Finding Magic Valley's Homeless

New data shows a rise in homeless people in southern Idaho, but the definition may be too narrow.

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI
kkruesi@magicvalley.com

Homelessness doesn't always happen to whom you think it might.

"I've worked all my life and I've never been on unemployment," said Sam Neyhart, a homeless father of two. "I'm not lazy."

Yet after a series of medical problems and a messy divorce, Neyhart has not had a steady residence for more than a year. In the spring, he and his family were forced to sleep in his car for a week. Finally, Neyhart moved his family into Valley House, a shelter in Twin Falls.

"I was apprehensive to go to a homeless shelter," he said. "I thought it was going to be dangerous, but I had to go somewhere."

Homeless testimonies like these challenge the stereotypes that all who are without a home are either there by choice or are lazy, said Leann Trappen, community services director for South Central Community Action Partnership. SCCAP is a nonprofit low-income assistance organization in Twin Falls.

Earlier this week, the Idaho Housing and Finance Association released the state's newest count of its homeless population. According to the report, the state's homeless population is 2,199, a 6 percent decrease from 2010. However, in eight south-central Idaho counties, the numbers have slowly been increasing throughout the past five years.

In 2008, the report recorded 69 homeless individuals in the eight-county Magic Valley area. The number jumped to more than 100 this year.

"Most people are not aware that there is a homeless problem in Idaho," said Trappen, who led the local region in counting the number of homeless people for the IHFA. "When they do, it's usually in a negative context."

T.F. Council to Hear Details of Eastland Meet

TIMES-NEWS

The Twin Falls City Council will hear today the results of a contentious public forum last week on the city's handling of rights of way on Eastland Drive.

That Wednesday forum brought out residents who complained that city workers drove stakes into their lawns and spray painted their property without notifying them, along with a smorgasbord of other complaints. The city is planning on widening North Eastland Drive to five lanes and wants to claim 10-foot-wide strips of land to make room for the expansion.

City Manager Travis Rothweiler apologized on the city's behalf and promised such breakdowns in communication wouldn't happen again. He invited affected residents to come to today's meeting where the council may hear choose to hear testimony.

The council will also be meeting an hour earlier than normal today, at 4 p.m., to continue preliminary budget discussions.

Technology Helps Heyburn Woman Adapt

Medical practices common five decades ago left Linda Croft with damaged sight and hearing. But medical advances are helping her to function.

BY COREEN HART
For the Times-News

HEYBURN • Linda Croft was born 13 weeks early. She weighed 3 pounds, 3 ounces. That was in 1947, when saving such premature infants was, well, in its infancy.

At the time, doctors didn't know their common practices would leave the Heyburn woman almost blind and nearly deaf.

Her doctor followed the then-current wisdom, giving her pure oxygen to help her lungs breathe as she lay in her incubator. At a month old, Croft contracted pneumonia and received more oxygen and a mixture of penicillin and streptomycin, another antibiotic.

The streptomycin destroyed her hearing. The oxygen damaged her eyes.

Those problems would alter anyone's life. But now, thanks to technological and medical advances, Croft's story may be one that is heard less and less. Already she is seeing — and hearing — the benefits of modern technology.

"They're doing some wonderful work with electronics," Croft said.

When she was growing up, public schools wouldn't accept her because of her hearing and vision problems, she said. They all referred her to the Gooding School for the Blind. Her parents pushed against that ruling and found a Catholic school, St. Theresa's Academy in Gooding, that would let Croft participate in the normal curriculum.

She completed schoolwork with the help of good lighting — and some understanding of her hardships — and graduated as valedictorian.

Now, Croft reads with the aid of an electronic screen that enlarges the text. A closed-circuit television can also pick up text from books set on a 14-inch screen. Her PenFriend, an audio labeling tool, scans and speaks the names of her books and DVDs.

Even her hearing aids work with each other, shutting one down to filter out background noise as needed.

Croft found many of the devices with the help of Brenda Knight, a home instructor with the Idaho Commission for the Blind and Visually Impaired.

"Each visually impaired person sees differently and so different appliances work for them," Knight said.

The medical community has since done its own work to improve the chances for babies born almost a trimester early.

Technology

Tracy Larsen, manager of St. Luke's Neonatal Intensive Care Unit, said oxygen needs of premature babies are now carefully weighed. Any infant born after 28 weeks or less of pregnancy may not be able to breathe on its own, she said. Electronic devices monitor what the babies' need, and oxygen is mixed with room air at varying percentages.

Meanwhile, research on infant vision problems are also advancing. A laser treatment for bleeding in the eye has been in use for sometime, said Dr. Denton Roberts, of Boise-based Retina Specialists of Idaho. But a new procedure that involves an injection into the eye is showing promise at stopping bleeding quicker and saving more of the infant's vision, he said.

Combined, there's less reason for today's infants to start out life like Croft did. If a person should develop vision or hearing problems, technology may offer more answers.

Investors

the price we got, it's going to take a long time for him to pay it off — and that's if crop prices stay high."

Buyers say soaring farm values simply reflect fundamentals. Crop prices have risen because demand for food is growing around the world while the supply of arable land is shrinking.

At the same time, farmers are shifting more of their land to the crops with the fastest-rising prices, which could cause those prices to fall — and take the value of farms with them. When the government reported June 30 that farmers had planted the second-largest corn crop in 70 years, corn prices dropped 8 percent in two days.

And even if crop prices hold up, land values could fall if another key prop disappears: low interest rates.

When the Federal Reserve cut its benchmark rate to a record low in December 2008, yields on CDs and money market funds and other conservative investments plunged, too. Investors were unhappy with earning less, but they were too scared about the economy to do much about it.

As they grew more confident — and more frustrated with their puny returns — they shifted money into riskier assets like stocks and corporate bonds. To many Wall Street experts, this hunt for alternatives also explains the rapid rise in gold, art, oil — and farms.

Those who favor farms like to point out that, unlike the first three choices, you can collect income while you own it. You can sell what you grow on the farm or hand the fields over to a farmer and collect rent.

In Iowa, investors pocket annual rent equivalent to 4 percent of the price of land. That's a 60-year low but almost 2.5 percentage points more than average yield on five-year CDs at banks. That advantage could disappear quickly. If the Fed starts raising rates, farmland won't look nearly as appealing.

For now, though, investors can't seem to get enough of it.

At a recent auction of 156 acres in Iowa, the 50 or so farmers who showed up withheld their bids out of respect for a beloved local farmer who had rented the land for two decades and wanted to own it. But his final bid of $1.1 million was topped by a California insurance executive. In Iowa, 25 percent of buyers are investors, double the proportion 20 years ago.

"They were angry, but what are they going to do about it?" says Jeffrey Obrecht of Farmers National, the brokerage that ran the auction. He told the farmers they shouldn't worry because some of the new investors will find a new way to make money in a few years and start selling their land.

Other dangers lurk for investors. In Iowa, corn prices are high partly because corn is used to make ethanol, a fuel additive subsidized by the federal government. The U.S. Department of Agriculture expects 40 percent of the nation's corn crop this year will go to factories that make it. But with Washington running up record deficits, it's anyone guess how long the subsidy will remain.

As with stocks, U.S. farms can swing wildly in value along with the economy. Despite the fragile recovery, though, farm prices are nearing records now, capping a decade of some of the fastest annual price jumps in 40 years.

In Iowa, farm prices rose 160 percent in the decade through last year to an average $5,064 per acre, according to Iowa State University.

Concern that farm prices may be inflated is serious enough that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. held a conference for farm lenders in March titled "Don't Bet the Farm." Thomas Hoenig, head of the Federal Reserve Bank of Kansas City, oversaw dozens of bank failures when a farm boom turned bust 30 years ago. Today, he suggests prices may be in an "unsustainable bubble."

Veteran bond trader Perry Vieth doesn't think so. Vieth, the former head of fixed income investments for PanAgora Asset Management in Boston, started buying farms with his own money five years ago, when buyers with no farming experience were rare.

"Agriculture was sleepy," he says. "People looked at me like, 'What are you doing?'"

Now he's buying for 71 wealthy investors. Ceres Partners, his 3½-year-old private investment fund, owns 65 farms, almost half bought since November. He says he's returned 15 percent annually to his investors overall.

Though Vieth says prices in some places have climbed too high — he won't buy in Iowa, for instance — he says the price of farms elsewhere will rise as big money managers start seeing them as just another tradable asset like stocks or bonds and start buying.

"When Goldman Sachs shows up to an auction, then I'll know it's time to get out," he says.

Stricter Taxi Laws for Sun Valley Cabbies?

A proposed dress code includes collared shirts, closed-toe shoes with socks, and casual dress pants or dress shorts.

KETCHUM (AP) • The manager of a central Idaho airport has proposed an amendment to airport regulations for taxi drivers out of concern some are giving tourists a bad first impression of the resort area that includes Ketchum and Sun Valley.

“Most of the companies are doing a great job, but there are some who are not operating to the standard we’d like to see,” Manager Rick Baird told the Idaho Mountain Express. “They are the first and last impression for many people who arrive in the valley.”

The proposed regulations presented last week to the Friedman Memorial Airport Authority include more strict dress and vehicle appearance codes.

The dress code includes collared shirts that identify the driver’s employer, closed-toe shoes with socks, and casual dress pants or dress shorts. Clothing must also be clean and wrinkle-free.

“We don’t think shorts and a muscle shirt is appropriate when they’re picking up people who are getting their first taste of the valley,” Baird said.

The new rules would also prohibit drivers from entering the terminal unless getting advance written permission from Baird. Baird would also have the power to suspend drivers who don’t follow the new rules.

“The myth that’s in the driver world right now is that drivers don’t have to adhere to the regulation because it has no teeth,” Baird said. “This changes some of the ways we do business out here.”

Baird said airport customers most often complain about solicitation from taxi drivers.

Board member and Hailey City Councilwoman Martha Burke said she felt she was “assaulted” by drivers fighting over her fare.

Taxi drivers oppose the regulations, saying their job is tough enough already.

“We’re just out here, fighting for a fare, trying to make a living, and the airport is making it harder and harder,” said Otis Miller, a driver for Cornwall Limo Service.

Homeless

Trappen said that the recession and the weak job market have hindered those seeking to improve their living conditions.

Diann Williams, a homeless woman also living in Valley House, agrees.

After multiple medical issues with her hip, Williams was left unemployed and broke. Before she knew it, she could no longer afford her rent and medical bills. She checked into the shelter in April.

“I am not ashamed to be homeless,” she said. “I’m paying off my debt and I’m not going to stay here forever.”

IHFA defines homelessness as a person without shelter. Using the Point in Time method, volunteers only count those who were without a shelter or used a non-housing structure to sleep in for a particular night in January. The IHFA then submits its findings to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

opment.

People like Neyhart and Williams would not be considered homeless in Idaho under this definition.

“There are many people who don’t have a stable place of residence but they rarely get counted,” Trappen said. “The PIT method is one way to get an estimate of the amount of homeless people in Idaho but it is not the best method.”

According to Williams, more attention needs to be given on how people become homeless.

“No one wants to be homeless,” Williams said. “There are more people out there who are without a home than you would think. This needs to be addressed.”

Hundreds Mourn Fallen Soldiers in N. Idaho

COEUR D’ALENE (AP) • Hundreds of friends, family and service members at a memorial service mourned two northern Idaho soldiers who died in Iraq earlier this month.

Commander of the Idaho Army National Guard, Brig. Gen. Alan Gayhart, told mourners on Saturday at Lake City Community Church that the two soldiers “never quit, no matter how difficult the challenge.”

An improvised explosive device struck a U.S. military convoy in Baghdad on July 7, killing 24-year-old Spc. Nathan Beyers and 20-year-old Spc. Nicholas Newby.

Flooding in N. Idaho’s Kootenai River Delays Sturgeon Spawning

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP) • A biologist with Idaho Fish and Game says the spawning season for endangered white sturgeon in the Kootenai River in northern Idaho was a bit delayed this year.

Pete Rust tells the Daily Inter Lake that adhesive mats on the river bottom didn’t start collecting eggs until May 31, about two weeks later than normal.

Biologist Brian Marotz of Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks says flows from Libby Dam in Montana stayed just below flood stage for a month.

Dam officials had planned a spill test to release additional water to help sturgeon reach spawning grounds but the high snowpack made that unnecessary this year.

Rust says four female sturgeon tagged with sonic transmitters were detected moving into spawning areas upstream of Bonners Ferry in Idaho.

Hail Damage Scrubs at Least 13 More United Flights From Denver

DENVER (AP) • United Airlines canceled 13 more departures from Denver International Airport on Sunday while it inspected airplanes for damage from last week's hailstorm.

United spokesman Mike Trevino said he didn't know if any Sunday arrivals were canceled because of the hailstorm, which struck Wednesday.

Denver International Airport's website listed about 20 United arrivals that were canceled at one point Sunday, but it wasn't known how many were attributed to the hailstorm.

All 13 departures canceled on Sunday were United Express regional flights, Trevino said. A 14th United Express flight was canceled for reasons unrelated to the storm, he said.

Eleven United planes remained out of service for inspection, Trevino said. He didn't know how many were damaged.

United said it had canceled more than 100 Denver flights on Thursday and Friday because of the hail inspections.

Frontier Airlines spokesman Peter Kowalchuk said 37 of the airline's flights were canceled Sunday, while 18 were set to be canceled on Monday.

Frontier officials were working to subserve air-craft — effectively renting planes from other airlines, Kowalchuk said. That's one reason why there were fewer Monday cancellations, he said.

Southwest Airlines, another big carrier in Denver, said three of its planes were damaged by hail, but with 550 planes in its fleet, it didn't have to delay or cancel flights.

ALASKANS PLEAD GUILTY TO WALRUS TRADING

Jesse James LeBoeuf and Loretta Sternbach were accused of trading cigarettes and guns in exchange for animal parts.

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) • Two men accused of participating in a walrus ivory and polar bear hide trading ring have pleaded guilty to breaking federal marine mammal laws, and a third person is expected to plead guilty on Tuesday.

Federal agents found hundreds of pounds of walrus tusks and two polar bear hides when they searched the home of Jesse James LeBoeuf and his companion, Loretta Sternbach, in April, the Anchorage Daily News reported.

LeBoeuf and Sternbach were accused of trading cigarettes, guns, snowmachines and other items to Natives in the village of Savoonga in exchange for federally protected animal parts. Co-conspirator Richard Weshenfelder marketed the tusks and hides on the Internet and helped sell the parts to out-of-state buyers, a federal indictment said.

LeBoeuf and Sternbach also illegally sold and transported walrus parts and tusks to out-of-state buyers, the indictment said.

By law, only Natives living on the Alaska coast can hunt the mammals, and they can't sell the raw ivory to private collectors.

Authorities believe the trading was done in two trips to Savoonga on Saint Lawrence Island, which lies in the Bering Strait between mainland Alaska and Russia. LeBoeuf and Sternbach live in Glenallen, about 180 miles northeast of Anchorage.

Weshenfelder, of Anchorage, and LeBoeuf pleaded guilty on Friday. Sternbach is set to enter a guilty plea on Tuesday.

"Sir, I just did what I did to get along in life," LeBoeuf told U.S. District Court Judge Timothy Burgess.

Prosecutors are seeking a nine-year sentence for LeBoeuf and a five-year sentence for Weshenfelder. All three defendants are expected to be sentenced in November.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Yvonne Lamoureux declined to comment on the possibility of charges for the ivory suppliers.

Former Uruguayan Military Dictator Dies at 83

Juan Maria Bordaberry suspended the constitution, banned political parties, ordered tanks into the streets and ruled by decree until the generals ousted him three years later. Democracy wasn't restored until 1985.

BY RAUL O. GARCES

The Associated Press

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay • Former President-turned-dictator Juan Maria Bordaberry, whose self-coup launched more than a decade of military rule in Uruguay, died Sunday in his home where he was serving a sentence for leading efforts to eliminate leftist dissent in the 1970s.

Bordaberry, 83, had been suffering from breathing problems and other illnesses that kept him from serving the 30-year sentence in prison. His death was confirmed to The Associated Press by his son, Sen. Pedro Bordaberry.

A wealthy conservative landowner, Bordaberry was elected president in 1971 during a chaotic time in Uruguay, when wealthy elites and leftist Tupamaro guerrillas both saw armed revolution as a real path to power.

The Tupamaros were already crushed when Uruguayans awoke to tanks surrounding the legislative palace on the cold winter day of June 27, 1973. The military had become so powerful that Bordaberry had to give up control in order to survive politically. Rather than lose a minor political fight in Congress, he suspended the constitution, banned political parties, ordered tanks into the streets and ruled by decree until the generals ousted him anyway three years later. Democracy wasn't restored until 1985.

Meanwhile, Bordaberry lived quietly out of public view, and as the dictatorship ended, Uruguay's congress approved amnesties that protected both military figures and former guerrillas — including Uruguay's current president, former Tupamaro leader Jose Mujica.

That pact threatened to break on Nov. 16, 2006, when a judge ordered Bordaberry arrested for the killings of four Uruguayans who had fled to Argentina. Weeks later, another judge added charges of especially aggravated homicide in the killings of 10 leftist detainees. Both sets of crimes were determined to be beyond the scope of the amnesties. He was eventually sentenced to the maximum 30 years in prison in February 2010 for violating the constitution by leading the coup.

Bordaberry's family considered him to be a victim of political pressure from the Broad Front coalition of center-left parties, unions and social movements that has governed Uruguay since 2005.

But his prosecution also marked the beginning of efforts by this small South American country of 3.5 million people to end impunity for those responsible for the disappearances and torture of hundreds of Uruguayans, and the exile of thousands of political dissidents.

A peace commission found in 2003 that the dictatorship killed 175 leftist political activists, 26 of them in clandestine torture centers.

Earlier, the Tupamaros also committed killings and other crimes after taking up arms in 1963 against democratically elected governments, and many of the guerrillas who weren't killed served long prison terms. Mujica, for one, spent more than a decade behind bars.

Investigative judges linked Bordaberry to the abductions and killings in May 1976 of leftist Sen. Zelmar Michelini and House leader Hector Gutierrez of the traditional National Party, prominent lawmakers who were seized from their homes in exile in Buenos Aires. Their bullet-riddled bodies and those of suspected Uruguayan guerrillas William Whitelaw and Rosario Barredo were found days later.

Human rights groups maintain they were killed as part of Operation Condor, a secret pact between South America's dictatorships to eliminate political opponents who had fled to neighboring countries.

"As the defender of human rights that I am, I lament his death just as I lament the death of any citizen, and I imagine how his family must be suffering," said attorney Hebe Martinez Burle, who helped win Bordaberry's conviction. "Still, I lament that because of his decision, so many deaths and disappearances resulted."

Despite Bordaberry's conviction, Uruguay has largely avoided prosecutions on the scale of Argentina or Chile, where hundreds of former military and police officials have been tried for crimes against humanity.

There are many reasons, besides money, more and more people over 60 are staying on the job—friendships (coworkers and customers); satisfaction in doing a job well; and, feeling valued or needed, to name just a few. Often people who are retired want to go back to work, even if only part-time. Research studies have found that older adults who work in a job they enjoy also enjoy better health. # Tea Party Debt Plan Takes Center Stage

BY ANDREW TAYLOR
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • The next step in the weeks-long saga over how to increase the government's borrowing cap is to let House tea party forces try it their way.

A Republican "cut, cap and balance" plan set for a House vote Tuesday would condition a $2.4 trillion increase in the so-called debt limit on an immediate $100 billion-plus cut from next year's budget and adoption by Congress of a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget.

"Let's let the American people decide," said Rep. Jim Jordan, R-Ohio, on "Fox News Sunday." "Do they want something common sense as cutting spending, capping the growth in government and requiring a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution?"

The idea appears to be to allow tea party-backed GOP lawmakers to have the run of Congress this week in hopes that they'll ultimately be able to stomach a plan emerging in the Senate to give President Barack Obama sweeping power to order a $2.5 trillion increase in the debt limit without approval by Congress.

The cut, cap and balance plan, however, is a dead letter with Obama and in the Democratic-controlled Senate — as is a separate effort by Republicans in that chamber to adopt a balanced budget amendment. Amending the Constitution requires a 2/3rds vote of both Houses, including 67 votes in the Senate, where Republicans control just 47.

"No one believes there are 67 votes for any version of that," said Dick Durbin of Illinois, the No. 2 Senate Democrat, on CBS' "Face The Nation."

Public opinion polls show that voters like the idea of a balanced budget, but the government faces such massive budget gaps — it now borrows more than 40 cents of every dollar it spends — that the cuts required to eliminate the deficit were too draconian for even the GOP-dominated House to endorse balancing the budget anytime soon. The House Republican budget still leaves deficits in the $400 billion range after 10 years.

The immediate issue is allowing the government to continue to borrow from investors and foreign countries like China to pay its bills — which include a $23 billion batch of Social Security checks set to go out the day after an Aug. 2 deadline to avoid default.

With the deadline just over two weeks away and with a recent round of White House talks failing to generate a breakthrough, Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., the cagey leader of his party in the Senate, has proposed a plan that would allow Obama to automatically win a large enough increase in the debt to keep the government afloat until 2013 unless both House and Senate override him by veto-proof margins.

Escaping the Media Glare

Casey Anthony climbs into an SUV with her lawyer Jose Baez, unseen, after her release from Orange County Jail in Orlando, Fla., early Sunday.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Anthony Lies Low on First Day of Freedom

BY MIKE SCHNEIDER AND MATT SEDENSKY

Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. • This is what freedom looks like for Casey Anthony: $537.68 from her jail account, no job, estranged parents, a criminal record, lawsuits pending against her and the scorn of multitudes who think she got away with murder.

She quickly gave reporters the slip after walking out of jail Sunday, but whatever life she manages to build for herself will be lived under a media microscope and the shadow of countless threats.

Experts who have helped other notorious defendants through rough times say she will have opportunities as well, but it won't be easy for the 25-year-old, who was found not guilty of killing her 2-year-old daughter, Caylee, but convicted of lying to investigators.

With her hair in a bun, Casey Anthony walked out the front door of an Orlando-area jail shortly after midnight, wearing a pink T-shirt, blue jeans and sneakers, and escorted by sheriff's deputies holding semi-automatic rifles. Protesters shouted "baby killer" and "you suck" as she climbed into an SUV.

The vehicle sped away and darted into a parking garage at a building where one of her attorneys has offices. Where she went next is unknown.

Soon after her release, there was police activity at Orlando Executive Airport as two vehicles pulled up to a twin-engine private jet bound for Columbus, Ohio, but no one saw Anthony get out and onto the plane. Ohio is the home state of Anthony's parents, but an official at the Columbus airport said the aircraft was only carrying golfers back from a Florida vacation.

"Casey is in good hands," said Todd Macaluso, a former member of Anthony's defense team who declined to comment further.

Her lead attorney, Jose Baez, did not respond Sunday to email and phone messages left by The Associated Press, nor did other lawyers on her defense team and those representing her father and mother.

Another former Anthony lawyer, Terry Lenamon, said he had no clue where she was headed, and that probably only a few people close to her knew.

"I wouldn't want anyone to know," he said. "I think she needs to go underground and I think she needs to spend some time to get her life back together."

Anthony's July 5 acquittal shocked and enraged many around the country who had been following the case since Caylee's 2008 disappearance. Anger has spilled onto social media sites and elsewhere. Her legal team said on Friday it had received an emailed death threat with a manipulated photo showing their client with a bullet hole in her forehead.

Anthony did not report her daughter's disappearance for a month and was arrested after telling a string of lies about the case to police. Caylee's remains were found in December 2008 near the home Casey Anthony shared with her parents.

Prosecutors alleged that Anthony suffocated her daughter with duct tape because motherhood interfered with her desire for a carefree life, but her lawyers said the girl drowned in an accident that snowballed out of control. Some of the jurors who acquitted Anthony said they believe she bears some responsibility for her daughter's death but that prosecutors failed to prove that she murdered the child.

Anthony had remained in jail to finish a four-year sentence for lying to investigators. With credit for the nearly three years she'd spent in jail since August 2008 and good behavior, she had only days remaining when she was sentenced July 7.

Her public vilification did not ease with her release from jail. "A baby killer was just set free!" Bree Thornton, 39, shouted as the SUV left the jail.

Ex-Murdoch Aide Brooks Arrested; London's Police Chief Resigns

Both developments are ominous for Murdoch's News Corp. and a British power structure that nurtured cozy relationship with his papers.

BY JILL LAWLESS

Associated Press

LONDON • An intensifying voicemail hacking and police bribery scandal cut closer than ever to Rupert Murdoch and Scotland Yard on Sunday with the arrest of the media magnate's former British newspaper chief and the resignation of London's police commissioner.

Though the former executive, Rebekah Brooks, and the police chief, Paul Stephenson, have denied wrongdoing, both developments are ominous not only for Murdoch's News Corp., but for a British power structure that nurtured a cozy relationship with his papers for years.

Brooks, the ultimate social and political insider, dined at Christmas with Prime Minister David Cameron. His Conservative-led government is now facing increasing questions about its relationship with Murdoch's media empire.

The arrest of the 43-year-old Brooks, often described as a surrogate daughter to the 80-year-old Murdoch, brought the British police investigations into the media baron's inner circle for the first time. It raises the possibility that Murdoch's old friend Les Hinton, who resigned Friday as publisher of The Wall Street Journal, or his 38-year-old son and heir apparent, James, could be next.

Until her resignation Friday, Brooks was the defiant chief executive of News International, Murdoch's British newspaper arm, whose News of the World tabloid stands accused of hacking into the phones of celebrities, politicians, other journalists and even murder victims. In the tumultuous last two weeks, she had kept her job even as Murdoch shut down the 168-year-old News of the World and tossed 200 other journalists out of work.

On Sunday she showed up for a prearranged meeting with London police investigating the hacking and was arrested. She was being questioned on suspicion of conspiring to intercept communications — phone hacking — and on suspicion of corruption, which relates to bribing police for information.

Brooks' spokesman, David Wilson, said police contacted her Friday to arrange a meeting and she voluntarily went "to assist with their ongoing investigation." He claimed that Brooks did not know she was going to be arrested.

Hours after Brooks' arrest, Stephenson said he was resigning as commissioner of London's force because of "speculation and accusations" about his links to Neil Wallis, a former News of the World executive editor who was arrested last week in the scandal. Wallis worked for the London police as a part-time PR consultant for a year until September 2010.

Stephenson said he did not make the decision to hire Wallis and had no knowledge of allegations that he was linked to phone hacking, but he wanted his police force to focus on preparing for the 2012 London Olympics instead of wondering about a possible leadership change.

"I had no knowledge of the extent of this disgraceful practice and the repugnant nature of the selection of victims that is now emerging," Stephenson said. "I will not lose any sleep over my personal integrity."

Brooks' arrest was the latest blow for Murdoch, the once all-powerful figure courted by British politicians of all stripes. Now Murdoch is struggling to tame a scandal that has already destroyed News of the World, cost the jobs of Brooks and Hinton and sunk the media baron's dream of taking full control of a lucrative satellite broadcaster, British Sky Broadcasting.

Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg said Murdoch "needs to come absolutely clean about what he knew, about what his senior executives knew, and why this culture of industrial-scale corruption — so it is alleged — appeared to have grown up without anyone higher up in the food chain taking any real responsibility for it."

Rupert and James Murdoch are to be grilled by U.K. lawmakers Tuesday over the scandal. Brooks also had agreed to be questioned before a parliamentary committee, but her arrest throws that appearance into doubt.

"Obviously this complicates matter greatly," said Wilson, her spokesman. "Her legal team will have to have discussions with the committee to see whether it would still be appropriate for her to attend."

Tables Turn on Murdoch as Scandal Rocks Empire

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) • To his many enemies, Rupert Murdoch is getting his comeuppance.

Murdoch's tabloid newspapers long have reveled in the misdeeds of others with salacious photos and pun-packed headlines. Now, one of the world's most powerful media executives is learning what it's like to be enveloped in his own scandal.

"There is a feeling that Murdoch has been king of the world for too long and it's about time that somebody brought him back to Earth," said Mungo MacCallum, a political journalist and commentator who once worked for a Murdoch-owned newspaper, The Australian.

But no one is calling press conferences to gloat about Murdoch's troubles. Even his bitterest media rivals are keeping quiet.

Liberty Media chief John Malone, who engaged in media-mogul head butting with Murdoch over his stake in Murdoch's News Corp and other issues, did not return a message seeking comment that was left with a spokeswoman.

CNN founder Ted Turner, who once challenged Murdoch to a boxing match in Las Vegas, was unavailable, according to a spokesman.

New York Daily News Publisher Mort Zuckerman, whose newspaper fights every day for front page dominance with the Post for New York's tabloid audience also did not return a message seeking comment.

But others aren't as charitable. In recent days, Murdoch has drawn comparisons to a cruel monarch, Richard Nixon, even the devil.

Herman Cain says communities have right to ban mosques

BY BRUCE SCHREINER
The Associated Press

Republican presidential candidate Herman Cain said Sunday that communities have a right to ban Islamic mosques.

Appearing on “Fox News Sunday,” the former Godfather’s Pizza CEO said protests and legal challenges to a planned mosque in Tennessee city are an example of local residents pushing back.

Cain said his view doesn’t amount to religious discrimination because he says Muslims are trying to inject Shariah law into the U.S.

Shariah is a set of core principles that most Muslims recognize and a series of rulings from religious scholars. It covers many areas of life and different sects have different versions and interpretations of the code.

Asked if his view could lead any community to stand up in opposition to a proposed mosque, Cain replied, “They could say that.” He pointed to opposition to the planned mosque in Murfreesboro, Tenn., as an example.

“Let’s go back to the fundamental issue that the people are basically saying that they are objecting to,” Cain said. “They are objecting to the fact that Islam is both religion and (a) set of laws, Shariah law. That’s the difference between any one of our other traditional religions where it’s just about religious purposes.

“The people in the community know best. And I happen to side with the people in the community?”

Cain’s comments were denounced as “unconstitutional and un-American” by a spokesman for the Washington-based Council on American-Islamic Relations.

“It’s clear that Herman Cain has decided that he will score political points every time he bashes the Muslim community or its constitutional rights,” council spokesman Ibrahim Hooper said in a phone interview.

Cain previously stirred controversy by saying that he would not want a Muslim bent on killing Americans in his administration.

Campaigning in Murfreesboro last week, Cain sided with mosque opponents.

“I happen to also know that it’s not just about a religious mosque,” he said Sunday. “There are other things going on based upon talking to the people closest to the problem. It’s not a mosque for religious purposes. This is what the people are objecting to.”

Perry’s credentials as conservative as they come

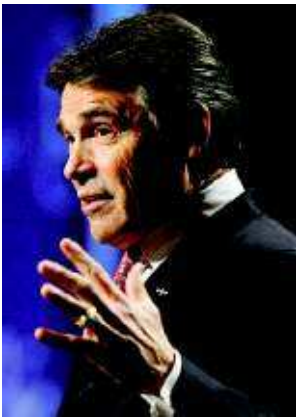

Texas Gov. Rick Perry has phoned influential Republicans in New Hampshire and Iowa as he weighs whether to enter 2012 race for president.

BY CHRIS TOMLINSON

AUSTIN, Texas • Should Rick Perry conclude that voter discontent has left him an opening to enter the presidential race, the longtime Texas governor would be among the GOP field’s most conservative candidates.

Primary voters would get a skilled politician with TV anchorman looks, a Southern preacher’s oratory and a cowboy’s swagger, matched by a disarming candor and sense of humor. The former cotton farmer from Paint Creek in West Texas has never lost an election in nearly three decades as a politician.

What they wouldn’t get is a candidate whose politics are positioned to unite a Republican electorate that stretches from moderate pro-business fiscal conservatives to evangelical social conservatives, with the tea party falling somewhere along the spectrum.

Texas Gov. Rick Perry speaks during the 28th annual National Association of Latino Elected and Appointed Officials conference June 23 in San Antonio.

“Texans, God love them, have that bigger-than-life persona about politics and that doesn’t necessarily play everywhere,” said Christopher Nicholas, a Republican political consultant who has worked extensively in the Northeast and Midwest. “I haven’t heard a lot of Republicans call Social Security a disease.”

Perry has. He branded Social Security and other New Deal programs “the second big step in the march of socialism,” according to a book published last year. The “first step” was a national income tax, which he has said stands alongside the direct election of U.S. senators as a major mistake among the amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

In the just-completed Texas legislative session, Perry’s “emergency items” included laws that require a photo ID in order to vote, a sonogram before a woman had an abortion and enforcement of federal immigration laws by local police.

He rejects the idea of global warming and the theory of evolution, arguing for natural climate variations and intelligent design of the universe.

In fact, he said last year when promoting his book, “Fed Up: Our Fight to Save America From Washington,” which was a state’s rights treatise that railed against the federal government, that he’s too conservative to run for national office.

“The best concrete evidence that I’m really not running for president is this book, because when you read this book, you’re going to see me talking about issues that for someone running for public office, it’s kind of been the third rail if you will,” Perry told The AP shortly after winning re-election in 2010.

Perry doesn’t shy away from his deep conservatism. He embraces it with the same vigor with which he dismisses those who found his shooting of a coyote while the governor was jogging or spending tens of thousands of campaign dollars on a luxury rental home unbecoming a state chief executive.

*“If they show me a serious plan I’m ready to move. ...
We are obviously running out of time.”*

President Barack Obama in urging congressional leaders to agree on a plan that will help stabilize U.S. finances.

OUR VIEW

Cameron’s right; budget surplus should have gone to Medicaid

When it closed the books on fiscal year 2011 on June 30, the state of Idaho had $85 million more than it anticipated.

Gov. C.L. “Butch” Otter had two options with part of that money: He could have expanded the grocery tax credit or he could have called a special session of the Legislature to restore some of the draconian cuts lawmakers made in Medicaid earlier this year.

The governor chose the former. He chose wrongly.

“My preference would be ... restoring some of the current programs we have cut,” Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, told The Associated Press. “Health and Welfare would be a high priority.”

Cameron, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said he’d rather partially restore Department of Health and Welfare programs including Medicaid, the health insurance program for the poor and disabled.

That would have leveraged federal matching funds of roughly $40 million, putting back about half the money the program is losing.

Instead, $15 million is going to expand the grocery tax credit that’s of only marginal benefit to most Idahoans.

Following a 2008 legislative compromise, Idaho’s grocery tax credit has been lifted to $70 annually for low-income residents and $50 for others. The 2011 Legislature wanted to delay expansion, citing uncertain budgets, but Otter’s decision to boost the credit will provide an additional $10 back on nearly everybody’s income taxes.

Getting an extra 10 bucks is nice, but it pales in comparison with the needs of Medicaid recipients — Idaho’s most vulnerable citizens — and providers.

Last session, the Legislature voted to reduce Medicaid spending by $35 million, but the real cut was $107 million because of a cost-sharing agreement between the federal government and the state.

House Minority Leader John Rusche, D-Lewiston, said institutionalizing those cuts when money is available will ripple throughout the system: higher prison costs, busier emergency rooms, more human pain.

“The consequence of that is we’re going to pay more in (later) years,” Rusche said.

Why would Otter do that when he had an alternative?

Debbie and Frank’s debt ceiling

One of the most popular sayings among conservative politicians these days is: “If the government had to run its budget the way a family does, we’d see a lot of changes real quick.” The government, though, does run its budget the way a lot of families do. Imagine if journalists covered the finances of households:

“As the deadline to approve an increase in the Peterson family debt limit approached without a compromise in sight, tensions rose Friday.

“Debbie and Frank Petersons’ expenses have traditionally exceeded revenue, starting with a Caribbean honeymoon in 1991 that they paid for entirely on a Visa at 27.99 percent interest (it has now cost them $72,000). Their debt limit has been increased 16 times since.

“Lately, each new authorization has come only after an extended battle. The Peterson family rules require both Debbie and Frank sign off on any increase.

“The situation is dire.

Lane Filler

Newsday

While the family’s debt load is high, its payment record is sterling. Now, if the two do not take out a second mortgage by Aug. 2 and use the proceeds to pay existing debt, they would likely default, pulling down the whole house of cards.

“Both say the second mortgage is necessary, but Debbie won’t sign until Frank agrees to spending cuts. Frank is willing to cut expenses (entirely different ones than his wife), but demands Debbie also get a job.

“We don’t have a revenue problem, we have a spending problem,” Debbie said. “The man is dropping $15,000 a year on golf memberships, greens fees, balls, tees, clubs and hideous pants. He’s a 34 handicap. That’s the kind of low-hanging fruit that we need to cut.”

“Cutting golf is a jobs killer, and it’s off the table,” says Frank, a consultant who claims links funding is repaid three times over by the clients he picks up there. Economists call this the ‘golf multiplier.’

“Debbie, by not working, imposes a double whammy,” Frank added. “She’s not bringing in the income we need, and she’s left with endless free time to spend a fortune on shoes, dealing any hope of an economic revival a deadly blow.”

“Debbie argues that any money she earned would go to day care for the couple’s three children. She says she cleans house, cooks meals and chauffeurs the kids 16 hours a day, and doesn’t believe a just plan to balance the budget would be based on her going barefoot.

“Experts say neither fix would solve the family’s issues, because over 85 percent of Peterson spending goes to ‘entitlements’: their home, cars, camps and enrichment activities for the children, and vacations.

Neither side is willing to address those items, the ‘third rail’ of Peterson politics.

“Even if these expenses could be slashed, the Petersons face trouble down the road because crucial investments have been ignored.

Their retirement plan consists of lottery tickets and prayer. College funds are nonexistent, and any hope the kids might attend an athletic or academic scholarships has been quashed by coaches and teachers.

“It’s almost certain the two will agree to raise the limit. The most likely scenario involves Frank canceling a winter golf trip to Myrtle Beach and Debbie returning a pair of Manolo Blahnik pumps. But most financial advisers agree that without increases in revenue or cuts in the big-ticket items, the stage will merely be set for the confrontation to play out again next year. Eventually, the couple won’t be able to maintain the debt they have, or find anyone to lend them more, and the whole situation will collapse.”

That’s what’s going to happen with the federal government, too, not because our politicians are awful, but because they’re just like us.

Lane Filler is a columnist for Newsday.

Veterans Were Missed During Kimberly Parade

I missed the Veterans of Foreign War leading in the Kimberly Good Neighbor Day parade this year — plenty of police cars at beginning and end, but no flag! In fact, I think I could have counted on one hand the number of participants that carried “Old Glory” with their entrant. Are we afraid to insult — to inconvenience? I hope not! I hope this was just an oversight.

Thank you, VFW, for your past service. I hope to see you leading next year’s Kimberly Good Neighbor Day parade. Please let me know if I can help.

Questioning Blue Lakes South Road Work

Question: How long will we be without Blue Lakes South?

It is my understanding that there are issues with the road base or something like that. No one knows! We are approaching a year without the use of Blue Lakes South. Now that they are tearing up the rest of Twin Falls, it would be advantageous to have some access besides having to go to Kimberly to get to south Twin Falls.

If there is an issue with this section of road, someone needs to get off their duff and get’er done!

Or maybe a little article of something advising the good people of Twin Falls what is going on!

Cameron is Fighting for Idaho Education

I would like to thank Mr. Dean Cameron’s service to our area and to the state of Idaho. He has and will continue to fight for Idaho and our area.

I wanted all of you to know that he has been fighting for education and our teachers. He has confronted Mr. Luna and Mr. Otter on the idea of giving out a bunch of laptops, and if a laptop could impact a student the same way a teacher does and they both avoided the question and would not answer him. If this is such a great idea, how come they would not and did not answer him?

Along those lines, how are we as a state going to be able to afford brand new laptops? What company is going to benefit from this? Will this company be from Idaho or have a base here so that it will benefit Idaho jobs? Will this computer company start up an employee call center in Idaho to provide customer support for all these new laptops that would be handed out or will someone from a foreign country answer the customer support line when there is a issue?

WHO: Blood Tests for TB Are Unreliable

BY FRANK JORDANS
Associated Press

GENEVA • Widely used blood tests to detect tuberculosis are “dangerous” to patients because they are unreliable and can produce wrong results, the World Health Organization warned Sunday.

The U.N. health agency said it will issue an unprecedented recommendation against using such tests for the infectious lung disease that affects some 14 million people worldwide. As much as a third of the world’s population is thought to harbor the bacteria that causes TB.

“The tests are not reliable and a waste of money and time, putting proper care at risk,” said Mario Raviglione, the director of WHO’s Stop TB department.

A review of the tests has shown that they produce too many false negative and false positive, according to WHO.

Raviglione told The Associated Press that the blood tests “are in fact dangerous to patients, since some cases will not be detected and some will be called TB when in fact they do not have it.”

The WHO guidance will be issued later this week. It is the first time that WHO has issued a “negative” policy, specifically counseling against the use of a particular method for diagnosing a disease.

The use of TB blood tests is common in developing countries such as India, where an estimated 3 million people are infected with the disease.

The Lancet medical journal reported in January that some of the blood testing kits used there are made in developed countries where such tests aren’t licensed. They are ordered by doctors who receive greater commissions for the blood tests than for the older and more reliable sputum microscopy method, the journal reported.

“Many of these tests are used in the private-for-profit sector, charging poor people who do not understand the lack of value of the test,” Raviglione said.

Killing of Adviser Another Blow to Afghan President

BY RAHIM FAIEZ
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan • Gunmen wearing explosives killed a close adviser to Afghan President Hamid Karzai and a member of parliament on Sunday in another insurgent strike against the Afghan leader’s inner circle.

Jan Mohammed Khan was an adviser to Karzai on tribal issues and was close to the president, a fellow Pashtun.

His killing, which the Taliban claimed responsibility for, came less than a week after the assassination of Ahmed Wali Karzai, the president’s half brother and one of the most powerful men in southern Afghanistan.

Two men wearing suicide bomb vests and armed with guns attacked Khan’s home in the western Kabul district of Karti Char, said Defense Ministry official Gen. Zahir Wardak. Khan, who was governor of the Pashtun-dominated Uruzgan province in the south from 2002 until March 2006, was shot along with Uruzgan lawmaker Mohammed Ashim Watanwal, the official said.

Police killed one of the attackers before he could detonate his explosives, while the other was still barricaded inside the home, said the head of the Kabul police investigation unit, Mohammed Zahir. A member of the police’s anti-terrorism unit was also killed, he added. The surviving gunman was alone in the house, Zahir said.

The assassination came as international military forces handed over security for Bamiyan province to Afghan security forces, part of a transition process in which seven areas are to be handed over to Karzai’s government this month.

It also came one day before Gen. David Petraeus, the top NATO commander in Afghanistan, hands over responsibility for the military campaign in Afghanistan to his replacement, Lt. Gen.

John Allen.

It was unclear how influential Khan was with Karzai, but he was thought to wield considerable influence in Uruzgan.

Taliban spokesman Zabihullah Mujahid claimed responsibility for the attack on behalf of the insurgent group.

Mujahid said the Taliban killed Khan because he was assisting coalition forces in carrying out night raids against Afghans.

Egypt PM Names New Ministers

“After seeing the ad for the HealthFair, we scheduled an appointment for my husband. That day, they discovered an aneurysm of 8.5cm on Ray’s aorta. The HealthFair technicians told Ray to go to the nearest hospital immediately. At the hospital, Ray was given a CAT scan and admitted for further tests. They found the aneurysm was leaking and required urgent surgery for Ray to survive. The HealthFair test and the operation that followed most certainly saved Ray’s life.”

“Little did I know that my neighbors’ pestering me to go to the HealthFair would save me from having a stroke. I finally agreed to go, and I am very glad I did. The HealthFair technician found that I had a very clogged carotid artery and told me to see my doctor immediately. I was shocked. I always have regular and vigorous physical exams. Within a week of the HealthFair screening, I was in the hospital having surgery on the clogged artery. Many of the hospital staff were surprised by my condition considering my otherwise good health. My surgeon told me the artery was over 80% blocked and the plaque unstable. He was surprised that I hadn’t already had a stroke, and was sure I would’ve had one soon without surgery. HealthFair provided a miracle for me and my neighbor. I think everyone should have the screening. It’s the best money I have ever spent.”

Sincerely,
Robert Hein

More Fireworks at Magic Valley Speedway

For the second time this month,
Kris McKean and Daniel Shirley tangled on the last lap of a Super Stocks main event race.

BY LINDA BRITTSAN
Times-News correspondent

Another race night, another set of fireworks at Magic Valley Speedway.

After taking the lead at Lap 8 in the first Budweiser Super Stocks main event on Saturday, Daniel Shirley looked to be on his way to the win. But a last-lap bump by Kris McKean instead sent the No. 7 car to the winner's circle.

Restarts peppered the first seven laps of the race, but after things settled, a battle for the win developed between Shirley, Kris McKean and Jerry McKean. As the trio rounded the final turns Kris McKean, who had been shadowing Shirley for several laps, busted a move on the leader to clear a path for himself to the checkered flag. Meanwhile, Shirley was able to stay out in front of a hard-charging Jerry McKean to finish second.

"I got a bump from the back and got a little sideways and here comes Kris," Shirley said. "I was kind of expecting something like that after my previous race."

On the final lap of the July 2 main event race, McKean sent Shirley into the Turn 3 embankment. In that incident, however, McKean was placed at the rear of the lap leaders and given a third place finish.

"We just got up to him and gave him a little nudge," Kris McKean said after his most recent win. "But he's been out here bumping and banging on everyone. It's not like we drilled him and put him in the wall or anything, it's just a racing deal and got around him on the last lap on the last corner. The fans loved it, I'm sure."

In the second main of the evening Casey Pehrson came through for the win. Although dogging Pehrson for several laps, McKean settled for second place, followed by Shirley.

"I think Kris was faster than me and I think maybe he could have gotten around but I think he was more worried about staying in front of Shirley," Pehrson said. "It wasn't worth the risk for him to try and go around — he was just trying to keep his points. The win stills feels good, though."

Russell Dalton won his first race of the season with the Quale's Jr. Stingers, while Jason Quale drove for a convincing win in the second main of the evening. Todd Audet was able to get around Devon Colson at Lap 17 to win another Brennan's Carpet Pony Stocks main, and Chad Everett ran away with another victory in the Quale's Pro Hornets.

The TVgoldandsilver Thunderdogs saw two cars upended in separate incidents, but Jeff Peck survived to win his first main event race of the season.

Darren Clarke Wins
British Open on 20th Try

BY DOUG FERGUSON
The Associated Press

SANDWICH, England • No matter how long it grows or even how quickly, the list of major champions from the tiny country of Northern Ireland just wouldn't feel complete without Darren Clarke.

He doesn't have the majestic swing of Rory McIlroy or the putting prowess of Graeme McDowell, the last two U.S. Open champions. He hasn't contended in a major for the last 10 years, wasn't even eligible for the last three majors and was no longer among the top 100 in the world.

No matter. Clarke's three-shot victory in the British Open was met with unending applause Sunday, the loudest saved for the closing ceremony when he was introduced as the champion golfer of the year.

More than that, Clarke is a man of the people.

"I'm a bit of a normal bloke, aren't I?" Clarke said, the claret jug at his side. "I like to go to the pub and have a pint, fly home, buy everybody a drink, just normal. There's not many airs and graces about me. I was a little bit more difficult to deal with in my earlier years, and I've mellowed

Newman Wins at Loudon

BY DAN GELSTON
The Associated Press

LOUDON, N.H. • Ryan Newman had his boss on his back and felt pressure to deliver a top performance.

Might make an office drone squirm in a cubicle.

Not on the track, where there was no other driver Newman would rather see behind him than Tony Stewart.

The owner-employee dynamic was simply teammate-teammate for 301 laps at New Hampshire Motor Speedway. Newman held off Stewart, his boss and teammate, to win his first race of the season Sunday and make it a 1-2 start and finish for Stewart-Haas Racing.

"This is huge for our team, even bigger for our organization," Newman said.

Newman and Stewart made it the first front-row start for SHR in qualifying Friday and they followed up with first- and second-place finishes for the first time on race day.

It was a banner weekend for SHR. With the 1-2 finish, Newman and Stewart have jostled themselves in position to qualify for the Chase for the Sprint Cup championship.

Even the usually gruff Stewart, his dark humor still on display, enjoyed this celebration.

"This was a perfect weekend," he said.

It was needed, too.

Newman won for the first time since April 2010 in Phoenix and Stewart earned only his second top-five of the season.

It was a pair of near-flawless runs for the drivers as they gear up for a championship run.

Acting Like a Champ

Actor Jack Wagner, left, stands with Dallas Cowboys quarterback Tony Romo, who he held off in the final round of the American Century Celebrity Golf Championship, Sunday at the Edgewood Tahoe Golf Course in Stateline, Nev. Wagner is the only non-professional athlete to have won the tourney in its 22 years.

Japan Stuns U.S. Women to Win World Cup Final on PKs

Japan scored with 10 minutes left in regulation and 3 minutes remaining in extra time to force a shootout, then won the Women's World Cup when the United States missed its first three penalty shots.

FRANKFURT, Germany • Amid the sorrow that lingers throughout Japan, perhaps a little joy — courtesy of the determined women on its World Cup team.

They beat the Americans for the title in a riveting final Sunday night, 3-1 on penalty kicks, after coming from behind twice in a 2-2 tie. The star of the shootout was feisty goalkeeper Ayumi Kaihori, who made two brilliant saves in the shootout.

All tournament long the teammates poignantly reminded the world they were playing for their battered country, still reeling from the devastation of the March 11 earthquake and tsunami.

Did they ever. They held the gleaming trophy high above their smiling faces as confetti swirled around the podium, flecking their hair with gold.

“Before we went to the match tonight we had some commentary on television and we heard comments on the situation in Japan,” coach Norio Sasaki said. “We wanted to use this opportunity to thank the people back home for the support that has been given.”

This was Japan's first appearance in the final of a major tournament, and they had not beaten the Americans in their first 25 meetings, including a pair of 2-0 losses in warm-up games a month before the World Cup. But the Nadeshiko pushed ahead, playing inspired soccer and hoping their success could provide even a small emotional lift to their nation, where nearly 23,000 people died or were reported missing.

After each game, the team unfurled a banner saying, “To our Friends Around the World — Thank You for Your Support.” On Sunday, they did it before the match and afterward they had a new sign to display: Champion — the first Members of Japan's women's soccer team celebrate after defeating the United States in a penalty shootout to win the Women's World Cup Sunday in Frankfurt, Germany.

Asian country to win this title.

The Americans found it all too hard to grasp. They believed they were meant to be World Cup champions after their rocky year — needing a playoff to qualify, a loss in group play to Sweden, the epic comeback against Brazil. They simply couldn't pull off one last thriller.

“The players were patient. They wanted to win this game,” Sasaki said. “I think it's because of that the Americans scored only two goals.”

While the Japanese celebrated at midfield, the Americans stood as a group and watched.

“There are really no words,” Abby Wambach said. “We were so close.”

Minutes, actually. After Wambach scored in the 104th minute of overtime to give the Americans a 2-1 lead, Homare Sawa flicked in a corner kick in the 117th to tie it. It was the fifth goal of the tournament for Sawa, who was playing in her fifth World Cup.

“We ran and ran,” Sawa said. “We were exhausted, but we kept running.”

The Americans had beaten Brazil on penalty kicks in a quarterfinal, but they didn't have the same touch Sunday. Give Kaihori credit for some of that. Shannon Boxx took the first U.S. shot, and it banged off Kaihori's right leg as she dove. After Aya Miyama made her penalty, Carli Lloyd stepped up and sent her shot soaring over the crossbar. As the crowd gasped, Lloyd covered her mouth in dismay.

Solo saved Japan's next shot, but Kaihori made an impressive two-handed save on a shot by Tobin Heath.

“This is a team effort,” Kaihori said. “In the penalty shootout I just had to believe in myself and I was very confident.”

After Wambach buried her kick, Japan need to make just one more, and Saki Kumagai did.

“It's tough to do two rounds of penalties,” Wambach said. “The keeper knows in a lot of ways where we're going to go. She made some great saves.”

Voeckler Keeps Tour Lead, Doubts He'll Win

Thomas Voeckler was expected to lose the yellow jersey in the Pyrenees, but that didn't happen. Now, as the Tour de France heads to the Alps, many think he could hold the lead all the way to Paris.

MONTPELLIER, France (AP) • Thomas Voeckler stayed with the big Tour de France favorites in the mountains.

He's had the lead for six days. And no less a cycling connoisseur than Lance Armstrong thinks the Frenchman could be wearing the yellow jersey when the race ends July 24 in Paris.

The biggest doubter is Voeckler himself.

“I will fight, of course, but I musn't be dishonest,” Voeckler said after Sunday's flat Stage 15, won by British sprint star Mark Cavendish. “I consider that I have zero percent chance of winning the Tour de France.”

For many French fans, Voeckler has rekindled cautious optimism that cycling's greatest prize could return home for the first time since 1985, the last of Bernard Hinault's five victories.

Voeckler's retort: Don't expect me to do it.

“I don't want to lie to the public,” he said. “Maybe it would make for good publicity, I don't know, but it doesn't interest me. ... I'm not going to announce to the French people that ‘I'm in yellow, I have a chance to win.’”

Such humility has been virtually unheard of at cycling's premier event in recent years. Riders like Armstrong or three-time champion Alberto Contador of Spain unabashedly bared their ambition from the outset.

“It's not a question of wanting. Everybody would like to win the Tour,” Voeckler said. “It's true that since Bernard Hinault, the French people want a winner. I really sense it well.”

Voeckler leads Frank Schleck of Luxembourg by 1 minute, 49 seconds, and Cadel Evans of Australia is third, 2:06 back. Schleck's younger brother, Andy, is 2:15 behind in fourth and Ivan Basso of Italy is fifth — 3:16 behind off the pace. Contador is seventh, four minutes behind.

Voeckler doesn't expect to hold off probable attackers in two punishing days in the Alps on Thursday and Friday, each featuring uphill finishes. Then, on Saturday, there's a final individual time trial — a discipline in which he isn't among the best — in and around Grenoble. The race ends next Sunday.

For the most part, the running commentary this year has been that Contador, two-time runners-up Evans and Andy Schleck, plus Basso have yet to go at each other. Voeckler, in a way, has been cast as just a bump in their road.

But after three days in the Pyrenees, the main contenders are taking the Frenchman seriously.

“Voeckler is in incredible form,” said Contador, who has increasingly used mind games since winning the Tour in 2007 and the last two years. “He has a big lead. It will be hard to make that up.”

Evans calls the overall standings “a bit strange.”

“I think people still look at the Schleck brothers as favorites, but they're two minutes down. ... So it's still about Voeckler for now.”

Armstrong knows the French rider well: He wrested the yellow jersey from Voeckler after his 10-day run in it in the 2004 Tour. Armstrong tweeted that if Voeckler finished the stage with the favorites “then we have to say he can win the TdF.” He did.

Then the seven-time Tour champion went further.

“Final TT is 42km. He's French. It's the Tour de FRANCE,” Armstrong wrote, referring to the final time trial. “He won't lose 2:06 in the final time trial ASSUMING... He keeps them close on Alpe d'Huez.”

Fellow French riders who've seen Voeckler up close more recently are cautious, with one floating the more reasonable chance that he could become the first top-three French finisher since Richard Virenque was second in 1997.

“I think he can limit the damage in the big Alpine stages, but the last time trial ...,” said Cofidis team rider Samuel Dumoulin. “A place in the top five is possible or even, in the right circumstances, a place on the podium.”

Voeckler and his squad want to just race and see how things turn out, possibly as a way to manage expectations and sidestep the question: Can he really win?

“I don't answer this question, and I don't ask it myself,” said Jean-Rene Bernardeau, manager of Voeckler's Europcar squad. “Thomas will give everything he can in the next week.”

On Sunday, Voeckler and the contenders cruised across after Cavendish in the mostly flat, 120-mile route through vineyards from Limoux to Montpellier that favored sprinters

The British rider overcame high winds and “bashing” among riders in the pack for his fourth stage victory this year and the 19th of his career.

Clarke

some. Just a little bit. But I'm just a normal guy playing golf, having a bit of fun.”

He was extraordinary at Royal St. George's.

A cigarette curled under his fingers as he barreled down the fairways, Clarke held off brief challenges from Phil Mickelson and Dustin Johnson and held up under the pressure until no one could catch him.

Mickelson, who needed only seven holes to make up a five-shot deficit, stepped aside by missing too many short putts. Johnson, in the final group of a major for the third time in the last six, made another blunder with a major at stake. This time, he was two shots behind on the par-5 14th, tried to lay up with a 2-iron and hit it out-of-bounds to make double bogey.

They shared second place, stretching the American drought to six straight majors without winning.

Despite meaningless bogeys on the last two holes, Clarke closed with an even-par 70.

“Pretty amazing right now,” Clarke said. “It's been a dream since I've been a kid to win the Open, like any kid's dream is, and I'm able to do it, which just feels incredible.”

The weather was so wild that heavy rain switched over to sunshine, back and forth all afternoon, in a relentless wind. Clarke was steady through it all, never allowing himself to think about what it mean to hold the claret jug until he stepped onto the 18th green.

Clarke removed his visor to salute the gallery. His hair is almost all gray now, the result of a 42-year-old who has gone through more hard times than he cares to remember, the worst of it losing his wife to cancer five years ago.

“Bad times in golf are more frequent than the good times,” he said. “I've always been pretty hard on myself when I fail because I don't find it very easy to accept that.”

“And there's times I've been completely and utterly fed up with the game.”

The advice from friends, family and agent Chubby Chandler were always the same.

“Get out there and practice and keep going, keep going, keep going,” Clarke said. “And that's why I'm sitting here now.”

Today is Monday, July 18, the 199th day of 2011. There are 166 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On July 18, 1811, English novelist William Makepeace Thackeray, author of "Vanity Fair," was born in Calcutta, India.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In A.D. 64, the Great Fire of Rome began.

In 1536, the English Parliament passed an act declaring the authority of the pope void in England.

In 1610, highly influential Italian baroque artist Michelangelo Merisi da Caravaggio died in Porto Ercole at age 38.

In 1792, American naval hero John Paul Jones died in Paris at age 45.

In 1911, actor Hume Cronyn was born in London, Ontario, Canada.

In 1932, the United States and Canada signed a treaty to develop the St. Lawrence Seaway.

In 1940, the Democratic national convention at Chicago Stadium nominated President Franklin D. Roosevelt for an unprecedented third term in office.

In 1947, President Harry S. Truman signed a Presidential Succession Act which placed the speaker of the House and the Senate president pro tempore next in the line of succession after the vice president.

In 1969, a car driven by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) plunged off a bridge on Chappaquiddick Island near Martha's Vineyard; his passenger, 28-year-old Mary Jo Kopechne, drowned.

In 1981, six weeks after being paroled from prison, Jack Henry Abbott, acclaimed for his book "In the Belly of the Beast," fatally stabbed waiter Richard Adan. (Abbott was convicted of manslaughter and sent back to prison; he later committed suicide.)

Ten years ago: President George W. Bush, en route to an economic summit in Italy, stopped over in Britain as he began his second trip to Europe in a month.

Five years ago: The Senate voted after two days of emotional debate to expand federal funding of embryonic stem cell research, sending the measure to President George W. Bush for a promised veto. A doctor and two nurses who'd labored at a flooded-out New Orleans hospital in Hurricane Katrina's chaotic aftermath were arrested and accused of killing four trapped and desperately ill patients with injections of morphine and sedatives. (A grand jury later declined to indict Dr. Anna Pou and the nurses.)

One year ago: Pakistan and Afghanistan sealed a landmark trade deal in the presence of U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, who pushed the two neighbors to step up civilian cooperation and work together against al-Qaida and the Taliban. A suicide bomber struck anti-al-Qaida Sunni fighters waiting for paychecks southwest of Baghdad, killing 45. Gunmen fired indiscriminately into a crowd of mainly young people in a rented hall in Torreon, Mexico, killing 17 people. Louis Oosthuizen of South Africa shot a 1-under 71 for a seven-stroke victory at 16-under 272 in the British Open.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"I hope our young men will not grow into such dodgers as these old men are. I believe everything a young man says to me."

— William Jowett

Bridge is full of technical jargon, but some terms are more abstruse than others. For example, does the Devil's Coup evoke a mental image of the play involved? I thought not.

However, there are some strategies whose names do conjure up the play that needs to be found, such as "avoidance play." Consider today's deal in four hearts on the lead of the spade king, where proper technique will see declarer producing two avoidance plays.

As declarer you can see that there is a risk of four losers (one in each major and two in clubs), but that you can almost insure your contract by keeping East off lead for the unwelcome club shift. Hence the need for the avoidance strategy.

You duck the top spade lead to prevent West from underleading his spade queen to East's jack. You win the spade continuation and cash the heart ace. The play is simple in the extreme if either defender shows out or produces the trump queen. Assuming that does not happen, you must next lead a trump and cover East's card. That might let West score a trick if he has the doubleton heart queen, whereupon he can hold you to 10 tricks by cashing the club ace. However, your contract is safe, and you have protected yourself against a layout like the one shown in the diagram, where playing a trump to the king would be fatal.

DEAR ABBY: I loaned money to a couple of family members when I was overseas. They had fallen behind on their bills, so I sent them each $1,000 to get caught up.

It's two years later, and I have yet to see a dime from either one of them. I have sent them both letters asking to have "some" money paid back; both sent me excuses about why they can't pay anything. However, on Facebook they write about how they went shopping, joined a gym and so on. I feel I have been taken advantage of. What can I do to get this settled?

— TAKEN ADVANTAGE OF IN MINNESOTA

DEAR TAKEN ADVANTAGE OF: Try this ... post on your Facebook page: "It's funny what short memories some people have. I loaned 'Tom' and 'Geri' $1,000 two years ago when they fell behind on some bills. Instead of repayment, I have received nothing but excuses — and all the while I see their postings about shopping at the mall and going to the gym. What DEADBEATS!"

Maybe it will shame your relatives into paying up. (Or not, because some people have no shame.)

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: Do I have to stop wearing my wedding ring? My husband died three years ago. We had been married 53 years and 12 days. Abby, I pledged "until death do us part." I just can't seem to make myself take off the ring he put on my finger so many years ago.

I'm tired of being told that I "have" to give up something so precious to me. Is there a time limit, or is it OK for me to go ahead with wearing the ring and ignore the people who pester me about taking it off? Maybe a time will come when I'll want to, but not now, not yet. Please give me some sound advice.

— ARIZONA WIDOW

DEAR WIDOW: Please accept my sympathy for your loss. Widows and widowers usually remove their wedding ring at the point when they decide they would like to begin dating again. When they do, some of them choose to move the ring from their left to the right hand. Others put it away as a treasured keepsake.

There is no set time at which your wedding ring "must" come off. If and when you feel the time is right, it will happen — or not. This is a personal decision that no one can or should make for you.

DEAR ABBY: I'm 15 years old, and I'm afraid to kiss! I won't date anyone because I'm afraid my kiss will suffer by comparison. I know no one becomes an expert without practice, but I don't want anyone to be my first kiss.

Several guys are into me, but I can't date them because eventually they'll want to kiss. It would be so embarrassing to be horrible at it. Any advice?

— TOO FREAKED OUT TO MAKE OUT

DEAR FREAKED OUT: Kissing isn't a competitive sport, so stop worrying that you won't measure up. A kiss doesn't have to be the way it's portrayed in the movies, with heavy breathing and mouths agape. Whether a guy wants to kiss you isn't as important as whether you WANT him to kiss you. If you do, all you have to do is close your eyes, tilt your head a bit to the side and lean in. He will take care of the rest.

I remember my first "real" kiss. I was 12, and my parents had decided to move from Wisconsin to California. I had a crush on a 16-year-old usher at the local movie theater. (He looked so handsome in his uniform!) Two weeks before we were scheduled to leave, I summoned the courage to approach him after a show, told him I was leaving, and asked if he'd give me my first real kiss. Once he got over his visible surprise, he did. It was sweet, gentle, chaste, and I've never forgotten it.

IF JULY 18 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Life is just a bowl of cherries during the next four to six weeks. Because all is right in your world, you can relax and take it easy; take a trip and explore the world. In September and October, you could fall in love, but it might be easy to fall back out again, so wait for some time to pass before making a major commitment of your heart or wallet. November and March are the months when people will look at you and your performance more critically, and when you will be less able to fulfill duties, so be sure to get to work on time and avoid making any promises you can't keep.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Luck is on your side. Your derring-do makes you a fearless contender where sports and travel are concerned. Assistance from a superior or manager could make work go faster and boost productivity.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be creative. Use energy wisely in constructive activities even if the powers that be do not seem inclined to give out pats on the back. This might be a good day to ask the boss for more leeway or a favor.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your popularity may shoot to new heights and a key relationship can make steady progress. You might think the world of someone, even if that person is not quite as worthy of admiration as you think.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Look both ways before crossing the street; don't rely on intuition to tell you when the coast is clear. You have the ability to turn away harsh words with a gentle demeanor and soften criticism with kindness.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You can be a model of industry. You possess leadership abilities necessary to get any important project off the ground. If people sense you are being insincere or exaggerating your abilities you will lose ground.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Give in to your inspirations. You are often on the same wavelength with others and can trust intuitions. But this is not the right time to pop "the" question or make crucial decisions for the future.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Stretch your brain at the library and your muscles at the gym. Less-energetic individuals might try to rain on your parade, but as long as you follow the rules a good time is possible.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Whistle, or at least hum, while you work. Carry on with important work while playing soothing music that offers a rhythmic background. Those in charge could be super sticklers for precision.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Roll out the barrel and you'll have a barrel of fun. Exert a little effort and everyone will enjoy the results. Build castles in the air or in your mind if it isn't possible to build sand castles on the beach.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Play to win. You are likely to bat a thousand wherever you are called on to demonstrate competitive skills. Escape for a day at the beach or set off on a challenging bike ride to burn off excess energy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Words of love so soft and tender need to be distributed frequently. Keep in touch with that special someone by phone or by email and maintain the rhythm of a romantic mood. Touch base with friends.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Others may view you in a flattering light, so it is a good time to cash in on business promises. You have enough imagination as well as the inspiration to make balanced decisions and value judgments.
