The Mussels in the Haystack

Inspections of more than 47,000 boats entering Idaho this season yielded 24 contaminated with tiny mussels the state wants to keep out. Idaho officials say the program works, and now seek federal help to track trouble boats.

BY KIMBERLEE KRUESI
kkruesi@magicvalley.com

One of Idaho's greatest threats is a brainless species. But what quagga and zebra mussels lack in central nervous systems, they make up in their ability to infest.

Idaho has yet to experience a quagga or zebra mussel invasion, unlike some of its neighbors in the West. However, the chances of an infestation are high, with thousands of boats passing through the state each year.

Hence, Idaho's boat inspection program, which just completed its third year. The Idaho State Department of Agriculture reports that 24 quagga- or zebra-contaminated boats were intercepted this year by its 15 inspection stations, scattered throughout the state.

Quagga and zebra mussels are not native species to the Pacific Northwest and have infested waters in Arizona, California, Nevada and Utah. The mussels are the size of a fingernail. They can attach to surfaces and clog intake pipes that draw water from an infested area.

Inspectors checked more than 47,000 boats between May and September. That amount is high, but not inclusive. The agency doesn't track how many boats pass through the state even though Idaho has more than 30 border-crossing roads.

However, the stations are located on highly trafficked roads with the greatest chance of intercepting boats traveling from other states, said Pamela Juker, ISDA's communication director.

One Magic Valley inspection station, located on U.S. Highway 93 near Jackpot, Nev., often stops weekend travelers coming from all over the state. It's not uncommon for the station to see boats coming from Nevada's Lake Mead, a particularly concerning location for ISDA.

Lake Mead has been infested by zebra and quagga mussels since 2007. The lake was most likely infected by travelers bringing contaminated boats from eastern regions like

THE CHOBANI EFFECT

Idaho dairymen hope the newly announced Twin Falls yogurt plant will help drive Gem State milk prices up. It may do that by keeping more of the milk already produced in Idaho within the state's borders before it's processed.

BY BEN BOTKIN

Containers of Chobani Greek yogurt — blueberry, peach and strawberry flavors — adorned the banquet tables Thursday at the annual United Dairymen of Idaho conference in Boise.

Greek yogurt wasn't part of the conference last year. Go back a few more years, and Chobani — part of parent company Agro Farma — didn't even exist.

Today, the Idaho dairy industry is abuzz with anticipation about what Chobani's Twin Falls arrival will bring to the state's economy when its yogurt processing plant opens in mid-2012.

Beyond 400 new jobs for the region, the New York-based yogurt company's new Idaho arm could mean a boost to the milk prices Idaho's dairymen receive for their product. For a state with notoriously low milk prices, that possibility has caught plenty of attention.

It's anticipated that Chobani's Twin Falls location will need 2 million pounds of milk each day. It will be Idaho's first large-scale yogurt plant.

For Idaho's dairymen, the plant means more of their milk will be processed in their home state. It's a welcome development in a state where milk produced is greater than the existing in-state plant capacity.

Idaho's milk production has nearly doubled in the last decade from about

Flanges and the Decline of Western Civilization

Assembly Instructions are an Indo-European language understood by few but with dire consequences to many.

You'll find them on an 8- by 11-inch sheet of recycled paper — written in Sanskrit — telling you how to put together an appliance or fixture that you bought at the big box store and foolishly figured to install without the assistance of somebody remotely competent.

Such folly ensnares men, chiefly. My opinion is that testosterone sufficiently addles a guy's judgment so that he really believes it's possible to slide Flange A over Discharge Tube B and soon finds himself standing in two inches of water on the kitchen floor.

"Flange" is the favorite noun of Assembly Instructions writers because (a) it sounds important and (b) nobody knows what the heck it really is.

But here's how dictionary.com defines it: "A projecting rim, collar or ring on a shaft, pipe, machine housing, etc., cast or formed to give additional strength, stiffness or supporting area, or to provide a place for the attachment of other objects."

Uh-huh. What makes me think there were lots of flanges on the Titanic and the Hindenburg?

Actually, when you see the word "flange" in a list of instructions it's code for "It'll be cheaper if you just call the plumber. Now."

Forget how flange-savvy you think you are. Many Assembly Instructions are simply indecipherable. Here's a passage from the directions for a new light fixture

Steve Crump
You Don't Say?

that I recently purchased:

"Unscrew threaded screw collar from the screw collar loop. Take the ceiling canopy and pass it over the screw collar loop, allowing approximately one-half of the screw collar loop exterior threads to remain exposed. Adjust the screw collar loop by turning the assembly clockwise up or counterclockwise down in the mounting strap. Remove the ceiling canopy over screw collar loop and thread on screw collar. Attach end of chain to screw collar loop with one of the supplied open chain links. Use the second open chain link to attach the loop on top of the fixture to the bottom end of the chain."

It will not surprise you, I suppose, to learn that the light fixture is sitting on the floor in the front hallway. Right where it came crashing down while I was installing it.

Since globalization became a reality, many assembly instructions now come printed in several languages. So I handed the Spanish version to my wife, who speaks the language, and asked her whether the instructions are any clearer in Spanish than they are in English.

Victoria sat down, read them carefully, scratched her head, and proclaimed: "Get a bigger flange."

Anatomy of the Chobani Deal

A more than $25 million package of incentives helped bring the Greek yogurt manufacturer to Twin Falls. Here's a look at where the investment comes from.

BY BEN BOTKIN

Bringing a 400-job Greek yogurt manufacturer to Twin Falls was much like piecing together an economic jigsaw puzzle.

There's not one, singular piece that dominated the journey to luring in Chobani, which is part of New York-based Agro Farma. In the end, it was a deal that pieced together input from multiple players: the city, urban renewal, the state and local investors.

"It has been an incredible team effort," said City Manager Travis Rothweiler. "There is, in my opinion, not really one hero."

Here's a look at the pieces of the $25.1 million puzzle. To receive the package of incentives, Chobani is required to invest at least $128 million into its southeast Twin Falls location.

$17.15 million: Dollars from the Twin Falls Urban Renewal

Agency make up the lion's share of the needed money.

The breakdown of where that money goes: $4.29 million for land acquisition; $2.5 million for water lines and meters; $9.65 million for wastewater improvements; and $700,000 for electrical and natural gas utility infrastructure.

The URA will be required to provide the money anticipated for those expenses up front. This means that the agency will work with a financial institution or Agro Farma on a loan agreement. That loan would then be repaid by increased property tax revenues captured from Agro Farma's improvements in Twin Falls.

Urban renewal districts get their money primarily through tax-increment financing, which allows them to collect any increase in assessed property tax value within their boundaries and use the dollars as incentives for developers.

In this case, the site of the future Chobani plant is in the city's urban renewal district, and has been turned into a revenue allocation area that will generate the urban renewal dollars. This means that money to repay the loan will be generated from increased property taxes the yogurt manufacturer will pay after improvements are made to the property.

$6.75 million: The city is fronting $6.75 million for the project, some of which will eventually return to city coffers. Of that amount, $2.75 million will go toward building a wastewater pretreatment facility and come out of city capital improvement fund reserves. That money will be returned to the city as Agro Farma pays its monthly sewer bill.

As for the other $4 million, that's coming out of Twin Falls' general fund reserves for extending the sewer line for Chobani. But that also paves the way for future development near the Chobani site, opening up 550 additional acres for potential growth.

$1.05 million: State grants also play a role, consisting of two $500,000 grants and a

$50,000 commitment from the Idaho Department of Commerce. The money will cover water line and electric power infrastructure needs.

$150,000: Private investment will come from Business Plus, a group of local south-central Idaho investors who look for opportunities to grow the region's economy.

$18,200: The client — Agro Farma — will provide this much for water meters.

Other incentives

Here are a few other things sweetening the pot:

- It's not a direct cost, but Twin Falls is giving up $5.4 million that it would normally collect from Chobani's building project. That figure includes waived building permit and wastewater system capacity fees.

- The city is also treating the company's wastewater at a guaranteed fixed rate for 10 years of $2.84 for every 1,000 gallons produced.

7.5 billion pounds of milk in 2001 to an expected 13 billion pounds this year.

Dairies in need of a place to ship their product are sending milk to outlying states like Arizona and Colorado instead of keeping it in the Gem State, where production plant capacity is easily met.

By adding Chobani into the equation, dairymen say they'll enjoy increased demand in Idaho for milk, along with the ability to tap into a market for a new product: Greek yogurt.

"It's a benefit from the dairy standpoint because not only are you adding a processing capacity, you're adding another product," said Rick Onaindia, chief financial officer of Bettencourt Dairies, south-central Idaho's largest dairy producer.

There's a quicker link to the consumer, too, unlike barrels of cheese that can be stored for years.

"Once you get competition, especially for a product like this, you need to give the consumer what they want and right now people are wanting a fat-free, nutritious product, and that's what this product is," said Tom Dorsey, chairman of the Idaho Dairy Products Commission. "It should enhance sales and create competition for the milk."

That could translate into benefits for dairymen — regardless of whether they sell to Chobani or other processors that will have a continued need for milk.

"What we're trying to do is get a fair price for our milk at the end of the day," said Jerome dairyman Dave Veenhouwer.

Numbers add up

In October, Idaho milk prices were $18.30 for each 100-pound unit, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Agricultural Statistics Service. That's the second lowest price for all states, with only California prices lower at $18 per hundredweight.

That Idaho milk price is $1.60 less than the nation's average of $19.90.

Scott Brown, a dairy economist with the University of Missouri, has been hired to work with the Idaho dairy industry to analyze milk prices.

"The last 12 or 18 months we've seen the situation where milk prices have not increased as much as we've seen in other parts of the country," he said. "Anything that industries can do to stimulate the demand for milk has to be helpful. Chobani coming into Idaho ought to be helpful."

The lack of new competition for milk produced in the Gem State, coupled by the need to haul that milk to other parts of the country where the demand lies, has kept Idaho's milk prices low, Brown said.

At the same time, the dairy industry will need to closely watch the relationship between its growth and the start of Chobani's work in Idaho before knowing the full effect the new plant will have on milk prices.

"The reason that it's good Chobani is coming is it provides more processing capacity for the Magic Valley and by doing that, it's more competition for the milk," said Mike Roth, a Jerome dairyman and president of Idaho Dairyman's Association. "And because of more competition, that will raise the price of milk unless the growth in Idaho fills the plant so fast we're back to the same place we were before they came."

What to expect

Mikael Pedersen, chief operations officer of Agro Farma, made it clear when visiting Idaho's dairy industry that Chobani's new plant will be up and running quickly: in June.

"The people here and the people in the Magic Valley are really magical, and of course it didn't hurt that there was so much milk there," he said in a Thursday speech at the dairy conference.

The Twin Falls facility will be a new building from the ground up for Chobani. That's different from in New York, where Chobani took over and rehabilitated a shuttered Kraft Foods plant.

Pedersen said the Twin Falls facility will be available for tours when it's open, with windows that will allow visitors to view the work going on inside.

Dairies that send their milk to Chobani will need to have a product that's free of a bovine growth hormone, though that's not an insurmountable challenge for the region's milk suppliers.

Dairymen react

Tony Vander Hulst, who owns a 5,500-cow dairy in Wendell, said that the addition of Chobani is welcome because it will add another product to the mix of cheese, whey and powder that Idaho dairymen already produce.

"It's a whole new mix to the game," he said.

Herkie Alves Jr., who runs a 250-cow dairy in rural Gooding, says the plant's announcement is good news. But what, exactly, that will translate into remains to be seen.

"We're really excited about it as far as how it's going to affect the dairy industry and things here," he said. "I would imagine it would help things out, but we're not sure to what extent."

Alves, for example, sends his milk to Glanbia, which he says is good to work with. Potentially, the arrival of Chobani could help out prices for all dairymen, regardless of whether they directly sell milk to the Greek yogurt company.

"Maybe it makes it more competitive to where they pay you more, which in turn would help everybody," Alves said.

He doesn't know what changes the yogurt company may bring, but says that as a smaller dairy, it can be a challenging business when dealing with expenses like the high price of cattle feed. But the size of his dairy also allows him to keep a close eye on the overall operation.

"We felt that actually we have an advantage because we try to produce a higher quality of milk," he said. "We don't have volume, but we kind of are hoping that places like Chobani would look at quality over quantity."

the Great Lakes, an area that has been swarmed with quagga mussels since 1990.

ISDA officials have written letters to the National Park Service, the agency that oversees Lake Mead, requesting that employees clean and rinse every boat leaving the lake. The letter also included requests to notify ISDA when Idaho-registered boats are headed back to the state.

But the Park Service isn't following through. After three years of receiving the letters, its officials say ISDA's expectations are unrealistic.

"We understand the position states are in," said Andrew Munoz, National Park Service public affairs officer for Lake Mead. "Our job is to inform our boaters what they can do to prevent the spread."

On any given summer weekend, there are 2,000 to 3,000 boats on the water, Munoz said. The lack of funding given to the Park Service for quagga mussel prevention makes it almost impossible for employees to check every boat, he said.

Federal privacy laws also hinder the agency from passing along the boaters' information.

"It is illegal to bring invasive species into a body of water but there is no regulation about boats leaving with the species," Munoz said. "If the boat hasn't done anything illegal, how can we pass along their information without breaking their privacy?"

Meanwhile, Idaho's program — funded by the sale of stickers required for almost every watercraft in the state — proceeds.

For now, ISDA officials are looking over data to determine what future steps can be implemented next year. The inspection stations have closed for winter; they'll reopen early next spring, in time for the next wave of boaters.

Emergency Lane Near Hazelton Blocked Until Monday

TIMES-NEWS

An emergency lane near Hazelton will be blocked to traffic until Monday.

A little before 6 p.m. Friday, the Idaho State Police assisted a motorist and his modular trailer, whose right-side tires had deflated on westbound Interstate 84 at milepost 191 near Hazelton.

The deflated tires caused the vehicle to stop partially in the right lane. Crews were unable to remove the vehicle, but were able to push it out of the lane of travel.

The right lane was blocked for seven hours as crews worked on the vehicle. The lane is open, but the emergency lane will be blocked until Monday.

ISP urges motorists to use caution when in the area.

CITY SEEKS CITIZEN INPUT ON RECYCLING PROGRAM

In an effort to find out what Twin Falls residents think about the city's recycling program, the city is asking that they participate in an online survey.

The survey may be accessed by a link on the city's website, tfid.org, and Facebook page. Questions include:

- Why do you recycle or choose not to?
- Are you using the rewards for recycling aspect of Twin Falls' program?
- Do you think the new program is worth $1 per month per household to administer?
- Do you know exactly what is acceptable to recycle in this new program? If not, do you know how to find out?

Started about a year ago, this rewards-for-recycling program is used by about 65 percent of the households.

The city hopes to obtain quality information to pass along to its recycling committee and PSI Environmental Systems to improve its services.

Two UI Students Killed in Crash

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) • Idaho State Police say two University of Idaho Students died early Saturday in a one-vehicle crash near Troy.

Police say 17-year-old Wyatt T. Smith of St. Anthony and 18-year-old Benson J. Sternberg of New Plymouth died as a result of the 3:45 a.m. crash on Randall Flat Road.

Police say four other UI students were injured in the crash and were transported to Gritman Medical Center in Moscow.

A center spokeswoman tells The Spokesman-Review that they were treated and released. Police say Smith was driving a 1997 GMC pickup south when he lost control and hit an embankment, causing the vehicle to roll.

FOUR PEOPLE INJURED IN SATURDAY ROLLOVER

TIMES-NEWS

Four Kansas residents were injured in a rollover Saturday afternoon while traveling through Cassia County, according to the Idaho State Police.

ISP investigated the incident that happened at about 3 p.m.

Ronald Kimbrough, 64, of Great Bend, Kan., was headed westbound in a 1995 Oldsmobile Cutlass when, for unknown reasons, he went off the right shoulder. He overcorrected, causing the vehicle to skid sideways across the westbound lanes and into the median where it rolled, according to an ISP news release.

Kimbrough was taken by air ambulance to Portneuf Medical Center in Pocatello with unknown injuries. Kimbrough's three passengers, James Kimbrough, 33, of Stafford, Kan., Caroline Huffman, 34, of Macksville, Kan., and Roxie Shrode, 55 of Great Bend, Kan., were all taken by ground ambulance to Cassia Regional Medical Center in Burley with unknown injuries, according to the release.

ISP said it was unknown if the driver and passengers were wearing seat belts. Weather was not a factor in the crash, the release stated. The crash is still under investigation.

BODY FOUND IN CAMPER TRAILER FOLLOWING FIRE

RIGGINS (AP) • Officials in western Idaho say a body has been found in a camper trailer destroyed by fire.

Salmon River Rural Fire Chief Dennis McCollum says the fire was reported by a neighbor about 2:50 a.m. Friday in Riggins.

Officials say the victim has been tentatively identified as the trailer's resident, 59-year-old Thomas Tepper. An autopsy is planned.

Officials Record Small Quake in North Idaho

LEWISTON (AP) • Officials in Clearwater County say an earthquake recorded in the city of Orofino was too small to cause any noticeable damage to the town and surrounding area.

Clearwater County Emergency Management Officer Don Gardner says a quake measuring 2.6 rattled the region Friday morning. He says it was centered about three miles southwest of the city center and about eight miles underground.

TANKER CRASH SPILLS FUEL ALONG LOCHSA

LEWISTON (AP) • Idaho State Police say a fuel tanker crashed about 8 a.m. Saturday on U.S. Highway 12 along the Lochsa River in northern Idaho.

An Idaho State Police dispatcher tells the Lewiston Tribune that a large amount of fuel has spilled into a ditch on the side of the highway away from the river and that a hazardous materials team with the Lewiston Fire Department is responding.

The dispatcher says the tanker and one pup trailer remain upright, while a second pup trailer is on its side.

Idahoans Awarded Congress' Highest Civilian Award

BY KATHLEEN KRELLER
Idaho Statesman

BOISE • In the fall of October 1944, a young but determined Pvt. Harry Kawahara fought his way through heavy woods, freezing temperatures and fog in the wilderness of France.

For a 19-year-old boy raised in the tiny, rural railroad towns of Idaho and Oregon, the bloody realities of World War II were something he would bear silently.

Likewise, Kawahara would bear the painful and nearly deadly bullet wound to his elbow, inflicted by a German sniper.

Kawahara was at a field hospital recovering from blood loss a few days later, when he heard the group he'd been fighting with, the famed 442nd Regimental Combat Team, had broken the German lines to rescue the "Lost Battalion," which had been cut off by opposing forces. The casualties were enormous.

When he returned home to Idaho, the decorated U.S. soldier was stoic as he faced prejudice from locals who feared and hated the Japanese — including those who were U.S. citizens.

Kawahara's own sister had been confined in a Japanese internment camp near Minidoka while he fought for the United States. Teri, the woman Kawahara would later marry, was sent to the camp at age 13.

After the war, Kawahara married, worked as a farmer and eventually headed up a produce operation in Nampa. He and Teri raised seven children.

He would occasionally discuss with friends and family his experiences as a member of the "Go For Broke" 442nd RCT, composed of Nisei — American-born sons of Japanese immigrants. They fought the Germans in Europe and prejudice back home.

What made him want to serve a country that treated his family that way?

"I think that was the whole thing," Kawahara said. "We had something to prove."

Kawahara, his wife and other family members traveled last week to Washington, D.C., where the 442nd was awarded the Congressional Gold Medal, the highest civilian honor in the United States.

According to www.goforbroke.org, the 442nd was the most decorated unit of its size and length of service in the history of the U.S. military. The first 4,000 soldiers in the unit had to be replaced more than three times. About 14,000 men served in the 442nd, receiving 9,486 Purple Hearts, 21 Medals of Honor and eight Presidential Unit Citations.

sent all six children to Japan for his family to look after.

Four years later, in 1940, Harry Kawahara came back to the States to avoid being conscripted into the Japanese army. He lived and worked with a Japanese-American family on their farm in Parma. They became his family, he said.

After earning the equivalent of a high school diploma, Kawahara went to Portland to get an engineering degree. But he got a job and earned some money.

"I started having fun, and that was the end of that," he said with a chuckle.

Kawahara enlisted in the Army on Dec. 8, 1941, the day after Pearl Harbor was attacked by Japan. But he was only 17, so the military told him to wait. He headed back to Parma.

"They would have sent me to a camp if I'd stayed in Portland," Kawahara said.

The Army called him up in May 1943. He and a Marsing kid of Japanese heritage headed to Camp Shelby, Miss., to join up and train with the 442nd.

At first, the Japanese-Americans from Hawaii who founded the 442nd had conflicts with their counterparts from the mainland, Kawahara said. That changed after the Hawaiians saw the conditions at an internment camp in Arkansas, amazed that the Nisei had joined up despite such treatment.

"After they got back from camp," he said, "everything changed."

Kawahara left the 442nd to try being a paratrooper.

Paratroopers had to weigh at least 140 pounds; Kawahara was 135 (the same weight he's been his whole life). So Kawa-hara volunteered for the Army's Office of Strategic Services and headed to Chicago for training. But he couldn't hear the tones well enough to decipher Morse code, so he asked to return to the 442nd.

They made him take basic training a second time.

In August 1944, Kawahara landed in Naples, Italy, and headed to Marseille, France.

The fighting was heavy. Kawahara saw things and lost friends he won't discuss.

"We just did what we were told," Kawahara said. "It's not a pleasant thing to talk about."

He will say this: "The trouble is that the close friends didn't come back."

On Oct. 29, a sniper shot Kawahara in the elbow.

"I passed out because I lost so much blood," he said.

Medics gave him plasma and morphine. He woke up at a military hospital in France.

That's where he heard the news that the 100th Infantry Battalion of the 442nd had broken through the German lines to rescue the "Lost Battalion." The 100th Battalion lost more men in the effort than the 200 soldiers from Texas that had needed to be rescued.

Back home, Idahoans didn't know about the heroics of the 442nd. They didn't know about Kawahara's Purple Heart and other decorations. They didn't know about the sacrifice of the Japanese-American soldiers.

"I think the war made everybody angry," Kawahara said. "The worst part is when you are a citizen, and you are disenfranchised."

We Help Hearts Get Back In Rhythm

25 percent of adults over 40 will develop an irregular heartbeat condition, or atrial fibrillation (A-Fib), in their lifetime.

Our experienced team will get you back in sync.

Atrial fibrillation, or A-Fib, is an irregular, fast heart rhythm caused by abnormal and chaotic electrical signals in the top part—or atria—of the heart. This progressive condition can lead to stroke, heart failure, and reduced quality of life.

Comprehensive A-Fib care plan for you.

Symptoms of A-Fib

Some people with A-Fib have no symptoms; those who do have symptoms may experience:

- Irregular, fast heartbeat or palpitations
- Extreme fatigue
- Dizziness
- Shortness of breath
- Decreased blood pressure
- Confusion
- Chest pain

Talk to your primary care provider about A-Fib symptoms.

George Shigeta, 89, is a veteran of the 442nd's heavy weapons company. He grew up in Payette and now lives in Nampa.

Terry Kuroda, a retired teacher from Nampa, and his sister accepted the medal behalf of their father, Kozo Kuroda, a master sergeant with the 442nd's 52nd Field Artillery Battalion, who died in 2002 at age 87.

Kozo Kuroda was a farmer who grew up in Fife, Wash. His mother and wife were in different internment camps while he fought in the war, Terry Kuroda said.

Kuroda came home from the war with a Bronze Star and forged ahead with life in Nampa despite open racism, his son said.

Terry would have liked to have seen his father at the ceremony.

"He was fighting for our country over in Europe, and he came home, and he was treated that poorly, even as a soldier," Kuroda said.

"Those things are hard for me to understand because I wasn't around in that time."

Like Kuroda, Kawahara grew up in small towns like Crane, Ore., Sage Valley, Ore., Notus and Parma as his father moved with the Union Pacific Railroad.

Kawahara's mother died when he was 12. So his father

Rob Sturgill, an Edward Jones financial advisor in Twin Falls, was appointed to the firm's Grassroots Legislative Task Force. The group is dedicated to voicing the concerns of individual investors to local, state and federal lawmakers.

Sturgill

Sturgill said he is genuinely concerned about legislative issues that affect individual investors. "And I want to convey investors' views to elected officials," he said.

Sturgill has served the Magic Valley area for Edward Jones since 1997.

Edward Jones provides financial services for individual investors in the U.S. and, through its affiliate, in Canada.

Stocks Surge as Italy, Greece Allay Debt Fears

BY MATTHEW CRAFT

Associated Press

NEW YORK • Stocks surged Friday, erasing their losses for the week, after Italy and Greece moved closer to getting their financial crises under control. The Dow Jones industrial average jumped back above 12,000.

Italy's benchmark stock index leapt 3.7 percent and its borrowing costs plunged after the country's Senate passed a crucial austerity budget demanded by the European Union. Other European stock markets and the euro also pushed higher as investors became more confident that Italy would avoid a fiscal disaster.

The passage clears the way for Italian Premier Silvio Berlusconi to step down. Berlusconi was widely considered an obstacle to serious economic reforms. The yield on Italy's benchmark two-year bond dropped 0.43 percentage point to 5.69 percent. That's a sign bond investors think Italy will succeed in managing its massive debt load. On Wednesday the yield soared as high as 7.13 percent.

The Dow Jones industrial average jumped 259.89 points, or 2.2 percent, to 12,153.68. It closed below 12,000 the previous two days. Friday's rally pushed the Dow up 1.4 percent for the week.

Together with a 112-point gain the day before, the Dow has now made up most of the 389-point plunge it took on Wednesday. That sell-off was triggered

White Resigns as Clear Springs President

TIMES-NEWS

Ed White has resigned as president of Clear Springs Foods, a fish producer based in Buhl.

White's last day was Oct. 20, and former president Larry Cope has stepped back into the position, according to spokeswoman Cally Parrott. Cope had led Clear Springs Foods for 38 years before stepping aside in January. He remained on the board of directors and will retain that position while serving as interim president.

Parrott said White took another job but did not have further details.

The board will likely begin a search for a new president, a process which could take up to a year.

Starbucks' Ketchum Location Draws Crowd, Some Ire

The coffee giant's move into the Ketchum Visitor Center rankled some of its competitors, but the new Starbucks drew a crowd for its Friday opening.

BY KAREN BOSSICK

For the Times-News

KETCHUM • You wouldn't have known it was slack season inside Starbucks Friday.

The Ketchum coffee shop was busy as an anthill as people poured in to check out its new digs in the newly remodeled Ketchum Visitor Center.

Barrista Joe Lamanna handed out samples of sun-dried Ethiopian coffee, along with wine and beer tasters. Ron Pierce lined up seats for a ribbon cutting ceremony later in the day as technicians mounted plasma screens. And Sun Valley resident Tommy Dunham sat contentedly, watching passersby through picture windows that the mountain resort town's old Starbucks lacked.

"I think this new store is going to be the toast of the town," said Ketchum resident Sandra Willingham. "It's not like a regular coffee shop. It's a really happening place. There's parking nearby, which the old one didn't have. And it's a fun place. I've been here for an hour and I don't want to leave."

The Starbucks and visitor center at 491 Sun Valley Road in the middle of town was designed by Ketchum architect Susan Desko, who is overseeing work on the downtown Boise Simplot JUMP event center.

Logs encase both the interior and exterior as if someone was stocking up firewood for a long, cold winter. When finished, visitor center helpers will be able to assist visitors using iPads at an information desk built from 13 dead standing timbers hauled in from surrounding mountains.

Visitors will also be able to watch seven plasma screens streaming video of things to do in Sun Valley while they sit on stools made of Douglas fir stumps.

"It's so natural, rather than modern, which is kind of neat," said Ketchum businessman Randy Schaeffer. "And I understand it will have a fireplace around the corner, which will also be neat."

Ketchum resident Timi Ryerson said she thinks the Ketchum Starbucks' relocation to the town's visitor center will help draw people downtown. The national coffee giant opened its new location Friday.

Starbucks

Starbucks had a mixed reception when it opened in Ketchum a decade ago. When the Wall Street Journal ran a front-page article on the Seattle-based company, it noted that the chain even had a presence in a Ketchum store where sheep ranchers used to hang out.

But locals who resisted the idea of the mega-chain gaining a foothold in town initially joked that it was the perfect place to hold a quiet meeting because so few people frequented it.

Ketchum coffee shop owners and restaurateurs protested Starbucks' relocation, saying they thought its presence in a public facility would give it an unfair advantage.

But those nursing their cup of joe Friday morning shrugged off the controversy.

"I think it's going to draw a lot of people downtown — and they'll go from here to other coffee shops and businesses," said Ketchum resident Kathy Lynn.

"Anyone willing to pour money and energy into our town, we should embrace them," said Ketchum resident Timi Ryerson. "I love the architecture, how edgy it is. I think the location will be fabulous for hanging out. And it looks as if it will be a great public meeting place."

by the spike in Italy's borrowing costs and a breakdown in talks to name a new prime minister in Greece.

In Greece, too, there was good news for the markets Friday. Lucas Papademos, a former central banker, was sworn in as interim prime minister. Lucas Papademos took over a coalition government after a two-week political crisis that jeopardized the country's ability to continue receiving emergency loans.

Plenty of uncertainty still hangs over financial markets. Brian Gendreau, senior investment strategist at Cetera Financial Group, noted that the VIX index is still above 30, a sign that traders expect stocks to stay volatile.

Gendreau expects the S&P 500 to trade in a range of 1,200 to 1,275 until Europe's debt crisis gets closer to resolution and the U.S. Congress signs off on a larger debt-cutting plan. A supercommittee in Congress has until Nov. 23 to agree on a deficit-reduction package of at least $1.2 trillion over a decade.

"We still don't have a real resolution on either side of the Atlantic," Gendreau said.

The S&P 500 rose 24.16, or 1.9 percent, to 1,263.85. Only 13 of the 500 stocks in the S&P fell. Technology and materials companies had the biggest gains. The S&P 500 gained 0.8 percent for the week.

Walt Disney Co. jumped 6 percent. The company reported record annual profits and revenue after the market closed Thursday, thanks to stronger advertising sales at ESPN and the Disney Channel.

The Nasdaq composite rose 53.60, or 2 percent, to 2,678.75. The index edged down 0.3 percent for the week.

In other corporate news:

- D.R. Horton Inc. returned to a quarterly profit as more people bought houses. But the builder's earnings and revenue fell below what analysts had expected. D.R. Horton's stock dropped 1.7 percent.
- Nordstrom Inc. also reported stronger a quarterly profit late Thursday. But the retailer lowered its full-year profit outlook below what analysts expected. Its stock fell 0.3 percent.

- Viacom Inc., the parent of Nickelodeon, said it will move its stock listing to the Nasdaq Stock Market from the New York Stock Exchange next month because it's more "cost effective." The company's class B stock rose 3 percent.
- E-Trade Financial

Corp. sank 4.1 percent. The online broker said late Thursday that it had decided against putting itself up for sale. E-Trade's largest shareholder, the hedge fund Citadel Advisors, had been pushing for a sale.

U.S. bond trading was closed for Veterans Day.

Five stocks rose for every one that fell on the New York Stock Exchange. Volume was light at 3.3 billion shares.

Toy Hall of Famers: Dollhouse, Hot Wheels, Blanket

BY BEN DOBBIN

Associated Press

ROCHESTER, N.Y. • Is Linus jumping for joy?

The blanket, an all-purpose plaything as well as a comfort for generations of thumb-suckers like Charlie Brown's best friend in the "Peanuts" comic strip, landed Thursday in the National Toy Hall of Fame along with Hot Wheels and the dollhouse.

The trio take their places at The Strong, a children's and cultural history museum in upstate New York, alongside 46 classics ranging from the bicycle, kite and teddy bear to Barbie, Jack-in-the-Box and Mr. Potato Head.

Curators said the blanket was a special addition in the spirit of two earlier inductees, the cardboard box and the stick. They praised its ability to serve either as recreational raw material or an accessory transformed in myriad ways by a child's daydreams.

"Every now and again we like to shake things up, remind folks there's play experiences that happen purely creatively ... rather than coming with rules, a path, a backstory you feel constrained into," said Christopher Bensch, the Rochester museum's chief curator.

"Blankets have been keeping people warm for centuries, but they've also been heating up kids' imaginations," serving as magic carpets and superhero capes, a peek-a-boo veil, a chair-draped fortress or "an island of safety surrounded by sea monsters."

For Linus, the comfort imparted by his precious blue blanket blends with its "play function" as a lasso, a whip, a Snoopy towrope and, in later adventures, "when he talks about turning his blanket into a sports coat when he grows up," Bensch said.

Longevity is a key criterion for getting into the 13-year-old hall, which was acquired in 2002 from A.C. Gilbert's Discovery Village in Salem, Ore. Each toy must be widely recognized, foster learning, creativity or discovery through play, and endure in popularity over generations.

Trying to create a toy that would be as big a success with boys as Barbie was with girls, Elliot Handler hit upon an idea for miniature die-cast vehicles with sleek designs. Hot Wheels were introduced in 1968 and the brand became a big hit.

Handler, who died in July at age 95, grew Mattel Inc. into the nation's largest toy maker along with his wife, Ruth, who created the Barbie doll in 1959.

The dollhouse evolved from 16th-century "baby houses," wooden cabinets in which wealthy European women displayed their collections of miniature furnishings.

German toy makers produced variations for youngsters to furnish with tiny chairs, tables, beds, tapes, and floor coverings and, by the 19th century, mass-production methods enabled dollhouses to grow in popularity.

"The dollhouse has gone on to hold a special place in the hearts of children everywhere," said Patricia Hogan, the museum's curator of toys and dolls. "From the most elaborately crafted mansions to the simplest home-made structures, the dollhouse gives kids an ideal environment for creative play, from furnishing and refurbishing rooms, making up stories and collaborating with friends and siblings."

Thailand's Teflon Tour Industry to Weather Floods

CHRIS BLAKE
Associated Press

BANGKOK • The tuk tuk drivers outside the Holiday Inn in Bangkok's still-dry downtown sit idle, calling to passers-by in hopes that someone, anyone will climb in for a ride in their colorful pedicabs. Fares are hard to come by as the floodwaters creeping ever deeper into the Thai capital have washed the streets of tourists.

Trying times like these are nothing new for those in Thailand's all important tourism industry, and with each new calamity come dire predictions that the kingdom's image and its allure to foreign tourists may be irreparably harmed. But each time it recovers and its beaches, jungles, spas and urban malls are soon swarming with visitors again.

Call it "Thailand's Teflon tourism industry," said Imtiaz Muqbil, the executive editor of Travel Impact Newswire, which writes about tourism in Asia.

The past decade has seen Thai tourism — which accounts for about 6 percent of the economy and employs more 2 million workers — rocked by crisis after crisis. Among the disasters: The SARS epidemic, a tsunami, a military coup, the occupation by antigovernment protesters of the capital's two airports and multiple rounds of deadly street fighting.

The most recent violence, in April and May last year, ended with nearly 100 people killed and several landmark Bangkok buildings set ablaze, but Thailand had a record 16 million international visitors in 2010, showing how quickly tourism can bounce back — even from frightening images of mayhem broadcast worldwide.

The country's worst flooding in half a century, which began in July and has steadily worsened through an epic monsoon season, has killed more than 500 people nationwide and left everyone from street vendors to restaurant owners to hoteliers saying business in Bangkok is down.

"This is high season now and a lot of tourists have just disappeared," said tuk tuk driver Thongdee Thongrin. His business has been cut in half since sections of northern and western Bangkok began to flood two weeks ago.

But as a whole Thailand seems to once again be weathering the latest storm, with tourists still coming but skipping Bangkok and heading south to beach resorts like Phuket and Pattaya or north to Chiang Mai, all of which have been spared flooding.

"The public and private sectors have been hit by so many crisis over the years that they are really good at managing it and have the responses worked out to a T," Muqbil said. "In Boy Scout terminology, they are perpetually prepared and ready with the response and recovery drill the moment it is necessary."

Farmers Question Burden of a Legal Workforce

BY GABRIEL SILVERMAN
Medill News Service

ENGELHARD, N.C. • Few people in Engelhard, N.C., understand the effect of government bureaucracy better than vegetable farmer Debbie Daughtry. Nearly 2 feet of regulatory paperwork is stacked on her desk.

Since participating in the H-2A visa program that provides farmers with legal, temporary workers from foreign countries, typically Mexico, Daughtry has become a full-time paper pusher, organizing applications, certifications, time sheets and more.

Because her farm follows the law, Daughtry believes she's at a competitive disadvantage to the majority of other farms who decide to hire undocumented labor, usually at a fraction of the cost.

Debbie and her husband, Wilson, started using H-2A labor five years ago because even after receiving all the proper documentation from their seasonal labor force, including Social Security numbers, something didn't feel right.

"In the back of your mind you can't help but believe we probably don't have a 100 percent legal workforce," Wilson Daughtry said.

With few Americans willing to take on the physically demanding work at the wages offered, farmers are faced with a choice: join the expensive, bureaucratic program or hire cheaper undocumented labor and take their chances with U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

"We were afraid that as we go to harvest the crop ... here comes the enforcement people and there goes our workers," Wilson Daughtry added. "We borrow a tremendous amount of operating money from our local bank. Up to the point of harvesting, it's all out there."

Recent events in Alabama, Georgia and Arizona highlighted this gamble when workers fled in fear of stricter immigration enforcement legislation.

There has been an uptick in H-2A use in the last five years, but the majority of foreign farm labor remains illegal.

"Honestly, we're mad as hell about the situation,"

Wilson Daughtry said. "We've tried to do the right thing and because of that we got ourselves kicked in the teeth and it's cost us a bunch of money. And at some point you've got to ask if it's worth it or not."

It's not just the time required to navigate the paperwork. Farmers who use H-2A labor must pay to advertise the positions first to American workers. U.S. citizens have first shot at the jobs, but several farmers say domestic hires rarely make it through the season, or sometimes even the first day, because of the difficulty of the work.

In addition, H-2A employers must provide free housing, pay for transportation to and from the worker's country, cover all visa costs, and guarantee a wage more than $2 higher than federal minimum wage.

Before a single vegetable is picked, the Daughtrys estimate they must pay upwards of $1,200 per employee. With 58 H-2A employees that means nearly an additional $70,000 each season, not including the higher wages, which they would not be obligated to pay if they hired outside the program.

Ironically, those who choose to use the H-2A program make themselves more available to public scrutiny than those who choose to skirt the law, according to Lee Wicker, deputy director of the North Carolina Growers Association. The NCGA was established to help its members more easily navigate the H-2A program.

All migrant housing is legally required to be inspected prior to occupancy and certified for a specific number of beds, but Wicker said non-H-2A housing often goes uninspected.

In 2011, the North Carolina Department of Labor certified 16,942 beds, of which 8,844 were H-2A. But with an estimated 70,000 to 100,000 undocumented agriculture workers in the state, Wicker believes that H-2A is disproportionately scrutinized.

"I've seen those numbers," said Regina Cullen, NCDOL's Agricultural Safety and Health bureau chief. "My opinion is, if they give us a referral, if somebody says, 'You need to go here (because) there's unregistered housing,' we will do it. We can't do it if we don't know about it. ... We do try to inspect all of them impartially, in other words, we don't sort inspection lists by H-2A."

'Cash-outs' for Unused Sick Time Boost Public Employees

BY MICHAEL HILL
Associated Press

Denny Johnston received more than a pension and a handshake when he retired from the Washington state corrections system in 2009.

Because he used only a quarter of his sick days over a three-decade-long career, he was able to convert $15,000 of unused sick time into a tax-free account to pay health care expenses.

While the benefit is extremely rare in the private sector, where use-it-or-lose-it policies prevail, state and local government workers around the country can convert unused sick time into straight cash, retirement credits or use them to pay for health care when they retire.

The perk can add up. In Ohio, 2,164 state retirees eligible to cash out sick time at a 55 percent rate received an average of $5,646 in the 2011 fiscal year. More than 4,300 departing Florida employees who retired or otherwise left state service last fiscal year averaged about $3,000 in sick-time payments. At least five received 10 times that.

"I worked for 30 years, and I worked in what could be a high-pressure type situation from time to time," said Johnston, a 60-year-old Olympia resident who held a series of jobs in the Washington Department of Corrections, from counselor to manager, before retiring. "I didn't make as much money as I could have in the private sector, but I did enjoy having things like seniority rights and having benefits."

At least half the states allow eligible employees to turn unused sick time into cash when they retire or quit. More than a dozen others allow retiring employees to apply the unused sick time to pension credits or other benefits, according to a nationwide review by The Associated Press.

Many city and county workers around the country also receive the benefit.

It's at the local level where sick time cash-outs tend to attract attention after especially large payouts, such as an outgoing Miami-Dade county manager whose benefit package included $78,984 in unused sick time. These headline-grabbing cases typically involve administrative employees with higher salaries.

Precise counts showing how many employees receive sick time "cash-outs" are difficult because benefits vary among union contracts and even can differ by hiring date.

Proponents of the benefit say the ability to monetize leftover sick days encourages good attendance and is a fair trade-off for what they believe is lower pay for public workers.

Research differs on whether public or private employees have higher pay but generally shows that public employees have far better pensions, retiree health benefits and job security.

Critics see the sick time cash-outs as yet another example of government employees receiving benefits that are not available to those who work in the private sector. Just 4 percent of private sector companies offer sick leave cash-outs to employees, according to the Society for Human Resource Management, an Alexandria, Va.-based organization for human resource professionals.

"The fact is the private sector largely survives and works efficiently without these sorts of things," said Andrew Biggs, resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute.

Romney's Political Shifts Stir Criticism

BY STEVE LEBLANC
Associated Press

BOSTON • When he was running for Massachusetts governor in 2002, Mitt Romney's campaign courted voters at a Boston Gay Pride weekend by handing out fliers proclaiming "All citizens deserve equal rights, regardless of sexual preference."

Just a year later, Romney emerged as a leading voice against gay marriage, opposing the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court's ruling overturning the ban on same-sex marriage.

With Romney's positions evolving on everything from abortion to gay rights, embryonic stem cell research to health care, the Republican presidential candidate has faced charges of political opportunism from Republicans and Democrats alike.

In a Web video last month, Texas Gov. Rick Perry highlighted Romney's shifts on health care and illegal immigration and reminded voters, "You cannot lead a nation by misleading the people."

Obama's senior strategist, David Axelrod, posed this question to reporters in a conference call last month: "If you are willing to change positions on fundamental issues of principle, how can we know what you will do as president?"

Romney's answer from last Wednesday's debate: "I think people understand that I'm a man of steadiness and constancy."

To counter the criticism, he said he's been married to the same woman for four decades, has been a member of the same church his entire life and worked at one company for 25 years.

Romney — who is leading opinion polls in the GOP race — hopes that the argument will help him get beyond what dogged his 2008 campaign.

This time, the electorate's focus on the troubled economy may overshadow Romney's shifts. The former venture capitalist and Harvard Business School alumnus is counting on it as he plays up his business experience.

"With the economy being the absolutely overriding issue, even in the GOP primaries where the social conservatives are typically in control, maybe he's finally found an election cycle that plays to his sweet spot," said Boston University communications professor Tobe Berkovitz. "The planets are all lining up."

Still, Perry and Romney's other rivals portray him as a political chameleon — and probably will try again during Saturday night's debate in South Carolina.

Romney's history offers plenty of fodder, beginning with his gradual about-face on abortion.

During his first foray into politics — a failed 1994 campaign against incumbent Democratic Sen. Edward Kennedy — Romney said that while he was personally opposed to abortion, he believed the procedure "should be safe and legal."

Romney said his personal beliefs had no place in the race and his commitment to legal abortion stemmed from the death of a close relative during an illegal procedure.

Eight years later, as he was running for governor, Romney again pledged he would do nothing to change abortion rights laws in Massachusetts.

Then in 2005, after vetoing a bill that would have given rape victims access to emergency contraception at hospitals or through their pharmacists — a veto he said honored his pledge not to change the state's abortion laws — Romney declared himself "pro-life" in an editorial in the Boston Globe.

"I believe that abortion is the wrong choice except in cases of incest, rape, and to save the life of the mother," Romney wrote. "I wish the people of America agreed, and that the laws of our nation could reflect that view."

Romney has since said in a recent National Review editorial that he supports a reversal of Roe v. Wade, the landmark Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion, "because it is bad law and bad medicine."

Melissa Kogut, the former executive director of NARAL Pro-Choice Massachusetts, remembers meeting with Romney while he was still a candidate for governor. During the meeting, Kogut said Romney argued he could be a more moderate Republican voice on abortion.

"They know that this is killing them," Kogut recalls Romney saying of the political implications.

Kogut said she was surprised by Romney's shift.

"This is a man who had run for office before," Kogut said. "Clearly he had thought about it. It was a surprise to see him change so dramatically when he decided to run for president."

There were other shifts.

In 2005 Romney vetoed an embryonic stem cell research bill saying the research "crosses the boundary of ethics," Romney, whose wife, Ann, has multiple sclerosis, had previously voiced support for stem cell research, which advocates say holds the promise of treatment for a range of debilitating physical conditions.

Romney said his position evolved as he began to better understand the implications of embryonic stem cell research.

"It is wrong to allow science to take an assembly line approach to the production of human embryos, the creation of which will be rooted in experimentation and destruction," Romney said in a 2005 letter to lawmakers explaining his veto.

The Democrat-controlled Massachusetts Legislature quickly overturned the veto.

While Romney has found himself under fire from conservatives in his own party, others say they take his political evolution at face value.

Kristian Mineau, president of the Massachusetts Family Institute, which opposes gay marriage and abortion, called Romney "a great champion."

Mineau said he believed that it was during the stem cell debate that Romney began to seriously examine some of his core values.

"I believe it was a genuine change of heart," Mineau said. "We have to give the governor the benefit of the doubt, and he has never wavered since."

OBITUARIES

William Glenn Moore

Feb. 15, 1923-Nov. 8, 2011

William Glenn Moore, 88, of Twin Falls, passed away Tuesday, Nov. 8, 2011, at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center.

William was born in Cumberland, Md., on Feb. 15, 1923.

He is survived by his wife, Pauline; son, William; daughter, Pamela Ann; six grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren.

Bill was a veteran of World War II, where he was awarded the Silver Star for bravery.

He was an avid fisherman and hunter and loved the Idaho outdoors almost as much as his wife and his wine. He will be greatly missed by all who knew him and eternally admired.

No local service will be held. Arrangements have been provided by Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home in Twin Falls. Those wishing to share memories or condolences may do so at www.magicvalleyfuneralhome.com.

Jeannette Bybee

Oct. 19, 1931-Oct. 24, 2011

D. Jeannette Bybee went to join her loving husband in Heaven on Monday, Oct. 24, 2011. She died peacefully at her home in Twin Falls.

Vern; her parents; baby brother, Dean; and brothers, Delbert (Sachiko) and Ronald. She is survived by her four children, Tamara Bybee of Boise, Brad Jeannette was born in Bancroft, Idaho, on Oct. 19, 1931, to Marguerite and Willis McLain. She spent the early years of her life in Bancroft, then moved to Pocatello. She married P. Vern Bybee on Dec. 11, 1953. Jeannette and Vern were married for 56 years until his death on March 4, 2010. They were blessed with four children, Tamara, Brad, Scott and Kim. Her grandchildren and great-grandchildren were the highlights of her life, and she enjoyed every moment she spent with them.

Jeannette was a homemaker; she loved to read, crochet, quilt and knit. She worked many jobs but loved working at Price Hardware until she retired. She and Vern spent many years traveling across the United States, Canada and Mexico on their motorcycle with many special friends. They were members of the Twin Elks Lodge for years and devoted many hours of service to this organization.

Jeannette was preceded in death by her husband,

Bybee of Boise, Scott (Ann) Bybee of Jerome and Kim Seebold (Al Fiscus) of Twin Falls; grandchildren, Anza (Steve) Fullmer of Twin Falls, Brandi (Albert) Arroyo of Filer and Shawn (Myciah) Bybee of Denver, Colo.; great-grandchildren, Brynlee, Matthew, Quinton, Phoenix and a baby girl Arroyo who will arrive in January. She is also survived by her siblings, Sharon (Jack) Rhondeau of Sacramento, Calif., Clair (Mary Ellen) McLain of Pocatello, Idaho, Odell (Carol) McLain of Ririe, Idaho, and Gerald (Susie) Duffin; numerous nieces and nephews; and a very special best friend, Glenda Crumbliss.

The family would like to thank all those who assisted in the help and support of Jeannette and family during her illness.

A memorial service celebrating the lives of our beloved parents will be held at a later date.

Memories and condolences may be shared with the family at www.magicvalleyfuneralhome.com.

Frances Mary Andersen

Nov. 24, 1932-Nov. 7, 2011

Frances M. Andersen, 78, of Twin Falls, passed away Monday, Nov. 7, 2011, at St. Luke's Magic Valley Medical Center of a sudden illness.

Frances was born Nov. 24, 1932, in Milwaukee, Wis., to Sam and Catherine Cromas. Frances later met and married her lifetime soul mate, SFC Andreas Andersen of Horicon, Wis., on Feb. 27, 1954. From this union, a son was born, Michael in 1955. While being with the Army, Andy, Frances and Mike were stationed in several places, including Panama and Salinas, Calif. In 1960, they made their permanent home in Twin Falls. In 1967, Frances went to work for Ore-Ida Foods in Burley, Idaho, and later retired in 1987 to be a loving and devoted wife to Andy.

Frances is survived by her son, Michael (Connie) Andersen; and two granddaughters, Bryann of Jerome and Jayme of Buhl. She is preceded in death by her husband, Andy; her parents, Sam and Catherine Cromas; a sister, Joann; and a brother, George.

We would like to thank the caring and compassionate staff of St. Luke's ICU and ER Drs. Rao, Mogelson and Colvin for the care of our mother; and a special thanks to Brett Buckley and the staff of Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home for their compassion and professionalism in this difficult time for our family.

A memorial service will be held at 11 a.m. Friday, Nov. 18, at Parke's Magic Valley Funeral Home, 2551 Kimberly Road in Twin Falls.

Those wishing to share condolences and memories may do so at www.magicvalleyfuneralhome.com.

Matthew Olds Jolley

Dec. 6, 1968-Nov. 10, 2011

Matthew Olds Jolley, 42, of Twin Falls, passed away Thursday, Nov. 10, 2011, at his home.

Matt was born Dec. 6, 1968, in Columbus, Ohio, the son of Frederick and Patricia Jolley. Before his fourth birthday, his family moved to Arvada, Colo., a suburb of Denver, where he grew up and attended high school. He received the degree of Bachelor of Science (summa cum laude) from the Colorado College in Colorado Springs, Colo., and the degree of Doctorate of Medicine from the University of Colorado Medical School in Denver, Colo. He completed his residency at Michigan State University Medical Center in Kalamazoo, Mich., in September of 1996 and immediately moved to Twin Falls, Idaho, where he engaged in family practice. He was employed by and a partner at the Physicians Center in Twin Falls until the summer of 2008, when he was forced to resign due to health reasons.

Matt was afflicted with cystic fibrosis which created numerous challenges and problems for him throughout his life. He met these challenges with determination and resolve. He refused to acknowledge his limitations. So in high school he became a trainer and received statewide recognition as an outstanding high school trainer. Later having the privilege of being a trainer for the Denver Broncos and the Denver Nuggets.

Despite his illness, he was determined to be normal. He played soccer for many years but his passion became martial arts. He began participating at age 6. As with everything he excelled at this, earning himself numerous black belts in several disciplines, including Tae Kwon Do, Jujitsu and Cane. After moving to Twin Falls, he became a member of the Intermountain Martial Arts. There he met Don Rider and they became instant best friends. He was humble about his incredible ability and became a well respected teacher and friend.

In August of 2008, Matt underwent a double lung transplant at the Anschutz Medical Campus in Denver, Colo. After five months of recuperation at his parents' home in Arvada, Colo., Matt returned to Twin Falls, Idaho, in March 2009, where he was employed by Psychiatric Services until his death.

While there, in addition to providing psychiatric services to his patients, he initiated a pain clinic, a project that was close to his heart.

Matt was possessed of an indomitable and courageous spirit. He consistently faced and successfully met challenges that would have daunted lesser mortals. He struggled constantly with his medical issues and endured without complaint more pain and suffering than was his due. Throughout it all, he maintained a cheerful attitude, was friendly to all who knew him and was a loving husband and father.

On Nov. 23, 2010, Matt married Jamie Hoffman. Matt was a member of the Lighthouse Christian Fellowship and was also a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity at Colorado College.

Matt is survived by his wife, Jamie; stepchildren, Tidus and Emma of Twin Falls, Idaho; his son, Brendan of Twin Falls, Idaho; his parents, Frederick and Patricia Jolley of Arvada, Colo.; and his brother, Mark A (Andy) Jolley, wife Daphne and daughters, Kaitlyn and Lauren of Denver, Colo.; his mother and father in-law, Barry and Vickie Eacker of Twin Falls; and his best friends in life, Don and Terri Rider.

A funeral service will be held at 2 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 15, at the Lighthouse Christian Fellowship, 916 Eastland Drive in Twin Falls, with Pastor Kevin Newbry officiating. Burial will follow at Sunset Memorial Park. Arrangements are under the direction of Rosenau Funeral Home in Twin Falls. Family and friends are encouraged to share their memories at www.rose-naufuneralhome.com.

Mary Hisako Kawamoto

May 5, 1925-Nov. 7, 2011

Mary Hisako Kawamoto, former resident of Twin Falls, Idaho, passed away peacefully on Monday, Nov. 7, 2011, surrounded by family in Vancouver, Wash.

Mary was born to Tahei and Kimie Enoki on May 5, 1925, in Onalaska, Wash., where she was the oldest daughter of seven children. Mary was considered Nisei, which means second generation Japanese American. She grew up helping on the family farm in Washington. Mary later graduated from high school in Tacoma, Wash. Soon after high school, Mary was brought to the Magic Valley during World War II, where she was interned at the Minidoka relocation camp near Eden, Idaho. Eventually, she went to Cleveland, Ohio, on an indefinite leave certificate from the camp to work at a war plane building facility.

After the war, Mary returned to Twin Falls, and started Kay's Rice Bowl with her husband. She later worked at the Ponderosa Inn in Burley. In the early 1970s, Mary joined her son, Kerry, in another family restaurant, George K's in Twin Falls, where she enjoyed customers and working with many of the same employees until its closure and her retirement in 1998. Once retired, Mary enjoyed the exercise class at the senior citizen center and visiting her siblings, daughter, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

Mary will be remembered for her wit and sense of humor, her strong work ethic, and the love she had for her family and friends.

Mary is survived by her sister, Martha (Kenji) Nishida of Huntington Beach, Calif.; brothers, Jim (Anne) Enoki of Nampa, Idaho, and Frank Enoki of Melrose Park, Ill.; sister-in-law, Mary Ellen (George) Enoki of Dunnellon, Fla.; daughter, Becky (Ron) Fox of Merritt Island, Fla.; daughter-in-law, Ruthie Kawamoto of Twin Falls; granddaughter, Kara (Steve) Martin of Vancouver, Wash.; grandson, Cade Kawamoto of Huntington Beach, Calif.; and great-grandchildren, Kinsey, Jacob and Addison Martin of Vancouver, Wash.

Mary was preceded in death by her son, Kerry Kawamoto of Twin Falls, Idaho; brothers, George Enoki and Tom Enoki; sister, Alyce Morishige; and her parents, Tahei and Kimie Enoki.

Mary's family gratefully thanks those who cared for her and made her last year extra special, Bridgewood at Four Seasons Assisted Living and Community Hospice in Vancouver, Wash.

Arrangements are under care of Evergreen Memorial Gardens in Vancouver, Wash., as with her wishes, no service, but a small celebration of her life with immediate family will be held at a later date.

W.C. 'Doc' Boyd

Nov. 14, 1919-Nov. 5, 2011

W.C. "Doc" Boyd, 91, of Twin Falls, died Saturday, Nov. 5, 2011, at home.

Doc was born Nov. 14, 1919, at Guthrie, Okla., to Arthur J. and Cora Wentworth Boyd. He was one of five children. He grew up and graduated from Holdenville High School at the age of 15. He attended Chiropractic Colleges in Kansas and Los Angeles, Calif. He put his education on hold in 1943 when he joined the Navy Seabees. He served in World War II with the 107th Battalion on Kwajalein and Tinian islands. Following his honorable discharge in 1945, he completed his education. He was licensed in Oklahoma, Kansas and Arizona. He practiced in Oklahoma for a few years, moving to Florence, Ariz., where he practiced for 25 years. In 1986, he retired and moved to Twin Falls. He had formerly received a degree in naturopathy in Oregon and practiced as a naturopath while living in Idaho.

Doc loved to travel and play golf. He also adored his poodles, Amber, Stormy and Smokey Jo. He received many special honors and recognition through his lifetime.

He is survived by the love of his life, Janice; three children, Rick Ramsey (Mitzi), Lori Miller (Russ Seal) and Penney Ramsey; seven grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren; one sister, Nellie Grady of St. George, Utah; and his beloved Stormy. Doc was preceded in death by his parents; two sisters; a brother; and his beloved poodles, Smokey Jo and Amber.

A celebration of life will be held at 3 p.m. Friday, Nov. 18, at the Jerome Country Club with military honors. Pastor Boyd Satterwhite will officiate. Cremation is under the direction of Serenity Funeral Chapel in Twin Falls.

Elder Derek Jason Walker

Aug. 31, 1991-Nov. 8, 2011

FAIRFIELD • Elder Derek Jason Walker, 20, a resident of Fairfield, passed away Tuesday, Nov. 8, 2011, in Weslaco, Texas.

Derek was born Aug. 31, 1991, in Provo, Utah, the son of Jason D. Walker and Cynthia (Cindy) Wilson. He attended elementary school in the Moscow School District and then in Minidoka County School District. Derek attended East Minico Junior High and his freshman year of high school at Minico High School before moving to Fairfield, Idaho, where he attended and graduated from Camas County High. Following the high school, Derek was accepted to Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah, but deferred his acceptance to serve a full-time mission for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Derek was called to serve in the Texas-McAllen Mission and entered the Missionary Training Center in Provo, Utah, on Sept. 29, 2010. Derek arrived in McAllen, Texas, on Dec. 1, 2010, and served in the communities of Brownsville, La Joya and Weslaco, Texas.

Derek loved serving as a missionary and loved the people of Southern Texas. Derek loved mountain biking, snowboarding, snowmobiling, football, basketball, track and the outdoors. He worked for several summers as a farmhand in Alta, Wyo. In 2010, Derek worked for the U.S. Forest Service on a YCC crew in the Fairfield Ranger District.

Derek is survived by his parents, Jason and Cindy Walker of Fairfield, Idaho; his brother, Austin Grant Walker who is attending Brigham Young University in Provo; his sisters, Kylie

Grace Walker and Alison Chloe Walker; and his youngest brother, Tyson David Walker, all of Fairfield, Idaho. Derek is also survived by both sets of grandparents, David and Carolyn Walker of Rupert, Idaho, and Grant and Sharol Wilson of Alta, Wyo.

A visitation for family and friends will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 13, at Demaray Funeral Service, Gooding Chapel. A funeral service will be held at 1 p.m. Monday, Nov. 14, at the Camas County High School gymnasium in Fairfield. A visitation will be held from 11 a.m. to noon prior to the service at the Fairfield Branch of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Fairfield.

Memorial contributions may be made to the General Mission Fund of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and may be made at your local ward or branch. Memorial donations may also be made to the Camas County High School.

Arrangements are under the direction of Demaray Funeral Service, Gooding Chapel.

Condolences may be sent to the family by visiting the obituary link at www.demaryfuneralservice.com.

Q. My sister's husband died in November of last year. How can I help her through this difficult time?

A. Feelings of grief may return on this first anniversary of her husband's death. Experts call this an "anniversary reaction" and its effects can last for days or weeks. Your sister's feelings are a natural response to her loss, and reflect how important her husband's life was to her. Symptoms to watch for include sadness, loneliness and crying spells, anger, anxiety, lack of interest in usual activities, and trouble eating and sleeping, including stomach upset and nightmares. You can help your sister prepare by talking calmly about the subject. Reminisce memory - perhaps a donation to a charitable organization, a scholarship to a local college, or even a family tree-planting ceremony. Work with your sister to plan a positive distraction, such as a gathering with friends, or a low-stress trip. Help her draw friends and loved ones close to her for support, comfort and encouragement. If your sister's grief appears to get worse over time, assist her in seeking help from a mental health professional.

POINTS TO CONSIDER BEFORE PURCHASING YOUR MEMORIAL

- Jim Lee received his training through and worked for, Jellison-Madland Memorials the last 27 years of their 100 years in business. • As a qualified memorial dealer with over 30 years experience he is here to help you select the memorial that will be a lasting tribute to your loved one. • Appointments are made to provide you the privacy and time to pick the right memorial and the perfect personalized design. Since we are an independent LOCAL memorial dealer, we can meet or beat any reasonable price in Southern Idaho. We own our own shop and do our own work. Unless a funeral home owns and operates its own monument shop your memorial will be ordered from and completed by someone over 100 miles away and delivered by someone from out of the area as well. We do not sell to, through, or for funeral homes. You do not have to buy a memorial through a funeral home. You have the right to buy from whomever you choose at whatever time you choose. The time to pick and design a memorial is NOT when suffering loss or making funeral arrangements. Take time to regroup and start the healing process before planning the memorial that will honor the one you've lost. Our prices include ALL lettering on your memorial, front and back, and delivery in most local cemeteries. We DO NOT charge for concrete on our memorials. Question outlandish concrete fees.
- We commend Sunset Memorial Park and most other area cemeteries for their professionalism and cemetery maintenance.

Through Charity, Sandusky had Access to Vulnerable Kids

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) • Over the past 30 years, politicians, sports stars and community leaders heaped praise on Jerry Sandusky and the charity he founded for troubled youngsters, The Second Mile. It was a model program, and the acclaimed football coach was its driving force. Now, prosecutors say that very success enabled Sandusky to find boys and sexually assault them.

OUR VIEW

No, No and NO!

This past Tuesday voters from Bellevue, Burley, Jerome, Kimberly and Sun Valley were each asked to approve measures that would have increased their taxes. In every case, those measures failed. In fact, Jerome voters rejected two separate spending increases; one by voting “no” and the other by voting “yes”

“Shall the City of Jerome enter into an agreement for a residential recycling program at a cost of approximately $3.50 per residential unit to be billed monthly along with regular sanitation services?”

Yes — 49 percent; No — 51 percent.

“Shall the City of Jerome, Jerome County, Idaho (the “City”), be authorized to issue General Obligation bonds (estimated to be approximately $500,000) to finance the cost of purchasing a property to house the Police Department, retrofit said facility, ...”

Yes — 64 percent ; No — 36 percent

But of course the police bond required a 66.7 percent supermajority for passage, so it failed even when it had substantial — not quite substantial enough — support.

The same was true in Bellevue where 58 percent of voters supported a $375,000 Fire Department improvement bond that would have led to a slight tax increase for the next 20 year. It too required a 66.7 percent approval.

Sun Valley voters continued that trend when 64percent said they wanted the city to spend $14.1 million to reconstruct roads and paths, but again fell short of the supermajority threshold necessary for passage.

Voters in Burley and Kimberly were more adamant in saying “No”.

In Burley, 58 percent of voters said no to a permanent $200,000 street repair levy and 67percent of Kimberly voters said no to a $3.50/month tax increase to implement a single stream recycling program.

It’s easy to think that this outbreak of “Just say No!” mentality is a product of the great recession and its lingering affects. And this past Tuesday this was probably the case. The truth is however, that with rare exceptions, voting “No” to referendums that would increase taxes has been our default position for quite some time. Like “guilty until proven innocent” is an accepted fact in our legal system, “voting no until convinced to say yes” is the modern equivalent when it comes to the self infliction of higher taxes.

That’s okay. For some of these measures the timing was not right or the duration of the levy increase too long (like in Burley where the street repair levy increase would have lasted until — well, forever).

However, each of these measures was placed on the ballot to deal with a perceived need. And in many of these cases, last Tuesday’s “No” vote will lead to a more expensive “Yes” vote at some point in the future. Every spending referendum is like that, providing voters the opportunity to put off into the future the possibility that a rapidly escalating cost will be paid by some other group.

Let’s hope that’s not what happened on Tuesday.

Does National Security Equal Energy Security?

BY JOHN W. WARNER AND JOHN NATHMAN

Throughout our public service careers, we have been honored to work on behalf of the men and women of our military. Whether from within the Navy or as the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, we each have seen and experienced firsthand the ingenuity and commitment of our uniformed men and women, their families and their civilian counterparts throughout our nation’s defense structure. Today’s servicemen are continuing to take a leadership role toward a safer, cleaner, more secure energy future.

These efforts are contributing to the easing of America’s dependence on imported oil by finding many ways to achieve energy efficiencies, harness renewable sources, and use advanced biofuels. The U.S. Department of Defense is pursuing these goals for convincing reasons. Most important is decreasing the risk to life and limb of deployed forces and applying the dollar savings to meet other needs of our troops.

As noted in a recent report by The Pew Charitable Trusts, titled “From Barracks to the Battlefield: Clean Energy Innovation and America’s Armed Forces,” the Pentagon is one of the largest energy consumers in the world. The U.S. military used 300,000 barrels of oil daily in 2010. By point of comparison, that is more than the individual consumption of 75 percent of all countries.

Delivering and protecting this fuel for combat operations comes with a high price, both human and financial. Eighty percent of the convoys employed in Iraq and Afghanistan are for fuel, and from 2003 to 2007, more than 3,000 uniformed and military contractor casualties were associated with its delivery. In 2010 alone, there were 1,100 attacks on such convoys, clearly defining the risks associated with supplying deployed units.

Financially, global oil price spikes hit the department’s budget hard, especially at a time of fiscal austerity. Every $10 rise in the price of a barrel of oil costs the Pentagon $1.3 billion per year, contributing to the 19 percent increase in operational energy outlays in 2010, even while consumption declined by almost 10 percent.

New Jobs Came at a Hefty Price

As I read the headline in the Friday, Nov. 4, newspaper, I learned of the good news of a major new employer coming to Twin Falls, and with it at least 400 new jobs. “Not just good news, great news!” I tell myself. Then as I read the article, I learn the price tag: $29 million? I hope this is a typo. Now I can be as thankful for new business and jobs to our area as anybody, but let me explain my disdain.

Three years ago, I desired to put up for sale a parcel of land within the city limits that was subdivided from land I already owned. The plans were sent to the Twin Falls City Planning and Zoning department and, to shorten a very long story, after a mere 9½ months of drawing plans, reviews and re-submissions, I finally had permission to put my parcel up for sale, with a laundry list of requirements in order to do so. Now keep in mind all I wanted to do was put a “For Sale” sign up in front of it. I wasn’t trying to make it into a CAFO or a nuclear waste depository or for any other purpose. I just wanted to put a sign up.

Dave Wright

As I worked my way through the “requirements” with the assistance of a local engineering firm and a qualified site work contractor, the costs came rolling in. So much so that by the time the laundry list was complete, my “For Sale” sign had cost me more than $260,000. That is not a typo. That figure, more than $7,600 was in fees to the city of Twin Falls. I had to pay fees to hook up to the very sewer

Election Night Showed Power, Potential of Modern Journalism

At 9 a.m. Tuesday morning, the newsroom was unusually quiet.

Sure, online editor Josh Palmer was already hours into his early morning routine, and the features staff were just getting situated, but the chairs in the news cubicles were empty.

It was election day. And every reporter knows that means they’ll be on duty into the wee hours — a fact that entitles them to a little bit of extra shut-eye.

In pre-Internet elections, newspapers would scramble to get the most complete results into the paper, repeatedly pushing county clerks to get the latest updates before the press started rolling. Those pressures are no less diminished today, but reporters are also expected to feed the website constantly.

This year, we added a “liveblog” to our frequent Web updates. This allowed any of the Times-News’ reporters and editors to update results faster than we could update the main election, but I wasn’t sure how the growth in social media would affect our plan. Had the conversation moved so much to Facebook and Twitter that the idea of chatting on a website had already become old fashioned?

My worries couldn’t have been more unfounded.

Thousands of readers tuned into our site at Magicvalley.com/live as the night went on. And those that dropped in weren’t passive — they lent their voices to the discussion.

It was journalism in its most undiluted state: readers asked us questions, and we answered them as quickly as possible. As people briefly tuned in, they asked for updates on elections in their corner of the Magic Valley, and our news team responded, searching through printouts and

Congress is Cutting Entitlements Unfairly

The front-page article on Nov. 7 reporting an anonymous analysis of the census results states that the median net worth of those older than 65 was $170,494. Net worth is the sum of all assets minus debts. Older Americans are more likely to have paid off their mortgages and built up some savings. This takes time. Almost all seniors started off with very little and scrimped, worked and saved to develop the net worth reported. Not everyone went to college; one of the wealthiest seniors I know was a carpenter, then a contractor and lived simply.

Social Security is like an annuity. My husband and I paid into it; my son and his wife paid into it. My son and his wife died and left two girls for us to raise. Their Social Security account provided money for their girls until they were 18 and was a great help to us. Social Security now provides for my retirement, in part. If the past congresses and administrations had not used Social Security funds for their pet projects, we would likely have enough to continue the present payments, but that isn't the case. So Social Security will be reduced, but we seniors know how to scrimp.

What is not right, in my mind, is that Congress has its own retirement plan, more generous than Social Security, and its own health care plan. This entitlement should be the first to be eliminated, as most politicians seem to retire with a net worth much higher than the median $170,494. The founding fathers never intended that Congress should be a full time job. We voters should tell our congressmen that there are entitlements aplenty to cut and we expect them to cut them fairly.

Airport Officials Correct AP Story

The Times-News recently (Oct. 31) printed an Associated Press article dealing with ongoing discussions in Blaine County regarding the future of Friedman Memorial Airport.

One important sentence in that article requires correction. The AP stated, "The FAA (Federal Aviation Administration) said the airport (Friedman) should be moved because expanding residential areas and high hills make the airfield too dangerous." That is incorrect. The FAA has never made such a statement and Friedman continues to operate as a safe airport.

The challenges at Friedman are complex, but fundamentally involve FAA design standards and winter-time reliability issues. Friedman's airport layout plan allows approved commercial aircraft to land and take off safely and routinely with some airfield operational modifications. Winter reliability issues center on approach minimums at the airport that are influenced by terrain and weather, not uncommon for a ski resort area, and that typically result in a number of flights which must be diverted to Twin Falls or Boise.

The Friedman Memorial Airport Authority continues to work with the community and the FAA to assess a range of options to address the challenges with our airport. Meantime, the airport safely handles regularly scheduled commercial aircraft and continues to serve a broad range of general aviation aircraft.

Nov. 17 is Children's Grief Awareness Day

I want to draw the attention to Children's Grief Awareness Day on Nov. 17, 2011. The purpose of this day is to help people understand the impact of loss through death on children and their need for support. This day was selected because it immediately precedes the winter holiday season, a particularly difficult time to miss a loved one.

Children's Grief Awareness Day is an opportunity for all of us to recognize and support the grieving children in our valley. Why raise awareness for grieving kids and teens? There are more grieving children and teens than most of us realize. One out of seven children faces the death of someone close to them. It takes most children longer to cope with their grief than we tend to expect. A grieving child or teen can't always just "get over it" in an immediate fashion. (www.Childrens-GriefAwarenessDay.com)

Kids Count Too! Inc., a local nonprofit organization, invites concerned residents to become more aware of the kids experiencing grief. Organized by local hospices and funeral directors, KCT has served nearly 200 kids with grief support over the last four years. Dedicated adult volunteers have planned day camps, summer campouts, and Kids 2 Kids After School grief groups. Generous donations by local foundations, businesses, service clubs, the CSI Community Council and individuals have enabled participants to attend free of charge.

What can you do on Nov. 17, 2011?

Be aware of children who have lost a loved one and that they are not forgotten in the midst of their grief.

Wear blue on Nov. 17 and let people know why you're wearing blue.

Visit the Facebook page, www.facebook.com/ChildrensGriefAwarenessDay, to discover what others are doing.

Contact by email, kidscounttoo@gmail.com, to share your support for children in the Magic Valley.

Sustaining Communities Through Caring

Broken communities need loving care to heal and recover their vitality. People need the joy of belonging. Judging, labeling and confining them within the walls of poverty prevent this. A grudge festers and grows worse over time until it robs our united wholeness and peace of mind. We lose our commitment to caring for others when we isolate from them. Our connectedness to community provides pathways for information to build positive relationships.

In good times and bad, we need to be part of a caring community that fosters respect for others and whose members provide love, nurturing, and support for each other. We reach out with a kind word, a meal, or a hug to make the world a better place to live.

Problems occur when we separate from a loving healthy community. We can't long survive by shutting out the very people who could provide the love we need. Pride and selfishness restrict the open and peaceful flow of helpful and encouraging conversation between us. A good attitude can take the futility and ineffectiveness out of broken relationships.

When we focus on the values we have in common with each other and stop harboring ill feelings that divide us, we restore our connectedness. Whether we change the world or not, we can change the way we look at it.

Showing others that we care can make a huge difference. When we demonstrate that their happiness matters to us, we begin to matter to them. As we share our positive stories and faith, we are enabled to move forward together. It is in seeking the best for each other that the community is sustained through hard times. We need each other.

Taking Issue with Rant About Redistricting

The Fremont neighborhood in Seattle has a locally famous sign that declares Fremont to be the actual Center of the Universe, not Twin Falls County. The Twin Falls commissioners' self-centered hypocritical rant about redistricting shows just how out of step with the universe they are.

The issue has nothing to do with disenfranchisement, as the commissioners claim. Every resident of Twin Falls County will still have the vote. What really irks the commissioners, I suspect, is that Twin Falls County will have absolute control over only one legislative district instead of two.

Currently Twin Falls voters make up about 75 percent of District 23 and 100 percent of District 24. Under the new plan, Twin Falls voters will still populate 100 percent of District 24 but only 37 percent of District 23 (along with Elmore County/58 percent and Owyhee County/5 percent) and 30 percent of District 27 (along with Cassia County/52 percent and Power County/18 percent).

To win election, some Twin Falls candidates might have to campaign outside the county. Horrors! The commissioners' "simple" solution is the status quo: two districts with Twin Falls County supermajorities. Do the math — that's the only result if Twin Falls County is split just once.

While the commissioners say diluting the (exaggerated) influence of Twin Falls County is "inappropriate," "illegal" and "unnecessary," they're just fine with doing the same thing to voters in any other county. After all, when have the commissioners ever fretted about the "disenfranchised" voters in today's District 23 — the 11,000 residents of Owyhee County who are yoked to the 35,000 residents in western Twin Falls County?

The days of being over-represented in Boise might be drawing to a close — the center of the universe must be moving.

Occupy Twin Falls a Model for Other Protests

Congratulations, Occupy Twin Falls, on your first protest. That's how a demonstration should run! No burned trash cans, poopie cop cars or sicko rapists. That's because Idaho has adults; even liberal ones. The crowd actually arrived with a predetermined message that focused on the lack of voice for the small person, unlike the Wall St. group that has yet to utter a coherent demand.

OTF didn't camp out, but they plan weekly meetings to keep their message alive and I hope they recognize and reject the opportunists that put skid stains on the other occupy movements. The first slime balls were the union organizers instructing Wall St'ers how to defy the police. When the strap cuffs and riot gear came out, the purple shirts disappeared. The organizers were already home when the 99 percent swallowed their first tear gas.

Secondly, letting anarchists join your group is a guaranteed negative outcome because their DNA make-up is anti-peace via vandalism. Peaceful folk don't carry backpacks full of rocks, gas bombs and face masks.

Thirdly, if an extreme lunatic fringe demands the extermination of all Jew bankers, feel free to bounce these clowns from your group the minute they spew their bile. They're nuttier than a fruitcake and their diatribe would make even Gandhi go Freddie Kruger on a pack of nuns. But don't worry about negative press coverage; media has no time for these psycho racists when hunting for Klan robes in Tea party closets takes precedence.

To be honest, Occupy Twin Falls should come up with another name. They seem to be the only rational adults in this declining movement so let the others follow your example. Occupy Wall St. has only hurt surrounding small businesses and terrorized old people while Dow Jones banks record cash since the occupation started. They're almost like a crusty little rabbit's foot for the 1%; how ironic, right?

Moving Beyond the 'Religious Right'

Lost amid day-to-day coverage of the Republican presidential candidates' jockeying is the question of what kind of values debate we need to have heading into 2012. The economy has so far overshadowed "culture war" issues in this campaign, but rumors of the religious right's death are greatly exaggerated. This is underscored by more than last month's "Values Voter" summit in Washington or a recent debate in Iowa hosted by Ralph Reed's Faith and Freedom Coalition (which drew all but one GOP presidential candidate). A group of donors has also announced an effort to swing the 2012 election by registering 5 million new Christian conservatives to vote. Conservative Christians have an enduring relevance to American politics.

As an evangelical Christian who believes the Republican Party does not have a monopoly on moral values, I believe this discussion is long overdue. The "compassionate conservatism" espoused by President George W. Bush and many prominent evangelical leaders has been supplanted by a Tea Party ideology that bears more resemblance to the anti-Christian philosophy of Ayn Rand than it does to the Gospel.

Whether the Christian duty to love our neighbors is compatible with a political movement that embraces radical individualism and rejects the ethic of collective responsibility is a central question as the GOP attempts to cement the Tea Party and the religious right into a cohesive base. Tea Party activists and Republican leaders have consistently targeted for cutbacks vital government programs that protect the poor, the elderly, children and other vulnerable Americans. Yet calls for shared sacrifice and proposals to modestly raise taxes on the wealthiest Americans in order to fund investments and protections that promote the common good are derided as "class warfare." This is what passes for family values?

At a time when our nation is plagued by the worst poverty rates in decades, religious leaders are not buying this narrow ideological agenda. In fact, evangelicals, Catholic bishops and Protestant leaders are leading a "Circle of Protection" campaign to defend government programs that provide a basic measure of dignity and security to those struggling to make ends meet. We are also urging a balanced approach to deficit reduction that doesn't put the greatest burden on those hit hardest by the economic crisis. It's time for a new values debate. Millions of religious Americans who believe in economic fairness, health care as a basic human right and justice for immigrants will vote in next year's elections. They are not going to let the "religious right" speak for them.

Historically, the Defense Department has played a key role in the development of the Internet, semiconductors, the microchip, and GPS. This same level of innovative progress is needed now more than ever to address the overall energy challenges facing America.

The two of us have visited military installations to observe how they are adopting clean energy technologies, improving efficiency and saving dollars. For example, at Marine Corps Base Quantico in Virginia, they are pairing rechargeable batteries with renewable energy technologies to extend ground troop range and effectiveness. One such new tool is the enhanced rucksack (what ground troops use to carry their gear) with a portable solar power system.

Uniformed and civilian personnel at New Hampshire's historic Portsmouth Naval Shipyard are working to increase the base's energy efficiency by constructing LEED-certified buildings, employing co-generation solutions (capturing waste heat to create additional power), and using solar-generated electricity as backup for communications systems.

At Fort Bragg in North Carolina, we saw the practical implementation of the initiatives that are part of an Army-wide goal toward "Net Zero" energy. This program aims to have each of six installations produce as much as they consume in energy, water, or waste by 2020, while two other installations, Fort Bliss in Texas and Fort Carson in Colorado, will become Net Zero in all three areas.

Such efforts across all branches of the military are leading to financial savings and often encouraging similar initiatives in nearby civilian communities that provide support to military families.

America can take pride in how the brave men and women in uniform, whether serving on U.S. bases or on deployments overseas, clearly understand the linkage between strong energy policies and the ability to carry out their missions.

Under the leadership of former Secretary of Defense Robert Gates, and now Secretary Leon Panetta, the Department of Defense is exercising aggressive energy efficiency goals to lessen our dependence on imported oil, thereby enhancing our nation's security and ability to protect our troops. The military has set a target of obtaining 25 percent of its energy from renewable sources by 2025.

Given the scale of these challenges facing our nation, and the world, the Department of Defense's efforts in this area will be viewed by history as a major contribution to defending our nation and maintaining America's leadership role as a technological innovator.

Viewers talked with each other, too. They asked each other who they expected to win and talked in depth about their opinions of the candidates in Twin Falls, Burley, Kimberly and beyond. It also provided a place for the candidates themselves to watch the election unfold live. For more than one candidate, Magicvalley.com was their election night headquarters.

More humbling than the dialogue, though, was the gratitude.

Readers kept thanking us for the service we were providing. As people drifted in and out of the conversation, they made a point to tell us how much they appreciated not only the live results, but the conversation.

We should really be thanking you.

Without your passion for the democratic process, our liveblog would have been a wasteland. You cared enough to tune in to our live updates, and your actions benefitted the other viewers. It's the sort of chain reaction that makes a community stronger.

And it's definitely a tool we'll be using again. 2012's election will be the logical place to go, but expect to see that type of community conversation online in more topics you're passionate about.

Sixteen hours after election day began, and nine hours after we opened the doors on the liveblog, we kicked out the remaining 70 political die-hards that were discussing the intricacies of the Burley city council. At 1 a.m., we asked folks to call it a night.

After all, we had to be in the newsroom bright and early, ready to put together a post-election paper that broadened the discussion.

and water lines that I had to pay to have put in. The new company coming to town is getting $5.7 million in fees waived. Hmmm ...

Other points aside, my major issue remains obvious. There seems to be a tilted scale between attracting new business and taking care of the ones we already have. No, my local businesses may never employ 400 people at once, nor do I desire such. But my main business has been in this locale for 104 years and has employed thousands of people in that time. And we are still here doing business in the land we love, as are hundreds of other local entities who have never asked for nor taken a plugged nickel.

Giving away the farm up front to someone who could potentially leave as quickly as they came is ill-advised in my conservative mind. I know nothing of nor do I have any burr against this coming company. I hope they have a long and prosperous relationship with

Twin Falls. After all, who can blame them for saying yes to such a generous offer?

I am certainly not soliciting some form of reimbursement for my own enterprises but also not for anyone else's. Sure, I understand the potential economic ripple of adding these new jobs. My own businesses may even see some benefit. But the businesses that have been around with a long track record of employment and loyalty are the ones getting taxed and fee'd to death to help fund such giveaways.

Call me unvisionary if you want to, but it is interesting to me to witness how much easier it is for someone to give away money that they themselves didn't earn.

A word of advice from me and of the bemoaning I hear from many other local business owners, workers and patrons out here bringing it every day, every year: Remember the "Free" in "Free Enterprise" doesn't mean you just give it away.

P.S.: "The government cannot give to anybody anything that the government does not first take from somebody else."

Mexico's Loss of 2nd in Charge Won't Affect Drug War

BY ADRIANA GOMEZ LICON
Associated Press

MEXICO CITY • President Felipe Calderon said Saturday the loss of Mexico's No. 2 official in a helicopter crash won't weaken the offensive against drug cartels and, if anything, will toughen it.

Speaking at a memorial service, Calderon said the best way to pay tribute to Interior Secretary Francisco Blake Mora and the seven others killed Friday when their aircraft smashed into a mountainside south of Mexico City is "to keep fighting with greater conviction for the things they fought for."

Blake Mora had been the face of the government's drug war, carrying a message to stay tough and bringing new offensives to states beleaguered by drug violence. He was on his way to a meeting of prosecutors when he died.

"The best way to honor these citizens is to step up the efforts to transform Mexico into the country they wanted," Calderon said at a military field where thousands of people, including Cabinet members, governors and relatives of Blake Mora mourned the crash victims.

As a military orchestra played a march, Calderon stood for several minutes on a red carpet next to Blake Mora's coffin, with the other seven caskets lined up behind him amid an honor guard of hundreds of soldiers.

The president then offered his condolences to Blake Mora's wife and children and gave them a portrait of Blake Mora and the Mexican flag that covered his coffin during the vigil.

Calderon had choked back emotion Friday when he announced the loss of "a great patriot ... a dear friend." On Saturday, he stood strong while delivering a speech telling Mexicans that despite their grief, the loss should inspire more action in the war against cartels, a conflict that has seen at least 35,000 deaths since late 2006.

Blake Mora's death has been a stunning mishap too odd for some Mexicans to accept as an accident, even with Calderon and officials saying bad weather may have been the cause of the crash. But just like the loss of another interior minister three years ago in a plane crash, Blake Mora's death won't change the course of the deadly assault on organized crime.

While the secretary of the interior is considered the government's second-in-charge, other Cabinet members are more central to carrying out the drug war: the secretaries of defense, navy and public security and the attorney general. The people currently in those positions have been with Calderon through most of his term. Blake Mora, 45, who was appointed in June 2010, was the fourth interior secretary since Calderon's election five years ago.

Mexico's interior secretary coordinates domestic policies such as security, human rights, migration and the president's relations with the legislature and opposition parties. The post has diminished in power over time. Under Mexico's old one-party system that ruled for 71 years, the secretary of the interior often went on to be president, but that changed when the autocratic Institutional Revolutionary Party lost the presidency in 2000.

In his short time in the job, Blake Mora embodied the government's get-tough attitude toward drug cartels and other gangs, publicly pledging not to back down.

"Organized crime, in its desperation, resorts to committing atrocities that we can't and shouldn't tolerate as a government and as a society," he had said.

He was heading to a meeting of prosecutors in central Morelos state, which has been hit heavily by violence among warring cartels, when the Super Puma helicopter crashed in a hilly area southeast of Mexico City.

Cain Says God Persuaded Him to Run for President

BY RAY HENRY
Associated Press

ATLANTA • Republican Herman Cain said God convinced him to enter the race for president, comparing himself to Moses: "You've got the wrong man, Lord. Are you sure?"

The Georgia business executive played up his faith Saturday after battling sexual harassment allegations for two weeks, trying to shift the conversation to religion, an issue vital to conservative Republicans, especially in the South.

In a speech Saturday to a national meeting of young Republicans, Cain said the Lord persuaded him after much prayer.

"That's when I prayed and prayed and prayed. I'm a man of faith — I had to do a lot of praying for this one, more praying than I've ever done before in my life," Cain said. "And when I finally realized that it was God saying that this is what I needed to do, I was like Moses. 'You've got the wrong man, Lord. Are you sure?'"

Once he made the decision, Cain said, he did not look back.

Four women have now accused Cain of sexually harassing them when he led the National Restaurant Association more than a decade ago. Cain, who has denied wrongdoing, was silent about the allegations and did not take reporters' questions.

Cain isn't the first to say God prodded him toward a campaign. Texas Gov. Rick Perry's wife, Anita, has said she felt God was speaking to her about the race, adding that her husband needed to see a "burning bush," a Biblical reference to God's first appearance to Moses.

During his speech, Cain also criticized President Barack Obama for canceling the space shuttle program — a decision actually made by President George W. Bush — as NASA shifts its focus on travel farther from Earth's orbit.

States, we are not going to bum a ride to outer space with Russia," Cain said to loud applause. "We're going to regain our rightful place in terms of technology, space technology."

WSU Prof Was Right: Mastodon Weapon Is Older Than Thought

BY CRAIG WELCH
The Seattle Times

SEATTLE • It's not unusual for an archaeologist to get stuck in the past, but Carl Gustafson may be the only one consumed by events on the Olympic Peninsula in 1977.

That summer, while sifting through earth in Sequim, Wash., the young Gustafson uncovered something extraordinary — a mastodon bone with a shaft jammed in it. This appeared to be a weapon that had been thrust into the beast's ribs, a sign that humans had been around and hunting far earlier than anyone suspected.

Unfortunately for Gustafson, few scientists agreed. He was challenging orthodoxy with less-than-perfect evidence.

For almost 35 years, his find was ridiculed or ignored, the site dismissed as curious but not significant.

But last month, a team that re-examined his discovery using new technology concluded in the prestigious journal Science that Gustafson had been right all along.

The pierced bone was clear evidence that human beings were hunting large mammals in North America 13,800 years ago — about 800 years before the so-called Clovis people were thought to have migrated across the Bering land bridge from Asia.

The announcement came as sweet vindication for the now-retired Washington State University professor.

"I was pretty bitter about the whole thing for a long time," Gustafson, 75, recalled. "I don't like saying it. I never really admitted it except to my wife. It was so frustrating. But I'm very humbled and happy it turned out this way."

His discovery has helped redefine our understanding of the history of the Americas.

"I think that's been the most gratifying aspect of this entire project — being able to go to Carl's house and show him all the data and the dates," said Mike Waters, director of the Center for the Study of the First Americans at Texas A&M University, who led the recent re-examination. "You could just see the excitement on his face. His wife told me later that it was one of his best days ever."

Of course, another day stands out, too.

It started with a bowling alley owner in Sequim who just wanted to put in a pond.

Manny Manis was turning over dirt with a backhoe in August 1977 when he unearthed what looked like the tusk of a mammoth. An excited Manis and his wife, Clare, started calling around to experts.

In Pullman a week later, Gustafson heard about the find. He grabbed an 8-foot-long roll of cotton batting and a 2.5-ton truck and drove to the Olympic Peninsula. He expected to be done in a few days. (He would spend every summer there until 1985.)

There, in the earth, lay the bones of a mastodon, an elephantlike creature that went extinct about 11,000 years ago. Within hours Gustafson found the rib bone with an odd fragment in it.

"I saw the object stuck into the bone," Gustafson recalled. "I could see some of the bone was crushed in, as if you'd penetrated the object with a spear or an ice pick. It looked like a human-modified bone stuck into this rib."

Gustafson was thrilled but knew he had to slow down. He and colleagues collected seeds and other organic material amid the bones and had them sent to be radiocarbon dated. The rib bone was sent to be X-rayed.

The dating suggested the bone was 14,000 years old, but the margin for error was high. The X-rays showed what looked to be a projectile point, but it was blurry.

Turkish Forces Kill Suspect in Passenger Ferry Hijacking

BY SELCAN HACA OGLU and SUZAN FRASER
Associated Press

ANKARA, Turkey • Turkish commandos in civilian clothes slipped onto a hijacked passenger ferry and posed as hostages before fatally shooting a suspected Kurdish rebel carrying explosives in a 12-hour drama that ended before dawn Saturday.

There were no other casualties aboard the Kartepe, that was hijacked on Friday after it left the northwestern port city of Izmit. There were 18 passengers on board, including five women, as well as four crew and two trainees, authorities said.

Despite the success of the raid, the hijacking drew attention to the conflict with Kurdish rebels who have stepped up attacks on government forces in the country's southeast this year. The Turkish military has responded by staging an air and ground offensive against rebel hideouts in neighboring Iraq. The rebels, who are considered terrorists by Turkey and the West, are seeking autonomy in Turkey's mostly Kurdish southeast.

Coast guard boats and helicopters had shadowed the vessel for much of its journey before it was forced to anchor off the port town of Silivri, west of Istanbul, Interior Minister Idris Naim Sahin said.

The commandos prepared the raid while the police conducted lengthy negotiations with the lone hijacker, including a single communication that lasted over one hour, Sahin said.

Some commandos, who apparently climbed the vessel from rubber boats, mingled with the hostages before killing the suspect, he said.

"They were wearing civilian clothes and waited orders from us to go ahead," Sahin said.

Two passengers said they heard six gunshots from the captain's cabin, where the hijacker was located.

One of them, Ceyhun Sezer, told NTV television that they had watched the news about the hostage drama all night on TV screens in the passenger hall.

"He did not talk to us at all," said Sezer of the hijacker. "We saw the commandos, then heard three shots and then three more."

"The whole operation lasted at most 10 minutes," Sezer said.

Arab League Votes to Suspend Syria Over Civilian Killings

BY AYA BATRAWY
Associated Press

CAIRO • In a surprisingly sharp move, the Arab League voted Saturday to suspend Syria over the country's bloody crackdown on an eight-month uprising and stepped up calls on the army to stop killing civilians.

The decision was a humiliating blow to a regime that prides itself as a bastion of Arab nationalism, but it was unlikely to immediately end a wave of violence that the U.N. estimates has killed more than 3,500 people since mid-March.

"Syria is a dear country for all of us and it pains us to make this decision," Qatar's Foreign Minister Hamad bin Jassim told reporters. "We hope there will be a brave move from Syria to stop the violence and begin a real dialogue toward real reform."

In Damascus, pro-regime demonstrators threw eggs and tomatoes at the Qatari Embassy to protest the vote.

The 22-member Arab League will monitor the situation and revisit the decision in a meeting Wednesday in the Moroccan capital, Rabat, bin Jassim said, a move that appeared to give Syrian President Bashar Assad time to avert the suspension.

But Syria has been unwilling to heed previous calls to end the violence. Saturday's vote came after Damascus failed to carry out a Nov. 2 peace deal brokered by the Arab League that called on Syria to halt the attacks and pull tanks out of cities.

More than 250 Syrian civilians have been killed so far this month, including 12 on Saturday in attacks in the restive city of Homs, the Damascus suburbs and elsewhere, according to activist groups.

President Barack Obama praised the Arab League, highlighting what he called the group's leadership in seeking to end attacks on peaceful protesters. "These significant steps expose the increasing diplomatic isolation of a regime that has systematically violated human rights and repressed peaceful protests," he said in a statement.

Arab League diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to brief reporters, said that if Syria does not adhere to its demands, the organization will work to unify the disparate Syrian opposition into a coalition similar to that of Libya's National Transitional Council. A next step would be to recognize the opposition as the sole representative of the Syrian people in a move that would symbolically isolate Assad's regime even further.

In his statement, bin Jassim called on all factions to meet later this week to unify their message as a step toward dialogue with the Syrian government, but many within the opposition refuse to negotiate with the regime.

Still, there is little to stop Assad now from calling upon the scorched-earth tactics that have kept his family in power for more than four decades. A longtime pariah, Syria grew accustomed to shrugging off the world's reproach long before the regime started shooting unarmed protesters eight months ago.

Through Charity, Sandusky Had Access to Vulnerable

Good-guy aura around Penn State's star assistant coach was so great that when some children questioned his behavior, no one took the complaints seriously.

BY KEVIN BEGOS and MARK SCOLFORO

Associated Press

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. • Over the past 30 years, politicians, sports stars and community leaders heaped praise on Jerry Sandusky and the charity he founded for troubled youngsters, The Second Mile. It was a model program, and the acclaimed football coach was its driving force.

Now, prosecutors say that very success enabled Sandusky to find boys and sexually assault them.

Sandusky, 67, was charged last weekend with molesting eight boys over a 15-year period in a scandal that rocked the Penn State campus and brought down the university's beloved football coach, Joe Paterno.

In the aftermath, some are wondering if The Second Mile can survive amid questions about its role in the alleged cover-up.

Sandusky was a star assistant coach at Penn State from the 1970s to the 1990s, and many assumed he would lead the team one day, or even head to pro football. He founded The Second Mile in 1977 for youngsters from broken homes and troubled backgrounds, building it into an organization that helped as many as 100,000 children a year through camps and fundraisers.

Among the big-time athletic figures listed as honorary directors were Cal Ripken Jr., Arnold Palmer, former Pittsburgh Steeler Franco Harris and Philadelphia Eagles coach Andy Reid. President George W. Bush praised the group as a "shining example" of charity work in a 1990 letter. (Sandusky's reaction: "It's about time, George! This is long overdue," he recalled in his autobiography, "Touched.")

But prosecutors said that running the charity gave Sandusky "access to hundreds of boys, many of whom were vulnerable due to their social situations."

He invited youngsters for overnight sleepovers at his home and took them to restaurants and bowl games. He wrestled in the swimming pool with kids who craved the attention. And he gave them gifts: golf clubs, sneakers, dress clothes, a computer and money, according to the indictment from the Pennsylvania attorney general.

The good-guy aura around Sandusky was so great that when some children questioned behavior that didn't seem right, no one took the complaints seriously.

Troy Craig recalled attending a weeklong sleep-away camp run by The Second Mile on the Penn State campus in the early 1990s. He was never sexually abused, but in other ways the coach's behavior seemed inappropriate at the time, said Craig, 33, who is now a disc jockey in State College.

Sandusky "had a way of, whether it was a hug or a hand on the leg in the car as we were driving, or just a way of putting his arm around you," Craig said. "I said this back then to people I knew. Everybody found it hard to believe, or that I was overreacting. I remember feeling as if I was the only one that thought anything was amiss."

Through his attorney, Sandusky has maintained his innocence.

Experts on pedophiles aren't surprised by the stories that have shocked so many people.

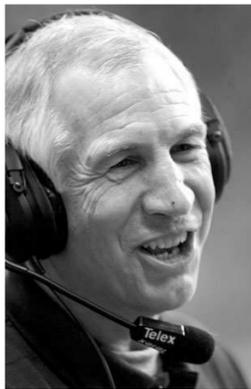

Richard J. Gelles, dean of the school of Social Policy & Practice at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia and author of several books on abuse and violence in families, said pedophiles typically engage in a "grooming" process in which they select a potential victim and proceed to "break down the inhibitions and establish trust." Gelles said it is no accident so many people saw a "good" Jerry Sandusky.

Sandusky "covered himself by being so beloved that nobody would think he would do something as awful as this," Gelles said.

The mother of one alleged victim told the Centre Daily Times that that disconnect enraged her.

"I just lived with this for so long, and it killed me when people talked about him like he was a god, and I knew he was a monster," said the woman, whose name has not been released.

Thomas Day was 15 when he began a Second Mile fitness program in 1996. Scrawny and not doing that well in school, he was suddenly getting one-on-one encouragement from big college football players who helped run the program. Day met Sandusky only a few times but remembers him as a mythical figure around The Second Mile.

"I remember being kind of envious of kids who got to spend more time around him," said Day, who never witnessed any abuse.

Day said he has trouble sleeping this week because of the scandal.

"These guys took me in and made me in to the man I am today," Day said. He went on to work as a mentor with the program, served with the 101st Airborne Division in Iraq, and is working on his second master's degree at the University of Chicago.

Sandusky also had the support of many other powerful figures in the community. The group's current board includes state Sen. Jake Corman, and attorneys, prominent business leaders, and community volunteers. Corman didn't respond to a message seeking comment.

The grand jury said that Penn State officials in 2002 told Jack Raykovitz, executive director of The Second Mile, that there had been an issue with Sandusky and a minor. But the charity took no action against Sandusky because, it said this week, Penn State did not find any wrongdoing.

And in 1998, Sandusky was investigated after he was accused of "behaving in a sexually inappropriate manner" with a boy in a shower at the football team's facilities, the grand jury said. The report said an attorney for Second Mile who was also university counsel, Wendell Courtney, was aware of the allegations.

Phone calls seeking comment from Courtney on Saturday rang unanswered, and emails sent to him were returned as undeliverable.

The Second Mile said that Sandusky told the organization in 2008 he was being investigated, and that from then on the charity separated him from programs involving youths.

But the word about Sandusky may not have reached other youth programs he was involved with.

Sandusky held summer football camps — both at Penn State satellite campuses and at other Pennsylvania schools — for years after he was banned from taking youths onto the main campus by the school's athletics director and senior vice president. Both officials have now been charged with failing to tell police about a 2002 allegation that Sandusky had sexually assaulted a boy in the showers of the football building.

Sandusky held the football camps through his Sandusky Associates company from 2000 to 2008 at Penn State's Behrend satellite campus near Erie. There were never any complaints, according to a spokesman. Still, Behrend's athletics director said he wishes someone had told him about the 2002 allegation.

"You definitely would know that person doesn't belong here on the campus," Brian Streeter said. "It's a sick feeling even to think about it."

The very success of The Second Mile meant there was plenty of money for Sandusky to lavish on boys. A review of tax forms filed by The Second Mile shows that out of almost $3.3 million in revenue during the 2008-09 year, salaries, wages, and payments to directors totaled almost $1.4 million, along with $190,000 for "camp food" and $288,000 for "other expenses."

Sandusky is no longer on the payroll; his last payment was $57,000 in 2007-08, according to tax records. Over the years the payments to Sandusky totaled hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Records from The Second Mile show that the organization asks staff members and volunteers to sign a statement affirming they have never been suspected of child abuse. They must also submit a criminal background check. Officials from the Second Mile didn't respond to a question about whether any such checks were ever done on Sandusky.

The Second Mile said in a statement that it has done "everything in our power to cooperate with law-enforcement officials." But Pennsylvania Attorney General Linda Kelly said that during the grand jury investigation there was an "uncooperative atmosphere" from some officials at Penn State and The Second Mile. And Gov. Tom Corbett said he believes there will be an investigation into what Second Mile officials knew.

Deborah Small, an associate professor of marketing and psychology at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania, said she doesn't think The Second Mile will survive the scandal.

Magazine's Original MAD Men Get a Rare Reunion

With their homes and studios spread across the U.S., the artists who put their work side by side in MAD magazine don't often meet face to face.

BY RUSS BYNUM
 Associated Press

SAVANNAH, Ga. • Think of them as the senior class of the "usual gang of idiots." Or the original MAD men perhaps.

There's Al Jaffee, who at 90 still draws the optical illusion fold-in gags for MAD magazine's back page. And Sergio Aragones, still whipping out eye-straining and gut-busting miniature cartoons in the magazine's margins after 48 years. And Jack Davis, who was there at the beginning, drawing the horror spoof "Hooah!" that appeared in MAD's debut issue in 1952.

They're among the cartoonists who put MAD on the map in the 1950s. Over the next six decades, they blended celebrity caricature, pop-culture parody and political satire in a way that would influence American comedy from Saturday Night Live to The Onion and more. And some of them are still churning out gags for MAD, in defiance of the ever-expanding generation gap with the magazine's young audience.

"I have kids come to me at conventions saying, 'My grandfather grew up with your work,'" said Aragones, 74, whose recent features include "A MAD Look at Lady Gaga." "Older people think the older MADs were funnier. But not really. You grew up. Your sense of humor has changed."

Aragones, Jaffee and Davis were among eight veteran MAD contributors gathering Saturday for a rare reunion on the Georgia coast. With their homes and studios spread across the U.S., the artists who put their work side by side in hundreds of MAD issues don't often meet face to face.

This weekend, the cartoonists are being honored and humored by their hosts, the Savannah College of Art and Design and the National Cartoonists Society. Their art is hanging in a gallery, while their schedule includes workshops with the college's art students and a panel discussion on MAD's history and their work.

John Lowe, the Savannah art college's dean of communication arts, said the MAD reunion represents "roughly 400 years' worth of comic book experience collected in one place."
 "MAD, to me, was really the first print publication to satire popular culture and American political culture," said Lowe, 44. "It is still very edgy. I can see parents wanting to keep it out of the hands of their children. And children wanting to get it in their hands."

Launched in 1952 by comics publisher William M. Gaines and editor-writer Harvey Kurtzman, MAD evolved from stories spoofing its owners' stable of horror comics to a broader range of send-ups lampooning American culture, celebrities and politics. By 1956 the magazine had a gap-toothed mascot, Alfred E. Newman, who soon became a cartoon icon.

The artists worked on a freelance basis, but Gaines rewarded their loyalty with annual group trips overseas for decades, beginning with a trip to Haiti in 1960. Davis recalled being cajoled by Aragones into fighting a bull — a very young one without horns, he admits — in Spain. Jaffee still laughs at how a MAD writer, during a tour of the Sistine Chapel in Vatican City, shattered the hushed reverence by remarking aloud that Michelangelo's painted ceiling was so priceless that God couldn't afford the rent.

MAD's stable of artists and writers embraced the group moniker "the usual gang of idiots." Now published by DC Comics, MAD similarly downplays its own influence.

On its website, MAD touts its success as "the best-selling magazine in the world with that title."

Jaffee, who first contributed in 1955, recalls how Time magazine initially dubbed MAD a "short-lived fad."

"They didn't think this crappy little magazine would last this long," Jaffee said from New York. "However, I think MAD is challenging Time for longevity."

And perhaps, in an offbeat way, challenging Time in stature?

Jaffee's MAD fold-ins — which have jabbed at everything from the Beatles and the Vietnam War to TMZ and "The Jersey Shore" — recently received the kind of star treatment normally reserved for major literary works. In September, Jaffee's entire 36-year run of some 400 fold-ins was collected in a hefty, $125 set of four hardbound books, a package he called "hernia-inducing."

While Jaffee and Aragones still work to keep pace with MAD's younger audience. Davis, 86, chose to end his more than half-century affiliation with the magazine more than two years ago.

"I'm an old stodgy man and pretty conservative," Davis said. "I like all the guys up there a lot, but I felt like it kind of got a little raunchy."

For those who remain, Aragones says, decades at the drawing board honing the razor edge of humor has kept the cartoonists feeling young — an energetically meeting deadlines.

Known as "the world's fastest cartoonist," Aragones reckons he's drawn 12,000 cartoons for the margins of MAD magazine since 1963. When he travels to Savannah, Aragones said, the deadlines won't stop as he writes on the flight from Los Angeles and draws at his hotel.

"It's not stressful," Aragones said. "Being a cartoonist is taking out all your frustrations on paper. You don't have to get road rage. You just draw a cartoon!"

Ugandan Arrested for Building Pigsty Out of Presidency Posters

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KAMPALA, Uganda • Ugandan police say they have arrested a man for "abusing the presidency" after he built a pigsty out of old election posters featuring the president's face.

Officer John Kuusa says the 35-year-old taxi dispatcher's decision to construct his pigsty out of the images of President Yoweri Museveni led to his Friday arrest. Kuusa said Saturday that George Kiberu used the durable posters for the roof, the walls, and as plates for the pigs.

Kiberu says he did not know he was breaking the law. His friend Robert Mbalule says the posters were still on the streets after February's poll, won by longtime leader Museveni.

A recent report by an international rights group says

Charmed Carey Advances to State Class 1A Div. II Championship

BY RYAN HOWE
rhowe@magicvalley.com

POCATELLO • Even when things went wrong, they turned out right for the Carey Panthers.

Late in the second quarter of Carey's Class 1A Division II state semifinal game against Castleford on Saturday, Carey quarterback Jordan Dilworth fumbled the snap on a fourth-and-15. However, the junior quickly picked the ball up off the Holt Arena turf and heaved a haphazard pass down the sideline where Baley Barg made a high-light-reel catch for a 35-yard touchdown.

It was that kind of day for Dilworth and the Panthers, who return to the Division II 8-man state championship game after blowing out Castleford 62-16.

"It's an amazing experience. What an honor it is to be playing with a bunch of great guys like our teammates," said Carey senior Charlie Rivera. "We executed well and I'm excited to see what we've got in the championship game."

Carey (11-0), which has won three state titles in the past five years, will play Lighthouse Christian next Friday at Holt Arena.

Already known for its speed, Carey looked even faster on the Holt Arena turf and exploited mismatches in Castleford's secondary. Dilworth completed 14-of-22 passes for 318 yards and six touchdowns.

Rivera rushed for 115 yards and a score, plus caught four touchdown passes with 158 yards receiving. It was redemption for Rivera, who was knocked out in the second quarter of last year's semifinal game against Castleford with a concussion.

"It was great to have a great game out there, especially when I didn't get to play last year," Rivera said.

Led by its tough three-man front consisting of Francisco Gamino, Garrett Lee and Glen Andrews, Carey limited Castleford to 87 yards rushing. Wolves quarterback Mitch Howard, who threw for 106 yards, had a 66-yard touchdown run, plus a 15-yard scoring hookup with Mike Peckham.

TCU Horned Frog quarterback Casey Pachall leaps for the two-point conversion as Boise State Bronco Tyrone Crawford tries to tackle him Saturday afternoon at Bronco Stadium in Boise.

DREW NASH • TIMES-NEWS

Pachall Shines as Frogs Upset BSU

BY ALEX CALINSKY
For the Times-News

BOISE • Before the season, sophomore quarterback Casey Pachall was known as Andy Dalton's replacement. After Saturday's electrifying performance, he proved he's worthy of his own star status.

Pachall threw for 473 yards and five touchdowns in TCU's 36-35 upset win, snapping Boise State's 35-game home winning streak and dashing the Broncos' national championship hopes.

"I told him at the beginning of the week that games like this is how legends are made," TCU coach Gary Patterson said.

With 2:26 remaining in the fourth quarter, Pachall marched the Horned Frogs 73 yards down the field, and found Brandon Carter with 1:05 left for the touchdown. Carter's 25-yard leaping catch over Quaylon Ewing-Burton capped the drive, then Pachall rolled right, throwing an out to tightly-covered Josh Boyce for the go-ahead two-point conversion.

Pachall found receivers Josh Boyce (163 yards, three TDs) and Brandon Carter (120 yards, two TDs) for scoring plays of 74, 75, and 69 yards in the first half. No quarterback has thrown for more yards under Patterson than Pachall did against Boise State.

"Receivers had a heck of a day," Pachall said. "We finally finished it and got it taken care of."

Despite Pachall's monster game, the Broncos had their chances to seal the win. Drew Wright, filling in for the injured D.J. Harper, fumbled as Boise State tried to bleed out the clock. TCU recovered, leading to the game-winning drive, and Dan Goodale missed a 39-yard field goal wide right as time expired. The Broncos put the brakes on their offense in the final minute, While hustling through disappointed fans to catch Boise State's postgame press conference, I lost track of the number of times I heard that name uttered.

Rightly or wrongly, Dan Goodale now shares some ignominious history with his predecessor.

Like Kyle Brotzman last season, Goodale missed a field goal at the end of regulation. Both ended up costing Boise State a potential shot at a national championship — Brotzman with the missed field goal and extra-point last season at Nevada, Goodale when he missed a 39-yarder as TCU became the first visiting team to leave Bronco Stadium with a win in six years, 36-35.

Lighthouse Christian Roars into State Championship Game

BY STEPHEN MEYERS
smeyers@magicvalley.com

Starting this summer at camps around the state, the mission all along for the Lighthouse Christian football team was to make the playoffs for the first time in the program's history.

After rolling past Salmon River last week for their first playoff win, the Lions can add another first to their historic season — a spot in the Class 1A Division II state championship game.

Showcasing their usual explosive offense and a bend-but-don't-break defense, Lighthouse Christian beat Kootenai 66-20 Saturday with former athletic director Nick Karavedas in the packed stands at Lighthouse Athletic Complex.

"I don't think it's really hit them yet that we're going to the state title game," said Lighthouse Christian coach John van Vliet, whose team will play defending champion Carey next week.

The Lions (8-3) jumped out to a near-perfect start behind the energy of the standing-room-only crowd. The defense forced a three-and-out and the Warriors punted to Eli Berndt, who zigzagged his way for a 79-yard return.

Lighthouse Christian then forced a fumble on the Warriors' ensuing possession with Donnie Aardema recovering, and Dylan Van Esch ran for a 56-yard three plays later to hand the Lions a 14-0 lead 4:09 into the game.

"I just got the ball and ran," said Berndt of his punt return. "I came across the field and my blockers did a nice job sealing the edge and I found a spot up the sideline. It was huge to get off to a good start like that."

The Lions roared out to a 28-0 lead on touchdown runs from Van Esch and freshman Adam Taylor, but allowed a Kootenai touchdown with 7.8 seconds remaining before the half.

With newfound momentum, the Warriors scored first in the third quarter on a 2-yard run by Daniel Whipple, cutting the lead to 28-14.

"I could tell the guys were really tight right before halftime," van Vliet said. "I told them to relax and to not let the pressure get to you."

Lighthouse Christian clamped down defensively and dashed any hope the Warriors had of forging a comeback as Van Esch ripped off a 60-yard run and Berndt caught a 69-yard pass from Logan Bosma to push the Lions' lead to 50-14 by the end of

Good Luck Finding This National Tournament Venue

When people ask me where I'm from, I turn to some words Johnny Cash sung many years ago.

"I've been everywhere, man, I've been everywhere."

As a result, I'm a geography buff. I've always loved looking at maps, dreaming of trips to unknown places. My father, brother and I have a life-long contest to see who can get to all 50 states first. I've been to 42, and I believe that's still good for last in our three-man race.

So if I'm in need of a map to find out where this week's NJCAA national volleyball tournament is being held, odds are you need one too.

Disclaimer: While I'm sure West Plains, Mo., is a nice town with friendly people, safe streets and good schools, I'll lay 2-1 odds not even the governor of Missouri knows where it is.

It's not even in the western part of the state. It's in the south-central part of the state, and is closer to the Bootheel — the little parcel of land that juts into Arkansas near the Tennessee border — than it is to Kansas.

Geography and sports have had their share of conflicts over the years.

Who can forget the Atlanta Braves playing in the National League West, or the Arizona Cardinals playing in the NFC East? Even today, Boise State is pending an offer from the Big East Conference. So the sports world really isn't in a position to quibble over geographical accuracy, whether it's from league commissioners or a city's founding fathers.

But what is the wisdom of having a national tournament in such a far-flung locale? Wanna guess which city with a major airport is closest to West Plains, as the crow flies?

St. Louis? The city to which the College of Southern Idaho women's volleyball team is flying is 205 miles from West Plains.

Well, certainly Kansas City then. Nope. KC is 276 miles away.

Little Rock? Getting closer. It's only 186 miles away.

Believe it or not, Memphis, Tenn., is the closest such city to West Plains, at only 175 miles.

"It's a nightmare with the costs involved," CSI athletic director Joel Bate said. "The location certainly isn't ideal. West Plains is defined as being three-and-a-half hours from everywhere."

And to get from everywhere to West Plains, you can count on plenty of two-land roads that wind through the Ozark Mountains, with nary a hint of interstate access to get you there.

Patrick Sheltra
Sports Editor

So we've established how tough it is to get there. The only thing tougher is finding qualified help to write about the tournament.

West Plains' tiny newspaper, The Daily Quill, features a one-woman shop in the sports department. And good luck getting anything online, as all of the newspaper's content is set up behind a paywall.

In Mountain Home, Ark., about 50 miles away and the closest town with a daily newspaper and multi-person sports desk, the staffer I spoke with was unaware of any stringers or freelancers up that way.

A call to Missouri State-West Plains and its public information office has gone unreturned.

To West Plains' credit, it is streaming all matches live, and a link to that site can be found on CSI's athletics website, athletics.csi.edu.

To West Plains' shame — and hopefully to the NJCAA's embarrassment — it will not have statisticians or produce official statistics.

It's one thing for CSI volleyball coach Heidi Cartisser, who by all counts is beyond accommodating to us media slugs, to take a call from my colleague at the Times-News, David Bashore, and talk about the match. She'll do that.

It's another thing for her or her staff to worry about gathering statistics. She shouldn't have to do that.

The best thing about West Plains hosting the tournament this year is that it won't do so again next year. Merely the "oversight," as Bate described West Plains' failure to secure the services of statkeepers, should be enough to disqualify it from future bids.

The NJCAA has an open-bid process for the rights to host most of its national tournaments. And word is several western schools are interested in submitting a bid, one that would earn the rights to host the volleyball tournament for three years. That deadline is Jan. 10.

And ideally, the NJCAA and volleyball fans won't need a map to find the school that submits the winning bid.

far. We have a bunch of kids and a lot of depth and we worked hard this summer and in practice," Van Esch said. "Carey is a really good team. They're going to be tough, but we'll be ready."

Fabyon Harris Sparks CSI to Win Against La Jolla Prep

BY STEPHEN MEYERS
smeyers@magicvalley.com

With his speed, smooth handle and signature shot, Fabyon Harris turned a lifeless game into one to watch.

The sophomore guard from Chicago scored a career-high 34 points, 27 coming in the second half to lift the College of Southern Idaho 91-75 over La Jolla Prep (Calif.) Saturday night.

Tied at 39 after a first half marked by 14 total turnovers and no semblance of rhythm or energy, the game turned into a fast-break track meet in the second half. CSI head coach Steve Gosar inserted Harris into the starting lineup and he immediately delivered.

He hit Rafriel Guthrie for a no-look pass to put the Golden Eagles (4-1) up 45-43 and later hit a 3-pointer to give them a 50-43 lead.

CSI, however, couldn't put away the pesky prep school from California, which battled to within two points before another Harris-fueled run.

He scored eight straight points for CSI, including six from his tear-drop floater — a shot he's had mastered since the seventh grade — to put the Golden Eagles up 81-73.

"It put it in my mind that we're in a scoring slump and I'm going to score how I know how to score," said Harris, who also made 10-of-11 free throws. "The floater has just gotten better and better."

CSI finished the game on a 6-0 run, highlighted by two Guthrie slams. He finished with 19 points and Cothron added 17.

Darnell Harris led La Jolla Prep with 20, including 14 in the first half, where the Waves surprised CSI a day after getting blown out by North Idaho.

"We came out sloppy and thinking, 'hey these kids are basically high-schoolers, and we can cruise right past them,'" Harris said. "They're a good team, though."

The Waves led by 8 at one point as CSI struggled in the opening five minutes.

"We had no passion, no energy and played lifeless basketball tonight," Gosar said. "We sucked the energy out of this gym."

The Golden Eagles host the K&T Steel Tournament next week where they'll play Treasure Valley and Chemeketa.

NOTES: Harris was named the most outstanding player of the Gordon's Paving/Gold's Gym Tournament. Cothron, Guthrie, Harris, Michael Middlebrooks of North Idaho and Christian Bower of Phoenix College rounded out the team.

CSI Women's Basketball Falls Short Against Mesa

BY STEPHEN MEYERS
smeyers@magicvalley.com

Heart and desire. And maybe some more height.

All things the College of Southern Idaho women's basketball team needed more of in its 70-62 loss to Mesa CC (Ariz.) Saturday night.

"Second effort is what killed us. It comes down to heart, it comes down to heart," said CSI forward Chakala Carthen, who led the Golden Eagles with 19 points and 14 rebounds.

Despite her solid effort, Carthen at 5-foot-7 was no match for 6-foot-2 forward Alli Gloyd. The sophomore from Phoenix, Ariz., scored a game-high 24 points and grabbed nine boards. She scored six of her points in the final 2:50 to help put away the Golden Eagles (1-1), who led throughout most of the first half.

Her final bucket of the night put the Thunderbirds up 66-62 and the Golden Eagles were forced to foul the final minute of the game.

"She was a tough person to guard. She knew her strengths and knew how to get the person underneath her," Carthen said of Gloyd, who was named the tournament's most outstanding player. "That move that she does is her No. 1 move and she's going to go to it whether she misses or not."

Megan Tanner went to the line for CSI with 22.6 seconds remaining, down by four, but front-rimmed both shots. It was a fitting ending to another dismal night at the stripe for CSI, which shot just 44.4 percent from the free throw line.

Mesa trailed by three at halftime, but went on a 7-0 run midway through the second half. CSI's Tayllor Gipson ended the run with a three-pointer and added a second trey to tie the game at 55.

She finished with 15 points, but shot just 7-19 from the floor. As a team, CSI shot 40.6 percent, while Mesa was at 46.7.

"Again, I think we got tired tonight," said CSI coach Randy Rogers. "We're supposed to front that low post, but we stayed behind. Once they caught it, they had the size advantage on Chakala."

Haley Venard added 12 points for Mesa and Kalasia Green chipped in with 10.

CSI travels to the Midland (Texas) Tournament next week where it will play No. 3 Midland College.

But that was all the offense Castleford could muster.

Meanwhile, Carey gained 563 yards of total offense.

"You never know in these kinds of games," said Carey head coach Lane Kirkland. "I thought it may be a little higher scoring affair. We got a good jump on them and I think injuries plagued them quite a bit, unfortunately, and we were just able to take advantage."

Although Castleford entered the game with key injuries, head coach Tracy Vulgamore declined to use it as an excuse.

"I tell the kids all the time, you're one injury away from being a starter. Hopefully they're ready if that happens," Vulgamore said.

Defense and special teams were the difference in allowing Carey to start seven of its 12 drives inside Castleford territory.

"They don't need the help," Vulgamore lamented. Senior Dillon Cenarrusa helped set the tone early when he blocked a Castleford punt that resulted in a safety.

Barg finished with six receptions for 141 yards and two touchdowns for the Panthers, who have their eyes on a state championship repeat.

"I think we're a lot better than last year's team," said Rivera. "We talked about this as a team and we made it a personal goal to become better than last year. We've accomplished that, I believe."

Despite the loss, Castleford (8-3) earned its second straight third-place state trophy and solidified itself among the elite 8-man programs in Idaho. Over the past two seasons the Wolves are 18-4, with losses only to Carey (twice), and Division I state contenders Hagerman and Oakley.

"I couldn't ask for more. Anytime you're playing in November you must be doing something right," Vulgamore said.

Let down? Ravens Say it Won't Happen in Seattle

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE • It's seems like the perfect trap. Coming off an emotional and important victory, the Baltimore Ravens fly across the country to play a 2-6 team coming off a third straight loss.

Problem for the Ravens is it's a situation they've faced and failed at twice this season.

The Ravens said all the right things this week about realizing the importance of today's game at Seattle and how any benefits from their thrilling, last-second 23-20 win over Pittsburgh last week will be completely negated with a West Coast flop.

But the Ravens track record this season says the rare matchup against the struggling Seahawks could mean problems. All they have to do is look back to Week 2 at Tennessee and Week 7 at Jacksonville to see the mistakes.

"We have been riding an emotional high right now. Coming off those big wins, (the media) like to say we have that tendency of a let-down," Baltimore running back Ray Rice said. "I think it's time for us to be able to put the big games behind us and treat every game like it's a big game."

After routing Pittsburgh in its season opener, Baltimore followed up with a flop against the Titans. Five weeks later, the Ravens had another poor performance at Jacksonville a week after an impressive victory over Houston.

They are rare moments in the tenure of John Harbaugh. Since taking over in 2008, the Ravens have three losses against sub-.500 teams. Only one was later than the second week of the regular season, and it came three weeks ago against the Jaguars.

The fact two of those slip ups against losing teams happened this season, and with a home game waiting next week against division co-leader Cincinnati, is what's causing the Ravens concern about this trip.

"It's really easy to get ready for a team like Seattle because they're very talented. I think they've lost a lot of close games and their record is not in any way indicative of the type of football team they are," Harbaugh said. "We've had this experience already and so we know that those records don't mean anything."

Flacco spent most of the week deflecting the praise being heaped his way following his nearly flawless final drive last week against Pittsburgh, which ended with a 26-yard TD pass to rookie Torrey Smith with 8 seconds left that gave the Ravens a season sweep of their AFC North rivals. Flacco took the Ravens 92 yards in the final 2 1/2 minutes for the winning score.

"If we just dwell on that then the end is going to be nothing. We're going to look back on it and say, 'Who cares?' because we lost a couple more games," Flacco said. "But as long as we go and do our jobs the rest of the season I think we will be able to look at that as a big win."

A win Sunday would give the Ravens their second 7-2 start in franchise history. The previous time came in 2006 when Baltimore finished 13-3 and had the second-best record in the AFC.

Patriots-Jets: Tough Matchup for New England

BY BARRY WILNER

Associated Press

A month ago, everything favored the Patriots in their divisional brawl with the Jets. New England won, handing New York its third straight loss.

Rex Ryan's team has turned things around since, winning three in a row thanks to a bruising defense — exactly what New England has struggled against recently, and could have trouble with again tonight at the Meadowlands.

The Patriots have dropped successive games to the Steelers and Giants, both of whom got very physical with Tom Brady's receivers in press coverage, then let loose the pass pressure up front. They hurried him into very un-Bradylike poor throws and mistakes.

Still, the Patriots almost never lose three in a row; the last time was in 2002 when, as defending Super Bowl champions, they dropped four straight and missed the playoffs.

"No doubts around here, and that's me being honest," wide receiver Deion Branch said. "Guys are still very enthusiastic about coming in, getting the game plan for this week and getting out to practice."

"As far as the two losses, we can see the mistakes that we made during the course of the game. Very coachable, and that's why I do know and understand why the coaches are not all down on us. We're all mad about the losses, but at the same time there are very coachable mistakes that were made during the course of the games, and hopefully we'll try to go out and eliminate those things so we don't go down that road again?"

Elsewhere today, with nobody on a bye, it's Pittsburgh at Cincinnati, Baltimore at Seattle, the New York Giants at San Francisco, New Orleans at Atlanta, Detroit at Chicago, Buffalo at Dallas, Denver at Kansas City, Houston at Tampa Bay, Jacksonville at Indianapolis, Arizona at Philadelphia, Tennessee at Carolina, Washington at Miami and St. Louis at Cleveland.

On Monday night, Minnesota is at Green Bay.

PITTSBURGH (6-3)

AT CINCINNATI (6-2)

Yes, the Bengals are tied with the Ravens atop the AFC North. No, they haven't beaten anyone special and this is their first true test since rallying past Buffalo five weeks ago.

But there they are. "You have done a great job of setting yourself in a good position, but that good position doesn't mean anything if you don't capitalize on it," left tackle Andrew Whitworth said. "So, it is great. It's more than people ever expected at this point even if we didn't do anything good from here, but it is not what we expected."

BALTIMORE (6-2)

AT SEATTLE (2-6)

Many in Baltimore believe quarterback Joe Flacco and the Ravens' offense took the next step with the way it performed down the stretch at Pittsburgh. The defense already is staunch, so big plays from the offense could mean big results the rest of the way.

Certainly, the Ravens are solid favorites against Seattle, which has lost three in a row and has the next to worst offense in the NFC.

This could be a trap game for Baltimore with Cincinnati and San Francisco up next, except the Seahawks appear vastly outmanned.

NY GIANTS (6-2)

AT SAN FRANCISCO (7-1)

The winner at Candlestick Park will have the inside track for a postseason bye. Indeed, the 49ers have a five-game lead over their wretched NFC West opponents and are closing in on one of the earliest division clinchings in league history. They've won six in a row with a stingy defense that is tied for the league lead with 19 take-aways, and a steady, punishing running game sparked by Frank Gore.

New York comes off an uplifting comeback win at New England, breaking a bunch of Patriots home winning strings, and seems to fear no one. Without top receiver Hakeem Nicks and RB Ahmad Bradshaw, the Giants still had enough offense — and plenty of defense — to win in Foxborough.

NEW ORLEANS (6-3)

AT ATLANTA (5-3)

A Saints win, with a bye next week, sets them up beautifully for the rest of the season. To get it, they need to show more strength in run defense and find a way to get turnovers; their eight take-aways are the fewest in the NFC.

"There's no question," Saints coach Sean Payton said. "Having done this long enough, when teams are having success running the football against you and it's second-and-2 or second-and-4, that has an effect on your team. When you're the team that's having success and are able to run the football, that's important."

DETROIT (6-2)

AT CHICAGO (5-3)

One of the success stories of the first half of the season, the Lions come off a bye eager to prove they belong in the playoff discussion. A win at Soldier Field would do just that, but they need to locate a running game; Jahvid Best has been plagued by concussion symptoms.

Chicago inserted itself into the postseason discussions with its gutsy win at Philadelphia as versatile RB Matt Forte continued his brilliant work. The Bears, winners of three straight, also can't be happy with how the Lions took them down on national TV last month.

BUFFALO (5-3)

AT DALLAS (4-4)

Dallas is so predictably unpredictable that its .500 record is fitting. The Cowboys must find some consistency quickly to become a contender, and after Buffalo they face Washington, Miami and Arizona. So now is the time, and with the emergence of RB DeMarco Murray, it might happen.

MINNESOTA (2-6) AT

GREEN BAY (8-0)

No Brett Favre drama in this one. Probably no drama, period.

Sure, the Packers are showing vulnerability against the pass, especially the deep ball, and Minnesota

ARIZONA (2-6)

AT PHILADELPHIA (3-5)

So the Eagles are back on the rise, ready to make a run for the postseason. That's what a whole lot of folks thought until Monday night's home loss against Chicago.

Philly is missing the decisive touch. All season, it has failed to put away opponents in the fourth quarter, whether it be with dropped passes, missed blocks or penalties on offense, or sloppy work on defense.

TENNESSEE (4-4)

AT CAROLINA (2-6)

Two teams in rebuilding mode with new coaches and, despite neither being a winner right now, two decent resumes. The Titans were 3-1 and have gone downhill the last month, but if they can ever get RB Chris Johnson on track, they could challenge for a winning record.

Carolina, coming off a bye, has one of the NFL's most exciting pass-catch duos in rookie QB Cam Newton and veteran wideout Steve Smith, a prime contender for comeback player awards.

WASHINGTON (3-5)

AT MIAMI (1-7)

Four consecutive defeats and a slew of injuries have the Redskins plummeting toward the bottom of the NFC. They've thrown 13 interceptions and have 19 give-aways, both the most in the NFC.

Miami came close in recent weeks before breaking through for win No. 1 at Kansas City — in blowout fashion, too. A second victory in a row hardly would be a surprise, particularly if WR Brandon Marshall and RB Reggie Bush can repeat their KC heroics.

ST. LOUIS (1-7)

AT CLEVELAND (3-5)

Both rosters have been ravaged by injuries, with Cleveland's backfield hit particularly hard. That is not the case with St. Louis with Steve Jackson now healthy and productive.

Raiders Stand Alone in First in Weak AFC West

ALAMEDA, Calif. •

Carson Palmer completing deep balls as if he was Daryle "The Mad Bomber" Lamonica. Michael Bush bowling over defenders on his way to a career night. Kamerion Wimbley and a physical defensive line overpowering a banged-up San Diego offensive line.

Just days after some critics were writing off the Raiders after a second straight division loss, Oakland (5-4) stands alone in first place in the AFC West following a 24-17 victory at San Diego.

"It's crazy, the NFL," offensive lineman Stefan Wisniewski said. "Shoot. Early in the year, everybody was talking about how good we are. And then (we're horrible) after a couple of losses. And now we're good again. It's a heavily criticized job, but that's the nature of the business."

With Palmer hitting his stride just a few weeks after getting off his couch and joining the Raiders, Oakland is in prime position in a division that lacks an elite team. The Chargers (4-5) have lost four straight, Kansas City (4-4) lost last week to winless Miami and Denver (3-5) has struggled all season.

That's despite losing starting quarterback Jason Campbell to a broken collarbone last month, being without leading rusher Darren McFadden for most of the past three games, missing two starters in the secondary in safety Michael Huff and cornerback Chris Johnson and having to reshuffle the offensive line in San Diego without center Samson Satele.

Raft River Grad Shatters Weber State Football Record

OGDEN, Utah • Malta native C.J. Tuckett set Weber State's single game all-purpose yards record with 407 yards in the Wildcats' 34-31 victory over Northern Arizona Saturday.

Tuckett, a 5-10, 200-pound junior, had 27 carries for 254 yards and three touchdowns. He also added nine receiving yards and 144 yards on kick returns. The 407 all-purpose yards is the second most in Big Sky Conference history.

It was a breakout performance for Tuckett, who had only 197 rushing yards on the season and hadn't returned any kicks before Saturday's game.

A 2005 graduate of Raft River High, Tuckett was the 2004 IA Player of the Year in Idaho and helped the Trojans win state championships in 2002 and 2004.

UTAH 31, UCLA 6

SALT LAKE CITY • John White rushed for 167 yards and scored three touchdowns and Conroy Black returned an interception 67 yards for another score to lift Utah.

The win makes the Utes (6-4, 3-4 Pac-12) bowl-eligible for the ninth straight year and gave offensive coordinator Norm Chow another victory against a former team.

With wintry conditions at the start of the game, the Utes became even more one-dimensional behind the diminutive White. He didn't disappoint, vaulting from 10th on Utah's single-season rushing chart all the way to No. 4 with 1,191 yards — passing Eddie Johnson, Eddie Wide, Keith Williams, Quinton Ganther and Del Rodgers.

NO. 6 OREGON 53, NO. 3 STANFORD 30
STANFORD, Calif. • LaMichael James ran for 146 yards and three touchdowns and No. 6 Oregon sprinted past third-ranked Stanford, giving Andrew Luck's Heisman Trophy campaign a blemish and taking a giant step toward hosting the inaugural Pac-12 championship.

James ran for scores from 1, 4 and 58 yards and had Stanford (9-1, 7-1) defenders slipping all over a slick field. The Ducks (9-1, 7-0) ended the nation's best winning streak at 17 games — which the Cardinal began after a loss in Eugene more than a year ago — and can clinch the league's North Division crown over Stanford with a win in one of their final two games.

Luck threw for 271 yards and three touchdowns with two interceptions and a fumble. Stanford had five total turnovers.

UTAH STATE 34, SAN JOSE STATE 33
LOGAN, Utah • Matt Austin scored on a 21-yard pass from Adam Kennedy with less than a minute remaining as Utah State came from behind to top San Jose State.

Utah State (4-5, 2-2 WAC) outscored San Jose 27-13 in the second half to grab their third consecutive win over the Spartans (3-7, 2-4).

USU scored two touchdowns late in the game on pass plays after turning the ball over three times early in the fourth quarter with two fumbles and an interception. USU blocked a 67-yard field goal attempt by San Jose with five seconds remaining to seal the comeback win.

NO. 18 USC 40, WASHINGTON 17
LOS ANGELES • Marqise Lee caught a touchdown pass and returned the second-half kickoff 88 yards for a score, and Curtis McNeal had a 79-yard TD sprint among his career-high 148 yards rushing.

Matt Barkley passed for 174 yards and one touchdown while running for an early score for the Trojans (8-2, 5-2 Pac-12), who made sure the Huskies had no chance to beat them on a last-second field goal, as they did in each of Washington coach Steve Sarkisian's first two meetings with his former employer.

Marc Tyler also rushed for a score for the bowl-banned Trojans, who have won five of six heading into next weekend's trip to Oregon.

Keith Price passed for just 125 yards for Washington (6-4, 4-3) before leaving with an injured left knee in the third quarter of the Huskies' third loss in four weeks to Top-25 opponents.

WYOMING 25, AIR FORCE 17
AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. • Freshman quarterback Brett Smith ran for two touchdowns and threw for another, lifting Wyoming in a howling wind that was gusting up to 60 mph.

Smith finished with 75 yards rushing and threw for another 139 as the Cowboys (6-3, 3-1 Mountain West) snapped a five-game skid against the Falcons (5-5, 1-4).

Defensive back Marquston Huff sealed the win when he scooped up a fumble in the waning seconds and raced 48 yards for a score.

PORTLAND STATE 23, NORTHERN COLORADO 17
GREELEY, Colo. • Connor Kavanaugh had 270 total yards and threw for a touchdown, Zach Brown kicked three field goals and Portland State hung on to keep its playoff hopes alive.

Justin Monahan had nine catches for 71 yards and a touchdown and DeShawn Shead had a 74-yard interception return for the Vikings, winners of four straight.

CALIFORNIA 23, OREGON STATE 6
SAN FRANCISCO • Isi Sofele rushed for a career-high 190 yards and one touchdown, quarterback Zach Maynard threw for one score and ran for another, and California beat Oregon State.

Safron Leads Sacramento St. Over Idaho St. 24-9

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) • Garrett Safron passed for a touchdown and ran for one Saturday to help Sacramento State defeat Idaho State 24-9 and snap a three-game losing streak.

Safron scored the go-ahead touchdown on a 34-yard run in the third quarter to put the Hornets (4-6, 3-5 Big Sky) on top 16-9. He earlier hit DJ Maciel for a 5-yard scoring pass. Bryan Hilliard added a 3-yard TD run in the fourth quarter to put the game out of reach. Sacramento State scored two-point conversions after each of its scores.

Safron was 7 of 16 passing for 100 yards and added 74 yards rushing on 17 carries.

Idaho State (2-8, 1-6) managed only 18 yards rushing and settled for field goals of 29, 32 and 23 yards from Brendon Garcia.

Bengals receiver Rodrick Rumble had nine catches for 62 yards, extending his Big Sky record to 107 receptions for the season.

Bowl Options Dwindle With Bronco Loss

BY DAVID BASHORE
dbashore@magicvalley.com

The Boise State football team began the day dreaming of the BCS National Championship Game in New Orleans.

At worst, the Broncos knew if they won out they'd be playing in one of the BCS bowls. Representatives of the Sugar and Fiesta bowls were on hand for Saturday's game against TCU, which figured to be Boise State's last chance to make a major pitch for playing in the national title game if it were one of two remaining unbeaten.

There may be two unbeaten, but Boise State won't be among them after losing in heartbreaking fashion Saturday, 36-35.

It not only killed off the Broncos' national title dreams — however small they might have been to begin with — it crushed their chances of reaching the BCS altogether. With the current selection process, it's now a long shot at best.

The BCS already takes the conference champions from six major conferences, with four "at-large" slots. One of those will go to Houston if it runs the table and wins the Conference USA championship. If the Cougars were to lose, that slot wouldn't revert to Boise State unless TCU falls apart and loses to either Colorado State or UNLV, both games to be played at home. Only a conference champion meeting other BCS criteria can qualify automatically from a non-automatic-qualifying conference.

Right now, barring the Pac-12 South representative (likely Arizona State) pulling an upset in the Pac-12 title game, five of the six automatic-qualifying conference champions will finish in the top 14 of the final BCS standings. Only the Big East champ seems certain to finish outside that range.

Teams in the top 14 of the final standings are eligible for at-large selection, and only two can be selected per conference. That leaves nine teams likely eligible for four at-large slots, of which Houston could be guaranteed one if it wins out. Throw in a second SEC school as a lock, and Boise State is staring down the barrel of competing against the Pac-12, Big 12 and ACC for two spots. An unlikely scenario at best, and the door really only cracks open a smidge if Houston slips up.

Short of the BCS, the Mountain West has four bowl tie-ins: Las Vegas, Poinsettia (San Diego), Independence (Shreveport, La.) and New Mexico. Those bowls pick in that order from the list of bowl-eligible conference teams, not necessarily in order of conference finish.

If the Broncos don't backdoor it into the BCS and Las Vegas decides it doesn't want a repeat participant from last season — despite its history to the contrary, like when it picked BYU five years in a row — the bowl options are looking far less sexy than this time 24 hours ago.

Heaps Comes Off Bench to Lead BYU Over Idaho 42-7

PROVO, Utah (AP) • Jake Heaps threw for 185 yards and two touchdowns after coming off the bench late in the first quarter to lead the BYU Cougars to a 42-7 victory over the Idaho Vandals on Saturday night.

Heaps entered the game when Riley Nelson suffered a broken rib on a play where he threw a touchdown pass to Cody Hoffman. Nelson did not return to the game. He finished with 56 yards and a touchdown.

Hoffman was the leading receiver for the Cougars (7-3) with 114 yards and two touchdowns on six catches. Michael Alisa led the way with 99 rushing yards and a touchdown on 10 carries. Idaho (2-8) surrendered 505 yards of offense to BYU.

never pin a loss on one play or player, nor will any members of his team. They didn't against Nevada, and they didn't Saturday evening. While Goodale's miss will grab the most attention as it was the game's last play, there were — just like at Nevada — a handful of other notable plays that proved pivotal and contributed just as much to defeat.

There was running back D.J. Harper turning an ankle, which pushed walk-on Drew Wright into the game. A couple plays later, Wright fumbled, giving TCU life. With 2:26 left, all the Broncos needed was one more first down and the game was essentially over.

There's no guarantee Harper wouldn't have coughed it up in the same situation, but it was a big moment.

After TCU scored to make it 35-34, the Horned Frogs went for two. Quaylon Ewing-Burton jumped the arrow route, but rather than try to make the tackle he tried to pick the pass off. Again, no guarantee that he tackles Josh Boyce before the conversion succeeds, but it wasn't a fundamentally proper play.

Then there's the kick. With 10 seconds left and one time-out remaining, Boise State sent Kellen Moore to sneak a ball into the center of the field and set up a medium-range field goal for a kicking game that has been a question mark all season.

Moore admitted he would have wanted one more shot, but conceded that sometimes coaches know the situation a little better. Petersen said Goodale had a great week of practice, and it just didn't work out. Whether you believe the Broncos should have taken a shot to get a little closer before centering the ball, Petersen's point is fair.

There's also the fact that Boise State's patchwork secondary got torched for three scoring pass plays of 69 yards or longer in the first half. Playing with the fourth and fifth cornerbacks is a good way to help a quarterback to a career day, as Casey Pachall enjoyed Saturday.

In short, it was a combination of things that contributed to the Bronco loss, things that Petersen and his staff had expressed concern over for much of the season: an inexperienced kicking game, depth issues at running back and cornerback. All issues that Bronco fans were worried might come back to haunt their team, and they all cropped up in the same game.

It's not going to get any easier for Boise State. The Broncos have to pick themselves up off the deck and head to San Diego next week for a tricky game at San Diego State. Then there's a visit from Wyoming, which has stunned many observers with its improved play over last season.

"We'll see what these guys are made of," Petersen said. "This is real-life football. You don't win all your games all the time — as much as we've done that around here."

settling for a field goal try instead of a possible touchdown.

"I think you're playing percentages and odds right there," Boise State coach Chris Petersen said. "That's what we thought our best chance was."

After TCU kicked off out of bounds after the successful conversion, it seemed senior Kellen Moore would gracefully lead a scoring drive to win the game in front of the home crowd. Moore, helped by a questionable pass-interference call on a fourth-down, plodded his team into field goal range before Goodale's miss.

Moore finished the game 28-of-38 for 320 yards with two touchdowns, but was upstaged on his home turf by Pachall.

"There's a variety of plays that you look back and you try to improve on those and maybe you have a little bit better opportunity," Moore said.

TCU owned the momentum heading into half, but on the first play after halftime, Boise State's Byron Hout forced an Antoine Hicks fumble that Tyrone Crawford returned 32 yards for a touchdown, bringing the crowd of 34,126 back into the game. The Broncos maintained the upper-hand throughout the second half, but failed to close the game out.

Matt Miller made a one-handed touchdown catch on the game's first drive for Boise State (8-1, 3-1 Mountain West), and Harper rushed for 130 yards and two TDs, but TCU (8-2, 4-1) proved too tough behind Pachall, who capitalized on TCU's opportunities. This was the first loss at home for Boise State since 2005 (Boston College), the first regular season loss at home since 2001 (Washington State) and the first conference loss at home since 1998 (Idaho).

"We'll see what guys are made of," Petersen said. "That's going to be the big key here — come back in tomorrow, analyze the tape, shake it off and go to work again on Tuesday, because there's a lot of football left to play."

Nebraska Holds Off Emotional Penn State

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. • Capping the worst week in school history, No. 12 Penn State nearly overcame a 17-point deficit but was stopped short on a 4th-and-1 late in a 17-14 loss Saturday to No. 19 Nebraska.

The outcome was secondary in Happy Valley.

A tumultuous week that began with the arrest of former defensive coordinator Jerry Sandusky on shocking child sexual abuse charges ended Saturday with Penn State losing in its first game in 46 years without coach Joe Paterno, who was fired Wednesday.

Rex Burkhead ran for 121 yards and a touchdown before the Nittany Lions scored 14 unanswered behind two second-half touchdown runs by Stephfon Green. But a key drive ended when Silas Redd was stopped on the fourth down with 1:49 left at the Penn State 38.

NO. 1 LSU 42, WESTERN KENTUCKY 9

BATON ROUGE, La. • Alfred Blue and Kenny Hilliard each scored two touchdowns, and No. 1 LSU overcame a slow start.

One week after playing most of LSU's 9-6 overtime victory at Alabama, Jordan Jefferson made his first start of the season against the Hilltoppers, hitting 8 of 14 passes for 168 yards, including a 59-yard scoring strike to Rueben Randle.

LSU (10-0), which came in favored by nearly six touchdowns, led only 14-7 at halftime before dominating the second half.

Keshawn Simpson had a 2-yard touchdown run for Western Kentucky (5-5), which saw its winning streak end at five.

Hilltoppers quarterback Kuwaun Jakes completed 11 of 24 passes for 97 yards and was intercepted once by linebacker Tahj Jones.

NO. 2 OKLAHOMA STATE 66, TEXAS TECH 6

LUBBOCK, Texas • Brandon Weeden threw for 423 yards and five touchdowns and Joseph Randle ran for three more scores to send the Cowboys to the first 10-0 start in school history.

The Cowboys, who improved to 7-0 in the Big 12, next play at Iowa State before closing their season at home against Oklahoma in the Bedlam game. Win both, and they likely will be headed to the BCS championship game.

Weeden threw touchdown passes of 2, 27, 28, 48 and 66 yards, and had no interceptions before his backup came in late in the third quarter. Justin Blackmon and Josh Cooper each had more than 100 yards receiving.

It was the Red Raiders' most lopsided loss ever and the most points allowed in program history. Seth Doege completed 25 of 43 passes for a season-low 169 yards and an interception for Texas Tech (5-5, 2-5).

NO. 3 ALABAMA 24, MISSISSIPPI STATE 7

STARKVILLE, Miss. • Trent Richardson rushed for 127 yards and a touchdown and Alabama's defense gave up just 131 total yards.

It was a typical no-frills victory for Alabama (9-1, 6-1 Southeastern Conference), which has won nine of its last 11 against Mississippi State, including four straight. The Crimson Tide defense has held 11 straight opponents to 14 points or less.

Alabama struggled again with field goals, missing two of them in the first half after missing four in last week's loss to No. 1 LSU. But Richardson and Eddie Lacy, who rushed for 96 yards and two touchdowns, made up for those miscues.

Mississippi State (5-5, 1-5) remains one victory from bowl eligibility. Third-year coach Dan Mullen is now 2-11 against SEC Western Division rivals, with both victories coming against Ole Miss.

NO. 8 ARKANSAS 49, FAYETTEVILLE, Ark.

Dennis Johnson accounted for 140 total yards and a pair of touchdowns and Arkansas won its sixth straight.

The Razorbacks (9-1, 5-1 Southeastern Conference) kept alive their hopes for a second-straight BCS bowl game — and possibly more. They also earned their seventh straight win against an SEC East opponent.

Johnson led Arkansas with 97 yards rushing, including a 71-yard touchdown run in the first half. He also had 43 yards receiving.

NO. 9 CLEMSON 31, WAKE FOREST 28

CLEMSON, S.C. • Chandler Catanzaro kicked a 43-yard field goal as time expired and No. 9 Clemson rallied from 14 points down in the second half to win the ACC Atlantic Division title.

Catanzaro missed a 30-yard attempt 2 minutes before his game-winner for the Tigers (9-1, 6-1). However, Clemson's defense quickly got the ball back for one last drive. This time, Catanzaro's attempt was straight and true and sent the Tigers to the Atlantic Coast Conference title game for the second time in three years.

Catanzaro was mobbed by teammates as fans swarmed the field in celebration. The Tigers, 7-0 at home this year, completed their first perfect season at Death Valley since 1990 and next weekend will face North Carolina State with a chance to reach 10 wins for the first time since 1991.

NO. 13 MICHIGAN STATE 37, IOWA 21

IOWA CITY, Iowa • Kirk Cousins threw for 260 yards and three touchdowns and 13th-ranked Michigan State took control of the Big Ten's Legends Division.

B.J. Cunningham caught a pair of TD passes for the Spartans, who snapped a seven-game losing streak at Iowa dating to 1989.

Michigan State (8-2, 5-1) took a commanding 31-7 lead with two touchdowns in a 36-second stretch late in the second quarter. Cunningham followed Le'Veon Bell's 25-yard TD run with a 22-yard touchdown catch to put Michigan State up by 24 at the break.

The Spartans now can earn a spot in the Big Ten title game with wins over Indiana and Northwestern in the next two weeks.

NO. 15 SOUTH CAROLINA 17, FLORIDA 12

COLUMBIA, S.C. • South Carolina quarterback Connor Shaw ran for 88 yards and two touchdowns.

Freshman Brandon Wilds rushed for 120 yards as the No. 15 Gamecocks (8-2, 6-2 Southeastern) edged the Gators (5-5, 3-5) and left themselves a chance to make it to a second straight SEC title game.

South Carolina led 14-3 after Shaw's sneak just before the half, but Florida rallied. A 2-yard touchdown run by Jacoby Brissett made it 14-12, but the Gators never threatened again.

The win gives South Carolina six SEC victories for the first time since joining the league in 1992. But the Gamecocks will need Georgia to lose to Kentucky next week to win the SEC East.

NO. 14 GEORGIA 45, NO. 24 AUBURN 7

ATHENS, Ga. • Aaron Murray threw four touchdown passes to surpass Matthew Stafford's school record and Georgia moved within one win of playing for the Southeastern Conference championship.

The Bulldogs (8-2, 6-1) won their eighth in a row with a dominating performance in the Deep South's oldest rivalry. They raced to a 35-7 halftime lead over the stunned Tigers (6-4, 4-3) and finished with their biggest win in the series since 1946.

Georgia can clinch its first division title in six years at home next weekend against Kentucky.

Murray now has 27 TDs for the season — nine in the past two weeks. He broke the school mark of 25 set in 2008 by Stafford, a top pick in the NFL draft.

NO. 16 WISCONSIN 42, MINNESOTA 13

MINNEAPOLIS • Montee Ball broke the Big Ten's single-season touchdown record and 16th-ranked Wisconsin trampled Minnesota to keep Paul Bunyan's Axe for the eighth straight year.

Russell Wilson had a season-high four touchdown passes. He was on target with every throw and every decision, connecting on all but his last throw, a deep ball that Nick Toon had in his hands but let trickle out as he hit the turf hard midway through the third quarter. Toon, who finished with eight catches for 100 yards and two scores, was shaken up on that play. Wilson went 16 for 17 for 178 yards.

In just 10 games, Ball has 27 total touchdowns.

NO. 17 KANSAS STATE 53, TEXAS A&M 50, 4OT

MANHATTAN, Kan. • Collin Klein scored on a sneak in the fourth overtime for his sixth touchdown of the game, giving Kansas State a dramatic victory.

Klein threw for a career-high 281 yards and added 103 yards on the ground for the Wildcats (8-2, 5-2 Big 12), who rallied from a 10-point deficit in the final 6 minutes of regulation to hand the Aggies (5-5, 3-4) their third consecutive loss.

The Aggies had the ball first in the fourth overtime and moved down to the Kansas State 3 before their drive stalled. Facing fourth-and-1, coach Mike Sherman played it safe and kicked the field goal, and that gave Kansas State the opening it needed.

Klein pounded forward for three yards on third-and-3 at the 18 for a first down, and a pass interference call on Toney Hurd Jr. in the end zone gave Kansas State the ball at the 2.

Klein went straight up the middle twice, getting across the goal line on his second try as the crowd erupted, and the Wildcats poured off the sideline to celebrate the victory.

MISSOURI 17, NO. 21 TEXAS 5

COLUMBIA, Mo. • Kendial Lawrence topped 100 yards with a touchdown in relief of injured Henry Josey and Missouri ended a six-game losing streak in the series.

James Franklin completed his first 10 passes and ran for a 2-yard score for the Tigers (5-5, 3-4 Big 12), who beat Texas for the first time since 1997. Lawrence had 106 yards on 18 carries with a 35-yard score in the second quarter.

Texas (6-3, 3-3) entered with injury concerns at running back and was held to 76 yards rushing in only its third road game of the year. Missouri allowed only a chip-shot field goal for the game's first score and a safety off a blocked punt in the third quarter.

NO. 22 MICHIGAN 31, ILLINOIS 14

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. • Fitzgerald Toussaint ran for 192 yards and a touchdown and backup quarterback Devin Gardner threw a key TD pass for Michigan.

Denard Robinson didn't play after a big third-quarter hit. Details about his injury weren't available. Gardner came in and hit Martavious Odoms for a fourth quarter touchdown that gave Michigan (8-2, 4-2 Big Ten) a 24-7 lead after Illinois scored.

The Illini (6-4, 2-4) finished with 214 yards of offense but had just 30 at halftime. They've lost four straight.

Illinois trailed 17-7 after quarterback Nathan Scheelhaase's 14-yard third-quarter touchdown run. But he was intercepted by J.T. Floyd on the next Illinois possession to set up Odoms' TD.

WEST VIRGINIA 24, NO. 23 CINCINNATI 21

CINCINNATI • Geno Smith threw for 372 yards and led a fourth-quarter touchdown drive that rallied West Virginia past No. 23 Cincinnati — which lost both quarterback Zach Collaros and control of the Big East race.

Eain Smith blocked Tony Miliano's attempt for a tying 31-yard field goal as time ran out, giving the Mountaineers (7-3, 3-2) a win they needed to stay in contention.

The Bearcats (7-2, 3-1) lost Collaros to a lower-leg injury in the second quarter and he watched the rest of the game on crutches from the sideline with his right foot and ankle heavily wrapped.

NO. 25 SOUTHERN MISS 30, CENTRAL FLORIDA 29

HATTIESBURG, Miss. • Danny Hrapmann kicked five field goals and No. 25 Southern Miss narrowly avoided an upset.

Central Florida's J.J. Whorton caught a 25-yard touchdown pass as time expired, but Southern Miss safety Jacorius Cotton got a hand on Blake Bortles' 2-point conversion pass to seal the win.

After Week of Turmoil Penn State Finally Plays

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. • The Penn State players left the field with their heads bowed, the fans mostly silent.

A lifetime worth of emotions was crammed into the past week. Shock, rage, regret and, now, exhaustion. The child sexual abuse scandal involving former assistant Jerry Sandusky cost Joe Paterno his job and, no doubt, scarred Penn State's soul.

A football game on a brilliant autumn afternoon won't erase it.

It was, however, a start.

"We've had better weeks in our lives, obviously," Paterno's son Jay, the quarterbacks coach, said after No. 12 Penn State's 17-14 loss to No. 19 Nebraska on Saturday. "The world's kind of turned upside down, but I think our kids were resilient."

The game was a combination of pep rally, cleansing and tribute, a way to acknowledge the past and take a step into the future. Affection for Penn State and Paterno was abundantly visible from players, fans and, yes, coaches. So was support for abuse victims, the kind of empathy many felt was missing in the days after news of the scandal broke.

Beaver Stadium was awash in blue — the color associated with child-abuse prevention — and public-service announcements flashed on the scoreboard throughout the game. A fund-raising campaign for abuse-prevention charities at the stadium gates raised more than $22,000.

In one of the most poignant moments in a week filled with lurid allegations, Nebraska and Penn State players gathered at midfield and knelt for a moment while Cornhuskers running backs coach Ron Brown offered a prayer.

"It felt like we all banded together. And it wasn't just about football," said Melissa Basinger, a 2005 Penn State grad who made the trip from Charlotte, N.C. "It was about coming together as a school, and showing the country, world or whatever that this does not define who we are."

Sandusky, once considered Paterno's heir apparent, is charged with sexually abusing eight boys over a 15-year span, with several of the alleged assaults occurring on Penn State property. Two university officials are charged with perjury, and Paterno and president Graham Spanier were fired for not doing enough after Sandusky was accused of molesting a young boy in the showers of the campus football complex in 2002.

The scandal would be damaging enough to anyone who prides himself on integrity. That it involved Paterno, major college football's winningest coach and the man who'd come to symbolize all that was good at Penn State, made it that much worse.

Though he was not at Beaver Stadium for the game — Jay Paterno joked that maybe he was out mowing the lawn — it took a while to get used to not seeing JoePa on the sideline, pacing back and forth, hands jammed in the pockets of his trademark blue windbreaker, watching the game unfold through those Coke-bottle glasses.

Students seemed almost afraid to acknowledge his absence, unsure how to react to having someone else in charge of the team for the first time in 46 seasons. But when Paterno appeared on the scoreboard as part of a video montage for Nittany Lion seniors — it was Senior Day — they let loose with gusto.

"Joe Pa-ter-no!" they chanted, clapping in rhythm.

No one felt the absence of the 84-year-old more keenly than his son, Jay, who choked up during a postgame interview.

"Dad, I wish you were here," he said, walking away from the cameras before the tears began to flow.

When the team arrived at the stadium, the normally low-key son pumped his fist and shouted, "Let's go!" as he followed the starting quarterback off the bus, just as his father always did. The younger Paterno high-fived passers-by on the way into the stadium, and several staffers gave him an encouraging embrace before he entered the locker room.

After the game, he shared a few details of a letter he'd dropped off at his parents' house earlier in the day. In it, he told his larger-than-life father all the things he'd never found the words to say before.

"I said, 'You and I, in my life, haven't always seen eye to eye. But generally speaking, it's (because) I had to grow up, to catch up to make eye contact with you,'" Jay Paterno recalled. "There were a lot of lessons that I learned from him."

At Joe Paterno's house nearby, a small clutch of TV cameras and reporters stood outside. Two people walked to the door, rang the bell and left when no one answered. On the lawn was a pair of homemade signs facing the house. One said, "We Love You Joe, Thank You" and the other, "Thanks Joe."

A small American flag was planted nearby.

"There's not going to be closure anytime soon," said Brandon Hewitt, a senior from York, Pa. "I feel horrible what happened to the kids. I feel bad for what happened about Joe. But today was about football, and it was heartwarming to see the university rally around a terrible time!"

AVONDALE, Ariz. • Matt Kenseth had no idea his pole-winning run at Phoenix International Raceway could benefit his championship-contending teammate.

When he found out he had assisted Carl Edwards, Kenseth pretended it was all part of the plan.

"That was my plan. I thought, 'Man, if we can sit on the pole, that will really help him,'" Kenseth laughed.

Kenseth turned a lap at 137.101 mph on Saturday to win his third pole of the season. It came in a late run, and separated title contenders Edwards and Tony Stewart on the grid.

Before Kenseth's lap, the two were seventh and eighth on the qualifying list and in line to start side-by-side in Sunday's race. But Edwards would have been on the outside, and new pavement at Phoenix has prevented the second line from adequately developing.

So when Kenseth wedged his way to the top of the board, Stewart dropped to eighth and Edwards to ninth. It means Stewart will start on the outside of the fourth row, and Edwards will line up on the inside of row five.

"I planned that. I am that good," Kenseth claimed.

But he actually downplayed the significance of the starting spots of the two championship contenders. Edwards takes a three-point lead over Stewart into the penultimate event of the 10-race Chase for the Sprint Cup championship.

"The bottom is probably going to be an advantage to get started, but it is still 300 miles and I think at some point in the race every car is going to be in the top groove for a little bit," Kenseth said.

AJ Allmendinger and Marcos Ambrose qualified second and third as Ford swept the top three spots. Mark Martin qualified fourth and Martin Truex Jr. was fifth, followed by Jamie McMurray and David Reutimann.

But the qualifying session was marked by drivers using strong adjectives in reference to the racing surface, was paved over the summer.

Ambrose said the slick track was "pretty sketchy" and Allmendinger said his lap "was insane." Jeff Gordon, who won here in February, called the surface "treacherous" after qualifying 23rd.

But Stewart? He didn't seem all that concerned.

"I didn't think it was a big drama," he said. "I am alright if it stays like this for the whole day."

Well, Stewart, who normally heats up during the hot summer stretch of the schedule, prefers a slick track, right?

"Yeah, I love it," he smiled.

It could be setting it up for a big Sunday for the two-time NASCAR champion, who already believes he's got the advantage over Edwards this weekend because the race could come down to which drivers adapt faster to the new surface.

Edwards said after four hours of practice Friday that this race had been a concern.

"I have been a little nervous about coming here not knowing what the track is going to be like and how we are going to stack up," Edwards said. "But practice went really well and we are really fast. I am excited about it."

Edwards also got the benefit of extra track time in Saturday's Nationwide Series race. Stewart was a mere observer, left to watch on TV to see how the racing lines developed.

Both drivers, though, believe they are in control of their own destiny.

Stewart, winner of four Chase races, including two straight, has been operating as if he's on a mission and can't be stopped in his bid to become the first driver-owner since Alan Kulwicki in 1992 to win the title.

Edwards, who has been the points leader for most of the season, thinks he needs only to maintain what he's been doing to lock up his first title and it doesn't matter what Stewart does.

"I feel that they have obviously had flashes of great speed and have won four races, and we haven't, but the job that we have done I am very proud of," he said.

Krzyzewski Ties Knight atop Career Wins List

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DURHAM, N.C. • Mike Krzyzewski tied Bob Knight atop the Division I men's career wins list with his 902nd victory in No. 6 Duke's 96-55 rout against Presbyterian on Saturday.

Ryan Kelly scored 17 points for the Blue Devils (2-0), who shot 61 percent and used a huge first-half run to deliver another milestone victory to their Hall of Fame coach.

Coach K improved to 902-284 during his 37th season as a college coach at Army and Duke. He can pass Knight — his coach and mentor — on Tuesday night against Michigan State at Madison Square Garden.

Krzyzewski continued his steady climb up the wins list by matching Knight — for whom he played point guard at Army in the 1960s. The Cameron Crazies chanted "902" as the final seconds ticked away, then chanted his name after the horn. Krzyzewski briefly huddled with the Blue Devils on the court, then hustled into the locker room as the song "Celebration" blared from the speakers.

Freshman Austin Rivers scored 15 points for Duke, which outscored Presbyterian 29-6 midway through the first half to push its lead well into double figures and remove all the drama from this one.

AlLonzo Coleman had 11 points for Presbyterian (1-1).

NO. 5 SYRACUSE 78, FORDHAM 53 SYRACUSE, N.Y. • Kris Joseph scored 16 points, Dion Waiters added 14 and Syracuse cruised to the win in its season opener.

Brandon Triche and C.J. Fair had nine points apiece and Scoop Jardine and James Southerland each scored seven as Orange coach Jim Boeheim emptied his bench in the first meeting between the schools since Syracuse's 80-63 victory four years ago.

Chris Gaston and Bryan Smith led Fordham with 13 points apiece. Branden Frazier had nine points, three steals and three assists.

Syracuse put the game out of reach with a 15-5 spurt in the second. Joseph hit a 3 from the left wing, Fair converted a miss by Joseph, and Waiters' steal and fast-break dunk capped the run and made it 51-28 with 12:49 left.

NO. 15 WISCONSIN 85, KENNESAW STATE 31 MADISON, Wis. • Ben Brust and Josh Gasser scored 14 points apiece, and Wisconsin hit 15 3-pointers.

Ryan Evans had 13 points for the Badgers, who made seven of their first 10 attempts from beyond the arc. Jared Berggren and preseason All-American Jordan Taylor finished with 11 apiece.

Mike Bruesewitz hit consecutive 3-pointers to cap a 16-0 run for the Badgers (1-0).

Tiger Adds Controversy to Presidents Cup

SYDNEY (AP) • The Presidents Cup has been looked upon as the country cousin of the Ryder Cup, an event packed with some of the best players in the world but missing the intensity of competing tours, competing continents and more than 60 years of history.

On paper, it would seem this edition doesn't have much going for it.

So why is the Presidents Cup getting more attention than ever?

Tiger Woods, of course. This sleepy little affair found itself in the middle of a minor controversy when Woods — winless for the last two years and out of the top 50 in the world for the first time since he was a 20-year-old rookie — was picked for the U.S. team by captain Fred Couples.

What's more, Couples announced he was taking Woods — calling him "the best player in the world forever" — a month before the qualifying period ended, essentially informing the other Americans that only one spot was available if they didn't make the team.

International captain Greg Norman added some fuel when he said he would not have taken Woods over PGA champion Keegan Bradley, a two-time winner this year who wound up being left off the team.

Tiger Woods Slips in Australia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SYDNEY • In the lead for the first time all year, Tiger Woods got the same result as his last time atop the leaderboard. He couldn't break par.

Woods bogeyed his first three holes Saturday in the Australian Open, and it didn't get much better from there. He managed only two birdies on a good day for scoring, shot 3-over 75 and went from a one-shot lead to six shots behind John Senden.

It was only the third time since Woods' last win two years ago that he had at least a share of the lead after a round. And it was the third time he was over par.

This round made him a long shot to end the longest drought of his career. Only once has he won a tournament when trailing by six shots or more going into the final round, and that was nearly 14 years ago in Thailand.

Senden, who won the Australian Open five years ago at Royal Sydney, birdied his last two holes to finish off a 9-under 63, giving him a one-shot lead over Jason Day going into Sunday at The Lakes.

LORENA OCHOA INVITATIONAL GUADALAJARA, Mexico • Catriona Matthew shot her second straight 4-under 68 on Saturday to take a three-stroke lead after the third round of the Lorena Ochoa Invitational.

Matthew, the 42-year-old Scot who won the last of her three LPGA Tour titles in 2009, had an 11-under 205 total at Guadalajara Country Club. Norway's Suzann Pettersen (71) was second, and defending champion I.K. Kim (70) was another stroke back along with Anna Nordqvist (73).

SINGAPORE OPEN SINGAPORE • Spain's Gonzalo Fernandez-Castano completed a 10-under 61 on Saturday to take a three-stroke lead after the second round of the rain-delayed Singapore Open.

Play was suspended because of the threat of lightning just as the third round began at about noon. The rain continued throughout the afternoon, wiping out play and forcing officials to shorten the tournament to three rounds. The event is sanctioned by the European and Asian tours.

Rescued Baseball Player Wilson Ramos Thankful to Be Alive

BY IAN JAMES
 Associated Press

VALENCIA, Venezuela

His eyes tearing up with emotion, Washington Nationals catcher Wilson Ramos embraced his rescuers Saturday and said he had wondered whether he would survive a two-day kidnapping ordeal that ended when commandos swept into his captors' mountain hideout. Ramos said he was happy and thankful to be alive a day after his rescue, saying that his final moments as a prisoner were hair-raising as police and the kidnappers exchanged heavy gunfire in the remote area where he was being held. He said his kidnappers had carefully planned the abduction and told him they were going to demand a large ransom. "I didn't know if I was going to get out of it alive," Ramos told reporters at a police station in his hometown of Valencia, flanked by police investigators, National Guard commanders and Justice Minister Tareck El Aissami. "It was very hard for me. It was very hard for my family." El Aissami said authorities arrested four of the captors, all of them Venezuelan men in their 20s. A 60-year-old woman and a 74-year-old man were also arrested as accomplices for supplying the kidnappers with food from their home in the area, he said. The six suspects were led past journalists at the police station with black hoods over their heads. Authorities were still searching for four Colombian men who escaped during the rescue, El Aissami said. He didn't say whether anyone was wounded in the gunbattle. Ramos, 24, was seized at gunpoint outside his family's home Wednesday night and whisked away in an SUV. It was the first known kidnapping of a Major League Baseball player in Venezuela, and the abduction set off an outpouring of candlelight vigils and public prayers at stadiums as well as outside Ramos' house. El Aissami said investigators' first break in the case came when they found the kidnappers' stolen SUV, a bronze-colored Chevrolet, abandoned in the town of Bejuma alongside the mountains of central Carabobo state. With that location pinpointed, he said, they studied past crimes in the area and ended up checking on a rural house that authorities believed had been used in a previous kidnapping. An SUV parked outside had mud on it even though there was no mud in the area, El Aissami said. Investigators suspected that SUV was being used to shuttle food to another spot nearby, and eventually determined the house was probably being used by the kidnappers as a support base while holding Ramos elsewhere, he said.

El Aissami said authorities took over the house and detained the couple who had been cooking for the abductors. Once investigators thought they had found the general area where Ramos might be, President Hugo Chavez personally authorized an aerial search mission and teams also set out on foot in the mountainous area.

Today is Sunday, Nov. 13, the 317th day of 2011. There are 48 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight:
On Nov. 13, 1956, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down laws calling for racial segregation on public city and state buses.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:
In 1789, Benjamin Franklin wrote in a letter to a friend, Jean-Baptiste Leroy: "In this world nothing can be said to be certain, except death and taxes"

In 1849, voters in California ratified the state's original constitution.

In 1909, 259 men and boys were killed when fire erupted inside a coal mine in Cherry, Ill.

In 1911, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that an unauthorized motion picture adaptation of the novel "Ben-Hur" by General Lew Wallace infringed on the book's copyright.

In 1927, the Holland Tunnel opened to the public, providing access between lower Manhattan and New Jersey beneath the Hudson River.

In 1940, the Walt Disney animated movie "Fantasia" had its world premiere in New York.

In 1969, speaking in Des Moines, Iowa, Vice President Spiro T. Agnew accused network television news departments of bias and distortion, and urged viewers to lodge complaints.

In 1971, the U.S. space probe Mariner 9 went into orbit around Mars.

In 1974, Karen Silkwood, a technician and union activist at the Kerr-McGee Cimarron plutonium plant near Crescent, Okla., died in a car crash while on her way to meet a reporter.

In 1982, the Vietnam Veterans Memorial was dedicated on the National Mall in Washington, D.C.

Ten years ago: Afghan opposition fighters rolled into Kabul after Taliban troops slipped away under cover of darkness. Eight foreign aid workers — two Americans, two Australians and four Germans — held captive in Afghanistan for three months were freed by anti-Taliban fighters. President George W. Bush approved the use of a special military tribunal that could put accused terrorists on trial faster and in greater secrecy than an ordinary criminal court. President Bush and Russian President Vladimir Putin met at the White House, where they pledged to slash Cold War-era nuclear arsenals by two-thirds. Bishop Wilton Gregory was elected the first black president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Five years ago: President George W. Bush met with the bipartisan Iraq Study Group and promised to work with the incoming Democratic majority toward "common objectives"; at the same time, Bush renewed his opposition to any timetable for withdrawing U.S. troops. President Bush led a ceremonial groundbreaking on the National Mall for a memorial dedicated to civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.

One year ago: Pro-democracy hero Aung San Suu Kyi (soo chee) walked free in Myanmar after more than seven years under house arrest. Former White House chief of staff Rahm Emanuel officially announced his ultimately successful candidacy for mayor of Chicago.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a widow who never thought I'd consider marrying again until I met "Lester" online two years ago. Being with him makes me feel like a teenager. He holds my hand when we go for walks, brings me flowers and is a wonderful lover.

My problem is he's taking care of his sister, "Gerda," who has cancer. He said she doesn't want him seeing anyone until she's dead. (He stands to inherit her fortune and doesn't want to take a chance on losing the money.) I told him we don't need the money, but he says he has put up with her bad moods for too long to lose it now.

My friends insist that because Lester doesn't call or email me much, Gerda is his wife, not his sister. I checked him out. Their last names are different and the house and his truck are in both their names. I'm lonely and want to be with him. I offered to help him with his sister, but he says she's also an alcoholic and doesn't want company.

I haven't heard from Lester since Gerda told him he can't have a girlfriend until she's gone. It's been two months. Should I wait, or should I start looking elsewhere as my son suggested?

— LONELY WITHOUT HIM

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR LONELY: Listen to your son because it appears he has good common sense. As to Lester, don't count on him because whatever Gerda is to him, it appears she has rallied and may not be going anywhere for a long, long time.

P.S. Married couples these days do not always share the same last name.

DEAR ABBY: I have hosted Thanksgiving dinner for a small group of friends for the past 20 years. My brother and sister-in-law live 400 miles away and also attend. It is the only time I get to see them.

Last week, I called my brother to invite him. He confirmed they would love to come and went on to say he feels the group should discuss our feelings about the presidential candidates. I pointed out that discussions about politics or religion seldom have happy endings and I prefer they be left at the front door.

My brother then announced that due to my decision about inappropriate subjects of conversation, he and his wife won't be coming! I'm shocked, hurt and angry. I can't stop crying. I can't sleep, and I don't know what to do. Can you help?

— SADDENED SISTER IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR SISTER: Dry your tears and stand your ground. That your brother would attempt to hijack your Thanksgiving celebration by injecting subjects that could make any of the guests uncomfortable is extremely rude. The coming election year is one that will determine the direction of this country, and it is already becoming emotional. Your brother has made his intentions clear. Now move forward and do NOT waffle.

DEAR ABBY: If family members provide significant services free for a wedding — officiate, conduct pre-marriage counseling, perform all the musical accompaniment for a long ceremony — is a wedding gift also expected to be given? This has been a family sore spot. Please help.

— WEDDINGS ARE OUR BUSINESS

DEAR W.A.O.B.: If family members are providing "significant services" for free, that IS the gift, and it is presumptuous for anyone to expect more.

Sudoku is a number-placing puzzle based on a 9x9 grid with several given numbers. The object is to place the numbers 1 to 9 in the empty squares so that each row, each column and each 3x3 box contains the same number only once. The difficulty level of the Conceptis Sudoku increases from Monday to Sunday.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

Dear Mr. Wolff:

In your column two weeks ago you printed a letter from a couple who wanted to learn to play bridge and had no resources where they lived. A good place to learn is at Bilbridge.com, where they have great teachers and mentors. I hope you will pass this on. Also, since there is no sanctioned club where I live either, I play online at BBO and really enjoy the site and the people there.

Hot Tip, Elephant Butte, New Mexico

ANSWER: Thanks for the excellent suggestion; I'm delighted to share your enthusiasm with my readers. Any way that we can encourage people to play makes me happy.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

In fourth chair I held ♠ J-7-4, ♥ K-Q-9-8-6, ♦ J-2, ♣ A-9-3. With three passes, what should my thoughts be about opening the bidding?

Silent Partner, Worcester, Mass.

ANSWER: One approach is to add your spades to your high cards and only act with 15 or more. It is a good idea, but ignores important information, such as the form of scoring and the vulnerability. If your side is vulnerable and opponents not, your RHO would have opened with any excuse. I'd open the bidding if my opponents were not vulnerable and pass if they were vulnerable — when it may be that my LHO has a better hand than I do.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

Playing at a local club, I was dealer. After the opponents had bid and raised diamonds, I doubled. My LHO passed and my partner doubled again! The director was called and after the situation was explained, he ruled that my partner would have to pass because she could not make her bid sufficient. Later, I was told that because this situation was not covered in the rule book, the director had to use his judgment as to the best solution. Therefore the ruling could not be protested. Was he right?

Railroaded, Houston, Texas

ANSWER: Per law 36: the second double is canceled, another call may be substituted, and the partner of the offender must pass throughout thereafter, and there may be lead penalties. The law does look perfectly clear — and easy to spot!

Dear Mr. Wolff:

My partner held ♠ Q-9-3, ♥ 9-5-4, ♦ Q-J-3, ♣ 10-8-7-4. The auction started with a four-heart bid on her right and a double from me (primarily for takeout). She passed, saying she was too weak to bid. Was this decision correct? The opponents had nine heart tricks and an ace to cash, while five clubs our way was close to making.

Hello Out There, Laredo, Texas

ANSWER: Imagine that your hand had been a strong no-trump with the doubleton heart king and three clubs to the queen. Would you have been so enthusiastic to hear your partner bid? I think not. Bidding is not an exact science, and I would only remove the double of a four-level call to a four-card major, or if I had shape or serious expectations of making my contract.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

Recently you advised that a hand with eight high-card points should pass after hearing his partner bid first one club, then two diamonds, after you had made a negative double of a one-heart overcall. You said because he bid both minors cheaply, this does not show extras. In the ACBL magazine, in a series on reverse bidding, it says this bid shows at least 17 points. Who is right?

All Shook Up, Nashville, Tenn.

ANSWER: Let's distinguish between two critical auctions here. A reverse occurs when you bid clubs, then diamonds, after partner has bid a suit. The reverse forces preference at the three-level. But if they overcall and you double, partner's bid of two diamonds is simply bidding one of your suits at the lowest level. Because the raise comes at a minimum level, it denies extras.

IF NOVEMBER 13 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: You might be letting group activities or organizational politics affect your happiness. Concentrate on being seen as the consummate professional no matter what line of work you are in — and don't let social affairs affect your financial decisions. Mid-December is a good time for you finances and career, so work hard to make your fantasies come true. On the romantic side, you might be able to take a dream vacation and gather wonderful memories. A new romance that comes into your life in March could be too good to be true. Wait until April to make key decisions about your love life or business. That is when your judgment is at its best.

HOROSCOPE

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Fools and their money are soon parted. There is nothing that can be bought that you can't live without. Don't waste your cash in the week to come; you are better suited to spend time on creative pursuits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A bit of spit and polish never hurts. Spend your free moments tidying up whatever needs tidied, be it your closet, the garage or even yourself. A little elbow grease this week spares you a future headache.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Listen; don't just wait for your turn to talk. Valuable insights can be found if you are perceptive in the week ahead. Asking too many questions may cause others to question how independent you are.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Blinders are put on horse so they aren't distracted by things along the road. Keep your proverbial blinders on as you work toward goals this week — and resist the temptation to get involved in other people's affairs.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The only certainty in life is that nothing is certain. Don't brashly believe that you cannot fail. No matter how confident you are, always keep a backup plan. Be punctual this week and honor responsibilities.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A bargain that you don't really need is no bargain. Money is best left in the vault. No matter how enticing a deal may seem, it might not be a good idea. Keep expenditures at a minimum until later in the week.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Work now, play later. You should put this day to good use by making sure that your business responsibilities are in order. Make plans that are flexible; the agenda is likely to change as the week wears on.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Don't start anything new while old issues are unresolved. You may be ready to move on, but must reconcile differences before wiping the slate clean. Hold off on important decisions until midweek.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Two heads are better than one. Someone else's fresh insight may provide the solution to a nagging problem. When shopping, adopt a "look but don't touch" policy until the middle of the week.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Don't get involved. You may be itching to step into a situation but if the matter doesn't really concern you, just sit on your hands and let it be. You might work better alone in the week ahead.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): To get something done do it yourself. You can't always expect someone else to come along and help you through the rough spots. Avoid those who try to rope you into a confrontation in the week to come.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Sometimes the best course of action is to take no action at all. Put your good judgment to good use. Perhaps adopting a more unconventional approach will make things easier in the week ahead.

What Dreams Are Made Of

Freud may have been the expert at interpreting what deep anxieties and desires were embodied in dreams, but new research finds an altogether different purpose for that state of mind when we sleep. According to Harvard Medical School psychologist Deirdre Barrett, dreams have produced some of the greatest creative thoughts in history.

She cites Mendeleev's coming up with the final form of his now-famous periodic table, Mary Shelley's conjuring the two main scenes of Frankenstein, and several musicians — including Beethoven and Paul McCartney — who woke up with melodies in their head.

Add to that "Mahatma Gandhi's call for a nonviolent protest," which she says was "inspired by a dream." Writing in Scientific American's November/December edition, Barrett cites recent studies in which REM-cycle sleep, when dreams occur, was shown to consolidate new learning and to solve problems.

Her tips for how you can use dreams to solve problems:

- Jot down what the the issue is, and leave that note next to your bed, then look at it a few minutes before you get into bed.
- Once tucked in, visualize the problem and tell yourself you want to dream about it as you drift off to sleep.
- When you wake up, lie quietly for a minute and try to recall any dreams you had and write down descriptions of them.

Book Helps You Fine-tune Your Style

AKRON BEACON JOURNAL

House Beautiful's new "Style 101" is an antidote to decorating indecision.

The book helps readers home in on their style and then offers tips and ideas from top designers to help achieve that look. It's loaded with room photos for inspiration, along with useful information, such as suggested colors and favorite accessories.

You can even take the pocket-size book along on shopping trips for reference, if you like.

"House Beautiful: Style 101" is published by Hearst Books and sells for $16.95 in softcover.

A Church for All

Now led by a lesbian agnostic minister it shares with a Pocatello church, Twin Falls' Unitarian congregation is all about individualism.

BY ANDREW WEEKS
aweeks@magicvalley.com

Suzanne Marsh doesn't live in the Magic Valley, but she's excited about getting better acquainted with it.

She visits at least twice a month, when she comes to take charge of the Magic Valley Unitarian Universalist Church in Twin Falls.

Marsh is the church's pastor but lives in Pocatello, where she also leads another church. Ministry is a second career for the 51-year-old former certified public accountant from Pennsylvania.

"I was surely making better money," she said, "but I wasn't meeting my spiritual needs."

Marsh was appointed by the denomination's headquarters in Boston to lead the two churches and said she hopes her position will serve as a model for other rural Unitarian congregations, where getting a full-time pastor is sometimes difficult.

Marsh's beliefs are different than more traditional religious leaders' in Magic Valley. Marsh calls herself agnostic, someone who doesn't believe — or disbelieve — in the existence of God.

"We just don't know," she said, adding there's no scientific proof one way or the other. Marsh said hers is a common belief pattern in the Unitarian church.

"It's a big tent. We're very broad theologically," Marsh said. "We're a non-creedal, non-dogmatic church. You don't have to believe a particular religious dogma to belong."

The church teaches a variety of topics including some Christian tenets, Hinduism, Buddhism, Islam and Earth worship. Marsh said she believes the humane teachings of Jesus — about how people should care for, not judge, and forgive others — but she doesn't necessarily consider him divine. About 30 people from all religious backgrounds, or no religious background at all, attend the Twin Falls church.

So what is the Unitarian mission? To seek truth and promote human worth, according to the church's website.

"We can learn tremendous things from his life," Marsh said about Jesus. "I have no desire to change anyone's belief about his divinity. I just think his teachings (about how to treat others) is a great way to live our lives. ... Everyone has inherent worth and should be treated with respect."

The Saleyard Scene

Stockyards draw more than buyers and sellers: Some seniors visit livestock auctions to pass their time or catch up with old friends.

BY ANDREW WEEKS
aweeks@magicvalley.com

People in the audience raise their hands now and then to either chase away a buzzing fly or bid on livestock.

A couple of people wipe their noses — but probably not to chase the strong scent of cattle. These men, dressed in broad-brimmed hats and cowboy boots, are used to such smells. They're ranchers, some of them women and seniors, at a recent Wednesday auction at the Twin Falls Livestock Commission stockyards.

The stockyards hold cattle auctions every Wednesday and small-animal auctions the first Saturday of each month. The sales always draw a crowd, but of two different groups, said office manager Sheila Smith: Ranchers come for the cattle, farmers for the other animals.

And some come for neither buying nor selling. Mel Worthington, for instance, likes to listen to the auctioneers, see the animals or hang out with peers in the facility's diner.

"It's something to do," the Twin Falls man said on a recent Saturday. Around him on the concrete benches sat other elderly farmers, some in conversation, others attentive to the movement of pigs and sheep through the arena.

Worthington suffered a stroke in September 2009 and now wears gloves and has limited use of his hands. "I don't know how I got to be 78," he said with a smile, noting that he comes to the auctions a couple of times a month to help fill his time. "You've got to do something."

Joe Pavkov, 91, of Gooding was at the stockyards that Saturday with buddies Jerry Strickland, 70, John Etchart, 59, and Alan Romans, 52, all of Gooding.

said. "To catch up with the gossip."

But times do change. "I used to know everybody here. Now I don't know anybody," Pavkov said.

"That's because you outlived them all," Strickland said, his cowboy hat shaking with his chuckle.

"Damn right," Pavkov said. "It's been a good life. I've worked hard, loved the girls a bit ..."

The Caffeine Nap: For Drowsy Drivers, Coffee Then Sleep

BY CANDY SAGON
AARP

So you're driving to some far-flung relative's home for the holidays and halfway there you start feeling sleepy. Do you pull over for some coffee? Pull over and take a short nap?

Actually, the best thing to do is do both — but not in the order you'd think.

Scientists call it "the caffeine nap," because first you have some coffee and then you take a 15-minute nap. It works because the brain gets just enough rest during the time it takes for the caffeine to kick in.

This is important especially with the holiday travel season coming up, as driver safety can be affected by those who suffer from insomnia problems and daytime drowsiness, according to a Yale University study.

The caffeine nap was first studied by British researchers at Loughborough University's Sleep Research Laboratory. They discovered that 200 mg. of caffeine (8 ounces of strong brewed coffee or a caffeine pill) followed by a short nap was most effective at reducing driving mishaps and re-energizing drivers.

Using a driving simulator and brain wave measurements, the scientists found that the caffeine nap worked better than either caffeine alone, a short nap, cold air, or a break with no nap, at reducing drowsiness and improving driving performance.

The sleep researchers believe this works because the short nap helps revitalize drivers, but is brief enough not to allow them to enter a normal sleep cycle, which can cause even more grogginess.

And because caffeine takes 20 to 30 minutes to kick in, its stimulant effect begins just as the nap is ending.

Researchers warn, however, that caffeine drinks with a high sugar content can worsen sleepiness.

Caffeine Content

- Examples, from the Mayo Clinic:
- Espresso, 1 oz., restaurant-style, 40 to 75 mg. caffeine
 - McDonald's brewed, 16 oz., 100 mg. caffeine
 - McDonald's Mocha Frappe, 16 oz., 125 mg.
 - Starbucks Latte, 16 oz., 150 mg.
 - Starbucks Pike Place, brewed, 16 oz., 330 mg.

Empty Nest? Not All Parents Are Sad about It

BY LEANNE ITALIE
Associated Press

Pamela Reilly and her husband have big plans that don't include moping when their three teens finally fly the coop over the next two years.

She and husband Terry, with a fourth child grown and gone, hope to downsize and leave Indianapolis for more rural, sunny climates. They're dreaming about touring Costa Rica and Baja Mexico on motorcycles. She's considering a return to school to become a physician's assistant or a nurse practitioner.

"We definitely fall into the category of parents who will be celebrating their children's successes instead of mourning the fact that we have an empty nest," said the 46-year-old Reilly, a doctoral student in naturopathic medicine. "Having an empty nest doesn't mean you have an empty life. At least it shouldn't."

Have the dark days of "empty nest syndrome" brightened among today's parents, or has juggling two careers on tight budgets with over-busy kids left them so stressed out and child-centric that they have no energy or skills left to navigate their lives alone?

What about all those helicopter moms? How will they fare in their empty nests after years of applying Ivy League educations to afterschool spreadsheets filled with soccer, test prep and music classes?

First your kids crawl, then they drive, then they leave. Why isn't that a good thing?

"Not all parents experience empty nest," said psychologist Joseph Cilona, a parenting specialist in Manhattan. But the helicopters, he said, those parents who "tend to be controlling and micro-manage their child's life, are at a much greater risk for negative emotions such as deep feelings of loss and sadness when children leave home."

No twinges of sorrow in Bentonville, Ark., for mom of five Pamela Haven and her husband, Jeff. She has a recurring thought about life after the last of the brood — 17-year-old twin boys — graduate high school in June: "Thank God they weren't triplets!"

Up next? "We're booked on a cruise right after school ends, just the two of us. We're purchasing a travel trailer, and we can't wait to strip down the upstairs and repaint, carpet and make two guest rooms."

Also looking forward to life after children is Jeanette Simpson, an interior designer in Lakewood Ranch, Fla. She has six kids (no boomerangers in the bunch) and the last is a high school senior.

"After 27 years of dealing with school schedules, and 33 years of kids at home, I'll be an empty nester in less than a year," she said.

"With the last one, I feel almost guilty about not being overly saddened. I have a feeling of 'job well done.'"

What's she looking forward to the most? Traveling with her hubby without worry about school breaks and, "Time for myself, something that's been rare since the first one came along."

Carl Hindy, a marriage counselor in Nashua, N.H., knows empty nests don't always start off smoothly. Those who seek guidance are led in part by working couples who have had little time to indulge their marriages.

"Couples come to counseling feeling they've grown so far apart and don't know what to do now that the proverbial product has shipped," he said.

Jolyn Brand, an education consultant in suburban Houston, has seen her share of weepy parents dropping kids off at college. What they don't consider, she said, is the guilt their tears whip up in their children during that crucial time when they're just taking flight.

"I'm always baffled by the parents who are enormously saddened," said the mother of four, ranging from 8 to 17. Her oldest is college-bound next fall. "Sure, we all love our children and we'll miss them, but we've been preparing them for 18 years to be independent and leave the nest."

Cool Science: These Experiments Feel More at Home in Backyard than Classroom

BY CATHY FRISINGER
McClatchy Newspapers

Perhaps our brains were getting feverish, but some kitchen science experiments sounded like a cool thing for kids and parents. We contacted a few experts, including Amy Sen-

Fountain of Youths

Materials: 16-ounce plastic soda bottle with a screw top; a large nail; a hammer; silicone sealant or caulk; a bucket; a straw.

Procedure: Have an adult use the nail and hammer to make a hole in the bottle cap that's big enough to fit the straw through. Place the straw through the hole so that it will extend about 6 inches into the bottle and fix it in place with the sealant or caulk. Let dry.

Fill the bucket with very hot water from the tap or have an adult heat water in a pot on the stove. Fill the bucket about three-quarters full with icy cold water. Quickly put the cap on the bottle, screw the cap on tightly and place one finger on the top of the straw to trap the air.

Then place the bottle into the bucket of water, pause for a few seconds to allow the pressure to build and then release your finger from the straw.

Results: Water will shoot out the straw.

The cold, hard facts: The hot water from the bucket heats the water in the bottle, which heats the air in the bottle. Hot air takes up more room than cool air. The expanding air pushes on the water and it squirts out the straw.

Balloon Deep Freeze

Materials: One helium-filled balloon; a freezer.

Procedure: Place the balloon in the freezer. Look at it 30 minutes later. Take the balloon out and let it return to room temperature. Observe again.

Results: The balloon deflates in the freezer. It fills up again when it returns to room temp.

The cold, hard facts: Molecules that are cold move around less than molecules that are warm, and therefore cold gases take up less space than warm gases.

The cold, hard facts: Cold air is denser than warm or room-temperature air because it contains more air particles. As cold air flows from the container into the bag, it will cause an imbalance of the yardstick.

Sam, left, 10, and Emily Hoffer, 12, watch as water spews from a straw after cold water expanded in a bottle dropped into a pot of hot water.

Pouring Air

Materials: Large glass jar; two plastic sandwich bags; yardstick; string; tape; a tack; freezer.

Procedure: Place the glass jar in the freezer for about one hour. Tape one bag to each end of the yardstick with the open end on top so you can "pour" air into it. Tie one end of the string around the middle of the yardstick. Tack the other end of the string to the ceiling or the doorway and adjust the yardstick so that it is evenly balanced. Take the jar out of the freezer and immediately pour the cold air into one of the bags.

Results: The side with the cold air will tilt to the floor.

Growing Ice

Materials: A small glass jar; clay; food coloring; a clear straw; a marker.

Procedure: Press a marble-size piece of clay into the inside bottom of the jar. Fill the jar with water and put a few drops of food coloring into the water. Wait till the food coloring spreads throughout the water. Slowly lower the straw into the water and press it into the clay so that the straw is standing up. Slowly pour out the water (leaving the water in the straw). Mark the height of the colored water on the straw.

Place the jar in the freezer for several hours. Take the jar out of the freezer and observe the height of the ice.

Results: The water level has risen.

The cold, hard facts: Although, generally, liquids take up more room than solids, water is the important exception to that rule. That's because water freezes into a crystalline pattern. (From "Awesome, Magical, Bizarre & Incredible Experiments" by Janice VanCleave, Wiley, 1994)

Magic Balloon

Materials: Large, good-quality balloon; a piece of dry ice.

Safety note: It is essential to wear gloves when working with dry ice. Do not touch dry ice. Do this activity only under adult supervision. If the balloon is too small or the dry ice is too large, the balloon will burst.

Do not touch dry ice. Do this activity only under adult supervision. If the balloon is too small or the dry ice is too large, the balloon will burst.

Procedure: Place a quarter-sized piece of dry ice inside the balloon.

Results: The balloon slowly expands.

The cold, hard facts: Dry ice is frozen carbon dioxide. When dry ice "melts," it sublimates, which means it goes directly from a solid to a gas, skipping the liquid phase.

Smoke Rings

Materials: Small piece of dry ice; 12-ounce clear plastic cup; piece of cardboard to fit on top of cup; scis-

Safety note: Do not touch the dry ice. Do this activity only under adult supervision.

Procedure: Cut a round hole, about 6 1/2-inch wide, in the center of the cardboard. Fill the cup halfway with water. Add a drop or two of food coloring for effect. Place a marble-size piece of dry ice in the cup. Place the cardboard on the cup. Gently squeeze the cup while holding the cardboard in place.

Results: Misty smoke rings rise up.

The cold, hard facts: The smoke ring effect is due to the fairly high density of the cold, carbon-dioxide-filled mist.

Sweet Treat

Materials: 1 cup milk; 6 1/2 cup sugar; salt; 3 egg yolks; 1 teaspoon vanilla; 2 cups heavy whipping cream; 4 small zip-top sandwich bags; 4 large zip-top plastic storage bags; ice.

Procedure: Boil the milk with the sugar and a pinch of salt. Add the egg yolks while stirring and continue to stir. Let the mixture cool, and stir in vanilla and whipping cream. Divide the mixture into the four small sandwich bags. Seal bags securely. Place the small plastic bags inside the large zip-top plastic storage bags. Add ice cubes, a small amount of water and a good amount of salt to the large bags. Seal the large bags. Shake the bags and toss them around for about 15 minutes.

Results: Individual servings of ice cream

The cold, hard facts: It takes energy to separate the sodium and the chloride atoms of the salt molecules, which lowers the freezing point of the mixture. The ice cream solidifies faster than it would in your freezer because of this. Tossing the bags around mixes air into the ice cream.

How Parents Can Support and Nurture Their Out-of-the-ordinary Child

BY HEIDI STEVENS
Chicago Tribune

Karen Holloman was raising three boys, and her youngest, Rob, was proving to be different.

"He spent a lot of time in the headmaster's office," she recalls. "In nursery school, his teachers stopped me one day and said, 'We have a new rule. When Rob comes into the classroom, he has to be Rob. He can't be anyone else.'"

He was called disruptive and difficult and lots of other words for "doesn't fit in" until, finally, in second grade, his teacher suggested having his IQ tested. He scored 164. (A score of 131 to 145 is generally considered highly gifted.)

"His teacher said, 'Do you know what you have?'" says Holloman, who lives in New York. "This child is extraordinary."

Parents of such "extraordinary" children know the gifted label can mean a number of things, but it rarely means life will be easy for their child. Even school, which would seem like a natural place for a gifted child to excel, can be fraught with challenges.

"Often these kids are struggling in school because they're not interested in learning about things they already know or the repetition and rote memorization required of so many other kids in their class," says Liz Perelstein, founder and president of School Choice International, a consulting service that helps families find the right school for their gifted children.

Parents can ease the way, experts say, but it requires some unconventional thinking.

Teachers often respond to a child's boredom or speedy completion of assignments with more work sheets, more chapters, more of what didn't hold the child's interest the first time around, Perelstein says. Parents should resist falling into the same trap.

"What these kids don't need is more work," she says. "What they do need is parents who recognize and respect what they're interested in and encourage those interests."

For Holloman's son, now 17, it has always been chess. She hired a chess tutor when he was still in elementary school and scoured the landscape for places where Rob could play.

"When he was in fifth or sixth grade, he asked to volunteer at this really nice retirement center, and they put him with this 90-year-old man who would play chess with him," she recalls. "He just loved that time. I was always having to explain to people, 'No, he doesn't want it for community service. He just wants to do it.'"

Perelstein counseled one family whose son was fascinated by train routes.

"There are all kinds of things the parents could do to foster that kind of interest," she says. "Taking him on rail trips to different parts of the country so he can learn geography, helping him learn the physics of trains, reading the history of trains, encouraging him to write about trains, learning about bullet trains in other countries and the politics and culture surrounding trains and how in Europe they can go across borders.

"Suddenly you're learning reading, writing, history, geography, science, politics and culture, all through his area of interest," she says. "You push their knowledge to its limits because you're encouraging them to do what's interesting to them."

You're also taking responsibility for your child's learning, rather than expecting the school to accommodate his unique needs.

"The worst thing parents can do is to go into the school and say, 'My child is gifted, and she needs to be challenged,'" Perelstein says. "School administrators hear that all the time — mostly among kids who aren't actually gifted — and it just sets you up for an adversarial relationship!"

Which isn't to say you should count the school out.

"Talk to your child's teachers, and ask specific questions," Perelstein suggests. "What if my kid has a strong passion about something you're not studying? Are you open to moving a child up in just math or just science if they excel in those areas? Do you ever take into account the specific needs of a child when you structure the schedule of the day?"

Eating Healthy as a Couple

BY ALISON JOHNSON
Daily Press (Newport News, Va.)

Women are more likely to gain weight after marriage, according to a recent study from Ohio State University. One solution: understand your nutritional needs. "Don't think you and your significant other can eat the same amount of food," says Jessica Levinson, a registered dietitian in New York City.

Don't match him bite for bite ... Men often are taller and more muscular than women and can eat more without gaining weight. While women generally need 1,600 to 2,200 calories a day — the higher number is for younger, more active women — the range for men is 2,200 to 2,800.

... or sip for sip. Women have lower amounts of an enzyme that breaks down alcohol and less body water to dilute it. Stick to one drink a day.

Don't gobble food. Men tend to eat faster than women. Put down utensils between bites, chew food thoroughly and use smaller forks and spoons (a teaspoon for cereal, say, rather than a soup spoon).

Know your needs. Talk to a registered dietitian or find an online calculator for calorie recommendations based on gender, age, size and exercise habits. Consider a multivitamin that offers sex-specific formulas; women often need more of certain substances (iron) and less of others (protein).

Eat well when you're alone. Fill up on fruits, vegetables, lean protein and whole grains.

Don't "let yourself go." Share diet and fitness goals with your significant other, ask for support and identify behaviors that interfere with them. Also find an exercise you can enjoy as a couple.

Be a creative cook. Tweak favorite "manly" foods: bake chicken with bread crumbs rather than frying it, for example, grill with olive oil instead of butter and use low-fat cheeses in sandwiches and recipes.

Find Something Nice at CSI Welding Auction

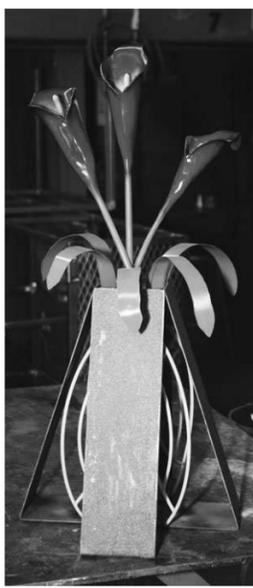

College of Southern Idaho welding students are finishing the items they will sell in their 11th semi-annual auction, planned for 1 p.m. Saturday in Room 150 of the Desert building.

Welding students have created more items for the auction this year than ever before. Items for sale will include tables, fire pits, free-standing art, shelves, and coat racks. Also available: smaller items such as trailer hitch plugs, wine racks, pots and pans, and decorative wall-hangings.

You're welcome to browse the merchandise ahead of the auction, starting at 10 a.m. Saturday. Free refreshments will be served throughout the day. All proceeds go to the CSI Welding Club for expenses and future projects.

The items shown here are among those set to be part of Saturday's College of Southern Idaho Welding Club auction, with proceeds to support the club's further projects.

Teen Seeks Volunteers to Continue Cancer Benefit

Sabrina Underwood, 17, knows what dealing with cancer as a child is like.

Diagnosed with acute lymphoblastic leukemia at age 2, the experience helped determine her goal in life — to make a difference for children with the same disease.

As part of that effort, Underwood recently partnered with the American Cancer Society, the Snake River Bros. motorcycle club, Dr. David McClusky and a host of local businesses to put on an event at Nazzkart in Twin Falls for any child who has been diagnosed with cancer. The motorcycle club raised $1,000 through a charity run for gifts for the children, and the event was well-attended, Underwood said.

She now hopes to make the party an annual event, and is seeking a student looking for a senior project next year who would be willing to take it on. She will help as a mentor, she said.

"When you put a smile on a child's face you have changed their world, even if it's only for a moment," Underwood wrote.

To volunteer, contact the American Cancer Society, 422-0174, or Underwood, 490-0862.

Operation Christmas Child Returns to Valley

Once again, local collection sites will open for donations for Operation Christmas Child, an effort that has hand-delivered 86 million gifts to kids worldwide since 1993.

This week is the charity's National Collection Week. Organizers seek donations of shoe boxes filled with school supplies, toys, necessity items and a letter of encouragement. You can find step-by-step packing instructions and other details online at www.samaritanspurse.org/occ.

Drop off your finished gifts at the following locations (be sure to call ahead for hours):

- Furniture and Appliance Outlet, 127 Second Ave. W., Twin Falls; 736-2622.
- First Christian Praise Chapel, 1110 8th St., Rupert; 436-0449.
- Calvary Chapel of Buhl, 1004 Burley Ave., Buhl; 543-9959.
- Living Waters, 821 E. Main St., Wendell; 536-6270.

Hospice Memorial is Tuesday

Intermountain Homecare and Cassia Regional Medical Center will present Lights for Life, a hospice memorial, at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the foyer of Cassia Regional Medical Center.

The event is intended to all who have lost a loved one — not just hospice patients — to honor and remember those departed.

An ornament for every hospice patient who has died since November 2009 will be displayed in the south hallway of the hospital unless requested otherwise. Additional ornaments will be available on the evening of the memorial.

Clay Handy will provide a message of hope, and The Taffetas and Alan Hale will provide music. Refreshments will be served after the event.

Turns and the Drivers Who Make Them

Can drivers legally make a left-hand turn by stopping in the middle of the intersection, then turning after it goes from green to red while still in the intersection? I've seen many drivers, including police, do this.

— David

This is one of those "colors of the law" versus the actual law. The actual law is that no vehicle should enter an intersection until a turn can be safely and legally made. This means that a vehicle turning left should wait at the intersection and not in the intersection before turning.

Now, the color of the law is that drivers have been making turns while waiting in the intersections for years and probably will continue to, including the police. The only time fault would come into play would be when there is a crash.

This is far-fetched, but I do remember this question coming up in driver's ed and I can't ever remember the answer. Four vehicles arrive at a four-way stop at the exact same time. Who has the right of way?

— Jamie

At first I thought this was an easy answer. "Right of way" — the driver on the right of the other driver would have the right of way. The problem was when I really thought about this, I realized that there would be four vehicles on the right of each other.

The hard part is that if four vehicles actually did meet at the same exact time, then the drivers must decide who goes first and must also avoid any kind of collision. The easy part here is that if all four were turning right then no problems. The nice thing about this scenario is that once a vehicle established who went first, all the other vehicles behind them would just follow the order created.

I should add that at an uncontrolled intersection, the rules would still apply as they do with a controlled intersection.

CLEANING CORNER

Question: You are absolutely amazing! I clean carpets for a living and one of my good clients is a local retirement home. As is to be expected, I'm always dealing with urine related accidents. I can always clean up the mess, but I couldn't always get rid of the lingering odor. Lori you recommend a product called X-O for me to use. The results were AMAZING! The urine smell went completely away! Can I use this product for other applications besides carpet cleaning?

Answer: Yes! X-O is an odor neutralizer that doesn't just cover up odors, it eliminates them completely. This natural and organic formula is also safe to use in the kitchen or bathroom, as well as on drapes, upholstery, in the car or RV. It eliminates ALL odors instantly! Permanently!

Alltech Brings 'Kidzone' to Jerome

While Southern Idaho is known for its abundant supply of dairy cows and agriculture, not all children understand where their food and milk originate.

Alltech, a global animal health and nutrition company, plans to change that for North Side Center Head Start students during Friday's Alltech Kidzone Day.

The event, to be held at 223 First Ave. E. in Jerome, is a first for the company. Kidzone is an educational program that teaches students between the ages of 4 and 17 about food, farming and the importance of healthy eating.

At 10:15 a.m. and 2:45 p.m., students will have a chance to interact with farm animals in a mini-petting zoo. Members of the Twin Falls Foothills Lads and Lasses 4-H Club will provide rabbits for the occasion, and students will also be able to interact with calves and chickens. The petting zoo will be followed by a farming lesson and will end with a "food experience" so the students can taste the fruits of the farm.

Lovers don't finally meet somewhere. They're in each other all along. ~~ Rumi

On October 21, 2011, Heike Weis and Scott Hyder were married in Maennedorf, Switzerland, in the Kanton of Zuerich.

Fulfilling the promise of a romance which first blossomed in Montreal, Canada in Autumn 2010, the wedding marks but the official beginning of a togetherness that, alas, continues to span the Atlantic. With love and surrender, and by the grace of God, the distance of time and space between the couple will diminish, even as their love and commitment grow and mature through the challenges and joys life presents them.

The bride is the beloved and devoted daughter of Rosmarie (Clement) Weis & Karl Heinz Weis, originally of Hanau, Germany, now of Zollikerberg, Switzerland. The groom (also beloved and devoted) is the son of Betty Lucille (Scott) Hyder and Jack William Hyder, of Jerome, Idaho.

Jack Hyder offered a beautiful rendition of "Hymn of Promise" at the civil ceremony (photos), and Scott Hyder sang "Walk Hand in Hand with Me" at a 17th century chapel thereafter, outside Rapperswill on Lake Zuerich.

The Heuers

Robert (Bob) and Loretta (Peterson) Heuer

Robert (Bob) Heuer and Loretta Peterson were married November 18, 1961.

Their children will be holding an 50th Anniversary celebration on Nov. 19, 2011 at the Jerome Bible Baptist Church 132 2nd Ave. E. in Jerome, ID. From 6-8 p.m. All family & friends are invited to celebrate with us and have some cake too.

Unitarian

The church accepts people from all religious and political backgrounds, ethnicity and sexual orientation. Marsh is a lesbian, she said, having married her companion in California. The union isn't recognized in Idaho, though.

"Here we're just two people living together, like we did for several years before we got married," said Marsh, who has been with her partner for 32 years.

In the Congregation

Twin Falls resident Ken Whiting, president of the Twin Falls church's board of directors and one of about 30 people who attend Sunday services, said he doesn't have a problem with Marsh's background or her beliefs. The church is all about individualism.

Whiting became acquainted with the church through his wife, Kyi Kyi, a Buddhist from Burma. He likes its non-dogmatic approach and that it teaches that all people are important.

"It gives me the freedom to believe the way I feel best," he said. "I can follow my own path."

Whiting's view of the afterlife: "There's many, many ways to get to Chicago, but no one way is the only right way."

Don Morishita and his wife, Betsy, of Twin Falls started attending the Unitarian church in 1996. Don, who served for a time as president of its board, said the church fits well with his lifestyle.

"I find it more comforting," he said. "I don't believe there's a god for Christians, a god for Muslims, a god for Jews. God is over all of us. ... One of the things I have liked about Unitarian Universalist religion is that there is a very strong belief to respect all other beliefs."

Morishita said he doesn't know if Unitarians are more politically involved than other people, but one of their tenets is to be socially active. "That might become political," he said, noting that the church also works with other community members such as helping out in the soup kitchen at St. Edwards Catholic Church.

Marsh is a good fit for the local congregation, he said. "It's really nice having a half-time minister. This is something we've worked hard to get, and we're hoping we get to keep her for a long time to come."

Famous Unitarians

- Unitarianism has been around since the late 1700s. The Unitarian Universalist church counts these people among its ranks:
- Charles Darwin, English naturalist.
- Isaac Newton, English physicist, mathematician and astronomer.
- Thomas Paine, American revolutionary.
- Thomas Jefferson, principal author of the U.S. Declaration of Independence.
- Benjamin Franklin, a signer of the Declaration of Independence.
- John Adams, second U.S. president.
- Alexander Graham Bell, telephone inventor.
- Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, "Frankenstein" novelist.
- Ralph Waldo Emerson, American essayist, lecturer and poet.
- Rod Serling, creator of the 1950s "The Twilight Zone" television series.
- Beatrix Potter, children's author.
- Christopher Reeve, American actor of the 1970s-'80 Superman movies.

Surprise Finding on Puberty in Girls; Study Says Chemical in Food May Delay Growth

BY LINDY WASHBURN
The Record (Hackensack N.J.)

Researchers studying the environmental causes of early puberty detected hormone-disrupting chemicals in four out of five healthy New Jersey girls, but evidence shows the substances don't necessarily promote early development.

The Jersey Girl Study at the Cancer Institute of New Jersey is among the first to look at the effects on healthy girls of Zearanol, a synthetic chemical used to boost meat production, and its natural form, zearalenone, a fungus found in contaminated grains. These fungi mimic estrogen in the body.

The results suggest that they may delay height growth and breast development in girls — contrary to what researchers expected to find, said Dr. Elisa Bandera, an epidemiologist and the study's lead researcher.

"The message right now is we need to do more research," Bandera said. The study was based on an analysis of urine samples from 163 girls, aged 9 and 10.

"Surprisingly, little is known about the health effects of these mycoestrogens, including their impact on puberty in girls," the study said. "Myco" means fungus.

The study is one of many across the country to examine environmental factors related to early puberty, which increases the risk of breast cancer later in life. Girls who have their first period before age 11 are at triple the risk for breast cancer, compared to those who have it after.

The reason is estrogen — the greater the lifelong exposure to estrogen, the greater the risk of breast cancer. The years between a girl's first period and her first pregnancy appear to be a time of particular vulnerability to mutation or environmental damage.

"Several groups are looking at the impact of pubertal timing from early environmental exposures," said Dr. Frank Biro, who heads one center of the federally funded "breast cancer and the environment research program," at the Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center.

His 2010 study of 1,200 girls, found the onset of puberty has dropped among American girls, with many as young as 7 and 8 showing signs of breast development. That is linked to increasing weight at a young age, as well as chemicals in the environment.

Young girls' exposure to three classes of chemicals — phenols, phthalates, and phytoestrogens — can disrupt the timing of puberty and set them up for later health problems, researchers at the Mount Sinai School of Medicine found. These chemicals are found in plasticizers, used in bottles, can coatings and time-released medications; in nail polishes, to increase durability; and in perfumes, lotions and shampoos, to carry fragrance.

his 40-acre farm. "They want everything right now."

More sheep were herded into the arena, their bleats heard above the din of chatter and the auctioneer's fast talk. Etchart, who buys and sells at the auctions, abruptly turned away from the conversation.

"I need to listen to this," he said.

The Wednesday Scene

Even for folks with serious business to do, the auctions are a social outing.

"I like to come and listen to the chatter," said white-bearded Buhl resident Gary Harms.

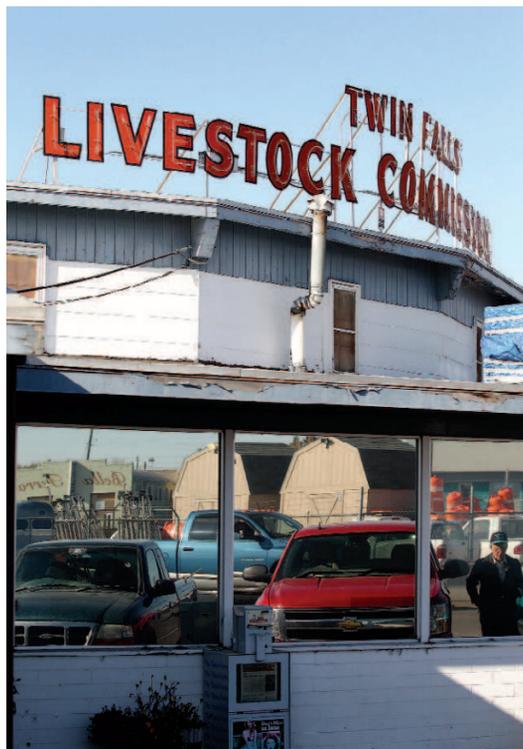

When he left the cattle auction Nov. 2, he walked away with a check for more than $1,200. Harms had sold two bull calves — two of the 2,600 animals up for auction that day.

Willie Manning comes from northern Nevada a couple of times a year to sell his livestock, but it's also a way for him to get reacquainted with old friends or turn the trip into a date with his wife. The couple often eats supper at the stockyard diner, sometimes with friends.

"Sixty-eight, 69, 9-9-9, 70, 71," auctioneer Stenson Clontz droned while cattle were herded into the small arena. The animals weren't there long before they were moved outside the ring into another corral, making room for the next group.

And so the time passed. Now and then a lone rancher or one with his family left the room to collect his check. Then he'd stand in the hallway or outside to chat with his peers, move on to the diner or simply walk to his pickup, kicking up dust with his boots.

Idahoans Awarded Congress' Highest Civilian Award

BY KATHLEEN KRELLER
Idaho Statesman

BOISE • In the fall of October 1944, a young but determined Pvt. Harry Kawahara fought his way through heavy woods, freezing temperatures and fog in the wilderness of France.

For a 19-year-old boy raised in the tiny, rural railroad towns of Idaho and Oregon, the bloody realities of World War II were something he would bear silently.

Likewise, Kawahara would bear the painful and nearly deadly bullet wound to his elbow, inflicted by a German sniper.

Kawahara was at a field hospital recovering from blood loss a few days later, when he heard the group he'd been fighting with, the famed 442nd Regimental Combat Team, had broken the German lines to rescue the "Lost Battalion," which had been cut off by opposing forces. The casualties were enormous.

When he returned home to Idaho, the decorated U.S. soldier was stoic as he faced prejudice from locals who feared and hated the Japanese — including those who were U.S. citizens.

Kawahara's own sister had been confined in a Japanese internment camp near Minidoka while he fought for the United States. Teri, the woman Kawahara would later marry, was sent to the camp at age 13.

After the war, Kawahara married, worked as a farmer and eventually headed up a produce operation in Nampa. He and Teri raised seven children.

He would occasionally discuss with friends and family his experiences as a member of the "Go For Broke" 442nd RCT, composed of Nisei — American-born sons of Japanese immigrants. They fought the Germans in Europe and prejudice back home.

What made him want to serve a country that treated his family that way?

"I think that was the whole thing," Kawahara said. "We had something to prove."

Kawahara, his wife and other family members traveled last week to Washington, D.C., where the 442nd was awarded the Congressional Gold Medal, the highest civilian honor in the United States.

According to www.goforbroke.org, the 442nd was the most decorated unit of its size and length of service in the history of the U.S. military. The first 4,000 soldiers in the unit had to be replaced more than three times. About 14,000 men served in the 442nd, receiving 9,486 Purple Hearts, 21 Medals of Honor and eight Presidential Unit Citations.

George Shigeta, 89, is a veteran of the 442nd's heavy weapons company. He grew up in Payette and now lives in Nampa.

Terry Kuroda, a retired teacher from Nampa, and his sister accepted the medal behalf of their father, Kozo Kuroda, a master sergeant with the 442nd's 522nd Field Artillery Battalion, who died in 2002 at age 87.

Kozo Kuroda was a farmer who grew up in Fife, Wash. His mother and wife were in different internment camps while he fought in the war, Terry Kuroda said.

Kuroda came home from the war with a Bronze Star and forged ahead with life in Nampa despite open racism, his son said.

Terry would have liked to have seen his father at the ceremony.

"He was fighting for our country over in Europe, and he came home, and he was treated that poorly, even as a soldier," Kuroda said.

"Those things are hard for me to understand because I wasn't around in that time!"

Like Kuroda, Kawahara grew up in small towns like Crane, Ore., Sage Valley, Ore., No-

tus and Parma as his father moved with the Union Pacific Railroad.

Kawahara's mother died when he was 12. So his father sent all six children to Japan for his family to look after.

Four years later, in 1940, Harry Kawahara came back to the States to avoid being conscripted into the Japanese army. He lived and worked with a Japanese-American family on their farm in Parma. They became his family, he said.

After earning the equivalent of a high school diploma, Kawahara went to Portland to get an engineering degree. But he got a job and earned some money.

"I started having fun, and that was the end of that," he said with a chuckle.

Kawahara enlisted in the Army on Dec. 8, 1941, the day after Pearl Harbor was attacked by Japan. But he was only 17, so the military told him to wait. He headed back to Parma.

"They would have sent me to a camp if I'd stayed in Portland," Kawahara said.

The Army called him up in May 1943. He and a Marsing kid of Japanese heritage headed to Camp Shelby, Miss., to join up and train with the 442nd.

At first, the Japanese-Americans from Hawaii who founded the 442nd had conflicts with their counterparts from the mainland, Kawahara said. That changed after the Hawaiians saw the conditions at an internment camp in Arkansas, amazed that the Nisei had joined up despite such treatment.

"After they got back from camp," he said, "everything changed."

Kawahara left the 442nd to try being a paratrooper.

Paratroopers had to weigh at least 140 pounds; Kawahara was 135 (the same weight he's been his whole life). So Kawahara volunteered for the Army's Office of Strategic Services and headed to Chicago for training. But he couldn't hear the tones well enough to decipher Morse code, so he asked to return to the 442nd.

They made him take basic training a second time.

In August 1944, Kawahara landed in Naples, Italy, and headed to Marseille, France.

We Help Hearts Get Back In Rhythm

25 percent of adults over 40 will develop an irregular heartbeat condition, or atrial fibrillation (A-Fib), in their lifetime.

Our experienced team will get you back in sync.

Atrial fibrillation, or A-Fib, is an irregular, fast heart rhythm caused by abnormal and chaotic electrical signals in the top part—or atria—of the heart. This progressive condition can lead to stroke, heart failure, and reduced quality of life.

Comprehensive A-Fib care plan for you.

Symptoms of A-Fib

Some people with A-Fib have no symptoms; those who do have symptoms may experience:

- Irregular, fast heartbeat or palpitations
- Extreme fatigue
- Dizziness
- Shortness of breath
- Decreased blood pressure
- Confusion
- Chest pain

Talk to your primary care provider about A-Fib symptoms.

Magazine's Original MAD Men Get a Rare Reunion

BY RUSS BYNUM
Associated Press

SAVANNAH, Ga. • Think of them as the senior class of the "usual gang of idiots." Or the original MAD men perhaps.

There's Al Jaffee, who at 90 still draws the optical illusion fold-in gags for MAD magazine's back page. And Sergio Aragonés, still whipping out eye-straining and gut-busting miniature cartoons in the magazine's margins after 48 years. And Jack Davis, who was there at the beginning, drawing the horror spoof "Hooah!" that appeared in MAD's debut issue in 1952.

They're among the cartoonists who put MAD on the map in the 1950s. Over the next six decades, they blended celebrity caricature, pop-culture parody and political satire in a way that would influence American comedy from Saturday Night Live to The Onion and more. And some of them are still churning out gags for MAD, in defiance of the ever-expanding generation gap with the magazine's young audience.

"I have kids come to me at conventions saying, 'My grandfather grew up with your work,'" said Aragonés, 74, whose recent features include "A MAD Look at Lady Gaga." "Older people think the older MADs were funnier. But not really. You grew up. Your sense of humor has changed."

Aragonés, Jaffee and Davis were among eight veteran MAD contributors who gathered Saturday for a rare reunion on the Georgia coast. With their homes and studios spread across the U.S., the artists who put their work side by side in hundreds of MAD issues don't often meet face to face.

This weekend, the cartoonists are being honored and humored by their hosts, the Savannah College of Art and Design and the National Cartoonists Society. Their art is hanging in a gallery, while their schedule includes workshops with the college's art students and a panel discussion on MAD's history and their work.

John Lowe, the Savannah art college's dean of communication arts, said the MAD reunion represents "roughly 400 years' worth of comic book experience collected in one place."

"MAD, to me, was really the first print publication to satirize popular culture and American political culture," said Lowe, 44. "It is still very edgy. I can see parents wanting to keep it out of the hands of their children. And children wanting to get it in their hands."

Launched in 1952 by comics publisher William M. Gaines and editor-writer Harvey Kurtzman, MAD evolved from stories spoofing its owners' stable of horror comics to a broader range of send-ups lampooning American culture, celebrities and politics. By 1956 the magazine had a gap-toothed mascot, Alfred E. Newman, who soon became a cartoon icon.

The artists worked on a freelance basis, but Gaines rewarded their loyalty with annual group trips overseas for decades, beginning with a trip to Haiti in 1960. Davis recalled being cajoled by Aragonés into fighting a bull — a very young one without horns, he admits — in Spain. Jaffee still laughs at how a MAD writer, during a tour of the Sistine Chapel in Vatican City, shattered the hushed reverence by remarking aloud that Michelangelo's painted ceiling was so priceless that God couldn't afford the rent.
