for such a book because the current housing market has many people focused solely on price, versus quality, when building their homes.

"People are so price conscious, and I'm a price-conscious person, but it gets to a point where it's counterintuitive," Boyd said. "People think they want a house that is cheap and that's what they get. When they move in they figure out how cheap and they're frustrated."

Boyd said his book takes people through the process of building a quality custom home, step-by-step.

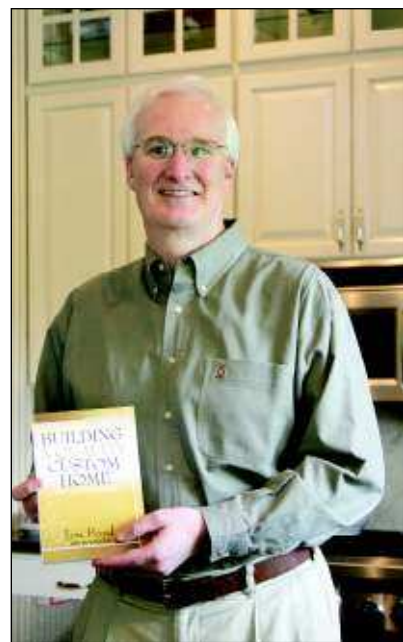

It includes questions and things to consider before calling a builder or finding land.

"I wanted to make the book an easy to read introduction to the process and make people more informed about it. There are a lot of things that people can do to help the process. A lot of miscommunication and problems can be avoided but simply being more knowledgeable

Jack in the Box not keeping pace with fast-food brethren

By Sharon Bernstein
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—What ails Jack in the Box?

The nation's fifth-largest burger chain has upgraded its food, remodeled its stores and trained its employees in the fine art of customer service.

But even though consumers forked over $3 billion for sandwiches, tacos, churros and other food last year, sales are still way below pre-recession levels. Jack in the Box Inc.'s stock remains sluggish, and last month the company said its profit in the three months ended April 17 dropped 62 percent from the same period last year.

Jack in the Box has a Twin Falls restaurant.

Customers are starting to return to its stores, but it's a trickle, with same-store sales up 0.8 percent over the second quarter of 2010.

"They need to find a way to differentiate themselves," said Darren Tristano, restaurant analyst for the research firm Technomic Inc. "If you think of Jack in the Box, I'm not sure what you think of anymore."

Jack in the Box is caught in the same fix as many other venerable fast-food brands: Their key customers, working-class men in their 20s, are still hugely affected by unemployment. And an onslaught of competition from high-quality new chains like Chipotle Mexican Grill Inc. has put a particular squeeze on older restaurants that let their menus and their stores become tired.

Chipotle shares are up about 34 percent this year.

But even other vintage brands were doing better than Jack in the Box, whose share price has risen less than 4 percent.

Yum Brands Inc., which owns Taco Bell, Pizza Hut and KFC, is up about 11 percent this year.

Jack in the Box's chief nemesis, McDonald's Corp., had a major push to renovate its stores

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Feds expand Idaho preference areas for federal contracts

The Idaho Department of Labor announced Thursday the U.S. Department of Labor has approved its petition to expand the areas of the state where employers receive preference when they bid on federal contracts.

The government agreed to add Bonner, Camas, Canyon, Gem, Idaho, Kootenai, Lincoln, Payette and Washington counties to the list of so-called Labor Surplus Areas that already included Adams, Benewah, Boundary, Clearwater, Shoshone and Valley counties.

Idaho is one of only four states to secure approval of additional areas. The others are Florida, California and Maine.

According to a press release the designation is based on jurisdictions exceeding the national average unemployment rate for 2008 and 2009, which was 9.1 percent.

The state's petition cited exceptional circumstances that drove the local unemployment rates over 9.1 percent in late 2008 and 2009 even though those rates for the two years combined did not hit that national average. Statewide, the unemployment rate averaged just 6.4 percent for the two-year period even though it jumped to 8 percent in 2009. The rate hit 9.3 percent in 2010, ending the year at a record 9.7 percent.

Labor Surplus Area designation helps businesses competing for federal contracts many advantages. For one, the federal government uses the designation to identify areas needing an economical boost, which helps the overall national economy.

The Small Business Administration uses the list for bid selections for small business awards in Historically Underutilized Business Zones.

Private industry has used the list for strategic planning and potential areas of human capital.

Idaho Supreme Court sides with Sportsman's Warehouse

By Blair Koch
Times-News writer

The Idaho Supreme Court ruled earlier this week that Sportsman's Warehouse is not liable for damages sustained when Eileen Ann McDevitt tripped and fell on a recessed irrigation box on the sidewalk outside of the Twin Falls retailer.

The decision marked the end of a legal battle stemming from McDevitt's accident in December 2005.

McDevitt also sued Canyon Park Management, Canyon Park, Neilson and Company and Eckman Mitchell Construction and received an undisclosed but "reasonable settlement," from the parties at an earlier date.

McDevitt told the Times-News that pursuing the case against Sportsman's Warehouse gave her attorney Jeffrey Hepworth, of Twin Falls, an opportunity to clarify Idaho law.

"I agreed ... and the case did just that," McDevitt said.

At issue was whether Sportsman's Warehouse, a tenant in a multi-tenant shopping mall, was responsible for keeping the sidewalk in front of its store safe or to warn people of hazards on it.

The Fifth District court heard the case in late 2009 and early 2010 and dismissed the charges against Sportsman's. At the same time, the court entered an order dismissing all other defendants in the case since they had settled with McDevitt.

"The district court and supreme court found that Sportsman's Warehouse was not liable for areas outside of its lease area," said Attorney Jeremy Brown with the Idaho Falls Weaker than expected sales reports from retailers and another large number of claims for unemployment benefits left stocks with a mixed finish on Thursday, a day after the Dow Jones industrial average took its biggest dive in nearly a year. The Dow Jones industrial average lost 41.59 points, or 0.3 percent, to close at 12,248.55 Thursday.

The S&P 500 recovered much of its losses from earlier in the day and ended down 1.61 points, or 0.1 percent, to 1,312.94. The Nasdaq composite was up for most of the day and finished with a gain of 4.12, or 0.2 percent, at 2,773.31.
Slightly more stocks fell than rose on the New York Stock Exchange. Trading volume was 3.9 billion shares.

Dugard's kidnappers sentenced

By Maria L. La Ganga
Los Angeles Times writer

PLACERVILLE, Calif. — Nearly 20 years after Jaycee Lee Dugard was abducted while walking to a school bus stop, the couple who pleaded guilty in her kidnapping and rape were sentenced Thursday to prison terms that could keep them behind bars for the rest of their lives.

Phillip Garrido, a 60-year-old convicted rapist, was sentenced to 431 years to life in prison. His 55-year-old wife Nancy was sentenced to 36 years in prison.

In recommending that Garrido receive a sentence of 431 years to life in prison, El Dorado County District Attorney Vern Pierson described the serial rapist as “a sexual predator who stole the childhood and innocence from an 11-year-old child. Defendant Garrido’s actions caused her mother Terry Probyn to have to endure an 18-year-long nightmare.”

Before the Garridos’ sentencing Thursday in a Placerville courtroom, a tearful Probyn addressed the court. “How could someone take away the one person in the world I loved so deeply? Where is she? Is she hungry? Is she cold? Is she hurt? My baby was gone and all my dreams turned to nightmares. She was a vulnerable child and I was unable to help her.

“During 18 years away, I could hear her crying, not with my ears, but with my heart. I could feel her pain, not with my body, but with my heart. ... I lived in hell on earth. It was you, Nancy Garrido and Phillip Garrido, that broke my heart.”

Probyn then read a statement from her daughter, who did not attend the hearing: “To Phillip Garrido, I hated every second of every day of 18 years because of you. To you Nancy, I have nothing to say.”

Before sentencing Phillip Garrido, Judge Douglas C. Phimister said the “defendant lacks a soul. What you have done is beyond horrible. May you think long and hard about what you did.”

Dugard, now 31, was walking to a bus stop in view of her South Lake Tahoe, Calif., home on June 10, 1991, when she was kidnapped in front of her horrified stepfather. Garrido was driving the car, and Nancy snatched the child. According to court documents, they drove immediately to Antioch, a suburb east of San Francisco, where they imprisoned Dugard in a backyard warren of tents and sheds for 18 years.

She was locked in one of the backyard buildings for a year-and-a-half as a “prisoner,” Pierson said in his statement. She did not leave the backyard for the first four years after the abduction.

“Dugard was impregnated by Phillip Garrido when she was 13 years old and had her first child at the age of 14,” Pierson said. She “was again impregnated by Phillip Garrido when she was 16 and had her second child at the age of 17.”

Stephen Tapson, Nancy’s attorney, has long argued that his client was not involved in “any of the sexual stuff.” She delivered Dugard’s daughters and “cooperated with him under his authority, under his thumb,” he said after an earlier hearing.

Timothy Ray Brown, the only man ever known to have been apparently cured from AIDS, is seen last month with his dog, Jack, on Treasure Island near San Francisco.

30 years after first AIDS cases, hope for a cure

By Marilynn Marchione
Associated Press writer

Sunday marks 30 years since the first AIDS cases were reported in the United States. And this anniversary brings fresh hope for something many had come to think was impossible: finding a cure.

The example is Timothy Ray Brown of San Francisco, the first person in the world apparently cured of AIDS. His treatment isn’t practical for wide use, but there are encouraging signs that other approaches might someday lead to a cure, or at least allow some people to control HIV without needing medication every day.

“I want to pull out all the stops to go for it,” though a cure is still a very difficult goal, said Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

For now, the focus remains on preventing new infections. With recent progress on novel ways to do that and a partially effective vaccine, “we’re starting to get the feel that we can really get our arms around this pandemic,” Fauci said.

More than 25 million people have died of AIDS since the first five cases were recognized in Los Angeles in 1981.

More than 33 million people have HIV now, including more than 1 million in the United States.

About 2 million people die of the disease each year, mostly in poor countries that lack treatment. In the U.S. though, newly diagnosed patients have a life expectancy only a few months shorter than people without HIV. Modern drugs are much easier to take, and many patients get by on a single pill a day.

Debt fight continues despite rating warning

WASHINGTON (AP) — Facing a dire warning from a credit rating agency, the Obama administration lobbied some of Congress’ most conservative members Thursday for an increase in the nation’s debt limit. Republicans responded that the surest way to reassure financial markets was to enact deep deficit cuts.

At the White House, President Barack Obama told Democrats he expected talks led by Vice President Joe Biden to achieve only about 60 to 70 percent of the reductions required as part of the deal, officials said, leaving him and top lawmakers to agree on the rest. The Biden talks are aimed at producing a bipartisan debt-cutting package that could accompany a boost in the federal government’s ability to borrow more money.

Treasury Secretary Tim Geithner has told Congress that without an increase in the $14.3 trillion debt limit by Aug. 2, the government will be forced into its first-ever default, with potentially catastrophic results for the economy.

Geithner spent part of his day meeting privately with freshmen House members, mostly Republicans elected last fall with tea party support and among the most committed to cutting spending.

“I’m confident two things are going to happen this summer,” he said afterward. “One is we’re going to avoid a default crisis, and we’re going to reach agreement on our long-term fiscal plan.”

NATION IN BRIEF

Residents view tornado damage

MONSON, Mass. — The sight of flattened homes, peeled-off roofs and the toppled steeple of a 140-year-old church stunned New Englanders after deadly tornadoes swept through Massachusetts, striking an area of the country that rarely sees such severe twisters.

The storms, which came with fair warning but still shocked with their intensity, killed at least three people, injured about 200 and wreaked damage in a string of 18 cities and villages across central and western Massachusetts.

If the National Weather Service agrees Wednesday’s three deaths are tornado-related, it would bring the year’s U.S. toll to 522 and make this year the deadliest for tornadoes since 1950.

Edwards charges appear likely today

RALEIGH, N.C. — Criminal charges are likely to be filed today against John Edwards, the culmination of a two-year federal investigation into money used to cover up his extramarital affair during the 2008 presidential election.

Edwards’ attorney Greg Craig was traveling to meet today with prosecutors in North Carolina, an indication that the former presidential candidate is likely to be charged, either in a grand jury indictment or in a negotiated charge to which he would plead guilty.

A person with knowledge of the investigation said Craig, a Washington lawyer who was President Barack Obama’s first White House counsel, planned to be in his client’s home state Friday, where prosecutors were prepared to file charges.

Obama's lawyer replaced by deputy

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama’s top lawyer at the White House, Bob Bauer, is quitting to return to his political law practice and represent Obama as his personal attorney and counsel to his re-election campaign.

Bauer will be replaced by his top deputy, Kathy Ruemmler, a former assistant U.S. attorney best known as a lead prosecutor in the Enron financial fraud case. At 40, Ruemmler will be one of the youngest lawyers to serve as the chief White House counsel to the president.

The move, announced Thursday, means Bauer will still play a central but outside role in advising a president who is seeking re-election in a time of divided government. The development was met without surprise. Bauer, a specialist in campaign finance, election law and ethics, is returning to the role as campaign counsel that he held when Obama ran for the presidency in 2008.

Probe nets arrests, cripples cartel

BOSTON — An investigation on three continents that started in Boston nearly five years ago has led to drug trafficking and money laundering charges against 20 people and has crippled a major Colombian drug cartel, federal authorities announced Thursday.

U.S. Attorney Carmen Ortiz announced the charges alongside investigators from Italy and Colombia. She predicted the charges — and the seizure of many millions of dollars in drug proceeds — will seriously disrupt the activities of La Oficina de Envigado, a successor to Colombia’s defunct Medellin cartel that has tentacles in Europe, the Caribbean and Latin America.

Odor leads to rhino remains, carcasses

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — New Mexico authorities are making a stink after an odor wafting from a New Mexico property lead them to a foul discovery — dozens of dead animals, including the remains of a rhino named Sally.

Authorities plan to cite, Ruben Saavedra, with illegally stockpiling animal carcasses after finding two dozen sheep, three horses, and the rhinoceros on the Albuquerque property.

Saavedra, who operates an animal disposal service, said Thursday that personal problems caused him to get behind on his work.

“So I know I did wrong, but we’re remedying the problem,” he said.

Gregg Middlekauff's Quote of the Day

Life is a risk.

Pakistan complains of cross-border attacks

ISLAMABAD (AP) — Islamist militants who flowed out of Afghanistan fought a second day of fierce battles with Pakistani security forces Thursday in one of the deadliest clashes on the Pakistan side of the frontier in months. Authorities said 63 people were dead.

Signaling a deepening of the rift with the United States and voicing Islamabad's anger over the attacks, the government issued a statement late Thursday voicing Pakistan's "strong concern" about the attack.

Pakistan's military had initially said the assault was the work of about 200 militants, but the government statement put the number at between 300 and 400.

The militant attack and Pakistan's reaction contradicted the U.S. narrative about the poorly defined and porous border. Typically, militant cross-frontier movements originate in Pakistan, leaving the United States and NATO to gripe at Islamabad over its failure to stop the infiltration.

The new battles found Pakistan the aggrieved party, lending credence to Pakistani army commanders' complaints that NATO was failing to crack down on militants sheltering on the Afghan side of the rugged frontier.

Outbreak blamed on 'super-toxic' strain

LONDON (AP) — Scientists on Thursday blamed Europe's worst recorded food-poisoning outbreak on a "super-toxic" strain of E. coli bacteria that may be brand new.

While suspicion has fallen on raw tomatoes, cucumbers and lettuce as the source of the germ, researchers have been unable to pinpoint the food responsible for the frightening illness, which has killed at least 18 people, sickened more than 1,600 and spread to at least 10 European countries.

An alarming number of victims — about 500 — have developed kidney complications that can be deadly.

Chinese and German scientists analyzed the DNA of the E. coli bacteria and determined that the outbreak was caused by "an entirely new, super-toxic" strain that contains several antibiotic-resistant genes, according to a statement from the Shenzhen, China-based laboratory BGI. It said the strain ap-specimen, but that is not necessarily enough to constitute a new strain.

"Though it appears to have been around a while, it hasn't called attention to itself as a major public health problem before," Tauxe said.

Elsewhere in Europe, Russia extended a ban on vegetables from Spain and Germany to the entire European Union to try to stop the outbreak spreading east, a move the EU quickly called disproportionate and Italy's farmers denounced as "absurd." No deaths or infections have been reported in Russia.

Some scientists suspect the deadly E. coli might have been in manure used to fertilize vegetables.

Kruse said it is not uncommon for bacteria to evolve and swap genes. It is difficult to explain where the new strain came from, she said, but bacteria from humans and animals easily trade genes.

SYRIA
Protest center sees unrelenting attacks

BEIRUT — Electricity, phone lines and then the water supply were cut off in a restive area of Syria that is a new center for protests against President Bashar Assad, and activists said 15 people died in the sixth day of government attacks Thursday.

and roofed tortoises were among the species found in the luggage Wednesday. They were discovered when an Indian traveler arriving from Bangladesh failed to retrieve his bags.

Thailand is a hub for the illegal wildlife trade. A smuggling attempt thwarted last month involved two leopards, two panthers, an Asiatic black bear and two macaque monkeys.

What started as street demonstrations calling for reforms has evolved into demands for Assad's ouster in the face of a violent crackdown, especially in Syria's south and agricultural center, where the challenge to his family's 40-year-rule is seen as strongest. In the city of Rastan on Thursday, a resident who fled said troops swept through making arrests.

"We have become refugees in our own country," said the Rastan resident, who said he slept in the woods to avoid capture.

AFGHANISTAN
Former bin Laden associate captured

KABUL — NATO said Thursday it captured a senior al-Qaida operative and former Osama bin Laden associate in northern Afghanistan.

NATO said the man was based in Pakistan and was a former associate of bin Laden, who was killed in a U.S. raid in Pakistan on May 2. NATO also said the captured man may have been with the al-Qaida leader in 2001.

IRAQ
9 killed in series of explosions

BAGHDAD — A series of bombings ripped through the capital of Iraq's western Anbar province Thursday night, killing nine people, Iraqi officials said.

The blasts in what was the heartland of the al-Qaida-led insurgency are a reminder of the danger still facing Iraq, as it prepares for the departure of the remaining U.S. troops by the end of this year.

A police officer and hospital official said at least 25 people were also injured in the explosions.

MEXICO
Debate rises over death toll in drug war

MEXICO CITY — The debate over how many people have died in Mexico's 4 1/2-year-old drug war is intensifying as the government's silence over the figure grows longer.

The last official count, more than 34,600 dead, came almost six months ago, and the number of lives lost is now obviously far higher, with daily reports of slayings and shootouts in drug hot spots and the occasional horror of mass graves containing hundreds of bodies.

Some Mexican news media are reporting that their counts show the death toll has risen past 40,000, a number that includes rival gang members killed in turf battles, as well as innocent bystanders, extortion victims, police and soldiers.

Jerome: A musician's destination?

Diamondz Bar draws national rock acts from '80s and today

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

JEROME — In the corner of the bar, a man in a suit and tie sipped a beer, his Bluetooth still in his ear.

Thirty feet away, a cowboy who had the belt buckle to prove it lined up a pool shot. Not 20 feet from him was '80s rocker Joe Leste of Bang Tango wailing into a microphone and whipping the crowd into a frenzy.

It was just another weekend night at Diamondz Bar and Grill in Jerome, a surprising watering hole in a town more known for its cheese factory than its music.

It could have been a dive bar behind that streetside facade if not for the shiny hardwood floor inside, the bright lights and a ventilation system that sucked away smoke almost as fast as smokers exhaled it. Rapper DMX blasted over the stereo between sets by rock 'n' roll acts that night. And Bang Tango, a band that broke the Billboard top-100 in 1989, made a detour between shows in Salt Lake City and Aurora, Colo., to jam in the 10,000-person town for its third time.

The bar brought out L.A. Guns and Dokken, two platinum-selling '80s rock bands, for an outdoor show in August 2009. L.A. Guns even came back to play in the bar. They are bands that may not be people's idols now, but once were, Diamondz booking manager Jim Tinsely said.

It's L.A. Guns that told Bang Tango members they needed to check out this rural Idaho bar, Tinsely said. Here they can play under rock-star lights to a crowd an arm's reach from almost every band member.

Today, Western Days celebrates three decades in Twin Falls

By Ariel Hansen
Times-News writer

A week before each year's Western Days parade, organizer MaryAnn Taylor is never quite sure what she'll see when the floats, marching bands, drill teams and flag bearers begin to assemble on Saturday morning.

"Until I actually see the entries, I won't know," Taylor said.

But for the past three decades, spectators have known what they'll see: their friends and neighbors sharing their love for Magic Valley and its Western heritage. The parade is celebrating 30 years Saturday with the theme "Fun for Generations," a nod to the family nature of the parade and the fact that after this many years, many generations have enjoyed the festivities together.

There are still surprises, though.

This year, FFA members from Kimberly High School will join with United Dairymen of Idaho to offer refreshments before the parade.

"June is Dairy Month, so it's a double celebration there," said Deana Sessions, administrator of the Boise-based Dairymen, whose members have purchased 10,000 8-ounce bottles of chocolate milk from Idaho dairies to distribute to spectators starting about 30 minutes before the parade's 10 a.m. start.

For the second year, Blue Lakes Rotary Club is offering Road Apple Roulette, a fundraiser that allows ticket purchasers to predict where the horses in the parade will lift their tails and leave deposits. Each road apple will be measured with GPS to determine where it landed; if that square on the invisible roulette grid was randomly assigned to a ticket holder, that holder will be entered into a raffle to win one of the prizes.

Last year, 2,192 squares were sold, and 30 ticket holders were lucky enough to have their squares deposited on. By Tuesday morning this week, 1,100 tickets had already been purchased, said Marianne Barker, chairwoman of the club's 2011 Road Apple Roulette committee. She said most tickets were sold last year in the days before the parade, and she hopes to double last year's sales by the time the last horse leaves its last deposit on the portion of the parade route included in the roulette (from the starting point to the intersection of Filer Avenue and Blue Lakes Boulevard).

Beds are generally kept in bedrooms. But the Idaho and Utah Chapter of the Multiple Sclerosis Society is taking beds out of the bedroom and propelling them down Twin Falls' Main Avenue with the help of Judy and John Fisher.

Teams of four bed pushers and one rider will race through downtown Twin Falls on June 18, making pit stops for Chinese fire drills and pajama changes.

The beds in question will be completely human powered, and gurneys will be provided for teams who choose not to bring their own beds. Organizers of the multiple sclerosis fundraiser encourage displaying a team name, dressing up derson, who will be part of the Junior Club's Purple Divas bed team.

"There is only one annual fundraiser for multiple sclerosis research, so we thought we'd start our own," said organizer Judy Fisher, who suffers from multiple sclerosis.

This is the second bed race the Fishers have organized. The first, held in 2009 in Twin Falls, raised $600 for the society chapter, and the Fishers hope this year's race will earn even more.

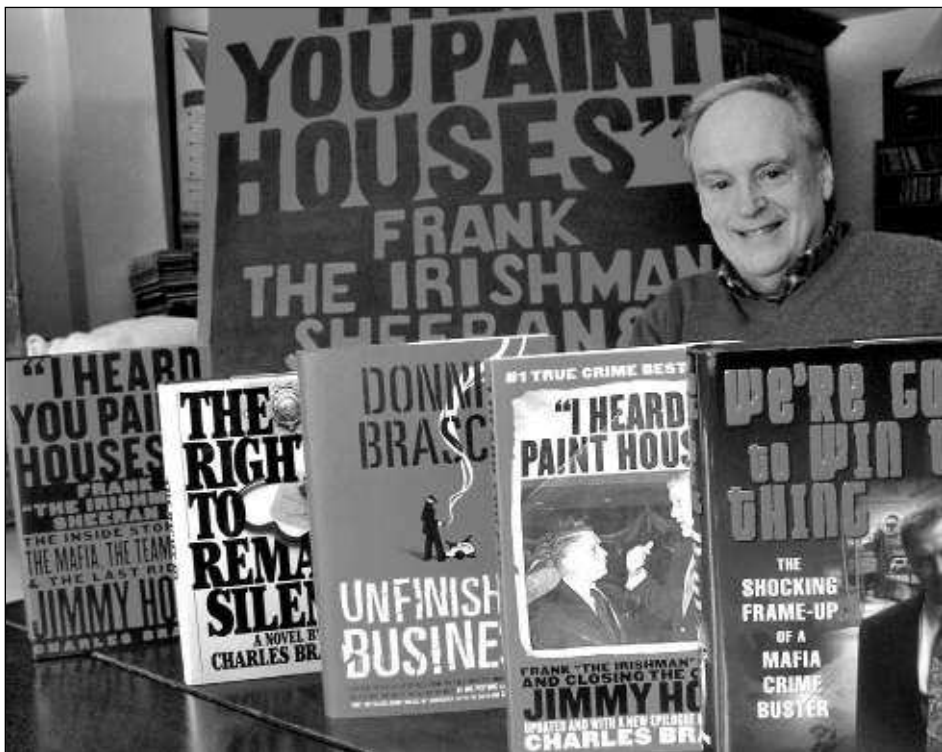

"It's always a lot of fun," Fisher said. "Last time we had spectators join in and race a bed."

Some teams are coming back to participate for the second time.

"It's fun for us, and it's a good organization," said Ken Fuchs of

KAREN BOSSICK/For the Times-News

The title of author Charles Brandt's bestseller 'I Heard You Paint Houses' refers to a Mafia euphemism for splattering blood on the walls during a murder.

Ketchum author's Mafia book will become Scorsese-DeNiro movie

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — Charles Brandt has no qualms about admitting “the Mafia’s been very good to me.”

The mob has kinged him with four books, including one that Martin Scorsese is currently making into a movie starring Robert DeNiro, Al Pacino, Harvey Keitel and Joe Pesci.

Another, “We’re Going to Win this Thing,” just received 15 minutes of prime time on “60 Minutes” as the venerable news magazine explored the story of former FBI investigator Lin DeVecchio, who claimed to be framed for ordering four mob hits.

“This is an incredibly thrilling time for my wife and me — to have a book made into a movie by Scorsese and DeNiro at the same time another book is on the most respected TV show in history. And we’ve already had movie offers for that book,” said Brandt, who was a consultant on the “60 Minutes” piece.

What makes Brandt’s story amazing is that he sat behind the prosecutor’s desk before he began penning his bestsellers. The Ketchum man also is a former chief deputy attorney of Delaware and a welfare and homicide investigator who was voted one of the best lawyers in America by his peers.

His first book, “The Right to Remain Silent,” was a 1988 novel spurred by Supreme Court’s passage of the Miranda rights.

His second book, “I Heard You Paint Houses,” fell into his lap when Mafia hit man Frank Sheeran, in prison for labor racketeering charges, hired Brandt to secure his release from jail because of severe spinal scoliosis. Sheeran — a former member of General George S. Patton’s “killer division” who became involved with the mob after volunteering to help with a broken-down truck at a truck stop — asked to tell his side of the story because he was tired of reading lies about himself.

“I knew that meant he wanted to confess,” Brandt said.

A New York Times best-seller, the 2004 book created a sensation when its subject, Sheeran, confessed to Brandt that he had killed Jimmy Hoffa — something the FBI had suspected but had never been able to get out of him.

“He turned to stone when I mentioned the JFK assassination. He said, ‘I’m not going anywhere near Dallas,’ which meant to me he knew something about the assassination,” Brandt said.

Brandt’s third book, “Unfinished Business” of 2007, revealed the things that couldn’t be put into Johnny Depp’s “Donnie Brasco” film about FBI agent Joe Pistone, who infiltrated the Bonanno crime family.

“He’s only the bravest man by a factor of a million,” Brandt said.

It was Pistone who introduced Brandt to DeVecchio, a former FBI agent who was a key player in bringing down the mob in New York from the 1970s through the 1990s. DeVecchio was betrayed by the very system he had worked for, Brandt said, and accused of collaborating with the Mafia, accepting bribes and orchestrating several hits. The charges were dropped for lack of evidence in November 2007.

“Lin is one of the finest people I’ve ever met. And his reward was to be framed for four murders,” Brandt said. “He was the victim of the greatest injustice I’ve ever seen. It’s an outrage how he was treated by Brooklyn’s attorney and ultimately the FBI. I’d like to see Congressional hearings come out of this.”

His second life as an author ushered Brandt — now 68 and a full-time resident of Ketchum — into Mafia social clubs that he quipped are “invitation-only unless you have a search warrant.”

It also ushered him into a shadowy world where no one pays income taxes “so they can afford to be generous” with the help, he said, and where many don’t even have a Social Security card “because they’ve never worked a day in their lives — at least, at a conventional job.”

And it earned him a four-hour meeting with Scorsese and DeNiro, who wanted material that wasn’t in the book.

“I was very impressed with their intelligence — their questions were so sharp, they got everything. And because I grew up in New York in an Italian family, Scorsese and DeNiro and I had a lot in common.”

Brandt’s wife, Nancy, his first-line editor, said she’s not above being critical about her husband’s work: “My favorite word is ‘boring’ when he sounds like a lawyer.”

But others say they can’t get enough of Brandt’s revealing look into the Mafia.

“I just find every little detail fascinating,” said Darlene Pate, who first encountered Brandt’s work at the Sun Valley Writers Conference.

Brandt said the public’s fascination with the Mafia has a lot to do with “The Godfather” films, which he said romanticized the Mafia.

“The framework is true to life but not the behavior. ‘The Sopranos’ is better. ‘Goodfellas’ right on target.”

This might be the first time you're happy to see a horse drop a road apple on Blue Lakes Boulevard.

Horses will be plentiful during Saturday morning's Western Days parade through Twin Falls. And if you place a bet in the Road Apple Roulette — a Rotary Club fundraiser with an unabashedly barnyard theme — a horse's well-placed pile might win you a big-screen TV or cash to blow in Vegas.

Western Days opens in Twin Falls City Park tonight with a karaoke contest. Walk a couple of blocks to catch the Friday Night Market vendors on Main Avenue at the same time. And wander through downtown's First Friday venues nearby for live music, food sampling, wine and art.

As the spring season winds down, theater lovers still have two choices this weekend: From the Heart Theater Group's costume-heavy musical production of "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" in Twin Falls, and Ketchum's "A Little Night Laughter," a comical collection of four short plays.

Love Broadway musicals? Get to Ketchum on Saturday or Sunday for Caritas Chorale's concerts. You'll hear Broadway pop and jazz in an art gallery setting, fortified by wine, hors d'oeuvres and desserts.

If you find that an overdose of culture, the antidote is the Herrett Center's five-evening "Stone and Bone" workshop, which starts Monday. You'll construct a primitive tool kit using rocks and animal bone — awls, scrapers, fish hooks, hammerstones. Who knows when you'll need to go primitive?

The calendar entry that most intrigues me is Thursday's Ketchum showing of film from a camera smuggled into a Utah internment camp during World War II, and a discussion by the Japanese internee's son.

For details on these events — and many others — see the full calendar in today's Entertainment section.

About 90 percent of the funds raised through ticket sales and sponsorships from the Roulette will go to the club's park committee, which is helping to build the new South Estates Park between Harrison Street South and Blue Lakes Boulevard South, off of Orchard Drive East.

"We felt very strongly about getting this park up and operational; we thought we can make a big difference here with these kids," said Don Acheson, vice president of the club and chairman of its park committee. He noted that the South Estates subdivision being built nearby is expected to attract many young families who will want to use the park.

Last year, the club added $10,000 from various club funds to a $40,000 grant from Glanbia Foods to bring the park up to city standards. Playground equipment and a picnic pavilion will be purchased by the club, while the city will eventually build a bathroom facility, Acheson said.

To the club, Road Apple Roulette seemed like a natural match for this weekend's Western-themed event.

"Western Days provides the horses, so we're tagging along," he said. "I'm

Many of the teams are building personalized beds.

"We don't really have a strategy," said Jennifer Jensen, whose husband, Troy, is building the Junior Club's bed. "We just pulled some ideas from the Internet."

Organizers encourage teams to prepare, but Fisher expects at least a few teams to register on race day.

"We have six teams registered right now, but we are expecting more than 10," Fisher said earlier this week.

There are a few rules for the goofy beds: Each must have a headboard, footboard and at least four wheels so that the bed riders are safe. Wheels may be on swivels or be permanently fixed. The bed cannot have any propulsion or brakes other than the runners.

Organizers will provide pajamas for the rider to wear over his or her regular clothing.

Diamondz

"I don't know what brought us here (originally)," said Leste, Bang Tango's lead singer. "I know I walked in, laughed my a-- off and played the show. And when we were done, we were like 'Whoa. This is going to be one of our spots!'"

Leste held the audience in his hand when the band played Diamondz last month. Girls ground against his mic stand, metal heads tried to give themselves whiplash and even the cowboy playing pool wandered out to watch the music.

"You want the long set or the short set?" Leste asked the crowd. Screams answered back.

Between screeching songs riddled with guitar solos, Leste laid out for the audience the reason he keeps coming back to Jerome: "The stage is cool, the people are cool, the owners are cool."

The people treated it as a party. Before Bang Tango took the stage, the crowd sang along with Bob Dylan's "Rainy Day Women #12 & 35," with particular emphasis on the line "Everybody must get stoned!" When the track started dying out, the audience cried out in protest, only to roar again when Bang Tango's instruments could be heard from behind a curtain.

Tom "One Finger" Seiberling, 57, was among a group of regulars filling a corner table. His gray ponytail reached down his Veterans of Freedom motorcycle club vest. Between shaking hands with and patting the backs of seemingly everyone in the bar, he moved to the music and looked like he was having as much fun as everyone else in the bar.

He said he's often at the bar on nights without live music, but Bang Tango was a cool draw for even the self-described country fan.

"This is something, especially for Jerome. Jerome isn't known for good bands," said Seiberling, who lives in Hagerman after moving out of Jerome.

The secret to getting those bands is simple, said Tinsely, the booking manager: lots of time on the phone negotiating and networking with band managers and agents.

"It is weird and I do hear that a lot, 'Wow, in Jerome, Idaho, that's too cool,'" Tinsely said of drawing national and regional acts. "But that's also part of the sale too: You can see a big-name act in Jerome, Idaho."

He said the bar goes out of its way to be accommodating to performers: It provides in-house sound equipment and even some house instruments to make events as smooth as possible.

"All it takes is one band to have a bad time and you're ruined as far as getting national acts," Tinsely said. "Word spreads extremely fast, especially in that circle."

As long as the crowd shows up, has a good time and pays the bill for bringing these acts to this Jerome bar, Tinsely said, he'll keep working to bring bands out.

"Every band I have talked to, even if they didn't have a big audience, they ask to come back because they had a blast and loved to play under the lights," Tinsely said. "Hopefully we can keep it up. And the trick to keeping it up is to get more and more people so it is feasible."

Twin Falls show: Impersonator nails young Elvis

By Emily Katseanes
Times-News correspondent

For 27-year-old performer Justin Shandor, one of the biggest compliments in his decade-long career has been having fans, audience members and other musicians mistake him for someone else.

Shandor walks, sings and swings in the style of Elvis Presley so well that Graceland has contacted Shandor manager Jamie Goetz, asking him not to use photos of the King for Shandor's publicity.

"But it wasn't Elvis. It was Justin," Goetz said.

On June 10, Shandor, who has toured worldwide as Elvis, will perform in Twin Falls on a College of Southern Idaho stage.

Before stepping into Presley's blue suede shoes full-time at 16, Shandor said he got teased for looking like Elvis. But after seeing the success of late-era Elvis impersonators in his hometown of Las Vegas, Shandor saw an opening to take his nickname to a new level.

"They all did the old Elvis," Shandor said. "I thought I could kick butt if I did the young Elvis."

Shandor auditioned for a gig as a young Elvis impersonator and nailed it on the first try. Since then, Shandor has toured impersonating Presley from Sweden to Australia and won an Elvis impersonator contest hosted by Elvis Presley Enterprises at Graceland.

For fans like Shirley Doetsch, Shandor's performances have only gotten closer to perfection.

Doetsch saw Elvis perform twice in his lifetime, but she's traveled from her native Oregon as far as California and Idaho to see Shandor perform 45 times. His three shows in Idaho in the coming week, including the Twin Falls ticket, will bump that number to 48.

"When I first saw him about three years ago, I did a double take. I thought it was a young Elvis," Doetsch said. "I've seen a lot of the others over the years, but no one comes even close to Justin Shandor. I don't think there ever will be."

Shandor says being the king of impersonators requires studying how the original King moved long enough to get the audience to believe the illusion.

"It takes studying how he spoke, moved, talked and sang and just capturing a crowd, to get them to believe in what you're doing," Shandor said. "I don't really know a

LEAP OF FAITH

Twin Falls actor tries luck with Hollywood talent contest

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

One of Dale Laughlin's earliest dreams was to be a cast member on "Saturday Night Live." The Twin Falls actor and movie buff has always loved performing and has been in several local productions, including Random Acts of Theatre Players' "Death of a Salesman."

But Laughlin, 34, has bigger dreams than performing at College of Southern Idaho. In July, he is competing in the World Championships of Performing Arts, an invitation-only contest that costs about $4,000 to register for. While many of his friends are wary, he said, Laughlin sees this as his last shot to break into Hollywood.

The journey started in April, when Laughlin got a call from model and talent scouts based in Coeur d'Alene. The scouts invited him to a mid-April audition in Boise.

"They told me that someone referred me to them, but they couldn't tell me who," Laughlin said. He had his doubts about the event, but because it was a one-time deal, he and a friend went to Boise for it. The day after his audition, he was invited to the World Championships of Performing Arts in Hollywood, Calif. The 10-day event costs about $4,000 and includes hotel, workshops and chances to meet and audition in front of industry professionals.

The plan met with skepticism from some of Laughlin's friends, partly because it costs so much money.

"Of course I was leery about it, too," Laughlin said. "I'd never heard of this thing before. Is it a scam?" But the more he looked into the competition, the better he felt about it. "Everything I found, everything I looked up, seemed to be legit, you know?" he said. "I decided what the hell."

Besides, he reasoned, the money goes to the hotel and workshops, and what he spends on the competition would be comparable to what he would spend to go to Hollywood for auditions without the contest.

Tony Mannen, theater professor at CSI, said he had never heard of the World Championships of Performing Arts, but said Laughlin is adaptable, a quick learner and could do well in Hollywood.

"I think Dale's got a lot of talent," Mannen said.

In preparation for the event, Laughlin had to travel to Seattle to get headshots taken with a photographer affiliated with the WCPA. He meets with an acting coach and vocal coach over Skype and is preparing a 60-second monologue for the competition.

On the WCPA website, success stories include actors cast as extras in films and featured in commercials. Laughlin had never heard of any of the winners, he said.

But the point isn't to become a superstar overnight,

TO HELP HIM TAKE THE LEAP

or even at all, he said. All he wants is to be a working actor, whether on stage or on the screen.

"I think it's the right time to do it," Laughlin said. "If it's going to happen, it will happen now."

Sun Valley Writers Conference amasses impressive lineup of guest speakers

By Karen Bossick

Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — Sandra Day O'Connor, the first female justice for the U.S. Supreme Court, will be among those headlining the Sun Valley Writers Conference in August.

O'Connor will be joined by Dr. Siddhartha Mukherjee, an oncologist whose book "The Emperor of all Maladies: A Biography of Cancer" was named a 2011 Pulitzer Prize winner and one of the five best nonfiction works of 2010 by The New York Times.

Other speakers include CNN commentator David Brooks; Richard Clark, White House adviser to three presidents; ESPN Sports Center essayist Rick Reilly; and humorist and food writer Calvin Trillin, whose syndicated column has been called "simply the funniest regular column in journalism" by USA Today.

This year's conference will be Aug. 19-22 at Sun Valley Resort.

A conference pass for $850 includes admission to all talks, including intimate breakout sessions. It also includes continental breakfasts and picnic lunches.

If you think the conference is a treatise on how to publish your own book, think again.

"It's more like a university — a meeting of minds," said Ketchum resident Connie Hoffman.

Last year, for instance, John Lithgow got participants laughing as the five-time Emmy Award winner performed his humorous impressions on stage. Then Harvard professor Niall Ferguson sobered them up with his inference that the United States could collapse rapidly if it doesn't rein in its debt.

And, in between, dozens of other authors broadened the minds of those attending the Sun Valley Writers Conference with a look at everything from the mind of a dog to the way climate change will affect the West's love affair with water.

"We live in a world dominated by technology," said conference director Robin Eidsmo. "But for this time — this short period of time — we get to turn it off. For a short time, we get to experience intimate human contact we would never experience from our screens."

For Ketchum resident Carol Harlig, that included the opportunity to lunch with former Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson.

"Where else do you get so close to these incredible people who have made history, where you can mingle with them and exchange ideas and they don't have body guards. It blows my mind!" she said.

Green Sox knock off rust, top T.F.

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Burley knocked off the rust and then knocked off Twin Falls in its American Legion Baseball Class A season-opening doubleheader Thursday.

Burley had taken a few weeks off after losing to Twin Falls in the final elimination game of high school's District IV tournament. It took a few shaky innings, but the Green Sox prevailed 9-2 in the opener and then held on for a 7-6 victory in the nightcap.

"Twin's a young team and they battle," said Burley coach Devin Kunz. "If we come out and do things like we should, older teams should beat younger teams. It wasn't pretty today, but it was a day we got the rust off. We'll come back tomorrow and we'll get better every day."

Jake Mills led Burley on the mound and at the plate in Game 1. He struck out 10 Cowboys batters and was just one long ball away from hitting for the cycle, finishing 4-for-4.

Kody Moon went 3-for-3 and Joe Ferrin went 3-for-4 for the Green Sox.

"Everybody played really well," said Mills. "I was hitting spots and locating well. (Twin Falls) put some balls in play, but we made most the plays and only had one error, which isn't too bad for the first game of legion."

After an 0-for-4 performance in Game 1, Burley shortstop Jackson Kunz bounced back to go 4-for-4 in Game 2.

"I got back in the groove," Jackson Kunz said. "I was just focusing on getting a base hit (instead of) trying to do too much."

After Burley handed Twin Falls freebies with a wild pitch and an error, the Cowboys tied the score 5-5 in the top of the fourth inning on Tyler Walters' two-run double down the left-field line.

However, the Green Sox recovered the lead in the bottom half as Kody Moon's RBI single scored Kunz. Later, Moon tagged up and scored on Jackson Knopp's sacrifice fly.

Ferrin closed out the final two innings for Burley with two hits, four strikeouts and no earned runs. Twin Falls left the tying and go-ahead runs stranded in the seventh.

Nowitzki rallies Mavericks to tie NBA Finals 1-1

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press writer

MIAMI — Dirk Nowitzki and the Dallas Mavericks put a stunning end to their misery in Miami.

Now they can win their first NBA title without ever coming back to South Florida.

Nowitzki made the tie-breaking layup with 3.6 seconds left, and the Mavericks roared back from 15 points down in the fourth quarter to beat the Heat 95-93 on Thursday night and tie the NBA Finals at one game apiece.

Capping a furious rally by scoring Dallas' final nine points, Nowitzki made two late baskets left-handed — despite a torn tendon on that non-shooting hand. He finished with 24 points.

Dwyane Wade had 36 points for Miami, but his desperation 3-pointer was off at the buzzer.

"I thought defensively we really got into them," Nowitzki said of the rally. "We pressured them full court and we scrambled defensively. We even gave up some offensive rebounds, but we kept scrambling."

Game 3 is Sunday in Dallas.

Seemingly out of the game when the Heat led 88-73 with 7:15 remaining, Dallas held the Heat to just one field goal from there, a 3-pointer by Mario Chalmers with 24.5 seconds that tied it just 2 seconds after Nowitzki's 3 had made it 93-90.

But after a timeout, Jason Kidd ran the clock down before getting the ball to Nowitzki, who drove into the lane, spun back to the left and made the layup.

Jason Terry, largely silent since the first half of Game 1, fueled the comeback with a couple of jumpers and finished with 16 points. Shawn Marion had 20 points for the Mavericks, who had lost four straight finals games in Miami since taking a 2-0 lead in the 2006 series.

Dallas Mavericks forward Dirk Nowitzki pumps his fist at the end of the second half of Game 2 of the NBA Finals basketball game Thursday in Miami. The Mavericks defeated the Heat 95-93.

They were about to go down 2-0 this time before Nowitzki, who insisted his injured finger wouldn't hinder him, led a rally even more amazing than the one that won Game 4 of the Western Conference finals, when the Mavs trailed Oklahoma City by 15 in the fourth quarter before pulling it out in overtime.

LeBron James scored 20 points for the Heat.

He and Wade were running by and over the older Mavs for three quarters, and it appeared the only thing that could slow them down was that big trophy they would soon be holding.

Not so fast.

Wade angered the Mavs, particularly Terry, when he held his follow through after his 3-pointer from the corner with 7:15 left capped a 13-0 run and made it 88-73.

The Heat suddenly went cold, holding the ball too long on possessions and forcing James and Wade to attempt long jumpers with the shot clock winding down, instead of playing to their strengths and driving into the lane.

Justice Dept. to meet with BCS

By Frederic J. Frommer
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department's antitrust division will meet with the BCS this summer, following up on concerns the department raised with the NCAA about college football's postseason format.

Bowl Championship Series executive director Bill Hancock told the Associated Press on Thursday that a Justice Department attorney last week asked for a voluntary background briefing on how the BCS operates. Hancock said he agreed to provide one, but that no date has been set yet.

"We view it as an opportunity to make it clear that the BCS was crafted very carefully with antitrust laws in mind," Hancock said.

The Justice Department initially raised its concerns with the NCAA, asking why there wasn't a playoff for college football's highest level and said there were "serious questions" about whether the current format to determine a national champion complies with antitrust laws.

But NCAA President Mark Emmert responded in a letter last month that the department's questions were best directed to the BCS.

Critics who have urged the department to investigate the BCS contend it unfairly gives some schools preferential access to the title game and lucrative, top-tier bowls at the end of the season.

Hancock said he wasn't concerned with the Justice Department's request for a meeting.

"We take seriously any connection in Washington, and we're certainly taking this seriously," he said. "But I view it as an opportunity, because we're confident that the BCS is on strong legal ground."

Under the BCS, the champions of six conferences have automatic bids to play in top-tier bowl games; the other five conferences

Super Bowl champion Korey Hall to host camp

Annual event comes to Glenss Ferry this month

By Mike Christensen
Times-News writer

When Super Bowl champion Korey Hall hosts his annual football camp later this month in Glenss Ferry, he'd love to have a hand in training the Magic Valley's next NFL player.

"That would be pretty neat," said Hall. "Hopefully that's the case. It's always neat to see guys from our area go on to do big things."

A Glenss Ferry High School graduate, Hall starred at linebacker for Boise State before being drafted in the sixth round of the 2007 NFL draft by the Green Bay Packers. He helped the Packers to a 31-25 win over the Pittsburgh Steelers in Super Bowl XLV in February. He had one reception from his fullback spot and saw numerous snaps on offense and special teams.

He said hosting the third annual Korey Hall Football Camp June 29 in Glenss Ferry is a way to give kids from smaller communities and schools a chance to be trained by players with college and professional experience.

Hall will be joined by former BSU players Derrel Acrey, Andrew Browning and Jerard Robb at the one-day camp. Hall hopes to have a few others, including fellow Packer and former BSU lineman Daryn Colledge, on hand, as well as a Bronco quarterback.

The camp will offer a session for players ages 12-14 at 9 a.m., with another for ages 15-18 at noon. The cost is $15 and includes lunch, a T-shirt and an autograph session with players after the camp.

"It's one of those deals where everyone comes out and we go through some basic drills," said Hall. "We also have a 7-on-7 tournament at the end and give away some prizes."

Hall's future is up in the air. The Packers did not tender a contract offer to him prior to the NFL lockout, leaving him to anxiously await the league's return to business as usual.

"That's the bad part," said Hall. "It's all day to day. We're going to proceed as normal."

Hall's aunt Pam Darrington is organizing the camp. Contact her via email at pamdarrington@yahoo.com. Registration deadline is Friday, June 10.

Giants rock Cardinals rookies

ST. LOUIS — Aubrey Huff hit three home runs and matched his career best with six RBIs and the San Francisco Giants hammered a pair of rookie pitchers making their major league debuts in a 12-7 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals on Thursday night.

Huff, who entered the game batting .219, hit two-run homers in the fourth and ninth and a solo shot in the seventh. He also had an RBI single in the sixth. Huff raised his average 14 points while leading the surge for the Giants, who set a season high for runs.

METS 9, PIRATES 8

NEW YORK — Carlos Beltran's three-run homer started New York's rally from a seven-run deficit and the Mets pulled off their biggest comeback win in 11 years, beating the Pittsburgh Pirates 9-8 on Thursday.

After a tongue-lashing from manager Terry Collins the previous night, New York found itself in a 7-0 hole by the third inning. Beltran homered in the bottom of the third, then hit a leadoff double in the sixth as the Mets scored four times to tie it at 7. Ruben Tejada delivered a go-ahead sacrifice fly in the eighth and Beltran drew a bases-loaded walk later in the inning.

RANGERS 7, INDIANS 4

CLEVELAND — Endy Chavez had his ninth career four-hit game and the Texas Rangers overcame a three-run deficit to beat the Cleveland Indians 7-4 on Thursday night.

McIlroy gets back into the hunt in America

DUBLIN, Ohio (AP) — Rory McIlroy only gets to play three regular PGA Tour events this year. He showed Thursday why the Memorial Tournament was one of them.

On a Muirfield Village course that already ranks among his favorites, McIlroy had a birdie putt on his last eight holes and converted half of them on his way to a 6-under 66 to join Chris Riley in the lead after the first round.

McIlroy hit the ball so pure that he shot 32 on the front nine despite missing three birdie putts inside 8 feet.

"A great way to start the tournament," McIlroy said.

The 22-year-old from Northern Ireland narrowly made the cut at Wentworth in the BMW PGA Championship and wound up in a tie for 24th. Asked the difference between last week and this week, he replied, "It's about 30 degrees warmer."

A tournament known for its sloppy weather has been spectacular, and it showed in the scoring on a well-manicured course.

Chris DiMarco and Josh Teater were at 67, followed by a large group at 68 that included Steve Stricker, Dustin Johnson, Stewart Cink and Rickie Fowler, the runner-up at the Memorial last year.

man field broke par.

Luke Donald, in his debut as the No. 1 player in the world ranking, recovered from a slow start by making four straight birdies toward the end of his round for a 70. He played with Masters champion Charl Schwartzel and four-time major champion Phil Mickelson, who each had a 72. Mickelson did that without making a single birdie on the par 5s.

Riley was in the first group to play in the morning and relied Yorvit Torrealba drove in two runs and Nelson Cruz doubled twice to start three-run rallies to help the defending AL champion Rangers win for the fourth time in their last five road games.

TWINS 8, ROYALS 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Michael Cuddyer drove in two runs, Anthony Swarzak pitched six effective innings and Minnesota beat Kansas City to snap a four-game losing streak.

Minnesota, 3-10 in its last 13 games, sent 10 men to the plate in a six-run third, scoring four unearned runs after Mike Aviles made a throwing error. Denard Span, Matt Tolbert and Rene Rivera had RBI singles and Cuddyer hit a run-scoring double. Justin Morneau scored on Aviles' error, and Rivera scored on a wild pitch.

heavily on his putter to take advantage of the smooth greens, although scoring conditions were not much different in the afternoon.

"The less I think, the better I play," Riley said. "And today, I didn't have time to think. The pace of play was so good and I didn't stand around and think about shots. I just played golf."

This is the last tournament for McIlroy before the U.S. Open, a chance for the No. 6 player in the world to atone for his 80 in the final round that cost him a chance to win the Masters. That collapse hasn't stayed with him long. He was third the next week in Malaysia, and while he missed the cut while defending his title at Quail Hollow, he reached the quarterfinals of the World Match Play in Spain.

And now, the U.S. Open beckons — along with a chance to win on another stronger course in America.

"This is one of my favorite weeks of the year, one of my favorite courses," McIlroy said. "I feel as if it really does set up well for me. I like these sort of golf courses, the likes of here and Akron (Firestone) and Quail Hollow. And I'm swinging well, I'm hitting it good and I'm holding a few putts. Hopefully, I can keep it going for the next three days."

BCS

But Hancock said that the BCS, which was established in 1998, has improved access to such bowls for those other five conferences. According to the BCS, schools from those conferences played in such bowls only six times in 54 years, while under the BCS, it happened seven times in the past seven years. Hancock said the system has done a better job pitting the top two teams in a championship game.

Texas A&M athletic director Bill Byrne said at the Big 12 meetings in Kansas City that if the Justice Department were to break up the BCS, "... I suspect what we will do is go right back to the old bowl system and the conferences will make their deals — the same things we used to have.

"Then it will give (the media) the opportunity to write editorials about how we should have a playoff system or bring the BCS back?"

Hancock said the meeting will be the first the BCS has had with the department at least since he joined the organization in 2005.

He said he did not think that the meeting signaled an investigation.

"Their staff made it clear this was simply a request for information," Hancock said. "They also said our cooperation was voluntary."

Justice Department spokeswoman Gina Talamona said the department continues to review information provided to it to determine whether to open an investigation into the legality of the current system under antitrust laws.

"It's not unusual for us to have discussions with knowledgeable parties on a particular matter," she added, but declined to confirm who the department was meeting with.

Matthew Sanderson, co-founder of Playoff PAC, which wants the BCS replaced with a championship playoff system, called the meeting "yet another sign that the Justice Department may be moving toward a formal investigation. The scandal-plagued BCS is in trouble on multiple fronts"

Even if there is no federal investigation, the BCS is already under fire from at least one state. The attorney general of Utah, Mark Shurtleff, has said he plans to file an antitrust lawsuit against the BCS.

Double-faults plague Sharapova

Li reaches 2nd consecutive major final

PARIS (AP) — As Maria Sharapova prepared to serve while only a point from defeat in the French Open semifinals, Li Na was thinking what any opponent would at that precise moment.

“I was, like, ‘Please, double-fault. That way I can win the match;’” Li explained to the crowd a few moments later.

Sharapova obliged. Her second serve hit the white tape atop the net and bounced back for Sharapova’s 10th double-fault of an error-filled afternoon, closing Li’s 6-4, 7-5 victory Thursday. The result ended Sharapova’s bid to complete a career Grand Slam, and allowed Li to reach a second consecutive major final.

At the Australian Open in January, Li was the runner-up, the first tennis player from China to reach a major championship match. At the French Open on Saturday — when she will play defending champion Francesca Schiavone — Li can become the first Grand Slam champion from her nation of more than 1 billion people.

Maria Sharapova reacts as she plays Li Na during their semifinal match of the French Open tennis tournament Thursday at the Roland Garros stadium in Paris. Li Na won 6-4, 7-5.

The sixth-seeded Li said she wants her sport to “get bigger and bigger” back home. Noting that Chinese children probably saw her semifinal on TV, Li said that perhaps “they think that maybe one day, they can do the same — or even better.”

A year ago at Roland Garros, Schiavone became the first woman from Italy to win one of tennis’ four most important titles. But she had failed to make it to the final of any tournament since then, until taking the last four games to beat 11th-seeded Marion Bartoli of France 6-3, 6-3 Thursday.

“When I come here,” the fifth-seeded Schiavone said, “I feel something special.”

After Bartoli’s last two-handed forehand — she grips her racket with both fists on nearly every shot — dropped into the net to end the day’s second semifinal, Schiavone celebrated by bending down and rubbing her right palm on the clay court, then making a fist and kissing it.

She fell in love with the French Open the first time she came to play in the junior tournament and got a chance to see Steffi Graf and Monica Seles play in the semifinals. Schiavone sat in the stands, like any other fan, and snapped a photo she still looks at to this day.

“I remember that moment,” Schiavone recounted, “and I (said then), ‘I want to play in this court. I want be like them.’”

At 30, Schiavone would be the first woman at least that old to win a Grand Slam title since Martina Navratilova was 33 at Wimbledon in 1990. Combine Schiavone’s age with the 29-year-old Li’s, and Saturday’s match will have the oldest pair of finalists at a major tournament in 13 years.

“The years can help a lot,” Schiavone said. “Is like the wine.”

The final will provide quite a contrast in styles.

Comfortable on clay, Schiavone looks for chances to charge the net and lathers her shots with plenty of spin, accompanying most with loud grunts. She’s also among the most demonstrative women on tour, and she skipped with delight after many of her 22 winners, twice as many as Bartoli hit.

Much more confident on hard courts, Li prefers to stay at the baseline, hitting flat shots in near silence. Only as the end neared against Sharapova did Li occasionally pump a fist.

Driving her big forehand near lines, Li finished with 24 winners, double Sharapova’s count. It was a performance that prompted Li’s coach since April, Michael Mortensen, to describe her Thursday as “kind of Roger Federer of the women; she can do so many things.”

Bruins moving on after Burrows avoids bite ban

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — The Vancouver Canucks don’t understand the big fuss about a little bite.

Neither did the NHL.

Vancouver forward Alex Burrows avoided a suspension in the Stanley Cup finals Thursday when league officials decided they couldn’t prove he deliberately bit the finger of Boston’s Patrice Bergeron during the Canucks’ series-opening 1-0 victory.

Although the Bruins weren’t terribly happy about NHL disciplinarian Mike Murphy’s decision, both teams realize they’ve got bigger issues than the after-the-whistle shenanigans that happen constantly in the NHL, particularly under playoff intensity.

After all, players have been biting, gouging, face-washing, elbowing, grabbing, spearing — and don’t forget punching — since probably the first period of the first game after Canada invented hockey.

“That’s how French guys say hello to one another,” joked Alexandre Bolduc, who centered the Canucks’ fourth line in Game 1. “You want to show respect, you put your fingers in someone’s mouth.”

Daniel and Henrik Sedin were relieved that such a silly incident didn’t sideline their linemate early in what’s shaping up as a gritty, goalie-dominated series heading into Game 2 on Saturday night.

Roberto Luongo shut out the Bruins with 36 saves, and Boston’s Tim Thomas matched him in a penalty-plagued game featuring six power plays for each team. Raffi Torres finally scored with 18.5 seconds to play, giving Vancouver a series-opening victory and the accompanying 77 percent historic probability of winning its first Stanley Cup title.

“We need him out there,” said NHL scoring champion Daniel Sedin, who took eight shots without a goal in Game 1.

Stanley Cup Finals Game 2

Boston at Vancouver
6 p.m., Saturday, NBC

“He plays in every situation. Big part of this team. Obviously, we’re happy to have him inside the rink.”

Burrows wasn’t made available to reporters after the Canucks’ light practice Thursday at the University of British Columbia. The Bruins refused to get indignant about the NHL’s decision, with Boston coach Claude Julien cautioning his players against whining about a single play in a chippy game.

“I’m over it,” Bergeron said Thursday after the Bruins’ workout. “I’m looking forward to the next game. We’ve got to get back in the series. Like I said last night, it’s the league’s decision, and I’ve got to let them make it. ... I don’t want to whine about that stuff. I don’t care.”

After the game, Bergeron declared Burrows had bitten him while they scuffled after the first-period buzzer, even showing his bandaged right index finger and saying he planned to take antibiotics.

In the television replay that seemingly played on an infinite loop in Vancouver’s bars and restaurants Wednesday night, Bergeron’s gloved right index finger sure appeared to go into Burrows’ mouth. Bergeron claimed Burrows then bit down on him, but Burrows denied it.

“It’s too bad that something like that has to happen in the Stanley Cup finals,” Julien said. “I think there’s better ways of resolving issues than getting to that.”

Bergeron scoffed at the notion he had deliberately put his finger in Burrows’ mouth. Both players had their gloves in each other’s face at different points of the scuffle.

“We were both face-washing each other, and I didn’t need to put my finger in his mouth,” Bergeron said. “Why would I do that?”

NFL and players meet, court date next

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press writer

From mediated talks to arguments before an appeals court, the NFL’s labor dispute has reached another critical stage.

The league and its players completed three straight days of not-so-secret negotiations Thursday, and now head for the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis for a hearing that could prove pivotal in the nearly three-month lockout.

The three-judge panel will ultimately decide whether the lockout should continue, and NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell and union chief DeMaurice Smith, among others, are expected to be inside the courtroom on Friday.

Training camps, meanwhile, normally would open in about seven weeks, but this, of course, is no normal year for pro football.

Ben Leber, one of 10 plaintiffs on the still-pending antitrust lawsuit against the league, said the players haven’t discussed a specific drop-dead date for reaching an agreement to ensure the on-time start of training camps. But he said it’s necessary to have a date to reach a deal.

“Both sides have a day, whether they want to make it public or not,” Leber said. “The biggest challenge is going to lie with whose day is going to come up first. Once it got to this point, I think it was just a good guess based on most corporate labor disputes that nothing was going to get done until the 11th hour. Now it depends on which 11th hour gets here first.”

Goodell and owners Jerry

Jones, Robert Kraft and John Mara were among those joined in a Chicago suburb by Smith and a group of players, including NFLPA president Kevin Mawae, before U.S. Magistrate Judge Arthur Boylan. Both sides issued statements saying they would honor a court-ordered confidentiality agreement. Boylan then canceled mediation sessions scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday in Minneapolis.

A person with knowledge of the talks told The Associated Press that the term “settlement negotiations” doesn’t necessarily mean an agreement is near. The person, speaking on condition of anonymity because of the judge’s confidentiality order, said canceling next week’s sessions was simply a way to keep the process as private as possible.

More likely than another round of mediated talks with Boylan would be a similar secret meeting without him — between just the league and players, who have been locked out since March 12.

In the past, a clandestine approach has helped negotiations. Such meetings between former union executive director Gene Upshaw and former Commissioner Paul Tagliabue often led to progress on a new collective bargaining agreement.

The NFL was granted a delay in the execution of an injunction against the lockout in late April. Though Friday’s hearing may not produce an immediate decision, one sports labor expert believes it will be expedited. With the scheduled start to the regular season barely three months away, there is an urgency to push forward.

Ingram striving to make early mark with Saints

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Mark Ingram figures there no use dwelling on whether the NFL lockout will stunt his growth as a player, and he downplays the apparent tension that the Saints’ decision to draft him has caused with Reggie Bush.

If anything, Alabama’s 2009 Heisman Trophy winner sounds pleased with the way his pro career has begun.

At the very least, it’s been convenient.

Ingram was already living in a quiet two-story row of townhouses in suburban New Orleans when he was drafted, and quarterback Drew Brees’ decision to organize workouts at Tulane made it easy for the Saints’ new running back to get acquainted with his new team.

“I’ve been meeting with Drew and a couple of the guys, just learning the system and getting familiar with things,” Ingram said before a recent workout with fellow Saints players. “I’m really just trying to get accustomed to them and just getting used to everything going on.”

Because of the lockout, there have been no rookie camps, or rookie signings for that matter. Ingram could have chosen to stay away from player-organized team drills while awaiting his first pro contract, but said he was impressed by the Saints’ veteran leadership and unity, and wanted to be part of that.

“I really just wanted to develop better chemistry

Mark Ingram doesn’t bemoan the NFL lockout’s effect on his rookie year and he downplays the apparent tension the New Orleans Saints’ decision to draft him caused with Reggie Bush.

with the guys, be out here, get ready, get to know ‘em better and just get familiar with the terminology and the system,” Ingram said. “That just shows you the type of leadership we have on the team — great players, great teammates, great organization. And that’s why they’ve been winning. And it’s just good that these guys have taken the initiative in being great leaders.”

Ingram has taken part in seven-on-seven drills, catching short passes from Brees and darting around defenders downfield. Although coverage has been relatively soft and contact nonexistent as players seek to minimize the risk of injury, Brees has been impressed with Ingram’s work.

“He looks great. There’s no doubt he’s been working and he’s in shape,” Brees said. “He can play a pretty significant role on our offense.”

Ingram rushed for 1,658 yards in 2009, won the Heisman Trophy and led Alabama to the national championship. Last season, he injured his left knee in preseason practice and missed the Crimson Tide’s first two games while recovering from arthroscopic surgery, then returned to rush for 875 yards on 158 carries.

He moved to New Orleans to work out with a personal trainer months before the draft, and it wasn’t long before

Reality TV lands Reggie Bush in Danville, Ill.

DANVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Reggie Bush of Danville is out of town, but someone is taking his place: Reggie Bush.

The New Orleans Saints star is spending the week in eastern Illinois, switching places while his namesake is living the offseason life of an NFL running back for a planned CBS reality-

TV show, “Same Name.”

Danville residents say Bush the running back has filmed scenes at the Fair Oaks Housing Complex and the Moon Glo restaurant. No word on whether he tried the restaurant’s signature Moon burger or its fried pickles.

Bush hasn’t said much about the show or his stop in the city of 32,000 just west of the Indiana line, but the San Diego native did briefly mention it on Twitter.

“In Danville, Illinois shooting a new TV show for CBS,” he wrote late Wednesday night. “Filming and staying with a cool family out here that shares my last name!”

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"I know a trick worth two of that."

— William Shakespeare

The success or failure of today's contract was determined by declarer's play to trick one. Be aware, the maneuver required was somewhat artificial, and the game reached by North and South was not the optimum one. Indeed, six clubs (played by North) is surely the place to be, though getting there might be beyond us all!

Fortunately for declarer, though, West led the spade jack and not a heart against five diamonds. Clubs are blocked, and if diamonds are 3-1 and the hand with the doubleton club has three diamonds, three rounds of clubs will not stand up before dummy's sole entry — the diamond 10 — can be utilized.

What can declarer do? Having been lucky enough to escape the damaging heart lead, the card to play from dummy at trick one is the spade queen, taking West off lead and avoiding the fatal heart shift. East covers, and South completes his sterling work by resisting the urge to trump. Instead, he discards the club ace on this trick.

Now, with clubs breaking 3-2, the 3-1 trump break is no longer an insurmountable barrier. No return by East at trick two can harm declarer. On, say, another spade, South ruffs, draws two rounds of trumps with high diamonds in hand, then cashes the club king and queen. A diamond to the 10 extracts West's last trump, after which three hearts from hand can be deposited on dummy's clubs. South's only other loser is a heart.

ANSWER: Your partner has made a long-suit game try, suggesting spade length and significant extra values or shape, or both. The fact that you have all your values in the majors suggests you should have what your partner needs, so despite your high-card minimum, you should jump to four hearts.

DEAR ABBY: I am a teacher with a dilemma. I have taught for 10 years and connected with thousands of former students. With the Internet and social networking, I am able to keep in touch with many of them. I enjoy knowing what they're doing in their college careers and beyond.

One student I've kept in touch with recently admitted his romantic love for me. "Kyle" is now in his 20s and on his own. As his teacher 10 years ago, I'd never have dreamed of this happening. What's difficult is I think I reciprocate those feelings. I never expected the man I connect with most to be a former student, but Kyle is an adult and I know him as such.

I'm not sure what to do. I'm aware of my professional boundaries as a teacher and would never cross those lines with a student or minor. What do you do when your former student is an adult, you live in a small town and you're drawn to each other? This could be the love I've been waiting for my entire life. Would it be totally inappropriate if I followed my heart?

— WONDERING IN WYOMING

DEAR ABBY Jeanne Phillips

DEAR WONDERING:

No. Because Kyle is an adult, and when he was your student there was no flirting (I presume), I see nothing unethical about pursuing the relationship. However, if your romance becomes fodder for gossip — and it very well might — you should be prepared to relocate.

DEAR ABBY: I went to the zoo with my daughter's class as a chaperone. While we were there, I saw several children begin climbing the walls of some of the exhibits. They were not part of the group from our school. I promptly asked the children "nicely" not to climb on the exhibits for fear they would hurt themselves or fall in.

A parent who heard me ask her son to get down began yelling and cursing at me in front of my daughter and the other children. I said, "I'm sorry," and walked on.

I don't feel I did anything wrong. I was trying to warn the boy that what he was doing was dangerous. Did I do the wrong thing? Or should I have talked to a member of the zoo staff about what happened? Please advise what you would do if someone's child did what I witnessed.

— VIGILANT PARENT IN OKLAHOMA CITY
DEAR VIGILANT PARENT: Candidly, I probably would have reflexively done exactly what you did — get the child out of harm's way. However, the prudent way to handle a situation like the one you encountered would have been to alert the zoo staff or security personnel so they could handle it.

DEAR ABBY: In our golfing circle there's a single, 47-year-old professional woman with two children. We thought we knew her. Come to find out, she has been involved for the last five years with a married man who has a child.

We're uncomfortable having her around us now. None of us is perfect, but a woman who would take another's man and wreck a home is one thing most women can't stand. What, if anything, should we do?

— TEE'D OFF IN ALABAMA

DEAR TEE'D OFF: Before deciding what to do, talk privately with the woman, tell her what you have learned and hear what she has to say about it. After that, you'll know what (or what not) to do.

“Guess what! They decided I AM a year smarter!”

Today is Friday, June 3, the 154th day of 2011. There are 211 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:

On June 3, Illinois Sen. Stephen A. Douglas, the Democratic presidential nominee in the 1860 election, died in Chicago of typhoid fever; he was 48.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1621, the Dutch West India Co. received its charter for a trade monopoly in parts of the Americas and Africa.

In 1808, Confederate President Jefferson Davis was born in Christian County, Ky.

In 1888, the poem “Casey at the Bat,” by Ernest Lawrence Thayer, was first published in the San Francisco Daily Examiner.

In 1937, the Duke of Windsor, who had abdicated the British throne, married Wallis Warfield Simpson in Monts, France.

In 1948, the 200-inch reflecting Hale Telescope at the Palomar Mountain Observatory in California was dedicated.

In 1961, President John F. Kennedy and Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev opened two days of summit talks in Vienna.

In 1963, Pope John XXIII died at age 81; he was succeeded by Pope Paul VI.

In 1965, astronaut Edward White became the first American to “walk” in space, during the flight of Gemini 4.

In 1981, Pope John Paul II left a Rome hospital and returned to the Vatican three weeks after the attempt on his life.

In 1989, Iran's spiritual leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, died. Chinese army troops began their sweep of Beijing to crush student-led pro-democracy demonstrations. SkyDome (now called Rogers Centre) opened in Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

Ten years ago: Alejandro Toledo defeated ex-president Alan Garcia in Peru's presidential election. Actor Anthony Quinn died in Boston at age 86. Mel Brooks' musical comedy “The Producers” won a record 12 Tony Awards. Golfer Karrie Webb won the U.S. Women's Open in a runaway for the second year in a row.

Five years ago: Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld, attending a security conference in Singapore, branded Iran the world's leading terrorist nation yet hoped that Tehran would seriously consider incentives from the West in exchange for suspending suspect nuclear activities. Gunmen attacked a car belonging to the Russian Embassy in Baghdad, killing one diplomat and kidnapping four employees who were later slain.

One year ago: BP sliced off a pipe with giant shears to make way for a cap in the latest bid to curtail the worst oil spill in U.S. history. During an Oval Office face-off over illegal immigration, Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer told President Barack Obama Americans “want our border secured” while Obama underscored his objections over the tough immigration law Brewer had signed, calling it discriminatory.
