Family of slain CSI player files lawsuit

Report: Driver Reinhardt was intoxicated at time of fatal crash

CASE BACKGROUND

Sept. 12, 2010: Devon Austin, 19, and Ryan Reinhardt, 18, are killed in a one-vehicle crash near Filer. Jessica Duran, a survivor of the crash, later tells police their group was chased from a house party near Filer.

May 5: Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs files a charge of misdemeanor reckless driving against Kade Laughlin, 19, accused of chasing the group in an unsuccessful bid to retrieve property he said they stole from him.

June 3: Austin's parents file a wrongful death civil lawsuit against Reinhardt, Laughlin and three others.

Times-News writer

The parents of one Coeur d'Alene teen killed in a single-vehicle crash in September 2010 are suing the people they say caused their son's death.

Tim and Paula Austin, along with Jessica Duran, the lone survivor of the crash, filed a complaint for damages for the death of 19-year-old Devon Austin on June 3 in Twin Falls County 5th District Court. They name Kade Laughlin, Ryan Balles, Colt Robinson, Nacoma Tegan Robinson and Ryan Reinhardt, the driver of the car, as defendants in the death of Austin, who came to Twin Falls last year to play baseball for the College of Southern Idaho.

Both Austin and Reinhardt died at the scene near Filer around 1 a.m. on Sept. 12, 2010.

Reinhardt lost control of his green 1998 Toyota Camry while navigating a curve on 3900 North Road near its intersection with U.S.

Highway 30. According to an Idaho Transportation Department vehicle collision report, Reinhardt, 18, had a blood-alcohol concentration of .19 at the time of the crash, enough for him to be considered intoxicated. The report lists contributing circumstances as driving off a roadway and overcorrecting, driving too fast for conditions and driving while impaired by alcohol. Blood-alcohol content levels are not taken for passengers in vehicle accidents.

SNRA faces fire threat of dead trees killed by bark beetles

By Kimberlee Kruesi
Times-News writer

The Sawtooth National Recreation Area is preparing for a possibly heightened fire season this year, due to an overabundance of dead trees.

Many consider the mountain pine beetle's attack on SNRA forests to have crested. But while the beetles may be leaving, the trees they killed remain.

These dead trees are falling over. And according to recent research, they can ignite up to three times faster than the green needles on a healthy, living tree.

"We've been removing trees near campgrounds and private land," said Jim Rineholt, SNRA forester for the Sawtooth National Forest's Ketchum district office. "We're focusing on removing dead trees in consideration of the public's safety."

As one beetle leaves one area, SNRA officials are fighting the attack of another.

BEETLES IN THE SAWTOOTH

Late 1990s: Mountain pine beetles begin massively invading lodgepole pines in the Sawtooth National Recreation Area. Officials don't begin spraying against the beetle until 2003.

2007: SNRA trees begin turning orange then red, a reflection that they are dying from the beetles' attack. The red needles pose an increased fire threat due to their lack of ability to hold as much moisture as healthy trees. An estimated 80 percent of mature lodgepole pine trees are killed over time.

2011: SNRA officials believe the worst of the beetle invasion is over. However, the trees have transitioned from red to gray and have begun falling throughout the Sawtooth Valley. The fallen trees serve as extra fuel to potential wildfires.

Army veteran pleads guilty to harassment of Muslim woman

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

John C. Larsen, the Army veteran accused of harassing a Muslim woman outside the Twin Falls Walmart, changed his plea to guilty on Wednesday before his jury trial for the crime resumed for its second day.

Minidoka County 5th District Judge Jonathan Brody accepted Larsen's entry of an Alford plea, which allows a defendant to maintain his innocence to gain the benefits of the plea agreement. The felony malicious harassment charge against him will not be amended or reduced as part of the plea. Larsen, 42, of Twin Falls, was accused of screaming at Jerome resident Amna Schultz while both parties were shopping near Walmart's electronics department last December.

Larsen has described himself as a 20-year veteran who was declared 100 percent disabled based on a diagnosis of post-traumatic stress disorder. He appeared in court both Tuesday and Wednesday wearing an Army dress uniform that featured three chevrons and the shield of the 1st Cavalry Division.

Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs said he will argue for a suspended prison term of three to five years so Larsen may apply for Mental Health Court as a means of joining the newly formed Veterans' Court, currently only available in Ada

Delta Air Lines bag fees for soldiers ignites backlash

By Joan Lowy and Joshua Freed

WASHINGTON — Delta Air Lines hastily changed its baggage fees for troops Wednesday after a YouTube video showed soldiers complaining that they had to pay $200 apiece to check extra bags as they made their way home from Afghanistan.

The video was posted Tuesday and was viewed almost 200,000 times before it was removed the next day by the person who put it up. By Wednesday afternoon, a Facebook page called Boycott Delta for Soldiers had sprung up, and the airline was backpedaling and apologizing to the soldiers.

In the video, titled “Delta Airlines Welcomes Soldiers Home,” two Army staff sergeants say their unit was told it would cost $200 apiece to check a fourth bag on a Tuesday morning flight from the Baltimore-Washington airport to Atlanta — a total bill of more than $2,800.

The Defense Department typically reimburses such costs, which the soldiers may not have known before they made their displeasure known. The airline said late Wednesday that it would refund the fees if the government doesn’t cover the bill. By then, the public relations damage to Delta was done.

In the video, one sergeant, Robert O’Hair, wearing a camouflage uniform and sitting inside the plane, says his fourth bag was a weapons case containing an M4 carbine rifle, a grenade launcher and a 9-millimeter pistol that he had used in Afghanistan.

“The tools I used to protect myself and Afghan citizens while I was deployed,” O’Hair says.

With a bite to his voice, the other sergeant — Fred Hilliker of Allendale, Mich. — closes the video: “Good business model, Delta. Thank you. We’re actually happy to be back to America. God bless America. Not happy, not happy at all. Appreciate it. Thank you.”

The soldiers say in the video that they had already endured an 18-hour layover and had Army authorization to carry four bags.

Initially, Delta apologized to the soldiers but didn’t change its policy. It posted a blog item attributed to an anonymous customer service representative explaining that Delta allows troops traveling in economy class up to three bags free but charges for the fourth.

As the storm of online complaints about the incident grew, the airline posted a new blog item Wednesday saying fourth bags will now be free for troops traveling in economy class and five bags will be free for those traveling in business class.

In a blog post, Delta said it regretted “that this experience caused these soldiers to feel anything but welcome on their return home.” Airline officials declined to answer further questions.

One sergeant in the video said the unit was returning from Afghanistan to Fort Polk in Louisiana. Paul Boyce, a spokesman for Army Forces Command, said the soldiers who made the video weren’t available for interviews.

“I don’t know if Delta is going to reimburse these individual soldiers or not, but I do know that we would,” Boyce said. “In the past, the airlines, if there’s been some sort of a misunderstanding, have done that.”

At least some of the soldiers traveling on the flight were with an Army Reserve unit based in Oklahoma, Boyce said. He said troops on the plane were returning from a military training center in Kabul. He did not have the name of their unit.

It was not clear why the video was removed from YouTube. The soldiers in the video also did not explain the total bill of more than $2,800 in detail.

It’s not unusual for returning soldiers to check weapons when flying on a commercial airline if the weapons have been certified as unloaded, said Joe Davis, a spokesman for the Veterans of Foreign Wars’ Washington office, who was critical of the fee.

Idaho keeps smaller rate for wind, solar power production

Times-News

A handful of Idaho wind energy developers will have to negotiate how much they’ll be paid for the energy they produce after state regulators decided they’ll offer special rates to only the smallest producers.

The Idaho Public Utilities Commission on Wednesday announced it won’t reinstate for now a larger cap on the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act rates that created a favorable climate for the development of wind energy in Idaho.

The state is required to determine and publish the special rate for projects that develop up to 100 kilowatts. During the state’s wind industry infancy, the PUC opted to extend the rate to projects that produce up to 10 megawatts — 100 times the mandated cap — through Dec. 14, 2010.

The rate is based on the price of natural gas, and pays qualifying wind and solar producers based on the cost a purchasing utility — Idaho Power, Areva and Rocky Mountain Power in the Gem State — avoids by not having to generate or buy power from elsewhere.

Idaho’s regulated electric utilities petitioned the PUC last November to reduce the

WHAT IT MEANS LOCALLY

The Idaho Public Utilities Commission’s decision not to extend PURPA rate eligibility to the first 10 megawatts produced by wind and solar projects could change how a handful of south-central Idaho developments move forward. Instead of operating on earnings projections noted below, they’ll have to negotiate rates with Idaho Power Co.

energy cap it offered, claiming that large Idaho wind projects were breaking themselves into smaller 10 MW projects in order to take advantage of PURPA rates that were higher than what they could negotiate with the utilities. With hydropower currently meeting many energy needs due to plentiful precipitation, the utilities claimed the increased cap forced them into buying power they don’t need at rates that aren’t reasonable for their customers.

In Idaho, 17 projects with contracts executed after the Dec. 14, 2010, deadline will only be eligible for the PURPA rates on 100 kW they produce. Now, those projects will have to negotiate rates with Idaho Power to determine their feasibility.

The Northwest and Intermountain Power Producers Coalition argued that the 10 MW cap has worked “remarkably well for Idaho” and called its loss “unfortunate.”

But the proposed Cotterel project near Burley repre-

Duran and the Austins say Laughlin and the others pursued the crash victims after they left a nearby house party, but the only criminal charge filed in relation to the crash is a misdemeanor reckless driving charge levied against Laughlin, 20, of Filer.

The separate wrongful death civil lawsuit, which asks for $10,000 in damages per defendant for a total of $50,000, claims that the defendants, including Reinhardt, were “engaged in said pursuit while under the influence of alcohol.”

Despite pressure from the victims’ family and friends for harsher criminal charges against Laughlin, Twin Falls County Prosecutor Grant Loebs has said the evidence so far leads only to the misdemeanor complaint, which was filed on May 5.

Laughlin is scheduled for a June 21 pretrial conference in front of Magistrate Judge Nicole Cannon. The maximum penalty for reckless driving is six months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

Laughlin is currently on probation for a driving under the influence conviction. He was arrested hours after the crash on Sept. 12.

The civil suit was assigned to Judge G. Richard Bevan. Online court records show that five summonses were issued, but no court date is set.

Beetles

Mountain since the 2007 Castle Rock Fire. The fire weakened the trees, making them ideal hosts for the beetles across 48,000 acres.

SNRA will also spray 400 trees in the Sawtooth Valley to protect against the beetle attacks, Rineholt said. In previous years, forest officials would spray up to 2,000 trees.

“We are just not seeing the same type of infestation that we saw a few years ago,” he said.

The beetle outbreak began in the Sawtooth’s lodgepole pines in the late 1990s. Beetles burrowed beneath tree bark and laid eggs between the bark and the wood. Once hatched, larvae stripped a tree of its nutrients and water, eventually killing it.

While mountain pine beetles are a natural part of the forest ecosystem, the recent swarms have caused massive wipeouts of forests across the West, including Idaho up into British Columbia.

Trees infested with the beetles used to be considered no bigger of a fire threat than a healthy tree. However, according to a new research study by U.S. Forest Service ecologist Matt Jolly, beetle-killed trees hold 10 times less water than a healthy tree and as a result, require less energy to ignite.

While Jolly’s study is still being peer-reviewed, he did share his findings at a wild-fire seminar in May to scientists and the public.

“What we are seeing is a thirst for information from the public and those who are in charge of protecting others,” Jolly said. “This study is just one step to help provide better information for those who need it the most.”

These new findings will help develop a new model to predict fire behavior, Jolly explained.

“The current research model to study fire behavior is a series of mathematical equations developed in 1972,” he said. “And it has proved to be quite effective in helping support decisions in the event of a fire, but the trade-off is that it’s not addressing the characteristics of the fires that we see after mountain pine beetle attack.”

For now, the SNRA is sents the type of development the utilities railed against. Shell-owned Cotterel WindEnergy Center initially responded to a 2009 Idaho Power bid request as one large 150 MW project, according to the PUC. But after an agreement wasn’t reached, it was divided into five 10 MW projects, for which Cotterel submitted five PURPA contracts scheduled to start in 2014.

Under the 10 MW cap, the projects’ projected earnings stretched to $716.4 million over 20 years.

“From the commission’s perspective, a thorough review is appropriate and necessary prior to signing agreements that obligate ratepayers to payments in excess of $70 million over the 20-year term of these agreements,” the commission stated in a written release.

The PUC will examine the methodology used to calculate the avoided-cost rates for utilities, stating in a written release, “it is more appropriate to first establish the just and reasonable avoided-cost rates before we implement procedures for obtaining the rate.”

PUC spokesman Gene Fadness said the commission is open to extending the rate to larger producers again in the future.

County, to receive treatment for PTSD.

“Because of this case being able to set precedent for PTSD and the veterans coming back now and the others that will return when drawdown occurs, I have decided to take advantage of this deal,” Larsen said while entering his plea.

If accepted, Larsen will be placed on probation and required to meet all conditions of the treatment program. As with other problem-solving courts, his conviction will be voided if he successfully completes treatment and doesn’t violate terms of his probation.

His suspended prison time and probation terms will be decided at sentencing on Aug. 1.

Witnesses to the confrontation between Larsen and Schultz testified on Tuesday that Larsen used vulgar language, bragged of having a concealed weapons license and moved his hand toward his hip. # Downtown flower vandals get community service

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

The pair of minors accused of terrorizing downtown Twin Falls flower beds will perform community service to atone for the mess they made.

Twin Falls Police Officer Josh Hayes, who took the vandalism report on Monday, said he worked with the parents of the boys, ages 10 and 12, and business owners on coming up with an appropriate punishment. The boys will spend up to two hours cleaning around downtown each Saturday for the rest of the summer.

Shop owners on five blocks of Main Avenue awoke on Monday to find flowers — purchased with their own money — scattered across the street and sidewalks. The youths were identified through video surveillance cameras outside some of the businesses, which caught them in the act as early as 5 to 6 a.m.

Because the boys are minors, their names were not released.

Crash closes I-84 lanes near Hazelton

A two-vehicle injury crash closed both westbound lanes of Interstate 84 at milepost 195 on Tuesday night, according to Idaho State Police.

Around 11 p.m., a semi-trailer was westbound near the Hazelton exit when it left the inside lane and crashed through the guardrail into a canal. The semi caught fire and left parts in traffic. James Hakin, 34, of Reno, Nev., was traveling behind the semi in a vehicle of an undisclosed model, which struck the semi's steering axle, which had separated from the vehicle.

Hakin was uninjured. But the semi driver, 47-year-old Scott Bailey of Billings, Mont., was taken by air ambulance to Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center in Idaho Falls. He was in critical condition there Wednesday evening, according to ISP.

I-84's westbound lanes were closed around the crash. One opened an hour after the crash while the other remained closed into Wednesday for repairs to the guardrail.

St. Luke's christens new rehab center

Times-News

St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center welcomed Wednesday a new patient rehabilitation center that almost didn't happen.

The Craig H. Neilsen Foundation, a private paralysis research foundation, donated a $1 million grant to the Twin Falls hospital's Gwen Neilsen Anderson Rehabilitation Center, which offers physical, speech and occupational therapy services. Hospital officials held a naming ceremony for the center on Wednesday.

While plans to build the rehab center have existed since 2007, the original floor plans of the new Twin Falls hospital failed to include the center due to funding issues. St. Luke's Magic Valley had installed an inpatient rehabilitation unit in its old location in 2007.

Once aware of the situation, Dr. Jonathan Myers, the medical director for rehabilitation services at St. Luke's Magic Valley, decided to fight to add a rehab center in the new building.

"By the time we were having discussions with the board about the possibility of a rehab center, the new location's foundation was already being laid," he said. "We ended up asking physicians to move their clinics or scale back their clinic size to fit the center in on the third floor"

Myers spearheaded a campaign to include the rehab center in the new building and eventually gained the board's approval in the spring of 2010 after enough funds were raised.

The center now includes 14 private rooms, a "simulated apartment" for patients practicing everyday activities before they return home, and a therapeutic gym.

"The gym doesn't have any windows," Myers said. "It was a casualty of war."

Twin Falls should hire a grantwriter, not a lobbyist

Congress — or the Republicans in it, anyway — have sworn off earmarks, temporarily at least. Which considerably circumscribes the options of communities such as Twin Falls, which for years have depended on federal spending on specific projects sponsored by members of Congress to pay for projects such as wastewater work at Auger Falls or digitizing a century’s worth of newspaper microfilm and other history records at the Twin Falls Public Library. So why is the city still sending Washington lobbyist Will Hollier $5,000 a month to push for such projects?

For the next two years, at least, the primary source of new federal funds for the city will be grants. For that, Twin Falls needs a grant administrator or an assistant city manager, not a lobbyist. Not that Hollier, a former staffer for U.S. Sen. Mike Crapo, R-Idaho, hasn’t done great work on the city’s behalf. His efforts secured Twin Falls $1.6 million for wastewater work at Auger Falls and another $100,000 for the Twin Falls Public Library. But for now, that $5,000 a month — $60,000 a year — could be used for other purposes. It could pay for a new position at the Twin Falls Police Department — and then some. Or it could cover the $52,506 deficit that the Twin Falls Golf Club ran last year. As far as next year’s city budget is concerned, we’re getting down to cases: Just a month ago the City Council was talking about the prospect of layoffs. The projected Twin Falls city deficit for the 2012 fiscal year is $2.4 million. That grows to $3.3 million in 2013 and $5.4 million in 2014. Clearly, $60,000 will make a difference. “In the future, communities across the country are not going to find much help forthcoming from the federal government as it finally confronts its own fiscal crisis,” said U.S. Rep. Mike Simpson, R-Idaho. That’s the new normal. The city of Twin Falls needs to accommodate it.

The digital diet: How to break free of your gadgets

Do you ever feel the urge to pull out your smartphone while someone else is making a point in a conversation? Have you ever realized that you were texting or checking your email while your child was telling you about her day at school? Have you ever felt that something hasn’t really happened until you post it on Facebook? If you answered yes, you’re among the millions of Americans being overrun by technology.

Daniel Sieberg

I’ve been there. In 2009 I realized that technology had gotten the best of me. I was more distracted and, ironically, more disconnected than ever before. I was so immersed in technology and work that I’d neglected several important life events: my father’s remarriage, a good friend’s pregnancy, my stepbrother’s divorce. So I spent one year untangling my wires and streamlining my digital life, including checking out of social networks for eight months. I say it’s time to make peace with our gadgets and fold them into our lives more effectively. We need a strategy that that puts us back in control, rather than letting technology overwhelm us. Here’s how.
Step 1: Rethink
Say you spend a total of two hours each day posting on Facebook or Twitter, mindlessly surfing the Web, sculpting your online image, or all of the above, in ways that don’t relate explicitly to your job. Over a year that adds up to roughly 30 days — an entire month vanished in the ether. What do you have to show for it? What else could you have accomplished in that time? Even multitasking, the preferred excuse of the gadget-obsessed, isn’t all it’s cracked up to be. A study published in April 2010 in the journal Science found that performing multiple simultaneous tasks leaves the brain somewhat baffled, while a 2009 Stanford University study found that massive multitaskers are easily distracted and have a hard time sorting out irrelevant information. This unfocused state often results in irrational decision-making.

Step 2: Reboot
Gadgets don’t come with nutrition labels, so I’ve developed a Virtual Weight Index — sort of a Body Mass Index for the tech-dependent — that assigns values to your tech habits. Calculating your score can give you a sense of how much you need a digital diet. If you’re due for a detox, it’s best done over a weekend. First, put your assorted tech temptations in a box (yes, an actual box; it can be a shoebox or a dresser drawer). Second, and this is scary, give someone you trust the passwords to your social networking accounts (never for your bank or credit card accounts, of course), so they can change them to remove any temptation to log on. Third, set a message on your cellphone saying you won’t be checking in for a couple of days (let callers assume you’re on a remote vacation). Fourth, stop sending texts. You can check your e-mail but only once each day.

Step 3: Reconnect
The point of the diet is not to eliminate gadgets from your life but to assign them their proper place. One way is by being vigilant about your e-day — the time you spend online each day, from when your digital use starts to when it ends. After detox, start using some of your gadgets again — at first for just one hour. Record the time spent in your notebook. Has technology replaced something in your life that concerns you? Is your identity being shaped through social networks? W Begin setting boundaries for your e-day. Establish limits on when people can expect to hear from you, for instance. Begin your e-day with a cup of coffee, sans gadgets, and end it by charging your devices in the kitchen overnight, not in your bedroom, where they will drain your personal energy and impede snuggle time. Buy an alarm clock; if your BlackBerry or iPhone doubles as your alarm, it will demand your attention the moment you wake up. For one day, at least, set your smartphone to give no alerts for e-mails and texts. Check it when you choose to. Note the times you reached for your gadgets. Was there a lull in the conversation, or were you just bored? Did you worry that you were missing something online — or something right in front of you? Set a conscious, realistic time limit for your e-day.

Step 4: Revitalize
I’ve developed some digital rules to live by that can help in this stage. Repeat after me:
• I will live in the real world. It can be wonderful to learn more about the lives of my friends and family members through social networks, but I won’t let the screen become my only connection.
• I must choose the human or the device. If someone is talking to me, I will do my best to put my gadget aside and listen to them.
• I will not be afraid to disconnect.
• I will trust my instincts. If I worry that I’m spending too much time browsing social networks, texting or playing online games, I probably am.

Renewable energy carries environmental concerns

In April, Gov. Jerry Brown made headlines by signing into law an ambitious mandate that requires California to obtain one-third of its electricity from renewable energy sources like sunlight and wind by 2020. Twenty-nine states and the District of Columbia now have renewable electricity mandates. President Obama and several members of Congress have supported one at the federal level. Polls routinely show strong support among voters for renewable energy projects — as long as they don’t cost too much. But there’s the rub: while energy sources like sunlight and wind are free and naturally replenished, converting them into large quantities of electricity requires vast amounts of natural resources. Even a cursory look at these costs exposes the deep contradictions in the renewable energy movement.

Robert Bryce

Consider California’s new mandate. The state’s peak electricity demand is about 52,000 megawatts. Meeting the one-third target will require about 17,000 megawatts of renewable energy capacity. Let’s assume that California will get half of that capacity from solar and half from wind. Most of its large-scale solar electricity production will presumably come from projects like the $2 billion Ivanpah solar plant, which is now under construction in the Mojave Desert in southern California. When completed, Ivanpah, which aims to provide 370 megawatts of solar generation capacity, will cover

3,600 acres — about five and a half square miles. The math is simple: to have 8,500 megawatts of solar capacity, California would need at least 23 projects the size of Ivanpah, covering about 129 square miles, an area more than five times as large as Manhattan. While there’s plenty of land in the Mojave, projects as big as Ivanpah raise environmental concerns. Wind energy projects require even more land. The Roscoe wind farm in Texas, which has a capacity of 781.5 megawatts, covers about 154 square miles. To have 8,500 megawatts of wind generation capacity, California would likely need to set aside an area equivalent to more than 70 Manhattans. Apart from the impact on the environment itself, few if any people could live on the land because of the noise (and the infrasound, which is inaudible to most humans but potentially harmful) produced by the turbines. Industrial solar and wind projects also require long swaths of land for power lines. Last year, despite opposition from environmental groups, San Diego Gas & Electric started construction on the 117-mile Sunrise Powerlink, which will carry electricity from solar, wind and geothermal projects located in Imperial County, Calif., to customers in and around San Diego. In January, environmental groups filed a federal lawsuit to prevent the $1.9 billion line from cutting through a nearby national forest. Not all environmentalists ignore renewable energy’s land requirements. The Nature Conservancy has coined the term “energy sprawl” to describe it. Unfortunately, energy sprawl is only one of the ways that renewable energy makes heavy demands on natural resources.

Consider the massive quantities of steel required for wind projects. The production and transportation of steel are both expensive and energy-intensive, and installing a single wind turbine requires about 200 tons of it. Many turbines have capacities of 3 or 4 megawatts, so you can assume that each megawatt of wind capacity requires roughly 50 tons of steel. By contrast, a typical natural gas turbine can produce nearly 43 megawatts while weighing only nine tons. Thus, each megawatt of capacity requires less than a quarter of a ton of steel. Obviously these are ballpark figures, but however you crunch the numbers, the takeaway is the same: The amount of steel needed to generate a given amount of electricity from a wind turbine is greater by several orders of magnitude. Such profligate use of resources is the antithesis of the environmental ideal. Nearly four decades ago, the economist E. F. Schumacher distilled the essence of environmental protection down to three words: “Small is beautiful.” In the rush to do something — anything — to deal with the intractable problem of greenhouse gas emissions, environmental groups and policy makers have determined that renewable energy is the answer. But in doing so they’ve tossed Schumacher’s dictum into the ditch. All energy and power systems exact a toll. If we are to take Schumacher’s phrase to heart while also reducing the rate of growth of greenhouse gas emissions, we must exploit the low-carbon energy sources — natural gas and, yes, nuclear — that have smaller footprints.

Ending Medicare ‘as we know it’

WASHINGTON — Almost everyone agrees that America’s health care system has the incentives all wrong. Under the fee-for-service system, doctors and hospitals get paid for doing more, even if added tests, operations and procedures have little chance of improving patients’ health. So what happens when someone proposes that we alter the incentives to reward better care, not more care? Well, Rep. Paul Ryan and Republicans found out. No surprise: Democrats slammed them for “ending Medicare as we know it.”

This predictably partisan reaction must depress anyone who cares about the country’s future. It is only a slight exaggeration to say that unless we end Medicare “as we know it,” America “as we know it” will end. Spiraling health spending is the crux of our federal budget problem. In 1965 — the year Congress created Medicare and Medicaid — health spending was 2.6 percent of the budget. In 2010, it was 26.5 percent. The Obama administration estimates it will be 30.3 percent in 2016. By contrast, defense spending is about 20 percent; scientific research and development is 4 percent.

Uncontrolled health spending isn’t simply crowding out other government programs; it’s also dampening overall living standards. Health economists Michael Chernew, Richard Hirth and David Cutler recently reported that higher health costs consumed 35.7 percent of the increase in per capita income from 1999 to 2007. They also project, that under reasonable assumptions, it could absorb half or more of the gain between now and 2083.

Ryan proposes to change that. Beginning in 2022, new Medicare beneficiaries would receive a voucher, valued initially at about $8,000. The theory is simple. Suddenly empowered, Medicare beneficiaries would shop for lowest-cost, highest-quality insurance plans providing a required package of benefits. The health-care delivery system would be forced to restructure by reducing costs and improving quality. Doctors, hospitals and clinics would form networks; there would be more “coordination” of care, helped by more investment in information technology; better use of deductible and co-payments would reduce unnecessary trips to doctors’ offices or clinics.

Robert Samuelson

Uncontrolled health spending isn’t simply crowding out other government programs; it’s also dampening overall living standards.

It’s shock therapy. Would it work? No one knows, but two things are clear.

First, as Medicare goes, so goes the entire health care system. Medicare is the nation’s largest insurance program, with 48 million recipients and spending last year of $520 billion. About 75 percent of beneficiaries have fee-for-service coverage. If Medicare remains largely fee-for-service, the rest of the system will too.

Second, few doubt that today’s health care system has much waste: medical care that does no good; high overhead costs. In a paper, Cutler documented some evidence. In one survey, 20 percent of patients reported that doctors repeated tests because records were unavailable; the health care sector has twice as many clerical workers as nurses and nine times as many as doctors; care of patients with chronic conditions is often slapdash, so that, for example, only 43 percent of diabetics receive recommended treatment.

Fee-for-service is open-ended reimbursement; the government’s main tool to control Medicare’s costs is to hold down reimbursement rates. Doctors and hospitals respond by ordering more services to offset the rate limits. For all its flaws, say Ryan’s critics, this system beats his. Indeed, the Congressional Budget Office has estimated that in 2022, Ryan’s plan would be more than a third costlier than the status quo, because Medicare’s size makes it more effective at restraining reimbursement rates.

If CBO is correct, Ryan’s plan fails; beneficiaries’ out-of-pocket costs would roughly double to cover the added cost. But CBO may be wrong. When a voucher system was adopted for Medicare’s new drug benefit, CBO overestimated its costs by a third; the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services’ overestimate was 42 percent.

Under Ryan’s plan, incentives would shift. Medicare would no longer be an open ATM; the vouchers would limit total spending. Providers would face pressures to do more with less; there would certainly be charges that essential care was being denied.

The Obama administration argues that better results can be achieved by modifying incentives within the existing system. Perhaps. But history suggests skepticism.

It’s Ryan’s radicalism versus President Obama’s tinkering. Which is realistic and which is wishful thinking? This important debate should rise above cheap political rhetoric. Burdened by runaway spending, Medicare “as we know it” is going to end. The only questions are when and on whose terms.

Newsweek columnist Robert Samuelson writes about economics.

Myths about Pakistan

In the war on terrorism, where does Pakistan’s loyalty lie?

1. Pakistan is a U.S. ally in the war on terrorism.

Pakistan pursues only its national interests. The security establishment likes to work with the United States when possible and certainly likes receiving U.S. aid, but its perception of Pakistan’s interests always comes first.

Since Sept. 11, 2001, Pakistan has sometimes helped the United States, and sometimes not. Though some U.S. legislators believe that its intelligence community sheltered bin Laden, Pakistan’s Inter-Services Intelligence agency arrested al-Qaida leaders Khalid Sheik Mohammed and Ramzi Binalshibh and helped foil terrorist plots by Pakistanis living in Britain. Though they don’t want to promote anti-Western terrorism, Pakistan’s generals do want to cultivate the Afghan Taliban for an expected civil war with anti-Pakistani Tajiks backed by India. Our enemies might turn out to be their friends.

Anatol Lieven

2. Pakistan is an ally of the Taliban.

Just as Pakistan isn’t an unconditional ally in the West’s war on terrorism, it isn’t always in the Taliban’s corner, either. Pakistan’s military gives the Afghan Taliban shelter, but it does not provide the fighters with sophisticated weapons such as antitank rockets or anti-aircraft missiles. If Pakistan were fully on the Taliban’s side, the Taliban would be more militarily effective.

And this suspicion runs both ways. Pakistan’s military remembers that the Afghan Taliban spurned its advice before 9/11, refusing to moderate its radical ideology and expel al-Qaida. Pakistani generals disapprove of Islamist revolution but most back the Afghan Taliban because they think they have no choice, given the bitter anti-Pakistan sentiment of powerful forces within Hamid Karzai’s government and India’s links to those forces.

Frasure brings experience to state redistricting panel

By Dan Popkey
The Idaho Statesman

BOISE — Immediately after being elected co-chairman of Idaho's Redistricting Commission, Evan Frasure made a gesture of restraint, suggesting that Democratic co-chair Allen Andersen preside the first day.

That was the end of Frasure's deference Tuesday.

He asked more questions than the five other members combined, corrected speakers, doubted the accuracy of population counts in the state's software, dispensed advice on parliamentary procedure and talked of "doodling" plans already.

"I won't say he's addicted to it, but he loves the process," said Senate Assistant GOP Leader Chuck Winder, R-Eagle, who observed the meeting.

Frasure, 60, is a former six-term lawmaker and longtime salesman of real estate and Melaleuca products. For the past three years, he's been a government teacher at Century High in Pocatello.

After a series of questions to Deputy Attorney General Brian Kane Tuesday, Frasure seemed to grow sheepish about his volubility.

"Just one more?" he asked Andersen.

Andersen: "What, do you have a whole list there?"

Frasure: "I do."

Frasure had three more queries, establishing that the three Republicans and three Democrats can meet privately without violating the Open Meeting Law, as long as a fourth member of the commission isn't present.

"This is a very partisan event," Frasure explained. "There's no getting around it. It's political bloodsport."

DARIN OSWALD/Idaho Statesman
Former legislator Evan Frasure of Pocatello, left, and political consultant Lou Esposito of Boise listen to public testimony relating to redistricting Idaho's political landscape Tuesday in Boise.

Frasure's experience in redrawing legislative and congressional districts makes him a man among boys and girls on the commission.

He was just 30 when he began influencing the process in 1981, when the legislators still drew the lines themselves. GOP House Speaker Ralph Olmstead gave Frasure space behind the speaker's chair to aid the remapping effort.

"I was kind of the whiz kid," Frasure admitted Tuesday, recalling how he got discovered in 1978 by coming within 141 votes of upsetting Democratic Sen. Lester Hartvigsen in Democrat-friendly Bannock County.

In 1991, after winning a seat in the House, Frasure was one of two freshmen on the special redistricting committee. He presented the first plan to the committee. "I put 11 Republican senators against each other, and only six Democrats. You can imagine how popular I was!"

Frasure said he didn't account for the residences of incumbents with that first map, a mistake he learned from.

In 2001, after the bipartisan commission was created by constitutional amendment to replace the mucky process in the Legislature, Frasure, in his fifth term as senator, was the Idaho GOP's special adviser.

But he says the talk among Democrats that he gave hand signals to help GOP Co-chairwoman Kristi Sellers draw the maps is false. "It's an absolute myth," he said. "I guess the Democrats were a little intimidated."

Frasure, who rose to chair the Transportation Committee, retired from the Senate in 2002 to run for secretary of state. He lost to Ben Ysursa in the primary by a 2-1 margin. But he served seven years on the Capitol Commission that oversaw the building's renovation.

He's thrilled to be back.

Recently, Frasure inadvertently posted a plan on the redistricting website. When he learned of his error Tuesday, he asked staff to remove it.

Monday night, he drove south of Boise to inspect an area he figured had too large a population on one of his draft maps.

"Your map is so inaccurate," Frasure told staff. "It shows 2,200 people, and there's not one single house!" Staffer Keith Bybee said he doubted there was such an error. Asked Andersen: "Were you out there by the prison?"

"I'll pull it up right now," said Frasure. After several minutes, he was unable to locate the suspect neighborhood. Still, he said, "At the (census) block level, I do question the accuracy."

Staff later confirmed Andersen's suspicion: The population in this part of the desert reflects Idaho's prison complex.

I.F. man sentenced in attack on grandmother

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — A judge has sentenced an Idaho Falls man to 15 years to life after he was convicted of cutting his grandmother's throat while robbing her.

The Post-Register reports that District Judge Gregory Anderson handed down the sentence Tuesday against 26-year-old Steven Michael Rankin.

Anderson says Rankin's history indicates a propensity for violence and that he showed no remorse or responsibility for the crime.

A jury convicted Rankin in February of attempted murder, burglary and robbery.

Prosecutors say he broke into his grandmother's house on Sept. 8 and was stealing her jewelry when she woke up.

Prosecutors say Rankin then slashed his grandmother's throat with a box cutter.

Rankin's mother, Judy Kay Anderson, testified that her son is "a good kid" who wants to do something with his life.

Small business index shows slowing recovery

Index for Idaho was 112.9 in May, down from 114.2 in April

By Blair Koch
Times-News writer

The Zions Bank Small Business Index for Idaho slipped slightly lower for May than the previous month.

The index, at 112.9 in May, was 114.2 in April.

A lower index number is associated with less favorable business conditions.

The most heavily weighted component of the Gem State's index was the unemployment rate, which sits at about 9.6 percent.

A higher unemployment rate is a positive factor for the index, as it implies greater labor availability for businesses. However, factors typically tied to higher unemployment, like anemic job creation, lower income gains and lower retail sales, can drag the index down.

Idaho has only added about 3,100 jobs during the past year.

“Despite the high level of uncertainty involving domestic politics and the global economy, one thing is certain ... low financing costs will continue to benefit Idaho's small businesses,” said Jeff Thredgold, of Thredgold Economic Associates and economic consultant to Zions Bank in a prepared statement.

Thredgold, who prepared the index, indicates that low financing costs will continue benefitting small businesses across the country as well.

However, uncertainty is likely hampering more robust economic gains.

“Major uncertainty exists regarding the need to increase the nation's debt ceiling before early August. Republicans are demanding substantial entitlement spending adjustments from the Democratic Administration and Senate in order to support the debt ceiling increase,” the report states.

Also causing market uncertainty is a likely default or repricing of Greek national debt and if certain, similar adjustments will be made to the debt levels of Ireland and Portugal.

Unstable energy prices are also being carefully watched.

Ongoing military conflicts in northern Africa and the Middle East have pushed oil prices and it's uncertain if prices will continue moving higher or eventually drop off.

One thing is near certain, however. The level of the federal funds rate is not expected to change any time soon.

This rate, which all other short-term interest rates are hugely tied, has been at an all-time low target range of 0.00-0.25 percent since December 2008.

Forecasters see this rate remaining through at least the end of this year.

Who says teens aren't smart when it comes to money?

By Claudia Buck
McClatchy Newspapers

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — In Chad Posner's economics classes at Sacramento's Mira Loma High School, students are scoring off the charts when it comes to financial savvy.

On a recent national financial literacy exam, nearly half of his 84 students scored in the top 10 percent. One of those, 18-year-old Angela Liu, scored a perfect 100 percent on the 40-question online test, whose results were released in April by the U.S. Treasury.

Despite its clunky-sounding name, the National Financial Capability Challenge has a clear-eyed goal: to increase high schoolers' knowledge and impress upon teachers, parents and students the need for deeper understanding of basic financial concepts.

Liu, whose parents are Chinese immigrants, said many of the test questions are “common-sense” subjects that go beyond textbook economics. The senior said personal finance is “not just memorizing facts” but learning “real life” skills that everyone should know.

Apparently, she and her classmates know them well. Combined, Posner's classes scored 86 percent, compared with 69 percent for U.S. teens overall.

Last fall, in launching a financial literacy push, FDIC Chairman Sheila Bair said, “Teaching young people how to handle their finances ... isn't a luxury in today's economy. It is essential.”

That's what Posner preaches to his three classes of 17- and 18-year-olds. Students, he said, are “very receptive” to class instruction on personal finances. “They want to learn about this stuff. Money is important to them.”

Posner, who worked several years as a financial planner, covers lots of real-life topics: Insurance. Credit and debt. FICO scores. College savings. Investing. Retirement.

He also lets his students solve real-life money problems, loosely based on his former clients. For instance, what's the best use of $500 in monthly savings for a young couple with no children who have a condo mortgage, credit card debt, a car loan, life insurance and no retirement plan?

Teachers learn to help students with personal finances

By Blair Koch
Times-News writer

Although gains are being made, graduating high school students still lack basic personal finance skills.

A 2008 JumpStart Coalition for Financial Literacy survey found that high school seniors answered fewer than half of the questions on a test correctly.

Life after high school isn't getting any easier either.

College education costs continue to rise, along with the amount of debt grads leave school with.

A poll commissioned by the National Endowment for Financial Education, in cooperation with Forbes.com, found that 59 percent of parents are financially supporting adult children when they are no longer in school.

That survey showed that 65 percent of adult children believe their generation faces tougher financial pressure, with 68 percent of parents agreeing.

The sobering statistics are why Lyle Hansen, University of Idaho Jerome County Extension Educator, say it's so important to teach personal finance skills before youth get their hands on credit card applications and rental insurance forms.

On Wednesday, Lyle joined with Idaho Credit Union League (ICUL) spokeswoman LaRaye O'Brien to “Costs are continuing to rise. Today's youth are going to pay more for housing, college, food and energy,” Hansen told the Times-News.

Teens

Often, he says, there are no right or wrong answers, but the scenarios let students think through the kind of money management choices they'll be facing in a few years.

"Kids too often go out into the real world totally unprepared for things that will affect their everyday lives: using a credit card or not using their 401(k) because they don't know what the heck it is," said Posner, who already has his 11-year-old son set up with a 529 college savings plan and an individual retirement account. "The sooner they know this stuff the better, so they won't have to declare bankruptcy in their 20s and will be better prepared for their own retirement."

With so many families battered by the economy's recent turmoil, the recession has definitely left its mark on teens' perceptions of money, according to a survey of 16-to-18-year-olds released last week by the Charles Schwab Foundation. The vast majority said the recession affected their family, either "a lot" (38 percent) or "a little" (55 percent).

As a result, 58 percent said they are "less likely to ask for things they want." And more than half the teens surveyed, 56 percent, reported having a greater appreciation for how hard their parents work.

But the survey also revealed gaps. It showed, for instance, that most teens know exactly what an iPad costs, but not enough about car insurance or how to handle such basics as writing a check or managing credit card fees.

Notably, parents were cited in several recent surveys of high school and college-age students as the best source on financial how-tos. As a common family conversation topic, money management was No. 4, wedged somewhere between "cleaning my room" and dating/sex, according to the Schwab survey.

"It's critically important that families have more conversations about money, savings, investment and debt management," because those topics are "not taught in schools on a regular basis," noted Schwab Foundation President Carrie Schwab-Pomerantz, who sits on President Barack Obama's financial literacy advisory council.

"It's important that they are prepared how to live within their means, within a budget."

In 2006, the U of I and ICUL joined forces and took the one-day how-to seminar across the state, showing educators how to use curriculum created by the National Endowment for Financial Education's High School Financial Planning Program.

The program offers beginning financial planning know-how to students: from budgeting, investing, fraud and identity theft and how to buy insurance.

Today, the curricula is used in schools in all but three Idaho counties.

O'Brien said the course is given to Idaho Department of Correction inmates, battered women and those needing help from agencies like the Salvation Army.

"In the case of inmates," O'Brien said, "This is information they haven't ever had an opportunity to learn. Women in shelters are so controlled they often don't have these basic skills....it's empowering."

About a dozen participants took advantage of the free seminar but Hansen said he and O'Brien will give the presentation to over 100 educators and service providers this year.

Heat grips much of U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The mercury climbed into the 90s across half the country Wednesday in a record-breaking blast of August-like heat, forcing schools with no air conditioning to let kids go home early and cities to open cooling centers. And scientists say we had better get used to it.

A new study from Stanford University predicts that global climate change will lead permanently to unusually hot summers by the middle of the century.

Temperatures in the 90s were recorded across much of the South, the East and the Midwest. Baltimore and Washington hit 99 degrees, breaking high-temperature records for the date that were set in 1999, according to the National Weather Service. The normal high for the date is about 82.

Philadelphia hit 97 degrees, breaking a 2008 record of 95, and Atlantic City, N.J., tied a record of 98 set in 1999. Chicago reached 94 by midafternoon.

Forecasters said it felt even hotter because of the high humidity. The ridge of high pressure that brought the broiling weather is expected to remain parked over the region through Thursday.

"I'm staying in my house. I'm going to watch TV and have a cold beer," said 84-year-old Harvey Milliman of Manchester, N.J. "You got a better idea than that, I'd love to hear it."

Youngsters sweltered in Hartford, Conn., where school would have ended for the summer by now if not for the heavy snows last winter that led to makeup days.

"I'm not even going to go outside this summer if it's going to be like this, unless

Oil rises as OPEC maintains production level

NEW YORK (AP) — A contentious meeting of oil ministers ended Wednesday with a clear message: Don't count on OPEC to do much about oil prices.

The 12-nation group decided not to boost production, which likely would have resulted in lower prices. That sent oil back above $100 a barrel. And more importantly, it sets the stage for higher prices later this year.

Rising energy prices since the beginning of the year have impacted the U.S. economic recovery. The Federal Reserve on Wednesday reported that the economy slowed in several parts of the country this spring and blamed high gas prices for sluggish consumer spending.

At Wednesday's OPEC meeting in Vienna, Saudi Arabia lobbied for an increase in oil output, which likely would have lowered oil prices. Countries like Iran resisted, arguing that oil supplies are adequate to meet demand and current prices are appropriate.

"We are unable to reach consensus," OPEC Secretary General Abdullah Al-Badri told reporters after the meeting in Vienna ended. Saudi oil minister Ali Naimi called the meeting "one of the worst ever."

Traders were surprised and oil prices climbed. Benchmark West Texas Intermediate for July delivery gained $1.65 to settle at $100.74 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

In London, Brent crude added $1.07 to settle at $117.85 per barrel on the ICE Futures exchange.

Many analysts were almost certain that OPEC would increase production. OPEC not only supplies 34 percent of the world's oil — about 29.7 million barrels per day — it has the unique ability to crank up production as needed.

Obama to create White House Rural Council

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama plans to create a special advisory council to recommend ways to boost the economic outlook and quality of life for the estimated 60 million people who live in rural areas of the U.S., a White House official said.

Obama was expected to sign an executive order today establishing the White House Rural Council and naming Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack, of Iowa, to be its chairman.

The official asked not to be identified in order to speak freely before a formal White House announcement about the council.

The panel will be responsible for providing recommendations to the president on investment in rural areas, as well as coordinating with a variety of rural interests, including agricultural groups, small businesses, and state, local and tribal governments.

It will focus on 10 areas that affect nearly one-fifth of the U.S. population of 308 million. But the panel's initial focus will be on job creation and economic development.

Rural residents are eager for better educational opportunities, transportation alternatives, better access to health care and reliable access to the Internet, among other issues.

The remaining subject areas will be: agriculture, access to credit, innovation, health care, education, Internet access, infrastructure, conservation and developing regional economies.

Don't let hantavirus spoil your time in the outdoors

Times-News

If you're planning to spend time outdoors this season, take precaution to prevent hantavirus.

That's the message from South Central Public Health District.

Hantavirus pulmonary syndrome or HPS is a potentially deadly disease transmitted by infected rodents, which in Idaho are likely to be deer mice, distinguished by their white bellies. The virus is contained in their urine, droppings or saliva.

"There are simple ways to take precautions against HPS, including wearing a mask and rubber gloves when cleaning any rodent-infested areas," Mary Jensen, epidemiology manager for SCPHD, said in a news release. "Visitors to rural areas including campers, hikers and others who take part in activities outdoors should use other special precautions to avoid HPS.

"Although cases of HPS in campers and hikers are fairly rare, we still stress the importance of taking necessary and easy precautions."

To minimize the risk for hantavirus infection, campers and hikers should follow these precautions:

- Before occupying abandoned or unused cabins, open them up to air out. Inspect for rodents and don't use cabins if you find signs of rodent infestation until it has properly been cleaned.
- If you sleep outdoors, check potential campsites for rodent droppings and burrows.
- Do not disturb rodents, burrows or dens.
- Avoid sleeping near wood-piles or garbage areas that may be frequented by rodents.
- Avoid sleeping on bare ground; use a mat or elevated cots, if possible.
- Store foods in rodent-proof containers and promptly discard, bury or burn all garbage.

There is no specific treatment, cure or vaccine for Hantavirus infection. With early diagnosis, however, and prompt medical attention, an infected individual can usually recover.

For information on safely cleaning up after rodents, visit www.cdc.gov/rodents/cleaning/index.html.

LOST AND FOUND

Looking for shed antlers once was a popular springtime activity in rural Idaho, but for many people it has turned into a source of extra cash. 'Like so many other things, when a hobby turns into a business, the enjoyment kind of goes away,' says Fish and Game Regional Conservation Officer Gary Hompland.

Hunting for shed antlers requires patience, persistence

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

Some time ago I met a gentleman near Indian Springs Road in the South Hills. He was unloading an all-terrain vehicle from the back of his pickup. He was in a hurry, he said, and didn't want to talk long.

Evening was approaching and he wanted to use what daylight was left to look for antlers. He was going horn hunting or, more precisely, antler hunting.

People actually go out and look for fallen antlers? I thought, still fairly new to Idaho.

Yep, Gary Hompland, regional conservation officer for the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, told me later.

I filed the idea in the back of my head, thinking one day I'd write a story about it. But other stories kept popping up and I never got around to writing about it, mainly because I've never been antler hunting.

Until recently, that is. And now that I've done it

'Later, reflecting upon my experience, I thought about how rewarding it is being able to find something you've been searching for. And that, I thought, must be the virtue of antler hunting.'

— kind of — I don't think I hunted properly. Instead of riding trails, I walked the fields. But in horn hunting, you often have to travel for many miles in search of your treasure. I didn't do that on foot.

There were some instances when I thought I happened upon an antler, only to find out a few seconds later that it instead was a twisted branch of sagebrush I had come upon. My hopes of finding any antler — something to mark my success — soon deflated.

This is for the birds, I thought, or at least for someone with more patience than me, maybe someone who actually cares about collecting antlers.

I'm not the type, I thought, walking away a bit unhappy.

Later, reflecting upon my experience, I thought about how rewarding it is being able to find something you've been searching for. And that, I thought, must be the virtue of antler hunting.

As a pre-teen and young entrepreneur I used to walk the fields near a golf course where I lived, searching for golf balls that players had lost. I always felt a tickle of excitement whenever I found a ball. By summer's end I had amassed a large collection of balls that I'd then sell to players on the course.

Maybe I'll give antler hunting another chance. Not because I collect antlers — I don't — and not because I'd try selling them — I won't — but because I know the excitement of finding something after looking for it.

Of course, there are other reasons why people hunt shed antlers and horns.

"It was a real common spring activity that people participated in," Hompland said. "And then it turned into an economic issue."

Free Fishing Day offers great opportunity for first-time anglers

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

If you haven't yet tried your hand at fishing, Saturday is a good time to start. That's Free Fishing Day in the Gem State.

To help get you in the mood for this special day — a day that can serve as your introduction or reintroduction to fishing — Scott Stanton, regional fishers biologist with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, answered questions about how to best get hooked on one of America's favorite pastimes.

What type of fishing is best suited for a first-time angler?

The best fishing opportunity for the first-time angler is one where the angler can fully enjoy the angling experience. This opportunity is found by visiting a local fishing hole that has been stocked with fish. These conditions allow the first-time angler the opportunity to fish for fish that are willing to bite.

Stocked waters also allow the first-time angler the opportunity to visit a fishing hole with easy access to the water, to fully enjoy the fishing experience. This often means visiting a local pond or lake with low travel costs, and the opportunity to harvest a few fish to take home.

What is the best style of fishing rod for a beginning — bait cast, spin cast, etc? Is one easier than another?

Beginning anglers often find push-button spin cast outfits easiest to use. They are easily spooled up with line and the reels are relatively simple to operate. They also can be operated using just one hand to cast. Simply push the button to cast. Most beginning anglers become familiar with using bait, and push button spin cast outfits are perfectly suited for bait fishing.

What kinds of tackle should a beginner fisherman use — size of hooks, weights, etc?

Beginning anglers should start by using simple tackle. Push button spin outfits are perfect for the beginner. A few different sized bobbers or floats, split-shot sinkers, snelled bait hooks in size 8-12, or small treble hooks. Baits may range from mealworms, night crawlers, salmon eggs, or various colors of power bait. A small tackle box for transporting all the tackle should also be included. Another essential and good idea for the beginning angler is a white 5-gallon bucket. It doubles as a way to transport gear, and also a nice thing to sit on when you are waiting for a nibble.

The Magic and Wood River valleys offer plenty of places for the beginning angler to get acquainted with fishing. Saturday is Idaho's Free Fishing Day, which is always a good time for novice anglers to try their luck on the water.

How much should a novice angler spend on tackle?

Tackle costs vary greatly in the sport fishing industry. Beginning anglers should only invest in tackle to start fishing, in case they decide in a different hobby. A beginning angler can get the essential tackle needed to start for a relatively cheap initial investment.

Often rod/reel combinations can be purchased, as well as small tackle boxes loaded with the essential hooks, weights, and swivels. These combinations are good options for the beginning angler and are made by many of the leading manufacturers in the sport fishing industry. Most anglers can find complete beginning tackle options in the $50-$100 range.

Fishing for memories: Launch fishing offers an inexpensive, hassle-free way to enjoy a day on water

By Doug Smith
Star Tribune (Minneapolis)

GARRISON, Minn. — “Fish on!” someone hollered.

A dinner bell clanged, signaling one of the 20 anglers aboard the 50-foot launch had hooked one. Guide and boat captain Greg Eno scrambled for a landing net.

“Oh, it’s a big one,” an angler shouted, seeing Jay Maher’s rod bent in half. After a couple hours of fishing on a choppy Lake Mille Lacs on a recent Wednesday evening, the group had landed several small walleyes and keeper-sized perch. But Maher clearly had something much bigger.

While fellow anglers ooded and aahed, Eno netted the walleye — a 27-plus-inch dandy.

“You don’t get a fish like that every day,” said a grinning Maher, 49, holding his trophy for photos before slipping it back into the lake.

Nor do you often get to catch a dandy fish with a crowd of onlookers to congratulate you.

But this is launch fishing, and it’s something special. The ingredients: a good-humored group of souls, wide-ranging in age and fishing experience. Add one of the great walleye fisheries in the nation.

Stir in a mild, clear-skied spring evening with a classic ‘walleye chop’ rocking the boat. Top it off with some classic ‘70s rock ‘n’ roll on the radio.

The result: a fishing experience unlike any other.

“You don’t have to trailer a boat, they provide the rods and bait, they treat you like royalty — and where else can you go on a fishing trip for less than $100?” said Tony Boys, 55, of Minneapolis, who was fishing with his wife, Royce, and two friends.

For years he used to fish Mille Lacs with his dad, but the trips ended when his dad passed away. Now Tony has returned, choosing to go out in a launch operated by Twin Pines Resort near Garrison. This was his third outing.

“We limited out on a trip last fall,” he said.

Though the fishing was relatively slow Wednesday night — Boys caught a walleye and a jumbo perch — he wasn’t disappointed.

“Does it get any better than watching the sun go down over the water?” he said as dusk descended on the big lake.

The allure is simple. Launches long have been a common sight on Mille Lacs, and perhaps 30 or so ply the lake each summer. (Statewide, the DNR licenses 136 charter fishing boats 25 feet or larger.) While the size, style and amenities may vary, for anglers the allure is the same.

“People are just looking to go out fishing with family, friends or groups as an outing,” said Bill Eno, who, with his wife, Linda, have owned Twin Pines Resort on the west shore of Mille Lacs for 16 years. They run two launches.

“You don’t have to own your own boat and all that goes with it. You simply pay your $35 and walk on,” he explained. “You bring your snacks and drinks. There’s a bathroom on board. You don’t have to bring your equipment. It’s very easy.”

Older and younger anglers find the access convenient.

And there’s the social aspect.

“Everyone has fun,” Eno said. “If you have two people in a boat, and you catch two fish over a four-hour period, that’s two catches you experience. But if you have 20 people on a launch, and everyone catches one fish, that’s 20 catches. And even though you’re not catching them all, you share the joy and excitement of catching fish.”

That was the case this Wednesday evening. It was an eclectic group, with three anglers from Nebraska and two from Florida. Nine were women. Though some anglers caught nothing, there were plenty of hoots and whoops whenever someone hooked a fish.

Maher and his buddy Brad Otremba, 51, have been coming to Mille Lacs to fish from a launch for 15 years.

“It’s comfortable and you don’t have to worry about getting tossed around on the lake (in a smaller boat),” Maher said. “This really takes the hassle out of it.”

“Hallelujah!”

We departed the Twin Pines dock

at 6 p.m. and returned promptly at 10 p.m. (A night fishing ban prohibits angling after 10 p.m. until June 13.) The group boated 18 walleyes. Half were released because of the lake’s 18- to 28-inch protected slot limit. Possession limit is four, with one fish over 28 inches allowed. They also kept four eating-size perch.

“We’ve had better nights, but that’s fishing,” said Greg Eno. The cold spring hasn’t helped. Still, the next night, five anglers caught 18 walleyes and kept 14, he said.

Martha Kooiman was fishing with her mom, Margaret, 86, and dad, Harold, 87. Her brother and sister-in-law were along, too.

“We had never tried a launch and heard good things,” Martha said. Around 8:30, something hit Margaret Kooiman’s leech.

“Fish on!” she shouted as her rod bent toward the dark water. The bell clanged and, after reeling the fish to the boat, guide Mike Gannon netted her dandy 23-inch walleye.

Her eyes lit up and she grinned like a kid at Christmas.

“Woo-hoo,” she shouted. “Hallelujah! Not bad for an 86-year-old!”

Not bad at all.

Fish & Game adds salmon season, adjusts limits

The Idaho Fish and Game Commission on Monday increased the bag limits on adult chinook salmon in the Clearwater River drainage to two fish per day and six in possession.

The commissioners also set a limited jacks-only season on another section of the upper Salmon River.

Fish and Game fishery managers estimate the numbers of adult chinook heading back to the Clearwater drainage to be about twice the pre-season estimate, anadromous fish manager Pete Hassemer told commissioners.

The increased bag limits are effective immediately on the Clearwater River main stem, the North Fork, South Fork and Middle Fork Clearwater rivers, and the Lochsa River.

The statewide season limit remains 20 adult chinook during any 2011 salmon seasons occurring before Sept. 1. All other salmon fishing rules remain the same and are listed in this year’s seasons and rules brochure.

The commission set a chinook fishing season in the upper Salmon River reach near Stanley. The season opens July 9 and closes at the end of fishing on July 17. Fishing hours are from 5 a.m. to 10 p.m.

The season is limited to two jack salmon per day and six in possession. No adult chinook may be taken. Only chinook less than 24 inches long, with a clipped adipose fin as evidenced by a healed scar, may be kept.

The Stanley area reach extends from a posted boundary about 20 yards upstream of Valley Creek in Stanley, upstream to the posted boundary about 100 yards downstream of the weir at the Sawtooth Hatchery south of Stanley.

Anglers must stop fishing for chinook salmon when they have retained their daily, possession or season limit of adult chinook or their overall daily or possession limit of chinook of any size, whichever comes first.

All other salmon fishing rules remain in effect.

Where in the Magic and Wood River valleys are the best places for a beginner to test his or her luck on the water?

There are many opportunities throughout the Magic and Wood river valleys for the beginning angler. In the Wood River valley, Gavers Lagoon located at the Hayspur Fish Hatchery near Picabo, and Penny and Dollar Lakes near Ketchum are great places for the beginning angler.

In the Magic Valley, opportunities abound across the entire region. For trout, beginning anglers may visit the Oster Lakes south of Hagerman, Filer Ponds north of Filer, and Crystal Lake north of Buhl. Beginning anglers near Twin Falls can visit Dierkes Lake. In the Mini Cassia area anglers should try Emerald Lake, Conner Pond, Freedom Park Pond, or the Rupert Gravel Ponds.

Once the weather starts to warm, beginning anglers can try their luck at warm water fish such as bass and bluegill. Bluegill are a great opportunity for the beginning angler, and a tasty treat as well. Harvesting a bunch of bluegill, spending some time filleting them, and frying them in hot oil, is about as good as it gets for table fare.

Local waters where bluegills and bass can be found are Conner and Emerald lakes in the Mini-Cassia area, the Snake River, Dierkes Lake, and the Hagerman WMA, which opens July 1.

Is Free Fishing Day a good time for beginners to start learning how to fish? What if they need help? What activities does Fish and Game have planned for Free Fishing Day?

Free fishing day this Saturday is a great opportunity for beginners to start learning how to fish. IDFG will be sponsoring free fishing day activities at Gavers Lagoon in Picabo, the Hagerman State Fish Hatchery in Hagerman, and at Rockys Pond in Murtaugh.

IDFG personnel will be on hand at each location, and will have fishing tackle available for people to learn and maybe even catch a fish.

Another great opportunity for the beginning angler is to sign out the IDFG “Take Me Fishing” trailer, which is loaded with all the gear needed to spend the day fishing.

Antlers

Many people now hunt them for money.

“Like so many other things, when a hobby turns into a business the enjoyment kind of goes away,” he said, noting that the “antler industry” has many branches including those who use found sheds on taxidermy mounts, to make furniture or for a variety of other purposes.

In some instances, antler hunting — some people call it horn hunting, though antlers are not a true horn — has caused off-road issues.

“Several states around the country, because of the potential for winter range disturbance and issues with moving wildlife populations around, have what they call a pickup season,” Hompland said. “Basically, it does not allow anyone on the range to hunt sheds. Idaho at this point does not have anything like that. It has been discussed.”

People don’t need a permit to hunt shed antlers, but they do need to be mindful of property access rules and off-road restrictions.

I do think I’ll look for shed antlers again sometime, but, unlike my golf ball days, my purpose will not be to make money. It’ll be to say, “I’ve found one.”

Places to go, things to do for anglers

Question: “With the unsettled weather this spring, where’s a good place to go fishing?”
Answer: The unsettled weather has definitely resulted in a few false starts for this summer’s fishing season.

The bite at a few reservoirs has just barely started. Crappie are starting at CJ Strike Reservoir and wall-eye, small mouth bass, and trout are starting at Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir. Boat ramps on many reservoirs may be difficult to use due to high water. Many of the rivers are still running high and muddy and I expect them to do so for some time. I would suggest anyone interested in finding a new fishing hole to get on the Idaho fishing planner on the Fish and Game’s website, fishandgame.idaho.gov/.

The fishing planner is a great site for the novice and the experienced angler. It contains suggested waters by fish species desired, fishing regulations, and even has maps to show you how to get there. Once you get to the department’s website, click the Idaho Fishing Planner icon at the bottom of the web page.

Another option you should take advantage of is “Free Fishing Day” on Saturday. The Idaho Department of Fish and Game will hold fishing clinics, specially designed for young anglers. The clinics will be held at local ponds stocked with trout.

Fishing clinics are scheduled 9 a.m.-1 p.m Saturday at the Hagerman Hatchery and Wildlife Management Area. Clinics will also be 8 a.m. to noon at Gavers’ Lagoon at the Hayspur Hatchery near Picabo and at Rocky Mathew’s Pond on the north side of Murtaugh Lake.

Free lunch is available at the Hagerman hatchery as is fish cleaning and fish painting. Loaner fishing equipment and bait will be available at all three locations.

Another fishing related activity for the public is the department’s annual Sportsmen’s Fish Fry, beginning at 6 p.m. Thursday.

This year’s fish fry will include clinics on fly fishing for trout, fishing for sturgeon, salmon, bass, walleye and crappie. Bow fishing and preparation of fish for the table also will be covered.

Listing brightest stars is an inexact science

You’d think it would be pretty straightforward to make a list of the brightest stars (that is, the stars which appear brightest to the unaided eye, not the stars with the greatest energy output). But real-world complications make compiling such a list challenging.

First, what the eye perceives as a lone point of light in the night sky isn’t always a single star. For example, Castor (rightmost of Gemini’s twin stars, currently sitting low in the northwest around 10:30 p.m.) is actually a sextuple star system. Castor’s stars are so close together that a telescope is required to “split” them. But some multiple stars are just wide enough apart that stargazers with exceptional visual acuity will see them not as one bright star, but as two fainter ones.

Second, many stars vary their brightness over time. While most such variations are barely noticeable to the eye, and are too little to change their rank on a brightest star list, others are more dramatic.

Mira, in the constellation Cetus, the Sea Monster (currently in the daytime sky) is a long-period variable star that shrinks and grows over a 332-day cycle. To the eye, it goes from invisible without a telescope when at its dimmest, to rivaling the Big Dipper’s stars at its brightest.

Third, there’s your viewing location. Some bright southern stars don’t make Idaho’s “brightest” list, because they never come above our horizon. The light from southern stars, which barely break the horizon, must traverse a long path through the atmosphere and thus never appear as bright as they would at lower latitudes.

So, a truly accurate “brightest stars” list would have to be tailored to the observer’s eyes, location, and the time of the observation. Sometimes, the universe resists being pigeonholed.

Hikers set out May 28 to climb 10,339-foot Cache Peak, Idaho’s highest peak south of the Snake River. The climb began at 6,000 feet, and the final 1,500 feet were in deep snow. Although it snowed on and off all day, it turned into an almost whiteout just before the group reached the summit. It was estimated that temperatures never made it above 45 degrees; it was 31 degrees when the group started out and 37 degrees when they finished the trek. ## Business keeps growing for Conn. taxidermist

By Mara Lee
The Hartford Courant

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. — Past Wild Bill’s Nostalgia Shop, where the sign says “We sell strange stuff,” past the winter storage for the Coleman Brothers Carnival there’s a strip mall of auto-repair shops and, hidden in the rear, Northeast Taxidermy Studios, billed as “New England’s Largest and Finest.”

In one bay, about 300 antlers line racks on the walls, waiting to be reunited with the heads they once graced. On a counter, a boar’s head peeks out from a garbage bag.

One deer head has eyes so expressive they could rival Bambi’s, and a nose that looks like it’s still wet.

Owner Joe Pitruzzello is cradling a phone to his ear, his arm resting across the snout of a bongo, his hand gripping the spiral horn. The bongo is a type of African antelope with a distinctive red and white striped coat.

Pitruzzello employs seven other taxidermists, and a staff of 10 in all. Although Connecticut has dozens of taxidermists, Pitruzzello said his is the only shop with enough volume to support such a large staff.

Most of the skins that become trophies come in salted and stiff, the fur much more dull than it will look once it’s finished. Some of the local hunters’ animals “sometimes do come in the carcass,” Pitruzzello said, but there’s no evidence of that in either bay. The only smell is that of paint drifting across the parking lot, and maybe a hint of glue. He sends the skins out for tanning — a much more odorous process — with specialists for bears, white sheep and goats (their fur must be bleached, but not too much) and others.

Only about 30 percent of his clients live in Connecticut, he said. Even as the industry is shrinking — fewer people are hunting, and the clientele is aging — his business keeps growing.

The majority of his orders are from repeat customers, he said.

“Most of my clients have separate trophy rooms,” he said.

One of those clients, a woman in Greenwich, called while a reporter was there. She had sent her mounted animals to be cleaned, because of smoke damage, and was interested in buying an elk and a mule deer Pitruzzello had on hand.

A huge buffalo head is in the shop because a Connecticut man knocked it from the wall and it fell 20 feet, breaking a horn and damaging the face.

Northeast Taxidermy was featured in a Discovery Channel show pilot in March called “Taxidermy USA,” and was the only big-game specialist in the program. One other shop featured on the show does pets, and another does novelties — like a deer-leg lamp. “They made it sound like we delivered the bear in five days,” he said. It takes three months to six months to deliver most trophies, he said.

Pitruzzello is not a hunter — he says he hunted pheasant once — and though he does fish, he has never preserved any of his catches.

Although he’s surrounded by the remains of Africa’s most majestic mammals, he has no desire to go on safari.

But he said when acquaintances hear of his business and want to argue against hunting, he’s ready to defend the sport. Hunters pay for habitat preservation that keeps animals from becoming endangered, he points out. And as for deer, they’re overpopulated, and, he asks, isn’t a quick arrow or bullet a better way to go than getting hit by a car or dying of disease?

“I don’t like killing animals, either,” he said. “But it has to happen.”

Nick Redman, 25, the newest taxidermist on staff, said he started when he became disillusioned with college six years ago.

Working as a taxidermist “gives me the chance to preserve the animal’s beauty,” he said as he sewed a goat skin closed around the neck form of a polyurethane foam mannequin.

Redfish Lake opens remodeled visitor center

Times-News

Visitors to Redfish Lake will find a newly renovated visitor center.

The “Redfish Center,” formerly known as the Redfish Lake Visitor Center, will be open seven days a week from June 24 through Labor Day.

The ability to open and operate this visitor center resulted from major commitments from area businesses, agencies and organizations. Its primary focus is interpretive and educational programs, said Gary Gadwa, president of the Sawtooth Interpretive and Historical Association.

Daily nature hikes are offered for all ages, and Junior Ranger Programs will engage young people. The center also will be home to the Friday evening SIHA Sawtooth Forum and Lecture Series during July and August.

An improved backcountry trip planning center will help visitors plan backcountry trips with better maps, guidebooks and current backcountry condition reports. Middle Fork Salmon and Main Salmon River float guides will be available along with a complete listing and contact information for all of the region’s permitted guides and outfitters for whitewater rafting, fishing, horseback, mountain biking, or hiking adventures.

MDF appoints new youth programs coordinator

The Salt lake City-based Mule Deer Foundation recently hired outdoor educator Jon Zinnel as coordinator for its youth programs.

“Jon shares our vision and enthusiasm for using best practices to recruit and mentor new hunters, shooters and conservationists,” said MDF President and CEO Miles Moretti. “He knows that we are not only passing along our hunting heritage, but we are also creating future conservation leaders.”

Zinnel, an avid hunter and former national 4-H Shooting Sports ambassador, will work with field directors, partners and many MDF chapters to expand the successful M.U.L.E.Y. (Mindful, Understanding, Legal, Ethical Youth) program.

“I’ve watched the Mule Deer Foundation’s growth, seen its friendly, cooperative approach with partners, and seen what a great position it’s in to really make a difference for the future of hunting,” Zinnel said. “I am excited to be a part of building that future.”

In recent months, MDF announced partnerships with the Youth Shooting Sports Alliance, Pass It On — Outdoor Mentors, Congressional Sportsmen’s Foundation and other partner companies and organizations.

Zinnel is an NRA certified firearms instructor in multiple disciplines, a rangemaster and an archery instructor for the National Archery in the Schools program.

Question: I handled my own bankruptcy case and it is closed. I'm trying to refinance my house, but the bank says there is a lien against my house in favor of one of the creditors I listed in my bankruptcy. What can I do?

Answer: Your creditor sued you and received a court judgment that was then recorded in your county, creating a lien on your home. Although the underlying debt was discharged in your bankruptcy, the lien remains and must be paid or otherwise cleared before your home can be refinanced or sold. In Idaho, you are entitled to a homestead exemption that protects the equity in your home from your creditors. If the judgment lien impairs your exemption, it could have been removed while your bankruptcy case was still open. In order to remove the lien now, your case will need to be reopened, then you will have to file the appropriate motion and documents. This can be a time consuming and expensive process. An experienced bankruptcy attorney can handle this matter easily. It's unfortunate, but what you saved by not using an attorney for your bankruptcy is probably less than you will spend reopening your case and removing the lien now. Bankruptcy is complex. Every debtor can benefit from being represented by an experienced bankruptcy attorney.

Oct. 7, 1924-June 7, 2011

JEROME — Hazel Ann Forsgren Tolman lived 86 honorable and dedicated years of life before passing away unexpectedly at her home Tuesday, June 7, 2011.

She was born to Vivian V and Kathleen Steele Forsgren on Oct. 7, 1924, in Tremonton, Utah. Hazel became the mother and caretaker of her siblings when her mother passed away when she was 11 years old, and she continued that selfless care for others throughout her life.

During World War II, Hazel left home and went to work for the Arsenal. She also kept contact with a young soldier, Don Tolman, through letters and packages. Upon Don's fulfilling of his duties, they were married in the Logan Utah LDS Temple on Jan. 22, 1946. As a young couple, they started their lives together farming in Salmon, Idaho, and then in Corinne, Utah. Fifth-two years ago in 1959, they purchased a dairy farm south of Jerome. Mom tells of her concerns in leaving the home they had, but how it turned out to be the best place to raise their family in Jerome. She often said, "God knew what was happening all along."

Hazel loved being a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, where she served in many callings and especially loved teaching the children in Primary, doing her visiting teaching and serving in the Relief Society. She was very appreciative in her later years of the dedicated home and visiting teachers who came to visit, the young men who brought the sacrament, the youth who worked in her yard, the meals when needed, and the care and concern from so many.

Hazel enjoyed working in her garden and yard. She provided food for the family and flowers for the soul. She worked tirelessly in her garden, yard and raspberry bushes, then canned well into the night where she said she could get more done while the children were asleep. She loved to read; her mind and knowledge was strong and interesting. She enjoyed having company visit and she always had stories to tell.

Hazel served alongside her husband, Don, while he was active in the Farm Bureau presidency. In 2007, the Farm Bureau honored her with the 3rd District "Woman of the Year" award. It was very fitting and well deserved.

Through all of the years of hard work, she knew what was important and enjoyed family and reunion time together. She enjoyed playing with young babies and children. She often mentioned that someone once made fun of her for taking so long playing with her baby while giving a bath. She didn't care; she loved that time with them and reminded us all that the best years of life are while our children are young, so enjoy them. She loved her family and sacrificed for their concerns.

Hazel is survived by her children, Dale Tolman of Jerome, Zona (Glenn) Johanson of Salt Lake City, Utah, John (Lorene) Tolman, Sally (Steve) Orchard and Marty (Sonia) Tolman of Jerome; son-in-law, Jerald Carney of Boise; 16 grandchildren, Cori Tolman, Sandi Nice, Shelly Tolman, Matt Johanson, Jami Johanson, Jacob Tolman, Jessica Tolman, Tyler Carney, Jodi Carney, Cody, Brady, Logan, Lance and Blake Orchard, and Eric and Nicole Tolman; six step-grandchildren, Vance (Heather) Church, Scott (Sandi) Hall, Sabrina (Matt) Becker, Tami Marshall, and Makelle and Jessica Parish; eight great-grandchildren, Scott Nice, Janessa and Andy Tolman, McKenzie, Porter, Emmalee and Olivia Orchard; five brothers, Dick, Wendell, Judd, Don and Jim Forsgren; and one sister, Dorothy King. Many friends and loved ones preceded her in death. She and her dear friend Fern have much to tell each other. Those family members who preceded her include her parents; her husband; one daughter, Rosemary Carney; one son, Monte Tolman; one granddaughter, Vicki Tolman; four brothers, Charles, Robert, Bill and Jack; and sisters, Fae and Erma.

A visitation will be held Friday evening, June 10, at Farnsworth Mortuary Chapel, 1343 S. Lincoln in Jerome, where family and friends may call from 6 to 8 p.m.

The funeral will be conducted at 1 p.m. Saturday, June 11, at the Jerome LDS 3rd Ward Chapel, 825 E. Ave. B in Jerome, with Bishop Rick Geist officiating. A visitation will begin one hour prior to the service. Interment will follow in the Jerome Cemetery.

3 arrested after rifle pointed at vehicle

BOISE — Ada County Sheriff's deputies have arrested three people after receiving a report that someone in a truck pointed a weapon at a driver in another vehicle.

A woman called sheriff's dispatchers on Tuesday night to report that someone in a truck pointed a rifle at her while she was driving toward the Kuna Caves.

Sheriff's spokeswoman Andrea Dearden told the Idaho Statesman that investigators found a man, woman and 17-year-old male in the truck stuck in gravel.

Dearden says both the man and woman tried to run at the deputies.

Both were charged with resisting and obstructing, and the woman faces an additional charge of battery on a law enforcement officer.

The teenager was charged with assault with a deadly weapon and being a minor under the influence of alcohol.

Vote on school leader puts district in tumult

BOISE — A northern Boise County's last school board meeting was so tumultuous that the sheriff says he plans to send a deputy to the next one.

Sheriff Ben Roeber told the Idaho Statesman that deputies are investigating whether a battery occurred at Monday's meeting of the Garden Valley School Board.

Tensions ran so high one person allegedly pushed down another who was trying to leave that meeting.

The dispute centers on whether to put Superintendent Michael Tomlin on paid administrative leave, a decision the board made in executive session.

Tomlin has been with the district about two years. Last year, a group of teachers submitted a letter of no confidence in Tomlin to the school board.

Tomlin says he wishes the community would come together to educate the kids.

All Yellowstone interior roads open for season

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK — All roads within Yellowstone National Park are now open for the season.

The park's highest elevation road — over Dunraven Pass between Tower Junction and Canyon Village — opened Wednesday. Avalanches had delayed the opening of another high elevation park road, Sylvan Pass, until last weekend.

Park officials warn that snow or rain could temporarily close the roads again if they prompt rockslides or avalanches. Rain and snow is possible at elevations over 8,000 feet on Thursday.

Crews are still working to clear the Beartooth Highway between Red Lodge and Cooke City, Mont. They hope to have the entire stretch open by this weekend.

Bin Laden documents sharpen U.S. aim

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. is tracking possible new terror targets and stepping up surveillance of operatives previously considered minor al-Qaida figures after digging through the mountain of correspondence seized from Osama bin Laden’s hideout, officials say. The trove of material is filling in blanks on how al-Qaida operatives work, think and fit in the organization, they say.

The new information is the result of five weeks of round-the-clock work by a CIA-led team of data analysts, cyber experts and translators who are 95 percent finished decrypting and translating the years of material and expect to complete the effort by mid-June, two U.S. officials say.

Al-Qaida operatives worldwide are feeling the heat, with at least two of them altering their travel plans in recent weeks in apparent alarm that they might become the targets of another U.S. raid, one official said.

All officials spoke on condition of anonymity to describe the review of bin Laden files taken by U.S. Navy SEALs in a May 2 raid on his Abbottabad, Pakistan, hideout.

The items taken by the SEALs from bin Laden’s second-floor office included a handwritten journal, five computers, 10 hard drives and 110 thumb drives.

Copies of the material have been distributed to agencies from the FBI to the Defense Intelligence Agency to continue long-term analysis, one official said. The material is now classified, greatly limiting the number of people who can see it and making any detailed public accounting of the contents a crime.

FBI Director Robert Mueller told Congress on Wednesday that one of the early assessments from the trove is that al-Qaida remains committed to attacking the United States.

“We continue to exploit the materials seized from bin Laden’s compound” and “we are focused on the new information about the homeland threat gained from this operation,” Mueller told the Senate Judiciary Committee, which is considering legislation that would extend Mueller’s job for up to two more years.

There is nothing in the bin Laden files so far to indicate an imminent attack, three officials said. The U.S. has increased its vigilance regarding some of the targets bin Laden suggests to his operatives, from smaller U.S. cities to mass transport systems, to U.S. embassies abroad and even oil tankers in the Persian Gulf.

A law enforcement official briefed on the process said investigators have been analyzing raw digital data found on multiple hard drives and flash drives, and that some of it consists of sequences of numbers. Investigators were trying to discern potential bank account or phone numbers that might point to al-Qaida contacts in the United States or elsewhere, or codes that could produce other leads, said the official, who was not authorized to publicly discuss the analysis and spoke on condition of anonymity.

Religion sticking point with Romney

By Michael Muskal
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Mitt Romney is stepping away from the rest of the field for the GOP presidential nomination and is increasingly competitive against President Barack Obama, though the former Massachusetts governor faces a potential problem because of his religion, according to the Quinnipiac poll released Wednesday.

A quarter of Republicans or GOP-leaning independent voters said they would back Romney over the rest of field for the Republican nod. It was the best showing for Romney in months and the first time any Republican had garnered so much support from his own party, a sign that Republicans may be coalescing a bit in these early days of the 2012 presidential campaign.

Still, Romney faces a possible political problem because of his religion, the Quinnipiac poll and other surveys have found. Overall, only 45 percent said they had a favorable opinion of the Mormon religion, while 32 percent said they had an unfavorable one. Other polls have found different numbers, but most agree that between a quarter and a third of voters say they would have a problem voting for a Mormon, creating a tough situation for Romney and former Utah Gov. Jon Huntsman, who is flirting with a presidential bid.

“The fact that less than half of voters have a favorable view of the religion is likely to be a political issue that Gov. Mitt Romney, and should his campaign catch on, Gov. Jon Huntsman, will have to deal with as they pursue the White House,” said Peter A. Brown, assistant director of the Quinnipiac University Polling Institute.

The nation’s anti-Mormon feelings aren’t new. In 2007, Romney tried to defuse the issue with a speech stressing common values.

According to the poll, Romney has opened up a lead over the rest of the GOP field, which has been seen as weak and fluid. Ranking in second place was Sarah Palin, the party’s 2008 vice presidential nominee, who received 15 percent.

Code Pink demonstrators stand behind Ryan Crocker, President Obama’s choice for ambassador to Afghanistan, as he arrives on Capitol Hill in Washington, D.C., Wednesday.

Nominee: U.S. must stay committed in Afghanistan

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama’s choice for U.S. ambassador to Afghanistan insisted on Wednesday that the United States must continue its multibillion-dollar investment to achieve a “good enough” government in Kabul that would prevent the country from backsliding into a sanctuary for terrorists.

Ryan Crocker was challenged repeatedly by skeptical senators who questioned a costly war now in its 10th year and nation-building that a fresh congressional report found has had limited success despite nearly $19 billion in foreign aid over a decade. That’s more than the United States has spent in any other country, including Iraq.

“Our current commitment, in troops and dollars, is neither proportional to our interests nor sustainable,” said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Looming large as senators pressed Crocker to state an Afghanistan endgame was Obama’s upcoming decision on how many of the 100,000 American troops to withdraw from Afghanistan in July. The killing of al-Qaida leader Osama bin Laden, reservations about unreliable ally Pakistan and significant U.S. budget constraints have forced even the more hawkish members of Congress to rethink continued U.S. involvement in Afghanistan.

The administration has not said what will be the size of the drawdown or whether it will include combat troops.

On a glide path to Senate confirmation, Crocker said the United States cannot afford to abandon Afghanistan, where the realistic goal is a relatively stable government rather than creation of “shining city on a hill.”

“Governance that is good enough to ensure that the country doesn’t degenerate back into a safe haven for al-Qaida,” Crocker told the Foreign Relations panel.

He recalled Defense Secretary Robert Gates’ warning that the United States walked away from Afghanistan in 1989 with disastrous consequences.

“We cannot afford to do so again,” said Crocker, who argued progress is hard, “but hard does not mean hopeless.”

Autism probably related to hundreds of genetic mutations, researchers say

By Shari Roan
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Autism is not caused by one or two gene defects but probably by hundreds of different mutations, many of which arise spontaneously, according to research that examined the genetic underpinnings of the disorder in more than 1,000 families.

The findings, reported in three studies published Wednesday in the journal

Neuron, cast autism disorders as genetically very complex, involving many potential changes in that may produce, essentially, different forms of autism.

The affected genes, however, appear to be part of a large network involved in controlling the development of synapses, the critical junctions between nerve cells that allow them to communicate, according to one of the three studies.

Although the work will have no immediate value to patients or their families, the insights provide a wealth of targets to pursue in developing treatments for the disorder, scientists said.

Understanding the genetic causes of autism spectrum disorders may promote more accurate diagnoses, and research on synapse formation and function could yield treatments that address the flow of signals between nerve cells.

AROUND THE NATION

GEORGIA

Judges seem receptive to health care challenge

ATLANTA — Judges on a federal appeals court panel on Wednesday repeatedly raised questions about President Barack Obama’s health care overhaul, expressing unease with the requirement that virtually all Americans carry health insurance or face penalties.

All three judges on the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals panel questioned whether upholding the landmark law could open the door to Congress adopting other sweeping economic mandates.

The Atlanta panel did not immediately rule on the lawsuit brought by 26 states, a coalition of small businesses and private individuals who urged the three to side with a federal judge in Florida who struck down the law.

But the pointed questions about the so-called individual mandate during almost three hours of oral arguments suggests the panel is considering whether to rule against at least part of the federal law to expand health coverage to tens of millions of Americans.

Federal appeals courts in Cincinnati and Richmond have heard similar legal constitutional challenges to the law within the last month, and lawyers on both sides agree the case is headed for the U.S. Supreme Court.

MISSISSIPPI

77 hurt when lightning hits military base

CAMP SHELBY — A spokeswoman for Camp Shelby says two Air Force Reserve cadets have been taken to a hospital by ambulance and 75 others by bus after a lightning strike at the southern Mississippi base.

Army National Guard Maj. Deidre Musgrave says reserve cadets from around the country were at the Joint Forces Training Center for a two-week training stint.

She says all were responsive and stable after the lightning hit about 2 p.m. on Wednesday.

Camp Shelby near Hattiesburg is the nation’s largest state-owned military training center. Its 136,000 acres cut out of southern Mississippi’s rolling hills and pine forests includes mock cities designed to look like Iraq and Afghanistan to give soldiers realistic training.

Soldiers and airmen from around the country train there each year.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Economy falters in several U.S. regions

For the first time this year, the economy slowed in several U.S. regions this spring. High gas prices weakened consumer spending, and the Japan crises reduced manufacturing output.

Four of the 12 Federal Reserve bank regions suffered slower growth in April and May, compared with earlier this year, a Federal Reserve survey said Wednesday. Nationwide, the economy faltered in May. Hiring slowed, orders to factories declined, and home prices fell.

The report helped to confirm a slew of reports that point to an economy growing more slowly than at the end of last year.

Fed banks in New York, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Chicago said the pace of growth slowed. Boston, Cleveland, Richmond, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, and San Francisco said growth continued at a steady pace.

The Dallas region was the only one to report accelerating growth, mostly because of higher oil prices that benefited the energy industry.

The report, known as the “Beige Book,” is based on anecdotal information gathered by officials at the Fed regional banks from their business contacts. It is released eight times a year and provides a more in-the-trenches look at the U.S. economy.

FDA: Some chicken may contain arsenic

The Food and Drug Administration said Wednesday that some chicken meat may contain small amounts of arsenic, though the agency is stressing that the amount is too tiny to be dangerous to people who eat it.

The FDA said Wednesday that a new study developed by the agency shows that an ingredient in chicken feed that contains arsenic, called Roxarsone, may make its way into parts of the bird that are eaten. Previous studies have indicated that the arsenic was eliminated with chicken waste. Pfizer Inc., which makes the feed ingredient, said Wednesday that it will pull it off the market in the United States. Had the company not stopped sales, the FDA could have eventually banned the product since it contains a known carcinogen.

Many poultry producers have already stopped feeding their birds the ingredient, which has been used since the 1940s to kill parasites and promote growth. The FDA said that people should not stop eating chicken that may have been fed the drug. Michael Taylor, FDA’s deputy commissioner for foods, said the study raised “concerns of a very low but completely avoidable exposure to a carcinogen.”

MLB DRAFT

Bruins' Sneed taken by Rangers

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

Cy Sneed had to wait until the final day, but he finally got his name called.

Sneed was selected on Wednesday's Day 3 of the Major League Baseball First-

Year Player Draft, tabbed by the Texas Rangers in the 35th round (1,074th overall selection). The 6-foot-4 flamethrower just completed his senior season at Twin Falls High School, going 9-0 with a 1.36 ERA. He also hit .467 with 11 home runs and 38 RBIs in leading the Bruins to the Class 4A state championship, their first title in 21 years. Sneed, the Gatorade Idaho Player of the Year, currently competes for the Twin Falls Cowboys Class AA American Legion Baseball team.

After being led to believe he'd be taken earlier — at least two teams and the MLB's scouting bureau suggested the top 12 rounds — Wednesday brought a balance of frustration and relief.

"It's pretty cool but it was also pretty frustrating," said Sneed, whose father Bob was drafted by the New York Mets in 1986. "We were in Boise (Tuesday) in the hotel, about 15 of us, and every time the Royals and Rangers had a pick we crowded around and heard other kids' names. It almost felt like I let those (teammates and friends) down."

The draft's first normal and compensatory rounds were held Monday, with Rounds 2-30 on Tuesday and 31-50 on Wednesday.

Sneed is the third Twin Falls player, all pitchers, drafted out of high school since 1994. Rob Welch was taken in the fourth round

CSI's Huber again picked by Marlins

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

It's not the first time, but hearing his name called never gets old for Travis Huber.

For the second time in as many years, Huber was selected by the Florida Marlins on the final day of the Major League Baseball First-Year Player Draft. This year the College of Southern Idaho pitcher was taken in the 39th round (1,183rd overall), eight rounds higher than Florida drafted him in the 2010 edition.

"It was exciting leading up to it, and nerve-racking through it all," Huber said from San Luis Obispo, Calif., where he's playing summer ball. "I'm glad it's over and I'm just so excited to be drafted again. It's a huge honor."

Jenna Sharp is the 2011 Times-News Girls Golfer of the Year.

For love of the game

Bruins' Sharp caps high school career, looks forward to college

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

Jenna Sharp and golf have a fickle relationship.

"Sometimes I hate it, sometimes I love it. It's kind of a love-hate relationship," Sharp said.

During her four-year career at Twin Falls, however, Sharp's love of the game far outweighed the hate as she helped the Bruins earn district titles and a state trophy each season.

"I love it when I have a great hole," Sharp said. "It's just those little moments when you have that one putt that's amazing, or that one chip-in, or an amazing drive. In the end when everyone is smiling at you and they're saying congratulations and they're proud of you — those are my favorite moments of golf."

The 2011 Times-News Girls Golfer of the Year finished her senior season as medalist at three events and took seventh place at the Class 4A state tournament.

"She just got better as the year progressed and she became the leader of our golf team," said Twin Falls coach Matt Harr. "She was the one pushing girls out to practice. It was good to see her focused. Toward the end of the year her teammates followed her."

Sharp was a part of Twin Falls' Class 5A state titles in 2008 and 2009, and helped the Bruins win back-to-back Class 4A third-place trophies in 2010 and 2011.

"I feel like I set a good example for the other girls and taught them that with hard work you can achieve a great four years of high school golf," she said. "Golf is a sport where if you don't have it perfectly you're not going to do very well, so you have to work really hard at it. Each season in high school is during crappy weather, and so you really have to love it to make yourself work at it and improve."

Moving to the next stage of their relationship, Sharp and golf will spend the next four years together at Idaho State University.

"I'm proud of what I've accomplished these four years of high school golf," Sharp said. "But I know I can do better. That's what this summer is for — I'm going to work my hardest so that I can get myself ready for college. I'm really excited to play college golf. It's going to be such an exciting experience. I'm sure I'm going to love it."

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

Thoughts on Twin Falls senior Jenna Sharp

"Jenna has been a great golfer her whole high school career and she's a great sport as well. She's consistently the best golfer that Twin Falls has and she just has a great attitude." — Wood River coach Chet Olson

"(College golf) is a big adjustment because you're playing with the best of the best, but she's got the right type of attitude and personality and I think she will fit right in and do well." — Twin Falls coach Matt Harr

Best of the Rest: The Magic Valley's other top girls golfers

Katherine Reed and Sydney Lee, Twin Falls: Reed and Lee shared the Bruins' No. 1 spot with Jenna Sharp this season, as all three golfers had their shining moments. The Bruins were untouchable in District IV play, winning the team title by 102 strokes. District medalist Reed finished fifth at state, while Lee was sixth. "This year the team as a whole did really well," said Twin Falls teammate Jenna Sharp. "Sydney and Katherine are really great players. ... Whenever we got together we had fun no matter what. The best memories were going to the tournaments, especially state, and just playing with each other and making each other improve."

Jennie Williams, Wood River: The junior led Wood River to an appearance in the Class 4A state tournament. Williams finished runner-up at the Class 4A District IV tourney.

"Since she was a freshman, Jennie has been the one that comes to every practice and stays late. She puts in the time and pays her dues to get better," said Wood River coach Chet Olson.

Angela Vitek, Gooding: As the top golfer on Gooding's Class 2A District IV championship team, Vitek was runner-up at the district tourney and finished third at the state tournament.

"She only really started playing a little over two years ago and she became a really good player in a short period of time. It will be interesting to see as she continues to play how much better she's going to get," said Gooding coach Troy Vitek.

Sierra Harr, Castleford: Harr capped her freshman season in style, topping the leaderboard as the Class 2A District IV medalist, followed by medalist honors again a week later at the 2A state tournament.

"She's just a true competitor. She's spent a lot of time playing the game of golf," said Castleford coach Laurie Howard.

Cowboy comeback: Twin Falls sweeps Seminoles

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

Down 10 runs in the fourth inning of their fifth game in three days, it would have been easy for the Twin Falls Cowboys to mail it in. They'd had a rough week, they were out of pitching and their plate approaches weren't as crisp as they needed to be.

But then they scored three runs and shut down the Boise Seminoles in the fourth inning. Then they scratched across another run. Then four more. Then two to tie it.

In the bottom of the eighth inning, what should have been a crushing defeat became an improbable win as Zayne Slotten ripped an inside pitch over the left-field wall for a two-run walk-off homer, lifting the Cowboys to a 12-10 win and a Wednesday sweep of the Seminoles at Skip Walker Field.

"This is a big one for us to be able to build some confidence and hopefully keep swinging the bats," said Slotten, who tossed a complete game in the Cowboys' 6-3 opening win. "It's nice to come up in that clutch situation so you can see what you're made of, whether you can come through or not?"

Twin Falls (6-2) gave up two runs in the first and third innings of Game 2, followed by a six-run fourth that should have put the game away. Michael Garcia was chased and John Hohnhorst walked the only two batters he faced. But Marcus Donaldson came in, helped stop the bleeding, and didn't give up another run the rest of the way.

"This is good for us. (American) Legion is totally different, we play all the (Class) 5A schools and it's better competition on the whole," Slotten said. "We're tired, but now we get the weekend off and we'll be ready to go Monday."

Minico's RBI tourney begins

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

RUPERT — The annual RBI Tournament is set to begin today at Minico High School's Warburton Field, albeit two teams fewer and one day shorter than last year.

The three-day, eight-team aluminum bat tournament features four squads from Idaho and four from Utah.

The 2011 RBI Tournament will continue a tradition it began two years ago, playing a pair of "midnight madness" games.

"Truthfully, the kids and fans enjoy the late ones," said Minico coach Ben Frank.

The tournament is divided into two leagues. The American League consists of Minico, Caldwell, Box Elder (Utah) and Helper (Utah). The National League consists of Kuna, the Poky Rebels, Northridge (Utah) and the Utah Sox.

Minico, the only Magic Valley team in the field, opens the tournament at midnight against Caldwell. On Friday, the Spartans play Helper at 6:30 p.m. and Box Elder at midnight.

On Saturday, each team will be seeded according to

Nine-team Donnelley Tournament in town

By David Bashore
Times-News writer

Nine teams, including three in the area, are in town today through Saturday for the 2011 Donnelley's Tournament, held jointly at Twin Falls and Canyon Ridge high schools.

"It'll be a good chance for us to shake off the rust and get going. We're still getting to know some of our players," said Twin Falls Cowboys coach Mark Schaal, whose Class A American Legion Baseball team is 0-2 to start the season.

The Kimberly Astros, the Twin Falls Cowboys (TFHS) and Twin Falls Hawks (CRHS) are the three local teams in participation.

They'll be joined by Upper Valley (St. Anthony), Blackfoot, Meridian, Centennial (Meridian), Marsh Falls (Inkom) and Greater Nevada (Winnemucca).

Each team will play three games to count to their standings before placement play begins on Saturday. The Cowboys will play four to balance the schedule, but their game against Upper Valley will not count in the standings.

Schaal expects Kimberly and the Twin Falls Hawks to be in the mix for the tournament title, which will be settled at 4:30 p.m. Saturday.

"Kimberly had a great season, and the Hawks just keep getting better and better," he said.

Bruins rout Canucks, even Finals

BOSTON (AP) — Just three days after the Bruins staggered back to Boston, they've barged right back in to the Stanley Cup finals with two brilliant blowout wins.

Tim Thomas made 38 saves in his third shutout of the playoffs, Rich Peverley scored two goals after replacing injured Nathan Horton on Boston's top line, and the Bruins emphatically evened the finals at two games apiece with a 4-0 victory over the foundering Vancouver Canucks in Game 4 on Wednesday night.

Michael Ryder and Brad Marchand also had goals for the Bruins, who chased Roberto Luongo early in the third period after Vancouver's star goalie allowed his 12th goal in less than two games.

The finals are now a best-of-three, with Game 5 in Vancouver on Friday night.

Game 6 is Monday night back in Boston. After outscoring Vancouver 12-1 in the last two games, the Bruins are halfway to their first NHL title since 1972 — but they'll have to win at least once on the West Coast.

Boston opened its first finals trip in 21 years with two deflating one-goal losses last week in Vancouver, but the Bruins have wrested all momentum from the suddenly shaky Canucks with two thoroughly dominant wins.

Luongo gave up four goals on 20 shots before Cory Schneider replaced him, ending yet another shaky defensive performance for the Presidents' Trophy-winning Canucks, who were inexplicably passionless in Boston.

Vancouver needed just one win in Boston to earn the chance to win the franchise's first championship on home ice. Instead, the Canucks headed home with huge questions about their mental toughness, defense and goaltending.

The Bruins rolled on an emotional high that began with a stirring pregame tribute to Horton. The right wing will miss the rest of the series after incurring a serious concussion early in Game 3 on a hit from Vancouver defenseman Aaron Rome, who was suspended

Ortiz, Sox roll Yankees

NEW YORK — David Ortiz hit one of three Boston homers to back a tireless Tim Wakefield and the Red Sox extended their domination of the Yankees this season, beating New York 11-6 on Wednesday night to take over first place in the AL East.

Carl Crawford and J.D. Drew also connected, both in the ninth inning to break the game open for a second time. Jacoby Ellsbury had three hits and Adrian Gonzalez added two RBIs.

Facing his most familiar foe in Wakefield (3-1), Derek Jeter finished 1 for 5 to move within 11 hits of 3,000. He had a run-scoring double but also grounded into a rally-killing double play.

Alex Rodriguez homered for the banged-up Yankees, who have lost seven of eight meetings with their longtime rivals this season — including all five at home.

MARINERS 7, WHITE SOX 4, 10 INNINGS

CHICAGO — Miguel Olive drove in three runs, including a go-ahead two-run double in the 10th inning, and the Seattle Mariners beat the Chicago White Sox 7-4 on Wednesday night.

Justin Smoak started the winning rally with a leadoff bloop double off White Sox closer Sergio Santos (2-2). Adam Kennedy drew a walk, then Olivo — who had a solo homer in the eighth against his former team — drove in both runners with a grounder just inside of third base and into the left-field corner.

BLUE JAYS 9, ROYALS 8

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Adam Lind hit a grand slam and Jayson Nix added a three-run homer to power the Toronto Blue Jays to a 9-8 victory over the Kansas City Royals on Wednesday night.

Corey Patterson snapped an 0-for-11 skid with four hits and scored two Toronto runs.

RANGERS 7, TIGERS 3

ARLINGTON, Texas — Alexi Ogando scattered six hits over 7 2-3 innings to remain unbeaten, Adrian Beltre homered, and the Rangers avoided a three-game sweep by Detroit.

Detroit had 21 runs and 38 hits while winning the first two games of the series and had taken four straight overall.

ORIOLES 3, ATHLETICS 2

BALTIMORE — Rookie Zach Britton took a four-hitter into the seventh inning, Mark Reynolds homered, and the Orioles beat the skidding Athletics for a three-game sweep.

TWINS 3, INDIANS 2

CLEVELAND — Ben Revere's two-out RBI single in the 10th inning off closer Chris Perez gave the coming-to-life Twins a win over the slumping Indians, who can't seem to shake free of their June swoon.

NATIONAL LEAGUE ROCKIES 5, PADRES 3

SAN DIEGO — Troy Tulowitzki hit a two-run double off closer Heath Bell with one out in the ninth inning and Colorado beat San Diego 5-3 on Wednesday to take two of three in the series.

Tulowitzki had been 0 for 14 lifetime against Bell (2-2), a two-time All-Star, before his hit to right-center. He finished with three hits and three RBIs.

PIRATES 3, DIAMONDBACKS 2, 12 INNINGS

PITTSBURGH — Andrew McCutchen led off the 12th with a home run and the Pittsburgh Pirates reached .500 with a 3-2 win over the Arizona Diamondbacks on Wednesday night.

McCutchen took a 3-2 pitch from Zach Kroenke (0-1) high and just inside the left-field foul pole for his team-leading 10th home run — the second time he has ended a game with a home run.

Boston Red Sox batter J.D. Drew follows through on a two-run home run during the ninth inning against the New York Yankees on Wednesday at Yankee Stadium in New York. The Red Sox won the game 11-6.

CUBS 4, REDS 1

CINCINNATI — Carlos Pena and Aramis Ramirez hit home runs on consecutive pitches in the fourth inning to back Ryan Dempster's pitching as Chicago snapped an eight-game losing streak.

Dempster (5-5) went six innings for his fourth win in his last five decisions. He allowed three hits and one run with one walk and eight strikeouts.

GIANTS 3, NATIONALS 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Matt Cain struck out 11 in his first complete game of the season and had an RBI double to help San Francisco to its sixth win in eight games.

Rookie Brandon Crawford hit a tiebreaking RBI triple in the seventh inning and later scored an insurance run to help the first-place Giants win their third straight series.

PHILLIES 2, DODGERS 0

PHILADELPHIA — Cole Hamels struck out nine in eight innings and Ryan Howard homered to lift Philadelphia.

Hamels (8-2) allowed six hits and walked none while lowering his ERA to 2.58. He improved to 3-0 with a 1.18 ERA in five career regular-season starts against Los Angeles. He is 3-0 in three career post-season starts against the Dodgers.

BRAVES 3, MARLINS 2, 10 INNINGS

MIAMI — Freddie Freeman singled home the go-ahead run in the 10th inning and Atlanta extended Florida's losing streak to seven games.

The Braves' Derek Lowe took a no-hitter into the seventh before he tired. Lowe gave up two hits and no runs in 6 2-3 innings.

BREWERS 7, METS 6

MILWAUKEE — Nyjer Morgan drove in the winning run with two outs in the ninth and Prince Fielder hit two homers for Milwaukee.

The Brewers trailed 6-2 before scoring four times in the eighth, capped by Fielder's second two-run blast.

ASTROS 4, CARDINALS 1

HOUSTON — Bud Norris took a no-hitter into the seventh inning and teamed with Mark Melancon to hold St. Louis to two hits.

Norris (4-4) pitched eight scoreless innings, allowing only former Astro Lance Berkman's solo homer with two outs.

for four games.

Bobby Orr, the Hall of Fame defenseman and Boston icon, wore his own No. 4 jersey as he waved a flag bearing Horton's No. 18, drawing thunderous cheers while standing in the lower bowl under a spotlight. Hundreds of Canucks fans in blue jerseys joined in the cheers for Horton, who scored the winning goals in both of Boston's Game 7 victories during these playoffs.

With the victory secure in the final minutes, the entire building loudly chanted Horton's name.

Thomas was outstanding yet again. He has allowed just five goals in four games in his first Stanley Cup finals, with Vancouver's vaunted Sedin twins — the NHL's last two scoring champions — failing to beat him.

Despite the NHL's warning to these teams about keeping their competition between the whistles, the third period featured another handful of skirmishes. Thomas delighted Boston's fans when he slashed Vancouver agitator Alex Burrows with 1:51 to play, precipitating another brawl.

Obama welcomes Auburn to White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cam Newton joined his former Auburn teammates Wednesday for one more celebration of their national championship, this time at the White House.

President Barack Obama congratulated the Heisman Trophy winner and the Tigers for their perfect season.

"There's a guy named Cam Newton who had a pretty good season and went on to win the Heisman Trophy. So obviously that's really extraordinary," Obama said.

Newton left Auburn after one season and was drafted first overall by the Carolina Panthers in April.

Newton had a record-breaking season in his one year at Auburn, but it was also filled with scandal. His father was found by the NCAA to have peddled his son to Mississippi State for money when Cam Newton was being recruited out of junior college.

Newton ultimately ended up at Auburn and he led the Tigers to their first national championship since 1957, despite all the controversy about his recruitment.

All-American defensive tackle Nick Fairley, who also gave up his senior season to enter the NFL draft not long after Auburn's 22-19 victory against Oregon in the BCS championship game, made the trip to the White House, too.

Auburn was set to visit the White House in late April, but the trip was postponed so Obama could fly to Alabama to survey tornado damage.

"Coach (Gene Chizik) and I were just talking about — you don't understand the devastation until you see it firsthand," Obama said.

"But what was also inspiring was the amount of strength and generosity that was shown by so many people in the midst of so much tragedy. And that includes the members of this program. Two days after the tornado, almost 70 Auburn coaches, players, and athletic department staff — led by Coach — traveled to Pleasant Grove and Cullman to help out with relief efforts.

"And even though one of the toughest-hit areas by the storm was the home of the Crimson Tide, this team knew what we all know in situations like this, which is we're all on the same team."

In a close NBA Finals, James plans to be better

DALLAS (AP) — For nearly a year, LeBron James has shaken off the criticism, laughed off the trash talk. None of it mattered to James, not as long as the Miami Heat remained on the route to a championship. But when that pursuit became threatened in part by his own poor play, James couldn't ignore the only critic that matters: himself. James said Wednesday he "didn't play well" in Game 4, when the Dallas Mavericks edged the Heat 86-83 to even the series at two games apiece after the two-time MVP failed to find ways to make an impact offensively. "I didn't do that last night," James said. "Those are the things that I pride myself on that hurt me the most. I'll just be hard on myself and figure out a way to do it better the next game." The Heat arrived about 30 minutes late for their interview session Wednesday after watching extra film of the game, though they could have saved time by just fast-forwarding through James' no-show. He scored only eight points, held in single digits for the first time in 90 career playoff games, and attempted only 11 shots. James said he criticized himself all night, taking solace that he had at least two more chances to turn things around for himself and his team.

"If it was the Super Bowl, I would be kicking myself in the foot. We have one game. That's it," James said. "The great thing about this, it's a series. No matter if you can have a bad game, you can always make an imprint on the next game. Game 5 is a huge game." And the way this series is shaping up, probably a close one. Three straight games have been decided by three points or fewer, the first time that's happened in the championship round since 1948, according to STATS, LLC. The Baltimore Bullets and Philadelphia Warriors played Games 2-4 within a three-point margin during those Basketball Association of America finals, a year before that league merged with the National Basketball League to become the NBA.

And while James has come under increased scrutiny for his passive play, Dirk Nowitzki is cementing his reputation by overcoming injury and illness to rally the Mavs to victories in two of the last three games. "Really, are there two guys that get more compared to Superman than Dwyane Wade and LeBron James? Think about it," Mavs president Donnie Nelson said. "Then our guy was the superstar that never really was a superstar because he was from Europe, or he was soft, or he couldn't win the big game." Not anymore. Not after Nowitzki made the go-ahead layup with a left hand that had a torn tendon in his middle finger with 3.6 seconds left in Game 2, and certainly not after fighting through a fever of 101 degrees to score 10 of his 21 points in the fourth quarter of Game 4. He felt better Wednesday morning, saying the fever had broke, though precautions were being made to make sure he didn't get anyone else sick. The microphone Nowitzki used for interviews was immediately replaced — teammate Tyson Chandler followed him and joked to "burn that mic!" — but the big German was already planning a workout later in the evening and thinking ahead to Thursday night. "I think we have to be ready for anything," he said. "I think usually it's the team that loses that looks at the film and says, 'Hey, we have to do this.' Usually the team that loses has more of an edge, makes some adjustments with the coaches."

BELMONT STAKES Motion remains well-grounded

NEW YORK (AP) — The priorities for Graham Motion haven't changed — family first, everything else follows. And that includes Kentucky Derby winner Animal Kingdom. He has won big races before in 18 years as a trainer, including a couple at the Breeders' Cup with Better Talk Now and Shared Account and a Whitney Handicap with Bullsbay. Never, though, has the good-natured 47-year-old Englishman been through a Triple Crown grind like the one that will end with Saturday's Belmont Stakes, when he sends out his Derby winner against Preakness winner Shackleford and 10 other 3-year-olds. Despite his unforgettable journey through Kentucky, Maryland and New York, Motion refuses to let the hectic pace get to him. Even family and friends say so. "His mother and I are extraordinarily proud of him, and through it all he's been determined to spend as much time as possible with his family," his father, Michael Motion, said Wednesday morning at Belmont Park. "What he's accomplished is absolutely amazing." Just the other day, for example, the trainer left Belmont Park and returned home to Fair Hill, Md., where he attended Tuesday's middle school graduation of his daughter, Jane. It was a family affair, and Michael Motion said the keynote speaker's family centered remarks reminded him of his son, who is based at the Fair Hill Training Center instead of at a racetrack just so he can spend as much time as possible with his wife, Anita, Jane, and son Marcus. "Graham has really got this way of life about him," said his father, who was an international bloodstock agent for 40 years. Fellow trainer David Donk, who has known Motion for 13 years, couldn't agree more. Their families are close, they spend time together at Fair Hill and Saratoga, and Motion not only stables his horses at Donk's barn when they run in New York, he also bunks at his house less than a mile from Belmont. "He's got a really good staff, a great wife and goes home to his kids at night," Donk said. "He's got a beautiful, quiet demeanor. He'll tell you he hasn't slept as well last month but at same time I think he is trying to enjoy it and let it soak it in." Donk recalled Motion's post-Derby comments following his return to Fair Hill. "He kept telling everyone he didn't want to talk about the Preakness," Donk said. "I want to enjoy this for a few days" he said. He didn't want to get tense and bothered about the next race." As a trainer, there's not much you can do to avoid it.

Clarett says athletes to blame, not Ohio State

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Former Ohio State running back Maurice Clarett blames athletes rather than coaches and fans for the culture that created problems in the Buckeyes' football program. "There's no secret regime, there's no secret congregation of people who sit around at Ohio State who gives young guys money," Clarett said Wednesday on The Dan Patrick Show. "Anything that any player goes and gets is all based on him and who he meets in the community. The coaches and the university have no control over what the young guy's doing." The NCAA is investigating

Ohio State players who allegedly received improper benefits and special deals on cars. Five players have been suspended for the first five games this fall for trading signed jerseys, championship rings and other items for cash and discounted tattoos from a Columbus tattoo-parlor owner. Buckeyes coach Jim Tressel was forced to resign last week for knowing about the players' involvement but not reporting it as required by his contract and NCAA rules. Star quarterback Terrelle Pryor, one of those suspended and a subject of the NCAA probe, announced Tuesday that he would not return for his senior season. Clarett, ruled ineligible after carrying Ohio State to its first national championship in 34 years in 2002, said the university cannot control everything that players do. "There wasn't any coach or any booster or any member in or around Ohio State who helps you get a car," Clarett said, recalling his own time on campus. "It doesn't go on. It's just guys doing what they want to. People will forever do what they want to. It's nothing more than young guys making mistakes." Clarett questioned the foundation of big-time college football, where universities and coaches make millions off athletes yet the players get in trouble with the NCAA for accepting cash for autographs or memorabilia. "Why are they even in that position? Why is it that a university can profit $20 million, $30 million, $40 million and these guys are in the position that they have to sell their memorabilia — the only thing they have of value at that point?" Clarett said. "Why are they even in that position to do that, when there's enough money to go around?"

Sneed

(103rd overall) by Boston in the 1994 draft, while Nick Carr was tabbed by the New York Mets in the 41st round of the 2005 draft (1,227th overall). Sneed has signed to play next season for Dallas Baptist University, which this weekend will play in the NCAA Division I Super Regional round for the first time in school history. Sneed said Wednesday he's leaning toward keeping that commitment, but he will listen to what the Rangers have to say. "We'll just see what happens with it. The ball's in their court right now. They have to start all that (contract) stuff," Sneed said. "We'll wait and see what happens and go play baseball (either way)." Draftees with remaining college eligibility must come to terms on a professional contract by 10 p.m. MDT Monday, Aug. 15, or wait until their next draft-eligible year. Junior college players are eligible at the end of every season but four-year college players must wait until their 21st birthday or their junior season, whichever comes first.

Draft

Huber made the transition from CSI's closer to its No. 2 starter. He went 6-3 with two saves, posting a 3.75 ERA and striking out 51 batters in 57 2-3 innings. Huber has signed to play next season at Nebraska, which will have a new coach in former big-leaguer Darin Erstad, a former No. 1 overall draft pick. Huber said he's excited about that opportunity but will listen to the Marlins as well. "They want to see how I do this summer, and whether I can do the kinds of things they want to see," Huber said. "We'll see how it goes, how I do and what the offer is, but right now I'm leaning to Nebraska." Two less-recent CSI players were also taken in the draft. Left-handed pitcher Tyler Barrett, a fourth-year junior at Lewis-Clark State College, was selected in the 20th round by the Detroit Tigers, and Gonzaga outfielder Tyler Chism was selected in the 43rd round by Kansas City. Both played for the Golden Eagles in the 2008-09 seasons.

NFL, players meet for 2nd day in N.Y.

NEW YORK (AP) — Whether they are meeting in secret locations or in the middle of Times Square at rush hour, talks between NFL owners and players are a good sign. Commissioner Roger Goodell has been saying that ever since the lockout began on March 12. Players, agents and lawyers familiar with the negotiating process second the notion. Both sides met Wednesday for a second straight day in New York, with Judge Arthur Boylan joining Goodell and NFLPA chief DeMaurice Smith. It was the second time this week that the sides got together. Last week, they met twice near Chicago.

Also on hand were five team owners and five players. That's a critical component for reaching a new collective bargaining agreement. "Having meetings on a regular basis is not nearly as important as having productive talks," said agent Ben Dogra, whose clients include Patrick Willis and Sam Bradford. "If having productive talks encompasses meeting on a regular basis, then it is a good for them to meet as often as possible." Both sides seem ready to do that as they await a ruling about the legality of the lockout from the federal appeals court in St. Louis. The factions aren't due back in court until August. On Wednesday, Judge Susan Nelson moved up a hearing for the league's motion to dismiss the players' antitrust suit from Sept. 12 to Aug. 29 — nine days before the regular season is scheduled to begin.

"NFL owners and players continue to be engaged in confidential discussions before Chief Magistrate Judge Boylan," the two sides said in a joint statement. "Both sides met again this week as part of ongoing court mediation. Those discussions are expected to continue." A person familiar with the talks told The Associated Press that the owners and players will meet again "soon and often. That means in the near future, not in a month or anything like that." The person spoke on condition of anonymity because the talks were supposed to remain confidential. On hand at the latest talks were owners John Mara of the New York Giants, Jerry Richardson of the Carolina Panthers, Robert Kraft of the New England Patriots, Clark Hunt of the Kansas city Chiefs and Dean Spanos of the San Diego Chargers. Representing the players were NFLPA President Kevin Mawae, Mike Vrabel, Tony Richardson, Domonique Foxworth and Jeff Saturday. Goodell told Buccaneers ticket holders Wednesday that "any time we're talking that's a positive because I believe both sides want to find solutions." "I believe it's the objective of everybody involved with the NFL to play a full 2011 season," Goodell said during the conference call. "That's certainly what we're working towards, and I think the players are working towards that, too. It's for the good of the game, it's for the good of the people involved in the game, and it's absolutely good for the fans."

CFL team looking at ex-Buckeye QB Pryor

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The Saskatchewan Roughriders have acquired the negotiating rights to Terrelle Pryor and have spoken to Pryor's lawyer about bringing the former Ohio State quarterback back to the Canadian Football League. Pryor's attorney, Larry James, said Wednesday that the CFL is a genuine possibility for the ex-Buckeye. "Yeah, it's like I told (the Roughriders). My house is not for sale, but at the right price, it's on the market," James said. James was in a meeting and had yet to speak with Pryor about the Roughriders, however. James said he did not believe Pryor had ever mentioned the CFL as a strong possibility in their conversations. Pryor, a three-year starter for the Buckeyes, announced on Tuesday that he is giving up his senior season while the NCAA investigates Ohio State players getting improper benefits, including tattoos, cash and possible sweetheart deals on cars. Pryor has admitted he broke NCAA rules by accepting improper benefits from a Columbus tattoo-parlor owner. Roughriders general manager Brendan Taman told The Associated Press on Wednesday that the team owned Pryor's CFL negotiation rights and was intrigued by the 6-foot-6, 233-pound quarterback. "He's a heck of an athlete," Taman said. "We get a lot of U.S. college football up here. We're well aware of him. With the (bigger) field up here in Canada, with the athlete that he is, he would be an interesting component to come up here and run around and do some things as a quarterback." Taman said he was more concerned about Pryor's passing ability than his past. "It (the CFL) is a pass-oriented league, so that's one thing he'd have to master," he said. "But as a runner he would flourish up here, I know."

DEAR ABBY: I am severely myopic and can't see without my prescription eyewear. Yet people continually ask me if they can "borrow" my glasses to read the menu. (I work as a hostess.) Abby, my glasses are not reading glasses; they are my eyes — literally. When I explain this, I get snorts, grunts and muttered comments that I am "rude."

My husband says I should let them try on my glasses and cut out the explanation, as they would immediately realize that they can't see through them. I disagree. I think it is inappropriate to even ask, let alone become offended when I politely refuse. Abby, I would like to explain the concept of reading glasses versus prescription eyewear: Most people do not walk around with reading glasses fully on their face. Reading glasses are often halfway down the nose or hanging around a person's neck so they don't impair his or her distance vision. If someone is wearing glasses full on their face — they're usually not reading glasses. If a person is wearing glasses, do not ask to borrow them. Instead, ask if there is a pair of reading glasses at the wait station or host stand.

— THE BLIND LEADING THE BLIND

DEAR "BLIND": I'm printing your letter, but I warn you — there are none so blind as those who will not see. For a stranger to expect to borrow someone's glasses is presumptuous. If the bows were bent or the lenses were broken, you'd be in serious trouble. Talk to your employer about keeping a magnifying glass or several pairs of reading glasses in various strengths available for patrons who have forgotten theirs. Many restaurants do. With our aging demographic, it's good business, because people order more when they can see the menu.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I'm a female manager in a male-dominated field, and a high-level corporate executive. I am good at what I do, but sometimes I become impatient with subordinates who don't "get it" like I do. I admit I prefer the company of some over others.

Several years ago, a friendship with a subordinate turned into something more. I was, and still am, married with children. During this time I had to discharge another employee for substandard performance. Since he left he has sent me several unsolicited emails in which he has suggested that he knows about the affair I had with his former co-worker and feels he didn't receive fair treatment because of it.

My former lover is no longer with the company, and I have done everything I can to put this behind me. I still worry, however, that the employee I let go may someday make the company aware of my indiscretions, or worse, my family. Abby, is there anything I can do to set the whole thing right?

— THREATENED IN THE NORTHWEST

DEAR THREATENED: Let me get this straight. You say you are good at your job as a manager, but you lose patience with subordinates who don't "get" things as quickly as you do — and play favorites among the employees in your department. If that's not a hostile work environment, it's at least one that's very unpleasant. And you had an affair with one of them? Didn't you know that you were leaving your company open to a lawsuit for sexual harassment? It appears that when you assumed the title of manager, you exceeded your level of competence. You have gotten yourself into a jam from which I can't extricate you. Go to your superiors and tell them about the emails so the company can protect itself from a possible lawsuit for wrongful termination. Stop deluding yourself and face the consequences of any indiscretion you have made because you have placed not only yourself, but also your employer, in jeopardy.

Repairs

IF JUNE 9 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You are more romantic than usual, so are eager to follow any lead, but are somewhat gullible. You will do better if you try to forge sound friendships in the next six to eight weeks. By September, you could find a romantic partner who has the potential for true love. That is a good time to be patient and exercise self-control, as anything worth having is worth waiting for. October through December is not a good time to make crucial financial decisions. Wait until January when your judgment is sound and you will be more likely to be successful with anything you begin.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You could make a maddening muddle of your moolah. If you are in a rush to complete projects or achieve important objectives, you could throw good money after bad. Sidestep unnecessary expenditures today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Crying over spilled milk will not refill the bucket. Mix-ups and misunderstandings need to be righted as soon as possible by using directness and honesty. Mingle with family or friends to boost your spirits.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Get involved in formal social gatherings and actively play the game of life. You can sign up for a book club or attend a lecture. Treat everyone with an equal measure of attentiveness and courtesy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): People could misinterpret your words or actions. Put initiatives on hold for the moment and focus on appearing as innocent as possible. You are unlikely to achieve a satisfactory compromise now.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be a friend and be friendly. At the same time, do not read too much into anyone's offer of undying love. If you remain detached and do not allow intimacy to develop too quickly, a new relationship can grow.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Innocent until proved guilty. Those closest to you could be somewhat mystifying. Don't think the worst of anyone until undeniable proof is presented. People might misconstrue your probing questions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are willing to sacrifice much to maintain the peace. Your sensitivity to the needs of others makes you a sympathetic friend and a prized helpmate — but an overactive imagination can cause trouble.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The facts could be crystal clear to you, but others could misunderstand your motives. While this brief period of cosmic confusion is in place, it is best to avoid signing contracts or making crucial promises.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Partners loom large in importance. It is imperative that you and your partner are each other's best friend. Don't fulfill each other's fantasies. Share financial secrets.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Participate in group activities or meetings and be a status seeker today. People will see through the façade if you brood over imagined injustices or pretend you are not interested in social climbing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Wait a few days to make a final decision. Someone's accurate appraisal of key situations might tempt you to join forces. There could be more important matters at stake — which are currently camouflaged.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Unforeseen misinterpretations could cause trouble. You think you are being aboveboard, but others might sense hidden knowledge. Watch your dollars carefully, as they may escape from your grip.
