Want a new license? Be prepared to wait for it

The Idaho Transportation Department began the transition to centrally issued driver's licenses and identification cards on Monday, starting with the Twin Falls Division of Motor Vehicles office. The good news is that the cards have new methods in place to protect against identity theft. The bad news is that you'll have to wait for nearly two weeks after your DMV visit to get one. What you'll need to know:

Q: What's different about the cards?
A: Idaho's new driver's license features a myriad of extra security features to protect citizens against identity fraud. One major change is that cards will no longer be issued at local DMV offices. Some changes include microprinting, "ghost images" or other patterns to curtail unlawful forgery. Cards for minors will be printed vertically and have color coding to show if the cardholder is between 18 and 21 years old or is under 18.

Q: Why aren't the cards made on site?
A: The cards are made in a central facility in the U.S., which increases security for card manufacturing. All but 14 states have switched to Central Issuance cards.

Q: Will the price of getting a new card go up?
A: No. The price for a driver's license or ID card will remain the same, depending on classification and age. New equipment provided to your local DMV was paid for by the U.S. Department of Homeland Security.

Q: Do I have to get a new card right now?
A: No. Existing cards will be honored to their expiration date. The new method apply to new licenses, concealed weapons licenses and other special identification cards.

Q: When does my license arrive in the mail? What do I use while I wait on the card to be mailed?
A: A new license should be in your mailbox by the 10th business day after your visit. The DMV office will issue a temporary paper card with much of the same information the final license will include. The temporary card, printed on specialty paper, is good for 30 days.

Tornado warning, flash-flood watch make for exciting Monday across Magic Valley

Times-News

A tornado warning for parts of southern Idaho Monday prompted little more than spotty reports. National Weather Service meteorologist George Skari said Monday evening that his agency had no official sighting of a twister, though a spotter up in the mountains later reported an unconfirmed funnel cloud. The NWS had followed what appeared to be a tornado on radar mid-afternoon north through Elmore, Gooding and Camas counties. That came the same day that the agency issued a flash-flood watch for much of central and southeast Idaho, including the Big and Little Wood rivers. That watch was expected to end this morning. Heavy rains were expected Monday evening across much of south-central Idaho. At their peak Monday afternoon, winds near Mountain Home Air Force Base reached gusts of 31 mph. Farther north, Camas County sheriff's dispatcher Vickie Chess said she'd received no calls about a tornado — just seen lots of rain and wind. "It's still black out there, but not like it was," she said at about 3:30 p.m. The good news is that the weather appears to be easing. Though a near-record snowpack has yet to melt in Idaho's mountains, the Snake River near Milner has dropped nearly two-thirds of a foot since Friday, with flows at one measuring station running at about 15,000 cubic feet per second at 1 p.m. Monday. The severe storms have passed as well, said Skari. "Things are winding down here," he said Monday. "All the heavy activity is up in Montana now." That doesn't mean the rains are gone. Today's forecast across south-central Idaho calls for a 40 to 50 percent chance of showers, with possible thunderstorms tonight, and highs of 60 to 70 degrees.

Wolves kill Bellevue calf; officials to set traps

Reports of livestock deaths from predators are down this year

By Kimberlee Kruesi
Times-News writer

Federal officials have confirmed this year's first instance of wolves killing livestock in south-central Idaho. But it appears that overall livestock deaths due to wolves are down, perhaps a product of last year's public wolf hunt. A group of at least three wolves killed one calf and severely injured another at the Cove Ranch in Bellevue on Saturday, according to Todd Grimm, western district supervisor of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Wildlife Services. The agency contracts with states to trap or kill problem predators.

AT A GLANCE

In 2009, the gray wolf was removed from the endangered species list in Idaho and other states. Later that year, the Idaho Department of Fish and Game had its first-ever public wolf hunt, which killed 188 wolves. A judge relisted the wolf in August 2010, but that action was undone in May 2011 after a vote by Congress — the first time that lawmakers took such a step for a species. Idaho wolves are now managed the same as other big game, and another hunt will be set later this year.

T.F. senior center gets OK to host private events

Council supports keeping local mail processing center

By Nick Coltraine
Times-News writer

The Twin Falls Senior Citizens Center will be allowed to rent space for private events, patching its finances. The Twin Falls City Council, which leases the center's building to it for $1 a month, barely gave the OK Monday to the center to rent out portions of the facility outside of its normal operating hours. In the 4-3 vote, council members David E. Johnson, Will Kezele, Rebecca Mills Sojka and Mayor Don Hall voted in favor. Councilmen Trip Craig, Greg Lanting and Lance Clow voted against. The original lease between the city and center disallowed renting the facility. Diane Stevens, the center's executive director, said allowing it to rent the space could bring in more than $12,000 this year and help close what's become a multi-thousand-dollar deficit. Groups already signed up to rent one-time space include weddings, a

The U.S. Postal Service is considering closing the Twin Falls mail processing center, saving an estimated $623,000 by consolidating its operations with Boise. Vicky Davis spoke on behalf of senior citizens opposing the change, arguing it would shift the center from senior use to community use. She said center policy has already been detrimental to seniors because some billiards and snooker players were "evicted" from a room dedicated to those games so the room could become multi-purpose.

Shoshone-Paiute Tribes support China Mountain

Times-News

The Shoshone-Paiute Tribes announced its support for the proposed China Mountain Wind Project in a Monday news conference.

Business Council members from the tribes stated their support with a resolution in favor of the proposed wind farm on the Idaho-Nevada border.

"Renewable energy, energy without burning fossil fuels, is needed to reverse changes affecting us all, everywhere. It is no longer sufficient to say that this is a problem that can be solved by other people in other locations," said Terry Gibson of the Shoshone-Paiute Business Council.

The Renewable Energy Systems Americas project would build up to 170 wind turbines on about 30,000 acres southwest of Roger-son, producing as much as 400 megawatts of electricity.

"We need to start solving this problem right away and in places where we have the best renewable energy resources" Gibson said. "The Shoshone-Paiute recognize a responsibility to face this difficulty, largely brought on by other people, but to do so in a way that preserves our history and way of life as fully as possible."

The U.S. Bureau of Land Management is currently reviewing the proposed project, with its decision on whether to allow it to proceed — in full or in part — uncertain. RES Americas officials hope to begin site construction in 2012-13.

"When you kick seniors out of an activity in order to rent out a room to non-seniors, you are really changing the purpose of the room, the purpose of the facility and you're denying the seniors the very thing they are supposed to be getting out of the center," Davis said.

Clow echoed this, saying that taxpayers voted to buy the building for senior citizens' use — not to be an event center.

Kezele said the fact that the City Council even needs to look at the issue means the community should look at itself and decide if it is really supporting the seniors.

The council also voted to send a letter to Idaho's congressional delegation supporting keeping the U.S. Postal Service's Twin Falls mail processing center open. American Postal Workers Union Local 179 President Donna Meyer argued the closure of the processing center will cost the Twin Falls area up to 30 jobs and decrease local service, business bulk-mail discounts and hurt local businesses that rely on quick mail delivery.

"The mail volume has definitely decreased, with the Internet and overnight mail by other services, but we can't just stand by and let our community take the brunt of this," she said.

Before the council voted unanimously in support of the processing center, Clow gave an impassioned speech about the need of the USPS not to protect bad business practices — such as Saturday delivery — especially when it will look at inflicting much greater hurt on communities like the Magic Valley.

Wolves

Wildlife Services will begin actively trapping for the wolves in that area, Grimm said.

"That has been an active spot for livestock depredation cases," Grimm said. "We've seen multiple cases in that area."

While Wildlife Services confirms wolf depredation cases, the Idaho Department of Fish and Game partners with the federal agency to monitor wolf management.

Control and oversight of wolves returned to the state just this spring.

"Fish and Game help set the population goals while we are the ones on the ground floor making sure we meet those numbers," Grimm said.

According to Jerome Hansen, Fish and Game's Magic Valley regional supervisor, wolf attacks on livestock will most likely continue to increase with more calves and other young livestock around.

However, Idaho's depredation cases are starting out much lower this year than in previous years.

Grimm and Hansen both attributed the decrease to Idaho's first regulated wolf hunt that ran from late 2009 to mid-2010.

"We see last year's wolf hunt as very successful," Hansen said. "It put the fear of man back in the wolves, which is a good thing."

This year, 11 cases of livestock kills have been confirmed so far throughout the state, said Fish and Game spokesman Mike Keckler. In 2009, 47 cases were confirmed by early June.

"It appears as a result of the hunting season, wolves equated humans with potential danger," Keckler said. "As a result, I think the wolves were less willing to be bold, and we hope that trend continues during and after our hunting season so that there continues to be fewer and fewer cases of depredation."

A HOME IN 5 DAYS

ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Teacher Leah Dow's new home in Twin Falls went from a simple foundation Monday morning to what is shown here on Monday afternoon. Habitat for Humanity of the Magic Valley and Thrivent Financial for Lutherans are partnering to build the home by Friday.

THE DOW HOME, DAY 1

In the course of only five days, Habitat for Humanity of the Magic Valley is building a new home for Oregon Trail Elementary School teacher Leah Dow and her two sons, Jalen and Langdon. Here's where things stand after Monday.

WHAT'S BEEN DONE: The framing was up and trusses were hanged after only an hour. Plumbing, electricity, and heating and air were nearing completion at 4 p.m. The project required four different city inspectors to do inspections in an hour. The roof is partially shingled and the exterior is partially stuccoed.

WHAT'S NEXT: Dry wall went up throughout the night. Today the walls will be textured, siding will go up and the roof and stucco will be completed.

WHAT'S SURPRISING: Future homeowner Leah Dow was spotted Monday crawling into the crawl space to do some plumbing work.

WHAT THEY SAID: "We were worried about the weather, but Mother Nature has been on our side," said local Habitat Executive Director Linda Fleming. "I went to get the hurricane clips and the hurricane blew over." For more on the build, visit Magicvalley.com and read Wednesday's Times-News.

Jerome voters may decide on recycling

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

IF YOU GO

What: Jerome City Council meets to discuss putting a recycling proposal on the November ballot
When: 5:30 p.m. today
Where: Council Chambers, 100 E. Ave. A, Jerome.

JEROME — Jerome residents may vote in November's election on whether they want a recycling program in their city.

The Jerome City Council will discuss at tonight's meeting whether to ask voters if they want to pay about $3.50 a month per residential household for a single-stream recycling service from PSI Environmental Systems Inc.

There's also an option in which residents would pay about $1 more per month and receive coupons from merchants through a rewards program, said Ben Marchant, the city administrator.

The waste management company already contracts with Jerome for trash removal and started a recycling program in January for Twin Falls.

Mayor John Shine said he's gotten little — but mixed — feedback on the issue.

"I've had a couple people very interested in having recycling, and I've had a couple other people that would like to have recycling but don't want to have an increase in their sanitation bill," he said.

Shine said he's encouraged the council to put the issue on the ballot.

"I believe that $3.50 to pick up a container of single-stream recycling where you don't have to separate everything is really a good deal," Shine said.

In Twin Falls, the change has caused growth in recycling compared to a year ago. In March, with the new program in place, the average household put 26.5 pounds of materials into recycling bins that may have otherwise ended up in the landfill.

Before the program, Twin Falls households recycled, on average, just 4.8 pounds of trash through a sorted recycling program in March 2010.

Utah officials trying to ban hookah smoking

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Hookahs could go the way of cigarettes, cigars and pipes if Utah health officials approve a ban on smoking heated tobacco in popular bars and other public places.

Health officials argue secondhand smoke from hookahs is just as dangerous as that of other tobacco products, which state law already prohibits in public indoor spaces. That includes all bars.

"There are harmful effects from the secondhand smoke from hookahs," Utah Department of Public Health spokesman Steve Hadden said Monday. "Just because it's an adult place doesn't mean it's any less harmful."

Two Utah counties have banned hookah smoking in public, although neither county had any businesses that offered hookahs at the time of the bans. Other public health officials have asked the state for a clarification about whether smoking hookahs, in which tobacco is sometimes mixed with flavorings, violates the indoor smoking laws.

The ban would not prohibit hookahs outright, only tobacco in the hookahs, Hadden said. There are non-tobacco options available and those would still be legal.

There are a number of bars and restaurants that offer hookahs in the state, primarily in Salt Lake City and surrounding suburbs. They include sushi bars, Middle Eastern restaurants and social clubs.

In its proposed rule, the health department acknowledges the ban could severely impact businesses where hookah smoking is a primary attraction.

Nathan Porter, the owner of the suburban Huka Bar, said the ban would potentially ruin his business.

"We're called the Huka Bar," Porter told Fox 13. "People come here knowing we have hookahs or they're with their friends who smoke hookah."

A public hearing was held for the hookah ban Monday afternoon in Salt Lake City.

During debates last year in Davis County, which was the first county to ban hookahs, health director Lewis Garrett said hookah smoke is still smoke that can be harmful to people.

"One of the reasons this is so prevalent, is it smells good," Garrett said. "It doesn't smell like tobacco. It smells like incense or something flavorful. And I think there's a misconception that this isn't nearly as harmful as cigarettes because it's filtered through the water and it smells nice."

L.A.-bound? Visit Magic Valley’s stars

For those of you who have labored all these years under the misapprehension that nobody from the Magic Valley has a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame, let me put you out of your misery.

There are, in fact, two. One belongs to Sherry Jackson, the Wendell-born actress best known as Danny Thomas’ daughter on the 1950s sitcom “Make Room for Daddy.” You’ll find it on Hollywood Boulevard, right in front of Holy-Vine Wigs (actor Ernest Borgnine’s star is next door).

The other star honors Buhl native Marjorie Reynolds, a Golden Age Hollywood actress (she was in “Gone With the Wind,” among many other movies). Her star is on Vine Street, in front of Occhi Eye Boutique.

Both got their stars on the same day — Feb. 8, 1960.

I’m sorry to say that our other local claim to glitter — Rupert’s Bill Fagerbakke — has so far been neglected by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, which administers the Walk of Fame.

Jackson, who’s now 69 and lives in Redondo Beach, Calif., was a child star, purportedly discovered by a talent scout as she and her mother waited for a bus. She was a regular on network television in the ’50s and ’60s, but is best remembered today for a single memorable 1966 appearance on “Star Trek” as Andrea, a very scantily clad android. That gets her invited to sci-fi conventions to this day.

For a Hollywood detective movie, “Gunn,” Jackson was filmed nude in a scene that appeared only in the international version, not the U.S. release. Stills of the nude scene appeared in the August 1967 issue of Playboy magazine, in a pictorial entitled Make Room For Sherry.

Reynolds (her real surname was Goodspeed) was born in Buhl in 1917 while her parents were making a cross-country move from Maine to California. Also a child star, she made her first movie at age 6.

Reynolds, who died in 1997, is best known for her performance as the loyal girlfriend of wrongly accused Richard Cromwell in the anti-Nazi action drama “Enemy Agent” (1940). She also sang “White Christmas” with Bing Crosby in “Holiday Inn” (1942).

Part-time Hailey resident Bruce Willis has a star on the Walk of Fame (he got it in 2006) and actress Ann Sothern — who lived most of her final years in Ketchum — has two, one for her movie work and one for television.

Sun Valley’s Adam West — TV’s Batman — has no star, and that’s the source of some discontent.

James Tooley, a moviemaker and West’s son-in-law, has put the actor’s case for a star on film in the form of a documentary, aimed at the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce. The project was paid for by donations from West’s fans.

West has lived in the Wood River Valley since 1986.

BLM seeks comments on wilderness, river plan

Times-News

The U.S. Bureau of Land Management is now accepting public comment on its developing Wilderness and Wild & Scenic River Management Plan.

the various segments.

Those wishing to offer comments on the plan are invited to attend a June 28 meeting held from 5:30-7:30 p.m. at the Red Lion Hotel Canyon Springs, 1357 Blue Lakes Blvd. N., Twin Falls.

“We’re in the really early stages,” said T.J. Clifford, the BLM’s Boise District outdoor recreation planner. “Right now we’re just asking the public to give us some feedback, and we will write the management plan with the comments influencing the plan.”

Clifford said the final draft will be submitted for approval from Congress in 2014.

The major issues Clifford is seeking feedback on are limited motorized access areas for permit holders and limited rafting capacity in certain river segments.

“There is very little flexibility in what we can do since we must comply with the Wilderness Act. We have a strict guideline on what defines wilderness and what we can do,” he said. “However, I am looking forward to what issues the public will also want addressed in the plan.”

Minors caught on camera vandalizing downtown

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

Downtown Twin Falls had a vibrant, colorful new look Monday morning, but only because vandals had strewn flowers all over Main Avenue.

Escape Salon, at 347 Main Ave. E., was one of many downtown businesses affected by the destruction. Owner Scott Andrus arrived at his salon around 7:45 a.m. to find red geraniums and other flowers everywhere. He learned from other business owners that he was not the only target.

“There were yellow petunias or whatever kind of flowers,” he said, “all these bright colors.”

He said video surveillance shows two males — who are guessed to be anywhere from 10 to 15 years old — at 6:07 a.m. tearing out the flowers he bought to spruce up his shop front.

For 2 minutes and 30 seconds, the teens ripped the flowers out of the soil and threw them into the air, onto the sidewalk and onto the street. Andrus turned the video over to Twin Falls police on Monday afternoon.

Virginia Wilcox, owner of Music Center at 221 Main Ave. E., is the green thumb of the entire 200 block, from the old Banner Furniture store to Advantage Archery. She got the call around 8 a.m., hearing that her shop front was hit sometime before 5:30 a.m.

In all, five blocks of flowers were vandalized. Downtown business owners pay to brighten up the city blocks with their own money. Andrus estimated paying $300 for the destroyed flowers and has now spent another $100 for replacements. Wilcox said it’s hard to determine her amount in damages as she was able to replant some flowers, a task she was still performing at 5 p.m.

While awaiting word on possible charges, punishment or restitution, owners will continue to replant and keep watch over their portions of downtown.

Man accused of hitting officers at Western Days

Twin Falls police had to get physically involved in a fight that broke out Friday night during the annual Western Days celebration. One participant, Jason Marovich, 32, of Twin Falls, was arrested and charged with two counts of felony battery on police officers for allegedly fighting back when officers intervened in a fracas near the Twin Falls City Park band shell. According to the report by Officer Ken Rivers, he and Officer Steven Gassert were alerted to the fight at around 8:15 p.m.

Marovich is accused of hitting both officers in the face. Rivers added that Marovich had to be subdued by Taser.

The other combatant complied with police orders to stop fighting and was not arrested.

Marovich was held in the Twin Falls County Jail over the weekend but posted a $2,500 bond on Monday. He faces a June 17 preliminary hearing.

IDAHO School reform foes hand in petitions

BOISE — Organizers of an effort to overturn Idaho’s new education laws say they have turned in enough signatures to put three repeal measures on the November 2012 ballot.

The group delivered the petitions to the Idaho Secretary of State on Monday.

Michael Lanza chairs Idahoans for Responsible Education Reform and says more than 72,000 signatures were gathered on each of the three petitions to put the new laws to referendum votes next year. The reforms backed by public schools chief Tom Luna and the governor were signed into law several weeks ago.

Idaho will limit teachers union bargaining rights, introduce merit pay and shift money from salaries to classroom technology as part of the plan.

State Hospital South to raze 2 buildings

BLACKFOOT — Two vacant patient wards at State Hospital South will be demolished this week.

Support Services Director Greg Horton told the Blackfoot Morning News that the 79-year-old buildings were used as separate men’s and women’s wards until 1988, when the treatment methods used in them became obsolete. The buildings were replaced by the Patient Treatment Facility used at the hospital today.

Horton says the demolition project could take all summer.

Police: Pair uncooperative after boy vanished

BOISE — Police said Monday that an Idaho mother and her boyfriend accused in the beating death of the woman’s 8-year-old son were uncooperative on the night the child went missing.

Boise Police Sgt. Cole Farmer testified in the first-degree murder trial of Daniel Ehrlick, who has pleaded not guilty in the death of Robert Manwill during the summer of 2009. The boy’s body was found in a canal about a week after his disappearance.

Ada County prosecutors say Ehrlick beat Robert to death, then stuffed rocks in the boy’s pants pockets and dumped his body in a canal before reporting the child missing.

Melissa Jenkins, the child’s mother, has pleaded guilty to aiding in Robert’s death as part of an agreement with prosecutors and faces up to 25 years in prison at her August sentencing.

MONTANA Yellowstone bison pushed back into park

BILLINGS — Several hundred Yellowstone bison have been hazed back into the national park after spending the winter grazing in southwest Montana.

Steve Merritt with the Montana Department of Livestock said Monday the animals are expected to stay inside the park as livestock return to the area. The bison were hazed from the West Yellowstone area by a state-contracted helicopter and government workers on horseback.

Bison are prohibited from roaming freely across most of Montana because of social opposition and concerns they could transmit the disease brucellosis to livestock.

An environmental group that sought to block this year’s bison hazing dropped its request for a court injunction on Monday. But Mike Garrity with the Alliance for the Wild Rockies says the group will continue to press its lawsuit over the practice.

ALASKA Troopers search for missing Iditarod musher

ANCHORAGE — Alaska State Troopers searched Monday for a 34-year-old Iditarod musher missing for nearly a week, a disappearance that alarmed friends who say she wouldn’t have left without her favorite dog or finding a caretaker for the rest of the pack.

Melanie Gould was last seen May 31, when she was spotted buying gas in Talkeetna, troopers said.

Trisha Costello, owner of the Talkeetna Roadhouse where Gould was a part-time housekeeper, said she didn’t show up to work that day or the next at her full-time job at a bakery. Later Tuesday, a friend went to her cabin overlooking the mountains, where she had no running water or electricity, and found her dozen dogs there, including her favorite, Jane. Her truck was gone.

WYOMING Bus carrying Wyoming students crashes

MINDEN, Iowa — A bus transporting a youth marching band from Wyoming to Indiana crashed and ended up on its side Monday in western Iowa, leaving more than three dozen people injured, authorities said.

Thirty-nine people were taken to hospitals in Omaha, Neb., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, after the crash on Interstate 80 near Minden, according to Jessica Lown, spokeswoman for the Iowa Department of Public Safety.

No one suffered life-threatening injuries in the crash, and the group had boarded a new bus and resumed its trek to Indianapolis by early Monday afternoon.

“The vast majority of injuries are really minor — bumps and bruises,” Lown said. Investigators believe the accident happened after the motor coach blew a tire around 7:45 a.m., Lown said. The bus skidded off the interstate and landed on its side in a field.

UTAH Man cited after paying bill with pennies

VERNAL — A Utah man has been cited on a charge of disorderly conduct after paying for a disputed medical bill with 2,500 pennies.

The Deseret News of Salt Lake City reports Jason West went to Basin Clinic in Vernal on May 27 prepared to dispute an outstanding $25 bill.

Assistant Vernal Police Chief Keith Campbell says that after asking staff members whether they accepted cash, West dumped 2,500 pennies on the counter and demanded that staff count them.

Campbell says the incident upset staff because pennies were strewn about the counter and floor, and West’s action served “no legitimate purpose.”

Police later issued the 38-year-old West a citation for disorderly conduct. That carries a fine of as much as $140. Or 14,000 pennies.

Idaho Supreme Court will consider gang recruitment law

By Rebecca Boone
Associated Press writer

BOISE — Idaho’s highest court is deciding if a law against gang recruitment is constitutional after hearing arguments from attorneys Monday over whether gangs exist solely to commit crimes or if they offer cultural, educational or other benefits to members.

The questions were raised in the case of Caldwell resident Simona Manzanares, who in 2008 became the first person in the state sentenced under its Criminal Gang Enforcement Act.

Police and prosecutors said she recruited teenagers and younger children at concerts and car shows to join a gang.

Manzanares appealed her sentence, saying the recruitment law is too broad and punishes people for exercising their right to associate with whomever they please.

“The right of association exists even for unpopular groups, even groups that take part in criminal activity,” deputy state appellate public defender Erik Lehtinen told the Idaho Supreme Court.

Gangs have several purposes for members, including BBQs, parties or crimes, Lehtinen said. He maintained that anti-recruitment laws are constitutional only when they specify that the recruitment be done with the specific intent to further crime — such as an anti-recruitment law in California.

Idaho’s law, though based in large part on the California statute, has no such wording, he said.

Deputy attorney general Ken Jorgensen told the high court that even if a gang recruited a member for non-criminal events, such as parties, that member would still be violating the law because joining a gang in any capacity amounts to providing material support to a criminal group.

“Mere association is protected, but material support to organizations involved in criminal activity is not,” Jorgensen said.

Parties, BBQs and other events lend a gang “street cred,” so those attending are giving the gangs material support, Jorgensen contended.

“If you know your beer fund is funded by thefts” then those people are participating in the criminal activity, he said.

The high court questioned whether that could really be the case. Would even recruiting an interior decorator to jazz up a gang’s party spot mean the decorator was taking part in criminal activity, Justice Jim Jones asked.

Yes, said Jorgensen, contending that if a gang liked to bowl and recruited excellent bowlers, and the ringer bowlers never took part in a burglary or other crime, they would still be violating the law because their presence furthers the gang’s purposes and frees up other members to commit crimes.

The Idaho Supreme Court took the matter under advisement and will issue a written ruling.

Nuclear waste plant at INL on track for completion

BOISE (AP) — The contractor building a nuclear waste treatment plant at the Idaho National Laboratory is expected to finish work by the end of the year as scheduled, according to Department of Energy officials.

A department review in March had raised doubts that the sodium-bearing nuclear waste treatment plant would be finished by a Dec. 31 deadline negotiated under Idaho’s 1995 nuclear waste agreement, but an Energy spokeswoman said the facility is nearly complete.

Under the agreement with Idaho, the federal government would not be allowed to ship DOE-owned fuel to Idaho for storage until the milestones are met. The plant is expected to turn 900,000 gallons of liquid sodium that is contaminated with plutonium and other low-radiation elements into relatively stable dry calcined pellets.

The March review said “there is simply no extra time” in the schedule if problems arise during testing of the facility.

Department spokeswoman Danielle Miller told The Idaho Statesman that the facility is now under testing and that contractor CH2M-WG Idaho was expected to meet the deadline. She said the two sides met and determined that data on the plant hadn’t been updated at the time of the March review.

Testing will run through May and reviews are scheduled to be completed by August 2011.

CH2M-WG Idaho is also the waste cleanup contractor at the laboratory and is expected to bid to keep that contract after it ends next year.

New storms could add to Montana flooding woes

By Stephen Dockery
Associated Press writer

HELENA, Mont. — Heavy thunderstorms are expected to compound flooding problems across Montana this week by adding sizable amounts of water to already high rivers and saturated soil, meteorologists said Monday.

A strong storm system heading east from California could bring up to 2 inches of rain across the state and 2-inch hail in eastern and central Montana, according to the National Weather Service. The rain and warm temperatures will speed the melting snowpack that was already projected to raise river levels later in the week.

Tom Frieders, a Weather Service meteorologist in Billings, said flash flooding

Highway engineers shore up I-80 bridges

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — State highway engineers have taken measures to help two bridges on Interstate 80 better withstand high water on the North Platte River near Sinclair in south-central Wyoming.

Engineers were concerned that the river would rise high enough that it would lift the bridges and push them off their supports.

So they installed pipes to vent any air that may become trapped underneath the bridges and lift them up.

That section of I-80 carries about 12,000 vehicles a day in both directions.

Meantime, the Little Snake River at Baggs is slowly receding after residents, with the help of Wyoming National Guard soldiers, erected an emergency levee to protect homes over the weekend.

And the state will close Bear River State Park near Evanston in southwest Wyoming because of high water.

and isolated tornadoes are possible from Billings to Roundup, which has already been hit hard by flooding.

Heavy rain of up to 8 inches and melting snow pack caused major flooding in parts of Montana last month. The inundated Missouri River also caused flooding problems in North and South Dakota.

Frieders said it's hard to predict how high the water will get this time until forecasters see how much rain the thunderstorms bring and how much snowpack melts. But the Musselshell River, already near flood levels, is expected to flood again.

"It's all coming together, both thunderstorms and significant runoff from melting," Frieders said.

Elsewhere in Montana, the rains and melting snow are likely to have the same impact.

The Clark Fork River in western Montana could reach moderate flood stage by the middle of the week.

Meteorologists are predicting the river could rise to 12 feet, 2 feet above flood stage. The river, near Missoula, could flood residential areas, meteorologist Leeann Allegretto of Missoula said.

Allegretto said the Bitterroot and Flathead rivers are also likely to reach low to moderate flood stage.

In northern Montana, the Milk River recently reached flood stage and is likely to rise higher.

On Thursday, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is expected to release water from the Fort Peck Dam at a record 50,000 cubic feet per second. The increased water flow into the Missouri River is already causing flooding in residential areas downstream.

More water is expected to cause flooding in low-lying areas downstream on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and in the Dakotas.

Improvised earthen levees built around South Dakota cities, including the capital city of Pierre, are currently blocking the water from entering parts of the city.

Study: Federal government's use of snail mail has increased

By Lisa Rein
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The federal government delivers Social Security checks and processes tax returns electronically, but its use of the old-fashioned mail systems is soaring nonetheless, according to a new study.

Declining mail volume has caused a plunge in the U.S. Postal Service's total revenue in recent years, but the federal government's use of first-class mail jumped 11 percent from 1997 to 2010, according to research by two top officials with the Postal Regulatory Commission, which oversees the Postal Service.

The federal government was the largest single user of the mail system, accounting for more than 2 percent of the money spent on first-class mail last year, the authors said. Together, states across the country spend about the same amount as the federal government with the postal service each year.

Government agencies spent at least $1 billion a year on mailing and shipping over roughly the same period, plus $200 million to $250 million on packages sent through private companies such as FedEx and UPS, the study by Michael J. Ravnitzky and J.P. Klingenberg concludes.

Ravnitzky, chief counsel to Ruth Y. Goldway, the commission chairman, and Klingenberg, an economist with the agency, argue that the switch by federal, state and local governments to electronic mail for their communicating to the public may be overblown. And, they say, the Postal Service can continue to count on governments as major customers, even as it fights for survival amid the surge in electronic communications. The authors' views do not necessarily reflect those of the commission.

"One vital function of the United States Postal Service is to form an essential communications backbone of the government . . . ensuring reliable and timely delivery of communications essential to the functions of government," the authors write. Their paper was presented last week at a conference at Rutgers University on the economics of the Postal Service.

Permits, benefits, voting materials, warning letters, surveys, military correspondence, employment and tax information, immigration documents, product recalls, security clearances, retirement information, regulatory compliance — all of this communication between government and its citizens is done the old-fashioned way, through snail mail or contracts with UPS and FedEx Express.

Part of the reason is that the government needs to make sure its missives are delivered to real people with real addresses, and electronic communication poses a risk that that may not happen, the authors said.

The federal agency most active with snail mail in 2010 was the Social Security Administration, which spent $237.7 million despite its move to electronic delivery of some benefit checks. Next came the Commerce Department, which paid $223.9 million; the Department of Veterans Affairs, at $223.5 million; and the Treasury Department, at $210.8 million. The data were collected from the General Services Administration.

Most of this mail is postmarked as single, 44-cent pieces.

Senators tell Biden to reject GOP Medicare plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five Democratic senators are calling on Vice President Joe Biden to keep the House Republican plan for Medicare out of out of budget and deficit negotiations.

Sens. Claire McCaskill, of Missouri, Jon Tester, of Montana, Sherrod Brown, of Ohio, Ben Cardin of Maryland and Bill Nelson of Florida express their concerns in a letter sent Monday to Biden. The letter was obtained by The Associated Press.

Biden has made progress in negotiations, the senators note. As talks move to areas of less consensus the vice president must insist that overhauling Medicare is off the table. They say that's important because Republican leaders maintain their Medicare proposal is still a part of negotiations.

All five senators, from states with significant elderly populations, are up for reelection in 2012.

State, local governments slow U.S. economy, cut 30,000 jobs

By Paul Wiseman
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — In a healthy economic recovery, states and localities start hiring, expand services and help fuel the nation's growth.

Then there's the 2011 recovery.

The U.S. economy is moving ahead, however fitfully. Yet state and local governments are still stuck in recession. Short of cash, they cut 30,000 jobs in May, the seventh straight month they've shed workers. Rather than add to U.S. economic growth, they're subtracting from it.

And ordinary Americans are feeling it — from reduced services to fewer teachers, police officers and firefighters.

The Great Recession officially ended two years ago this month. By the same point during previous recoveries, state and local governments were engines of growth: In the two years after the 1990-91 recession ended, for example, they'd added 430,000 jobs. At the same point after the 2001 recession ended, they had added 249,000.

This time is different. More than 467,000 state and local government jobs have vanished since the recession officially ended in June 2009, including 188,000 in schools.

Few see the pain subsiding soon. Mark Vitner, senior economist at Wells Fargo Securities, expects state and local governments to slash 20,000 to 30,000 jobs a month through the middle of 2012.

Joel Naroff of Naroff Economic Advisors notes that when states cut spending to balance their budgets, as required annually, a ripple effect multiplies the damage: Companies that do business with states and localities suffer. These companies, in turn, scale back their own hiring.

"There's a whole slew of private companies that have to cut back when they don't get the (government) contracts they had been getting," Naroff said. "You can't balance a budget and say everything's going to be beautiful."

Moody's Analytics estimates that each job in state and local government supports an additional 1.3 jobs elsewhere in the economy.

The cutbacks stretch across the country:

- Monticello, Ga., has cut its police force in half — to five. It had planned to eliminate the force entirely until it found the money to keep some officers, says Police Chief Bobby Norris.
- Zanesville, Ohio, just cut nearly 50 jobs from its schools, mostly through layoffs. "People have to realize: There's just so much money," says school Superintendent Terry Martin, who had to close a $7.2 million budget gap through 2016. "We have to watch every dime that we spend."
- In Alameda, Calif., police and firefighters last week couldn't save a drowning man in the San Francisco Bay because the fire department had cut funding for water rescue training, wet suits and other equipment.

The Great Recession of 2007-2009, the longest and deepest downturn since the 1930s, dried up state and local tax revenue. It also escalated demands for social programs like Medicaid and unemployment benefits and "ate through their rainy-day funds," notes Michael Gapen, senior U.S. economist at Barclays Capital.

For a while, federal stimulus spending cushioned the blow to state and local finances. But that money is running out. And probably won't be replenished.

States like Wisconsin, New Jersey and Ohio have first-term governors who "are trying to make their names by cutting spending," Naroff says. "It wasn't the 'in thing' before to become a governor and immediately slash and burn. Now, you've got economic and political realities that are different from any time before."

Analysts hold out hope that state governments might be on the verge of a rebound. State tax revenue is forecast to rise 2.1 percent in the fiscal year that starts July 1, according to a report last week from the National Governors Association and the National Association of State Budget Officers.

Sen. Kerry visits Normandy for D-Day anniversary

CRICQUEVILLE-EN-BESSIN, France (AP) — World War II veterans and Sen. John Kerry are commemorating the D-Day landings in Normandy at an iconic and eroding cliff.

The visit is one of several events along the coast Monday marking 67 years since Allied forces landed on a swath of beaches in Nazi-occupied France. The June, 6, 1944, invasion and ensuing battle for Normandy helped change the course of the war.

Kerry and the veterans are visiting Pointe du Hoc, where elite U.S. Rangers scaled jagged cliffs in one of the most trying missions of the invasion.

The limestone and clay cliffs have eroded by 33 feet since D-Day. Pointe du Hoc reopened to the public in March after extensive restoration efforts, organized by the American Battle Monuments Commission. Some half a million people visit the site each year.

WASHINGTON D.C. Weiner says he will cooperate with ethics investigation

Scandalized congressman Anthony Weiner says he'll fully cooperate with a House ethics investigation his fellow Democrats have demanded into whether he broke any rules when he sent lewd photos of himself over the Internet.

The statement came Monday less than an hour after top House Democrats issued chilly calls for an ethics committee probe into whether Weiner used government resources or broke House rules when he sent what he called "inappropriate" photos and messages to six women before and after he got married.

The New York congressman earlier in the day confessed to the scandal and apologized, but refused to resign. He said he welcomes and will fully cooperate with an ethics committee investigation.

Weiner married Huma Abedin, a top aide to Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, last July.

Prosecutors have Edwards emails discussing payments to mistress

Prosecutors have obtained emails between John Edwards and a former aide to use as evidence at trial that he knew about payments to his pregnant mistress even while he was publicly denying it, people familiar with the case told The Associated Press on Monday.

Dozens of emails were exchanged between Edwards and his former speechwriter Wendy Button as they worked on a never-released draft statement to acknowledge paternity of his out-of-wedlock child, according to people who have seen the messages and requested anonymity because they have not been made public yet.

The messages, draft statements and notes of their related phone conversations are key evidence prosecutors are using against Edwards, indicted on charges he failed to report nearly $1 million allegedly spent to keep his mistress out of the public eye as he pursued the White House.

Officials say half the military force trained on gay ban repeal

More than a million U.S. troops — roughly half the armed forces — have been trained on the new law allowing gays to serve openly in the military, and so far there has been none of the turmoil or dire consequences predicted by opponents of what had been expected to be a wrenching change in military culture.

There's been no widespread resistance, no mad rush for the door by enlisted members opposed to the policy and no drop in recruiting.

"So far this seems to be a non-event," Gen. Peter Chiarelli, vice chief of staff for the Army, told reporters recently. But, he warned, "This is not going to happen without incident — I'd be crazy to say that."

ARIZONA Fire grows to 365 square miles; wind, low-humidity predicted

SPRINGERVILLE — Firefighters worked furiously Monday to save a line of mountain communities in eastern Arizona from a gigantic blaze that has forced thousands of people from their homes and cast a smoky haze over states as far away as Iowa.

Strong winds and lightning storms were expected to make matters worse in an area dotted with cabins and campgrounds. Lighter winds a day earlier sent embers flying as far as three miles and triggered a series of spot fires.

The fire had grown to nearly 365 square miles, officials said. Authorities believe an abandoned campfire may have sparked the blaze more than a week ago.

So far, the flames have destroyed five buildings and scorched 233,522 acres of ponderosa pine forest. No serious injuries have been reported.

PENNSYLVANIA Former Sen. Santorum says he's running for president

SOMERSET — Former Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum, a blunt talker who is popular among social conservatives, plunged into the 2012 Republican presidential sweepstakes Monday, saying he wants to protect American freedoms under threat from President Barack Obama.

Once the No. 3 Republican in the ranks of the Senate GOP leadership, Santorum charged that Obama has worked to undermine Americans' liberties and has imposed a national health care plan that saps individual choice. He accused Obama of spending billions of dollars that will add to the debt of future generations and said the president lacks faith in the nation's potential.

"I'm ready to lead. I'm ready to do what has to be done for the next generation, with the courage to fight for freedom, with the courage to fight for America," Santorum said, speaking the sun-splashed steps of a county courthouse in western Pennsylvania.

ALASKA Palin's statements on Paul Revere ride trigger Wikipedia edits

JUNEAU — Sarah Palin's version of Paul Revere's ride has triggered a tug of war over the Wikipedia entry on that historic event that left the page shielded against further changes.

Dozens of changes were made to the Revere page on the Internet site Sunday and Monday after Palin claimed Revere's famous ride was intended to warn both his fellow colonists and British soldiers. On Monday, the page featured a padlock, which Wikimedia Foundation spokesman Jay Walsh said provides a cooling-off period when there are numerous attempts to edit a site. It wasn't immediately clear when the lock, which makes it more difficult to make changes to Wikipedia pages, went on.

CALIFORNIA Apple CEO Steve Jobs, announces synching service, software

SAN FRANCISCO — Apple CEO Steve Jobs briefly emerged from a medical leave Monday to unveil a free service that lets customers share calendar entries, songs and other files among their devices more easily.

The company also announced new software to make Mac computers behave more like mobile devices and Apple's mobile devices more like rival smartphones.

Jobs left many of the specific announcements to top executives. In the first hour, he appeared on stage for only a few minutes. Typically, he's on stage longer at major public launches.

UTAH 2 women linked to released immigrant list plead guilty

MIDVALE — Two former state workers pleaded guilty Monday to their roles in the release of a list of 1,300 purported illegal immigrants that created panic among Utah's Hispanic community last year.

Teresa Bassett, 59, pleaded guilty to two felony counts of computer crimes, despite maintaining her innocence during a hearing in 3rd District Court in Salt Lake City. Bassett recently changed her name to London Grace Wellington.

Earlier Monday, her co-defendant, Leah Carson, 32, pleaded guilty to making a false statement by an unemployment compensation agent, a misdemeanor. She will serve one year of probation and pay a $440 fine.

Both worked for the Utah Department of Workforce Services when they allegedly compiled the list from people who had applied for benefits. It was anonymously sent to law enforcement and media, along with a note demanding the deportation of those listed.

Bassett said during her hearing that she was innocent, but did not explain why she chose to enter the guilty plea.

Irene enjoyed spending time with her Pinochle group and taking frequent trips to Jackpot with sister-in-law Thelma. One family friend recalls being passed on 93 by "someone going 90 mph plus" Irene never lost her love of sports and supported Boise State Football, Jazz Basketball, and the Seattle Mariners. Most of all Irene loved to entertain and prepare meals for family and friends at home.

U.S. troop cuts in Afghanistan will be ‘real’

By Ben Fuller
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama will order a “real drawdown” of U.S. forces from Afghanistan starting in July, the White House insisted Monday, a milestone in a long war that is testing the patience of the American people and Congress particularly after the killing of al-Qaida leader Osama bin Laden.

Roughly 100,000 U.S. troops are in Afghanistan, three times as many as when Obama took office, and U.S. forces are expected to remain there through 2014.

Sometime this month, Obama is likely to announce how many troops will start coming home. The commander in chief is on record as promising a “significant” withdrawal of forces in July after having sent in an additional 30,000 troops in December 2009 to turn around a troubled war that began after the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. Outgoing Defense Secretary Robert Gates said over the weekend that only a “modest” drawdown would be appropriate.

The White House sought to tamp down anticipation of Obama’s decision, suggesting there are no major policy decisions in debate and that the more important date is 2014, when NATO forces have pledged to turn over control of security to Afghan forces.

Presidential spokesman Jay Carney said Obama’s war strategy is set and that the coming drawdown is “a step along the way” to Afghanistan taking control of its own country.

Yet for a president heading into a re-election year, the pressure over Afghanistan is only mounting, particularly given the U.S. success in finding and killing bin Laden. As Gates traveled through Afghanistan the past week, the most frequent question he heard from soldiers was what does bin Laden’s death mean for the war. “We shouldn’t let up on the gas too much — at least for the next few months,” the secretary said.

A majority of Americans oppose the war, Afghan President Hamid Karzai bluntly wants a smaller U.S. presence and Congress is weary of the toll and cost of a war now nearly a decade old.

Obama’s decision could be at least a couple of weeks away. He is awaiting recommendations from Gen. David Petraeus, the top U.S. and NATO commander in Afghanistan, who is expected to offer a range of options on how to begin the withdrawal and at what pace.

“I intend to follow through on that commitment that I made to the American people,” Obama said Monday in an interview with Hearst Television.

He said U.S. forces have killed bin Laden, knocked back al-Qaida and stabilized much of Afghanistan so that the Taliban cannot wrest back control, and “it’s now time for us to recognize that we’ve accomplished a big chunk of our mission and that it’s time for the Afghans to take more responsibility.”

The president is likely to address the nation once he makes his decision, although no format or timing has been set.

Obama met with war advisers on Monday for a regular update about the effort in Afghanistan and Pakistan. The scope of the July withdrawal was not discussed, Carney said.

What’s clear is that Obama is intent on avoiding what would widely be considered a token withdrawal. “It will be a real drawdown,” Carney said, based on current conditions.

Gates’ concern is that too fast a withdrawal could undermine the tenuous security gains in the fight against the Taliban insurgency in Afghanistan, the al-Qaida training ground for the Sept. 11 attacks. Gates is also worried that a bold U.S. drawdown could influence the same action by allies at a time when Afghanistan remains unstable and its forces not fully ready.

Gates’ preference for a “modest” pullout now gives Obama room for what military officials have long expected would be a compromise decision — a withdrawal large enough to make a statement and small enough not to make much difference on the front lines.

A Wendy’s restaurant is surrounded by a temporary berm Monday in Hamburg, Iowa. The southwest Iowa town is under a mandatory evacuation order as the Missouri River continues to rise.

Army expects full breach of Missouri River levee

HAMBURG, Iowa (AP) — Crews scrambled Monday to protect a southwest Iowa town from the swollen Missouri River, but local officials said it’s unclear whether they’ll be able to prevent the river from leaving the community under several feet of water for weeks.

If efforts to pile massive sandbags on a faltering levee and build a secondary barrier fail, part of Hamburg could be under as much as 8 feet of water for a month or more, Fire Chief Dan Sturm said. Flooding along the river this summer — expected to break decades-old records — will test the system of levees, dams and flood walls like never before.

“We’re working against the clock,” Sturm said Monday as many residents were packing up their homes and heading out of town. “There’s a chance we can save ourselves from the worst of it. We just need some time. But if water gets in here, it’s going to be here for a while.”

The earthen levee that guards an area of farmland and small towns between Omaha, Neb., and Kansas City has been partially breached in at least two places south of the Iowa-Missouri border. And emergency management officials expect new breaches in the coming days as the river rises.

That means Hamburg could be only the first of many communities to get hit.

The last time the Missouri River crested at levels predicted for this summer happened in 1952, before most of the major dams along the river were built. And the flooding is expected to last into mid-August.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers will be releasing more water than it ever has from the dams by mid-June, meaning there likely will be other levee problems like the ones near Hamburg, said Kevin Grode with the corps’ water management office.

“With these high flows, there’s the possibility of more levee breaches,” Grode said.

Officials also predict that the water will get high enough to flow over at least 11 levees in the area near Hamburg in the corners of southeast Nebraska, southwest Iowa and northwest Missouri.

Diamond withdraws nomination for Fed board

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nobel Prize-winning economist Peter Diamond is withdrawing his nomination for the Federal Reserve board, expressing frustration with Republicans who had blocked his appointment and questioned his practical experience.

Diamond said it would be easy to blame his failed nomination on partisan politics, in an op-ed piece first published on The New York Times website on Sunday and in its print edition on Monday. But a more troubling explanation, he wrote, was that Republicans failed to recognize the value of his decades spent analyzing what causes unemployment. He said such study is “crucial to conducting monetary policy.”

“It is time for me to withdraw, as I plan to inform the White House,” Diamond wrote.

His withdrawal was a setback for President Barack Obama, who had nominated and re-nominated Diamond to fill a vacancy on the seven-member board.

The White House said it was “deeply disappointed.” Press secretary Jay Carney said Monday that Diamond “fell victim to partisan obstructionism.” Carney said Obama believes Diamond would have brought knowledge and expertise to the Fed board.

The Fed often operates with vacancies on its board. The board hasn’t had every seat filled since 2006.

Diamond’s initial nomination fizzled when the Senate adjourned in December without acting on it. When Obama resubmitted the nomination in January to the newly convened Senate, the Republicans held six additional seats. That was expected to make the confirmation process more difficult.

Total ban on alcohol at CSI may be excessive

Drinking is a major problem on campuses, and no college wants to make it easier for students to get their hands on alcohol.

But the College of Southern Idaho board of trustees may have overreached last week when it voted to keep alcohol off campus under all circumstances.

At issue were requests by off-campus groups that use CSI facilities to be permitted to serve alcohol at special events they hold on campus. The school receives about five such requests a year.

Last fall, trustees denied Festival of Trees organizers permission to serve drinks at their December event. Organizers of the festival — a fundraiser for the St. Like's Magic Valley Foundation — made the same request earlier this month, prompting the board's discussion of whether alcohol should be on campus for any reason.

Our view:

There are occasions when allowing alcohol to be served on the College of Southern Idaho campus is appropriate. What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

It seems to us the better course would be to permit beer, wine or liquor on a case-by-case basis.

Adults are forever cautioning young people to use alcohol responsibly, but leading by example is a better approach. The Festival of Trees has included alcohol for years, and there's never been serious problem.

There's a difference, it seems to us, between permitting alcohol to be sold at selected community gatherings and allowing beer sales at basketball games or rodeos.

After years of debate, the Twin Falls County Fair Board voted to allow beer sales on a trial basis at this summer's fair. Based on the experience of other Magic Valley county fairs that permit beer sales, we're guessing the experiment will be relatively trouble free.

In extending the ban on alcohol, the CSI board cited liability worries. Those concerns are legitimate, but liability is an issue with all the events CSI hosts — even without alcohol. It's not possible to make the public's use of campus facilities risk-free.

Rent paid by off-campus groups for events is a significant source of revenue for the school, but beyond that the campus is a center for the community. From Independence Day fireworks to car shows to civic events, it's where Twin Falls gathers.

CSI's administration and its trustees, it seems to us, are capable of making sound decisions on an event-by-event basis about whether alcohol is welcome.

Subsidies for healthy eating? Fat chance

Is the plate half full or half empty? The food guide icon just unveiled by the U.S. Department of Agriculture recommends that Americans fill half their plates with fruits and vegetables.

Kathryn Strong

This advice — and the new simple plate design — are significant steps forward. But as a dietitian, I find myself focusing on the sharp contrast between the new icon and federal agricultural subsidies.

The USDA's new plate icon, as well as the department's recently released dietary guidelines, advise Americans to limit high-fat products like meat and cheese. But the federal government continues to subsidize these very products with billions of tax dollars and gives almost no support to fruits and vegetables.

The federal government spends about $16 billion per year on agricultural subsidies. While more than 60 percent of agricultural subsidies in recent history have directly and indirectly supported meat and dairy production, less than 1 percent has gone to fruits and vegetables.

It's clear that the federal government understands that the latest nutrition research supports a shift toward plant-centered diets to help fight heart disease, cancer, obesity, and the other chronic diseases that are killing so many Americans. The dietary guidelines recommend eating more fruits, vegetables and whole grains — and even include full sections outlining the benefits of vegetarian and vegan diets. But the government is still having trouble putting its money where its mouth is.

It's an endless cycle. The government uses billions of tax dollars to encourage the production of foods that have been linked to chronic diseases, and uses billions more tax dollars to cover health-care costs for the resulting hospital bills. In 2008, the direct medical costs associated with obesity added up to $147 billion. Since the USDA's first Food Pyramid was introduced two decades ago, obesity and diabetes have become commonplace. About 27 percent of young adults are now too overweight to qualify for military service, and an estimated one in three children born in 2000 will develop diabetes. More than 60 percent of deaths in the United States are caused by heart disease, cancer, and other diet-related diseases.

In 1991, the USDA unveiled the first Eating Right Pyramid, which emphasized grains, fruits, and vegetables and reduced emphasis on meat and dairy products. The USDA quickly withdrew the icon because of objections from the meat industry. The next year, the department introduced a similar food guide but added recommendations for two to three servings each day from the meat group and two to three from the dairy group.

The USDA is finally taking a bold step by introducing this plate icon that encourages a shift toward diets rich in plant foods. But just as the USDA has given the food guide icon a makeover, Congress must revamp farm policy to encourage the production and consumption of healthful foods. Our health depends on it.

State police seem to be serving oil company

The contract between ExxonMobil and the Idaho State Police states that ISP “shall provide” four state troopers for each megaload transport on Highway 12. The permit for 200-plus loads allows Exxon to ship one megaload per night from Lewiston, seven days per week, and each megaload will travel no fewer than three nights to reach Montana. The use of ISP officers is cited as essential to the safety of these shipments.

At the recent hearing, ISP Capt. L. Richardson testified he has 17 officers to draw from for this duty. He stated he understood only one megaload would be on Highway 12 at any one time, not three, and that he did not have enough personnel to provide escorts for more than one at a time.

Idaho citizens face three possibilities: megaloads will be on Highway 12 without the police escort both Exxon and ITD claim is essential for safety, five north central Idaho counties will experience a drastic reduction in state police coverage, or officers will be pulled in from other areas in the state to serve Exxon.

If Exxon's 200-plus shipments must travel U.S. 12 one at a time and each shipment requires three nights, these shipments will last over two years. Several other giant oil companies are clamoring to add their shipments to ITD's permit list.

Obama the real hero of bin Laden triumph

President G.W. Bush announced shortly after the event that we would avenge the terrorist attack of 9/11 and “get” anyone that gave the terrorists safe harbor. We learned later that the terrorists obviously found safe harbor in Pakistan. So what did Mr. Bush do? He invited our “ally,” Mr. Pervez Musharraf, dictator of Pakistan, to the White House presumably to strengthen the “alliance.”! Now we find the leader of the terrorists where? Pakistan of all places! Who would've guessed! Is Mr. Bush blushing?

On the contrary, he seems to be taking some kind of credit for Osama bin Laden's discovery and execution — or at least given credit by the right wing press. President Obama is the real hero in this triumph and, if for no other reason, deserves re-election for his brilliant strategy and leadership in executing it.

Furthermore, didn't Mr. Bush say at one point during his term in office (when asked) that he didn't care about bin Laden's whereabouts? If so, and at the risk of starting another “conspiracy theory,” did Mr. Bush know where bin Laden was at the time he made that statement? Just theorizing — having no access to secrets that our government seems to keep from us more and more.

Finding strength after experiencing tragedy

It's difficult to describe a parent's concern for their children when we know they are in harm's way. When my wife alerted me that the tornado alarm had been sounded for Piedmont, Okla., to take cover on May 24, I immediately thought of my oldest son and his family's safety. All three of the communities where our children live around Oklahoma City were hit by tornadoes. The kids and their families sought shelter, where they were safe, and their homes didn't suffer damage while others were destroyed.

It's hard to understand the intensity and utter destruction of a tornado without experiencing it firsthand. It sounds like roaring freight train coming at you, and you take cover wherever you can find it.

While we don't suffer from tornadoes, floods and tsunamis as much here in Idaho, we may still find our communities, homes, schools and families ripped apart by poverty, drugs, abandonment, neglect and abuse of children. We must make a compassionate response. Whether it is a fire that destroys an entire forest or a tornado that wipes out a big part of Joplin, Mo., beauty and hope can still rise from those ashes and rubble. It is in rebuilding that we develop a sense of renewed faith, along with a sense of humor to see us through the tough times.

Stephen Curtis Chapman created his album, Beauty Will Rise, after losing his 5-year-old daughter in a tragic accident. Bad things happen to good people every day that we can't explain. We choose in our faith to find something to propel us forward past the difficulties we encounter from day-to-day life. Sometimes it is in helping our neighbors get through their hard times that we find our own strength.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Doonesbury

By Garry Trudeau

Mallard Fillmore

By Bruce Tinsley

Human behavior: What’s bugging you?

What annoys you? Traffic jams, car alarms, flight delays, phone trees, junk mail? People who cut in line? People who talk loudly on cell-phones? People who eat noisily and clip their nails in public? You’re not alone. These are just some of the irksome things we confront daily.

Since annoyances are ubiquitous, and so many people are annoyed so much of the time, you might think that science could offer some insights about why we find certain things so annoying and what we can do about them. In fact, science can. But don’t ask a scientist. As a group, they have almost completely dropped the ball on this topic. In fact, if you talk to scientists, you might get the idea that there is no such thing as annoyance at all.

“From my perspective, annoyance is mild anger” says James Gross, a psychologist at Stanford University.

Joe Palca and Flora Lichtman

It’s true that annoyance shares qualities with anger, aversion and frustration. There is also some overlap with disgust, irritation, even ennui. But annoyance, as we who’ve felt it can attest, is its own thing. It captures elements of other emotions but belongs exclusively to none.

After talking with researchers in a variety of disciplines including psychology, physics, acoustics, chemistry, molecular genetics, animal behavior and neuroscience, we have come up with a formula for what makes something annoying.

First, to be annoying, something must be unpredictable. This may be the heart of why cellphone conversations are so grating. Research shows that when we listen to speech, our brains try to predict the words that will come next. But it’s hard to predict the next words out of someone’s mouth when you’re only hearing one side of a conversation. Research on this topic indicates you get drawn in more; you get more distracted from what you’d rather be doing or thinking about; the annoyance level rises.

Next, it must be unpleasant. This is a giant category, and often subjective. Some people are annoyed when someone picks a piece of lint off a garment they are wearing; others are grateful. Some are annoyed when radio announcers leave the “g” off words such “going” and “rolling”; others hardly notice.

While there’s no accounting for taste, there may be a way to account for aversion.

Detecting something unpleasant is among the first things that biological organisms learned to do. Thanks to a receptor that evolved half a billion years ago, certain chemical irritants — like the active ingredient in tear gas or the compound that makes up wasabi — have been annoying life on Earth since before the dinosaurs.

Some smells and sounds also seem to be intrinsically unpleasant. There may be a biological component to why most of us can’t abide the sound of fingernails on a blackboard. Some researchers suggest the fingernail noise resembles the acoustic signature of a primate warning call; others liken it to a human scream. We may be pre-programmed to register that sound as a danger signal.

The final ingredient in the annoyance recipe is that it must be of uncertain duration. A cellphone call will end eventually; you just don’t know when. This uncertainty, combined with a desire that it be over soon, feeds your annoyance. You can’t craft a logical plan of action for dealing with an unpleasant, unpredictable situation if you don’t know how long it will last.

The good news is that taking control of an annoyance seems to alleviate the feeling. Take a baby’s wail. The annoying sound of crying prompts you to take action — you shut off the sound by changing a diaper or providing a meal. And dealing with your annoyance sometimes prevents your having to confront something worse later. If you’d ignored the crying and the wet diaper had stayed next to your baby’s sensitive skin longer, you might have had to deal with diaper rash — and an even fussier baby.

Annoyances are, by definition, trivial. If the sensory assault were putting you in real danger, it would no longer be annoying; it would be a crisis. That seems to be the essence of annoyance’s special role in the emotional arena: Unlike something that makes you angry or sad, in which you might be rightly justified in your feeling, an annoyance is so petty that you’re expected to put up with it, even though you don’t like it.

If you become aware that your reaction is out of proportion with the stimulus causing it, you become at risk for what we call “terminal annoyance.” This is where you become annoyed with yourself for being annoyed, and then you become annoyed with yourself for being annoyed with yourself. You’ve entered the annoyance spiral. It’s a bad state.

Hysteria doesn’t help proponents of climate change

The May 21 apocalypse foretold by the fundamentalist minister Harold Camping never materialized, but end-of-the-world doomsaying goes on as usual among the global warmists.

“Worst ever carbon emissions leave climate on the brink,” a story in The Guardian was breathlessly headlined over the weekend. It reported — hyperventilated might be a better verb — that greenhouse gas emissions increased in 2010 “to the highest carbon output in history, putting hopes of holding global warming to safe levels all but out of reach.” The Guardian attributed word of this “shock rise” to the International Energy Agency, whose chief economist is “very worried” because “this is the worst news on emissions” and the climate outlook “is getting bleaker.” It cites another expert’s “dire” warning that if carbon dioxide isn’t drastically reduced, global warming will “disrupt the lives and livelihoods of hundreds of millions of people across the planet, leading to widespread mass migration and conflict.”

All that is nothing, however, to the climate fear-mongering in Newsweek, which insists the global-warming Rapture is already underway.

“Worldwide, the litany of weather’s extremes has reached biblical proportions,” Newsweek intones, pointing to tornadoes in the United States, floods in Australia and Pakistan, and drought in China. “From these and other extreme-weather events, one lesson is sinking in with terrifying certainty. The stable climate of the last 12,000 years is gone.” This is what comes of burning fossil fuels for energy, which has increased atmospheric CO2 levels by 40 percent above what they were before the Industrial Revolution. “You haven’t seen anything yet,” Newsweek preaches. “Bat-ten down the hatches.”

By now, of course, few things are more familiar than predictions of the environmental catastrophe to which the use of carbon-based energy has supposedly condemned us. In 1992, Al Gore claimed that “evidence of an ecological Kristallnacht is as clear as the sound of glass shattering in Berlin;” nearly 20 years later he is still warning of “an unimaginable calamity requiring large-scale, preventive measures to protect human civilization as we know it.” Like Camping, Gore and other climate alarmists keep forecasting a Day of Doom that never arrives. And like Camping — who now says the world will end on Oct. 21 — they continue to be sure that disaster is just around the corner.

But hyperbolic climate rhetoric doesn’t scare as many people as it used to. Gallup reported in March that of nine leading environmental issues, global warming is the one Americans worry about least. In Britain too, as The New York Times noted last spring, fear of climate change has receded, as more and more people conclude that the dangers have been over-hyped.

Take the recent increase in global CO2 emissions. Is the Guardian’s panicked anxiety — “Climate on the brink” — really a sensible response? Writing in the journal First Things, the distinguished Princeton physicist William Happer makes a compelling case that rising carbon-dioxide levels are neither unprecedented nor anything to fear.

“Carbon is the stuff of life,” he points out. “Our bodies are made of carbon.” Yes, atmospheric CO2 is higher today than it was before the industrial age —

390 parts per million now vs. 270 ppm then — but there was a time when “CO2 levels were several thousand ppm, much higher than now. And life flourished abundantly.” Indeed, greenhouse operators artificially boost CO2 concentrations in order to grow better flowers and fruit.

So why recoil from the modest increase in carbon emissions caused by fossil-fuel use? Because more CO2 means more climate change? Happer shoots down that idea. The earth’s climate is always changing, sometimes dramatically. During the medieval warming of a thousand years ago, temperatures were much higher than they are now; during the Little Ice Age six centuries later they were much lower. “Yet there is no evidence for significant increase of CO2 in the medieval warm period, nor for a significant decrease at the time of the subsequent little ice age.”

Newsweek’s “stable climate of the last 12,000 years” is a myth. So is the notion that higher carbon emissions are a prescription for disaster. Carbon dioxide is only one of several factors that influence the earth’s temperature, Happer writes, and “seldom the dominant one.”

The global-warming alarmists have had a good run, as the global-cooling alarmists did before them, but fewer people find the doomsday prophecies persuasive. Scaremongering wins headlines; fact-based skepticism eventually wins arguments.

Crisis center gets early start on fundraising

The Pregnancy Crisis Center’s 20th annual fundraising banquet is going to be bigger and better than ever this year. Proof of that is the fact that its having the banquet at the Lighthouse Church on Eastland Drive here in Twin Falls. Now maybe it’s a little early to be announcing this, but with all this new space to fill, it seemed like a good idea! The center needs more basic volunteers and table hostesses to get involved and the sooner the better. Not to mention getting your raffle tickers to beat the last-minute rush around September.

The theme for this year is “A Matter of the Heart.” It’s a matter of the heart because the Pregnancy Crisis Center gets by on donations only and this banquet is how it raises money to operate for most of the year. Its help with new moms and families with children up to 2 years old is indeed a matter of the heart to it and others and it deserves our help!

So please, Magic Valley, start helping it just a little earlier because, after all, Magic Valley, it is a matter of the heart.

■ 48 HOUR DISTRIBUTION BEGINS: Distribution hotlines open at precisely 8:30am this morning for Idaho residents only. These trucks are being loaded at the National Distribution Center of U.S.-based Fridge Electric with new ArcticPro™ high performance portable air conditioners and soon will be delivered to lucky Idahoans.

UMS – It just got a lot cooler for lucky Idahoans.

That’s because U.S.-based Fridge Electric has just announced that they are releasing brand new portable air conditioners that drastically slash cooling bills by up to 74% to residents of the state of Idaho.

Company spokesman, Ryan Berry, says, “We only have 1,546 new air conditioners to release, so residents of the state of Idaho who find their county listed in today’s paper need to call the Idaho Distribution Hotline immediately to get theirs.”

This is all happening to announce the new ArcticPro™ high performance air conditioner that actually cools an uncomfortably hot room in just minutes by blasting out ice cold air.

This amazing performance was verified by Fridge Electric’s top engineer who researches and develops new products at the company’s highly-secured testing laboratory located at their world headquarters.

The ArcticPro™ high performance air conditioners are being called a work of engineering genius from the China coast because they use 74% less electricity than costly central air conditioners to save you money all summer long.

“You see, with central air conditioners you are wasting a lot of money to cool areas of your home that you’re not even using. And window air conditioners are even worse because they weigh so much they’re nearly impossible to move,” said Berry.

But the ArcticPro™ high performance air conditioner saves you money because it actually rolls from room-to-room so you can turn down the central air conditioner and stay cool in any room of the house for just pennies an hour. Everyone is getting them because all you do is vent them and plug them in.

Just in time to beat the unbearable summer heat, ArcticPro™ portable air conditioners are being delivered directly to the doors of the first 1,546 Idahoans who beat the 48 hour order deadline.

And here’s the best part. Since the ArcticPro™ high performance air conditioner is not being sold at any retail stores, residents of the counties listed in today’s paper are actually saving a ton of money by avoiding all the retail markup. That makes getting the ArcticPro™ portable air conditioner direct a real steal for just three hundred ninety-eight dollars and shipping because it only uses about 10¢ an hour of electricity, so you can leave it on all day long and never be hot again.

With all of the money you save over central air, these high performance portable air conditioners pay for themselves in just a matter of weeks. After that, they just keep on putting cash in your pocket month after month.

“We’re trying to make sure no one gets left out, but we only have 1,546 ArcticPro™ high performance air conditioners to release and when they’re gone, they’re gone so residents of the counties listed in today’s paper need to call right now. Those who do will be the really smart ones because we’re letting residents have two air conditioners per household until we run out just as long as they call before the deadline ends,” confirms Berry.

“We’re bracing ourselves for all the calls because with the amount of money these high performance air conditioners save people on electric bills everyone wants one. But since Idaho residents are not paying the retail markup you better believe they’ll be telling the operators they want two,” said Berry.

“So when the lines are busy keep trying. We promise to answer every call. Then we’ll have a delivery truck out to you in no time at all so you can stay cool and start saving money,” Berry said.

“You’ll never have to be hot and miserable again,” he said. ■

WHAT YOU SHOW THE WORLD

Exterior paint balances personality, neighborhood harmony

By Ariel Hansen ♦ Times-News writer

You live with your home's interior paint colors every day. But it's your neighbors who live with your exterior paint. Is it time to give them something new to look at?

Most houses — except those with natural wood, stucco, brick or pre-painted siding like vinyl — need to be repainted every so often. And a new paint job, inside and out, is the quickest way to spruce up a house when it is put up for sale, say many real estate agents.

But what color should you choose? What about the trim and the front door? And should you do it yourself or hire a contractor? The Times-News spoke to local experts to give you the hows and the hues.

Ariel Hansen may be reached at 788-3475 or ahansen@magicvalley.com.

Choose wisely

It wasn't the color Jerry Kester had thought it was.

He and his wife wanted to be a bit brave when they painted their Twin Falls home last year, and decided to copy a peach-colored house they'd admired in Nampa. But the reactions were quick and consistent.

Kester's son was adamant: "That's too bright." "The first person that came by said, 'Is that your primer color?'" Kester remembered. And a visiting friend's child asked: Of all the colors you could choose, why'd you paint your house pink? When it snowed, Kester said, "it really did look baby-aspirin orange."

And then there was the real estate agent.

"He asked, 'Do you think it's a problem?'" and I said, "Only if you plan on selling it," said Sue Loosli, associate broker with Prudential Idaho Homes & Properties. It wasn't long afterward that Kester, former pastor at Twin Falls Nazarene Church, accepted a position in Olympia, Wash., and did want to put the home on the market. So he repainted — this time opting for a taupe called "Muddy Creek," with white trim. The house sold within a month of listing.

"Curb appeal is everything, and when people drive by a home and it doesn't appeal to them from the outside, you will not get them to the inside of the home," Loosli said. Although the designers for prebuilt neighborhoods are getting a bit more adventurous — Kwal Paints interior designer Carol Jones mentioned Sweetwater in Hailley, which features tones of mustard, paprika red and leaf-green — most homeowners in south-central Idaho opt for colors that match the desert outside.

"We're still seeing a lot of natural tones, dusty golds or mossy greens, or light tans or even warm brownish grays; the colors of the canyon, which is really pretty around here," Jones said. She recommends checking out your neighbors' colors to get a sense of what will fit in, if that's your goal.

And if you're trying to sell, don't pick blue.

"Blues on the outside are the hardest color to re-sell, because they're a cold color," said Cindy Collins, co-owner of Prudential. Potential buyers just don't feel as "at home" when they drive up to a house painted a cool color.

Prepping a home carefully is important whether doing exterior painting yourself or hiring a contractor. Here, Jesus Martinez of Jerome contractor Lupher's Painting tapes down butcher paper to protect the porch of a Sun Valley home.

Should you do it yourself?

When to go bold

One easy place to mix in a bright color is the front door. Brick red is still popular, Kwal Paints designer Carol Jones said, while area painters added forest green and natural wood to the list of exterior colors they're frequently asked for.

You can match your shutters to the door color, which looks especially striking if that color is red or black on a lighter-color house; or use bright, crisp white for shutters on a home painted a darker tone.

But there's no rule about whether darker trim with a lighter house or vice versa is more appealing; choose whichever combination you like.

More homeowners are opting for a darker tone of their main home color to paint accents like soffits or gables, though. "It's adding a little more character to a lot of properties," said

Jeff Reynolds, owner of painting contractor JC Reynolds Co. in Rupert.

Reynolds also noted that he's painting fewer doors — because homeowners are taking their metal doors to automotive body shops to be coated. "It's a good sheen, a smooth finish and very durable. It seems to be catching on more and more," he said.

Expiration dates offer guidance, but don't always translate to danger when passed

By Alexia Elejalde-Ruiz
Chicago Tribune

There are telltale signs that a product has gone bad. Moldy bread. Clumpy milk. The layer of fur blanketing the cream cheese. But what about the toothpaste sitting in your pantry for years after a zealous bulk purchase? Or those condoms waiting optimistically in your nightstand for longer than you wish to recall?

Many such products carry expiration dates, but thrifty shoppers often wonder if they really must toss dated items that still "seem" perfectly fine. After all, how can headache medicine stop working from one month to the next? And why should you believe the expiration date on one lotion when another doesn't carry one at all?

The Food and Drug Administration requires that expiration dates be printed on all prescription and over-the-counter drugs, but not on cosmetics — unless the cosmetics are also considered drugs, such as toothpaste with fluoride, anything with sunscreen, anti-dandruff shampoo and antiperspirant. But even then, over-the-counter drugs without dose limitations don't have to carry expiration dates if tests have proven they're stable for at least three years, which is why one sunscreen may have a date while another won't.

Expiration doesn't necessarily mean the product turns putrid or ineffective once the date passes. Manufacturers set expiration by choosing a date and conducting stability tests to ensure the product will still be good at that time.

Expiration dates tend to be conservative to account for a wide range of storage conditions and consumer handling, said Dr. John Bailey, chief scientist with the Personal Care Products Council, an industry trade group. But for some products there can be a cushion. Here's a guide to products that commonly carry expiration dates.

Saline solutions, eyedrops

Sterility is the greatest concern. The preservatives used to prevent microbial overgrowth become less effective over time, putting the solution at risk of contamination, said Dr. Thomas Steinemann, ophthalmology professor at Case Western Reserve University. Patients who have used outdated or contaminated product can get eye infections or worsen a problem they aimed to treat, he said. Also, especially once a bottle has been opened, the water starts to evaporate, leaving behind a greater concentration of salt, said ophthalmologist Elmer Tu.

'Undecorate': A style as eclectic as the Internet

By Jennifer Barger
The Washington Post

In fashion, yesterday's matchy, polished looks have given way to a rumpled, eccentric style driven by wearing your personality, not your labels, on your sleeve. Nesters are doing the same thing, blending wild color schemes with flea market finds and Ikea pieces with family antiques. In this brave, well-decorated new world, a formal dining set or showroom-tidy boudoir makes you seem square. Christiane Lemieux, founder of bedding company DwellStudio, writes about this new casual-chic movement in her new book, "Undecorate" ($40, Clarkson-Potter).

Lemieux says she was inspired by the Internet. Specifically, "the multiplicity of styles that are flourishing out there right now, with or without the stamp of approval of some trained professional," she writes in the coffee-table book's introduction. "Undecorate" features 20 homes from across the country that illustrate the "undecorate" philosophy, including a modern log cabin in Nashville and a "bric-a-brac-strewn" home in Los Angeles.

Lemieux, whose company is known for graphic and modern home furnishings, talked about the book and how the Internet has changed decorating.

ABOVE: Taupes — and other colors found in the desert landscape of south-central Idaho — remain among the most popular hues for local home exteriors, say paint contractors and sellers. RIGHT: Miguel Briseno warms up his paint gun on Thursday morning at a Sun Valley home while other employees tape off second-story windows.

Do it yourself?

About half the purchases from Kwal Paint in Twin Falls are by homeowners, and half by contractors, said store manager Paul Luker.

"You're having a little more people on repaints doing their own, just because of the economy," he said, noting that although exteriors are easier to do because they require a bit less precision, some homeowners prefer not to deal with the ladders and heights.

Andrew Dipietro, general manager of Specialty Painting Inc. in Twin Falls, said many of his clients are looking to do clean-up jobs on their exteriors as cost-effectively as possible, so they're not changing colors. He often has clients who want to put in the sweat equity to do all the prep work, with his company coming in for the actual painting. Or vice versa.

Rupert painting contractor Jeff Reynolds said it could pay to have a professional do the prep work, because even though it's time-consuming, he or she will notice things that need repairing, like a rotten board or broken windowsill caulking. These things — and improperly scraped and primed surfaces — can lead to additional maintenance costs in the future if they're not taken care of.

If you do decide to do the painting yourself, be sure you know what you're doing with the equipment you choose. "They'll go rent a sprayer and end up costing themselves more than they'll save," Reynolds said. "You can get wind drift and all of a sudden you've painted your neighbor's car."

Whether you do it yourself or hire a contractor, if cost is a factor consider not painting the entire house. You'll have to use the color you used before, and have it accurately matched, but it can save you a bundle.

"It might only take a couple gallons and a few hundred dollars for a south wall or a peeling spot," said Bill Lupher, owner of Lupher's Painting Inc. in Jerome.

A new regulation

Starting last spring, contractors need to be certified to deal with lead paint if they're handling paint — scraping, replacing boards, repainting — on any house built before 1978. Any contractor caught violating this Environmental Protection Agency law can be fined $37,500 a day, said Bill Lupher, owner of Lupher's Painting Inc. in Jerome.

The new regulations require that the house be surrounded by plastic sheeting to catch paint chips and flakes that may contain lead-based paint, and any materials caught during the prep process have to be disposed of at a hazardous-materials facility, which adds cost.

"That takes the bid way up there because of the procedures," Lupher said. He noted that some contractors (they might be unscrupulous, or just uneducated about the new lead laws) are underbidding certified contractors, so owners of homes built before 1978 should ask their painting contractor how they plan to comply with the law.

The regulation doesn't apply if the homeowner is disturbing the paint herself, or if a nonprofit group (like Paint Magic, which annually spruces up the exteriors of low-income disabled or elderly homeowners) is doing the work, said Paul Luker, manager of Kwal Paint's Twin Falls store.

However, if it is suspected that any home's old paint — in any layer down to the bare wood — might contain lead, the federal government recommends that similar measures be used to those required of contractors, including containing the work area, minimizing dust, wearing personal protective equipment like a mask, and cleaning the area thoroughly when work is complete.

where people keep vintage cars to a farmhouse full of eccentric antiques. What do the homeowners have in common?

Everyone in this book did unexpected things, like wallpapering the ceilings or living in an apartment with old cars. I think it's about being fearless and doing what you love.

You say that the Internet has really changed how people decorate. Why?

It's made us more creative and empowered us to do things ourselves. It's a kind of breakdown of formality, where people invite each other into their homes to weigh in on designing. There's this whole philosophy now that your home is never finished, that you're always tweaking it.

People in this book collect things, yet their homes don't look overly cluttered. What's the secret to that?

It's using these things you love as part of your decor. These interiors become soulful because people like this stuff, but they also curate it.

How do they find this stuff? One guy has a zillion Sprout (the Jolly Green Giant's sidekick) souvenirs.

The Internet, again, allows people to collect in ways they couldn't before. They can sit on eBay and amass full collections.

Vacuum basics for a clean sweep

By Jura Koncius
The Washington Post

Vacuum cleaners are the front line of the war against dust. Today's revved-up, dressed-up machines have ways to suck focaccia crumbs out of a keyboard and Afghan hound hair from a sisal rug.

The first widely known upright vac (a "suction sweeper") was invented in 1907 by a guy who had asthma. His design was marketed with great success by the Hoover company. Today, dozens of brands tout dizzying lists of features.

The age-old debate in vacuums has been upright vs. canister. Jay Morris, an owner of the chain Brothers Sew & Vac, says urbanites like canisters because they work well in old houses and apartments with hardwood floors and stairs. In the suburbs, acres of wall-to-wall carpeting make uprights top dog.

Today's vacuum buzz: endless online debate on whether bag or bagless vacuums rule.

What's new

- Special pet attachments. Some are grooming tools; others gently vacuum hair from your dog before it falls on the floor.
- Vacuum wardrobes. Consumers have an average of 2 1/2 vacuums in their homes, according to industry experts. That can include hand-held and stick versions for quick jobs; robotics for cleaning of larger spaces and wet-dry vacs to attack flooded basements.

- Dust up. More models feature self-sealing bags to keep dust contained as you remove and toss the bag, says Allen Rathey, president of the Housekeeping Channel, a website about cleaning.

Operating tips

- Dump the dust. In bagless models, empty dirt cups after every use. Change vacuum bags when they are three-quarters full. Never empty and reuse them.
- Check the belt. Many uprights need belts replaced every one or two years to maintain optimum power. For details, visit the Vacuum Dealers Trade Association Web site, www.vdta.com.

- Keep it clean. Jay Morris of Brothers Sew & Vac suggests wiping out the cavity where the bag sits with a damp paper cloth.
- Turn it off. Turn the vacuum switch off before you plug or unplug the machine.

Low, middle, high

Susan Ruhl, Home Depot's floor-care buyer, recommends three bagless upright models at three price points. The Shark model is available only at www.homedepot.com.

- Hoover Windtunnel. Entry-level unit with cyclonic technology that minimizes clogging. Five carpet-height adjustments. 27-foot power cord. Model UH70107, $100.
- Shark Navigator Lift-Away. Swivel steering. Lightweight detachable canister for portable cleaning. Pet hair removal tools. Model NV352, $169.
- Dyson Animal. Ball technology for easy maneuvering. Turbine head for efficient removal of dirt and pet hair. Washable HEPA filters and rigorous dust and pollen removal for those with asthma or allergies. Model DC25, $549.

Shop smart

1. In addition to cleaning power, consider a vacuum's weight and noise level. Test it in person.
 2. Consider a model with a HEPA (high-efficiency particulate air) filter, especially if any family member has allergies or asthma.
 3. If you have a large home, make sure the hose and cord lengths are adequate. Allison Duy, a spokeswoman for Electrolux, says, "There is nothing worse than having to keep unplugging."
- Resource: The Carpet and Rug Institute (www.carpet-rug.org) lists ratings of vacuums tested for soil removal and containment.

Rudbeckias draw butterflies

By Kathy Van Mullekom
Daily Press (Newport News, Va.)

There's nothing better than a garden filled with butterflies.

May and June are perfect times to plant perennials that bring you these colorful fluttering insects, and the new Cinnamon Bear Rudbeckia could be one that does the trick.

Rudbeckias are among the flat-top flowers that butterflies like because they can easily land and sip on nectar a while. Cone-flowers feature similar characteristics.

When you plant rudbeckias, you get season-long blooms, especially if you deadhead, or remove old flowers. This is where a pair of dollar-store scissors comes in handy because they are ideal pruners for small-stemmed perennials. Cinnamon Bear is a dwarf rudbeckia, staying compact as it grows 8 to 10 inches tall and wide. Yet, it bears big blooms, usually 4- to 6-inch bicolor, deep red and yellow petals and center.

Rudbeckias, in general, are easy-care plants that thrive in hot, dry climates and tolerate drought once their roots are established.

Give them full sun and well-drained soil. Plant rudbeckias in wildflower beds, cut-flower gardens, containers, combination planters and, of course, in butterfly gardens. The perennial is cold hardy through Zone 5.

You'll find Cinnamon Bear Rudbeckia at most Home Depot stores.

Condoms

Because the latex in condoms degrades over time, becoming brittle and more prone to breakage, the FDA requires they carry an expiration date, up to five years from the date of packaging, established by testing to ensure their integrity. Storing condoms for prolonged periods in a hot environment, such as a windowsill or glove compartment (a wallet is usually OK), can speed up deterioration, while storing in a cool, dry place could make them usable past the expiration date, said Dr. John Santelli, professor of clinical population and public health at Columbia University's Mailman School of Public Health.

Anything with sunscreen

The ingredients that absorb UV light and prevent it from reaching your skin can change or degrade with time and extreme temperature, diminishing the effectiveness of the sunscreen, said Dr. John Bailey, chief scientist with the Personal Care Products Council. If the product still looks, smells and feels right, you can probably use it for a year past the expiration if you're willing to take the risk (that is, if you tolerate the sun well), Bailey said. But if you're fair-skinned or burn easily, it's best to abide by the date. Other doctors, such as Glogau, advise people to buy a new bottle each year.

Drugs (liquid)

Liquids are generally less stable than solid forms of drugs, so err toward abiding by the expiration date, said Ohio State's Weber. Sometimes it's hard to see inside containers to determine if something is off with the liquid, but if it smells funny or looks cloudy or discolored, don't take it. Never swig straight from the bottle, to avoid contamination with bacteria.

Drugs (solid)

While patients should follow expiration dates on prescription drugs, taking expired over-the-counter drugs could just mean they won't be as potent, said Robert Weber, senior director of pharmaceutical services at the Ohio State University Medical Center. There has been some clamoring for a re-evaluation of drug shelf life. The military, upon testing the stability of 122 types of expired drugs, found that many retained 90 percent of their potency five years after their expiration date. But those were unopened and ideally stored; heat or high humidity can shorten life span.

Toothpaste

The greatest concern is the reduction in the concentration of fluoride, which is key to cavity prevention, said Frank Lippert, a researcher at Indiana University's Oral Health Research Institute. Anti-tartar and whitening agents also can degrade, making the product less effective. Toothpastes with chemicals such as triclosan, which fights gingivitis, have an even shorter shelf life because that chemical can leach into the packaging material over time, cutting effectiveness. Also, disappearing flavor and the process of syneresis (when water leaves the gel and makes the tube hard to squeeze), make old toothpaste unpleasant.

Beauty products

For cosmetics with active ingredients, such as acne-fighting or anti-aging products, abide by the expiration date because the low concentrations of active ingredients can degrade quickly, said San Francisco dermatologist Richard Glogau. Other cosmetics that don't require expiration dates sometimes still carry them, often in the form of PAO (period after opening), a symbol of an open jar that suggests how many months you should keep the product after opening it. The biggest risk is microbial growth. If it doesn't look or smell right, it's time to dump, said Bailey.

Batteries

There's no reason not to use an old battery unless there's visible damage to the can, said Kurt Iverson, spokesman for Duracell, which prints a seven-year shelf life for its alkaline batteries as a guarantee rather than an expiration. The metals oxidize as they age, and there can be a small amount of self-discharge from batteries as they sit for long periods unused, but the only consequence is that an older battery might have a shorter life, Iverson said. (Tip: Don't store batteries in the refrigerator or freezer; room temperature is best for quality and life span.)

Planting a Climbing Rose Bush

Ah, climbing rose bushes. You love the color. You love the fragrance. You love how big and magnificent they are. You just don't love the idea of putting in a lot of work to plant one. The fact is, rose bushes are easier to plant and care for than you think. All it takes is a little planning and patience. Here are a few easy steps to follow

PROJECT STEPS

First, Location, location, location - Your rose bush needs sunlight and lots of it. While some rose bushes can tolerate a little shade, you're in good shape if you can find a spot that provides four to six hours of sunlight per day. Your rose bush is going to need a lot of personal space. It can grow up to 12 feet high and just as wide, so give it room.

Second, Start off healthy - When you visit your garden center, choose the healthiest specimen you can find. You'll want one that will produce flowers in the color you desire for your garden.

Third, Prepare the Soil, and Dig In - The ideal soil for a rose bush is rich and fertile, with good drainage. If your soil doesn't fit that profile, you can amend it with products such as Miracle-Gro® Garden Soil for Roses. When your soil is ready, dig a hole that is twice as wide as bush's root ball and about two feet deep. Be sure that the center of the hole is 18 to 30 inches out from the nearest trellis, fence, or post. Plant your bush, cover the base with more garden soil, and give it plenty of water. You can finish the project with a layer of mulch, which looks great and helps the bush retain moisture.

Fourth, Get Ready for the Climb - You can train your rose bush to climb in many different ways. It can frame a doorway, climb a pillar, or engulf a trellis. If you want it to grow around a trellis, you have to weave the bush's shoots into the structure, since the plant can't do it alone. Try using plant ties. If you like lots of blooms and a bushier look, go for horizontal growth by bending the shoots sideways.

Finally, The Basics: Feeding and Watering - Rose bushes give you glorious blooms and lush growth if you water and feed them regularly with a product such as Miracle-Gro® Water Soluble Rose Plant Food.

WTO calls COOL a trade barrier

Beef industry mulls changes to law or paying economic concessions

By Cindy Snyder
Times News correspondent

A preliminary ruling by the World Trade Organization that the U.S. country-of-origin labeling law is a trade barrier wasn't a surprise to many in the meat industry. Especially not to those who questioned the need for country-of-origin labeling, or COOL as it is known, when it was enacted.

John Nalivka was among the skeptics of COOL. It began as a voluntary labeling program in the 2002 Farm Bill and included pork, beef, lamb, fish, perishable agricultural products and peanuts. Provisions in the Farm Bill said that COOL would become a mandatory requirement by Sept. 30, 2004.

Nalivka, who runs a livestock marketing service in Vale, Ore., and is also the Idaho Cattle Association's marketing committee chairman, said COOL was enacted on the tail end of the bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE), or mad-cow disease, concern. Congress, along with consumers, was told COOL would help protect food safety.

Despite objections by numerous agricultural groups who argued that the costs of COOL would outweigh the benefits, COOL became mandatory in March 2009. Within six months both Canada and Mexico had filed complaints with the World Trade Organization (WTO). The two countries' trade officials argued that mandatory COOL amounted to an illegal, non-tariff trade barrier, and treated U.S. products more favorably than those from Canada and Mexico.

The WTO agreed in a preliminary ruling issued late last month.

The final ruling is expected by fall, but Nalivka doesn't expect the WTO will change its mind. "You don't come to that kind of a conclusion and then say three months later, 'Oops, I changed my mind.'"

So the question is: what will the U.S. do? Appealing the final ruling will extend the process but Nalivka expects that at the end of an appeals process, COOL will still be considered a trade barrier. That leaves two options: change COOL

Germany backtracks on E. coli

Officials do U-turn on suspected cause

By Juergen Baetz
Associated Press writer

BERLIN — In their second major retraction in a week, German officials said initial tests provided no evidence that sprouts from an organic farm in northern Germany were the cause of the deadly E. coli outbreak. One U.S. expert called the German investigation "a disaster."

The surprise U-turn came only a day after the same state agency, Lower Saxony's agriculture ministry, held a news conference to announce that sprouts from the organic Gaertnerhof farm in the northern village of Bienenbuettel were suspected to be the cause of the outbreak. The ministry shut down the farm, recalled all its produce and sent an alert urging Germans not to eat any more sprouts.

Last week, German officials pointed to contaminated cucumbers from Spain as a possible cause, igniting vegetable bans and heated protests from Spanish farmers. Researchers later concluded the Spanish cucumbers were contaminated with a different strain of E. coli.

"This investigation has been a disaster," Michael Osterholm, director of the Center for Infectious Disease Research and Policy at the University of Minnesota, told The Associated Press.

"This kind of wishy-washy response is incompetent," he said, slamming German authorities for casting suspicion on cucumbers and sprouts without firm data.

But the European Union's

A farm worker empties cucumbers into a container after failing to sell them due an ongoing food crisis in Europe, in Carquefou, western France, Monday.

A woman holds bean sprouts with chopsticks in Berlin, Germany on Sunday.

Health Commissioner defended German investigators, saying they were under extreme pressure as the crisis kept unfolding.

"We have to understand that people in certain situations do have a responsibility to inform their citizens as soon as possible of any danger that could exist to them," John Dalli said in Brussels.

German Agriculture Minister Ilse Aigner on Monday reiterated the warning against eating sprouts, as well as tomatoes, cucumbers and lettuce.

But the German flip-flop on the sprouts means there is still no confirmed source for the deadliest known E. coli outbreak, which has already killed least 22 people and sickened more than 2,330 across Europe.

On Monday, the agriculture ministry for Lower-Saxony state said 23 of 40 samples from the organic sprouts farm tested negative for the highly aggressive, "super-toxic" strain of E. coli bacteria. It said tests were still under way on 17 other sprout samples from the farm.

"The search for the outbreak's cause is very difficult, as several weeks have passed since its suspected start," the ministry said in a statement, cautioning that further testing of the sprouts and their seeds was necessary.

However, negative test results on sprout or seed batches do not mean that previous sprout batches weren't contaminated.

"Contaminated food could have been completely processed and sold by now," admitted ministry spokeswoman Natascha Manski.

Osterholm, whose team has investigated a number of food-borne outbreaks in the U.S., said finding negative results in about half of the sprout tests was "meaningless" because it was possible that only a few sprouts in the entire batch were contaminated.

Drought boosts wheat prices

Bloomberg News

The worst droughts in decades are wilting wheat fields from China to the United States to Britain, overwhelming Russia's return to grain markets and driving prices to the highest levels since 2008.

Parts of China, the biggest grower, had the least rain in a century, some European regions are the driest in 50 years and almost half the winter-wheat crop in the U.S., the largest exporter, is rated poor or worse. Inventory is dropping 8.8 percent, the most in five years, Rabobank International says. Prices will advance 20 percent to as high as $9.25 a bushel by Dec. 31, a Bloomberg survey of 14 analysts and traders shows.

Wheat as much as doubled in the past year as crops failed, spurring Ukraine and Russia to curb shipments and increasing the U.S. share of global sales by the most since 2004. Russia ending its export ban on July 1 and Ukraine lifting quotas may not be enough as crops wither elsewhere, fueling gains in food prices which the United Nations says are already near a record.

"In 32 years, I've never seen so many problems in so many places," said Dan Basse, the president of AgResource Co., a farm researcher in Chicago. "We're concerned about the world

Factors drive wheat exports in Idaho

Audrey Dutton
Idaho Statesman

Idaho's wheat exports have spiked since July, in large part because Middle Eastern and North African countries are buying more and paying higher prices for it.

Wheat is not the main product Idaho sells to Egypt. But exports of soft white wheat — a major Idaho crop and a popular export to the region — grew five-fold over the last year, according to Blaine Jacobson, executive director of the Idaho Wheat Commission.

Two factors are driving the wheat export spike, Jacobson said.

While Russia is usually a top exporter of wheat to Egypt and neighboring countries, heat and drought ravaged the crops in 2010. That prompted importers in the Middle East and North Africa to turn to less-frequent wheat trading partners in the United States.

But political unrest in countries such as Tunisia and Egypt also influences food and agricultural exports to nearby countries, Jacobson said.

Milk bulk tanks won't be regulated by the EPA

The Environmental Protection Agency decided late last month that it won't regulate on-farm milk bulk tanks.

Under rules meant to protect waterways and shorelines from oil spills, the federal agency had proposed regulating the oil in milk-butterfat — the same way it handles petroleum-based fuels.

Although the EPA's stance was that milk would pose an environmental threat if a large quantity was spilled the dairy industry countered that milk shouldn't be considered toxic as buttermilk is biodegradable and edible.

The EPA withdrew the proposal because on-farm milk tanks, containers and pipes are already regulated by other agencies. The Idaho State Department of Agriculture already inspects dairies for sanitation and environmental standards.

ICA slates mid-year conference

Times-News

The Idaho Cattle Association will hold its mid-year conference at Cactus Pete's Resort and Casino in Jackpot, Nev., June 21-23.

Idaho cattle producers are focusing on the future at this year's conference, pinpointing a wide variety of topics that affect the outlook of Idaho's cattle industry. Highlights of the conference include various guest speakers, a range tour, golf tournament and barbecue.

Alex Avery, director of Research and Education of the Hudson Institute Center for Global Food Issues, will be the conference's keynote speaker.

Avery's address is to give cattle producers' insight into why expanding and changing global populations will soon confirm the value in modern agricultural production. His 50-year projections for global food and animal protein demand specifically break down why beef producers will become immensely valuable in the near future.

Avery will also be illustrating how grain-finished cattle have a smaller greenhouse gas footprint than that of grass-fed cattle.

J.D. Alexander, president-elect of the National Cattlemen's Beef Association (NCBA), will also be sharing updates on challenges and opportunities in increasing trade value for U.S. cattle producers, along with a review of the current key marketing and agricultural policy issues.

Alexander, a cattleman from Pilger, Neb., owns a 2,000-acre corn, soybean, and alfalfa farm that markets approximately 15,000 head of cattle per year.

Top industry issues will be discussed on June 21-22, along with a political roundup from Idaho Lt. Gov. Brad Little and a joint session with members of the Nevada Cattlemen's Association.

Other topics to be discussed include grazing improvement opportunities, wildfire prevention methods, brucellosis testing, and more.

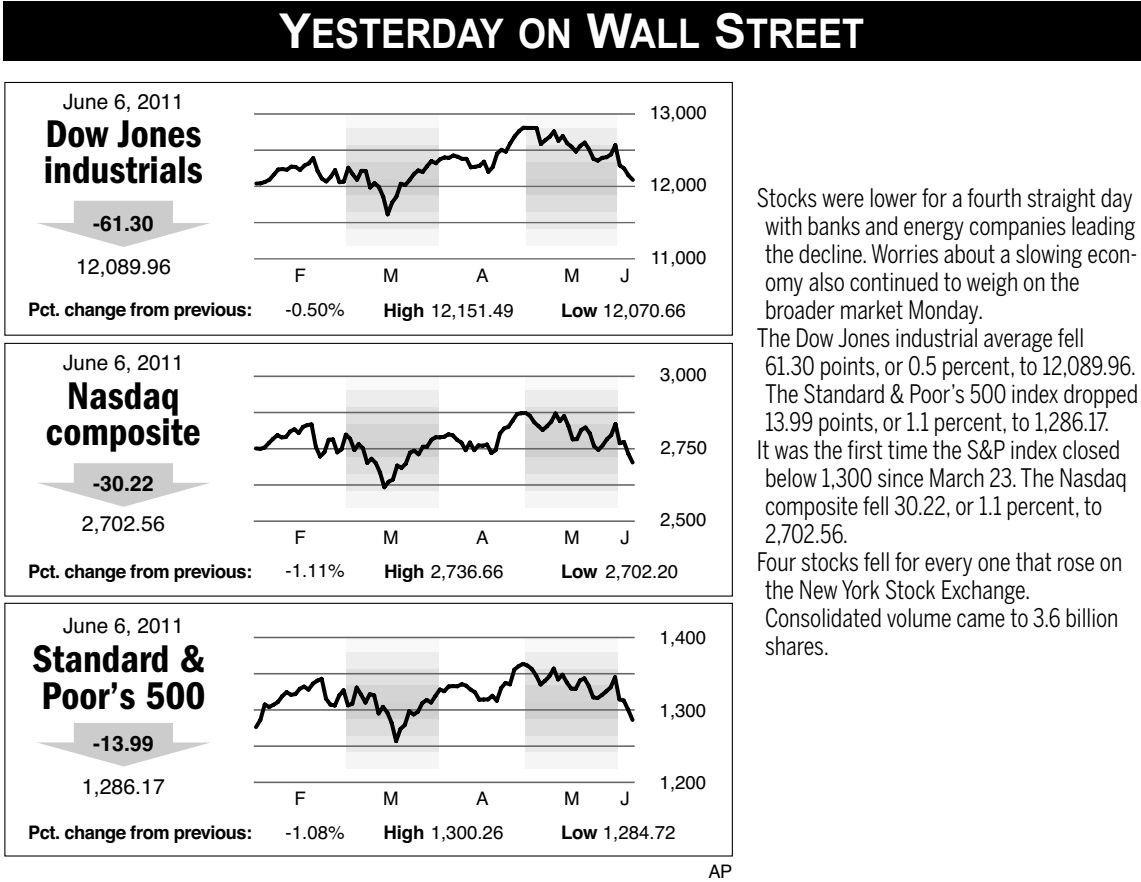

For more information or to register for the conference, please visit our website www.idahocattle.org, email info@idahocattle.org or contact the ICA office at 343-1615.

to conform with WTO standards or pay economic concessions to Canada and Mexico.

One argument for making COOL mandatory was that consumers want to know where their food is coming from. But even with the local food movement gaining strength, a national survey conducted by Kansas State University found that only 30 percent of consumers even know that COOL exists.

“Most consumers don’t use it,” said Glynn Tonsor, a livestock economist at KSU who is part of a two-year research project studying the effects of COOL on consumers.

Nalivka agrees. “I’m not hearing a lot of people clamoring to know where their meat is coming from,” he said. “The way gasoline prices are, they are just looking for an affordable price.”

KSU researchers asked consumers what action the U.S. should take if the WTO ruled against COOL as expected. Nearly half said the U.S. should change the law to conform but 37 percent wanted to keep COOL and pay economic concessions. That indicates to him that public support for COOL is divided as is industry support.

“This is going to be another divisive issue from both the consumer and cattlemen’s perspective,” Tonsor said during a radio interview. “The two camps are digging in and arguing their side is right.”

One unintended consequence of changes in the beef industry that coincided with mandatory COOL have cost the Pacific Northwest two packing plants in recent years.

The IBP beef packing plant in Boise was shuttered during the border closure during the height of the BSE scare. Smaller cow herds in both the U.S. and Canada is a primary reason the XL Four Star beef packing plant in Nampa is closing this week.

“While it may be a nice idea to know where your purchase is from, we label clothes and have labeled fruit and vegetables for some time, COOL did reduce feeders and packers willingness to bring in livestock from Canada and Mexico,” said Wilson Gray, a livestock economist with the University of Idaho. “That was the primary intent, I believe, of some folks. To a degree it worked and coincided with a low point in cattle numbers so volume was low enough that we’ve seen plant closures as a result.”

story now,” said Basse, who has been studying agricultural markets since 1979 and expects prices as high as $10 this year.

Higher prices will help U.S. farm income rise 20 percent to a record $94.7 billion this year, the government estimates. It also means the most profit ever for Moline, Ill.-based Deere & Co., the largest maker of agriculture equipment, analysts’ estimates compiled by Bloomberg show.

Futures traders anticipate rising wheat prices through March 2013, according to data from the Chicago Board of Trade. Speculators almost tripled their bets on gains in the two weeks ended May 31, figures from the Commodity Futures Trading Commission show. The most widely held option gives the holder the right to buy wheat at $9 for July.

Demand from some of the biggest importing nations may decline as their harvests improve. Egypt, the largest buyer, will purchase 6.9 per-

“In Nigeria and Saudi Arabia, they have doubled their stocks of wheat” as a preventive measure, he said. “When you run short of food, you reach a tipping point where even the middle class joins in the revolution.”

About two-thirds of Idaho’s crop is soft white wheat, which is used in flat breads, he said. In the past six months, Egypt has purchased about 350,000 metric tons of that wheat from Idaho, Oregon and Washington.

Soft white wheat is currently selling for $7.70 per bushel out of Burley, compared with about $5.50 a year ago. Idaho exported about $14.1 million of goods to Egypt in 2010, according to the Idaho Department of Commerce.

The state’s major exports were dehydrated dairy products, paper products and dairy milking machinery.

Overall exports from Idaho to the North African region doubled between September 2009 and September 2010, according to data compiled by the International Trade Administration.

cent less in the 12 months ending in July 2012 and Morocco 46 percent less, the USDA estimates.

Rolling four-week grain exports to northern Africa from France, now the second-biggest wheat exporter, fell 49 percent since the end of March, according to data from the port of Rouen, the main grain hub. The drop suggests no return to the panic buying in the first months of the year when the nations expanded stockpiles to damp prices as riots erupted from Egypt to Morocco.

But the anticipated decline in import demand won’t stop global purchases from rising, the USDA forecasts. China may double its wheat imports to about 3 million tons this year, said Li Qiang, the managing director at Shanghai J.C. Intelligence Co., the biggest independent agricultural market researcher.

Lightning strikes over the Puyehue volcano, more than 500 miles south of Santiago, Chile, Monday.

Chilean volcano grounds flights, coats ski slopes

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — An erupting Chilean volcano sent a towering plume of ash across South America on Monday, forcing thousands from their homes, grounding airline flights in southern Argentina and coating ski resorts with a gritty layer of dust instead of snow.

Booming explosions echoed across the Andes as toxic gases belched up from a three-mile-long fissure in the Puyehue-Cordon Caulle volcanic complex — a ridge between two craters just west of the Chilean-Argentine border that began erupting Saturday.

Winds blew a six-mile-high cloud of ash all the way to the Atlantic Ocean and even into southern Buenos Aires province, hundreds of miles to the northeast.

Authorities in Chile went house to house, trying to persuade stragglers near the volcano to leave because of an increasing danger of toxic gas and flash floods. More than 3,500 people were evacuated from 22 communities as swarms of earthquakes Saturday heralded the eruption and hundreds more fled Monday to shelters farther away.

Some refused to leave, wanting to protect their homes and livestock. Chile's verdant lakes region is a center for dairy farming, with more than 9,000 cows and sheep.

"Everything is prepared with shelter and transportation for them to immediately leave the danger zone," added Vicente Nunez, director of Chile's emergency preparedness office, urging them to leave.

Spectacular displays of lightning flashed in the volcanic clouds during the week-end, and while the amount of ash falling east of the volcano subsided significantly by Monday, experts said it was too early to predict how long it will take before the volcano falls silent.

Volcanic dust coated ski slopes above San Carlos de Bariloche and Villa la Angostura two weeks before the official start of the winter skiing season. The resorts' trade group said it was too early to say how it would affect the local economy, but for now, residents were told to stay indoors and tourists were asked not to come.

The Cordon Caulle is nearly 620 miles south of Santiago, in Chile's lakes region.

Group says Libya rebels have detained pro-Gadhafi civilians

By Hadeel Al-shalchi and Diaa Hadid
Associated Press writers

BENGHAZI, Libya — Libya's rebels have arbitrarily detained dozens of civilians suspected of supporting ruler Moammar Gadhafi and at least one has died after apparently being tortured while in custody, Human Rights Watch said Monday.

Since the uprising started in mid-February, rebels have seized control of much of the country's east and scrambled to set up an administration in their de facto capital of Benghazi. Rebels also hold the western city of Misrata and smaller towns in the western mountains.

Both sides have taken prisoners in the fighting.

On Monday, New York-based Human Rights Watch called on Libya's rebels to give detainees legal protection and investigate abuses, said researcher Sidney Kwiram.

"Detainees are entitled to their full due process rights, including access to a lawyer," Kwiram said. "The concern is that if this is not addressed early, bad habits can become entrenched."

As of May 28, rebel authorities held about 330 people, Human Rights Watch said in a report released Sunday. It remains unclear how many are civilians because rebel authorities often do not distinguish them from fighters, seeing all Gadhafi supporters as enemies of the "revolution."

In Benghazi, at least one-third of 118 detainees were civilians, the report said. Of the 20 civilians Human Rights Watch interviewed, none said they had been abused, but none had been able to meet with a lawyer or challenge their detention in court.

The report, based on interviews with detainees and rebel officials in three rebel-controlled cities, also said bands of volunteers were rounding up people suspected of pro-Gadhafi activities.

"They are making arrests with no formal legal authority, and that creates the space for vigilante justice," Kwiram said.

The report said one man held by such a group, Muhammad el-Dabr, died in late April, apparently after being tortured. El-Dabr, a Jordanian citizen, was suspected of spreading propaganda for Gadhafi.

Rocket attack kills 5 U.S. soldiers in Iraq

By Ned Parker and Raheem Salaman
Los Angeles Times

BAGHDAD — Five American soldiers were killed Monday in an attack in central Iraq, the military said. It was the deadliest attack this year against U.S. forces in Iraq and underscored the dangers American troops still face as they prepare to withdraw by the end of 2011.

The attack came as Iraqi officials touted the end of a 100-day-period called by Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki to improve governmental services, but ordinary Iraqis appeared to greet the milestone with a shrug and skepticism that anything was improving as violence claimed the lives of at least 14 Iraqis.

lence claimed the lives of at least 14 Iraqis.

An Iraqi security source said that the five U.S. soldiers had been serving as advisers for Iraqi national police at a base in eastern Baghdad when their quarters were targeted by rocket fire shortly before 7 a.m.

U.S. military officials declined to comment beyond their original statement when asked about the information.

The deaths raise the number of U.S. soldiers killed in Iraq since March 2003 to 4,459, according to the independent website icasualties.org. Both Shiite and Sunni extremist groups are eager to target the Americans and claim they drove U.S. forces out of the country.

Eastern Baghdad is rife with Shiite Muslim militia groups: radical cleric Muqtada al-Sadr's elite fighting unit, the Promised Day Brigade, as well as a splinter group called League of the Righteous.

Eleven U.S. soldiers were killed in April, and two died last month in attacks. An estimated 46,000 American troops remain in Iraq on about 66 bases. The U.S. military is currently involved in training Iraqi forces and conducting joint operations, notably with Iraq's counterterrorism units. They also guard diplomatic teams traveling around the country.

The military expects its numbers to stay even through the end of the summer.

UN chief says he is seeking a second term

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon announced Monday that he will seek a second term as head of the United Nations, pledging to keep leading the world body as a "bridge-builder" at a time of unprecedented global change. His reelection is virtually assured.

Ki-moon

The former South Korean foreign minister finally made public what has been the U.N.'s worst kept secret — that he wants a second term — at a news conference to discuss his recent trips to Europe and Africa. In his virtually non-stop travels around the globe, he has been quietly lobbying world leaders for support.

Ban said he had sent letters to the 15-member Security Council and 192-member General Assembly

"humbly" offering himself for consideration for a second five-year term. His current term ends Dec. 31.

Though he insisted he takes nothing for granted, Ban has no opponents and diplomats say he has the backing of the five veto-wielding members of the Security Council — the U.S., China, Russia, France and Britain — who must recommend him. He likely has support from the entire General Assembly, which will probably elect him by acclamation later this month.

Attack kills 120 Syrian forces; crackdown feared

BEIRUT (AP) — Armed men killed 120 Syrian security forces and torched government buildings Monday in a northern region where troops have unleashed deadly assaults on protesters for days, Syria said. The government vowed to respond "decisively," hinting at an even more brutal crackdown by a regime known for ruthlessly crushing dissent.

If confirmed, the attack in the north would be a turning point in what so far has largely been a peaceful uprising threatening the 40-year rule of President Bashar Assad and his family.

Opposition activists were skeptical of the official casualty toll, saying the authorities were setting the stage for a new onslaught. But even they acknowledged there was fighting, although it was not clear who was involved.

Communications were cut to the area around Jisr al-Shughour on Monday and the details of the attack were impossible to verify, but there have been unconfirmed reports by activists and residents in the past of Syrians and even mutinous troops fighting back against security forces.

Adnan Mahmoud, the chief government spokesman, acknowledged that Syrian forces had lost control of some areas for "intermittent periods of time" and said residents had appealed to the army to do what was necessary to restore security.

"We will deal strongly and decisively, and according to the law, and we will not be silent about any armed attack that targets the security of the state and its citizens," said Interior Minister Ibrahim Shaar.

Leftist nationalist's win in presidential race

By Tracy Wilkinson
Los Angeles Times

LIMA, Peru — The narrow victory of leftist nationalist Ollanta Humala in Peru's contentious presidential election triggered serious jitters throughout the Peruvian stock market and business establishment Monday but also words of conciliation from some of the president-elect's most implacable enemies.

By a thin margin in Sunday's vote, Humala defeated Keiko Fujimori, a conservative 36-year-old lawmaker who is the daughter of Peru's disgraced former President Alberto Fujimori. The elder Fujimori is serving a 25-year jail sentence for corruption and authorizing death squads.

Reacting to Humala's pledge to work for better distribution of Peru's wealth from silver and gold mines, the stock market plunged by more than 12 percent despite suspended trading at one point; media here described it as a record fall.

Humala sought to reinsure investors and the business class, the motor and benefactors in Peru's remarkable economic growth of the last decade. Speaking to supporters late Sunday, he vowed to form a consensus government that would continue to welcome investment. He has said he will tax mining profits but pledged not to expropriate private property or businesses, and to respect the constitution.

But he also said he understood his victory, where he won overwhelmingly in Peru's vast, impoverished highlands and rural countryside, was a call for improved status for the poor and working class.

"We must have workers of the 21st century, not the 17th century," he said. "Peru has to advance, but for that, every Peruvian family must also advance."

Fujimori on Monday conceded defeat. She recognized that Peruvians had voted for "change" but also offered to "build bridges" and to work with the new government as "constructive opposition."

"The country must not be held back," she said in a brief news conference. "We will defend our convictions and prioritize the interests of the country."

Given the narrow margin of Humala's victory, he will have to make compromises with opponents while holding together his rather disparate coalition, some of whose most prominent members supported him mostly out of opposition to Fujimori.

Analysts attributed Humala's win to his success in softening his image from the more radical leftist who ran unsuccessfully for the presidency in 2006. The former army colonel sought to portray himself as more like popular former Brazilian President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva than radical socialist Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez.

Mexican army seizes drug gang's armored trucks

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexican soldiers in a northern border state seized two more of the armored cargo trucks that drug cartels have been using for street battles with rivals, authorities said Monday.

The Defense Department said the trucks were found during a weekend search of a metalworking shop that had been used by a drug gang in the town of Camargo in Tamaulipas state. It said the trucks had inch-thick sheet steel welded over the cabin, doors and cargo container, complete with primitive fixed turrets and firing ports.

About 25 other trucks — some already partly modified — were also found at the workshop, the military's statement said.

Today is Tuesday, June 7, the 158th day of 2011. There are 207 days left in the year.

Today's Highlights:
On June 7, 1776, Richard Henry Lee of Virginia proposed to the Continental Congress a resolution stating “That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States, that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved.”

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1654, King Louis XIV, age 15, was crowned in Rheims, 11 years after the start of his reign.

In 1753, Britain's King George II gave his assent to an Act of Parliament establishing the British Museum.
In 1769, frontiersman Daniel Boone first began to explore present-day Kentucky.

In 1848, French painter and sculptor Paul Gauguin was born in Paris.

In 1929, the sovereign state of Vatican City came into existence as copies of the Lateran Treaty were exchanged in Rome.

In 1939, King George VI and his wife, Queen Elizabeth, arrived at Niagara Falls, N.Y., from Canada on the first visit to the United States by a reigning British monarch.

In 1948, the Communists completed their takeover of Czechoslovakia with the resignation of President Edvard Benes.

In 1967, the Haight Ashbury Free Medical Clinic opened in San Francisco.

In 1981, Israeli military planes destroyed a nuclear power plant in Iraq, a facility the Israelis charged could have been used to make nuclear weapons.

In 1998, in a crime that shocked the nation, James Byrd Jr., a 49-year-old black man, was hooked by a chain to a pickup truck and dragged to his death in Jasper, Texas. (Two white men were later sentenced to death for the crime; a third received life with the possibility of parole.)

Ten years ago: Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh abandoned all appeals after a three-judge panel of the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected his request to delay his impending execution. A federal judge refused to stop plans for a World War II Memorial on the National Mall in Washington, D.C. British Prime Minister Tony Blair and his Labour Party swept to a second term, winning re-election by a crushing margin.

Five years ago: Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, the founder of al-Qaida in Iraq, was killed by a U.S. airstrike on his safe house. The U.S. Senate rejected a constitutional amendment to ban gay marriage.

One year ago: U.S. defense officials announced that Army Spc. Bradley Manning had been detained in Baghdad in connection with a video posted on WikiLeaks showing Apache helicopters gunning down unarmed men in Iraq. White House correspondent Helen Thomas, 89, abruptly retired after calling for Israelis to get “out of Palestine” in an online video. An Indian court convicted seven former employees of Union Carbide's India subsidiary of “death by negligence” for their roles in the 1984 Bhopal gas tragedy.

IF JUNE 7 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: A burst in your happiness and vigor can make the next several weeks a fine time for physical fitness or starting any health related regimen. July is a good time to develop a new circle of friends, so go ahead and join a book club or start attending meetings. In August and September, you need to keep your nose pressed firmly to the grindstone and gather experience. November could be challenging because your business acumen is not quite up to par. Wait until January to make key decisions that could affect your finances or career.

HOROSCOPE
Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your opinion has value. Your input can smooth troubled waters and put the competition into perspective. Your romantic nature seeps through when you try to be friendly with members of the opposite sex.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Courtesy costs nothing and helps you gain ground. Minor flirtations can sweeten your day but it is best to avoid any appearance of impropriety. Your friendliness may attract beneficial admirers.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Even if the iron is blazing hot, it isn't the time to strike. It is a better day for mental pursuits and organization than starting projects. The object of your affection should be loving and amorous this evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Test your values by speaking your mind. Someone will provide a sparkling-clear mirror and show you the flaws — as well as the beauty — of your ideas. Late afternoon and evening are perfect for romantic overtures.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Being a tower of strength is your special talent today. You are particularly reliable when dealing with business organizations or social clubs. Invite friends or coworkers out for lunch or to a social event.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accept any challenges to your authority as a mental exercise. Competitions are a test of skill. Be as objective as possible if others wish to debate. A few pleasant surprises could brighten your day.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Prepare to preen. You may not realize just how sexy and desirable you are until someone gives you the eye. Someone may find you scrumptious; sign up for group activities to meet new admirers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Put your feet up on the desk and tell a personal anecdote. Unbending just a little when you spend time with new acquaintances can help you find common ground. Helpful supporters flock to your side.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be a positive influence in a negative world. Your vibrant outlook can buoy up the spirits of companions who may be down in the dumps. Put new career initiatives on hold and remain steadfast.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Look for the facts and insist on accuracy. Too much imagination could create problems. For instance, you might imagine that an attractive someone has a crush on you when quite the reverse is true.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What seems glamorous could be only a mirage. It is best to stick to your present plans or go along with the crowd. You may benefit from minor altercations that expose truth and clear the air.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): There is a soft center under your shell. You hide the fact that you feel an urge to escape to a more glamorous existence. At the same time you may avoid admitting sensitivity to criticism to others.

ANSWER: The simple solution here is to jump to two no-trump. Since a bid of one no-trump in this sequence would show 18-20 points, a call of two no-trump shows approximately 21-22. I agree that it is possible that a 4-3 major-suit fit might play better, but since there is no scientific way to find out, settle for the value bid and let partner explore other strains if his hand warrants it.

DEAR ABBY: While I understand “Loose and Baggy in San Francisco’s” (April 23) mother’s wish to get the most out of her daughter’s clothing budget, as one whose career has been studying the social psychology of appearance, I disagree with your response. A girl’s early teen years are crucial to her development of self-image and overall self-esteem. This is a major reason for their obsession with their appearance.

Parents who want to assist their daughters through the quagmire of appearance-related issues associated with these years should work with their daughters by being open to their needs, yet not allow them to exceed boundaries of decency, etc. A 13-year-old who wants clothing that fits should be accommodated. Otherwise, she stands to become ashamed of her appearance, inclined to act out through her appearance once she gains control over what she wears, and be overly obsessed with it well beyond her teen years.

— KAREN KAIGLER-WALKER, PH.D.
BURBANK, CALIF.

DEAR DR. KAIGLER-WALKER: Thank you for your opinion. Many readers also empathized with “Loose and Baggy.”

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

Read on for their views on the subject:

DEAR ABBY: I had the same problems when I was 13. My mom always made me buy clothes that were too large, too long, etc. But my grandmother was a clever seamstress who helped “nip and tuck” the extra material away until I needed it. She could also add new cool-looking details to the clothes. “Loose and Baggy” may also have a relative with a talent for clothing alterations, or if not, she most likely has a tailor or alteration shop nearby.

I’m 15 now and still have many of the same clothes. It has saved money in the long run because we can just let the stitches out instead of buying new clothes. At 13, she still has some room for growth.

— GRANDDAUGHTER OF A TOP-LEVEL TAILOR

DEAR ABBY: I empathize with “Loose and Baggy.” When my mom and I would go shopping, it always ended in a big fight with me in tears. I was teased mercilessly by the other children for dressing like a “40-year-old” and never had the cool things the other kids were wearing even though my clothes cost just as much.

I vowed never to do that with my daughter, and by the time she was 12 she was shopping for her own clothes. Our only rule was that she had to follow the three B’s — no butt, no boobs and no belly. At 16 she has an amazing sense of fashion and is often emulated. “Loose and Baggy” should be given some boundaries and then allowed to buy what she wants.

— REFORMED FRUMP IN TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: When my daughter was younger, she had specific style tastes that included expensive, trendy clothes. I implemented a budget that allowed her to have a set amount of money on the first day of the new season. The money was given to her in cash or, later, in her checking account. She was responsible for budgeting the amount herself for her clothes during that season.

Because of this she has learned how to manage money, shop “high end” on sale and roll over unused amounts to the next season. She has become a responsible teenager who understands the value of the dollar. She also trades outfits with her friends — or consigns them to resale stores. “Loose and Baggy” sounds like part of the “entitlement” generation and probably would learn more if she was part of the solution.

— SMART MOM/SMART DAUGHTER

2011 Times-News Girls Track Athlete of the Year

Illustration by DREW NASH/Times-News

Kimberly senior Kaitlin Keller is the 2011 Times-News Girls Track Athlete of the Year.

TRIPLE QUADRUPLE

Four-time state champ Keller adds to medal haul

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

A month before the state meet, Kaitlin Keller had one of her worst performances in the triple jump.

Competing at the Boise Relays and hyped up after running two of her best races of the season in the 100 and 200 meters, Keller took that energy to the triple jump.

The three-time state champion scratched three times, and for the first time all season, she didn't win a meet.

"I really, really wanted to do well. I had never run so well down the runway but I was over my mark every time," Keller said.

She made sure her return trip to Boise was more successful.

"She had a lot of pressure on her and put a lot of pressure on herself," said Kimberly track coach Marvin Mumm. "She was probably a little nervous and took it a little more careful (at the state meet)."

Her careful jumps still beat everyone else's best.

Keller jumped 36 feet, 6 inches — more than a foot shorter than her personal best — but still won the state title by nearly two feet, giving her a fourth consecutive gold medal in the triple jump to become the first four-time state champion in Kimberly High School's history.

"I went in thinking, just don't over-think things and go out and do what I've done throughout my career," Keller said. "All I had to do was what I had done week after week."

Namely, beat everyone.

The 2011 Times-News Girls Track Athlete of the Year has collected a whopping 14 state medals in her career, including seven golds.

She capped her final day of high school track by snagging her first gold in the 100 meters, winning in a time of 12.72 seconds. She also anchored the winning 4x200 relay team to help the Bulldogs to a third-place trophy.

This fall, the 5-foot-4 Keller will jump and run at Idaho State.

"I think it will be fun. I love track. Doing it the entire year, instead of just a few months, is going to be awesome for me," Keller said. "They're going to be pushing me really hard. I'm excited for that. I think that will help me get better and better."

As for those 14 medals? "Those will stay at home with my parents," Keller said.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

"She must have a heck of a vertical or springs underneath her legs to do what she does." — Buhl track coach Andrew Moretto

"The thing that's impressive of these jumpers is that it's tough on the legs. And then for her to turn around and run the sprints is very impressive." — Filer track coach LaRell Patterson

"We're going to miss her. She's been an incredible athlete for us for four years." — Kimberly track coach Marvin Mumm

Best of the Rest: The Magic Valley's other top girls track athletes

Mackenzie Chojnacky, Jerome: The Toledo-bound senior finished her career with a state title in the 1,600 meters in a personal-best time of 5 minutes, 7 seconds. She also finished second and third in the 800 and 3,200 meters, respectively, helping the Tigers to a team championship.

"It was amazing. I've always wanted to win the mile. I've always kind of thought of it as my race, so I knew it was an epic moment when I crossed that finish line," said Chojnacky.

Whitney Amoth, Buhl: The Magic Valley won't see a girls thrower like Amoth for a long time. The Buhl senior, who holds the school record in the bench press, squat and front squat, capped a stellar career at Buhl this season, winning her third consecutive state title in the shot put and her first in the discus. Her personal-best throw of 46 feet, 10.25 inches at the district meet was the ninth-best shot put mark in the nation — a throw her coach Andrew Moretto said, "We'll probably never see again around here."

"I'm extremely pleased to see her go out with state titles in the shot and discus and to do it there at BSU's track where she'll throw next year is just awesome in itself," Moretto said.

Madi Worst, Twin Falls: Her junior year, Worst suffered a torn ACL playing soccer and through extensive rehab, she was able to return to the track and qualify for state. This season, Worst returned even stronger. The University of Montana-bound sprinter finished second at the state meet in both the 100 and 200 meters, running the 100 in a personal-best time of 12.29 seconds.

"Madi was about as low as you could be after her knee surgery," said Twin Falls coach Marty Grindstaff. "She worked extremely hard rehabbing. For her to be one of the best sprinters in the state after her knee reconstruction was incredible."

Sasha Kent, Richfield: Always wanting to run against the best competition, Kent blew away the field in the 1A ranks all season and capped her junior year with a sweep in the 800, 1,600 and 3,200 meters at the state meet in Boise.

"We had her run against the best competition all season and she finished with great races at state," said Richfield track coach Steve Kent.

Katelyn Peterson, Camas County: The junior dominated the 1A ranks all season, capping off an impressive season with state titles in the high jump, triple jump and long jump. She also took second in the 300-meter hurdles. Her jump of 5 feet, 7 inches in the high jump was the best mark in the state regardless of classification and the 41st best mark nationally, according to track and field website athletic.net. The jump also would have qualified her for the NCAA Div. 1 national meet.

"The season started off kind of rocky for me, but toward the end of the season, I finished out strong and peaked at the right time," Peterson said.

Declo winner of IHSAA 'School of Excellence'

Times-News

The Idaho High School Activities Association will honor Declo High School as one of six "Schools of Excellence" winners.

The annual award is presented to one school in each classification. Schools earn points based on their student-athletes' performance in the classroom, in athletics, in activity competitions and in the area of citizenship and sportsmanship.

Declo had an exceptional 2010-11 school year in athletics.

In Class 2A state competition, Declo won the wrestling championship, was runner-up in softball, placed third in football, claimed a consolation championship in girls basketball and finished fourth in track and field.

Declo will receive a plaque at the IHSAA annual meeting, Aug. 10.

Twin Falls, Kimberly and Castleford high schools will receive Exemplary Achievement Status for finishing second or third in the point compilation for their respective classes.

Burress leaves prison for uncertain NFL career

By John Kekis
Associated Press writer

ROME, N.Y. — Clad nearly all in black — hooded sweat shirt, athletic shorts, sneakers — and a white T-shirt, the tall, lanky man walked alone through a gate in a chain-link fence topped by swirls of barbed wire.

Plaxico Burress looked around for something familiar, and his agent Drew Rosenhaus ran up and jumped into his arms as both men smiled broadly.

Freedom at last for Burress, the former New York Giants receiver. He was released from prison around 9 a.m. Monday after spending nearly two years behind bars on a gun charge.

Former New York Giants star Plaxico Burress speaks to the media moments after being released Monday from the Oneida County Correction Facility in Rome, N.Y.

"I just want to thank God for bringing me through one of the most trying times in my life," Burress said in a brief exchange with reporters outside Oneida Correctional Facility in central New York. "It's a beautiful day. It's a beautiful day to be reunited with my family. I want to go home and spend some quality time with them."

"I'd like to thank everybody for their prayers and words of encouragement," Burress said as the fog-shrouded morning gave way to brilliant sunshine. "I'd like to thank all my fans all around the world for the thousands of letters, for their unwavering support. As far as football is concerned, if and when everything gets settled, when they get back on the field, I'll be ready."

Burress pleaded guilty in August 2009 to attempted criminal possession of a weapon.

Victory is sweet from the recliner

(Editor's note: This is part of four-month series as Times-News writer Ryan Howe starts from scratch and trains for the Spudman Triathlon. Follow his progress at Magicvalley.com/sports and Facebook: Times-News Ryan Howe.)

Well, I did it. I finished my first triathlon yesterday.

I swam, biked and ran faster than I've ever done before and I was never fatigued. It felt great crossing the finish line ahead of everyone in my division. Someone draped a medal around my neck for being the fastest first-timer in the race. The crowd lifted me onto their shoulders and carried me around while chanting my name.

And I did it all from the

comfort of my recliner.

Besides physical training, my coach Alice Schenk said I need to whip my mind into shape as well. That includes creative visualization.

"The mind cannot distinguish between what it real and what is vividly and repeatedly imagined," she said.

Sounds good to me. I'd much rather sit on the couch and think about doing sit-ups than actually doing them. And I don't sweat near as much.

"You have to picture yourself finishing the Spudman," she continued. "Picture yourself getting in the water, swimming, and coming out of the water. Picture the transition and heading out on the bike. Picture yourself coming in off the bike, putting on your running shoes and heading out on the run. You practice it in your mind so that when it actually happens, it's like you've been there before."

I've learned not to question Coach Alice. She is the Mr. Miyagi to my Danielson. So I gave it a try.

Visualization is tricky, especially when your mind wanders. When I imagined myself swimming, the thought of fishing in the Snake River popped into my mind. That led me to think about Big Mouth Billy Bass singing "Don't Worry, Be Happy!"

Focus, Ryan. Focus!

T.F. Cowboys fall to Mountain View

Times-News

Costly miscues late in the game Monday sent the Twin Falls Cowboys to their first loss, a 3-2 setback against the Mountain View Toros in American Legion Baseball action.

Cy Sneed had a no-hitter going through seven innings as Twin Falls built a 2-0 lead. The second of those runs came as Jason Byce tripled and Sneed's RBI double brought him home.

Mountain View scored one in the eighth before the Cowboys escaped a bases-loaded jam. But in the ninth, a throwing error on a bunt and a misplayed ball in the outfield helped the Toros score the winning runs.

"We had them beat there until the end, but we just didn't execute at the end," said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir. "We broke down defensively."

Mountain View took third in the Class 5A high school state tournament, while today's opponent, Capital, finished second at the 5A level. The teams will play a 4:30 p.m. double-header.

BURLEY 5, MADISON 2

Kody Moon went 2-for-4 with a double in Burley's rain-delayed 5-2 win over Madison on Monday in American Legion Class A action.

The play was as sloppy as the weather, according to Burley coach Devin Kunz.

"It was a pretty uneventful game. We were lucky to come out on top," Kunz said. "We had a lot of bad at-bats tonight and we kind of went through the motions. I wasn't real happy with it."

Rain washed out the second game of the double-header, which the teams will try to make up at 10 a.m. today. Burley (4-1) will also host Skyline today for a doubleheader beginning at 5 p.m.

Bruins lose Horton, but rout Canucks

BOSTON (AP) — Shortly after the Boston Bruins lost Nathan Horton to a frightening injury, they found a dazzling offensive rhythm that got them back into the Stanley Cup finals.

Andrew Ference and David Krejci each had a goal and an assist during Boston's four-goal second period, Tim Thomas made 40 saves, and the Bruins beat the Canucks 8-1 in Game 3 on Monday night, trimming Vancouver's series lead to 2-1.

Mark Recchi scored two goals for the Bruins, who turned a big win into a blowout with four more goals in the final 8½ minutes of the third period against beleaguered goalie Roberto Luongo, who won the first two games of the series in Vancouver.

The Bruins were one goal shy of equaling the finals record of nine in a game, set by Detroit in Game 2 of the 1936 series and matched by Toronto six years later in Game 5. The eight goals were the most scored in the finals since Colorado topped Florida 8-1 on June 6, 1996, in Game 2, according to STATS LLC.

Boston emerged from its offensive slump after Horton was taken off the ice on a stretcher in the first period after taking a late hit to the head from Vancouver defenseman Aaron Rome.

"It's always tough when a guy goes down," said forward Brad Marchand, who scored a short-handed goal. "We really wanted to get this win tonight for him. It's a very tough situation, and everyone is worried about him, but it definitely gave us motivation to win."

Game 4 is Wednesday in Boston.

Marchand scored a short-handed goal in the second period, and Daniel Paille added another short-handed goal in the third. Recchi,

Pirates take UCLA righty Cole with No. 1 pick in baseball draft

SECAUCUS, N.J. (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pirates wanted Gerrit Cole's blazing fastball blowing away hitters for them.

In a baseball draft dominated early by outstanding pitching prospects, the Pirates were convinced Cole was the best of the bunch and took the UCLA right-hander with the No. 1 pick Monday night.

"We felt he'd have the biggest potential impact for us of anybody on the board," general manager Neal Huntington said.

Cole, a 6-foot-4, 220-pound junior, posted mediocre numbers this season for the Bruins (6-8, 3.31 ERA), but has what many consider to be the best pure stuff in the draft. He's the latest promising young arm that Pittsburgh, which finished with baseball's worst record a year ago, has added in the last two drafts.

The Pirates took a pair of high school right-handers with their first two picks last year in Jameson Taillon and Stetson Allie, giving them three potential front-line starters.

"It's a game of attrition, and you can never have too much if it," Huntington said. "It's the most valuable commodity in our game. We didn't consciously go out to stockpile arms — we stay true to the board. More often than not, that happened to be a pitcher."

Cole's teammate on the UCLA staff, right-hander Trevor Bauer, wasn't far behind, going third overall to the Arizona Diamondbacks. It marked the first time a pair of teammates went in the top three picks since Arizona State's Bob Horner and Hubie Brooks in 1978.

With the second choice, the Seattle Mariners tabbed Virginia lefty Danny Hultzen, the Atlantic Coast Conference pitcher of the year the last two seasons. Watching with family and friends, Hultzen looked stunned when the pick was announced, putting his hands on his head.

"This is completely unexpected. It's a huge honor, though," Hultzen said in an interview on MLB Network.

Hultzen, a junior, is 11-3 with a 1.57 ERA and 148 strikeouts while leading the top-ranked Cavaliers to the super regionals of the NCAA tournament.

Chris Kelly and Michael Ryder — who finished with three points — scored in the final 2½ minutes as the Bruins emphatically avoided a daunting 0-3 series deficit.

Boston had managed just three goals in its previous 10 periods before torching Luongo, who stopped 30 shots. Boston hadn't even scored six goals in a finals game since May 5, 1970, in Game 2 against St. Louis on the way to their last championship.

Jannik Hansen broke up Thomas' shutout bid with 6:07 to play for the Canucks, who finally hit a major bump in their late-season roll toward their first Stanley Cup title.

NHL scoring champion Daniel Sedin got a 10-minute misconduct late in the jarring loss for the Presidents' Trophy winners, who had won seven of eight games. The Canucks had given up just six total goals in their previous four games while closing out the Western Conference finals and taking a two-game lead over Boston.

Heat won't look back, Mavs don't feel beaten

DALLAS (AP) — A chance for another championship ahead of him, Dwyane Wade refused to look back.

No, he said, the answer as quick and forceful as his first step to the basket. He doesn't consider that the Miami Heat should have a 3-0 lead in the NBA finals.

The margin is 2-1, close on the scoreboard even though it doesn't feel that way on the floor. The Heat have repeatedly built double-digit cushions against the Dallas Mavericks, and a late collapse in Game 2 is all that's keeping them from the lead that's never been blown in an NBA series.

"You can't think about stuff like that. Everything in life happens for a reason," Wade said Monday before practicing. "If we come in and we win that game, if we run away with that game, I don't know if our sense of urgency is the same in Game 3. Who knows? So our sense of urgency was that way for a reason. We lost the game we know we shouldn't. We are up 2-1. That's what we have to focus on and worry about."

The Heat insist the game isn't as easy as Wade and LeBron James are making it look, and the Mavericks refuse to admit they might just be facing a superior foe.

"We're just too stubborn," point guard Jason Kidd said Monday.

Game 4 is tonight, and a Heat victory would put them in position to win a second championship on the Mavericks' floor if they followed that with another one Thursday.

Wade clutched the finals MVP trophy that night five years ago, already a superstar in just his third NBA season, and figured he would be back plenty of times. Instead, the Heat never truly contended again — partially because they were clearing salary cap space for last summer — until James and Bosh agreed to join him in Miami.

With that trio together, the Heat could win multiple titles, but Wade doesn't want to wait.

"Nothing is promised to none of us," he said. "You never know what's going to happen in this game. If you get your opportunity, you have to seize it."

That's why he and the Heat could be disappointed about where the series stands. They led by 12 in Game 1, were up 15 with 7:14 to go in Game 2, and they had a series of double-digit advantages in Game 3, when it peaked at 14 points. Forcing turnovers on defense that sent Wade and James off for fast-break dunks, it's often appeared they could run away from the Mavericks whenever they wanted.

Yet Dallas rallied to pull out Game 2 by two points and kept coming back Sunday before falling 88-86. And though they've been playing from behind, the Mavericks remain unconvinced that's where they'll end up.

"I still feel like we're going to be NBA champs this year," center Tyson Chandler said. "It's a hard fight. Nobody said it's going to be easy. I've got the ultimate respect for those guys on the other side."

"It's going to be a tough road, but I feel like we're willing to do it."

The finals have had consecutive games decided by two or fewer points for the first time since 1998, according to research provided to the NBA by the Elias Sports Bureau. So even when his team is building those sizable gaps, Heat coach Erik Spoelstra doesn't expect them to last.

USC stripped of 2004 BCS national championship

The Associated Press

The Bowl Championship Series stripped Southern California of its 2004 title on Monday, leaving that season without a BCS champion.

The announcement was no surprise. BCS officials had said USC was in danger of having its championship vacated after the Trojans were hit with heavy NCAA sanctions last year for rules violations committed during the 2004 and '05 seasons.

"The BCS alerted us today that their presidents have voted to vacate USC's 2005 BCS championship game victory," USC athletic director Pat Haden said. "This was not an unexpected outcome. We will comply with all requirements mandated by the result of this BCS vote."

The NCAA ruled star tailback Reggie Bush received improper extra benefits during those seasons and was ineligible when he played.

One of Haden's first moves when he took over as AD last year was to give back the school's copy of the Heisman Trophy that Bush won in 2005. Bush later relinquished his own Heisman and the trust in charge of handing out the award announced the '05 winner would be left vacant.

The BCS waited until USC appealed the NCAA sanctions, which included a two-year ban from postseason play.

The Trojans will not have to relinquish The Associated Press national championship.

Burress will be on parole for two years. He has to get and keep a job, undergo substance abuse testing, obey any curfew established by his Florida parole officer, support his family and undergo any anger counseling or other conditions required by his parole officer.

It didn't take long for friends and former teammates to transmit their good wishes.

In response to a tweet that said: 'Just In!. Plaxico Burress Just Released from Jail!' former Giants star Michael Strahan responded: "About time!!"

Despite the intensity of the NBA finals, even LeBron James took a moment to tweet: "Welcome home Plaxico! Best of luck in the near future both on and off the field. 17 Jersey coming to a city near u."

Former Giants linebacker Antonio Pierce, who was with Burress the night his life unraveled, tweeted the following couple of hours before Burress was released: "17. Time well over due.. Great teammate, friend, person and better yet Man. Always a Champ.. Only 1 way to go ... Back to the TOP"

Burress, who turns 34 in August, seemed intent on doing just that. He gave the victory sign as he sped away in a black Range Rover to meet up with his wife for the flight home.

Coach Alice also recommends having a mantra — a saying, a theme song, a quote, a scripture. Something you can memorize and focus on. When she qualified for her first Boston Marathon, her quote was, "Failure will never overtake you if your desire to succeed is strong enough."

Later, a Mark Twain quote inspired Alice to do her first Ironman: "Twenty years from now you will be more disappointed by the things that you didn't do than by the ones you did do. So throw off the bowlines. Sail away from the safe harbor. Catch the trade winds in your sails. Explore. Dream. Discover."

My mantra for Spudman: "Hard work never killed anyone, but why take a chance?"

Coach Alice also says, "We move towards and become what we think about." If that were true, during high school I would have turned into a Sports Illustrated swimsuit model.

As a health and fitness instructor at College of Southern Idaho, Alice gives her students a "dream list" as signment. The task is to write down 100 dreams, if money was unlimited and you knew you could not fail. What would you do? Where would you go? What would you become?

First on my list: Finish the Spudman.

Derby winner looks sharp in final Belmont workout

NEW YORK (AP) — The owner, trainer and jockey of Animal Kingdom have every reason to feel confident about their chances in the Belmont Stakes after the Kentucky Derby winner's final leg of the Triple Crown.

"I think he was moving great," Barry Irwin, president of owner Team Valor International, said after Animal Kingdom posted the fastest four-furlong workout at Belmont Park on Monday morning. "I think he's got a lot of energy still. I think that's the key with him. He doesn't look like a tired horse, or anything."

Animal Kingdom, with Velazquez aboard, ran in company with another horse from trainer Graham Motion's barn and covered four furlongs in 47.76 seconds — the fastest of 32 times at the distance. He galloped out five furlongs in 1:00.60.

"He did it all on his own," Motion said. "He galloped out nicely. I don't think it could have gone any smoother, really. I thought he might go a tick slower but I'm not surprised he did what he did."

Earlier Monday, Derby runner-up Nehro ran four furlongs in 50.88 seconds in his final Belmont tuneup under exercise raider Cesar Garcia, among the slowest times at the distance.

Animal Kingdom finished second to Shackleford in the Preakness, and will attempt to become the 12th horse to win the Derby and the Belmont. Shackleford, fourth in the Derby, will attempt to become the 19th Preakness-Belmont winner.

Velazquez said Animal Kingdom called most of the shots during the breeze.

"He was halfway running off with me," Velazquez said. "I took him as slowly as I could. He got very competitive with the other horse. After he passed him after the wire, he kept galloping very strong. He knew he had the jockey on top of him because he just played with me. He had me at 'Hello!'"

A probable field of 12 is shaping up for the 1 1/2-mile Belmont, which features the first Derby winner vs. Preakness winner matchup since 2005. It also could have the first seven finishers from the Derby — Animal Kingdom, Nehro, Mucho Macho Man, Shackleford, Master of Hounds, Santiva and Brilliant Speed.

The post position draw is Wednesday.
