Idaho Power sees solar energy in future

By Kimberlee Kruesi
Times-News writer

Solar power, business growth and the lingering effects of the recession have all factored into Idaho Power Co.'s latest growth plan, released this week.

The Integrated Resource Plan explains the utility's business plan, growth predictions and future projects it hopes to spearhead within the next 20 years.

Among the highlights: The company has seen a drop in energy use for the first time since 2001, according to the document. In 2009, energy use contracted by 3.5 percent, followed by another decline of 1.2 percent in 2010. Idaho Power believes the decline is related to the stalled customer growth the company experienced during the peak of the recession. The report estimates Idaho Power will regain the amount of customers it had before the economy soured by 2015.

Renewable energy has been in the utility's plan for some time, and Idaho Power is again looking to renewable energy with the expect-tation of growing customers and, eventually, more energy use. A series of renewable energy projects is scheduled to begin within the next 10 years. Unlike in previous plans, this one includes a solar demonstration project.

"Solar energy is really unlike wind or natural gas," said Mark Stokes, the company's manager of power supply planning. "Unlike wind, our peak energy-use days are on our hottest days when the wind isn't blowing. Solar panels could be critical for adding energy when the wind can't."

While the state does not regulate how much of a utility's energy must come from renewable sources, the cost of solar panels has been trending down, Stokes said. The lower costs sparked an interest among company stakeholders to begin testing solar energy use.

"We know the technology is out there, this will be a time for us to learn how it can sync up with our load and integrate the energy into our system," Stokes said.

WHAT'S NEXT

Idaho Power has drawn up its 20-year forecast of its operations, which the utility does every two years.

Now, the Idaho Public Utilities Commission must give its final approval to the plan. Dates will be set down the road for a public comment period, including a public meeting in Twin Falls.

2 BOND ISSUES FOR JEROME

Jerome Police Chief Dan Hall crouches as he walks through a storage room at his station on Wednesday. The Jerome City Council plans to ask the public this fall to approve a bond to buy a $355,000 building to house the station.

Police to ask voters for a new station in Nov.

Times-News writer

JEROME — When it comes to public safety improvements, Jerome city residents will now have two major decisions in the upcoming November election.

Already, Jerome County will seek a bond to pay for a larger, improved jail. Now, the city of Jerome will also ask voters to pay to buy a building that will become the new home of the Jerome Police Department.

At the intersection of both proposals are city voters, who will make the decision about the police station, plus play a major role in the countywide jail bond election.

City leaders say the police station bond isn't intended to compete with the county's jail proposal, saying it's a matter of timing and needing to move quickly to buy a building that can be turned into a new police station.

The Jerome City Council approved on Tuesday a plan to pay a $20,000 refundable deposit to hold a building along the 800 block of East Main Street, with the option to buy it for $355,000 if the bond issue passes

See JEROME, Main 2

The two votes

Jerome city voters will now face two bond proposals in the November election, one from the city and the other from the county.

- The station: Jerome city officials seek voter approval for a bond to purchase a building for $355,000. The bond's final cost isn't known yet, as remodeling costs aren't yet calculated.
- The jail: Jerome County will make a fourth attempt at voter approval for a bond for a new, expanded 120-bed jail, estimated to cost between $8 million and $11 million. This jail proposal is pared down from prior attempts.

Paramedic services to remain in downtown Twin Falls

County, St. Luke's sign lease agreement for ambulance service

By Nick Coltrain
Times-News writer

Even after completion of the new St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center on Pole Line Road and months of nuts-and-bolts planning to transition the old hospital back to Twin Falls County, the two entities aren't done being intertwined.

The Twin Falls County commissioners have OK'd a lease agreement with St. Luke's Magic Valley to continue operating a paramedics' base in downtown Twin Falls, near City Park, so as not to hamper emergency response times, Commissioner Leon Mills said.

Because of the base's proximity and its location, "it just made sense to continue that relationship with the county," hospital spokeswoman Laura Stewart said. "It really is just a central location to that part of Twin Falls, that downtown Blue Lakes area."

The base is one of three in Twin Falls, Stewart said. Another one near Martin Street and Addison Avenue, by the old hospital campus, serves the western part of Twin Falls. A base on Kimberly Road by the cemeteries serves the east side of town.

Mills said St. Luke's will pay $500 a month to use the property, with either party having the option to cancel the agreement with two months' notice — a clause to allow for painless separation if the county finds a potential buyer for the property on Shoshone Street or if St. Luke's finds a better location in the city.

The move also fits with the commissioners' prior philosophy for the hospital's transition: No matter the urgency, don't let the move interfere with patient care.

"(The deal with the paramedics' base) is just a nice example of the county and St. Luke's working together to provide that nice community service," Stewart said.

Riding for the kids: Snake River Bros. host Rally in the Valley

By Amy Huddleston
Times-News writer

Once a year, Murtaugh Lake Park is overrun by bikers wearing leather chaps, sporting tattoos and revving their bikes, all in the name of fundraising.

The gates to the park will open Friday morning at 8 for the sixth annual Rally in the Valley hosted by the Snake River Bros., a Twin Falls-based nonprofit motorcycle organization. Over the past 10 years, the bikers have raised around $100,000 to help children and families in southern Idaho and northern Nevada in need of medical attention. The admission cost this year is $20 for adults and $15 for people 13-20 years old.

Roger Bolton, Snake River Bros. treasurer, said most of the money goes to gas cards for families traveling out of the Magic Valley for medical needs. Last year, around 700 people attended the rally and the event raised $18,000. This year Bolton said he hopes $20,000 will be raised.

As one of the founding members of the Snake River Bros. and a motorcycle enthusiast, Bolton said even those people not predisposed to wearing leather chaps will have a good time.

On Saturday morning, bikers can sign up for a 100-mile dice ride. The afternoons will offer biker rodeos and tattoo contests. The biker rodeos allow participants to show off their skills in events like the plank race, a "weenie bite" and the "honey, I'm home" competition, which requires riders to dive through an open window and disrobe quickly before putting all their clothes back on and driving away.

The event offers family friendly fun during the day, and at night the bands Swamp Cats, Dogs on the Lam, Hoodwink and As Is will be featured. Proceeds and entry fees will go toward the nonprofit's fundraising effort.

"It's good to see all of the people that show up," Bolton said. "Everyone is welcome."

Arraignment set for Jerome bank robbery suspect

Times-News

The man suspected of robbing a Jerome bank is set to answer to three felony charges later this month in Jerome County 5th District Court.

Joseph Jacobs, 23, of Jerome, is scheduled for arraignment in district court on July 25. He is accused of robbery, grand theft and burglary. His case was moved from magistrate court late last week after a judge found probable cause to charge and potentially convict Jacobs.

Police and prosecutors say Jacobs robbed the D.L. Evans Bank branch at 980 S. Lincoln Ave. on the afternoon of June 10. Police arrested Jacobs the same day at a residence near the bank.

He was allegedly found unarmed and with an undisclosed amount of cash. Jacobs remains in custody on $150,000 bond.

Gooding couple pleads not guilty to growing pot

Times-News

Gooding couple Jacob and Randie Novinger have pleaded not guilty to felony trafficking in marijuana in Gooding County 5th District Court.

Jacob, 31, and Randie, 26, entered their pleas at their district court arraignment last week and are now scheduled for a Sept. 14 jury trial. They are accused of growing marijuana plants in their home.

According to court documents, Gooding police obtained a search warrant for the house on 11th Avenue East and scoured it on June 5. The police report claims investigators found 70 plants in various states of growth in red, plastic drinking cups. Five plants were anywhere from four to nine inches in height, while the rest were just breaking through the soil. Police also recovered rolling papers, stems and seeds.

Utah woman charged with poisoning smoothie

The Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A woman was being held on an attempted murder charge Wednesday after police say she spiked her roommate’s peach smoothie with antifreeze three years ago.

Selena Irene York, 33, was arrested this week in Eugene, Ore., where she remained jailed pending extradition back to Utah.

Police say Ed Zurbuchen, now 78, nearly died when York bought him a smoothie at a nearby store, dumped out half of it and poured in antifreeze before he drank it. The Sept. 29, 2008, case went cold until a jilted boyfriend of York’s recently came forward with new information, authorities said.

Police in Vernal, Utah, received a letter in April from Joseph Dominic Ferraro, who was awaiting trial on an unrelated case in Oregon but had information about the crime, according to court documents.

The documents say he provided specific details of where York bought the smoothie and the antifreeze.

Solar

Even once it’s up, solar for the near future won’t play a large role. Idaho Power expects solar energy to make up just 1 percent of its overall system by 2030. The solar demonstration project will produce 500 kilowatts to one megawatt of energy.

“We would like to do more but we’re still trying to keep costs down,” Stokes said.

The company is also considering padding its expectations for its system load. In the past, Idaho Power would forecast how much energy was needed for a year, but not what it would take above that to supply a new, large industrial customer. Maintaining more energy would, of course, come with a cost.

“We’re really looking forward for public comment on this idea,” Stokes said. “This will help us figure out if this is what our customers want and if this is a good idea.”

It took a year for the company to compile the document. Now, the Idaho Public Utilities Commission must still review it and give a final stamp of approval. That review will include a public comment period, though the dates have not yet been released.

Burley seeks advice from Ada Co. sheriff

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Burley officials brought in a criminal justice leader Tuesday with experience in police service contracts to learn the ins and outs of the documents, as the city continues to wrangle with county officials over renewing a police contract.

“Citizens don’t care what the badge says, citizens don’t care what the patch says, citizens don’t care what the car says when they need help,” said Ada County Sheriff Gary Raney, who contracts police services with the cities of Eagle, Kuna and Star. “They want someone to come and help and that’s what I think you have to keep in mind as government leaders and elected officials first and foremost.”

Raney oversees more than 600 employees and a 1,217-bed jail, and is also an adjunct professor at Boise State University and Northwestern University’s Center for Public Safety.

Ada County’s police service contracts follow the dedicated policing model, the current contract trend. It allows for “mini” police departments in each city complete with identifying insignias and decals, and a police chief who answers to the city council.

Other models include hourly, which most closely matches the current contract between the city of Burley and Cassia County, and shared supervision, the least common model.

“Criminals do not know borders or that invisible county line that we call ‘city limit.’ They cross that into the county, they cross that into other counties and jurisdictions,” Raney said. “The more we can share information and utilize similar resources to recognize crime and arrest offenders, the better off we are, and that is done through better consolidation and co-location of policing services.”

For cities contracting out their police services, it comes down to costs, communication and trust, Raney said.

The advantages include lower costs and better public safety. The disadvantages include less information and control for the city, differences in service-level expectations that can cause frustration, confusion over costs and billing, and small issues becoming big issues if the sheriff is unresponsive to the city’s needs.

Raney said he staffs at one officer per 200 yearly calls for service by the public. For example, Eagle — with a population of about 20,000 people — currently has 12 officers and would have seven more if not for budget constraints. Eagle pays nearly $1.4 million annually for police services.

Adding an Ada County deputy to a city costs $90,302 per year with uniforms and equipment, Raney said. Ninety percent of his budget is personnel costs, and each city can also purchase overtime. Each patrol car, which is used by two deputies, costs just less than $45,000 with equipment.

Reached by phone later on Wednesday, Raney said his agency’s contracts were much simpler when first used, containing more estimates and generalizations.

If someone is arrested for city ordinance violations under the contracts, the county charges the city for the jail time but does not charge for violations of state statutes. The cities are also billed for fire and emergency service dispatch calls based on the actual number of calls for those services the year before.

The last contract between Burley and Cassia County required the city to pay $1.5 million of the $3.3 million it takes to operate the sheriff’s office. It expired last October.

“I think as we’ve looked at our contract and gone through the problems, it’s been about communication,” said Burley Councilman Denny Curtis.

Curtis said he would like to see the city and county stay together in some way.

“But, we have to stay together for the benefit of both parties,” Curtis said.

Wakeboard competition returns to Burley

By Laurie Welch
Times-News writer

BURLEY — Several dozen wakeboard riders will shake up the Snake River on Saturday as they compete for prizes and glory during the 13th annual Wake in the Snake competition.

The event will be held on the river from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Burley Golf Course Marina and is free for spectators. Riders who want to compete, but haven’t registered online can register for $60 the day of the event.

“People like to come to this event mainly because of the venue,” said Carol Warr, business manager for Idaho Water Sports, which hosts the competition.

“They always say they like the grassy park by the water and that the people in Burley are really friendly.”

Warr said about 90 percent of the competitors will come from outside the area and about 500 spectators are expected to turn out to watch.

Riders as young as 10 will be able to compete and there will be a women’s division, as well as the crowd-pleasing “outlaw” class.

Professional rider Bob Soven, of Orlando, Fla., who held a wakeboard clinic in Burley on Wednesday, said competitions like Wake in the Snake give people a chance to get out and both watch the sport and compete in it.

“If people come out to Wake in the Snake, they’ll see high-flying action on the water in a family environment,” Soven said. Warr said there will also be a bounce house for children, among other activities and lots of trivia.

muster with voters. The building sought was formerly office space for the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

“The needs of our police are not new,” Mayor John Shine said. “This discussion has been going on for quite some time and I think everybody in the community understands we need a new facility.”

Jerome County Commission Chairman Charlie Howell said the city has the right to present proposals to its voters, adding that the two issues can be weighed on their own merits.

At the same time, he said he believes it will make the county’s effort more challenging.

The existing police station, which the city’s law enforcement agency moved into in 1988, has plenty of problems that Jerome Police Chief Dan Hall points to.

The building, constructed back in the 1920s and formerly used as a telephone exchange, has no room for further expansion. Cramped offices line the station’s hallway.

For example, the room for patrol officers holds four computer work stations, and the space also doubles as a locker room.

The partially underground building has leaky walls and a flat roof that drips, even with repairs. Occasionally, a foul odor drifts through the building.

In the station’s storage space for records, a tarp covers computer servers to shield them from leaks.

Other needs vary. Among them: a secure space for police cars and searching vehicles for evidence, and more security for storing police files.

As for the building under consideration, city leaders say it’s not as ideal as constructing a new station, but a necessary choice given the economy.

“I’ve got to be honest it’s probably not the optimum plan,” Hall said. “Obviously the optimum plan would be to build a new police facility that was built from the ground up.”

Hall said the building on Main Street could probably meet the department’s need for about a decade if the city’s growth continues as it has.

“I certainly empathize with the county and the need for the county jail,” he said. “We don’t have much choice in our timing. We basically have to move on it at this point. ... If we want to take advantage of this opportunity, we basically need to do it now.”

New danger found in asbestos town

By Matthew Brown
Associated Press writer

LIBBY, Mont. — For a decade, the people of Libby have longed for the day when they will be rid of the asbestos that turned their town into the deadliest Superfund site in America.

Now they are being forced to live through the agony all over again, thanks to two giant piles of bark and wood chips on the edge of town.

An Associated Press investigation found that the federal government has known for at least three years that the wood piles were contaminated with an unknown level of asbestos, even as Libby residents hauled truckload after truckload of the material away from the site and placed it in yards, in city parks, outside schools and at the local cemetery. The Environmental Protection Agency did not stop the removal of the material until the AP began investigating in early March.

Regulators still do not know what effect the material could have on public health, but EPA documents obtained by the AP showed that the agency found potentially deadly asbestos fibers in four of 20 samples taken from the piles of scrap wood in 2007. The sprawling piles came from a now-defunct timber mill that took thousands of trees from a forest tainted with asbestos from a nearby mine.

The potential for more contamination has frayed nerves in the town of 3,000 people and further eroded confidence in the government to clean up the mess that to date has killed an estimated 400 people and sickened 1,750.

“We thought we were coming to an end and now we have this issue all over again,” said Lerah Parker, who spread dozens of truckloads of the material around her property.

The source of Libby’s asbestos was a W.R. Grace vermiculite mine that at its peak produced 2 million tons of ore annually and employed 200 people. Vermiculite stripped from a mountain on the edge of town was shipped around the world to make insulation, only for authorities to later discover the ore was loaded with deadly asbestos.

The EPA has spent more than $370 million over the past 11 years cleaning up Libby. Contractors in moon suits carting off tainted materials have become a constant reminder of the severity of the contamination.

The wood chips and bark became a popular item for anyone in Libby looking to add some landscaping touches to their yards, and for contractors who packaged the product and sold it around the country.

Local officials estimate that 1,000 tons were used in landscaping and for erosion control in Libby. Over the past decade, as much as 15,000 tons were sold and hauled out of town to destinations unknown, according to the economic development official who was selling it.

The EPA is now scrambling to gauge the public health risk and is preparing to issue guidelines about how residents should handle the wood, including warnings not to move or work with the material when it’s dry to avoid stirring up asbestos. But the agency has decided it won’t track down where the chips went, saying it no longer has jurisdiction because the material is now classified as a commercial product.

Responding to the AP’s investigation, Montana U.S. Sen. Max Baucus on Tuesday pledged to launch his own inquiry into the use of the bark and wood chips. The Democrat — a longtime advocate for Libby — said he wanted to find what EPA knew, when they knew it and whether more action was needed to protect public health.

“The people of Libby have already been poisoned in the name of greed and I won’t allow them to be poisoned again because of negligence,” Baucus said.

The EPA’s press office declined repeated requests from the AP to interview senior officials within the agency’s Superfund program about removal of the material.

The agency instead offered a written statement saying its prior tests on the material provided “incomplete information” and were too limited to indicate an imminent danger.

The local official who was selling the wood and bark, Paul Rummelhart, dismissed concerns, saying they unnecessarily threatened to undermine economic development in the Libby area, where roughly one in five people are unemployed.

“I’ve got a file that’s three-feet thick on all the (asbestos) sampling that’s been going on,” Rummelhart said. “If you have a few hits, so what?”

Federal officials have acknowledged that removal of the bark went on for years without their knowledge. Yet the agency absolved the on-scene contractor, CDM, of responsibility, saying the company’s workers were not charged with monitoring movement of material into and out of the former mill site.

Lerah Parker holds bark potentially contaminated with asbestos that she and her husband used in the garden around their home, April 28 in Libby, Mont. More than 15,000 tons of the material have been sold, used in and trucked out of the town over the past decade, with unknown risks to public health.

A CDM spokeswoman, Marlene Hobel, referred questions about the matter back to the EPA.

“We’re trying to take a look backward at what’s there,” EPA regional director Jim Martin said. “We’re trying to reconstruct history and see what has been moved and should it have been moved.”

The presence of the bark has stoked fears of widespread recontamination just after the EPA in May declared it had reduced the dangers facing Libby.

“How many more years is it going to take?” asked Parker, who suffers from asbestosis, an incurable disease caused by inhaling asbestos fibers that scars the lungs and slowly starves them of air. “Are we supposed to sit here and hold our breath?”

Parker and her husband have been working to restore their property since it was demolished during the cleanup. Over the last several years, they hauled about 30 loads of the bark and wood chips from the former Stimson Lumber Co. mill.

They showed a reporter more than 300 trees they had planted, each one ringed with bark a foot deep. Scattered across the property were thousands of newly planted berry bushes, vines, shrubs and other plants — all ringed with the bark.

The material is easily found around town, where landscapers, city workers and homeowners paid small fees to haul it out. Those who have used it described it as ideal landscaping material — cheap, plentiful and attractive.

After the EPA tested samples from the piles and found evidence of asbestos in 2007, agency scientists never determined just how much contamination was present. Air samples taken from the site were negative.

Truckloads of the chips and bark continued to be shipped from the site as recently as last fall. A pile that witnesses said once towered as high as a four-story building and covered five acres has been reduced to remnants. A second pile, now roughly half gone, still towers at least 20 feet.

Let’s be realistic about future of old hospital

The Twin Falls County commissioners became somewhat reluctant landlords last week, taking over the 300,000-square-foot white elephant that used to be the St. Luke’s Magic Valley health care complex.

As part of 2006 sale of the hospital to St. Luke’s Health System that led to the construction of a new hospital, the county now faces a major real estate challenge — and a conundrum:

How much of a purpose-built hospital is suitable for any other use?

The county just commissioned a space study for the Addison Avenue West medical office building and don’t expect results for about two months. From there, commissioners will decide whether to move non-law-enforcement county facilities into that building or use the old Twin Falls Clinic and Hospital building on Shoshone Street. There’s no timeline for the decision.

They’ve already spent $60,000 on studies associated with county departments moving into the buildings and remodeling information. The county has at least $5 million set aside for final renovations, including $4.6 million St. Luke’s gave the county for remodeling.

As for filling the other 14 buildings the county inherited from St. Luke’s, commissioners said they’ve already received some interest from adjacent building owners hoping to expand, and there have been preliminary talks with the city of Twin Falls concerning it taking a building for a new City Hall.

It’s worth taking time to explore at the possibilities, but we tend to agree with Commissioner George Urie, who’s the in-house pragmatist about the future of the properties.

Urie has said that if the county can’t find the right tenants for the properties, they’re likely to be demolished.

And the meter is running. The county just signed up an on-site caretaker for the old hospital property and a private security service. The longer the old hospital is empty, the deeper the money pit becomes.

We hope a new day is coming for the old hospital campus and for the West Addison neighborhood that surrounds it. But Twin Falls County taxpayers can’t afford to wait indefinitely for that to happen.

Our view: It’s a formidable challenge to find someone to take 300,000 square feet of unwanted hospital space off your hands. What do you think? We welcome viewpoints from our readers on this and other issues.

How much should gas cost?

For people who believe that oil markets are rigged or broken, the first week of May offered Exhibit A.

That week, the price of crude oil plunged more than $16 a barrel, erasing about $32 billion of the market value of Exxon Mobil and presaging an easing of prices at the pump, where the cost of a gallon of gas had hit record levels.

Steve Mufson

On that Thursday alone, the price of oil fell off a cliff, tumbling more than $10 a barrel.

Yet the physical amount of oil in the market didn’t change that week. Libya’s oil exports had been offline for more than two months. In the oil world, the surface was relatively calm. But a couple of signs of economic weakness spooked traders, who suddenly worried that demand would be less than they had expected. Goldman Sachs, a believer in rising crude oil prices, predicted a temporary pullback. Poof! More than a tenth of the value of a barrel of oil disappeared.

For consumers, oil prices are like a bad case of malaria — feverish one month and tolerable another. Such wild fluctuation makes it nearly impossible to discern: What is the right price for oil?

Today’s crude oil prices are nearly 10 times as high as they were in 1998, and twice as high as in 2005. They hit a record of $147 a barrel in July 2008, only to sink to less than $40 a barrel by the end of that year.

In March, amid intense fighting in Libya, President Obama said that there wasn’t a serious supply shortage and that rising oil prices weren’t reason enough to tap the nation’s Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Then on June 23, he suddenly said that turmoil in Libya justified the largest-ever release of reserves. It was more of an economic stimulus than a national security measure.

Because oil prices fluctuate so much, however, it will be impossible to measure Obama’s success or failure. If prices continue to drop, as they were doing before his move, will he deserve credit? If they rise, will he deserve blame? If it works, will we want him to do it again?

That will come down to the question of price.

In a competitive market, the price of oil would be linked to the marginal cost of the next barrel. In other words, the price for the first 88 barrels would be affected by the cost of producing the 89th barrel, in effect the cost of replacing each barrel used.

But in the world of oil, it’s hard to say what that replacement cost is. Producing oil is not like churning out computer chips, where costs are similar everywhere.

In Canada, it costs somewhere between $40 and $60 a barrel to mine and melt the viscous goo known as tar sands. Yet in the Gulf of Mexico, where giant drilling rigs plumb deep waters, the cost of finding and developing oilfields can be relatively modest. Chevron, for example, has a $7.5 billion platform that will tap into a half-billion-barrel field at an average cost of about $15 a barrel.

And that’s the thing: There is no free market. There are obstacles everywhere. Pipelines. Politics. Oil spills. Warfare. They make it hard to figure out a marginal price for the next barrel of oil because it’s not clear whether the cheapest barrel can get anywhere near a tanker, refinery or consumer.

Some argue that an era of limits has begun. Yes, there is a peak to world oil production out there somewhere, because we’re gobbling up the plants and plankton that have been simmering for millions of years in the sedimentary cooker faster than the Earth can replace them. But we keep postponing that peak — by finding new fields, getting more oil out of old ones or clamping down on consumption.

Still, supplies could remain tight because of fast consumption growth in China, where every year it’s increasing by more than half a million barrels a day. The world has about 3 million to 4 million barrels a day of spare capacity right now, but prices edge up when that cushion shrinks.

The only way to restore balance in coming years will be through higher prices — but that could constrain economic growth. Robert McNally, founder and president of the Raptidian Group, estimates that prices will have to rise 13 to 15 percent a year to effectively ration supplies. “You can have 4 percent economic growth or double-digit crude oil prices,” he says, “but you can’t have both.”

That goes back to Obama’s release of strategic reserves. “The administration will be repeatedly tested” on its strategic oil reserves policy, McNally says. “If you believe half of this, how do you get reelected next year?” he says. “You have to prevent the rationing. So you have to throw the reserves into the market.”

A week after Obama and the International Energy Agency unveiled their oil reserve plan, petroleum prices had recovered nearly all the ground.

It remains unclear whether the president pays a political price, and what price we’ll all pay for oil.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Reader thankful for Ehrlick conviction

What an ordinary day, June 29, 2001. It was Robert Manwill’s day. Justice was served.

Robert was a light in this dark and cruel world, his biological father said at his son’s funeral. His sweet, 8-year-old son was taken away too soon by Daniel Ehrlick. The day finally came when justice was done. Congratulations to the prosecutor. They presented their case completely and broadly. They were very comprehensive. Thank you to the 12 jurors. It only took them two hours to find Daniel Ehrlick guilty of first-degree murder for Robert’s torturous murder.

Robert’s light is shining. When you look up at the stars at night remember Robert Manwill. His star is the brightest and shiniest. He is telling us he is happy and he is OK. May he rest in peace, for today justice was served.

As New Jersey throws its weight behind Wisconsin and Ohio in rolling back the collective bargaining rights of public sector employees, we are once again going to hear the argument that public sector unions ought not to be confused with their private sector counterparts. They’re two different animals entirely.

Private sector workers, so the argument goes, have historically organized to win better working conditions and a bigger piece of the pie from profit-making entities like railroads and coal mines. But public sector employees work for “us,” the ultimate nonprofit, and therefore are not entitled to the same protections.

This is a fond notion at best. Yes, public school teachers were never gunned down by Pinkerton guards; municipal firefighters were never housed in company-owned shanties by the side of the tracks. But none of this cancels their rights as organized workers. No ancestor of mine voted to ratify the Constitution, either, but I have the same claim on the Bill of Rights as any Daughter of the American Revolution. Collective bargaining is an inheritance and we are all named in the will.

Garret Keizer

The two-labors fallacy rests on an even shakier proposition: that profits exist only where there is an accountant to tally them. This is economics reduced to the code of a shoplifter — whatever the security guard doesn’t see the store won’t miss. If my wife and I have young children but are still able to enjoy the double-income advantages of a childless couple, isn’t that partly because our children are being watched at school? If I needn’t invest some of my household’s savings in elaborate surveillance systems, isn’t that partly because I have a patrol car circling the block? The so-called “public sector” is a profit-making entity; it profits me.

Denying this profitability has an obvious appeal to conservatives. It allows a union-busting agenda to hide behind nice distinctions. “We’re not anti-union, we’re just against certain kinds of unions.” But the denial isn’t exclusive to conservatives; in fact, it informs the delusional innocence of many liberals. I mean the idea that exploitation is the exclusive province of oil tycoons and other wicked types. If you own a yoga center or direct an M.F.A. program, you can’t possibly be implicated in the more scandalous aspects of capitalism — just as you can’t possibly be to blame for racism if you’ve never grown cotton or owned a slave.

The fact is that our entire economic system rests on the principle of paying someone less than his or her labor is worth. The principle applies in the public sector no less than the private. The purpose of most labor unions has never been to eliminate the profit margin (the tragedy of the American labor movement) but rather to keep it within reasonable bounds.

But what about those school superintendents and police chiefs with their fabulous pensions, with salaries and benefits far beyond the average worker’s dreams?

Tell me about it. This past school year, I worked as a public high school teacher in northeastern Vermont. At 58 years of age, with a master’s degree and 16 years of teaching experience, I earned less than $50,000. By the standards of the Ohio school superintendent or the Wisconsin police chief, my pension can only be described as pitiful, though the dairy farmer who lives down the road from me would be happy to have it.

He should have it, at the least, and he could. If fiscal conservatives truly want to “bring salaries into line” they should commit to a model similar to the one proposed by George Orwell 70 years ago, with the nation’s highest income exceeding the lowest by no more than a factor of 10. They should establish that model in the public sector and enforce it with equal rigor and truly progressive taxation in the private.

Right now CEO’s of multinational corporations earn salaries as much as a thousand times those of their lowest-paid employees. In such a context complaining about “lavish” public sector salaries is like shushing the foul language of children playing near the set of a snuff film. Whom are we kidding? More to the point, who’s getting snuffed?

Exxon assured feds failed Montana pipeline was deeply buried in river

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Exxon Mobil Co. had reassured federal regulators and officials from a Montana town since December that an oil pipeline beneath the Yellowstone River was safe, buried deep enough to avoid any accidental ruptures.

Then, on Friday night, the pipe failed, spilling an estimated 42,000 gallons into the flooded river.

The cause of the accident remains under investigation, but the prevailing theory among officials and the company is that the raging Yellowstone eroded the riverbed and exposed the line to damaging rocks or debris.

There is still no definitive word on how far downriver the spill could spread.

Oil has fouled miles of the waterway that flows from the famed Yellowstone National Park, upriver from the spill, and across farmlands and prized fishing grounds to North Dakota. Crude has been reported as far as 240 miles downstream, although most appears to be concentrated in the first 25 miles.

As residents along the river deal with an oil-smearred shoreline and workers clean up the mess, the accident has raised concerns about the impact that the season's floods may be having on the network of pipelines buried under riverbeds.

"It's too early to tell

Cleanup workers unload a truckload of oil-absorbent material at a staging area at Coulson Park alongside the Yellowstone River in Billings, Mont., Wednesday.

whether this is an isolated incident or there might be other types of increased damage or erosion based on a year of flooding," said Brigham McCown, a former federal pipeline safety official who now advises pipeline companies at a Dallas firm.

Officials in Laurel, near the site of the spill, raised questions last year about erosion along the riverbank threatening the Exxon Mobil line. The company in December surveyed the pipe's depth and said it was at least 5 to 8 feet beneath the riverbed.

The line was temporarily shut down in May after Laurel officials again raised concerns that it could be at risk as the Yellowstone started to rise. The company restarted the line after a day, following a review of its safety record.

The company said in a June 1 email — just a month before the spill — that the line was buried at least 12 feet beneath the riverbed, according to documents from the U.S. Department of Transportation, which oversees pipelines.

Exxon Mobil Pipeline Co. president Gary Pruessing said Wednesday the company did not know where the 12-foot figure came from but was looking into the matter.

The documents also contained additional details that raised new questions about the company's response.

Exxon Mobil took almost an hour to fully seal the pipeline after the accident — nearly twice as long as it had publicly disclosed. The company said that did not change its estimate of how much crude entered the river.

Company representatives initially said the spill lasted "at most" 30 minutes, and then later said workers began shutting down the line within six minutes of the break.

Wyoming wants wolf deal exempt from court review

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — The state's lone U.S. representative wants any deal between Wyoming and the federal government over wolf management exempted from review in the courts.

Rep. Cynthia Lummis, R-Wyo., announced Wednesday she's inserted language in a pending appropriations bill to bar any such legal challenges. She also proposes to require the federal government to transfer wolf management to Wyoming as soon as the state and federal officials can reach a deal.

Wyoming Gov. Matt Mead and U.S. Interior Secretary Ken Salazar are set to meet Thursday in Cheyenne to discuss the wolf issue. U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service Director Dan Ashe also is scheduled to attend.

Mead and Salazar have held a series of meetings since late last year intended to allow Wyoming to follow the lead of other states in the Northern Rockies and take over management of wolves from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Federal biologists and environmental groups have opposed ending federal protections for wolves in Wyoming for years because the current state plan calls for them to be classified as predators that could be shot on sight in most areas. The standoff has spawned several federal lawsuits in Wyoming and elsewhere.

The federal government earlier this year approved turning wolf management over to state governments in Idaho, Montana and other areas with a similar provision barring court challenges. Environmentalists are nonetheless trying to fight that move in court, saying it sets a precedent that undermines the Endangered Species Act while exceeding the power of Congress to limit judicial review.

Lummis issued a statement Wednesday saying it's necessary to short-circuit years of legal wrangling on the wolf issue in Wyoming.

Since their reintroduction in Yellowstone and other areas in the mid-1990s, the wolf population in the Northern Rockies has rebounded up to more than 1,600 animals, including more than 300 in Wyoming. Many ranchers and hunters in Wyoming have expressed concern that wolves are taking too great a toll on elk, moose and livestock.

Illegal fireworks blamed for fire that damaged Lewiston church

LEWISTON (AP) — An illegal firework is believed to have ignited a blaze that significantly damaged a church Tuesday in northern Idaho, a fire inspector said.

A family sleeping in the basement of Grace Evangelical Lutheran Church in Lewiston was awakened by firefighters and evacuated from the burning building early Tuesday. The firefighters had arrived to find the roof and a wing of the church in flames.

There were no reported injuries.

Lewiston fire inspector Julian Sorrell said illegal fireworks are believed to have ignited the blaze after striking the church roof. Sorrell and Lewiston police detective Rick Fuentes searched the neighborhood and concluded the aerial fireworks came from a street beside the church.

Idaho law bars people from setting off aerial fireworks.

"The fire was initially seen as a smoldering fire on the roof and subsequently erupted into flames," Sorrell told the Lewiston Tribune.

The blaze resulted in significant damage to the building, where the family had been staying as part of a program offered by Family Promise of the Lewis-Clark Valley Inc. The organization partners with churches to provide shelter to families in crisis.

"We've had tears and sadness, and there will be grieving."

— Loretta Stowers, president of the church's council

Only three of the five family members staying at the church were inside when the blaze erupted. Firefighters were able to evacuate them before any major damage was done to the building, Sorrell said.

The roof later caved in, and the church windows were blown out. Smoke damage was also reported throughout the sanctuary, and the church's fellowship hall, which contains a kitchen and offices, was deemed a total loss.

Parishioners stopped by Tuesday to survey the damage.

"We've had tears and sadness, and there will be grieving," said Loretta Stowers, president of the church's council.

She took inventory of what could be salvaged from the church, which will not be open for services Sunday. The Grace Lutheran congregation will instead meet at their office building next door, Stowers said.

"The church is our members, and we will hold together," she said.

Man killed by Yellowstone grizzly

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — A grizzly bear killed a man who was hiking with his wife in Yellowstone National Park's backcountry after the couple apparently surprised the female bear and its cubs on Wednesday, park officials said.

It was the park's first fatal grizzly mauling since 1986, but the third in the Yellowstone region in just over a year amid ever-growing numbers of grizzlies and tourists roaming the same wild landscape of scalding-hot geysers and sweeping mountain vistas.

The Wednesday morning attack happened just two days after the peak weekend for tourism in the park all year, on a trail close to Canyon Village near the middle of Yellowstone.

Details were sketchy but park officials said the bear attacked to defend against a perceived threat. They said the wife of the 57-year-old victim called 911 on her cell phone and other hikers in the area responded to her cries for help.

Yellowstone spokesman Al Nash said the couple saw the bear twice on their hike. The first time, they continued hiking. The second time, the grizzly was running at them and the man told his wife to run.

The woman told park officials she didn't see the bear attack her husband. When the bear went for her, Nash said, she dropped to the ground. The grizzly lifted her off the ground by the day pack she was wearing then dropped her.

The woman may have had scrapes and bruises but didn't seek medical attention, Nash said. Authorities weren't prepared to identify the couple until the man's family could be notified, he said.

Park officials worked Wednesday to clear the area of people.

Alert: Terrorists look to surgically implant bombs in humans

By Eileen Sullivan
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Airlines are being warned by the government that terrorists are considering surgically hiding bombs inside humans to evade airport security. And as a result, travelers may find themselves subjected to more scrutiny when flying in the heart of summer vacation season, especially to the U.S. from abroad.

Bombs-in-the body is not a new idea, but recent intelligence indicates a fresh interest in using this method, as people-scanning machines in airports aren't able to detect explosives hidden inside humans. Still, there is no current information that points to a specific plot involving surgically implanted explosives, a U.S. security official said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

As airport security has increased since the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks, so has the terrorists' creativity in developing methods to get around it. Aviation continues to be a special target, and evidence from Osama bin Laden's compound showed that the al-Qaida leader retained his fascination with attacking airplanes until his death in May.

Last year, it was reported that British officials uncovered intelligence that al-Qaida was seeking to surgically implant bombs, a move some believed was prompted by the use of full-body imaging machines at major airports around the world.

"This is something we've been concerned about for quite some time," said J. Bennett Waters, a security consultant with the Washington, D.C.-based Chertoff Group and a former Transportation Security Administration official in the Bush administration.

The U.S. government has been working with foreign air carriers and governments to identify ways to discover hidden explosives, including bombs potentially hidden inside of humans. Officials did not want to discuss specific security measures under consideration so as not to tip off terrorists who could seek ways to get around them.

Once a terrorist finds a willing suicide bomber, secures the explosive material and makes the bomb, carrying off this tactic is not that difficult, said Chris Ronay, a former chief of the FBI explosives unit.

"It's rather easy and the damage could be rather severe," Ronay said.

Surgery to implant explosives could be done a couple of days before a planned attack, said James Crippin, an explosives expert in Colorado. In order for it to work, there would need to be a detonation device, and it's conceivable that if the explosive was implanted in a woman's breast, the detonator could be underneath the breast so that all the operative would have to do is press downward, Crippin said.

But Jimmie C. Oxley, a chemistry professor at the University of Rhode Island and explosives expert, said it would be tough to carry out such an effort successfully.

She said there are only so many places to hide a bomb in the body, and a suicide bomber would have to recover enough from the surgery to travel and set off the device.

The al-Qaida offshoot in Yemen has emerged as the most inventive terror organization these days and has been behind two plots that nearly brought down planes over the U.S. The group, known as al-Qaida in the Arabian Peninsula, or AQAP, was behind the Christmas Day attack in 2009 when a Nigerian hid a bomb in his underpants and nearly brought down an airliner over Detroit.

Obama logs another first with his presidential tweet

By Peter Nicholas
Tribune Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — In a presidency full of firsts, President Barack Obama racked up another one: first sitting president to "tweet" live from the White House.

Obama strode to a laptop set up in the East Room on Wednesday, splayed his fingers in classic touch-type position and "tweeted" out a question: "In order to reduce the deficit, what costs would you cut and what investments would you keep? BO?"

With that, the first-ever Twitter town hall was under way. Obama sat on a high stool, his back to the Gilbert Stuart portrait of George Washington, and fielded questions submitted via the trendiest of social media tools.

He didn't make news, but that wasn't really the point. As ever with the tech-obsessed White House staff, the goal was to give an on-line audience an unfiltered dose of Barack Obama.

The questions weren't softballs. "Shnaps" seemed to think Obama was forsaking the free market. Then President Barack Obama sends a tweet from a laptop computer during a 'Twitter Town Hall' in the East Room of the White House in Washington, Wednesday.

there was a question about jobs.

"After embarking on a record spending binge that's left us deeper in debt, where are the jobs?" read the message from (at)johnboehner.

That would be House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio. Obama spotted a character glitch in the message: "John needs to work on his typing skills." (Boehner's office later said the problem was at the receiving end and that there was no typo when the message went out).

Noting Boehner's political leanings, Obama called the question "slightly skewed." He conceded that job growth hasn't been fast enough, but then turned it around and asked why Boehner and other lawmakers won't pay for road, sewer and bridge projects that could put people to work right away.

"We haven't gotten the kind of cooperation that I'd like to see on some of those ideas and initiatives," he said. "But I'm just going to keep on trying and eventually I'm sure the speaker will see the light."

With the economy sputtering, the questions centered on domestic issues. People sent in nearly 170,000 questions and comments. Obama answered 18 before reviewing the replies to his inaugural tweet.

"RenegadeNerd" asked if Obama would raise the debt ceiling on his own, bypassing Congress on the grounds that it would be unconstitutional for the U.S. not to pay its bills. That's a strategy

Auto industry is on hiring spree

By Dee-Ann Durbin
Associated Press writer

DETROIT — Volkswagen opened a plant in Tennessee last month with 2,000 workers. Honda is hiring 1,000 in Indiana to meet demand for its best-selling Civic. General Motors is looking for 2,500 in Detroit to build the Chevy Volt.

Two years after the end of the Great Recession, the auto industry is hiring again — and much faster than the rest of the economy. As an employer, it's growing faster than airplane manufacturers, shipbuilders, health care providers and the federal government.

The hiring spree is even more remarkable because memories of the U.S. auto industry's near-death experience are fresh. In 2009, General Motors and Chrysler both got government bailouts and entered bankruptcy, and auto sales hit a 30-year low.

In June of that year, about 623,000 people were employed by the auto industry in the United States, the fewest since the early 1980s. Now the figure is almost 700,000, a 12 percent increase.

Sales are back up, too, and automakers are hiring by the thousands to meet increased demand.

"The buzz is incredible around here about what opportunity we're going to get if we can build a great product," says Ben Edwards, who went to work for Volkswagen in Chattanooga, Tenn., last year and is now a team leader on an assembly line that installs tires and seats.

Edwards was working as a general contractor until the housing market dried up. He says the pay at Volkswagen, which starts at $14.50 an hour, is fair and the benefits are generous.

Besides hiring 2,000 people itself, Volkswagen figures the plant, where it will make its new Passat, will create 9,000 spin-off jobs in the region, including 500 at auto-supplier plants that are springing up nearby.

Automakers are hiring again because car sales are rising. Americans bought 10.4 million cars and trucks in 2009 and 11.6 million in 2010. This year, they're on track to buy 13 million or more, and auto companies are adding shifts to meet the demand.

"Everybody got so lean and mean during the downturn that they're trying to rebuild staff," says Charles Chesbrough, a senior economist with IHS Automotive.

percent gain for the economy as a whole, excluding farming and adjusted for seasonal variation, since June 2009. The Labor Department reports Friday on jobs gained or lost last month.

In a normal economic recovery, improvement in the housing market leads the way by creating construction jobs. But home prices haven't stopped falling, and the construction industry has shed 8 percent of its workers since June 2009 — 474,000 jobs in all.

The gains in the auto industry have been small by comparison.

But they do create positive ripple effects for the economy. The Center for Automotive Research estimates that every new auto manufacturing job leads to nine other jobs — from parts makers to restaurants that feed autoworkers.

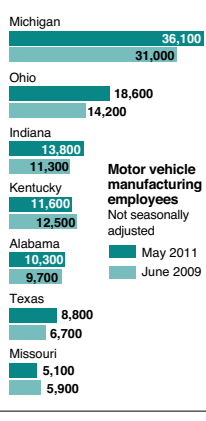

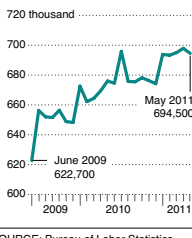

The auto gains have been widespread, with the Midwest the biggest beneficiary. In Ohio alone,

"Zombie shooting has really taken off in the last three years."

— Eric Johnson, owner of the Shoot House

Taking aim at the living dead

N. Idaho obstacle course offers 'zombie shooting'

By Tom Hasslinger
Coeur d'Alene Press

COEUR D'ALENE — "Don't chase the zombies, they could be leading you to an ambush."

That's advice from Eric Johnson, owner of the Shoot House, the downtown Coeur d'Alene business that lets real-life zombies attack you.

Your best defense is a simulated weapon of your choice, from a 9mm handgun to a fully automatic machine gun, so when they come at you, blast away.

"This is the entertainment, the hook of the business," Johnson said. "Zombie shooting has really taken off in the last three years."

Google zombie hunt and a slew of pages will come up. Everyone, it seems, wants to shoot one. Credit Hollywood movies, credit political correctness for not feeling bad for killing the already dead, just know it's popular.

And Coeur d'Alene's obstacle course, open for roughly three weeks, is at 403 N. Second St., connected to the next-door businesses, Downtown Guns and Ammo.

It's more than just blasting zombies. It offers real-life firearm training courses for the general public to law enforcement agencies. The training courses use a smokeless, non-toxic marking cartridge from a converted firearm. The cartridges, made by Simunition, don't penetrate and the discharges are quiet, so the shooter doesn't have to wear ear protection.

The courses incorporate home-based and real-life situations, like an attack at an ATM machine, or a home invasion, to give it more realism. Using live attackers adds stress for the trainee, making the lesson more valuable.

"The live targets add a whole other element to the training," Johnson said.

But it's the zombie blasting that's taking off.

U.S., Mexico sign multi-year cross-border trucking agreement

By Jonathan M. Katz
Associated Press writer

MEXICO CITY — U.S. and Mexican officials signed an agreement Wednesday allowing each country's trucks to traverse the other's highways, implementing a key provision of the North American Free Trade Agreement after nearly two decades of bickering.

Transportation secretaries Ray LaHood and Dionisio Perez-Jacome signed the three-year memorandum, which is based on an agreement announced in March by Presidents Barack Obama and Felipe Calderon.

NAFTA, signed in 1994, had called for Mexican trucks to have unrestricted access to highways in border states by 1995 and full access to all U.S. highways by January 2000. Canadian trucks have no limits on where they can go.

But until now, Mexican trucks have seldom been allowed farther than a buffer zone on the U.S. side of the border. In retaliation, Mexico had imposed higher tariffs on dozens of U.S. products.

The Mexican government has now agreed to suspend those tariffs as long as the agreement is in place.

The public debate surrounding the accord had mostly focused on the safety of Mexican trucks. But labor unions and other groups were strongly opposed to the agreement, which they say will cost Americans trucking and other jobs.

The U.S. Department of Transportation says the safety concerns have now been resolved. Electronic monitoring systems will track how many hours the trucks are in service. Drivers will also have to pass safety reviews, drug tests and assessments of their English-language and U.S. traffic sign-reading skills. Mexico has the authority to demand similar measures from U.S. truck drivers entering their territory.

But those won't do much to resolve the U.S. debate over the migration of jobs, which dates back to the NAFTA debates of the early 1990s. The question: Will a freer flow of cross-border cargo traffic boost business and allow

Building permits continue to decline

Times-News

Building permits for new home construction and commercial construction are still on the decline in the Magic Valley compared to a year ago.

The city of Twin Falls approved seven permits for new home construction in June, 12.5 percent fewer permits than were issued in June 2010. Year-to-date, the city's seen roughly half the new construction it had by this time last year; Twin Falls approved 78 total single-family home permits by the end of June 2011, compared to 141 permits granted in the same time frame in 2010.

Across the bridge, the city of Jerome saw a similar decline of 12 percent from June 2010 to June 2011. During the latter, only three permits were approved for new homes in Jerome.

Year-to-date, Jerome has approved six new home construction permits this year, which represents a nearly 18 percent decline compared to 2010.

In new commercial construction, the permits issued in Twin Falls dropped by about 10 each month from the previous year, representing a year-to-date decline of 43 percent.

Business In Brief

CONNECTICUT Bank of America to lay off 107 workers

HARTFORD, Conn. — Bank of America has informed Connecticut officials it will be laying off more than 100 workers in Hartford and East Hartford.

Spokeswoman Nicole Nastacie said Wednesday that Bank of America is eliminating 56 positions at its Hartford Cash Vault site, transferring the work to Dedham, Mass., and Schenectady, NY.

The bank is also exiting its East Hartford Lockbox site, affecting about 50 workers. The work will be relocated to Boston's neighborhood of Dorchester.

The bank notified the state Department of Labor that it will lay off the workers in Hartford on Sept. 23. Employees in East Hartford will lose their jobs from Aug. 11 to Dec. 1.

Bank of America says it will remain a major employer in Connecticut, with about 4,000 workers.

CALIFORNIA U.S. music sales see first rise since 2004

LOS ANGELES — U.S. music album sales grew in the first six months of the year from a year ago, the first gain since 2004, thanks to rising sales of digital tracks and albums.

Tracking firm Nielsen SoundScan said Wednesday that overall album sales rose nearly 4 percent to 221.5 million units, from 213.6 million a year ago.

The figure includes compact discs and digital albums. Nielsen also counts 10 tracks sold individually as one album.

The top-selling album was Adele's "21," with 2.5 million albums sold, while Lady Gaga's "Born This Way" came second with 1.5 million albums, thanks largely to a promotion on Amazon.com that sold her album for a heavily discounted 99 cents.

TEXAS Farmers workers to get $1.5 million back wages

DALLAS — Farmers Insurance has agreed to pay just over $1.5 million in back overtime wages to workers at 11 customer service call centers in Texas and five other states after a U.S. Labor Department investigation.

The federal probe found what a Labor Department statement Wednesday called "significant and systemic violations" of federal overtime and record-keeping provisions of federal wage-hour statutes.

The agreement will pay back overtime to almost 3,500 workers.

Those workers were spread over Farmers centers in Austin, Texas; Olathe, Kan.; Oklahoma City; Lake Mary, Fla.; and Grand Rapids, Mich.; Overland Park, Kan.; and Hillsboro, Ore.

A message to Los Angeles-based Farmers seeking comment was not returned Wednesday.

SOUTH KOREA Samsung says Q2 operating profit fell

SEOUL, South Korea — Samsung Electronics Co. is offering a preliminary look at its second-quarter earnings performance showing operating profit falling and sales rising slightly.

The manufacturer of the Galaxy S smartphone said Thursday in a statement that operating profit for the three months that ended June 30 will fall to between 3.5 trillion won and 3.9 trillion won ($3.7 billion) from 5.01 trillion won a year earlier.

Yesterday on Wall Street

In late afternoon trading, the Standard & Poor's 500 index lost less than 1 point to 1,337. Rupert Murdoch's News Corp. was among the index's biggest losers, dropping 4 percent, as a phone-hacking scandal engulfed one of the media giant's tabloids. Some British legislators called on regulators to block News Corp. from taking over British Sky Broadcasting.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 39 points, or 0.3 percent, to 12,609. DuPont rose 2 percent, the most of any stock in the average, followed by Intel Corp.

The technology-focused Nasdaq composite added 2 points to 2,827.

Among U.S. companies, General Motors gained 1 percent after analysts upgraded the stock. Walgreen Co. also rose 1 percent after the retailer said its June sales were higher than anticipated.

Business software maker Compuware Corp. rose more than 5 percent, among the strongest in the S&P 500. Compuware bought another software maker, dynaTrace, for $256 million and said it expects the deal to more than double sales in the next year.

Hulu sees IM paying subscribers by end of summer

LOS ANGELES — Online video service Hulu expects to have more than a million paying subscribers by the end of summer, several months earlier than forecast, its chief executive said in a blogpost Wednesday.

The rapid popularity of the paid plan may increase interest in Hulu, whose media company parents — including The Walt Disney Co., News Corp. and Comcast Corp. — have put it up for sale.

Hulu Chief Executive Jason Kilar said the number of people who paid $8 a month for the HuluPlus service hit 875,000 in June. Paying customers get access to a deep catalog of TV shows and can watch on mobile and other connected devices. The free service is available only on computers. Both entail watching video ads.

Kilar also said Hulu remains on track to make nearly $500 million in revenue in 2011, up from $263 million in 2010. He reiterated that the company is profitable.

The company began presenting its financial information to interested bidders late last month after an unsolicited offer prompted its board to look afield for other offers.

About a dozen potential buyers are in discussions with Hulu, including search leader Google Inc. and portal operator Yahoo Inc., according to a person familiar with the matter, who requested anonymity because the talks were confidential.

Both companies have said they don't comment on rumor or speculation. Discussions with outside parties are more than just exploratory.

On Wednesday, Disney Chief Executive Bob Iger told reporters that Hulu's owners are "committed to selling." He spoke on the sidelines of an annual gathering of top media executives hosted by investment bank Allen & Co. in Sun Valley, Idaho. Iger's comments were reported by Bloomberg and The Wall Street Journal.

Life

auto manufacturing jobs have risen 31 percent the past two years, while parts makers in Michigan have added nearly 20,000 jobs.

Parts jobs are also up 15 percent in Alabama, where workers make parts for Mercedes SUVs and Honda minivans, and in Kentucky, where the Chevrolet Corvette and Toyota Camry are made.

Before the turnaround, new auto jobs were scarce. Detroit's auto companies had too many factories, high wages and bloated bureaucratic management. Jobs began disappearing in 2006 and 2007 as U.S. automakers tried desperately to restructure. Dozens of auto suppliers were pushed into bankruptcy.

Then came 2008, when gas prices spiked and the financial crisis struck. The industry lost almost one in every four of its jobs. By the time GM and Chrysler got out of bankruptcy, in June 2009, the industry employed about half as many people as it did in 2000.

Sales and profits have risen ever since, and payrolls have followed.

GM, Ford and Chrysler are all making money for the first time since the mid-2000s and adding workers to build popular models like the revamped Ford Explorer. Foreign companies, stung by the high cost of exporting cars to the U.S. when the dollar is weak, are racing to build more products here.

Automakers are doing it with cheaper labor. Four years ago, the United Auto Workers agreed to a contract that allowed Detroit's carmakers to hire some new workers at $14 per hour, or half the starting pay of workers at that time. While the UAW doesn't represent workers at foreign-owned plants, those companies — like Volkswagen — generally match UAW pay.

At a recent GM event in Toledo, Ohio — where GM was announcing that it plans to hire or retain 4,000 workers over the next 18 months — UAW Vice President Joe Ashton was unapologetic about the wage cuts and said the union would consider allowing more $14-per-hour jobs in the future.

"We're willing to discuss anything that creates jobs," he said.

Auto companies are racing to hire white-collar workers, too. Monster.com has more than 100 postings for auto engineers, including a handful for Hyundai and Subaru. Electric batteries, touchscreen dashboards and other technology are becoming more common, so automakers need engineers with expertise.

Randy Floreska was recruited by GM at a competition for college students to design and build hybrid cars. He says he and other young recruits view the 103-year-old automaker as a trendsetter.

"Here in the battery lab, there's so much youth and so much opportunity for growth," he says.

U.S. auto employment may never reach its previous heights. The industry last topped 1 million workers in 2007, and most analysts don't expect it to reach that level again. The Center for Automotive Research predicts total industry employment of about 877,000 in 2025.

The Detroit carmakers have shed nine brands — including Pontiac, Mercury and Hummer — and closed 25 plants since 2005. Mexico, China and other countries with cheap labor are competing for jobs, which will limit U.S. growth. And automation lets every company do more work with fewer people.

In a struggling U.S. economy, though, it's significant, since growing auto sales indicate growing consumer confidence. And considering what the auto industry has been through, it's a bonanza.

"I really do believe that we are seeing a renaissance in the American automobile industry," says James Brock, a professor of economics at Farmer School of Business at Miami University.

operated similar training facilities with live rounds. He said his goal is to teach firearms safety, provide experience building on the use of firearms and teach life-saving exercises.

The city of Coeur d'Alene granted the business permit in October. Patrons aren't allowed to bring their own guns, only the converted ones for the special cartridges that the business provides.

Appeals court rules against law banning gays from military

By Carol J. Williams
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — A federal law banning openly gay people from serving in the military should no longer be enforced, a federal appeals court ruled Wednesday, citing the Obama administration's call for an end to "a history of discrimination" against homosexuals.

The "don't ask, don't tell" policy signed into law by President Bill Clinton in 1993 was ruled unconstitutional in September by U.S. District Judge Virginia

Phillips in Riverside. A month later, Phillips issued a "worldwide injunction" against further discharges of gay soldiers and sailors, but the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in November suspended her order while the case was being appealed.

Congress, in the meantime, repealed "don't ask, don't tell" but left the policy in force until the president, the defense secretary and the Joint Chiefs of Staff certify that enough training and preparation for integrating gays has been accomplished to avoid any damage to military readiness.

On Wednesday, a three-judge panel of the 9th Circuit said the "balance of hardships," which had previously justified a stay of Phillips' order, had changed. The appeals panel noted that the Pentagon expects to have completed its training of military personnel to adjust to the new policy by mid-summer.

Gay rights groups applauded the 9th Circuit action, while opponents of gays in the military called the decision a capitulation to an administration that is "letting down the troops."

The 9th Circuit's turnaround was attributed to recent statements by the Justice Department and the White House calling for "heightened scrutiny" of laws that discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation, like the Defense of Marriage Act that deprives same-sex married couples of federal benefits.

"Gay and lesbian individuals have suffered a long and significant history of purposeful discrimination," the administration said last week in ordering equal treatment of the spouse of a lesbian lawyer who works for the 9th Circuit.

Attorney General Eric H. Holder Jr.'s February letter to Congress saying that the Justice Department would no longer go to court to protect the Defense of Marriage Act against lawsuits was also referred to by the 9th Circuit panel comprised of Chief Judge Alex Kozinski and two appointees of President Clinton, Judges Kim McLane Wardlaw and Richard A. Paez.

The panel lifted the stay it imposed in November in a two-page order granting a motion brought by the Log Cabin Republicans, a gay rights advocacy group that sued the federal government over "don't ask, don't tell" seven years ago.

R. Clarke Cooper, a combat veteran and reservist who is executive director of the Log Cabin Republicans, said the Defense Department had been making good-faith progress in preparing for repeal of "don't ask, don't tell," but that the 9th Circuit action "ensures there will be no walking back on the legislative side."

Acquitted of murder, Casey Anthony now must rebuild life

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A big fat book deal? A life in hiding? Motherhood again?

What could the future hold for Casey Anthony when she gets out of jail, perhaps as early as Thursday?

A day after she was acquitted of killing her 2-year-old daughter, Caylee, in a case that was a coast-to-coast TV sensation, many of those who followed the riveting drama are wondering.

"Anthony will always be dogged by the belief that she killed her child," said Lewis Katz, a law professor at Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland. "She will never lead a normal life."

In a country known for second acts, never is a strong word. But should she be released at her sentencing Thursday, after nearly three years behind bars, the 25-year-old Anthony could be hard-pressed to piece together some semblance of a normal life:

- She may have to get out of town. Threats have been made against her, and online she is being vilified. Nearly 15,000 people

"liked" the "I hate Casey Anthony" page on Facebook, which included comments wishing her the same fate that befell little Caylee. Ti McCleod, who lives a few doors from Anthony's parents, said: "Society is a danger to Casey; she's not a danger to society."

- Her family has been fractured by her attorneys' insistence that Anthony's father and brother molested her and that her father participated in a cover-up of Caylee's death. On Tuesday, Anthony's parents rose from their seats without emotion upon hearing the verdict and left the courtroom ahead of everyone else. Their attorney, Mark Lippman, said they haven't spoken with their daughter since the verdict, and he wouldn't say whether they believed she was guilty.

- Anthony is a high school dropout who, before her arrest at 22, had limited work experience. Her last job was in 2006 as a vendor at Universal Studios theme park. While she once professed an interest in photography, and even found some work in the field, it's not known whether she has skills that could translate into a career.

In a 2010 jailhouse letter to a friend, Anthony said she would like to adopt a child from Ireland "accent and all."

Judge Belvin Perry will sentence Anthony on four misdemeanor counts of lying to investigators while they were looking into her daughter's disappearance. Each count carries up to a year behind bars. At worst, she will serve only a little additional time.

Prosecutors contended that Anthony suffocated Caylee with duct tape because she wanted to be free to party and be with her boyfriends. Defense attorneys argued that the little girl accidentally drowned in the family swimming pool and that Anthony panicked and hid the body because of the effects of being sexually abused by her father.

The prosecutor in the case, Jeff Ashton, told NBC's "Today" show Wednesday that the verdict left him and other prosecutors in shock. "I think I mouthed the word 'wow' about five times," said Ashton, who is retiring Friday.

Obama to send condolence letters on troop suicides

WASHINGTON (AP) — Acknowledging the mental strains wrought by America's decade at war, the Pentagon and White House said Wednesday they will now begin sending condolence letters to families of troops who commit suicide in a combat zone.

The policy shift brings a bit of consistency to the long-standing practice of top U.S. leaders recognizing the service of those who died while fighting for their country. Until now, many of the military service chiefs and secretaries wrote to families of those who committed suicide while in combat. But in most cases, the president and secretary of defense did not.

Mental health and troop advocacy groups welcomed the change but said those who die outside war zones also should be recognized and that more should be done to prevent suicide among service members.

President Barack Obama said the decision was made after an exhaustive review of the previous policy, and was not taken lightly.

"This issue is emotional, painful and complicated, but these Americans served our nation bravely. They didn't die because they were weak," Obama said in a written statement. "And the fact that they didn't get the help they needed must change."

The complex and wrenching emotions of the issue are evident on a war memorial at Fort Hood, Texas. Gen. Peter Chiarelli, the Army vice chief of staff, said Wednesday that the greatest regret of his military career was his decision to leave one name off that monument. The soldier — one of the 169 1st Cavalry Division troops Chiarelli lost during a yearlong deployment in Iraq — had committed suicide. So just 168 names are listed on the memorial.

"The terrible things some have seen or experienced in combat have undoubtedly taken a toll on them," said Chiarelli, who has been leading the Army's effort to reduce suicides.

The letter policy had been under review by the White House since 2009 and some military families had pushed for the change. Service member suicides have increased as the U.S. has fought two overseas wars and some troops serve repeated tours of duty and suffered post-traumatic stress and other problems.

According to totals released Wednesday by the Pentagon, nearly 300 active duty service members committed suicide last year.

Lawyers in Strauss-Kahn case hold talks

NEW YORK (AP) — Lawyers for Dominique Strauss-Kahn met with prosecutors Wednesday for what the defense called a productive discussion, but there was no immediate word on what would happen to the sexual assault case that has been threatened by doubts about the accuser's credibility.

The two sides met privately for about 90 minutes in Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus R. Vance Jr.'s offices, but participants were tight-lipped about the exchange, which came five days after prosecutors said the accuser had not been truthful about her background and the aftermath of the alleged attack.

Lawyers for the former leader of the International Monetary Fund called the session with Vance and assistant prosecutors "constructive."

Vance's office said only that it was continuing to investigate and that no decisions had been made about the case's future.

3 Calif. moms accused of using PTA in Ponzi scheme

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Three former PTA mothers used their connection with a suburban elementary school to recruit investors in a phony $14 million get-rich-quick scheme, authorities said Wednesday.

The alleged Ponzi-style scam lasted more than two years before an irate investor filed a complaint last year, sparking an investigation that led to the arrests Tuesday of three women, said Lt. Steve Katz of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department.

The alleged swindle started in 2008 when the women told fellow PTA members they had the exclusive right to sell products from a well-known local dairy to Disneyland, Disney hotels and other small retailers.

They said they needed capital to expand the business and promised returns of up to 100 percent, adding that even if there was no profit, investors would get their money back, Katz said.

"It was billed as no way to lose," he said.

Investments, which had to be made in cash, ranged from $5,000 to $208,000. The 40 investors dipped into their life savings, maxed out their credit cards and took out second mortgages on their homes to come up with the money, Katz said.

Maricela Barajas, 41, and Juliana Menefee, 50, both of Diamond Bar, were arrested on 22 felony charges, including grand theft and securities fraud. The third woman, Eva Perez, was already behind bars, serving a nearly 10-year sentence on grand theft charges related to a similar swindle in neighboring San Bernardino County.

Calls to the homes of Barajas and Menefee, who were being held on $500,000 bail, were not immediately returned. Their arraignment scheduled for Thursday was continued until Aug. 4.

The women belonged to the PTA at the Neil Armstrong Elementary School in Diamond Bar until school leaders became aware of the complaints and ended their membership, Katz said.

The fact that they were PTA members was key in leading the investors to trust the women and to recruit their own acquaintances as far away as Salt Lake City, he said.

A spokeswoman for the Pomona Unified School District said the district was unaware of the investigation until the sheriff's department announced the arrests.

No PTA funds were involved in the fraud, Gabriela De La Cruz said.

Shortly after the scheme started, Perez was arrested in San Bernardino County on 28 charges of grand theft and one charge of writing a check on insufficient funds. In December 2010, she pleaded guilty to 10 of the charges and was sentenced to nine years and eight months in prison and ordered to pay $151,600 to 33 victims, according to court records.

Weather worsens for NASA's last space shuttle launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The weather isn't cutting NASA any breaks, not even for the last space shuttle launch set for Friday.

Bad weather is expected, and forecasters said there's a 70 percent chance that rain or thunderstorms will prevent Atlantis from flying. No hail or other severe conditions are anticipated, just "a lot of nuisance weather," said the shuttle weather officer, Kathy Winters. The weather improves slightly over the weekend.

Friday's forecast would have to get worse before he'd call off the launch, mission management team leader Mike Moses said at a Wednesday news conference. A rain-free, storm-free zone is needed 23 miles around, among other things, in order for Atlantis to take off.

Launch director Mike Leinbach doesn't just want a hole in the clouds for Atlantis to sneak through, he wants no clouds for this historic send-off — the last of the 30-year shuttle program.

Between 750,000 and 1 million people are expected to jam the area for the launch, rivaling the crowds that gathered for the Apollo moon shots.

"I hope it's not like the last launch where we only saw it for 22 seconds," Leinbach said, referring to Endeavour's May liftoff when the shuttle quickly disappeared into the clouds.

Glancing at Winters seated next to him, Leinbach said, "I'm hoping she's really blown this forecast big time."

The weather was the only uncertainty hanging over the 135th and final shuttle launch. At the mission management meeting Wednesday, there were only a few technical items to discuss, all minor. The formal "go" for launch came easily.

In the hallways of Kennedy Space Center, the mood is increasingly somber, Leinbach said. Thousands of shuttle workers will lose their jobs soon after Atlantis and its four astronauts return from the 12-day space station delivery mission.

Even so, Moses and Leinbach stressed, there is no desire for delays that would push off those layoffs.

"Friday's game day for us, so we don't want to wait until Saturday" or beyond, Leinbach said.

If Atlantis isn't flying by Sunday, NASA said it will have to wait until at least July 16. That's because of a scheduling conflict with an unmanned rocket due to lift off next week.

"We know there's a lot more interest in the final launch, but when we're on console Friday morning, it's going to be like any other launch," Leinbach said.

Arizona washes away dust deposited by massive storm

PHOENIX (AP) — Arizonans are calling it the mother of all dust storms.

The mile-high wall of ominous, billowing dust that appeared to swallow Phoenix and its suburbs is all that locals can talk about.

It moved through the state at about sundown Tuesday, halting airline flights, knocking out power to nearly 10,000 people, turning swimming pools into mud pits and caking cars with dirt.

The sky was still filled with a hazy shade of brown Wednesday as residents washed their cars and swept sidewalks.

Because dust storms, also known by the Arabic term "haboobs," are so hard to predict, Tuesday's took everyone by surprise.

Seemingly out of nowhere, the 100-mile-wide storm moved like a giant wave, the dust roiling as it approached at up to 60 mph. Once it hit, visibility dropped to zero in some areas, the sky turned nearly black, trees blew sideways, and even downtown Phoenix skyscrapers became invisible.

"Just the height of it looked like a special-effect scene from a movie, like a dust storm out in Africa," said Charlotte Dewey, a National Weather Service meteorologist in Phoenix. "It looked so huge, looking at the city down below, it was just specks of light and miniature buildings."

"I have a feeling that people will be talking about this for another week or two, at least," Dewey said.

She said meteorologists were still trying to get exact measures from satellite and radar to figure out how big the dust storm was and compare it with previous ones, but they estimate it was more than a mile high and more than 100 miles wide.

"People who've lived here their whole lives, 30 or 40 years, are saying they've never seen a storm this large," Dewey said.

She said winds from separate thunderstorms in the eastern and southern parts of the state collided somewhere between Phoenix and Tucson and combined with a severe lack of moisture to create the wall of dust. The storm also hit the Yuma area in southwestern Arizona, and far western Arizona.

Haboobs only happen in Arizona, the Sahara desert and parts of the Middle East because of dry conditions and large amounts of sand, Dewey said.

"It's a pretty rare thing to be able to see," she said.

While some Arizonans revel in the strange weather, many were unlucky enough to be outside when the storm rolled in. They got blasted with dust that went up their noses, behind their contact lenses and in their mouths, leaving behind a gritty taste.

Holly Ward, a spokeswoman at the Maricopa County Air Quality Department, said pollution levels skyrocketed. During the storm, the amount of particulate matter in the air reached 375 micrograms per cubic meter, more than double the level federal standards consider healthy.

"You didn't have to go far anywhere in the dust storm to feel the remnants of that dust in your throat and in your nose," Ward said.

ENCOUNTER WITH A RATTLER

What you should — and shouldn't — do if you run into a rattlesnake

By Andrew Weeks
Times-News writer

Teresa Botkin likes to hike with her husband, Ben, and one of their favorites is Rim View Trail in the South Hills.

"We've seen deer, sheep and other animals that aren't going to bite you," Teresa said.

That's why it surprised her — even scared her — when during a recent hike the Twin Falls woman came upon a rattlesnake resting on the trail.

"We weren't even a mile up the trail when all of a sudden, out of the corner of my eye, I saw something move," said Teresa, who was walking ahead of Ben, a Times-News reporter. She saw the snake coil, heard its rattle and jumped back.

"I ran back down the trail and barreled through Ben, the poor guy," she said.

They didn't return to look at the snake, figuring if there was one on the trail there might be more nearby.

"I was told later on that what I did was absolutely wrong," Teresa said. Don't ever jump away from a snake.

Since her encounter, she's read up about rattlers — "I'm even intrigued by them," she said — and learned a few other things that she plans to remember in the event she encounters another.

Will she hike the trail again? "Absolutely," she said. "But I will be more cautious."

1 Look ahead

If you're in an area where signs are posted to keep an eye out for rattlesnakes, use caution. They're probably not far away. You won't likely find such warnings on remote trails, but if you're in desert terrain, often where there's sagebrush and rock, the snakes might be there anyway.

One of the things Teresa learned is that you should always look ahead of you when hiking on trails — not just where you're stepping, but several yards in front of you. You're looking for dark oval patterns that often blend in with rocks on the trail. Teresa said the snake she saw was stretched out on the trail and did not coil until she got close.

"Be alert," said Kelton Hatch, conservation educator with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game. "Pay attention to your surroundings."

This way your chance of encountering a rattler unaware is lessened.

4 If you feel threatened

"There's nothing wrong with killing a snake if you feel threatened by it," said Gary Hompland, conservation officer with Fish and Game.

But if you're not within striking distance, there might be other options — such as walking around it.

"Just because you see a rattlesnake doesn't mean you have to kill it," said Hatch. "They are beneficial to the environment and good at rodent control. They eat a lot of mice and things like that."

WHERE ARE THE SNAKES?

Rattlesnakes are most active during the day. They rest in shade when the weather is extremely warm, and often go onto trails and roads to glean warmth from rocks as evening approaches or in early mornings.

They can be found underneath rocks, shrubs and plants.

"But there's not one under every rock," said Kelton Hatch of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

2 Give it room

Paying attention to what's ahead of you allows you to make proper judgements if you see a snake.

"If you encounter a rattler," Hatch said, "give it a wide berth and walk around it."

Snakes do not have external ears but are sensitive to vibrations and will "feel" your footsteps as you get close to them. Snakes can strike only within half their length, Hatch said. But don't take chances. Rattlers coil up when they feel threatened, so it's difficult to tell how long the snake might be.

3 Stay calm, respect the snake

As Teresa learned, quick movements aren't good if you stumble close to a rattler unaware.

"When they start rattling, it's a warning for you not to get too close," Hatch said. "If you're within a couple of feet, that's pretty close. So what you'd want to do is stand still and wait until things de-escalate. Usually, they'll drop and try to slither off."

Rattlesnakes aren't interested in humans because we're too big for them to eat. They bite us only if they feel threatened, or if we startle them.

Statistically, Hatch said, most bite victims are twenty-something males, who are often intoxicated and start teasing the snake.

Don't do that, he said. Respect the snake and it will leave you alone if you're not too close.

5 What if you're bitten?

About 25 percent of all rattlesnake bites are dry, non-venomous bites. But don't take chances. If you're bitten by a rattlesnake, stay calm and seek medical help immediately.

Do not cut the wound, as this can cause extensive bleeding, according to BitesandStings.com. Because human mouths are full of bacteria, sucking venom from the wound can cause infection, making treatment more difficult.

Tie a tight bandage a couple of inches above the bite. This slows the dissemination of the venom. Do not cut off your circulation, or you can damage the healthy tissue not receiving the proper amount of blood below the wound.

Carry a snakebite kit. Kits such as the Sawyer Extractor contain a syringe-like device that extracts venom from the wound without the complications of bleeding or wound contamination.

Rattlesnake bites are extremely painful and life-threatening without medical intervention. But according to the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, more people die from bee and wasp stings than rattlesnake bites. Each person reacts differently to bites, Hatch said. But most people who are bitten by a rattler — as long as they get medical help — make a full recovery without lasting effects from the bite.

Going without medical treatment can result in death within the day or following day due to venom disrupting blood flow and the function of vital organs.

BULLSNAKES GET A BAD RAP

Rattlesnakes have triangular heads, narrow necks and thick bodies. They are brown with dark oval patterns on the back and a lighter underside. Their rattles, which have multiple layers, are formed by shed skin and sound like a raspy buzz when knocked against each other.

In southern Idaho, many people often mistake bullsnakes for rattlers, said Kelton Hatch, conservation educator with the Idaho Department of Fish and Game.

Bullsnares, which like rattlers are found throughout the region, also are brown, with dark patterns on their thick bodies.

Bullsnares look a great deal like their poisonous friends, but without the rattle and venom. A number of them live — and die, often getting run over on the road — in the South Hills, he said.

They are so named because they often make a snorting sound, like a bull.

Sun Valley gears up for bike mania

By Karen Bossick
Times-News correspondent

Sun Valley is coming down with an attack of bike mania.

More than 500 of the nation's top mountain bikers are expected to descend on Sun Valley Wednesday through July 17, for the USA Cycling Mountain Bike Cross-Country National Championships.

The prestigious event — Sun Valley's answer to the Tour de France — will take place primarily on Bald Mountain.

And the valley is throwing a Ride Sun Valley Bike Festival in conjunction with the event that will offer semi-guided mountain bike rides around Sun Valley, bike films, a bike expo, fun races for kids and two concerts.

"It's a lot like the Sun Valley Nordic Festival. It's meant to become an annual event," said Ellen Gillespie, who is helping to organize the week-long events. "The Fat Tire Criterium on Thursday evening will be quite the show with bicyclists racing wildly around Ketchum's downtown streets. And even kids can race in that and the Idaho Pump Track State Championships for prizes offered by the Toy Store.

Some of the top contenders in the mountain bike championships include Adam Craig, a 15-time national bike champion, Georgia Gould, who swept all six events on the national mountain bike series in 1007, and Ned Overend, who appeared in the world's first mountain biking video, titled "The Great Mountain Biking Video."

Spectators will be able to watch the racers from the River Run side of Bald Mountain where the stadium finishes will be, said Sun Valley Chamber Director

Riders will practice on Wednesday and Thursday with Amateur XC races held at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. Thursday. Cross-country races get under way in earnest on Friday beginning at 9 a.m. and continuing through 5 p.m. They start up again at 7:30 a.m. Saturday and Sunday, continuing until 5 p.m.

The top race, according to organizers, is the 2011 Super Downhill Course, a 10-kilometer time-trial start that launches from the historic Roundhouse

Wyoming gunners savor automatic fire, freedom

By Ben Neary
Associated Press

NATRONA COUNTY, Wyo. — The row of machine gunners sprayed a steady stream of bullets hundreds of yards downrange into the Wyoming prairie, destroying propane tanks, fire extinguishers and the occasional stick of dynamite or sacrificial radio-controlled model airplane.

These enthusiasts were celebrating machine guns and machine gun rights — and they’ve been doing so annually at the Northern Rockies Machine Gun and Cannon Shoot, whose 2011 edition was held recently at a ranch west of Casper.

“A lot of people give us a bad rap and say, ‘Why do you need a full-auto gun?’” said Quinton Miller of Casper, one of several dealers offering machine guns for rent. “Well, because we can.”

The shoot featured a wide array of machine guns and earsplitting noise: Large ones on tripods pulsed with a profound thumping bass. Small ones, designed to fit under suit coats, emptied their magazines with jagged rips of sound. Gunners wore both foam ear plugs and ear phones to prevent hearing damage from the wall of sound.

With both hands on the twin wooden handles of a tripod-mounted machine gun, one shooter simultaneously pulled back on a safety toggle with two fingers while pushing forward with both thumbs on a plunger that serves as a trigger.

The gun fired, moving on its tripod with a surprisingly gentle, rocking motion, sucking a belt of loaded cartridges in one side and spewing smoking, empty casings out the other. Through the peep sight, bullets kicked up puffs of dust on the landscape. Smiling shooters exchanged high-fives and posed for pictures next to their weapons.

A young man fires a machine gun at the 2011 Northern Rockies Machine Gun & Cannon Shoot, June 3 at a ranch west of Casper, Wyo. These enthusiasts were celebrating machine guns and machine gun rights — and they’ve been doing so annually.

Robert Mullen of Sheridan, Wyo., a gunner with the Kearny’s Frontier Regulars, takes a break June 3 at the 2011 Northern Rockies Machine Gun & Cannon Shoot, west of Casper, Wyo. Mullen said he sees the expression of a particularly American freedom in firing machine guns at the event.

Although machine guns are designed solely to kill, they are also marvels of mechanical engineering — something celebrated at the Wyoming shoot. They harness the gas pressure or recoil of each cartridge as it fires to cycle the action, eject the empty casing and feed in a fresh cartridge.

Demand for machine guns went up sharply after Congress banned sales of new guns to civilians in the mid-80s. The government taxes each machine gun transfer $200.

With the supply of guns fixed, it can cost $12,000 to $15,000 to buy a gun like Bill Hudick’s World War I-era .303-caliber Vickers. Buyers must apply for and pass a federal government background check. Hudick and other shooters emphasized that legal, registered machine guns aren’t typically used in crimes.

It’s also expensive to shoot them at the Wyoming event, and others held across the country. “You’re talking $300 to $500 a minute to shoot one of these, so it will definitely keep you out of the bars,” said Hudick, who works in the excavation business in eastern Colorado.

Several shooters said the fact private citizens can own machine guns underscores a unique level of personal freedom in the United States.

Robert Mullen, a Korean

War veteran from Sheridan, said the shoot showed that Wyoming is one of the last bastions of a rare kind of freedom — one combining vast stretches of unpopulated land with full acceptance of gun ownership.

“It’s still open yet, and people still have a choice. They can make up their own mind,” Mullen said. “They still have their own free will, or whatever you want to call it. I don’t know how long that’s going to last.”

Miller said people commonly respond with suspicion when they hear about his interest in machine guns. He said his work with the oil industry has taken him to Kuwait and elsewhere in the Middle East, where people are dumbfounded to learn U.S. citizens may own machine guns.

“We don’t know how good we have it,” Miller said.

Event organizers prohibited vendors from renting any machine guns shorter than 18 inches. An 8-year-old boy died at a Massachusetts machine gun shoot in 2008 when he lost control of a 9 mm micro Uzi and shot himself.

Here, passers-by were able to pay $20 to $30 to fire off a magazine or a belt of cartridges.

“They’re just fun; there’s not much else you can say about them,” Miller said. “Especially belt-fed guns, the ability of having more than 30 rounds.”

Matt Hendrickson of Laramie, a worker at the University of Wyoming, blazed away with a few different rental guns.

Jerry John Lovik, a dealer from Iowa, enticed members of the crowd to rent his guns with all the enthusiasm of a carnival barker. He brought 40,000 rounds of ammunition for the event, which he said was becoming more popular as others in Colorado and elsewhere close as locations become unavailable.

“My dad started me in guns when I was about 4 years old,” the 52-year-old Lovik said. “I guess you could just say it was a continual upping of the bar, is what it was.”

While other guns blazed on the line, Hudick’s old Vickers momentarily sat silent on its tripod. Its action stood open. Water oozed from a corrugated metal reservoir surrounding the gun’s barrel. A pile of spent cartridge casings, along with a few dud cartridges, littered the ground.

Hudick worked to replace a broken firing pin spring. His hands slick with grease, he fit the nearly century-old pieces of his gun’s bronze and steel firing mechanism back together.

“If this was a real battle, that would be the point where the enemy would come up and blow my brains out,” Hudick said. “And that would be the end of Bill.”

From economical plinker to certifiable tack driver

Unless you live under a rock, you’re likely aware that a small but vocal minority of our national legislators are pushing for a total ban on semi-automatic firearms and high-capacity magazines.

SHOOTING THE BULL

Rich Simpson

Equally obvious is the fact that many of these politicians’ views do not reflect the desires of their constituents. Semi-autos are hands down the most popular firearms carried by law abiding citizens, sportsmen and law enforcement personnel. Two in particular dominate the sales charts: Ruger’s 10/22 rifles and carbines and the ever-evolving line of AR-15 variants.

These two have become so popular that each has spawned an aftermarket industry devoted exclusively to modifying that firearm to meet the individual user’s particular tastes and needs. The array of replacement barrels, stocks, sights, lights, triggers, extractors and magazines is mind boggling.

A future column will focus on the AR-15’s adaptability, but today I want to zero in on the ease and affordability with which a standard Ruger 10/22 can be converted from an economical and accurate plinker into a certifiable tack driver. The best part is, you can make this conversion for a fraction of the cost of buying a specialty .22 target rifle.

This affordable metamorphosis is made possible by the modular nature of the 10/22. Simply loosen the bedding screw and barrel band (if present) and the stock drops free. Back out two screws from the barrel retainer and the barrel slips from the receiver. Drift out two steel pins and the trigger group parts company with the receiver. Then it’s just a matter of gathering the desired components and reassembling.

As mentioned earlier, the array of customizing accessories for the 10/22 is legion. Many area sporting goods stores carry a fine selection. Numerous sources also are available online, such as MidwayUSA, Brownells and Cabelas, which distribute the largest variety of aftermarket selections.

For specific brands, check out fajen.com, shootersridge.com, butlercreek.com, and volquartson.com. Boise-based Tactical Solutions produces what many aficionados consider the highest quality 10/22 accessories available anywhere.

For this project, I attached a Shooters Ridge camo-finished thumbhole stock. This excellent synthetic model features a soft rubber recoil pad, easy grip forearm panels, sling swivel studs, and a steel bedding pillar for stability.

For optimum accuracy, I chose an 18-inch Shooters Ridge .910 fluted target (bull) barrel. With their Benz Match chambers and carbide button rifled bores, these premium barrels are one-hole shooters.

To prevent the 10/22’s notorious accuracy-diminishing bull barrel droop, I firmly secured the barrel with a Tactical Solutions V-block retainer. To cushion the violent bolt slam, I fitted a Clark recoil buffer and screwed down a Weaver Picatinny rail to allow wide latitude in optic choices.

Final results: Not only was the heavy barrel/thumbhole stock combo easier to stabilize at the range and in the field, its accuracy potential absolutely went through the roof. My plain Jane 10/22 evolved from pounding out decent 1 1/2-inch groups at 50 yards to drilling wonderfully tight 1/2-inch clusters.

Just imagine, for less than two Benjamin’s you too can transform your run-of-the-mill 10/22 plinker into a certified tack-driving machine. Why not give it a try? Good shooting!

Grizzly bear trapping begins in Bridger Teton

JACKSON — Wyoming state wildlife officials are warning people to stay away from areas where grizzly bears are being trapped in the Bridger Teton National Forest.

Trapping begins Tuesday in two spots near Moran Junction and will continue through July 25.

Officials say brightly-colored warning signs will be posted along major access points to the trapping site.

The animals will be trapped, tranquilized, processed and released. The monitoring is part of federal efforts to rebuild the grizzly’s population in the Yellowstone area.

Last year, a 70-year-old man was killed by a grizzly after he went hiking where a bear had just been released.

The Wyoming Game and Fish Department will start a second operation in the Fox Park area of the Teton Wilderness between July 26 and Aug. 12.

Grand Teton sets up bear spray collection sites

MOOSE — Add bear spray canisters to the list of items that can be recycled in Grand Teton National Park.

Collection bins have been set up at several locations in the park where people can drop off unwanted bear spray canisters for recycling.

Millions of people visit northwest Wyoming every year. Thousands of visitors buy bear spray to protect themselves against grizzly bears but tourists often can’t take the bear spray home with them — it’s prohibited on commercial flights.

Many unused bear spray canisters get thrown away as a result.

Three Montana State University students designed a solution: A machine that removes the pepper spray before crushing the aluminum canister. A recycling unit for bear spray began operating in Yellowstone National Park this year.

Restaurant, following one of the fastest, flowing downhill rides ever conceived.

There also will be fast, flat circuit short-track cross country races, which wind around River Run Lodge across the bike path up to the parking lot.

The Ride Sun Valley Bike Festival will offer four free semi-guided mountain bike rides during the week with transportation provided from the Sun Valley Visitor Center to the sites of the rides.

“The whole week is going to be really exciting and it will bring a lot of people who have never ridden Sun Valley’s trails before,” said Jim Keating, who heads up the Blaine County Recreation District. “Like the Nordic Festival, it celebrates the trail system and the biking culture that this valley offers.”

WHAT’S HAPPENING?

The Wednesday ride starts at 8:30 a.m. taking riders along the newly refurbished Red Warrior Trail to Greenhorn Gulch. The Thursday ride, also at 8:30 a.m., heads to Baker Creek. Friday’s ride, which meets at the Visitor Center at 9 a.m., is called the “Baldy Burner.”

There are two Saturday rides leaving at 9 a.m. One 22-mile ride, billed as “the mother of all stokers,” heads to Fox Peak via the East Fork of Baker Creek. The easier 11-mile ride follows Curly’s Trail from Baker Creek to Easley Hot Springs.

The Fat Tire Criterium starts in front of the Sun Valley Visitor Center on Sun Valley Road and East Avenue Ketchum at 6:30 p.m. Thursday. It circles around on Leadville Avenue, Fourth Street and Walnut Avenue.

There will be amateur, pro and kids races with the grand finale being the Ride Sun Valley Stand-Off — a four-person per team relay race that pits businesses and teams of locals against each other in a quest for Mad Max glory.

Spectators will also enjoy the Bike Expo at River Run Lodge, said Randolph. It will include festival souvenirs and the latest in bike technology.

Sun Valley Mountain Bike champion Rebecca Rusch and racers Todd Wells and Jeremy Horgan-Kobelski will preside at the showing of the bike documentary “Race Across the Sky,” which chronicles Colorado’s grueling Leadville race, at 7 p.m. July 16 at the Sun Valley Opera House. The showing costs $10 for children and $15 for adults.

The Avett Brothers will perform at 7 p.m. July 13 at the Sun Valley Pavilion (www.sunvalleycenter.org) And The Great British Invasion will perform at the Pavilion on July 16 (www.sunvalley.com).

Rounding out the festival will be the official race after party with Philly’s Phunkestra on Saturday and a Sun Valley Fat Tire Film and Photo Fest at 6 p.m. Sunday. Both will be held at Whiskeys Jacques on Main Street Ketchum.

Grand Teton grizzly family snarls traffic in national park

By Mead Gruver
Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — A grizzly bear clan famous for its frequent roadside appearances in Grand Teton National Park is keeping park rangers especially busy this summer tending to tourist critter jams.

The cubs are cute — no question about that — but a female grizzly with cubs happens to be one of the most dangerous animals in North America. And this Grand Teton clan has a history: One attacked a hiker; another was shot and killed by a hunter.

Biologists speculate the unusually camera-friendly behavior by Grizzly No. 399 and her daughter, No. 610, might serve to keep at bay adult male grizzlies, which sometimes kill cubs not their own. Five spunky cubs recently have joined the clan, adding to the tourist traffic.

“It’s very important for people to remember that these are wild bears and that they are very protective,” said Steve Cain, senior wildlife biologist at Grand Teton.

No. 399 has attacked before. In 2007, the year after she gave birth to a litter of three cubs, she bit a man who came across the four bears feeding on a just-killed elk.

This year, three more cubs were born to No. 399 and two to No. 610, who has been especially visible in recent weeks.

Around sunset on a recent Sunday, No. 610 caused a traffic jam while feeding on an elk calf just 70 feet from a road. About 30 cars lined up while tourists snapped photos of the 5-year-old grizzly and her cubs. A team of rangers and volunteers made

IF YOU GO

Grand Teton National Park is located in northwestern Wyoming, south of Yellowstone National Park. Closest airports are in Jackson, Wyo., Idaho Falls, and Salt Lake City. Entrance fee is $25 per vehicle for seven days. Info: nps.gov/grte/index.htm.

sure people stayed behind their cars and didn’t get too close.

June has been an especially busy for bear jams and the park’s Wildlife Brigade, a team of about a dozen volunteers supervised by a park ranger. The brigade also checks campgrounds for improperly stored food that could attract bears.

“I think this is going to be the summer of bear-watching in Grand Teton, the way it’s going,” said park spokeswoman Jackie Skaggs.

Grand Teton has not just famous grizzly bears, but more grizzlies in general as the big bruins rebound in the Yellowstone region, which is under federal protection as a threatened species. Numbers are up from a couple hundred in the 1970s to perhaps as many as 1,000 or more.

“Twenty years ago, seeing a grizzly in Grand Teton was rare. Today it’s common,” Cain said. “It’s necessitated a change in attitudes and culture.”

The park encourages people to take care not to attract grizzlies to camp and to know what to do if they encounter a grizzly: Use binoculars or long lenses for viewing; stay at least 300 feet away; and never get between an adult and its offspring, among other measures.

No. 610 — the bears are numbered in the order they’ve been trapped for study — has been frequenting the same area where she grew up, and biologists say she’s emulating her mother’s roadside habits.

Few people have observed the grizzlies as much as wildlife photographer Tom Mangelsen, who lives near the park and a short drive from the territories of No. 610 and No. 399.

He thinks the opportunity for one photo in particular is only a matter of time, possibly while elk are calving and attracting grizzlies to the Willow Flats area not far from Jackson Lake Lodge.

“The ideal thing for me would be to see if they walk past each other and see if they greet and meet each other. Typically females will tolerate other females, and even more so with their own offspring,” Mangelsen said.

High water hurts Montana fly fishing

By Matt Volz
Associated Press

HELENA, Mont. — Disappointed anglers are putting off their vacations this year with Montana’s blue-ribbon trout streams running higher and dirtier than they have in recent memory.

The murky water is the result of spring flooding and a torrential runoff still pouring off the mountains from a record winter snowpack. Water flows for many of the major rivers are at twice their normal rates or higher, churning up muck and mud that have made the water nearly opaque in some streams.

That’s muddied the outlook for a major tourism draw for Montana, with cancellations running as high as 80 percent in parts of the state so far this year. Some fly shops are reporting that their business is off between 38 and 50 percent.

“If you want to fish a blue-ribbon trout stream right now it’s going to be pretty tough,” said Eric Swedman, manager of the Madison River Fishing Company in Ennis. “Right now, we should be floating and throwing salmon flies around, but it ain’t happening.”

Fishermen have been calling in to Swedman’s shop, asking about the water’s clarity and the amount of snow that’s still in the mountains.

All Swedman can tell them is, “It’s pretty daunting. It’s going to be a while.”

Fishing is big business in Montana, particularly after the sport was popularized by the 1992 Robert Redford film “A River Runs Through It.” Last summer, 16 percent of out-of-state travelers to Montana fished, or roughly 808,000 people, according to the University of Montana’s Institute for Tourism and Recreation Research.

Those visitors who come to fish spend more per day and stay longer than vacationers coming for any of the other top attractions, including Glacier and Yellowstone national parks, according to the institute. Visitors spent $34.2 million on guided fishing trips alone in 2005, the most recent data available, and that doesn’t include what they spent on gear, licenses and hotels.

But this year is looking different. President Barack Obama has declared a major disaster for 31 Montana counties and four Indian reservations after weeks of flooding in May and June. The snow is still coming down from the mountains, keeping most of the state’s waterways at high levels far longer into the season than has been seen in years.

That news has caused out-of-state anglers to delay or cancel their trips to Montana, while locals are forsaking the big water to crowd the few clear streams and lakes they can find at higher elevations.

About this time of year, visitors usually are flocking to the Bighorn River in southeastern Montana, a waterway frequented by the likes of former Vice-President Dick Cheney and former U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O’Connor.

But with swollen flows from the Yellowstone Dam causing the river to run at about twice its regular speed, there is an 80 percent cancellation rate for fishing trips going into the July 4 weekend, Friends of the Bighorn’s Doug Haacke said.

“The people who make their living on the river this year are just getting killed,” he said.

The irony? The fishing on the Bighorn now is excellent, even with the high water.

“That’s the sad part about this whole thing, it’s fishing great and it’s an easy river to float even at 15,000 (cubic feet per second),” Haacke said. “The fishing is super but there are a lot of people who don’t want to fish that at those levels.”

The fishing is not so super at the Yellowstone River near Livingston. At the Sweetwater Fly Shop, the high, muddy water has not only put off Dan Vermillion’s business by 38 percent in June, but it is also threatening his shop: floodwaters crept to within 20 feet of his doors last week, and he is keeping 1,500 sandbags at the ready in case it rises again.

It’s so bad that the water has invaded his dreams.

“The water’s been weighing on our minds and I’ve been having dreams about water conditions,” he said. “My sense is, it’s going to drop pretty quickly. It’s going to be two weeks before we know.”

Otter names new Fish and Game commish

BOISE (AP) — Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter named a 60-year-old Rigby man to the seven-member Idaho Fish and Game Commission.

Kenny Anderson replaces Cameron Wheeler of Ririe, whose term expired June 30.

Among the issues Anderson will help decide is management of wolves during the upcoming hunting season.

Anderson is the owner of a cabinet and millwork business, as well as an avid sportsman and member of the National Rifle Association.

Sen. Steven Bair of Blackfoot, the Republican vice chairman of the Senate Resources and Environment Committee, says Anderson “has no hidden agenda” and aims simply to protect and magnify Idaho’s wildlife resources to provide future outdoor opportunities for kids.

Otter says among numerous qualified candidates, Ken Anderson stood out as someone with a grasp of the issues and an even temperament.

What you should know about drawings and controlled hunts

Question: “In the new big game hunting brochure I noticed several controlled hunts listed with unlimited numbers of permits allowed. Since I was not successful in the first drawing I was wondering if I could apply for one of these in the second drawing?”

Answer: A well-known wildlife professor and scholar at the University of Idaho once said to me, “wildlife populations generally survive quite well in spite of all of our attempts to control or manage them. The real art and science of management involves controlling the numbers of consumptive and non-consumptive sportsmen.”

As he said, much of our efforts to manage wildlife requires biologists to develop hunting seasons that allow a level of harvest in line with wildlife population goals. Hunting opportunities can be manipulated to increase or decrease harvest based on the types of hunting regulations adopted by the commission.

Examples of regulations that encourage increased harvest would be open hunts, any weapon, long seasons, and timing hunting seasons when animals are most vulnerable such as during the rut or during winter when they are congregated.

Examples of regulations that may decrease or regulate harvest would be weapons restrictions, controlled hunts, shorter seasons, or moving the hunting season out of the rut to a time when animals would be more difficult to locate.

In either case, economics and weather can play a huge role in making regulations successful or fail to produce the desired management outcomes.

Within our current rules, a hunter successfully drawing a controlled hunt permit, and purchasing his tag, is only allowed to hunt that specified controlled hunt. This rule prohibits those drawing hunts from hunting anywhere else, but it also requires a commitment from a hunter during the application period because he cannot apply in any other unit.

Wildlife manager’s use of controlled hunts with no limits on the number of permits (unlimited controlled hunts) means that everyone who applies for these opportunities are successfully drawn. Many applicants select an unlimited controlled hunt as their second choice on their application to ensure they draw at least something.

An unlimited controlled hunt may be selected by managers where there is a need to stabilize or reduce harvest.

Unlimited controlled hunts also help regulate hunter numbers in some previously open hunts with high hunter congestion. Another benefit of this option is that everyone who really wants to hunt a specific big game unit still can.

If the desired management outcome or goal is successful this option maximizes hunting opportunity to the extent possible without having to reduce opportunity by going to a limited entry controlled hunt.

Unlimited controlled hunts are not available to hunters in the second drawing. Hunters successfully drawing unlimited controlled hunts during the first drawing may purchase their tags up to the last day of their unlimited controlled hunting season.

If you have further questions, call the Magic Valley Regional Office at 324-4350 or e-mail us at the Fish and Game website at fishandgame.idaho.gov.

ANACONDA — Sharon Scognamiglio coaxed the two massive Belgian horses out of the trees with tubs of grain.

Mike and Red trotted up slowly at first, but picked up the pace when they could see their treat. At 1,900 pounds each, the duo eats plenty, but works plenty hard, too.

They are the muscle that will pull the covered wagon as part of a new horseback riding operation at Pogonip Ranch, about 2 miles west of Anaconda.

Prior to horseback riding, Pogonip Ranch leased to area cattle ranchers for the summer. Before that, it was used for logging.

KG Investments bought Pogonip — the word for icy fog that forms in the mountain valleys of the American West — seven years ago, with the intention of creating a recreational retreat.

Preparation has included carving out seven interconnecting trails, and bringing in a rustic, 100-year-old barn from Silver Lake that used to belong to the Butte Water Co.

Question: I have to file Bankruptcy, but don't want to lose my antique guns worth about $5,000. My neighbor has agreed to buy them from me for $250 then sell them back to me later so I won't have to declare them. Is this OK?

Answer: What you propose is called a “fraudulent transfer” & violates both state and federal laws because you could get a bankruptcy discharge of your debts and unfairly deprive your creditors of the value of your non-exempt property items. If caught, and you surely would be, you would face a 5 year prison sentence and fines of a quarter-million dollars. It is absolutely not OK, and no bankruptcy attorney I’m familiar with would represent you knowing what you had done. The better approach is for your attorney to help you protect part of the value of your guns using legitimate exemptions, and then negotiate a deal where you could keep the guns by paying the bankruptcy estate a sum of money.

Spreading phone hacking scandal touches UK nerves

By Gregory Katz
Associated Press writer

LONDON — Britain's phone hacking scandal intensified Wednesday as the scope of tabloid intrusion into private voice mails became clearer: Murder victims. Terror victims. Film stars. Sports figures. Politicians. The royal family's entourage.

Almost no one, it seems, was safe from a tabloid determined to beat its rivals, whatever it takes.

The focal point is the News of the World — now facing a spreading advertising boycott — and the top executives of its parent companies: Rebekah Brooks, chief executive of News International, and her boss, media potentate Rupert Murdoch.

In his first comment since the latest details emerged, Murdoch said in a statement Wednesday that Brooks would continue to lead his British newspaper operation despite calls for her resignation.

The scandal, which has already touched the office of Prime Minister David Cameron, widened as the Metropolitan Police confirmed they were investigating evidence from News International that the tabloid made illegal payments to police officers in its quest for information.

The list of potential victims also grew. Revelations emerged Wednesday that the phones of relatives of people killed in the July 7, 2005, terrorist attacks on London's transit system, as well as those tied to two more slain schoolgirls, may also have been targeted.

The true extent of the hacking is not yet clear — and may not be known for months as inquiries unfold.

Graham Foulkes, whose 22-year-old son David died in the 2005 terrorist attacks, was told by police that he was on a list of potential hacking victims.

"I just felt stunned and horrified," Foulkes told The Associated Press. "I find it hard to believe someone could be so wicked and so evil, and that someone could work for an organization that even today is trying to defend what they see as normal practices."

Foulkes, who plans to mourn his son on Thursday's sixth anniversary of the attack, said an independent investigation is needed because the police were compromised by accepting pay-offs from the tabloid.

"The police are now implicated," he said. "The prime minister must have an independent inquiry and all concerned should be prosecuted."

Foulkes also demanded the resignation of Brooks, the former News of the World editor who is now chief executive of News International, the U.K. newspaper division of Murdoch's News Corp. media empire. News Corp. owns a swath of newspapers, including News of the World, the Sun, and the Wall Street Journal.

"She's gotta go," Foulkes said. "She cannot say, oops, sorry, we've been caught out. Of course she's responsible for the ethos and practices of her department. Her position is untenable."

Brooks, one of the most powerful women in British journalism, maintains she did not know about the phone hacking. She said she will continue to direct the company.

Harry Potter fans hold a sign that predicts the coming of the rapture as they wait Wednesday in Trafalgar Square, London, for the world premiere of the movie 'Harry Potter and The Deathly Hallows: Part 2.'

Harry Potter actors bid adieu to characters

By Jill Lawless
Associated Press writer

LONDON — Daniel Radcliffe will miss being an action hero. Emma Watson will miss being a role model. Robbie Coltrane will simply miss getting to play a good guy.

The cast and crew of the "Harry Potter" movies have been saying goodbye to their characters on the eve of the premiere of the eighth and final film in the magical adventure series.

When they met the press at a valedictory news conference Wednesday, it felt like the last day of school — a warm mixture of release and regret.

Radcliffe, Watson and Rupert Grint have grown up in the films over the past decade, playing young wizards Harry, Hermione and Ron as they progress through Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, and fight the dark forces of Lord Voldemort.

Watson said was it is still "difficult to process" the fact that she won't be playing Hermione again.

The 21-year-old said she would miss the brave, brainy young witch, who was not just a role but a role model.

"I think of her like a sister," Watson said. "She feels so real to me. ... Of course I will miss the people, but actually I will just miss being her."

"I think she made me a better person, and she made me work harder, just as a result of comparing myself to her every day."

Grint, 21, said he felt bereft that the series had ended.

"I have felt a little bit lost without it, really, not really knowing what to do with myself," Grint said. "It's been such a constant part of my life."

Radcliffe — who appeared on tape from New York, where he is starring in a Broadway production of "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" — said he would miss the cast and crew, and the stunts.

"I don't really have the natural frame and stature of an action hero," the modestly sized 21-year-old actor said. "So it's kind of a gift for a young actor to be able to do all that stuff. ... Bursting out of the water surrounded by a ring of fire: I will never get to do that again."

Scottish actor Coltrane — who has played the friendly giant Hagrid since the start of the series — said the films were "the first time in my entire career that I've played a thoroughly good man."

"Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows: Part 2" has its premiere Thursday in London and opens around the world next week. It brings Harry's saga to a close 10 years after the launch of the first film, "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone," and four years after the publication of the final book in J.K. Rowling's adventure series.

More than 20 members of the cast and crew — from producer David Heyman and director David Yates to assorted Hogwarts teachers and red-haired Weasley siblings — spoke to reporters Wednesday under the grand neo-Gothic vaults of London's St. Pancras Hotel.

It was a sentimental occasion. Everyone, magic or muggle, paid tribute to their colleagues. Several spoke of the Potter "family" and rejected the idea of the films as a "franchise."

Yates, who has directed the last four Potter movies, said the cast and crew had a strong bond.

"We've all been to the moon together, as it were, and I think that's special," he said.

Evanna Lynch, the Irish actress and Harry Potter fan who was cast, aged 14, as flighty Hogwarts pupil Luna Lovegood, said she had no idea what she would do next.

"I'm distraught that this is over," said 19-year-old Lynch. "I've been obsessed with this book since I was eight, so I don't really know what I was before that or what will come next."

"Apparently they are opening a Harry Potter Experience thing where Leavesden (Studios) was. I am available as a tour guide."

The "Harry Potter" films have been big box office hits, but largely overlooked by the Academy Awards and other major prizes.

Riots erupt in Egyptian city over police trials

CAIRO (AP) — Hundreds of Egyptian protesters lobbed rocks at the security headquarters and set fire to police cars for a second day Wednesday in a flashpoint city as growing impatience over delays in trying former regime officials and police accused of killing protesters threatened to plunge the nation back into crisis.

In a bid to defuse rising anger, the Interior Ministry announced that hundreds of high-ranking police officers will be sacked for their role in the harsh crackdown on anti-government protests earlier this year that left nearly 850 people dead. Interior Minister Mansour el-Essawi said in a statement that it will be the largest shake up in the history of his ministry.

Justice for those who killed demonstrators has become a rallying point for the protest movement, nearly five months after Hosni Mubarak was ousted in an uprising after a nearly three-decade rule marred by complaints of widespread corruption and police abuse.

The two days of rioting in Suez — a city at the southern tip of the strategic Suez Canal that saw some of the most dramatic confrontations between police and protesters — was prompted by anger over a court order on Monday to release seven police officers charged with killing demonstrators.

Prosecutor-General Mahmoud Abdel-Meguid had promised to appeal the court order and return the police officers to jail.

Libyan rebels seize 2 mountain towns

TRIPOLI, Libya (AP) — Rebel fighters in western Libya seized two mountain towns from government troops Wednesday as their counterparts east of the capital Tripoli suffered heavy losses in intense fighting with government troops.

Meanwhile, the embattled regime of Moammar Gadhafi sought to show it remains in control of the country, laying out plans to try rebel leaders for treason in court next week.

In the eastern rebel stronghold of Benghazi, tens of thousands of rebel supporters poured into the city's main square for a rally aimed at sustaining momentum for their nearly five month-old uprising. Fighting began in February when a popular movement against Gadhafi quickly escalated into armed conflict.

The civil war has been largely deadlocked, with the rebels controlling the east and Gadhafi clinging to large parts of western Libya, but unable to retake rebel bridgeheads there. The rebels made some gains Wednesday, taking two more towns in the western Nafusa mountains and pushing further from the port city of Misrata, their main stronghold in the west, toward the town of Zlitan, 12 kilometers to the west.

Gadhafi's forces fired more than 500 rockets at rebel positions near Zlitan, from dawn until after nightfall, said Dr. Ayman Abu Shahma, a physician in Misrata. He said 18 rebel fighters were killed and 30 wounded Wednesday. He said two civilians, including a 12-year-old girl, also were killed when a rocket hit their Misrata house.

NATO, meanwhile, said it struck equipment used to refuel government military vehicles near the key eastern oil town of Brega, which has been a frequent site of clashes between rebel fighters and troops loyal to Gadhafi.

The alliance said its warplanes have destroyed 2,700 military targets, including 600 Libyan tanks and artillery guns and nearly 800 ammunition stores, since NATO began bombing Gadhafi-linked sites in March under a U.N. mandate to protect Libyan civilians.

Secretary-General Anders Fogh Rasmussen warned that Gadhafi's forces remain a threat. "Without NATO there would be a massacre. Gadhafi would be free to use his tanks and missiles on towns and markets," he said. "We will not let that happen."

NATO's campaign was intended to deliver a sharp, devastating blow. However, with the campaign dragging on inconclusively, there have been increasing international calls for a negotiated end to the war.

Sally Diane Tipton

April 19, 1958-June 30, 2011

RICHFIELD — Sally Diane Tipton, 53, of Richfield, Idaho, began her walk with Jesus Thursday, June 30, 2011. She passed away at home with her husband and daughter by her side after a long and courageous battle with breast cancer.

Sally was born April 19, 1958, to Helen and Hamilton Morrison in Flint, Mich. She graduated from Byron High School and one of her first jobs was working with the race horses at Harness Racing. She then took to the open road and became a truck driver, seeing 48 states from behind the windshield of a big rig. She loved spending time in the mountains, hunting and fishing. She had a love of critters but horses were most special to her heart. She was always a dreamer and loved life. She loved to laugh, and she was very artistic, giving many of her crafts away as gifts to loved ones.

Sally married Sol Tipton on Nov. 10, 1996, and they moved around the area, living in Buhl, Castleford, Filer and Richfield. Sol and Sally adopted Sally's niece, Chelsie, and raised her as their own.

(Jacquie) Tipton and Kara (Alvaro) Mendoza; five sisters, Kathy (Dennis) Graham of Howell, Mich., Nancy (Lee) Foster of Dallas City, Ill., Holly (Jim) Russell of Carthage, Ill.,

Gail (Roy) Burmeister of Lake View, Mich., and Dorothy Morrison of Carthage, Mo.; two brothers, Hamilton (Ruby) Morrison of Brookwood, Ala., and Dana (Karen) Morrison of Wesley Chapel, Fla.; as well as eight grandchildren and numerous nieces and nephews.

Sally was preceded in death by her parents; a brother, James Herbert; a stepdaughter, Penny; and her father-in-law, Boyd Tipton.

The funeral service for Sally will be at 10 a.m. Friday, July 8, at the First Christian Church, 1005 Poplar St. in Buhl, Idaho. All services and arrangements are under the direction of the Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home of Twin Falls, Idaho. Those wishing to share condolences may do so at www.magicvalleyfuneral-home.com.

The family would like to thank Hospice Visions for the care given to Sally as she began her final journey. Sally had an undying faith and everlasting love of God. We will miss her, but find comfort knowing that she is free from pain and suffering.

Triangle of hunger batters millions in East Africa

By Malkhadir M. Muhumed and Joe Mwhia
Associated Press writers

WAJIR, Kenya — Thousands of families are walking for days in search of food in a triangle of hunger where the borders of Ethiopia, Kenya and Somalia meet. Hundreds already have died, and images of children with skinny, malnourished bodies are becoming commonplace in this corner of Africa.

Even Somalia's top militant group is asking the aid agencies it once banned from its territories to return. Thirsty livestock are dying by the thousands, and food prices have risen beyond what many families can afford.

Hawo Ibrahim said she and her seven children trekked 15 days from a town in southern Somalia before reaching a refugee camp in northeast Kenya.

"We have seen misery and hunger on our way," said Ibrahim, 32, who said her husband went mad after the family lost its livestock to drought. "The most painful thing was when you don't get anything for your thirsty and hungry children."

Aid agencies are appealing for tens of millions of dollars in emergency funding. Oxfam — which hopes to raise $80 million, its largest ever appeal for Africa — says 12 million people are affected by hunger. At least 500 Somalis are known to have died from drought-related diseases, though Oxfam says the actual number is likely higher.

"Two successive poor rains, entrenched poverty and lack of investment in affected areas have pushed 12 million people into a fight for survival," said Jane Cocking, Oxfam's humanitarian director.

A malnourished child is held in her grandmother's arms Wednesday at Wajir District hospital in Wajir, Kenya.

Somalis desperate for food are overrunning the world's largest refugee camp in neighboring Kenya, which is seeing some 10,000 new arrivals each week, six times the average at this time last year. Caught between violence and hunger, a U.N. official said Somali refugees are suffering "a human tragedy of unimaginable proportions."

The epicenter of the drought lies on the three-way border shared by Kenya, Ethiopia and Somalia, a nomadic region where families heavily depend on the health of their livestock. Uganda and Djibouti have also been hit. ActionAid says some areas in the Horn are experiencing their driest conditions in 60 years.

"We only ran away from hunger — nothing else," said Halimo Farah, a mother of three who fled Somalia and is now in Dadaab. "We had farms and got no rains

Food prices have also risen. The U.N. says in the last year the price of sorghum in Somalia's Baidoa jumped 240 percent, while yellow maize rose 117 percent rise in Jiiga, Ethiopia. White maize jumped nearly 60 percent in the Kenyan town of Mandera.

The U.N.'s refugee agency says Dadaab's three camps now host more than 382,000 people, while thousands more are waiting at reception centers outside the camp.

More than 135,000 people have fled Somalia this year — including 54,000 in June, three times as many as in May, said Melissa Fleming, a spokeswoman for UNHCR.

Many Somali children are arriving at refugee camps so weak that they are dying within 24 hours despite emergency care and feeding, she said.

DETROIT — Barry Bremen, a Detroit-area businessman whose fun-loving, gate-crashing stunts led him to shoot layups before NBA All-Star games, accept an Emmy Award for best supporting actress and flee from veteran baseball manager Tommy LaSorda, died of cancer at age 64.

Sometimes called the "Great Impostor," Bremen became known to millions during the 1980s for sneaking onto professional courts and fields donning chicken suits as well as player and umpire uniforms — capers that required such accomplices as baseball player George Brett and golfer Jack Nicklaus.

He died June 30 in Scottsdale, Ariz., where he lived with his wife, Margo. A memorial service was held for family and friends Tuesday in Southfield, following a funeral and burial in Phoenix.

Some of his more famous exploits included being chased off the field by LaSorda — then the Los Angeles Dodgers manager — during 1986 during All-Star game warm-ups and slipping onto the stage to accept an Emmy award in 1985 for Betty Thomas of "Hill Street Blues" before she could make her way to the microphone.

"More than a man, he's a force," said Rabbi Tamara Kolton, who officiated the Michigan memorial service that was videotaped and posted on the Ira Kaufman Chapel's website. "He's a force to remember the part of us that yearns to do something a little different, a little extraordinary, a lot of fun. ... What the world needs is more forces like Barry."

Bremen was a father of three and an enthusiastic amateur athlete who ran a successful merchandising business in the Detroit suburb of Bloomfield Hills. Friends say he began his career as the Great Impostor in 1978 while attending a Detroit Pistons game. He casually made his way toward the visiting Kansas City Kings bench and grabbed the warm-up suit of a Kings benchwarmer, getting some floor time in the final minutes of his team's rout of the lowly Pistons.

The get-up reappeared a few months later — on Bremen's 6-foot-3-inch frame — in the NBA All-Star game. After an air ball and a couple clunkers, players started feeding him the ball. His hard work, love of the game and charm endeared himself to many professional players.

"They always have a good time pulling something off against the establishment," Bremen told The Associated Press in 1997. "That's why it's been so successful."

Bremen's list of stunts included shagging flies in a New York Yankees uniform before the 1979 All-Star game in Seattle; showing up at home plate dressed as an umpire before a 1980 World Series game in Philadelphia between the Phillies and Royals; and playing a practice round with Fred Couples and Curtis Strange at the 1985 U.S. Open at Oakland Hills, Mich.

He found his way — by invitation — onto the late night sets of Johnny Carson and David Letterman and became a subject of a "Jeopardy" question.

Bremen told the AP he "retired" from gate-crashing in because he didn't want to be mistaken for the real nuts, who run onto sports fields for attention or worse. The knife attack on tennis star Monica Seles in Germany in 1993 was a game-changer for security breaches.

Minidoka Memorial Hospital's Education Department recently held its annual Safe Sitter class for kids ages 11 to 14. The two-day course teaches youth about the safe and appropriate actions needed in order to care for younger children, including CPR, first aid, and caring and feeding. Each student must then pass a test to receive a certificate of completion. The hospital offers the course every June.

Non-profit Community Spotlight

Basque in Idaho

From the mid-eighteenth century until after World War II, large numbers of young Basques left the Basque Country for other parts of the world, often for economic or political reasons. In the Western United States, Basques were often employed in sheepherding, ranching and farming. No U.S. State is more associated with Basque people and culture than Idaho. It has a large population of ethnic Basques and their descendants. The largest concentration of Basques communities is in the area around Boise with Gooding and the surrounding communities next.

The Basques call their language Euskara. The Basques have traditionally called their country Euskal Herria, which means 'the Basque Country'. This designation includes the territory of the traditional seven provinces, located in northern Spain and southern France. "Basques took great pride in being hard workers and being good citizens" as evidenced by the number of Basques in leadership positions in business and politics. Probably the most well known Basque in the State government is former Secretary of State Pete Cenarrusa.

The Gooding Basque Association strives to maintain and share our culture with all who are interested. We utilize our Cultural Center in Gooding to this end, hosting Basque dinners every first Friday of each month except July. In July we hold our annual Gooding Basque Association Picnic on the third Sunday of the month. This year's picnic will be July 17th at the Gooding County Fairgrounds.

Come join us Sunday July 17th at the fairgrounds. Even if you are not Basque, we'll make you Basque for a day. You can sample our food, including Basque style BBQ lamb, salad, rice, beans and this year, roasted pork loins. We'll have something for every member of the family from Basque Dancing exhibitions (in traditional costume), Basque sports and contests for adults (weight carrying, bota contest, Basque style tug of war) & sports and contests for younger kids including races, junior tug of war, rides and other activities. Part of our activities will include our traditional auction (live lambs, Dutch oven bread & gift baskets). The day begins with a Catholic Mass at 11 am with the BBQ lunch at a little after noon. The auction and other events follow. Late arrivals can munch on chorizo sandwiches which will be served starting about 3 p.m. Never heard the Basque language spoken? Come to the Gooding Basque Picnic and sample a little bit of Idaho's ethnic heritage.

Burley stays perfect in division

By Stephen Meyers

Burley coach Devin Kunz described the Class A American Legion Baseball season as a grind.

The Green Sox played two games Wednesday in Twin Falls to kick-start a seven-day, nine-game trek, all on the road with the exception of hosting rival Minico on Monday.

And with their top two pitchers both not at full health against Twin Falls, the Green Sox found a way to grind out 6-3 and 13-3 wins over the Hawks and stay undefeated in Area C West Division play.

Burley starter Joe Ferrin woke up with a 101 degree fever Wednesday morning and pitched three-plus innings for the Green Sox, giving up three runs before handing the reins over to Jake Mills, who was nursing a sore ankle he tweaked while scoring a run in the third inning.

"Joe wasn't feeling 100 percent today, but he was able to set the tone for us and his teammates stepped up and finished the game," Kunz said.

Showing off a nasty curveball and an off-balance changeup, Mills struck out five in four innings of work, while allowing only one hit to earn the win. His two biggest outs came in the bottom of the fifth inning.

Trailing 5-3, the Hawks put on two runners as Josh Schrader worked a leadoff walk and Kyler Meaker snuck a one-out single past a diving Jackson Kunz at short-stop to bring up the heart of their order.

Burley third baseman Taylor Carson handled a hard-hit ball down the line by Scott Speer to record the second out and caught a foul ball by Jon Cron to end the United States players Carli Lloyd, right, and Christie Rampone walk on the pitch following the Group C match Wednesday against Sweden at the Women's World Cup in Wolfsburg, Germany.

Sweden beats U.S. women to win group

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press writer

WOLFSBURG, Germany — The Americans can't do things the easy way.

Needing only a draw to avoid Brazil in the quarter-finals, the U.S. fell 2-1 to Sweden on Wednesday night, the team's fourth loss since November and first ever in group play at the World Cup.

"After, what I said to the team is, my glass is half-full," U.S. coach Pia Sundhage said. "Even though we lost, we can come out as a winner if we take a different path. ... We really want to play in the final. But we have to play some great games, play some great teams. I really want us to embrace this process. I think the team will get stronger. That's the plan.

"It's a little bit different for me to talk about the final," she added. "That's what it takes when we take a different road."

Lisa Dahlkvist converted a penalty and Nilla Fischer scored on a free kick for Sweden, which won Group C and will play Australia on Sunday in Augsburg.

Abby Wambach got the U.S. back in the game in the 67th minute with her first goal of the tournament, but as they have all year the Americans squandered too many other chances and now must Brazil on Sunday in Dresden.

Brazil was the runner-up to the Americans at the last two Olympics and to Germany at the 2007 World Cup, and is led by five-time FIFA player of the year Marta.

As the final whistle sounded, Sweden's players rushed onto the field, gathered in a circle and did the dance that's quickly becoming their tradition.

They then took a victory lap around the field, delighting the many Swedish fans in the crowd of 23,468 who whistled and cheered.

CRHS wrestler takes term "no offseason" to another level

Never again will Braydon Metcalf complain about a high school wrestling practice being too hard.

Not after running 1.5 miles from the dorms on the campus of Pennsylvania State University, running every last step of gigantic Beaver Stadium (capacity 107,282), then running all the way back.

Not after wrestling for an entire hour against the same person — no water breaks, no bathroom breaks, no gear adjustments.

Not after a week in the most intense wrestling camp, hosted by the reigning NCAA champions and guided by arguably the best wrestler the United States has ever produced.

Most importantly, not with all the things he now needs to impart on the younger wrestlers in the Canyon Ridge program.

As far down as the high school level, there's no longer much (if any) of an off-season from a given sport.

Even less so for

guys like Metcalf, whose tireless pursuit of a state championship landed him in a prime camp, clashing with the best of the best from around the country.

When Metcalf got a sponsorship to attend essentially any one wrestling camp he wanted, he immediately thought of regional camps he'd already attended. He quickly was reminded that any camp he wanted meant exactly that: any camp he wanted.

From then on, there was just one he set his heart on — an ultra-intensive camp from June 25 to July 2 at Penn State, home to the national champions and coach Cael Sanderson, a U.S. wrestling legend at age 32.

It had been full for months, but almost as if by providence a spot opened up, and Metcalf became the only Idaho wrestler in attendance.

For seven full days and parts of two others, there were three things wrestlers could do — attend practices, sleep, and eat.

"If we weren't too tired to eat," Metcalf said Wednesday. "My dad used to come home and we'd have dinner ready, and he was too tired to eat. I never understood that, but I do now."

Aside from Beaver Stadium and hour-long grudge matches, Metcalf and the others came ready to wrestle and to learn.

For someone new to that elite level of wrestling, there was a lot for Metcalf to take in. But he wrote down as much as he could so he could remember it and share it with his teammates.

The biggest moment was when he finally mustered up the courage to approach his idol, Sanderson, who was 127-3 with four state titles in the Utah high school ranks and a perfect 159-0 at Iowa State with four national titles.

Oh, yeah, and he won a gold medal in the 2004 Olympics.

But Metcalf might have learned more from the way Sanderson carries himself than from any wrestling move.

"He's my biggest role model ever. The epitome of perfect (as a wrestler)," Metcalf said. "It took me two days to go up to him and ask him about the kind of grip he likes to use, pick his brain.

"It was kind of weird talking to him because he's so bashful, but this guy could rip my head off at any moment if he really wanted to. I learned I need to be more modest about myself and don't let my ego get to me. If you're going to be like him, you're going to be pretty dang good."

Now home from his once-in-a-lifetime experience, Metcalf acknowledges this season presents his last chance, in more ways than one.

He'll have to shake the reputation of being hotheaded — Metcalf was ejected from both the 2010 Twin Falls-Canyon Ridge football game and the 2011 Red Halverson Invitational wrestling tournament for striking an opponent — but he's determined to be known for something else: improving on his fifth-place finish at state, and being a good leader for the Riverhawk program.

"I know I mess up one more time and I'm not going to be a part of this program ... being successful has everything to do with attitude and maturity," he said. "When I went to this camp, I was there for the whole Canyon Ridge team, to learn as much as I could.

"This is a landmark for me, because I got messages from all my wrestling buddies that want to wrestle against me every day in practice. I feel like I'm one of the first seniors to go through Canyon Ridge with full respect, full captain title and it'll be because I'm at that maturity level.

"Did I learn anything from the camp? Not yet," he added. "There was a lot to learn but I've got to process all that. I really think that during the season is when I'm going to really call on it."

Wood River, Jerome split pair of blowouts

By John Derr
Times-News writer

HAILEY — Both Wood River and Jerome can look back at Wednesday's doubleheader and feel good about one game.

The Wranglers dominated the first, winning 12-2 in five innings. In the nightcap, it was the Cyclones' turn to shine, belting out 18 hits on their way to a 19-8 victory in six innings.

The Wranglers got things going early as Zach Israel smashed a two-run triple.

"I have been seeing it well, not trying to do to much, just hitting line drives," said Israel, who added that the team is improving. "We have been playing a lot better and hitting the ball well."

The next batter, Alex Padilla, followed suit as Wood River set the tone with four runs in the first inning.

Marshall Reyburn chipped in a two-run double in the third as the Wranglers pushed the lead to 11-2 after three innings.

Wood River pitcher Austin Hafer earned a no-hitter for the game. Walks led to the two runs the Cyclones tallied.

"I struggled for most of the game, couldn't find the (strike) zone. I did better later," said Hafer, who wasn't aware of the no-no. "I didn't notice at first until someone told me. It feels good."

Israel ended the game early with an RBI single to right, invoking the 10-run rule.

The struggles of the first game went away quickly in the second for the Cyclones. Four runs on five hits turned things around. Deion Ortega, Garrett Sant and Ethan Bragg all chipped in RBI singles.

Jerome was back at it in the third. Bragg blasted a two-run double as the lead grew to 6-1.

"I have been really working with the coaches on my swing and today everything fell into place," said Bragg, who tallied three hits and three RBIs. "We never give up, we are always battling"

The Wranglers found their rhythm in the third, collecting four hits and three runs. Israel chipped in a double while Padilla smashed a triple to the fence, scoring another.

The Cyclones kept at it as Dom Baker brought a pair home with a single. Wood River tried to keep up as Padilla blasted another triple.

Four pitching changes couldn't deter Jerome as Deion Ortega and Garrett Sant both blasted two-run doubles, highlighting an eight-run sixth, and ended the game early.

Ortega, the leadoff hitter and catcher, went 3 of 4, scoring four runs and chipping in three RBIs.

"I started out bad, but then adjusted. I wanted to put the ball in play and make the defense work," said Ortega, who added that the team stepped up in the second game. "It shows we know how to play, we have potential and can be a great team."

Baker went the distance, earning the victory while scoring four runs to help his own cause.

"It feels great. They got some hits, but my defense helped me

Jerome travels to Pocatello Friday for a double header while Wood River hits the road this weekend for doubleheaders against Bear Lake and Sugar-Salem.

CSI baseball team hires pitching coach

Times-News

The College of Southern Idaho baseball program has added former Golden Eagle Nick Aiello to the coaching staff, CSI announced Wednesday.

Aiello replaces Kris Welker, who left after two seasons. He comes to CSI from Region 18 rival College of Southern Nevada.

"Nick has an outstanding reputation as one of the top pitching coaches in the Las Vegas area," said CSI Athletic Director Joel Bate. "He is highly respected for his knowledge and his ability to get the best out of his players. With his ties to the Vegas baseball community, it should open up recruiting relationships in that area. We are lucky to have a former Eagle with that kind of talent come back to join us"

Aiello played for the Golden Eagles in 1999, earning Region 18 Tournament MVP honors as he led CSI to its most recent region tournament title.

Jeter moves within three hits of 3,000

CLEVELAND — Derek Jeter pulled within three hits of 3,000 for his career, lining a double in three at-bats against Justin Masterson, who shut down New York for eight scoreless innings and led Cleveland to a 5-3 win Wednesday night.

Jeter, who was on deck when the game ended, went 1 for 3 and also drew a walk from Masterson (7-6), who was backed up by two sensational plays from All-Star shortstop Asdrubal Cabrera in the eighth.

Rookie Lonnie Chisenhall hit his first career homer for Cleveland, which took two of three in the series between first-place teams. The Indians scored two runs in the first off starter Phil Hughes (0-2), but left the bases loaded twice and stranded 13 runners.

RED SOX 5, BLUE JAYS 4

BOSTON — Jacoby Ellsbury and Kevin Youkilis both had three extra-base hits and Tim Wakefield scattered nine hits in seven innings to lead Boston.

Wakefield (5-3) earned the 198th win of his career, filling in for a rotation that is without Clay Buchholz, Jon Lester and Daisuke Matsuzaka. The 44-year-old knuckleballer allowed three runs, struck out seven and walked one as Boston earned its sixth win in its last seven games.

ATHLETICS 2, MARINERS 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Guillermo Moscoso allowed two hits in seven innings and Scott Sizemore homered and drove in two runs to help Oakland salvage the finale of a three-game series.

Sizemore homered in the second inning and added an RBI single in the fifth against Jason Vargas (6-6) to give Moscoso (3-4) more than enough support to win for the first time since May 29.

RAVS 12, TWINS 5

MINNEAPOLIS — Evan Longoria had three hits and four RBIs for Tampa Bay, which avoided being swept.

TIGERS 5, ANGELS 4

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Miguel Cabrera homered during a three-run seventh inning for Detroit.

ROYALS 4, WHITE SOX 1

CHICAGO — Bruce Chen pitched effectively into the seventh inning and Eric Hosmer homered for Kansas City.

RANGERS 13, ORIOLES 5

ARLINGTON, Texas — Alexi Ogando allowed four hits over seven innings and Texas completed a three-game sweep of Baltimore.

NATIONAL LEAGUE
ASTROS 8, PIRATES 2

PITTSBURGH — Hunter Pence had three hits, including an RBI single during a five-run sixth inning, and Houston snapped a five-game losing streak.

Houston took the field less than 90 minutes after a team meeting that lasted an hour and 15 minutes. The Astros had lost 10 of 11 and were 6-24 since June 3 and have the majors' worst record (30-58).

NATIONALS 5, CUBS 4

WASHINGTON — Wilson Ramos' suicide squeeze drove in Michael Morse in the seventh inning to lift Washington.

Ramos pulled off the tiebreaking sacrifice after missing the sign earlier in the count. He swung away with Morse charging home on the first pitch from Kerry Wood (1-4) but managed to foul it off.

Danny Espinosa and Ryan Zimmerman homered for the Nationals, and Carlos Pena and Aramis Ramirez did the same for the Cubs — all four coming with a man on base.

BRVES 9, ROCKIES 1

that led to the winning touchdown in the 2010 Fiesta Bowl, the Boise product has amassed 72 receptions for 1,005 yards and six touchdowns in his Bronco career.

During his junior season Efaw caught 24 passes for 299 yards and five scores.

The Mackey Award has been given annually since 2001 to the nation's most outstanding tight end. In addition to demonstrating outstanding athletic prowess on the field, the award also stands for positive sportsmanship-like behavior, good academic standing and exceptional leadership abilities.

According to BSU, Efaw has graduated and is currently pursuing his master's degree.

Shoemaker, a Meridian native, had his best season last year, catching 32 passes for 582 yards and five touchdowns.

He averaged a career-high 18.2 yards per reception.

scoring threat.

"That was a huge spot right there," Mills said. "(Scott) Speer was settling down on the mound for them and we were up only two runs. My changeup really kept them off balance and the defense made a couple of huge plays and we were able to get out of it."

Carson ripped an RBI double in the third to help jumpstart a three-run inning for Burley (19-10, 12-0). Ferrin followed with an RBI single and Spencer Rice hit a sacrifice fly to score Carson.

Twin Falls (20-8, 5-5) scored its three runs in the fourth as Cron ripped an RBI double and Trae Bishop a two-run triple to knock Ferrin out of the game.

"Outside of that fourth inning, we just couldn't get anything going offensively," said Twin Falls coach Brady Madsen. "It's tough when you give away some runs with errors in the field and putting guys on base with walks."

The Green Sox hammered the Hawks 13-3 in Game 2 as Jake Mills pitched all five innings, giving up only four hits.

Twin Falls travels across town on Friday to play the Cowboys, while the Green Sox head to Blackfoot and Idaho Falls on Friday and Saturday.

Persistence pays off: South Korea wins 2018 Olympic bid

DURBAN, South Africa — The victory margin was massive and the message loud and clear: Persistence paid off for South Korea in its third consecutive bid for the Winter Olympics.

After two stinging defeats in a decade of trying, the South Korean city of Pyeongchang finally won its Olympic prize Wednesday, burying two European rivals in a landslide vote for the 2018 Winter Games and bringing them back to the lucrative Asian market.

The Koreans lost narrowly in the final round of voting for the 2010 and 2014 Games, but this time they defeated Munich and Anney, France, by a one-sided margin that few had expected.

Needing 48 votes for victory, Pyeongchang won an overwhelming 63 of the 95 cast in the first round of the secret ballot. Munich received 25 and Anney seven.

FORMER BSU COACH PAID $40K AS PART OF SETTLEMENT

BOISE — A former Boise State University assistant track coach received a $40,000 payment from the state last month as part of a settlement with the school over her claims that she was discriminated against because she is a woman.

Amy Christoffersen sued the university, the head track coach and the head of the athletics department in September 2008 alleging she was wrongly demoted to an insurance coordinator post in 2007 and then fired the next year.

The lawsuit outlined several instances in which Christoffersen said she felt she was discriminated against, yelled at and treated poorly in comparison to male coaches. She was hired as an assistant track coach in 1998.

At the time, a university spokesman called her court complaint “groundless.”

A settlement was reached in the case last month, a few weeks before it was scheduled to go to trial on July 11.

Public records show the Idaho Department of Administration sent Christoffersen a $40,000 payment on June 13, the Idaho Statesman reported. It was unclear if Christoffersen would receive additional payments as part of her settlement with the university.

“They never told me I wasn’t going to be the coach, so I just tried to carry myself like I was,” the 38-year-old said Wednesday after the Pacers officially made him the head coach.

Vogel took over for Jim O’Brien at the middle of last season, went 20-18 to close the regular season and led the team to its first playoff berth since 2006.

SOURCE: FIFA EVIDENCE AGAINST BIN HAMMAM MOUNTS

LONDON — FIFA’s investigators have gathered more evidence of bribery against suspended executive Mohamed bin Hammam during his campaign to become president of world soccer governing body, a person familiar with the case told The Associated Press on Wednesday.

Nine of the 24 Caribbean Football Union members who attended a meeting in Trinidad in May have admitted to ex-FBI director Louis Freeh that they were offered or accepted $40,000 payments from bin Hammam. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because it is a confidential report.

The corruption report — compiled by former FBI agents — was sent to bin Hammam last week, and FIFA has summoned the suspended head of Asian soccer to a full ethics committee hearing on July 22.

Bin Hammam and two Caribbean soccer officials are accused of involvement in a plot to bribe executives in the Caribbean before the Qatari’s challenge to topple FIFA President Sepp Blatter.

An initial report last month by FIFA’s ethics committee concluded there was “compelling” evidence that bin Hammam and then-CONCACAF President Jack Warner conspired to bribe voters.

Cavendish wins Tour’s crash-marred fifth stage

CAP FREHEL, France (AP) — Mark Cavendish of Britain won a windy and crash-marred fifth stage of the Tour de France in a mass sprint on Wednesday, while Thor Hushovd of Norway kept the leader’s yellow jersey.

Defending champion Alberto Contador fell in a crash and RadioShack rider Janez Brajkovic broke his collarbone and pulled out of the race during the 102-mile stage from Carhaix to Cap Frehel on the English Channel.

Cavendish, a sprint specialist, collected his 16th career Tour stage victory and his first this year by speeding past Philippe Gilbert of Belgium — who finished second — and Jose Joaquin Rojas in third.

“I am really happy. It was a difficult finish,” said Cavendish, who rides with the HTC-Highroad team. “I put every thing into it ... If we win, it’s not because we’re lucky, it’s because we’re good.”

The British rider, known almost as much for his powerful legs as his sharp tongue, took aim at unidentified critics who he said expressed doubts about his abilities.

But Gilbert succeeded in making him work hard in the sprint.

“Normally, I try to win by a little margin, just to try and save energy,” Cavendish said. “Today, I had to give everything I had. He’s taken a lot out of me, so I’ll take a couple of days to recover.”

The top standings didn’t change because the vast majority of riders crossed in a pack right behind the sprinters. Hushovd kept his one-second lead over Cadel Evans of Australia in second. Frank Schleck of Luxembourg is third overall, 4 seconds back.

Schleck’s younger brother Andy — the Tour runner-up for the last two years — is 10th, 12 seconds behind. Contador, who lost time by getting caught up in a crash in Stage 1, is 39th overall, 1:42 behind Hushovd.

The stage Wednesday included a picturesque patch along rocky Brittany cliffs overlooking the Atlantic, was mostly marked by crashes that brought down some of the biggest names in the pack. Two riders pulled out, reducing the pack to 195.

“It was very nervous, and because of that you get a lot of crashes, because there are 200 riders who want to be in front,” said Hushovd, who retained the coveted yellow jersey for a fourth straight day.

Many riders were jostling to stay at the front — and ahead of possible group spills.

Contador, the Spanish three-time Tour champion, fell at about the 44-mile mark. With his Saxo Bank jersey ripped over the right shoulder, he took off his helmet briefly, then gave a thumbs-up to signal that he was all right.

“It was very difficult day, with a lot of tension,” said Contador, who had scrapes on his right shoulder, elbow and knee. He said he took “a little knock” while braking to avoid one crash, then had his own a few miles later.

“When I got back going, 5 kilometers later, my chain came off — so I fell,” Contador told French TV, which showed images of him throwing his bike on the roadside at the time. “What matters is, I was able to get back up.”

“Yes, it’ll be a bad night, of course, but you have to think about tomorrow,” he added, suggesting his bruises and bumps might cause him to lose some sleep.

The highest-profile withdrawal was Brajkovic. The 27-year-old Slovenian was evacuated to a hospital in an ambulance. A race medical report said he had suffered a broken collarbone and a concussion.

Teammate Levi Leipheimer of the United States also was involved in a crash but returned to the course. In one of the more dramatic spills, Saxo Bank’s Nicki Sorensen bumped into the motorcycle of a race photographer, and skidded on a roadside. The motorbike dragged his bike along the road — and race organizers barred its driver from covering the race.

Robert Gesink, the leader of the Rabobank team, went down in the same spill as Brajkovic. A mass crash earlier tangled up France’s Sylvain Chavanel and Britain’s Bradley Wiggins. Yet another ensnared Belgian sprint star Tom Boonen and his teammate Gert Steegmans.

Christophe Kern, the French time-trial champion, dropped out of the race after yet another crash.

“I kept hearing over the radio, ‘Crash! Crash! Crash!’, and then I saw guys like Gesink coming back to the peloton all covered in dirt,” Evans said. “It was a dangerous day, I think.”

With his jersey torn over his right shoulder, Boonen struggled through wincing pain behind an escort from Quick Step teammate Andy Engels — and finished more than 13 minutes behind the main pack.

On top of his injury, Boonen was penalized along with Rojas for an “irregular sprint” during the intermediate sprint earlier in the day’s stage, race officials said. The riders were stripped of points used to calculate who wins the Tour’s green jersey awarded to the best sprinter.

Former Jazz player Armen Gilliam dies

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Armen Gilliam, who was part of the UNLV Runnin’ Rebels basketball team that made a run to the Final Four in 1987 and played for several NBA teams, has died. He was 47.

The Allegheny County Medical Examiner’s Office said Wednesday that Gilliam died Tuesday night at the LA Fitness gym in Bridgeville while he was playing basketball.

The office said the cause of death has not yet been determined pending an autopsy which was to be completed later Wednesday.

After college, the Phoenix Suns drafted Gilliam as the No. 2 overall pick in the first round of the draft. Besides the Suns, Gilliam also played with the then-Charlotte Hornets, Philadelphia 76ers, New Jersey Nets, Milwaukee Bucks and Utah Jazz. He retired in 2000.

“We are deeply saddened to learn about the loss of Armen Gilliam,” said Rod Thorn, president of the 76ers. “He was a hard-working, physical player during his distinguished 13 years in the NBA and we are proud of the contributions he made to the Sixers from 1990 to 1993.

“On behalf of the entire Sixers organization, we send our deepest condolences to the Gilliam family during this very difficult time.”

Nicknamed “The Hammer,” Gilliam was the leading scorer on the 1987 UNLV team coached by Jerry Tarkanian.

In a statement released by UNLV, Tarkanian, who coached basketball there from 1973-1992, called him one of the best players the university ever had.

“In my ratings, I had Larry Johnson No. 1 and Armen No. 2. He was such a great person. Everybody loved him and he loved everybody,” Tarkanian said. “He was such a gentle person and such a caring guy. I am all shook up over it. I think the world of him and am just really shocked.”

Gilliam’s No. 35 UNLV jersey was retired during a half-time ceremony at the Thomas & Mack Center in November 2007. He became the eighth player in the program’s history to receive that honor.

He played at UNLV from 1984-87 and was a key member of UNLV’s second NCAA Final Four team in 1987. That team finished the season with a 37-2 overall record and was 18-0 in Big West Conference play.

Gilliam coached and played for the Pittsburgh Xplosion in the American Basketball Association in 2005 and 2006. He also coached Division III Penn State-Altoona from 2002-05.

Born as Armon Louis Gilliam, he later changed the spelling of his first name to Armen to better suit the pronunciation of it.

Union: “Adequate basis” to question validity of reported NBA financial figures

NEW YORK (AP) — The NBA players’ association will keep doubting the league’s financial losses, since it made inaccurate projections before.

Doesn’t matter, the league says, since those projections have nothing to do with the final numbers it turns over to the union and insists can’t be disputed.

Wednesday, Day 6 of the lockout, featured sparring by union and league officials over financial information, a day after a report questioned whether the NBA indeed lost money two seasons ago.

Though the NBA says it lost $340 million in 2009-10, a New York Times blog post Tuesday titled “Calling Foul on NBA’s Claims of Financial Distress” called the league “fundamentally a healthy and profitable business” with an estimated operating income of $183 million that season.

Union spokesman Dan Wasserman said the NBA projected a decline in revenues that season but they actually rose, so the final losses should have been much less than the league said.

“In 2009-10, the NBA repeatedly offered projections that league revenues would decline as much as 5 percent, or $180 million, while also projecting losses of $370 million. Revenues were actually up in ‘09-10 and the revenue projections were off by as much as $200 million. Yet, the loss figures were only adjusted by $30 million. So yes, we feel there is more than adequate basis for questioning their pro-

“Revenues were actually up in ’09-10 and the revenue projections were off by as much as $200 million. Yet, the loss figures were only adjusted by $30 million. So yes, we feel there is more than adequate basis for questioning their projections and financials.”

— NBA Players Union spokesman Dan Wasserman

jections and financials,” Wasserman said.

Because of the projected losses, the league forecast a steep drop in the salary cap for the 2010-11 season, saying it could fall as low as $50.4 million.

Instead, it was set at $58 million after the higher-than-expected revenues following a seven-game finals between the Lakers and Celtics allowed the league to finish slightly up.

But that didn’t save the league from the overall losses it says are documented in the data it has handed over to the union.

“For Dan Wasserman to suggest that the league’s future revenue projection, made before the start of the 2009-10 season during the worst economy in 80 years (which, by the way, turned out to be off by only 3.5 percent) somehow relates to the veracity of our year-end audited financials is absurd,” NBA spokesman Mike Bass said. “Mr. Wasserman’s questioning of the league’s audited financials based on this missed projection is a complete non-sequitur.”

The Times story was based on estimates prepared by Forbes and Financial World magazines. Bass said Tuesday the information was inaccurate, saying Forbes “does not have the financial data for our teams and the magazine’s estimates do not reflect reality.” The league added it believed Financial World had gone out of business.

“Precisely to avoid this issue, the NBA and its teams shared their complete league and team audited financials as well as our state and federal tax returns with the players union,” Bass said.

“Those financials demonstrate the substantial and indisputable losses the league has incurred over the past several years.”

The league projected losses of $300 million last season after losses of several hundred million dollars in each season of the CBA, which was ratified in 2005. Owners locked out the players last week after they could not agree on a new deal.

The union has frequently questioned the league’s financials, acknowledging losses but not anywhere near what the NBA has stated. The players offered to give up $100 million in salary costs annually in a recent proposal for a new five-year deal, believing that was more in line with the true losses.

The story was also skeptical, saying perhaps about $250 million of the purported losses results “from an unusual accounting treatment related to depreciation and amortization when a team is sold.” The NBA responded that it uses the conventional and generally accepted accounting (GAAP) approach and does not include purchase price amortization from when a team is sold, with Bass saying “put simply, none of the league losses are related to team purchase or sale accounting.”

The league followed up with another response Wednesday, arguing that “the notion that $250 million of losses is due to ‘accounting procedures’ is patently false and so vague an assertion as to be meaningless as a matter of financial analysis.”

Because the NBA had such a successful 2010-11 season, with growth in TV ratings, and merchandise and ticket sales, the league has struggled to convince fans it needs the massive financial changes owners are seeking from the players.

But Bass said the league never had a positive net or operating income in the last CBA, and that 11 teams had net losses of more than $20 million in the 2009-10 season.

He added 23 of the 30 teams lost money that season. Forbes estimated there were 17.

Timeframe getting tight for NFL labor discussions

NEW YORK (AP) — NFL owners and players may find themselves shifting to hurry-up mode as time gets tight to reach labor peace.

Although both sides say progress has been made in the last month of meetings in various locations, the prospect of postponing the opening of training camps grows stronger every day. Lawyers for the NFL and the players’ association sorted out contract language and details Wednesday for a second straight day, hoping it could speed the process in reaching a new collective bargaining agreement.

A person with knowledge of the situation told The Associated Press that attorneys met at a Manhattan law firm’s headquarters. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because a judge has directed that details of the court-ordered mediated negotiations not be disclosed.

NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell and NFLPA chief DeMaurice Smith plan to return to the negotiations today, along with several owners and players. They all know that some training camps are set to open in less than three weeks and the first exhibition game, at the Pro Football Hall of Fame inductions, is Aug. 7 in Canton, Ohio. The St. Louis Rams and Chicago Bears are scheduled for that game.

“Everyone’s back is up against the wall,” said economic consultant Dr. Jessica Horewitz, a director at Gnarus Advisors who consulted with Smith on the finer points of NFL labor before he was elected executive director of the players association. “The last few details of the contract have to be hammered out, but I believe the big issues are pretty wrapped up: the salary cap and revenue share with the players.”

“I think it will be steady progress, and if we don’t have something by the 15th, I don’t think it will long after that.”

Marc Ganis, president of Chicago-based sports business consulting firm SportsCorp Ltd., and a keen observer of the league’s business side, also sees something getting done in the next week or so.

“They are now up against a hard deadline,” Ganis said. “July 15 is effectively a hard deadline to make sure to get all the preseason games in. If they go beyond July 15, you likely start losing preseason games and it means less money is available overall to do a deal to satisfy both parties.”

Canceling a full weekend of preseason games would cost upward of $60 million in lost revenue.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING

The Board of Jerome Commissioners will be holding a Public Hearing at 3:30 p.m. during their July 18, 2011 County Commissioner Meeting. The Commissioner meeting room is located at the Jerome County Courthouse, 300 North Lincoln, Room 301, Jerome, Idaho.

The purpose of this Public Hearing is to receive input regarding the need to increase the refuse fee for the maintenance and operation of the Landfill/Jerome County Transfer Station. The maintenance and operation of the Landfill/Jerome County Transfer Station is fee based. Pursuant to Jerome County Ordinance No. 2001-11 adopted by the Jerome County Commissioners on December 7, 2001, the following fees were established and have been charged accordingly:

Commercial	$	120.00
Residential		60.00
Circuit Breaker		30.00
Exempt Property		60.00
Apartments		60.00
Excess Refuse fee		30.00
Total charge based on current fees		$609,720.00

The new fee increase in the above-stated categories would be a 10% increase from the fees established by Jerome County Ordinance 2001-11. Increase would be as follows:

Commercial	$	132.00	Increase of $12.00
Residential		66.00	Increase of $6.00
Circuit Breaker		33.00	Increase of $3.00
Exempt Property		66.00	Increase of $6.00
Apartments		66.00	Increase of $6.00
Excess Refuse fee		33.00	Increase of $3.00
Total charge based on proposed increase			$670,692.00

This fee increase of $60,972.00 will assist in decreasing an estimated shortfall of $144,280.00.

Anyone desiring accommodations for disabilities at this Public Hearing should contact the Jerome County Clerk's Office, (208) 644-2714 at least 48 hours prior to the hearing.

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE

On Friday, the 14th day of October, 2011, at the hour of 10:00 o'clock a.m. of said day on the steps of the Jerome County Courthouse, 300 N. Lincoln, Jerome, in the County of Jerome, State of Idaho, Ryan M. Fawcett, as Successor Trustee, will sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, in lawful money of the United States, all payable at the time of sale, the following described real property situated in the County of Jerome, State of Idaho, and described as follows, to wit:

LOT 20 IN BLOCK 2 OF AMENDED PLAT OF THOMPSON SUBDIVISION, RECORDED JANUARY 3, 1997 AS INSTRUMENT NO. 970023, JEROME COUNTY, IDAHO.

The Successor Trustee has no knowledge of a more particular description of the above referenced real property, but for purposes of compliance with Section 60-113, Idaho Code, the Successor Trustee has been informed that the street address of 320 K Ave. W., Jerome, Idaho, is sometimes associated with said real property.

Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possession or encumbrances to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the Deed of Trust executed by ISAIAS MACIEL and CELIA MACIEL, Husband and Wife, Grantor, to Ryan M. Fawcett, Successor Trustee, for the benefit and security of FIRST FEDERAL SAVINGS BANK OF TWIN FALLS, recorded May 18, 2007, as Instrument No. 2072983, Mortgage records of Jerome County, Idaho; and assigned to the IDAHO HOUSING AND FINANCE ASSOCIATION by Assignment of Deed of Trust recorded on July 11, 2007, as Instrument No. 2074167, Mortgage records of Jerome County, Idaho. THE ABOVE GRANTOR IS NAMED TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 45-1506(4)(a), IDAHO CODE. NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE THAT THEY ARE, OR ARE NOT, PRESENTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS OBLIGATION.

The default for which this sale is to be made is the failure to pay when due, monthly installment payments under the Deed of Trust Note dated May 18, 2007, in the amount of $927.00 each, for the months of January through June, 2011, inclusive; and for each and every month thereafter until date of sale or reimbursement. All delinquent payments are now due, plus accumulated late charges, plus any costs or expenses associated with this foreclosure. The accrued interest is at the rate of 5.50% per annum from December 1, 2010. The principal balance owing as of this date on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $129,003.40, plus accrued interest at the rate of 5.50% per annum from December 1, 2010.

Thence South 1°23'00" East for 98.00 feet to the TRUE POINT OF BEGINNING.

The Trustee has no knowledge of a more particular description of the above referenced real property, but for purposes of compliance with Section 60-113 Idaho Code, the Trustee has been informed the address of 295 West 600 South, Heyburn, ID, is sometimes associated with the said real property.

This Trustee's Sale is subject to a bankruptcy filing, a payoff, a reinstatement or any other conditions of which the Trustee is not aware that would cause the cancellation of this sale. Further, if any of these conditions exist, this sale may be null and void, the successful bidder's funds shall be returned, and the Trustee and the Beneficiary shall not be liable to the successful bidder for any damages.

Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possessions or encumbrances to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the Deed of Trust executed by Charles G. Martinez and Robin J. Martinez, husband and wife, as Grantor(s) with Republic Mortgage, Division of Old Kent Mortgage Co., Michigan Corp. as the Beneficiary, under the Deed of Trust recorded November 19, 1999, as Instrument No. 444917; subsequently assigned to Old Kent Mortgage Company, a Michigan Corporation,, recorded June 6, 2011, as Instrument No. 512680; subsequently assigned to Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc., as nominee for Homeside Lending, Inc., its successors and assigns; recorded June 6, 2011, as Instrument No. 512681, in the records of Minidoka County, Idaho. The Beneficial interest of said Deed of Trust was subsequently assigned to Midfirst Bank, a Federally Chartered Savings Association, recorded June 6, 2011, as Instrument No. 512682, in the records of said County.

THE ABOVE GRANTORS ARE NAMED TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 45-1506(4)(a), IDAHO CODE. NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE THAT THEY ARE, OR ARE NOT, PRESENTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS OBLIGATION.

The default for which this sale is to be made is the failure to pay the amount due under the certain Promissory Note and Deed of Trust, in the amounts called for thereunder as follows:

Monthly payments in the amount of $708.58 for the months of November 2010 through and including to the date of sale, together with late charges and monthly payments accruing. The sum owing on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $69,706.78 as principal, plus service charges, attorney's fees, costs of this foreclosure, any and all funds expended by Beneficiary to protect their security interest, and interest accruing at the rate of 8% from October 1, 2010, together with delinquent taxes plus penalties and interest to the date of sale.

The Beneficiary elects to sell or cause the trust property to be sold to satisfy said obligation.

NOTICE OF TRUSTEE'S SALE

On November 1, 2011, at the hour of 1:00 o'clock PM of said day, at First American Title, 260 Third Avenue North, Twin Falls, Idaho, JUST LAW, INC., as Successor Trustee, will sell at public auction to the highest bidder, for cash, in lawful money of the United States, all payable at the time of sale, the following described real property, situated in the County of Twin Falls, State of Idaho, and described as follows to wit:

Lot 3 in Block 2 of Pheasant Meadows Subdivision, Phase 1, according to the official plat thereof, filed in Book 20 of Plats at Page(s) 5, official records of Twin Falls, Idaho

The Trustee has no knowledge of a more particular description of the above referenced real property, but for purposes of compliance with Section 60-113 Idaho Code, the Trustee has been informed the address of 1153 Kenyon Road, Twin Falls, ID, is sometimes associated with the said real property.

This Trustee's Sale is subject to a bankruptcy filing, a payoff, a reinstatement or any other conditions of which the Trustee is not aware that would cause the cancellation of this sale. Further, if any of these conditions exist, this sale may be null and void, the successful bidder's funds shall be returned, and the Trustee and the Beneficiary shall not be liable to the successful bidder for any damages.

Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possessions or encumbrances to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the Deed of Trust executed by Richard G. Verhoeven and Kendra C. Verhoeven, husband and wife, as Grantor(s) with Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. as the Beneficiary, under the Deed of Trust recorded February 25, 2009, as Instrument No. 2009-004055, in the records of Twin Falls County, Idaho. The Beneficial interest of said Deed of Trust was subsequently assigned to Guild Mortgage Corporation, recorded June 20, 2011, as Instrument No. 2011011595, in the records of said County.

THE ABOVE GRANTORS ARE NAMED TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 45-1506(4)(a), IDAHO CODE. NO REPRESENTATION IS MADE THAT THEY ARE, OR ARE NOT, PRESENTLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THIS OBLIGATION.

The default for which this sale is to be made is the failure to pay the amount due under the certain Promissory Note and Deed of Trust, in the amounts called for thereunder as follows:

Monthly payments in the amount of $1,016.22 for the months of November 2010 through and including to the date of sale, together with late charges and monthly payments accruing. The sum owing on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is $144,686.32 as principal, plus service charges, attorney's fees, costs of this foreclosure, any and all funds expended by Beneficiary to protect their security interest, and interest accruing at the rate of 5.5% from October 1, 2010, together with delinquent taxes plus penalties and interest to the date of sale.

The Beneficiary elects to sell or cause the trust property to be sold to satisfy said obligation.

Dated this 27th day of June, 2011.

For purposes of compliance with Idaho Code §60-113, information concerning the location of the property may be obtained by contacting Insured Titles, formerly Gooding Title & Escrow Company, 841 Main Street, Gooding, Idaho 83330, Telephone (208) 934-4427.

Said sale will be made without covenant or warranty regarding title, possession, or encumbrances, to satisfy the obligation secured by and pursuant to the power of sale conferred in the Deed of Trust, executed on May 12, 2009 by Suzanne L. Cenarrusa, a married woman, as her sole and separate property, as Grantor, Insured Titles, formerly Gooding Title & Escrow Company, as Trustee, for the benefit and security Japasa, LLC, as successor beneficiary, said Deed of Trust being recorded May 15, 2009 as Instrument Number 230522, records of Gooding County, Idaho.

The above Grantors are named to comply with Idaho Code §45-1506(4)(a). No representation is made that they are or are not presently responsible for this obligation.

Foreclosure is being effected because of default in the payment of the obligation due and owing from Suzanne L. Cenarrusa, Grantor, to Japasa, LLC, successor beneficiary, and evidenced by a Deed of Trust Note, which said obligation is secured by the said Deed of Trust.

The default for which this sale is to be made is:

- 1) Failure to make systematic monthly payments of $1,106.20 per month due the 14th day of each month for the months of October, 2010 through February, 2011, as required by the Deed of Trust, and as itemized in the Notice of Default. The total delinquency as of the date of the Notice of Default was $4,917.28 together with continuing installments of principal and interest, delinquent taxes, insurance, late charges, and expenses of foreclosure which have accumulated and will continue to accumulate from and after the date of the Notice of Default which was recorded in the records of Gooding County on February 9, 2011 as Instrument No. 236845.
- 2) Any other defaults under the note and deed of trust above described, occurring prior to the trustee's sale.

That by reason of said default, the beneficiary of said Deed of Trust has, in the Notice of Default, declared all sums secured by said Deed of Trust immediately due and payable. The principal balance owing as of October 14, 2010, on the obligation secured by said Deed of Trust is the sum of $99,778.62, together with unpaid interest at thirteen percent (13%) per annum, as of October 14, 2010 and which continues to accrue, together with foreclosure costs including, but not limited to, accruing interest and late charges, costs of sale, taxes, assessments, attorney's fees and other costs or expenses associated with the sale.

DATED this 9th day of June, 2011.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff

"Obruding false rules, pranked in reason's garb."
— John Milton

In today's deal from the Dyspeptics Club, South found himself declarer in a respectable spade slam. Following his usual principle of not giving any deal much thought until he needed to defend himself in the post-mortem, he won the club lead, drew trump ending in dummy, then took the heart finesse. He won the heart return and crossed to hand with a club to try the Chinese finesse in diamonds by leading the queen. It was easy for West to cover this, and down went the contract.

South apologized to his partner, claiming that all the cards were poorly placed, but North unsympathetically remarked that the only wrong thing about the hand was South's thinking. Can you see what South should have done?

South should have won the opening lead, drawn two rounds of trump, and cashed all the clubs. At this point, rather than just relying on the heart finesse, he plays the diamond ace followed by a low diamond to put the defenders on lead.

If it is West who has the diamond king, he will have no choice but to give a ruff-sluff or lead into the heart tenace. If East has the diamond king, he must lead a heart now, and declarer is no worse off than before, since he can take the heart finesse for the contract.

This line of play turns a 50 percent contract into one that needs either red king properly positioned — in other words, a 75 percent chance.

ANSWER: There is no hand with diamonds and values that could be bid at its second turn but not over one club. If you trust your partner, this auction suggests spade tolerance and diamond values. But you don't have to commit yourself yet. Bid three clubs to show where you live, and wait to find out where your partner wants to go.

DEAR ABBY: Has the marriage proposal become an invited ceremony like the wedding, or am I out of touch?

A few months ago friends and family were invited to a beach near Seattle for the proposal. Our grandson and his live-in went for a short seaplane ride. The plane returned, beached and the couple got out. Then, surrounded by the throng on the sand — and videotaped — grandson proposed on bended knee and she, of course, accepted.

Because we did not attend, my daughter is still not speaking to us. The young couple will fly to Maui in a few months for the wedding. We are among the invited, but the trip is too much for us. Your comments, please.

— BAFFLED IN

BRUNSWICK, MAINE

DEAR BAFFLED: I have heard of brides getting carried away and turning their wedding ceremony into the equivalent of a stage production, but this is the first time I have heard about a mother of the groom issuing a command performance for the proposal. Heaven only knows what she's planning for the birth of their first child.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I am with a man who treats me and my kids great. He is kind, caring and very generous. I trust him. However, I have been in a couple of bad relationships. For some reason, I'm drawn to "bad" boys. I'm not sure if I really love this man because there is no "spark." None!

Should I stay with someone who is a really great person and treats me good — but there is no passion — and learn to live with it, or do I end the relationship?

— NOT SURE WHAT TO DO IN CANADA

DEAR NOT SURE: You might as well end the relationship now because sooner or later you will become bored and it will end anyway. The man you're seeing deserves to have someone who fully appreciates what he has to offer, which you seem unable to do. Continue dating "bad boys" until you finally stop confusing anxiety and disappointment with excitement. You appear to be one of those women who has to learn what's important through pain. You have my sympathy.

DEAR ABBY: My husband (second marriage) keeps in touch with his ex-wife. At one point, it was several times a day. I expressed my concerns to him and told him I didn't like it and saw no need for it. It stopped — but only for a while. I know, because I check his call and text log.

I know I shouldn't do that, but recently I found some text messages saying, "Sorry I haven't called you." That's not what's bothering me, though. It's how they signed off. She writes, "Love you," and he writes, "Love you mostest!"

Abby, that's what he says to me. How do I talk to him about this? I snooped.

— SNOOPED ON

THE EAST COAST

DEAR SNOOPED: I don't blame you for feeling hurt and threatened by this. Almost any woman would. When he's in a relaxed mood and you can talk without interruption, ask him if he is still in love with his ex-wife. If he says no, ask why he feels the need to remain in communication with her and why he's telling her he loves her "mostest." Expect him to go on the attack because you snooped. But you wouldn't have done it if your intuition hadn't made you feel insecure. And it turns out you were right.

Exxon assured feds failed Montana pipeline was deeply buried in river

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Exxon Mobil Co. had reassured federal regulators and officials from a Montana town since December that an oil pipeline beneath the Yellowstone River was safe, buried deep enough to avoid any accidental ruptures.

Then, on Friday night, the pipe failed, spilling an estimated 42,000 gallons into the flooded river.

The cause of the accident remains under investigation, but the prevailing theory among officials and the company is that the raging Yellowstone eroded the riverbed and exposed the line to damaging rocks or debris.

There is still no definitive word on how far downriver the spill could spread.

Oil has fouled miles of the waterway that flows from the famed Yellowstone National Park, upriver from the spill, and across farmlands and prized fishing grounds to North Dakota. Crude has been reported as far as 240 miles downstream, although most appears to be concentrated in the first 25 miles.

As residents along the river deal with an oil-smeared shoreline and workers clean up the mess, the accident has raised concerns about the impact that the season's floods may be having on the network of pipelines buried under riverbeds.

"It's too early to tell whether this is an isolated incident or there might be other types of increased damage or erosion based on a year of flooding," said Brigham McCown, a former federal pipeline safety official who now advises pipeline companies at a Dallas firm.

Officials in Laurel, near the site of the spill, raised questions last year about erosion along the riverbank threatening the Exxon Mobil line. The company in December surveyed the pipe's depth and said it was at least 5 to 8 feet beneath the riverbed.

The line was temporarily shut down in May after Laurel officials again raised concerns that it could be at risk as the Yellowstone started to rise. The company restarted the line after a day, following a review of its safety record.

The company said in a June 1 email — just a month before the spill — that the line was buried at least 12 feet beneath the riverbed, according to documents from the U.S. Department of Transportation, which oversees pipelines.

Exxon Mobil Pipeline Co. president Gary Pruessing said Wednesday the company did not know where the 12-foot figure came from but was looking into the matter.

The documents also contained additional details that raised new questions about the company's response.

Exxon Mobil took almost an hour to fully seal the pipeline after the accident — nearly twice as long as it had publicly disclosed. The company said that did not change its estimate of how much crude entered the river.

Illegal fireworks blamed for fire that damaged Lewiston church

LEWISTON (AP) — An illegal firework is believed to have ignited a blaze that significantly damaged a church Tuesday in northern Idaho, a fire inspector said.

A family sleeping in the basement of Grace Evangelical Lutheran Church in Lewiston was awakened by firefighters and evacuated from the burning building early Tuesday. The firefighters had arrived to find the roof and a wing of the church in flames.

There were no reported injuries.

Lewiston fire inspector Julian Sorrell said illegal fireworks are believed to have ignited the blaze after striking the church roof. Sorrell and Lewiston police detective Rick Fuentes searched the neighborhood and concluded the aerial fireworks came from a street beside the church.

Idaho law bars people from setting off aerial fireworks.

"The fire was initially seen as a smoldering fire on the roof and subsequently erupted into flames," Sorrell told the Lewiston Tribune.

The blaze resulted in significant damage to the building, where the family had been staying as part of a program offered by Family

Promise of the Lewis-Clark Valley Inc. The organization partners with churches to provide shelter to families in crisis.

Only three of the five family members staying at the church were inside when the blaze erupted. Firefighters were able to evacuate them before any major damage was done to the building, Sorrell said.

The roof later caved in, and the church windows were blown out. Smoke damage was also reported throughout the sanctuary, and the church's fellowship hall, which contains a kitchen and offices, was deemed a total loss. Parishioners stopped by Tuesday to survey the damage.

"We've had tears and sadness, and there will be grieving," said Loretta Stowers, president of the church's council.

She took inventory of what could be salvaged from the church, which will not be open for services Sunday. The Grace Lutheran congregation will instead meet at their office building next door, Stowers said.

"The church is our members, and we will hold together," she said.
