Private instructors to lead Idaho's online classes

Luna spokesman: Linking students to in-class teachers would 'defeat the purpose' of online classes

By Dan Popkey
Idaho Statesman writer

BOISE — For Sugar-Salem School District Superintendent Alan Dunn, adjusting to Idaho's K-12 reforms meant innovating. And fast.

Dunn spearheaded a consortium with the Jefferson, Jerome and Madison districts to offer distance learning programs on the Idaho Education Network. They plan to

Until Monday, Dunn expected that would satisfy the online education requirement for high school graduation under Idaho Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna's reform plan, sparing the four districts from giving up money to other providers.

But during the first meeting of a Technology Task Force subcommittee that includes Dunn, he learned from a Luna aide that classes delivered over IEN will not satisfy the mandate if the teacher works at the student's school.

"That wasn't our understanding as we went through this," said Dunn, whose district has about 1,500 students. "That may change the things we were planning to do."

Dunn said his first priority is quality instruction, but that he also must protect his district's financial health.

Andy Grover, chairman of the Online Learning Implementation subcommittee, is in a similar spot as Melba superintendent. He's eyeing a consortium as well and was disheartened to hear the news from Luna aide Jason Hancock.

"As a superintendent of a small school district I want to guard my ADA (average daily attendance) pretty close," Grover said, referring to the attendance-based formula that drives the state funding structure.

Hancock cited Luna's Senate Bill 1184, which defines an online course as "a course which delivers a sequential program of synchronous and/or asynchronous instruction primarily through the

What constitutes an online class?

The confusion of the online issue results from a portion of the education reform bill (SB 1184), where it refers to "a course which delivers a sequential program of ... instruction primarily though the use of technology, in which the instructor is not physically located at the school or place in which the student is receiving instruction."

Jerome Fire Department, MVERT issues still unresolved

Teams from Pocatello or Boise would need to be called if there ever is a hazmat incident

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

The Jerome Fire Department still has access to teams needed for hazardous materials emergencies, despite not participating in the Magic Valley Emergency Response Team.

The city's fire department, which recently ended its association with the team because of the fire chief's concerns about training and equipment safety, would call in a team from Pocatello or Boise for a hazmat incident in Jerome, Fire Chief Mike Hatfield said.

"Right now without the Magic Valley team, that's where our response would come from for the time being until this gets sorted out," he said, adding that the two-hour lag in the response time isn't a concern and still meets requirements.

The city and regional response team are still trying to work out their differences. MVERT asked the Jerome City Council last week for help resolving the situation.

A work session is expected to take place later this month with both sides, though it hasn't been finalized yet.

"I foresee it will get resolved," Hatfield said, adding that MVERT would be his team of choice if all the issues are settled.

HIZZAZED FIREWORKS?

Don't the cities pay for fireworks?

The city of Jerome typically pays for fireworks there. This year, tight budgets squeezed that item out. The city of Twin Falls typically donates $8,000 to local fireworks organizers, some from permit fees for fireworks booths and the rest from its general fund. Mayor Don Hall said he and other council members want to get away from donating tax dollars, in part to avoid backlash over decisions made by a private organization.

Five days before deadline, M.V. fireworks group needs $15,000

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Wednesday morning, five days from their fireworks order deadline, heads of the Magic Valley Citizens' Fourth of July committee were fretting over if the sky would glow in Twin Falls on Independence Day.

By Wednesday night, they became a little surer that patriotic booms would fill the air on July 4, though they still need $15,000 to meet their $35,000 goal. Organizer Ruth Pierce said she had started calling every contact she had, gaining $4,200 in pledges on Wednesday.

That short sprint renewed her confidence that the committee will host a second successful show, though its scope is still a concern.

Local schools wrap up negotiations

T.F. teachers get more work days, potential for salary advancement

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

On Wednesday morning, Twin Falls School District trustees unanimously ratified next year's collective bargaining agreement between the school and its teachers.

Over the course of nine public meetings, which lasted anywhere from two to six hours each, the Twin Falls Education Association and the school board wrote an agreement that defined the salary, benefits and leave time district educators will receive during the coming school year. The end result was a much smaller document compared to ones in the past, as education reforms signed into law this year limited the scope of negotiations. All other issues that were previously discussed in negotiations — including working conditions and break times — will

WHAT WILL CHANGE

Here are some of the ways teacher contracts in the Twin Falls School District will change from this year.
Days: Teachers are contracted to work 187 days, up six from this year
Health insurance: The district will pay $332 more per employee
Dental insurance: The district will pay $1.45 more per employee Salary advancement: Teachers will be eligible for raises based on education and experience.

become policies decided by individual school boards.

In Twin Falls, teachers will be paid for 187 days of work — six more than this year — and the district will pick up the bill for increased health and dental insurance. Teachers will also be eligible for raises if they advance in education or experience, something that was put on hold this current year. The district may add five more paid days to contracts if state revenues allow it to do so.

Various south-central Idaho superintendents said the new negotiation process wasn’t met with much debate. Jerome schools chief Dale Layne said teams from his district and the Jerome Education Association were able to complete negotiations in two meetings. He said the board, however, had more work than usual before the meetings to review policies to reflect the new laws.

In Jerome, negotiations brought teacher salaries up to the state’s required base pay of $30,000 a year for first-year teachers. Talks also restored 1 1/2 days lost to furloughs last year. Jerome teachers will have 181.5-day contracts next year.

Idaho high schools are required to provide students 990 hours of instruction per year, or 165 days if they provide six daily hours of instruction.

The district also agreed to pick up increased insurance costs for its educators.

“It gives the school board more control, but there wasn’t any controversy on anything,” Layne said of the new negotiation process. “The staff won’t see any major changes.”

Buhl School District Superintendent Byron Stutzman said his district’s negotiation process went smoothly. No days were added to the 178-day calendar the district operated on this year, and grievance policies will be handled by the school board. The district also bumped up beginning salaries to reflect the state’s mandated base salary.

While negotiation meetings were open to the public for the first time this year, most didn’t see marked attendance. Layne said only one person showed up for one of the meetings. TFSD board member Dan King said the new format offered a great opportunity for both parties to allow public participation.

TFSD chief Wiley Dobbs said he expects the negotiation process to be shorter in the future. But depending on changes at the legislative level, they could continue to take hours of time.

“We had to go through every word this year so the letter of the law was upheld,” he said. “It caused a lot more time to be involved.”

Pedestrian hit by car, sent to hospital

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

One person was sent to the hospital on Wednesday afternoon following a pedestrian versus vehicle accident in Twin Falls.

According to Twin Falls police, a vehicle turning left onto Filer Avenue from Monroe Street struck a pedestrian, who was in the crosswalk. The accident happened around 2 p.m.

The pedestrian was taken to St. Luke’s Magic Valley Medical Center. Police did not release the names of either party, as the accident is still under investigation.

Hearing set for Jerome teen accused of shooting brother

A Jerome teenager said he was tired of his brother’s bullying, but didn’t mean to shoot him. Now Zachary Sparks faces a Friday preliminary hearing for felony aggravated battery with a deadly weapon.

Sparks, 18, is set to appear in Jerome County 5th District Court, where a magistrate judge will decide if there’s enough probable cause to formally charge Sparks in district court.

According to the police report, Jerome County sheriff’s deputies arrived at the men’s mother’s residence at around 5:30 p.m. on May 4 and found Sparks’ brother, Harry Sparks, sitting on the couch with a gunshot wound to his hand and leg. Deputies found Zachary in the garage, where the teen told them the shooting was accidental.

Zachary claimed his brother was screaming at his mother and wouldn’t calm down. When Zachary confronted Harry, he was thrown up against a wall.

Zachary then told deputies about getting a shotgun from his bedroom. He said he thought the safety was on when he pointed the shotgun at his brother.

Although the mother, Kathy Sparks, told deputies Zachary shot Harry, she said she did not see the shooting.

The maximum penalty for the charge is 30 years in state prison.

HOA treasurer pleads not guilty in embezzlement case

A Bliss woman accused of taking approximately $24,000 from the Malad Estates Homeowners’ Association pleaded not guilty to felony grand theft on Tuesday in Gooding County 5th District Court.

Leslie Jones, 50, is set for a Sept. 28 trial. She is accused of taking the money while working as a treasurer for the association. According to the police report, the theft was discovered in April when the association president and vice president decided to audit the books. A new treasurer was set to take over from Jones starting in May.

The report notes that Jones admitted the theft to the association’s top officers and repaid nearly $12,000 by taking money from her retirement account. During an interview with Gooding County sheriff’s detectives, Jones said she used the money for medical expenses and that the situation “spiraled out of control.”

The maximum punishment for grand theft is 14 years in state prison and a $5,000 fine.

Appeals court upholds ruling in teen shooting case

BOISE (AP) — The Idaho Court of Appeals has upheld a lower court ruling denying a Bellevue man a new trial for shooting two teenagers in 2004.

The judges ruled last week in the case of 54-year-old

David Santistevan, who is serving a 35-year prison term for shooting 15-year-old Tyrel Peak and 19-year-old Marshall Hooten seven years ago.

Last year, 5th District Judge Robert J. Elgee dismissed a petition claiming Santistevan did not receive a fair trial and suffered from ineffective legal counsel during his trial.

The Idaho Mountain Express reports that the appellate judges ruled the claims were without merit.

Fireworks

The citizens’ committee took over fireworks duty last year from Southern Idaho Fireworks amid outcry that the former organizing and fundraising group proposed moving the display to Monday, July 5, in 2010 so it wouldn’t land on a Sunday. Riding that wave, in which an observer at a Twin Falls City Council meeting waved a $50 bill he touted as the first donation for a July 4 show, the new committee raised more than $17,000 in nine days last year.

In that short burst of fundraising, the committee raised more cash than it had on hand Wednesday morning. This year, it had only raised about $2,000 in new donations, had about $5,100 rolled over from 2010 and an $8,000 donation from the city of Twin Falls — $15,000 total and $20,000 short of its Monday goal.

The shortfall is made worse by the citizens’ committee upping its fundraising goal by $10,000 to include Jerome in the celebration.

“I anticipated this (shortfall) a little bit,” Pierce said. “But I actually have been really surprised (at the shortfall) because there was a lot of passion related to the holiday, also. I mean, we had soldiers in Iraq and Afghanistan donating through PayPal” in 2010.

The lack of passion this year, without the turmoil of a potential July 5 show, contributed to the slow fundraising, officials said. Without a tight deadline for a Fourth of July show, some pledges told Pierce that time had simply gotten away from them. Others just needed to be asked or to find out the need, she said.

More fireworks Q&A

Will the fireworks show be canceled?

The Magic Valley Citizens’ Fourth of July show is not canceled, though it is far behind its stated fundraising goal. The show is a combined effort between Jerome and Twin Falls fundraisers, and will be at the College of Southern Idaho.

Is the shortfall a result of fallout from last year’s Fourth of July controversy?

All the organizers denied this and in 2010, the former fireworks organizers said they would be as supportive as possible.

Can I still donate?

Yes. Donate online at magicvalleyfireworks.org or at the following locations: Stevens Pierce and Associates, the Pioneer Club, Twin Falls City Hall, all Oasis Stop ‘N Go locations in Twin Falls and Jerome, and at the Jerome County Fairgrounds.

Organizer Ruth Pierce can also be contacted about donations at 734-8662.

Rbrt Groves, head of the Jerome Events Committee and lead on Jerome fundraising for the fireworks committee, said his solicitations have had to include education on his fireworks plans, or the lack of them. The city of Jerome, which normally funds a fireworks show, cut that expense this year due to budget concerns, prompting Groves to get involved with the Twin Falls effort.

If the fundraising effort had only limped on from the $15,000 mark, Groves said the group would have faced a tough decision: having a lackluster show, or having none this year and putting the cash toward 2012.

“One of the things that is discussed that no one wants to talk about is rolling the funds over,” Groves said. “If we don’t meet the goal, do you do a small, scaled-down version and say ‘wasn’t this combined effort of two towns so great’ and try to convince people that it was? Or do you wait a year and try to do it again?”

But Twin Falls’ quick-strike fundraising last year raises his hopes — although before Wednesday’s blitz, the committee had to raise more money in fewer days than it had last year.

“You have to do what you have to do,” he said. “And we have to raise $20,000 by Monday.”

Jerome County mulls addition to zoning code

Times-News

Jerome County commissioners are considering a zoning ordinance change that would add commercial subdivisions to the county’s regulations.

The county currently doesn’t have an ordinance for commercial subdivisions.

The change would require a special use permit in commercial and commercial overlay zones and the city impact area along the frontage of U.S. Highway 25, U.S. Highway 93, and Interstate 84. Commercial subdivisions wouldn’t be allowed in other zones.

The county has a public hearing on the matter scheduled for 9:30 a.m. June 28 in Room 300 of the Jerome County Courthouse, 300 N. Lincoln, Jerome.

The public can comment for up to five minutes per person.

Copies of the proposal are available at www.jerome-countyid.us or at the Jerome County Planning and Zoning Office in the courthouse between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. on weekdays.

Ketchum looks at overhauling city government

By Ben Botkin
Times-News writer

The city of Ketchum may change its form of government in the future.

The Ketchum City Council plans to form a seven-member advisory committee to look at three models of city government and possibly make recommendations that could lead to a different structure of governance. Those models are: the traditional mayor and council structure, in which the council and mayor have more power; a city manager form, which delegates more authority to a full-time administrator; and a “hybrid” model that combines both.

Ketchum currently has a hybrid model, in which Mayor Randy Hall authorizes City Administrator Gary Marks to handle most duties in a city manager format, such as wrangling the budget and supervising city departments.

Marks said the council tentatively plans to appoint the committee’s members at its July 5 meeting. The advisory committee’s meetings will be open to the public, he said.

The committee will give a report to the council by Oct. 31. If any changes are pursued, the council would hold a public election on the matter no earlier than May 2012.

“We believe this hybrid form of government works extremely well,” Hall said in a statement. “However, we will enlist some citizens to examine alternatives to be sure we’re doing the best we can for our residents.”

The council on May 31 had passed a resolution to put a committee in place to look at the issue.

Marks said a citizen had approached the council about the potential change, adding that it’s good to be open to ideas.

“It doesn’t hurt to have a review and have the people be educated about the different forms,” he said.

City leaders stressed the need to carefully weigh the decision.

“Any decision to change government is more than just political — there are legal, financial and managerial ramifications. The issue needs to be fully vetted, especially in light of today’s tough economic conditions,” Hall said in a statement.

Online classes

use of technology, in which the instructor is not physically located at the school or place in which the student is receiving instruction.”

That could hurt consortiums because they were counting on keeping their ADA for all students, including those at the school where the teacher resides.

But Hancock said allowing face-to-face access in these required online classes would “defeat the purpose” of teaching students the skills necessary for online learning, which they’ll need in college and in life.

“If they just put the kids next door (in a different classroom), would that constitute an online class?” Grover asked Hancock.

“Not if the teacher’s in the building,” replied Hancock.

Said Dunn, with a preface that he was being facetious: “We may see a lot of students walking over to the elementary school.”

The details are no joke, however. Other committee members who work for the state-funded Idaho Digital Learning Academy are concerned that for-profit vendors will claim their students. IDLA is partly staffed by Idaho teachers supplementing their incomes.

Meanwhile, task force members like Cliff Green, regional vice president for the for-profit Insight Schools, see opportunity.

“It’s been hard to come into a state and compete with subsidy,” Green said, referring to IDLA. “Now, whoever has the best product will win.”

Luna’s 39-member task force met for the first time Monday and Tuesday and has scheduled two meetings a month through December. The meetings are budgeted to cost $100,000, with another $75,000 for presenters and travel to other states and districts. By Jan. 31, the task force must report to the Legislature ideas to help implement the law in fall 2012

— as opponents work to overturn the reforms at the polls that November.

Luna hired a facilitator from Maryland, Lauren Morando Rhim, who looked in on Monday’s discussion of what constitutes an online class. She urged the panel to see the big picture.

“There seems to be lots of very, very almost tedious details into coming up with that definition, and I’m not sure if that’s the best use of your whole committee’s time,” she said. “I would encourage you all to step back a little bit to think more broadly about online learning issues.”

Grover replied that the definition isn’t his subcommittee’s priority. Rather, he said, his group is working on how to implement the online mandate, mechanisms for splitting ADA funds and a payment plan for summer online courses.

Senate Education Committee Chairman John Goedde, R-Coeur d’Alene, was a co-sponsor of the reforms and sits on Grover’s subcommittee.

“We passed a law and now comes the hard part of making it all work,” Goedde said. “It’s going to take awhile to get our arms around the issues.”

Girl fights back tears at triple-murder suspect’s hearing

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press writer

MOUNTAIN HOME — A teenage girl sniffed back tears Wednesday in an Idaho courtroom as she pointed out the man accused of killing her mother and two young brothers, then burning their bodies and leaving them in the desert.

Noemi Ramirez, 16, testified at a preliminary hearing for Jorge Alberto Lopez-Orozco, who is charged with three counts of first-degree murder and was once on the FBI’s list of most-wanted fugitives.

Authorities allege Lopez-Orozco killed Rebecca Ramirez and her sons — ages 2 and 4 — nine years ago before fleeing the area. He was apprehended in Mexico in October 2009, and was extradited to Idaho earlier this year.

Mexico’s policy is not to extradite suspects who might face execution, so prosecutors have agreed not to pursue the death penalty in the case.

No motive has been released. Elmore County investigators have said that Rebecca Ramirez and Lopez-Orozco had been having an on-again, off-again affair that was well-known in the community, though Lopez-Orozco’s wife may not have been aware of it.

On Wednesday, Lopez-Orozco listened through a Spanish interpreter as Noemi Ramirez testified that she last saw her mother at her grandfather’s house in July 2002. She said the woman left in a white car with Lopez-Orozco, whom the girl knew as “Pepe,” and her two young brothers.

Noemi Ramirez, who was 7 at the time, said she wanted to go with her mother and at first, she joined her brothers and climbed into the car.

“I wanted to stay so I got back out,” she testified through her sobs.

Liliana Pedroza Sanchez, a 27-year-old Mountain Home woman, testified that Lopez-Orozco was her neighbor in 1999 and 2000. She said one of her friends received a call from Orozco in July 2002 because his car ran out of gas.

Sanchez testified that she and her friends borrowed a container from a gas station after an employee refused to let them fill up their empty milk jugs. She said the group then drove to meet Lopez-Orozco who poured the gas into the milk jugs and put them in the trunk of his car.

Sanchez testified that Lopez-Orozco was driving a white car.

“I noticed the passenger seat of the vehicle was laid back and someone was laying there,” said Sanchez, who later went to police after seeing a local news story that said Lopez-Orozco was a murder suspect and three bodies had been found in his car.

Sanchez said she was concerned because her fingerprints were on the milk jugs.

“I didn’t want to get involved in anything serious,” she said.

Rebecca Ramirez, 29, and her young sons — two of her seven children — were killed around July 31, 2002. The woman was identified, in part, because jewelry her father had given her was found with the remains, according to investigators.

Idaho couple’s dream home turns into slithering nightmare

By Jessie L. Bonner

REXBURG — They slithered behind the walls at night and released foul-smelling musk into the drinking water. And they were so numerous that Ben Sessions once killed 42 in a single day.

Shortly after buying their dream home, Sessions and his wife discovered it was infested with thousands of garter snakes. For the next three months, their growing family lived as if in a horror movie. More than a year after they abandoned the property, the home briefly went back on the market, and they fear it could someday attract another unsuspecting buyer.

the musk released by the snakes as a warning to predators.

But because of the paperwork they had signed, the couple had little recourse when they decided to flee the home. They filed for bankruptcy, and the bank foreclosed on the house.

The Sessions left in December 2009, the day after their daughter was born and just three months after moving in.

“We’re not going to pay for a house full of snakes,” Sessions said.

His wife, Amber, said she felt like their family was starting to fall apart.

“It was just so stressful,” she said. “It felt like we were living in Satan’s lair. That’s the only way to really explain it.”

Several months ago, the house briefly went back on the market.

Now owned by JP Morgan Chase, it was listed at $114,900 in December, according to Zillow.com, a real estate data firm. That price fell to $109,200 in January.

Then, the Animal Planet network featured the Sessions’ story in its “Infested” series.

The listing was removed, and it has stayed off the market while Chase decides what to do with it.

A Rexburg real estate company that was hired to sell the house referred all questions to a Chase spokeswoman in Seattle.

Darcy Donahoe-Wilmot did not return repeated phone calls from The Associated Press. But she told a business columnist for Dow Jones Newswires that the bank had contracted to have the snakes trapped and released elsewhere.

Sessions said that he has been diagnosed with snake-related post-traumatic

Concussion and the Adolescent Athlete
Thursday | June 23 | 5:30 to 7:00 PM | Twin Falls High School | Roper Auditorium

Boise State running back, Matt Kaiserman, will discuss the series of concussions he suffered culminating with a career ending hit in the Maaco Bowl last December, highlighting the importance of properly recognizing, diagnosing and treating concussions in athletes. Dr. Carolyn Faure, a concussion expert, will review cause and effect and current legislation surrounding concussion in the adolescent athlete, and address the critical role parents play in managing their child’s concussion with the appropriate medical team as they return-to-play. Physicians, athletic trainers, coaches, parents and anyone interested in the management of concussion in young athletes is encouraged to attend.

Emergency Action Planning
Friday | June 24 | 5:00 to 7:00 PM | Canyon Ridge High School | Football Field

Participants will learn the importance of a documented, structured, and well understood Plan of Action, and why one should exist at every school and athletic activity. Physicians, athletic trainers, physical therapists and local EMS will discuss chain of command, access and evacuation routes, as well as safety guidelines for spectators and trained medical professionals. The forum is targeted toward coaches, parents, athletes, school administration, and any health care professionals who may need to respond to an emergency situation at an athletic event, and will end with a demonstration of a plan in action and sample documents.

Financial disclosures show not much has changed in Congress

By Kathleen Hennessey, Kim Geiger and Richard Simon
Tribune Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The arrival of nearly 100 freshmen did little to change the overall financial picture of Congress, financial disclosure reports showed Wednesday: On the whole, lawmakers are a well-heeled lot.

House Speaker John A. Boehner, R-Ohio, reported a net worth ranging from about $2 million to $6 million in 2010, much of it in blue-chip stocks.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., reported a net worth of at least $3.35 million.

However, the reports offered reminders of more typical financial burdens. Many lawmakers reported unpaid student loans or hefty credit card balances. One cash-strapped freshman put himself on his campaign payroll to make ends meet last year.

The reports disclose lawmakers' unearned income and liabilities in broad ranges, making it difficult to describe exact transactions or precise net worth. Lawmakers do not have to include any information about their primary residences.

Many members opted for an extension and will file their 2010 reports later.

Beyond the numbers, the annual reports provide a window into the oddities and luxuries in the private lives of the nation's public servants. A husband pouring money into a struggling football league. A California congressman's good day or two at the races. A pricey ride home on a private jet.

Rep. Grace Napolitano, D-Calif., used her campaign committee to generate cash. Napolitano received a final payment of $5,000-$15,000 on an outstanding loan she made to her campaign committee in the late 1990s. The $150,000 loan produced at least $132,700 in interest over 13 years, according to financial filings dating back to 1998. At one point, the congresswoman charged her committee 18 percent interest. "I didn't need the money," Napolitano said, explaining why she had waited so long to retire the debt.

Boehner's report showed his investments had increased roughly 15 percent in value since 2009.

His wealth, however, hardly compares to his predecessor, House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., who is one of the wealthiest members of Congress. Pelosi's investment-banker husband, Paul, poured at least $650,000 into a new professional football league and at least $1.8 million into the Sacramento Mountain Lions, one of the league's five teams. He sold at least $2 million in Apple stock and at least $765,000 in Cisco Systems stock in 2010.

Another of the richest is Rep. Darrell Issa, R-Calif., who made his fortune in the car-alarm business. Issa is worth at least $200 million, according to his report, but the precise figure is impossible to determine.

Lawmakers also must disclose gifts, such as the $14,500 lift home that Sen. Dianne Feinstein of California gave to Reid and his wife on the day before Christmas Eve.

"Senator Feinstein was flying to San Francisco and stopping in Reno was of little inconvenience to her," Reid spokesman Jon Summers said.

Rep. Dennis Cardoza, D-Calif., reported financial interests in racehorses — among them Tres Locos and Unanimous Consent. Some of his horses produced thousands of dollars in winnings.

Nobody’s happy? Welcome to the world of emergency dispatch

Forget bitter high school football and basketball rivalries: The nastiest disputes among neighboring communities of the Magic Valley in recent years have been over 911 emergency dispatch issues.

And now Blaine County and its cities are experiencing the same.

Blaine County’s commissioners decided earlier this month to delay for at least a year a switch to a volume-of-service-based 911 funding method because cell phone calls are geographically hard to track. They instructed county employees to look for a better way.

Our view:
Can’t we all just get along? Not when 911 emergency dispatch service is on the line.

As it stands, each city’s share of the tab is allocated on the basis of the total number of parcels or addresses in each community.

Calls-for-service would be a good deal for Ketchum and Sun Valley; Hailey and Bellevue insist they couldn’t afford it.

Exactly the same arguments have been heard throughout the 16-year history of the Southern Idaho Regional Communications Center, which serves Twin Falls, Jerome, Gooding and Lincoln counties. The city of Twin Falls went its own way in 2003, partly over service concerns and administrative issues but largely because it disagreed with how much it was being charged.

Although Idaho law defines what’s expected of cities and counties who agree to join forces on 911, emergency dispatch is basically a coalition of the willing. Since 1995, for example, the city of Hansen (population 1,051) has refused to pay its SIRCOMM assessment because emergency response is covered by the rest of SIRCOMM members.

So if Hailey — which has threatened to pull out of the consolidated emergency 911 dispatch center — is asked to pay substantially more than its current $138,898 annual assessment, it probably will leave.

The only real clout that officials who run 911 systems have is a willingness to negotiate a better deal, as SIRCOMM’s board has learned time and again.

So maybe Blaine County will come up with a more accurate system for tracking cell phone calls and figure out ways to compensate one jurisdiction’s emergency responders who handle calls in another city.

Yet even if they do, emergency dispatch will be an issue for years to come.

Instead of unemployment benefits, offer a ‘signing bonus’

Washington politicians are flailing for job-creation ideas like a drowning man lunging for a life preserver. President Obama probably remembers Ronald Reagan’s setup and punch line: “A recession is when your neighbor loses his job. A depression is when you lose yours. And recovery is when Jimmy Carter loses his.”

Todd G. Buchholz

So it’s no surprise that rumors of new payroll-tax cuts and dreams of a new infrastructure bank have followed the miserable jobs report released June 3.

Here’s a simple idea to cut unemployment that won’t cost the government any more money and won’t require devaluing our currency: Turn unemployment benefits into a signing bonus.

Until the Great Recession, few economists could have imagined that the government would offer laid-off workers up to 99 weeks of jobless benefits, the maximum now allowed. Ninety-nine is a very large number, and most likely the wrong number if you’re trying to spark a recovery. And so, here we are with a 9.1 percent unemployment rate — even higher when you count those millions of discouraged, marginalized Americans who’ve given up looking for work and are hoping to hang on to their sanity.

It’s time to turn the joblessness machine into a jobs machine. By transforming unemployment benefits into a signing bonus, we can create new incentives to propel people back into the workplace sooner, rather than later. Too many Americans are sitting on the sidelines, waiting for the end of benefits or for a higher-paying job to come along. You can’t blame them.

John Maynard Keynes pointed to the “sticky wages” problem. The laid-off U.S. Steel worker who had earned $60 an hour is n’t eager to pack his lunchbox for a 25 percent pay cut. Eventually, unless his skills justify $60 an hour, he will have to relent or retire permanently. This does no good for his mental health, and it damages the overall economy.

When you combine sticky wage expectations with 99 weeks of jobless benefits, pretty soon you’ve got a lot of depressed people sitting on their sofas watching daytime reality shows on the flat-panel TVs they bought on credit. You wind up with 2.1 million private-sector jobs created in the past 15 months, while actual hiring looks flat.

More than 6 million Americans have been out of work longer than six months, and the average span of joblessness is nearly 40 weeks and rising since last year, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Unemployment benefits may have added between 0.4 and 1.7 percentage points to the jobless rate, even before benefits were extended to 99 weeks.

The federal government and the states must overhaul unemployment payments to prod people forward, not cushion them while they wait for the phone to ring. Here’s my plan for structuring a better system to do that:

After 26 weeks of receiving benefits, a job-seeker would be eligible for a “signing bonus” equal to three additional months of benefits if he or she took a full-time job. It wouldn’t matter whether the job paid more, less or the same as the worker’s old one. We don’t want the logistics mess of a “cash for clunkers” type of program, in which the government had to figure out which clunkers really clunked.

After 39 weeks, weekly benefits would expire, but the job-seeker would be eligible for a two-month signing bonus if he or she took a job. This bonus opportunity would expire after 52 weeks.

This plan would create a greater incentive to take a job after 26 weeks than after 39 weeks, and a huge incentive to go back to work before a year has passed. The longer one holds out, the less one gets.

While this proposal may sound harsh to some, since it would cut off weekly benefits at 39 weeks instead of 99, the signing bonus effectively would give the job-taker 11 months of support. During the brutal recession of the early 1980s, which drove the jobless rate to 10.8 percent and bludgeoned factory workers with an uncompetitive dollar, benefits maxed out at 42 weeks.

Under my plan, the signing bonus would be available only as long as the national unemployment rate remains above 7.5 percent. This, too, creates urgency to get back into the workforce before the economy returns to normal.

Losing a job hurts deeply. For all the Dilbert cubicle jokes and television parodies such as “The Office,” most Americans like to work and like their jobs. Gathering around a water cooler beats waiting around for the mailman to show up at the house. We want to feel that rush of dopamine when we face a new challenge at work. We need that forward momentum to be creative and to find some slivers of happiness in this crazy world.

And a signing bonus, like pro athletes and Wall Street guys get — albeit with fewer zeroes — could be a pretty nice push.

Todd Buchholz was a White House economic adviser to George H. W. Bush. He wrote this commentary

The knock on the door in the middle of the night

I bet you didn’t know that federal law enforcement officers representing the Department of Education can break down your front door if you are suspected of violating the law.

I was not aware of this until I heard what happened to Kenneth Wright of Stockton, Calif. On June 7, at 6 a.m., Wright was awakened by a knock on his door. According to his account, he came downstairs in his boxer shorts, but before he could reach the door, federal police officers stormed in. They were looking for his estranged wife, who was not in the house. Wright has no criminal record.

Wright told local TV station “News 10” he was grabbed by the neck and taken outside to his front lawn. He says officers then awakened his children, ages 3, 7 and 11, and put them in a Stockton patrol car while his house was searched. “They put me in handcuffs in that hot patrol car for six hours, traumatizing my kids,” he said.

DOE spokesman Justin Hamilton told the TV station that federal agents with the Office of Inspector General served the search warrant. Hamilton would not say why the raid took place, but he said it was not because someone had defaulted on student loans, as some local media initially reported.

A statement from the OIG said: “The reasons for our search warrant are currently under seal by the court and cannot be discussed publicly.” The statement added: “OIG ... is responsible for the detection and prevention of waste, fraud, abuse and criminal activity involving Department of Education funds, programs and operations.” If they were consistent, they’d be breaking down the doors of many failing public schools that are wasting taxpayer funds and allow especially poor and minority children out so they can choose better schools and have a brighter future.

Constitutional attorney John Whitehead, president of The Rutherford Institute in Charlottesville, Va., says the Stockton incident is one of a growing number of examples threatening the Fourth Amendment, which guarantees “the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures ...”

Whitehead says the passage of the U.S. Patriot Act “opened the door to other kinds of invasions” beyond the search for terrorist suspects. Worse, the courts are increasingly approving this cozy association between government and the police. “The problems inherent in these situations,” he says, “are further compounded by the fact that SWAT teams are granted ‘no-knock’ warrants at high rates, such that the warrants themselves are rendered practically meaningless.”

Two recent cases demonstrate the threat. In an 8-1 Supreme Court ruling last month (Kentucky v. King), Whitehead says the court “effectively decimated the Fourth Amendment by giving police more leeway to break into homes or apartments without a warrant when in search of illegal drugs which they suspect might be destroyed if notice were given.”

In the other ruling, the Indiana Supreme Court (Barnes v. State) said people do not have the right to resist police officers entering their homes illegally. Resistance, notes Whitehead, can be as simple as saying, “Wait, this is my home. What’s this about?”

If governments are permitted to slowly erode the Fourth Amendment and the public won’t resist, then not only that amendment, but others protecting speech, religion, the right to keep and bear arms and who knows what else could be in jeopardy.

Incidents like the one in Stockton should cause conservatives and liberals to be more vigilant about the encroaching power of government. If a gang of cops, acting on behalf of the Department of Education, can break down your door in possible violation of the Fourth Amendment, then none of us is safe.

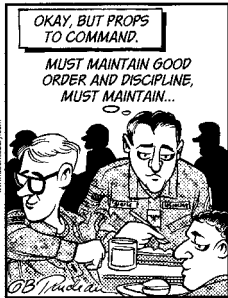

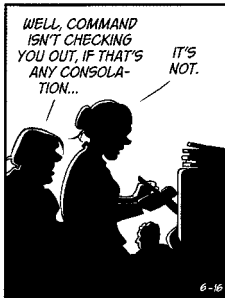

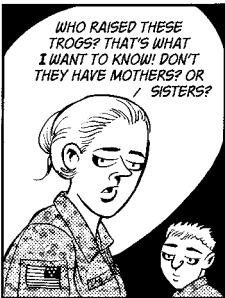

The New York Times reports the FBI’s approximately 14,000 agents are being given “significant new powers” that will allow them more freedom to search databases, examine your trash and use surveillance teams to scrutinize the lives of people who attract their attention.

THE LIGHTER SIDE OF POLITICS

Doonesbury

By Garry Trudeau

Mallard Fillmore

By Bruce Tinsley

We simply can't go on like this

You really do have to wonder whether a few years from now we'll look back at the first decade of the 21st century — when food prices spiked, energy prices soared, world population surged, tornadoes plowed through cities, floods and droughts set records, populations were displaced and governments were threatened by the confluence of it all — and ask ourselves: What were we thinking? How did we not panic when the evidence was so obvious that we'd crossed some growth/climate/natural resource/population redlines all at once?

"The only answer can be denial," argues Paul Gilding, the veteran Australian environmentalist-entrepreneur, who described this moment in a new book called The Great Disruption: Why the Climate Crisis Will Bring on the End of Shopping and the Birth of a New World. "When you are surrounded by something so big that requires you to change everything about the way you think and see the world, then denial is the natural response. But the longer we wait, the bigger the response required."

Gilding cites the work of the Global Footprint Network, an alliance of scientists, which calculates how many "planet Earths" we need to sustain our current growth rates. GFN measures how much land and water area we need to produce the resources we consume and absorb our waste, using prevailing technology. On the whole, says GFN, we are currently growing at a rate that is using up the Earth's resources far faster than they can be sustainably replenished, so we are eating into the future. Right now, global growth is using about 1.5 Earths.

This is not science fiction. This is what happens when our system of growth and the system of nature hit the wall at once. While in Yemen last year, I saw a tanker truck delivering water in the capital, Sana. Why? Because Sana could be the first big city in the world to run out of water, within a decade. That is what happens when one generation in one country lives at 150 percent of sustainable capacity.

"If you cut down more trees than you grow, you run out of trees," writes Gilding. "If you put additional nitrogen into a water system, you change the type and quantity of life that water can support. If you thicken the Earth's CO2 blanket, the Earth gets warmer. If you do all these and many more things at once, you change the way the whole system of planet Earth behaves, with social, economic, and life support impacts. This is not speculation; this is high school science."

It is also current affairs. "In China's thousands of years of civilization, the conflict between humankind and nature has never been as serious as it is today," China's environment minister, Zhou Shengxian, said recently. "The depletion, deterioration and exhaustion of resources and the worsening ecological environment have become bottlenecks and grave impediments to the nation's economic and social development."

The Earth is full. We are now using so many resources and putting out so much waste into the Earth that we have reached some kind of limit, given current technologies. The economy is going to have to get smaller in terms of physical impact.

We will not change systems, though, without a crisis. But don't worry, we're getting there.

The Earth is full. We are now using so many resources and putting out so much waste into the Earth that we have reached some kind of limit, given current technologies. The economy is going to have to get smaller in terms of physical impact.

We're currently caught in two loops: One is that more population growth and more global warming together are pushing up food prices; rising food prices cause political instability in the Middle East, which leads to higher oil prices, which leads to higher food prices, which leads to more instability.

At the same time, improved productivity means fewer people are needed in every factory to produce more stuff. So if we want to have more jobs, we need more factories. More factories making more stuff make more global warming, and that is where the two loops meet.

But Gilding is actually an eco-optimist. As the impact of the imminent Great Disruption hits us, he says, "our response will be proportionally dramatic, mobilizing as we do in war. We will change at a scale and speed we can barely imagine today, completely transforming our economy, including our energy and transport industries, in just a few short decades."

We will realize that the consumer-driven growth model is broken and we have to move to a more happiness-driven growth model, based on people working less and owning less. "How many people," Gilding asks, "lie on their death bed and say, 'I wish I had worked harder or built more shareholder value,' and how many say, 'I wish I had gone to more ballgames, read more books to my kids, taken more walks?'" To do that, you need a growth model based on giving people more time to enjoy life, but with less stuff.

Sounds utopian? Gilding insists he is a realist.

"We are heading for a crisis-driven choice," he says. "We either allow collapse to overtake us or develop a new sustainable economic model. We will choose the latter. We may be slow, but we're not stupid."

Thomas Friedman is a columnist for The New York Times.

U.S. Rep. Giffords out of hospital for first time since shooting

By Ramit Plushnick-Masti
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Rep. Gabrielle Giffords returned home to her astronaut husband on Wednesday, leaving behind a Houston hospital where she began to rebuild her life after a gunman shot her in the head five months ago.

Giffords' release marks a new phase in her recovery. She struggles to speak and walk, and will need daily, intensive therapy. Whether she will ever recover enough to resume her congressional duties is still unknown.

But doctors at TIRR Memorial Hermann, her husband Mark Kelly and experts who have been observing Giffords' recovery emphasize that going home is a key milestone and could help stimulate her progress.

"Anyone who knows Gabby knows that she loves being outside," Kelly said in a statement released by the hospital. "Living and working in a rehab facility for five months straight has been especially challenging for her."

Giffords will still go to the hospital each day where she will participate in speech, music, physical and occupational therapy with the same team that has treated her since she arrived in Houston in late January.

Now, however, at the end of each day "she will be with her family," Kelly said.

The congresswoman will move to Kelly's home in League City, a suburb near the Johnson Space Center, where she will have 24-hour help from a home care assistant.

The 41-year-old was shot in the left side of the brain, the part that controls speech and communication, on Jan. 8 while meeting with constituents in Tucson. Six people were killed and 13 wounded in the attack, including the lawmaker and members of her staff.

Her release from the hospital was met with excitement.

"When I went home from the hospital after surgery, I was so nervous, but boy it's wonderful to be home in your own surroundings, to be able to have things on your own schedule," said Ron Barber, who also survived the shooting.

"I'm sure it'll be uplifting and healing for her, too," he said.

Jordan Grafman, director of the Traumatic Brain Injury Research Laboratory at the Kessler Foundation Research Center in West Orange, N.J., said being around family often motivates patients. He warned, however, that the congresswoman is far from healed and will have many months, years and even a lifetime of recovery ahead of her.

As bank fees escalate, prepaid cards go mainstream

By Pallavi Gogoi
Associated Press

Rising fees have chased millions of people away from banks and into prepaid debit cards.

In just a handful of years, prepaid cards have become the fastest growing payment method in the U.S. Just this week, American Express became the first mainstream financial company to offer a prepaid card.

But the cards have problems of their own. Complex fee schedules. Few of the consumer protections afforded to bank and credit card customers. No ability to build credit history.

Consumer advocates are raising concerns and demanding more oversight and at least one state is investigating prepaid card issuers. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau is expected to step up oversight of the industry when it launches in July.

“People are using prepaid cards as checking accounts and the government ought to regulate it similarly,” says

Suzanne Martindale, staff attorney for Consumers Union, a nonprofit advocacy group that is concerned about unfair prepaid card fees.

Even so, Americans spent $140 billion using prepaid cards in 2009, according to the latest data available from the Federal Reserve. That’s a 21.5 percent increase each year over four years. The amount of money loaded onto the cards is expected to reach $552 billion in 2012 from $330 million three years ago, according to the Mercator Advisory Group, a research firm.

Prepaid cards have gone mainstream by catering to the ranks of the unbanked — people who don’t have a bank account. Nearly one in five Americans are unbanked, a 2009 government report found, and the number is growing.

Prepaid cards can be used to pay bills or buy merchandise in the same places a bank-issued debit card can be used. So it’s no wonder

The new business with a plant in Endicott, N.Y., made scales, time clocks, cheese slicers and — significantly for its future — machines that read data stored on punch cards.

‘Big Blue’ nickname remains a big mystery

The Associated Press

IBM has been known informally as Big Blue for decades, but the origin of the colorful nickname remains a mystery.

The term Big Blue has appeared in the press accounts since at least 1982. The “Big” refers to the global company’s size, but there are several possible explanations for the “Blue.”

The name may owe its origin to the IBM logo adopted in 1972. It depicts the three letters in bold horizontal stripes, often colored blue.

There also are suggestions that it is an allusion to the blue covers that IBM put on its mainframes in the 1960s or even the dark blue suits once worn by IBM’s conservatively dressed salesmen.

Uncertainty hasn’t deterred IBM Corp. from playing off the nickname. When the company put one of its computers up against Garry Kasparov in a chess match in 1997, IBM called the machine Deep Blue. More recently, it pushed frontiers in supercomputing with Blue Gene.

ENDICOTT, N.Y. — Google, Apple and Facebook get all the attention. But the forgettable everyday tasks of technology — saving a file on your laptop, swiping your ATM card to get 40 bucks, scanning a gallon of milk at the checkout line — that’s all IBM.

International Business Machines turns 100 on Thursday without much fanfare. But its much younger competitors owe a lot to Big Blue.

After all, where would Groupon be without the supermarket bar code? Or Google without the main-frame computer?

“They were kind of like a cornerstone of that whole enterprise that has become the heart of the computer industry in the U.S.,” says Bob Djurdjevic, a former IBM employee and president of Annex Research.

IBM dates to June 16, 1911, when three companies that made scales, punch-clocks for work and other machines merged to form the Computing Tabulating Recording Co. The modern-day name followed in 1924.

With a plant in Endicott,

N.Y., the new business also made cheese slicers and — significantly for its future — machines that read data stored on punch cards. By the 1930s, IBM’s cards were keeping track of 26 million Americans for the newly launched Social Security program.

These old, sprawling machines might seem quaint in the iPod era, but they had design elements similar to modern computers. They had places for data storage, math processing areas and output, says David A. Mindell, professor of the history of technology at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Punch cards carted from station to station represented what business today might call “data flow.”

“It was very sophisticated,” Mindell says.

The force behind IBM’s early growth was Thomas J. Watson Sr., a demanding boss with exacting standards for everything from office wear (white shirts, ties) to creativity (his slogan: “Think”).

Watson, and later his son, Thomas Watson Jr., guided IBM into the computer age. Its machines were used to calculate everything from

U of I Kimberly center hosts pest management tours

University of Idaho Extension researchers will offer tours of their Kimberly Research and Extension Center on Wednesday.

The pest management tours are free and open to the public. They will introduce attendees to the latest local research focused on how to control weeds, insects and other pests that can cut into crop yields. Participants can earn three Idaho State Department of Agriculture pesticide certification credits, and a lunch concludes each tour.

According to a U of I Extension release, the cold, wet spring has helped some weeds grow while crops have been held back.

Topics covered at the tour will range from herbicides to fungicides, Roundup Ready sugar beet systems versus conventional systems, and many others.

The center is at 3793 N. 3600 E., near Kimberly. For tour times and other information: Kimberly@uidaho.edu or 423-4691.

Redbox kiosk comes to Rupert location

American Falls-based company offers new product for truckers

American Falls-based Bully Dog Technologies on Wednesday announced the launch of the Heavy Duty WatchDog, a dashboard-mounted product that provides truckers information on their rig’s fuel efficiency, identifies and erases trouble codes, and adjusts the speed limiter, among other features.

According to a company release, the device allows truckers to read and erase trouble codes without having to visit a dealer, and helps drivers identify major issues that will require immediate assistance.

Brett Garner, new product development manager, said in a release that the speed limiter can help truckers avoid fines in areas where top vehicle speeds must be governed, and can help drivers gain fuel economy with a coaching device.

“The Heavy Duty WD provides both visual and audio feedback,” Garner said. “An instantaneous score ranging from A to F is displayed depending on how well they are doing in safe, efficient driving.”

The device will work immediately on CAT, Cummins and Detroit engines, while models for other engines are in development, according to a company release.

Pandora gains point to healthy Internet IPO future

By Michael Liedtke
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Internet radio station Pandora Media’s IPO struck the right chord with investors Wednesday despite the static in the overall stock market.

Pandora’s shares surged by as much 63 percent in their market debut before pulling back later in the session. The stock closed at $17.42, still a decent gain amid the market’s broader decline. It marked a 9 percent increase from Pandora’s initial public offering price of $16 and a nearly six-fold increase from what Pandora’s own board thought the stock was worth just six months ago.

The performance shows the recent market slump hasn’t dampened the enthusiasm investors have for new stock offerings from rapidly growing Internet services.

The excitement began to build after shares of professional networking site LinkedIn Corp. more than doubled on their first day of trading last month. Now it looks like the fervor could escalate into an outright mania as even bigger Internet companies such as online coupon seller Groupon Inc., Web game maker Zynga and the

Severe spring weather leaves behind battered records – and Americans

By Randolph E. Schmid
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — It was a spring to remember, with America pummeled by tornadoes, floods, wildfire, snowmelt, thunderstorms and drought.

Government weather researchers said Wednesday that, while similar extremes have occurred throughout modern American history, never before have they occurred in a single month.

The last time anything remotely looked like it was the spring of 1927, which also had a lot of tornadoes and flooding, said Harold Brooks of the Storm Prediction Center in Norman, Okla.

The tornado outbreak, floods and drought during April were comparable to extreme events in the past, but never so close together, agreed Deke Arndt, chief of the climate monitoring branch at the National Climatic Data Center in Asheville, N.C..

The preliminary tornado count was 875 for April, and even after duplicates are eliminated the final total is expected to approach the single-month record of 542 set in May, 2003, Tom Karl, director of the climatic data center, said at a briefing.

The tornado death toll for the year is 536 so far, Brooks said, making 2011 the 6th deadliest year on record. That may still rise somewhat, he added, though typically most annual tornado deaths occur by mid-June.

Statues of workers, part of the Monument for Labor by Matthew J. Placzek, stand in the rising waters of the Missouri River, in Omaha, Neb., Wednesday. The Missouri River has been rising steadily for weeks and is expected to reach 5 to 7 feet above flood stage in most of Nebraska and Iowa, and possibly higher in Missouri.

The researchers explained that April brought an active weather pattern across the 48 contiguous U.S., with strong storms moving through the center of the country, tapping into moisture from the Gulf of Mexico as they matured across the mid-Mississippi Valley. Contributing to the thrashing were the La Nina conditions in the Pacific Ocean, unusually warm ocean temperatures in the Gulf of Mexico and the increase of moisture in the atmosphere caused by the warming climate.

But Karl cautioned against focusing on any single cause for the unusual chain of events, "clearly these things interconnect."

Nonetheless, April lived up to poet T. S. Eliot's description as the cruellest month, and March and May contributed to the battering in the three months of climatological spring.

So far this year the United States has suffered eight disasters costing $1 billion or more and the total damage to date is $32 billion and rising, Karl said. If no more disasters occurred, 2011 would still rank in the top 25 percent of years for disaster costs, he said.

La Nina is marked by a cooling of the tropical Pacific Ocean and has now returned to more normal conditions.

However, when it is under way it sets up a storm weather track that brings storms into the upper Midwest and then south into Ohio Valley. This resulted in the extremely thick snow-pack in some areas that contributed to the spring flooding and also brought dry, windy conditions to the southern Plains.

The spring warming then brought the warm, moist southerly flow of air in from the Gulf of Mexico, contributing energy to the storms that developed into the outbreaks of tornadoes and other severe storms.

Years with more tornado deaths than 2011 were:

- 1925, with 794.
- 1936, with 552.
- 1917, with 551.
- 1927, with 540.

Arizona wildfire biggest in state history

SPRINGVILLE, Ariz. (AP) — A single campfire likely sparked what is now the largest blaze in Arizona history, and authorities said Wednesday they've questioned two "persons of interest" as the massive wildfire and two others threaten separate corners of New Mexico.

However, investigators declined to call the two people suspects or speculate on whether they'll face charges or be found liable to pay restitution.

Area residents had mixed feelings about how hard officials should go after those responsible.

"It's done," said Reed Schmidlin, 61, who was evacuated from his Springerville home. "There's not a lot you can do about it."

He said prosecuting those responsible would just add to the fire's cost.

Lilly Miller, 63, left, thanks Nutrioso Fire Department firefighter Dave Denali, as Denali and another firefighter drove up to check on her family Wednesday in Nutrioso, Ariz.

In New Mexico, the tourism secretary said the state had been hoping for a modest rebound in tourism this summer.

But with fires burning near three of the state's four borders, she's trying to stay optimistic and reassure people that New Mexico is open for business.

The fire burning in eastern Arizona's Apache-Sitgreaves National Forest continued its cross-border threat to Luna, N.M., as it grew to 478,452 acres of forest, or nearly 750 square miles, fire command team spokesman Alan Barbi-an said.

Of that, 4,911 acres were in New Mexico and 473,541 in Arizona, making it the largest fire in Arizona history, although nowhere near the most damaging to homes. The fire was about 29 percent contained by late Wednesday afternoon, but authorities were expecting high winds Thursday, Friday and Saturday, with gusts up to 45 mph, fire command spokesman Jim Hyland said.

The blaze forced nearly 10,000 people to evacuate in several small mountain communities and two larger towns on the forest's edge. It has burned 32 homes and four rental cabins.

Arizona's largest fire previously was the 2002 Rodeo-Chediski fire, which burned 732 square miles and destroyed 491 buildings.

AT A GLANCE

- Severe weather in the U.S. this spring included:
- Heavy snowmelt in the upper Midwest combined with record rains in the Ohio River Valley produced floods along the lower Mississippi River equaling or surpassing the historic floods of 1927 and 1937.
 - Ideal wildfire conditions developed across the southern plains as rainfall encouraged rapid plant growth, followed by drought and hot weather to launch still-burning fires consuming millions of acres.
 - Consecutive dry months caused drought that extends across much of the Southwest and South from Arizona and New Mexico across Texas to the Gulf Coast and southern Georgia.
 - Yet it was the wettest April on record for Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kentucky and West Virginia.

HORSIN' AROUND IN THE HILLS

Photos by ANDREW WEEKS/Times-News

Chris Dickard gives a treat to a palomino named Cotton after a ride June 9 in the South Hills, while her husband, Jerry, gets ready to remove the saddle. The couple, who are members of area equestrian groups, often ride horseback in the hills.

Kimberly couple explores outdoors on horseback

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

HANSEN — The Senator nuzzled a canvas knapsack, opening it with his large lips, trying to get to the food inside. “You mooch,” Chris Dickard said. “If there’s any food to be found, he’ll find it.”

The Senator isn’t much inclined to politics, but the tan-colored Missouri Fox Trotter does like his snacks.

He also likes to walk the trails, which he did Friday afternoon with another tan-colored horse named Cotton.

Chris sat tall in the saddle on The Senator, while her husband, Jerry Dickard, rode Cotton. Another horse called Mr. T, so named because of the white “T” on his forehead, stayed behind at the trailer.

They started their ride at Wahlstrom Hollow and rode in about a 10-mile loop to Third Fork and Porcupine Springs before returning to the hollow.

With temperatures in the upper 60s, it was the perfect day to ride. They made it back to the trailer just in time: A few minutes later, gray clouds rolled across the otherwise blue sky, and a few minutes after that, rain drops began to fall.

“We come out as often as we can,” Chris said.

The Dickards, who have been riding horses for as long as they can remember, own six horses on their ranch south of Kimberly.

Horses are a mainstay for the couple, who are members of different riding groups — the Thursday Sage Riders and the High Desert Backcountry Horsemen.

Chris meets Thursdays with the Sage Riders, who ride near the Cottonwood area south of Kimberly, and Jerry rides with the Horsemen’s group.

Equestrian riders don’t have as many trail issues as off-road riders, but they haven’t been exempt from them. There’ve been a lot of lobbying done by the groups for trail access, Jerry said. They work closely with the Bureau of Land Management and Forest Service, and often do trail maintenance.

The Dickards also helped found a therapeutic riding group that several times a week visits the Stargazer Ranch in Twin Falls, where children and adults with disabilities ride horses.

“It’s been real successful,” Jerry said. “But it takes a lot of volunteers. We have about 40 people, as far as clients go, and about that many volunteers.”

There definitely is something therapeutic about riding horses, the couple said: Being able to explore places you might not otherwise see, and bonding with the horse.

Horses become attached to their owners, quickly learning their rider’s style and what is expected of them.

“Horses are a lot smarter than people think they are,” Chris said. “They figure things out.”

Like how to open a knapsack. As for riding, there’s not the noise from an off-road vehicle, Jerry said, and you get to access places you might not be able to get to on a machine.

Be mindful if you plan to ride backcountry, though. There is still plenty of snow the farther back in the hills you go, they said.

“There’s a lot of country to see in Idaho,” Jerry said. “I’ve lived here all my life and am still finding places I haven’t seen before.”

Wildlife at Walcott

Animals are just some of the things visitors can enjoy at the lake

RUPERT — In southern Idaho the occasional deer sighting is not uncommon. However, the wide variety of creatures and wild game that inhabit Lake Walcott State Park might surprise campers who haven’t prepared for thieving raccoons and friendly porcupines.

“We’ve had instances where a raccoon will steal candy out of a kid’s hand,” said park ranger Travis Taylor.

Animals are just some of the things visitors can enjoy at Lake Walcott.

The park offers walking trails, horseshoe pits and gazebos, which are ideal for family reunions and barbecues. There are grills and picnic tables stationed throughout the park as well as playground equipment, basketball hoops and large grassy areas to keep kids, and adults that think they’re kids, entertained. The $5 entrance fee for day use and $10.60 for camping is worthwhile for those hoping to see a variety of native Idaho animals. The park is home to many birds including a great horned owl and a red-tailed hawk, and camping sites come equipped with fire pits and grills.

There have even been some sightings of a mountain bluebird, which is very rare for the area, said Robbins.

Other guests come in search of a record catch and are often not left wanting. The lake boasts a healthy assortment of trout and bass that are easy to get to with the park’s boat ramp and trailer parking.

The park itself is manicured with well-kept restrooms and a park office that sells bottled drinks and disc golf supplies.

Sportsmen eat fish, learn to catch them at Jerome fish fry

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

JEROME — If you’re a bass fisherman, it’s a good thing you live in south-central Idaho.

There are plenty of places to catch your limit of large- and smallmouth bass — American Falls, Lake Walcott, anywhere along the Snake River below Shoshone Falls to Brownlee Reservoir — said Skyler Hill, a member of the Magic Valley Bass Masters.

Bass was just one of the fish visitors learned about at a sportsmen’s fish fry last week. It was the second such event the Idaho Department of Fish and Game has hosted at its Magic Valley region office.

More than a hundred people came out for the evening dinner to try their choice of fried catfish, crappie, and carp served with coleslaw, hushpuppies and fries. After tummies were filled, people could visit the eight booths set up to learn about their favorite sport-fish, techniques to catch them and other information.

Les Reitz, a member of the Magic Valley Fly Fishers, demonstrated how to tie a fly.

Reitz has been tying flies for more than 20 years. It’s a relaxing pastime, he said.

“If I’ve had a bad day at work, I sit down and tie a dozen flies and forget about work,” he said.

He’s gotten quicker over the years. He’s been known to tie three-dozen flies in about an hour. Flies come in all varieties, from topwater dry flies to under-water wet flies and the larger woolly buggers.

There’s definitely a technique to fly tying — and fly fishing — but once you learn how, Reitz said, it becomes second nature.

Steve Roberts, a conservation officer with Fish and Game, provided information about sturgeon fishing.

The department is looking into an idea about making circle hooks mandatory when fishing for sturgeon. He said circle hooks would be easier to remove from caught fish, reducing mortality rates.

“Anything we can do to reduce the harm done to sturgeon,” he said. “They are a long-lived fish and don’t reproduce very quickly.”

As for bass fishing, Hill displayed a variety of lures. Topwater lures are good in early morning, he said, while plastic lures are best used when fish are more lethargic.

There are a number of good bass fisheries in the region, he said. Lake Walcott in Rupert is one of the best.

“I wouldn’t be surprised if a state record came out of there some time,” he said.

RICH SIMPSON/For the Times-News

Whatever your taste is for guns or game, Ruger fashions a Hawkeye to meet your needs.

Ruger’s latest Hawkeye offers versatility, several improvements

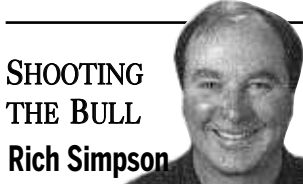

Regular readers of this column will notice that I have a definite prejudice toward Ruger firearms. I absolutely love the company’s handguns, rifles and shotguns.

This affliction began in the early ‘60s when I started chasing cottontails and snowshoe rabbits in my native Maine. Through the years, a succession of .22LR and big-bore single-action pistols, .44 Magnum semi-auto and lever-action carbines reliably took both large and small game from those impossibly thick spruce and cedar swamps and hardwood ridges.

Just before packing my bags for my move to the Wild West in 1975, I made a special trip to the Kittery Trading Post in the bordering state of New Hampshire. There I picked up a spanking new M77 chambered for the hot rod 7mm Remington Magnum. I’m proud to report that there has been an M77 or two in my gun rack ever since.

As much as I admire the original M77 and the improved M77 Mark II, I have to admit that since 2006, they have been suitably succeeded by the latest iteration in the prolific M77 bolt-action line: the Ruger Hawkeye.

Designed to fill a market niche between the bolt-action sporters of Savage, Marlin, Remington and Mossberg, and the higher end models marketed by Browning, Winchester, Remington, Weatherby and Sako, M77’s have always provided a lot of bang for the buck.

SHOOTING THE BULL
Rich Simpson

Let’s take a look at the latest evolution of the ‘77 design.

Whether fashioned from cast blue or stainless steel, the Hawkeye’s action boasts the classic Mauser two-lug bolt, fixed ejector and large claw extractor — fail safe features favored by hardcore hunters everywhere. Boxed with each M77 are Ruger’s proprietary scope rings. These hefty two-piece steel rings dovetail directly into slots milled in the rifle’s receiver.

This practice negates the need for the weak link in the scope mounting equation — separate bases. And the best part, the rings (a $60-$80 value) are included free.

Though it still falls short of the excellent mechanisms fitted to new Remington, Browning and Winchester rifles, the Hawkeye’s LC6 trigger offers a noticeably lighter and crisper pull than that of its oft criticized predecessor, the Mark II. Retained from the Mark II design, however, are the excellent receiver-mounted three position safety and patented floor plate latch.

Another change, which I truly appreciate as a big game hunter, is the substitution of a subdued matte finish to both the blued and stainless variants’ metal work, in place of the Mark II’s game-alerting high polish.

Perhaps the most noteworthy improvement involves the redesign of the Hawkeye’s classically styled stock. Gone forever are the overly thick and squared forearm and pistol grip contours, replaced by the slimmer, rounder and more refined dimensions of its black synthetic or higher grade walnut stocks.

No matter whether you shoot from the left shoulder or right and pursue game from distant varmints to truculent Alaskan and African beasts, Ruger makes an affordable Hawkeye that will fit your needs. Good shooting!

Owner must have permission to stock private pond with fish

Question: “I would like to put trout in a pond on my property. Are there any rules about stocking my pond with fish?”

Answer: Yes. Idaho law in part states, “No person shall establish and maintain a private park or pond on premises owned or leased by him and obtain, possess, transport, propagate, and process for his own personal pleasure and use only fish approved by the commission, ... in this state unless he has first obtained a permit from the director (of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game).”

Additional rules require private ponds to be “posted” in at least three locations. All water inlets and outflows must be screened to prevent fish from going into or out of the pond and the department must approve all fish species. No private ponds will be authorized “in or across any natural stream bed, lake or water course containing wild fish.”

In simpler terms, the law requires you to license any pond on private property you want to stock with game fish.

The pond cannot be part of a natural stream or lake and must be posted to prevent trespass. Some kind of barrier must be installed so your fish don’t escape and wild fish can’t get in. And lastly, you are only allowed to stock fish species approved by the department.

Idaho fishing rules no longer apply in a licensed private pond. The fish in the pond are private property and are subject to rules of the pond owner. Holding or raising fish in a private pond for monetary gain is unlawful. If the owner wishes to charge a fee for fishing, the pond should then be licensed with the Idaho Department of Agriculture as a commercial fish facility. Applications for private ponds require inspection by conservation officers to ensure compliance with the rules. Private pond permits are free of charge and last five years.

ASK THE OFFICER

The department will only approve fish species that do not compete with wild populations and pose no disease risk. We request pond owners obtain “certified disease free” fish for their ponds to help maintain the health of their fish and reduce the risk of transmitting fish diseases to wild fish populations in nearby streams. For a list of certified disease-free commercial fish growers, contact the College of Southern Idaho’s aquaculture program or the Idaho Aquaculture Association.

Requests for fish imported from other states or species of concern must follow a strict application process. For example, species such as grass carp are often requested to reduce summer vegetation. A special request must be made for this exotic species. These fish must also have their genetic makeup certified as triploid so they are incapable of reproducing.

Most people purchase fish for their pond from local commercial fish growers. The commercial grower delivering the fish should verify a permit has been issued for a private pond before transporting and stocking any fish. Without this verification, the commercial grower risks a citation for an unlawful fish release.

Fish and Game has stocked some private ponds. To do this we require a written agreement with the pond owner to allow public access for fishing.

Having a licensed private pond is usually more complicated than “digging a hole, filling it with water and stocking it with fish.” Water quality and quantity may not be sufficient to support the kind of fish you want. Moss and algae growth during the warm summer weather sometimes turns ponds into smelly mosquito factories. Low dissolved oxygen levels and high water temperatures are lethal to most fish. Winter kills are also common.

All these issues mean restocking on a regular basis. For technical assistance about water quality and species selection, you may contact Fish and Game, your county extension agent, the College of Southern Idaho’s aquaculture program, or a commercial fish grower that is a member of the Idaho Aquaculture Association.

Gary Hompland, regional conservation officer for the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, may be reached at 324-4350.

Walcott

It doesn’t seem like the place where you’d find wild animals roaming around, but many campers and disc golfers that come to play the 18-hole golf course spot porcupines rummaging through the bushes just outside the park grounds.

The animals don’t seem to be scaring away outdoors enthusiasts. An estimated 51,000 people came to Lake Walcott last year. Because the park is part of the Minidoka National Wildlife Refuge, there are limited means of dealing with thieving critters.

“The best defense is emptying the garbage frequently and keeping food stored safely out of reach,” Taylor said.

There are multiple signs around the park warning visitors to secure lids on trash cans.

Raccoons have been known to open coolers in the 22 RV spaces and 14 tent sites while campers are sleeping, but not all of the wildlife is a bother to those who frequent the park.

“Last night I drove down to the boat docks and there was a little doe wandering around,” said Robbins.

Question: My bankruptcy attorney insists that I list the names of all my creditors and collection agencies along with their addresses. My problem is that some of these debts are so old that I don't remember all the creditors. Worse, my accounts have been sold to numerous collection agencies, and I can't keep track of them all. Is this really necessary?

Answer: The Bankruptcy Code says that only debts that are properly identified on your schedules will be included in your bankruptcy discharge. The Federal Courts for the Ninth Circuit have carved out some exceptions, but the general rule is that in order for a debt to be discharged, it must be properly scheduled so that each creditor receives the necessary notices from the Bankruptcy Court. If you are not sure you can identify all your creditors and their assignees, you should get a credit report to help you. You are entitled to a free copy of your credit report from each of the three major credit-reporting agencies. You can access your free report by logging on to annualcreditreport.com. This is a free service required by law; you can get one free report from each of the agencies one time each year.

A tourist walks on jagged salt formations of Devils Golf Course in Death Valley National Park in July 2010.

Death Valley: Extreme heat is main attraction

A summertime stop is well worth it, and not only for bragging rights of having survived

By Alexia Elejalde-Ruiz
Chicago Tribune

DEATH VALLEY, Calif. — Summertime in Death Valley. Breathing hurts a little. The wind blows heavy like a hair dryer, burning our nostrils. The asphalt sizzles through the soles of our shoes. It's 120 degrees outside, our rented PT Cruiser tells us when we slide back inside. I reach for the air conditioner, a layer of grimy salt covering my arm. "Let's turn the heat on, just to see what happens," says Chicago Tribune photographer Chris Sweda, my co-pilot on this mission. We giggle and crank the heat full blast, trapping ourselves in a literal hell on wheels.

We drive and sweat, masochistically, maybe deliriously, relishing the outer limits of discomfort until breathing becomes too suffocating to bear. It's July in the Mojave Desert in southeastern California. We're covering the Badwater Ultramarathon, a brutal 135-mile running race from Badwater Basin, the lowest point in North America, to halfway up Mount Whitney, the tallest mountain in the contiguous United States.

The runners, many swathed in white, huff painfully along the side of the road, proudly enduring their self-imposed torture. There are other masochists here too. Tourists. Many of them Europeans on summer holiday. Most are just passing through en route from Yosemite to the Grand Canyon, tickled to spend a few hours midsummer in one of the hottest and driest places on Earth, where landmarks have sweltry names such as Furnace Creek, Stovepipe Wells and Devil's Cornfield.

"We wanted to experience the extremes," says Jason Mellott, of Hagerstown, Md., standing with his wife, Stephanie, on a sand dune glistening with golden flecks under the scorching sun.

During fall, winter and spring, when average high temperatures range from the mid-60s to the high 80s, the stunning 3.4-million acre Death Valley National Park draws people for the ample hiking, backcountry road adventures, crystal-clear stargazing and colorful spring wildflowers.

In the summer, the triple-digit heat prevents you from doing much of any of that. So the heat becomes the main attraction.

Take the young British woman in shorts and a tank top who is lying on her back in the Mesquite Flat Sand Dunes, making a sand angel.

"Didn't you hear me screaming?" she says when asked how that sand felt on her back.

"I just thought it would be cool to get back and be like, 'I've done this in Death Valley!'"

Death Valley. It got its name when pioneers seeking a shortcut to the California gold mines got lost in the valley in 1849-50, and one of them died. Just one. But that was winter.

Today, the heat kills three to six people each year, often because they try to hike farther than they should, or their car breaks down on a backcountry road and they don't have enough water, said Terry Baldino, chief of interpretation at Death Valley National Park.

"No matter how many warnings we put out that you have to drink water or have to avoid strenuous activities, someone always gets in trouble," Baldino said. "It's amazing how little time it takes for the heat to get ahold of you."

It's not just that it's hot. It's dry. Death Valley sees less than 2 inches of rain annually, while the evaporation rate is 150 inches per year. You don't even realize you're losing much water because it evaporates so quickly, Baldino said.

Summer visitors are advised to drink at least a gallon of water per day.

Visitors also are advised to avoid the backcountry roads in the summer because of the dangers of overheating if you get lost or have car trouble. That's

IF YOU GO

Getting there: The closest airport is Las Vegas International Airport, which is 120 miles away. Park entry fee is $20 for a standard vehicle for unlimited seven-day re-entry. Staying there: If you stay inside Death Valley itself, the nicest hotel is the Inn at Furnace Creek and the accompanying Ranch at Furnace Creek (800-236-7916, furnacecreekresort.com). The inn is the more elegant of the lodgings, but it's open only October through May, so if you go in summer you'll stay in the more casual ranch (May to October rates: $134-$184). The ranch has 224 guest units, three restaurants, a saloon, a general store and The Borax Museum, an ode to the valley as an old borax mining region. It also has a swimming pool, a golf course, tennis, horseback riding and horse-drawn carriage rides. Another in-valley hotel option is Stovepipe Wells Village Hotel (760-786-2387, escapetodeathvalley.com, $80-$145). More info: nps.gov/deva unfortunate because it means you shouldn't visit bizarre sights such as Racetrack Playa, famous for the inexplicable track marks left by boulders that have inexplicably slid across the flat terrain.

Still, a summertime stop in Death Valley is well worth it, and not only for the bragging rights of having survived.

The shimmering salt flats, the intricate folds of dusty, bone-dry rock, the otherworldly vistas and the surprising splashes of color give you the feeling on being on another planet, or maybe on this planet some billion years ago.

And then there is the absolute silence. I had never before known the sound of nothing until I stood at the edge of Salt Creek, where a rare stream of water spurts up from the desert and hosts pupfish during late winter and spring (we saw neither water nor fish on this blistering afternoon), and heard — nothing.

It was as if a vacuum had sucked the sound out of the world.

Roles of U.S. dads diverging this Father's Day

By Hope Yen
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — Nearly half of American dads under 45 this Father's Day say they have at least one kid who was born out of wedlock. And the share of fathers living apart from children is more than double what it was not so long ago.

In encouraging news, though, among married fathers, children are said to be getting more attention from both parents at home than ever before.

A Pew Research Center report highlights the changing roles of parents as U.S. marriage rates and traditional family households fall to historic lows.

For example, college-educated men who tend to marry and get better jobs are more involved with their children than lesser-skilled men struggling to get by.

"When a father can't provide monetarily for his offspring, he often becomes estranged," said Beth Latshaw, an assistant sociology professor at Appalachian State University, who researches changing paternal roles. She pointed to an economic advantage for college graduates hired at companies with better benefits and family-friendly policies, contrasted with the situation for the larger ranks of low-wage workers.

"As a result, many women now raise children outside of marriage or without a father figure," Latshaw said.

Pew's survey and analysis of government data, released Wednesday, found that more than one in four fathers — or 27 percent — with kids 18 or younger live away from at least one of their children. That number is more than double the share of fathers who lived apart from their kids in 1960.

On the other hand, married fathers who live with their children are devoting more time helping their wives with caregiving at home, a task once seen almost exclusively as a woman's duty. Such fathers on average now spend about 6.5 hours a week on child care, which include playing, helping kids with homework or taking them to activities. That's up from 2.6 hours in the 1960s.

The 6.5 hours is still just half the amount of time mothers spend per week. Still, it is a gap that is narrowing; in the 1960s, fathers put in one-fourth the time mothers did.

"Father's Day reminds us parents that we have no more solemn obligation than to care for our children. But far too many young people in America grow up without their dads, and our families and communities are challenged as a result," President Barack Obama said Wednesday in calling for fathers to be more involved. Next Sunday is Father's Day.

Obama has often reminded Americans how his father left his family when the future president was a small child, describing a "hole in a child's life that no government can fill." The Health and Human Services Department in conjunction with the Ad Council is now running public service advertisements this week urging fathers to "Take Time to Be a Dad Today;" and the administration next week is expected to announce new support for local fatherhood programs.

The ads this year focus on Hispanic fathers and military dads sharing small moments with their children.

The Pew study, entitled "A Tale of Two Fathers," found sharp differences based on race and education. Black and Hispanic fathers were much more likely to have children out of wedlock, at 72 percent and 59 percent, respectively, compared to 37 percent for white men. Among fathers with at least a bachelor's degree, only 13 percent had children outside marriage, compared to 51 percent of those with high school diplomas and 65 percent of those who didn't finish high school.

Age, too, was a factor. Three-fourths of fathers who were 20 to 24 had children out of wedlock, compared to 36 percent for fathers 35 to 44.

Hackers say they hit CIA website

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of hackers who breached the Senate computer system earlier this week claimed responsibility for problems with the CIA's website Wednesday.

The group, known as Lulz Security, tweeted "Tango down — CIA.gov;" and there were difficulties throughout the early evening accessing the agency's website.

The computer mischief appeared to be targeting the CIA's public website, which does not include classified data and has no impact on the CIA's operation. CIA spokeswoman Marie Harf said the agency is looking into the reports.

It is sometimes difficult to tell if a website has been hacked, or if the claim alone drove so many people to the site that it crashed. Efforts to access the website were met with an error message long after the breach began, around 6 p.m. EDT.

Lulz has claimed credit for hacking into the systems of Sony and Nintendo and for defacing the PBS website after the public television broadcaster aired a documentary seen as critical of WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange.

On Monday, the group accessed a Senate server that supports the chamber's public website but did not breach other files, according to a Capitol Hill law enforcement official. The hackers said the release was a "just for kicks" attempt to help the government "fix their issues."

Senate Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms Martina Bradford said in a statement that while the intrusion was inconvenient, it did not compromise the security of the Senate's network, members or staff.

Lulz Security claimed that it had added a Senate file to its list of successful, high-profile intrusions at a time when governments and corporations are on high guard for cyber intrusions.

The group has suggested it is trying to highlight cyber security weaknesses.

Bag a gift for Dad before Father's Day

By Mike Marsh
McClatchy Newspapers

Ask most hunters and fishermen who introduced them to the outdoors and most will reply that it was their fathers. To honor this hallowed handed-down tradition, many outdoor offspring will be spending Father's Day with their dads, participating in their favorite outdoor activities.

Outdoorsmen love the latest widgets and gadgets, as well as time-tested tools and books that help them become better hunters and fishermen.

Here are a few ideas for gifts that will be cherished long after they have been received on Father's Day.

Keep electronics dry

Anglers are constantly on guard against dropping electronic devices into the water. Solve the problem with a new, vacuum-sealed, fully enclosed waterproof case that will protect a smart phone, iPad, electronic book or digital camera. The case, called the DryCase, allows full access to touch-screens, and one model even has hookups for headphones or microphones. It has an optional armband for attaching to an arm or boat console. The various sizes cost from $40 to $60. For information, visit www.drycase.com or call 888-600-0379.

Train that best friend

Books make excellent gifts. For the father who has a retrieving dog, the second edition of "Top Dog" was recently released. "Top Dog" teaches a rapid training method for upland and water hunting. It is based on Richard A. Wolter's original book, "Water Dog," but has been upgraded to incorporate electronic collar training much earlier in the training process for faster results. Price is $14.99. Published by Mid Carolina Media Inc., it is available along with the company's other dog training books and videos at major retailers. Learn more at www.familydogs.com, or call 800-601-9514.

Solve a problem

Braided line is notorious for throwing tangles that cannot be unraveled without cutting the expensive line. But Castalia Outdoors' innovative Sharkfin spinning reel solves the situation of backlashes in braided fishing line. A specially designed spool face is scalloped to allow line loops to rest forward and below any overlapping line. When a cast is made, the line pays out until it gets down to the loop, and the loop simply comes free rather than throwing a "braid booger." Available in FD2000 (Freshwater-Inshore Saltwater, $119.99) and FD4000 (Inshore-Light Offshore, $149.99) sizes, each reel comes with a second, conventional spool for monofilament line. For information, visit www.castaliaoutdoors.com or call 863-635-7238. 7392.

Anglers are constantly on guard against dropping electronic devices into the water. A new vacuum-sealed, fully enclosed waterproof case that will protect a smart phone, iPad, electronic book or digital camera called the DryCASE solves the problem.

Save boat space

The Flip Net is another innovative product from Castalia Outdoors. For landing catfish, flounder, striped bass and other large game fish, a large net is required. But a net with a big hoop takes up so much room in a boat it creates problems with stowing. The Flip Net ($39.99, Bass Pro Shops price) folds to a couple of inches in diameter, small enough to stow beneath a seat or in a rod holder. It flips open easily into a huge triangular figuration rather than a loop. The coated mesh won't snag hooks. For information, visit www.castaliaoutdoors.com or call 863-635-7238. 7392.

Prepare a bow hunter

For the bow hunter, Field Logic's new Big Shooter Buck ($109.99) has a 125-point Pope and Young rack. It's so big that it's harder to miss than smaller 3-D targets and prepares the archer for hunting trophy deer. The company offers many 3-D and other target styles in a broad price range to fit any budget. Field Logic targets offer positive arrow stops with easy arrow removal. For more information, visit www.fieldlogic.com or call 800-282-4868.

Provide a good look

Sporting goods and department stores sell binoculars at prices beginning around $20. Nikon offers high-quality binoculars in several models that have special rebate pricing including the Action 10x50 ($89.95), Travelite 8x25 ($69.95) and Pro Staff Waterproof ($89.95). Visit www.nikonusa.com for retail outlets and online sales information.

Shell out for shooters

Ammunition is always a welcome gift, and summertime is a great time to shoot up some .22 rimfire ammo. A 555 carton of Winchester .22 long-rifle hollow-point ammo costs about $20. Outdoor sports retailers and discount and department stores sell .22 ammo, and the Winchester 555 box gives five more shots for the same price as other manufacturers' 550-round cartons. Wal-Mart is a good place to buy Winchester .22 ammo.

Learn more at www.winchester.com.

Give a handy treasure

Knives are among the most cherished gifts an outdoorsman can receive.

Fiskars offers a couple of knives that anglers will put to good use. The company's fillet knife with belt sheath is priced around $17, and its classic yellow-handled folding knife with a filleting blade and fish-scaling blade retails for about $50. Fiskars knives are available at Wal-Mart and other discount or sporting goods stores. Learn more at www.fiskars.com.

Protect Dad on water

Inflatable life vests are practical and may save Dad's life during an on-the-water emergency. They are comfortable enough that anglers actually wear them, unlike personal flotation devices with excessively bulky buoyancy.

The Revere Sport Max Manual inflatable PFD costs $79.99.

The Revere Comfort Max Automatic inflatable costs $199.99. Buy at Overton's online www.overtons.com or at the Raleigh store (919-850-9754).

The Earth casts its shadow over the moon in a total lunar eclipse Thursday, as seen before dawn in Manila, Philippines.

Ash turns eclipse blood red

SYDNEY (AP) — Asian and African night owls were treated to a lunar eclipse, and ash in the atmosphere from a Chilean volcano turned it blood red for some viewers.

The Sydney Observatory said the eclipse was to begin at 3:25 a.m. Thursday (11:25 a.m. MDT Wednesday) day) and last until after 5 a.m.

Scientists said the specific phenomenon happening Thursday — known as a “deep lunar eclipse” — often exudes a coppery color. But the intensity of the color depends on the amount of ash and dust in the atmosphere.

Luckily for moon-gazers, there was plenty of ash in the air so the moon appeared orange or red, especially in Asia. Air travelers haven’t been so lucky: The ash has grounded hundreds of flights around the region.

Scientists said the eclipse could be safely observed with the naked eye.

British singer Joss Stone is shown after an interview in October 2008 in New York.

Police arrest 2 men near home of Joss Stone

LONDON (AP) — Two men have been arrested near Joss Stone’s home on suspicion of conspiracy to rob and murder, after reportedly being found in a car with swords, rope, a body bag and plans of the soul singer’s secluded house.

Stone said in a statement that she was “absolutely fine and getting on with life as normal” as police charged the men with conspiracy to commit robbery and conspiracy to commit grievous bodily harm.

Devon and Cornwall Police said Junior Bradshaw, 30, and Kevin Liverpool, 33, both from the Manchester area of northwest England, were arrested Monday morning near Stone’s house in Cullompton, 175 miles southwest of London, after residents reported a suspicious-looking vehicle.

Detective Inspector Steve Parker said the men “had in their possession information relating to an individual in the Cullompton area and items which lead us to suspect that they may have intended to commit a criminal offense.”

The force would not confirm a report in The Sun newspaper that the men had swords, rope and a body bag, as well as maps and aerial photos of Stone’s property.

Parker said it was “important to stress that no properties have been burgled and no individuals have been harmed.”

Two police officers stood guard Wednesday outside the gates to the house, which is on a quiet country road.

Stone’s London publicists, DWL, said the singer was aware of the arrests and was being kept up to date by the police.

They would not say whether 24-year-old Stone was at home when the men were arrested.

Gates: Afghanistan is not ‘war without end’

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Robert Gates on Wednesday bluntly rejected suggestions that Afghanistan is a “war without end,” defending the U.S. military operation amid fresh congressional pressure on President Barack Obama to withdraw a significant number of U.S. troops beginning next month.

Gates acknowledged the war fatigue throughout the country and on Capitol Hill as the Afghan conflict nears the decade mark with lives lost and billions of dollars spent. But he argued that the United States and its NATO allies have made progress in building up Afghan security forces to prevent the al-Qaida terrorist network from a dangerous revival.

“I know people are frustrated. The country has been at war for 10 years. I know people are tired,” Gates told the Senate Appropriations defense subcommittee. “People also have to think in terms of stability and in terms of the potential of (al-Qaida) reconstitution. What’s the cost of failure?”

In the coming days, Obama will confer with Gates as well as senior military and administration officials and decide how many of the 100,000 U.S. troops in Afghanistan to withdraw in the initial round of troop reductions. Several lawmakers are clamoring for significant cuts, citing the killing of Osama bin Laden and CIA Director Leon Panetta’s assessment that less than 100 al-Qaida members remain in Afghanistan.

Twenty-seven senators, Democrats and Republicans, sent a letter to Obama on Wednesday pressing for a shift in Afghanistan strategy and major troop cuts.

“Given our successes, it is the right moment to initiate a sizable and sustained reduction in forces, with the goal of steadily redeploying all regular combat troops,” the senators wrote. “The costs of prolonging the war far outweigh the benefits. It is time for the United States to shift course in Afghanistan.”

Signing the letter was a fourth of the Senate, 25 Democrats and two freshman Republicans, Mike Lee of Utah and Rand Paul of Kentucky.

Gates insisted that the war is heading toward an end date of 2014 in a somewhat testy exchange with Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt.

“This is not a war without end,” Gates said. “Troops will be coming down during that period.”

Goldie 'Marie' Schow Norby

Nov. 7, 1920–June 10, 2011

RUPERT — Goldie “Marie” Schow Norby, 90, of Rupert, passed away Friday, June 10, 2011, at Autumn Haven Assisted Living, with Jerry, Jill and Mike by her side.

Marie was born Nov. 7, 1920, in Burley, Idaho, to Floyd and Goldie Schow. Marie grew up and attended schools in Rupert. She graduated from Rupert High School in 1938. In September 1938, Marie enrolled at LDS Hospital in the registered nursing program and graduated as a registered nurse in May 1941. She then moved back to Rupert and worked in several doctor's offices for about 10 years. During that time, she met the love of her life, Charlie Norby. They were married March 13, 1951. Upon Charlie's death in October 2003, they had been married 52 years.

In January 1956, Jill and Jerry (“the twins”) came into their lives. Marie told Jill, “When Charlie and I brought you two home from the hospital, it was one of the happiest days of our lives.” Marie loved gardening and working in their yard. She and Charlie worked hand-in-hand canning the products of their gardens and they made sure Jill and Jerry learned “the traits of the trade.” Marie had a green thumb and, if you were ever at her house, you would always see an African violet on her kitchen table and maybe a fresh cut red rose from her yard. Marie loved to cook for her family and hosted many family dinners. Marie's kitchen always had the smell of fresh baked bread. Marie was a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. She never missed watching General Conference on TV and always enjoyed her visiting and home teachers. From Marie's journal, “I loved caring for my husband, Charlie, my children and my grandchildren. They were the most important people in my life.”

Marie is survived by one sister, Edna (Keith) Wilson; her children, Jerry Norby and Jill (Mike) Fleming of Rupert; six grandchildren, Andrea Andino, Makenzie Hall, Chuck Fleming, Tiffany (Kevin) Rose, Nathan Norby and Nicholas Norby; and six great-grandchildren, Andrew and Adam Andino, Benton and Eve Hall, Kylee and Katelyn Rose, and Allie Joe Norby; and many nieces and nephews. She was preceded in death by her husband, Charlie; her parents; six brothers; and two sisters.

The funeral will be held at 2 p.m. Monday, June 20, at the Rupert LDS 1st Ward Chapel, 806 G St in Rupert, with Bishop Clint Crane presiding. A viewing will be held one hour prior to the service at the church.

A very special thanks to Anissa Rocha, Verla Darrington and all the staff of Autumn Haven for their tender loving care of Marie. Also, a thank you to Inter-mountain Homecare and Hospice, the Minidoka Memorial Staff and Dr. Mar-go Saunders.

In lieu of flowers, the family would like to request donations be made to Autumn Haven Assisted Living or a charity of your choice. Services are under the direction of Hansen Mortuary Rupert Chapel.

Elton J. Kendrick

June 2, 1915–June 13, 2011

Elton J. Kendrick, age 96, of Twin Falls, Idaho, passed away Monday, June 13, 2011.

He was born in the family home June 2, 1915, in Providence, Utah, to Ernest Henry Kendrick and Elsie Naef Kendrick. He was the sixth of nine children. He grew up in Providence and attended schools there through the eighth grade and graduated from South Cache High School in Hyrum, Utah, in 1933. This was a county school made up of students from the southern part of Cache County. The students rode the Utah-Idaho Central Railroad to school each day, a distance of 12 miles. They were given a book of tickets each month to ride the train.

Elton went to work for Covey Garage in Salt Lake City, Utah, during the summers of his junior and senior years, then full time upon high school graduation. He lived and worked with his brother, Dean. He worked 12-hour shifts for a dollar a day with no days off. Men came in nearly every day offering to work for less. This was motivation enough for not complaining about the long hours. Elton married Kalma Mae Young on Aug. 12, 1936, in Salt Lake City, Utah. Their marriage was later solemnized in the Idaho Falls LDS Temple. Before her death in 2007, they celebrated 71 years of marriage.

Elton and Kalma lived in Salt Lake City, where he went to work for General Electric Co. During the war, he called on Army installations. After the war, they moved to Redmond, Wash., where they started an electrical business. Years later, they moved back to Twin Falls, Idaho, and purchased the Phillips Petroleum distributorship and Kendrick Oil Co., which they operated in both Twin Falls and Buhl. Elton was a prominent, well-respected area businessman and active in civic affairs, participating in Lions Club and Jaycees.

They resided in Buhl, Idaho, for many years, where they raised their family and made lifelong friends. Elton and Kalma owned and operated Kendrick's Big Chief Drive-In while living in Buhl. As a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Elton served as bishop of the Buhl 2nd Ward, among other responsibilities. Upon retirement, Elton and Kalma served in the Boise LDS Temple for four years. Elton had a beautiful bass voice and a love of singing throughout his life. He sang in quartets and choirs and especially enjoyed being a member of the Magichords, a barbershop singing group and served at one time as its president. Many fond memories were made as they traveled to competitions and performances.

They spent several winters traveling to Arizona with friends and family as well as camping and boating in the Sawtooth Mountains. Throughout the many years, Elton and Kalma worked side-by-side as partners in their businesses and as partners in life. For nearly four years, Elton resided with his son and daughter in-law, Ernie and Kay Kendrick, after the passing of his wife. As much as he missed his sweetheart, he enjoyed being a part of their loving, caring home. The family is grateful for their selfless kindness and love.

Elton is survived by his three children, Kay (Glade) Bean of Iona, Idaho, Ernest J. (Kay) Kendrick and Marilyn (David) Fiala, both of Twin Falls, Idaho; 11 grandchildren; 18 great-grandchildren; and one brother, Ellis Kendrick of Hooper, Utah. He was preceded in death by his wife, Kalma; infant daughter, Deanna; granddaughter, Me'Chelle Kendrick; three brothers, Bert, Dean and Clarence; as well as four sisters, Mary, Alta, Grace and Eileen.

Dad was the positive role model that has influenced his family all their lives. We love you, Dad and we will carry an empty place in our hearts.

The funeral for Elton will be at 11 a.m. Saturday, June 18, at the Harrison LDS Stake Center, 667 Harrison St. in Twin Falls, with Bishop Greg Schroeder conducting. Burial will follow at Sunset Memorial Park. A viewing for family and friends will take place from 6 until 8 p.m. Friday, June 17, at White Mortuary, 136 Fourth Ave. E. in Twin Falls, as well as one hour prior to the service Saturday at the church. Services are under the direction of White Mortuary “Chapel by the Park” in Twin Falls.

Condolences may be left for the family by visiting www.whitemortuary.com.

Experts say public should be wary of cancer warnings

By Marilyn Marchione
Associated Press

You're sitting in a freshly drywalled house, drinking coffee from a plastic foam cup and talking on a cellphone. Which of these is most likely to be a cancer risk?

It might be the sitting, especially if you do that a lot.

Despite all the recent news about possible cancer risks from cellphones, coffee, styrene, and formaldehyde in building materials, most of us probably face little if any danger from these things with ordinary use, health experts say. Inactivity and obesity may pose a greater cancer risk than chemicals for some people.

“We are being bombarded” with messages about the dangers posed by common things in our lives, yet most exposures “are not at a level that are going to cause cancer,” said Dr. Len Lichtenfeld, the American Cancer Society's deputy chief medical officer.

Linda Birnbaum agrees. She is a toxicologist who heads the government agency that just declared styrene, an ingredient in fiberglass boats and Styrofoam, a likely cancer risk.

“Let me put your mind at ease right away about Styrofoam,” she said. Levels of styrene that leach from food containers “are hundreds if not thousands of times lower than have occurred in the occupational setting,” where the chemical in vapor form poses a possible risk to workers. “In finished products, certainly styrene is not an issue,” and exposure to it from riding in a boat “is infinitesimal,” she said.

Carcinogens are things that can cause cancer, but that label doesn't mean that they will or that they pose a risk to anyone exposed to them in any amount at any time.

They have been in the news because two groups that periodically convene scientists to decide whether something is a carcinogen issued new reports.

Last month, the International Agency for Research on Cancer, part of the World Health Organization, said there is a possibility cellphones raise the risk of brain tumors.

“The operative word is ‘possibility,’” said Lichtenfeld, who among others has pointed out the thin evidence for this and the fact that cancer rates have not risen since cellphones came out.

Last week, the National Toxicology Program, part of the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences — both of which Birnbaum heads — issued its report.

It adds to the list of known carcinogens formaldehyde, which is in building materials and some hair-straightening products, though Birnbaum said on-the-job exposure is the main concern. The list also adds a plant substance in some “natural” arthritis remedies, aristolochic acid. Six other things were dubbed “reasonably anticipated” to be carcinogens, including styrene and another herbal medicine ingredient, riddelline.

Since 1971, the international cancer agency has evaluated more than 900 substances. Just over 100 have been deemed carcinogens, 59 are called probable carcinogens, and 266 others are possible ones.

In this last category of possibles — besides the electromagnetic energy from cellphones — are coffee, engine exhaust and talc-based body powder. Talc in its natural form may contain asbestos, though products sold for home use since the 1970s have been asbestos-free. Again, most risk is thought to involve occupational or unusual exposure to natural talc.

The evidence on coffee has gone back and forth for years, with no clear sign of danger and some suggestions of benefit.

However, known carcinogens include alcoholic beverages, estrogen treatments for menopause symptoms, birth control pills, certain viruses and parasites, and even some drugs used to treat cancer, such as cyclophosphamide and tamoxifen.

“Most people would probably be shocked to see the number of things they interact with every day” on these lists, Lichtenfeld said.

Here's the problem: The agencies that pass judgment on a carcinogen don't regulate it or determine what levels or routes of exposure are a concern and for whom.

“People immediately assume it's going to cause cancer at any exposure level, and that's simply not true,” said A. Wallace Hayes, editor of the scientific journal Food and Chemical Toxicology, and an industry consultant.

The rule is “RITE” — Risk Is equal to Toxicity times Exposure — and “they've left out half of the equation” by not saying how much exposure is a concern, Hayes said.

“The organizations that list these substances as possibly carcinogenic have to be conservative. That means if there's any reasonable evidence, way before it's a sure thing, they have to say, ‘Let's be cautious.’ That's their job — to raise the flag,” said David Ropeik, a consultant and author of “How Risky Is It Really? Why Our Fears Don't Always Match the Facts.”

It's human nature to fear risks we didn't choose, such as hazardous chemicals, more than those we did, such as lack of exercise, poor diets or smoking, he said.

“A risk that is imposed on us scares us more than a risk we take voluntarily,” especially if it comes from companies we don't trust, Ropeik said.

Styrene is an example: The government says it is a component of tobacco smoke and that is the biggest way most people are exposed to it. Smoking, of course, is the most easily preventable cancer risk.

To minimize risk, people can take reasonable measures to avoid exposure to possibly harmful things, experts say.

“If you walk into a room and you can smell formaldehyde, you probably want to vent the room before you spend a lot of time in it. That's just common sense,” Birnbaum said.

Arrests by Pakistan may include doctor who lived behind bin Laden

By Saeed Shah
McClatchy Newspapers

ISLAMABAD — The occupant of a large house about 100 yards behind the compound where U.S. special forces shot and killed Osama bin Laden may be among the people Pakistan has arrested for helping the CIA track the terrorist leader down.

U.S. and Pakistani officials acknowledged Wednesday that Pakistan has arrested several of its own citizens for helping the CIA spy on the house where bin Laden lived.

Officials declined to release the names of those being held. But the occupant of the house behind bin Laden's compound in Abbottabad, Pakistan, matches the description of one of the detainees, who one Pakistani official said had been a doctor in the army's medical corps.

The house's watchtowers would have provided a clear view of the walled compound where bin Laden is suspected of having lived for perhaps as long as five years. The nameplate outside the home identified the resident as Major Amir Aziz. Neighbors said he was a doctor.

The Pakistan military, in a statement Wednesday, said no serving officer had been arrested; the name plate gave no indication of whether Major Aziz was serving or retired.

The arrests of people who might have helped track bin Laden highlight the deep distrust that continues to plague relations between Washington and Islamabad, two anti-terror allies. Pakistan fears that the CIA has set up its own independent spy network in the country, a tactic apparently confirmed by the operation to eliminate bin Laden.

Washington is pressing Islamabad to urgently mount joint operations to strike at the remainder of al-Qaida in Pakistan, as the organization reels from the loss of its leader and the disclosure of a huge amount of data on its workings, gathered from the bin Laden compound.

But the Pakistani military, which controls security policy in a country with a weak civilian government, is still angry at the perceived humiliation it suffered as a result of the unilateral May 2 U.S. special forces raid into the country, which was undetected by Pakistan's air defense network, even though Abbottabad is a military town and home to Pakistan's prestigious national military academy.

Those arrested in Abbottabad had monitored the bin Laden house, noting number plates of vehicles coming and going, and "patterns of life" at the compound, according to U.S. and Pakistani officials. They include the owner of a safe house rented to CIA operatives to spy on the bin Laden home.

A Pakistani official, who spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the issue, said that the detentions included a former army medical corps doctor. The army medical corps is headquartered in Abbottabad.

The official didn't provide a name for the doctor, but last month, a McClatchy reporter located a house around 100 yards behind the bin Laden compound with two watchtowers, an usual feature. With no buildings between the house and the bin Laden compound, the watchtowers would have provided a commanding view of the Qaida leader's hiding place.

The occupants refused to come to the gate of the house, but the nameplate identified the occupant as Major Aziz, and neighbors said at the time that he was a doctor. The following day, when the McClatchy reporter returned, the nameplate had been removed.

According to the Pakistani official, those arrested may not have been aware that they were working for the CIA. The official said they were hired by Pakistanis to snoop on unnamed terrorists.

"Wouldn't any country detain people for working for a foreign spy service?" said the Pakistani official.

Pakistan has agreed, in principle, to mount joint intelligence operations with the CIA against al-Qaida and other extremist targets in the country. But the visas for CIA personnel required for such an effort have yet to be issued. In the meantime, Pakistan hasn't bowed to U.S. demands for raids against the targets, according to U.S. and Pakistani officials.

Al-Qaida's deputy leader Ayman al-Zawahiri, who's widely expected to be named bin Laden's successor, is believed to be in Pakistan, along with many other top commanders of the group.

White House defends legality of Libya mission

By Julie Pace
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Defying congressional criticism, the White House insisted Wednesday that President Barack Obama has the authority to continue U.S. military action in Libya even without authorization from lawmakers on Capitol Hill.

In a detailed, 32-page report to Congress, the White House also put the cost of U.S. military operations and humanitarian assistance in Libya at about $800 million, as of June 3, with the total increasing to $1.1 billion by early September.

It was the first time the administration has publically detailed its legal rationale for continuing the Libya campaign without receiving congressional authorization within the 60-day window set in the War Powers Resolution. Officials argued that because the U.S. has a limited, supporting role in the NATO-led bombing campaign in Libya and American forces are not engaged in sustained fighting, the president is within his constitutional rights to direct the mission on his own.

"The president is of the view that the current U.S. military operations in Libya are consistent with the War Powers Resolution and do not under that law require further congressional authorization because U.S. military operations are distinct from the kind of "hostilities" contemplated by the resolution's 60-day termination provision," the White House said.

The administration's defense of the Libya mission comes in response to a nonbinding House resolution passed this month that chastised Obama for failing to provide a "compelling rationale" for U.S. involvement in Libya.

The resolution gave the administration until Friday to respond to a series of questions on the mission, including the scope of U.S. military activity, the cost of the mission and its impact on other U.S. wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

But the report appeared to do little to quell congressional criticism. A spokesman for House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio, said the White House was using "creative arguments" that raised additional questions.

Sen. Bob Corker, R-Tenn., who has introduced a resolution similar to the House measure, said he was amazed that the administration did not believe U.S. forces were facing "hostilities" in Libya, saying generals have told lawmakers otherwise in classified briefings.

"The way the administration handled this entire affair left people on both sides of the aisle very perplexed," said Corker, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Adding to the congressional pressure on Obama, a bipartisan group of 10 lawmakers on Wednesday sued the president for taking military action against Libya without war authorization from Congress. The lawmakers said Obama violated the Constitution in bypassing Congress and using international organizations like the United Nations and NATO to authorize military force.

While Obama did not seek congressional consent before ordering U.S. airstrikes against Moammar Gadhafi's forces nearly three months ago, the White House maintained that the president is not in violation of the War Powers Resolution. Boehner sent Obama a letter this week stating that the 90-day window runs out on Sunday.

Previous presidents, Republicans and Democrats, have largely ignored the law, which was created as a check on their power to authorize military force.

While the U.S. led the initial airstrikes on Libya, NATO forces have since taken over the mission. The U.S. still plays a significant support role that includes aerial refueling of warplanes and intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance work. Obama has ruled out sending U.S. ground forces to Libya.

"U.S. operations do not involve sustained fighting or active exchanges of fire with hostile forces, nor do they involve the presence of U.S. ground troops, U.S. casualties or a serious threat thereof, or any significant chance of escalation into a conflict characterized by those factors," the report said.

Buhl's Crossland wins sectional junior golf title

Times-News

Buhl's Kade Crossland is tough to beat. Crossland won the Junior Rocky Mountain Section PGA championship, contested Tuesday and Wednesday in Victor. Crossland shot a two-day 140 to finish at 2-under par, three shots ahead of Meridian's Taylor Judy. He trailed two golfers by one stroke despite shooting 69 on Tuesday, but his even-par 71 on Wednesday was the lowest score of the day. With the win, Crossland earns an invitation to the Junior PGA Championship, staged Aug. 2-5 in Fort Wayne, Ind.

AA Cowboys slip up late in loss

By Stephen Meyers
Times-News writer

Talk about helping your own cause. Idaho Falls pitcher Colben McGuire smacked a grand slam with one out in the top of the seventh inning to give the Russets the 5-3 come-from-behind victory over the Twin Falls Cowboys in Class AA American Legion Baseball at Skip Walker Field Wednesday. Twin Falls pitcher Zayne Sloten issued a leadoff walk and two hit batsmen to begin the seventh inning, loading the bases for McGuire, who was in line for the loss after giving up three runs to the Cowboys in the fifth inning. His shot cleared the left field wall and knocked Sloten out of the game.

"A lot of this game is a learning curve for these guys. ... they've got to bow their back and compete."

— Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir

"A lot of this game is a learning curve for these guys. We've got to get them into these situations and they've got to bow their back and compete," said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeir. "He (Sloten) had thrown a great game and I decided to let him work through it. I figured it was his game to win or lose. He kept us in it." Through five innings, Sloten was nearly untouchable, allowing only two hits and a pair of walks. He allowed one run in the sixth, but worked his way out of a bases-loaded jam with a strikeout to end the threat. The Cowboys (7-4) took a 3-0 lead in the fifth as Casey Merritt hit an RBI single and T.J. Ellis poked an opposite field double to score Tyler Wolters. Cy Sneed capped the scoring with a deep fly ball to centerfield that was dropped when the left fielder and centerfielder collided. Other than that inning, though, the Cowboys didn't put the pressure on the Russets. At one point, they went nine consecutive batters without a base runner. "That game right there is on our hitters. We've got to do a better job making plays. We should have broken that game open with the pitching that we got," said Stadelmeir. "We're normally the aggressor, but we were waiting for the game to come to us." Wolters hit a leadoff single in the bottom of the seventh, but the Cowboys went down in order after that. Game 2 of Wednesday's doubleheader was in progress at press time. Twin Falls (7-4) plays a pair of doubleheaders on the road Friday and Saturday against Eagle and Centennial.

Summer football helps in the fall

Pad crashes against pad. The football gets toted on the ground, or lobbed through the air. Teammates do the in-style flying body bump to celebrate a score. Just wait until it actually counts for six points. This week in Twin Falls, a glut of teams has been scrimmaging and challenging its way through a rigorous week of summer football. It doesn't get them any points in August — not directly, at least — but it does lay the groundwork for every touchdown, interception or sack that we'll see in 11 weeks' time. These are the days teams get better. Coaches can have an idea of the best fit for certain players and positions within their roster, but you never know how a 15-, 16-, 17-year-old kid will respond to external competition. Confidence in one's ability needs to be nurtured, and after that, trust in the team's collective talent must be forged. That's done through passing leagues, through full scrimmages, and through the pressure setting of 10-yard, four-to-score team challenges (a la high school overtime). That's why this week is so important. This is the first, last and only chance some of these teams will get an opportunity to test their players against unfamiliar opposition before the season begins in late August. Most will get a jamboree, but not all will gain as much as they can from this week's set. At any preseason jamboree, teams like Oakley or Castleford would play against fellow eight-man teams. This week, however, they get to match wits and brawn with teams like Bishop Kelly and Skyview, two of the four Class 4A semifinalists in 2010. Granted, it's only eight players from each squad and these aren't completely the same teams that made deep playoff runs last season, but only good things can come from Oakley playing the reigning 4A champions. Playing against a deeper talent pool, even if only for an hour or so in the middle of June, will stand the smaller schools in good stead when they go against teams with depth of talent similar to their own. Even in practice, they'll have faced teams just as tough, if not tougher, than the ones they'll face in many games. Ask just about any coach, and they'll tell you they try to make practice harder than the games. While that doesn't make it entirely downhill from here, this week will build a platform from which these teams can launch a successful 2011 campaign.

Not this time, Canada: Bruins claim Stanley Cup

By Greg Beacham
Associated Press writer

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — While the Boston Bruins beelined across the ice to mob him at the buzzer, Tim Thomas tapped both goalposts, sank to his knees and rubbed the ice in front of his empty goal. Thomas drew a virtual line in his crease throughout these crazy, contentious Stanley Cup finals, and Boston's brilliant goalie just wouldn't allow the Vancouver Canucks to cross it whenever it really mattered. After 39 years without a championship, the Bruins ripped the Cup — and several thousand hearts — out of a Canadian city that had waited four decades itself for one sip. Thomas was just too good, and the Bruins are the NHL's best. The Cup is headed back to the Hub of Hockey. Thomas made 37 saves in the second shutout of his landmark finals performance, Patrice Bergeron and rookie Brad Marchand scored two goals apiece, and the Bruins beat the Canucks 4-0 Wednesday night to win their first championship since 1972. "I think I went even further than I thought," Thomas said. "I never envisioned three Game 7s in one playoff season and still being able to come out on top." The Bruins leaped over the boards and headed straight for Thomas at the final buzzer, mobbing the goalie who carried them through long stretches of this post-season. The Bruins are the first team in NHL history to win a Game 7 three times in the same postseason, with Thomas posting shutouts in the decisive game of the Eastern Conference finals and the Stanley Cup finals. Captain Zdeno Chara nearly slipped when he skated away from Commissioner Gary Bettman with the Stanley Cup. And the oversized trophy eventually got a lift from Nathan Horton, the injured Boston forward whose Game 3 concussion on a late hit irrevocably swung the series' momentum to Boston. Before Game 7, Horton worked to give the Bruins a home-ice advantage, pouring a bottle of Boston water onto the ice in front of the Bruins' bench 90 minutes before warmups. "I was just trying to get some Garden ice here and make it our ice," Horton said. But it was mostly Thomas, who limited the Canucks to eight goals in seven spectacular games in the finals, blanking Vancouver in two of the last four. Boston dropped the first two games in Vancouver but became just the third team since 1966 to overcome that deficit. "We got the first goal, and we knew that would be important coming here," said 43-year-old Mark Recchi, who plans to retire after winning the Stanley Cup with his third franchise. "If they got any

BACK FROM THE BRINK Cal's emotional season ends in Omaha

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — This season has already included the biggest save in California baseball history. Now the Golden Bears are hoping to cap it with one of their biggest wins.

A season that started with the Cal baseball program on the chopping block because of budget problems is ending at the College World Series in what can only be described as a storybook ending.

"It's been a roller coaster ride," catcher Chadd Krist said. "We were cut, we weren't cut, we weren't playing very well and lost some of our focus and energy. We were kind of a bubble team for the playoffs but we made it. We deserved to make it and now we're going to the College World Series. It's been a unique ride but it's been special."

It's been an emotional year for the Golden Bears (37-21), who found out in September just before the start of fall practice that the program would be eliminated after the school year as part of a cost-cutting move by cash-strapped Cal.

Then hopes for reinstatement spurred by private fundraising were dashed just over a week before the season when the school announced that the men's rugby, women's lacrosse and women's gymnastics programs would be saved, but baseball and men's gymnastics would be eliminated after the year.

But the program's supporters never stopped working, raising more than $9 million to persuade Chancellor Robert Birge-neau to announce in April that the program would avoid the chopping block.

The players did the rest. They made it to the NCAA tournament, staged a dramatic rally to beat Baylor to win a regional, then swept Dallas Baptist in the super regional to earn the program's first trip to the College World Series since 1992.

The Bears open play Sunday against top-seeded Virginia, looking for their third title overall and first since 1957.

"They weren't going to take no for an answer in terms of competing and we weren't going to take no for an answer in terms of reinstatement," said former Cal and major league pitcher Doug Nickle, who was heavily involved in the group Save Cal Baseball. "To see both reached was almost surreal. The pure joy was like a release."

Report: Football schools made more money

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — More football-playing colleges are cutting back on costs and turning profits, too.

The latest NCAA annual report on revenue and expenses shows that 22 Football Bowl Subdivision schools made money in 2009-10, eight more than the previous year, and that schools in both Division I football subdivisions have figured out how to halt a rapid increase in expenses.

The report was released Wednesday, two days after NCAA President Mark Emmert announced he would hold a retreat later this summer to discuss the fiscal sustainability of athletic departments with about 50 university leaders.

The report isn't all good news for the schools.

Emmert is concerned the balance in college sports could be jeopardized by a growing gap between schools with self-sufficient athletic departments and those that rely on school subsidies to fund sports programs.

"That gap in revenue, either from self-generated or institutionally allocated sources, is significant," Emmert said in a statement posted on the NCAA website. "Indeed, it is coming to redefine what we mean by competitive equity. This will undoubtedly be a discussion point at the August presidential retreat."

The report shows an increasing financial disparity between those with lots of money and those trying to find money.

The median net surplus of the 22 moneymaking athletic departments was roughly $7.4 million, while the median net deficit for the other 98 FBS schools was $11.3 million. The gap of $18.7 million is much higher than the $15.6 million difference in last year's report.

Schools that play football, however, generally appear to be making more money to fund their programs. The findings show:

— After adjusting for inflation, total expenses for FBS schools increased by 1 percent in 2009-10 over the previous year and decreased by 8 percent at Football Championship Subdivision schools. Division I schools without football had a 9 percent increase in expenses.

— Median revenues for FBS schools increased by 9.5 percent and jumped 14 percent for FCS schools. Non-football schools saw revenue drop by 5.1 percent.

— Overall, the median revenue for FBS schools was about $48.3 million, compared with FCS schools ($13,189,000) and non-football schools ($11,077,000).

— The net operating results show FBS schools are losing nearly $9.5 million on average, compared with FCS schools that are losing slightly more than $9.1 million and non-football schools at approximately $8.6 million.

— In all three NCAA divisions, total athletic department expenditures continue to hold at about 5 percent of the share of a school's overall budget. That number that drops to 1 percent among FBS schools and 4 percent at FCS schools and those without football when net deficits, rather than overall expenses, are part of the equation.

The report also shows that nearly half of all Division I athletic expenses are derived from salaries and benefits for coaches and administrators or scholarships given to players.

Mini-Cassia Diggers playoff bound

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — The Mini-Cassia Diggers' inaugural season has been a roller-coaster ride, so it's only fitting that they would end their Rocky Mountain Football League regular season with some dramatics.

In the finale last Saturday, Miguel Simental kicked the game-winning field goal in the Diggers' 26-24 victory over the Idaho Matadors. The win moved Mini-Cassia to 5-3 overall and into a tie for the final Division AA playoff spot.

At first, league officials told the Diggers their season was over, but a closer examination of RMFL tiebreaker rules determined Mini-Cassia had indeed clinched a playoff berth.

The Diggers will meet the undefeated (8-0) Southern Idaho Mustangs, based out of Idaho Falls, in the first round. The game will be played 7 p.m. Saturday at American Falls Intermediate School. Although the Mustangs are the home team, the site is closer to Mini-Cassia, and team organizer and lineman Kit Carney hopes for increased fan support.

The Diggers lost to the Mustangs 23-12 earlier this season.

"It was a fairly close game, but we didn't make plays at the end of the day," said Carney. "We're coming in with a lot better attitude. It's really hard to beat a good team twice and I think we're going to be overlooked. When we come out, I know that they're not going to know what hit 'em."

The Diggers' offense is led by quarterback Mike Manning, whose top receiving targets are Pablo Marin and Brad Cook. Marin is coming off a 180-yard game last week.

Running backs Ryan Verwey and Logan Parrish will carry the load. Parrish scored two TDs in last week's win.

Defensively, the Diggers boast Brogan Thoren, who broke the league's single-season sack record with 15. The previous record was 13, held by a player from Helena.

To beat Southern Idaho, Carney said the Diggers will need a full team effort.

"We've got some big things in mind," Carney said. "Even though we lost to this team, I think we're going to show up and blow them out of the water. We're going to be a different team than what showed up a few weeks ago. We get a second chance, and not a lot of teams get that opportunity."

Damon Jones hit a double and had two RBIs in Game 2.

Lee Johnson and Wyatt Doyle earned the wins on the mound for the Cowboys (5-5).

chances, Timmy was there, and it was just scary how good he was."

Bergeron quieted the crowd with the first goal, scoring the eventual game-winner in the first period. He added a short-handed score in the second to keep the Cup away from the Canucks, who have never won it in nearly 41 years of existence.

Star goalie Roberto Luongo again failed to match Thomas' brilliance, giving up 18 goals in the last five games of the finals.

Thomas thoroughly outplayed and outclassed his Vancouver counterpart while limiting the Canucks to eight goals in seven games. Luongo, Vancouver's enigmatic goalie, capped a brutally inconsistent series by allowing Bergeron's crushing short-handed goal to slip underneath him late in the second period.

"Their goaltender was real tough to beat," Vancouver coach Alain Vigneault said. "The way they played in front of him was real tough to beat. We had some Grade A chances, and we were unable to score."

Game 7 was another heartbreak for the Canucks, who still have never raised the Cup, and their stunned fans, who stayed by the thousands just to get a glimpse of the trophy.

Thomas silenced the NHL's highest-scoring team, erased nearly four decades of Bruins playoff blunders and crushed an entire Canadian city desperate to take the Stanley Cup across town to Stanley Park.

"Anybody in our situation right now would feel real disappointed, whether you're the favorite or not," Vigneault said. "We battled real hard. We gave it our best shot. This one game, they were the better team. It's that simple."

A scenic Pioneer League baseball road trip

By Carey J. Williams
Associated Press writer

MISSOULA, Mont. — Eight baseball games, eight different ballparks, eight days. We would have seen eight home-team wins, but the Missoula Osprey blew the ninth-inning lead in the trip opener.

A motorcycle tour last summer through the stadiums of the Pioneer League took me and my dad through some of the most beautiful parts of Montana, Idaho, Wyoming and Utah, with some of the parks offering spectacular mountain range views. Catching games in all eight places makes a great theme for a summer road trip through the region, where nearby attractions include Yellowstone and the Grand Tetons.

The league has a Rookie classification, the lowest class of the minor league farm systems, with many players right out of high school. A number of famous ballplayers started in the league, including George Brett, Jeff Cirillo, Andre Dawson, Sid Fernandez, Cecil Fielder, Andres Galarraga, Eric Karros, Pedro Martinez, Raul Mondesi, Gary Sheffield and Ryne Sandberg.

The league dates to 1939, though games were suspended during World War II. The current eight teams are broken into two divisions. The four Montana teams, the Missoula Osprey, Helena Brewers, Great Falls Voyagers and Billings Mustangs, make up the North Division. The South Division stretches from Idaho, with the Idaho Falls Chukars, to Wyoming, with the Casper Ghosts, and down to Utah, with the Orem Owlz and Ogden Raptors.

It's a split-season format with the division winners in the first and second halves of the season making the playoffs. In 2010, the Helena Brewers won the league championship.

Our first game was in downtown Missoula, next to the Clark Fork River. The stadium opened in 2004 and features an osprey mascot. We even saw a real osprey nest on a pole just outside the right-center field wall.

We quickly noticed the small town, family-friendly environment. As we were parking our motorcycles just outside of the fee lot, an employee came over and invited us to use free motorcycle parking near the front gate.

It was a Saturday night and the stands were nearly full. A promotion that night gave away Osprey Snuggles to the first 750 fans (announced attendance was 2,841).

The early fans were also treated to a local band performing on the first base dugout. Pregame con-

This undated photo courtesy of the Ogden Raptors shows the Raptors at Lindquist Field with the Wasatch Mountain Range in the background in Ogden, Utah. The Pioneer League started in 1939. The current eight teams in the Minor Leagues are broken into two divisions. certs take place for every Saturday night home game. (The ballpark also hosts other events, including this year, on Aug. 2, when the team's away, an appearance by Willie Nelson and Lyle Lovett.)

The following day, we saw the Helena Brewers (affiliated with the Milwaukee Brewers). Helena has the smallest market and the oldest stadium in the league. A half-hour before the first pitch, I counted 32 people in the stands, though more fans eventually arrived for the Sunday afternoon game. The park offers a weekend promotion of four tickets, four hotdogs and four sodas for $25, and kids 13 and under get to run the bases after Sunday games.

It was a beautiful ride from Missoula, over MacDonald Pass in the Rockies, as we headed south toward Butte.

Idaho Falls has the longest continuous team (since 1976) in the Pioneer League. The Chukars are named for a partridge-like bird and their ballpark, Melaleuca Field, built in 2007, is next to Highland Park and the Snake River. Fans can use a hot tub on the right field line for an additional fee.

The Monday night announced attendance of 3,720 was the biggest crowd of the trip, fueled by free general admission tickets from a local credit union.

Most of the breaks between innings were filled with crowd participation activities. The most creative game of the trip was called sectional volleyball. Two section leaders held up a volleyball net and whichever section had the most beach balls at the end of the song, lost.

The game ended with a game-winning walk-off hit.

The next day we rode the most scenic parts of the trip, from Idaho Falls to Casper. Or maybe I should say from Idaho Falls to just outside of Jackson, Wyo. The route takes you right near Grand Teton National Park, with Yellowstone nearby. After that, though, we hit central Wyoming, which doesn't offer much to write home about except for the courage and fortitude of highway construction workers.

The stadium for the Casper Ghosts features a pale ale on tap called the Boo Brew made by the Grand Teton Brewing Company, which also makes root beer. We visited the brewery earlier in the day, in Victor.

Casper also offered the best beverage deal of our trip. During the game, a player from the opposite team was designated as the "brew guy," and after the home team struck him out in the fourth inning, beers were $2 for the next 10 minutes.

But there was no beer available at our next stop, in Orem. Games there are held on the Utah Valley University campus, where alcohol is prohibited under state law. Obviously, that made it the most family-friendly park on the tour.

Orem is south of Salt Lake City, near Provo. The views from the stadium of the Wasatch Mountain Range and Utah Lake were beautiful, but something was missing from the baseball experience — drunken fans yelling at the umpires.

The umpires travel in two-man crews, and just like the players, they are in the early stages of their professional careers.

Players often say that life on the road in the minor leagues is not easy. A local article I read said the Orem Owlz arrived at 7 a.m. after an overnight bus ride from Montana.

Perhaps the Owlz know some travel secrets the other teams don't. They won the league's 2009 title, which gave them four championships in six years.

Another scenic riding highlight of the trip was traveling north 110 miles to Ogden. We rode on the eastern side of the mountains instead of the more direct route on the western side, through Salt Lake City.

After traveling near Park City earlier in the day, it was only fitting that the foul poles at the Ogden park were sponsored by a couple of ski brands — Salomon and Atomic. Here, too, the Wasatch Mountain Range offers a magnificent backdrop to the stadium.

Last year, the Ogden Raptors led the league in attendance with 132,799 fans. Next on the list was Billings with 101,516, Idaho Falls with 91,551, Missoula at 87,345, Orem with 81,229, Great Falls at 66,106, Casper at 57,120, and Helena with 32,723, for a league season attendance total of 650,389. The numbers were down from 2009, likely due to the weak economy. Still, ticket prices for Pioneer League games are a bargain compared to Major League games or even the movies: adult tickets average $6.13, kids $5.06, according to Steve Densa, who handles communications for Minor League Baseball.

The entrance to Lindquist Field says "Welcome to Dodgertown, Utah." The team is a farm team for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Many fans feel a connection to their teams' affiliates. They track the players through the minors and applaud when winning scores are announced for the farm teams.

The next night in Billings, the players wore Cincinnati Reds jerseys. The Billings-Reds partnership began in 1974.

Dehler Park opened in 2008, and is the only ballpark in the league where fans can walk around the entire park without leaving the gates. There are no obstructed seats, and fans can watch the live game while waiting in concession stand lines.

That night fans were treated to a walk-off double to complete a comeback.

We ended our trip in Great Falls at Centene Stadium watching the Voyagers, affiliated with the Chicago White Sox. Great Falls was a stop on the Lewis and Clark Expedition of 1805, but local lore also includes a 20th century tale, memorialized in a team logo of a baseball on a spinning planet. In 1950, when the team was called the Great Falls Electric, general manager Nick Mariana captured a home movie of two shiny objects spinning in the sky. The "Mariana Incident" led to investigations, debunkings and claims ranging from UFO to hoax.

We didn't see any UFOs on our trip, but after traveling over 2,200 miles to all eight Pioneer League parks, we certainly qualify as voyagers.

Tickling golf's funny bone at the U.S. Open

BETHESDA, Md. — Nobody ever laughs much during U.S. Open week. Small wonder.

Howls, curses, grimaces and groans, players doubled over with heads in hands — those are the familiar sounds and sights that hold sway during golf's toughest test, beginning with the moment players set eyes on the brutal championship layout and lasting until the last putt drops mercifully on Sunday. Not this year.

In what could charitably be called a pre-emptive strike on the game's most buttoned-down event, Ben Crane and pals Rickie Fowler, Bubba Watson and Hunter Mahan released their send-up of a boy-band video titled "Oh Oh Oh" earlier this week — poking fun at everything from how players dress to the exaggerated manners on display from tee to green.

To celebrate the launch, Crane, the band's leader and chief provocateur, arrived for the tournament's final practice session turned out in pink accents from the tip of his cap down to his saddle shoes.

"All these guys asked at some point if they could do a video and wanted to be in one and so, it just kind of fell into, you know, a boy band-type deal. So we became the golf boys," he chuckled. "It was kind of hot."

Last time at Congressional: Ernie Els won his second U.S. Open by closing with a 1-under 69. He hit 5-iron into the dangerous 17th for par, then made a 5-foot par putt on the 18th. Tom Lehman hit into the water on the 17th, while Colin Montgomerie missed a par putt on the 17th to miss another chance in a major.

minute long clip had already generated more than 130,000 hits by mid-afternoon Wednesday. It's not the kind of video you can imagine Jack Nicklaus or Arnold Palmer ever taking part in, though they once posed together in a famous photo wearing women's wigs.

But as Crane's manager, Tommy Limbaugh, noted, "I can't imagine Jack not laughing when he saw it."

No doubt.

Crane, who's released a handful of goofy videos previously, wears a crash helmet and bright orange body surfing suit in this one. Watson, playing barefoot, opted for bib overalls and Fowler donned black jeans and jacket with an array of scarfs in typical boy-band style. But it's Mahan who's likely to grab the costuming Oscar for his tiger-stripe pants and sleeveless Alpaca vest.

Asked whether he ever imagined golfers promoting their sport that way, the 66-year-old Limbaugh simply shook his head.

"You're talkin' to an old football coach when you ask that question. Absolutely not. No way to foresee this day coming," he replied. But a moment later, he added, "It's good."

So good, in fact, that Limbaugh hasn't found the time to respond to any but a few of the hundreds of e-mails rolling in, nearly all of which have been positive, let alone keep up with requests from media outlets to put Crane on the air. He did appear on a segment at The Golf Channel, where former player Frank Nobilo, one of the show's over-40 hosts, gave the video a hearty thumbs up.

In this era of Twitter and social networking, younger fans expect to see the curtain pulled back on just about every endeavor, including golf. As Crane made his way from the range to the first tee, fans called out "loved the video" on either side of him. He politely said thanks and squelched any talk about the video transforming him into the game's version of a rock star.

"Just a golfer," he said pausing. "A golfer who likes to enjoy himself."

If the blue blazers who run the U.S. Golf Association had any problem with the video, they held their tongues during the organization's annual "State of the Game" news conference. The PGA Tour, on the other hand, is in the business of merchandising their golfers, which might explain why the video was prominently posted on its website.

Crane made no apologies, saying the timing was intentional.

"We planned it for this week. Everybody is excited about golf this week," he said. "I thought the timing was good."

If Limbaugh's inbox and voicemail count is any indication, Crane is spot on. "I think genuine interest — this is interesting to me — is how many people are crying for more. Just that simple statement: We need more of this in golf. If there's a constant theme, that's the theme I'm hearing. ...

"I think fans are dying to know golfers — to really know them. What they see between the ropes is focused on one thing, not showing much emotion, whereas this is really opening up the personalities," he said, "in a way they've never seen them."

Defending champ Serena seeded 7th at Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Defending champion Serena Williams was bumped up to No. 7 in the Wimbledon seedings — 19 places above her world ranking — on Wednesday, a position that will allow her to avoid playing the highest-ranked players until at least the quarterfinals.

Williams won her 13th Grand Slam title last year at the All England Club, but stepped on broken glass and needed two foot surgeries. She later had blood clots on her lungs, and missed nearly a year of competition.

She returned on Tuesday at Eastbourne, coming back from a set down to defeat Tsvetana Pironkova 1-6, 6-3, 6-4, but lost Wednesday to top-seeded Vera Zvonareva 3-6, 7-6 (5), 7-5 in the second round.

She was originally seeded No. 8, but the withdrawal of second-seeded Kim Clijsters moved the rest of the field up one spot.

"Listen, I don't ask for much. I would have been happy with 25, because I'm going to be in there fighting for every point and for everything," Williams said. "It doesn't matter where I'm seeded. I'm just going to give it 200 percent like everyone else in the draw."

Wimbledon starts Monday. The draw is scheduled for Friday.

On the men's side, defending champion Rafael Nadal was seeded No. 1, followed by Novak Djokovic at No. 2, Roger Federer at No. 3 and Andy Murray at No. 4 — in line with their rankings.

Federer and Nadal have combined for the past eight titles at the All England Club.

For Federer, it's the first time he's been outside the top two seedings at Wimbledon since 2003, the year he won the first of five straight titles at the grass-court Grand Slam.

Since her injury, Williams has dropped to No. 26 in the WTA rankings. If Wimbledon organizers had seeded her according to her ranking, the four-time Wimbledon champion could have come up against a top player in the third round.

Her sister Venus, a five-time Wimbledon champion, was seeded No. 24. She has dropped to 33rd in the rankings since missing most of this season with a hip injury. She also returned to action this week with two wins at Eastbourne.

"The seeding order follows the WTA ranking list, except where in the opinion of the committee, a change is necessary to produce a balanced draw," Wimbledon organizers said. "The only changes this year are Serena Williams and Venus Williams moving to 8 and 24, respectively. This reflects the balance between their proven records and also their lack of competitive play in the past 12 months."

The sisters have combined to win nine of the last 11 titles at the All England Club.

"I just want to be in the draw," said Venus, who beat Ana Ivanovic 6-3, 6-2 Wednesday to reach the quarterfinals at Eastbourne. "I'm still in this tournament so that's pretty much my focus. For me the seedings not a big deal."

WHEREAS, the said Subject Property is being used for residential use or is to be developed for residential use in the future; and,

WHEREAS, the City has utility services adjacent to the Subject Property; and,

WHEREAS, the City hereby determines and declares that it is in the best interests of not only the property owners of the Subject Property, but also the City as a whole for such land to be annexed into the City and that such annexation is consistent with the City's current version of the City's Comprehensive Plan and that such annexation is reasonable given all factors; and,

WHEREAS, William Emmett, has requested annexation and, further, the property owned by Kevin George and Kresta George receives water and sewer service from the City and implied consent by the owners has been given as provided in Idaho Code Section 50-222 (4) (ii); and therefore the City can proceed with the annexation as a "Category A" type of annexation as set forth in Idaho Code Section 50-222 (3) and (5) (a); and,

Do-It-Yourself Ideas

Waterfall & Fishpond

When it's hot, the cool spray and soothing sounds of running water can provide a refreshing escape. With this waterfall-fountain-fishpond project, do-it-yourselfers can create a private retreat and a focal point for landscaping in their own backyards. Best of all, they can do it without the hassle and expense of contractors.

The pond pictured here measures approximately 4 feet wide by 16 feet long and holds 300 gallons of water, but a variety of shapes and sizes can be substituted for this one.

The plan includes step-by-step instructions with 20 photos and a complete materials list.

BREAKING NEWS!!

magicvalley.com

Today is Thursday, June 16, the 167th day of 2011. There are 198 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On June 16, 1911, the Computing-Tabulating-Recording Co. was incorporated in New York State; it later became known as International Business Machines, or IBM.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1567, Mary, Queen of Scots, was imprisoned in Lochleven Castle in Scotland. (She escaped almost a year later but ended up imprisoned again.)

In 1858, accepting the Illinois Republican Party's nomination for the U.S. Senate, Abraham Lincoln said the slavery issue had to be resolved, declaring, "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

In 1903, Ford Motor Co. was incorporated.

In 1932, President Herbert Hoover and Vice President Charles Curtis were renominated at the Republican national convention in Chicago.

In 1933, the National Industrial Recovery Act became law. (It was later struck down by the Supreme Court.)

In 1941, National Airport (now Ronald Reagan Washington National Airport) opened for business with a ceremony attended by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

In 1959, actor George Reeves, TV's "Superman," was found dead of an apparently self-inflicted gunshot wound in the bedroom of his Beverly Hills, Calif., home; he was 45.

In 1963, the world's first female space traveler, Valentina Tereshkova, was launched into orbit by the Soviet Union aboard Vostok 6.

In 1970, Kenneth A. Gibson of Newark, N.J., became the first black politician elected mayor of a major Northeast city. Chicago Bears running back Brian Piccolo, 26, died at a New York hospital after battling cancer.

In 1978, President Jimmy Carter and Panamanian leader Omar Torrijos exchanged the instruments of ratification for the Panama Canal treaties.

Ten years ago: Face to face for the first time, President George W. Bush and Russian President Vladimir Putin pledged during a meeting in Slovenia to deepen their nations' bonds and to explore the possibility of compromise on U.S. missile defense plans. City lawmakers elected Klaus Wowereit Berlin's first openly gay mayor.

Five years ago: The House rejected a timetable for pulling U.S. forces out of Iraq, 256-153. In Iraq, three 101st Airborne Division soldiers were killed in an attack while two others were abducted (their mutilated bodies were found three days later). In Martinez, Calif., Susan Polk, 48, was convicted of second-degree murder for stabbing to death her millionaire psychotherapist husband, Felix Polk, whom she had first met as a 14-year-old girl in treatment. "Lonelygirl15," a fictitious video blogger played by actress Jessica Lee Rose, made her online debut.

One year ago: After meeting with President Barack Obama at the White House, BP Chairman Carl-Henric Svanberg announced the oil giant was establishing a $20 billion claim fund and suspending dividends as he insisted, "We care about the small people." Movie director Ronald Neame ("The Poseidon Adventure") died in Los Angeles at age 99.

IF JUNE 16 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Be at peace with the world and gather inspiration to brighten your inner light in the year to come. You are likely to be generally satisfied with the status quo and happy to travel along without making waves or kicking up a fuss for the next six weeks. Keep an eye peeled for an opportunity or offer that might change your life for the better. You could be a bit gullible however, so ask advice from a friend or professionals before making dynamic changes. If you wish to start an important project of any kind, your judgment and business sense will be at a peak. From September through February, you might be on a very tight schedule that necessitates a high degree of self-discipline, but the experience you gather will be valuable and lead to better things.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A chip on your shoulder may result in the cold shoulder from someone else. When you try to appear gritty, original, progressive or shocking, you might have all the charm and abrasiveness of sandpaper.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Going through the motions can be maddening. Friends with benefits might begin to doubt the value of the reimbursements. You might be more concerned about doing your duty then enriching your life.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): The plot thickens. You can harness your imagination and nail down the details under these stars. This might be a good time to outline a story, investigate an idea or to simply balance the checkbook.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Concentrate on putting one foot in front of the other. Put enthusiasms in an envelope then seal it for later use. To make progress it is wise to be methodical and best to be cautious rather than carefree.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): If you haven't found yourself, it is probably because you were never lost. Don't let anything undermine your confidence. At the same time, steer clear of business deals where you are out of your depth.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be as patient as Job. Relationships may experience ups and downs, but are sure to change for the better by next week. Problems from the past or bills you forgot about could show up to spoil your plans.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): No one likes to feel used. You do the right thing – but not always willingly. Consciously strive to make a special someone feel loved and show appreciation to significant others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Search for solid solutions to perplexing problems. It may be difficult to get feedback from your partners or significant others, as time for socializing is scant. Hold off on making key purchases.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can't rest on your laurels if you want to succeed. The nose and the grindstone must meet. For the next several days, it is best to be as thrifty as possible and avoid adding credit card debt.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Distractions are demeaning. To make ice cream, it is necessary to crank the handle consistently. The attractive carrot held in front of your nose may be unattainable unless you remain a concerted effort.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Subtle crosscurrents can interfere with business success. With financial matters, it is best to adopt an attitude of, "When in doubt, don't." Focus on being disciplined about the budget.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Roll up the shirtsleeves and get down to the nitty-gritty. Leave romantic banter to the scriptwriters and try to maintain a businesslike demeanor. Your consistent and diligent efforts will pay off in the end.
