THE COST OF CONSERVATION

“Saving the environment but killing our pocket book is what we're going to start calling it.”

Waste director says Twin Falls' recycling may affect rates at landfill, but also extends its life

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Twin Falls City Councilman David E. Johnson is pro-conservation. But he also doesn't want to pay more for it.

It's a tricky balance, and one with particular weight now: with use driven down by wet weather, city water revenue is projected to be down $460,000. Southern Idaho Solid Waste, which operates the landfill, may need to raise its rates to cover rising costs and declining use, thanks in part to the city's new recycling program.

For managers of the Milner Butte Landfill south of Burley, the rub is this: fewer tons of waste are being deposited, but its costs aren't dropping. SISW Executive Director Josh Bartlome said that while tonnage lost to Twin Falls' recycling effort isn't all to blame — recycling is something his organization supports and does in its own way — it will factor into whether SISW charges counties more to take their trash.

And while SISW might need to raise its rates, Bartlome also said recycling has another hidden benefit: it will let the landfill operate longer without expanding, though it's a benefit he couldn't put a dollar amount to.

If SISW does raise its rates for trash it collects from a seven-county area, those rates could be passed down to individual residents and businesses as counties and cities look to recoup increased

Twin Falls council to hear results of parking surveys

RES America to ask for council's support on China Mountain

Times-News

After online and in-person surveys on downtown parking, Twin Falls city staff is ready to present its findings to the city council.

At the end of May, the city sought opinions from downtown stakeholders — business and property owners and shoppers alike — on what should be done with downtown parking and the much-disparaged meters.

Bicyclists beware: Injuries from cars up

City plans ad campaign as more people leave cars home amid high gas prices

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

As the weather warms up in south-central Idaho, more people will turn to walking and bicycle riding for getting around. Pedestrians, riders and motorists are encouraged to share the road and avoid needless accidents.

According to the Idaho Transportation Department Office of Highway Safety's 2010 report, the number of crashes with serious injuries has risen in a five-year period.

From 2006 to 2010, the amount of pedestrians sustaining serious injuries is up 1.7 percent. For bicyclists, the same figure has spiraled

Free asthma screening Saturday at Costco

Times-News

There will be a free asthma screening at Costco in Twin Falls on Saturday as part of the 15th annual Nationwide Asthma Screening Program, sponsored by the American College of Allergy, Asthma and Immunology. The screenings also offer people already diagnosed with asthma the chance to see if their condition is under control and can direct people who may be suffering from other breathing conditions such as chronic obstructive pulmonary disease to seek professional diagnosis. More than 24.6 million Americans, including 7.1 million children, have asthma. The disease is responsible for almost 4,000 deaths a year, according to a press release from Idaho allergist Dr. Gregory Wickern. Although the exact cause of asthma is unknown, many treatments are available to control this chronic inflammation of the airways in the lungs, according to the release.

Students will have to pay more for GED test

Times-News

Those seeking to prove their high-school equivalency through the GED will have to pay a little more for the tests starting July 1. GED tests taken at the College of Southern Idaho and other testing centers across the state will now cost $20 each, or $100 for the whole battery. That's up from $87 for all five — a $12 registration fee and $15 per test. Test retakes will also increase from $18 to $25, while the cost of the American government test will also increase to $20. According to a CSI release, students who have completed some but not all five required GED tests should plan to complete testing by the end of 2013, as a new test will be introduced in 2014. At that time, scores from incomplete tests will no longer be valid. To learn more or to schedule a test, call CSI's Adult Basic Education Center at 732-6534.

'Bold and Beautiful' repeats as best drama

LAS VEGAS (AP) — "The Bold and the Beautiful" won drama series honors for the third consecutive year at the Daytime Emmys on Sunday night in a bitter-sweet ceremony that marked the impending daytime departures of two veteran soap operas along with Regis Philbin and talk show queen Oprah Winfrey. Executive producer Bradley Bell accepted the trophy, saying, "It's over the top. We're so grateful." Bell saluted his late father William Bell, who created "The Young and the Restless" and gave the younger Bell his start in the business. "Dad, we did it," he said.

"Happy Father's Day," Laura Wright, who plays Carly Corinthos on "General Hospital," won her first Emmy in her first nomination. She joins Finola Hughes in 1991 as the only stars of the ABC soap to win lead actress honors. "Hell, yeah!" she said, thrusting the trophy in the air. "This has been 20 years of the best career ever." Michael Park, who plays Jack Snyder on CBS' "As the World Turns," earned lead actor honors. Scott Clifton won younger actor honors for his role as Liam Cooper on "The Bold and the Beautiful," one of four trophies the show earned.

Winds challenge crews battling Arizona, New Mexico wildfires

By Bob Christie
Associated Press

PHOENIX — Authorities ordered more evacuations Sunday as crews battling a pair of wildfires in Arizona and on the New Mexico border faced extremely high winds that drove flames across containment lines and toward populated areas. The new evacuations were near the southern Arizona city of Sierra Vista, where the Monument fire had already forced nearly 7,000 people to flee 2,600 homes. At least 44 homes have been lost. Winds reaching 50 mph pushed flames down a mountain and into a heavily populated area Sunday. Fire crews were forced to abandon their lines and try to set up in new spots as the fire advanced, fire spokesman Bill Paxton said. Residents of several areas that had been under a pre-evacuation notices were ordered to flee. An additional 1,500 homes were evacuated Sunday afternoon, and the fire jumped a highway and was blowing into a community, Cochise County sheriff's spokeswoman Carol Capas said. No additional damage to homes was immediately reported. "It's moving fast, like it was on Tuesday, just like it was on Thursday," she said. "The fire crews are doing an amazing job, trying to get in front of it." Meanwhile, the massive Wallow fire that has been burning in eastern Arizona for three weeks kept about 200 residents of Luna, N.M., under an evacuation order for a second day. A containment line that had held through days of high winds was breached Saturday and the fire raced toward town before shifting winds steered it around the community. It was moving to the north into an area of scattered ranches late Sunday afternoon, fire information officer Michael Puentes said. Despite the evacuation order for Luna, about half the town's residents remained in town. They have been told to stay off the roads so they don't get in the way of fire crews, Catron County Undersheriff Ian Fletcher said. Few people went to a Red Cross shelter set up in Reserve, N.M. "If the fire comes back around or things change where they have to get out, we still have an egress point, so we will still escort them out of town," Fletcher said. "We're expecting high winds this afternoon — we're preparing for the worst and hoping for the best." The Wallow fire, which is burning up much of Apache-Sitgreaves National Forest, is the largest of several wildfires burning in spots across the southwestern United States.

The city is working on a series of public service announcements via local radio and television, according to Twin Falls Parks and Recreation Director Dennis Bowyer.

"With high gas prices, more people are walking and riding," Bowyer said. "Also, more people are getting out for fresh air." Bowyer also wants to remind the public of the multiple walking and biking paths around town, including the trails at the canyon rim and Rock Creek Park. Bradley Guire may be reached at bguire@magicvalley.com or 735-3380.

Council

The city is working on its pledge of support for the China Mountain wind project. In January, the five voting council members unanimously supported including wind energy in a U.S. Bureau of Land Management plan that will govern 1.4 million acres of public land in the Jarbidge area. RES Americas representative Laurie Lickley said at the January meeting that BLM approval of land use is the only thing stopping the development of her company's proposed 30,000-acre, 200-turbine wind farm, which is expected to generate 400 megawatts of power and more than $30 million in revenue to Twin Falls County. The wind farm is proposed to be in habitat for the greater sage grouse, a candidate for federal protection due to its struggling population. • Consideration of a $1.5 million contract award to Stutzman, Inc., of Twin Falls, to construct a waterline extension on Falls Avenue East. This is part of the city's arsenic-reduction project. • Event approval for the Fourth of July fireworks display at the College of Southern Idaho. The item is on the consent calendar, a slot typically reserved for non-controversial or straightforward council matters.

costs. Twin Falls City Councilman Trip Craig looked into the future at last Monday's council meeting, speculating on a worse situation if Jerome, Kimberly and other towns start recycling.
"Saving the environment but killing our pocketbook is what we're going to start calling it," he said.
Councilman Will Kezele echoed that and warned against entering a self-perpetuating cycle of raising utility rates in response to conservation, only to see people conserve more — and pay even less for garbage and other services — as a result.
The city's water fund, which prompted the Monday council discussion, runs parallel to the issues facing SISW: less water is being used, with weather and city conservation efforts at least partly to blame, and so less revenue is coming in.

"If you look at the years the revenue didn't meet the budget, cooler temperatures and higher precipitation have played a part," city Chief Finance Officer Lori Race said at the Monday council meeting, "But is that the whole story? I can't answer that."
Councilman Lance Clow pitched the idea of reining back conservation efforts in wet springs like this one, but only if the city can avoid unintended consequences. He wasn't for a complete repeal though: if the city started using more than its share of water, officials couldn't call on every house in the city to stop watering. They would call major industrial users ConAgra Food and Glanbia Foods.

"If we have a crisis, that's who gets to be hurt," Clow said Monday. "All of a sudden, you have people who's jobs are threatened, et cetera, and then the industry has non-dependability, and will they locate to a community with a more dependable water source?"
Johnson's response is for government, or quasi-government agencies like the SISW, to find efficiencies, or do really anything they can to bring costs in line with use — you don't want to raise rates as a reward for greater conservation, he said. He praised Race repeatedly, in the meeting and later, for emulating that attitude.

Johnson said he doesn't classify himself as a save-the-planet type, but recognizes conservation as a good thing.
"I'm not a radical either way," he said. "I guess if anything bothers me, and it didn't just happen overnight, it just bothers me in general that government has this mindset that we'll just go get money."
Bartlome said his operation is already efficient, down to knowing how many times a compactor should back over trash before it is just wasting gas without noticeable compaction. But in the end, he and his staff can only calculate the operating costs per ton and count on the waste board and counties to find a way to pay it.

21-year-old Californian wins Miss USA crown

The Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — A 21-year-old auburn-haired California girl won the Miss USA crown on Sunday night and will represent the nation in this year's Miss Universe pageant in September in Brazil.
Alyssa Campanella of Los Angeles topped a field of 51 beauty queens to take the title at the Planet Hollywood Resort & Casino on the Las Vegas Strip. She strutted across the stage in a blue bikini with white polka dots and a dark turquoise evening gown with beading on its top.
She also answered a question about legalizing marijuana by saying she didn't think it should be fully legalized as a solution to help ailing economies.
"Well, I understand why that question would be asked, especially with today's economy, but I also understand that medical marijuana is very important to help those who need it medically," she said. "I'm not sure if it should be legalized, if it would really affect, with the drug war. I mean, it's abused today, unfortunately, so that's the only reason why I would kind of be a little bit against it, but medically it's OK."
Miss Tennessee Ashley Durham was the first runner-up, while contestants from Alabama and Texas placed third and fourth.
Campanella, a natural blonde, said she dyed her hair six years ago for a part in a play, for a "fiery" character with whom she found she had traits in common.

"It's really brought out the true Alyssa Campanella, I feel, and that's why I really enjoy being a redhead," she said.

Campanella

Campanella replaces Miss USA 2010 Rima Fakih. The Michigan woman teared up as she walked across the stage for a final goodbye.
The pageant had three competitions: swimsuit, evening gown and interview question.

The contestants were whittled to 16 after the show's opening number, in which the beauty queens introduced themselves one-by-one.

Barbara and Raymond Greene

“After seeing the ad for the HealthFair, we scheduled an appointment for my husband. That day, they discovered an aneurysm of 8.5cm on Ray’s aorta. The HealthFair technicians told Ray to go to the nearest hospital immediately. At the hospital, Ray was given a CAT scan and admitted for further tests. They found the aneurysm was leaking and required urgent surgery for Ray to survive. The HealthFair test and the operation that followed most certainly saved Ray’s life.”

Sincerely,

“Little did I know that my neighbors’ pestering me to go to the HealthFair would save me from having a stroke. I finally agreed to go, and I am very glad I did. The HealthFair technician found that I had a very clogged carotid artery and told me to see my doctor immediately. I was shocked. I always have regular and vigorous physical exams. Within a week of the HealthFair screening, I was in the hospital having surgery on the clogged artery. Many of the hospital staff were surprised by my condition considering my otherwise good health. My surgeon told me the artery was over 80% blocked and the plaque unstable. He was surprised that I hadn’t already had a stroke, and was sure I would’ve had one soon without surgery. HealthFair provided a miracle for me and my neighbor. I think everyone should have the screening. It’s the best money I have ever spent.”

Sincerely,
Robert Hein

Heart Disease, Stroke & Aneurysm Prevention Package

Echocardiogram Ultrasound Test

A video ultrasound of the heart, which may detect enlargement of the heart, valve abnormalities, blood clots and tumors.

Electrocardiogram (EKG)

This screening provides a picture of the heart’s electrical activity, which may predict pending heart attack, irregular rhythm and more.

Hardening of the Arteries (ASI) Test

Arteriosclerosis reduces flexibility in the arteries. The higher the ASI, the more likely someone is to have hardening of the arteries.

Stroke/Carotid Artery Ultrasound Test

This ultrasound test identifies plaque buildup in the carotid arteries, which is a leading cause of stroke.

Peripheral Arterial Disease (PAD) Test

Leg cramps due to poor circulation could indicate something more serious. This screening measures the extremities for peripheral arterial disease.

At New Jersey haunt, big tears for Springsteen’s Big Man

By Josh Lederman
Associated Press

ASBURY PARK, N.J. — Nancy Ryder-Cunningham said it felt like the end of the soundtrack to her life.

Outside The Stone Pony, the Jersey Shore rock club that helped launch Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band, she wept Sunday as she surveyed the flowers, candles and photos that had sprung up overnight in honor of saxophonist Clarence Clemons.

“It changed everything in my life,” said Ryder-Cunningham, 59, recalling the first of about 100 Springsteen concerts she estimated she had attended. “I was just a disillusioned kid on the street, and I feel like they rescued me.”

Hundreds of the band’s fans, including some who drove from hours away, gathered at the club, where Springsteen and his bandmates got their start in the early 1970s. Clemons died Saturday at age 69 of complications from a stroke.

“R.I.P., Clarence — you filled my life with music,” said the inscription on one bouquet left outside the club. Inside, framed photos of the band, arranged side by side, were left on the stage Clemons graced so many times.

Clemons was known as the Big Man — for both his 6-foot-5-inch, 270-pound frame and his imposing stage presence. His raucous sax solos helped define the Jersey Shore sound of the 1970s and ‘80s.

Clemons’ last performance at Stone Pony was a solo show in the summer of 2006, house promoter Kyle Brendle said, but Springsteen and Clemons played routinely at the club in the 1970s, usually as unannounced acts.

The gathering Sunday afternoon juxtaposed bereavement and festivity. Fans milled around, drank beer and sang along to Springsteen tunes as they talked about what Clemons’ music meant to them.

“One of our first dates was a Bruce concert,” said Cyndi Matts of Little Silver, recalling the night more than a quarter-century ago when she and the man who later became her husband heard the band perform the song “Jungleland.” “When he had that solo and everyone put their hands up — it still gives me chills.”

Val Vancleef, a 27-year-old podiatrist from Ocean Grove, said her parents never tire of talking about the time they sat next to Clemons at a restaurant when she was a baby. Clemons overheard it was the child’s birthday and performed “Happy Birthday,” the family story goes.

Gary Mottola, who owns The Stone Pony, said the E Street Band was “the soul of Asbury Park” and Clemons the soul of the band. When the city fell on hard times, it was the band’s energy that kept it alive, he said.

Expressions of adoration for Clemons came from across the country after he suffered a stroke last week at his home in Singer Island, Fla. Lady Gaga encouraged her fans to create video tributes and Springsteen called him a “beloved comrade.”

On Sunday came one more — from Gov. Chris Christie, who said Clemons represented the soul and spirit of New Jersey.

“On a personal note, when I heard about the Big Man’s passing on Saturday night, I was struck with an overwhelming feeling that the days of my youth were now finally over,” he said.

A US Airways plane sits on the tarmac at Reagan National Airport in Washington on Sunday, surrounded by police and emergency vehicles after a bomb threat was made at an airport ticket counter in Ohio.

FBI: No bomb found on plane at Reagan Airport

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bomb threat made by someone at a Dayton, Ohio, airport ticket counter caused flights at Reagan National Airport to be grounded for a time as authorities searched a US Airways plane but found no explosives, authorities said Sunday.

Andrew Ames said no hazards were found aboard the plane that landed about 1 p.m. at the airport just outside Washington, D.C. Authorities searched everything including luggage and interviewed the 44 passengers who all got off safely.

Airport police took the person who made the threat to a mental health facility in Dayton, where the person was expected to stay overnight, said Special Agent Michael Brooks, an FBI spokesman in Cincinnati. He did not identify the suspect.

No charges had been filed as of Sunday evening and there are no other suspects, Brooks said.

“We have no reason to believe anyone else was involved,” he said.

The threat shut down the airport for about 20 minutes. US Airways Flight 2596 was moved away from the gate after landing, the FBI said. Reagan airport was the flight’s original destination.

Airport operations were back to normal, although some US Airways flights were delayed because the affected flight was taken to an area used by the airline, Metropolitan Washington Airports Authority spokeswoman Courtney Mickalonis.

Levees in N. Missouri breached, overtopped

By Heather Hollingsworth
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Several levees in northern Missouri were failing Sunday to hold back the surge of water being released from upstream dams.

Authorities said water — some of it from recent rain — began pouring over levees Saturday night and Sunday morning in Holt and Atchison counties, flooding farmland and numerous homes and cabins. A hole in the side of a Holt County levee continued to grow Sunday, deluging the state park and recreational area of Big Lake, a community of less than 200 people located 78 miles north of Kansas City.

Jud Kneuvean, chief of emergency management for the corps’ Kansas City District, said the Missouri river dipped by almost one foot after the Big Lake breach but that the water level started to rise again by Sunday afternoon.

Meanwhile, the Nebraska Public Power District issued a flooding alert Sunday for its Cooper Nuclear power plant near Brownville, Neb., as the Missouri River continues to rise. The declaration is the least serious of four emergency notifications established by the federal commission.

The plant was operating Sunday at full capacity, and there was no threat to plant employees or to the public, said Mark Becker, a spokesman for the Columbus, Neb.-based utility.

The Fort Calhoun Station, another nuclear plant along the river in eastern Nebraska, issued a similar alert June 6. That plant near Blair, Neb., has been shut down since April and will not be reactivated until the flooding subsides.

The corps said Sunday that the river level at Brownville, Neb., had surged about 2 feet from Saturday morning to Sunday morning. Water was flowing over a levee there and into farmland but the levee was being built up to alleviate that, said Jodi Fawl, spokeswoman for the Nebraska Emergency Management Agency.

In Missouri, presiding Holt County commissioner Mark Sitherwood said U.S. 159 is closed south of Big Lake because water is pouring over the road, and most of the west side of the community is underwater.

“It’s going through in one place that we know of and overtopped in numerous places and there is seepage everywhere,” Sitherwood said.

He said most people evacuated well in advance of the flooding. Those who stayed were told Saturday night that water was flowing into the area.

Giffords returns to Houston after Tucson visit

PHOENIX (AP) — Rep. Gabrielle Giffords returned to Houston on Sunday after spending the weekend with her family in Tucson.

The visit was the Arizona Democrat’s first trip home since was shot in the head at a January political event. Six people were killed in the attack and 12 others besides the congresswoman were wounded.

Giffords boarded a private plane late Sunday morning after spending nearly two days in Tucson, Giffords Chief of Staff Pia Carusone told The Arizona Republic. Details of the visit by Giffords and astronaut husband Mark Kelly were being kept private at his request.

Kelly announced the visit in a news release Friday, and the couple and one of Kelly’s daughters arrived in Tucson that evening.

“We’ve been dreaming of this trip for some time,” Kelly said in a statement. “Gabby misses Tucson very much and her doctors have said that returning to her hometown could play an important role in her recovery.”

NATO confirms it hit wrong target, killing civilians in Libya

By Ernesto Londono
The Washington Post

TRIPOLI, Libya — NATO said a coalition bomb misfired into a residential neighborhood of Tripoli early Sunday and killed civilians, an acknowledgment that is likely to fuel a growing controversy over the West's protracted effort to oust Moammar Gadhafi.

Libyan officials said the blast flattened a two-story house, killing two children and seven adults. Sunday's bombing marked the first time NATO has acknowledged that a military mishap had resulted in civilian deaths in Libya, and it came a day after the alliance confirmed that last week it accidentally struck a vehicle carrying allied rebel fighters.

The two incidents underscored the perils of a military campaign the West is waging almost exclusively from the air, with shifting front lines and scattered allies with whom it has spotty lines of communication.

"NATO regrets the loss of innocent civilian lives and takes great care in conducting strikes against a regime determined to use violence against its own citizens," Lt. Gen. Charles Bouchard, the Canadian commander of the alliance's mission in Libya, said in a statement issued late Sunday.

NATO said that it intended to strike a military missile site but that "a weapons system failure" appeared to "have caused a number of civilian casualties."

High-profile cases in which civilians were killed by U.S. and allied troops in the Iraq and Afghanistan wars became major turning points in those conflicts as anti-Western sentiment soared. And Sunday's incident bolstered Gadhafi's claim that the coalition's operation is just the West's latest bid to invade and piller a Muslim nation.

"We will never forgive, we will never forget," Libyan Foreign Minister Abdul Ati al-Obeidi told reporters Sunday afternoon. He said the recent NATO bombings ought to "ignite a global jihad against the oppressive, criminal West."

The Libya operation's growing number of critics on Capitol Hill and in NATO capitals are certain to pounce on the incident to argue that the costly, three-month mission is foundering. The Obama administration has struggled to defend its stance that the U.S. role does not require congressional approval, while NATO is facing mounting questions about the pace and achievements of a campaign that Western leaders hoped would end within weeks. Sunday marked the 90th day of the campaign, and Congress is likely to vote this week on amendments that would cut off funds for the operation or place restrictions on the use of U.S. troops.

"One hopes it will encourage NATO and Western governments to reconsider the case for a ceasefire, which they appear to have ignored until now," said Hugh Roberts, a Libya expert at the International Crisis Group. "The great danger is that out of laziness, politicians will continue to succumb to the false argument that there is no alternative to military intervention."

The bomb struck a home in the Souk Jouma district of northern Tripoli, an area of the city where many despise the Gadhafi regime.

European officials delay decision on vital Greek loans

By Gabriele Steinhauser
Associated Press

LUXEMBOURG — Hours of talks between eurozone finance ministers on the imploding finances of Greece broke up early Monday morning without the ministers signing off on a vital installment of rescue loans needed to avoid bankruptcy next month.

Greece will get the next (euro) 12 billion of its existing (euro) 110 billion bailout package in early July, but only if it manages to pass (euro) 28 billion in new spending cuts and economic reforms by the end of the month, said Jean-Claude Juncker, the prime minister of Luxembourg who also chairs the regular meetings of the 17 eurozone finance ministers.

"We have to, of course, await this vote" by the Greek parliament, Juncker said as he left the meeting.

However, Juncker said that as long as the parliament supported the new measures, he was certain that Greece would also get a second bailout — on top of the existing one — that will keep it afloat over the coming years as it works to restore its struggling economy. Greek Prime Minister George Papandreou said Sunday that his country was in talks for a new bailout similar in size to the first one.

In a statement, the ministers said that the private sector would contribute to the new package of rescue loans on a voluntary basis. Banks and other private creditors will be asked to buy up new Greek bonds as old ones mature, thereby reducing the amount of money other eurozone countries and the International Monetary Fund will have to provide.

"No pressure may be exerted on the private sector," Juncker stressed, since any sign of coercion could force rating agencies to consider the bond rollover as a partial default. Such a negative rating could take down Greek banks and further shake other struggling euro countries like Ireland and Portugal, economists have warned.

Juncker said he planned to convene a special finance ministers meeting in the first days of July, where the remaining questions would be finalized. He said that because of the voluntary nature of the roll-over, it was too early to put a number on the contribution of the private sector.

The meeting of the 17 eurozone nations came after a tumultuous week that saw rioting on the streets of Athens, a Greek Cabinet reshuffle and days of market turmoil that sent borrowing costs spiking. A default by Greece could cause ripples around the world, disrupting the global economy similarly to the collapse of investment bank Lehman Brothers in 2008.

Just before the meeting broke up, the finance chiefs of the United States, Canada, Japan and the U.K. were updated on the discussions taking place in Luxembourg in a conference call limited to the Group of Seven rich nations, underlining the heightened level of concern over the small euro nation.

Horse defenders oppose winter roundup plan

By Martin Griffith
Associated Press

RENO, Nev. — The U.S. Bureau of Land Management plans to stage a winter roundup of wild horses from the range north of Reno after a similar gather in the same area resulted in the deaths of more than 100 mustangs last year.

Horse defenders who unsuccessfully sued to halt the earlier roundup before it began in January 2010 are criticizing the agency's latest plans to remove about 1,300 mustangs in the Tri-State-Calico Complex beginning in December.

They maintain winter roundups expose horses to the risk of respiratory illness, and the use of helicopters to drive horses to corrals is inhumane and risks their death.

"It's a no-brainer not to do a roundup like this in winter, especially after all the deaths that occurred in 2010," said Anne Novak of the Colorado-based horse advocacy group Cloud Foundation. "All the wild horses there are going to suffer."

But BLM officials say the winter is a better time to gather horses in such high-elevation, rocky terrain, and herds need to be thinned because of an overpopulation of the animals in the sprawling area northeast of Gerlach, about 110 miles north of Reno.

"Cold and snow do not affect horses to the degree that heat and dust would in summer months," BLM spokeswoman Lisa Ross said.

Moreover, Ross said, research shows the highest percentage of effectiveness for fertility-control treatments is the winter. The BLM plans to give the fertility-control drug PCP to 87 mares before releasing them back to the wild in the area.

The BLM removed about 1,900 horses from the Calico Mountains Complex in January 2010. The agency had planned to remove about 2,500 horses but stopped short of the goal due to winter conditions and mustangs moving out of the complex.

Ross confirmed seven horses died at the roundup site and at least 113 horses died after being transported to a Fallon holding facility where they were being prepared for adoption or shipment to pastures in the Midwest.

Activists blamed most of the deaths on stress and trauma, while BLM officials attributed the deaths mostly to the poor body condition of mares.

The deaths prompted animal rights activists to press Churchill County prosecutors to file criminal charges against BLM officials. The sheriff's department submitted a report with no recommendations to the district attorney's office after investigating allegations of abuse and neglect at the holding facility, but prosecutors took no action.

The BLM estimates 1,602 wild horses currently roam free in the complex. The proposed removal of 1,298 horses would return the herd population to within the "appropriate management level" of 572 to 952 mustangs, officials said.

"Keeping the herd population in balance with the available forage and water helps keep these wild horses healthy," said Rolando Mendez, a BLM field manager. "It is the BLM's responsibility to sustain the health of the rangelands, and achieve and maintain a thriving natural ecological balance."

Hamlin wins NASCAR race at Michigan

By Noah Trister
Associated Press writer

BROOKLYN, Mich. — Two days after facing questions about unauthorized auto parts and possible penalties, Denny Hamlin enjoyed a happier kind of scrutiny.

Hamlin raced to his first NASCAR Sprint Cup victory over the year, holding off Matt Kenseth on Sunday at Michigan International Speedway. The drivers appeared headed for a fuel-mileage finish, then a late caution enabled them to make pit stops before a frantic closing five-lap sprint.

“Over these last six weeks, I can honestly say we’ve had a chance to win each and every race,” Hamlin said. “For me, if I go about eight weeks without winning, I’m wondering what the heck’s going on.”

Kenseth was the only driver with a shot to catch Hamlin in the final moments. Kenseth tried to go both above and below the leader, but was unable to pass Hamlin’s No. 11 Toyota. Hamlin won by 0.281 seconds for his second straight victory in the June race at the track.

Kyle Busch was third, giving Joe Gibbs Racing two of the top three spots after the team was told to change oil pans before Friday’s practice. NASCAR said oil pans from cars driven by Hamlin, Busch and Joey Logano were not submitted for approval before opening day inspection.

The team could face additional penalties this week, but Hamlin and Busch hardly seemed distracted.

“It speaks volumes to the experience and resilience of this 11 car that you can start the week off with a down note and put that behind you and make sure that it doesn’t affect what’s getting ready to happen,” said Mike Ford, Hamlin’s crew chief. “This team usually comes out swinging when its back’s against the ropes. Sometimes we connect and sometimes we get dotted in the eye.”

Team president J.D. Gibbs said Friday’s situation was a good lesson.

“We want to be here with integrity,” Gibbs said. “We’ve made mistakes in the past as a team, and I’m sure we’ll make mistakes in the future. If we can’t conduct ourselves in the right way, there’s no use in us doing this.”

Hamlin won eight times last year and contended for the series title but was unable to match Jimmie Johnson. Hamlin was winless this season, although he led early last weekend at Pocono Raceway before running into tire problems.

He entered this race 12th in the points standings but was still confident heading into the summer months. The victory moved him up to ninth.

“Realistically, you know if the whole world collapses and ends, you’re still one win away from getting a Chase spot, pretty much,” Hamlin said. “We know two wins pretty much puts you in. From here on out, we know we’re one win away.”

Busch finished the race without incident after he and Kevin Harvick came off probation. They were fined and disciplined for a run-in last month. Harvick finished 14th Sunday.

Busch drove despite chest pain and took the lead about midway through the 400-mile, 200-lap race.

“It was just hard to breathe. I had to take real short breaths,” he said. “Felt like I was running a 400-mile marathon, which essentially I was. But I felt like I was running on my feet instead of in a race car.”

Carl Edwards moved in front coming out of a caution that ended at lap 163, and it appeared the race would come down to who had enough fuel. The final caution, however, changed all that.

“I think I was going to run out of gas, so I was riding around half-throttle, which isn’t much fun,” Kenseth said. “Just running slow, hoping for a caution.”

Edwards, who won the Nationwide race Saturday, finished fifth. He remains atop the standings, 20 points ahead of Harvick.

Dale Earnhardt Jr. finished 21st, three years after his most recent Cup victory, at Michigan. He has gone 108 races without a victory, and it was his car that hit the wall to cause the fifth and final caution.

Johnson, who entered the race second to Edwards in the standings, dropped three spots to fifth after a 27th-place finish. The defending series champion fell way behind Sunday after an early spin.

Finishing in a blaze of Rory

McIlroy dominates in U.S. Open runaway

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press writer

BETHESDA, Md. — Rory McIlroy buried the memory of his Masters meltdown the same way he buried the competition at the U.S. Open, with a breathtaking performance filled with the promise of more majors to come.

Four days of flawless golf at Congressional ended Sunday afternoon when McIlroy polished off a 2-under 69 to shatter U.S. Open records that simply defy logic at the major known as the toughest test in golf.

He finished at 16-under par. The last 10 U.S. Open championships combined were 14 under.

The 22-year-old from Northern Ireland walked off the 18th green and into the arms of his father, Gerry, who worked three jobs so his only son could pursue his passion. Not even he could have imagined a day like this.

“Happy Father’s Day,” McIlroy told him.

Rory’s win one for the ages?

BETHESDA, Md. — The lead was 10 following yet another birdie as Rory McIlroy walked off the fourth green and handed his Titleist to a tousle-haired teen watching from just beyond the ropes at Congressional.

A nice souvenir for the kid, who may one day dream of having a future in golf. And appropriate that it was given to him by the kid who may be the future of golf.

His romp in the park at the U.S. Open didn’t just make McIlroy a major champion for the first time at a younger age than the great Jack Nicklaus. It also announced the arrival of a player so talented and magnetic that golf may stop caring so much about Tiger Woods.

The 37,000 people who lined

the fairways and surrounded the greens on a steamy Sunday seemed to sense that. They cheered every shot, even though the little drama that remained evaporated when McIlroy birdied the first hole to let everyone know this was not the Masters and there would be no meltdown.

A few youngsters even climbed trees to get a better look, straining to see the 22-year-old turn their national championship into a rout eerily

See AGES, Main 8

Open title for the tiny country of Northern Ireland, and 2010 champion Graeme McDowell walked back across the bridge to the 18th green to embrace the new winner.

“You’re a legend,” McDowell told him.

Not many would dispute that now, not after a week like this.

McIlroy finished at 268 to break the U.S. Open record by four shots. That record 12-under par by Tiger Woods at Pebble Beach? McIlroy matched it in the second round and kept right on rolling, finishing at a staggering 16 under.

“I couldn’t ask for much more, and I’m just so happy to be holding this trophy,” McIlroy said. “I know how good Tiger was in 2000 to win by 15 in Pebble. I was trying to go out there and emulate him in some way. I played great for four days, and I couldn’t be happier.”

When he arrived for his press conference, he took a picture of the silver U.S. Open trophy on the table and posted it on Twitter with two references that said it all: Winning. Bounceback.

“Going back to Augusta this year, I felt like that was a great opportunity to get my first major. It didn’t quite work out,” McIlroy said. “But to come back straight-away at the U.S. Open and win that is nice. You can always call yourself a major champion, and hopefully after this, I can call myself a multiple major champion”

His freckled-face bursting with joy when he tapped in for par, McIlroy won by eight shots over Jason Day, who closed with a 68 and moved to No. 9 in the world. It was the second straight runner-up in a major for Day, only this time he didn’t have

United States forward Clint Dempsey celebrates after scoring a goal during Sunday’s CONCACAF Gold Cup quarterfinal match against Jamaica in Washington.

WASHINGTON — Jermaine Jones broke a scoreless tie early in the second half, leading the United States to a 2-0 victory over Jamaica in the CONCACAF Gold Cup quarterfinals Sunday.

Jones fired a shot from outside the penalty area in the 49th minute, and Jamaica defender Jermaine Taylor stuck out his foot, deflecting the ball past goalkeeper Donovan Ricketts.

To celebrate his Father’s Day goal, Jones gave a salute, honoring his soldier father.

“It was a nice little gift,” said Jones in postgame remarks translated from German by teammate Steve Cherundolo.

Jones started his international career playing in three friendlies for Germany before FIFA allowed his move to the United States team in 2009.

“It was a sign of respect,” Jones said of the celebration.

The United States will play Panama on Wednesday in Houston, a rematch of Panama’s 2-1 Group C win, the first ever loss for the U.S. in group play. Panama scored in the last minute Saturday night to tie its quarterfinal match with El Salvador at 1-1, later advancing 5-3 on penalty kicks.

Jones was in the middle of several big plays until he left the game in the 75th minute for substitute Maurice Edu.

Jones seemed to be in position for a goal late in the opening half, when Ricketts saved a shot by Juan Agudelo and the rebound bounced straight to Jones, but he couldn’t control the ball. Jones also drew a tackle from Taylor that earned the Jamaican defender a red card in the 67th minute.

“Jermaine has a good engine and has the ability in certain moments to get forward and be a threat,” U.S. coach Bob Bradley said. “That was nice to see.”

Jones’ salute to his father wasn’t the only reminder in this game of the importance of families.

Midfielders Clint Dempsey, who scored the second goal in the 80th minute, and Landon Donovan had not trained with the team in Washington before the match.

Each was excused to attend their sisters’ weddings — Dempsey in Texas and Donovan in California.

The players both hopped planes at about 11 p.m. Saturday and arrived in Washington early Sunday morning. Dempsey landed about 2 a.m. and Donovan didn’t arrive until around 7:30 a.m.

After both players met with Bradley, he decided to include Dempsey in the starting lineup while Donovan was a substitute.

Nadal says he’s far from Federer’s Slam record

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Having won four of the past five Grand Slam tournaments and 10 in all, Rafael Nadal was asked on the eve of Wimbledon about quickly closing in on Roger Federer’s record of 16.

Nadal cut in to clarify.

“Very close? No. I am very far,” Nadal said Sunday. “Six is a lot.”

Perhaps. Still, the 25-year-old Spaniard is looking more and more like someone who will be able to challenge, if not surpass, whatever Federer’s final tally is. As long as a couple of other guys don’t get in the way, that is.

For years, Federer and Nadal were the men to beat at major tournaments. These days, they’re joined at what is a competitive and compelling top of the game by a pair of 24-year-olds, Novak Djokovic and Andy Murray.

That Big Four filled out the semi-finals at the French Open two weeks ago, and most everyone expects them to be the final four standing in a fortnight’s time at Wimbledon, where play begins today with Nadal as the defending champion.

“That’s maybe something that’s a bit different than maybe in the past, where maybe one of the top four guys wouldn’t feel so comfortable on grass,” said Federer, a six-time winner at Wimbledon. “But this year, it seems like all of us are, which is a good thing.”

Nadal quickly earned the sobriquet “King of Clay” for his excellence on that surface, particularly at Roland Garros, where he beat Federer on June 5 for a sixth championship there.

Now Nadal seeks a third title on the grass of the All England Club, where he hasn’t lost to anyone other than Federer since 2005. a

“I love to play on grass. I love to play in this fabulous place,” the top-seeded Nadal said. “In the beginning of my career, everybody talked a lot that with my style of game, (it’s) going to be always very difficult to play very well here. But I worked a lot and I put all my best in every practice.”

As the returning men’s champion, Nadal will play the first match on Centre Court on Day 1, against Michael Russell of the United States. That’s an honor that’s often been accorded Federer, but he lost in the quarterfinals a year ago, is seeded third this year, and must wait until Tuesday to get started against Mikhail Kukushkin of Kazakhstan.

The second-seeded Djokovic, whose 43-match winning streak ended with a loss to Federer in Paris, also is scheduled to begin Tuesday, while No. 4 Murray is slated to play Daniel Gimeno-Traver of Spain on Centre Court today.

The forecast calls for — surprise! — rain, but at the very least, matches in the main stadium shouldn’t be affected because of the retractable roof in use since 2009.

Other men on today’s slate include 2003 U.S. Open champion and three-time Wimbledon runner-up Andy Roddick, 2010 finalist Tomas Berdych and 10th-seeded Mardy Fish. Women scheduled to play include five-time Wimbledon champion Venus Williams, 2010 French Open winner Francesca Schiavone, and 2010 Wimbledon finalist Vera Zvonareva.

Vargas, Mariners shut out Phillies

SEATTLE — Jason Vargas tossed a three-hitter for his second shutout of the season, outdueling Philadelphia left-hander Cole Hamels to lead the Seattle Mariners to a 2-0 win over the Phillies on Sunday.

Vargas (5-4) not only kept pace with Hamels, he exceeded and outlasted him in his third career complete game. He allowed just two singles and six base-runners.

The Mariners now have eight shutouts on the season. It was the fifth time the Phillies have been shut out. It’s also the fifth time they have been held to three hits or fewer.

Cyclones go 0-5 in Nampa

Times-News

They were right there, but the Jerome Cyclones are still looking for their first win.

Jerome’s Class AA American Legion Baseball team wrapped up a weekend trip to a tournament in Nampa on Sunday by losing two one-run, extra-inning ball games. The Cyclones lost 4-3 to Kuna in 11 innings, hours after slipping up 3-2 to Meridian in nine. Both losses came in walk-off fashion.

Jordy Garrard tossed all 11 innings in the loss to Kuna, which came a day after the Cyclones lost two more one-run games, 2-1 to the Boise Seminoles and 6-5 to host Nampa. They were run-ruled 11-1 by Bonneville in their opener on Friday.

Two bright spots on Saturday came when Nolan Stouder doubled, tripled and drove in four of the team’s five runs against Nampa, and Gary Koopman struck out 13 against the Seminoles, allowing just a first-inning two-run single to Boise’s No. 3 hitter.

“Our pitchers gave us a chance to win every single game. Our sticks let us down, popped up a lot and made unproductive outs,” said Jerome coach Kenneth James. “It’s the first live pitching we’ve seen in the last few weeks but in a wood-bat tournament we hit the ball in the air way too many times and we don’t have those types of players.”

Jerome hosts Idaho Falls on Wednesday.

similar to the one turned in by another young phenom in 2000 — a performance no one thought could be repeated. The final round was nothing more than a victory lap for McIlroy, a chance to soak in the adulation and post some numbers that made the people who run the Open cringe.

He began the day leading by eight shots, ended it winning by eight shots. He finished at 16-under-par, smashing the mark of 12-under set by Woods in 2000 at Pebble Beach.

If not for an 80 in the final round of the Masters, he would be halfway to the Grand Slam.

And, if you want to know what kind of person he is, the first thing he did afterward was thank his mother and father for making it all possible.

All of a sudden does it really matter if Woods is playing in the British Open?

“This guy is the best I’ve ever seen, simple as that,” said Graeme McDowell, who won last year’s Open at Pebble Beach. “He’s great for golf. He’s a breath of fresh air for the game and perhaps we’re ready for golf’s next superstar and maybe Rory is it.”

With Woods now damaged goods, golf is in desperate need of a new star and the youngster from Holywood, Northern Ireland, couldn’t be more perfect if he came from central casting in Hollywood, Calif.

He’s a fresh face under a mop of hair, so disarmingly candid you wonder if he got the memo that athletes aren’t really supposed to say what they think. In the wake of his final round debacle at the Masters, he had to teach himself to play with a certain arrogance, mostly because off the course his personality is best suited for having a pint with his friends at the neighborhood pub.

His game is even more enticing. McIlroy drives the ball so long and straight that his fellow pros stop to watch, his iron play is meticulous, and he’s now figuring out a way to get the ball in the hole with his putter on a more consistent basis.

He’s on the verge of greatness now. But he only figures to get better.

“My impression is that he hasn’t primed yet,” said Y.E. Yang, who played with McIlroy on the weekend. “There’s still a lot more for him to grow. I think he’s still growing, and it’s just scary to think about it.”

Scarier still may be that McIlroy has Woods in his sights. At least he did on this day, fully aware of the history that came before.

“I know how good Tiger was in 2000 to win by 15 at Pebble,” he said. “I was trying to go out there today and emulate him in some way.”

Consider that done. But also consider what McIlroy did for himself by bouncing back from bitter disappointment at Augusta National to win the kind of Open that golf historians will be talking about for generations.

He called his father in Northern Ireland just 20 minutes after losing a four-shot lead in the final round of the Masters to tell him he was OK and that it was all part of golf. Then he told reporters for weeks that he had gotten over his failure and would bounce back.

If we didn’t believe him then, we do now.

For the supremely talented, winning the first major championship is almost always as much about relief as it joy. Once the burden of expectations is lifted, the wins tend to come more easily.

Expect them to come quickly for McIlroy.

“After the Masters and after winning this, I think he’ll just go on, go in leaps and bounds,” his father, Gerry, said. “He should do well, you know, and he’s keen to do well. He’ll keep working, if I know Rory.”

McIlroy himself believes they may come sooner than later.

“I said after Augusta, there’s three more majors left, I’ll try and go out and win one of them. I’ve done that,” he said. “There’s two more majors left. I’m going to try my best and go out and put myself in a great position to win them, also.”

First, though, he had more immediate plans. With the Open trophy securely in his hands, there was some celebrating to do, and surely a beverage or two would be sipped from it before the night was through.

Golf should raise a toast to its newest star, too.

Because the future of the game is looking good.

Rory

a chance.

No one did this week.

McIlroy opened with a three-shot lead, stretched it to six shots after 36 holes and eight shots going into the final round.

No one got any closer over the final 18 holes.

Tributes poured in throughout the steamy afternoon outside the nation’s capital — first from the players he beat, then from Jack Nicklaus and ultimately from Woods.

“What a performance from start to finish,” Woods said in a statement. “Enjoy the win. Well done.”

Nicklaus invited McIlroy

to lunch last year in Florida and talked to him about how to close out tournaments.

He apparently wasn’t listening when he took a four-shot lead into the final round of the Masters, only to implode on the back nine and shoot 80.

“I didn’t think it was going to happen again, and it hasn’t,” Nicklaus said by telephone to NBC Sports. “I think this kid’s going to have a great career. I don’t think there’s any question about it. He’s got all the components. He’s got a lot of people rooting for him. He’s a nice kid. He’s got a pleasant personality.

“He’s humble when he needs to be humble, and he’s confident when he needs to be confident.”

And to think that only four days ago, this was being called the U.S. Wide Open with no clear favorite in the game.

Woods has gone 18 months without winning and isn’t even playing now because of injuries to his left leg.

The top two players in the world have yet to win a major. There appeared to be no one who stood out in the game.

McIlroy, who goes to No. 4 in the world, now stands above everyone going into the final two majors of the year.

Just think: If he had avoided the collapse at Augusta National, he could be headed to Royal St. George’s for the British Open with the first two legs of the Grand Slam in tow.

“Nothing this kid does ever surprises me,” McDowell said. “He’s the best player I’ve ever seen. I didn’t have a chance to play with Tiger when he was in his real pomp, and this guy is the best I’ve ever seen. Simple as that. He’s great for golf. He’s a breath of fresh air for the game, and perhaps we’re ready for golf’s next superstar.

“And maybe,” he said, “Rory is it.”

Did you get a bonus this year? Some state workers did

There are about 24,000 Idaho state employees, some 15,000 of whom are teachers. They won't be getting a raise this year; many are lucky they still have jobs.

The vast majority of the other 9,000 state workers haven't had a pay hike in three years. But that's about to change at the Legislative Services Office, the Appellate Public's Defender's Office, the Industrial Commission, the Board of Pharmacy and the Idaho Commission on Libraries.

Our view:

Apparently the Legislature hasn't explained clearly enough to the directors of some Idaho state agencies that there's a recession going on.

What do you think?

We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

Those six state agencies will dish out thousands of dollars in one-time bonuses for more than 100 of their staffers to be paid out on the final payday of fiscal year 2011.

The pay perks range from as small as $500 to $5,000 retention bonuses paid to four top staffers at the Department of Finance, according to records obtained by The Associated Press.

State officials say the bonuses for state employees are the first paid out since the Idaho economy began its decline in 2008, prompting state lawmakers and Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter to call for deep cuts in state spending and budgets and impose hiring freezes, layoffs and furloughs for state workers.

Records show 59 staffers in the Legislative Services Office will get a pay bump next week, anywhere from $1,380 to $1,984 for top administrators. Director Jeff Youtz said the budget flexibility to hand out bonuses to his 59 employees was created by eliminating positions and other savings in the personnel budget.

"I wish it were more," Youtz said. "We're all being asked to do more with less. It's a philosophical decision every agency director has to make."

Yountz and his colleagues are tone deaf. Statewide, unemployment is running at 9.4 percent. Over at the Idaho Department of Health and Welfare, food stamp rolls have increased 40 percent in a single year.

And then there are all those teachers about to be forced out because the Legislature decreased state funding for education and shifted money that would otherwise go to teachers to the purchase of technology.

Paying bonuses to public employees right now insults the taxpayers.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Someone is stealing from the dead

May I call attention to a serious problem facing our community? We have someone or several people going into the Twin Falls Cemetery stealing from our loved ones buried there.

In the week of June 5 through 11, we have had our flowers, planters, flags, lights and shepherd hooks stolen! What possesses a person to want to steal from the dead?

Vandalism only causes an 80-year-old widow unnecessary grief. She took her grocery money to replace the flowers you stole. Does that make you happy? Do you sleep well at night, knowing you are causing such pain to an old woman?

I'm asking the public to help us. Our collective efforts to catch and stop these thieves will have a significant impact on our community.

The great jobs mismatch

WASHINGTON — One puzzle of this somber economy is the existence of unfilled jobs in the midst of mass unemployment. You might think (I did) that with almost 14 million Americans unemployed — and nearly half those for more than six months — that companies could fill almost any opening quickly. Not so. Somehow, there's a mismatch between idle workers and open jobs. Economists call this "structural unemployment."

Robert Samuelson

Just how many jobs are affected is unclear; there are no definitive statistics. Economist Harry Holzer of Georgetown University thinks the unemployment rate might be closer to 8 percent than today's 9.1 percent if most of these jobs were filled. That implies up to 1.5 million more jobs. Economist Prakash Loungani of the International Monetary Fund estimates that 25 percent of unemployment is structural; that's more than 3 million jobs. A recent survey of 2,000 firms by the McKinsey Institute, a research group, found that 40 percent had positions open at least six months because they couldn't find suitable candidates.

Let's acknowledge two realities. First, though structural joblessness is important, the main cause of high unemployment remains the deep slump. In the recession, jobs dropped 20 percent in construction, 15 percent in manufacturing and 7 percent in retailing. Only a stronger economy can remedy this unemployment.

Second, a big economy like ours always has some vacancies. People quit or get fired. Hiring procedures grind slowly. Some highly specialized jobs are inherently hard to fill: say, a transportation engineer fluent in both Chinese and English.

Still, the job mismatch hobbles recovery and bodes ill. The harder it is for workers to find jobs, the longer they stay unemployed — and this, in turn, worsens their prospects. "Long-term unemployment sends a negative signal to employers: What's wrong with this person?" says Holzer. Some jobs lost in the recession and the associated skills won't ever return. "Workers' networks (contacts) atrophy," he adds. "Their skills look more obsolete."

As more workers become less employable, some economists are raising their estimates of "full employment" — the unemployment rate consistent with stable inflation. It could be 6 percent compared with 5 percent before the recession, says Mark Zandi of Moody's Analytics. Trying to push unemployment below 6 percent with easy credit would risk higher inflation.

Carl Camden, head of the temporary-employment company Kelly Services, says that skill shortages span a wide array of jobs, from electricians to CAD/CAM operators (computer-aided design and manufacturing) to Ph.D. scientists for clinical drug tests.

"You can't find engineers to take jobs in many cities," says Camden. "We have three jobs for every candidate."

In any dynamic economy, constant changes in technologies, products and companies naturally create gaps between skills available and skills wanted. But today's gaps seem to transcend this. A survey for the National Association of Manufacturers in 2009, near the recession's nadir, found that a third of companies still faced shortages. These were largest for engineers and scientists and among aerospace, defense and biotechnology firms.

Theories abound as to what's gone wrong. For skilled blue-collar jobs, high schools have de-emphasized vocational training, community colleges often aren't well-connected to local job markets, and union apprenticeship programs have withered, says Anthony Carnevale, director of Georgetown's Center on Education and the Workforce. Another theory is that Americans are less willing to move to take jobs.

Companies traditionally provided much training, but that may also have changed. Loyalties have weakened. Companies are more willing to fire; workers are more willing to jump ship. Training may seem a poor investment because workers won't stay long enough to earn a return. In the McKinsey survey, companies denied cutting training budgets. But Carnevale and others think the training has altered. Before, firms provided more basic training in business or technology skills; now, firms expect workers to come with these skills and focus training on firm-specific practices and systems.

"Employers are looking for people with proven skills in the right fields," says the McKinsey study. "The No. 1 cause for difficulty in filling positions (cited by 45 percent of companies) is lack of sufficient experience."

So it's a Catch-22: You can't get hired unless you have experience; but you can't get experience unless you're hired. With technology changing rapidly, workers need to know more, even as their skills-support systems weaken. There is no instant cure for today's job mismatch, but it might ease if America's largest companies were a little bolder.

Surely many of them — enjoying strong profits — could make a small gamble that, by providing more training for workers, they might actually do themselves and the country some good.

Anger in U.S. could provide opportunity for terrorists

Remember 9/11: We weren't on our guard! There were dots to connect that didn't happen. The executive branch of our federal government may have to call marshal law enforcement.

Our society is plagued with anger because of the recession. This anger may incite anarchy in large cities; thieves, gangbangers and others will cause a riot that will spread all over the big cities. NATO will offer militant help. I'm sure that terrorist Muslims will come thousands upon thousands.

Couple of years ago, I was talking to a person who sold his garbage disposal business in this area to an outfit in the state of Florida. He told me they are buying disposal businesses all over America. I am trying to connect the dots. What if thousands of disposal companies group together with super-large unions and when the timing is ripe, they go on strike. Garbage collects fast and heavy in big cities. Good people will try to fix the problem.

Now I think of 2012; 2012 will keep the public rattled and politicians will be busy with their pomposity. It would be a good time to do one part of the master plan to take over America. God forbid!

I have 15 grandkids and 14 great-grandchildren. They are innocent little ones; I'm saddened about their future.

Remember 911. Our intelligence agencies had suspicions of multiple Muslim terrorist suspects who expressed they only wanted to know how to control a plane in air — no take-offs or landings — one-way air fares, etc., reported to the "boss" or "straw boss."

The agents did their jobs; the bosses didn't connect the dots. They had enough, I'm sure. The unthinkable is possible. Political correctness can keep us dangerously insecure.

Why doesn't ed board save money with online conferences?

Well is it nice that our beloved State Board of Education, in its infinite wisdom, will take away from the money set aside for classroom technology so that the newly appointed task force can meet in Boise.

I am well aware of technology already in place that can eliminate such travel costs. They can use online conferences or webinars. They can stay in their own towns, thus saving more than $11,300 each time they meet.

I thought they were going to discuss the future of our classrooms when they themselves use the old methods of meetings.

Drivers, businesses not keeping handicapped parking spots open

Drivers and businesses need to be more concerned with the parking spots for the handicapped. I have noticed and experienced seeing a lot of poor considerations for the handicapped.

Shopping carts blocking handicap spaces, store displays blocking the handicap spots and people without a placard for handicap parked in handicap spots. One particular store had all three spots filled with racks.

My wife expressed much disbelief with store actions. All they did is laugh about it. As one customer, it will be my last time there.

Please keep it in mind when leaving a cart or having displays in front of the store.

State senator arrested on suspicion of grand theft

By Keith Ridler
Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho Senate GOP Caucus Chairman John McGee was arrested early Sunday after police say he took a Ford Excursion and cargo trailer from the Boise-area home of a “complete stranger” and a blood-alcohol test showed the four-term lawmaker had been drinking.

The 38-year-old McGee, who represents Caldwell, was taken into custody by police on suspicion of felony grand theft and misdemeanor driving under the influence, authorities said. Officials said a breath test found he had a blood-alcohol content of .15, nearly twice the Idaho state limit. He was booked into the Ada

County Jail at about 4:30 a.m.

Lt. Kody Aldrich told The Associated Press that McGee did not know the owner of the SUV and trailer, which became stuck as he backed into a neighbor's yard southwest of Boise. It was also unclear why McGee was in the Boise area in Ada County.

“Nobody knows why he was there,” Aldrich said. “It doesn’t sound like he did either.”

Aldrich said McGee told officers he was on his way to Jackpot, Nev.

Aldrich said the vehicle owner reported typically leaving the keys in the unlocked vehicle.

Because McGee faces a potential felony charge, he will be held in jail until he goes before a judge, Aldrich said. The lawmaker's first court appearance is scheduled for Monday afternoon in 4th District Court.

Messages left by The Associated Press at McGee's home and cell phone were not returned.Sunday.

KTVB-TV first reported the arrest of the Idaho lawmaker who is in his fourth term representing district 10 in Canyon County.

Idaho Senate Pro Tem Brent Hill, R-Rexburg, expressed support for McGee and said the immediate concern is for his colleague and his family.

“We feel really bad about the situation and how it may affect his wife and family,” Hill, the GOP leader of the Senate, told the AP Sunday. “Our concerns right now are to help him and his family out any way we can. We just want to make sure things work out for John and his family.”

Aldrich said McGee jacked knifed the vehicle and trailer attempting to back up, entering a yard and becoming stuck. Aldrich said the trailer and vehicle sustained minor damage, and that McGee was not injured.

McGee, who is married and has a daughter, in 2006 was named the Idaho Young Republican of the Year and Republican Legislator of the Year.

McGee, the marketing director for West Valley Medical Center, is on the three Legislative committees: local government and taxation, state affairs, and transportation.

In the last Legislative session, McGee supported Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter’s “Hire one Act” that offers employers tax credits as a way to encourage them to add more workers. McGee also supported a bonds-for-highways plan called “Connecting Idaho” intended to maintain Idaho’s roads and bridges.

Also last session he introduced a bill requiring underage drivers to take safety training as part of a compromise to fend off road closures and maintain public access following a U.S. Forest Service plan to close some roads to all-terrain vehicles amid safety concerns over underage drivers.

McGee also supported a measure giving immunity from lawsuits to doctors who recommend that a patient’s driver’s license be revoked, arguing doctors must be allowed to recommend drastic action without fear of legal repercussions.

Former Boise State player, MSU coach writes book

By Tim Dumas
Bozeman Daily Chronicle

BOZEMAN, Mont. — He’s married, he runs his own business and he’s coaching again. Most of all, he’s remorseful.

Former Montana State University assistant football coach Joe O’Brien, who spent nearly two and a half years in federal prison for his role in a methamphetamine distribution conspiracy, has written a book about his life that is due out later this summer.

In the 192 pages of “Busted Bronco: From Addiction to Redemption,” O’Brien covers topics ranging from his dysfunctional upbringing and unlawful behavior to his incarceration and “triumph over the demons that have haunted him throughout his life,” according to a press release from publisher Bootleg Books.

The Pittsburg, Calif., native has been out of prison since September of 2006 and recently completed his first season as a paid football coach since his arrest seven years ago. He is also a motivational speaker.

During a phone interview on Monday, O’Brien said he wanted to tell his story in order to guide others into not making the same mistakes he did.

“I just think it’s going to help people,” the 38-year-old said from his home in Great Falls. “I’ve made some decisions in my life that I wished I would have changed. Hopefully people can learn from the bad decisions that I made.”

In September of 2003, during his fourth season as an assistant coach at MSU, O’Brien was arrested in Townsend on methamphetamine charges. He resigned two weeks later. In October of that year, he pleaded not guilty to felony drug charges, claiming he was set up.

He later changed his plea to guilty, and in October of 2004, O’Brien was sentenced to four years in jail. He wound up serving 28 months at a federal prison in Pennsylvania.

Another motivation for writing the book, O’Brien says, is “to set the record straight. The media puts out all the things that people want to read — a lot of the bad stuff — and I want to tell the real story of what happened.”

According to Bob Evancho, who wrote the book with O’Brien, Busted Bronco is scheduled to be released in late July or early August.

Evancho has written four books, including “Pokey: The Good Fight,” about former Boise State head football coach Pokey Allen.

O’Brien was the Big Sky Conference’s Defensive Player of the Year and a first-team All-American that season and Evancho had interviewed O’Brien for his book on Allen that came out in 1997.

O’Brien sought out Evancho via email in August of 2008, inviting the author to sit down on the morning of Boise State’s season opener at a coffee shop a month later. They spoke for two hours.

“I didn’t even know he was out of prison when he first contacted me,” said Evancho, a former sports writer who lives in Boise. “The journalist in me was interested right away. Before I left (the coffee shop) I knew I wanted to do this book with him.”

Beekeeping ban stings eastern Idaho resident

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — An eastern Idaho resident’s request to revoke a 51-year-old beekeeping ban that comes with a 30-days-in-jail stinger has started a buzz in Idaho Falls.

Retired teacher Janeil Kunz said she’s been fascinated with bees since she was a little girl and would like to keep a hive or two in her backyard.

“I’m following the rules, but it’s something I disagree with,” Kunz said. “I’m working to make (the rules) comfortable for people who do disagree with the ordinance.”

Kunz contends that city bees will help pollinate gardens while producing honey and ridding neighborhoods of wasps and yellow jackets.

City councilors say it sounds like a sweet idea to them. Councilor Karen Cornwell at a recent meeting said she wasn’t even aware of the ordinance existed. But she said some requirement needed to be met before the ordinance was removed.

“I think we need to have three public hearings to gather information and recognize people who may not want it,” Cornwell said. “But, at this point, I see no reason why we wouldn’t do it.”

Todd Greenhalgh, a first-year beekeeper who lives in Jefferson County, told councilors bee keeping should be allowed in the city.

“I don’t really see a problem with it if they want to limit it to a couple of hives in the backyard,” Greenhalgh said, the Post Register reported. “It’s actually fairly simple to get started, and most of (the bees) are fairly docile.”

Council President Ida Hardcastle said dozens of pages of research provided by Kunz allayed her concerns about the potential for angry swarms of bees.

Dairy industry going sour?

Brad Kamerman talks about the dairy industry on June 3 while petting ‘Coconut,’ one of a few hundred Holstein cows on his dairy farm near Logan, Mont.

Bozeman dairies milked dry by scandal

By Daniel Person
Bozeman Daily Chronicle

BOZEMAN, Mont. — Brad Kamerman’s dairy farm sits along a dusty and rolling road in western Gallatin County, his black-and-white Holstein cows visible to the occasional passerby.

Milking there starts daily at 3 a.m. as cows file into pens where rubber tubes simultaneously do the work of a several farmhands, pumping the milk into refrigerated vats.

By the time most county residents are pouring 2 percent over their Cheerios or dropping a dollop of cream into their first cup of coffee, most of Kamerman’s herd of 300 will have been milked and the farm will have 20,000 pounds of milk ready for the daily shipment to the bottling plant in Bozeman.

It’s a seven-day-a-week job for Kamerman, who bought his first herd of dairy cows in 1978 and can count on one hand the days off he gets in any given year, and he doesn’t begrudge it.

“I love this lifestyle,” he said while walking around his pens, clad in denim and a full-brim hat, “and I have a wife who puts up with it.”

Since the dairy cooperative that would become Country Classic formed in Gallatin County in 1933, dairy farms like Kamerman’s have been an important part of the local economy. With the opening of the co-op’s processing plant in 1957, Bozeman became a major hub of milk production that would eventually stock milk aisles across the West.

In recent years, the processing plant on North Seventh Avenue expanded as it began processing and bottling Kirkland’s Signature milk for two dozen Costco stores in the region — including stores in Montana, Salt Lake City, and Denver. It was a major coup in an industry where billion-dollar corporations fight for coveted shelf space.

But in recent years, a combination of hard choices, brutal economics and white-collar crime has hampered the Gallatin Valley milk industry.

Following a major embezzlement scandal that landed three executives in federal prison, Country Classic merged with Darigold, a large co-op based in Seattle. Two weeks ago, Darigold announced that 40 people would be laid off from the Bozeman bottling plant — two-thirds of the plant’s workforce. The same day, company officials said Country Classic’s shipping operation — responsible for delivering milk from Bozeman to grocery stores across the West — would be completely shut down.

Now, dairymen like Kamerman say better days lie ahead for the local milk industry, one of the final, vibrant milk producing regions in Montana. But a dissenting few see more trouble ahead.

Like other food industries, the milk market has seen a few huge firms dominate more and more shelf space in grocery stores across the country.

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, the top 10 processors of milk now provide the U.S. with 82 percent of its milk. In 2000, the 10 biggest processors only accounted for 65 percent.

More to the point, in 2009, there was a one-in-three chance that the milk you were dunking your Oreo into was processed by a single company, Dean Foods. Among other things, Dean Foods, a Dallas-based company, owns the Meadow Gold bottling plants in Great Falls and Billings.

In this industry, the relatively small Country Classic was an exception, not a rule. But in recent years, economics began catching up to the company.

For one, the larger grocery stores that have become popular with consumers can spell trouble for small suppliers.

Big box stores like Costco and Walmart don’t just want suppliers that can give them cheap milk, said Brian Gould, an associate professor of agriculture and applied economics at the University of Wisconsin. They want suppliers that can give them lots of it.

“To supply Costco, or to supply Walmart, you have to be big,” he said. “You have to be a big player. They don’t want to deal with small players. They need a constant, single supplier.”

At Country Classic, Costco began pressuring the co-op to supply more and more of its stores, said Bill Hedstrom, a dairy farmer in the Flathead Valley who left the co-op after the merger.

“County Classic was servicing the Costco accounts in Montana, then Costco wanted it to service a lot more of their stores with cheaper milk, and that’s where they got in trouble,” he said. “That’s what started stretching them out.”

It got to the point that the Bozeman plant was buying milk from farmers who were out of state and not part of the co-op, a practice that began cutting into profits.

“Locally, there wasn’t enough milk produced to supply all the Costco stores and the freight got to the point that it was prohibitive,” said Bill Tatarka, a Bozeman dairy farmer who sat on the Country Classic board for eight years and is still a member of the co-op.

Meanwhile, Northwest Dairy Association, which in 2002 was the fourth biggest dairy cooperative in the country — and its subsidiary Darigold — the 10th largest milk producer — had bought a bottling plant near Salt Lake City and was moving into Montana markets, dairy farmers said.

As a further blow, federal investigators found that Country Classic CEO Michael Monforton and three other executives had embezzled almost $1 million from the company — a financial and emotional blow to farmers here.

“You can’t run a dairy and run a co-op at the same time,” Kamerman said. “That’s what you have your management team for. You trust them.”

For the vast majority of co-op members here, a merger quickly appeared to be the best option for Country Classic.

“When you get all your eggs in one basket and Costco pulls the plug on you, what do you do?” Kamerman asked.

“It was basically, you either had to beat (Darigold) or join them,” he said. “We joined them.”

In August 2010, Country Classic members voted to merge, with only two farmers voting “No.”

Well before the merger, dairy farmers in Montana, and the nation as a whole, were becoming a rare breed. According to Montana Department of Livestock data, Montana had 10,400 dairy farmers in 1965. By 2007, that number had shrunk to 390 — a 96 percent reduction. The number of dairy cows has gone from a high in 1933 of 196,000 to 15,000 today.

As supporters of the merger see it, while the layoffs in Bozeman are unfortunate, Darigold has given them a security they once lacked.

“I’m more excited about the dairy industry in Montana than I’ve ever been,” said Loren Dyk, a dairy farmer who was president of the board at the time of the merger. “We have a future now.

“It’s tough to lose your local plant, but we’re still members of our local plant, still a co-op, still farmer owned.”

Study: 1 in 13 U.S. children have food allergy

By Lindsey Tanner
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Food allergies affect about one in 13 U.S. children, double the latest government estimate, a new study suggests.

The researchers say about 40 percent of them have severe reactions — a finding they hope will erase misconceptions that food allergies are just like hay fever and other seasonal allergies that are troublesome but not dangerous.

Overall, 8 percent of the children studied had food allergies; peanuts and milk were the most common sources. That translates to nearly 6 million U.S. children.

The most recent government estimate, from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, was based on in-home interviews and found that about 3 million children were affected, or about 4 percent. Other estimates based on different methods have ranged from 2 percent to 8 percent.

The new study, funded by an advocacy group, is based on online interviews with parents of kids younger than age 18 and involved 40,104 children. Research firm Knowledge Networks conducted the survey. Families were recruited through random telephone dialing.

Results were released online Monday in Pediatrics.

The findings suggest that food allergies affect two kids per classroom, said lead author Dr. Ruchi Gupta, a pediatrician and researcher with Chicago's Children's Memorial Hospital.

Dr. Calman Prussin, an investigator with the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said the study "confirms that food allergy is a substantial public health problem."

Prussin said differences in estimates are due to different survey methods and definitions of what constitutes a food allergy. He said the only way to know for sure how many kids are affected would be lab tests on scores of children, which isn't practical.

Because the new figure is within the range of previous estimates, he said the study doesn't mean prevalence has increased, although experts generally believe allergies including those to food are on the rise, Prussin noted.

He said some people mistake food intolerances for food allergies. For instance, many people are lactose intolerant, meaning they can't properly digest milk. That can cause bloating and digestive problems, but not an allergic reaction.

Typical signs of a true food allergy include skin rashes, wheezing, tightness in the throat or difficulty breathing.

The new survey asked parents whether their children had those symptoms — a big strength of the study, Prussin said.

Many children outgrow allergies to some foods, including eggs and wheat, but they're less likely to outgrow allergies to nuts.

The study was funded by the Food Allergy Initiative, a nonprofit advocacy group founded by parents of children with allergies.

Mary Jane Marchisotto, the group's executive director, said the study "paints a more comprehensive picture" of food allergies, and should help raise awareness.

The group, funded privately but without industry money, is working with the CDC on national guidelines on how to manage food allergies in schools, she said.

States look to Internet taxes to close budget gaps

By Chris Tomlinson
Associated Press

AUSTIN, Texas — State governments across the country are laying off teachers, closing public libraries and parks, and reducing health care services, but there is one place they could get $23 billion if they could only agree how to do it: Internet retailers such as Amazon.com.

That's enough to pay for the salaries of more than 46,000 teachers, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. In California, the amount of uncollected taxes from Amazon sales alone is roughly the same amount cut from child welfare services in the current state budget.

But collecting those taxes from major online retailers is difficult.

Internet retailers are required to collect sales tax only when they sell to customers living in a state where they have a physical presence, such as a store or office. When consumers order from out-of-state retailers, they are required under state law to pay the tax. But it's difficult to enforce and rarely happens.

Under the current system the seller is absolved of responsibility, buyers save 3 percent to 9 percent because they rarely volunteer to pay the sales tax, and the state loses revenue.

With sales tax revenue slumping more than 30 percent in most states between 2007 and 2010, lawmakers across the country are grasping for ways to collect those unpaid taxes. Retailers and lawmakers in several states have proposed ways to solve the problem, some with more support than others.

"The problem is that some out-of-state e-retailers openly flaunt the law, arguing that it doesn't apply to them," said Texas state Democratic Rep. Elliot Naishtat, who has offered a bill to require more Internet sellers to collect Texas sales tax.

Texas cut $24 billion in state services to cover its revenue shortfall. That included decisions not to fund the expected growth in the number of public school students and the expected growth in the caseload for Medicaid, the health care program for the poor and disabled.

Internet retailers cite a 1992 U.S. Supreme Court decision involving catalog sales, Quill Corp. v. North Dakota, which ruled that states could require only companies that had a physical presence within the state to act as tax collector.

To get around the ruling, some states are expanding what it means to be physically present. For example, an online retailer hiring a marketing firm or owning a subsidiary inside the state would qualify under definitions adopted in some states.

In February, the Texas comptroller demanded that Amazon.com pay $269 million in back sales taxes because a subsidiary operated a warehouse near Dallas. Amazon is appealing the order.

Last year, New York enacted a law that said Internet retailers' practice of paying commissions to marketing agents based within the state constituted a presence. Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Rhode Island and North Carolina quickly followed with similar laws.

Bills are pending in Arizona, California, Florida, Hawaii, Massachusetts, Minnesota and Pennsylvania. Texas lawmakers passed such a measure, but Gov. Rick Perry vetoed it. Now legislators are trying to resurrect the bill by attaching it to a larger budget measure. The matter is now before a conference committee.

California estimates it loses at least $200 million a year in uncollected tax from online sales, $83 million from Amazon.com alone. A bill that has passed the state Legislature would force Seattle-based Amazon and others to collect that tax from California residents.

Amazon, Overstock.com and other big Internet retailers cite the Quill decision as their primary defense against collecting sales taxes, but they also argue that collecting tax in the District of Columbia and the 45 states where a sales tax exists would be extremely complex and expensive.

"There are over 8,000 taxing jurisdictions in the United States," said Jonathan Johnson, president of Overstock.com, which has offices only in Utah. "We think it's wrong that states are trying to cause out-of-state retailers to be their tax collectors."

N. Carolina grapples with legacy of postwar sterilization programs

By Renee Elder and Tom Breen
Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — Nearly 35 years after ending the country's most active postwar sterilization program, North Carolina is the only state trying to make amends to thousands of people who cannot have children because of eugenics-inspired theories about social improvement.

Next week, victims and their relatives will tell their stories to a state task force considering compensation to victims of sterilizations that continued into 1974. Roughly 85 percent of victims were women or girls, some as young as 10. North Carolina has more victims living than any other state because a majority was sterilized after World War II, said Charmaine Fuller Cooper, director of the state Justice for Sterilization Victims Foundation.

Eugenics programs gained popularity in the U.S. and other countries in the early 1900s, but most abandoned those efforts after World War II because of the association with Nazi Germany's program aimed at racial purity. However, North Carolina's expanded, with sterilizations peaking in the 1950s and early 1960s. About 70 percent of the state's 7,600 sterilizations occurred after the war, state figures show.

Overt rationalization for the programs ranged from protecting the potential offspring of mentally disabled parents to improving the overall health and intellectual competence of the human race. Before the atrocities of World War II, it was seen by many — both blacks and whites — as a legitimate effort to improve society.

"Sterilization was always a cost-cutting measure," said Paul Lombardo, a professor at Georgia State University's College of Law. "The argument was, anybody who generates social costs shouldn't be allowed to have children."

In 1968, Elaine Riddick was like many others who were sterilized: poor, black and female.

Now living in Atlanta, Riddick plans to drive to Raleigh next week to tell the task force about her sterilization at age 14 following a rape. She said her grandmother gave the state permission for the procedure.

"My grandmother was worried about me. I didn't blame her," Riddick said.

Yet she said it was a traumatic experience that led to years of depression and physical problems. Riddick wants financial compensation from the state to pay for doctor bills and medicine.

Researchers estimate more than 60,000 people nationwide were sterilized during the 20th century as part of government programs. Even in states without sterilization laws, the procedures still occurred on local or informal levels. That means the real number could be 100,000 or higher, Lombardo said.

Among the 33 states with eugenics programs, North Carolina's was unique. The state had the most open-ended law in the country, allowing doctors and social workers to refer people living at home to the state Eugenics Board for possible sterilization. In every other state, Lombardo said, people had to be either institutionalized or jailed before they could be sterilized.

According to research done by University of Vermont professor Lutz Kaelber, North Carolina averaged about 300 sterilizations per year between 1950 and 1963.

It's not totally clear why support for sterilizations remained strong in North Carolina as it declined in nearly every other state.

The most obvious explanation is the influence of the Winston-Salem-based Human Betterment League, Fuller Cooper said. The nonprofit group aimed at social reform folded in 1988, but at its peak its members had the passion and financial backing needed to shape public policy, she said.

The North Carolina branch was organized by several wealthy and prominent citizens, including textile magnate James Hanes and tobacco czar R.J. Reynolds. The group's members drummed up support for sterilization through direct mail campaigns and other methods.

A league brochure from 1950 states: "You wouldn't give a responsible position to a person of little intelligence. Yet each day the feeble-minded and the mentally defective are entrusted with the most important and far reaching job of all — the job of parenthood."

The Department of Social Services even established a psychology division to test individuals referred by social workers. Many received benefits such as special education or occupational training. Some with mental disabilities, mental illness or even epilepsy were deemed unfit to become parents.

"This wasn't just a bunch of evil people running around. Many of these people really wanted to alleviate suffering," Lombardo said.

Mary Kilburn, a retired psychologist who worked for the state Social Services Department from 1969 to 1980, said she and her co-workers believed "we were doing a really helpful thing."

She said it has been a shock to see their work vilified because so many families welcomed the procedure at the time.

Now in her mid-70s, Kilburn said she testified before the Eugenics Board twice in her career. In both cases, she said, parents had asked the state to perform sterilizations to protect daughters whose intelligence test scores were in the 30- to 40-point range, less than half of what was considered average.

"I looked at it not as something being done to them, but something being done for them," Kilburn said.

The experience of Delores Marks' mother was typical. A black woman with four children living on a farm near Goldsboro, she was sent to a psychiatric hospital in 1953 after showing signs of what Marks thinks was probably post-partum depression. After a few months at the hospital, she returned home to her family, having been sterilized.

"My father couldn't write, yet his signature was on the paperwork," Marks said. "They even had my mother's signature, even though they said she couldn't understand what was happening to her."

Marks didn't find out the full details of the procedure until after her mother died, when she and her sisters got the medical records from the state.

Marks said it had a damaging impact on her mother that lasted the rest of her life.

"I really and truly believe it was mind-altering," she said. "First my grandparents and then my sisters and I had to take care of her in our homes."

That's why Marks believes relatives of sterilization victims also should be eligible for compensation.

"It's almost like we lived this with her, because once they released her, it became our responsibility," she said.

Keep your family's summer safe from DROWNING

Photos by ASHLEY SMITH/Times-News

Carrie Cook, 6, takes a swimming lesson from Lindsey Hanchey on Thursday at the Twin Falls YMCA on Locust Street. Between rising water in the Snake River and more kids heading to the pool, there are more chances for water-related injuries — so prevention is key.

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

“I think all kids need to know how to swim,” Webb said. For added safety, she keeps an eye on her children when they’re in the water and makes sure they stick together.

That’s a good plan. The weather is slowly warming up, and between rising water in the Snake River and more kids heading to the pool, there are more chances for water-related injuries. With some water awareness, parents can help keep their kids safe.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the U.S. saw 3,443 fatal unintentional drownings in 2007, or almost 10 per day. And for every child who drowned, another four received emergency room care for nonfatal submersion injuries.

Drowning looks different than what you see in the movies. Often, there is little flailing or screaming for help — swimmers are using all the energy they have to stay above water, said John Pauley, aquatics director for the Twin Falls YMCA.

So make sure you know what to look for. The Times-News talked to Pauley and Rupert City Pool manager Chelsey Parkin for advice. Here is a rundown of what drowning can look like:

Distressed swimmer: A distressed swimmer is still horizontal and may be making forward progress, but he’s struggling, Pauley said. His movements won’t

“In some cases they call for help,” Parkin said.

Active drowning: An active drowner’s body is vertical, and his body stays in the same place. His head may be bobbing in and out of the water, and his legs and arms aren’t coordinated, Pauley said.

It’s closest to the image most people have of drowning, except you won’t hear distressed shouts.

“They can’t call for help,” Parkin said. “They’re struggling so much they can’t even ask for help.”

Passive drowning: A passive drowner is unconscious, often floating face-down in the water or under the water. It’s a scary sight to see, Pauley said, and for that reason, both the Twin Falls and Rupert pools don’t let children float face-down while playing. Once every 2 1/2 hours, lifeguards at the Rupert pool clear everyone out of the water to check the bottom for people, Parkin said.

So what should you do?

Make some ground rules. Pauley recommends making children swim with a buddy at all times and telling them to stay close. Chantel Zuercher of Twin Falls, who has three children in swim lessons, makes sure her children stay in the shallow end and watches them play.

“We are always with them,” Zuercher said.

Pay attention. Parents, don’t rely on just flotation devices or life-guards. The more eyes on the pool, the better. That goes for the shallow end, too — Parkin has had to help small children in the kiddie pool, which is only 2 feet deep.

If you do buy flotation, make sure it’s U.S. Coast Guard-approved, Pauley said. Stay away from arm floaties, which can slip off.

Act fast. If you think you see a distressed swimmer, act before asking.

“If you have to ask if that kid is drowning, they probably are and you should act,” Pauley said. It’s better to have a false rescue than to let someone drown.

Ideally, you should alert a life-guard. If there is no lifeguard, though, use a tool you can extend so the person in distress can grab onto it. If a parent has swimming skills, she can go in after the child herself.

But, Pauley emphasized, “it’s better to be preventive than reactive.”

Consuming more olive oil may protect against strokes

By Jeannine Stein
Los Angeles Times

Pour some more of that EVOO on your plate — a study finds that eating more olive oil could be linked with lower stroke risk in older people.

Medical records of 7,625 people 65 and older who lived in three French cities were examined by researchers to determine how their olive oil consumption affected their chances of having a stroke. The participants had no history of stroke at the beginning of the study.

Olive oil is a component of the Mediterranean diet, which is rich in healthy fats (like olive oil and nuts), plus whole grains, fruits, vegetables, fish and chicken. Red meat and wine are consumed in moderate amounts, and regular physical activity is part of the regimen as well. Other studies have linked the Mediterranean diet with a lower risk of heart disease, but scientists are still assessing the roles various portions of the diet and lifestyle play.

In this study, participants were surveyed about how much olive oil they consumed: About 23 percent used none, 40 percent were moderate users, and about 37 percent were intensive users (using it in cooking and as a dressing or with bread).

In an average 5.25 years of follow-up, 148 strokes occurred. Those who were intensive users had a 41 percent lower stroke risk compared with those who never used olive oil. Researchers arrived at that number after adjusting for such factors as body mass index, other stroke risk factors, diet and physical activity. The results were statistically significant for ischemic stroke (caused by blockage of an artery to the brain) but not hemorrhagic stroke (caused by the rupture of a blood vessel).

The authors noted that the findings could be used to make dietary recommendations for older people at risk for stroke.

The study was published online in the journal Neurology.

New rules to cut confusion on sunscreen claims

By Matthew Perrone
Associated Press writer

Help is on the way to consumers confused by the jumble of sun protection numbers, symbols and other claims on sunscreens. Starting next summer, consumers can start looking for SPF 15 bottles with the label “broad spectrum” and feel confident they’re being protected from an increased risk of cancer.

Currently, standards of protection apply only to one part of the sun’s spectrum, ultraviolet B rays, which cause sunburn. Under new rules published last week, they will also have to protect against the more penetrating ultraviolet A rays associated with skin cancer.

Cassie Bonenfant, 18, who uses SPF 30 sunscreen on her face and SPF 8 on her body, vacations in Sarasota, Fla.

The guidelines, which spent more than 30 years in bureaucratic limbo, are designed to enhance the effectiveness of sunscreens and make them easier to use.

The key takeaway for consumers: Look for a sun protection factor, or SPF, of 15 and above that also says “broad spectrum.” That’s the new buzzword from the Food and Drug Administration to describe a product that does an acceptable job blocking both types of damaging rays.

Starting next summer, sunscreens with less than an SPF of 15 or that aren’t “broad spectrum” will have to carry a warning label: “This product has been shown only to help prevent sunburn, not skin cancer or early skin aging.”

Advances in self-tanning product formulas, coupled with sun damage fears, inspire many to spread it on

By Melissa Magsaysay
Los Angeles Times

The deleterious effects of self-tanning products — streaky brown or Oompa-Loompa orange skin — have faded considerably over the past couple of years, due in large part to advances in formulations and delivery methods that make a DIY tan easier to acquire. These advances, coupled with a stronger awareness of sun damage and the potential harmful effects of UV lights in tanning beds, have inspired more of us to slather on the bronze, rather than run the risk of skin cancer or premature aging.

U.S. sales of self-tanning products increased 13 percent in 2010, compared with 2009 ($22.9 million versus $25.8 million). Which may lead you to ask: How do these creams, lotions, foams and sprays work?

Self-tanning

The active ingredient in the formulas that are misted onto the skin in a sunless tanning salon as well as the self-tanning products you'll find at drugstores and department stores is called dihydroxyacetone (or DHA) which is often derived from sugar cane or beets. "The DHA binds with proteins in the stratum corneum (top layer of the skin) and undergoes a series of chemical reactions similar to what happens when you brown bread," says Randy Wickett, a professor of pharmaceuticals and cosmetic science at the University of Cincinnati. He adds that DHA doesn't react with the deeper, more viable part of the skin; it reacts with only the most superficial layer, which is constantly exfoliating itself — and that's why a sunless tan generally lasts from two to 10 days.

"The color created by the DHA reaction is more yellow and less red than natural skin color," Wickett says. "And unless you put something else in there, DHA will leave the skin orange."

Which is why many of the original self-tanners sold in the 1960s and '70s were notorious for turning the user's skin an ochreous hue, rather than a more natural bronze. Over the past several years, the addition of another sugar compound called erythrulose has tempered the orange and produced a more natural-looking color.

DHA is approved by the FDA for cosmetic use and Wickett adds that he hasn't seen any indications that the ingredient is unsafe.

Dr. Heather Roberts, an L.A.-based dermatologist, says that people should do two patch tests on an arm before applying a self-tanner to the entire body. "The reaction is similar to poison oak," she says. "You may not see it in the first application. Apply it once and wait 48 to 72 hours to ensure there's no breakout or adverse reaction. Perform the test again a week later for a better safety margin." And since some self tanning formulas include ingredients such as beet juice, caramel and chocolate to amp up the color in the skin dying process, potential tanners with food allergies should be sure to check product labels.

Roberts also reminds self-tanners that a golden color is not an indication that skin is less sensitive to the sun. "Self-tanners do not protect you from sun damage," she says. "People must use SPF after the sunless tanning product is applied."

Exfoliating is the most important step to keep the results of self-tanner looking even. Sloughing off the oldest skin cells and exposing the freshest layer of stratum corneum gives the tan a chance to last longer as well clear the skin of rough and flaky spots.

As formulations of self-tanners have evolved so has the product packaging. In some cases the word "tan" has been replaced with terms such as "skin finishing" and "glow products" in order to emphasize healthy, natural-looking skin. Jergens has an extensive line of "glow lotions" that supposedly enhance the skin's natural color and add a healthy tone.

St. Tropez, a self-tanning brand that refers to the process as skin finishing,

Josie Maran Argan self tanning cream

$32 for 4 fluid ounces

For anyone who has skin allergies or just prefers natural cosmetics, this product is free of parabens and infused with organic Argan oil, which is said to be hydrating and to protect the skin against pollutants and environmental toxins. Our tester said the product delivered a natural looking finish to her skin and turned her usually pale legs to a warm honey-brown color that came on gradually after she applied the cream three times over three days.

"It goes on just like my daily lotion and didn't turn my hands brown at all," our tester said of the white cream that "doesn't smell good or bad, it just smells like nothing."

One drawback to this gradual and natural self-tanner — the small (4-ounce) tube doesn't last long if you're planning to tan your entire body. Our tester used about half the bottle during her three applications in order to build up to her desired shade.

St. Tropez Bronzing Mousse

$30 for 4 fluid ounces

This aloe-infused, brown foam goes on easily and soaks right into the skin before it has a chance to streak or stain. Our tester said the lightly perfumed scent isn't cloying, but after putting it all over her body, the smell did start to become stronger.

Color-wise, this product seems to be for someone who is going for brown, a look-at-me-I-just-came-back-from-the-Bahamas-brown. Our tester's medium skin tone took to this product immediately and turned about two shades darker with just one application.

Clarins Instant Smooth Self Tanning

$32.50 for 1 fluid ounce

In the 1-ounce jar, Clarins self-tanner has the color and consistency of processed peanut butter, but our tester (the only male in the group) said it spread easily over his skin and body hair. Our tester noted that the instructions on the packaging made clear (in several places) that it does not contain a sunscreen and therefore it should be applied only after a daily skin-care regimen that includes one.

It's considered a "progressive" self-tanner, meaning that it should be applied daily until the desired shade is achieved. The first daily application was barely noticeable compared with the non-bronzed forearm; the second daily dose started to show a darker shade; and a decidedly bronze glow was present after the third application — by which time nearly a third of the 1-ounce jar was gone.

The color did transfer slightly to a long-sleeve shirt, and since the product is intended for the face and neckline area, our tester suggests not wearing an expensive or favorite garment until you're sure the color can be laundered out.

Treatment for muscle atrophy?

By Meredith Cohn
The Baltimore Sun

Muscle atrophy in older people is a big problem, but a common blood pressure drug shows promise in regenerating muscle and also in protecting against its wasting away from inactivity.

The drug, losartan, worked on geriatric mice muscle and tests on humans are in the works.

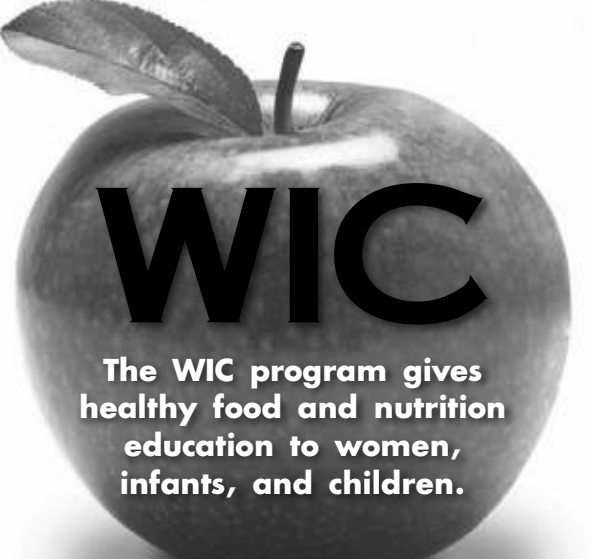

"The goal of the investigation was to find a way to prevent a bad situation from getting worse in the case of old muscle that's injured or not used," said Dr. Ronald Cohn, an assistant professor of pediatrics and neurology in Hopkins's McKusick-Nathans Institute of Genetic Medicine. "As pleased as we were to see that losartan therapy in mice had a positive effect on muscle regeneration, we were most surprised and excited by its striking prevention of disuse atrophy."

Seniors can have muscle loss and weakness, called sarcopenia, from inactivity, injury or illness. As people age, other studies have shown that activity in a certain protein increases and that means less muscle repair. Losartan promotes muscle regeneration by blocking a protein receptor and tamping down the activity.

There hasn't been a lot of other attention to this condition, with research more focused on preservation of bone.

This research was reported in the journal Science Translational Medicine.

Israel asks U.S. to let spy attend father's funeral

By Aron Heller
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Israelis are rallying behind convicted spy Jonathan Pollard like never before, urging the U.S. on Sunday to let the former Pentagon analyst leave prison to attend his father's funeral.

Israelis widely feel that after 25 years behind bars, Pollard has been excessively punished, and they seem puzzled over the U.S. refusal to set him free, despite recent calls for his release from some prominent former American officials.

Pollard was a civilian intelligence analyst for the U.S. Navy when he copied and gave to his Israeli handlers enough classified documents to fill a walk-in closet.

Arrested in 1985 after unsuccessfully seeking refuge at the Israeli Embassy in Washington, Pollard was convicted and sentenced to life in prison two years later. Pollard is scheduled for release in 2015, according to a U.S. Justice Department Web site.

Nachman Shai, an Israeli lawmaker leading a campaign on Pollard's behalf, said Israel has done everything it reasonably could to repair the damage done by the scandal.

"Israel has already apologized," he said. "Israel accepted responsibility."

It also pledged years ago to halt espionage against its mainly.

Pollard advocates claim that other spies convicted of far worse crimes against America — including on behalf of actually hostile nations — have received lesser sentences and have been released earlier than Pollard.

The U.S. defense establishment is considered hostile to the idea of clemency, claiming Pollard caused huge, but largely undisclosed, damage.

Once a niche cause for the Israeli right, the Pollard campaign is now an issue that unites most Israelis. It is a rarity in this politically divided country, and it is reflected in the origins of the petition — in Shai's opposition centrist Kadima Party.

Nearly two-thirds of the members of Israel's parliament signed the call asking that Pollard be allowed to attend his father's funeral Monday in Indiana, and dozens rallied for Pollard in front of the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv Sunday.

Calls grow in Egypt to delay elections

Election debate is just one of many challenges in chaotic transition period

By Hamza Hendawi and Maggie Michael
Associated Press

CAIRO — Calls are growing in Egypt for a delay of September's parliamentary elections to give parties formed in the aftermath of Hosni Mubarak's ouster more time to organize.

The push, which now has the prime minister's backing, is aimed at keeping the well-organized Muslim Brotherhood from dominating the next legislature and exerting disproportionate Islamist influence over the drafting of a new constitution.

The debate over the timing of the elections and the new constitution is a political novelty in a country where elections under the 29-year rule of former President Mubarak were routinely marred by widespread fraud and their results known before the first ballot was cast.

The election debate is just one of a host of challenges Egypt is grappling with in the chaotic transition period to what many hope will be a freer, more democratic Egypt. There are also disagreements over the extent to which police powers should be curtailed, how best to halt economic deterioration and how to divvy up the nation's wealth among some 85 million people.

The debate itself seems remarkable, given the authoritarian system that was in place until just a few months ago. It is another sign that post-Mubarak Egyptians have cast off decades of political apathy and have new faith in the political process.

However, it also could be a trigger for renewed unrest if the question is not resolved in a way that satisfies everyone or at least many of the players.

Interim Prime Minister Essam Sharaf, in an interview posted Sunday on Egyptian news website Masrawy.com, said he preferred a delay in the vote to allow the nation's "political landscape" to take shape. He also hinted that drafting a new constitution before the elections would not be a bad idea either.

Sharaf, however, made clear that a delay is his personal preference, and that his Cabinet would do everything it can to ensure a fair and secure vote if the election went ahead as scheduled.

The Islamic fundamentalist Brotherhood, Egypt's largest and best organized political group, reacted angrily to Sharaf's comments, with a top figure in the group saying the prime minister should resign before expressing personal views.

"The people want to transfer power to a civilian administration. This is in the interest of the country," said Sobhi Saleh, a Brotherhood leader who helped draft amendments to Egypt's current constitution that were voted on in March. "The Muslim Brotherhood are against postponement and against drafting the constitution before elections."

Some fear that elections will leave the doors wide open for Islamist ministers to govern, a council of clerics to decide which laws to pass or drop depending on how they fit according to Islamic Sharia law and where liberal and secular voices will be labeled "infidels."

Those worries have been prompted by the fact that the 90-year-old Brotherhood has revved up the social services campaign that has long helped it build its following. Just after the collapse of Mubarak's rule, it formed for the first time a political party and launched a strong nationwide campaign.

The military, which took over the reins of power when Mubarak stepped down in February, has yet to say where it stands on the elections issue but it has been adamant that no new constitution would be drafted before legislative elections are held.

The military's main argument is that the constitutional amendments adopted by more than 70 percent of voters in the March referendum reflected the will of the people.

The nine amendments effectively give the next parliament a mandate to draft a new constitution. They also limit the presidency to two four-year terms, ease requirements for running in presidential elections — especially for independent candidates — and provide judicial supervision of elections.

Bolivia's double whammy

Climate, government controls hit Bolivian farmers

By Carlos Valdez
Associated Press

ACHACACHI, Bolivia — Bolivia's farmers were hit from all sides last year — drought, floods and wildfires — forcing the poor Andean nation to import staple foods on an unprecedented scale.

But nature wasn't the only cause. Farmers also blame the government for imposing price controls and export restrictions instead of letting the free market prevail as it does in nearly all the other Latin American countries similarly suffering bad weather.

In Bolivia's eastern lowlands, soybeans that would ordinarily have been exported languished in their silos because they could not find local buyers.

"We were already being battered by the climate when the government came out with these decrees prohibiting exports," said Demetrio Perez, a soy farmer who is president of the National Association of Oil Seed Producers. "With the restrictions, an incentive to plant more was lost."

Sunflower crops rotted in the fields because farmers could neither sell locally nor get export licenses from an inefficient bureaucracy.

"It was a disaster," said Susano Terceros, who lost part of his sunflower crop.

The political cost for President Evo Morales is high. After winning reelection by a landslide in 2009, his approval rating is now about 45 percent. He is now seeking advice from the farmers, including agribusinessmen in the pro-capitalist east where his fiercest political foes reside.

In December, at a time when food shortages were already being felt, the government decided to eliminate gasoline subsidies, which would have raised fuel prices more than 70 percent. Thousands took to the streets in protest, forcing Morales to back down.

His government had imposed price controls and an export ban on corn, wheat, sugar and other staples in 2007. Two years later, it added vegetable oils, sunflower seeds and soybeans to the list of staples that could only be exported if officials decided the domestic market was adequately supplied.

Export controls are necessary to prevent food from being smuggled out to neighboring countries such as Peru, said Nemecia Achacollo, the government's rural development minister.

"The government is like a mother who has to look out for all her children," Achacollo told The Associated Press. "It's not acceptable for (food) to be exported while leaving shortages in the domestic market."

Bolivia has long produced most of its food, but imports of sugar and corn shot up 68 percent to $143 million in the first three months of this year to compensate for slumping output.

A double whammy of floods and severe drought dramatically shrank the land area under cultivation last year, while fires blackened fields in the eastern lowlands that produce most crops. Now, the high plains are suffering erratic weather.

Golden fields of wheat and oats near the town of Achacachi wilted last month under early snows.

"The oats didn't grow and aren't good for anything but animal feed," lamented Avelino Miranda, a 70-year-old Indian farmer, as he cut the dry, shriveled crops. He said his son has moved to Argentina, seeing no future here.

Loading oats onto a truck in dry fields nearby, 60-year-old Modesto Bautista said his oat crop was also stunted by the harsh weather. He blamed climate change.

Scientists caution that a single year is too short a time frame to ascribe crop damage to long-term climate change. But a study published in last month's journal Science by researchers from Stanford University and Columbia University said global warming since 1980 has had an impact on crop yields, pushing up prices of wheat and corn crops.

Unlike their neighbors, Bolivian farmers rely heavily on rainfall rather than irrigation, and they have been hit by severe climate swings during the El Nino and La Nina weather phenomena over the Pacific Ocean.

Chile, Peru, Brazil, Paraguay, Argentina and Colombia have all avoided shortages in recent years, even though some have suffered spells of destructive weather.

Argentina suffered its worst drought in 40 years in 2009, with heavy losses of cattle, wheat and corn. Yet although prices increased, there were no shortages. Rains damaged much Colombian farmland this year, but prices have increased only slightly and no shortages have occurred.

In Bolivia's eastern province of Santa Cruz, its agricultural heartland and a bastion of anti-Morales sentiment, farmers say price and export controls are as much to blame for the country's food woes as the weather.

Land under cultivation in their region shrank from more than 1.8 million acres in 2009 to 1.5 million acres in 2010. Corn suffered the biggest decline, from 370,000 acres to 220,000 acres.

Part of the reason was drought, but Perez said the government shared the blame because the low price it dictated for corn became a disincentive to plant it.

Earlier this year, thousands of tons of sugar were smuggled out of Bolivia. The government, powerless to halt the entire outflow, was forced to let the price rise to nearly double.

Annual food inflation, 18.5 percent in March, was the third highest in the region behind Venezuela and Paraguay, according to U.N. figures.

Now Morales, himself a former coca farmer, is calling food his top priority and is asking farmers for advice.

"Advise me, help me. Let's work together to guarantee food production," he said last month at a meeting with sugar growers. "If we've had ... ideological differences, that's in the past. Now the situation is different."

Morales has made a series of concessions and spending decisions that have been welcomed by the otherwise distrustful farmers. One concession is to stop opposing the introduction of genetically modified crops other than soybeans. This month, he submitted a bill that would allow more GM crops.

He also announced plans to invest $1 billion in farming projects in the next four years, and is starting to spend $100 million this year on water and irrigation projects as a hedge against future dry spells.

Some sugar farmers have accepted $20 million in new government loans, and corn farmers are pleased that the government is now paying 10 percent more for their crops to supply a state-run food distribution company.

But most corn, sugar and soybean production remains in the hands of farmers in Santa Cruz, and they say they want the government to ease up on regulation and encourage investment.

"We can't fight the ravages of nature, but what's doing the most harm are inappropriate policies that discourage production," said Gary Rodriguez of the National Institute of Foreign Commerce, a leading business group.

"Farmers already have plenty to deal with coping with the climate."

Clean-up of Former Training Area 3
Kimama Training Site
Idaho Army National Guard

Lincoln County, ID - The Department of Defense (DoD) and the Idaho Army National Guard are in the process of completing a Remedial Investigation/Feasibility Study (RI/FS) for the former Training Area 3 at the Kimama Training Site (KTS) in accordance with the Military Munitions Response Program (MMRP). Information collected from these investigations will be used to characterize site conditions, assess the risks to human health and the environment, and evaluate remedial action alternatives. DEAR ABBY: Because my 90-year-old mother is homebound, she qualifies for a meal program through a senior charity service. The program is free of charge for those in need. She didn't like some of the meals, so she asked me to give them to my father-in-law, "Louis."

Louis is 88. He still drives and is well-off, so he doesn't qualify for the program, but he accepted the meals that were offered. My mother has now decided she can no longer eat any of these meals, so I told her we should discontinue the program.

When I mentioned it to my wife, she became very upset with me, saying her father appreciated those meals. I reminded her that her father is able to drive himself to the supermarket and buy frozen dinners similar to what is being provided through the service. My wife is so angry she now says she will never again share any leftovers with my mother. It's an understatement to say this situation has created a major fight between us.

Is my wife correct in being upset about my discontinuing the meal service?

— CHARITY BEGINS AT HOME

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR CHARITY: It wasn't wrong to offer the meals that had already been delivered to your mother to your father-in-law after she rejected them. They probably could not have been redistributed to other seniors by the food program at that point.

But to continue your mother's food service while redirecting them to someone who is not in need is dishonest. It's stealing necessary resources from people who truly need them.

Because your wife is upset, she should contact the agency that provides the meals, or another agency that serves seniors, and see if her father qualifies. But she shouldn't punish you for refusing to go along with a deception.

DEAR ABBY: Twice, while attending social functions, my wife and I met couples for the first time. On each of these occasions as we were saying goodbye, the husbands said to me, "Your wife is gorgeous." They said it in front of their wives, which surprised me. The first time it happened, I didn't know what to say. The second time, I replied, "So is yours," even though the women weren't all that attractive.

I'm wondering if their comments were appropriate, especially because they were made in the presence of their wives. I wasn't offended, just caught off-guard and felt uncomfortable for their wives. I'd appreciate your comments.

— MARRIED TO A KNOCKOUT

DEAR MARRIED TO A KNOCKOUT: Not only do you have a gorgeous wife, but your wife is blessed with a sensitive husband. The comments those individuals made strike me as insensitive to the feelings of their wives because it invited a comparison which could have made the women feel uncomfortable. I think you handled both situations gallantly.

DEAR ABBY: What does it mean when someone signs his/her name with a "Just" in front of it? I received a Mother's Day card from my in-laws (with whom I don't have a good relationship) and it was signed, "Just Bob and Diane."

I have not seen anyone do this before, and was curious if this was another form of my mother-in-law's cattiness or my ignorance.

— SINCERELY YOURS IN SAVANNAH

DEAR SINCERELY: If I had to hazard a guess, I'd say that Bob and Diane may have a bit of a self-esteem problem. Or they're telling you you don't make them feel very important. Could that be true?

ANSWER: Neither clubs nor hearts seem to be lying well for declarer. Maybe his best chance to make tricks is on a crossruff; so lead trumps at every opportunity, unless the sight of dummy makes that seem an unrewarding option.

IF JUNE 20 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Ignore the stars in your eyes during the next month as your challenge will be to choose lasting values over your fantasy favorites. Choose interaction and partnership with others, rather than isolation whenever you can during the months to come. Some of your goals and friends are unworthy of your attention this summer, but in August you will see them in a clearer light. Because you will be wiser than usual, that is a good month to make key decisions and launch important plans for the future. After the first of the year put physical health and exercise at the top of your priority list. Ask someone else to come along and participate by your side as you start new health regimens or fitness plans.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The more you want to be first, the more likely you will come in last. A passing scheme might prove to be a delicate bubble that can burst unexpectedly. People may misunderstand your intentions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Push your own agenda right off the cliff. Team up with others to handle mundane tasks or invite a friend along on what would otherwise be a boring errand. You can mix social activities with business.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You can walk along Penny Lane. The Beatles may have had a different idea of what a penny bought, so even if your thoughts center on memories from long ago, be sure to remain modern about spending.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Clarity is always enhanced by brevity. If you embellish the truth or spend too much time explaining, you might merely muddy the waters. Take pains to avoid disputes and confrontations today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accept the good with the bad. Someone you consider to be but a fair-weather friend might be given an opportunity to show his or her true colors. You may be disappointed in a situation that requires trust.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Mud sticks. If someone passes along some nasty comments, they can cause problems even if they aren't true. It will pay off to spend extra time greasing the cogs to ensure there are no misunderstandings.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Two heads are better than one. Any project will proceed more pleasantly and smoothly if you invite someone to help you. Once you get to know someone better you may find there is a serious side.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be brave under fire. With a combination of bravado and diplomacy, you can handle any upsets or an aggravating or confusing situation. Strive to be open-minded when faced with unreasonable people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): It is time to look the gift horse in the mouth. Learn exactly what you are getting into when someone offers you something that could affect your future. It is best to hold off on financial decisions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Making key decisions now might mire you in the muck of a major misunderstanding. Wait for better celestial conditions to spend your money or to follow up on an enticing romantic invitation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Dollars to doughnuts you have the right idea. Keep your pennies in the piggy bank without investing in those doughnuts, however, as there could be more than meets the eye in a contract or financial arrangement.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It doesn't help to feel as though you were a hostage to fortune. Don't pay the ransom if you feel threatened by competition because you are only adding fuel to the fire. Wait for better timing for decisions.
