High school seniors work through the college application process.

BY JULIE WOOTTON

TWIN FALLS • Twin Falls High School senior Alexa Johnson has her sights set on an East Coast college experience.

This fall, she applied to eight out-of-state schools — seven of which are on the other side of the country. She's already been accepted to Loyola University Maryland after applying early.

But now it's a waiting game to hear back from other schools.

"It's been a process filling everything out," she said about college applications.

For students at dozens of south-central Idaho high schools, it's the prime season for turning in college applications and applying for financial aid.

At Twin Falls High School, Principal Ben Allen said the majority of the seniors go to the College of Southern Idaho.

That's also been the trend for years among seniors at Jerome High School.

"They don't seem to like to leave the area," Counselor Kathy Muscat said. She estimates that about 20 students, though, applied to four-year colleges this year.

While many students choose to stay close to home, some are opting to apply for colleges outside the Gem State.

Applying for Scholarships

High school seniors may breathe a sigh of relief once they finish their college applications. But now is the prime time to apply for financial aid.

"At this time of year, the focus is strongly on financial aid," Jerome High School Counselor Kathy Muscat said.

High school counselors encourage families to start filling out the Free Application for Federal Student Aid online. It's what colleges use to award scholarships and loans.

Twin Falls High School Counselor Sharee Hamilton said the school provides monthly newsletters to students with scholarship opportunities. Announcements are also posted on the counseling office's Facebook page.

"The students who get the scholarships are the ones who actually apply," she said.

Twin Falls High Principal Ben Allen says there a lot of scholarships that aren't awarded due to a lack of applicants.

Even if a scholarship award is smaller — such as $400 — he says it's still worth taking the time to apply.

New England Journal: 200 Years of Medical History

MARILYNN MARCHIONE

Associated Press

Unhappy with today's health care? Think of what it was like to be sick 200 years ago.

No stethoscopes, antibiotics, X-rays or vaccines. Bloodletting was a common treatment. If you had a heart attack or a stroke, doctors put you in bed and hoped for the best. If you needed surgery, you got a few shots of whiskey and a bullet to bite.

Into this medical dark age, two Boston doctors brought a beacon of light. They started what is now the New England Journal of Medicine with the idea that science should guide care — not whoever argued loudest or had the most persuasive theory.

The first 100 copies in January 1812 were delivered by horseback. Today, 2 million people read the journal online every month. It is the oldest continuously publishing medical journal in the world, and it has touched lives in more ways than you may know. Some examples:

— Stroke victims now get clot-busting medicine, not dark rooms to ride out their brain trauma, because a 1995 study in the journal proved its benefit.

— Heart attack patients have arteries unclogged without surgery, then go home on medicines that studies in the journal showed could prevent future attacks.

— Women with early stage breast cancer can have just the lump removed followed by radiation instead of losing the whole breast, thanks to a 1985 study that found the lesser surgery just as good.

— Bone marrow and organ transplants — radical ideas when first tried half a century ago — are now routine. Even face transplants are becoming more common: three were described in last week's issue.

— Rehydration is now recognized as the main treatment for many diarrheal diseases. A journal article warned against bloodletting in 1832 as cholera ravaged New York City.

T.F. Council Makes Temporary Move Back to 6 p.m. Start

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Tonight's meeting of the Twin Falls City Council is a bare-bones one, as only a minor issue of scheduling will go before the governing body for a vote.

As pointed out by Councilman Chris Talkington last week, the council's weekly 5 p.m. meeting time contradicts the language of city code. The council is expected to amend the code to allow for the favored start time.

However, tonight's meeting will begin at 6 p.m., which is the "official" time for now, at Council Chambers, 305 Third Ave. E.

In other business, a public hearing will center around amending the city code regarding guidelines for the Twin Falls Historic Warehouse District, which would establish architectural standards for structures within the district.

The district encompasses structures southwest of Second Avenue West to the train tracks, within a few blocks of Shoshone Street.

The Historic Preservation Commission in 2011 acquired a $12,000 grant to pay for a Colorado consultant to help draft guidelines for allowable changes to building exteriors.

Although a Salt Lake City consultant aided the city in developing guidelines in 1997, the council then never approved them official.

The HPC wants the city to do so this time around, giving the commission an official guiding document for its design review process of new construction and building alterations within the district.

Twin Falls High School senior Rachel Webster talks about applying to colleges on Friday at the school.

College

Allen says one reason is that students are finding it's affordable to go to out-of-state private colleges since they're receiving more scholarships.

At Kimberly High School, that seems to be the case. Counselor Debbie Klug says many seniors are applying to small, liberal arts colleges.

"It seems like it's a little bit unique to this class," she said.

Klug said although many students have turned in applications, there are some procrastinators.

Students have different strategies for how to tackle college applications. But there is an advantage to turning in applications early — hearing back sooner.

Twin Falls High senior Alex Wirtz has already been accepted to the three schools where he applied. He decided on the College of Idaho, a private school in Caldwell, and plans to study physics.

Classmate Averey Strong started working on college applications this summer. He applied to four schools — three in Idaho, plus Yale University.

Strong — who plans to major in biology — applied online using the Common Application. It allows students to fill out one application and submit it to multiple schools.

So far, Strong has been accepted at the three in-state schools he applied to, but won't hear back from Yale until the spring.

Rachel Webster, also a senior at Twin Falls High, emphasized the importance of planning ahead when completing college applications. Webster applied to several in-state schools, as well as a few in California near relatives.

"Get started early," she said, adding that it's a stressful process.

Senior Dylan Dobbs — who hopes to pursue a career in law turned in college applications over winter break.

"I felt like the process was fairly simple," he said.

Another Twin Falls High senior, Angelica Price, says she wants to study civil engineering, but was a little indecisive at first about where to apply.

However, "it's not as scary of a process as people think it is," she said.

MASKED SUSPECT ROBS APPLEBEE'S EMPLOYEE

TIMES-NEWS

TWIN FALLS • Twin Falls police say a masked individual held up a night manager of the Applebee's restaurant on Blue Lakes Boulevard around 3 a.m. on Sunday morning.

The night manager was carrying an undisclosed amount of money for a deposit, when the suspect approached the employee with a gun. Police are working on a description of a suspect.

So far, only one individual was seen by the alleged victim.

The suspect was last seen heading north on Blue Lakes Boulevard on foot. Police may release more details as they become available.

N. IDAHO MEETINGS PLANNED TO DISCUSS FOREST PLAN

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) • The U.S. Forest Service plans to hold a series of public meetings in northern Idaho to discuss a draft management plan that will guide decisions for the Panhandle National Forests for the next 10 to 15 years.

Forest Supervisor Mary Farnsworth tells The Spokesman-Review that the plan includes a mix of recreational opportunities and timber sales along with forest restoration and healthy watersheds.

Farnsworth said the forest faces challenges because 40 percent of the 2.5-million-acre forest is within wildland-urban interface areas. That means private residences, municipal watersheds, power lines and other infrastructure that's adjacent to the forest boundary.

The area has added 100,000 residents since 1987, with many choosing to live along scenic corridors and lakes next to the forest.

"You look at real estate ads these days. They say, 'Adjacent to national forest lands.' That's a selling point for people," said Farnsworth.

For forest officials, the increasing human population has ramifications when it comes to fighting wildfires, managing insect outbreaks and planning for recreational use.

"It's the community's backyard," said Linda Clark, a Forest Service planner. "People love their national forest. Everyone has their desire of what the national forest should do for them."

Forest officials also say the expanding human population affects migrating wildlife, and part of the plan includes goals for keeping people and grizzly bears apart by closing or reducing motorized use in core grizzly areas.

Female Pedestrian Killed Near Star

IDAHO STATESMAN

BOISE • Ada County deputies don't know the identity of the woman hit and killed by a vehicle late Saturday night on Chinden Boulevard east of Star.

Minutes before midnight, a driver called in a report that she had hit a woman who had stepped out onto the road directly in front of her vehicle, according to a release from the Ada County Sheriff's Office.

The driver, a 24-year-old woman driving a Subaru, said the woman walked out into the road and was waving her arms. The driver did not see the woman until the just before the moment of impact and could not avoid hitting her, officials said.

According to the release, the driver immediately stopped, called emergency dispatch and began looking for the pedestrian. The woman was located a few feet off the road and was unresponsive. Emergency crews arriving on scene said the woman was deceased.

No charges or citations are expected to be filed against the 24-year-old driver. Officials said there is no indication of wrongdoing on her part.

The pedestrian was in her 20s with reddish brown shoulder-length hair, about 5-feet tall and 115 pounds. She was wearing blue jeans, a brown shirt and a knee-length black leather jacket. She has a small black tattoo with vines or curved lines on her right shoulder blade. The woman was not carrying a purse and did not have any identification.

Otter Spends Less Time in Office Since Re-election

BY DAN POPKEY
Idaho Statesman

BOISE • Since his landslide re-election, Gov. Butch Otter is spending significantly less time in the office.

Otter, 69, typically doesn't show up at the office Mondays, instead scheduling "general office time" with no appointments. He works from home, according to a former chief of staff.

Comparing 12-month periods from Otter's third year in office with his fifth year, an Idaho Statesman analysis shows: 27 percent fewer appointments, both official and unofficial; 29 percent fewer hours scheduled for those appointments; 33 percent less time spent traveling for official and unofficial purposes, both in Idaho and elsewhere; and 28 percent increase in personal and vacation days, with 41 days off during the business week over the year.

The analysis is based on three years of scheduling records, from Nov. 1, 2008, to Oct. 31, 2011, obtained under Idaho's public records law.

The Statesman provided the governor with its analysis of his records, but he declined repeated requests for comment, beginning in mid-November. Otter's spokesman, Jon Hanian, also would not comment on Otter's workload but did not dispute the findings.

On Dec. 14, Otter surprised a crowd in Coeur d'Alene with an exceptionally early announcement: He'll run again in 2014. "It surprised me, it surprised a lot of people," said his two-time campaign manager, Debbie Field.

Otter made the statement at a campaign fundraiser. In the last finance reporting period, Otter's campaign owed him $206,000 for loans he made to support his 2010 re-election.

Field scoffed at speculation that Otter would be re-elected a third time and then resign to hand the job to a man he appointed, Lt. Gov. Brad Little. "You do not as a candidate work this hard and then turn it over to someone else," Field said, adding that Otter's vow to run was loudly applauded. "I will tell you he feels really great."

Little said he and Otter have never discussed Otter resigning. "No. None. Zero. Not even close."

Public awareness of Otter's schedule has risen in recent weeks, with news that he sent Little on a trade mission to Brazil and Mexico last month and vacationed at the National Finals Rodeo in Las Vegas instead.

Otter also spent a week in Hawaii and a week in Florida in November, but those trips wouldn't count as vacation under the Statesman analysis — Otter was speaking to the California Independent Voter Project in Hawaii and attending the Republican Governors Association annual meeting in Florida.

Since re-election, Otter has had a particularly light schedule on Mondays. In the 52 weeks following his re-election, he had a full schedule on six Mondays. On 30 of those Mondays, he had no appointments.

"General office time" did not appear on Otter's schedule at all in the 2008-09 records (a new scheduler began working for Otter in November 2009). The absence of the "GOT" designation appears to account for a higher number of "personal" hours logged during the business day in 2008-09. Otter scheduled 353 personal hours in 2008-09, 118 personal hours in 2009-10 and 291 personal hours in 2010-11. Meanwhile, general office time rose from zero in 2008-09 to 221 hours in 2009-10 and 358 hours in 2010-11.

Otter may not be commenting, but two confidants offered insight into how the office operates and praised Otter's work ethic.

"He works from home," said Jason Kreizenbeck, Otter's chief of staff for almost four years. "There were a lot of times when he wasn't in the office and he didn't have anything officially scheduled, but he was still working. We would send stuff to him and talk to him about things. Whenever there was work to be done, he did the work."

Kreizenbeck, who left in October to join a lobbying firm, reviewed the Statesman analysis and deemed it flawed.

"I don't agree with the basic premise of your story to begin with and still have not heard people saying he's not working very hard," he said. "I don't feel you can measure how hard a governor or any elected official works by measuring their office hours or how much time they dedicate to meetings. It should be measured by outcomes and accomplishments of the administration."

Jeff Malmen, Otter's chief in 2007, said working from home is a way to ease the burden of a 24/7 job. "You're on call all the time," he said. "If we could make his life a little bit easier by shipping things home, we'd do that."

Malmen also was Otter's campaign manager and congressional chief of staff for six years. He is now vice president of public affairs for Idaho Power and said he's seen no evidence Otter is mailing it in.

"There's a whole lot more to the job than sitting there and yakking with people who sit across the desk from you," Malmen said. "There's a lot of stuff that goes on that has nothing to do with appointments."

Little said Otter may be scheduling fewer events since he's been re-elected but remains fully engaged. "There may be something about profile, but not work. I don't see any holes."

Little added that Otter regularly jokes about Little's designs on the top job, including telling a group gathered on the edge of the Snake River Canyon, "Don't let the lieutenant governor push me over."

The governor also has a standard mealtime jibe, Little said. "Every time he eats something and I'm there, he asks for a food tester?"

Little bristles at speculation that Otter's health is failing. "I hear this stuff every six months," Little said. "I hope it's infectious because I'm with him enough I hope I'll catch it."

Watching Otter during his 6-hour-long Capitol-for-a-Day events held across Idaho, Little said he marvels at the governor's mental powers. "He walks in a room and meets 60 strangers," Little said. "Then 25 of 'em get up to leave, and he calls 'em by name and remembers their issues."

Little said Otter asked him to fill in on the December trip to Mexico and Brazil. When announced in February, Otter was to have led the mission, then scheduled for June.

Commerce Director Jeffery Sayer said the decision to reschedule was made in the governor's office. Hanian, Otter's spokesman, declined to say why Otter rescheduled.

House Minority Leader John Rusche, D-Lewiston, said he has no trouble reaching Otter but finds the governor's lighter schedule concerning. "I think it is a little strange. I'm surprised what the data show."

Rusche said Idaho's budgetary and economic challenges are formidable. "I would think that would take more time, rather than less time."

At an October reception for the Idaho Statesman's "Private 75," the largest privately held companies in the state, several business leaders grumbled — off the record — about how Otter wasn't working hard enough to attract new business.

Still, Rusche said Little is a more-than-suitable replacement. Little led a trade trip to Taiwan in June that Rusche joined. "Brad may be a better fit," Rusche said. "He knows a lot of the businesses in Idaho. Brad is stepping up, particularly in economic development, trade and business."

Ron Nilson, CEO of Ground Force in Post Falls, was on the Brazil-Mexico mission and said their hosts showed no sign of feeling slighted. "I'm not sure the countries we go to know the real difference between a lieutenant governor and a governor. They know it's a high-ranking official. Brad did a great job. He's got a great personality."

Added Nilson: "The governor, clearly, is more polished than Brad is, but it's after a number of times that Butch has gone that he has developed an ability to lead this delegation. But Brad did an incredible job. I'd be happy to go back with either one of them."

House Speaker Lawrence Denney, R-Midvale, is critical of Otter being in Hawaii Nov. 15, rather than chairing the meeting of the state Oil and Gas Commission. Little stood in, overseeing the approval of new rules for natural gas exploration, which are subject to review by the 2012 Legislature.

"I wish he was there," Denney said. "This is a big deal for not only my district, but it's a big deal for Idaho."

Instead, Otter and his wife were in Maui on a five-day trip with expenses paid by the California Independent Voter Project. Otter had planned to stay longer but changed his plans to be home for the Nov. 18 execution of Paul Ezra Rhoades.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Tom Luna, one of five oil and gas commissioners, said during the meeting that the nascent industry holds great promise for boosting the economy and revenue for schools. "Wyoming hit the natural resources lottery," Luna said. "We have an opportunity to do the same thing ourselves."

Hanian, Otter's spokesman, said Otter had committed to travel to Hawaii in August and that he has missed only four of 66 meetings of the Land Board, which has the same membership as the commission. "So missing Land Board meetings in this job sometimes happens, but with this governor that occurrence is rare."

Generally, Denney said, he can reach Otter when necessary. "Of course, I have his cell number, so he may not be in the office but I feel like I can get ahold of him any time."

House Appropriations Committee Chairwoman Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, said the scheduling records show Otter does "have a different pattern of activity" in the last year but that it has had no impact on her.

"I did not see anything different," Bell said. "If there is a budget issue, we are called and the subject is visited. Perhaps he is finding as he continues to serve that his hours and days can look different and still accomplish what he feels necessary."

Bell's counterpart, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, has served with five governors. He said he is able to reach Otter whenever he needs him, sometimes by cellphone.

But Cameron said Otter spends less time with lawmakers than his predecessors. "It's been a little more difficult for me working with this administration and having a little bit less access during the session with Gov. Otter. But each governor has the right to run their office the way they want. If they've got the information they need to make a decision from someplace else, then that's their option."

Cameron added that since the 2010 election he's seen no change in his access to Otter, or in the governor's interest. "I really haven't noticed any difference in his level of engagement, his ability to command a discussion about the budget or health insurance exchanges or any of those issues. He's certainly been fully engaged in that regard."

Senate President Pro Tem Brent Hill, R-Rexburg, who has been the Senate's leader for a year, said he finds Otter "very engaged," and has at least weekly meetings with legislative leaders during the session.

"I can find no fault with Gov. Otter's executive leadership in the legislative process," Hill said.

Otter's budget chief, Wayne Hammon, said he's had better access to Otter since the election. In 2010, Otter held no budget meetings ahead of the election and just two before he presented his budget in January 2011. This year, Hammon said he's had six scheduled meetings with Otter in anticipation of Monday's State of the State and Budget Address.

"Compared to last year when he was gone so much for the re-election, it's nice to have him back full steam," Hammon said.

Brian Whitlock is a former chief of staff to Gov. Dirk Kempthorne and now a lobbyist for the Idaho National Laboratory. He said Otter has been "very accommodating to our scheduling requests" and that he's also available at public events, a venue where Hanian often suggests reporters contact Otter.

"I've always been able to corner him at a public event, or he'll sometimes pop in if I'm updating or briefing the staff on something," Whitlock said.

Jim Weatherby, professor emeritus at Boise State and an observer of Idaho politics for 40 years, said he finds the analysis of Otter's schedule unsurprising. "He's never held himself out to be a hands-on, nuts-and-bolts governor. He's been very clear about delegating a lot of his responsibilities to department heads."

Weatherby said he also expects top lawmakers and lobbyists can reach Otter. "The real question here is: As a result of the governor's cutting back his hours, has it meant the denial of access to average citizens who want to communicate with him?"

Rusche, the Democratic leader, agreed. "That's a good question for somebody else. Do people that don't have the access of a minority leader or a potent lobbyist have trouble with the governor being responsive?"

Prison Ordered in Meth Case

BY KEITH KINNAIRD

Bonner County Daily Bee

SANDPOINT • A southwestern Bonner County man is receiving a four-year prison sentence for cooking methamphetamine.

Lewis Mark Blood will have to serve at least two years of the sentence before becoming eligible for release onto probation, according to the terms of the sentence imposed by 1st District Judge Steve Verby.

Blood was also fined $10,000 and ordered, along with two other accomplices, to pay $3,700 to cover cleanup costs for the rudimentary drug labs found in their homes and laboratory analysis of the drug evidence.

Blood, 44, described his arrest as a blessing during his sentencing hearing on Monday.

"I am happy that this happened because I am off drugs," said Blood.

Blood and his former neighbors on Bandy Road — Shauna Lynn Crump and Brandon Neil Crump — were each charged with trafficking meth and felony injury to a child after Bonner County sheriff's deputies executed a search warrant at their respective homes in August.

The child endangerment charges were brought because the toxic drug labs were in places that the Crumps' six children could have easily accessed.

In separate agreements with the prosecution, charges against all three suspects were amended in exchange for admissions of guilt.

Shauna Crump's trafficking charge was downgraded to simple possession and the child endangerment charge was dismissed. The trafficking charges against Brandon Crump and Blood were amended to attempted manufacturing and the endangerment charges were also dismissed.

Shauna Crump, 32, was given a suspended two- to four-year prison sentence and put on probation when she was sentenced last November.

- People no longer suffer surgery without anesthesia, a field that grew from Henry Jacob Bigelow's 1846 report on the first successful use of inhaled ether.

- Medicine is more ethical, and study participants have more protections, because of a 1966 report in the journal about researchers failing to get informed consent. Another top journal had rejected the article as too controversial.

The New England Journal started decades before the American Medical Association was founded in 1847 and is widely credited with promoting evidence-based care.

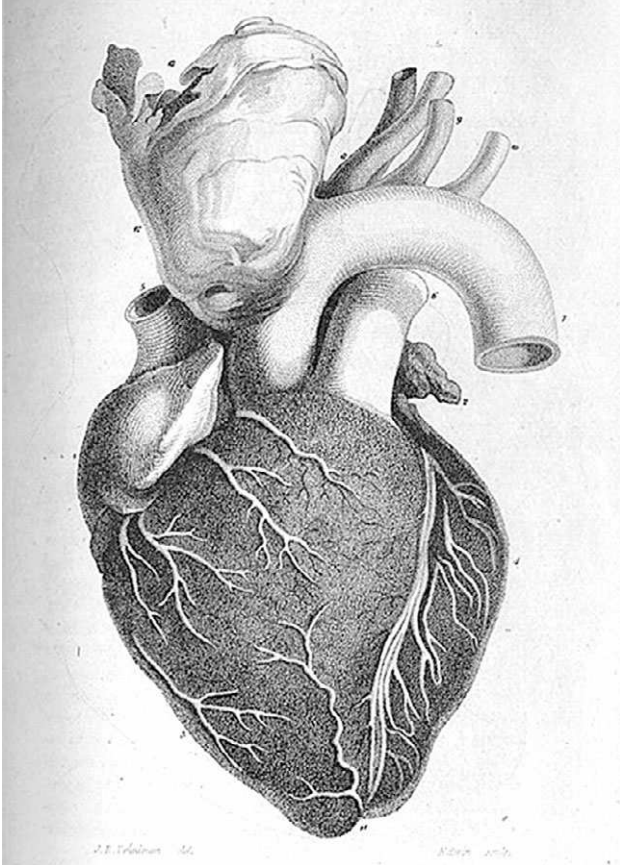

"It has been very good for society," said Pat Thibodeau, head librarian and associate dean for the Medical Center Library at Duke University. "When I go in, I'm hoping my doctor has read the New England Journal of Medicine or something similar and is following that information."

"It's the cream of the crop," said Dr. Barron Lerner, a Columbia University physician and medical historian.

"They get the best research submitted to them, and they do an extremely good job of peer reviewing" to make sure it is solid, he said.

That's what Boston surgeon John Collins Warren and James Jackson, who helped found Massachusetts General Hospital, hoped for the journal, which is now published weekly. It got its current name in 1928, seven years after it was bought by the Massachusetts Medical Society.

Warren's father, John Warren, surgeon to George Washington's troops, wrote the first article, on chest pain. Doctors had been debating whether it was caused by plaque — "the cement that builds up in arteries" — or blood clots, said

NEW ENGLAND JOURNAL OF MEDICINE • ASSOCIATED PRESS

This illustration shows a diagram of a human heart in the article 'Cases of Organic Diseases of the Heart and Lungs' by John C. Warren in the April 1, 1812, issue of the journal.

Dr. Jeffrey Drazen, the journal's editor-in-chief since 2000. Both proved correct — the "cement" fractures and allows a clot to form that blocks an artery, he said.

Heart care has been a journal specialty, and two prominent doctors — Elizabeth Nabel and Eugene Braunwald of Brigham and Women's Hospital — trace its evolution in this week's issue. Nabel is former director of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute and now is president of the Boston hospital.

They describe the first human cardiac catheterization — now a common diagnostic procedure — that Werner Forssman performed on himself in 1929. Under local anesthesia, he put a catheter into his arm and maneuvered it into his own heart.

For a heart attack, "it used to be that all we did was put people to bed for five weeks," but studies in the journal showed "that that was the worst thing you could do," said Dr. Jerome Kassirer, its top editor from 1991 to 1999.

The journal also helped prove "germ theory" and the nature of infectious diseases.

"People didn't realize you could infect people when you were using your dirty gloves or not using gloves. People didn't realize tuberculosis was communicable. They thought it emanated from clouds they called miasma, clouds of dirty smoke in cities," said Lerner, the Columbia historian.

Not all was grand in the journal's history, though, as Allan Brandt, a Harvard University medical historian writes in this week's issue.

When Harvard Medical School debated admitting female students in 1878, the journal expressed concern about men and women mingling during surgeries normally witnessed only by one sex. The school didn't admit women until 1945, when World War II caused a shortage of men.

The journal also agreed with mandatory sterilization of "mental defectives" in the early 20th century. "Most alarming," Brandt writes, was its declaration in 1934 that "Germany is perhaps the most progressive nation in restricting fecundity among its unfit." The journal later condemned Nazi medicine.

In recent years, it has tracked health policy, from the Clinton health care plan and the advent of managed care to current debates about Medicare.

There were oddball reports along the way, like the 2007 account of a cat named Oscar that had a knack for predicting when patients at a Providence, R.I., nursing home were close to death by curling up to them in their final hours.

The journal has printed few studies on alternative medicine because so little good research has been done on it, Drazen said. Unlike some other journals that like controversial research, the New England Journal tries to avoid it.

"People think the cutting edge is sharp. The cutting edge is very dull. It's very foggy and you don't know what the right answer is," so editors try to pick studies that are definitive enough to affect care, Drazen said.

That's why it publishes very few observational studies, the kind that in the 1990s led to pronouncements like "margarine is better than butter" only to be reversed by the next such study.

"Some of those are papers that we've seen and turned back," Drazen said. "I'm looking for a higher evidence standard."

Iran Reported to Enrich Uranium at Underground Lab

BY ALI AKBAR DAREINI and BRIAN MURPHY
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran • Iran has begun uranium enrichment at a new underground site built to withstand possible airstrikes, a leading hard-line newspaper reported Sunday in another show of defiance against Western pressure to rein in Tehran's nuclear program.

The operations at the bunker-like facility south of Tehran, reported by the Kayhan daily newspaper, are small in comparison to Iran's main enrichment site. But the centrifuges at the underground labs are considered more efficient and are shielded from aerial surveillance and protected against airstrikes by up to 300 feet of mountain rock.

Uranium enrichment is at the core of the international standoff over Iran's nuclear program. The U.S. and its allies fear Iran could use its enrichment facilities to develop high-grade nuclear material for warheads.

Iran — which claims it only seeks nuclear reactors for energy and research — has sharply increased its threats and military posturing against stronger pressures, including U.S. sanctions targeting Iran's Central Bank in attempts to complicate its ability to sell oil.

A senior commander of the Revolutionary Guard force was quoted as saying Tehran's leadership has decided to order the closure of the Strait of Hormuz, a strategic oil route, if the country's petroleum exports are blocked. Revolutionary Guard ground forces also staged war games in eastern Iran in an apparent display of resolve against U.S. forces just over the border in Afghanistan.

Iranian officials have issued similar threats, but this is the strongest statement yet by a top commander in the security establishment.

"The supreme authorities ... have insisted that if enemies block the export of our oil, we won't allow a drop of oil to pass through the Strait of Hormuz. This is the strategy of the Islamic Republic in countering such threats," Revolutionary Guard deputy commander Ali Ashraf Nouri was quoted as saying by another newspaper, the Khorasan daily.

Giffords Leads Vigil One Year After Ariz. Shooting

BY AMANDA LEE MYERS
Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. • Rep. Gabrielle Giffords led a crowd in the Pledge of Allegiance, her words ringing out across a cold Tucson night in a rare public appearance Sunday evening at a candlelight vigil one year after surviving a deadly shooting.

The Democratic congresswoman — who has struggled to re-learn to walk after being shot in the head — stepped onstage to cheers from the crowd. Ron Barber, a staffer who was wounded in the rampage that killed six one year ago, invited her to lead the audience in the pledge.

The crowd chanted: "Gabby, Gabby!" She limped to the podium, and husband Mark Kelly helped lift her left hand over her heart. After months of intensive speech therapy, Giffords recited the pledge with the audience, head held high and a smile on her face as she punched each word.

The remembrance at the University of Arizona capped off a day of events, including a church service that drew hundreds in the afternoon and a citywide bell-ringing at 10:11 a.m., the exact time a gunman started shooting at a Safeway political event on Jan. 8, 2011.

With hugs and tears, southern Arizonans remembered the dead, the shattered lives and those who acted heroically after a gunman opened fire at an outdoor meet-and-greet that severely wounded Giffords and 12 others.

"Even in the midst of this troubling year, the healing, the courage that we have experienced in our community — each one of us can notice how our cups overflow with the blessings of our lives," said Stephanie Aaron, Giffords' rabbi, who recited the 23rd Psalm at an interfaith service at the cathedral Sunday afternoon.

Relatives of the six dead walked solemnly down the aisle with a single red rose, placing the flowers in a vase in front of a picture of a heart.

Hundreds of people at the cathedral — including Gov. Jan Brewer — stood and chanted, "We remember, we remember, we remember with grateful hearts." Some closed their eyes while others held each other.

At the evening service, 19 candles marked the lost and the survivors. Giffords and Kelly lit one candle together as an orchestra played and many in the crowd wept. The emotional service brought together many who survived the shooting, and those who lost loved ones.

Suzi Hileman, who was shot three times, took the stage, hugged Giffords and walked to the candle area. She lit one, put her hands over her heart and mouthed "thank you" to the crowd.

Promising Gain without Pain

EDITOR'S NOTE — An occasional look at how well politicians' statements adhere to the facts.

BY CALVIN WOODWARD

WASHINGTON • Executing a classic Washington dodge, Newt Gingrich told Americans that Medicare and Medicaid could be kept solid merely by ending fraud in the system, a promise of gain without pain that ignores the aging population and other great forces pressing on the programs.

Mitt Romney told voters he's done the math supporting his claim that he created more than 100,000 jobs in the private sector, but didn't share it. And Ron Paul came up with a shocking figure on Fed "bailouts" that bears little resemblance to reality.

A look at some of the claims in a pair of weekend Republican presidential debates and how they compare with the facts:

GINGRICH: "The duty of the president is to find a way to manage the federal government so the primary pain is on changing the bureaucracy. On theft alone, we could save $100 billion a year in Medicaid and Medicare if the federal government were competent. That's a trillion dollars over 10 years. And the only people in pain would be crooks?"

THE FACTS: Those who have crunched the numbers believe that squeezing every last penny of fraud from health care programs would not solve long-range problems that are at the heart of the federal government's budget woes and imperil Medicare and Medicaid.

Those problems are driven by an aging population, the cost of high-tech medicine and what some researchers see as a pattern of overtreatment — the widespread use of medical tests, procedures, drugs and devices that wind up being of little or no benefit to patients.

Texas Electoral Maps at Issue Before Supreme Court

BY MARK SHERMAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • A federal law says states and localities with a history of discrimination cannot change any voting procedures without first getting approval from the Justice Department or a federal court in Washington. Yet Texas is asking the Supreme Court to allow the use of new, unapproved electoral districts in this year's voting for Congress and the state Legislature.

The outcome of the high court case, to be argued Monday afternoon, could be another blow to a key provision of the Voting Rights Act. In 2009, the justices raised doubts about whether Southern states still should need approval in advance of voting changes more than 40 years after the law was enacted.

The case also might help determine the balance of power in the House of Representatives in 2013, with Republicans in a stronger position if the court allows Texas to use electoral districts drawn by the GOP-dominated Legislature.

The complicated legal fight over Texas' political maps arises from the state's population gain of more than 4 million people, most of them Latino or African-American, in the 2010 census, and involves federal district courts in Texas and Washington, as well as the Supreme Court. It has come to a head now because Texas needs to be able to use some maps to hold elections this year.

The state has so far failed to persuade three judges in Washington, including two appointees of Republican President George W. Bush, to sign off on new political maps adopted by the Legislature. The justices jumped into the case at Texas' request after judges in San Antonio who are hearing a lawsuit filed by minority groups drew their own political lines for use in the 2012 elections.

Derral H. Hupfer

April 26, 1921-Jan. 6, 2012

FAIRFIELD • Derral H. Hupfer, 90, a resident of Fairfield returned home to his Heavenly Father on Jan. 6, 2012, at Twin Falls Care Center in Twin Falls.

Derral Herman Hupfer was born on April 26, 1921, as the middle child of Ira and Matilda Hupfer, joining big sister LaVona and little brother Ira Lyle. The well-spring and driving force of Derral's life was his love for our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He was raised and educated along the Salmon Track, in Burger and Hollister. Along with his family, he moved to Mountain Home, where he graduated from high school and worked the family farm.

Several years after graduation, Derral left the farm, driving away in a brand new 1941 GMC pickup, gifted to Derral from his father with thanks and blessings. Derral continued to drive the GMC for the next 68 years. Farmer, rancher, butcher, logger, carpenter, mechanic, craftsman, tradesman, photographer, voracious reader, researcher, and writer were all endeavors that Derral enjoyed, mastered, and carried with him both during his life as a young man and beyond. These accomplishments provided him with an extensive knowledge base and skill set, which he used to build the "Cabin in the Tall, Tall Pines." This cabin, created from Derral's love, hard work, and limitless energy, has been providing the family with gifts of connection, peace, and laughter for over 60 years.

On July 31, 1958, Derral married Wilma Shockley in Los Angeles. They resided in Fairfield, where Derral was the foreman for Sun Valley Ranches. They had two beautiful daughters, Susan and Janie. After many years on the ranch, Derral began a new career as the Camas County Assessor, until his retirement at the age of 77. Following Wilma's passing in 1994, Derral continued to serve his beloved community in many ways and roles, including writing grants for the building of the Camas County Senior Center, Medical Clinic and serving on the board for Family Health Services. Always willing to share a good story, one Christmas Derral invited elementary students into his home for Christmas stories from the Great Depression, a sagebrush Christmas tree, and hot coco.

In 1998 Derral married his wonderful wife Arlee, whom he respectfully and lovingly referred to as his "Indian Princess." After retirement, Derral and Arlee enjoyed working side-by-side on a co-ordinance mapping project for Camas County, traveling the exodus route of Arlee's ancestor, Chief Joseph, and exploring the southwest around Sedona, Arizona.

Derral is survived by his wife, Arlee; one son, Terry Hupfer of Santa Ana, Calif.; three daughters Janie (Todd) Johnson of Twin Falls, Vickie (Marvon) Chess of Hill City, Tenna (Jay) Biggs of Ogden, Utah; 8 grandchildren, Joel Goodell, Danielle Goodell, Libby Smith, Lindsay Lancaster, Rod Lancaster Jr., Levi Lancaster, Brandy Tracy, Shana Biggs; and 10 great grandchildren.

He was preceded in death by his mother, father, brother, sister, wife Wilma, and daughter Susan Goodell.

"Well Done Thou Good and Faithful Servant"

A Celebration of Life Service will take place Tuesday, Jan. 10, 2012, at 11 a.m. at the Fairfield Community Church in Fairfield.

In lieu of flowers, donations can be made in Derral's name to the Camas County Senior Center.

Cremation arrangements are under the direction of Demaray Funeral Service, Gooding Chapel.

Condolences may be sent to the family by visiting the obituary link at www.demarayfuneralservice.com.

business, that hasn't been the case for years. President Barack Obama's health care overhaul law toughened penalties and gave law enforcement agencies new tools to combat fraud. That built on earlier efforts by the administrations of George W. Bush and Bill Clinton.

Health care fraud investigations are a major source of money recovered for taxpayers by the Justice Department, surpassing fines and penalties collected from defense contracting fraud.

Although cracking down on fraud and abuse will help to maintain Medicare and Medicaid, the administration and lawmakers are convinced it is not a magic elixir to restore the financial health of the programs. Knowing that has not stopped a succession of presidents and lawmakers of both parties from ducking tough choices and promising painless dividends by going after "waste, fraud and abuse" in government.

PAUL: "I don't see how we can do well against Obama if we have any candidate that, you know, endorsed, you know, single-payer systems and TARP bailouts and don't challenge the Federal Reserve's $15 trillion of injection bailing out their friends."

THE FACTS: First, there are no fans of government-run, single-payer health insurance in the Republican field, despite Paul's suggestion otherwise Sunday. Newt Gingrich once endorsed the idea of requiring everyone to have health insurance, and Romney introduced a mandate for health coverage as Massachusetts governor. But that's a far cry from a Canadian-style health system that makes government the primary payer of people's medical bills.

TARP is the $700 billion Troubled Asset Relief Program that was proposed by President George W. Bush and passed by Congress in 2008 to help rescue imperiled financial institutions. Nearly all of the money has been paid back, with interest.

Paul's slam against the Fed ignores the fact that most of the $15 trillion he is talking about involved loans that were quickly repaid, sometimes the next day. And that's if these Fed transactions can even be considered loans in the conventional sense.

When the Fed lends money to banks, it creates the money out of thin air. When the banks pay it back, the money disappears from the system. If a bank borrows $5 billion from the Fed one day, then pays it back the next, and a week later borrows $5 billion more and quickly pays it back, the total would be listed as $10 billion, even though it's just the same money going back and forth and the treasury is in no sense being emptied.

That's how a federal report counted a running total of about $15 trillion in emergency Fed loans to domestic banks and their foreign subsidiaries between 2007 and 2010. The actual loan total, once paybacks are accounted for, is estimated at $1.1 trillion.

ROMNEY: "In the business I had, we invested in over 100 different businesses and net-net, taking out the ones where we lost jobs and those that we added, those businesses have now added over 100,000 jobs.... I'm a good enough numbers guy to make sure I got both sides of that."

THE FACTS: Romney has never substantiated his frequent claim that he was a creator of more than 100,000 jobs while leading the Bain Capital private equity company. His campaign merely cites success stories without laying out the other side of the ledger — jobs lost at Bain-acquired or Bain-supported firms that closed, trimmed their workforce or shifted employment overseas.

Moreover, his campaign bases its claims on recent employment figures at three companies — Staples, Domino's and Sports Authority — even though Romney's involvement with them ceased years ago.

By that sort of charitable math, President Barack Obama could be credited with creating over 1 million jobs even though employment overall is down about 2 million since he came to office. But Romney accuses Obama of destroying jobs while using a different standard to judge his own performance — cherry-picked examples that leave everything else out.

By its nature, venture capitalism often results in lost jobs because profitability and efficiency are key to investors, not how many people are on the payroll. Bain Capital profited in cases where employment went both up and down.

Staples, now with close to 90,000 employees, and Sports Authority, with about 15,000, were startups supported by Romney. The direct workforce at Domino's has grown by nearly 8,000 since Romney's intervention. But Romney got out of the game in 1999, which has not stopped his campaign from crediting him with jobs created at those companies since then.

Romney toned down the braggadocio in the Saturday debate, saying that of the Bain-supported companies that grew, "we're only a small part of that, by the way." But he mentioned a few more successful companies, again without giving voters a breakdown of his "net-net" calculations.

No one has been able to produce a full accounting of job gains and losses from the scores of companies Romney dealt with at Bain. But a Los Angeles Times review of Bain's 10 largest investments under Romney found that four of the big companies declared bankruptcy within a few years, costing thousands of jobs and often pension and severance benefits.

Q. When I stayed overnight at the hospital recently, the nurse who was filling out paperwork asked if I had a Living Will or a Durable Power of Attorney for Health Care. I don't have either one. Should I?

A. Nobody wants to think that time will come when they can't make decisions, but it is best to be prepared. In Idaho, there is a simple form that includes both of these important health documents. Together they can put your mind at ease knowing that people you trust will be empowered to act on your behalf, should the need arise. A Living Will clearly states your wishes for end-of-life medical treatment. The Durable Power of Attorney for Health Care designates a Health Care Agent to make a host of health care decisions if you cannot. This form is available at: www.ag.idaho.gov/livingWills/LivingWill_DurablePowerOfAttorney.pdf

THEIR VIEW

Defense Bill Will Hamper Efforts at Counterterrorism

The following editorial appeared in the San Jose Mercury News on Wednesday:

It's cold comfort to know that President Barack Obama has "serious reservations" with provisions of the $662 billion defense bill he signed into law as 2011 came to a close. He should have refused to sign until Congress threw out the section that gave the military the power to indefinitely detain people suspected of involvement with terrorism — even if they're American citizens. Obama insists that he didn't ask for the authority and doesn't want it: "I want to clarify that my administration will not authorize the indefinite military detention without trial of American citizens," he said. "I believe that doing so would break with our most important traditions and values as a nation."

So until the end of his tenure, Americans may be safe from being snatched by the military and never heard from again — the kind of thing we expect of tin-pot dictatorships. But now that the insidious provision has become law, future presidents may not share Obama's respect for constitutional rights. Imagine what a Dick Cheney would do with this toy in his hands.

This Congress hardly has been able to agree on anything benefiting all Americans, but this undermining of one of our most cherished ideals — the right to due process — in the name of fighting terrorism has bipartisan support. It's not just advocates of civil liberties who are appalled.

Robert Mueller, the head of the FBI, and David Petraeus, the director of the CIA, are opposed. They say the bill will hamper counterterrorism. High-ranking military officers also are increasingly troubled. Charles C. Krulak and Joseph P. Hoar, two retired four-star generals, wrote a New York Times op-ed last month arguing that the legislation violates the sacred trust "with service members, who enlist believing that they will never be asked to turn their weapons on fellow Americans."

They also warn about the danger of military custody eliminating the role of federal courts in terrorism cases. Since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, military commissions have not been effective in winning terror-related convictions.

President George W. Bush, with the help of Cheney and Donald Rumsfeld, gave us Guantanamo and all of its sordid treatment of detainees. As a presidential candidate, Obama promised to close Guantanamo — all but impossible now that the new legislation also forbids transferring Guantanamo detainees to prisons on American soil.

What will happen if a U.S. citizen suspected of terrorism is arrested by the military? We don't need to ask. It already has happened. Jose Padilla was arrested in Chicago in 2002 for plotting a "dirty bomb" attack. Bush transferred him to a military prison, where he stayed until 2006, when he finally was tried in a civilian court and sentenced to life in prison. Under the new legislation, Padilla could have been held by the military forever, denying him his right to a day in court and denying the public the satisfaction of a conviction.

How Can We Help Iraqis Who Risked Lives for Us?

Last week, I spoke on the PBS "New-sHour" about Iraqis who worked for our civilians and military before we left the country — and who now face death threats because we betrayed them.

I've received a slew of email from Iraqi interpreters who are in hiding because Shiite militias have pledged to kill the "traitors" who aided the Americans. I've also received email from U.S. military officers desperately trying to get their "terps" out of the country. And I've heard from ordinary, concerned Americans.

All ask the same question: How can we get the U.S. government to issue the visas it promised to Iraqis who risked their lives to help us?

I'm ashamed to admit that the U.S. government has abandoned these people. No one seems eager to bring more Iraqis into this country in an election year.

President Obama has failed to keep his 2007 campaign pledge to rescue these Iraqis. A group of concerned senators, mostly Democrats, including Pennsylvania's Bob Casey, has made inquiries, but gotten no answers from Secretary of Defense Leon Panetta or Secretary of Homeland Security Janet Napolitano. Nor has a peep been heard on behalf of the "terps" from Republican senators who backed our war in Iraq.

State Department officials say they're working hard to expedite the visa process. Yet the number of visas for Iraqis who helped us slowed to a trickle just when they were most urgently needed, as U.S. troops quit Iraq.

Nor has the Pentagon made any move to rescue Iraqis who worked with our soldiers. Many U.S. officers moved mountains to get their Iraqi aides out, but others have been thwarted. Moreover, individual officers can't organize the large-scale evacuation that's now needed.

Official figures show that 39,000 Iraqis (including family members) are in the pipeline in the Direct Access program for Iraqis who worked with us. Only 153 of these visas were issued in December. There are about 15,000 (not including family) in the pipeline for the Special Immigrant Visa program. Only 50 SIVs were issued last month.

The supposed reason for the freeze is new security regulations imposed after two Iraqi refugees in Kentucky were accused of having terrorist connections. But these bad apples never worked for Americans. Those who did went through numerous security checks before getting their jobs.

A few of the emails I've received since the PBS show will give you a feeling for the Iraqis we are betraying.

Retired Col. Richard Welch, who served 77 months in Iraq, is trying to help a young Iraqi widow who worked on a U.S. base. She and her family "are getting direct threats from JAM," a radical Shiite militia. The widow completed all the formalities and should have long since received her visa. Yet, her case has been on hold for a year. "This is a beautiful family, and I don't know what I will do if they are killed while waiting for approval," Welch wrote.

Madeleine Marx, a New York sculptor who voluntarily helps Iraqi visa applicants, emailed about a translator and his family who have been living in hiding for three years: "The translator, after having his SIV application accepted completely (handshakes at the embassy, 'stand by for travel instructions'), heard nothing for 10 months, then had his approval withdrawn in August 'for security reasons." Never mind that he'd worked for two years with the U.S. military and had outstanding recommendations from his officers.

Bizarrely, the embassy then told the translator to reapply, then rejected him a second time, without explanation, even after Marx's two congressmen made inquiries. "Now he doesn't want anyone to even mention the U.S. to him," Marx writes. "And everyone is still in danger."

I've received a sheaf of similar stories you can read on my blog at www.philly.com/world-view. They all send the same message: The United States cannot be trusted to keep its promises to its allies. Afghans, take notice.

On Wednesday, I spoke with my former translator/fixer/driver in Iraq, Salam Hamrani, who also worked for other U.S. media outlets and should have been eligible for a U.S. visa. Threatened with death because he helped U.S. troops finger radical Shiite militiamen in his neighborhood, he fled with his family to the Greek Republic of Cyprus. There, he was told by the Interior Ministry he would soon be granted refugee status. Several months later, he hasn't received it and is extremely worried.

Salam asked me, if his Cyprus hopes fall through, should he apply here? I told him, grimly, he'd better keep trying in Cyprus. It seems my country won't repay those who risked their lives to aid us.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

America Does Deserve Better

Quote of the decade: "The fact that we are here today to debate raising America's debt limit is a sign of leadership failure. It is a sign that the U.S. Government cannot pay its own bills. It is a sign that we now depend on ongoing financial assistance from foreign countries to finance our government's reckless fiscal policies. Increasing America's debt weakens us domestically and internationally. Leadership means that 'the buck stops here.' Instead, Washington is shifting the burden of bad choices today onto the backs of our children and grandchildren. America has a debt problem and a failure of leadership. America deserves better."

A statement made by then-Sen. Barack H. Obama, March 2006.

The same Barack H. Obama in just three years has added $5 trillion to the nation's debt.

The same Barack H. Obama that has hung a $50,000 debt on the heads of our children and grandchildren.

The same Barack H. Obama that has no idea of what it is to be a leader. Yes, putz, America does deserve better!

If you can read this, thank a teacher. If not, head south.

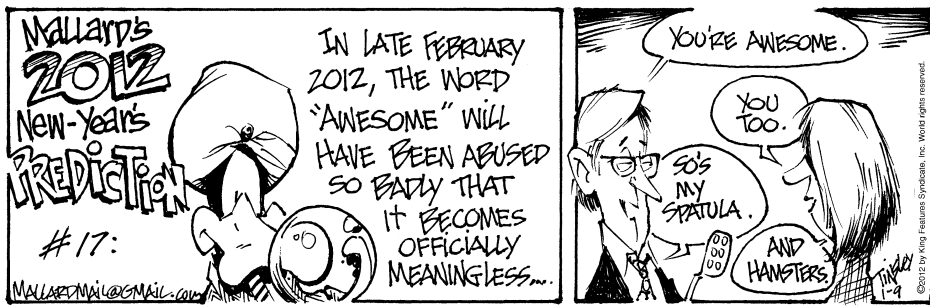

Also, I see where the Times-News is advertising for a financial controller. Someone from the current administration might fit right in — Tim Gietner or Erik Holder. Both should be looking for work in the near future if we are lucky.

Safety of Popular Air Shows, Races Under Scrutiny

BY JOAN LOWY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON • Despite suffering severe injuries in the worst air race accident in the U.S. in more than a half a century, some victims have told their lawyer they would like to attend future races.

“I just look at them, shake my head and say, ‘You are absolutely nuts,’” said Houston attorney Tony Buzbee, who represents 16 injured victims and families of people killed at an air race in Reno, Nev., in September.

Eleven people died and about 70 more were badly injured after a souped-up World War II-era warbird crashed in front of VIP boxes, sending shrapnel into the crowd.

That some victims would still support such events and return to them underscores the powerful fascination of air shows and races, which are built around pilots and performers engaged in extreme risk-taking.

More than 10 million people attend U.S. air shows every year. But what level of risk is acceptable for both the public and the pilots? And can safety improvements be made to reduce that risk while still permitting daredevil performances?

The National Transportation Safety Board is holding a hearing Tuesday to help answer those questions. The hearing is separate from the board’s investigation of the Reno accident. Officials for the Reno Air Racing Association, which sponsors the races, are scheduled to testify.

Since 1986, there have been 152 air show and air race accidents in the U.S., including 75 fatal ones, according to the board. But, except for the Reno race, none involved spectator deaths.

“When it comes to spectator fatalities, their record is very good in the United States,” said the board’s head, Deborah Hersman. “But any fatalities lead us to question how we can improve.”

Industry officials draw a sharp distinction between the Reno air races and the other nearly 350 air shows held around the country each year.

The Reno races are the only ones of their type held anywhere in the world. A group of planes flies wingtip-to-wingtip as low as 50 feet off the sagebrush at speeds sometimes surpassing 500 mph. Pilots follow an oval path around pylons, with distances and speeds depending on the class of aircraft.

“We’re just like NASCAR in the sky,” said race spokeswoman Valerie Miller.

The Red Bull Air Race World Championships, the only other air race series, was canceled for this year and next year before the Reno accident. Those races are significantly different from the Reno races, with one plane at a time flying a course around pylons vying to achieve the best time.

Critics of the Reno air races contend they are more dangerous than the typical air show where aerobatic stunts are performed. Air show regulations require planes to follow a course parallel to the grandstands so that the direction and energy of the planes is never pointed directly at the crowd. In the air races, they say, there is a point, usually just before the home stretch, when planes briefly turn in the direction of spectators.

“When you think about the aircraft, in many cases highly modified aircraft, going over 500 mph 50 or 100 feet off the ground in the area of thousands of people, I think common sense would tell you, man, that sounds on its face just very dangerous,” Buzbee said. While some of his clients support continuing the races, others say they feel strongly they should be ended, he said.

Before the Reno accident, the last U.S. spectator fatalities were at an air show in 1951 in Flagler, Colo., where 20 people were killed. That accident led to significant changes in the way air shows are staged, including a requirement that grandstands are kept a distance of 500 feet to 1,500 feet from planes depending upon the aircraft.

The requirements were strengthened after 67 people were killed and another 350 injured in 1988 at a U.S. Air Force base in Ramstein, Germany, after the midair collision of an Italian Air Force team performing stunts. Wreckage from the collision landed on spectators. Planes are no longer allowed to fly over crowds at U.S. shows.

“The good news is after that accident, safeguards that were put in place have protected the audience ever since,” said John Cudahy, president of the International Council of Air Shows.

Michael Barr, an expert on aviation safety and former U.S. Air Force fighter pilot who used to help plan air shows, said the Reno accident is an exception that will probably wind up being attributed to a problem with the aircraft rather than the nature of the air races.

“When you look back at the hundreds and hundreds of air shows there are and how few fatalities there are, this one is just the 100-year flood,” he said.

NEVADA FORESTER WARNS OF FIRE DANGER IN DRY WINTER

BY SANDRA CHEREB
Associated Press

CARSON CITY, Nev. • One of the driest winters on record in northern Nevada has prompted an unusual January warning from state Forester Peter Anderson.

“The lack of snowfall has resulted in extensive flammable vegetation throughout our communities and open-space areas in both urban and rural areas of the state,” Anderson said in a statement Friday. “Human caused wildfires can be prevented and I encourage all Nevadans to exercise extreme caution in areas with dry vegetation.”

Northern Nevada hasn’t seen any measureable precipitation since early October, and record high temperatures over the past week belie the fact it’s wintertime.

Reno ended the year with its driest December in nearly 130 years after the month ended without any precipitation. The last time that happened was in 1883.

With vegetation tinder dry and moisture levels nonexistent, conditions are ripe for a serious wild land fire more typical in late summer or early fall.

“Any kind of ignition is going to spark a fire,” Anderson said. “If you put a wind with that, you’ll have rapid spread.”

Just two days before the New Year, a brush fire in Carson City burned 400 acres. In mid-November, the Caughlin fire destroyed or damaged 42 homes in Reno as it raced through steep canyons and ravines, burning more than 3 square miles.

There were large fires late in the year that destroyed critical rangeland, homes and wildlife habitat in Humboldt, Eureka, Washoe and Elko counties, Anderson said.

“In the last month, we’ve had fire at 6,000-, 7,000-foot elevations, and active fire behavior,” he said. Those mountain elevations are generally buried under snow by now.

“It’s very strange,” he said.

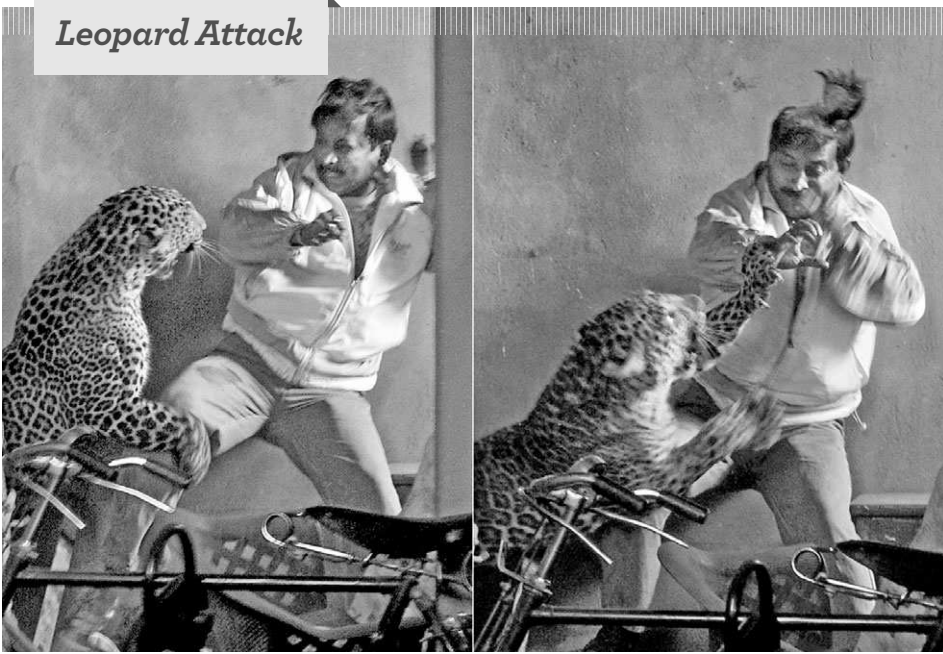

Winter is usually a time when fire agencies train, work on equipment and get ready for next year’s wildfire season. But crews this year haven’t caught much of a break.

“So far this winter, wildfires have occurred weekly through the state,” Anderson said.

In 2011, 814 wildfires in Nevada burned 660 square miles, or 423,000 acres. It was considered an average year, acreage wise.

Fire officials hope the dry start to the 2012 isn’t an omen of what’s to come.

Snow and rain would help. “Keep your fingers crossed,” Anderson said.

In this combination photos taken Saturday, a wild full-grown leopard scalps the head of a man as it attacks after wandering into a residential neighborhood in Gauhati, in the northern state of Assam, India. The leopard ventured into a crowded area and injured four people before it was captured and caged, local reports said.

Senator Warns FDA on Danger of Newest Painkillers

BY MICHAEL GORMLEY
Associated Press

ALBANY, N.Y. • Following fatal shootings in two New York pharmacy robberies, a U.S. senator is warning that a new batch of “super painkillers” now under review could force repeats of recent violent robberies that left six people dead.

“It’s tremendously concerning that at the same time policymakers and law enforcement professionals are waging a war on the growing prescription drug crisis, new superdrugs could well be on their way, flooding the market,” said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y. “The FDA needs to grab the reins and slow down the stampede to introduce these powerful narcotics.”

A message seeking comment from the Food and Drug Administration was not immediately returned Friday.

The Associated Press reported last month about addiction experts’ fears over four drugs being tested that contain a more powerful version of one of the nation’s most abused painkillers — hydrocodone.

Schumer is particularly concerned about legalizing the drugs for prescriptions because they would be prized commodities in the black market.

Experts say painkiller addiction has been driven partly by a loophole in the 1970 Controlled Substances Act that classified pure hydrocodone — a super painkiller — as a strictly controlled Schedule II drug. But the law put combination products, such as pills containing hydrocodone and acetaminophen, into the less strict Schedule III.

Because of the loophole, patients can refill a prescription for a hydrocodone-acetaminophen drug like Vicodin up to five times. A prescription for a similar oxycodone product, such as Percocet, can be filled only once. Critics say the loophole has flooded American medicine cabinets with hydrocodone.

In 1999, the Drug Enforcement Administration and FDA began reviewing whether they should reschedule hydrocodone combination products. But an AP review of regulatory documents and court filings shows the agencies have repeatedly passed the rescheduling study back and forth, with no final decision made.

Imprisoned Polygamist Pestering S.D. County

BELLE FOURCHE, S.D. (AP) • A polygamist who’s in prison for sexual assault has been pestering South Dakota county officials with letters and boxes of books.

Butte County officials tell the Rapid City Journal the material is coming from Warren Jeffs and his supporters.

Jeffs is leader of a sect called the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Jeffs is serving a life term, plus 20 years, in a Texas prison for sexually assaulting two young girls he claimed as his wives.

A group affiliated with Jeffs owns land in western South Dakota’s Custer County.

But auditor Elaine Jensen says there’s no record of Jeffs’ church having any presence in Butte County.

The materials include a letter from Jeffs in which he claims “keyholding power of authority on Earth.”

‘24’ Movie Scheduled to Begin Shooting this Spring

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) • Fans of Jack Bauer have something to look forward to. A movie based on the old Fox series “24” is scheduled to begin shooting this spring. Actor Kiefer Sutherland said Sunday that he expects to go to work on the movie in late April or May. Sutherland played Bauer, the centerpiece on the pulse-quickening adventure series that ended its television run in 2010. Even with the movie ahead of him, Sutherland is already working on a new Fox series. “Touch” features him as the father of a super-intelligent son able to understand odd connections in the world and even predict the future. After portraying Bauer, a character who is often required to repress emotions, his new character Martin

Bohm shows his feelings. Sutherland said he hadn’t expected to be doing a new TV series so soon, and wasn’t specifically looking for a character as different from Bauer as possible. “The reason I wanted to do this is it really spoke to me,” he said. Fox will offer a sneak preview of the show Jan. 25 before it joins the network schedule in March.

An investigator with the Montana Department of Transportation’s Motor Carrier Division looks at the interior of a Rimrock Stages bus that crashed on any icy stretch of Interstate 90 east of Missoula, near Clinton, Mont., Sunday, killing two passengers and injuring 32 others. The bus apparently slid on an icy stretch of highway and rolled on to its side.

Bus Crash in Icy Montana Kills 2, Injures Dozens

MISSOULA, Mont. (AP) • A bus crashed Sunday on an icy interstate highway in southwestern Montana, killing two people and sending more than 30 others to area hospitals, officials said. The westbound Rimrock Trailways bus crashed on Interstate 90 about a mile west of Clinton, 18 miles southeast of Missoula, shortly after 7 a.m., Dan Ronan of the American Bus Association said. All of the 34 people on board were either injured or killed. The crash was one of several reported along that stretch of highway Sunday morning, closing both eastbound and westbound lanes of an 8-mile section of the interstate between Clinton and Turah. It was not clear if there were additional injuries, or how many. Two people died in the bus crash, Montana Highway Patrol Sgt. Scott Hoffman said. He expected the death toll to rise. St. Patrick Hospital spokeswoman JoAnne Hoven said four of the 10 passengers taken to the Missoula hospital were in critical condition. Four others were in in serious condition, and two were treated and released, she said. Mary Windecker, spokeswoman for the Community Medical Center, also in Missoula, said 20 passengers were taken there to be treated for various injuries, none critical. Those suffering the worst injuries appeared to have been ejected when the bus slid on its side and bounced, breaking out the windows on the driver’s side. Three people were pinned under the bus. Hoffman said the driver was among the seriously injured. He said the estimated speed of the bus was 65 to 70 mph, and that it slid 150 feet when it entered the median, though it’s unclear how long it might have been out of control before that. “When it went on its side, because of the speed involved, it had a bouncing motion,” Hoffman said. “And as it did people were ejected through those windows.” The bus ended up in the median on its side, said Bill Tucker, the fire chief for the Clinton Rural Fire District. Two of the passengers were transported to a hospital by helicopters, and six or eight by ground ambulance, he said. The rest of the survivors, which Tucker described as “walking wounded,” were loaded on a Clinton Elementary School bus and taken to Community Medical Center. The cause of the crash was not yet known, though it is believed icy conditions were a factor, Ronan said. The electronic equipment on the bus indicated it was going 65 mph at the time of the crash, he said. The speed limit in the area is 75 mph, but Montana law requires motorists to travel at a speed that is safe for the conditions, and Hoffman said authorities were investigating whether the bus was going too fast. “The law states you must drive to the conditions, and that’s where our investigation is going on this,” said Hoffman. “We have no other indications of another vehicle being involved. We think he was simply going too fast for the road conditions. We had one passenger state already that they felt the bus driver was going too fast right before the crash.

2ND GA. MAN DIES FROM MOTORHOME WRECK IN MISS.

BY HOLBROOK MOHR
Associated Press
JACKSON, Miss. • A second man has died from injuries sustained in the southern Mississippi wreck of a motorhome carrying a group of friends from Georgia to New Orleans to attend the national college football championship game, authorities said Sunday. Forrest County, Miss., Coroner Butch Benedict said Sunday that 66-year-old Alfred Holt Jr. of Lithonia, Ga., the driver of the vehicle, died Sunday. On Saturday evening, 47-year-old Darryl Parker of Riverdale, Ga., died in the wreck. Benedict said Parker’s wife was among at least 10 people injured in the crash. Authorities said the group was traveling in the recreational vehicle from the Atlanta area to New Orleans, where they planned to attend the Bowl Championship Series national title game between No. 1 LSU and No. 2 Alabama. The game will be played today.

Northern Plains Hit Hard by Deer-killing Disease

BY MATTHEW BROWN
Associated Press

BILLINGS, Mont. • White-tailed deer populations in parts of eastern Montana and elsewhere in the Northern Plains could take years to recover from a devastating disease that killed thousands of the animals in recent months, wildlife officials and hunting outfitters said.

In northeast Montana, officials said 90 percent or more of whitetail have been killed along a 100-mile stretch of the Milk River from Malta to east of Glasgow. Whitetail deaths also have been reported along the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers in western North Dakota and eastern Montana and scattered sites in Wyoming, South Dakota and eastern Kansas.

The deaths are being attributed to an outbreak of epizootic hemorrhagic disease, or EHD. Transmitted by biting midges, EHD causes internal bleeding that can kill infected animals within just a few days.

“I’ve been here 21 years and it was worse than any of us here have seen,” said Pat Gunderson, the Glasgow-based regional supervisor for Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks. “Right now it’s going to take a few years to get things back to even a moderate population.”

In North Dakota, state wildlife chief Randy Kreil described the outbreak as the most extensive and deadly in two decades.

Mule deer, bighorn sheep, elk and pronghorn also are susceptible to EHD, but it is particularly damaging to whitetail herds, animal health experts said. Livestock can be infected but typically show few symptoms.

Researchers say the virus that causes EHD does not infect people and there is no risk of eating or handling infected deer.

More precise estimates of the number of whitetail killed are expected after agencies conduct winter population counts and survey fall hunter success.

Periodic outbreaks of EHD occur in whitetail herds across the country. Wildlife officials say the outbreak in the Northern Plains stands out for the high number of deaths and wide area affected.

Animal health experts suspect it was triggered by an exceptionally wet spring that led to lots of muddy breeding habitat for the biting midges that carry the disease. A warm fall meant the midges lingered and continued transmitting EHD to deer.

The outbreak followed a harsh winter that already had knocked down deer numbers across the region.

In response to those winter deaths, Gunderson said the number of hunting tags offered in northeast Montana was reduced from 5,000 to 4,000. After the EHD outbreak began in late summer, sales of another 2,000 tags were suspended.

In western North Dakota, 1,500 licenses were suspended and the state offered refunds for deer tags already sold. More than 630 people took advantage of the refunds, said Randy Meissner, license manager for North Dakota Game and Fish.

Hunting outfitter Eric Albus in Hinsdale, Mont., said his business ran one archery hunting trip along the Milk River this fall, compared to 40 or 50 hunts in prior years.

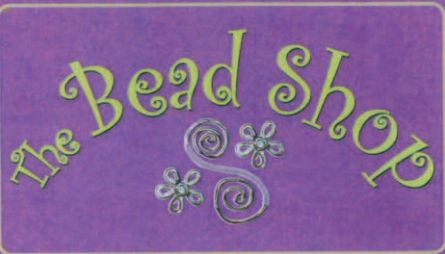

“It was horrendous,” Albus said, “especially when you couple it with the fact that we lost 40 to 45 percent of our whitetail in the winter.”

To satisfy his customers, Albus said he leased alternate properties to hunt on that were up to 350 miles away from Hinsdale.

In southern states where deer have a history of exposure to EHD, death rates from the disease are relatively low, said David Stallknecht with the Southeastern Cooperative Wildlife Disease Study, which has been tracking EHD for more than 30 years.

Whitetail in northern states are more likely to die because they lack the antibodies from previous exposures needed to help fight off the disease, said Stallknecht, a professor in the College of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Georgia.

Miles: ‘Big Boy’ Football Tonight

NEW ORLEANS • Les Miles squeezed out a smile, clenched his left hand nervously and extended his right hand toward Nick Saban. The coaches got in an awkward grasp, forced a bit of small talk, and then posed for the cameras behind the crystal trophy that only one of them can hoist toward the Superdome roof come Monday night.

This was the last of their pregame obligations — one final chance for Miles to deflect a query about whether top-ranked LSU is the favorite to make it to the BCS title NEXT YEAR, one more opportunity for Saban to show he’s got a life beyond his stranglehold on the storied program at No. 2 Alabama (turns out he does, if watching the Weather Channel qualifies).

Now, let’s get down to business.

LSU vs. Alabama, Part II. The BCS championship.

This time, it’s for all the marbles.

Really.

The teams already met two months ago in Tuscaloosa, a so-called Game of the Century that was more of a Brawl in the Backyard, a brutal slugfest that sent both teams scurrying for the training room the next day and left fans around the country feeling a bit cheated by an old-fashioned defensive struggle in a college game now dominated by point-a-minute offenses.

Neither team made it to the end zone in that first meeting, even with the benefit of extra time. LSU won a battle of field goals, claiming a 9-6 overtime victory and stealing away the top spot in the rankings from the Crimson Tide.

Everyone expects more scoring in the rematch, but there’s no way it’s turning into one of those back-and-forth shootouts we’ve seen so many times this bowl season.

Title Game Brings Closure to Long Season

NEW ORLEANS • The moment was about as stilted as it could get, though Les Miles and Nick Saban certainly knew the routine. They posed stiffly for the photographers, smiles fixed on their faces and the BCS trophy between them, even though everyone in the room except the BCS bigwigs who crowded into the photo op knew they would both rather be somewhere — make that anywhere — else.

The title game between No. 1 LSU and No. 2 Alabama was little more than a day away, 32 hours as Miles kept reminding everyone, yet there was still work to be done. There always is for football coaches and, mercifully enough, the last public appearance before the game by the two coaching heavyweights was finally over.

Mercifully enough, soon the college football season will be, too.

It comes to an end in a dome just a short drive down Interstate 10 from Baton Rouge, making it almost a home game for the team almost everyone outside Alabama believes is the best in the country. It comes to an end in a yet another game between two SEC heavyweights, the third time in 14 months that LSU and Alabama have played each other.

That it may not end with a clear national champion isn’t surprising because the system is deeply flawed. Always will be until a team like Oklahoma State or even Boise State has a chance to Tim Tebow (15) hugs coach John Fox after the Denver Broncos defeated the Pittsburgh Steelers 29-23 in overtime on Sunday.

Tebow’s Thrills Lift Broncos

DENVER • One of the most storied NFL playoff teams ran into a rejuvenated Tim Tebow and the Denver Broncos.

Sorry, Pittsburgh Steelers.

The magic is back.

Tebow connected with Demaryius Thomas on an electrifying 80-yard touchdown pass on the first play of overtime and the Broncos defeated the stunned Steelers 29-23 in the AFC wild-card game on Sunday. Wild doesn’t begin to describe it. The play took 11 seconds and was the quickest ending to an overtime in NFL history.

Thomas hauled in a high play-action pass at the Denver 38, stiff-armed Ike Taylor and then outraced Ryan Mundy to the end zone. Tebow, who looked as startled as everyone else, headed for his own end zone and knelt on one knee — a gesture known far and wide these days as Tebowing. Then he pounded a fist in triumph and took a victory lap.

Behind Tebow’s 316 yards passing, the Broncos (9-8) are heading to New England for a second-round game against the top-seeded Patriots on Saturday night.

The Steelers (12-5) lost despite Ben Roethlisberger rallying injury-depleted Pittsburgh from a two-touchdown half-time deficit with 10 points in the final 10 minutes.

Pittsburgh called tails for the overtime coin toss, and it came up heads. Tebow, who engineered five fourth-quarter comebacks and three OT wins in the regular season, wasted no time in finding Thomas to end the game. Mundy was playing in place of Ryan Clark, the Steelers’ leading tackler who sat this one out because of a blood condition that’s exacerbated at altitude.

Clark was one of several Steelers sidelined or injured. Pro Bowl center Maurkice Pouncey was out, replaced by Doug Legursky, who had a bad snap right before halftime that moved Pittsburgh out of field goal range.

After Thomas raced down the Broncos sideline, sending the crowd, including Broncos executive vice president John Elway, into a frenzy at Sports Authority Field, which was rocking like the old Mile High Stadium back in the 1990s.

And Elway, the architect of so many those magical moments at the old place, jumped for joy in his suite.

The Patriots walloped the Broncos 41-23 last month, sending Tebow into a funk that included seven turnovers and a 40 percent completion clip — and prompting Elway to implore him to “pull the trigger” in the playoffs.

Did he ever.

Tebow completed 10 of 21 passes but Thomas hauled in four of them for 204 yards after his top target, Eric Decker, was lost to a left knee injury on the first play of the second quarter when he was hit by linebacker James Harrison.

Tebow also ran 10 times for 50 yards and capped his best day as a pro with the toss to Thomas.

Stricker Keeps Big Lead at Kapalua

KAPALUA, Hawaii • Steve Stricker never looked comfortable at Kapalua until he walked off the Plantation Course with the same five-shot margin that he started with Sunday in the Tournament of Champions.

Right when he felt as if he was letting everyone back into the hunt, Stricker birdied his last four holes for a 4-under 69 that restored his cushion going into the Monday finish in Maui.

Webb Simpson had a 30-foot birdie putt on the 14th hole for a share of the lead. He missed. Jonathan Byrd had a 4-foot birdie putt on the 16th for a share of the lead. He missed that one.

Stricker, after a two-putt birdie on the 15th, chipped in for birdie on the 16th hole, then knocked in short birdie putts on the last two holes.

He was at 19-under 200, five shots clear of defending champion Byrd (67), Martin Laird (67) and Simpson, who also had a 69 while playing in the final group with Stricker.

Through three rounds, Stricker now is 13-under par on the five closing holes at the Plantation Course.

“I wasn’t making any birdies, and it seemed like everybody else was,” Stricker said. “I knew it was going to be tough. When you’re leading a golf tournament, it’s just hard to keep that momentum. When you’re not making birdies, you feel

Timely Giants Putting It All Together

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. • All the missing pieces — defense and a running game — are aligning at the right time for Eli Manning and the New York Giants. And just in time to play the Packers.

After routing the Atlanta Falcons 24-2 Sunday in the NFC wild-card game, the Giants head to Green Bay next weekend, a place where they will need all the help they can muster.

Manning carried the Giants (10-7) for much of the season, hoping the defense would get stingy, the pass rush would materialize and the running game would get on track. Now, all of that is happening.

“A great mix of run and pass and these guys have a great understanding of what our offense is,” Manning said of the help he’s receiving. “If we can get that run game going like we did in the second half, that opens up a lot of windows.”

And if the defense remains impenetrable, watch out.

“If we can play defense like that, we will continue to make ourselves heard in this tournament,” coach Tom Coughlin said.

Manning punctuated his best pro season by throwing for three touchdowns and scrambling for a 14-yard gain that woke up New York’s offense in its first postseason victory since its Super Bowl upset of undefeated New England four years ago. Next up is as big a challenge: the defending champion Packers (15-1), who won here 38-35 in December.

“We know they are a good team,” Manning said. “We played them tough here, did some good things here, we scored some points. We know offensively we are going to have to play strong, score some points.”

The team that couldn’t run the ball will be sprinting there, bringing along a defense the Packers actually might fear. Not to mention the passing offense led by Manning, who hooked up on a 72-yard catch and run by Hakeem Nicks in the third quarter that put away the inept Falcons (10-7). Manning also connected on a 4-yard

TD with Nicks in the second period, and a 27-yard TD throw to Mario Manningham in the fourth quarter that finished it off.

The Giants’ last postseason trip to frigid Lambeau Field was a 23-20 overtime victory for the NFC championship two weeks before they upset the Patriots.

“Cold, I remember that. I remember coach Coughlin’s face. I remember (tackle) David Diehl sweating and it froze on his hair and he had icicles on his hair,” defensive end Justin Tuck said. “And I remember us winning.”

“Hopefully, we can go back there and do it again.”

The tempo in the first playoff game at MetLife Stadium was set by New York’s defense, which never allowed Atlanta to get going, and by the league’s lowest-ranked rushing game, which ran for a season-high 172 yards, 92 by Brandon Jacobs and 63 by Ahmad Bradshaw. The Giants averaged 5.5 yards a carry, 2 yards more than in the regular season.

BCS TITLE GAME

Guide to the BCS Title Game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — So you are planning to watch the BCS championship Monday night between No. 1 LSU and No. 2 Alabama but maybe you’re not the biggest college football fan. We’ve got you covered with everything you need for a well-informed and enjoyable game-watching experience.

Suited Up

As an ode to the late, great Alabama coach Paul Bryant, Crimson Tide fans are fond of wearing clothing with a Houndstooth pattern to match the Bear’s famous hat. So if you want to feel like a real ‘Bama backer, you might want to raid your grandfather’s closet.

Mascots

Alabama’s Big Al is a student in an elephant costume. LSU’s Mike the Tiger is a 6-year-old Bengal/Siberian mix with a 15,000-square-foot habitat on campus that includes large oak trees and a waterfall.

Advantage, LSU.

Rally Cries

For Alabama fans, “Roll Tide” is used as a greeting. Or a compliment. Or a threat. Or a proclamation. Or an exclamation. It is both a question and an answer. If you’ve seen the ESPN commercial showing the varied and odd ways Alabama fans use the phrase, understand this: That was NOT an exaggeration.

LSU’s “Tiger Bait” call has a far less ambiguous meaning: “We plan to feed you to

S-E-C!

Alabama and LSU both play in the Southeastern Conference, making this the first BCS title game between league rivals — from any league.

Rematch?

LSU beat Alabama 9-6 in overtime on Nov. 5 in Tuscaloosa, Ala., in what was dubbed the Game of the Century. It was an epic struggle so dazzling and thrilling the public demanded a rematch. And by the public we mean Alabama fans.

National Titles

At some point you might hear that Alabama claims 13 national titles, more than any program in the country. It’s a claim fans of other teams tend to roll their eyes at because it includes four from before there were major polls handing out championships in 1936, and another in 1941 that was bequeathed to a two-loss Crimson Tide team by the Houlgate System. Tide fans argue all national titles are mythical. Skeptics counter that some are more mythical than others.

WARNING: Do not ask an LSU fan about that SPLIT national title with USC.

Speaking of Split Titles

Yes, it is possible that LSU could lose the game and be voted No. 1 in the AP poll. It may not be the most likely scenario, but if Alabama wins a very close game under fluky and/or controversial circumstances the Tigers absolutely could be crowned national champions by the AP voters.

Uncle Les vs. Saint Nick

The man in the white hat is usually considered the good guy in those cowboy movies, and it seems appropriate that LSU coach Les Miles never coaches a game without his white cap.

Heisman Finalists

If a running back could be genetically engineered, the result would likely be Alabama All-American Trent Richardson. The 224-pound junior ran for 1,583 yards, scored 23 touchdowns, finished third in the Heisman Trophy voting and can squat 600 pounds. To sum up, Richardson is a bad, bad man with the ball in his hands. This will likely be his last game with Alabama. Next stop, first-round NFL draft pick.

When LSU Has Ball

Running backs struggling to get past the line of scrimmage. Receivers being laid out. Quarterbacks throwing the ball away. All to be followed by long punts from LSU All-American Brad Wing.

Title Game

“I’d expect it to be big-boy football,” Miles said Sunday during his time on podium.

LSU (13-0) has already put up a body of work that clearly establishes it as the nation’s best team. In addition to that Nov. 5 win at Alabama, the Tigers have victories over two other major bowl champions, Rose Bowl winner Oregon and Orange Bowl champ West Virginia. In all, they’ve knocked off eight teams that were ranked in The Associated Press Top 25, with only three of those games in Baton Rouge.

“The only team I’ve told them not to schedule is the Green Bay Packers,” Miles quipped.

Maybe it’s only appropriate for the Tigers to find one more daunting challenge standing in the way of a championship season — a great team they’ve already beaten.

“When we take the field, we’ll be an emotional, fired-up football team,” Miles vowed.

Alabama (11-1) didn’t even make the championship game of the Southeastern Conference, but the Crimson Tide managed to sneak back into the national title race when Oklahoma State lost late in the season. In the strangest of twists, Saban’s team will be the one celebrating its second national title in three years with a mere split of the season series with LSU.

Perhaps sensing just how fortuitous Alabama was to get a do-over, Saban wants his players to seize the moment.

“I would like for them to focus on the opportunity, not the pressure part,” he said, “so that they really are zeroed into the mental practice and the things that when they go out there and play, they’re going to be confident in doing their job the way they need to do it to have success.”

battle its way through a playoff to get into the title game.

The people who run the BCS will tell you otherwise, arguing that the cartel has done more to elevate the college game than Knute Rockne ever did while prowling the sidelines at Notre Dame. They claim interest in the postseason has never been higher, even while they match teams like West Virginia and Clemson and run a system that makes the BCS title game little more than a second SEC championship game.

Fans, though, seem to be catching on.

They’re tired of a bloated bowl season, fed up with mismatches dictated not by records but by conference affiliation. They’re voting against the BCS series the only way they know how — by staying home and watching something else on television.

Bowl attendance was down this season, and that’s not the biggest story. The Rose Bowl had its lowest television ratings in history, Orange Bowl ratings dropped 37 percent from last year, and Sugar Bowl viewership was almost non-existent. Even the Fiesta Bowl — won by Oklahoma State over Stanford in an overtime thriller — was the third-least viewed of the past decade.

And to cap it all off we get a title game that feels so yesterday. Not only are LSU and Alabama in the same SEC division, a game between them went into overtime in November without either school scoring a touchdown. It’s a little tough for fans to get excited about a rematch that requires a deep appreciation of defensive line play and the kicking game.

It’s on Jan. 9 to boot, long after New Year’s hangovers are forgotten, and — more importantly — after the NFL playoffs have already begun. The biggest show in college football wasn’t even the biggest show in town over an extended weekend where it seemed every other person was wearing a Drew Brees jersey and the Superdome was rocking as the Saints beat Detroit to open the playoffs.

Maybe that’s why Miles felt the need to hype the game just a bit before posing for photographers.

“I expect it to be big boy football,” the LSU coach said. “It will be a game representative of two quality football teams.”

That’s a given, considering these are the two best teams in the best football conference there is. This will be the sixth time in a row a SEC team has won the BCS title game, leading some to joke that the only way an SEC team will lose the title game is to play another SEC team.

Not hard to see why. The SEC has $5 million a year coaches, and programs that bring in $100 million a year. It has football traditions that run deep into the fabric of society throughout the South, and it has its way whenever decisions are made in the BCS cartel.

New PSU Coach O’Brien Meets Players

ASSOCIATED PRESS

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. • A smiling Matt McGloin’s eyes lit up when asked about new Penn State coach Bill O’Brien’s star pupil at his other job.

After finishing up his duties as the offensive coordinator and quarterback coach of the New England Patriots through the NFL postseason, O’Brien will leave Tom Brady, and join McGloin full-time in Happy Valley.

O’Brien’s second day as Penn State’s new leader included a standing ovation after being introduced at a basketball game, and his first meeting with McGloin and his new players.

So, it’s now time for McGloin, the Nittany Lions starting quarterback, to start studying up on film of Brady, the Patriots’ standout signal-caller.

“That’s it right there. That’s enough ... It couldn’t get any better,” McGloin said Sunday when asked how much it would help to be coached by someone who tutored Brady.

What else did McGloin like about the New England offense?

“I don’t know, that Brady threw for like 5,000 yards,” McGloin said with a chuckle.

That’s 5,235 yards to be exact. And Brady isn’t done. In fact, O’Brien was scheduled to fly back to Massachusetts on Sunday night to help Brady and the Patriots prepare for the Denver Broncos. New England had a bye this week after securing the No. 1 seed in the AFC, and learned late Sunday that Denver — a 29-23 overtime winner over Pittsburgh in the wild-card round — would be the opponent.

O’Brien will likely remain with the Patriots the rest of the week, though he’s also expected to name the rest of his Penn State coaching staff within a few days.

“I’m sure you’ll figure it out,” O’Brien said Saturday after his introductory news conference about his travel schedule. “I’ll be on the move.”

magicvalley.com

DEAR ABBY: My fiance, "Kip," and I are being married next year and we have only one disappointment. It's about my keeping my last name. I don't want to take Kip's last name. I have had the same name for 33 years and I do not believe a woman "has" to take her husband's name when they marry. However, the biggest issue for me is my fiance never knew his father, who left when Kip was a baby. I do not wish to take the name of a man who neither of us knows, and who had no positive influence on our lives. I'm part of a close-knit family, and I am proud to bear the name of my father — a hard-working, dedicated Vietnam veteran. Am I out of line? We will accept your answer because we are unable to resolve this ourselves.

— STANDING MY GROUND, NEW JERSEY

DEAR ABBY
Jeanne Phillips

DEAR STANDING: While most women still change their names to their husband's (or hyphenate them), those who don't usually have established themselves in a career in which they are known by their maiden name. Others fear that if they change their names they'll lose their identity.

No one can or should decide this for you. However, if Kip did know his dad and the man was a fine, upstanding citizen, would you feel differently? Remember, you are marrying Kip, not his father, and I assume your fiance is a wonderful person. Given your logic, because he had no relationship with his father, should he change his name to yours? Please make no decisions about this until you two have talked this out more fully.

DEAR ABBY: My siblings and I never hear from my grandmother unless she's in town, and then it's usually for one day out of the two weeks she's here. She never calls on holidays, birthdays or just to say hello. Yes, we call her on these special days.

We have other grandparents who wouldn't let a week go by without calling to ask how we are, how we are doing in school or just to talk.

My mom is a grandma to my oldest sister's children and when she doesn't see or hear from them within a week, she'll call or visit them. (By the way, my grandmother is retired, very healthy and travels. When she does, we don't even get a postcard!) What's wrong with her?

— HURT FEELINGS

IN MASSACHUSETTS

DEAR HURT FEELINGS: I agree that you didn't get the standard-issue dotting, cookie-baking grandmother. Not knowing her, I can't explain the reason for her distant behavior, but I'm positive it has nothing to do with you personally. She may be pre-occupied with her own life, or it may have something to do with the relationship she has with your parents. If you really want the answer to your question, the person you should ask is your grandmother the next time she comes to town.

DEAR ABBY: When I'm out in public, there's always someone saying, "Oh, you're so TINY!" or, "I didn't see you down there" or, "You're so CUTE!" Abby, I am 83 years old with white hair. I was never tall to begin with, and I have lost close to 4 inches due to a bad back (with constant pain), spine surgery and osteoporosis. Please remind your readers to abstain from making remarks about a person's size. I don't feel "cute," and I don't appreciate the constant reminders about my disability. Am I too sensitive?

— VERTICALLY CHALLENGED IN ANN ARBOR, MICH.

DEAR VERTICALLY CHALLENGED: I don't think so. You have stated your feelings very well, but I'm pleased to remind readers that comments about someone's personal appearance ("You're so tall," "You're so small," "You're so thin") can hit a sore spot, and to refrain from saying the first thing that comes to mind because it may be rude or hurtful.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"Ship me somewheres east of Suez, where the best is like the worst, Where there aren't no Ten Commandments, and a man can raise a thirst."

— Rudyard Kipling

After South's strong no-trump, West came in with two hearts and North showed four spades and no heart stop by cue-bidding three hearts. (Had he held a heart stopper and four spades, a convention called Lebensohl would have let him bid two no-trump as a puppet to three clubs, then cue-bid three hearts.)

The final contract of three no-trump was predictable enough, and West equally predictably led a top heart.

Before you play to the first trick, it is always a good idea to count your winners and decide where you need to set up tricks and who is the danger hand. A cursory count of potential winners should come to eight. If clubs split, you have nine tricks, so you need to allow for the likelihood that they will not break.

The secret here is that the hearts are useless to you, and the diamond king is worth nothing if the ace is onside. If that is so, West will have heart winners galore, ready to cash. So you must hope the diamond ace is offside!

Win the heart lead for fear of the diamond shift, unblock your spade honors, then cross to a top club and cash the spade jack. Now take your club winners, ending in dummy. If the fourth club is not a winner, exit with the club loser and wait for East to lead a diamond. With any luck, the diamond ace will be offside, and East will be endplayed to lead around to dummy's diamond king.

ANSWER: Your best choice for setting up tricks is a heart lead, but at the same time this lead is likely to give up a trick unnecessarily. I'd prefer to lead the more passive club, hoping that if dummy does not have a long running club suit, we can defeat the contract by giving nothing away. The diamond jack is also a good choice if looking for a swing action.

IF JANUARY 9 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY: Your business acumen is out of kilter in the next few weeks, so stick to business as usual and don't implement any major changes. In March, you might be inspired to try something new, but just write down your ideas for future use. A shift of focus and a chance to change the course of your life for the better may present itself in April. Seek to improve those areas of life that seem to cause you hardship. Concentrate on getting your ducks in a row where career or your finances are concerned in May when your judgment about material things is at its best.

Horoscope

Jeraldine Saunders

ARIES (March 21-April 19): The full moon might bewitch, bother or bewilder you. Juggling home and job could create stresses you prefer not to ponder. The quick financial fix you consider today won't look so attractive by tomorrow.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Others find your sultry attractions and knowledge a major turn on. You seem to fulfill someone's fantasies today, but don't let it go to your head. The light of day might show you the error of your choices.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Never give up on someone you can't keep thinking about. Today might not be the day that you will succeed in pursuing your fantasies. There is much to be said for patience and waiting for better timing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Mirror, mirror on the wall. Today's full moon might bring relationships into sharp focus. The things you like and dislike about your partner might be the very things that you like or dislike about yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Everything looks more appealing under the light of the silvery moon. Thinking that buying something will solve your problems is an error of judgment. Today you might be too gullible for your own good.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Keep your pennies in your pocket. Like a magpie, you could be attracted by shiny objects of dubious value and tempted to take them home to your nest. Spend more time with the kids or your hobbies.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The dogs of romantic fantasy howl at today's full moon. All the romantic juices that are squeezed out tonight could turn sour by tomorrow. Don't make a firm commitment involving love or money.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stranger than fiction. Social media might be a great way to reconnect with old friends, but they also give a lot of strangers, who aren't who they say they are, a way to creep into your life.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Others may be immune to your romantic charms today, so steel your resolve and expect icy rebuffs. To maintain harmony and keep the peace, it is best to let others call the shots.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): One is the loneliest number. The full moon might make relationships or the lack of a relationship, the center of attention. You might be fooled into grabbing the first thing that attracts your attention.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Bubbles are quickly burst. A veneer of sophistication and an aura of glamour surround everything you do. Don't forget that your popularity could be fleeting and admirers might not be there tomorrow.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): One step at a time. Restrictions placed on your activities could put you so far behind you might feel like you are working in a rear view mirror. Accept your limitations with good grace to succeed.
