Tussle over Redistricting Puts Idaho Voters in Limbo

BY JOHN MILLER
Associated Press

BOISE • More than 700,000 registered voters are in political limbo because the panel drawing up Idaho's new legislative and congressional boundaries hasn't agreed on a final map.

In the end, the Idaho Supreme Court may decide the issue.

If no map is adopted before Sept. 6, here's a likely scenario: Secretary of State Ben Ysursa could file a lawsuit with state high court justices charging the six-member redistricting commission with violating the state Constitution. The Supreme Court would likely order panelists back to Boise for another try.

And if the May 15, 2012 primary election approaches with still no agreement in sight, the justices could draw their own plan, as a last resort.

"They can do whatever they want to do," Tim Hurst, Ysursa's top deputy, told The Associated Press. "I'm not guessing what they'll do."

During the 2001 redistricting, multiple lawsuits ended up in justices' hands, delaying the map until March 2002 — just before the primary election filing deadline.

A new map will be based on this foundation: Urban areas that grew faster during the last decade will pick up representatives, while Idaho's rural spaces will see power diluted.

But Idaho's sparse population and unorthodox shape, from its forested northern panhandle to its border with Nevada and Utah, don't exactly lend themselves to crisp, uniform legislative or congressional districts. Moving one boundary just a hair north or south can throw the best-made plan off kilter.

The panel's three Republicans and three Democrats are also

Police Remind Motorists to Slow Down in School Zones, Watch for Students

BY BRADLEY GUIRE
bguire@magicvalley.com

Twin Falls police want to remind students, parents and all motorists to take extra precautions around school zones as the new academic year begins soon.

The speed limit at most elementary, middle school and high school zones in the city is 20 mph, and police maintain their "Zero Tolerance" policy for those who choose to ignore the law. School zones are in effect from 7 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays. Some zones are equipped with a flashing yellow light to alert motorists that the reduced speed is in effect. The fine for speeding in a school zone is $151.50.

Officer Luke Allen said the department issued 47 school zone citations — which include a harsher fine than a regular speeding citation — from Aug. 30, 2010, to June 3. That figure dropped drastically from the 2009-10 academic year, in which 198 citations were written. Allen noted that an officer has discretion over when to issue a citation.

Drivers should also watch for students crossing the street in school zones, and for the crossing guards on duty at elementary schools to better ensure student safety.

Twin Falls Parks and Recreation Director Dennis Bowyer walks through Clyde Thomsen Park on Thursday. Bowyer sought $140,000 in next year's city budget to replace the aging trail at the park, but that line-item was cut from the budget during last week's Twin Falls City Council meeting.

Two Sides in Parks and Rec Budget Change

The Twin Falls Parks and Recreation Department saw 15 percent of its budget disappear in an hour at last week's city council meeting. And with more than $800,000 in other city-wide line items being questioned, tonight may see even more cuts.

BY NICK COLTRAIN
ncoltrain@magicvalley.com

Clyde Thomsen Park in Twin Falls was the first new city-built park in Twin Falls in more than 15 years, coincidentally, about the age it is now.

It features a looping asphalt path, with the asphalt laid directly onto the ground when it was built. Today, the trail is showing its age: Cracks slither through it and its edges are becoming jagged and broken from heavy lawnmowers trimming too close.

Replacing it was a goal of city Parks and Recreation Director Dennis Bowyer in the upcoming year. He got $140,000 set aside for the work in the preliminary city budget, only to have it yanked away when the city council started tweaking the proposal. The cash was formally pulled and voted on last week when the council went on a flurry of line-item cuts that left Bowyer's department with a collective 15 percent decrease in funding. He said he'll try to get the path repaved this year at a substantially lower cost, with the complete rework, including making the asphalt flush with the ground, now a goal for the future.

"We're still hoping we can do this, but maybe pushed back four or five years," he said.

The council started diving into next year's budget line-by-line last week, looking for savings after several members of the community railed against the possibility of higher property taxes, even if the cash would have been set aside for road maintenance.

If You Go

The Twin Falls City Council will continue its discussion of the upcoming fiscal year's budget. The most recent turn in the debate has council members looking at individual line items as they search for ways to better fund road maintenance without raising — and possibly even reducing — city property taxes.

The meeting will be open to the public though the formal public comment time for it has passed.

Peace Corps Volunteers on a Quest for Due Process

Erin Bingham of State College, Pa., credits a now-lapsed system of investigating violent crimes against Peace Corps volunteers with bringing the person who raped her in 2008 to justice in Bolivia.

Lawmakers and crime victims have complained that the Peace Corps suffers from a 'blame-the-victim' culture.

BY LISA REIN
The Washington Post

A Peace Corps volunteer had been raped in Bolivia and wanted justice. Within hours, Julie De Mello was on an airplane from Washington to meet the victim.

De Mello, employed by the Peace Corps inspector general as a senior federal agent investigating crimes against volunteers, worked with the 23-year-old victim, Erin Bingham, to sketch the attacker. De Mello went with Bingham to a police line-up, hired a lawyer to represent her and worked with local police to track down witnesses.

De Mello believes her advocacy helped convict the rapist in 2008. He was sentenced to 10 years in prison.

Today, a Peace Corps volunteer who is the victim of a violent crime is likely to get a far less aggressive U.S. government response. De Mello quit three years ago, after the agency grounded her and the four other investigators who routinely traveled abroad to help local police investigate.

The Peace Corps in 2008 moved the responsibility for working with local police from the inspector general's office to its own in-country security staffers, most of whom have little or no law enforcement training but who are already on the scene in the host countries. After the change, the rate of prosecutions in sex crimes involving volunteers dropped slightly, records show.

Peace Corps officials say the system is working, and spokeswoman Allison Price said it is difficult to draw conclusions from incomplete statistics kept by the agency. She said the decision to move crime response to local security staffs "was made to ensure a proper alignment of functions," but she declined to elaborate.

"We take the security of all volunteers seriously," said Edward Hobson, chief of the Peace Corps' Office of Safety and Security and a

COMMERCIAL TRUCK BREAKS THROUGH MEDIAN, SPILLS PIPING ON I-84 NEAR JEROME

TIMES-NEWS

Interstate 84 near Jerome was shut down for several hours Sunday when a commercial truck driver veered into the opposite lanes of travel and spilled a load of 50-foot piping.

Chang-Yi Huang, 42, of Brooklyn, N.Y., was traveling westbound on I-84 at about 8 a.m. Sunday when he became distracted, according to an Idaho State Police media release. Huang then drove off the shoulder, overcorrected, drove through the median and came to a rest facing west-bound in the eastbound lanes. He spilled his load in the westbound lanes in the process.

Huang was taken to St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center in Twin Falls by ground ambulance, where he was treated and released with minor injuries. He was wearing a seatbelt.

The eastbound lanes were partially blocked by the wreck for about four hours. The westbound lanes were completely blocked for about 5.5 hours. ISP is investigating the crash.

Budget

The city budget must be set within the next three weeks.

It wasn't all glum news for Bowyer, however: During the council's flurry, it formalized spending $185,000 to build new restrooms in the Oregon Trail Youth Complex. Now, the bathrooms are in the center of the park and heavily shadowed at night, making them a target for vandalism, or worse. Just last year, someone snuck into the bathroom at night and took a sledgehammer to the brick wall separating the bathroom from the concession stand, apparently in an attempt to steal what was in there, Bowyer said.

Bowyer hopes the new restroom facilities, aside from be-

More decisions like those affecting Bowyer's department may happen at tonight's Twin Falls City Council meeting, walking the partisan tightrope of protecting the principle of "one person, one vote," while still satisfying passionate loyalists who want the best deal possible to maximize their political clout.

There's also the matter of the Idaho Legislature's incumbents, none of whom wants to face off against each other. Counties, cities and even Indian tribes are also weighing in, fearing they'll be disenfranchised.

"There's still a high probability that somebody is going to sue us," concedes Evan Frasure, the Republican co-chairman.

Since the panel started in June, much of the public debate has focused on internal GOP politics: Eight Republican senators who opposed schools chief Tom Luna's education reforms would run against incumbents under one GOP-backed map proposal, prompting speculation that conservatives are whispering in redistricting commissioners' ears and demanding payback against moderates.

Gary Moncrief, a Boise State University political science professor, says redistricting almost everywhere is contentious. In Idaho, it's maybe worse.

"Not only are there the partisan and incumbency issues, but also the difficulty of creating districts that make sense in a state with very uneven population growth and substantial challenges due to geography," Moncrief said. "I do not think it is surprising that there has been some controversy and, frankly, sniping between members."

For a map to be accepted, at least four commissioners must support it. Democrats or Republicans must peel off at least one defector from the rival side.

With Sept. 6 fast approaching, the divide between the GOP's Frasure, Lorna Finman and Lou Esposito and their Democratic counterparts, Allen Andersen, Julie Kane and George Moses, is grounded in statutory and constitutional provisions set up to ensure the fairest map possible.

Republicans want to follow closely the 2009 Legislature's directive that seeks to avoid big, unwieldy districts like District 31 in southeastern Idaho, where travel often requires detouring through Wyoming. The two-year-old law encourages legislative districts containing more than one county to be linked by state highways.

Meanwhile, Democrats argue the roads provision undercuts the Idaho Constitution's mandate for them to avoid splitting up the state's 44 counties.

"Our plan is as nearly constitutionally perfect as we could get," said Moses, a Boise union organizer.

Esposito, a campaign consultant to GOP lawmakers including U.S. Rep. Raul Labrador, said the Democrats' insistence on this point creates the same problems that plagued the last redistricting: A mammoth megadistrict in northern and central Idaho stretching almost from Lake Pend Oreille to Riggins, about 250 miles.

"Ultimately, it might take a court decision to find out if something is constitutional," Esposito said. "I'm hoping it doesn't come to that."

Last Wednesday — in advance of a scheduled break until Aug. 30 — Frasure met privately with Anderson, while Finman sat down behind closed doors with Kane, for several hours in what the panel called "sidebar conversations." The line of thinking? A little one-on-one time, far from the glare of live Internet-televized hearings at the Idaho Capitol — and scrutiny from feverish party mates who would look askance at their commissioners giving too much ground — could result in progress.

Afterward, Frasure left hope that there will be a last-minute deal.

"I didn't come here to fail," he said. "I am putting on a brand-new set of glasses."

Due Process

former forensic investigator in Orlando. "If a volunteer chooses to pursue legal options after a crime, we stand beside them every step of the way."

Victims and critics say the change was among many missteps the Peace Corps has made in protecting its 8,655 volunteers and trainees. The humanitarian organization, which this year celebrates its 50th anniversary, has come under fire in recent months for its handling of sexual assaults and the death of a volunteer in West Africa. The young woman, Kate Puzey, was killed days after she told Peace Corps staff that a fellow teacher was molesting students.

In May, Peace Corps Director Aaron S. Williams acknowledged problems and promised changes at a congressional hearing, where lawmakers and crime victims complained that the Peace Corps suffers from a "blame-the-victim" culture.

Rep. Ted Poe, R-Texas, chief House sponsor of a bill that would force the Peace Corps to give sexual assault victims more support, said in an interview that he did not know the Peace Corps had shifted responsibility for crime investigations to in-country security personnel.

"It would seem to me that in criminal cases, you need trained officers responding rather than people who have other duties," he said.

Peace Corps staff members operate in each of the 77 developing countries where volunteers are posted. They function separately from the U.S. embassies and include security officers who handle many duties. Often, they have no law enforcement background. Former agents and inspectors general at the Peace Corps said they believe that shifting responsibility to the security staff lessened the chances that crimes will be solved.

"We just felt like this was going to be a travesty and tragedy for volunteers to not have an advocate," De Mello said.

Peace Corps volunteers always have faced dangers abroad. Volunteers reported more than 1,000 rapes, attempted rapes and sexual assaults from 2000 to 2010, statistics show. Because many crimes go unreported, Peace Corps officials believe the real numbers are higher.

But when volunteers become crime victims, the U.S. government cannot prosecute in a foreign country. It can, however, pressure local authorities — as the federal agents did. That responsibility now falls to the Peace Corps' local security officers. U.S. Embassy staffers may help, but their resources are limited.

Volunteers in developing countries often deal with police officers who are overloaded with work and undertrained, and they get no special treatment. "A Peace Corps volunteer would not be any higher on the totem pole than anyone in the country who was a victim of a violent crime," said Henry Mulzac, a former detective who worked on the inspector general's team.

The Peace Corps contends that the number of arrests in crimes against volunteers has remained about the same since responsibilities were shifted. About a third of the reported cases resulted in arrests when the inspector where further budget discussions appear to be the big topic. Last week, council members asked for more information on — or the defense of — more than $800,000 in proposed city spending. The total budget is currently set at $46.2 million, which includes a $380,000 increase that the council added so it has wiggle room in the last weeks of the budgeting process. The total spending in the budget can still be lowered.

The budget questions from the council range from $10,000 for utility vehicles to discussion on $135,000 set aside for three new police cruisers. Other cost cutting proposals, such as replacing travel for training with online classes and decreasing the miscellaneous contingency line item, were also discussed last week with the council.

general's office handled the cases; the percentage remains the same today.

But the drop in sexual assault cases that result in prosecutions — from about 60 percent to 46 percent, according to figures provided to a congressional committee — underscores what critics call a serious step back for volunteers.

Inspector General Kathy A. Buller last year questioned how effectively the current system is in protecting volunteers. In a report, Buller wrote that the "lack of a comprehensive security policy" could not "ensure consistent support to volunteers."

But Buller, who was hired in 2008, said in a statement that her office should not be investigating crimes and that the shift of responsibility was appropriate. Otherwise, she said, her office "would be responsible for reviewing a program under its administration," creating a conflict.

Peace Corps officials say they have made improvements that Buller recommended: Local security programs are now reviewed more thoroughly, and security staffs are offered online training, they said.

The inspector general's office first took responsibility for investigations in 2003 as the Peace Corps faced several unsolved slayings. Walter Poirier, a volunteer in Bolivia, disappeared in 2001 and was never found. Congressional auditors and news accounts criticized the Peace Corps' response.

The inspector general's office hired local lawyers and signed an agreement with the Defense Department to perform autopsies when a volunteer died. Legal cases were laid out in detail in reports to Congress. Dozens of cases were prosecuted.

Julia Campbell, a volunteer from Fairfax County, Va., disappeared in 2007 in a remote village in the Philippines. She was found slain 10 days later. An investigator trained in criminal searches broke the case, working with the Philippine army. Campbell's killer was sentenced to 40 years in prison.

But by 2008, Peace Corps leaders concluded that the watchdog office should drop the investigative role. Then-Director Ronald A. Tschetter said local police should handle criminal investigations. The inspector general should focus on waste, fraud and abuse, he said.

Geoffrey A. Johnson, then the acting inspector general, argued that Tschetter's approach would not be as effective. "The majority of law enforcement agencies where Peace Corps programs operate are severely understaffed, undertrained, underpaid and ill-equipped," he wrote in protest in a memo to Tschetter.

Volunteers and their families have continued to complain about problems dealing with local police forces, and some believe the decision to rely on in-country security staffs has seriously hampered the quest for justice.

Bingham, the volunteer raped in Bolivia, allowed The Washington Post to use her name in praising the work of DeMello. (The Post normally does not identify victims of sexual assault.)

Without a trained investigator, she said, her case would have languished. Prosecutors in the small city where she was attacked had never tried someone for rape — let alone used DNA evidence in court, DeMello said.

"Julie was so experienced," Bingham said. "She fought so hard for me in all aspects."

Sheriff: No Sign of Foul Play in Couple's Death

BOISE (AP) • A law enforcement official says investigators have found no sign of foul play involving the deaths of a Meridian couple missing for three weeks whose bodies were found late Friday in a remote area near the central Idaho city of Lowman.

Boise County Sheriff Ben Roeber says the couple's vehicle apparently went off a narrow gravel road over an embankment of about 60 to 80 feet and rolled before coming to rest on its tires.

Roeber says 81-year-old Charles Rigg and 77-year-old Barbara Rigg apparently survived the crash because their bodies were found outside the vehicle. He says it's unclear how long they lived after the accident.

Roeber says the couple's white schnauzer named Sassy was found alive in the area and returned to the family.

Police Seek Witnesses After SF Stadium Shootings

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) • Police interviewed witnesses and looked for suspects Sunday after two men were shot and wounded following a San Francisco 49ers-Oakland Raiders preseason game, while the NFL and the mayors of the two cities jointly called for an end to “intimidation” and acts of violence at sporting events.

Saturday night’s shooting in the parking lot at Candlestick Park evoked memories of another recent disturbing act of post-game violence involving two rival California pro sports teams — the near-fatal beating in March of a San Francisco Giants fan outside Dodger Stadium.

In Saturday’s attacks, a 24-year-old man, who reportedly was wearing a “F—the Niners” T-shirt, remained hospitalized in serious condition Sunday after being shot several times in the stomach.

He had managed to stumble to Candlestick Park stadium security for help despite the severe injuries, police said.

A second victim, a 20-year-old man, was treated for less serious wounds in a separate shooting, also after the game.

Sgt. Mike Andraychak said Sunday that police are looking for “a person of interest” connected to at least one of the shootings. He would not specify which shooting.

Young Jerome Stares Down Tough Schedule

BY DAVID BASHORE

JEROME • It could be a great year for Jerome. Could also be a pretty long one.

In Jerome’s heyday a few years ago, the Tigers had more than 100 kids out for football. Those gawdy numbers are gone, and the game plan now has to change, if only slightly.

Coach Gary Krumm said he’ll need to lean on more sophomores than has been necessary in the past, which will bode well for the future but could cause growing pains earlier in the year. Some of the more experienced players will be counted on to play both ways, something that wasn’t normally done the past few seasons. With Jerome’s fast-paced spread offense, conditioning is at a premium in preseason practices.

Considering the first two games are at Middleton and reigning Class 4A champ Bishop Kelly, the Tigers would probably snap your hand off at the offer of a 1-1 record heading into their home opener Sept. 16.

Senators Break in New Faces, Coaches in 2011

GOODING • It’s been a whirlwind start to the new season for the Gooding Senators.

Some varsity players from last year moved away. New players arrived from out of town. A couple new assistant coaches are barking orders on the practice field.

“It’s been a different and exciting first couple weeks of two-a-days,” said Gooding head coach Cameron Anderson. “But ultimately it’s been a really positive experience and we’re excited to start the season.”

Anderson hired assistant coaches Sid Gambles and Terry Waitley, both formerly of Jerome and the pair will coach the offense and the linemen respectively. Two other imports include players Will and Jesse Batch, who moved from California.

Will expects to start at offensive tackle and Jesse will provide key depth to the program of about 50 players. Anderson was also able to talk cross country runner, Jacob Becker, onto the team and he is making noise at the slot position.

He joins running backs Alec Basterrechea and Kyle Rison as offensive weapons for new quarterback Josh Faulkner.

“Alec has really matured this year and has shown a lot of leadership for this team and Kyle will also be a big part of the offense,” Anderson said. “And we also have Cole McGinnis back along the line and that’s huge for us.”

The Senators begin the season Sept. 2 against Butte County.

Kort Breckenridge, now 23, suffers from brain damage caused by concussion injuries in 2005 when he was a senior on the Teton High School football team in Driggs, Idaho.

Teton H.S. Player’s Concussions Prompt Awareness, Prevention

Teton High School football player Kort Breckenridge sustained a series of concussions six years ago and now suffers from brain damage. New cognitive testing has become more common among high school sports as concussion research has accelerated over the past five years.

BY ZACH KYLE
The Post-Register

DRIGGS • Six years have passed since a series of concussions nearly killed Teton High School football player Kort Breckenridge.

Memories of Breckenridge collapsing on the field, the emergency brain surgery that saved his life and his permanent brain damage prompted the Teton County School District to take action.

Last week in the high school gym, senior quarterback Logan Petersen stood on one foot with his eyes closed as Caroline Faure clicked a stopwatch. Faure ran Petersen and the other 50 Teton varsity and JV football players through several balance tests, noting each time a player lost balance.

The tests were difficult, but the players weren’t competing against one another. Instead, their performance gave Faure a baseline to test each player against if they take a hard hit or show symptoms of a concussion.

Petersen said he sees Breckenridge limp while walking the sidelines at football games. He hears Breckenridge’s slurred speech. He said he’ll gladly struggle through a few awkward tests to ward off long-term consequences.

“(The tests) show where you are at,” Petersen said. “We’ve had the experience with Kort. That scares me sometimes, to think if that happened to me. I think (the tests) will help out.”

Faure has tackled concussions in youth sports as a personal crusade. An assistant professor at Idaho State University and the founder of the Center for Sports Concussions at ISU, Faure also ran the Teton players through a neurocognitive test in the school computer lab.

The IMPACT test — the same test used by the NFL — measured players’ attention span, reaction time and working memory, the first cognitive faculties diminished by concussions.

If a player takes a hard hit, he must take the test a few days later or when symptom-free. If a player’s scores are in line with the baseline test, the player returns to the field. Scores below the baseline show lingering symptoms, meaning the player must sit out at least until the score returns to the baseline.

Neurocognitive testing has become more common in high school sports as concussion research has accelerated over the past five years. Players from 23 Idaho high school football teams take the neurocognitive test, including players from Twin Falls, Wood River, Teton, Salmon, Idaho Falls and Skyline high schools. Teton, however, is the first district in the state to mandate the tests.

Breckenridge struggles to remember anything for longer than 15 minutes, and he may need supervision the rest of his life. But he’s alert and pleased that his alma mater is ahead of the curve. Teton also tested its boys and girls soccer teams and will test the basketball and wrestling teams in the winter.

“(The tests) should be an absolute must,” Breckenridge said, his inflection a little off. “I don’t want kids going through the hell that I went through, to not be able to talk right.”

Shirley Shakes Things Up at MVS

BY LINDA BRITTSAN
Times-News correspondent

Realizing that there aren’t many races remaining in the 2011 season, he knew what he had to do, and he got it done.

After qualifying second and winning his heat race, Budweiser Super Stocks driver Daniel Shirley then sealed the deal with a main event win Saturday night at Magic Valley Speedway.

Shirley, who began the main from the fourth position, remained cool in the early laps while Ernie Hall took off with the lead after starting from the pole.

After falling back to fifth, Shirley worked his way up to third by lap 12 just behind Hall and Kris McKean.

Five laps later, the cautions came into play and two consecutive restarts faced off Hall and McKean for the lead.

It was the next caution however, that gave Shirley his big break when McKean was sent to the rear of the field after the muffler of his car began to drag the track.

After challenging Hall for control of the race at the next restart, Shirley took the lead at lap 20 and was able to hold off Hall, a hard-charging McKean and Casey Pehrson to the finish at lap 40.

“When I saw Kris (McKean) get back up to the front that quick I was really surprised,” said Shirley of the final laps.

“But Casey (Pehrson) was kind of blocking him off for a while. I don’t know if he was doing it for his sake or my sake of both our sakes but it worked out. Our car was fast tonight though. We tried a new set-up and it worked.”

After failing post-race inspection, Hall was removed from his second place finish and given a last place result.

In other Whelen All-American Racing Series action, double main events for the Project Filter Street Stocks sent two different drivers to the winner’s circle.

Chase Carraway, who is in a fight for the championship, took the lead of the first main event at lap six and was still in front when the checkered flag flew at lap 25.

Kendel Woll, current points leader, finished 3.803 seconds behind Carraway.

“We didn’t change anything on the car for this week but the first main worked out great,” Carraway said. “Actually I thought Kendel was right behind me the whole time. I didn’t realize he was battling back there for position.”

In the second main, Mike Gill took the lead at lap three and although he never gave up the front runner position he had to hold off a pack of drivers to the finish.

Paul Browne, Kendel Woll and Craig Nuthak all finished less than one second behind Gill as the checkered flag waved at lap 25, but Gill held the edge and pocketed his first win in his first start of the season.

For the Quale’s Electronics Jr. Stingers, Holden Maughan took the lead at lap three and proceeded to pull away from the rest of the field.

At lap 20, Maughan crossed the finish line still well out in front and the celebrations of his first win in the division began.

Kris McKean drove to Victory Lane in the Quale’s Electronics Pro Hornets and Jeff Peck survived the battle to capture the TVGoldandSilver Thunderdogs main event win.

Webb Simpson holds the trophy after winning the Wyndham Championship golf tournament in Greensboro, N.C., Sunday.

Simpson Wins Wyndham Championship

GREENSBORO, N.C. • Webb Simpson won the Wyndham Championship for his first PGA Tour title, finishing with a bogey-free 3-under 67 on Sunday for a three-stroke victory.

The Raleigh native and former Wake Forest standout had an 18-under 262 total at Sedgefield Country Club.

George McNeill (64) was second, and Tommy Gainey (69) was third at 14 under in the final event before the PGA Tour playoffs. Carl Pettersson (69), Vijay Singh (65), Jerry Kelly (65), Kyung-tae Kim (66) and Charles Howell III (67) followed at 13 under.

Simpson turned in a steady, bogey-free round and gave himself plenty of breathing room with birdies on Nos. 15 and 16. After taking the lead during Round 3 with a late five-hole stretch of four birdies and an eagle, Simpson opened his final round with eight straight pars before moving to 16 under with a birdie on No. 9.

Safeway Classic
NORTH PLAINS, Ore. • Suzann Pettersen rallied to win the LPGA Safeway Classic, overcoming a nine-stroke deficit with a 7-under 64 and beating Na Yeon Choi with a par on the first hole of a playoff.

In the playoff, Choi's second shot on the par-4 18th went into the water to the right of the green, and she missed a putt for bogey before Pettersen sank her winning putt.

Pettersen, coming off a victory Aug. 7 in the European tour's Ladies Irish Open, won her second LPGA Tour title of the year and eighth overall. The Norwegian star jumped to No. 2 in the world behind Yani Tseng.

Choi finished with a 73 to match Pettersen at 6 under on Pumpkin Ridge's Ghost Creek Course.

Senior Players Championship
HARRISON, N.Y. • Fred Couples made a 3-foot birdie putt on the third hole of a playoff with John Cook to win the Seniors Players Championship for his first major victory on the Champions Tour.

Couples, the 1992 Masters champion, won for the first time this season after winning four times last year in his first season on the 50-and-over tour.

BURRESS LEADS JETS OVER BENGALS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. • Plaxico Burress caught three passes for 66 yards, including an over-the-shoulder 26-yarder for a touchdown, in his first game in nearly three years to help the New York Jets beat the Cincinnati Bengals 27-7 in a preseason game Sunday night.

Burress, signed last month after serving 20 months in prison on a gun charge, made his debut with the Jets (1-1) a memorable one. He caught a 20-yard pass from Mark Sanchez on the Jets' first offensive play and another 20-yard grab in the second quarter, but the highlight came on New York's last offensive play of the first half.

Burress took off down the left sideline, drew separation from defensive back Fred Bennett and hauled in a pass from Sanchez and fell into the end zone to put New York up 17-7.

Sanchez finished 12 of 20 for 173 yards and two touchdowns, the first to Santonio Holmes, as the Jets' starting offense played the entire first half.

Chargers 20, Cowboys 7
ARLINGTON, Texas • Philip Rivers led San Diego to scores on two of three drives, then coach Norv Turner earned his club score another touchdown with two successful challenges on a single series in the Chargers' victory over Dallas.

Rivers went 8 of 11 for 92 yards, with a 7-yard touchdown pass to Randy McMichael.

Dallas' Tony Romo was 8 of 12 for 58 yards, with a 6-yard touchdown pass to Jason Witten.

Romo also threw an interception on an ill-advised pass.

Turner got an interception by Billy Volek overturned, and got a touchdown for Ryan Mathews on a play officials declared him out of bounds inside the 1.

Both teams are 1-1.

Kyle Busch outlasts Johnson in Michigan

BROOKLYN, Mich. (AP) • Kyle Busch won his 23rd race on NASCAR's Sprint Cup circuit, pulling even with brother Kurt in career victories.

Now, Kyle would like to match another of Kurt's accomplishments — winning a series title.

“He’s always still got that carrot over me,” Kyle Busch said. “Certainly, being the younger brother, I’ve had a little bit shorter time being here, but still, it’s great to see both of us be as competitive as we’ve been and as successful as we’ve been.”

Kyle Busch outlasted Jimmie Johnson on Sunday in a green-white-checked finish at Michigan International-al Speedway, winning his fourth Cup race of the year. Busch leads the series standings by 10 points over Johnson and is assured of a spot in the Chase for the Sprint Cup.

Kurt Busch won the series championship in 2004. Now, his 26-year-old brother might be the driver with the best chance of ending Johnson's five-year hold on the title. There are three races remaining before the 10-race Chase begins.

“Certainly we’ve built ourselves into championship contenders this year,” Kyle Busch said. “There’s a great opportunity for us to win three more races before the Chase starts.”

Prevention

and pitched a bill to the Idaho House of Representatives aiming to curb concussions in high school sports.

Breckenridge spoke on the House floor about how surgeons removed the right hemisphere of his skull, and how his brain ballooned beyond his ear.

He spoke about talking to God as he lay in an induced coma for two weeks.

“Kort’s Law,” as Faure’s bill was known, had three legs. The first leg mandated concussion training for all youth coaches and required concussion information to be available for all players and parents. The second mandated instant removal from competition and practice for any symptomatic player. The third required clearance from a medical professional for the player to return.

Lawmakers passed only the first leg into law. Faure was frustrated that the language about the required training was weak and lacked criteria, but she said it gives her something to build on.

Idaho schools are making progress toward pulling concussed players off the field and preventing subsequent and more devastating injuries. Teton football coach Bill Vasas said he’s wiser to concussion symptoms than he was three years ago even though he wasn’t Kort Breckenridge’s coach in 2005.

Last year, the Teton coaching staff identified two players with concussions and held them out of competition.

“They’ve done a great job educating us what to look for,” Vasas said. “It’s not just the big hits and the things you associate a concussion with. It’s the little symptoms you don’t even think about. Now, we can look at a kid and say, ‘OK, maybe he’s a little bit off. We’ll check him.’”

Coaches aren’t doctors. Testing gives coaches a new tool and a way to explain to a symptomatic kid or a frustrated parent why Johnny has to sit out.

But testing doesn’t solve the biggest problem in preventing second and third concussions — convincing players to report the first one.

Looking back, Ray Breckenridge said his son had at least 10 concussions between seventh and 12th grade. As a registered nurse, Ray Breckenridge saw the hits during games, then saw the symptoms at home.

But Kort hid his symptoms as well as he could. A mostly honest kid, he lied to coaches and his father when they questioned why he was rubbing his eyes or uncharacteristically moody or when an A grade fell to a D.

Vomiting after contact is one of the most clear-cut symptoms.

Only after Breckenridge nearly died did his teammates come forward with stories about him vomiting behind the bus after games.

Susan Thompson’s five sons have played in the Red-skin program. Two suffered concussions.

As Faure ran players through the tests, Thompson said she had no faith that her sons would report a concussion even after hearing Faure detail the long-term risks.

“They are boys,” she said. “They are supposed to be tough, so probably not. That’s the scariest part.”

Which raises the million dollar question: If Kort Breckenridge was a senior today instead of 2005, would he be forced off the field to prevent the sequence of concussions that nearly killed him?

Ray Breckenridge said yes. “No question,” he said. “The testing picks up on things that you can’t fake. I’m convinced if we’d had that in place, we would have picked up those subtle changes early enough that we could have eluded the major ordeal.”

Players embrace a warrior mentality, but concussions can be life-altering. Teton athletes have a taste of that reality because of Breckenridge.

They see him around town and at games. They know what’s at stake.

“If I do get hit, and I do come out, I will feel a little bad about missing some playing time,” Petersen said. “But I know it’s better to miss playing time than to miss out on the rest of your life.”

Don't Let Politicians Drive an ATV into Wildlife Management

Professional fish and game management was a hard-won achievement in Idaho. Let's not throw it away.

Should Idaho turn hunters riding ATVs loose to go where they will in the Idaho backwoods? Maybe, or maybe not. That's a wildlife management decision.

But legislation to accomplish the same thing could go a long way toward dragging the Idaho Department of Fish and Game back into politics.

It took decades for Idaho to build firewalls between politicians and professional game managers. For the first 39 years of Fish and Game's history, legislators, county commissioners, the governor and just about anyone else with political influence could and did call up the state game warden and tell him how to do his job.

And who to hire.

Every time Idahoans got a new governor, they got a new Fish and Game Department from director down to conservation officers, with little regard for any qualifications in managing wildlife.

And it goes without saying that those local game wardens sometimes took their orders from someone other than their supervisors at Fish and Game.

Finally, Idahoans had enough. In 1938, they began signing petitions for a voter initiative to turn management of Fish and Game over to a board of commissioners, appointed by the governor but independent in their management. That fall, the measure passed by a 3-to-1 margin.

The following year, the commission hired its first professional director and implemented a merit system for choosing employees.

In the 72 years since, governors have occasionally tried to chip away at the independence of the commission, but by and large politicians have kept out of game management.

Now they're knocking on the door again.

In the next legislation session, state Sen. Tim Corder, R-Mountain Home, is likely to reintroduce bills that would strip the state's wildlife management agency of much of its authority to regulate where hunters can steer ATVs on state, U.S. Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management territory.

Last winter's proposed legislation, which was shelved in the Senate Resources and Conservation Committee, would have curbed Fish and Game's ability to regulate where hunters can drive their vehicles in a third of its 99 hunting units.

Not surprisingly Fish and Game took exception to that, viewing Corder's bills as an attempt to undermine its capability to manage Idaho's trophy mule deer, elk and other big game as it sees fit.

Under current hunting regulations, the state requires armed hunters who head out onto public land in about a third of Idaho's 99 hunting units to stick to established roads, while keeping away from off-road vehicle or jeep trails and areas that are otherwise open to unarmed recreational ATV riders.

This is an explosive issue among hunters themselves. Some outdoorsmen think riding down game on a snarling ATV violates the ethics of the sport.

But of the all the states where this debate it being played out — and there are several — Idaho is place most like to see ATV-riding hunters off-trail first.

And it that happens, it will take place on a slippery slope.

If the Legislature can dictate hunting regulations, where's the line between professional game management and politics?

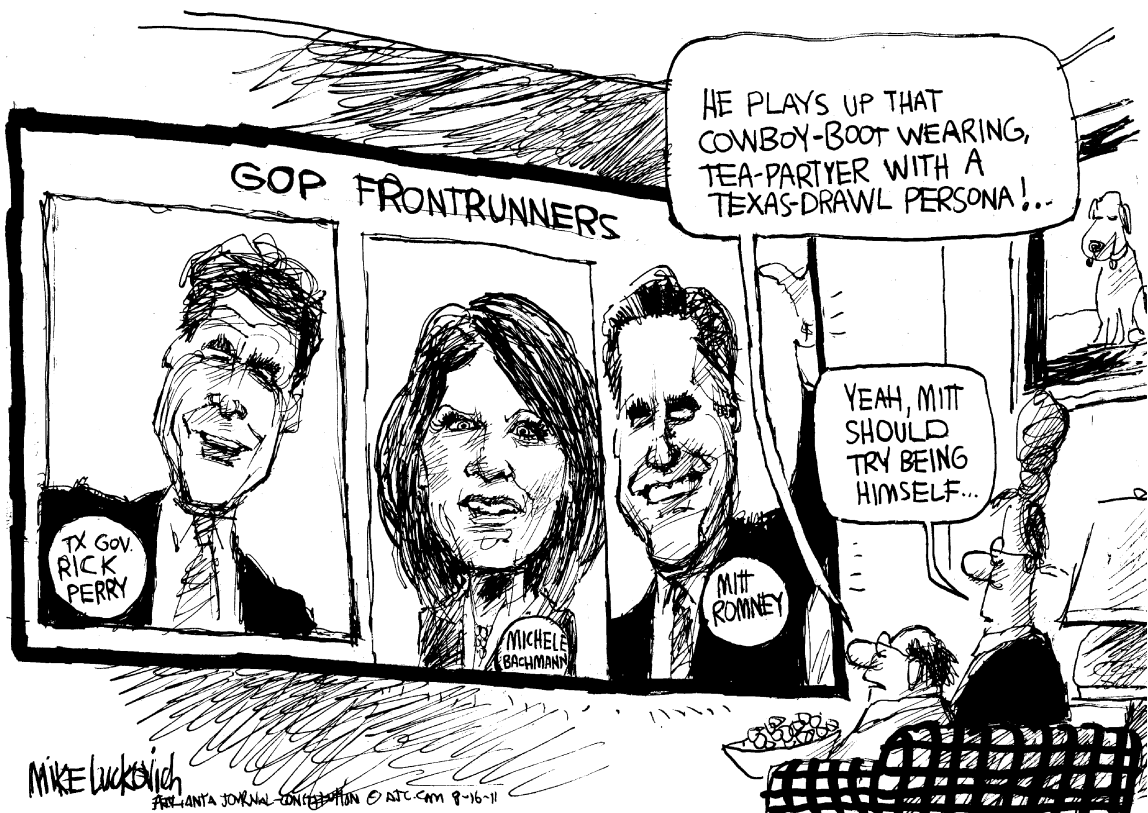

They only thing that keeps politics out of wildlife management in Idaho is the self-control of the politicians — and broad public agreement that the resource must be protected by professionals.

Idahoans didn't come to that conclusion naturally; that consensus was forged by bad experiences with a Fish and Game Department whipsawed by elected officials.

Let's not go there again.

"I can swim a little bit and was looking at a tree branch. I heard one woman yelling for help, but the water was coming down so fast, I couldn't see. ... I've never seen nothing like this in my life."

Rhodearland 'Bob' Bailey, who is about 80, to the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review after he was rescued from the roof of his car when a deadly flash flood ravaged the city Friday.

When Being Jus' Folks is Hard Work

Want to be authentic? Good luck! These days it takes deliberate effort, focus, even a long-term commitment to change. This might sound surprising to those of you who associate authenticity with just being yourself, but misconceptions about authenticity abound, not least among them the idea that it comes naturally to everyone.

Then again, I'm referring not to the traditional definition of authenticity, but its expanded contemporary definition. Call it "aw-shucks authenticity." Instead of "true to one's own personality, spirit or character" (Webster's words), it's more like "successfully evoking a culturally agreed-upon idea of ordinariness." That is, rolling one's sleeves up to one's elbows or convincingly wearing plaid shirts, being "plain-spoken," or displaying small-town roots as proof of trustworthiness.

Then again, I'm referring not to the traditional definition of authenticity, but its expanded contemporary definition. Call it "aw-shucks authenticity." Instead of "true to one's own personality, spirit or character" (Webster's words), it's more like "successfully evoking a culturally agreed-upon idea of ordinariness." Then again, I'm referring not to the traditional definition of authenticity, but its expanded contemporary definition. Call it "aw-shucks authenticity." Instead of "true to one's own personality, spirit or character" (Webster's words), it's more like "successfully evoking a culturally agreed-upon idea of ordinariness." That is, rolling one's sleeves up to one's elbows or convincingly wearing plaid shirts, being "plain-spoken," or displaying small-town roots as proof of trustworthiness.

These days the word is thrown around so profligately you'd think that all other traits once considered political assets — experience, intelligence, leadership — pale in comparison to conveying the impression of being an ordinary Joe. In 2008, the Palin campaign made the aw-shucks ethos its calling card, but it was there even before she joined the fray (remember Hillary Rodham Clinton drinking shots in an Indiana bar or Obama's sad attempt at bowling?).

Now, we're swimming in "authentic" candidates. Just the other day, Michele Bachmann told a crowd in Iowa, "I'm a real person, not a politician." Earlier this month a Politico article about Sen. Rand Paul's support for his father's campaign described the need for "an anti-establishment, authentic candidate." The Atlantic Wire wrote that the candidates were fighting to prove which "is the most authentic Christian conservative."

If only political writers had access to one of those X-ray machines that art authenticators use to distinguish forgeries from the real thing. But alas, judgments about who's faking it are left primarily to what we might call (for the imposed lack of a more familiar but less printable term) the bogosity detectors of the American people. And, based on some of the people we elect, it seems our radar for the bogus is easily scrambled.

Once we were drawn to glamorous public figures we could put on a pedestal; today we prefer to idolize those we can see as just like us. To describe someone as "down to earth" is high praise. But to run for president (or to even consider it), requires more hubris, energy and ambition than people "just like us" could ever muster. Sure, some politicians come by some their aw-shucks qualities honestly. Some legitimately prefer pulled pork to poached salmon (that would be you, Bill Clinton). But most are, for better or worse, "extraordinary" each in his or her own way. No matter how humble they try to appear, running for president is an intrinsically unhumble pursuit.

And that's just part of the problem with this new definition of authenticity. Not only is it artifice, and hence a contradiction, it's downright exclusionary. It forgets that mean people can be authentically mean, shallow people can be authentically shallow and snobby people can be authentically snobby. John F. Kennedy, for instance, a real American hero president, was authentic all right — authentically rich, Harvard-educated and privileged — but he definitely wasn't a plaid-shirt guy. Putting aside his politics, can you imagine him winning an election today? Can you imagine him (or, say, George H.W. Bush for that matter) pandering to Tea Party sensibilities by employing folksy aphorisms, bowling or entering a mud wrestling match for most authentic Christian?

I can't. But even if you can, surely we can all admit that authenticity these days is less an innate state than a high-maintenance hairstyle. All that time in front of the mirror, when the nation has bigger things to worry about.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Obama Runs Risk of London-Style Teachable Moment

Obama's founded a new era of whining with the Willie Nelson bus and the complain-a-polooza tour. Absent are the plans for housing rebounds, economic recovery, deficit reduction and job creation. They remain cocktail napkin scribbles in his pocket because this tour is for blaming and complaining. Lamenting congressional dysfunction is preaching to the choir but there's a campaign twist here: Pontius Pilot's washing his hands, hoping to remove his name from the blame game.

I have great affection for President Obama's speeches. They've always had optimism, hope and the energizing faith that the next day holds something wonderful if we just hang on till morning. But the latest addresses have been dark and bitter. They're repetitiously accusatory and divisive with the notable absence of the "me, myself and I" accolades that once peppered his speeches. Now they just sound like suicide letters from the edge.

He's screaming for attention while shaming anyone opposing his policies. He wants to guilt those who made him pull the proverbial trigger and elicit buckets of tears and pity from his faithful. He's blamed technology, Tea Party, tsunamis, volcanoes, foreign economies, local states and Arab Springs for the retardation and failure of his policies. Daily he lashes out at corporations, the rich, fat cats and in general the successful. And now he begs us to call Congress requesting unification because he's failed to lead.

It's always been a president's job to unify a divided Congress, to inspire them; to galvanize them in the toughest of times. Many great presidents have succeeded in similar situations without calling upon Americans to pinch hit. His desperation could easily backfire into a London-style teachable moment, and I guarantee it won't be Tea Party folk sitting in jails.

Obama can't pass up a microphone or photo-op, but can he lay down his pride to pass the torch if needed? If there's a better Democratic candidate out there, let 'em shine.

COUNTY LIMITS ABSENTEE BALLOT POLLING LOCATIONS

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) • The Kootenai County clerk says city halls in the county aren't secure enough to house absentee ballots so anyone wanting to cast such a ballot early and in person in future elections will have to do so at the Kootenai County Elections Office in Coeur d'Alene.

Cliff Hayes also says it's too expensive to provide staff to work at the absentee polling sites. The Coeur d'Alene Press reports in a story published Sunday that it will be the first time in decades that several Kootenai County municipalities won't have their city halls open for early ballot voting.

Some Post Falls and Coeur d'Alene officials are unhappy with the change, noting it will make voting more difficult.

Tussock Moths Make Impact on Idaho, Wash. Forests

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) • Forest experts say tussock moths appear to be at or near a 10-year cyclical peak with caterpillars feeding on Douglas fir and grand fir trees in eastern Washington state and northern Idaho.

Entomologists say the tussock moth outbreaks usually subside within two to three years.

Experts in the two states say that last year the species was active in 140,000 acres in Kootenai

County in Idaho and 570 acres in Spokane County in Washington state. Estimates aren't available for the size of this year's outbreak.

Tom Eckberg of the Idaho Department of Lands tells The Spokesman-Review that the trees often appear dead but usually recover with new buds appearing in the spring.

Idaho Falls Man Killed When Tree Falls on Home

IDAHO FALLS (AP) • The Bonneville County Sheriff's Office says an 82-year-old Idaho Falls man has died after a large tree fell on his home.

Officials say emergency responders found Louis Carney in his bedroom pinned under the tree early Sunday morning and that he showed no signs of life.

Capt. Samuel Hulse says the tree apparently fell just after midnight when a strong windstorm struck the Idaho Falls area.

Hulse says Carney's wife was able to get out of the house and call for help.

Powerful joint pill flying off drug store shelves

Clinical trial; participants began to feel noticeable results in just days

(UMS) – Imagine a pill that can start helping you get around more easily in just a matter of days.⁵

Then think of how great it would be for your joints to begin feeling better too.

Well there's no reason to imagine, a team of scientists has delivered an amazing joint health supplement that's been clinically shown to improve mobility and joint comfort.²

Now, after years of development and testing it's hitting the shelves at all major U.S. pharmacies.

This remarkable joint health pill is called Fast Acting Trigosamine®. It has been clinically shown to produce amazing results; 81% of the participants started feeling better just days after taking the recommended dosage and an incredible 100% reported their joints felt better just midway through the 8 week clinical trial.^{2,3,5}

"I've never seen relief like this before," said Dr. Joseph Dietz.¹

"Our goal was to formulate Trigosamine so that people would start to feel results quickly, and based on the feedback from consumers along with the clinical data I'd say we hit the bulls-eye with this powerful pill," added Dietz.

National drug store shipments are being delivered, but as of today there's no way to know which stores actually have product on their shelves.

"Until we know all the shelves are stocked we'll ship Trigosamine directly to people's homes. As an added bonus, all local residents who call the Regional Health Hotline at 1-866-941-7632 before the 48-hour deadline expires can also qualify for a significant discount," said Darla Miller, Distribution Director for the company.

"We're shipping pills on a first-come, first-served basis; callers just have to be sure they give the bonus approval code of TG16825 when they call and we'll take care of everything for them," she said.

"We know that people suffering with joint discomfort want Trigosamine, the phones have been ringing like crazy. We strongly recommend that local readers call right away to make sure they get their fair share," said Miller.

Trigosamine's formula has a special combination of ingredients that until now have never been blended into a pill. It's this special mixture that was clinically tested and is responsible for delivering the incredible results.

One of the key ingredients is hyaluronate, which is a building block of "human joint oil" and known by medical professionals as synovial fluid.

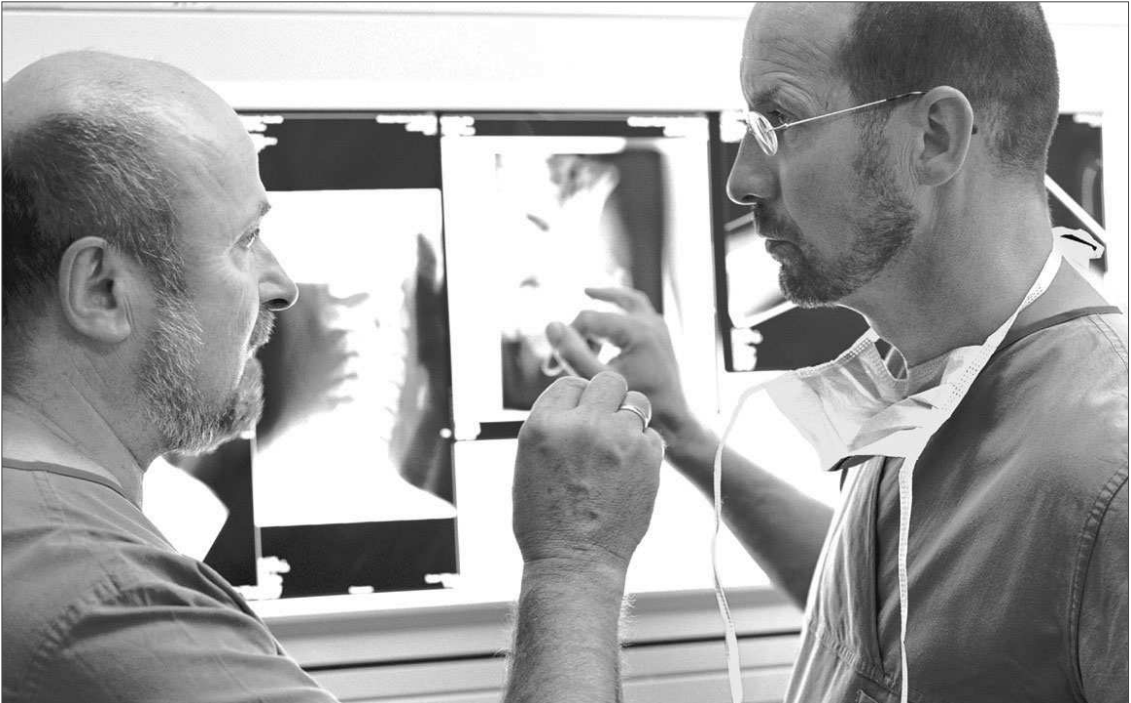

This remarkable molecule can absorb up to 1000 times its own weight in water helping to lubricate the joints which reduces friction while acting as a "shock absorber" allowing for effortless comfortable motion.⁵

"Synovial fluid is part of what allows young people to be highly active without getting sore joints. But as we age we produce less of this fluid which can force bones and joints to grind together causing nagging discomfort," said Dr. Dietz.

"This remarkable combination of ingredients is what makes Trigosamine work so well. It really helps people to move more freely and with greater flexibility," said Dietz.⁵

Trigosamine's powerful results are all supported by a recently completed randomized, double-blind placebo controlled clinical study which is considered to be the "gold standard" for joint health supplements.

While no pill works for every-

■ PROOF THAT IT WORKS: Dr. Philip Howren was so astounded by Fast Acting Trigosamine's® clinical results that he said; "Yes, I am thoroughly impressed with the clinical data, in fact I now take the pill myself to get the joint relief I need. It's my number one recommendation to anyone who suffers with joint discomfort," added Dr. Howren.⁴

one, during this clinical trial, every one of the participants that took this amazing supplement reported an improvement in their joint comfort. The data also shows that their joint comfort just kept getting better the entire time they were taking Trigosamine during clinical study.^{2,5}

On the other hand, the clinical participants that were taking the placebo experienced much different results. Those taking the placebo developed increased joint discomfort and soreness during the clinical study, which is the exact opposite of what happened to participants taking the Fast Acting Trigosamine pills.²

"For participants to get this type of relief is simply amazing," said Dr. Joe Dietz.

"In all my years of clinical research, I've never seen that type of a response before. This powerful supplement is simply remarkable for those suffering with sore joints," he added.

The tough part now will be how to get it.

"National pharmacy shipments are happening daily, but as of right now there's no way to know which drug stores have it and which ones don't," said Darla Miller.

But for those who want to be among the first to get it the company has opened a Regional Health Hotline so people can have it shipped directly to their homes.

Local readers can also qualify for a huge discount if they're lucky enough to get through before the 48-hour deadline expires. The number to call right now is 1-866-941-7632.

"Until shipments get to all the drug stores we're shipping it directly to people who call our hotline," said Miller. "All they have to do is give the bonus approval code of TG16825 when they call and we'll take care of the rest," she added.

That makes the next 48 hours critical for those living in the local area who want this remarkable joint supplement. Those getting through to the hotline within the next 48 hours are not only guaranteed to get the pills delivered directly to their homes, but they can save money too.

Otherwise, those who don't get through may be hard pressed to get their hands on this medical breakthrough. ■

How Fast Acting Trigosamine® Works

(Actual Size)

KNEE

Medical X-Ray

Fast Acting Trigosamine combines three powerful compounds to quickly improve joint comfort.⁵

- 1. HYALURONATE-13:
One tiny molecule of this remarkable compound can hold an amazing 1,000 times its weight in water. This allows naturally occurring hyaluronate to bind water, making the joints extremely slippery allowing them to slide smoothly over one another.^{2,5}
- 2. GLUCOSAMINE SULFATE-15:
Review studies show glucosamine maintains healthy cartilage in the joints by inhibiting joint destroying enzymes. The compound also builds up naturally present amounts in the blood stream used to build healthy cartilage.⁵
- 3. RAPIDFLEX FORMULA-61:
The patented ingredients in RapidFLEX improve overall joint performance and one ingredient increases the speed in which nutrients are absorbed.⁵

■ HEALTHY JOINT: A Diagnostic x-ray reveals a human knee joint that has the proper amount of synovial fluid to lubricate the joint and act as a comfortable shock absorber.

Demand soars for new Omega-3 krill oil pills

New pill's amazing ingredients endorsed by famous physicians during nationally televised medical program

■ "SKYROCKETING SALES": Since the recent medical show features, sales for the new omega-3 supplement Astamega-3™ have soared. Astamega-3, pictured above on a Walgreens store shelf, features a breakthrough formula that can provide consumers with a wide range of health benefits. Walgreens, Rite Aid and CVS are the only pharmacies that currently carry Astamega-3. Consumers can also call 1-888-207-4453 and have this new supplement shipped directly to their homes.

(Canton, OH) - Now that its key ingredients have been featured on a popular TV medical program, demand is soaring for a new omega-3 krill oil supplement.

Doctors and scientists have developed the breakthrough omega-3 formula by combining Krill Oil with Astaxanthin.

This remarkable new supplement is called Astamega-3™ and it can provide people with a variety of health benefits.¹

"The scientific evidence is incredible; by combining Krill Oil and Astaxanthin, we've created a 'super' supplement," said Dr. Rudi Moerck, PhD., president of Valensa International and one of the doctors that helped develop the breakthrough formula.

"By taking just one small Astamega-3 pill per day, people could help improve their cardiovascular, joint and brain functions while also getting the protection of a powerful antioxidant," he said.¹

"Astamega-3 has the potential to help millions of people live healthier, more active lives and that includes me. I'll be taking Astamega-3 every day for the rest of my life," added Dr. Moerck.¹

A closer look at the science explains why doctors are so optimistic.

To begin with, krill oil is a much better source of omega-3 essential fatty acids than fish oil. In fact, some professionals are even referring to krill oil as the "perfect source" for omega-3's.¹

"There are several reasons why krill oil is better than fish oil," said Dr. Joseph Dietz, PhD., Director of Health Science, Research and Development for PatentHEALTH, the company that developed Astamega-3.¹

"Krill oil is absorbed more easily by the body, it's transported directly to the cells, it comes in a very small easy-to-swallow soft-gel and krill are harvested from the Antarctic Ocean so the oil is virtually free from environmental impurities like heavy metals, toxins and pesticides," said Dr. Dietz.

"But what might be the best benefit of krill oil is that since it's delivered to the body in phospholipid form people will rarely, if ever, experience the fishy aftertaste or smell that many encounter when taking fish oil capsules," added Dr. Dietz.

What really separates Astamega-3's formula from fish oil and other krill oil supplements is the addition of Astaxanthin.

Astaxanthin is a powerful antioxidant. Antioxidants are organic compounds within the body that help protect the body's cells from being damaged by oxidation.¹

"Astaxanthin works like a bodyguard," said Dr. Dietz. "It not only helps protect the cells, it also helps the omega-3's from being damaged as well," he said.¹

"That's why we combined it with krill oil and this combination is what makes Astamega-3 such a powerful, effective supplement," added Dr. Dietz.¹

Astamega-3 is brand new so it may be difficult to find at your local pharmacy.

"All of the national chains want it, but as of right now, Walgreens, Rite Aid and CVS are the only national pharmacies that have Astamega-3 in stock," said Eric Barker, Director of Marketing Operations for PatentHEALTH.

But consumers can get it shipped directly to their homes since the company has set up a National Order Hotline for those not able to find it at their local pharmacy.

"All consumers have to do is call 1-888-207-4453 and give the operator approval code KR710 and we'll rush Astamega-3 right out to them," he said.

Consumers that have this remarkable supplement shipped directly to their homes can also save money but they must call within the next 48 hours. ■

Local readers discount code

Local readers can receive a significant discount on Astamega-3 if they have it shipped directly to their homes by calling toll free 1-888-207-4453 and giving the operator discount code KR710 before the 48-hour discount code deadline expires. Those consumers calling after the deadline expires will either have to wait for future promotions, find it at the pharmacy or pay a higher price. Toll-free lines open promptly at 8:30a.m.

Retail Stores: CVS, Rite Aid and Walgreens are reported to have Astamega-3 in stock.

Stock Market Begins to Feed Economic Fear

Fear could drag down the markets even further as stocks have fallen four weeks in a row.

BY BERNARD CONDON and CHRISTOPHER RUGABER

Associated Press

NEW YORK • The stock market is starting to feed economic fear, not just reflect it.

Stocks have fallen four weeks in a row. Some on Wall Street worry that the resulting blow to confidence, not to mention 401(k) statements, has set off a spiral of fear that could push prices even lower, cause people and businesses to pull back and tip the economy into a new recession.

"I'm nervous that fear will lead companies to stop hiring and people to stop spending," says Jim Paulsen, chief investment strategist of Wells Capital Management, famous for his usually bullish take on the markets.

A home sales report this past week showed that more sales than usual fell apart at the last minute, which suggests plunging stocks and dismal economic news gave buyers cold feet. At least 16 percent of deals were canceled ahead of closings last month, four times the rate in May.

Beth Ann Bovino, senior economist at Standard & Poor's, says that another big plunge in stocks could "push us closer to the brink."

The Standard & Poor's 500 stock index ended Friday at 1,123.53, down 5 percent for the week. The average is down 16 percent during the four-week losing streak. One reason for the drop is fear that another recession, if not certain, is more likely now.

The run of bad economic news started last month when the government said the economy grew much more weakly in the first half of this year than thought. Growth, at an annual rate of 0.8 percent, was the slowest since the Great Recession ended in June 2009.

The economic weakness has made investors more likely to sell stocks at the first hint that things are getting worse. And last week, they got signs aplenty.

A regional survey by the Federal Reserve said manufacturing had slowed in the mid-Atlantic states by the most in more than two years. Existing home sales fell in July for third time in four months. Another report showed that exports from Japan, the world's third-biggest economy, had slumped for the fifth straight month. Japan is still reeling from the effects of an earthquake and tsunami in March.

GOP May OK Tax Increase That Obama Hopes to Block

BY CHARLES BABINGTON

Associated Press

WASHINGTON • News flash: Congressional Republicans want to raise your taxes. Impossible, right? GOP lawmakers are so virulently anti-tax, surely they will fight to prevent a payroll tax increase on virtually every wage-earner starting Jan. 1, right?

Apparently not. Many of the same Republicans who fought hammer-and-tong to keep the George W. Bush-era income tax cuts from expiring on schedule are now saying a different "temporary" tax cut should end as planned. By their own definition, that amounts to a tax increase.

The tax break extension they oppose is sought by President Barack Obama. Unlike proposed changes in the income tax, this policy helps the 46 percent of all Americans who owe no federal income taxes but who pay a "payroll tax" on practically every dime they earn.

There are other differences as well, and Republicans say their stand is consistent with their goal of long-term tax policies that will spur employment and lend greater certainty to the economy.

"It's always a net positive to let taxpayers keep more of what they earn," says Rep. Jeb Hensarling, "but not all tax relief is created equal for the purposes of helping to get the economy moving again." The Texas lawmaker is on the House GOP leadership team.

The debate is likely to boil up in coming weeks as a special bipartisan committee seeks big deficit reductions and weighs which tax cuts are sacrosanct.

At issue is a tax that the vast majority of workers pay, but many don't recognize because they don't read, or don't understand their pay stubs. Workers normally pay 6.2 percent of their wages toward a tax designated for Social Security. Their employer pays an equal amount, for a total of 12.4 percent per worker.

As part of a bipartisan spending deal last December, Congress approved Obama's request to reduce the workers' share to 4.2 percent for one year; employers'

Tripoli Falls to Libyan Rebels

BY KARIN LAUB and BEN HUBBARD

Associated Press

TRIPOLI, Libya • Libyan rebels raced into Tripoli Sunday and met little resistance as Moammar Gadhafi's defenders melted away and his 42-year rule rapidly crumbled. The euphoric fighters celebrated with residents of the capital in Green Square, the symbolic heart of the fading regime.

Gadhafi's whereabouts were unknown, though state TV broadcast his bitter pleas for Libyans to defend his regime. Opposition fighters captured his son and one-time heir apparent, Seif al-Islam, who along with his father faces charges of crimes against humanity at the International Criminal Court in the Netherlands. Another son was in contact with rebels about surrendering, the opposition said.

"It's over, frizz-head," chanted hundreds of jubilant men and women massed in Green Square, using a mocking nickname of the curly-haired Gadhafi. The revelers fired shots in the air, clapped and waved the rebels' tricolor flag. Some set fire to the green flag of Gadhafi's regime and shot holes in a poster with the leader's image.

By the early hours of Monday, rebels controlled large parts of the capital. They set up checkpoints

"We were waiting for the signal and it happened. All mosques chanted 'God is great' all at once. We smelled a good scent, it is the smell of victory. We know it is the time."

— Nour Eddin Shatouni, a 50-year-old engineer who was among the residents who flowed out of their homes to join the celebrations alongside residents — many of them secretly armed by rebel smugglers in recent weeks. But pockets of pro-Gadhafi fighters remained: In one area, Associated Press reporters with the rebels were stopped and told to take a different route because of regime snipers nearby.

"We were waiting for the signal and it happened," said Nour Eddin Shatouni, a 50-year-old engineer who was among the residents who flowed out of their homes to join the celebrations. "All mosques chanted 'God is great' all at once. We smelled a good scent, it is the smell of victory. We know it is the time."

The seizure of Green Square held profound symbolic value and marked a stunning turn in the tide of the 6-month-old Libyan civil war. The regime has held pro-Gadhafi rallies there nearly every night since the revolt began in February, and Gadhafi delivered speeches to his loyalists from the historic Red Fort that overlooks the square.

The sweep into the capital came after the rebel fighters advanced 20 miles from the west in a matter of hours. They took town after town and overwhelmed a major military base meant to defend Tripoli, 16 miles from the city. All the way, they met little resistance and residents poured out on the streets to welcome them.

In a series of angry and defiant audio messages broadcast on state television, Gadhafi called on his supporters to march in the streets of the capital and "purify it" of "the rats." He was not shown in the messages.

His defiance raised the possibility of a last-ditch fight over the capital, home to 2 million people. Government spokesman Moussa Ibrahim claimed the regime has "thousands and thousands of fighters" and vowed: "We will fight. We have whole cities on our sides. They are coming en masse to protect Tripoli to join the fight."

But it appeared that Gadhafi's military was abandoning him quickly.

The rebels' way into Tripoli was opened when the military unit in charge of protecting Gadhafi and the capital surrendered, ordering his troops to drop their weapons, the rebel information minister Mahmoud Shammam said.

In a sign of the coordination among rebels, as the main force moved into the city from the west, a second force of 200 opposition fighters from the city of Misrata further east landed by boat in the capital. They brought weapons and ammunition for Tripoli residents who join the rebellion, said Munir Ramzi of the rebels' military council in Misrata.

NATO Secretary-General Anders Fogh Rasmussen said Gadhafi's regime was "clearly crumbling" and that the time to create a new democratic Libya has arrived.

The sooner Gadhafi "realizes that he cannot win the battle against his own people, the better," he said in a statement, adding that NATO will continue to strike his troops if they make "any threatening moves toward the Libyan people."

In a statement early Monday, President Barack Obama said the way to prevent more bloodshed was for Gadhafi "to relinquish power once and for all." Obama said the rebel leaders must pursue a peaceful

8 Months Later, Pet Pooch Reunited with Utah Owner

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) • Eight months after vanishing from her Utah home, a 2-year-old dog has been reunited with her owner after turning up 750 miles away in San Diego.

The Deseret News reports the miniature pinscher named Fadidle was flown Saturday to Salt Lake International Airport, where she was greeted by her owner, Sharalyn Cooper of Roy. Cooper says the dog ran away from her Roy home last October, and she all but gave up hope of ever seeing her again after posting flyers and checking local animal shelters.

Athena Davis of the San Diego Humane Society says Fadidle was dropped off by a good Samaritan and was first believed to be a stray. Cooper was tracked down through a microchip embedded in the dog.

Cooper thinks her dog was probably stolen.

rate did not change. Obama wants Congress to extend the reduction for an additional year. If not, the rate will return to 6.2 percent on Jan. 1.

Obama cited the payroll tax in his weekend radio and Internet address Saturday, when he urged Congress to work together on measures that help the economy and create jobs. "There are things we can do right now that will mean more customers for businesses and more jobs across the country. We can cut payroll taxes again, so families have an extra $1,000 to spend," he said.

Social Security payroll taxes apply only to the first $106,800 of a worker's wages. Therefore, $2,136 is the biggest benefit anyone can gain from the one-year reduction.

The great majority of Americans make less than $106,800 a year. Millions of workers pay more in payroll taxes than in federal income taxes.

The 12-month tax reduction will cost the government about $120 billion this year, and a similar amount next year if it's renewed.

That worries Rep. David Camp, R-Mich., chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, and a member of the House-Senate supercommittee tasked with finding new deficit cuts. Tax reductions, "no matter how well-intended," will push the deficit higher, making the panel's task that much harder, Camp's office said.

But Republican lawmakers haven't always worried about tax cuts increasing the deficit. They led the fight to extend the life of a much bigger tax break: the major 2001 income tax reduction enacted under Bush. It was scheduled to expire at the start of this year. Obama cam-transition to democracy.

It was a stunning reversal for Gadhafi, who earlier this month had seemed to have a firm grip on his stronghold in the western part of Libya, despite months of NATO airstrikes on his military. Rebels had been unable to make any advances for weeks, bogged down on the main fronts with regime troops in the east and center of the country.

Gadhafi is the Arab world's longest-ruling, most erratic, most grimly fascinating leader — presiding for 42 years over this North African desert republic with vast oil reserves and just 6 million people. For years, he was an international pariah blamed for the 1988 bombing of a Pan Am jumbo jet over Lockerbie, Scotland, that killed 270 people. After years of denial, Gadhafi's Libya acknowledged responsibility, agreed to pay up to $10 million to relatives of each victim, and declared he would dismantle all weapons of mass destruction.

That eased him back into the international community.

But on February 22, days after the uprising against him began, Gadhafi gave a televised speech amid violent social unrest against his autocratic rule. In the speech, he vowed to hunt down protesters "inch by inch, room by room, home by home, alleyway by alleyway." The speech caused a furor that fueled the armed rebellion against him and it has been since mocked in songs and spoofs across the Arab world.

Fear

The housing market, which usually helps lead an economic recovery, keeps getting worse. The plunging stock market and scary economic news won't make it any better.

"What you're seeing with the economy, on the job front — it's scaring a lot of people," says Brian Fine, a loan manager at Mortgage Master in Rockville, Md. He says the housing market will languish until buyers and sellers feel more secure about the economy.

"People are really motivated by larger economic trends. It's all about if you feel confident enough to buy a home right now," he says.

The news from Europe got worse, too. Its economy has slowed considerably — even in Germany, which has been its greatest source of strength. Fear spread that European banks, already ailing because they hold bonds of countries that are struggling with debt, were having trouble getting short-term loans to pay for day-to-day activities.

BRYAN DENTON • THE NEW YORK TIMES

Libyans celebrate the entrance of rebels into Tripoli, on Sunday.

As the rebel force advanced on Tripoli, taking town after town, thousands of jubilant civilians rushed out of their homes to cheer the long convoys of pickup trucks packed with fighters shooting in the air. One man grabbed a rebel flag that had been draped over the hood of a slow-moving car and kissed it, overcome with emotion.

Some of the fighters were hoarse, shouting: "We are coming for you, frizz-head." In villages, mosque loudspeakers blared "Allahu Akbar," or "God is great."

"We are going to sacrifice our lives for freedom," said Nabil al-Ghowail, a 30-year-old dentist holding a rifle in the streets of Janzour, a suburb just six miles west of Tripoli. Heavy gunfire erupted nearby.

As rebels moved in Tripoli, thousands celebrated in the streets of Benghazi, the rebels' de facto capital hundreds of miles to the east. Firing guns into the air and shooting fireworks, they cheered and waved the rebel tricolor flags, dancing and singing in the city's main square.

Rebel chief Mustafa Ab-

were exaggerated, but that didn't seem to matter. For investors, the prospect of banks scrambling for cash dredged up bad memories of the global credit freeze that hit in the fall of 2008 — and they sold stocks.

"A negative feedback loop ... appears to be in the making," two economists at Morgan Stanley wrote Thursday in a widely cited report that itself seemed to beget more fear and selling. It warned that the U.S. was "dangerously close" to recession.

Stock investors aren't the only ones worried. Martin Fridson, global chief credit strategist at BNP Paribas Investment Partners, notes that investors in bonds issued by the riskiest U.S. companies are dumping them, too. These investors fear that in a recession companies might not be able to pay interest on these so-called junk bonds.

The selling has forced up the average interest rate on the bonds to 8.3 percent. If investors had faith in the economy, the rate would be 4.6 percent, Fridson says.

"I'm nervous," says Fridson, who has followed the junk bond market since 1984. "I think there's a very material risk of falling into recession."

early days of the violent crackdown on anti-regime protesters.

Another son, Mohammed, was in contact with the rebels and was asking for guarantees for his safety, said rebel spokesman Sadiq al-Kibir. Mohammed, who is in charge of Libyan telecommunications, appeared on the Arabic satellite channel Al-Jazeera, saying his house was surrounded by armed rebels.

"They have guaranteed my safety. I have always wanted good for all Libyans and was always on the side of God," he said. Close to the end of the interview, there was the sound of heavy gunfire and Mohammed said rebels had entered his house before the phone line cut off.

A rebel spokesman based in London said Gadhafi's prime minister, Al-Baghdadi Al-Mahmoudi, was in a Tunisian hotel, indicating he had joined a growing list of defecting officials.

The day's first breakthrough came when hundreds of rebels fought their way into a major symbol of the Gadhafi regime — the base of the elite 32nd Brigade commanded by Gadhafi's son, Khamis. Fighters said they met with little resistance. They were 16 miles from the big prize, Tripoli.

Q. We are planning a family vacation and want my 78 year old mother to join us. Do you have any tips to make this adventure a success?

A. Bringing an elder on vacation requires extra effort but is a terrific opportunity to create lasting memories! Be sure the vacation you have in mind is appropriate for your mother, and is something she would enjoy. Review your plans with her physician as soon as possible. Does your mother have difficulty walking? Bring a wheelchair or walker. Consider adding activities that fit her abilities. Travelling by car? Anticipate slower progress, with more frequent stops along the route. If extra space would make the trip more comfortable, consider renting a larger vehicle. Pack a cooler with nutritious snacks. Flying? Take advantage of priority boarding options for older adults, people with disabilities, and young children.

The Times-News is seeking two professional advertising salespeople; one outside sales for retail advertising and one inside sales for recruitment advertising. The principal duty of these salespeople will be to sell. The secondary duty will be to sell. You'll sell 'win-win' print, online and mobile advertising packages offered by the Times-News, www.magicvalley.com and a variety of specialty and niche publications. But what you'll really be selling is solutions to local business owners who may also need your assistance in discovering just what solutions they need.
The Successful Candidate will demonstrate:

- success in relentlessly prospecting to get new business;
- a natural inquisitiveness about what constitutes customer success and an ability to ask open-ended, thought-provoking questions;
- a pattern of success in marketplaces that are extremely competitive;
- the ability to consistently listen;
- an ongoing history of success in a fast-paced business;
- an assertive approach to achieving revenue and customer satisfaction goals;
- the ability to communicate personal, quantifiable components of customer service excellence.

Past sales experience may be helpful but possessing innate curiosity and a competitive approach is far more important. The Times-News offers an excellent benefit package including medical, dental, vision, life, paid vacation and sick days, flexible spending account(s) and a 401(k) program.
Please apply online at www.magicvalley.com/workhere before Saturday, July 30, 2011.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

*“The reticent volcano keeps
His never slumbering plan;
Confided are his projects pink
To no precarious man.”*
— Emily Dickinson

If you need four tricks to defeat a contract but can see only three, it may be vital to set up the fourth, even before securing the second.

Against four hearts, West led the club three to East’s ace. In spite of declarer’s attempt to muddy the waters by dropping the 10, East knew that his partner’s lead was a singleton. The four was the missing spot-card, and West would have led his top card had he held a doubleton.

East returned a club and his partner duly scored a ruff, but apart from the king of trumps, that was the end of the defense, as South’s losers in spades and diamonds could later be discarded on dummy’s clubs.

Could the defense have done better? Yes. The club ruff can wait, as East knows that he will come in again with the heart king to deliver it. On the bidding, West is marked with a high card. If that card is the spade king, it needs to be speedily set up as a winner before South’s losing spades disappear. A spade return at trick two will set the contact since East will score his trump king in due course and administer the club ruff.

East knows that declarer has a completely balanced hand with five hearts, so there is no way for declarer to dispose of his club on dummy’s spades. Moreover, even if declarer has great diamonds, the clubs in dummy will not all evaporate.

ANSWER: Although you need less from your partner in spades than in clubs to set up a suit for your side, declarer’s bidding suggests he is more worried about clubs. So perhaps a low club is best. However, if you suspect East of being a trickster, the spade lead might be better, since East could be trying to fake club weakness.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are expecting our first child in a few months, and my mother, who lives out of state, will be flying in to help with the new baby. This will be her first grandchild.

Mom adopted a small indoor dog about a month ago. "Trixie" is pint-sized, but she has a loud, high-pitched bark and she barks often. When Mom told me she plans to bring Trixie with her, I expressed concern that the constant barking will wake the baby and everyone else. I am also concerned about dander in the nursery from Trixie's long hair.

I asked Mom to leave Trixie home with my father, but she said she just adopted her and doesn't want her to feel abandoned. I wouldn't mind her bringing Trixie on future visits, just not while we're adjusting to a new baby.

Am I being selfish to ask my mother to keep the dog at home when she comes to visit?

— GET ME OUT OF THE DOGHOUSE
DEAR DOGHOUSE: By the time your baby arrives, Trixie should have adjusted to both of your parents and should not feel abandoned if one of them leaves for a short while. Your needs and the needs of your household should take precedence over the needs of your mother's dog, and you are not being selfish to insist upon it.

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I have been married 24 years to a great guy. For the first time I am struggling with feelings of jealousy. My husband has begun a friendship with a female co-worker who is also married. They exchange emails, text messages and phone calls. They get together socially occasionally and have exchanged birthday and holiday gifts.

There's nothing "wrong" with what they're doing, and I feel my husband has the right to be friends with whomever he chooses. He loves me and treats me well. I don't want to feel or act like a crazy, jealous wife. But I have a hard time when I see how he enjoys his fun new friend — who, by the way, is young and great looking. How can I overcome my jealousy?

— OLD BALL AND CHAIN
DEAR O.B. AND C.: I'm not sure you should. If your husband had a female friend from work he had lunch with occasionally, I wouldn't be concerned. But emails, texts, phone calls and exchanging gifts seems excessive. Tell him his relationship with his "fun new friend" is making you uncomfortable and you need it toned down because you feel it's a threat to your marriage. If he cares about your feelings, he should pay attention to what you're saying.

DEAR ABBY: As a former paramedic and also a food allergy sufferer, I'm acutely aware of the problems caused by this condition. Food allergies vary widely and are not limited to common ones — nuts, shellfish, gluten or strawberries. We know what we are allergic to, and we do our best to avoid those foods.

Sometimes it's difficult to tell what's in some tasty-looking dishes at potluck gatherings. An ingredient may be used only for seasoning, but sometimes just a trace of it is all it takes to trigger a reaction. That's why I have established a practice that has always been well-received. I print out a card to attach to the dish I brought. On it I name the dish and list the ingredients. I hope you'll find this suggestion helpful enough to pass along. It could save a life.

— JOE IN JANESVILLE, MINN.
DEAR JOE: You're right; it could — and that's why I'm printing it. I met a widow whose husband suffered an allergic reaction and died at a dinner party, despite the frantic efforts of several physicians who were also in attendance. Forewarned is forearmed.

IF AUGUST 22 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: When surrounded by fog, it is wise to go slowly. In the upcoming year, you may occasionally lose sight of what you want or suffer from a lack of motivation. On the other hand, your refusal to compete with others may give you a chance to appreciate your part as a member of a group or to investigate the less material side of life through an interest in the healing arts or creative endeavors. Late October and early November is the best time to begin a new crucial endeavor, ask for favors from your higher-ups or simply take a vacation and enjoy yourself. Avoid entering into contracts or making commitments in January. Wait for late March and early April to make crucial career or financial decisions.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stay the course. No matter what pitfalls or obstacles are ahead, do not deviate from the original plan. To get through the next few days, you'll need to rely on yourself rather than expect aid from others.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): No matter what your desire, your appetite just won't be satisfied. You may be moving forward under the misconception that you need more than you have when, in fact, you are better off than most.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Suspicious thoughts can cloud good judgment. Conspiracies will certainly abound if that's all your mind is focused upon, but a more objective approach, and hindsight, will reveal that it was all in your head.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Use your charm to disarm. You can diffuse a potentially volatile situation with diplomacy. However, don't overdo it by being dishonest or fake, as you'll run the risk of making the original problem worse.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make sure you only place your trust in those who are worthy of it. An agreement loses value if one party doesn't hold up his or her end. Beware of misdirection; someone may deflect attention from the original issue.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A good salesperson can make even the most horrid item seem like something you can't live without. Don't get swept away by a crafty sales pitch. Delve a little deeper; determine whether a loved one has hurt feelings.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Fools and their money are soon parted. Designer labels may be in style, but the difference between those and what you buy off the rack is price. You can be stylish with big-name labels but you'll pay ten times more.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Only when clouds part can you see the sky. Beware of placing too much trust in an unknown, as you could put a project on the road to failure. Do homework before committing to a course of action.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Flattery will get you nowhere. Trying to manipulate someone through compliments could come off as phony and cause more harm than good. Wait for a better time to make promises or enter agreements.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): All is not as it seems. You may be blind to an important aspect that will hamper your ability to make the right choice. Take a step back and review all the information again.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Vagueness could lead to mistakes. Be clear and concise and leave nothing to chance. Remember that no one can read your mind. If someone has trouble understanding the program, take time to explain.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Let someone else do the driving. Take a step back from your own pursuits and help someone else chase their own dreams today. Hold off on signing on the dotted line or making expensive purchases.
