Several districts back Luna on 'No Child'

Some prefer measuring how much students improve each year rather than their scores on proficiency tests

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

Several Magic Valley school district superintendents say they support Idaho's move away from some parts of the federal law that tracks their students' and schools' progress.

State public schools chief Tom Luna told U.S. Secretary of Education Arne Duncan in a Tuesday letter that Idaho won't adopt higher No Child Left Behind benchmarks, nor will it sanction schools that fail to meet them until the federal law is reformed.

Luna wants to move toward a model that measures students' growth. Currently, all students are required to take standardized tests to prove they are proficient in different subjects before they graduate high school.

It's something Minidoka County Superintendent Scott Rogers said is like trying to have all students jump over a 7-foot academic hurdle.

"What about someone with a traumatic brain injury or someone who has limited English?" Rogers said.

Congress has yet to reauthorize the 9-year-old law, leading states like Montana and Idaho to take a stand against it.

Luci Willits, Idaho State Department of Education chief of staff, said reauthorization of NCLB is long overdue.

"A lot has changed over the years in education and our ability to measure

It may be a little easier on the teachers and will give them more recognition for the accomplishments their students have made."

What is the No Child Left Behind Act?

The act was passed in 2001 by a bipartisan majority. NCLB requires states to test students on basic skills in order to receive federal funding.

Thief hits two golf pro shops

Thieves swipe cash from Jerome, Gooding golf course clubhouses

By Bradley Guire
Times-News writer

JEROME — The burglar did not take sleeves of Titleist balls nor carry off the Callaway oversized drivers, but he did make off with a little cash.

Both the Jerome Country Club and Gooding Country Club pro shops were burglarized within an hour of each other early Friday, according to employees of both courses.

John Peterson, PGA professional at Jerome Country Club, said he arrived at the course around 3:40 a.m. Friday to find the glass door to the pro shop smashed. The thief took only the petty cash from the shop's till, rather than the thousands of dollars' worth of golf shirts, balls, clubs, bags and other accessories.

"They didn't get enough to justify breaking in," Peterson said on Friday morning.

Regardless of the burglary, the course had a busy day with its member/guest men's tournament.

Bug fighters seeing more mosquitoes, black flies

There aren't many people who don't like kiddie pools, but Kirk Tubbs is one of them.

"People call me all the time asking me to help them with their mosquito problem," he said. "They usually don't like it when I say it's their kid's pool creating the perfect nesting ground for thousands of mosquitoes."

If it was up to him, every small pool, bucket of water and feeding trough would remain empty.

As manager for the Twin Falls County Pest Abatement District, Tubbs says he is seeing a rise in the amount of mosquito and black fly swarms throughout the county. The district has been actively treating for the insects

BEATING MOSQUITOES

If you or someone you know is facing a mosquito problem, here are some tips the TFCPAD suggests:

- Drain standing water. This could be as simple as draining containers or small swimming pools.
- Use goldfish to eat the mosquito larva in livestock watering troughs.
- Don't overwater. Let the ground dry between waterings of fields or lawns.

Why is this year so bad?

Mosquitoes lay their eggs on the high water edges. Most years, the river and stream levels never reach the high water mark so the eggs never hatch. However, the eggs can remain dormant for years, until the right weather comes along.

Gooding School District growth has grown,” she said, referencing the state’s new ISEE data system that will track individual students’ performance throughout their public-school careers.

Willits said the teacher merit-pay component of Idaho’s new education reform is based in part on student achievement. Districts are currently determining how growth will be judged for each school, she said.

Rogers said measuring students based on how they improve each year rather than on their test proficiency is more accurate and more statistically sound.

“It makes more sense. It won’t be easier but it will be more fair and more positive for both teachers and students,” Rogers said.

Willits said the state will keep its current proficiency targets in place while it develops a new model of accountability.

“We are in the preliminary stages right now,” Willits said. “No Child Left Behind has done great things but now it is a stumbling block for our new reform. We have more tools at our disposal.”

Gooding School District Superintendent Heather Williams said the growth model will be a better assessment of what happens in a classroom.

“Some kids come to us proficient, so this growth model will be a better measure of what teachers have added to the students,” she said.

Kathleen Noh, Kimberly’s schools chief, said that while the growth model is a good idea, all students should still be expected to reach proficiency. She said if students are not leaving school with the skills they need, they won’t have the same opportunities to be successful. It’s a balancing act, she said.

“I don’t think it will impact our teachers because they always take a child from where he is to as far as he could go,” she said. “Each child’s success is what matters. It may be a little easier on the teachers and will give them more recognition for the accomplishments their students have made.”

Cassia County asks BLM for Gateway West info

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Cassia County officials want to do their homework ahead of time when it comes to a proposed high-voltage transmission line.

County commissioners signed off Friday on a public records request to the U.S. Bureau of Land Management, seeking information they say they’ll need to defend their proposed route for the Gateway West project.

The county will seek data on sage grouse, wilderness inventory, wild lands and roadless areas relating to the project’s proposed and alternate routes.

Idaho Power and Rocky Mountain Power’s proposed transmission line would stretch 1,150 miles from Glenrock, Wyo., to a substation near Melba. BLM officials are currently compiling a draft environmental impact statement — an analysis of the project’s effects and its various routes — and plan to release it this fall to gather public comment over a 90-day period.

“If we were not to take this opportunity, we would, to my knowledge with everything we know, never have another chance until the EIS is completed to ever be in the driver’s seat to negotiate,” said Brent Stoker, chairman of the Cassia County Gateway West Task Force. “... And I don’t think it’s going to be the same as negotiating before it’s out.”

The route the utilities suggested would cross a substantial amount of private property in Cassia County. The project would also cross Bannock, Power, Oneida and Twin Falls counties, which banded together to establish a congruent corridor more palatable to county residents.

Cassia County’s task force, consisting of many private property owners who would be affected by the project, studied the issue and came up with an alternative route crossing more public land than private. Cassia County officials adopted the route, dubbed the Stateline Route, in January 2010 as an official utility transmission corridor. A second alternate route has also been configured.

Crash hampers traffic, little else

Times-News

A two-vehicle crash Friday evening snarled traffic in Twin Falls, but otherwise caused little in the way of injury.

Twin Falls police responded at 5:50 p.m. to the incident at about 2392 Addison Ave. E. According to Officer J.R. Paredes, a 2002 Hyundai Sonata pulled out of the parking lot of the Sonic Drive-In, turning westbound, and was struck by a Mercury Grand Marquis heading east on Addison.

None of the vehicles’ occupants reported major injuries. The incident did block westbound traffic for about 45 minutes.

Paredes said he expected to cite the driver of the Hyundai for pulling out in front of the other vehicle. No names of those involved were immediately available.

Twin Falls launches redesigned website

Times-News

The city of Twin Falls has redesigned its website in an effort to make information more accessible to the public.

The city’s website, www.tfid.org, features a new design and drop-down menus to help visitors find information more quickly. In a Friday release, city staff said that one feature they hope will be most useful is a new comment box that allows visitors to provide questions, comments or complaints.

In addition, city officials hope the site will reflect the area well for prospective businesses, tourists and incoming residents.

Some of the new website’s functions are yet to be added, but many others — including links to the city’s Facebook and Twitter accounts — are up and running.

The new website was designed by CivicPlus, a company that provides site design for a variety of government agencies.

have a horrible year, but we have the potential for it,” Tubbs said. “But we’ve also been treating for awhile, so I’m hopeful things won’t get too bad.”

High river flows from above-average spring precipitation have increased mosquito swarms, thus raising concerns that West Nile virus carriers are also on the rise. As of Thursday, TFCPAD officials had found no mosquitoes carrying the disease.

Mosquitoes lay their eggs on the high water edges, Tubbs said. Most years the river and stream levels never reach the high water mark, so the eggs never hatch. However, the eggs can remain undeveloped for years.

“We could be seeing eggs hatching that were laid five to seven years ago,” he said. “Normally we’ll go out to the streams and see cup samples holding four or five mosquitoes. This year we are seeing samples with 40 to 60 mosquitoes.”

TFCPAD tries to use non-chemical treatment methods to control mosquitoes and black flies. The district uses a combination of live and dead bacteria to kill the bugs.

“When the mosquitoes eat the chemical with the live bacteria in it, they’ll burst open and then other mosquitoes will eat their remains, thus creating a continual cycle,” Tubbs said. “Most people get excited when I tell them that.”

While high water levels have caused a swell in mosquitoes and black flies, a rise in ticks has also emerged.

“We’re seeing a major hit now since the colder weather has kept people off the trails,” said Zsigmond Szanto, medical director and veterinarian for the Twin Falls Veterinary Clinic and Hospital. “But now with the warmer weather, people are out hiking more with their pets and we’re seeing a jump in tick cases throughout the Magic Valley.”

However, tick populations are not dependent on water levels, Szanto said.

Whatever this summer brings, Tubbs says his district will continue to treat for the insects and test for disease-carrying mosquitoes.

“You have to remember, we’re in a desert so whatever mosquito problem we have, we brought it on ourselves,” Tubbs said. “Right now I’m thankful it’s just a pest problem and not we’re dealing with diseases.”

BLM says fireworks illegal, pose fire risk on public lands

Times-News

The U.S. Bureau of Land Management reminds everyone to practice firework safety to prevent wildfires as the Fourth of July nears.

Fireworks remain illegal to possess or discharge on public lands under the Idaho Fire Prevention Order, which also prohibits the use of incendiary or tracer ammunition and burning tires or potentially explosive materials. Independence Day revelers are urged to handle fireworks carefully, lighting them away from brush and debris. Keep water on hand and make sure children are supervised.

BLM engine crews will patrol for fires around the July 4 weekend. Anyone spotting illegal fire activity on public lands should report it immediately by dialing #FIRE or 800-974-2373.

Idaho delegates want more public comments on lake

BOISE (AP) — All four members of Idaho's congressional delegation are asking the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to extend the public comment period for a conservation plan that could put new restrictions on Lake Lowell.

The public comment period is scheduled to expire July 29, but The Idaho Statesman reports the delegation sent a letter this week asking for a 120-day extension.

Canyon County officials, boaters and others are worried about the planning process, which they expect will put new restrictions on activities around the man-made lake and surrounding Deer Flat National Wildlife Refuge. But refuge managers say the changes would help safeguard wildlife while still allowing public access.

The proposed plan would limit motorized water sports and bicycles, impose access and boat-launch fees and bar dogs and horses from the refuge.

Wendell may ban dogs from park events

By Emily Katseanes
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — In the wake of Dairy Days, Wendell's public parks were on the minds of the City Council at Thursday's meeting.

Mayor Brad Christopherson asked the council, minus absent Councilman Kent Bates, to consider adopting a stricter dog ordinance after seeing canines among the crowd at Dairy Days.

"We noticed quite a big number of dogs in the city park," Christopherson said. "We had everything from Rottweilers and pit bulls to little dogs."

Christopherson said he worried that continuing to allow four-legged companions at crowded outdoor events could lead to injuries for children intent on petting strange puppies. He cited ordinances from other towns, such as Emmett, that prohibit pets in parks during special events.

Former Mayor George Benson spoke in favor of banning dogs from parks permanently. When two other audience members got upset at Benson's suggestion, Christopherson said he would put more research into the issue.

In other public spaces news, Jim Benson approached the council about some proposed work on the veterans park. Benson said the park board was interested in using up to $700 to purchase sprinkler equipment for the area where the old gymnasium previously stood.

"$700 would cover, from the approximate estimations or bids we got, the parts," he said.

Aside from the veterans park, Carolyn McRoberts hoped to get a parcel of land near the Ambrose subdivision revamped as well. McRoberts, president of the local Lions Club, said her organization had been fundraising for about three years in hopes of turning a patch of weeds into a volleyball court, horseshoe pit and picnic area.

Before committing to any support, the council told McRoberts to talk to the parks and recreation department about its capacity to maintain the park once it's built and to help create it with manpower. Since the city is still working to overcome its budget deficit, any funds would have to come out of the parks and recreation budget, not the general fund.

In other news, Wendell High School senior Kiersten Hilt asked the council to approve a date for her fundraiser. Hilt organized a charity run to benefit the Huntsman Cancer Institute in Salt Lake City for her senior project. The council approved the July 23 date of her 5K walk and run.

Librarian Elaine Dalton also had happy news for the city: After applying for a $5,000 grant, Dalton said she received twice that much from Glanbia Foods.

“We’re no longer able to save the city.”
— Burlington, N.D., Mayor Jerome Gruenberg on flooding expected to wipe out a third of the 320 houses in the town

What would T.F. be without Salvation Army’s Patterson?

CHEERS: To Twin Falls Salvation Army Maj. Ed Patterson, for a decade of peerless service to this community.

Patterson will retire as pastor and director of the local Salvation Army on Friday. The 66-year-old cleric is a fourth-generation Salvationist who grew up attending church and eventually became an officer. He’s served for 42 years and plans another two or three more in his new position of emergency disaster coordinator before he officially hangs up his cap.

With his wife, Ann, he planned to go back to his home state of New Mexico to retire. But after she died three years ago from cancer, Patterson decided to stay in Twin Falls where his daughter and one of his grandchildren live.

As emergency disaster coordinator, Patterson will travel to towns across southern Idaho, recruiting and training volunteers to respond to floods, fires, chemical spills or other emergencies.

Patterson’s service has been tireless, and he has meant the difference between many families surviving or breaking apart.

For that, he has this community’s undying gratitude.

JEERS: To the Twin Falls City Council, for organizing a task force to find solutions to the parking issues facing the area.

There’s no need. Councilwoman Rebecca Mills Sojka, who cast the only vote against the task force earlier this week, is right that the council has all the information it needs to make a decision about the future of downtown parking. The task force is a waste of the city’s time and money.

It’s time to pull parking meters out of downtown Twin Falls. Period.

There is simply no more effective step to make visitors — which is to say shoppers — feel welcome.

CHEERS: To Ketchum resident Anne Corrock and her committee seeking to change Ketchum’s city government from a strong mayor to a city manager system.

There are only three city manager cities in Idaho — Twin Falls included — and they are simply more efficient and responsive to taxpayers.

Corrock and fellow advocates are hoping that a special election on Nov. 8 will decide what type of government Ketchum should have.

A city manager form of city government would be preferable because of the expansion of duties faced by elected officials, Corrock said.

“City manager and staff taking care of responsibilities will leave the elected officials the time they need to work on all of their responsibilities,” she told the Idaho Mountain Express.

Supporters have until Aug. 15 to collect 213 signatures — 20 percent of people who voted in the last general election — for the issue to be put before voters in November.

Ketchumites should sign that petition.

Many helped with Heyburn facelift

I want to thank all those who helped the city of Heyburn with its Operation Facelift Project.

Steve and Karen Roberts spearheaded the project and Southern Idaho Economic Development gave us the start-up money. Franklin Lumber helped with a discount, and K and R Rental helped with equipment.

For those who are unaware, we began painting and cleanup of the Hockey Rink. It will be an ongoing project for the summer as Eagle Scouts and skaters help to complete everything. What a great opportunity this has been to show our pride in our community and give it a little boost with a facelift to help encourage development. This will be an annual event so let’s start looking for next year’s project!

The American Century is over

The American Century just ended. This was the phrase coined by Henry Luce, which so aptly described America as the modern-day colossus, more powerful than any nation had ever been.

Last Wednesday night, President Obama said that power had reached its limit. He was bringing 10,000 troops home from Afghanistan. The war was not finished, but we are.

“America, it is time to focus on nation building at home,” the president said.

There it was, the theme of the speech. We had done what we could in Afghanistan, and there was, of course, more to do. But the purse was empty and the nation was tired — this is me, not Obama, talking, but he said much the same thing. “We must be as pragmatic as we are passionate; as strategic as we are resolute,” Obama said. In other words, we are going to pick our fights more carefully, and when we do, we can use the new weaponry of drones and the units of SEALs and such. No need for massive armies anymore. From the president’s mouth to God’s ear, I would add.

I have heard this speech before. I heard echoes of Richard Nixon explaining “Vietnamization.” Gonna turn the war over to our stolid allies. We put them on their feet. We trained them. We supplied them. We schooled them at our elite military academies. They looked splendid in their uniforms. But when the U.S. pulled out, South Vietnam collapsed. It will happen again in Afghanistan. I think Obama knows that. He fought this war — authorized the West Point surge — because he did not know how to get out. Now, he does. As any previous president could have told him, it’s by getting out.

Somewhere in the Obama

“The job (in Afghanistan) is done, or done enough, and we are broke and in need of some R&R. Obama surely knows his history and does not want it repeated — neither as tragedy nor as farce.”

speechwriting shop is someone with a tin ear. Having raised the specter of Vietnamization, Obama came close to mimicking Robert McNamara’s famous and klutzy line about the Vietnam War, “light at the end of the tunnel.” He said, “And even as there will be dark days ahead in Afghanistan, the light of a secure peace can be seen in the distance.” I hope so. But this secure peace will not hold a day. Even George McGovern’s refrain from his 1972 acceptance speech at the Democratic convention — “Come Home America” — was echoed here as a call to turn inward.

McGovern’s call was stirring and profound, and even though Nixon beat him, America did come home. We were a tired and divided nation, and we hated one another with a fury that no one should forget. The Vietnam War was long and bloody, over 50,000 dead, and it almost seemed as if no one could remember why we were fighting — or for what.

Something similar has happened in Afghanistan. Bin-Laden is dead. Al-Qaida has been riddled by drones. The job is done, or done enough, and we are broke and in need of some R&R. Obama surely knows his history and does not want it repeated — neither as tragedy nor as farce. We are not Henry Luce’s America — not because we no longer want to be, but because we no longer can be.

Prosecutor: Teen cleared in vehicle vandalism case

BOISE (AP) — Prosecutors have dropped a felony vandalism charge against a teenager accused of throwing large rocks at cars traveling from Interstate 184 into Boise.

Ada County Deputy Prosecutor Whitney Faulkner confirmed a charge of felony malicious injury to property was dropped against 18-year-old Sequoia L. Adams, of Boise. The Idaho Statesman reports Faulkner did not say why the charge was dismissed.

Another teen, 18-year-old Daniel S. Saylor, was arraigned Tuesday on the same felony charge.

Boise man gets at least 17 years for shooting death

BOISE (AP) — A 28-year-old Boise man has been sentenced to at least 17 years in prison for shooting a man to death during a drug-related argument last fall.

The Idaho Statesman reports Jorge Baird was sentenced Wednesday to 37 years in prison. Fourth District Judge Michael Wetherell said Baird cannot seek parole until he serves 17 years.

Baird pleaded guilty to seven charges in March, including manslaughter for the October 2010 death of 43-year-old Jake P. Roach. Baird also pleaded guilty to drug, firearms and theft charges under a plea agreement that called for a 40-year sentence with the possibility of parole after 15 years.

Ada County officials say Roach was shot several times after the two men argued over illegal drugs and died of a gunshot wound to the heart.

Jury finds Lewiston police officer used excessive force

LEWISTON (AP) — A federal jury says a former Lewiston police officer used excessive force in apprehending a suspect five years ago.

Kevin E. Mays sued in U.S. District Court three years ago, contending he was beaten and Tasered by four Lewiston police officers and Nez Perce County deputies when they were called to check on his welfare on Dec. 23, 2006. The Lewiston Tribune reports that the jury, empaneled in Coeur d'Alene's U.S. District Court, cleared three officers of wrongdoing but found that former Lewiston police officer Donald Blair used excessive force in the encounter.

The jury also found that Mays, who originally asked for more than $75,000 in damages in a tort claim, wasn't entitled to any punitive damages. Mays was awarded nearly $2,000 for his medical expenses.

The incident happened when Mays' then-girlfriend called police to say she was worried he was suicidal and had a weapon, according to court records. Police encountered Mays in North Lewiston a short time later, and Mays said that they attacked him, beat him and used a Taser on him. Police took a pocketknife from Mays but he was not armed, according to court records. Mays was charged with misdemeanor obstructing law enforcement, but a jury acquitted him.

The federal jury found that the use of the Taser was not excessive, but taking Mays to the ground was, his attorney Gregory Rauch said.

"He's pretty happy that they recognize that it was in fact excessive force," Rauch said of his client, "though he feels his life has been affected by the police quite a bit more."

The jury found that there was no wrongdoing by Lewiston police officer Mike Rigney and Nez Perce County deputies Sgt. John Hilderbrand and Joe Rodriguez.

Lewiston Police Chief Steven Orr says his department believes all the officers' use of force was reasonable. Lewiston police Capt. Roger Lanier said the department reviewed its officers' actions after the encounter and found no policy violations.

Schweitzer urges megaload construction in Montana

By Matt Gouras
Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. — Gov. Brian Schweitzer told Exxon Mobil officials on Friday that the company should manufacture some of its oversized oil refinery equipment in Montana in the future as a way of reducing criticism against "megaload" shipments.

More than 200 of the oversized rigs are slated to travel through Idaho and Montana over the next year to the Kearl Oil Fields in Alberta, Canada. But the shipments, being handled by a subsidiary called Imperial Oil, have been mired in legal and political disputes.

Critics argue the loads will tie up traffic and damage roads in pristine areas. The loads are also criticized by conservationists who oppose developing Canada's oil sands.

Schweitzer had no such issues. But he advised the company in a Friday meeting that a portion of future loads could be made in Montana to create jobs and make it easier to overcome objections.

Schweitzer, a Democrat, said he supports "conflict-free" oil from Canada as a better alternative to oil from the Middle East that he believes is at the heart much of the U.S. military intervention in the region. He argued the total cost to the U.S., and the environment, of oil from the Middle East is greater.

The governor said some of the resistance comes from people who wonder why Exxon Mobil Corp. is manufacturing the big industrial parts in Asia and shipping them through Montana to Canada.

"I would like you to look at Montana as a potential site for at least a portion of this manufacturing," Schweitzer told Jeff Woodbury, an executive with the company. "Take this up the corporate ladder and say, 'You want to make them happy in Montana? Put them to work.'"

Woodbury said the company is supportive of the idea of using resources in the U.S. and would consider the idea.

Kyla Wiens the Montana Environmental Information Center, which opposes the shipments, said the largest concern is building a corridor for huge shipments that could be used for decades to support the booming Canadian oil fields.

Wiens said the rigs will cause traffic safety issues, long delays, damage roads that taxpayers will have to pay for, and create recreation difficulties along the Blackfoot River corridor and the scenic rocky Mountain Front.

Sun Valley Resort adds 18 holes of golf

Company enters deal to purchase Elkhorn Golf Club

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — Sun Valley Resort will be able to offer 45 holes of golf come July 1, when it's expected to acquire Elkhorn Golf Club.

The resort company announced an agreement with Delaware-based CG-Elkhorn Golf on Thursday, and the deal with an undisclosed purchase amount is currently in escrow, said Sun Valley spokesman Jack Sibbach.

Rumors of the 18-hole course's purchase have buzzed about the resort for the past few weeks. Sun Valley unsuccessfully tried to purchase the property a few years ago, said Rick Hickman, who has been named Sun Valley's new manager of golf operations.

Sibbach said the addition of the Robert Trent Jones-designed course will elevate Sun Valley's status as a destination golf resort. He said Sun Valley plans to accom-

"I think its real value will be realized in the long run as the economy improves and we build a new hotel," Sibbach said.

The course has broad, sweeping views of the surrounding mountains and the nearby Dollar Mountain ski area, and its 16,000-square foot clubhouse includes a dining room, teaching center, locker rooms and two practice facilities.

A spoonful of Honey Nut Cheerios is shown June 15 in Pembroke, N.Y. Cheerios, the iconic cereal from General Mills, is 70 years old this year.

Cheerios turn 70

Iconic cereal endures, sells

By Carolyn Thompson
Associated Press writer

BUFFALO, N.Y. — Here's a little quiz for the breakfast table:

What is the most popular cereal brand in American grocery stores?

Hint: It's been General Mills' top name since 1951.

Another hint: If you're a parent, you've vacuumed it from the minivan and under the high-chair cushion by the cupful.

The answer, of course, is Cheerios.

The iconic cereal, known by its distinctive yellow box, is 70 years old this year and still a force on the breakfast cereal market. One out of every eight boxes of cereal to leave the shelf in America carries the Cheerios name.

"They've been around

Facts about Cheerios

- One in every eight boxes of all cereal sold in the U.S. are Cheerios.
- More than 10 shapes and sizes were considered before the current "o."
- General Mills sold 1.8 million cases (each containing 12 boxes) in the first year, 1941.
- Cheerios are made with same "puffing gun" technology used to create Kix cereal in 1937. Balls of dough are heated and shot out of a gun at hundreds of miles an hour to make the "o."
- Four years after their debut, Cheerioats were renamed Cheerios.
- In 1979, Honey Nut Cheerios were introduced, followed by Apple Cinnamon Cheerios in 1988, MultiGrain Cheerios in 1992, Frosted Cheerios in 1995, Berry Burst Cheerios in 2001 and Chocolate Cheerios in 2010.

since the beginning of man, right?" said Kathy Scott in Cape Coral, Fla. For her, the cereal's linked to memories of childhood Saturday morning cartoons.

"My mother was very old-fashioned, a stay-at-home mom," Scott, 50, said, "She made breakfast every morning, but on Saturday morning we were allowed to have cereal. Throw some fruit in there, sit on the floor and watch cartoons?"

The tradition repeated itself with her own two children.

"Saturday morning cartoons and Cheerios," she said.

To make Cheerios, balls of dough are heated and shot out of a "puffing gun" at hundreds of miles an hour, according to General Mills. The company's waterfront plant in Buffalo has been firing them off since 1941, often cloaking the city with a distinctive toasty-with-a-sweet-finish aroma and inspiring T-shirts announcing "My city smells like Cheerios." Drivers catch a break as gas prices fall

By Chris Kahn and Jonathan Fahey
Associated Press writers

NEW YORK — A summer road trip may not be such a bad idea after all.

Gasoline prices are falling fast. In the past 7 weeks, the average U.S. retail prices has dropped 38 cents to $3.60 per gallon. Another 25-cent drop is expected by mid-July.

When prices approached $4 in early May, drivers were worried that $5 gasoline was a possibility this summer. But since then, oil prices have collapsed, the result of slowing economic growth in developed countries, weaker demand for oil and gas and this week's decision by the U.S. and other countries to release 60 million barrels of oil from strategic reserves. Economists say falling prices will benefit consumers by leaving money in their wallets, and making them feel freer to spend on travel, shopping and dining.

Ron Meyers, 51, a handyman from Little Rock, Ark., was doubtful that he could afford the drive to visit family in Pennsylvania. Now, thanks to cheaper gas, the trip is on. And he plans on seeing a few more summer movies, too.

"You can go out and have a good time, and have a little money left in your pocket," he said.

Economists say that while, for instance, a 25-cent-per-gallon drop only saves the typical driver $12.50 per month, it has a huge effect both on the economy as a whole and on the psychology of consumers.

Ron Meyers pumps gas into his car at a little Rock, Ark., Conoco Phillips station on June 2. Drivers who feared a summer road trip would be too expensive may hit the highway after all.

Naveen Agarwal, who helps small businesses and car companies manage fuel costs as CEO of Pricelock, in Redwood City, Calif, said he expects drivers will travel farther distances this summer than originally planned. And they'll spend as they go.

"They'll be a little bit more liberal about their consumption instead of just having a barbeque in their back yard," Agarwal said.

Instead of thinking of ways to cut back, the Dykstra family of Orange City, Iowa, will now be able to spend a little more on meals and souvenirs when it visits Chicago.

"We actually budgeted for $5 a gallon," Mark Dykstra, 46, a supermarket assistant manager who will be travelling with his three

FTC launches Google antitrust inquiry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators have begun a formal antitrust investigation into Google's business practices.

In a blog post Friday, the Internet search giant said it received notification from the Federal Trade Commission of the review on Thursday.

Google said "it's still unclear exactly what the FTC's concerns are."

But the inquiry is expected to focus in large part on whether Google abuses its dominance of Internet search to extend its influence into other lucrative online markets, such as mapping, comparison shopping and travel. Rivals complain that Google, which handles two out of every three Internet searches in the U.S., manipulates its results to steer users to its own sites and services and bury links to competitors.

The European Commission and the Texas attorney general have already opened investigations into whether Google uses its enormous clout as a major gateway to the Internet to stifle competition online. The Senate Judiciary Committee's antitrust subcommittee, too, is examining whether Google gives its own services favorable treatment in search results.

Pitchers' paradise at Burley tournament

RYAN HOWE/Times-News

Twin Falls Hawk Scott Speer pitches against Kimberly at the Donnelley Wood Bat Tournament on Friday at Burley High School.

Hawks' Speer denies Astros, Rountree no-hits Bear Lake

By Ryan Howe
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Scott Speer appeared to be in trouble. In the bottom of the third inning, the Twin Falls Hawks pitcher gave up three triples in a row and lost the lead. “I was just missing my spots on those triples,” Speer said. “I didn’t locate for those few batters, besides that I felt like I was on.” On, indeed. Following the barrage of triples, Speer regrouped and allowed just three harmless base hits the rest of the way to lift Twin Falls to a 7-4 win over Kimberly on Friday at Burley’s Donnelley Wood Bat Tournament. Just two weeks removed from their championship at the Donnelley Sports Invitational, the Hawks are again in position to play for a wood bat title with a 3-1 record heading into the final day.

“We just want to take one game at a time, but focus on the whole tournament,” Speer said. “We don’t really want to think about the championship yet.” Back-to-back RBI singles by Garret Basham and Kaleb Price put Twin Falls on the board in the second inning. The Hawks tacked on two more in the fifth as Kyle Mealer and Jon Cron each drove in a run. Two errors by Kimberly’s battery crossed two more Twin Falls runs in the sixth, followed by another Basham RBI. A pair of Hawks throwing errors plated runs for Kimberly with no outs in the bottom of the seventh, but Speer retired the next three batters — via two strikeouts and a groundout — to end the rally. “We need to work on our hitting,” Speer said. “We’re kind of off-and-on a lot. But for the most part our defense is helping us out quite a bit.” Nick Rountree pitched a no-hitter in the Hawks’ 15-0 win over Bear Lake. “I didn’t realize I was throwing a no-hitter until the last inning. I was just going out there and throwing. I was just focused on the game,” Rountree said. Rountree said it was his See TOURNAMENT, Sports 2

Class A Cowboys, Wood River split

T.F. takes Game 1, Wranglers win nightcap in extras

Times-News

The Twin Falls Cowboys showed their youth Friday night. The American Legion Class A Cowboys split a doubleheader with Wood River, holding on to win the first game 6-4, but dropping the nightcap 14-8 in eight innings. Twin Falls tied the game at 8 in the bottom of the seventh inning in Game 2, scoring a run on a passed ball. The Wranglers issued three straight walks to load the bases for the Cowboys, but they couldn’t score another run to seal the win. Wood River took advantage of its second chance. Marshall Reyburn hit a three-run double in the top of the eighth and the Wranglers poured on three more runs to put away the Cowboys for good. “That’s kind of the way we’ve been this season,” said Twin Falls coach Mark Schaal. “We play well for five innings and get a lead and just can’t finish the game. “We’re a team with a lot of youth and we’ve just had a hard time finishing people off.” The Cowboys held on to win Game 1 after Alex Padilla hit a two-run home run in the sixth to tie the game 4-4.

Twin Falls responded with two runs in the bottom of the frame to seal the win. “It was a good, back and forth game and we came through to get the win,” Schaal said. Twin Falls (7-9) travels to Pocatello on Monday to play the Razorbacks for a doubleheader.

BEGINNING, END OF LABOR ARMAGEDDON?

No new CBA proposal from NBA players

By Brian Mahoney
Associated Press writer

NEW YORK — With their turn, the players passed. NBA players declined to present a new economic proposal to owners Friday, less than a week before the expiration of the collective bargaining agreement. Dressed in matching T-shirts urging solidarity, about 40 players attended the negotiating session, the final one before owners could vote on whether to lock them out if no deal is reached. But once there, they decided not to make any move to close the distance between the sides’ financial positions. “There’s still such a large gap, we feel that any move for us is real dollars we’d be giving back from where we currently stand, as opposed to where our owners have proposed numbers that in our estimation don’t exist right now,” union president Derek Fisher of the Lakers said. “They’re asking us to go to a place where they want us to go, so we’ve expressed our reasons why we don’t want to continue to move economically.” The sides aren’t scheduled to meet again until Wednesday or Thursday, hours before the June 30 deadline. The owners could make their next move by then, voting to authorize a lockout when they meet Tuesday in Dallas. Deputy Commissioner Adam Silver, the NBA’s lead negotiator, said it would be “premature to talk about where we’re going to find ourselves next week.” Billy Hunter, the union’s executive director, said there was enough good dialogue between owners and his expanded contingent of players that any lockout

Sources: NFL talks to be held again next week

By Barry Wilner
Associated Press writer

With training camps set to open in another month, NFL owners and players will resume negotiations next week, hoping to build on recent talks, two people familiar with the discussions told The Associated Press on Friday. While each side has acknowledged progress in the four-month-old lockout, a new collective bargaining agreement isn’t imminent. One of the two people who spoke on condition of anonymity said conference calls are being set up to discuss various issues, but not the major one of splitting revenues. The person said that was being negotiated “face to face.” The two people declined to be identified because the meetings were confidential.

The sides completed two days of talks at a beachfront resort in Hull, Mass., on Thursday. On hand were NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell, owners John Mara of the New York Giants, Jerry Richardson of the Carolina Panthers, Clark Hunt of the Kansas City Chiefs, Robert Kraft of the New England Patriots and Dean Spanos of the San Diego Chargers. NFLPA executive director DeMaurice Smith also was present along with several players, including Jeff Saturday of the Indianapolis Colts, Tony Richardson of the New York Jets and Domonique Foxworth of the Baltimore Ravens. “Someone asked me whether I was optimistic,” Smith said. “I think we’re both optimistic when we have the right people in the

Pro Trucks ready to rumble at MVS

By Linda Brittsan
Times-News correspondent

They say one is the loneliest number. But for Intermountain Pro Trucks driver Johnny Pierre, there’s nothing lonely about it. Pierre carries just a single-point lead over Jerry Rice in the standings going into tonight’s events at Magic Valley Speedway and, at least for Pierre, that’s much too close. “We had some mechanical troubles in Salt Lake a couple of weeks ago otherwise we would have a bigger lead going into this race,” Pierre said. “But this is the first time we’ve ever led in the standings — at least going into the fourth race like this. We’re pretty excited about that.” Rice, the defending champion in the series, is not letting on if he’s feeling the heat. “I was surprised we gained that many points on him (Pierre) after Salt Lake,” he said. “But tonight I am just going to go out there and have fun. We’ll see how it settles at the end of the night.” The top five drivers in the point standings have a lot of experience at MVS, and both Rice and Pierre know they have more than just each other to be concerned with. Lou Andersen and Dan Doan, currently third and fourth in the standings, respectively, are former track champions. Scott Luttmner, sitting right behind Doan in the standings, won the April 30 main event at MVS after overtaking Doan at the halfway point of the race. But they all have work to do harvesting points in the Agri-Service sponsored main event race. A full field of at least 14 trucks is expected to take the green flag.

“Twin Falls is a good track, but it’s kind of hard to pass people,” Andersen said. “There are a lot of good drivers, the trucks are all pretty even and it can be a challenge. But if you can get some breaks, you can get moved around and gain a lot of points. Hopefully we’re competitive, but I think there are about 10 or 12 drivers who can win it on any given night.” Pierre is hoping to pocket points, as well as get the Victory Lane monkey off his back. He has yet to win a main event race in the series at MVS. “I have to be patient but I also have to get through traffic,” he said. “The truck has been pretty awesome this year, we’ve been winning heat races and we’re fast, but it would be really nice to win a main in front of the hometown crowd.” While the Intermountain Pro Trucks roll in for their second of four events at MVS this year, it’s mid-season championship night for the Hornets, Thunderdogs and Jr. Stingers. Doug Brownfield can breathe a sigh of relief knowing he has a comfortable lead over Robbie Hyde in the Quale’s Electronics Hornets division. But tonight he needs to fetch 14 points in order to hang with Chad Everett as a title contender in the TV-gold and silver Thunderdogs. In the Quale’s Jr. Stingers division, Jason Quale has a 15-point advantage over Jay McDonald, but he will have to wait and see if it’s enough of a cushion to wrap up the title. Continuing with NASCAR Whelen Racing Series action, the Mr. Gas Late Models and Budweiser Super Stocks are also featured on tonight’s schedule. The Brennan’s Carpet Pony Stocks will make up rained-out races with double main events, and the Legends assemble at MVS for their first appearance of the season. This evening’s events are presented by Petersen Brothers Construction. Gates open at 4 p.m. and green flag racing begins at 6.

Edwards mum on contract talks at Infineon

SONOMA, Calif. (AP) — NASCAR's top series shifted to the road course at Infineon Raceway this weekend, where the focus should have been on the winding track and the ringers who arrived looking for a rare victory.

Instead, side stories again dominated discussions.

Carl Edwards remained silent Friday on his free agency status, dodging and weaving every question about his contract talks. The industry is waiting to see how things shake out for the Sprint Cup Series points leader because he's considered the first domino in what could become a frenzied signing period.

There could also be two fewer seats to fill after the announcement this week that Red Bull will leave NASCAR at the end of the season, news that weighed heavily throughout the garage.

And to think, this annual trip to picturesque Sonoma is supposed to be a reprieve from the weekly NASCAR grind!

Edwards found himself in the center of the spotlight on one of his biggest weekends of the year. He travels back and forth from California to Wisconsin to race in Sunday's main event at Sonoma and the Nationwide Series race at Road America on Saturday.

He's been dogged by rumors of meetings with Joe Gibbs Racing, which could be the only team shy of Red Bull with enough financing to lure Edwards from Roush Fenway Racing. But he didn't stray from his policy of keeping business dealings private.

"We are working hard on it and we do all that stuff behind closed doors," Edwards said. "I have heard rumors about all different teams for the last two years. The thing I am going to do is keep working on it and working on it privately. I think that is the best way for me."

But he's the points leader and a legitimate threat to win his first Cup title this year. Although he said he'd be content to wait until the season is over to sign a contract, it's not really realistic. That constant speculation could wear on his No. 99 team, regardless of how hard crew chief Bob Osborne tries to keep the focus on the

Logano wins Sonoma pole

SONOMA, Calif. (AP) — Joey Logano never thought he'd win the pole at Infineon Raceway, even after he claimed the top qualifying spot.

As he sat in his Joe Gibbs Racing hauler Friday watching the final drivers make their qualifying laps, Logano expected to be bumped. But when Kasey Kahne, Denny Hamlin and Kurt Busch all failed to beat him, Logano wound up with just the second pole of his career.

Logano turned a lap at 93.256 mph in his Toyota to claim the top starting spot in Sunday's race.

"I was very surprised," he big prize.

"We have to get it done. There is that feeling of 'Hey, we would like to get this done before we get into the Chase,'" Edwards said. "I am not going to force anything or rush anything. I am going to go about it in a methodical way."

Edwards also has faith that Osborne will not allow distractions to derail said. "We were sitting in the trailer watching the last three guys to go and it was Kasey, who got the pole here last year, Denny, who is really good here and our teammate, and then Kurt, who has got the last three poles in a row. We didn't think we were going to be good enough to get the pole, but made some good adjustments and got some speed in the car.

"This is the last place I expected to get a pole. I never considered myself a road course racer."

Logano snapped Busch's streak of three straight poles this season.

the team.

"I have worked really hard in my career trying to minimize distractions," Edwards said. "That is one thing I am very fortunate that with Bob Osborne, that guy is non-emotional about racing. He just goes about his business. I think that no matter how things go or how long we delay this or how long it takes ... we will race fine as a team.

"It is a difficult thing though because there are so many personalities that have to come together to get everything to work. We have to stay focused on our goal to win the championship, no matter what."

That's the dilemma Kasey Kahne and Kenny Francis find themselves in at Red Bull.

Although Kahne was already scheduled to move to Hendrick Motorsports next season, he's been put in yet another difficult situation. This time last year, he knew he wouldn't be returning to Richard Petty Motorsports, and had to hope his team wouldn't quit on him late in the year.

Now, he and Francis are trying to hold things together this season.

"I think what happens is, even (when) there were rumblings of what ended up happening, a lot of the pit crew and guys working on the cars were like, 'Man, what am I going to do? I have family,'" Kahne said. "As soon as that gets started, it doesn't make the team any better. That's just the way it is. There's no way it can be good.

"You start thinking about your life and things, your family. That makes it difficult."

Francis has already had a difficult stretch — his mother passed away last week, and except for last weekend at Michigan, he's been with family in Florida and away from the race shop.

Now at the track with worried crew members, he's hoping his group doesn't need to be told how important it is to stay focused.

"It's hard because people are worried about what they are going to do next year," he said. "I feel really bad for everyone. But a lot of my guys have been with me a long time, and they've been through situations like this before and they know they've still got to do their jobs."

Francis, who is not tied to Kahne's move to Hendrick, said he "hopes to be" with Kahne at his new team next year. But he's not worried right now about his future.

"I'm going to be fine, and I'm not too worried about next year for me," Francis said. "Right now I just feel bad for all the people who are worried about next year."

Roddick bounced from Wimbledon in straight sets

Top-ranked American exits before quarters in seventh straight Slam

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Head bowed, Andy Roddick trudged off Centre Court, his purple Wimbledon towel dragging along the turf.

As the three-time runner-up at the All England Club headed for the exit, he passed some kids clamoring for an autograph from their front-row perch. Roddick paused and tossed his blue-framed racket underhand. Thanks to his latest earlier-than-anticipated Grand Slam loss, the American won't be needing it next week.

The eighth-seeded Roddick departed quickly Friday, beaten 7-6 (2), 7-6 (2), 6-4 in the third round by unseeded Feliciano Lopez of Spain. Lopez served spectacularly well, hitting 28 aces, and finally got the better of the 2003 U.S. Open champion after losing all seven previous matches they played.

Roddick turns 29 in August, and he was asked whether, as the years go by, one particularly depressing thought creeps into his mind: He might never win Wimbledon.

"Well, sure. You're human. I mean, of course it does," he replied. Then, speaking directly to the reporter, Roddick added: "You know, you may never get your favorite job, either — no offense to your current employer."

Roddick lost to Roger Federer in the 2004, 2005 and 2009 finals — 16-14 in the fifth set of that last one — but only made it as far as the fourth round last year, and second round in 2008.

"What do you do? You keep moving forward until you decide to stop," Roddick said. "At this point, I've not decided to stop, so I'll keep moving forward."

He hasn't been past the quarterfinals at any of the past seven major tournaments; he withdrew from the French

Open in May because of a right shoulder injury, but said he's healthy at the moment.

That, in part, is why Roddick figured he'd make a deep run at the grass-court Grand Slam tournament.

"He gears a lot of his year for Wimbledon. It's a tough loss," said Roddick's coach, Larry Stefanki. "He's disappointed. Very disappointed."

It didn't help that Lopez was nearly perfect, conjuring up 57 winners and eight unforced errors.

"Unbelievable," Lopez said. "When I came back in the locker room, my coaches told me. I was surprised that I didn't miss anything, almost."

Because of rain, only two other third-round men's matches finished Friday: No. 4 Andy Murray moved forward in his bid to give Britain its first male champion at Wimbledon since 1936, beating Ivan Ljubicic 6-4, 4-6, 6-1, 7-6 (4) with the help of a behind-the-back, between-the-legs trick shot under the Centre Court roof; and No. 17 Richard Gasquet of France beat Simone Bolelli of Italy 6-3, 6-2, 6-4. Murray plays Gasquet next.

Roddick is the highest-seeded man out of the tournament so far. Two of the top three women already are gone: No. 2 Vera Zvonareva, the runner-up at Wimbledon and the U.S. Open in 2010, was eliminated by No. 32 Tsvetana Pironkova of Bulgaria 6-2, 6-3 Friday, less than 24 hours after No. 3 Li Na, the French Open champion, lost.

Pironkova reached the semifinals last year, when she upset five-time Wimbledon champion Venus Williams, and they'll have a rematch in the fourth round next week. Williams overpowered 76th-ranked Maria Jose Martinez Sanchez of Spain 6-0, 6-2 on Court 1.

Trustee: OSU scandal requires "soul-searching"

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State needs to do a lot of "soul-searching" in the wake of the memorabilia-for-cash and tattoos football scandal that forced coach Jim Tressel to resign and quarterback Terrelle Pryor to leave school, a university trustee said Friday.

After weeks of silence, the oversight panel for Ohio State — a school of more than 50,000 students — is beginning to comment on the memorabilia scandal. It will spend up to six weeks reviewing the athletic department's entire response to the scandal, though members say they do not know of any other NCAA rules violations right now.

"We have a lot to look at in sort of the soul-searching of what is most important in the game of life," trustee Jerry Jurgensen, retired chief executive officer of Nationwide Insurance, said in remarks to the full board on Friday.

"The cracks here weren't really cracks of rules and procedures," he said. "They were cracks in a value system."

Jurgensen, often an independent voice on the board, was quickly contradicted by board chairman Les Wexner, billionaire chairman and founder of Limited Brands and a major donor to the university.

"I don't think we have a lot of soul-searching to do, not at all," Wexner said. "We have a lot of heart celebrating to do for the good that this university does."

Neither Wexner nor Jurgensen would comment after the board meeting. Ohio State President Gordon Gee took Wexner's side, saying "the university is moving forward and we feel very strongly about the fact that we have much to celebrate today."

Tressel's 10-year Ohio State head coaching career, which included a national championship and seven Big Ten titles, ended in disgrace when he stepped down May 30 after failing to tell alert his superiors that players were getting improper benefits under NCAA rules.

The coach knew players received cash and tattoos for autographs, championship rings and equipment and did not tell anyone at Ohio State or the NCAA for more than nine months. NCAA rules — and Tressel's contract — specified that he had to disclose any and all information about possible violations.

Wexner defended the board's silence Friday, saying that, rather than making public pronouncements, trustees decided to devote their energy to working with university administrators to make sure the proper processes, reviews and protocols were in place.

"We've got a very sound process of work," Wexner said.

"I'm pleased and I think the board is pleased with the work to date and the way we've progressed that work in an orderly, focused and thorough manner."

Trustee Robert Schottenstein said on Friday that Ohio State's athletic compliance program is good but there might be room for improvement.

room. We know we're talking about the right issues and that we're working hard to get it done."

Previous meetings took place in suburban Chicago, New York and the Maryland shore.

Once the owners and players can agree on how to divide revenues — $9.3 billion last year — other issues such as a rookie wage scale, benefits for retired players, and player health and safety could fall in line quickly. Still, it's almost July, and training camps are scheduled to open late next month. The first preseason game is Aug. 7 at Canton, Ohio.

This week, two teams — the Ravens and Jets — said they would train at their regular-season facilities and not out of town. Baltimore canceled its camp at Winchester, Md., and New York did the same for Cortland, N.Y.

"With all the variables presented by this unique offseason, we felt it was best for the Jets that we hold our training camp here at our practice facility," general manager Mike Tannenbaum said Friday.

Also this week, league owners were briefed on a plan that would give the players just under 50 percent of total income. An off-the-top expense credit of about $1 billion that went to the owners would be eliminated.

action may be unnecessary.

"I think that the nature of the discussion today was such that they may find it difficult to pull the trigger," Hunter said. "Even though we didn't make any progress, maybe they felt that the energy and the attitude in the room was such that it might necessitate further discussion."

The union's negotiating committee was joined by Boston's Kevin Garnett and Paul Pierce — who both spoke in the meeting — Jason Terry of the NBA champion Dallas Mavericks, and a number of other players in town for player representative meetings. Hunter said he was told late Thursday night that the players had decided to attend Friday's session.

They arrived at a midtown hotel in gray T-shirts reading "STAND," which Hunter said was the players' message of "solidarity."

Commissioner David

Stern said the shirts were "nicely done," adding it was "great to have so many players in the room."

Owners had hoped for another proposal from the union, but players felt they had gone far enough after they offered a $500 million reduction in salaries over five years on Tuesday, a move Stern termed "modest."

"Why did we not make one? Because we felt that the one that we made previously was sufficient," Hunter said.

U.S., Mexico ready to meet for Gold Cup title

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Landon Donovan and the United States are looking for another big win over rival Mexico in the title match of the CONCACAF Gold Cup tonight.

The game is the third consecutive time that the teams will face each other for the title. Mexico won 5-0 in 2009 at Giants Stadium after the United States won 2-1 in 2007 in Chicago.

The United States and Mexico have won nine of the 10 Gold Cup championships since the tournament began in 1991, with Mexico taking five titles.

The Gold Cup winner qualifies for the 2013 FIFA Confederations Cup, a preview of the 2014 World Cup in Brazil. The U.S. victory in 2007 sent it to the Confederations Cup, where it beat Spain two years ago before losing to Brazil.

This time, the United States used three successive shutouts to reach the Gold Cup final after a 2-1 loss to Panama, the team's first in group play.

Goalkeeper Tim Howard has not allowed a goal in 322 minutes.

"We're playing a lot better and, sometimes, it's good to get a wake-up call," Donovan said. "We've said all along that this tournament is a marathon. Now, we find ourselves in the final with a chance to win it."

The Americans will play without forward Jozy Altidore, who scored twice in the Gold Cup. Altidore will miss 4 to 6 weeks after straining his left hamstring in the victory against Jamaica.

Tonight's game is the latest installment in a rivalry that has featured World Cup qualifiers in frigid Ohio and in Mexico City's altitude, and the United States' 2-0 victory over Mexico in the round of 16 of the 2002 World Cup.

Enhancing the drama will be a sellout crowd of more than 90,000 at the Rose Bowl, with the vast majority supporting Mexico.

"We have fewer fans than any other team," the United States' Clint Dempsey said. "We need more. But we're a strong team. I hope one day we'll get more U.S. fans in the stadiums. For now, we're concentrating on winning."

Mexico's Giovanni Dos Santos said that such support can be intimidating.

"In a Gold Cup, Mexico always has to have a winning mentality," Dos Santos said. "We have the players. We're coming to win it. We want to remain champions or it will be a disaster for everybody."

Mexico is counting on 23-year-old Manchester United forward Javier Hernandez, who leads the Gold Cup with seven goals. "Chicharito," as Hernandez is called, scored 20 goals in all competitions during his first season with Manchester United.

Zero tolerance? At FIFA, Warner's ouster seems more like zero scruples

By John Leicester
Associated Press writer

PARIS — When history books are written, this should go down as the week when FIFA's paper-thin last scraps of dignity and credibility withered and died.

Because this was the week that world soccer's governing body exposed itself: It professes to "zero tolerance" of corruption but, from its actions this week, "zero scruples" appears closer to the truth.

This May, soccer officials called to a meeting in the Caribbean were offered brown envelopes stuffed with $40,000 in $100 notes and told not to breathe a word. We know this because some but not all the officials later blew the whistle.

FIFA investigated. Its conclusions, leaked this week, were that the payments seem to have been bribes and that two of its most senior and influential executives — FIFA vice president Jack Warner and Asian soccer chief Mohamed bin Hammam — were allegedly neck-deep in the dirt.

Evidence, FIFA said, was "comprehensive, convincing and overwhelming." Bin Hammam wanted Sepp Blatter's job as FIFA president. For that, he needed soccer officials' votes. From FIFA's report, it appears he was ready to pay for them.

Warner, one of soccer's most powerful men, allegedly used his clout and contacts to act as bin Hammam's facilitator. FIFA's report accused him of arranging the May 10-11 meeting at a hotel on the Caribbean island of Trinidad and of condoning the payoffs.

If FIFA put soccer's interests first, Warner should have been banished as an example to others, packed off in disgrace, good riddance.

FIFA's report even suggested as much.

"Corruption affects the very core of sports and is to be considered as nothing less than life-threatening for sports and sports organizations. Thus, if there is considerable suspicion that offenses related to corruption might have been committed, immediate action is imperative," it said.

"FIFA has a direct and pressing interest in barring the persons concerned from sports immediately and effectively," it added. "In this regard, FIFA and the FIFA Ethics Committee adhere to a zero tolerance approach."

You can almost hear Warner laughing. He walked away, resigning this week from soccer duties and taking with him his secrets from 28 years inside the most discredited governing body in sports. Whatever knowledge Warner may have of any misdeeds within FIFA, the "football tsunami" of embarrassing revelations that he threatened to unleash, he can now keep for himself.

Good deal for Warner, an insult for soccer. Warner is not banned from soccer stadiums or from contacting buddies still working in the game, officials who owe him their jobs and may still do his bidding. It seems, although FIFA's press office won't outright confirm or deny this, that Warner may even still be eligible for his FIFA pension, payable for as many years as he served on the executive committee — 28.

The biggest scandal is that FIFA waved off Warner with kind words of thanks, saying his soccer work was "appreciated and acknowledged." FIFA's statement completely omitted mention of its own report, which it was sitting on, that accused him of knowing about, facilitating and condoning the alleged bribery in the Caribbean. Nor did it recall the 2006 World Cup ticket scam for which Warner's family was fined, or the other alleged financial misdeeds that critics linked him to over the years.

FIFA closed its ethics probe of Warner. And because Warner is no longer involved in soccer, FIFA said it no longer has any authority to investigate him. That may be true, but FIFA surely didn't need to go the extra mile and state, as it so obligingly did, that Warner's "presumption of innocence is maintained."

FIFA hasn't been so forgiving with others, like Michel Zen-Ruffinen, Blatter's former right-hand man forced out for crossing swords with his boss a decade ago. Last November, FIFA declared Zen-Ruffinen "persona non grata" after he told reporters that countries bidding for the World Cup were secretly trading votes.

So why was Warner accorded such a face-saving send-off? Out of fear that he might, if dealt with strictly, pull down others in FIFA, too?

More worrisome is why Warner and bin Hammam apparently felt safe that they wouldn't get into trouble for the alleged bribery in May and that officials offered wads of cash wouldn't double-cross them. Does that suggest that, in the past, officials simply took the money? And is this how FIFA presidential votes are won?

These are questions Warner no longer needs to answer.

How can that be zero tolerance?

FIFA worried by Brazil World Cup preparations

MOSCOW (AP) — FIFA remains concerned at the slow pace of Brazil's preparations for the 2014 World Cup, saying soccer officials in South America appear to have invested more energy in winning the tournament than organizing it.

"We don't have stadiums, we don't have airports," secretary general Jerome Valcke said on Friday at the Inside World Football forum in Moscow.

He added it looked increasingly likely that some facilities, including Rio de Janeiro's iconic Maracana, would be ready with only a few weeks to spare.

"The Maracana is not a World Cup stadium" yet, Valcke said, adding that in Brazil "the main issue is not to organize the World Cup but to win the World Cup."

Brazil, which won hosting rights by default after other South American nations withdrew, has been mired in organizational and bureaucratic problems since it was announced as host in 2007.

Builders working on one of the stadiums only this week returned to work after going on strike over pay and conditions. About 160 of the nearly 400 workers helping to upgrade Mineirao Stadium in Belo Horizonte stopped working this month. The agreement includes a 4 percent wage hike, a health plan and more overtime pay.

Belo Horizonte is one of the cities vying to host the opening match. Others include the capital, Brasilia, and Sao Paulo, South America's biggest city.

Brazilian lawmakers this month were forced to approve a raft of measures aimed at reducing the paperwork needed to clear various infrastructure projects. The changes reduce the time to conclude the bidding processes on tenders, eliminating some stages and need for approval.

Saint-Clair Milesi, a spokesman for the local World Cup organizing committee, said from Brazil that with the exception of Sao Paulo, the construction of new stadiums and renovation of existing ones is "continuing according to schedule."

He declined to comment further.

Ricardo Leyser, a top official with Brazil's Sports Ministry, told the Estado de S. Paulo newspaper Friday that "it is obvious that Brazil will be ready on time to host the World Cup."

"We have no doubt that all the work being done to prepare the country to host the games will be concluded on time," Leyser said.

Valcke urged Russia, which is hosting the event for the first time in 2018, to have the required 12 stadiums ready two years in advance to allow time for test events.

Amateur Cantlay fires second-round 60 at Travelers

UCLA frosh sets PGA amateur record for lowest score

CROMWELL, Conn. — Patrick Cantlay showed up at the Travelers Championship with no intentions of turning pro until he finishes his last three years at UCLA.

A record round Friday on the PGA Tour — just one week after he was low amateur at the U.S. Open — makes that a tougher decision.

In what already has been a month to remember, the 19-year-old Cantlay turned in his most inspiring moment yet by breaking the course record at TPC River Highlands with a 10-under 60 for the lowest round ever on tour by an amateur.

Last week, the sophomore-to-be at UCLA said the earliest he would turn pro would be “after I get my degree.”

But after two strong rounds put him atop the leaderboard in the rain-suspended second round, he was starting to soften.

“I’m going to stay amateur definitely for the Walker Cup,” Cantlay said of the premier amateur event in September at Royal Aberdeeen. “And my plan is to stay amateur until I finish college.”

Taking advantage of soft conditions and preferred lies on the soggy TPC River Highlands, Cantlay tied the tournament record set by Tommy Bolt in 1954 when it was played in Wethersfield.

Cantlay birdied the final two holes to reach 13 under. After shooting a 67 on Friday morning in the rain-delayed first round, he had eight birdies and an eagle in the afternoon.

It was his second eagle of the day on the par-5 13th.

He said he had no idea that he was setting an amateur record.

“I knew where I was. I knew I needed to make eagle on 18 for 59,” he said. “It’s tough to hole it from 152.”

But he came close. His approach landed just above the hole and rolled back to just over 2 feet below the pin.

“I thought it had a chance, it was covering the flag pretty good,” he said. “It takes some luck.”

The way his month has been going, he might have expected it to go in. Cantlay received the Jack Nicklaus Award from the Golden Bear himself on June 5 at the Memorial, and the next day qualified for the U.S. Open at a sectional site filled with PGA Tour players.

Then after opening with a 75 at Congressional, he followed with rounds of 67-70-72 to be low amateur, finishing in a tie for 21st.

Despite his youth, he has been around the game long enough to realize he still is only halfway there — and 77 players have yet to even finish their second round. Cantlay was at 13-under 127.

D.J. Trahan (62), Webb Simpson (65) Alexandre Rocha (66) and Vaughn Taylor (66) were tied for second at 9-under 131, while Andres Romero was 9 under through five holes of his second round.

Play was suspended because of darkness just after 8 p.m. local time.

Players had perfect scoring conditions Friday with rain-softened greens and little wind.

And because of the wet conditions, players were allowed to lift, clean and place their golf balls hit in the fairway, another big advantage.

The projected cut line was 3-under par.

An amateur hasn’t won a PGA Tour event since Phil Mickelson in the 1991 Northern Telecom Open in Arizona.

TSENG KEEPS LEAD AT LPGA CHAMPIONSHIP

PITTSFORD, N.Y. — Top-ranked Yani Tseng shot a 2-under 70 to take a one-stroke lead over Pat Hurst after the second round of the LPGA Championship, the tour’s second major of the year.

Battling a torrential downpour then a steady drizzle for nearly half her first nine holes, Tseng followed her first-round-best 66 with a grinding performance that put her at 8 under overall.

She won the LPGA State Farm Classic two weeks ago for her second LPGA Tour victory of the year.

Hurst shot a 67 in the morning before the heavy rain hit Locust Hill Country Club.

Morgan Pressel, Minea Blomqvist, and Hee Young Park were 6 under after 69s.

Defending champion Cristie Kerr shot her second straight 72 to make the cut. Michelle Wie also opened with consecutive 72s.

TWO TIED ATOP DICK’S SPORTING GOODS OPEN LEADERBOARD

ENDICOTT, N.Y. — John Huston and Mark Wiebe shot 7-under 65s to share the lead after the first round of the Dick’s Sporting Goods Open.

Huston, playing just his third Champions Tour event since turning 50 on June 1, had seven birdies on a bogey-free day, nearly making eagle at No. 18 when his second shot at the par 4 hit the flag and stayed out. The tap-in birdie tied him with Wiebe, who also had seven birdies and no bogeys as he began his drive to win his second straight event. Wiebe won at Rock Barn two weeks ago.

Ronnie Black and Nick Price were tied for third at 6 under, and Steve Lowery, Hal Sutton, John Cook and Peter Jacobsen were 5 under.

COETZEE, STENSON SHARE BMW INTERNATIONAL OPEN LEAD

MUNICH — South Africa’s George Coetzee birdied four of his last six holes for his second straight 5-under 67 and a share of the lead with Henrik Stenson in the BMW International Open.

Stenson followed his opening 64 with a 70 to match Coetzee at 10 under.

Twin Falls Reformed Church, whose steeple is shown, and other churches are increasingly turning to Facebook and other social media to stay connected with members, promote events and share the Word.

More churches using social media to SPREAD THE WORD

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

When Jesus was on Earth, he walked the dusty roads of Galilee to spread his message of hope and peace. If he were on Earth today, would he use modern technology, such as social media, to spread his Word?

Some faith leaders have asked that question and say church trends perhaps indicate the answer.

Churches increasingly are turning to social media as networking and ministry tools. Facebook is the most popular.

“Churches need to be where the people are, and people today are on Facebook,” said Etha Carruthers, administrator at First United Methodist Church in Twin Falls.

She signed up the church on Facebook about three months ago.

“It’s a great way to connect with church members,” Carruthers said. “More and more people are finding out” about the church’s Facebook page.

The church is one of thousands across the country that have jumped into the social media craze.

A LifeWay Research survey of 1,003 Protestant congregations, released in January, found that 47 percent of American churches actively use Facebook. About 20 percent network through tools included in church management software packages, 3 percent use MySpace, and 3 percent other social networking tools.

A separate LifeWay survey of 1,000 pastors found nearly half (48 percent) personally use Facebook, 16 percent blog and 6 percent use Twitter. In addition, 84 percent of pastors send email to groups. Among those who use social media, 73 percent use them for interacting with the congregation.

“As a church, it’s our responsibility to stay in touch with members,” said Mike Smit, director of ministries at Twin Falls Reformed Church. The church joined Facebook last fall in an effort to “stay relevant to the community,” he said. “There’s a tremendous amount of people that use social media. ...

“We’re trying to stay in touch as much as we can to meet those needs and demands.”

Protestants aren’t the only ones using social media.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints uses Facebook, Twitter, YouTube, blogs and emails.

And there’s LDS LinkUp. The website, which is not run by the LDS church but is popular among Mormons, hails itself as “the world’s largest LDS social network, where tens of thousands of church members from over 50 countries meet new people ...”

And Pope Benedict XVI, the first pope with his own YouTube channel and presence on Facebook, urged Roman Catholic clergy to use social media to communicate with parishioners and those outside the church.

Some religious leaders, however, including the Pope, are concerned about putting too much faith in Facebook. They worry that religion and spirituality are being reduced to bytes and instant messages.

“It is important always to remember that virtual contact cannot and must not take the place of direct human contact with people at every level of our lives,” Benedict said earlier this year in a message for the Catholic Church’s World Day of Communications.

He urged users of social networks to ask themselves: “Who is my ‘neighbor’ in this new world?” and avoid the danger of always being available online but being “less present to those whom we encounter in our everyday life.”

Other faith leaders see social media as a godsend. The Rev. Phil Airhart, pastor of First United Methodist Church in Twin Falls, said social media is something he believes Jesus would endorse if he were here today.

“As I look at the life and ministry of Jesus,” he said, “two words stand out in my mind. The first is communication. Jesus was all about communication. He had a divine message, a message from God, a message people needed to hear, and so his purpose was to be the most effective communicator he could be. Jesus was perhaps the most relational person that ever lived. ...

“To project that into the 21st century, if Jesus were here in our society today he would still be about communicating. Would he use social media? Would he be on Facebook? I say, absolutely he would. Those are some of society’s most effective tools of communication, at building relationships.”

The Twin Falls church’s website has evolved over the years and today includes Airhart’s sermons. Other churches, such as Lighthouse Christian Fellowship, use video feeds and podcasts on their websites. That’s something Airhart would like to do, and he said new technology is helping him to become a different preacher.

“I now use PowerPoint in my sermons and audio and movie clips to help illustrate a point,” he said.

No one knows how social media will be used in the future, Airhart said.

“But I think the church needs to use the most effective ways, the most successful techniques that society offers, to communicate its message.”

Romney, Huntsman compete in Mormon primary

By Jennifer Dobner
and Philip Elliott
Associated Press writers

SALT LAKE CITY — Distant cousins Mitt Romney and Jon Huntsman each have deep ties to their Mormon community and, they hope, its pocketbooks.

As Romney and Huntsman jostle for support, Mormons are watching two of their own compete in what could become a nasty, intra-faith contest between two scions of Mormon royalty. Both families are steeped in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and Huntsman and Romney are planning trips to Utah in the coming days to pitch their White House bids and round up campaign dollars.

Yet neither should assume they have a lock on the traditionally conservative, 5 million-strong Mormon community in the United States. Theirs is the first Mormon-versus-Mormon contest for a presidential nomination and it puts two dynasties in competition for their faith’s small bloc of votes yet sizeable clutch of campaign cash.

Romney

Huntsman

“It’s not automatic that this Mormon is going to support a Mormon,” said Gary Lawrence, a Mormon who is a political pollster in Southern California.

He pointed to Romney’s 2008 campaign that included a speech on his faith that helped assuage some of the public’s concerns over Mormons.

“I would say Mormonism will be a factor in the candidacy of these two men,” he said, “but not as big of one as it was the last time.”

That could help or hurt.

“I really believe most of the Mormon population is going to vote for the person, not for the religion. That’s what we’re taught,” said Mac Robinson, the GOP chairman of rural Kane County, some 300 miles southeast of Salt Lake City near the Arizona state line.

“I’m a very active Mormon, but it does not matter to me whether (the candidates) are Mormon or not,” said Robinson, who is leaning toward Romney but isn’t decided. “I’m not going to vote for anybody because they are a Mormon. I think some people will.”

That’s why Romney and Huntsman are trying to set themselves apart — in this state that is more than half Mormon — despite looking a lot alike on paper.

Both are former Republican governors and sons of industrial giants. Both have matinee idol good looks and business-heavy resumes. Both are Mormons with big families. Both are running for the White House with positions that fall outside the GOP’s orthodoxy.

Yet they are hardly friends, let alone similar campaigners.

Romney is a product of the 1950s and at times comes across with a formality of a bygone era. Huntsman came of age during the 1960s. The generational difference is evident in their styles on the road.

Romney struggles to chat up voters on the campaign trail, awkwardly filling in the silences with small talk. Huntsman is a natural retail campaigner who sidles up to tables for long conversations about work and family.

Romney polls and meticulously tests messages. Huntsman prefers to go from his gut — much to the chagrin of his advisers at times. His campaign has yet to conduct a single poll.

Neither is eager to criticize the other and both try to play down the rivalry.

“It’s a lot of hyperbole. It sounds good. Everybody loves drama,” Huntsman said in Wolfeboro, N.H., during a campaign trip that took him within miles of the Romney clan’s vacation home.

“I met Gov. Romney as governor a few years ago. My grandfather and his father used to fish in the same stream in Idaho 300 years ago. I have nothing but respect for Gov. Romney and his family. He’s an accomplished professional,” Huntsman said.

Why are some lives full of bad things, others hardly any?

McClatchy Newspapers

KARMA SHAPES LIFE

It is important to qualify your question by asking what is meant by the term “bad things.”

Twenty-five-hundred years ago, the Buddha observed that everything in this phenomenal world is impermanent — nothing lasts. Therefore, all of us are subject to old age, sickness and, eventually, death. This is the human condition that none of us will escape. Accepting the fact that our world is impermanent and ever-changing can help us better deal with unexpected changes.

We have recently seen people suffer greatly because of natural disasters. Earthquakes in Haiti and Japan and, more recently the tornadoes that devastated entire cities in the South and Midwest, resulted in incredible suffering.

But even within these natural disasters, some were spared while others perished. From a Buddhist perspective, everything that happens to us is a result of karma from this lifetime or from past lifetimes. Karma is the cosmic law of cause and effect. H.H. Dalai Lama says, “If you want to know what your past life was like, look at your current situation. If you want to know what your future life will be like, then look at your current actions.”

So, while we may not have control over everything that happens to us, we do have control over how we respond to them. If we respond with anger, we are only generating more negative karma. Therefore, we should do our best to always respond with kindness and compassion, regardless of the situation.

— Lama Chuck Stanford, Rime Buddhist Center & Monastery

MANY VARIABLES INFLUENCE OUR LIVES

In this world, there are variables that affect all of life: good, kindness, evil, ugly, and the list goes on and on.

Man is cultivated by the choices of many. There are those who have been in our past and present and have made tremendous influences on how we live. We would suppose that being born in this world has great advantages. But a careful look at the great and good society discloses that many who have not experienced justice or fairness

Thompson honored at convention

Paul Thompson, pastor of Eastside Baptist Church in Twin Falls, was recently recognized at the Southern Baptist Convention in Phoenix.

"I didn't go expecting anything," Thompson said.

SBC Executive Committee President Frank Page recognized Thompson during the June 14 event, highlighting how Thompson is a bivocational pastor who, with his congregation, work hard to bring the gospel message to the people of southern Idaho.

Besides working as pastor, Thompson drives a school bus.

"He was generous and kind to us, and I'm real thankful for his remarks," Thompson said.

and nine others were imprisoned in a Haiti jail cell for allegedly not having proper paperwork to take orphaned children to the Dominican Republic. The allegations were dropped 19 days later.

Thompson, who moved from Colorado about 28 years ago, recently hit his 10th anniversary as pastor at the Twin Falls church. He and his wife, Renee, formerly lived in Boise where he worked as an associate pastor.

Frank gave Thompson the opportunity to speak at the convention.

"It was real brief," Thompson said. "I'm not real comfortable in such a large group. I pastor about 100, and (at the convention) there were about 4,000."

According to the Baptist News Press, Thompson told the audience, "I have never been so proud to be a Southern Baptist as I was in the 19 days in a lonely but yet God-filled prison cell in Haiti. I bless the Lord for Southern Baptists and for ... our co-operative work together. May the name of our Lord be greatly glorified on all the earth."

Bello Maasaba, 87, a religious faith healer, is surrounded by some of his followers, who hang onto his every word. Maasaba got into trouble with Islamic leaders in northern Nigeria for marrying 107 women. After various deaths and divorces, he now has 86 wives and claims they are all satisfied with him.

Always groom for one more

Faith healer with 86 wives has been married 107 times

By Robyn Dixon
Los Angeles Times

BIDA, Nigeria — He fell in love with his first wife because she was sincere and eager to please.

His second wife, a cousin, was irresistible because she did everything he wished and nothing he didn't.

"That alone made me love her."

His third wife won him because she submitted to his every request.

"I saw her, I liked her. I went to her parents and asked for her hand in marriage."

Wife No. 4 was very obedient. So was wife No. 5. Wife No. 6, the same. As were wives 7 and 8 and 9 and ...

Well, by then — it was the late 1980s — things had taken off for Bello Maasaba, an Islamic faith healer from this city in Niger state. He went from a wedding every few months to one every few weeks.

All told, the 87-year-old has married 107 women, which, even in a society with a tradition of polygamy, is on the high side. The Nigerian government is not amused. Neither are Islamic authorities in the state.

But he's still marrying, every time Miss Right comes along. He now has 86 wives, the youngest 19 and the oldest 64. Nine have died and 12 he divorced (for disobedience).

But how on earth does he ... ?

To ask the delicate question about how a man with so many wives, well, manages, one first has to cross a dusty street in this hot city in northern Nigeria where the sun bleaches the color from the street. Droning Chinese motorcycles belch choking fumes. Women in flowing garments sit under umbrellas in the market, selling fruit and vegetables.

Bello Maasaba, 87, has 86 wives and has fathered 185 children, 133 who are still living.

A looming four-story house with 89 rooms and a broad veranda supported by gold columns overlooks the street with an air of faded grandeur. But its view is inauspicious: an open gutter running from a bank of rickety street toilets, their wooden doors askew.

On the porch, dozens of men are seated — some relations, some followers. They rustle in excitement at the approach of guests. Chorus of "You are welcome" echo like bells as visitors are seated on a red couch beside a large, patterned red rug. The carpet, an island in the sea of Maasaba's followers, lies bare but for one white pillow and one white facecloth.

The pillow awaits. Suddenly, the crowd of males leaps to its feet, bursting into a traditional song of praise.

He is coming.

At the doorway, his long, pointy white shoes are removed by aides and placed in an empty plastic shoe rack tacked high on the wall. Then he rustles in, enveloped by a tumble of shiny white cloth, which the aides spring forward to arrange whenever he stands or sits.

He ignores the pillow and sits beside it. He wears a tall white hat, and smiles a crooked-toothed smile. The pouches under his eyes give him a mournful air. But there's barely a wrinkle on his forehead, and he professes to have no worries.

An aide proffers a microphone hooked up to speakers on every floor of the house so his wives and children can listen. Questions are blasted through speakers over the street so his followers (and anyone happening by) can hear.

Which makes it a little awkward to ask that delicate one.

He begins with his family history, almost singing the story of his roots.

After school, he led an ordinary life for 21 years, involved in the clothing business and later working for a sugar company, keeping just two wives. Life was normal until a religious "vision" in the 1970s, which he says involved a visit from the archangel Gabriel. He fell deeply ill, unable to eat or sleep for days, and all the medicine the doctors gave him only made him worse.

He gave up work and became a traditional faith healer who eschewed medicine. The angel also instructed him to take wife after wife after wife.

"I get a revelation from God telling me any woman I'm going to marry. If it wasn't from God, I wouldn't have gone beyond two," he explains in a wispy, singsong voice.

Maasaba has to pause to remember the number of children he has — an ever growing figure, with the youngest just 1 month old. He has fathered 185, and 133 are still living. He has acquired an extended family of some 5,000 people, many who live in the sprawling compound in the block surrounding his house.

It takes three enormous sacks of rice a day and prodigious quantities of meat and vegetables to feed his enormous clan. He's rich because of the handsome fees paid by those who come to be healed.

Three years ago, Islamic authorities in Niger, a majority Muslim state with Shariah, or Islamic law, ordered that Maasaba divorce 82 of his wives, keeping four. He refused and was ordered by the Shariah court to leave town. (Muslim scholars generally agree that the Quran allows up to four wives, provided each gets equal treatment.)

Police raided Maasaba's house at 3:45 a.m. on Sept. 15, 2008. He was taken away to jail.

That November, at the High Court in the capital, Abuja, the lawyers called in his wives and their parents, one by one, to testify that they had agreed to marriage. At wife No. 57, the court told the lawyers to stop, and ordered Maasaba freed.

Some of the wives, wearing bright costumes of pink and blue, gold and yellow, meet visitors to the house in a white-tiled entry room, chorusing hellos. Others, surrounded by a clutch of children, cascade down a wooden staircase and peer curiously around a door.

As Maasaba talks, they are hidden within, listening to the squawking speakers, as the delicate question is finally posed. With so many wives, how does he meet their romantic needs?

He smiles. Everyone asks him that.

"In his wisdom, God has given me the power and strength to give them the sexual portion they need," he says. "If I didn't satisfy them, they would leave."

Then he stands up, and his aides rush to him, putting his white shoes on his feet and arranging his white costume, just so.

Mormon

Both say they're not personally close; neither is rushing to help the other despite a tangled political and personal family tree.

In 2008, Huntsman backed Sen. John McCain's presidential bid and was often at his side, watching the person-to-person campaign master at work.

His father, industrial magnate Jon Huntsman Sr., was a national finance chairman for Romney, turning to his vast network to open deep pockets that helped Romney wage a professional — although unsuccessful — presidential bid. Now, the elder Huntsman is working for his son's bid.

The personal ties are even deeper.

Huntsman's uncle Bruce once dated Romney's sister Lynn.

Huntsman's maternal grandfather was best friends with Romney's father, George Huntsman's mother lived for two years with Romney's sister Jane while they were at the University of Utah.

Going back even further: Early Mormon missionary

Parley Pratt is Huntsman's great-great-grandfather and Romney's great-great-grandfather.

Both Romney's and Huntsman's families have strong familial ties to the Mormon church. Romney served as a stake president in the church, roughly the equivalent of a volunteer chief executive officer in a Catholic diocese. Huntsman's family lends its private jets to church leaders.

Yet for the advantages of being linked to their church, there is a downside. A Gallup poll found 22 percent of Americans wouldn't support a Mormon for president — a consistent number since the polling firm started asking about Mormons in the White House in 1967 when then-Michigan Gov. George Romney sought the office.

"I think (Mormonism) is still something of a barrier, but not insurmountable," said Lavar Webb, a Mormon and a Republican strategist who worked for former Gov. Mike Leavitt. "I think anyone will have a difficult fight against Obama, but I think if he lost, it wouldn't be his Mormon religion that did it."

are affected.

When we are born, we have no choices. We live in a world that has already made choices for us. Is that bad or good? Only time will tell the outcome. What takes place in the meantime will depend on how we respond to things that are given to us.

Interestingly, life can respond favorably and profitably when we recognize that every bad thing does not mean the end. Sometimes, it can mean an opportunity to approach our situation with a new set of values.

Life is a challenge and must be met with an attitude that if bad things happen to us, then we should decide to make the best of what is given.

Ultimately, we have a great deal to do with what happens, good or bad.

Baynam, pastor of Metropolitan Baptist Church, Kansas City, Kan.

Opponents file suit over San Francisco's proposed ban on circumcision

By Maria L. La Ganga
Los Angeles Times

SAN FRANCISCO — Opponents of a measure that would make it a misdemeanor to circumcise male children in San Francisco filed a law suit Wednesday morning to get the initiative stricken from the November ballot.

The plaintiffs called the measure anti-Semitic, a threat to the religious freedom of Jews and Muslims and an infringement on parental and medical rights. But during a news conference on the steps of City Hall here, attorney Michael Jacobs said that the group is suing on the grounds that state law prohibits local governments from restricting medical procedures.

That's the job of the state Legislature, said Jacobs, flanked by two Muslim women in head scarves and a doctor in a white coat. He said the California Business and Professions Code contains a "clear" prohibition on "exactly these kinds of ballot measures. ... This is not about local control."

Male circumcision, Jacobs said, is safe, sanctioned, and the most widely done medical procedure in the country. The ballot measure is a "distraction" to San Franciscans, parents, Jews, Muslims and doctors.

"To parents and physicians, the law protects you against this proposed initiative, which we feel is so misguided," Jacobs said.

The Anti-Defamation

MONICA ALMEIDA/The New York Times

Jena Troutman campaigns for a ballot measure that would ban circumcision on boys under 18, even for religious reasons, June 1 in Santa Monica, Calif. Activists are promoting circumcision bans for minors in San Francisco and Santa Monica, and Jewish groups see a real threat, likening the measures to bans in Soviet-era Russia and Eastern Europe.

League and the Jewish Community Relations Council are among the plaintiffs in the case, along with local doctors and families. According to a statement by the Committee for Parental Choice & Religious Freedom, which is leading the fight against the measure, the entire San Francisco Board of Supervisors opposes the circumcision ban.

The measure, which will be on the November ballot here, would prohibit what it calls the "genital cutting of male minors." Anyone who performed a circumcision would face a fine of up to $1,000 and up to a year in jail.

The SF MGM Bill website says that the measure is necessary to "protect ALL infants and children in San Francisco from the pain and harm caused by forced genital cutting. Damage ranges from excruciating pain, nerve destruction, loss of normal, natural and functional tissue, infection, disfigurement and sometimes death."

Lloyd Schofield, spokesman for the San Francisco measure, did not respond to requests for comment. But in an interview earlier this month, he said that the group had gathered 7,743 valid signatures to get the measure on the Nov. 8 ballot.

"We don't want anybody to be injured" because of what backers of the measure call "male genital mutilation," Schofield said. "There's no religious exemption. ... People talk about their religious freedom, but we thought it was discrimination against children to not include protection for everybody."

But Jeremy Benjamin, a plaintiff in the case, called the measure anti-Semitic and said it singles his Jewish family out "as illegal and unwanted in our own city."

The Benjamins' son was circumcised "as Jews have done for thousands of years," he said, with wife Jenny at his side. "This is our city, and we're standing up for ourselves and our family's freedom to live the life that we choose in this city."

OREGON Prosecutors seek jail for convicted Oregon couple

OREGON CITY — Prosecutors plan to ask a judge to sentence an Oregon couple to 90 days in jail after they were convicted of criminal mistreatment for failing to seek medical care for their infant daughter.

Rebecca and Timothy Wyland of Oregon City belong to the Followers of Christ Church, which practices faith healing and rejects doctors.

Their daughter, Alayna, developed a growth above her left eye as a baby that eventually threatened her with blindness because it went untreated.

Doctors said the growth would never have posed a threat if the Wylands had sought medical care when they first noticed it.

The Oregonian reports the couple are the fourth and fifth church members convicted in the past two years of crimes involving medical neglect of children. Sentencing was scheduled Friday morning.

MARYLAND Tabernacle stolen when Md. church is vandalized

NORTH EAST, Md. — A Catholic church congregation in North East is planning a reconsecration service after vandals made off with a $2,000 brass tabernacle and caused $8,000 in damage to the building.

The crime occurred late Sunday or early Monday at St. Jude Mission Church. A worker on Monday saw several doors had been damaged. The Rev.

Joseph J. Piekarski, the pastor, arrived to find the tabernacle, which houses the Eucharist, was missing. With the Eucharist gone, the church is considered desecrated and cannot hold services.

Piekarski notified the Diocese of Wilmington, Del., of which the church is a member, and officials there contacted the Vatican.

On Friday, a reconsecration service will offer penance in atonement and have the church ready in time for Sunday services. Police have no suspects in the crime.

CALIFORNIA Suits say Lutheran church knew about sex abuse

LOS ANGELES — Three men have filed Los Angeles lawsuits claiming Lutheran church leaders knew a Bell Gardens pastor was a pedophile but tried to cover it up and silence the victims.

Frank Brundige was relieved of his ministry at Lutheran Church of San Pedro y Pablo in 1997 and the 51-year-old disgraced pastor is now serving a 24-year prison sentence for child molestation. He was pastor at the Bell Gardens church from 1989 until his arrest.

Three men filed Los Angeles lawsuits on Wednesday seeking compensation from the church.

Attorney Anthony DeMarco tells the Los Angeles Times that his clients, who are now 32, 20 and 19 years old, suffered abuse at various ages and times.

Pacific Southwest District of the Lutheran Church Missouri Synod president Larry Stoterau says he cannot comment.

Terror by any other name: Osama eyed name change

By Matt Apuzzo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — As Osama bin Laden watched his terrorist organization get picked apart, he lamented in his final writings that al-Qaida was suffering from a marketing problem. His group was killing too many Muslims and that was bad for business. The West was winning the public relations fight. All his old comrades were dead and he barely knew their replacements.

Faced with these challenges, bin Laden, who hated the United States and decried capitalism, considered a most American of business strategies. Like Blackwater, Valujet and Philip Morris, perhaps what al-Qaida really needed was a fresh start under a new name.

The problem with the name al-Qaida, bin Laden wrote in a letter recovered from his compound in Pakistan, was that it lacked a religious element, something to convince Muslims worldwide that they are in a holy war with America.

Maybe something like Taifat al-Tawhed Wal-Jihad, meaning Monotheism and Jihad Group, would do the trick, he wrote. Or Jama'at l'Adat al-Khilafat al-Rashida, meaning Restoration of the Caliphate Group.

As bin Laden saw it, the problem was that the group's full name, al-Qaida al-Jihad, or The Base of Holy War, had become short-handed as simply al-Qaida. Lopping off the word “jihad,” bin Laden wrote, allowed the West to “claim deceptively that they are not at war with Islam.” Maybe it was time for al-Qaida to bring back its original name.

The letter, which was undated, was discovered among bin Laden's recent writings. Navy SEALs stormed his compound and killed him before any name change could be made. The letter was described by senior administration, national security and other U.S. officials only on condition of anonymity because the materials are sensitive. The documents portray bin Laden as a terrorist chief executive, struggling to sell holy war for a company in crisis.

At the White House, the documents were taken as positive reinforcement for President Barack Obama's effort to eliminate religiously charged words from the government's language of terrorism.

15 die as Syrians march demanding Assad's ouster

By Elizabeth A. Kennedy
Associated Press

BEIRUT — Defying government guns, thousands of Syrian protesters poured down city streets and a main highway Friday to press demands for President Bashar Assad's ouster. Security forces opened fire, killing at least 15 people, including two children, activists said.

“Our revolution is strong! Assad has lost legitimacy!” a YouTube video showed protesters chanting in Zabadani, a suburb of Damascus, the Syrian capital.

Syria's streets have become the stage for a test of endurance between a 3-month-old pro-democracy movement, bloodied but resilient, and an iron-fisted but embattled regime. The latest round of protests and killings came as international pressure mounted on Assad.

“We will not stand by while the Syrian regime uses violent repression to silence its own people,” British Foreign Secretary William Hague said after the European Union expanded sanctions — asset freezes and travel bans — to more members of the Syrian leadership.

The Syrian opposition says 1,400 people have been killed as the government has cracked down on a movement demanding an end to four decades of Assad family rule — a popular uprising renewed each Friday after weekly Muslim prayers.

Five people were killed by security forces' gunfire this Friday in Barzeh, a Damascus district 3 miles from the city center, said the Local Coordination Committees, which track the protests. But Syrian state television offered another version, saying gunmen, otherwise unidentified, had opened fire on security personnel and civilians, killing three civilians and wounding several security force members.

Today is Saturday, June 25, the 176th day of 2011. There are 189 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On June 25, 1950, war broke out in Korea as forces from the communist North invaded the South.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1788, Virginia ratified the U.S. Constitution.

In 1876, Lt. Col. George A. Custer and his 7th Cavalry were wiped out by Sioux and Cheyenne Indians in the Battle of the Little Bighorn in Montana.

In 1910, President William Howard Taft signed the White-Slave Traffic Act, more popularly known as the Mann Act, which made it illegal to transport women across state lines for "immoral" purposes. The ballet "The Firebird" with music by Igor Stravinsky was premiered in Paris by the Ballets Russes.

LEGAL NOTICE

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game was informed by the Bureau of Fisheries and Regional fishery managers that, through June 19, weekly angler surveys indicate that about 60 percent of the State's harvest share of hatchery Chinook salmon greater than or equal to 24 inches total length (adults) returning to the Clearwater River drainage has been harvested. By June 27, anglers likely will have harvested 70 percent of the non-tribal harvest share of adult Chinook salmon returning to the Clearwater River drainage. The majority of that harvest is expected to occur in the North Fork Clearwater River and in the Clearwater River downstream of the Orofino Bridge.

To ensure opportunity for upstream communities, such as Orofino, Kamiah, Kooskia and Grangeville to harvest adult Chinook salmon, the Bureau of Fisheries recommends prohibiting retention of adult Chinook salmon in the Clearwater River fishery downstream of the Orofino Bridge and in the North Fork Clearwater River fishery effective at the close of legal fishing hours on June 26, 2011.

Pursuant to his authority under Idaho Code Section 36-106(e)(6) (A), the Idaho Department of Fish and Game Director hereby closes the North Fork Clearwater River and the Clearwater River downstream of the Orofino Bridge to harvest of Chinook salmon greater than or equal to 24 inches total length effective at the close of legal fishing hours on June 26, 2011.

Copies of Order 11-23 are available at the Idaho Department of Fish and Game headquarters, 600 South Walnut, PO Box 25, Boise, ID 83707.

DATED this 21st day of June 2011.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

“People ask you for criticism, but they only want praise.”
— Somerset Maugham

In today's deal from last year's European Championships, four spades would have been easy if declared by North on a club lead. However, Marianne Harding as South received the singleton club lead and had to win this in dummy to draw four rounds of trump. West pitched two diamonds and a heart, and declarer now astutely led a diamond to the 10.

When that held, she decided to play East for a doubleton heart honor. She cashed the diamond ace, then the heart ace, and exited with a heart to endplay East, who had to lead a club into the tenace. Had East unblocked her heart honor under the ace, Harding would have taken her remaining club winner, then exited with a diamond to West, who would have had to concede a heart trick to dummy.

Very nicely done, but could the defense have done better? West does best to pitch two hearts and a diamond on the run of the spades, coming down to five diamonds and three hearts, and then split her honors when declarer leads a diamond toward the A-10.

Declarer wins and plays the heart ace, again forcing East to decide whether to unblock. If she does not, she is endplayed with the heart queen to lead clubs. If she does unblock, declarer cashes the club king to squeeze West.

If West bares her heart king, declarer establishes a heart. If West pitches a diamond, declarer leads the diamond 10 from dummy and eventually collects a second heart trick.

ANSWER: The best way to get both suits into play now is to jump to two no-trump, which guarantees at least a 5-5 pattern in the unbid suits. Even if you play a call of one no-trump as unusual here (I prefer it to be strong and balanced), your extra card in the red suits warrants the additional pre-emption.

DEAR ABBY: I am a teenage girl and my family is important to me. I really wish I could treat them better. My mom and I always fight. She says little things and I get mad at her. I feel bad for snapping at her and my sisters all the time because I really want them to know how much they mean to me. They are the best family you could ever get, and I just push them away.

Mom is going through a lot of health problems, and I know my being mean won't help her get better. Abby, help me, please.

— TEENAGE GIRL IN OHIO

DEAR TEENAGE GIRL:

The first thing you need to remember is that because your mother is experiencing health problems, she may not be at her best — which is why she says some of those “little things” that make you angry. Before you react and take them personally, you need to remind yourself that she may be having a bad day.

When you are upset and under stress, you should not take it out on your sisters. A better way to cope would be, rather than saying something hurtful, to leave the room or take a walk and organize your thoughts. You'll then be better able to communicate your feelings in a rational way and avoid a fight.

Please try it. These are skills that take practice, but if you master them they will serve you for a lifetime. Now, go hug your mother, tell her you love her and apologize.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I am extremely overweight (5-foot-6 and 331 pounds). I am 38 years old, and the weight is now catching up with me. It hurts to get up in the morning. My knees hurt walking up the stairs, and I can't bear to look at myself (to the point that I will not go out except to work). I have started to pull away from my family.

“Just lose the weight”? Easier said than done! I lost 110 pounds, then gained it back and more. I don't know who to turn to, but I know I need help.

— TOO BIG TO ENJOY LIFE

DEAR TOO BIG: I'm glad you wrote, because I'm going to recommend a multi-pronged approach. The first person to contact is your physician, and tell him or her that you are ready to take off the weight and you need help. Then ask for a referral to a psychologist, to help you understand the emotional reasons you have put on so much weight, and also an American Dietetic Association-registered nutritionist who can help you craft a healthy eating program that works for you.

You will also have to make some lifestyle changes, but they will SAVE YOUR LIFE. And remember, losing weight will take time. You didn't put it on overnight; it won't come off overnight. But by writing to me you have already taken your first step in the right direction, and I'm urging you to continue moving down the same path.

DEAR ABBY: We are stumped about how to handle a situation with our grandchildren. Is it OK to set different rules in our home than they have in their own home?

We are inclined to limit running or wrestling indoors, but our daughter (their mother) doesn't feel that's necessary. At different times both children have been injured or gotten into trouble that could have been avoided by having a “no running or wrestling inside” rule. Is it our place to establish rules for our home?

— CONCERNED IN TEXAS

DEAR C.I.T.: Absolutely, and without QUESTION it is your place to establish the rules of conduct in YOUR household!

IF JUNE 25 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Smooth sailing and sunny celestial skies are something to be grateful for in the year to come. Expect that there will be few obstacles in the road to prevent you from realizing your growing ambitions. Optimism and a feeling of overall well-being will instill a fresh sense of purpose during August and September. That is a fine time to seek greener pastures, start something of importance or ask for favors. If there is something you truly need, such as a job, better health or a soul mate to make your heart glad, the universe will probably provide it. You can make ties and happiness permanent in the first half of next year and may feel younger and healthier than ever.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): All that glitters isn't gold. You can make a favorable impression on new acquaintances in the business world, or enjoy a pleasant time with a new hookup, but avoid investments and major purchases.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Never satisfied, never safe. By making impulsive demands you could spoil whatever happiness is at your disposal. Ride out a brief flurry of dissatisfaction with a loved one and you can get back on track.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A relationship that begins with solid friendship on both sides can overcome adversity. On the other hand, you could be headed for trouble if you refuse to face facts or break off an existing connection.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You can't always build a bridge over troubled water. Enjoy the sunshine, get a tan or focus on family fun. This isn't the right time to make key decisions or to begin a new romantic relationship.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Put your money in a safe place. Making a profit with investments that you begin under these stars might be like putting water in a leaky bucket. Opposition to your authority can feel like a thorn in your side.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't gamble even on what seems like a sure thing. The stars are not aligned properly for profits or winnings. You seem more attractive to others than usual, but maybe that is because others are gullible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You could be your own worst enemy. You might feel restless or think you are not getting enough attention from that special someone. You might disrupt the peace and tranquility by trying to stir up jealousy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The times they are a-changin'! The wisest course would be to reconsider an idea or hold off on starting key projects until you can eliminate an emerging situation that will very likely hamper your success.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You would like to get back to your regularly scheduled program, but it seems there are endless interruptions. All the recent progress you have made can be swept away by a foolish gamble.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): To think you are invincible is invalid. You are convinced it's possible to bulldoze through problems. If you think you can prevail through sheer force of will, you are in for a big disappointment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Suffer through a brief period of boredom for your own good. Fight the urge to make drastic changes. You may feel coerced or manipulated by others and are challenged to keep your cool in heated debates.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): There may be more irons in the fire than you can safely handle. Write down your inspiring thoughts so you can utilize them in the future, but don't be inspired to risk your heart or your money this weekend.
