THE GEM STATE DECODER

Nancy McArthur is blazing a career trail — and helping people save on their medical bills.

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI
kkruesi@magicvalley.com

Medical bills are not all that different from treasure maps. Follow the trail of various charges and you'll find clues to reducing the overall amount. This is the mentality Nancy McArthur adheres to religiously. She is Idaho's only self-proclaimed "patient advocate," and she's taken on the responsibility of deciphering — and ultimately reducing — patients' medical bills. "Medical bills can be extremely confusing if you don't know how to speak the language," she said. "I help untangle them."

McArthur's method is simple. Clients pay her a $50 start-up fee to review their bills. She then organizes and combs through their statements, checking for errors, mark-ups or any other mistakes. If she reduces the bill, she receives 20 percent of the amount recovered. "On average, I save my clients 20 to 40 percent on their overall medical bill," she said. "I don't get paid if I don't find savings, so I have incentive to help my clients as much as I can."

However, her job is met with resistance. She says she spends a good deal of time haggling with insurance companies and negotiating with collection agencies on her clients' behalf. Yet it's all worth it. She claims she's found errors in more than 80 percent of her clients' bills. "Never pay your bill in full when you first receive it," she advises. "Question everything and trust your gut."

Years After Failure, Teton Dam Still Sparks Debate

BY JOHN MILLER
Associated Press

BOISE • When the newly built Teton Dam failed spectacularly in 1976, Dale Swensen was spared the worst: Only the basement of the then-26-year-old farmer's rental home was flooded when billions of gallons of water came crashing down the canyon. The deluge around him killed 11 people and thousands of livestock. Despite the calamity, Swensen, now director of the Fremont-Madison Irrigation District, has become a big advocate of rebuilding what's recorded as one of America's greatest engineering failures. Just two years ago, he promoted an $800,000 study — paid for by Idaho and the federal Bureau of Reclamation — to examine new water storage sites above the Henry's Fork of the Snake River, including a new Teton Dam. Today, however, Swensen believes the dam idea is doomed. "I'd love to have Teton Dam rebuilt. There would be numerous benefits from that project," Swensen told The Associated Press. "But boy, you've got to be able to afford it. And I just don't think we can."

Idaho has myriad reasons for wanting to boost its water supply: To produce more electricity, guarantee that industry in cities can grow and that farmers can irrigate, and to help its endangered salmon spawn swim to the Pacific Ocean and return. Last week, federal officials presented findings from the 2009 study to the Idaho Water Resource Board, the eight-member panel that governs state water policy, about what they've concluded, so far. Bureau of Reclamation managers say the Teton Dam, now projected to cost

Faced with this summer's wall of road construction? Here are some tips to get through it.

BY EVA STUTZMAN
estutzman@magicvalley.com

The amount of road construction in the Magic Valley this summer tends not to bring out the best in any driver. It's easy to get frustrated or overwhelmed by the flood of orange cones. And that can lead to driving mishaps and near-misses. "I have seen two people cut out into the right lane (before construction zones) to cut off people in the last week," said Crystal Pyne, who commutes from Gooding to Twin Falls for work. The good news is some simple steps can make those trips easier. Above all, be helpful: the U.S. Department of Transportation (DOT) says the more drivers cooperate with each other, the quicker each will get through. Before you start up that engine again, here's some other advice on dealing with work zones.

'Pay Attention'

That's the advice of Sgt. Kent Oliver of the Idaho State Police. "Most of the time when we stop people in construction zones, they don't even know they are in one," he said. Construction zones around the Magic Valley range in length from a couple of miles to not even one mile. "The Highway 30, 93 construction zone is a half-mile where the speed limit is 45 miles per hour," said Twin Falls County Sheriff's Deputy Ken Danson. "The signs have been up for over a month."

Slow Down

Warning signs ahead of some work zones give drivers an extra reminder that the speed limit's about to drop. Regardless, it's a safe bet that if you find yourself next to construction, you'd better take it easy. "Idaho law states that you can't exceed the posted speed within the speed zone," said Nathan Jerke, Idaho Transportation Department spokesman. "This means people should be slowing down well before the speed limit sign." To avoid fender-benders, Oliver and DOT recommend slowing down and increasing following distance well before you enter a construction zone. "People tend to need to stop quicker or in a shorter distance in a construction zone, so if you leave a little extra space and are going slower you won't hit the person in front of you when they have to slam on the brakes," Oliver said.

Master Merging

In most construction zones, drivers are asked to move over into one lane. These merge points are hot zones for road rage, traffic violations and accidents. One federal transportation recommendation in bottleneck situations is called zipper merging: drivers take turns letting one car out from each lane of traffic, so that each side moves at an equal pace. However, local law enforcement is wary of blocking both lanes of traffic even in the busiest times. "If there is an accident and traffic is backed up in both lanes, there is no way for emergency vehicles to get through," Oliver said. "We are asking drivers to merge before they are forced to for their own safety and the safety of other drivers." That said, it's not illegal to stay in a lane for as long as it's open. Drivers who do so should watch for vehicles pulling unexpectedly out of the line — waiting drivers often get frustrated with delays or with watching others pass them in the soon-to-be-closed lane, Oliver said.

CSI Zoning Heads for Twin Falls City Council Approval

TIMES-NEWS

The College of Southern Idaho is asking the Twin Falls City Council to take the final step to establish its property as a special CSI Planned Unit Development tonight.

The request, which has the recommendation of city staff, will give the college property a unique designation for college-related activities, which covers buildings ranging from student housing to windmills for the college's alternate energy program. The two parcels in question — the main campus and the land north of North College Road — are currently zoned for residential uses.

When the issue came be-

The council will also continue its discussion of the budget for the next fiscal year.

Currently she is working with 10 clients throughout the state, but she also receives requests for help from clients throughout the region.

Deb Mehraban, who lives in Twin Falls, found McArthur through word of mouth. Mehraban is no stranger to medical bills, as she is afflicted with multiple sclerosis. However, an impending surgery has left her wondering if there is a chance she can save or cut back on her other monthly medical payments.

"I can't work so I don't have a ton of money to throw around," she said.

She hopes McArthur can help lower her bill.

McArthur said she expects her business to continue to grow as the baby boomer generation ages. Health care reform hasn't made anything easier. The shifts in who ends up paying what only results in more confusion, she said.

"Idahoans like to pay their bills," she said. "They don't like getting ripped off. I got into this job to help people, and until medical billing becomes easier to understand, I'm going to continue fighting for my clients."

BLM Aims for Monday Fire Containments

Deadhorse Fire doubles, burns namesake cave; Fire south of Rogerson escapes containment

TIMES-NEWS

The Deadhorse Fire has doubled its burn in land to the northeast of Bliss — now at almost 7,000 acres, including 409 on private land — but the Bureau of Land Management is hoping to have it contained by Monday afternoon.

Lightning also sparked the Point Fire about 10 miles to the south of Rogerson on Saturday night. Crews had it about 50 percent contained at 235 acres, but wind kicked it up until it had spread to about 700 acres by Sunday afternoon, BLM fire information officer Kyli Astle said. Ten engines, two hand crews and aircraft are working to contain the blaze. They hope to complete that Monday, though they have no time estimate.

"They're definitely getting a handle on it," Astle said.

The Deadhorse fire, which caused problems for BLM crews Saturday thanks to rough terrain and weather, now has no active flames and crews are mopping it up, Astle said. But it didn't slow down before burning part of the landmark Deadhorse Cave. Its acreage is classified as an "area of critical environmental concern" for the cave and for housing greater sage grouse and pygmy rabbits.

BLM crews hope to have it under control by 6 p.m. Wednesday. Other fires that dotted the Magic Valley on Saturday are also experiencing minimal activity with crews having taken control, Astle said.

Teton Dam

some $550 million, is still part of the conversation, but mostly as a benchmark for other, potentially cheaper storage alternatives.

"I would say, it (the Teton Dam) is not coming up as a high priority," said Robert Schattin, the Bureau of Reclamation official helping lead the Henry's Fork Basin Study.

Instead, the focus over the next five months will be on seven smaller water storage proposals, including raising the Ashton Dam and Island Park Reservoir, as well as adding smaller dams to tributaries of the Teton River. Those projects that survive scrutiny may move forward to a more-detailed engineering analysis.

And more than just water storage is on the table.

Schattin and others will examine how canal expansion, conservation schemes to move water to where it's most needed, and expanded recharge of the Eastern Snake Plain Aquifer beneath southern and eastern Idaho can play a bigger role in preserving the state's most precious resource. The Lake Erie-size aquifer, depleted by overuse and changing agricultural practices since the 1950s, is critical to Idaho's economic future, with $10 billion in goods and services generated by the region it flows beneath.

Schattin expects any proposals from the Henry's Fork Basin study this December will include a combination of storage, conservation, recharge and market-based incentives. Managing Idaho's water resources "really needs to be in a broader package," he said. "It's not just storage."

For their part, Idaho officials say it's premature to abandon discussion of the Teton Dam, or any other storage project.

Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter has been a vocal fan of storage projects since his 2006 election.

And just last week, the Water Resource Board approved spending $2 million to study a dam proposal on the Weiser River, which runs more than 100 miles from the Payette National Forest in Adams County to the Snake River in western Idaho.

Brian Patton, the Idaho Department of Water Resources planning bureau chief, said building a dam is a decades-long endeavor, one that will outlast recession-driven budgets that have defined Idaho's priorities since 2008. That, coupled with multi-year droughts of the future, could provide new impetus for big construction projects like those of the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s.

"Even looking at some of the reservoirs that were built in the 1970s, the planning for those started in the '30s and '40s," Patton said. "So there's a lot of time in there for priorities to shift and for budgets to turn around. The upshot is, it's way too early to tell if the state should back away from or jump in and build new storage."

Environmentalists at American Rivers and Trout Unlimited were alarmed when proponents of the 2009 study left the Teton Dam's resurrection in the mix.

They're pleased that conservation is part of discussion but suspect that state and federal managers favor storage projects over other, less-ambitious measures, said Kim Trotter, Trout Unlimited's Idaho Water Project director in Driggs.

For example, among the seven storage projects the Bureau of Reclamation will scrutinize through December is a man-made lake a mile above sea level in Fremont County that would be filled with water from a creek that's prime spawning ground for Yellowstone cut-throat trout. Tapping the creek could push a fish already dubbed a "species of special concern" closer to Endangered Species Act protection, Trotter said.

"This is now less about rebuilding the exact same Teton Dam, and more about building some other storage facility that would have the same deleterious effect," she said, adding measures like modernizing irrigation systems could save enough water to make new storage unnecessary. "And it would be a fraction of the cost," she said.

Studies like the Bureau of Reclamation's may spur debate over storage, said irrigation district manager Dale Swensen, but projected costs stretching into the hundreds of millions, coupled with inevitable opposition from environmentalists, make a new era of Idaho dam building unlikely.

Idaho Among Last States to Get Electric Cars

BOISE (AP) • Idaho will be among the last states where electric cars will be sold, officials from the auto industry say.

Representatives from Nissan Motor Co. told the Idaho Business Review that the plug-in Leaf won't be available in the state until the end of 2012. And a spokeswoman for General Motors Co. said the Chevrolet Volt will be available to order by the end of this year, though it's unclear when deliveries might start.

Officials said one reason for the delay is that Idaho's spread-out population works against the cars. They operate best in urban areas due to their limited range. Another reason is that the cars do better in warmer climates, so early introductions have been in southern states and the West Coast.

Also, Idaho has no public charging stations.

"This is sort of like a chicken and egg thing, where people say, 'We don't want to put the infrastructure in place until we know there's going to be a market,'" said David Solan, head of the energy policy institute at Boise State.

But some charging stations are scattered around, with one at the Idaho National Laboratory in eastern Idaho, and another at Dennis Dillon Nissan in Boise.

The Leaf has a range of about 100 miles, while the Volt's is larger because it has a backup gasoline engine in case the car's electric charge runs out. The Volt costs about $40,000, while the Leaf costs about $35,000. There's a $7,500 federal tax credit for buyers.

Bruce Rattner, executive manager at Dennis Dillon Nissan, said there is demand in the more populated southwest Idaho.

"I get weekly calls from people asking about this," he said.

Tim Gallagher, a California-based spokesman for Nissan, said the company has sold 3,800 Leafs in the United States this year.

"It's not the highest volume car we're going to sell in our lineup, but our chairman has made it clear that we want to be a leader in zero-emissions technology," Gallagher said.

Leafs can be purchased in Portland, Ore., and Seattle. Owners can install a charging station at home, or they can plug it into a regular 120-volt power source, though that takes twice as long as a 240-volt source.

Northern Idaho District Becomes More Conservative

BY BETSY Z. RUSSELL

The Spokeman-Review

COEUR D'ALENE, Idaho • Conservatism is practically a religion in Idaho's legislative District 3, the district that elected tax-protesting state Rep. Phil Hart four times and this year added two like-minded lawmakers he recruited to run.

"I was considered a radical to my friends in California, and then I got up here and found out I was a moderate," said Vito Barbieri, a first-term state representative and, like many District 3 residents, a California transplant who moved north.

The district, which takes in Hayden, tiny Hayden Lake, the once-agricultural but fast-developing Rathdrum Prairie and little towns like Spirit Lake and Athol, has seen massive development and population increase over the last decade, but its conservative nature is nothing new — the last time a Democrat was elected here was in 1994. No Democrat has even run for the Legislature since 2002, and then there was just one candidate, who lost.

What's different, though, is the intensity of the conservative leanings. Former state Sen. Mike Jorgenson, a Republican who represented District 3 for six years but lost to Hart-backed state Sen. Steve Vick in the primary in 2010, said, "These radical losers think that having legislation that requires contractors to register is communistic — any kind of reasonable government is too much government."

With the Republican Party's strong dominance in Idaho statewide, District 3 may offer something of a window into the future as conservatives within the party, some of them former third-party members, increasingly seek to steer it to the right and seize the reins from more moderate Republicans they deride as "Republicans in name only," or RINOs.

When Hart first ran for the state Legislature in 2002, he ran on the Constitution Party ticket and lost with only 32 percent of the vote. But two years later, he beat the late Rep. Wayne Meyer of Rathdrum in a low-turnout GOP primary, targeting Meyer for not voting a hard line against abortion, and sailed to victory in the general election.

"When so many people from California were moving in, I thought we were going to get all of the kooks. And instead, we got the cream of the crop — the ones that wanted to get away from some of the ideas they had down there."

— Hayden Lake GOP icon Ruthie Johnson, the 87-year-old former longtime aide to the late U.S. Sen. Jim McClure

It's a move increasingly seen around the state, as third-party members shift to working within the GOP. Former Libertarian Party Chairman Ryan Davidson of Boise, for example, is now a vice chairman of the Ada County Republican Party. "I really like to consider myself a Ron Paul Republican," Davidson said. "I just decided that the third-party movement wasn't really going anywhere, and that maybe if we tried to reform the two major parties we'd have a better chance."

As for Democrats in District 3, "We have not performed there in a very, very long time," said Shelley Landry, executive director of the Idaho Democratic Party and a North Idaho resident until this spring. "The population there leans not just to be conservative Republicans, but there are some constitutionalists, some libertarians, that definitely don't agree with the Democratic Party."

"I was considered a radical to my friends in California, and then I got up here and found out I was a moderate."

— Vito Barbieri, a first-term state representative and, like many District 3 residents, a California transplant who moved north

Jeff Alltus, a Christian conservative who represented District 3 from 1995 to 2000, is a member of Rally Right, a group formed by a church pastor in 2009 to try to shift the local Republican Party more toward a religious conservative perspective. The group's slogan, emblazoned on its website: "It is easier to fix the Republican Party than to try to start a third party."

Alltus said the group has been successful, electing its own candidates to Kootenai County GOP precinct positions. "It was started to get conservatives back in office, to kind of take over the Republican Party, which they did," he said.

Hayden Lake GOP icon Ruthie Johnson, the 87-year-old former longtime aide to the late U.S. Sen. Jim McClure, was among those targeted for her party precinct position. In response, she said, she "went to a Rally Right meeting and I told 'em they'd never find anyone more conservative than I was." She won the election.

Johnson says of the district's current legislators, "I think they're all conservative, and I think they represent the conservative thinking of our district."

She said she's not thrilled with Hart's tax-protesting, which includes a pending appeal to the Idaho Supreme Court over his more than $53,000 in unpaid state income taxes. "I think it was foolish of him to fight that in the way he did in the first place," she said. "I thought that he should pay his taxes, and then challenge it."

Johnson, a Wallace native, said the area was mostly Democratic when she first moved there in 1968, but that changed over the years. She attributes it to concern over "what's been going on nationally." She added, "We're a self-reliant state we don't want everything done for us."

District 3 is also a remarkably politically attuned district: A whopping 83 percent of the voting-age population is registered to vote, compared with just 50 percent statewide.

Ron McIntyre, owner of Super 1 Foods and the mayor of Hayden for the past 11 years, says the district is "very high in Republican, but mainly conservative."

McIntyre didn't vote for Hart in the last election, choosing instead a write-in candidate, Howard Griffiths, who garnered 25 percent of the vote. "Pretty gutsy to run when you have the government after you, the IRS," he said of Hart. Still, "I thought the write-in had a lot less problems. I figured he could focus better."

For Howie White, owner of the Saddle Up Grill in Athol, there are pluses and minuses to the political climate. When his restaurant burned down in 2008, he was able to rebuild with the help of volunteers and dealt with little red tape.

But he's not happy that his hometown of 22 years has stubbornly resisted putting in a sewer system to allow the town to grow. As a result, he estimates, the area around Athol has grown by 10,000 people, but the city of Athol, still on septic tanks, grew by just 16 people in the last census. At the same time, Hayden's population grew by 45 percent.

"I look at the older people who have to drive as far as Coeur d'Alene for as simple a thing as a prescription," he said. "Whereas if they'd let a sewer system go in years ago, there would be a pharmacy, there would be a doctor's office, a large grocery store. It would give a lot of people jobs."

Former state Sen. Jorgenson is bitter over his election loss after three terms, noting that his voting record was ranked the eighth-most conservative in the 35-member Senate in a state-commissioned study in 2010. The same study ranked Hart the 15th-most conservative-voting representative. But the new wave of conservative Republicans in the district branded Jorgenson not conservative enough.

Jorgenson, who was known for backing harsh anti-immigration legislation at the Statehouse, said, "Most of the people, the average Republicans, are embarrassed by Phil Hart's image."

He believes most GOP faithful, especially California transplants, are what he calls "stock-in-trade Republicans" who "don't want to see taxes go up, they want to see immigration issues put in check." But in a one-party district, voter turnout in the primary elections can be light — 24.7 percent of registered voters in 2010, compared with general-election turnout of 59.2 percent of registered voters — and intraparty squabbles can determine election outcomes.

Jorgenson, a former City Council president in Hayden Lake, said the district is full of haves and have-nots, including many retirees who moved to the area with "substantial means," along with working-class folks who struggle to find jobs.

Barbieri falls somewhere in between, having sold a law practice in Orange County and bought a North Idaho restaurant, only to have it fail. Now he does "as many part-time jobs as possible," from state lawmaker to paralegal work to operating a concession trailer with his family, "to try and make ends meet."

He can't just take the bar exam in Idaho and start practicing law again because the law school he graduated from in Southern California wasn't accredited at the time, and he hasn't practiced law 10 out of the past 15 years. That means he'd have to seek a waiver from the state Supreme Court.

Barbieri, like Vick, lives in Dalton Gardens, a city of one-acre-minimum lots where folks can keep a semirural feel to their in-town living.

With the area's beautiful lakes, lower cost of living compared with California, and conservative bent, Barbieri said he's still glad he moved north. He said, "Fifteen minutes outside of your house you're in the forest — it's pretty amazing."

Johnson thinks the influx of newcomers has improved the area's politics. "When so many people from California were moving in, I thought we were going to get all of the kooks," she said. "And instead, we got the cream of the crop — the ones that wanted to get away from some of the ideas they had down there."

Restoration Project Aims to Help White Sturgeon

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP)

• A panel that helps manage federal hydro operations in the Northwest has approved a request to increase flows from Montana's Libby Dam.

The move is in preparation for reducing flows this fall for work to make parts of the Kootenai River more suitable for endangered wild white sturgeon.

The Technical Management Team last week approved the request by the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes that will allow work on portions of a 55-mile stretch of the river mostly upstream of Bonners Ferry, Idaho.

"We're really excited to get this first project implemented," Sue Ireland, director of the tribes' fish and wildlife program, told the Daily Inter Lake.

Flows from the dam have been increased from 14,000 cubic feet per second to 16,000. The flow will be decreased in September so work can start in the river.

Officials said the project is a large-scale ecosystem restoration that will take 10 to 15 years to complete. Work includes stabilizing banks, increasing riparian vegetation and improving side-channel complexity.

Before Libby Dam, there were an estimated 10,000 Kootenai sturgeon. Fewer than 500 mature adults of spawning age remain.

The wild Kootenai River white sturgeon, a toothless beast from the days of dinosaurs, has a large head, armor-like scales, can reach 19 feet long and top 1,000 pounds. It takes 20 or 30 years for white sturgeon to mature and reproduce.

An isolated population of the bottom-feeding behemoths lives along a stretch of the Kootenai that passes through Montana, Idaho and British Columbia, Canada. The construction of Libby Dam in 1974 stopped the river from flooding Bonners Ferry, Idaho, but also prevented the high water flows that triggered the sturgeon to move upriver and spawn.

In recent years flows have been increased at certain times of the year to make conditions more favorable for spawning sturgeon. But the most recent project is different.

"Another thing about this project that we think is important is that it's a habitat fix rather than flow only, which has kind of been the only approach in the past," Ireland said.

Work this fall will last about two months and include equipment in the river channel. The work costing about $2.2 million is mostly being paid for through the Bonneville Power Administration's fish and wildlife program that's intended to mitigating impacts caused by federal dams.

"We're going to need to de-water a portion of the main and by-channels," Ireland said. "We will need to isolate that work area by building a small dam so we can do the channel work."

Ireland said part of the work is intended to reduce sedimentation in the riverbed that has reduced the survival chances for sturgeon emerging from eggs.

Pryor Mountain Mustang Roundup Planned for 2012

BY MATTHEW BROWN
Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. • Dozens of wild mustangs descended from the mounts used by Spanish Conquistadors would be rounded up from their mountain range next year and put up for adoption under a plan announced by federal officials.

The roundup from Pryor Mountain Wild Horse Range would reduce the size of the 150 horse herd to between 90 and 120 animals. The Bureau of Land Management said the roundup, or “gather”, is needed to keep the horses from outgrowing their 38,000-acre range in a remote, arid region along the Montana-Wyoming border.

Established in 1968 as the first public wild horse range in the United States, the Pryor range has emerged as a contentious battleground in the nationwide debate over horses that run free on public lands.

Some wild horse advocates contend the government’s periodic roundups are destroying the herd’s storied genetics. Others side with the federal government in saying the horses’ numbers need to be reined in, to prevent overgrazing and starvation.

The Pryor herd is widely known among horse lovers for its colorful ancestry and a series of documentary films on the animals that appeared on public television.

During the last roundup, in 2009, 57 wild horses were removed from the herd.

That roundup and others across the country helped stoke a backlash against the government’s handling of the country’s 38,000 wild horses and burros, the offspring of animals first introduced to North America by European explorers.

More than 10,000 horses and burros were removed from public lands in fiscal year 2010. The government estimates that existing ranges have enough room for only about 27,000 horses and burros.

In recent years, the BLM has turned to treating the horses with infertility drugs as an alternative way of controlling the animals’ population. Those treatments have been given to the Pryor horses since 2001, under a program that was expanded this year and now includes most of the herd’s roughly 75 mares, said BLM spokeswoman Kristen Lenhardt.

But it’s still uncertain whether infertility treatments alone will stabilize the size of the Pryor herd. In the interim, Lenhardt said, roundups will be needed to keep a balance between the horses and other range uses, including grazing and providing habitat for different species of wildlife.

“The purpose of the (infertility treatments) is to hopefully slow the growth rate and hopefully increase the length of time between gathers,” she said. “It’s going to take a lot of time.”

Through a lawsuit pending in federal court, several Colorado-based advocacy groups have argued that the Bureau of Land Management has not met its obligation under federal law to protect the horses.

Hackers attend the DefCon conference Friday in Las Vegas.

Kids and Hackers, Oh My! DefCon Adds Kids Track

BY JORDAN ROBERTSON
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS • Fewer things seem out of place at the rough-hewn DefCon hacker convention than a swarm of kids.

For 18 years, hackers — and the computer security experts who track them — have gathered at DefCon, one of the largest and longest-running conferences of its kind, to share information about breaching and securing computers and other devices.

This year’s DefCon featured what some hardcore attendees might consider to be a startling sight: children. For the first time, DefCon included discussions and tutorials for budding hackers, ages 8 to 16. Some 60 kids showed up.

Over two days, they met prominent hackers, Homeland Security officials and NSA security experts. They also listened to talks on the history of hacking, and lectures on cryptography. Some of the convention’s hotly contested competitions were geared toward children, as well. One contest covered lock-picking techniques to be used in the event they forget their locker combination. The kids were encouraged to find security vulnerabilities in popular technologies, from video games to computer hardware.

Children were required to have a parent with them. Many parents who brought their kids are longtime DefCon attendees who said they were excited about the bonding opportunity.

Rey Ayers, 42, an informa-

“The technology itself isn’t good or evil — it’s what you do with it.”

— Rick Crouse, a parent who brought his boys to DefCon, an expo focused on hacking technology, in Las Vegas tion security specialist for a utility company in the San Francisco Bay area, has attended DefCon for the past four years. He brought his son, Xavier, 14, who has been tinkering with computers for years and already has two information technology certifications.

Ayers said it was important to introduce his son to the hacker community, adding that they’ve talked extensively about the difference between ethical and unethical hacking.

“I see it in him — he feels like he belongs to a clan, to a group. I’m really proud,” Rey Ayers said in an interview. “I can see he has the excitement in his eyes.”

Xavier, his backpack decked out in new pins with hacker logos, said he’s trying to follow in his dad’s footsteps. The conference has given them new ideas to explore. The two look forward to finding vulnerabilities in wireless networks together when they get home to Vallejo, California. Xavier, who hacks mostly with his dad, said he hoped to meet some kids his age at the conference who might become his hacking pen pals.

“I feel like a community here — it’s like I’m not the only kid,” Xavier said.

The emergence of the DefCon kids’ conference comes as hackers are making headlines around the world. Though the general public often associates hacking with criminality, the engineering culture of the technology mainstream has always embraced people who explore the boundaries of what can be done with computers and other gadgets. Steve Jobs and Stephen Wozniak, the co-founders of Apple Inc., have said they considered themselves “hackers” when they created the first Apple computers in the mid-1970s.

Recent hacker attacks, however, play into stereotypical definitions of hackers. On Saturday, for instance, the hacker group Anonymous broke into 70 U.S. law enforcement websites, illustrating the growing threat from criminal hackers.

DefCon and its more-polished relative, the Black Hat technical security convention, drew thousands of people here in Las Vegas. They came for the revelry and intense discussion of new vulnerabilities in devices ranging from mobile phones to insulin pumps and critical infrastructure.

Black Hat, which is an industry sponsored event and costs up to $2,500 to enter, had more than 6,000 attendees. Vendors and executives in suits were there to schmooze and strike deals until Black Hat ended on Thursday.

DefCon, which ended Sunday, costs $150 to enter. Organizers stopped counting the number of attendees after they sold 10,000 badges on the first day. Most attendees wore t-shirts and shorts. One popular annual pastime at DefCon involves trying to identify undercover federal agents.

This year many attendees rallied around a hacker named “Barkode” who has a blood disease and needs an urgent bone marrow transplant. Volunteers running a blood drive on site offered free mohawks to all donors. Conference or organizers said the drive was so successful that extra supplies were needed to handle the donations.

Wolfe and Behr Crouse of Conroe, Texas proudly sported mohawks. Wolfe, 11 and Behr, 8 outlined the family hacking hierarchy.

“He’s the hacker, I’m the lockpicker. I get him in the building,” Behr said.

So how long has he been a lockpicker? Less than a day, his mother laughed. He got the bug after picking locks with some success at DefCon.

The boys’ parents, Rick and Kirsten, are both techies. They came to DefCon to introduce their boys to the culture. Rick has attended for the past three years. He said he wanted Wolfe and Behr to see the constructive applications of hacking.

“The technology itself isn’t good or evil — it’s what you do with it,” Rick Crouse said.

Kirsten Crouse added that they wanted to show examples of math and science in action to convey the importance of doing well in school.

“It’s an amazing opportunity for the kids to see what the options are out there,” she said.

Climate Experts Say La Niña May Return in Fall

RENO, Nev. (AP) • Climate experts say the weather pattern that helped bring record snowfall to the Reno-Lake Tahoe region last winter could return this fall.

The U.S. Climate Prediction Center on Thursday issued a La Nina watch, citing conditions indicating a return of the climatic phenomenon characterized by cooler surface ocean temperatures in the eastern Pacific.

It was in place from late 2010 through much of this year.

The Reno Gazette-Journal reports scientists say computer models suggest the return of a mild La Nina this fall.

But what that would mean for northern Nevada and the Sierra is anyone’s guess.

Experts say Reno-Tahoe is right on the dividing line between wetter or drier conditions during a La Nina. Wetter conditions are generally expected to the north, drier ones to the south.

Idaho Boy Injured After Falling From Moving Car

MIDDLETON (AP) • The Canyon County Sheriff’s office in southwest Idaho says a 15-year-old boy has been seriously injured after climbing on top of a moving vehicle and falling off.

Sgt. Doug Daniels says police received a report about the incident just after 10 p.m. Saturday. He says the caller was unsure of the location but that dispatchers were able to obtain GPS coordinates from the caller’s cell phone and determine the location to be about a mile north of Middleton.

Daniels says the boy was transported by helicopter to a Boise hospital. His condition was not available.

Police say they are investigating.

Iowa Focal Point for Potential Shifts in GOP Race

BY THOMAS BEAUMONT
Associated Press

DES MOINES, Iowa • A nationally televised debate, a test vote in Iowa and a candidacy by Texas Gov. Rick Perry — should he decide to seek the GOP nomination as many insiders, activists and party leaders expect — could shake up the Republican presidential race in the coming days.

The entire field of Republican candidates planned to participate in Thursday’s debate in Iowa — the first that will include former Utah Gov. Jon Huntsman — and most were staying in the leadoff caucus state for a straw poll two days later when GOP activists will indicate their presidential preferences for the first time. Perry planned to be elsewhere, but his likely candidacy was looming large in Iowa and across the nation.

With the first votes of 2012 less than six months away, the week promises to refocus the political world, to a certain extent at least, on the Republican nomination fight after months of debate in Washington over the nation’s debt having largely eclipsed it. That issue, coupled with a sour jobs outlook, last week’s Wall Street sell-off and the nation’s downgraded credit rating, is framing the 2012 campaign, with Republicans using fears of a double-dip recession to criticize President Barack Obama’s handling of the economy.

“He’s hiding on these issues. He’s ducking on these issues. He should be leading,”

Tim Pawlenty, the former Minnesota governor, said in an interview on “Fox News Sunday” while campaigning in Iowa. “We can’t find him. ... We shouldn’t have to play ‘come out, come out, wherever you are’ with this president.”

Obama, aware that he’s been taking a beating for months in this important presidential battleground, planned to counter the criticism by holding a rural economic forum on Aug. 16, on the heels of the straw poll, as part of a Midwestern bus tour. It will mark a new chapter in his re-election efforts; until now, he’s been focused on governing and has done little campaigning as Republicans compete for the chance to challenge him in November 2012.

For months, former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney has led the Republican field in polls and money while no less than a half-dozen — Minnesota Rep. Michele Bachmann, Pawlenty and Huntsman among them — have fought to emerge as his main challenger. All the while, the GOP electorate has made clear in polls that it wants more choices, perhaps a conservative who is strong on both economic and social issues, leading Perry to consider a White House bid. Former Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin also is keeping the door open and plans to headline a tea party rally in Iowa on Sept. 3, though many Republicans consider her far less likely than Perry to run.

“He has the potential to appeal to both the economic conservatives and social conservatives,” Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad, a Republican who is unaligned in the race, said of Perry. “The economic conservatives are somewhat up for grabs. I really think it comes down to what does Perry do. I think there is the potential for him to change the race.”

Duncan: States Will Get School-Testing Waivers

BY DONNA GORDON BLANKINSHIP
Associated Press

State and local education officials have been begging the federal government for relief from student testing mandates in the federal No Child Left Behind law, but school starts soon and Congress still hasn't answered the call.

Education Secretary Arne Duncan says he will announce a new waiver system Monday to give schools a break.

The plan to offer waivers to all 50 states, as long as they meet other school reform requirements, comes at the request of President Barack Obama, Duncan said. More details on the waivers will come in September, he said.

The goal of the No Child Left Behind law is to have every student proficient in math and reading by 2014. States have been required to bring more students up to the math and reading standards each year, based on tests that usually take place each spring. The step-by-step ramping up of the 9-year-old law has caused heartburn in states and most school districts, because more and more schools are labeled as failures as too few of their students meet testing goals.

Critics say the benchmarks are unrealistic and brands schools as failures even if they make progress. Schools and districts where too few kids pass the tests for several years are subject to sanctions that can include firing teachers or closing the school entirely.

Through the waivers, schools will get some relief from looming deadlines to meet testing goals as long as they agree to embrace other kinds of education reforms such as raising standards, helping teachers and principals improve, and focusing on fixing the lowest performing schools.

Duncan and Melody Barnes, director of the Domestic Policy Council at the White House, said the administration will encourage every state to apply and will work with them to meet the requirements.

Nothing in this plan for temporary relief from some aspects of the federal law will undermine what Congress is still discussing in terms of revising federal education laws, Duncan said. The long-awaited overhaul of the law began earlier this year in the U.S. House, but a comprehensive reform appears far from the finish line.

"What we do in terms of flexibility can be a bridge or transition," he said. "We all want to fix the law. This might help us get closer to that."

The chairman of the House Committee on Education and the Workforce, however, says he is worried about Duncan's waiver plan.

"I remain concerned that temporary measures instituted by the department, such as conditional waivers, could undermine the committee's efforts to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act," said Rep. John Kline, R-Minn., in a statement, referring to the formal name of the No Child Left Behind law.

The Obama administration requested a revision more than a year ago. Duncan said another school year is about to start and state education officials have told him they can't keep waiting for relief from the mandates.

"I can't overemphasize how loudly the outcry is to do something now," Duncan said.

Duncan has warned that 82 percent of U.S. schools could be labeled failures next year if No Child Left Behind is not changed. Education experts have questioned that estimate, but state officials report a growing number of schools facing sanctions under the law.

Montana Schools Superintendent Denise Juneau said she welcomed the waiver proposal, as long as it offers relief from the 2014 deadline. She said her state isn't afraid of high standards and education reform but needs enough time to reach those standards and freedom to institute change in a way that works for Montana.

Montana decided to skip a planned increase in its testing goals this past school year.

"I don't mind the goals and we're certainly not afraid of accountability. They can set the bar wherever they want. They just have to let us have the flexibility to get there," Juneau said. "We can definitely meet any bar they throw at us."

The chairman of the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee said he understands why it was time for the administration to take action.

"This Congress faces real challenges reaching bipartisan, bicameral agreement on anything," said Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, in a written statement. "Given the ill-advised and partisan bills that the House majority has chosen to move, I understand Secretary Duncan's decision to proceed with a waiver package to provide some interim relief while Congress finishes its work."

Harkin said he remains committed to keep working toward a bipartisan solution to reform the federal education law.

POLICE: 8 KILLED IN OHIO, GUNMAN AMONG DEAD

BY THOMAS J. SHEERAN AND KANTELE FRANKO
Associated Press

COPLEY, Ohio • A man gunned down two people outside an Ohio home and two more in a car Sunday morning, then shot his girlfriend in a rampage that left eight dead including the gunman, who was shot by police, authorities and witnesses said.

Two others were wounded, police said. A child was among those shot, witnesses said, though police wouldn't confirm that. Investigators were trying to piece together what happened at four crime scenes, Copley police Chief Michael Mier said.

A neighbor, Gilbert Elie, said he was getting ready for church when he heard gunshots and cries for help in his northeast Ohio neighborhood, a wooded, residential area outside Akron. He went to a house across the street and said he found a shocking scene: the woman who lived there lying in the driveway, her husband shot near the garage, and their young granddaughter and another woman shot in the front seat of a vehicle, the windows apparently blown out by gunfire.

A third woman came out of the house next door and tried to talk to Elie, he said, but their brief exchange ended abruptly when a man followed her out of the house and shot her, sending the 75-year-old Elie running for safety behind a truck.

"She was talking to me, and he come up behind her and shot her, so I figured, maybe I'm next," he told The Associated Press.

He hid until he could see the gunman was gone, then returned home. Police arrived, and Elie said he heard a second round of shots coming from behind the houses and assumed officers had killed the gunman.

Elie said the gunman lived with the woman who tried to talk to him. Elie described the gunman as unfriendly, a rarity on a street where most neighbors offer a wave in passing.

He often worked on his car outside his house but never waved at anyone, Elie said.

The names and ages of the victims and the gunman weren't being released until police could tell family members, some of whom are out of state, Copley police Sgt. Eric Goodwin said.

Goodwin did not know the conditions of the wounded. Investigators were "still putting things together" as they work the crime scenes, he said.

OUR VIEW

As CAMP Circles Drain, Where are the Grownups?

The Comprehensive Aquifer Management Process is failing for lack of leadership. If you make a living in the Magic Valley, that's your problem.

When it comes to managing its chronically short water resources, the Magic Valley has historically been lucky. First, Idaho U.S. Sen. Frank Church, a back-bencher from a small state, engineered legislation in Congress in the 1960s to prevent the water we depend upon for a living from being shipped to Southern California.

Then, after the 1984 Swan Falls decision by the Idaho Supreme Court put allocation of our water resources in doubt, a group of farmers and lawyers stepped forward to resolve the situation.

One of them — Deputy Attorney General Clive Strong, a Wendell native — was an acknowledged water expert, but the rest of the group: state Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly; state Rep. Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley, and Rep. Golden Linford, R-Rexburg -to name three - learned water law and policy as they went along. Still, they managed to engineer a foundation for Idaho water policy that, if it's wisely used, will stand south-central Idaho in good stead into the 22nd century.

But Linford left the Legislature in 2000, Noh in 2004 and Newcomb in 2006. Things have gone downhill from there.

The latest evidence came last month, when the Idaho Water Resources Board heard a study that showed the Eastern Snake River Plain Aquifer was losing an average of 225,000 acre-feet of water a year. (An acre foot is the amount of water it takes to cover 1 acre, 1 foot deep, or about 325,000 gallons.)

The study showed a dramatic drop from how much water was available from 1960 to what can be today.

Board advisors are pushing for more conservation and recharge programs that were approved under the Comprehensive Aquifer Management Plan.

"We don't have to reinvent the wheel," said Rich Rigby, senior adviser for the Idaho Department of Water Resources. "We're not talking about using the CAMP process. Instead, we should be using CAMP's recommendation."

CAMP, which has received $2.46 million in state funding this year, was pitched in 2007 as a $100 million effort to repair the Lake Erie-sized aquifer in 10 years.

And it's in deep trouble.

Partly that's because of lack of money — including insufficient state support. But mostly, it's because there are too few grownups like Noh, Newcomb and Linford involved in the process.

"There isn't a lot of leadership right now," said Lynn Tominaga, executive director of the Idaho Ground Water Appropriators who served in the Legislature with Noh, Newcomb and Linford. "We want to see more people involved in this, not just the groundwater users."

Starting new programs is difficult since many depend on volunteers, Rigby said. These don't provide the best results because not as many water users volunteer as they would if they had a financial incentive to join.

Department officials are looking for more cooperation from water users; but some of them are calling for more leadership from the IDWR. They're right. Thanks to the Legislature, IDWR has been gutted by budget cuts over the past three years.

According to Tominaga, the issue comes down to money. He suggests IDWR make a financial commitment to mending decreasing water levels throughout the entire aquifer instead of funding only certain areas.

But money aside, the CAMP process is adrift.

After Newcomb retired, state Rep. Jim Patrick, R-Twin Falls, stepped in admirably as an advocate for an activist approach to restoring the aquifer.

But Patrick is just one voice, and frankly he's not driving C AMP's future.

That would be stakeholders like former state Sen. Stan Hawkins, executive director of the Great Feeder Canal Co., in eastern Idaho, who denies any responsibility for depleting the aquifer and couldn't care less if CAMP failed.

If nothing changes — and changes soon — Hawkins will get his wish. And if that happens, the Magic Valley will be out of luck.

"The biggest thing to keep in mind is that when F-16s come screaming up to you, they are probably trying to tell you something."

How ATF Sent Assault Arms to Drug Cartels

Back in February 2009, Attorney General Eric Holder outlined the new administration's intent on an assault - weapons ban:

"As President Obama indicated during the campaign, there are just a few gun-related changes that we would like to make, and among them would be to reinstitute the ban on the sale of assault weapons."

Not only would it be good for the United States, Holder pointed out, but it also would "have a positive impact" on Mexico, which was plagued — then and now — by drug-related gun violence.

That same month, in a travel warning, the State Department confirmed the level of violence near the U.S. border: "Some recent Mexican army and police confrontations with drug cartels have resembled small-unit combat, with cartels employing automatic weapons and grenades. Large firefights have taken place in many towns and cities ... most recently in northern Mexico."

Holder's comments on a weapons ban naturally upset Second Amendment proponents, who always fear the worst when it comes to the government and gun rights. But their worst fears were no match for the misguided policy that would be implemented on Obama and Holder's watch.

A push for the ban never materialized. Holder was no more accurate on that count than he was on closing the Gitmo detention facility or trying Khalid Shaikh Mohammed in a civilian court in Manhattan.

What did happen was Fast and Furious, a new operation out of the Justice Department's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives that turned the world of fighting gun trafficking upside down.

Before, ATF agents routinely busted straw purchasers — usually people with clean records who are paid to buy guns and pass them along to others with criminal records — and confiscated any weapons found. But straw purchasers are the bottom feeders in the gunrunning food chain. ATF officials, understandably, wanted to get closer to the cartel bosses running the smuggling operations.

Fast and Furious was supposed to help make that happen. The plan was to allow straw purchasers to make deliveries, and then the ATF would trace the flow of the weapons.

But one huge detail was left unaddressed: The ATF made no provisions to actually trace the guns once they crossed the border.

The agency wasn't attaching electronic-tracking devices to the guns, and agents were not pursuing them into Mexico. They were forced to stop and watch the weapons "walk." Maybe Mexican authorities could have picked up the trail — but the ATF never told its counterparts across the border about the operation.

Essentially, the U.S. government was now arming the very drug cartels that it was supposed to be helping Mexico fight.

Agents themselves were appalled. "It goes against everything we've been taught," Special Agent Carlos Canino said last week at the latest in a series of hearings on Fast and Furious by the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform.

More than 2,000 weapons walked. Fewer than 600 have been recovered. And recovered usually means found at the scene of a crime, often a shooting or a homicide, in the United States or Mexico.

The last straw for some agents occurred in December, when two weapons traced to Fast and Furious were found at the scene of a firefight in the Arizona desert that killed U.S. Border Patrol agent Brian Terry.

Agents took their concerns up the chain of command at the ATF, and to the Justice Department's inspector general. When that didn't work, they went to Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, ranking member of the Judiciary Committee. Grassley has been working with his House counterpart, Rep. Darrell Issa, R-Calif., who had the power to initiate hearings.

As a result, Holder has ordered an internal investigation at Justice, and has said he didn't learn of the program until this year. Both Grassley and Issa have complained about the department's lack of cooperation as they have tried to find out who authorized the program and let it continue when it was clear that it was losing track of the weapons.

Holder needs to be more forthcoming on the decisions that led to the death of Terry and others. He needs to detail how he plans to recover the other 1,400 weapons that "walked" before they end up at a crime scene. Finally, he needs to explain how the administration went from wanting to ban assault weapons to supplying them to drug lords.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

School Should Bone Up on Flag Etiquette

To Heritage Charter School in Jerome:

Welcome to Jerome! I am pleased to see a new and creative educational institution enter our local community, and I see that you have proudly presented a display of dozens of our nation's beautiful flags in the front of your new building. Flying our national flag in front of a school named Heritage is very fitting. I know that somewhere in your school curriculum you will be teaching the youngsters in our community about their country's history and about the United States flag.

I hope that before you teach the content you brush up on the etiquette for flying Old Glory in public places. Your flags are incorrectly displayed, and I am worried that our community's youth will lose their reverence for our nation's flag by becoming so accustomed to its relaxed presentation that we can no longer remember the etiquette for properly presenting it.

A website dedicated to the American flag (<http://www.us-flag.org/flagetiquette.html>) states: "The flag should be displayed only between sunrise and sunset. It should be illuminated if displayed at night."

I welcome you to our community; however, I am distressed to see your flags flying through the night.

If you (or anyone else in our community) are interested in learning more about how to correctly fly your flag, please contact our local American Legion Post 46 at 107 West Seventh St. or by visiting the website listed above.

Take note participants of the upcoming Jerome County Fair Parade — Are you displaying our national flag correctly?

Nev. Receives $10M Grant to Help Boost Home Health

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) • More Nevadans in nursing homes will have an opportunity for home or group-home care arrangements, thanks to a $10 million federal grant.

The six-year funding from the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid is for the Money Follows the Person Rebalancing Demonstration Grant and continues an effort initiated in Nevada nine years ago.

Betsy Aiello, deputy administrator for the Division of Health Care Policy and Financing, said the goal is to use the money to transition 524 people out of long-term care facilities and into more home-based settings.

“The health care reform bill reauthorized ability to get more grants for this,” Aiello said Friday. “This is a pretty good dollar grant for us.”

Home-based transition began as a pilot program in northern Nevada in 2002. It expanded to southern Nevada the following year and the rest of the state in 2004.

Aiello said since then, people with less severe need have been able to get out of nursing homes and into more home-like settings.

“Now we’re getting to the point where we need more housing accessibility,” she said.

About $5.5 million in grant money will help support the cost of current Medicaid home and community services.

New Unrest in North London a Night After Violent Rioting

BY RAPHAEL G. SATTER

Associated Press

LONDON • New unrest erupted on north London’s streets late Sunday, a day after rioting and looting in a deprived area amid community anger over a fatal police shooting.

Police deployed extra officers on London’s streets to prevent a repeat of Saturday’s violence in north London’s Tottenham area, which appeared to be quiet Sunday night.

But disturbances broke out in Enfield, about 5 miles north of Tottenham. TV footage showed riot and mounted police patrolling the streets, and there were also images of smashed shop windows, and police with dogs detaining at least one man.

A peaceful protest against the killing of a 29-year-old man in Tottenham degenerated into a Saturday night rampage, with rioters torching a double-decker bus, destroying patrol cars and trashing a shopping mall in the nearby Wood Green district.

In Enfield, there were reports that a police car was vandalized, and Sky News television reported that several hundred young people were on the streets causing trouble, with footage showing a looted pharmacy.

“We do have extra resources out tonight on duty across the capital,” police commander Christine Jones said. “We are carefully monitoring any intelligence and ensuring we have our resources in the right places. No one wants to see a repeat of the scenes that we witnessed last night in Tottenham.”

In Saturday’s violence, several buildings were set ablaze. TV footage showed the double-decker bus in a fireball and mounted police charging through the streets trying to restore order. Police said 26 officers received injuries, most if not all apparently minor, and made 55 arrests, including four Sunday. The majority of arrests were for burglary; other offenses included violent disorder, robbery, theft and handling of stolen goods.

London’s fire department said it dealt with 49 “primary” fires in Tottenham. No firefighters were injured.

Social networking websites swirled with rumors of other riots beginning or being planned in other areas of the city, but police warned the public not to trust everything they saw on the Internet — adding that officers were keeping a close eye on what was being said online as well.

The violence has cast a pall over a city preparing to host the 2012 Olympic Games.

“I hope people will have a fantastic Olympics no matter what happened last night,” London Mayor Boris Johnson said in a telephone interview with BBC television, trying to assure the world his city was safe.

45,000 Verizon Landline Workers Strike

BY DEEPTI HAJELA

Associated Press

NEW YORK • Stalled contract negotiations led thousands of workers in Verizon Communication Inc.’s wireline division to go on strike Sunday, potentially affecting landline operations as well as installation of services like FiOS, its fiber-optic television and Internet lines.

The contract for the 45,000 employees from Massachusetts to Washington, D.C., expired at midnight Saturday with the company and the workers unable to come to terms on issues including health care costs and pensions.

Verizon offers landline service in Connecticut, California, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Florida, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas and Virginia.

The dispute does not affect the company’s wireless division. Verizon is the nation’s largest wireless carrier.

Verizon employees who are members of the Communication Workers of America union picketed headquarters in New York City on Sunday morning, wearing red and holding signs with messages including “CWA on strike for middle-class jobs.”

Vinnie Galvin, 56, said he and his fellow workers are the backbone of the industry. “Everybody needs to be wired and we’re the people who do that,” said the three-decades-plus veteran of the company.

“They’re trying to bust us. ... This is stuff that it took us 40, 50 years to get.”

The affected workers are responsible for maintaining and repairing traditional landlines, as well as installing FiOS, union spokesman Bob Master said. Workers covered by the expired contract also include 10,000 represented by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, who serve as telephone and repair technicians, customer service representatives, operators and more. Contract negotiations began June 22.

New York-based Verizon has 196,000 workers; 135,000 are non-union.

The company is asking for changes in the contract because it says its wireline business has been in decline for more than a decade as more people switch to using cellphones exclusively. It had 25 million landlines at the end of the second quarter, down from 26 million at the end of 2010. It has been selling off some of its landlines to other phone companies.

“It’s not reflective of today’s marketplace,” Verizon spokesman Rich Young said of the contract. “Our union employees pay nothing toward their health care premiums. That’s virtually unheard of.”

Economy, Not Debt Rating, Will Send Markets Lower

BY CHIP CUTTER AND PALLAVI GOGOI

Associated Press

NEW YORK • U.S. investors will have their first chance Monday to react to Standard & Poor’s decision to strip the U.S. government of its top credit rating. But the bigger issues facing Wall Street and stock markets worldwide remain debt-ridden countries in Europe and concerns that the global economy is weakening.

Friday’s first-ever downgrade of U.S. long-term debt from AAA to AA+ wasn’t unexpected and may have little impact on interest rates. But it’s the kind of news that stock markets don’t need when investors are already nervous.

Even before the downgrade, the Dow Jones industrial average last week fell nearly 700 points, or 6 percent. Investors were worried because economic signals in the U.S. and overseas were pointing toward trouble:

• On July 29, the government dramatically lowered its estimate of how much the economy grew during the first quarter. It had said the economy grew at an annual rate of 1.3 percent, but revised that number down to 0.4 percent. Second-quarter growth was also weak, a 1.3 percent rate.

• European officials are trying to help Italy — the world’s eighth-largest economy — avoid the kind of bailouts that Greece, Portugal and Spain were forced to accept to prevent them from defaulting on their debt. And those bailouts haven’t solved all the problems in those countries.

• The first reports on the economy during the third quarter have been mixed. Manufacturing, which helped pull the economy out of the recession, fell to its weakest level since July 2009 — the month after the recession officially ended. The Labor Department said 117,000 jobs were created last month. But that came after 99,000 jobs were created in May and June combined — and 250,000 new jobs are needed each month to reduce unemployment.

As a result, financial analysts interviewed Sunday said they expect markets to be volatile this week — and beyond.

“We are in uncharted territory and, therefore, should all brace for volatility over a number of days if not weeks,” said Mohamed El-Erian, CEO and co-chief investment officer of the bond mutual fund company PIMCO.

SEALs Killed in Afghanistan Were on Rescue Mission

BY PATRICK QUINN AND KIMBERLY DOZIER
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan • The 30 American service members — most of them elite Navy SEALs — who died when their helicopter was shot down had rushed to help Army Rangers who had come under fire, two U.S. officials said Sunday.

The heavy loss shows that clandestine tactics carry huge risks despite the huge success of the SEAL mission that killed Osama bin Laden more than three months ago. Most of the SEALs who died Saturday were from the same unit that killed bin Laden, although none of the men took part in that mission.

The U.S.-led coalition plans to rely more on special operations missions as it reduces the overall number of combat troops by the end of 2014.

This weekend, the rescue team had subdued attackers who had pinned down the Rangers and were departing in their Chinook helicopter when the aircraft was apparently hit, one of the officials said.

Thirty Americans and eight Afghans were killed in the crash, making it the deadliest single loss for U.S. forces in the decade-long war in Afghanistan. The Rangers, special operations forces who work regularly with the SEALs, secured the crash site in the Tangi Joy Zarin area of Wardak province, about 60 miles southwest of Kabul, the other official said.

Both officials spoke on condition of anonymity to describe the event, as the investigation is still ongoing. The SEAL mission was first reported by CNN.

NATO was recovering the remains of the twin rotor Chinook helicopter. A current and a former U.S. official said the Americans included 22 SEALs, three Air Force combat controllers and a dog handler and his dog. The two spoke on condition of anonymity because military officials were still notifying the families of the dead.

All but two of the SEALs were from SEAL Team 6, the unit that killed bin Laden, U.S. officials said on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to release the information.

Eight Taliban fighters were also killed in the battle, Taliban spokesman Zabiullah Mujahid said in a statement.

Afghanistan has more U.S. special operations troops, about 10,000, than any other theater of war. The forces, often joined by Afghan troops, are among the most effective weapons in the coalition's arsenal, conducting surveillance, infiltration and capture missions and night raids.

From April to July this year, 2,832 special operations raids captured 2,941 insurgents and killed 834, twice as many as during the same time period last year, according to NATO.

SEALs, Rangers, and other special operations troops are expected to be the vanguard of the American military effort in Afghanistan as international military forces start pulling out. By the time combat troops plan to have left the country, the coalition will have handed control of security to the Afghan forces they have spent tens of billions of dollars arming and training.

Special operations troops are expected to remain in the country after 2014 for counterterrorism missions and advisory support. Just how many will remain has not yet been negotiated with the Afghan government, but the United States is considering from 5,000 to 20,000, far fewer than the 100,000 U.S. troops there now.

Special forces are frequently used to target insurgent commanders as part of an effort to force the Taliban's leadership to agree to a negotiated peace. The operations, mostly in the form of night raids, are often carried out by Afghan and coalition special operations forces.

Night raids have drawn criticism from human rights activists and infuriated Afghan President Hamid Karzai, who says they anger and alienate the Afghan population.

But NATO commanders have said the raids are safer for civilians than relatively imprecise airstrikes.

As U.S. forces removed the wreckage Sunday, nearby Afghan and NATO forces battled insurgents as they carried out clearing operations in the areas around the crash site, a region that is just a stone's throw from the capital. The province, which borders Kabul, has increasingly come under Taliban control in recent months — even as the U.S.-led coalition has begun handing over security for parts of Afghanistan over to the government of Karzai.

"There have been a small number of limited engagements in the same district" as Saturday's helicopter crash, NATO said in a statement. "However those clashes have not been in the direct vicinity of the crash site. As of now, we have no reporting to indicate any coalition casualties resulting from these engagements."

Pohlman Stable Shines at MVS

BY LINDA BRITTSAN
For the Times-News

Late Models driver Jeff Pohlman struck again Saturday at Magic Valley Speedway.

Coming off two feature division main event wins last week, Pohlman carried his winning ways into the month of August with victories in both Mr. Gas Late Models mains.

Starting fifth in a field of seven in the first main event race of the evening Pohlman executed the bump-and-run on Dan Pehrson to take over the lead at Lap 11. While Pohlman stretched out his lead Pehrson, T.J. Woodhall, Bobby Latham III and Kris McKean all scrambled to better their position. With three laps remaining in the race the caution was displayed, setting up a shootout for the checkered, but Pohlman held off Woodhall for the win.

Starting at the rear of the field for the second main, Pohlman had to dig harder for the win. Contact with McKean at Lap 7 sent both cars to the pits after they spun near Turn 4, but Pohlman was able to fight his way toward the front at Lap 14. Despite five restarts over the final 21 laps, Pohlman held firm for his second win of the night, again with Woodhall in second place.

"When I got on the outside of Kris (McKean) it just seemed that he just kind of turned right," Pohlman said of the early race contact with his competitor. "But I was really mad that I spun out, I pride myself on being able to save that stuff. But if they want to wreck me they're going to have to wreck me harder than that."

With the wins, Pohlman added to his already substantial lead in the point standings.

"I never thought his would happen," Pohlman said of his double-double victories. "Louis (Lopez, crew chief) has this car hooked up great and these wins really help us be secure for the next few races. Now we can be a lot smarter not to get into some of the messes we got into tonight."

Also from the Pohlman racing stable, Robbie Hyde recovered from the hood of his car flying up against his windshield to win the first Quale's Electronics Hornets main. In the second main, this time pins securely in place, Hyde was able to round up another win. Fellow Pohlman stable driver Scott Gilligan roped in the victory in the TVGoldand-Silver Thunderdogs.

In Budweiser Super Stocks action, Allen Williams began the main from pole position and, despite having to regroup from a late race caution, he fought off Casey Pehrson and later Willie Dalton for his first main event win of the season.

"I was pretty confident tonight, because we changed everything on the setup," Williams said. "The car works great now, and it sure feels good to get that win."

Todd Audet and Jerry Slocum battled side-by-side in the late laps of the Brennan's Carpet Pony Stocks main event until Audet finally had enough to beat Slocum to the finish line by 0.687 seconds. Pro 4's drivers Ken Chandler and Joe Barton also fought door-to-door for much of the main event race, but it was Chandler who was victorious.

Although it was his first night in the car, Stacey Jensen proved he had what it took to pilot a Pepsi Winged Sprint machine winning the main event in the final lap. Jay McDonald took the lead at Lap 5 of the Quale's Jr. Stingers main and was able to pull into the winner's circle 15 laps later.

A Caddie's Revenge

Adam Scott won the WGC Bridgestone Invitational, but more attention seemed to fall on his caddie: Steve Williams, who recently was fired from carrying Tiger Woods' bag.

AKRON, Ohio (AP) • The chants and cheers began as Adam Scott walked toward the 18th green to complete a command performance Sunday in the Bridgestone Invitational and win his first World Golf Championship.

But in a surreal scene at Firestone, they weren't for him.

They were for his caddie. "Stev-ie Will-iams," they shouted as the guy carrying the bag for Scott broke into a big smile.

The celebration made it clear that Steve Williams felt vindicated after being fired last month by Tiger Woods. The interview after it was over — yes, he gave interviews — made it sound as if it was Williams who shot the 5-under 65. At one point, Williams described himself as a "good front-runner when I'm caddying"

"I've caddied for 33 years — 145 wins now — and that's the best win I've ever had," Williams told CBS Sports on the 18th green. This from a guy whose 12 years working for Woods featured 13 majors and 16 world titles among 72 wins worldwide. That includes the 2001 Masters, when Woods won an unprecedented fourth straight major.

Clearly, Williams is still angry over how — and when — Woods cut him loose. He even disputed Woods' version of how it happened, saying Woods told him over the phone, not in person.

Scott didn't seem to mind that his caddie was getting most of the attention.

Poker Probe Shouldn't Be Biggest Worry About A-Rod

The big news coming out of Florida is Alex Rodriguez has started taking batting practice, and is eager to start playing once again. Word is he should be on the field for the Yankees in the next week or so, though they seem to have done just fine without him.

Tim Dahlberg

Not that Rodriguez is terribly concerned about being Wally Pipped. Eric Chavez has been filling in nicely for him lately, but A-Rod is making $31 million this year and is guaranteed another $143 million over the next six years. He'll be playing third base for a long time, even as his power numbers continue their seemingly inexorable decline.

The other news about A-Rod wasn't quite as good, though you have to consider the source. In this case it was Star magazine, reporting that the slugger liked to play in high-stakes poker games with Hollywood celebrities. At one of those games, it was reported, a fight broke out, and at another there were other

Broken Ankle and All, Keselowski Wins at Pocono

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) • Brad Keselowski was inspired Sunday by a relative in the Navy Seals, and that was all he needed to push through his painful ankle injury.

Keselowski's cousin lost a friend who was one of 30 American service members who died when their helicopter was shot down during fighting in eastern Afghanistan. The NASCAR driver took the sacrifice to heart, and vowed he would not leave his car no matter how bad he hurt.

So Keselowski went out and raced all 500 miles of the Sprint Cup stop at Pocono Raceway with a broken left ankle.

As if that wasn't enough, he somehow managed to win, too.

Competing with a brace on his ankle, Keselowski sped off on the final restart late in the race to pick up his second victory of the season. He gingerly climbed out of his car to celebrate with his crew in Victory Lane.

He dedicated the victory — one that thrust him into Chase contention — to the troops in Afghanistan.

"I might not be feeling great, but those are the guys that are really making sacrifices," Keselowski said. "Whenever I got in the car and felt like, man, this really hurts, it was good inspiration as to

Clubs Steamed About August Friendlies

Wednesday is a FIFA-mandated date for international exhibitions, but many leagues are an important stage of preparation that will be interrupted.

GENEVA (AP) • Europe's top soccer clubs hate it. National team coaches don't like it. The global players' union thinks FIFA should stop it.

"It" arrives Wednesday, the annual August date protected for national team exhibitions — probably the least loved part of soccer's international calendar.

The official FIFA document that plans matches in four-year cycles, and orders clubs when to hand over their players for national duty, is giving the scandal-hit governing body a problem it doesn't need.

On Wednesday, the marquee matches on a 50-game schedule include Germany vs. Brazil, Italy vs. Spain, England vs. the Netherlands and the U.S. vs. Mexico.

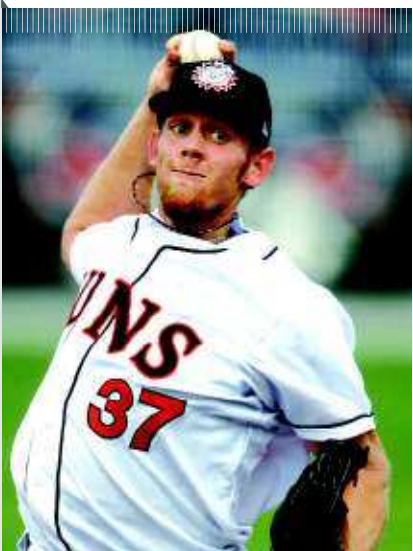

Yet much of FIFA President Sepp Blatter's increasingly hostile "football family" doesn't believe these early games are worth keeping. Not when it interrupts clubs' tours and players' preparation for the new season.

"It's the international managers who aren't very happy about matches in August," France coach Laurent Blanc said last week, while reluctantly people around who were using cocaine.

That means Rodriguez will be talking to the commissioner's office again, somewhat of a regular occurrence in recent years. Along with it will almost surely come another warning — like the one he got in 2005 — to stay away from big money card games.

And that's where it should end. Because, as alleged transgressions go, this one doesn't even make A-Rod's personal top-10 list.

Yes, playing poker for big money may technically be illegal in most parts, but last time I checked there are not a lot of police working overtime to bust neighborhood games. Besides, hasn't ESPN made a legitimate sport of high-stakes poker already, televising matches where millions of dollars are at stake?

Bust A-Rod as a steroid user who has disgraced the game if you want. Look at him more closely because he was treated by a Canadian doctor who recently pleaded guilty to charges that include bringing human growth hormone into the United States.

But don't waste time going after him for enjoying a Friday night card game with his A-list friends.

Before you think I've gotten soft on A-Rod, nothing could be further from the truth. To me he really is A-Fraud, a supremely talented player who felt it necessary to chemically alter his body so he could get the untold riches the Rangers and Yankees threw at him.

I find the fact he's chasing the most hallowed record in baseball distasteful. The day he catches Henry Aaron (the legitimate home run record holder) will be a dark one for baseball, no matter how much they celebrate at Yankee Stadium.

And I don't care a lot for his attitude of entitlement, which doesn't sit well with the rest of us who won't earn hundreds of millions to play a child's game.

But any speculation about a possible suspension for playing poker is ridiculous. That's especially true since none of the reports about the games A-Rod attended — all based on anonymous sources, by the way — make any claim that he was involved in any fights or was doing any cocaine.

Indeed, A-Rod's biggest crime might be that he plays for stakes higher than you do at your buddy's house. Way higher, but he's making $31 million a year so he can afford a few bad beats.

A-Rod's publicist claimed the Star story contained "numerous factual inaccuracies" and said the slugger looked forward to cooperating with major league investigators looking into the matter. Rodriguez himself isn't talking and cut short a session with reporters on Thursday in Florida when asked about it.

Really, though, what does he have to talk about? The time Matt Damon filled out a full house on the last card to beat his three aces? The laughs he got from his card playing buddies when he told them that he, not Derek Jeter, is the real captain of the Yankees?

Rodriguez, meanwhile, is expected back in the lineup within the next week or so for the first time since having right knee surgery July 14. There's no question the Yankees want him back, despite going 18-8 entering Sunday's game against the Red Sox in his absence.

But he's clearly a player in decline, no longer a huge power threat and nowhere near as dominating as he was just a few years back. Rodriguez has only 13 home runs this season, and unless he finds a miraculous power surge in the final two months of the season will hit the fewest home runs since his rookie season with the Seattle Mariners.

He's got things to worry about, yes. But the fact he likes to play poker shouldn't be one of them.

"I can talk about Steve now and not Tiger," Scott said to laughter, alluding to the countless times he and other players have been asked about Woods. "I'm sure there are a lot of other golfers who wouldn't mind that, either."

The latest chapter in the endless saga involving Woods took away from a premier performance by Scott, who didn't make a bogey over his last 26 holes and couldn't afford to with 19-year-old Ryo Ishikawa giving him all he could handle.

They were never separated by more than one shot until Scott chipped in from the side of the 12th green, then rolled in a birdie putt from just inside 30 feet on the 14th to build a three-shot lead. Ishikawa three-putted the 15th, and Scott had no trouble closing this one out.

He wound up winning by four shots over world No. 1 Luke Donald, who shot 66; and Rickie Fowler, who played a final round worthy of a winner with a bogey-free 66, only to run into an affable Australian who couldn't be beat.

Ishikawa made a bogey on the last hole to tie for fourth with Jason Day. They both shot 69.

For the Japanese star, it was his highest finish in America.

Scott finished at 17-under 263, the lowest score to win at Firestone since Woods had 259 in 2000 in an 11-shot win.

With a three-shot lead, Scott thought about playing it safe on the 18th. Williams told him to take 6-iron at the flag, and Scott obliged with a shot that rolled past the cup and settled 5 feet away. When they got to the green, one fan shouted out, "How do you like him now, Tiger?"

By then, Woods was long gone.

After missing three months with a leg injury, he finished a tournament for the first time since the Masters on April 10 and closed with a 70 to tie for 37th, 18 shots behind.

"I had it in spurts this week," Woods said.

preparing to host Chile's team that impressed at the Copa America last month.

"I don't think it's the best way to prepare for a season of international matches," said Blanc, seeming to undermine the basic reason for an August match.

Club coaches are also unhappy.

Barcelona boss Pep Guardiola hasn't even seen his $37 million offseason signing, Chile winger Alexis Sanchez, in training yet.

"We're fighting a losing battle," Guardiola said during the European champion's U.S. trip last week. "National teams control everything and will continue to set the agenda."

Guardiola is also losing eight players to Spain duty until next Thursday, just as Bayern Munich is obliged by FIFA rules to hand over eight who have been selected for Germany and must report at least 48 hours before the game.

"That date in August is a very bad one and we have to change that. As soon as possible," Theo van Seggelen, secretary general of the FIF-Pro players' unions group, told The Associated Press.

Players are caught up in a long-standing fight for their loyalty between clubs, whose contracts they must obey, and countries, who have FIFA's backing to use the players they want without guaranteeing to return them in good health.

what it takes to 'man up' and make it happen."

Keselowski was an unlikely winner after he crashed head-on into a wall on Wednesday during a test session at Road Atlanta. He slammed a section of wall at 100 mph and was forced out of the Nationwide Series race.

He insisted during practice this weekend he wouldn't leave the No. 2 Dodge, no matter the aches and pain.

No relief driver was necessary, though Keselowski had some rest during a 1 hour, 40-minute rain delay.

"I was amazed he raced the full race," third-place finisher Kurt Busch said.

Keselowski's victory placed him in prime position to claim one of two wild-card spots available for the Chase for the championship. The top two drivers with the most victories in 11th to 20th place earn a wild-card spot for the playoffs.

Keselowski, in 18th place, is the only one of the wild-card contenders with two victories. Only five races remain until the field is set. The top 10 drivers in the points standings automatically qualify.

"It gives us pretty high odds if we're playing poker," he said.

Keselowski posted several updates on his injury this week on his Twitter page, including two photos that showed a swollen ankle and an abrasion on his foot.

His broken left ankle ballooned to the size of a softball, and he needed a left shoe a size larger than his right one.

"There's no good time, but this is certainly the worst time," he said Friday.

No way. Keselowski won his third career Cup race and first since he won in June at Kansas.

"I came here to win," he said. "When you let the pain get into your head that far that you don't believe you can win anymore, you can't win the race."

Kyle Busch was second, Jimmie Johnson fourth and Ryan Newman fifthth.

Kurt Busch and Johnson had a heated exchange after the race because of some last-lap contact and had to be separated by their crews.

of 186 countries, was a reminder that FIFA primarily answers to its 208 member federations, who send national teams to its competitions.

The international calendar fixes four-year schedules for the World Cup, continental championships, qualifiers and exhibitions, after final approval from the FIFA 24-man executive committee.

However, European club officials were shocked to discover the detailed 2011-14 calendar completed at a June 2010 FIFA meeting in Johannesburg.

In 2013, the calendar has 15 match dates — including an Aug. 14 exhibition — plus the Confederations Cup, African Cup of Nations and CONCACAF Gold Cup tournaments.

Long frustrated that FIFA appears to ignore his members, European Club Association chairman Karl-Heinz Rummenigge has called for a "revolution" to make soccer more democratic, and openly questioned whether Blatter is fit to run the sport.

"We feel that our requests have been ignored too much and for too long," ECA vice chairman Umberto Gandini told the AP. "It is necessary to raise the bar and get attention to our case."

FIFA declined to say if the current calendar can be changed, but said it would consult widely to set the 2015-18 dates. Blatter has shown little willingness to speak with European clubs, whose $1 billion share of annual prize money from the Champions League matches FIFA's total revenue.

Today is Monday, Aug. 8, the 220th day of 2011. There are 145 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On Aug. 8, 1911, President William Howard Taft signed a measure raising the number of members in the U.S. House of Representatives from 391 to 433, effective with the next Congress, with a proviso to add two more members when New Mexico and Arizona became states. (The number of House seats has remained at 435 ever since, except for a temporary increase to 437 after Alaska and Hawaii were admitted to the Union.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1815, Napoleon Bonaparte set sail for St. Helena to spend the remainder of his days in exile.

In 1861, biologist William Bateson, founder of the science of genetics, was born in Whitby, Yorkshire, England.

In 1942, six convicted Nazi saboteurs who'd landed in the U.S. were executed in Washington, D.C.; two others were spared.

In 1953, the United States and South Korea initiated a mutual security pact.

In 1963, Britain's "Great Train Robbery" took place as thieves made off with 2.6 million pounds in banknotes.

In 1968, the Republican national convention in Miami Beach nominated Richard Nixon for president on the first ballot.

In 1973, Vice President Spiro T. Agnew branded as "damned lies" reports he had taken kickbacks from government contracts in Maryland, and vowed not to resign — which he ended up doing.

In 1974, President Richard Nixon announced his resignation, effective the next day, following damaging new revelations in the Watergate scandal.

In 1978, the U.S. launched Pioneer Venus 2, which carried scientific probes to study the atmosphere of Venus.

In 1994, Israel and Jordan opened the first road link between the two once-warring countries.

Ten years ago: Former President Ronald Reagan's daughter Maureen died in Granite Bay, Calif., at age 60. Mohammad Khatami was sworn in for a second term as Iran's president.

Five years ago: Sen. Joe Lieberman lost the Connecticut Democratic primary to political newcomer Ned Lamont (however, Lieberman ended up winning re-election to the Senate by running as an independent). The Federal Reserve left a benchmark interest rate unchanged after 17 consecutive rate hikes over more than two years. Roger Goodell was chosen as the NFL's next commissioner.

One year ago: Flooding in Gansu province in China resulted in mudslides that killed more than 1,400 people. Academy Award-winning actress Patricia Neal died in Edgartown, Mass., at 84.

Advertising Salesperson & Recruitment Salesperson

The Times-News is seeking two professional advertising salespeople; one outside sales for retail advertising and one inside sales for recruitment advertising. The principal duty of these salespeople will be to sell. The secondary duty will be to sell. You'll sell 'win-win' print, online and mobile advertising packages offered by the Times-News, www.magicvalley.com and a variety of specialty and niche publications. But what you'll really be selling is solutions to local business owners who may also need your assistance in discovering just what solutions they need.

The Successful Candidate will demonstrate:

- success in relentlessly prospecting to get new business;
- a natural inquisitiveness about what constitutes customer success and an ability to ask open-ended, thought-provoking questions;
- a pattern of success in marketplaces that are extremely competitive;
- the ability to consistently listen;
- an ongoing history of success in a fast-paced business;
- an assertive approach to achieving revenue and customer satisfaction goals;
- the ability to communicate personal, quantifiable components of customer service excellence.

Past sales experience may be helpful but possessing innate curiosity and a competitive approach is far more important. The Times-News offers an excellent benefit package including medical, dental, vision, life, paid vacation and sick days, flexible spending account(s) and a 401(k) program.

Please apply online at www.magicvalley.com/workhere before Saturday, July 30, 2011.

DEAR ABBY: My in-laws have a small dog, "Fluffy," who has come to rule their lives. That's OK, because it doesn't really affect me. However, we frequently have them over for dinner, and they insist on taking home a large portion of whatever meat was served to give to their dog. I'm not talking about scraps from everyone's plates — the amount they take would be a serving for another meal.

I have objected to this practice in the past, but each time they come for dinner they seem to have "forgotten" the lesson. I don't like it! How can I tactfully tell them not to take meat from my table for Fluffy?

— "STEAKING"
MY CLAIM,
ST. PETERSBURG, FLA.

DEAR "STEAKING": You already have told your in-laws not to take the meat you are serving for their dog. Either their memories are failing, or your feelings aren't important to them.

Suggestion: When you have them to dinner, set up the plates in your kitchen rather than have dishes on the table, and immediately refrigerate any meat you haven't served. Or consider serving your in-laws a meatless dinner. (I can hear them now, asking, "Where's the BEEF?")

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: My husband, "Bud," retired a year ago and now does almost nothing with his life. He calls himself a "house husband," but that's a lie. All he does is watch TV or play on his computer all day while I work full time outside the home.

Our house has become a pigsty. If I try to do some cleaning, Bud gets mad and says he'll do it "later." Later comes and goes.

Returning to a filthy house after work is driving me crazy. He doesn't even do the grocery shopping; I have to do it on my lunch hour.

Any advice on how I can get his rear end off the couch and get him to assume some responsibilities? I don't usually nag, but I'm so mad I'm taking out my frustrations on my exercise bike. It's making me very fit, but I'm still upset about his lack of ambition.

— WIFE OF A LAZY SLOB

DEAR WIFE: You and Bud have a communication problem. Rather than scold him about his inactivity, try to get him to tell you (calmly) what his "vision" of retirement is. You may find that it's very different from yours. He may also be depressed at the changes that have occurred in his life.

If Bud was always a "lazy slob," then face it — that's the person you married. However, if this is a recent, radical change in his behavior, you should insist he be examined by his doctor. But taking out your frustrations on your exercise bike is not a solution, and you may have to decide if this is how you want to live the rest of your life.

DEAR ABBY: I work in a small office of eight people, and we have two restrooms — one for the men, the other for the women. Recently the women's restroom was out of order and we had to use the men's room.

In a case like this, what is proper etiquette? Do we girls put the seat back up when we are finished, or leave it down? The guys in the office said it should be left up.

— HE SAID, SHE SAID

DEAR H.S.S.S.: I say that because both sexes are using the same restroom — which makes it temporarily unisex — the toilet seat should be left down.

TWIN FALLS 2 bdrm,

IF AUGUST 8 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Tame a tendency to be overly eager and competitive by participating in physical activities or sports. Group activities can provide an avenue of contacts that lead to bigger and better career, job or financial success this year. By fall, you will be in better physical shape and your mental attitudes will improve as well. In December, don't let your gullible nature or wishful thinking get the best of you. A new idea or person could be less than advertised. Plan ahead and choose to make key changes or important financial commitments in February or March.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Try to be accurate rather than vague. You won't want to waste time spinning your wheels. There may be enormous pressure on you to perform at your best, so schedule plenty of breaks and get lots of rest.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You won't find a recipe for living that suits all cases. You could be so anxious to fit in with the crowd that you might bend your own rules. This is not the time to pretend to be something you aren't.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A casual conversation could be misconstrued. It isn't possible to present a convincing argument under these celestial conditions, so don't try to defend your position. Make no large investments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Separate the facts from the fancies. Under these stars, you could easily be provoked or act out of misplaced ardor. You possess plenty of energy, but need to be sure that you apply it in constructive ways.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Peace and contentment come not so much from getting what you want, as from having few wants to satisfy. Although someone may dangle an attractive proposition, resist the temptation to participate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): High hopes are just pies in the sky. Not everything is what it seems. You may rely too much on the hype and not pay enough attention to the facts. Do not enter into agreements or make promises.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): When you rush in and jump to conclusions, it is easy to lose sight of the path and get lost. Misunderstandings with others are possible, so remember to walk carefully around a minefield of touchy subjects.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Resist the urge to react when it seems that people do their best to push your buttons. It may pay off in the end to remain loving and kind — even in the face of opposition to your plans and ideas.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You can't see see eye to eye with people when you look down on them. Avoid making important financial decisions or signing contracts that are based on spur-of-the-moment desires and wishes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): If you feel torn two ways, it is best to stick to the middle. You might be challenged to defend yourself even when it isn't in your best interest to do so. Steer clear of confrontations and arguments.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You follow your own life-plan, which cannot be superseded by any other. A desire to appear to be just one of the guys or gals might tempt you to voice opinions that are alien to your nature.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You can get by on your good looks as long as you keep quiet. It is possible that communications will experience mix-ups. You might also find that money has a tendency to slip through your fingers.

Bobby Wolff

— William Shakespeare

Let's say declarer misses the point and plays low from dummy, winning the first spade in hand with the 10. He must now go to dummy with the club king and run first the heart queen, then the heart jack. East sensibly ducks twice to block the suit, so now declarer abandons hearts and simply takes the club finesse. When it succeeds, declarer has three hearts, three clubs, two diamonds and one spade.

ANSWER: When the opponents' strength is limited, as here, your choice of leads should be, in order of preference, your long suit, a passive lead, or declarer's shortage. Only then should you fall back on a broken suit of your own. You have no long suit or an obviously passive lead, so I'd guess to lead a diamond, without any conviction.

For details of Bobby Wolff's autobiography, "The Lone Wolff," contact kay19072 @aol.com. If you would like to contact Bobby Wolff, e-mail him at bobbywolff@mindspring.com.
