New fiscal year means new laws

By Ben Botkin ♦ Times-News writer » Idaho is in the middle of another tough economic year. With tight times ahead, the Idaho Legislature approved a budget filled with further cuts for the fiscal year that starts today. The $2.5 billion general fund budget relies on $38 million in one-time transfers from other funds to keep government afloat. • Meanwhile, other funding sources — like federal stimulus money that helped prop the state up in recent years — are gone. By way of comparison, the general fund budget is $47.7 million less than what was spent five years ago. • To deal with the growing Gem State's funding crisis and evolving needs, lawmakers signed off on a mix of changes that go into effect today. • Here's a look:

Farming

A stronger Right to Farm Act is now in place, offering more protections to farmers from nuisance complaints as long as they're lawfully conducting their agricultural activities.

The measure came in response to farmers' concern about residential growth entering Idaho's traditionally rural areas. Those in the agriculture industry contended the protections are necessary to deal with an increase in complaints made by people unfamiliar with the noises and smells of farm life. But opponents fear the law will create roadblocks for those battling large agriculture operations that harm quality of life.

The law prevents local ordinances from turning routine agricultural activities that are properly permitted into a nuisance.

Medicaid

In a nod to the need to reform an unsustainable health care system, lawmakers passed a Medicaid overhaul focused on reining in what they deemed unnecessary costs without changing eligibility for recipients.

Among the changes: adults receiving psychosocial rehabilitative services will receive one less hour of care per week; dental care for adults, except for pregnant women, will be limited to emergency services; chiropractic services will be limited to six visits a year instead of 24; and vision care for adults will be limited to what's needed to treat or monitor a serious condition like glaucoma or diabetes.

Co-pays for some Medicaid services will be required, though they cannot exceed $3.65 for each visit to a provider.

Schools

Public schools chief Tom Luna's education reform bills have already captured much attention. Many details, like merit pay for teachers and laptops for high school students, are still a year or more away from becoming reality.

Other parts begin today. School districts will have the leeway to fire teachers if their enrollment drops by more than 1 percent this year.

Legislators also put a one-year safety net in place to partially preserve state funding for any district that sustains an enrollment dip of more than 3 percent. The end result of those moves will play out until Oct. 1, the deadline for firing teachers.

Also starting today, principals will have a stronger role in hiring their schools' teachers, as their permission is now required before a school board can bring a new teacher on.

Other items going into effect:

16-year-olds can now donate blood to nonprofit drives, provided they have consent from a parent or guardian • Pregnant women who choose a midwife instead of a traditional doctor for prenatal care are now eligible for Medicaid. • A state-approved safety course will be required for underage drivers of all-terrain vehicles before they drive on U.S. Forest Service lands. • Got a complaint about someone's hobby horse being poorly cared for? Take it to local law enforcement, not the State Department of Agriculture. A new law makes local law enforcement responsible for companion animals, while the agriculture department investigates complaints about production animals.

Health district approves bonuses for employees

By Kimberlee Kruesi
Times-News writer

After three years of no raises, South Central Public Health District employees are in line to receive bonuses.

The SCPHD Board of Health decided to use $69,000 of its end-of-the-year budget surplus to give one-time bonuses to 80 employees. However, the board must get approval from the state Department of Financial Management before the funds can be distributed.

The board decided to approve the bonuses on the condition that next year's budget would attempt to raise wages for salaried employee positions that aren't considered to be competitive.

"I don't like the idea of bonuses," said Terry Kramer, a

Former POWs offer support to family of captured soldier Bergdahl

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY — Sue Martin began the third year of Sgt. Bowe Bergdahl's captivity handing out yellow ribbon — something she had hoped she would be able to stop doing by now.

"But at least the withdrawal of troops from Afghanistan and the killing of Osama bin Laden are heightening our awareness to keep thinking of Bowe," said Martin, who owns the Zaney's River Street Coffeehouse where the young prisoner of war worked before joining the Army.

"My customers come in and ask about Bowe all the time — every day. And a lot of out-of-towners learn about Bowe through our Bowe Bergdahl board," she said pointing to a board with well-wishes for Bergdahl. "We're on our third board."

More than 50 people, including four TV cameramen and 10 motorcycle riders with the Boise Valley POW-MIA group, showed up at Zaney's at noon Thursday in support of the Hailey man who

Inspection stations help keep invasive species out of Idaho

By Kimberlee Kruesi
Times-News writer

The Idaho State Department of Agriculture is again taking extra precaution to prevent invasive mussels from entering Idaho waters this year.

Inspection stations near Idaho's borders have stopped 18 boats entering the Gem State with invasive species attached to them. Three of these "fouled" boats were stopped at a station on U.S. Highway 93 north of Jackpot, Nev.

"The station near Jackpot is considered a high-risk station," said Amy Ferriter, IS-DA invasive species coordinator. "It gets a lot of traffic from people traveling from other states. It's really that last line of defense to stop invasive species from coming into Idaho."

The state agency has opened 15 inspection stations this year to prevent foreign species like zebra and quagga mussels from entering the state.

All individuals hauling boats into Idaho must pass through a watercraft inspection station. While there are no fines if a boat is found

About the stations

There are 15 watercraft inspection stations throughout the state. All stations are open 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. daily. Here are the stations located closest to the Magic Valley; both stations are for northbound traffic.

- Juniper Station on Interstate 84 at milepost 269 near the Idaho-Utah border.
- U.S. Highway 93 Roadside Station at milepost 3 near Jackpot, Nev.

with a foreign specimen, the boat must be cleaned before it can enter the state.

"We've only had the stations opened a few years, so this is still a new program," Ferriter said. "We're learning a lot about boater behavior and that we need to open earlier to catch more boats as soon as possible."

Zebra and quagga mussels are not native species to Pacific Northwest states but have been found in Arizona, California, Nevada and Utah. They are European in origin and grow only up to the size of a fingernail, but attach themselves to surfaces en masse and can clog intake pipes that draw water from an infested area.

Bonuses

Twin Falls County commissioner and member of the district's board. "It's a Band-Aid approach to a bigger problem. If our wages aren't competitive, a one-time bonus won't make them any more better."

However, Rene LeBlanc, SCPHD's director, says he's out of options when it comes to keeping his employees' morale high.

"I've had a pay freeze for the past three years," he said. "I've offered casual Fridays and letting employees work four days a week on 10-hour days, but the novelty has worn out."

The budget surplus came from several retiring employees and from four full-time employees who decided to step down to part-time.

LeBlanc said that staffers could receive their bonuses as early as July 10 if everything goes smoothly at DFM. Bonuses will range from $450 to $1,720, depending on the staffer's salary.

"I'm not a big fan of bonuses," said Don Clark, SCPHD board member.

"But how we get to better salaries to a point where they're competitive is beyond me."

The decision to approve the bonuses comes right after media reports about the state Legislative Services Office giving $167,000 in one-time state employee bonuses. Around $95,000 of that amount went to LSO staffers.

"If the LSO hadn't done what they did we probably wouldn't be considering this right now," LeBlanc said.

LeBlanc said he has been unable to give raises to his employees for the past three years. The only pay increases have stemmed from employee promotions — there were eight in the 2011 fiscal year, according to data from the state controller's office.

"I have one employee leaving because she can do the same job at a better wage somewhere else," LeBlanc said. "I would love to adjust everyone's salaries to what it should be but it wouldn't get approval, so I'm forced to get creative and work with what I can do."

Old hospital, new hands

Twin Falls County takes over Addison Ave. medical campus

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

The jangle of keys and rounds of applause Thursday capped off a multi-year transition for St. Luke's Health System's move from its old Addison Avenue West campus in Twin Falls to a new $238 million facility on Pole Line Road.

But for Twin Falls County, which takes over today the buildings it had leased to St. Luke's, it marks the true beginning of the quest to fill 300,000 vacant square feet of the old campus. The commissioners have already spent $60,000 on studies associated with county departments moving into the buildings and remodeling information, "but believe me, that's just the beginning," Commissioner Terry Kramer said.

The county has "a few million dollars" set aside for final renovations, Kramer and Commission Chairman George Urie said. They were hesitant to go into specifics because they didn't want bidding contractors to see the upper limit of what the county could spend. But the sum is more than $5 million, including $4.6 million St. Luke's gave the county for remodeling and made public in a 2009 agreement.

They've also hired one person as a kind of property manager for the campus — available to give tours to potential lessees and ensure upkeep — and brought on a seasonal employee to handle the site's flora. Kramer said the county has budgeted to make that seasonal employee full-

What's next

The Twin Falls County commissioners just commissioned a space study for the Addison Avenue West medical office building and don't expect results for about two months. From there, they will decide whether to move non-law-enforcement county facilities into that building or use the clinic building on Shoshone Street. They have no timeline for the decision.

time in the next fiscal year.

The county has also hired a private security firm to patrol the area and keep vandals and squatters out, renewing the contract of the firm hired by St. Luke's so not a night of patrol would be missed.

The commissioners didn't set a firm timeline for future plans for the 15 properties taken back from St. Luke's. They just commissioned a space study of the Addison Avenue medical office building that they expect to take two months. From there, commissioners will look at the pros and cons of the space, from initial renovation costs to build-out potential, and decide where to move departments not related to law enforcement from the courthouse in Twin Falls.

For filling the other 14 buildings, commissioners said they've already received some interest from adjacent building owners hoping to expand, and there have been preliminary talks with the city of Twin Falls concerning it taking a building for a new city hall. Nothing has progressed further than talks.

For the larger specialty buildings — the tower for live-in patients, particularly — Urie said he hasn't ruled out the possibility of demolition if the county can't attract a tenant in the long term. He didn't give a time frame for when he would consider pursuing that plan, but suggested it would be years out.

Magic Valley Arts Council director resigns

By Melissa Davlin
Times-News writer

For the second time in two years, the Magic Valley Arts Council is without an executive director.

Robin Baumgartner voluntarily resigned after about nine months in the role. Thursday was her last day, she said.

"It's kind of bittersweet," she said.

Baumgartner was hired in 2009 as the center's project coordinator. She took over as executive director in September, filling a vacancy left by former director Stacy Madson, who resigned in late 2009. Under Baumgartner, the Magic Valley Arts Council moved into its new home at Twin Falls Center for the Arts, located at Renaissance Plaza near the Snake River Canyon.

According to 2010 tax returns, Baumgartner made $12,534 as executive director that year for the 30-hour-per-week position.

MVAC Board President Linda Butler said the board hasn't decided when or how they will conduct a search for a new director.

"We will be reviewing the position and posting it in the future, probably soon," Butler said, adding their next meeting is in mid-July.

Times-News takes 5 regional AP awards

Times-News

The Times-News earned five awards in this year's regional Associated Press journalism contest, including being named the third-best newspaper in its division.

Competing among all Idaho, Utah, and Spokane, Wash., newspapers with daily circulation of 10,000-50,000, four Times-News journalists earned individual awards.

Mike Christensen finished second in sports feature writing for his profile of College of Southern Idaho basketball player Fabyon Harris. Photographer Ashley Smith took second place in the spot news photo category for his shot of a roaring house fire.

Ben Botkin finished third in investigative reporting for his look into how Idaho public school districts check the backgrounds of potential new teaching hires, while David Bashore's collection of sports columns earned him a third-place finish.

Idaho newspapers swept the general excellence competitions, with the Idaho Statesman in Boise, Idaho State Journal in Pocatello and Moscow-Pullman Daily News in Moscow winning in the largest to smallest circulation categories, respectively.

This year's contest was judged by editors from AP member newspapers in South Dakota, North Dakota and Nebraska.

Ada County coroner: No foul play in Moedl death

Times-News

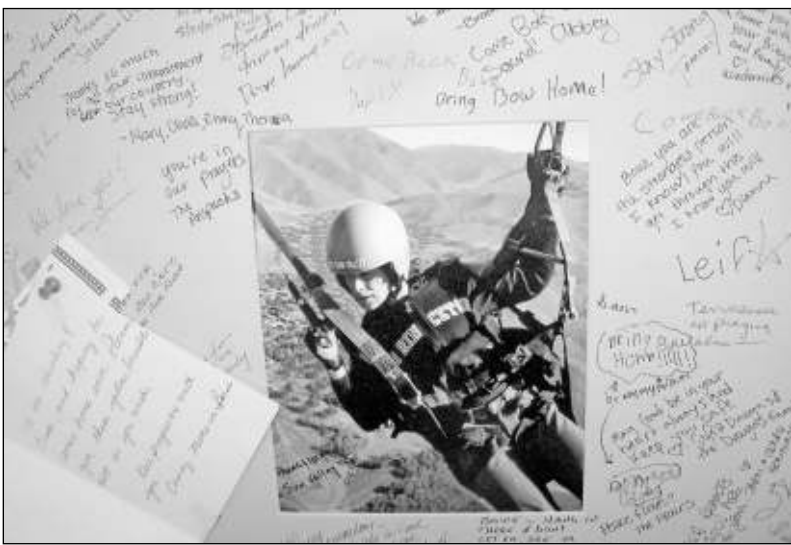

The Ada County Coroner's Office does not suspect foul play in the death of a Rexburg man who went missing in March, the Elmore County Sheriff's Office announced on Thursday.

Grant Moedl's body was found in the Mountain Home Reservoir Sunday, nearly four months after he went missing. He died after possibly becoming trapped in his vehicle, which broke through the ice atop the reservoir. It is unknown why Moedl, 57, drove off of U.S. Highway 20. He left Rexburg on a business trip on March 2 but never reached his destination of Boise. Moedl took the highway cutting across the Camas Prairie rather than taking Interstate 84 to the south.

The autopsy was conducted on Monday, shortly after the body was discovered. Authorities found Moedl's body still in his car, which wildlife photographers reported seeing sticking out of the water earlier that day.

was captured by the Taliban in Afghanistan on June 30, 2009.

Bergdahl's parents sent a statement, which Hailey Mayor Rick Davis read.

"We are reminded of the wisdom spoken to us by former prisoners of war Render Crayton and Jerry Coffee soon after Bowe's capture," the statement said. "Those two men, who know exactly what Bowe is going through, told us to have a long-term plan. During the summer of 2009, our family started pacing ourselves for the long haul, just like we believe Bowe has been doing."

The statement thanked Idahoans and Americans for their expressions of support.

"We have not forgotten Bowe and we have not forgotten every single act of your support to bring Bowe back home with honor," it read. "Please continue with us in this ordeal by remembering all those suffering the consequences of this war and praying that peace may come to Afghanistan."

Stephy Smith wasted no time posting a few more yellow ribbons of support, asking Jim Banholzer to pull his truck up to a telephone pole on River Street where she could tie a ribbon "high enough that everyone will see it."

Ben Bradley, who like Bergdahl is in his 20s, said he never met the soldier, having moved to Hailey after Bergdahl was captured.

"But I wanted to show support for someone in that position," Bradley said. "And I hope to meet him in person very soon."

Rocket science? For Twin Falls' Bennett, you'd better believe it

What better time than the Fourth of July weekend to remind you that Twin Falls can brag about its own rocket man?

He's Gary Bennett, a 71-year-old, Twin Falls-born, Boise-bred aeronautical scientist and engineer now retired to Emmett. He worked for NASA and the Department of Energy on advanced space propulsion systems, including the Voyager (exploring Jupiter and Saturn), Galileo (Jupiter) and Ulysses (the sun) missions.

For a spacefaring-minded fellow, Bennett had the good fortune to be 17 years old in 1957.

That was the year the Soviet Union launched Sputnik, the first human-made object to orbit the Earth. Bennett was transfixed.

"I have to credit my grandmother and the Flash Gordon comics I read as a kid for my interest in space," Bennett told the Idaho Statesman's Tim Woodward in 2007. "When my grandmother told me that stars were suns, my universe expanded. And Flash Gordon was able to travel to the stars. We needed better propulsion to do that, and I figured that would be the (Boise Rocket Research Society's) contribution. As if a bunch of teenagers from a town of 35,000 would be the ones to invent it?"

YOU DON'T SAY

Steve Crump

He and three other members of the society got together on the night of Sputnik's launch and listened to the satellite beeping on a console radio.

When they weren't tracking satellites, they were launching rockets, and cooking up fuel to propel them in Bennett's parents' basement.

That didn't always go as planned.

"We were trying potassium chloride and charcoal powder for rocket fuel," he said. "We didn't have any charcoal, so my mother suggested grinding up charcoal briquettes in the meat grinder ... It was a classic dust explosion. If you get enough fine, flammable material in the air and get a spark, it will burn. We'd brought in a battery with a wire attached, and when somebody touched the wire the basement just went red." Bennett got off relatively easy.

"The backs of my ears were singed," he told the Statesman.

Bennett would get better at such things. After getting a two-year degree from what was then Boise Junior College in 1960, Bennett earned a bachelor's degree in physics from the University of Idaho in 1962, a master's in nuclear science from Washington State University in 1966 and a doctorate in physics from WSU in 1970.

Over the next 40 years, he worked at various times for NASA, DOE, the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, the Idaho National Laboratory and the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

At NASA, Bennett was a physicist at the Nuclear Engine for Rocket Vehicle Applications program at the John Glenn Research Center in Cleveland. Then he joined NASA headquarters as manager of advanced space power systems in the transportation division of the Office of Advanced Concepts and Technology. There, he managed programs including hybrid propulsion, electric propulsion, low-thrust chemical propulsion, and other advanced propulsion concepts including fusion and antimatter.

You read that correctly, Star Trek fans: fusion and antimatter.

He's also a science fiction author (The Star Sailors), a passionate advocate of science education and the teaching of evolution, and an outspoken defender of the separation of church and state.

"My hope is that someday we'll get around Mr. Einstein's theories and be able to travel to the stars by going faster than light," he told Woodward. "It doesn't make sense that there's so much out there and we're stuck here."

Western governors turn focus to wildfires

By Nicholas K. Geranios
Associated Press

COEUR D'ALENE — Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer said Thursday that one of her biggest fears when she became chief executive of the state two years ago was a devastating wildfire.

That concern came to life this year as nearly 1 million acres of Arizona burned in wildfires that included the largest such blaze in the state's history.

"One percent of the total land mass of Arizona has already burned in this fire season alone, and the season is not over yet," said Brewer, speaking at the Western Governors' Association annual meeting here Thursday.

Harris Sherman, undersecretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, told governors that wildfires are becoming bigger and more destructive in western states, because of a combination of factors including drought, insect infestations and disease.

He said potential solutions include expensive practices like controlled burns, thinning and pest control.

U.S. Rep. Doc Hastings, R-Wash., chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, suggested that locally controlled land would be in better position to prevent fires and called for the federal government to transfer authority.

"States and local governments are closest to the land and better suited to manage it," he said.

Hastings also said 88 percent of the land in the 12 westernmost states is un-

"Random acts of conservation are not enough."

— Harris Sherman, undersecretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, who told governors that western wildfires are becoming bigger and more destructive der federal control. He called on the government to allow more domestic energy production, timber harvesting and grazing on those lands.

For his part, Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer, a Democrat, questioned whether states could afford to manage federal lands that had a big backlog of maintenance needs.

"I'm not sure I could turn a profit on forest land that has been managed by the federal government," Schweitzer said.

Brewer, a Republican, also said that drought is fueling the devastating fires in her region.

She noted that Arizona averages about 180,000 acres of wildfires per year. But this year the state has had 923,000 acres burn — or 1,100 square miles.

Brewer said the burned land will be susceptible to flooding during the rainy season. She called on the federal government to create a better process to allow burned timber to be salvage logged and to plant new forests.

"We need to better manage the forests to prevent this from happening again," Brewer said. "Forest restoration or thinning is key to preventing these disasters."

But it is also very expensive.

Sherman, of the agriculture department, said it can cost up to $2,000 per acre to thin forest land, or up to $200 per acre to have a controlled burn.

"You take 80 million acres of national forest land in desperate need of restoration, and it is a staggering figure," he said.

Sherman agreed that dry conditions have led to big fire years in New Mexico, Texas and Florida this year, conforming to the trend of the past decade.

He said the period from 2000 to 2010 has seen total wildfire losses of 7 million acres per year, far more than in previous years. He added that nearly 5 million acres have already burned this year.

"Fires are larger and more intense than we have seen in the past," Sherman said, including far more fires of more than 100,000 acres each.

Sherman also noted that bark beetles, which thrive in warmer winters, are a major cause because they kill trees and make them more susceptible to fire. He added that about 41 million acres of western forests are infested.

Sherman said the federal government must find ways to spend less on environmental studies, which cost $350 million per year, and more to make actual land improvements.

"Random acts of conservation are not enough," he said.

Crews battle New Mexico fire as it pushes into canyon

The Associated Press

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. — Firefighters were confident Thursday they had stopped the advance of a wildfire that headed toward the Los Alamos nuclear lab and the nearby town that now sits empty for the second time in 11 years, even as they battled the blaze that crept into a canyon that descends into the town and parts of the lab.

Of 1,000 firefighters on the scene, 200 were battling the blaze in Los Alamos Canyon, which runs past the old Manhattan Project site in town and a 1940s era dump site where workers are near the end of a clean-up project of low-level radioactive waste. The World War II Manhattan Project developed the first atomic bomb, and workers from the era dumped hazardous and radioactive waste in trenches along six acres atop the mesa where the town sits.

"The threat is pretty limited," said Kevin Smith, the Department of Energy's National Nuclear Security Administration site manager for Los Alamos, which oversees the lab. "Most of the materials have been dug up."

Los Alamos Canyon runs through town and a portion of the northern end of the lab, where a weapons research nuclear reactor was located until it was demolished in 2003.

Los Alamos County Fire Chief Doug Tucker said the area in the canyon that was burning had been previously thinned, providing a safe area for firefighters to attack it.

"Am I concerned? Yes. Do I feel threatened? No. But it's fire and it's dangerous," Tucker said.

Jurors convict Idaho man of murder in boy's death

By Jessie L. Bonner
Associated Press

BOISE — An Ada County jury took just two hours Thursday to convict an Idaho man of first-degree murder in the death of his girlfriend's 8-year-old son.

Prosecutors told the panel in closing arguments that 38-year-old Daniel Ehrlick was a "ticking time bomb" on the day in 2009 when he killed Robert Manwill. The boy's body was found in an irrigation canal about a week after his disappearance triggered a massive search across the city of Boise.

Robert would have turned 10 earlier this month.

Ehrlick's sentencing was set for Sept. 2. He faces a maximum penalty of life in prison.

During his closing argument earlier in the day, Ada County Deputy Prosecutor Dan Dinger told jurors that Ehrlick panicked because Robert, who had been visiting his mother in Boise, was covered in bruises and about to go home to his father, who lived in New Plymouth.

"He was feeling that pressure, he was feeling that fear because that day was fast approaching," Dinger said.

Prosecutors claim Ehrlick feared Robert would tell about the abuse and he would lose his girlfriend's other son, an infant who had been previously removed from the home.

"It's been a long two years but today the system worked and we got some justice for my son," Charles Manwill, Robert's father, told reporters after the verdict was announced.

Jurors saw autopsy photos and heard recorded interviews in which Ehrlick told police he would hide Robert in a closet when social workers visited the apartment multiple times a week to check on the infant. Dinger told jurors that Ehrlick tortured the boy and hiding Robert in the closet was part of the abuse.

"He was preying on one of Robert's fears," Dinger said. "He knew that Robert hated to be alone."

The boy lived with his mother, Melissa Jenkins, and Ehrlick for about seven weeks and was bruised for much of that time, Dinger said.

The defense, however, rejected the notion that Ehrlick despised Robert and countered that Jenkins was responsible for much of the abuse the boy had suffered.

The prosecution examined more than 100 witnesses but did not present evidence that proved Ehrlick had killed the boy, said defense attorney Gus Cahill.

New spotted-owl plan targets rival bird

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The federal government on Thursday unveiled the latest version of its plan to save the northern spotted owl, while acknowledging that the Pacific Northwest bird's population is declining faster than scientists had previously thought.

The plan gingerly approaches the idea that government would experiment with shooting a rival bird, the barred owl. Some scientists say that species from the eastern U.S. has followed Americans westward over the decades and is now shoving the spotted owl aside.

The spotted owl is a smaller, meeker bird that was listed as threatened in 1990 because the old-growth forests it inhabits have been largely logged over.

Now the bird is losing out to the barred owl in remnant old-growth stands, federal officials said Thursday.

"This is the pressing short-term threat to the spotted owl," said Robyn Thorson, northwest regional director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Although estimates of spotted owl numbers are considered inexact, ranging from a few thousand to 10,000, Thorson said studies of sample populations show them declining at an annual rate of 3 percent.

The barred owl is not in jeopardy and is instead expanding its range into California.

The plan that Thorson and other federal agency managers unveiled Thursday is the Obama administration's attempt to find a lasting balance between saving the spotted owl from extinction and allowing logging on Northwest national forests — something neither the Clinton nor Bush administrations could do.

Initial reactions to the new plan suggested that it changed little in the long struggle over the forests the owl has come to symbolize:

Idaho to loosen wolf-hunt rules

Hunting-tag sales are far below what they were in 2009

By John Miller and Matthew Brown
Associated Press

BOISE — Idaho wildlife managers will propose a wolf hunt without quotas in much of the state, but hunters so far have purchased only a fraction of the tags needed to kill the rangy predators, compared with the first hunt in 2009.

Having no limits on how many wolves can be killed in many hunting areas could be alarming for wildlife advocates who fear Idaho will manage wolves back into federal protection. There would still be quotas on parts of the Montana-Idaho border, where Department of Fish and Game managers seek to preserve a corridor where wolves from both states can wander back and forth and breed.

But with only about 3,100 tags sold through Thursday — compared with some 30,000 in 2009 — hunters are likely to fall well short of Idaho Department of Fish and Game's hopes of keeping predator numbers in check.

“We’re not getting near the response this year in term of tag purchases that we did that first year,” Idaho Fish and Game Deputy Director Jim Unsworth told The Associated Press.

That means officially sanctioned kills, including kills by federal agents, will likely remain the most important tool for wildlife managers.

Idaho and Montana are holding wolf hunts again this year after Congress passed a law delisting them, a move that quashed a U.S. District Court ruling that had kept them among animals protected by the Endangered Species Act.

Montana State Fish, Wildlife and Parks commissioners aim to meet July 14 to adopt a quota of 220 wolves to be killed during fall rifle and archery hunts.

Details of Idaho wildlife managers’ hunt proposal are due next Tuesday, with the Idaho Fish and Game Commission’s approval necessary before a hunt starts, likely in September.

Adoption of season regulations will come at the commissioners’ meeting July 27-28 meeting in Salmon.

Hunters killed 72 wolves in Montana in 2009 and 188 in Idaho.

Idaho’s season was extended to March 31, 2010 but hunters still fell short of reaching a 220 wolf quota.

Unsworth said this year, there will be no quotas in areas where wolves have successfully reproduced to the point that Fish and Game agents and local residents blame them for eating too many big game animals like elk and for conflicts with livestock and traditional ranching. Those areas include the Lolo area in northcentral Idaho, where the agency wants to reduce the 75 to 100 wolves estimated in the Lolo region to just 20 to 30. With as many as 1,000 wolves or more already in Idaho, Unsworth says there’s little worry the absence of quotas in some areas will result in hunters killing so many wolves that federal U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officials in charge of managing endangered or threatened species would step in. “We can always close seasons the next day,” he said. “If we’re getting concerned at all we can close the season. We’re not going to have a target. We are going to reduce them from where we’re at right now.” However, Suzanne Stone, Northern Rocky Mountains representative of the Defenders of Wildlife in Boise, called the proposal reprehensible. She said wolves are a lightning rod species, even though coyotes kill more livestock and cougars more elk per animal than wolves. “So, just open season?” Stone said. “They don’t manage any other kinds of wildlife that irresponsibly. I’m shocked to think that’s OK with wolves. This is clearly a political and knee jerk reaction, rather than a biological need.”

Montana man dies in Idaho river accident

LEWISTON (AP) — The Idaho County sheriff’s office has released the name of a 29-year-old Missoula, Mont., man who died in a rafting accident on the Lochsa River in north-central Idaho.

The sheriff’s office says Keegan Seth Ginther died Wednesday afternoon.

Officials say Ginther was rafting with four friends from Missoula when the raft flipped in the Lochsa Falls Rapid and threw all four into the water. Ginther was swept downriver.

One of the rafters, 30-year-old Bradley Applegate, was able to get to shore, flag down a passing motorist who took him downriver where he pulled Ginther out of the water. Emergency responders were unable to revive him.

A soda tax? How about a potato tax?

Los Angeles Times

The time has come, America, for a tater tax. Now that a groundbreaking study published in the New England Journal of Medicine has demonstrated that potatoes may be a bigger culprit in weight gain than sugary soft drinks or red meat, it seems appropriate to exact a little spud money. You want chips with that? Ante up.

No, we're not being serious. But politicians and health advocates nationwide are very serious about imposing taxes on the culinary villain du jour, soda pop, which is thought to be a key cause of the country's obesity epidemic. Make people pay a few extra pennies for their Pepsis, the theory goes, and they'll drink less, lose weight and save the health system money. It sounds good, but the new research out of Harvard Medical School and the Harvard School of Public Health shows why singling out a particular food may not be such a good idea.

Researchers tracked the eating habits of 120,000 health professionals from across the country over at least 12 years and found that the most fat-inducing food wasn't soft drinks but potatoes — especially french fries. People who downed an extra portion of fries daily were super-sized by 3.4 pounds on average after four years, according to the study. Next on the fat list was potato chips, which added on average 1.7 pounds. Even in non-chip form, an extra helping of potatoes added 1.3 pounds, making them worse for one's waistline than sugar-sweetened soft drinks, which added 1 pound over four years.

The science on food is evolving, with researchers constantly turning up new dietary heroes and villains and sometimes reversing themselves. Potatoes have been a staple food for centuries and are a rich source of vitamins and minerals, but the Harvard study will doubtless send their reputation down the tuber. That's what happened to coconuts. In 1994, a study from the Center for the Public Interest found that movie-theater popcorn popped in coconut oil was a coronary in a cardboard cup, hurting sales at theaters and prompting many to switch to other oils. Today, health-food stores have whole shelves devoted to non-hydro-genated coconut oil, which is now considered relatively beneficial.

Soda taxes were part of the federal health-care reform bill before being stripped out, and cities and states nationwide are considering them. We'll grant that soda pop is nearly devoid of nutritional value and that phasing it out of our diets would do more good than harm, but a tax wouldn't stop people from switching to other drinks, such as fruit juices, that are just as fattening. Tax french fries, and people would just switch to onion rings. Moreover, the next study might find that an order of fries and a Coke are better for you than previously believed.

What if GOP can't agree on debt deal?

WASHINGTON — The White House and Republican congressional leaders insist the debt ceiling will be raised well before the United States has to default, which would cause massive economic disruption. But a resolution seems less than assured. In the last few days, Republican presidential candidates Michele Bachmann and Tim Pawlenty have joined a growing conservative chorus loudly denouncing a deal, and antagonism among the various parties appears to be growing, not diminishing.

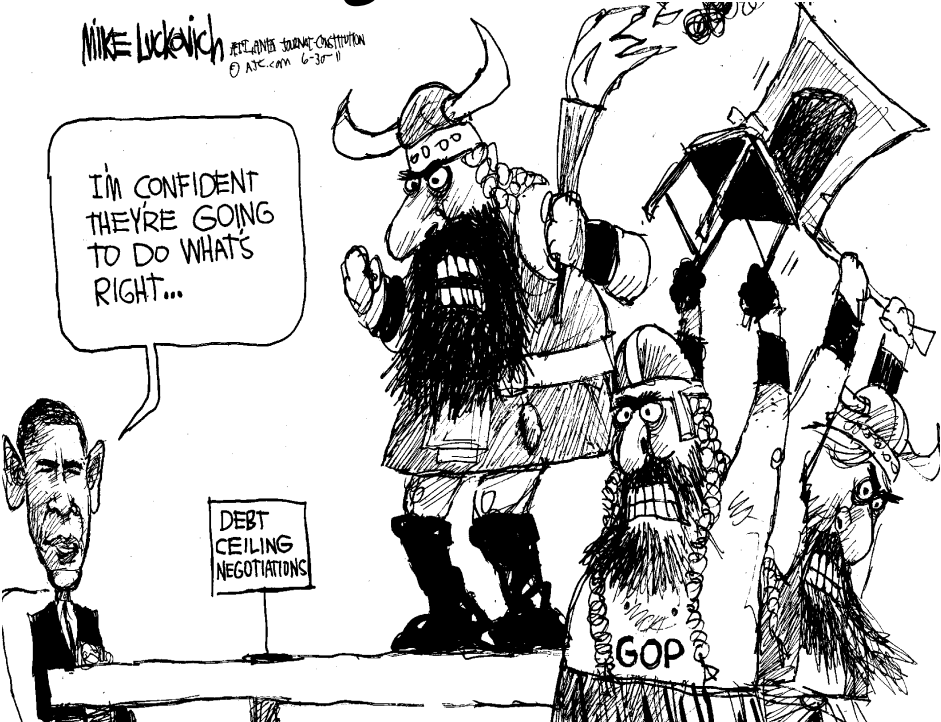

Joshua Green

Still, nobody in Washington or on Wall Street seems very alarmed. The Treasury says it can hold out until Aug. 2. But a look at the current politics and the recent history of debt-ceiling showdowns suggests that alarm might soon become warranted.

There are two reasons why. The first has to do with how difficult it will be to settle on something that can get through Congress in time to stave off any damage. This struggle has been largely misportrayed and crudely simplified as a tug-of-war between Republicans set on spending cuts and Democrats who want tax increases to accompany them. It's actually a three-way struggle, because Republicans themselves don't agree on their ransom demands to permit a larger debt.

House Republicans want to cut $2 trillion without raising any taxes or closing any loopholes. They're focused strictly on spending. But Mitch McConnell, the Republican Senate leader, wants any deal to include Medicare reform. He's focused on politics. McConnell worries that the House Republican budget passed in April, which takes the deeply unpopular step of privatizing Medicare, presents a mortal threat to Republican candidates in next fall's elections. A debt-limit deal on Medicare that drew the support of President Obama and Democrats would inoculate the GOP against this danger.

The trouble is, House Republicans don't share McConnell's concern, so an agreement among Republicans seems nearly as remote as one between Republicans and Democrats.

That gets to the second reason for alarm: the United States need not default on its debt in order to incur costly and potentially lasting damage. A February report by the Government Accountability Office examining the recent history of "debt-ceiling events" — none nearly so serious as the current one — showed that government borrowing costs began to rise well in advance of default.

Call it a taxpayer premium for congressional squabbling: the disruption of Treasury auctions and the threatened loss of liquidity among Treasury notes and bills caused billions in additional borrowing costs in the form of higher interest rates.

One reason why the debt showdown isn't causing more alarm is that interest rates have been falling. But that's due mostly to declining economic forecasts in the United States and fear of a Greek default — currently more powerful influences, but also ones that would mask worries about a US default.

At some point, perhaps as soon as in a few weeks, the fight in Congress could eclipse those factors and drive interest rates higher. That's been the historical pattern, and it is already causing worry about what might trigger such a rise. "The nervousness on our end is that the markets will misperceive what's going on," an aide to a conservative House Republican told me. "If something fails on the House floor, people might react as if all life is about to end

— just like they did when the TARP vote failed?"

That could cost taxpayers dearly, even if a default is ultimately avoided. One reason why U.S. borrowing costs are so low is the universal belief that the government will always make good on its debts in a timely manner. But if that faith is shaken — and a good scare could do the trick — investors might decide that government debt is a riskier investment than they had imagined and demand a better return.

That will hurt. The Office of Management and Budget determined that a mere 1 percent rise in interest rates would cost taxpayers $973 billion over the next decade. So a fight purportedly about cutting the deficit could actually cause it to grow much larger. That's worth worrying about now — especially as Republicans threaten a default and claim there's no cause for alarm.

Money trumps education in department's decision

Wednesday's (June 15) Times-News article on who can prepare online courses was almost unbelievable. That article stated that district superintendents were informed that online courses presented by their own qualified teachers would not meet the state's mandate for online education courses. The State Department of Education spokesman revealed that the current legislation required that "The instructor is not physically located at school or place in which the student is receiving instruction." That means that school districts cannot band together, identify their most qualified instructors in particular subjects and prepare online courses for students in other school districts. Thus classes must be prepared by a for-profit online class provider.

The reasoning behind this interpretation of the law at first is incomprehensible. There seems to be only two reasons for such an outlandish decision to be made. First possibility is that they do not believe that Idaho teachers are qualified to prepare quality online courses. The second possibility, and I believe the true logic, is that they are committed to having for-profit vendors reap the financial rewards from Idaho's educational system.

In a quote from Cliff Green, regional vice president of the for-profit Insight Schools, Mr. Green states: "It's hard to come into a state and compete with subsidy." Thus, it is obvious the issue is not who will provide the best educational product but who can wrangle the most money from Idaho's cash strapped school districts.

So while it first appears that the Idaho Department of Education's decision is unbelievably insensitive to the challenges facing our schools and their efforts to comply with the state's mandates, as you read further you understand that their decision is totally understandable. It's not about education, stupid. It's all about the money.

'Bug Crew' + bio-control equal less noxious weeds

"Bug Crew" is back once again in Lincoln County and their team is killing noxious weeds in your area! The Bug Crew monitors sites, establishes new sites, and educates the people of our community about noxious weeds and bio-control. The crew plants bugs on noxious weeds to kill them rather than killing them with pesticides, chemicals, or mowing over them. The crew this year is supervised by Sue Haffner. Crew members returning from last year include Kelcie Hutchins, Matthew Decker, Brett Riley, Elizabeth Mabbutt, and the new alternate is Thayne Hagen. We are currently looking for hoary cress and Russian knapweed to establish new sites as we are expecting to get insects for these weeds in the upcoming year. So far this year we have one new site. The weeds that we are monitoring now in Lincoln County are Canada thistle, knapweed (spotted, diffuse, Russian), purple loosestrife, leafy spurge and Dalmatian toadflax. Please report any noxious weeds in your area to Terry Ruby, tri-county weed superintendent, 934-5569.

Southern Idaho Solid Waste shouldn't have to increase its rates

The thought that reduced waste deposits might cause Southern Idaho Solid Waste to increase its rates to cover costs is the most ridiculous idea in solid waste treatment that I have heard of. It is simple "cut back on expenses." I believe in conservation and recycling, more on conservation than the other, however, not if it means charging the residents of Twin Falls more for pickup. Regardless of what Southern Idaho Solid Waste says they can cut their costs in relationship to less waste being delivered if they want to. Cut personnel through attrition. If this is an unemployment problem, so be it. Just blame it on Obama like everyone else does. Try cutting back acceptance days. In fact, solid waste is only about half of what it was before recycling. Who says solid waste has to be picked up every seven days. How about every 10 days or even 14 days? Maybe alternate it with recycling. I understand that pickup and solid waste acceptance are two different projects but they are definitely interrelated. How about different timing in acceptance for domestic waste as differentiated from commercial waste. They do not need the same compaction therefore personnel may be rotated and time and effort saved.

If Southern Idaho Solid Waste doesn't want to be more innovated perhaps the city of Twin Falls should consider going back to leasing their own depot again as they did with the Fuller property. It worked. Above all just don't expect the citizenry to bail everyone out every time something changes. As a last possibility maybe Southern Idaho Solid Waste should consider operating with just a little less profit. Oh how thoughtless.

Crack offenders may get early release

By Jessica Gresko
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — As many as 12,000 people in federal prison for crack-related crimes can get their sentences reduced as a result of a new law that brought the penalties for the drug more closely in line with those for powdered cocaine, a government commission decided Thursday.

The decision by the U.S. Sentencing Commission applies to approximately 1 in 17 inmates in the federal system.

Congress last year substantially lowered the sentences for crack-related crimes such as possession and trafficking, changing a 1980s law that was criticized as racially discriminatory because it came down extra hard on a drug common in poor, black neighborhoods.

The question before the commission Thursday was whether people already locked up under the old law should benefit retroactively from the changes. The six-member commission unanimously decided in their favor.

“I believe that the commission has no choice but to make this right,” said Ketanji Brown Jackson, a vice chairwoman of the commission. “I say justice demands this result.”

The NAACP was among the groups praising the commission’s action.

A plastic container of crack — the smokable, purified form of cocaine — is displayed at a Boston news conference in June 1986.

About 85 percent of the inmates expected to benefit from the decision are black.

“This is just another step in us righting a wrong, fixing failed criminal justice policy,” said Robert Rooks, national criminal justice director for the NAACP.

The commission’s action is final unless Congress decides by the end of October to intervene, and that is considered unlikely.

Prisoners will have to petition a judge for a sentence reduction, and requests will be decided on a case-by-case basis, with the court taking into consideration the defendant’s behavior in prison and danger to society. Prosecutors will be allowed to weigh in. The earliest anyone could get out is November.

According to the commission, approximately 12,000 of the roughly 200,000 people in federal prisons will be eligible to have their sentences cut. The average reduction is expected to be about three years. Inmates convicted under state law will not be affected.

The federal Bureau of Prisons estimates that over the first five years the change will save $200 million.

In its ruling Thursday the commission took a broad view of who should benefit from the lower sentences, though various groups had urged the panel to act more narrowly.

Attorney General Eric Holder, for example, argued that prisoners who used weapons during their crimes or who have extensive criminal records should not be entitled to a break. That would have cut the number of eligible prisoners in half, to approximately 6,000.

Prospects dim for Minnesota budget deal; shutdown near

By Martiga Lohn
and Patrick Condon
Associated Press

ST. PAUL, Minn. — A sweeping shutdown of Minnesota’s state government appeared certain as a midnight deadline approached, with Democratic Gov. Mark Dayton and top Republicans breaking off negotiations to accuse the other side of stubbornness.

Republicans said a deal was close and pleaded with Dayton to agree to a bare-bones budget bill to avert a shutdown while they come back in special session next week to wrap things up.

Dayton rejected it as a publicity stunt, saying the two sides aren’t close at all, and called on Republicans again to agree to hike taxes on top earners. Asked whether there was any way to stop a shutdown, Dayton said: “I’m not aware of it.”

A shutdown would force thousands of layoffs, bring road projects to a standstill and close state parks just ahead of the Fourth of July weekend. The effects were already being felt hours ahead of the deadline, as people rushed Thursday to get driver’s and fishing licenses, and park officials began warning campers to pack their gear and leave.

Gov. Mark Dayton speaks during a news conference hours before the midnight deadline to pass a budget at the Minnesota State Capitol Thursday in St. Paul, Minn.

Though nearly all states are having severe budget problems this year, Minnesota stood alone on the brink of a shutdown, thanks to Democratic Gov. Mark Dayton’s determination to raise taxes on high-earners to close a $5 billion deficit and the Republican Legislature’s insistence that the gap should be closed by cutting spending.

Negotiations between Dayton and legislative leaders were fitful, starting and stopping with no outward signs of progress, and details were scant, since the two sides agreed to what they jokingly called “the cone of silence.”

Republican Sen. Michelle Benson said she wasn’t budging.

“If we don’t start taking a different approach to how we manage our government, we’re going to swing from one bad economic circumstance to another,” Benson said. “We can’t just keep throwing more money at government and hoping that makes things better.”

Glenn Beck’s Fox News finale is vintage visit to the ‘Doom Room’

By Paul Farhi
The Washington Post

Goodbye to the big blackboard. Goodbye to the turn-it-on tears. Goodbye, too, to the supertime serving of anger, conspiracy and the coming apocalypse.

Glenn Beck — populist ranter, Barack Obama scourge, self-described “rodeo clown” — stepped away from his biggest stage Thursday. After a volcanic rise and a muddled denouement lasting just 30 tumultuous months, the host ended his run on the Fox News Channel, going out with what sounded almost like a threat: “For those members of media who are celebrating (his departure) . . . you will pray for the time I was only on the air for one hour a day.”

Beck’s Fox finale was a vintage visit to what he once referred to as the “doom room.” Like a teacher reviewing his lessons before the final, he offered viewers a last look at “Things We’ve Learned” — a synopsis of fear — on his ever-present blackboard. On the lengthy list: “The Fed;” “Woodrow Wilson;” “ACORN;” “The caliphate;”

“We have taught things and learned things together that we never knew,” he said. “We’ve learned a lot together. . . . We’ve done amazing things together.”

There were no tears, but there was plenty of sentimentality and self-congratulation. Beck thanked his production crew and his viewers, as well as Fox News chief Roger Ailes and Ailes’s boss, News Corp. chief Rupert Murdoch.

Beck suggested that his departure was his own call, planned many months ago, but even Ailes has muddled those waters. Given Beck’s declining ratings and growing radioactivity among advertisers, the network has left it unclear whether Beck jumped or was pushed. “Half of the headlines say he’s been canceled,” Ailes told the Associated Press in April. “The other half say he quit. We’re pretty happy with both of them.”

At his peak last year, Beck’s audience at 5 p.m. — nearly 3 million — exceeded the combined viewing of all his time slot competitors in cable news. It also rivaled that of cable news’s leading prime-time attraction, Fox’s Bill O’Reilly. Beck once rated the cover of Time magazine, which headlined its article “Mad Man;” and asked a provocative question: “Is Glenn Beck Bad for America?”

More than one commentator has noted that Beck’s rapid rise reflected acute anxiety over the financial crisis and recession. Equally so, Beck’s fade-out might mirror the softening of the crisis or just its weary acceptance.

Nevertheless, Beck isn’t generating his old heat he once did. He has lately struggled to attract half as many viewers as he once did.

As a conservative political polemicist and clarion of anti-Obama rage, Beck, 47, often danced near the edge of reason and sometimes tumbled madly over it. On Fox, he mixed messages of self-empowerment, patriotism and religious appeals with recycled theories about a conspiracy to impose a New World Order.

Appearing on Fox News’s morning show in mid-2009, he asserted that President Obama was a “racist” who harbors “a deep-seated hatred for white people.”

He has variously described Obama as a Marxist, a socialist and a fascist.

In November, Beck launched a three-part attack on billionaire philanthropist and Democratic Party contributor George Soros as the “puppetmaster” of a global plot to subvert governments, including the United States.

Accuser’s credibility doubted in case against IMF leader

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Prosecutors have serious questions about the credibility of a hotel housekeeper who has accused former International Monetary Fund leader Dominique Strauss-Kahn of raping her, and they are taking the extraordinary step of seeking a substantial reduction in his pricey bail, a person familiar with the case said Thursday.

The person, who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss matters not yet made public in court, told The Associated Press that prosecutors have raised issues about the accuser’s credibility in the case against Strauss-Kahn, but would not elaborate on what those issues were.

A separate law enforcement official who is familiar with the case, but not authorized to speak about it publicly, told the AP that the issue was not necessarily about the rape accusation itself, but about troubling questions surrounding the alleged victim’s background that could damage her credibility on the witness stand. The official refused to elaborate.

The New York Police Department, which investigated the case, declined comment. The woman’s lawyer did not immediately return a telephone call seeking comment.

Man who invented Weed Eater dies at 85

HOUSTON (AP) — George C. Ballas Sr., a Houston entrepreneur best known for inventing the Weed Eater, has died. He was 85.

Ballas’ son, Corky Ballas, told AP on Wednesday that his father died of natural causes on Saturday.

“He changed the way we cut grass,” Corky Ballas said.

Ballas got the idea for the Weed Eater, a device also commonly known as a weed whacker, while sitting in a car wash. He wondered whether the idea of spinning bristles, like the ones cleaning his car, could be applied to trimming grass and weeds in areas a lawnmower couldn’t reach.

He experimented with fishing wire that poked through holes in a tin can attached to the rotary of a lawn edger, and found that the spinning wires easily sliced through grass. The Houston Chronicle reported.

He later sold his invention to Emerson Electric. As part of his agreement with Emerson, Ballas was not allowed to disclose how much he was paid.

Recess canceled; Senate to stay in capital next week to work on debt

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate canceled its planned July Fourth recess on Thursday, but partisan divisions remained razor sharp as the clock ticked on efforts to strike a deal to avoid a government default and trim huge federal deficits.

A day after President Barack Obama accused congressional leaders of procrastinating over the impasse, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., announced that the chamber would meet beginning next Tuesday. The Republican-run House is not in session this week but had already been scheduled to be at work next week.

Despite the Senate's schedule change, there was no indication the two sides had progressed in resolving their chief disagreement. Democrats insist that a deficit-cutting package of deep spending cuts also include higher taxes for the wealthiest Americans and fewer tax breaks for oil companies. Republicans say any such agreement would be defeated in Congress, a point Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., made anew when he invited Obama to meet with GOP lawmakers at the Capitol on Thursday afternoon.

"That way he can hear directly from Republicans why what he's proposing won't pass," McConnell said on the Senate floor. "And we can start talking about what's actually possible."

The stakes of the debate were underscored when a Standard & Poor's executive said Thursday the credit-rating agency would give the government its lowest rating should lawmakers fail to agree on raising the borrowing limit and cause a federal default.

Should that occur, S&P would drop the U.S. rating of AAA to D, John Chambers, managing director of sovereign ratings for the company, said on Bloomberg Television.

McConnell's invitation to Obama seemed almost like a taunt, since well before McConnell spoke the White House had announced that Obama was heading to Philadelphia to attend Democratic fundraising events.

In Philadelphia, the president was met outside one fundraising event by protesters demanding less spending.

Later, at a donor's home, he reiterated his call for spending cuts and new tax revenues.

"The truth is you could figure out on the back of a napkin how to get this thing done," he said. "The question is one of political will."

White House spokesman Jay Carney defended Obama's decision to attend the fundraisers, saying, "We can walk and chew gum at the same time." He also said McConnell had merely "invited the president to hear what would not pass. That's not a conversation worth having."

Pocatello boasts best fuel prices

Times-News

The kids are loaded, the dogs kenneled, and the cooler in the backseat is filled with enough snacks to hopefully keep everyone happy.

For the drivers who'll ferry the 39 million Americans AAA expects will travel 50 miles or more to enjoy this holiday weekend, the biggest vacation challenge may actually come after they set off: where to get a deal on gas.

Pocatello. That's the easy answer in Idaho, according to AAA, as the average cost of a gallon of regular gas there was $3.39 on Wednesday — 25 cents lower than the state norm.

But for those not headed to or through "The Gateway to the Northwest," the decision of where to stop can be trickier. Mini-Cassia is home to south-central Idaho's lowest average gas prices, as a gallon of regular is selling for $3.57 on average. That'll bode well for travelers headed to Salt Lake City and beyond on Interstate 84.

On the flip side, those headed to or through the Wood River Valley should fuel up before rubbing noses with the Sawtooths, where average per-gallon prices range from $3.76 in Bellevue to $3.87 in Ketchum.

While factors ranging from competition to a station's distance from wholesale suppliers can swing gas prices, a nearly 50-cent difference between stations within the same state is unusual.

"These prices are all over the board and the range seems uncharacteristically large," AAA spokesman Dave Carlson said in a written release.

The good news, according to AAA, is that drivers headed out of the Gem State might find a comparative deal at their destinations — the national average for a gallon of gas is $3.54.

Auto dealerships spruce up

Ryan LaFountain points out features in his customer waiting room at LaFountain Cadillac in Highland Township, Mich. Across the country, dealers are spending millions, adding comfy leather chairs, oak walls and theatrical lighting. There are even hair salons, restaurants and putting greens.

Dealers pamper customers — but is it getting out of hand?

By Tom Krisher

Associated Press writer

DETROIT — Spending a Saturday afternoon at the typical car dealership is not exactly pampering yourself. Drab floors, battered furniture, weak coffee in a paper cup. And that's before the salesman abandons you for half an hour to "check with my manager."

But Detroit automakers are finally stable after their brush with death, and most dealers can afford to spend a little money to spruce up the showroom. So they're adding leather chairs, rich oak walls, theatrical lighting — even hair salons.

The improvements can cost from $200,000 to $15 million. But dealers say it's worth it because people expect a more memorable, luxurious experience these days as they make one of the biggest purchases of their lives.

"If we don't meet that expectation, we will not compete," says Richard Bazy, who plans to spend more than $1 million each to renovate his two Ford dealerships in the Pittsburgh suburbs, including brushed-aluminum exteriors and mahogany and maple furniture.

Whether it helps sales is up for debate in the industry. Nicer surroundings may draw people in, but they also raise costs and let dealers with shabbier buildings sell for less.

Bazy says he'll pay for the upgrades without help from Ford, but sometimes automakers will kick in. Some dealers have spent millions on their own, while others were forced to by automakers.

General Motors, Ford and Chrysler have been trying for years to get dealers to spiff up, but they're pushing harder now. Honda and Toyota have similar programs. There are specifications for uniform signs, paint colors and furniture as automakers try to make dealers look alike and create a unified image for their brands.

Dealerships that sell luxury cars have been one-upping each other for years, but the contest is moving into everyday brands. Some dealers say it's getting out of hand and the customer will wind up absorbing the additional cost.

After all, who really needs a putting green when they're sizing up a new ride?

"There's a point here where I think it's excessive," says Gary Dilts, a former Chrysler sales chief who now runs a consulting business. "How much cappuccino are you willing to pay for?"

Detroit automakers can afford to turn their attention to modernizing dealerships because the existential crisis of 2009, when

Burley Dot employees win company's forklift rodeo

Times-News

Call an event a rodeo and there's a strong chance someone from south-central Idaho will be pretty good at it.

About a week after a number of area cowboys and cowgirls had strong showings in the state's high school finals and college national championships, a pair of Mini-Cassia residents claimed titles in a different type of rodeo.

Josh Hall and Nick Blayney, both employees of Dot Foods' Burley distribution center, finished first in their disciplines at the company's Grand National Forklift Rodeo Finals on June 23. Their win earned the Burley center bragging rights as the competition's all-around champion.

Hall, a Burley resident, finished first in the forklift competition, while Heyburn's Blayney won in the narrow-aisle category. A company release states that the obstacle-course competition, held in Mt. Sterling, Ill., encourages safety and efficient equipment operation. Thirty Dot employees participated.

For their winning times, Hall and Blayney each won a free vacation sponsored by the company. Dot's Burley location is at 1541 W. 27th St.

Couples need to discuss details about retirement

By David Pitt

Associated Press writer

DES MOINES, Iowa — Workers have become more involved in retirement planning but too often just one member of the family takes care of investments and strategy, leaving the spouse unprepared to take over if needed.

Fidelity Investments says 41 percent of the couples surveyed in May handle retirement investment decisions together. That means just one person — usually the husband — handles the retirement planning for a majority of families.

More worrisome is the fact that only 17 percent of couples say either spouse is prepared to assume sole responsibility of their retirement finances if necessary.

Women, who are more likely to survive their husbands, are not at all confident that they could take over. Just 35 percent of wives say they are completely confident in their ability to do so, while 72 percent of husbands say they can.

"The life expectancy for a woman on average is about three years longer than a man so there's a likelihood that the wife will have to manage the retirement finances alone or at least be the primary decision maker at some point in time in retirement," said Chris McDermott, senior vice president of retirement and financial planning at Fidelity.

Larger corn crop could slow food inflation

John Lyons unloads a truck full of corn at the Farmers Elevator Company in Auburn, Ill.

ST. LOUIS (AP) — U.S. food prices may ease later this year now that farmers have planted the second-largest corn crop in nearly seven decades.

The size of this year's corn crop will be 92.3 million acres, the U.S. Agriculture Department said Thursday. That's 9 percent larger than the average annual corn crop over the past decade. The only crop bigger in the past 67 years was planted in 2007.

Many analysts had worried that wet weather this spring would cut the number of corn acres. But record-high prices are encouraging farmers to use more acres for corn, and less for soybeans and wheat.

A greater crop estimate drove corn futures down 30 cents to close at nearly $6.21 per bushel. That's the maximum price change allowed by futures exchanges. Corn rose to a record high of $7.99 per bushel earlier this month.

More expensive grain has led to food price increases this year. That could ultimately make everything from beef to cereal to soft drinks more expensive at the supermarket. For all of 2011, the USDA predicts food prices will rise 3 percent to 4 percent.

A huge harvest in August could ultimately slow food inflation. It typically takes six months for changes in commodity prices

Dealerships

GM and Chrysler went bankrupt, is behind them. All three Detroit automakers are profitable again for the first time in nearly seven years.

The dealerships could use the attention. Many have buildings that date to Detroit's boom years in the 1950s and '60s — and it shows. Competitors came along in the '70s, the time of the Arab oil embargo and long lines for gasoline, when Americans began shifting to more fuel-efficient foreign cars. Toyota and Honda dealers blossomed with shiny buildings, especially in the suburbs.

In the '80s and '90s, Detroit's market share sank further, and it ended up with too many dealerships in more rundown neighborhoods, all fighting over fewer sales. Cheap desks and fake plants had to do.

Detroit tried to get its dealerships, which operate as independent franchises, to spruce up in the 1990s and 2000s. Some did; others wouldn't or couldn't afford to. Then came the financial crisis of 2008.

Many dealers who made it through were targeted by Detroit companies for closure. GM and Chrysler cut dealers during their 2009 bankruptcies while Ford was easing dealers out, all with the idea of selling more cars with less competition.

All told, the Detroit car-makers shed more than a quarter of their dealers between 2008 and the start of this year, when they had about 10,000, according to the trade publication Automotive News. Since the survivors are selling more cars, the companies want them to invest.

The average U.S. dealership has been in the same place for almost 28 years, and nearly half the buildings haven't been renovated in more than five years, the National Automobile Dealers Association found in a survey.

While automakers are pressing mainstream-brand dealers to spruce up, the pressure is even more intense on luxury dealers, especially Cadillac and Lincoln.

Many of those dealerships are worn out compared with Lexus and BMW.

GM is pushing Cadillac dealers to separate showrooms and service entrances from other GM brands, and it expects wooden walls, leather furniture, and fancy tile and carpet. Ford's struggling Lincoln brand has a similar program, prodding dealers to spend at least $1 million each.

At Suburban Cadillac-Chevrolet near Ann Arbor, Mich., the first dealership renovated under a new GM program, both sides of the 41-year-old building were upgraded this year. The luxury side got the best amenities, but Chevy got attention, too.

There's a cappuccino machine in the Cadillac waiting area and coffee on the Chevy side. The Chevy walls are a freshly painted bright yellow, while they're English oak on the luxury side. Cadillac salesmen have separate office space; Chevy salesmen share new cubicles.

Renovation of the once-dingy building cost around $4 million, and Mike Mosser, the general manager, said it's now nicer than the Lexus store down the street.

Even with the upgrade, Mosser would have a hard time out-classing Performance Lexus, a dealer in Cincinnati's upscale suburbs. It has a fitness center, a white grand piano and a lounge with a home theater. It's worth $9 million, according to tax records.

Although automakers often say they aren't requiring the upgrades, they can take steps such as withholding hot-selling models to force improvements, said Dilts, the ex-Chrysler sales chief. The dealers association worries that dealerships could start struggling again if they have to borrow too much money for a makeover.

But for others, upgrades are good business. Ryan Lafontaine, whose family-owned group spent $15 million two years ago to build a sparkling Cadillac-Buick-GMC dealer with a hair salon and restaurant, said he covers the costs by selling more cars than other dealers north of Detroit. He ranked second in the nation last year in Buick and GMC sales.

"We're getting customers into our building that maybe we wouldn't have gotten an opportunity to talk to or wow," he says.

YESTERDAY ON WALL STREET

NEW YORK (AP) — Four days, 480 points. That's how the Dow Jones industrial average closed the final four days of June. The Dow added more than 150 points on Thursday alone after Greece cleared the final hurdle needed to receive its next installment of emergency loans. A pickup in manufacturing around Chicago also pushed indexes higher.

The weeklong rally began Monday when Nike Inc. reported quarterly results that showed that consumers were spending more than expected. The stock market's gains put it on track for the best week since July of last year.

It was a stunning reversal from the beginning of the month, when the Dow dropped nearly 280 points in one day. The first day of June, reports showed that auto sales fell sharply in May and that private companies were hiring far fewer people than expected. The late surge was not enough to turn the broader stock market positive for the month, but it brought the Dow up 0.8 percent for the quarter. The Standard and Poor's 500 index and Nasdaq composite each lost about 0.3 percent for the month.

Federal jobless tax for employers expiring quietly

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly every private employer in the U.S. will get a tax cut today.

It won't affect workers' paychecks. But the expiration of a 35-year-old "temporary" unemployment tax — about $14 a year per worker — will mean real money for some big companies at a time when President Barack Obama is pushing Congress to raise taxes on businesses by closing some loopholes.

Amid a fierce debate over whether higher taxes should be part of a deal to reduce annual deficits — in exchange for letting the government go further into debt — the small cut in federal unemployment taxes has received little attention on Capitol Hill. Most employers probably don't even know they are getting it, especially those who are being hit with bigger increases in state jobless taxes.

But business groups say every little bit helps, whether you're a small employer struggling to make a payroll or a huge company like Wal-Mart, with more than 1.4 million U.S. workers. That's nearly $20 million a year in savings for Wal-Mart.

Some worry that reducing federal unemployment taxes while the jobless rate hovers above 9 percent will add to the system's financial problems. But the tax cut will save businesses nationwide more than $14 billion over the next decade, according to congressional estimates.

Retire

Husbands and wives should know where critical documents are kept and what they would need to do if their spouse is no longer able to assist with financial decision-making. Both also should have an understanding of the family's finances and the savings and investment goals. They should become active in financial planning. Both should meet with the family's financial adviser.

The survey also suggests husbands and wives don't talk enough about fundamental facts of retirement living. Consider these results:

- 33 percent said they don't agree or don't know where they plan to retire.
- 62 percent of couples approaching retirement don't agree on the age at which they will stop working.

- 47 percent of couples approaching retirement don't agree on whether they will continue to work in retirement.

Those are some very basic factors used to determine how much money couples will have to live on in retirement, McDermott said. They need to talk about and be on the same page on these matters.

Boston-based Fidelity, one of the country's largest individual retirement account and workplace retirement plan providers, surveyed 648 married couples with a household income of at least $75,000 or at least $100,000 in investable assets. Respondents had to be at least age 46, married and living with their spouse to be included.

Scientists show new images of Titanic

By Steve Szkotak
Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. — Scientists showed some never-before-seen images of the Titanic in a Virginia courtroom Thursday, unveiling dramatic three-dimensional views of the rusting hulk and the ghostly images of the sea floor where the ship sank almost a century ago.

The Titanic struck ice while making its maiden voyage on April 12, 1912, about 400 miles off Newfoundland, Canada. More than 1,500 of the 2,228 passengers and crew perished as the liner plunged into the deep. The images taken from a remote-controlled submersible vehicle were shown to a judge Thursday amid an ongoing salvage claim involving the world's most famous shipwreck.

Scientists who took part in a 2010 expedition to the North Atlantic wreck site said the images are the most extensive and highest quality ever taken of the Titanic. The expedition also fully mapped the 3-by-5-mile wreck site, which is 2 1/2 miles below the ocean's surface. The experts said the entire debris field has now been documented for the first time.

The new images will ultimately be assembled for public viewing, scientists said, and to help oceanographers and archaeologists explain the ship's violent descent to the ocean bottom. It is also intended to provide answers on the state of the wreck, which scientists say is showing increasing signs of deterioration.

The findings were presented in a federal courtroom in Norfolk where a salvage claim is still being decided 26 years after the Titanic was discovered by oceanographer Robert Ballard.

LEBANON Militant wanted in former PM's killing

BEIRUT — A high-ranking Hezbollah militant linked to the 1983 truck bombings at the U.S. and French embassies in Kuwait was among four people indicted Thursday by an international tribunal in the assassination of Lebanon's former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri.

The implication of Hezbollah, the dominant player in Lebanon's new government, threatens to plunge this Arab nation on Israel's northern border into a new and violent crisis. The Shiite militant group denies any role in the killing.

GREECE Greece clears final hurdle to get bailout

ATHENS — Greece has faced down street violence and strikes for the sake of financial aid it was promised and needs to avoid bankruptcy. Now its fellow European countries will be expected to come up with a second rescue package to convince investors that the 17-nation euro will survive the debt crisis.

A new austerity package that lawmakers cleared in Athens is required to get more rescue loans but will force deep changes on all parts of society. Minimum wages will be taxed more and key assets like water, gas and oil companies will be sold, possibly to foreigners.

Having done what it was asked, Greece will now look to its bailout creditors to hold up their side of the bargain.

AFGHANISTAN NATO blames Haqqani for attack on hotel

KABUL — The U.S.-led coalition on Thursday blamed an al-Qaida affiliated network working jointly with Taliban fighters for a deadly attack on a luxury hotel in Kabul — an assault that raised doubts about the ability of Afghan forces to handle security as foreign troops withdraw.

The coalition also reported that a leader with the Haqqani network suspected of having provided weapons, fighters and training to the gunmen who attacked the Inter-Continental hotel was killed Wednesday night in an airstrike. Ismail Jan, the deputy to the senior Haqqani commander in Afghanistan, and other Haqqani fighters died in the airstrike in Gardez, the provincial capital of Paktia province, the coalition said.

What would Princess Diana be like at 50?

By Robert Barr
Associated Press

LONDON — Princess Diana would have been 50 years old on Friday, perhaps the only certainty about what might have been in a life abruptly cut short by a 1997 car crash in Paris, with a new boyfriend, two months past her 36th birthday.

Officially, there are no plans for marking the birth anniversary; Prince William, Diana's elder son, will be in Canada on Friday with his wife Catherine on their first big international tour as husband and wife.

But the "what if?" questions abound as the world looks back on Diana's life and legacy.

Andrew Morton, the British journalist who was Diana's confidant and collaborator on an explosive book about the marriage turmoil that led to a royal divorce, believes she might now be living in the United States.

"A lot more billionaires live in America than in Britain," Morton said in an interview with The Associated Press in Los Angeles.

"And she probably would have snagged a guy with all the toys; you know, the guy with the private jet, the boat and the house in the Hamptons. Maybe started a second family. She always wanted a baby girl, and that was an ambition that she held very dear."

Diana, in 1997

A new life in America is exactly the future imagined by British writer Monica Ali in her new novel "Untold Story." It depicts a princess closely modeled on Diana who fakes her own death, changes her name and rebuilds her life in a small American town — until the paparazzi who dogged her past threaten catch up with her.

The enduring fascination Diana commands in the United States was in evidence on the latest cover of Newsweek, which showed a computer-generated image of Diana at 50, strolling next to William's bride.

The image, which came under widespread criticism for being "creepy," was for an article by Newsweek editor-in-chief Tina Brown titled "If She Were Here Now."

However irresistible that question is to some, Diana's former secretary Patrick Jephson says the speculation is "entertaining perhaps, but hardly useful."

"The first Mrs. Wales might by now be solving conflicts, banishing poverty, feeding the world's hungry or even breeding spaniels in happy rural obscurity. Alas, we will never know," Jephson said in a commentary for The Daily Telegraph newspaper.

"Instead we have an even greater enigma. Why is it that 14 years after her death she continues to figure so large in popular imagination?"

For 'Music Man,' barbershop quartet harmonizes in overtime

By Eva Stutzman ♦ Times-News writer

Four nights a week, three hours a night, for two months Ryker Harris, McKenzie Manning, Barrett Manning and Michael Kezele have honed their barbershop quartet skills. And those are just the scheduled rehearsals. The Twin Falls teens can't even calculate the additional time they have spent missing work and friends for JuMP Co.'s upcoming production of "The Music Man."

"We have rehearsal on Wednesday night, so I had to give up Scouts," said Barrett Manning, 14.

All four barbershoppers have sacrificed something — concerts, vacations — to be a part of the quartet. They took up their roles like jobs, learning to dance, sing and execute their lines with perfect accuracy.

"It's been intense, but it's been fun," said Kezele, 16.

The four boys' dedication stands out even in a cast full of hard workers, director Jud Harmon said.

"The barbershop quartet has really been doing triple duty," Harmon said.

"The Music Man," opening Wednesday at College of Southern Idaho, depicts con man and traveling salesman Harold Hill as he teaches the town of River City, Iowa, to play instruments. The musical requires every actor, whether he has one line or 100, to learn to sing and dance multiple numbers. Children as young as 8 were recruited for the cast, and they have dedicated just as much time as the rest of the actors.

Though he is only a third-grader, 8-year-old Alex Carpenter sang and danced four nights a week for two months. The process was not work but fun, and the final performances will be too, Carpenter said.

"The little kids learn pretty quick," said Stephanie Hass, a JuMP Co. parent who has done publicity for the show. "It's really surprising."

T.F. — JEROME DISPLAY Watch fireworks the right way

By Eva Stutzman
Times-News writer

The annual Fourth of July fireworks display will see yet another year in Twin Falls, and with it come family traditions, visitors and traffic jams.

With the joining of funds from Jerome and Twin Falls, the display will be slightly longer than last year, about 25 to 30 minutes total, and will cause more people to be on the roads traveling to and from College of Southern Idaho, said Don Hall, one of the event's organizers and fundraisers.

At dusk Monday, roughly 10 p.m., the fireworks will be fired on the north side of North College Road beside CSI's new Health Sciences and Human Services Building.

The fireworks committee drew Dotti Roberts' name out of a raffle as the button pusher. She and a representative from Magic Valley Mall, which donated the most money, will detonate the display's first and last rockets.

"No one will be allowed within 100 feet of the fireworks," said Neil Christensen, the official pyrotechnics expert for this year's display. "I recommend people steer clear of that side of campus."

North College Road will close at 7 p.m. during Monday's preparation, and Falls Avenue will be closed starting at 9 p.m., said Staff Sgt. Dennis Pullin of the Twin Falls Police Department.

"Due to construction on Washington Street, we will be diverting all traffic leaving the campus towards Blue Lakes Boulevard," Pullin said.

While Christensen prepares the fireworks on the north side of campus, vendors will supply food and

Auditions seek all-Hispanic cast for Twin Falls playwright's ghost story

By Eva Stutzman
Times-News writer

Do you remember your parents telling you stories to teach you to behave? The Hispanic ghost story of La Llorona — the weeping woman — is that kind of story.

Twin Falls writer Patricia Marcantonio and the Magic Valley Arts Council transformed Marcantonio's short story based on the legend into a play. The play, "Tears for Llorona," has lessons for many age groups and will be featured as one of the weekend activities for the Hispanic Heritage Festival in August.

The arts council will hold auditions for the all-Hispanic cast July 6-7, and the play will be performed Aug. 11-13.

"We are still working on the concept," said James Haycock, Twin Falls High School's drama teacher and director of "Tears for Llorona." "It is a creepy ghost story, but it also has strong moral undertones. It focuses Pull on your sandals and stock the cooler with ice. Who cares if crowded campgrounds kept you home? You've got as many ways to relax this weekend as Magic Valley has friendly towns.

Rupert is celebrating Independence Day with lawnmower races and a melodrama. Buhl is doing it with the trout feed, firehose competition and anvil firing of its annual Sagebrush Days. Patriotism takes the form of a multi-church concert in Burley. And Hailey marks the holiday with an Old West shootout and parade, followed by an ice cream social and a bunch of crazy bike races.

Fireworks will shoot up all over the valley. But the headlining display is in Twin Falls, where a partnership with Jerome organizers has funded a fireworks show that's guaranteed to clog the streets on Monday night. So find your spot to watch early in the day — while browsing vendor booths and listening to the Twin Falls Municipal Band on the south side of the canyon, or competing in Jerome's bus pull and dancing in the street on the north side.

Despite all of the weekend's Fourth of July fun, the arts are still getting their due.

Tonight, you can sip wine and nibble hors d'oeuvres while perusing exhibits at Ketchum's Gallery Walk. Sun Valley's summer ice shows start Saturday with U.S. gold medalists Mirai Nagasu and Nathan Chen. Today through Monday, Ketchum and Hailey will be positively loaded with the antiques of three simultaneous shows.

And trouble comes to River City on Wednesday, as theater troupe JuMP Co.'s production of "The Music Man" opens in Twin Falls. Its cast of almost 80 kids is beautifully costumed and well drilled in the song-and-dance numbers. That's a show I don't intend to miss.

Master watercolor techniques

Times-News

Joyce DeFord will teach a two-day watercolor workshop for the Twin Falls Center for the Arts.

The class is for beginners to advanced students and will cover watercolor techniques such as washes, textures and color layering. Students will produce a finished painting each day. The second day they'll work with more advanced techniques including still life, floral landscape painting and more use of mixed color and values.

The workshop is set for 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. July 16-17 then will run again from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Aug. 13-14 at the center, 195 River Vista Place in Twin Falls. Cost for the two-day class is $125 for Magic Valley Arts Council members and $145 for others. Cost to attend one day is $75 for members and $95 for others.

Beginner kits of materials will be available for $70.

Pre-registration is required: 734-2787.

on taking responsibility for your actions and being a good mother."

Because the story is such a big part of Hispanic culture, it was chosen to be incorporated into the heritage celebration; however, the play will also bridge cultural gaps by focusing on the story's moral issues, said Carolyn White, program director for Magic Valley Arts Council

"It is a morality story," White said.

The adaptation requires only Hispanic actors, as all the characters are Hispanic. It would be ideal if the cast were completely bilingual so that one performance could be done in Spanish, White said.

"It will be a challenging play for some of our leads, because they have to portray strong emotion on stage as well as portray different ages," Haycock said. "It really skips generations."

The story of La Llorona has been passed down through generations, changing slightly over the years. However, the core values the legend depicts have stayed the same. The story is about the justice of God and the punishment for sin, White said.

drinks for those who decide to watch the fireworks from the south side of campus. Vendors will set up between noon and 1 p.m. on Monday. The Twin Falls Municipal Band will play a patriotic concert and sing-along at 8 p.m. on campus.

"This is the first time we have had the vendors at CSI," Hall said. The 10 vendors on campus will include Canyon Crest and Jamba Juice, and their booth registration fees will go toward next year's fireworks display.

Organizers expect large crowds and advise patrons to come early and to find spots to watch and park before 9 p.m.

However, there are also places outside of CSI to watch the fireworks. With a variety of events happening at the Jerome County Fair Grounds — pancake breakfast at 8 a.m., patriotic celebration at noon, bus pull competition at 5 p.m. and street dance at 7 p.m. — Jerome organizers point out that there are many places to watch from the north side of the Snake River Canyon rim.

"We will be announcing the time at the street dance here in Jerome," said Rbrt Groves, event chairman in Jerome. "Something like, 'It's 9:30, last call to go to the fireworks.'"

As always, Locally Owned Radio will synchronize music to the fireworks show and broadcast it on all four of its FM stations.

"My family has a tradition of cranking up the radio in someone's car and putting out our lawn chairs where we can see it," said Ruth Pierce, one of the Twin Falls fundraisers. Pierce will watch the fireworks display

Kids can fill a week with art-project fun

Times-News

Twin Falls Center for the Arts will offer a week of "Have Fun with Art" classes for grades four through eight, taught by Amy Botz.

Class is 10-11:30 a.m. July 18-22. Cost for the week is $50 for Magic Valley Arts Council members and $65 for others. Supplies are included.

Day 1: Students will learn about primary, secondary and complementary colors and create a flower still life in pastels.

Day 2: Students will use recycled material to create a sculpture of an animal.

Day 3: They'll learn to make layered pictures with various color and monotone magazine cutouts and abstract shapes.

Day 4: They'll make their own beads and decorate them with textures and paint.

Day 5: They'll create mini-books and cards with paper, stamps, stickers and ribbons.

Pre-registration is required: 734-2787.

Hailey offers big, bold Independence Day fun

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

Erwin Kett hails from Germany. But that doesn't prevent him from donning pinstriped pants and a blue blazer and topping off his bushy white beard with Uncle Sam's stovepipe hat on the Fourth of July.

"It's a little unusual, isn't it, him being German and being Uncle Sam. But he's got the beard and loves to do it," Marlis Kett said.

Erwin Kett said he doesn't remember how he got started parading through Hailey, shouting "Happy Fourth" and posing for pictures with youngsters. "But you know how it is. Once you start, you can't stop."

Kett will be at it again on Monday when Hailey celebrates 130 years of history with this year's Fourth of July Parade, said Hailey Chamber of Commerce director Heather Lamonica Deckard.

The Black Jack Shootout Gang will take to the streets between 11 a.m. and noon near The Mint on Main Street, and the parade will follow at noon. The day's events will culminate in fireworks accompanied by a performance of the 25th Army Band at Fox Acres Park on Fox Acres Drive.

Here are the Wood River Valley's other holiday activities:

Children's Carnival: Spirit n' Motion Athletic School plans a Children's Carnival from 9 a.m. to noon Monday on the farmers market lot next to Bank of America on Hailey's Main Street.

Road Apple Roulette: Hailey Rotary Foundation will hold its popular contest during the parade. Main Street will be sectioned off into 10,000 numbered squares. If a horse drops a road apple on a bettor's square, his name goes into a drum for the prize drawing at the end of the parade.

Prizes include a trip to Mexico, spa package, gas barbecue, season ski pass from Sun Valley, ski equipment, a golf package donated by Coeur d'Alene Resort and $500 and $250 gift certificates. Money from the sale of $5 tickets goes to causes including holiday baskets, Company of Fools and the Sawtooth Botanical Garden. Buy tickets online through PayPal or at Color Tyme at Alturas Plaza, the Real Estate Center and DL Evans Bank in Hailey.

Days of the Old West Rodeo: Sawtooth Rangers will present the rodeo — voted best rodeo in the Intermountain Professional Rodeo Association for six years in a row — at the new Hailey Rodeo Park, Saturday through Monday. Pre-events start at 6:30 p.m. with the rodeo at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $10 for adults and $5 for children under 10, at Atkinsons' Markets, the Hailey Chamber of Commerce and the gate. Information: 788-1012.

Hailey Major Rick Davis will cut the ribbon for the new park at 7:15 p.m. today.

Hailey 4th of July Critérium: Bicyclists will careen around the corners of downtown Hailey in a handful of exciting races immediately following Monday's parade.

The Shimano Youth Race for those 9 and younger starts at 1 p.m. Pro men start at 1:20 p.m. The Shimano Youth Race for 10- and 12-year-olds takes eight laps beginning at 2:30 p.m. The competitive women's pool starts at 2:45 p.m. The Cruiser Crit for all ages and levels starts at 3:30 p.m.; costumes encouraged. And the development pool for men and juniors starts at 3:45 p.m.

Entry fee is $35; youth 12 and younger race for free. There will be cash prizes and medals. Registration starts at 11:30 a.m. in front of Wiseguy Pizza and KB's. Information: www.bcrd.org or 578-2273.

Ice cream social: Sun Valley Center for the Arts will continue a community tradition, hosting a free ice cream social from 1 to 3 p.m. Monday at its Hailey facility, 314 Second Ave., after the parade.

The center will serve free floats made from ice cream donated by Atkinsons' Markets and root beer brewed with sassafras, wintergreen and other herbs by Bellevue brewer Bucksnot Root Beer.

Antique fairs: The streets of Hailey and Ketchum may creak a little under the weight of all the antiques offered throughout the weekend:

- Bill Summers Ketchum Antiques Show from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday through Monday at nexStage Theatre in Ketchum, 120 S. Main St.
- Ketchum Art and Antique Show from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Friday through Sunday and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday at Ketchum's Forest Service Park, First and Washington streets.
- Hailey's Antique Market from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday through Monday in Hailey's Roberta McKercher Park and the Hailey Armory.

Because of the wide range of ages participating and the sheer number of actors — just fewer than 80 — scheduling rehearsals has been challenging for the adult organizers. The number of excused absences was increased so that the cast could continue with the show, Harmon said.

At the first dress rehearsal on June 28, the barber-shop quartet and the rest of the cast donned big hats, patterned suits and frilly skirts and began to relearn their dance moves in the new attire. One dancer couldn't see past her floppy hat brim, so she traded

TONIGHT'S GALLERY WALK

Magic Valley's famous falls through Boston photographer's eyes

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM — When Boston photographer Laura McPhee lugged her 8-by-10 viewfinder to Shoshone Falls, she turned her back to the spray coming off the falls and shot a picture of the canyon looking away from the falls.

“My friend said, ‘Everyone looks the one way and you look the opposite way,’” recalled McPhee, a frequent visitor to Sun Valley. “But for me a lot of it has to do with light. Sometimes something doesn’t hold much interest because the lighting is wrong. ... I know that Shoshone Falls has been a huge topic in photography since Timothy O’Sullivan shot it after the Civil War, and I wanted to try to get a different angle.”

McPhee’s picture at the falls will be featured at Gail Severn Gallery during tonight’s Gallery Walk, when galleries around Ketchum open their doors for art lovers to enjoy free wine and nibbles as they peruse the exhibits from 5 to 8 p.m.

One of the things McPhee likes about her photograph is the power line running across it. It’s something many photographers might try to erase. But for McPhee it speaks to the 19th century and present.

“It might make people think about how (we’re) going to deal with the future and energy,” she said.

Making people think is why McPhee shoots her photos.

“To me, art is most successful when it challenges preconceived beliefs, when it wakes viewers up to something that they may not have considered,” she said. “I’m interested in: What are we doing in nature, and what are the consequences?”

ELSEWHERE AROUND TOWN

Ketchum’s galleries will hold their July Gallery Walk, 5-8 p.m. tonight. It’s free. Other places to see art:

- Sun Valley Center for the Arts, Fifth and Washington streets
- Broschofsky Gallery, 360 East Ave.
- Kneeland Gallery, 271 First Ave. N.
- Gallery DeNovo, Friesen Gallery and Frederic Boloix Fine Arts, 320 First Ave. N.
- Ochi Gallery, 305 Walnut Ave.
- David M. Norton Gallery, 511 Sun Valley Road
- Mountain Images Gallery, 400 Sun Valley Road
- Toneri Hink Gallery, 400 Sun Valley Road

about her work during a free discussion at 10 a.m. Saturday at Gail Severn Gallery, 400 First Ave. N. — started shooting the Sawtooth Valley in 2003, using a large-format view camera to capture the area’s jagged mountains, sprawling ranches and fast-moving rivers in incredible color and clarity.

“One of the reasons I love photographing the Sawtooth Valley is because there are so many controversies in such a small area,” she said. “I hope, for instance, that my photograph of a man who shoots wolves with a tranquilizer will prompt people to think about the controversy over wolves. I hope my photographs on the aftermath of the Valley Road fire in 2005 will have people think about fire policies and whether landscape is ruined by fire or whether fire is part of the cycle of life.”

Other don’t-miss artists on tonight’s Gallery Walk include the husband-wife team of Charles and Laurie Victor Kay, who will show their photography at Gilman Contemporary, 661 Sun Valley Road.

Married for 14 years, both are photographers but employ different angles. Charles approaches much of his work with the eye of a commercial photographer. Laurie, who has long visited her grandmother Dee Owen in Sun Valley, has a painter’s background.

Laurie injects super-real hues and manipulates and flips her photographs to make them symmetrical and balanced, whether the subject be a subway station or the trees lining the palace grounds at Versailles, France.

“I like to create spaces that draw viewers in,” she said.

Her husband, meanwhile, will exhibit pieces from his “Anarchy” series. He layered negatives of images in London, such as the London Bridge, on top of one another, upside down and all around.

“My other work normally consists of very clean black-and-white architectural images, so this crazy imagery is a departure for me,” he said.

Charles and Laurie typically travel together on photo shoots — often to Paris, one of their favorite haunts.

“Our motto is: Why pack underwear when we can put another camera in the suitcase?” Charles quipped. “But once we get there, one of us is apt to hop on the subway and be gone in search of the right subject. And when we do work on a common assignment, we usually come back with totally different views of it.”

Audition for OutCast’s feminist retelling of Joan of Arc

Times-News

Joan of Arc was a hero and a saint, but you’ve never heard her story told like this.

Twin Falls theater company OutCast Inc. is holding auditions for its production of “The Second Coming of Joan of Arc,” a drama written by Carolyn Gage and directed for OutCast by Jennifer Miller. The play is a feminist interpretation of the story and reflects what has happened to women throughout history, an OutCast release said.

Auditions are 6-9 p.m. July 6-7 at Magic Valley High School, 512 Main Ave. W. in Twin Falls. The production is tentatively set for Aug. 18-20. The auditions will consist of cold readings from the script. OutCast is looking for four to five women to perform.

If you want information or can’t make the scheduled audition times, call Miller at 961-0959.

OutCast aims to perform evocative theater while donating production proceeds to Magic Valley causes.

Sun Valley Pavilion overhauls acoustics

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

SUN VALLEY — Those checking out the Avett Brothers or Lee Ann Womack at the Sun Valley Pavilion this summer will notice vastly improved sound.

Sun Valley Resort asked the Berkeley, Calif.-based Meyer Sound Laboratories to do a sophisticated sound check this spring. Technicians set up microphones in every section throughout the pavilion to test the sound.

Then they stripped the rafters of the arsenal of speakers that formerly stared down at concertgoers. They replaced those with one relatively small speaker hanging on either side of the rafters for last week's Bill Cosby show.

Many of those in the sold-out crowd of 1,561 reported a major improvement in intelligibility.

"Sun Valley Co. has put a lot of energy and money into improving the sound," said Jennifer Teisinger, executive director of the Sun Valley Summer Symphony.

John Mauldin, Sun Valley's director of entertainment, said Meyer Sound intends to do further fine tuning and acoustic treatment. But the reconfiguration of speakers should improve the spoken word and other audio for audiences seated on the grassy terrace.

Sun Valley had hoped to bring back the LED screen for the lawn in time for some of July's concerts, Mauldin added, noting that Sun Valley has built a permanent site for the 14-by-25-foot screen that symphony listeners enjoyed on the lawn last summer.

But it won't be in place until the start of the Sun Valley Summer Symphony season on Aug. 1, staying for the remainder of the symphony season. The Elaine P. Wynn Foundation and an anonymous donor made this year's screen rental possible, Teisinger said.

Eventually, Sun Valley Co. and the symphony hope to have a permanent screen, Mauldin said.

In other news, the Great British Invasion scheduled for July 16 will include a parade of Harley-Davidson motorcycle riders including high-ranking British dignitaries — riding from Canada to Ketchum in honor of U.S., Canadian and British vets. Sun Valley Resort agreed to donate proceeds from the concert to groups like Sun Valley Adaptive Sports and Higher Ground that support vets, organizer Jason Fry said.

Fry hopes to have a big military presence attend the concert, which will feature the British rock groups Thunder and The Union.

Send the kids to a week of art mornings

Times-News

Caleb Meyers will teach a week of art classes dubbed "Elements of Art" for grades six through nine, at Twin Falls Center for the Arts.

The classes are 10-11:30 a.m. July 25-29. Cost for the week is $50 for Magic Valley Arts Council members and $65 for others. Supplies are included.

Students will explore line, shape, value, form, color, texture and space. They will learn the building blocks of art through drawing, painting, collage and sculpture. It's a hands-on (and messy) learning process. Each class is a self-contained project, but the lessons build on each other as the week progresses.

Pre-registration is required: 734-2787. Registration forms are available at the Twin Falls Center for the Arts, 195 River Vista Place, or at Full Moon Gallery downtown.

Buhl spends holiday weekend on traditional Sagebrush Days

By Blair Koch
Times-News correspondent

Sagebrush Days schedule

Today
11 a.m. to 9 p.m.: Street fair, downtown Buhl. Free admission. Vendor spaces available for $25. Information: Tom Nelsen, 543-9879, or Mary Davidson, 543-5946.

Saturday
5 p.m.: Magic Valley Tractor Pullers Association, Buhl Rodeo Grounds. Free.

Sunday

7:30 p.m.: Sagebrush Days Rodeo, Buhl Rodeo Grounds. Tough Enough to Wear Pink Night. $8 for adults, $7 for seniors and military, $6 for students 14 and younger and free for children 5 and younger. Family Night, $25 for two adults and their children.

thing from tanning products to electronics, fresh salad vegetables and sourdough bread today, they'll be serenaded by the music of local bluegrass band Strings Attached. More street fairs are planned throughout the summer.

Just as Buhl's residents and businesses give a damn about the community's future, in its past Frank Buhl gave a dam to put the area on the map. In 1903, the Pennsylvania steel magnate shored up the necessary funding to keep I.B. Perrine's Twin Falls South Side Project in the black. Without the infusion of cash, the city of Buhl — and Twin Falls County — wouldn't have been much more than plat drawings.

So this year's Sagebrush Days is themed "Frankly, Buhl Gave a Dam," and event chairwoman Holly Langdon said the tagline could inspire some fun parade floats, civic pride and nostalgia.

"We wanted something fun and different," Langdon said. A local Boy Scout troop will walk ahead of Monday's parade to pass out 2,000 miniature American flags, she added, so the ambiance will be patriotic as well.

Although the parade is a great way to relax among family and friends, Sagebrush Days offers ample opportunity for moving your derriere.

Prior to Monday's parade is

7-10 a.m.: Kiwanis pancake breakfast, West End Senior Center, 1010 Main St.; $5 for adults, $3 for children 6-12 and free for ages 5 and younger.
7 a.m.: Fun run registration at Furniture Room parking lot, 1102 Main St.; $25 per person, or $65 for a family of up to four people. Preregistration cost is $15 per person: 543-8576.
8 a.m.: Fun run starts, Furniture Room.
10:30 a.m.: Local pilot flyover. Parade starts. Route: north on Main Street from Burley Avenue, turning right onto Broadway Avenue, right onto Fair Road, right onto Sprague Avenue and right onto Milner Street, then traveling back to Burley Avenue and disbanding at Sunset Bowl parking lot.
Noon: Vendors, entertainment and activities in Eastman Park.

Noon: Free swimming at Buhl City Pool.
1 p.m.: Firehose competition registration, McClusky Park. Free.
2 p.m.: Firehose competition starts, McClusky Park. Free.
7 p.m.: Sagebrush Days Rodeo, Buhl Rodeo Grounds. Military Night. $8 for adults, $7 for seniors and military, $6 for students 14 and younger and free for children 5 and younger.
Dusk: Anvil firing and fireworks at North Park. Free.

Other Buhl street fairs
Noon to 9 p.m., Aug. 2 and Sept. 16. Featuring live music, business open houses, sidewalk sales and more. Information on vendor space: Tom Nelsen, 543-9879, or Mary Davidson, 543-5946.

missing her."

Of course, running a few miles around town isn't as much physical exertion as the bucking stock or the cowboys will need during Sunday and Monday nights' pro-rodeo action at the Buhl Rodeo Grounds. Slash T Rodeo of Gooding is back again after a phenomenal showing last year with an action-packed, Idaho Cowboy Association-sanctioned event of steer wrestling, calf roping, barrel racing and bull riding.

"We're excited to be back because decades ago, the Sagebrush Days rodeo in Buhl was the largest two-day rodeo in Idaho," said Pat O'Maley, Slash T owner.

Cowboys fall to Las Vegas Titans

By John Derr
Times-News writer

The late-inning rallies from last year failed to arrive for the Cowboys. Las Vegas tallied seven hits and took advantage of the opportunities presented while Twin Falls struggled at the plate and in the field, falling 5-3 in the first day of the Cowboy Classic wood bat tournament Thursday at Skip Walker Field.

“We can’t afford to have three errors. We need to make them earn what they get,” said Twin Falls coach Tim Stadelmeier. “The credit goes to them — they stepped up when they needed to. They are a great team and great program.”

The Titans are comprised primarily of players from Bishop Gorman High School, six-time reigning Nevada Class 4A champion.

In other action, Rocky Mountain (Meridian) opened the day with an 11-0 pasting of Lethbridge (Alberta). The Boise Gems topped Pacific Tech (Wash.) 3-2 while it took an extra inning for the Reno Athletics to defeat Lewis-Clark 2-1.

Games continue today with Las Vegas and Pacific Tech battling at 11 a.m., followed by the Gems and Lewis-Clark at 2 p.m. The Cowboys have a doubleheader, facing Rocky Mountain at 5 p.m. and Lethbridge immediately after. At Bill Ingram Field, Reno tangles with the Gems at 10 a.m. and Rocky Mountain after that.

The Titans threatened in the first, belting a pair of singles, but Cy Sneed was able to strike out the side. Sneed finished with eight strikeouts on the night.

In the fourth, it was the same two hitters for Las Vegas — Cole Krzmarzick and David Day — that got hits off Sneed. A fielder’s choice grounder scored Krzmarzick for the first run of the game. The two would tally six of the seven hits Sneed allowed.

The Titans’ Neiko Martinez dominated the Cowboys through the first four innings, not allowing a hit.

“He kept us off balance and we needed to have a better approach,” Stadelmeier said.

Tucker Donnelley finally broke up the no-hitter, slicing a single to right in the fifth. Casey Merritt followed

Kimberly community comes out for local track meet

KIMBERLY — Shae Bair describes her family as “track junkies.”

She was a pole vaulter and her husband, Brad a decathlete at Utah State University. Today, Brad is an assistant track and field coach at Kimberly High School and once a week this June, Shae coached 25 children in grades K-8 the joy of running and jumping as part of the Kimberly Track Club.

On Thursday, Shae and her husband helped organize the first community track and field meet at Kimberly High School.

“People don’t go, ‘Oh, gee, I want to run.’ But if they come in and see that it’s fun and you can go for goals and try to improve yourself, then they can see that it’s a great thing,” Shae Bair said.

About 50 people participated in the inaugural event, which consisted of 19 running and field events, including 50-yard sprints and hurdles for the younger children. Shae Bair got the idea to host a community track meet after taking her three sons, Peyton, Jaxson and Gatlin to similar meets in Boise.

For two months during the summer, Boise hosts community all-comer meets every Thursday at various tracks throughout the city.

“They get a wide range (of ages). I’ve seen an 80-year-old pole vault there, so you’ve got it all,” Shae Bair said. “We saw a little girl, who was probably seven, she ran the mile, 800 and the 400. It was awesome.”

Canyon Ridge junior Bobby Rios, who is training this summer with his coach Ben Benoit, has run at the all-comer meets and with the Junior Olympic Association in Boise.

“Usually I just kind of sit on my butt and do nothing, so it’s good to get out and start running,” said Rios, who ran the 100 and 400 meters. “It’s good to have a head start and stay in shape. It was good today that they had this meet here. I didn’t have to go all the way to Boise.”

“It would be cool if this got a little bigger and more people and teams came.”

Rios was one of just a handful of high school-aged athletes to compete and teamed up with Canyon Ridge graduates Tyler Myers and Burhan Hetemi and Twin Falls graduate Ricky Akridge to win the 4x100 relay — not that they had much competition running against 7- and

Building on their success

Former Eagles Chism, Barrett get pro careers started

Times-News

Two paths that diverged from the College of Southern Idaho baseball program have continued in the same general direction. The men traveling them hope each one day leads to the majors.

Former CSI standouts Tyler Chism and Tyler Barrett, outfielder and pitcher, respectively, began their minor-league careers in two completely different parts of the country in late June — Barrett in Connecticut, and Chism in Idaho Falls.

Barrett was a 20th-round selection by the Detroit Tigers. He had a year of eligibility left at Lewis-Clark State College, but he decided to chase the big-league dream.

His first start with the short-season Class A Connecticut Tigers didn’t last long, just two innings, but his second earned him his first professional win. Through those two starts, Barrett is 1-0 with a 1.29 ERA, holding opponents to a .136 batting average.

Chism, the 2009 Scenic West Athletic Conference Player of the Year, is enjoying similar success with the Chukars, the Rookie affiliate for the Kansas City Royals. A late-round selection out of Gonzaga, Chism is hitting .323 with a pair of doubles, a triple and three RBIs.

If the two ex-CSI stars keep building on their success, it shouldn’t be too long before the ladder to the next level is calling their names.

While the minor-league journey is just starting for Chism and Barrett, the road has gotten bumpy, or ended altogether, for some others with local ties.

Glenns Ferry graduate Zach Simons was released Monday by the Detroit Tigers. Shuffling between Class AA and AAA this season, he was 0-2 with two saves and a 5.05 ERA in 23 appearances.

Wood River graduate Ryne Reynoso was cut loose by the Boston Red Sox after the 2010 season, having been picked up at the AA level after his release from

Horner signs with TVCC

Times-News

Castleford graduate Houston Horner has signed to run cross country for Treasure Valley Community College in Ontario, Ore., according to a release from the athletics conference with which TVCC is affiliated.

The Northwest Athletic Association of Community College confirmed Horner’s signing in its June 30 letter of intent release. The NWAACC releases a composite list of signings every two weeks from late January until September.

Horner participated in several sports for the Wolves, including football, basketball and track and field.

He missed his senior football season with a knee injury.

NBA lockout begins as sides fail to reach deal

NEW YORK — The NBA’s thrilling season came with a high price tag.

LeBron’s move to Miami and Dirk’s title in Dallas couldn’t hide a simple fact: Owners insisted they were losing money, perhaps $300 million this season, and weren’t interested in subsidizing a system they felt guaranteed they’d keep losing more.

So the NBA locked out its players, a long-expected move that put the 2011-12 season in jeopardy and came as the NFL is trying to end its own work stoppage that began in March.

The latest lockout began at 12:01 EDT Friday. It will last until player and owners can agree on a new collective bargaining agreement, one owners demand must give all teams a chance to profit.

“We had a great year in terms of the appreciation of our fans for our game. It just wasn’t a profitable one for the owners, and it wasn’t one that many of the smaller market teams particularly enjoyed or felt included in,” Commissioner David Stern said. “The goal here has been to make the league profitable and to have a league where all 30 teams can compete.”

Despite a three-hour meeting Thursday and a final proposal from the players — which NBA leaders said would have raised average player salaries to $7 million in the sixth year of the deal — the sides could not close the enormous gulf between their positions.

“The problem is that there’s such a gap in terms of the numbers, where they are and where we are, and we just can’t find any way to bridge that gap,” union chief Billy Hunter said.

All league business is officially on hold, starting with the free agency period that would have opened Friday. The NBA’s summer league in Las Vegas already has been canceled, preseason games in Europe were never scheduled, and players might have to decide if they want to risk playing in this summer’s Olympic qualifying tournaments without the NBA’s help in securing insurance in case of injury.

And teams will be prohibited from having any contact with their players, most of whom won’t be paid until a deal is done but insist they’ll hang in anyway.

Verlander dominates on-fire Mets

DETROIT — Justin Verlander slowed down the rampaging Mets, pitching seven solid innings Thursday to lead the Detroit Tigers to a 5-2 victory over New York.

The Mets had scored a team-record 52 runs in their previous four games, including 30 in the first two of this series. Verlander (11-3) prevented a sweep, holding New York to one run and seven hits.

Verlander finished June with a 6-0 record and a 0.92 ERA, and tied CC Sabathia for the major league lead in wins this season. Verlander has won his last seven starts, allowing two or fewer runs in each.

CARDINALS 9, ORIOLES 6

BALTIMORE — Lance Berkman homered twice and Jon Jay hit a three-run shot as St. Louis completed a three-game sweep.

The Cardinals never trailed in the series and outscored Baltimore 20-9. In the finale, St. Louis built an 8-0 lead in the fourth inning and coasted to its fourth win in nine games since Albert Pujols went on the disabled list with a fractured wrist.

a two-run homer as Pittsburgh won its first interleague road series since 2003.

The Pirates, who have won six of eight, had lost 17 straight interleague series away from home since taking two of three at Tampa Bay in June 2003.

ASTROS 7, RANGERS 0

HOUSTON — Jason Michaels homered and drove in three runs and Wandy Rodriguez and three relievers combined on a four-hitter as Houston snapped an eight-game home losing streak.

Carlos Lee homered for the second straight day in the fourth inning and Chris Johnson drove in two runs in Houston's four-run fifth as the Astros won at Minute Maid Park for the first time since June 13.

YANKEES 5, BREWERS 0

NEW YORK — CC Sabathia tied his career high with 13 strikeouts and Mark Teixeira hit his 300th homer to help the New York Yankees finish off June with a season-best five-game winning streak by beating the Milwaukee Brewers.

Sabathia (11-4) won for the eighth time in nine starts. He is tied with Detroit's Justin Verlander for the major league lead in victories.

RED SOX 5, PHILLIES 2

PHILADELPHIA — Jon Lester tossed two-hit ball over seven shutout innings, Jason Varitek homered twice and the Boston Red Sox avoided a three-game sweep by defeating the Philadelphia Phillies.

MARLINS 5, ATHLETICS 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — Chris Volstad allowed one unearned run in seven innings and John Buck hit a two-run double to help the Florida Marlins cap a miserable June by beating the Oakland Athletics for their first back-to-back wins in more than a month.

WHITE SOX 6, ROCKIES 4, 10 INNINGS

DENVER — Light-hitting Juan Pierre laced a tiebreaking, two-run single off the wall in the 10th inning, helping the Chicago White Sox rally past the Colorado Rockies.

CUBS 5, GIANTS 2, 13 INNINGS

CHICAGO — Pinch-hitter Geovany Soto's three-run homer capped a four-run rally with two outs in the 13th inning and sent the Chicago Cubs over the San Francisco Giants.

Soto's drive finished off an eventful day for the Cubs. Starter Carlos Zambrano left in the second inning because of soreness in his lower back, then Aramis Ramirez hit a tying home run in the ninth off San Francisco closer Brian Wilson.

National feels more like U.S. Open than U.S. Open did

NEWTOWN SQUARE, Pa. (AP) — Adam Scott must have felt as though he got another crack at the U.S. Open on Thursday in the AT&T National. Only this course felt more like a U.S. Open.

Aronimink built on its growing reputation when only 28 players managed to break par in the opening round despite warm sunshine and a mild breeze. Scott and Hunter Haas, who were tied atop the leaderboard at 4-under 66, followed a U.S. Open formula by trying to keep the ball in play off the tee and being cautious on the greens.

"It's a great golf course, obviously, but in great shape," Scott said. "But they've set the course up beautifully. The greens are perfect and they've got very generous fairways, but severe rough, which is a nice balance. There are good scores out there, but you have to play well."

The U.S. Open became a talking point because of how hard players had to work for their scores on a course with firm fairways, fast greens and several diabolical hole locations. The average score was about 71.5, and all but four of the holes played over par.

Rain softened the course at Congressional two weeks ago, and while Rory McIlroy turned in a commanding performance with a record 16-under 268, the 20 scores under par at the end of the week were unusual for a U.S. Open.

"They obviously didn't get the greens where they really would have liked them," said Scott, who missed the cut by one shot at Congressional. "And here, I think they've got the greens probably where the U.S. Open would have liked them on a Thursday."

Scott holed birdie putts of 20 feet and 25 feet early in his round, and finished with a 15-foot par save on the 17th and another 15-footer for birdie on the 18th. His lone bogey came on a three-putt from the fringe on the difficult 10th, and he called it a "stress-free" round.

with an RBI single, knotting the score.

It didn't take long for Krzmarzick and Day to put the Titans back on top. Day had the big hit, a double down the left field line while Krzmarzick crossed home plate again, this time courtesy of a sacrifice fly.

Then things fell apart. Two straight infield errors brought two more Las Vegas runs home, putting the Cowboys down four.

Reminiscent of last year, Twin Falls attempted a rally in the sixth. Sneed doubled to right while a walk and an error loaded the bases. One run came across on a fielder's choice, but that was it.

Down to their last chance, Sneed blasted his second double, scoring T.J. Ellis, but the Cowboys got no closer

"That was the first time we've run this together," Hetemi said. "The handoffs weren't very pretty but it was a fun way to compete and stay in shape."

Hetemi and Akridge will attend Briar Cliff University in Iowa this fall on track and field and football scholarships, respectively, and Myers is playing football at Idaho State.

"I wish I would have gotten more into stuff like this earlier," Myers said. "This is a cool deal and will be neat if it grows more."

Shae Bair was pleased with the outcome of the first community track meet in Kimberly and although she doesn't foresee hosting another one this summer, she hopes to organize a couple next summer.

"It's great. It's going really well. I'm hoping it will grow and other schools can do some stuff and hopefully we'll have some more meets around the area," Bair said. "It's just a great thing for the sport and the kids. Track and field is great for all kids and all sports. You learn to run, you learn to jump."

Atlanta's AAA club. He's currently pitching for the Kansas City T-Bones of the independent American Association, where he's 2-2 with a 7.71 ERA.

Late last season Filer's Paul Gerrish retired, after a brief stint in the Astros organization.

Here's a look at how others with local ties are faring in the baseball world. All statistics are accurate as of June 29.

NICK CARR, TWIN FALLS AND CSI ST. LUCIE METS (NEW YORK METS, CLASS A ADVANCED)

Having bounced back from Tommy John surgery, Carr appears to be rounding back into old form. In 20 appearances he's got eight saves and a 3-0 record with a 1.86 ERA. He's struck out 33 batters in 29 innings pitched.

BRANDON DUCKWORTH, CSI PAWTUCKET RED SOX (BOSTON, CLASS AAA)

Nearing the end of a long career in baseball, the 35-year-old Duckworth is 4-4 with a 4.03 ERA in 13 appearances for the PawSox.

TYLER KNIGGE, FILER LAKEWOOD BLUECLAWS (PHILADELPHIA, CLASS A)

Knigge is performing well in a reliever role in the Phillies' system, making 25 appearances so far this season and posting a 1-3 record with three saves. He's struck out 31 batters in 32 1-3 innings and has a 3.90 ERA.

JUSTIN SMITH, CSI PALM BEACH CARDINALS (ST. LOUIS, CLASS A ADVANCED)

Smith started off well but endured a rough June. On the season he's 1-5 with a 6.16 ERA, striking out 52 batters in 57 innings.

Sharapova reaches first Wimbledon final since 2004

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — So what if Maria Sharapova managed to win only two of the first 13 points of her Wimbledon semifinal Thursday, dropping the first three games?

So what if she bungled her serve so badly that she double-faulted 13 times?

All that mattered to Sharapova was that she roared — well, shrieked — her way back into the match, taking 12 of the last 16 games to beat wild-card entry Sabine Lisicki of Germany 6-4, 6-3 and return to the final at the All England Club for the first time since 2004, when she won the title at 17.

"It's been many years, but it's a really great feeling," Sharapova said. "Today wasn't my best match of the championships, so I was real happy to get through in two sets. But, yeah, it's pretty amazing to be back on that stage."

In Saturday's final, Sharapova will play No. 8 Petra Kvitova of the Czech Republic, who hit nine aces and dictated points throughout her 6-1, 3-6, 6-2 victory over No. 4 Victoria Azarenka of Belarus.

Sharapova's seven-year gap between Wimbledon finals is the longest for a woman in the Open era, which began in 1968.

"I'm in a different stage in my career. I'm 24 years old. I have a lot of experience behind my back," said Sharapova, who hasn't lost a set during the tournament. "But I'm still playing tennis."

That wasn't always a given: Months after winning her third, and most recent, Grand Slam title at the 2008 Australian Open, Sharapova was sidelined with a serious injury to her right shoulder. When rehab wasn't enough, she had surgery in October 2008. It was an arduous road back, and only now has she returned to the top of the game.

"You're going to have certain doubts, I mean, when you go through something like that," the fifth-seeded Sharapova said, "knowing that not too many players have recovered fully."

Kvitova, who lost in last year's Wimbledon semifinals, is the first left-handed woman to reach a Grand Slam title match since Monica Seles at the 1998 French Open. She would be the first lefty to win the Wimbledon trophy since 1990, when Martina Navratilova — who was born in Czechoslovakia and was a spectator at Centre Court on Thursday — earned her ninth title.

"There's been so few women lefties that were good," Navratilova said. "For Petra, I think the key's always been to minimize those streaks of bad play. She's very streaky."

There's little question who the favorite is Saturday: Sharapova will be playing in her fifth major final; the 21-year-old Kvitova in her first. Sharapova seeks her 24th career title; Kvitova her fifth.

"Experience is an incredible asset," Sharapova said, "because you feel like you've been through many different situations."

In their only previous meeting, Sharapova beat Kvitova in straight sets on an indoor hard court at Memphis last year.

Then again, here's what Kvitova's coach, David Kotyza, took away from that: "Petra knows how to play against her."

As for whether Kvitova might be intimidated against Sharapova, Kotyza said: "I don't think so. No. She doesn't care who she plays."

In Thursday's opening semifinal, Kvitova wasn't distracted one bit by Azarenka's shot-accompanying screeching — which drew snickers from the crowd on the match's very first point — or the fire alarm that droned on for a couple of minutes in the fifth game.

Punctuating nearly every point she won with a yelp, Kvitova showed why she was honored as the WTA newcomer of the year in 2010. Still, she acknowledged afterward that, as recently as two weeks ago, "I didn't think, like, that I could win" the Wimbledon title.

Azarenka begged to differ. "She can beat anybody, any day, because right now she has really good game," Azarenka said. "She's really going for it."

Indeed, Kvitova took the initiative, accumulating a 40-9 edge in winners. Her serve helped her get through some important moments: She hit three aces in the last game of the first set, and she dug out of a 15-40 hole while serving in the final set's fifth game, ending it with another ace.

Sharapova was forced to tweak her service motion after her operation, and Thursday's match is only the latest evidence that there's still a problem. While losing in the French Open semifinals a month ago, she hit 10 double-faults, including on the final point. Against the 62nd-ranked Lisicki, Sharapova put in only 48 percent of her first serves.

THAT SCRAMBLED WORD GAME

by David L. Hoyt and Jeff Knurek

Now arrange the circled letters to form the surprise answer, as suggested by the above cartoon.

(Answers tomorrow)

Today is Friday, July 1, the 182nd day of 2011. There are 183 days left in the year. This is Canada Day.

Today's Highlights:
On July 1, 1971, the 26th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, which lowered the minimum voting age from 21 to 18, was ratified. The State of Washington became the first state to ban sex discrimination. The United States Post Office Department was replaced with the United States Postal Service.

Today's Highlights:

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1861, the first issue of the Vatican newspaper L'Osservatore Romano was published in Rome.
In 1863, the Civil War Battle of Gettysburg, resulting in a Union victory, began in Pennsylvania.
In 1867, Canada became a self-governing dominion of Great Britain as the British North America Act took effect.

In 1910, Chicago's original Comiskey Park held its opening day under the name White Sox Park. (The home team lost to the St. Louis Browns, 2-0.)

In 1943, "pay-as-you-go" income tax withholding began.

In 1946, the United States exploded a 20-kiloton atomic bomb near Bikini Atoll in the Pacific.

In 1961, Diana, the princess of Wales, was born in Sandringham, England. (She died in a 1997 car crash in Paris at age 36.)

In 1980, "O Canada" was proclaimed the national anthem of Canada.

In 1991, President George H.W. Bush nominated federal appeals court judge Clarence Thomas to the Supreme Court, beginning an ultimately successful confirmation process marked by allegations of sexual harassment. The Warsaw Pact formally disbanded. Actor Michael Landon, 54, died in Malibu, Calif.

In 2004, actor Marlon Brando died in Los Angeles at age 80.

Ten years ago: Vice President Dick Cheney rested at home, a day after having a new pacemaker implanted in his chest. The National Organization for Women announced in Philadelphia that delegates had chosen Kim A. Gandy to be their new president, succeeding Patricia Ireland.

Five years ago: Thunderstorms forced NASA to call off the launch of Discovery, delaying the first space shuttle flight in a year. (Discovery was launched three days later, on the Fourth of July.) A huge car bomb exploded at a bustling outdoor market in a Shiite district of Baghdad, killing more than 60 people.

One year ago: California lawmakers approved a $20 million settlement with the family of Jaycee Dugard, who was kidnapped as a girl and held captive in a secret backyard for 18 years by a paroled sex offender. At least two suicide bombers attacked a popular Muslim shrine in Pakistan's second largest city, Lahore, killing some three dozen people.

DEAR ABBY: I'm writing because I'm afraid I will never be able to have a normal, healthy relationship with a man. Until recently, I was the victim of a physically, verbally and sexually abusive father. Now I find myself unable to speak around even the most nonthreatening boy.

At even the slightest hint of aggression or anger I flinch and run away. I'm afraid I will never escape the shadow of what he did to me. What should I do?

— SHY AND BATTERED IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR SHY AND BATTERED: For you to move from victim to survivor will take professional help. Few people are able to completely overcome the abuse you have experienced on their own. A good first step would be to contact R.A.I.N.N., the Rape, Abuse and Incest National Network. Its website is www.rainn.org and its toll-free phone number is 800-656-4673. The counselors there can guide you in finding help to repair your life.

Men like your father belong behind bars, where they can't hurt helpless children. If he would sexually and physically abuse you, no child is safe around him. If there are minors still living with your parents, the police should be notified about what he did to you so they can be rescued.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I have been happily married for six years. My husband is kind, caring and honest. Our only problem involves jewelry. I'm not very good at wearing my wedding ring every day. I can be forgetful and clumsy, and I have misplaced it, almost dropped it down the drain, etc. I have tried wearing it around my neck, but it just gets in the way.

My husband wears his ring every day and says he doesn't mind if I don't wear mine because he trusts me. My problem is other people. My co-workers are suspicious. My family thinks it's "strange." Men have hit on me, and when I politely told them I'm married, they became angry and asked where my ring is.

Abby, I don't do or say anything to lead people on, and I often mention that I'm happily married. I'm becoming frustrated and have even considered getting a tattoo on my ring finger so that people know I'm married. My husband says not to let it bother me; that he doesn't care about what others think. Any suggestions?

— NO RING ON IT, COLUMBIA, MO.

DEAR NO RING ON IT: I do not recommend getting your finger tattooed to allay your co-workers' suspicions or because some fool becomes angry that you don't welcome his advances. My recommendation is to listen to the secure, mature man you married and stop worrying so much about what other people think.

DEAR ABBY: My wife makes snarky comments to our extremely nice daughter-in-law. Our son finally had enough and has issued an ultimatum to his mother: Either change her ways or she won't be able to see their child.

Our first grandchild is due soon. Has our son gone too far? What can this grandpa-to-be do when Grandpa-to-be claims she "doesn't care," even though I know she's lying to herself?

— NOT FAIR TO ME IN SAN JOSE

DEAR NOT FAIR TO YOU: Has your son said that YOU won't be welcome to visit your grandchild? If not, I'm sure you will be welcome minus his mother. I respect your son for drawing the line and insisting his wife be treated with respect, which his mother hasn't been doing. Because you can't control her behavior or her mouth, invest in cartons of tissue because I predict she'll be needing a lot of them when the baby arrives and she's sitting by herself, persona non grata.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Tis our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances, with any portion of the foreign world."

— George Washington

South needs to look beyond the first trick when West leads the diamond queen against today's contract of four hearts. Since declarer does not want East to gain the lead and put a spade through, his strategy at trick one depends on East. If East plays low, so does he. If East plays the diamond king, declarer wins and relies on West to have the diamond jack. As long as this is the case, South's diamond 10 can keep East off lead.

But let's suppose East ducks at trick one, as most defenders would. Declarer wins the second diamond, draws two rounds of trump, ruffs a diamond, and now needs to set up a club winner without letting East gain the lead for the fatal spade shift.

If declarer simply plays three rounds of clubs, he goes down without a fight. If he ducks a club to West, that player wins and exits with a club. Declarer now gets to test clubs and fall back on the spade finesse, but this will not be his lucky day.

Better is for South to cash the club ace before leading a club to the 10. After winning his now bare club jack, West has only spades and diamonds left, so must lead away from the spade ace or concede a ruff and discard. Either way, South has 10 tricks.

If West had a third club to return, declarer would still be able to discard a spade on the fourth club at his leisure.

ANSWER: Your partner's auction shows at least an ace more than an opening bid, with a decent spade suit of at least five cards. You are clearly too good to pass — indeed, with your high cards apparently working and a useful doubleton ruffing value, even a call of two spades hardly does justice to this hand. I would bid three spades instead.

ANSWER: Your partner's auction shows at least an ace more than an opening bid, with a decent spade suit of at least five cards. You are clearly too good to pass — indeed, with your high cards apparently working and a useful doubleton ruffing value, even a call of two spades hardly does justice to this hand. I would bid three spades instead.

Western governors turn focus to wildfires

By Nicholas K. Geranios
Associated Press

COEUR D'ALENE — Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer said Thursday that one of her biggest fears when she became chief executive of the state two years ago was a devastating wildfire.

That concern came to life this year as nearly 1 million acres of Arizona burned in wildfires that included the largest such blaze in the state's history.

"One percent of the total land mass of Arizona has already burned in this fire season alone, and the season is not over yet," said Brewer, speaking at the Western Governors' Association annual meeting here Thursday.

Harris Sherman, undersecretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, told governors that wildfires are becoming bigger and more destructive in western states, because of a combination of factors including drought, insect infestations and disease.

He said potential solutions include expensive practices like controlled burns, thinning and pest control.

U.S. Rep. Doc Hastings, R-Wash., chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, suggested that locally controlled land would be in better position to prevent fires and called for the federal government to transfer authority.

"States and local governments are closest to the land and better suited to manage it," he said.

Hastings also said 88 percent of the land in the 12 westernmost states is un-

"Random acts of conservation are not enough."

— Harris Sherman, undersecretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, who told governors that western wildfires are becoming bigger and more destructive der federal control. He called on the government to allow more domestic energy production, timber harvesting and grazing on those lands.

For his part, Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer, a Democrat, questioned whether states could afford to manage federal lands that had a big backlog of maintenance needs.

"I'm not sure I could turn a profit on forest land that has been managed by the federal government," Schweitzer said.

Brewer, a Republican, also said that drought is fueling the devastating fires in her region.

She noted that Arizona averages about 180,000 acres of wildfires per year. But this year the state has had 923,000 acres burn — or 1,100 square miles.

Brewer said the burned land will be susceptible to flooding during the rainy season. She called on the federal government to create a better process to allow burned timber to be salvage logged and to plant new forests.

"We need to better manage the forests to prevent this from happening again," Brewer said. "Forest restoration or thinning is key to preventing these disasters."

But it is also very expensive.

Sherman, of the agriculture department, said it can cost up to $2,000 per acre to thin forest land, or up to $200 per acre to have a controlled burn.

"You take 80 million acres of national forest land in desperate need of restoration, and it is a staggering figure," he said.

Sherman agreed that dry conditions have led to big fire years in New Mexico, Texas and Florida this year, conforming to the trend of the past decade.

He said the period from 2000 to 2010 has seen total wildfire losses of 7 million acres per year, far more than in previous years. He added that nearly 5 million acres have already burned this year.

"Fires are larger and more intense than we have seen in the past," Sherman said, including far more fires of more than 100,000 acres each.

Sherman also noted that bark beetles, which thrive in warmer winters, are a major cause because they kill trees and make them more susceptible to fire. He added that about 41 million acres of western forests are infested.

Sherman said the federal government must find ways to spend less on environmental studies, which cost $350 million per year, and more to make actual land improvements.

"Random acts of conservation are not enough," he said.

Jurors convict Idaho man of murder in boy's death

By Jessie L. Bonner

BOISE — An Ada County jury took just two hours Thursday to convict an Idaho man of first-degree murder in the death of his girlfriend's 8-year-old son.

Prosecutors told the panel in closing arguments that 38-year-old Daniel Ehrlick was a "ticking time bomb" on the day in 2009 when he killed Robert Manwill. The boy's body was found in an irrigation canal about a week after his disappearance triggered a massive search across the city of Boise.

Robert would have turned 10 earlier this month.

Ehrlick's sentencing was set for Sept. 2. He faces a maximum penalty of life in prison.

During his closing argument earlier in the day, Ada County Deputy Prosecutor Dan Dinger told jurors that Ehrlick panicked because Robert, who had been visiting his mother in Boise, was covered in bruises and about to go home to his father, who lived in New Plymouth.

"He was feeling that pressure, he was feeling that fear because that day was fast approaching," Dinger said.

Prosecutors claim Ehrlick feared Robert would tell about the abuse and he would lose his girlfriend's other son, an infant who had been previously removed from the home.

"It's been a long two years but today the system worked and we got some justice for my son," Charles Manwill, Robert's father, told reporters after the verdict was announced.

Jurors saw autopsy photos and heard recorded interviews in which Ehrlick told police he would hide Robert in a closet when social workers visited the apartment multiple times a week to check on the infant. Dinger told jurors that Ehrlick tortured the boy and hiding Robert in the closet was part of the abuse.

"He was preying on one of Robert's fears," Dinger said. "He knew that Robert hated to be alone."

The boy lived with his mother, Melissa Jenkins, and Ehrlick for about seven weeks and was bruised for much of that time, Dinger said.

The defense, however, rejected the notion that Ehrlick despised Robert and countered that Jenkins was responsible for much of the abuse the boy had suffered.

The prosecution examined more than 100 witnesses but did not present evidence that proved Ehrlick had killed the boy, said defense attorney Gus Cahill.

New spotted-owl plan targets rival bird

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The federal government on Thursday unveiled the latest version of its plan to save the northern spotted owl, while acknowledging that the Pacific Northwest bird's population is declining faster than scientists had previously thought.

The plan gingerly approaches the idea that government would experiment with shooting a rival bird, the barred owl. Some scientists say that species from the eastern U.S. has followed Americans westward over the decades and is now shoving the spotted owl aside.

The spotted owl is a smaller, meeker bird that was listed as threatened in 1990 because the old-growth forests it inhabits have been largely logged over.

Now the bird is losing out to the barred owl in remnant old-growth stands, federal officials said Thursday.

"This is the pressing short-term threat to the spotted owl," said Robyn Thorson, northwest regional director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Although estimates of spotted owl numbers are considered inexact, ranging from a few thousand to 10,000, Thorson said studies of sample populations show them declining at an annual rate of 3 percent.

The barred owl is not in jeopardy and is instead expanding its range into California.

The plan that Thorson and other federal agency managers unveiled Thursday is the Obama administration's attempt to find a lasting balance between saving the spotted owl from extinction and allowing logging on Northwest national forests — something neither the Clinton nor Bush administrations could do.

Initial reactions to the new plan suggested that it changed little in the long struggle over the forests the owl has come to symbolize:

The timber industry says the plan doesn't allow enough logging, and environmentalists say it allows too much.

The recovery plan doesn't specify how to stem the barred owl's invasion. One idea has been to select test areas, shoot barred owls to thin their numbers, and see whether spotted owls move back in.
